Our government has always made what I consider to be a very serious mistake in the rate of interest they have fixed to be paid by the Grand Trunk Pacific for the use of the line from Winnipeg to Moncton, the rate of interest being fixed at three per cent. Now, supposing, as we fully expect, that that line will cost us $150,000,000 from Winnipeg to Moncton, including shops, terminals and the Quebec bridge, we shall receive from them at three per cent, $4,500,000 per annum. But if we are borrowing that money at four per cent, and it is more than likely we shall have to borrow a considerable portion of it at that rate, we shall be paying $6,000,000 per year on the $150,000,000, and as we shall be collecting only $4,500,000 annually, we shall make an annual loss of $1,500,000 per annum during the period on which they pay that rate of three per cent and our loans run at the same time. But it may be said that we will not have to pay four per cent on that $150,000,000. What have we had to pay on what has already gone into that road? $50,000,000 has already been expended. We have borrowed £3,000,000 at 3¾ per cent per annum, £5,000,000 at 3 4-5 per cent, and £2,000,000 at 4⅛ per cent That is to say, on the total amount that has gone into that road we have to pay from 3¾ of 3⅘ per cent ; and yet we have stipulated that we shall relend that money at three per cent. Now, supposing we take a ten year period, we shall make a loss on that transaction of $1,125,000 a year, which in ten years will amount to $11,250,000. But if we take the transaction up to the year 1950, and that is a reasonable period, because the loans that are being floated are payable in 1905, and we expect the company will pay interest at least until that time, we shall have in thirty years a loss of $1,125,000 a year, or, not computing compound interest, a total loss of $33,750,000 on that calculation alone. I claim that we should have arranged, when building the National Transcontinental Railway, that the lessee of the road should pay the same rate of interest including charges, as that at which we have to borrow the money to build it.

It must also be very apparent that we are unusually generous to this company, because if they went into the money market, they could not sell their bonds at 100 cents on the dollar. In order to borrow $7 they would have to issue $8 of bonds. They could not issue these bonds at more than 87½ or 90. You must remember that the interest is not calculated on the amount of money that is paid them but on the amount of the debt; so that, in order to raise that $10,000,000 cash, the Grand Trunk Pacific would have had to go into the money market and float a loan for at least $11,500,000. That would bring the net rate of interest on the amount of money actually raised up to 4⅘ per cent.

I think that is all I need say. It seems to me that the proposition I have submitted is such a reasonable one that it does not require any further presentation than I have already given it. We are to act as the banker for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. They come to us because they cannot get good terms anywhere else, and we have agreed to assist them in order that this enterprise may be carried out. It seems to me that the least we can ask of them, the least we should ask of them in the interest of the people of the country, is that they should pay us the price at which we borrow this money plus the cost of borrowing the money. Therefore, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Perley :

That the order for the third reading be discharged, and that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole with power to amend the same by providing that the rate of interest and charges payable by the company to the government upon and in respect of the said loan shall not be less than the rate of interest and charges which the government shall pay in obtaining funds for the purpose of the said loan.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). We have already discussed this matter at an earlier stage and I do not imagine that anything very new or important can be added to the stock of information in the possession of the House. The hon. member (Mr. Ames) has correctly quoted me as stating that this was a banking transaction—a very proper illustration. If anybody goes into a bank to borrow money he will be rather surprised if the banker should say to him: 'Well, I will lend you this money at four per cent, but if I should happen to have to pay a little more than four per cent I will come back on you for it.' That is not banking business. The banker forms his idea of the value of the money and he fixes the rate which he supposes will cover his needs. The very first consideration would be that the banker should determine what would be a fair rate of interest. He fixes the rate of interest to his customer, but how he may get the money and what rate of interest he may have to pay the depositor would form no part of the negotiation with his customer; consequently, in fixing a definite rate on this loan, we are certainly acting in accordance with common banking business.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman is speaking as a banker. Does he imagine for a moment that a banker would lend money at a rate on which he could not possibly gain but would make a loss?

Mr. FIELDING. That is not the point. I shall come to that in a moment. The question is whether or not there shall be a fixed rate, not what the rate is. That is another branch of the question. My friend (Mr. Ames) is introducing into this question the proposition of an uncertain rate. The point I am making is that the banker would charge his customer a fixed rate. Whether it would be considered a high rate or a low rate is another question. My hon. friend wishes to interrupt?

Mr. AMES. I do not think the minister has quite read the amendment correctly. The amendment says 'the rate of interest and charges.' The rate of interest can be fixed now by the minister. The minister knows what rate he would pay for his loan.

Mr. FIELDING. No, I do not.

Mr. AMES. Well, he could probably say what rate the company should pay.

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. AMES. And that the charge for obtaining the loan should be the same charge to the company.

Mr. FIELDING. The charges are always included in a statement of the net rate of interest. In any statement I make to this House as to what a loan costs I would feel bound to include all the charges in it so as to come as near as I could to what my hon. friend described as the effective rate per unit. The point that I desire to make is that when a man goes to a bank to borrow money the banker always makes a fixed rate for the transaction. Whether or not that is considered a high rate or a low rate, that is another question. I say it is desirable that there should be a fixed rate because we have taken a mortgage as a security,—a security which is desirable to have though not one of immediately great value, and if we are to have a transaction of that character it certainly is desirable that the mortgage should bear a fixed rate of interest and not an uncertain rate of interest. I think, therefore, it is clear that for these various reasons, we ought to have a fixed rate of interest.

Now, in fixing that rate of interest the banker would naturally fix a rate which he believed would be satisfactory to him. He would aim to have a profit. That is the chief business of the banker, but, that is not necessarily our chief business in the present instance. Nevertheless, it would be the part of wisdom that we should have a definite fixed rate of interest which we might reasonably believe would cover the cost of the money to us and we have fixed that rate at four per cent. My hon. friend assumes that the rate of interest that we will have to pay will be more than four per cent. I have all through carefully guarded this point, and I have given no definite assurance as to what the money will cost. My hon. friend says that I cannot tell at what rate of interest the bonds will be issued. No man can say that in advance. All through this discussion I have insisted respectfully that the proper course for a Finance Minister to take is to hold himself free to issue securities at such time, at such rate and for such terms as the condition of the money market may require. Therefore, I think it is unwise to found any argument on the assumption that we should have a higher rate. Nevertheless, we should to a certain extent, foresee the conditions of the market. I say there is as much reason to believe that we will make a profit out of this transaction as there is to believe that we will make a loss. I do not think the theory of my hon. friend that we are likely to make a loss has anything to warrant it. Is there not just as much reason to believe that we may secure a profit? He does not, in moving this amendment, assume that we are going to make a profit. He has no confidence that we will make a profit and he does not say that we must give back to the Grand Trunk Railway any profit we may make. This motion is to no purpose at all. It is based upon the assumption that should the loan cost more than four per cent, we ought to make the Grand Trunk pay more. Why should we do so?

Mr. AMES. As a precautionary measure.

Mr. FIELDING. In fixing the rate at four per cent we are taking a reasonable precautionary measure. We are satisfied that the element of risk in the matter is of exceedingly small proportions, of such small proportions that there is no need practically of our being concerned about it at all. Then I will cite the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The only way you can get over that is by saying that they were wrong. Looking back over the transaction I am not prepared to say they were wrong. I would rather say that they were right. It was wise to fix a definite rate, and if four per cent were not enough, they might have fixed a higher rate, but the fact that they afterwards went to the money market and paid a little more than four per cent will not, in the light of history, be held up against them.

Looking back over the whole transaction I believe it was wiser for the government to fix a rate which they thought would cover the transaction than to have introduced such an element of uncertainty as it proposed to introduce to-day. I do not give that transaction as conclusive evidence but I do say that it is of some value in presenting to the House my argument. I would rather believe that what was done in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway was a fair and reasonable transaction, than that it was an act of imprudence on the part of the government of the day. My hon. friend (Mr. Ames) went away from the loan and he told us that we are going to receive only 3 per cent from the Grand Trunk Pacific on the lease whereas we will have to pay a higher interest rate. That is true, and to that extent we are undoubtedly doing something for the company. Six years ago when the transaction was negotiated 3 per cent was thought to be the fair value of money, but money has since increased in cost and we shall probably find that we may have to pay for some considerable time more than 3 per cent. In that respect we are giving something to the Grand Trunk Pacific. But there are a great many things the government are not giving to the Grand Trunk Pacific. They are not giving them $25,000,000 cash or 25,000,000 acres of land anywhere in this Dominion; they are not giving them miles and miles of completed railway which cost the Dominion many millions of dollars; they are not giving them exemption; they are not giving them any of the favours which were lavished upon the Canadian Pacific Railway. When my hon. friend says that we are giving the Grand Trunk Pacific some slight advantage on the interest rate, I would ask him to remember that the Grand Trunk Pacific is far from receiving the spendid liberal grants that were given to the Canadian Pacific Railway years ago, and that we are giving to this Transcontinental Railway less, immensely less, than was given to the other corporation by our predecessors in office. Then my hon. friend says that before we lend money we must be sure that we are losing nothing, and that we will at least have our loan returned. The hon. gentleman does not seem to think kindly of this loan to the Grand Trunk Pacific, but as a representative of the great city of Montreal he is interested in the fact that we are lending money liberally to the harbour commissioners of his city, not at one-eighth per cent less than we pay for it but at one and one-eighth per cent less, if I take the same basis that he applies to this case. The hon. gentleman has told us that we are paying four and one-eighth for some money lately borrowed, and I can tell him that we have been occasionally lending money to the Montreal Harbour Commissioners at 3 per cent. What then becomes of this principle that if we are to lend money we must be sure we are to lose nothing? The Harbour Commissioners of Montreal and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, are all public bodies interested in the development of the trade and commerce of this country. On what principle do we grant a subsidy to a railway and receive not one cent back?

Mr. BRISTOL. Can the harbour commissioners of Montreal make a profit in the operation of its works in the same way that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company will make a profit out of their line?

Mr. FIELDING. I am delighted to have the assurance of my hon. friend that the Grand Trunk Pacific is going to make a profit.

Mr. BRISTOL. The Minister of Finance has great imagination. I did not say the Grand Trunk Pacific would make a profit, I merely asked as to the possibility of the Harbour Commissioners making a profit out of their works in the same way as a railway company might.

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. BRISTOL. Then what is the object of the comparison?

Mr. FIELDING. When we grant a subsidy to a railway company does that company make profit for the government or profit for themselves? When we grant a subsidy to a railway company we get our return in the development of the trade of the country.

Mr. BRISTOL. Does the Minister of Finance see no distinction between a railway company that operates a public service for profit, and a harbour commission which operates a public service as a trust?

Mr. FIELDING. Of course they are serving the public in a different way. But the policy of the Dominion of Canada has recognized the fact that a railway company is interested in developing the trade and commerce of the country and that in granting aid to that railway company and not getting a cent back, we are getting our profits through the development of the commerce of the country.

Mr. AMES. I know the Minister of Finance wants to be perfectly fair; will he allow me one word?

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly.

Mr. AMES. There is one essential difference between the Grand Trunk Pacific from Winnipeg to the coast and the harbour of Montreal. The railway line is the property of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company while the harbour of Montreal is the property of the Canadian government and every dollar spent on Montreal harbour is spent on the property of the government.

Mr. FIELDING. I have already said there is a distinction, but all these corporations are serving the country although in different ways and by different means. As a matter of principle I say that every railway in this country is recognized by the parliament of Canada as a public corporation serving public interests, and were it not so upon what ground could the payment of a single dollar in subsidies be justified? Whether it be the Canadian Pacific Railway, or the Grand Trunk Railway, or any other railway that comes to this parliament for aid, we never look upon it as a personal transaction for the individual gain of somebody, but in every case it is considered a transaction associated with public interest, and for the sake of the public interests and not for the sake of private gain we grant aid in one form or another. My hon. friend (Mr. Ames) will see at once that if we apply to the Montreal Harbour Commission the rule that in lending money we must first provide that we shall lose nothing, then, the great works which have been successfully carried on in the harbour of Montreal and of which my hon. friend I am sure is as proud as I am, would never have been completed. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) further said that the government had no right to lend money to anybody unless it had money to lend. Again that rule would be unsatisfactory if applied to the Montreal Harbour Commission, because we have advanced money to that body when we did not have it in our treasury. It was, however, a proper obligation on us to assist such a great public work and we borrowed the money when the necessity arose as we will have to do in this case. We are assisting an enterprise in which this parliament feels a warm interest, because it is one closely identified with the progress and development of the country. We have granted aid to assist that enterprise, but small aid in comparison with what was granted to the other company in former years; and in granting this loan we do not consider that we are giving the Grand Trunk Pacific Company any great favour at all. We are looking after the credit of the Dominion as much as after the credit of the Grand Trunk Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific Company. They could go out and get this money, as their bonds have a commercial value; but we feel that if they went on the market and forced the sale of those securities, they would have to accept a price which would be most unfortunate for the enterprise and would diminish the funds for the construction of the railway. Therefore, in view of the fact that the interests of this great enterprise are so closely blended with the general interests of the Dominion, any sacrifice of the securities of these companies would be a misfortune not only to the companies themselves, but to the credit of the Dominion. For all these reasons I am satisfied that this loan is no great favour to these companies, but is a fair and reasonable business proposition. We are much more likely to make a profit than a loss so far as our mere interest is concerned; but above all that we are assisting one of the great corporations of the country to carry forward one of the greatest works ever undertaken in the history of the Dominion.

Mr. BARKER. I do not intend to occupy the time of the House more than a few minutes in an effort to set the Minister of Finance right. The hon. gentleman puts this transaction on the footing of a banking transaction in order that he may fix the rate of interest, and the transaction is put in such a shape that the country can never by any possibility make a profit on it, but may lose. That is what he calls a banking transaction. I doubt whether the hon. gentleman could enter the office of any bank in this world and convince the manager that that was a banking transaction. I take it, so far as the debate has gone, that the country desires to make this loan; but I have yet to learn that the country either wants to make a profit or desires to make a loss. The hon. gentleman seems to think that because he calls it a banking transaction, it is absolutely essential to put in the contract a fixed rate of interest. Well, I have had, not the experience of the hon. gentleman, but something like a quarter of a century of experience in dealing with some such loans on a smaller scale, and I have never yet heard that there was the slightest difficulty in arranging with a bank for a loan at variable rates of interest or for variable charges according to the conditions of the market from time to time. Why should there be any difficulty in our helping this railway company by making an advance of millions to them and saying to them : 'We desire to make no profit out of you, but we want you to sign a contract that what we pay you shall return to us.' Is there any mystery about a banking transaction that stands in the way of that? Why, Sir, millions of dollars have been loaned on a contract by which the borrower agreed to pay the current rate of interest from time to time to the Bank of England plus ½ per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. In this case there will be only one transaction, and that at the moment when the loan is made.

Mr. BARKER. It is going to be a pretty long contract if you are looking forward to getting your money back. There was not the slightest difficulty in the Finance Minister going to the company and saying : 'We can borrow this $10,000,000 cheaper than you can; we can get the money on better terms; we want to make no money out of you; all we ask is that what we pay you shall return to us, and even then you will make money by it, that is a banking transaction. It is just as simple as a large railway company going to a bank in London and saying. 'We want $2,000,000 from you, and we will pay you from time to time until we repay the loan at current rates month after month or quarter after quarter, plus ½ per cent of profit to you.' That also is banking, just as much as if there was a fixed rate. The Finance Minister could have done the same in this case, except that the country does not desire that the government should make a profit out of the transaction. We do not ask for ½ per cent more than the cost, but we do say that we should not be asked to pledge the credit of this country by borrowing $10,000,000 at a time when it requires all we can do to get all that we need for ourselves, without getting back every cent that it cost us. That is all that we ask. But the hon. gentleman is so wedded to the expression banking transaction that he thinks we must not get back all we advance, but he must agree to a fixed rate and take all the risk of loss without any chance of profit.

Mr. BARKER.

Amendment of Mr. Ames negatived on the same division.

Mr. W. S. MIDDLEBRO (North Grey) moved:

That the order of the third reading be discharged, and that the said Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House with power to amend the same by providing that the security to be taken and held by the government for the proposed loan should include a mortgage covering the interest of the company (a) in the paid-up stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific Townsite and Development Company, and (b) in the branch line from Port Arthur to the main line of the National Transcontinental Railway; subject, however, to any charges or liens now outstanding thereon.

He said: I desire to say a few words before the main motion is put on the amendment I have placed, Mr. Speaker, in your hands, but before proceeding to discuss that amendment specially, I may be permitted to say a word or two with reference to some remarks made this afternoon by the right hon the. Prime Minister. The right hon. gentleman was good enough to refer to a certain portion of a speech made by myself on the proposed loan in this House about a month ago. He referred to that portion in which I dealt with the amount of security that had been given in 1884 by the Canadian Pacific Railway for the loan of $30,000,000 then made by the Conservative administration. May I tender to my right hon. friend my sincere thanks for having placed the seal of his approval on the correctness of statements I then made. It was with a certain amount of temerity, being a new member, that I submitted that statement to the House, and I am all the more gratified that the right hon. gentleman saw fit to give it his approval. What I said was that the Canadian Pacific Railway, on that occasion, had given an undoubted security which, as a banking proposition, the government of that day were justified in accepting. They gave us practically a completed railway of 3,300 miles as security. I say a completed railway because it was considered that the loan they were getting would be sufficient to complete it and it did eventually complete it. We had therefore as security a completed railway of 3,300 miles, we had in addition a first mortgage on 21,000,000 acres of land, and in addition a first lien upon all their other property. Or to put the matter in a nutshell, we had an undoubted first mortgage as a direct security by the Canadian Pacific Railway, worth $200,000,000, upon which we were making the company a loan of $30,000,000. Am I not justified in saying that that was a proposition which we were fully warranted in accepting? It was a proposition that we on this side did accept, but which gentlemen opposite refused to countenance, and voted against? Might I refer to the words used by the right hon. the Prime Minister on that occasion? We had a lecture given us this afternoon by the right hon. gentleman on our lack of faith in the future of this country. Well, in those days that grand old man, the late Sir John Macdonald, had, in the face of innumerable difficulties, in the face of the determined opposition made by the party of hon. gentlemen opposite at that time, the bull dog tenacity, perseverance and sagacity which enabled him to stick to his policy and carry it to a successful conclusion. 'I have sufficient confidence,' he said, 'in the future o fthis country, to lend these people $30,000,000 on which I consider an undoubted security of $200,000,000.' But where was the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) at that time? Why, notwithstanding the fact, as he admits to-day, that Sir John Macdonald held up before him an undoubted security of $200,000,000 for a loan of $30,000,000, he said:

I would as soon believe that the waters will flow back from the sea to the lakes as that one cent of that $30,000,000 will ever come back from the Pacific Railway exchequer to the treasury of this Dominion.

In the light of that pessimistic declaration, does it lie in the mouth of that right hon. gentleman to taunt us to-day with lack of faith in the future of this country? Then I might quote the words of other hon. gentlemen who were colleagues in those days of my right hon. friend Sir Wilfrid Laurier. I might quote the language of his present Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Fisher, who said. 'I do not believe that because this company is in difficulty, that is any reason the government of the day should grant it assistance. On the contrary I believe that because it is in financial difficulties is the very reason why we should refuse to do so.' To-day, however, we find that hon. gentleman taking a position the very reverse. I might also quote Sir Richard Cartwright who, in the presence of the right hon. gentleman, said that it was such an act of folly and indiscretion that it has hung like a millstone around the necks of the people for all time to come. Yet these hon. gentlemen are to-day endeavouring to preach to us the doctrine of faith in our country. But it ill lies in their mouth to preach that doctrine to us who, in times of difficulty, when the possibilities of the great northwest country were still greatly in doubt, had yet an abiding confidence in the future of this Dominion.

The hon. the Finance Minister argues that this is a banking proposition and I purpose to deal with it to-night exactly on that basis. The resolution I am introducing, is exactly on the lines of the speech of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) when he referred to the amount of the security given by the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1884. It has not been made sufficiently clear to me, from the beginning of this debate to the present, that the $7,000,000 now owed by the Grand Trunk Pacific to the Grand Trunk Railway has actually gone into the road bed of the former. I say that we are entitled to dence,' he said, 'in the future of this counout of this loan and is to be paid to the Grand Trunk Railway, represents that amount of value which has actually gone into the road bed of the Grand Trunk Pacific. So far as I know we have had no definite assurance to that effect. What is the reason which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) gives why this loan is asked for by the Grand Trunk Pacific? It is to obviate, he says, the necessity of that company or the Grand Trunk going into the money market of the world during the present financial stringency, and raising $10,000,000 on its bonds. Yet we find that the Grand Trunk Railway has already advanced the Grand Trunk Pacific moneys to the extent of $7,000,000, which will be recouped them out of the present loan of $10,000,000. We have also the right to assume that this loan is for the purpose of completing the Grand Trunk Pacific and that the money is required not for work that actually has been done but what has to be done from this time on. We have no assurance on that point. If it be true that the Grand Trunk Railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific do not desire at present to go into the financial markets of the world because they will not be able to borrow at a reasonable rate, I would ask why it is that since this session has opened, they have applied to this House and have received authority to borrow, not $10,000,000, but $25,000,000; and I find from the London 'Statist' and the 'Daily Telegraph' that the Grand Trunk Railway are now about to borrow money on these bonds. In the London 'Statist' of the 17th of April I find the following:

The Grand Trunk Railway is moreover compelled to seek power to issue further capital—2½ million pounds of 4 per cent debenture stock and an equal amount of 4 per cent guaranteed stock. As these powers must be exercised at an early date, it is obvious that the quotations of existing securities have in the meantime little prospect of appreciation.

The' Daily Telegraph' says:

It will be noticed also that authorization is to be asked at the meeting for the further creation of £2,500,000 Grand Trunk Railway debenture stock and £2,500,000 4 per cent guaranteed stock under the Grand Trunk Railway Act, 1909. Hence it appears that the charges in front of the preference stocks are likely to be considerably increased before long.

At the next meeting of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, which probably was held a few days ago, no doubt they were authorized to issue a large proportion of this $25,000,000 stock, and if they are going on the market with that stock the probability is they will be in the market just as soon as the Finance Minister in his efforts to raise the proposed loan of $10,000,000, so I think the argument that this loan was given to the Grand Trunk Pacific in order to obviate the necessity of going on the market falls to the ground because the company are themselves going into the market for loans probably larger than this one. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has alluded to the amount of the security given by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the object of my resolution to-night is, if possible, to increase, at least to some extent, the amount of the security which we are to get from the Grand Trunk Pacific. I am sure that no hon. gentleman in this House can object to the Grand Trunk Pacific giving us more security if they can get it. If they honestly intend to repay this loan, they could have no legitimate excuse for not giving us such other and further security as they themselves possess. What can we get from them, what do they own? The first point I touch on is in connection with the Lake Superior branch of the Grand Trunk Pacific. As we all know this branch runs for about 198 miles from the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific to the towns of Fort William and Port Arthur. That branch line has been financed without any assistance whatever, except the ordinary railway bonus, from the Dominion government, and in what shape are they? They have financed that branch and to-day it is practically running and in operation. As the hon. gentleman from Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) said, that will be one of the most lucrative portions of the branch lines of the Grand Trunk Pacific—and it will be the more lucrative because of the fall of the Quebec bridge. Owing to that disaster we know that for many years to come the grain from the west will necessarily have to go by that route, so that this branch line will have the carrying trade practically of all grain from the west that cannot be carried by other railways. In what position is that branch line? It received a railway subsidy from the Dominion government of $1,209,000; it received a subsidy in cash from the provincial government of $378,000; it received from Fort William and Port Arthur, or one of them, $300,000 in cash and $50,000 to assist in building a bridge, or $350,000; in all it has received from Dominion, provincial and municipal authorities, $1,937,000, practically $2,000,000 in hard cash. In addition to that it received from the Ontario government 675,000 acres of land, which I value at $2 an acre, making $1,350,000 the value of that land. Thus altogether it has received from the Dominion, provincial and municipal authorities $3,287,000. In addition to that, surely the Grand Trunk Pacific or those behind it, the Grand Trunk, have put some of their own money into that institution. There must be a very valuable equity in the Lake Superior branch of the Grand Trunk Pacific; upon the admission of the Finance Minister there is no doubt that a large proportion of the stock in the Lake Superior branch of the Grand Trunk Pacific is held by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, and it is only right, when this company is asking this government for $10,000,000 more, that they should give us what little security they can in the Lake Superior division. That is along the line of my resolution.

I come now to the Grand Trunk Pacific Townsite Development Company. This company was instituted in order to take from the Grand Trunk Pacific Company something which legitimately belonged to that company in order to take the cream of the institution and put it in the hands of a private company. We find the directors of that company are Charles N. Hays, with two shares, $200; E. J. Chamberlin, with two shares, $200; William Wainwright, with two shares, $200; W. H. Biggar, two shares, $200; E. M. Fitzhugh, two shares, $200. In all these directors of that company have ten shares upon which they paid $1,000. The company is incorporated at $5,000,000; $3,000,000 of this is paid up and has been issued. Who owns the balance of that $3,000,000? Of the 30,000 shares of the stock issued, ten shares have gone to the directors, who are also the directors of the Grand Trunk Pacific and intimately connected with the Grand Trunk. Ten of these shares belong to them and the remaining 29,990 belong to the Grand Trunk Pacific, and why should not we, when the Grand Trunk Pacific own 29,990 shares in that company say to them: 'If you intend to repay this loan, give us an assignment or a mortgage on the 29,990 shares.' They have 78,000 acres of land, a large proportion of which is in townsite. They own 86 townsites between Winnipeg and Edmonton and we do not know how many more they will own between Edmonton and the coast. I quote an extract from a pamphlet issued by the Grand Trunk Pacific in November:

> The Grand Trunk Town and Development Company (Limited), a majority of the capital stock of which is held by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company——

And when they say a majority they mean 29,990 shares out of 30,000.

> —has acquired land for 86 townsites, between Winnipeg and Edmonton, which have been subdivided into lots and placed on the market for sale; there has been an interest displayed in these townsites most gratifying to the company, and thousands of lots have already been sold. Thriving towns are springing up where a few months ago there was nothing but the bare prairie; grain elevators, warehouses, dwellings, stores and other evidences of remarkable activity are presented immediately following the laying of the track. The growth is especially astonishing at the division points or terminals of which there are five between Winnipeg and Edmonton, namely: at Rivers, Manitoba, Melville, Watrons and Biggar, Saskatchewan, and Wainwright, Alberta, and there are many other towns which given promise of notable development.

As the construction of the railway proceeds westerly from Edmonton, townsites will be established along the line, and these will be on the market in 1909.

Hon. gentlemen will see that these townsites are not worth more than $2 or $3 an acre except for the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and were it not for the assistance of the government which has contributed practically nine-tenths of the cost of the construction of that road, those townsites would be practically valueless. Is it not right and just that they should give to us as security what legitimately belongs to the Grand Trunk Pacific in respect of the increment which should go to the Grand Trunk Pacific if these townsites had been allowed to remain under the control of that railway where they properly belonged. When the Grand Trunk Pacific come to us for a $10,000,000 loan we should say: You, as the Grand Trunk Pacific Company own 29,990 shares in that townsite company. You have the control and you can, if you will, and you should give to us a mortgage upon your interest in the Townsite and Development Company. In addition to this they own three-quarters of the townsite of Prince Rupert and we all know that in the course of a few years their interest in Prince Rupert will be worth probably millions of dollars.

In addition to that they have the Grand Trunk Pacific Telephone Company. Wherever a profit is going to be made out of the transactions of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company there is some subsidiary company to reap it. We have the Grand Trunk Pacific Telegraph Company, and in a prospectus relating to it, the Grand Trunk Pacific Company say:

> The Grand Trunk Pacific Telegraph Company was incorporated by Act of parliament, 1906, with a capital stock of $5,000,000, for the purpose of constructing a telegraph system along the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. The company has broad powers and may establish, construct or acquire by purchase, lease or otherwise, and may maintain and operate any overhead, underground or cable line or lines of telegraph or telephone, or any system of wireless telegraphy, &c.

You have there the telegraph company, which the gentlemen who belong to the Grand Trunk Pacific also control and operate by a separate corporation. Now we say that these institutions, if not the telegraph company, certainly the other two companies which the Grand Trunk Pacific control, should be pledged to this government as security for this loan. We find that the Grand Trunk Pacific has been shorn of all these necessary adjuncts which enable it to be translated from a supine vertebrae into a useful, healthy and legitimate corporate entity capable of earning a decent livelihood. That being the case, we say the mortgage should contain a provision creating a lien upon the assets of these other two companies which the Grand Trunk Pacific itself controls. So far as I can see, there is no logical reason why the Grand Trunk Pacific controlling the interest of these two companies should not pledge them to us as further security for the loan. We desire to get all the security we can; we desire to get this transaction placed as near as possible to that of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company loan of 1884 for the purpose of making it to the interest of the Grand Trunk Pacific to pay back this loan. One of the reasons why the Canadian Pacific Railway Company paid back the loan was because we had an undoubted security of $200,000,000. The Finance Minister himself admits that as a direct security the mortgage which we are getting from the Grand Trunk Pacific is practically worth nothing, because there are ahead of us three other prior mortgages. So we are in the position of getting a fourth mortgage which the minister himself practically admits is valueless, and we fall back then upon the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. As I said before, I do not place so much value upon the Grand Trunk Railway Company's guarantee, as the government do, because according to admission we have $121,000,000 of mortgage bonds which form the first mortgage against the Grand Trunk ahead of us; we have $19,000,000 rentals capitalized ahead of us, and we have this Bill passed this year for $12,000,000 more. The Grand Trunk are issuing these bonds to the extent of $12,000,000 which will also be a prior charge to the present guarantee. That is to say we have directly ahead of us $152,000,000 on the Grand Trunk guarantee. But that is not all. According to the figures brought down by the Finance Minister, the Grand Trunk Company has already guaranteed $30,000,000 more to other creditors and that $30,000,000 more stands exactly in the same position as we do with respect to the present $10,000,000 guarantee. So we have $152,000,000 of direct mortgage security ahead of our Grand Trunk Railway guarantee and the $30,000,000 guarantee standing side by side with the present guarantee. So I ask hon. gentlemen, in view of these figures, do they not think it is right that the Grand Trunk Pacific should hand over to us as further security the interest in these two other companies, which interest they control. I have therefore much pleasure in moving:

That the order of the third reading be discharged, and that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House with power to amend the same by providing that the security to be taken and held by the government for the proposed loan should include a mortgage covering the interests of the company (a) in paid-up stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific Townsite and Development Company; and (b) in the branch line from Port Arthur to the main line of the National Transcontinental Railway; subject, however, to any charges or liens now outstanding thereon.

Mr. FIELDING. My objection to the motion of my hon. friend is that, in the judgment of the government, which we respectfully ask the House to confirm, there is abundant security for the loan of $10,000,000 which is proposed by this legislation. I think I should not be wrong if I stated that there has never been any loan transaction made by this government in which we had such good security for our money. My hon. friend refers to the alleged securities, which he says were worth $200,000,000, put up in one form or another by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. My hon. friend must know at once that if they could have realized $200,000,000, or one-tenth of that sum on these securities, they would not have come to the government for help at all. The value of any security is the immediate value; the value of any security is the value you can realize upon it in the markets of the world. Though these securities proved themselves in the end to be of great value, it was self-evident that if they had been of great financial value at the time, the company would have raised the money in the money market, and would not have come to the government of Canada at all. It is perfectly evident that at the time the Canadian Pacific Railway Company produced these securities they had little or no substantial value; therefore as a security for the time being they are not worthy of the commendation that my hon. friend awards to them. Ultimately they did become valuable, ultimately the loan was paid back. But if we look at the transaction as it occurred at the time the loan was made, it is quite evident that if these securities had had any substantial security in the money market, the company would have raised the money on the money market and would not have come to the government of Canada at all. So in that sense the securities were not valuable, and the government did not have proper security for its money. The government loaned the money upon the faith that the country would be improved, the government loaned the money upon the faith that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would prove a success, and happily that expectation proved correct. But as a money security, as a market security, as a banking transaction, the securities which they put up had no substantial value comparatively speaking, because if they had, the company would not have been obliged to apply to the treasury of Canada.

Now turn to the security we are putting up. I put aside the question of the mortgage which, as I have said, while it is of value for the future, has no immediate value. I do not attach great importance to it, but I hold that we have the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. My hon. friend speaks of the immense amount of securities of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I shall not follow him in that, I gave the figures before, showing that after all these securities were provided for there was a surplus in the Grand Trunk Railway Company's affairs which would have abundantly protected this loan; and the later reports of last year's transactions confirm that statement and make it even stronger than I did. But we need not go into the question of the value of the securities. The money market watches all these things, and the value of a security can be found at almost any time in the financial journals. But the point I desire to call attention to is that these securities have a financial value, they have a commercial value, they have a value fixed by the men who know how to value these things. All the securities outstanding are well known, all the obligations of the Grand Trunk Railway Company are well known, all the guarantees are well known, and in face of it all the money market fixes the value on securities of a similar character. In the 'Economist' of the 24th April I find that the four per cent bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, issued for the prairie section and which bear the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, are quoted at from 92 to 94. That is the value of this class of bonds in the money market to-day. That is the value on the counters of the bankers in London. Cut off a small percentage to represent the difference between an ordinary quotation and what they would receive for a large issue, and I would be justified in stating that you could take these $10,000,000 of bonds, go to any reputable banking house and perhaps get 90 cents on the dollar to-day. What is the use of talking about having no security for this loan? The most that can be said is that we take the risk of a margin of possibly 10 per cent. Any man who knows anything of the history of the Grand Trunk affairs, any man who knows the standing of the Grand Trunk in the money markets of the world, will say at once that, when we have for our security the Grand Trunk guarantee, which is quoted in the money market at from 92 to 94, it is preposterous to assert that this government have not an excellent security for this loan.

My hon. friend has had a good deal to say about the town sites. He wants to know about the town sites. At an earlier stage of this discussion several hon. members on the other side of the House had a good deal to say about rake-offs, about some individuals getting a profit out of this. We were told that individuals were skimming this business and making money out of it for their personal profit. No attempt has been made to sustain any charge. It was suggested that in connection with the Town Sites Company there were some individuals who were making money at the expense of the company. My hon. friend now says that the stock of the Town Sites Company, a subsidiary company, is held by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company of Canada, and therefore my hon. friend will see that the suggestions offered at an earlier stage of this debate that some individual officials of the Grand Trunk Railway Company were making money privately out of this transaction were entirely unjustified. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company have formed a Town Site Company for purposes which are entirely legitimate. We were told that the government had given them a great deal of land. The government sold them that land at $3 an acre, but we reserved a quarter interest in the profits of the Town Site Company, a fact which my hon. friend has not mentioned at all. There is nothing in any transaction between the Grand Trunk Pacic Railway Company and the Town Sites Company that any one can say is not perfectly legitimate and fair. There is nothing in any transaction between the government and the Town Sites Company but is fair and proper and in the interests of the Dominion.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Did the hon. gentleman ask the Town Site Company to give us security for this loan, their interest in that company?

Mr. FIELDING. No. I think that when we have got a security of $9 out of $10 of the highest mercantile value, it is nonsense to ask them to give us other security. And then reference has been made to the common stock. The common stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to-day has little or no commercial value. There is some $25,000,000 of it, but if any hon. gentleman can get possession of it and if he will take it to any of the banks and ask them to loan him one per cent of the whole amount I do not think he can get the money. It is worth substantially nothing at the present time. The stock of a new railway company has no immediate commercial value. Its value depends on the future. Its value depends on the enterprise. It would be no good to us to-day as a security, and if at any time, by the development of the enterprise, that common stock becomes valuable, we do not want it as a security because it cannot be worth anything until the obligation of the Grand Trunk Pacific has been met. If then, by the development of the enterprise, this common stock becomes of value, at that moment our loan and every other debt against that enterprise will have been fully protected. Believing then that we have abundant security for our loan, better security than a government usually gets, and immensely better than we got in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway, I have to ask the House not to agree to my hon. friend's amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Middlebro) negatived on the same division.

Mr. G. H. PERLEY (Argenteuil). Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance objects very strongly to asking this company for any further security but I have a suggestion to make on lines which have already been discussed and an amendment to propose which, I think, will probably meet the views of the hon. gentleman and of the several members of the government. The Grand Trunk Railway Company own a large quantity of the stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. In the Act passed in 1903 it was provided that the Grand Trunk Pacific should take and pay for this stock as it was needed and hold it all. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said that time that every dollar of the money that was received for this common stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific would be used in the construction of the railway. It was for the purpose of enabling the Grand Trunk to receive some common stock for which they were to put up some money for the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific that provision was made in 1903. This, however, did not suit the Grand Trunk, or the Grand Trunk Pacific and in 1904 they came again to this parliament and got a change made in the Act by which the Grand Trunk Pacific were allowed to issue to the Grand Trunk common stock as fully paid up stock, not in return for cash or money, but in return for services to be rendered to the Grand Trunk and especially for a guarantee of Grand Trunk Pacific bonds. The Grand Trunk guaranteed these bonds and now they find themselves unable to float these bonds on the London market at a satisfactory price and they therefore come to this government and ask them for this loan. Do the Grand Trunk at the same time offer to give back this common stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific which they have received in return for their guarantee? Not at all. They propose to keep it all the same. What I am going to suggest in regard to this stock will not hurt anybody, will not hurt the Grand Trunk or the Grand Trunk Pacific. It will simply protect us in case this loan of $10,000,000 is not repaid. Every hon. member of this House knows the difficulty there is in foreclosing a mortgage when a large enterprise fails. There is always a lot of trouble about it and it takes a long time. If we got the common stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific transferred to us in the meantime it would relieve us of all this trouble in case the mortgage had to be foreclosed. The Act provided for the guarantee of the government on a so-called first mortgage. and for the guarantee of the Grand Trunk on a so-called second bond mortgage. But they really were on a par with each other and it was provided that if there is a default in the payment of either of these issues of bonds a receiver shall be appointed.

The duty of the receiver is to pay, first the working expenses, and after that to divide pro rata any surplus he may have between the holders of the first and second mortgage bonds so called. I would like to see any such difficulty avoided. It seems to me this is a most unwise provision in the original Act and that we ought to try to safeguard ourselves against similar trouble in connection with this loan. I suggest that the Grand Trunk Railway Company should transfer to the government all the common stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific at present in its possession. I do not suggest this as a security, for the Minister of Finance is perfectly right when he says that the stock has no value at the present time. But I ask that it be transferred in order that we may have it in our possession in case of default in the payment of these bonds. At the same time provision would be made so that the voting power in this stock should remain with the Grand Trunk Company so long as there is no default in the payment of bonds or interest. What I suggest is a simple precaution to protect the people of the country. The government are the trustees of the people of Canada, but it would seem that the arguments advanced by government supporters have all been in favour of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Grand Trunk Railway Companies, and that the interests of the people have been lost sight of. I enter my protest against the evident desire on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to make the people of the country believe that we on this side of the House are in some way opposed to the completion of this Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. Difference of opinion did exist when the original scheme was brought before parliament, but it has been sanctioned by the people and we quite realize that the road must be completed as promptly as possible. The amendment which I offer will not in any way interfere with the credit of the Grand Trunk Railway or the Grand Trunk Pacific. It will still allow the voting power on the stock and complete control of the railway, so that when the $10,000,000 is paid back the stock will be transferred to the present holders. In case of default, however, the government will have the common stock in their possession and they will be able to assume the road subject to the other liens on it without process of law and without all the trouble which would otherwise be necessary to assert their rights. I beg to move:

That the order of the third reading be discharged, and that the said Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole House with power to amend the same by providing that all the stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company in the control of the Grand Trunk Railway Company shall be conveyed and pledged to the government, to be held until the amount advanced has been repaid with interest, but subject to any necessary or reasonable provision as to power to vote on the said stock in the meantime.

Amendment of Mr. Perley negatived on the same division.

Mr. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Portage la Prairie). I have also an amendment to offer, but before making any remarks directly bearing on that amendment, I shall say a few words with reference to the construction work on the Grand Trunk Pacific, particularly in western Canada. I do not conceive that at this late hour it would be proper for me to take up the time of the House at length. The matter which I wish to bring to the attention of the House in the first place is in regard to the nationality of the individuals to whom the money of this country has gone in connection with the construction of that line in the west. For some two years this has been a burning question, in the west. On the 22nd of March last certain questions were put to the Minister of Railways by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) on this very subject, and I quote from 'Hansard':

Mr. Sifton—by Mr. A. H. Clarke—asked:

1. What is the total number of employees upon the operating staff of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway above the rank of brakemen?

2. Of the total number how many are British subjects, and how many are citizens of the United States?

3. What is the total number of employees upon the engineering staff of the Grand Trunk Pacific, exclusive of labourers?

4. Of the total how many are British subjects, and how many are citizens of the United States?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. The information to answer this question is furnished by the vice-president and general manager of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, as follows: Total number of men above the rank of brakesmen, is 135.

2. It would seem to be impossible to secure information as to the nationality of the men mentioned without making a complete canvass from Edmonton to Prince Rupert, where many of the employees are in practically inaccessible locations at this time of the year. The correspondence indicates that it would take at least three months to get the information. It is also stated that 90 per cent of the employees referred to are British subjects or have been residents of Canada for from three to ten years, this assertion being based on the March pay-rolls and from information at hand.

3. 231.

4. Answered by Number 2, in addition to which it is stated that the following are British subjects: Second vice-president, chief engineer, bridge engineer, freight traffic manager.

And so on through a list of about 15 officials. The House will observe that in these answers the government announced to the country that the percentage, so far as they can estimate, of the operating staff of that road west of Lake Superior, above the rank of brakeman, is 90 per cent of British subjects, that the same figures apply to the engineering staff and that in addition there are two others whom they state are British subjects as well. It would appear from the statement of the department that in the whole list of the engineering staff given only two are British subjects.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will my hon. friend allow me to point out that the statement of the department is not the department's information, but is information furnished to us by the company.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I hope my language could not be interpreted as challenging the bona fides of the department or of the minister in the statement he gave. I do, however, wish, on such information as I have, to challenge its correctness. The answer to the second part of the series of questions is particularly subject to challenge. The engineering staff of the Grand Trunk Pacific in western Canada, from what information I have, and I venture to say that it is very complete, is practically dominated by American citizens. To say that 90 per cent of that staff are Canadian citizens is to say what the Grand Trunk Pacific authorities, who furnished that information, could not possibly have had reasonable grounds for asserting. There has been furnished to me to-day, and I can give it to the House, a list of 56 employees of that road, of whom the great majority are engineers; the list is furnished by a gentleman who is an engineer himself and who has been connected with the railway; and of those 56, no less that 40 are citizens of the United States of America. In the list which has been furnished to the Minister of Railways, numbering those on the engineering staff at 231, the company have doubtless taken advantage of the question as put to include in that number those far down in the grade, such as chainmen, perhaps servants, and other employees in minor capacities. Among those who receive the larger remuneration on the railway, the complaint is very prevalent, and has been for some time past, throughout the western country, that a very decided preference has always been given to citizens of the United States over citizens of Canada. If there were not civil engineers, architects and others of kindred professions actually idle on the streets of Canada to-day, and competent men at that, this state of affairs would not be so bad. But, Sir, there are highly trained, competent and tried civil engineers idle on the streets of western Canada to-day, and I am informed and believe that the systematic policy of this company is to leave these engineers and give a preference to citizens of foreign lands. There is a double objection to that in this case: In the first place, because the road is being financed practically and entirely by the Dominion of Canada; and, secondly, because the conditions prevailing in this country are peculiarly suited and peculiarly well known to Canadian engineers trained in this country. Instances could be given where the employment of foreign engineers has been highly detrimental to the interests of the road, where serious mistakes have been made entailing heavy loss, and in consequence heavy liabilities to this country, simply by reason of the fact that the engineers employed were trained under conditions that do not prevail in the northern zone of this continent.

Mr. TALBOT. Will my hon. friend be good enough to tell us if he knows of any engineer or architect of repute who is to-day idle in any city in Canada?

Mr. MEIGHEN. I certainly do. I hope my hon. friend will not be so personal as to ask me the name.

Mr. TALBOT. I will push the question harder. I would like to know the name.

Mr. MEIGHEN. My hon. friend, I am afraid, displays a lack of something; the House will have to judge what it is. The system which has resulted in the state of affairs to which I have called attention is known to me in some degree. I cannot say that I know many instances, but I know of more than one. A citizen of the United States, perhaps known to some one high in authority on the road, who is likewise a citizen of that country, writes to the engineering department applying for a position. The answer is given, out of deference to the provisions of our alien labour law, that it is impossible to employ him in this way, but that if he reports to the city of Winnipeg or somewhere else before a certain individual on a certain date, it is more than likely or possible that he will receive employment. That is a very neat way of getting around the alien labour law. The result has been, as I have stated, that a feeling very far from content prevails among the profession in this country, particularly in the western part of the country with which I have some personal acquaintance. Now, I submit, especially at this juncture, when we are called upon to vote more money for this road, that it would not be amiss to inquire where that money is going in this regard. I believe that some three or four years ago Judge Winchester was appointed a commissioner to look into the observance of the alien labour law on the part of this company, and that it was found that serious breeches of the law were committed, or methods of getting around it were employed, by the company. I believe that considerable improvement took place as the result of that action by the government. I believe from reports that I have received that there exists to-day a condition of affairs which would justify a repetition of that action.

Having said this much, I shall proceed, very briefly, to a statement of the principles of the amendment which I propose to lay before the House. The government have pronounced, as the outstanding merit of this Grand Trunk project, that it was altogether a Canadian project, designed as set out in the very recital of the contract originally entered into in 1893 to build up and protect Canadian ports. But when a resolution is moved by this side of the House with that object, and that alone in view, it is voted down by the other side and voted down on the avowed reason, as stated by the leader of the government, that another time will come when we can introduce perhaps a clause of that kind, but that time stated by the right hon. gentleman is the very time when this very clause in the contract will forbid its being introduced.

Another pardonable principle submitted as the basis of this proposed loan, is that it is a banking proposition; but when we endeavour to infuse into the Bill some principle of banking, by providing that we shall at least not lose on the transaction, that proposition is voted down at the instance of the Finance Minister who declares that he has an abstract, theoretical horror of a fixed rate of interest but fails to give us any reason, sound or otherwise, for his invincible repugnance.

And when we endeavour to infuse into this measure the principle of greater security, as a sound principle of banking, we are answered that we have abundant security. The argument of the Minister of Finance on that point was very peculiar. He instanced the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in which it was shown by the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) that we had $200,000,000 of security on a valuation at that time—not a valuation to-day—for the $30,000,000 we advanced. The hon. minister argued that if the Canadian Pacific Railway had a valuation of $200,000,000 at that time, they would not have had to come to the government of that day for a loan. The very fact, he said, that they were forced to do so argued that the security they had to offer was of no value then in the money markets of the world. But in speaking of the present case, he said we have abundant security. If, however, we apply the same argument to this case of the Grand Trunk Pacific as we did to that of the Canadian Pacific Railway, what is the result? The letter of Mr. Hays, the president of the Grand Trunk Railway, to the Finance Minister practically admits that the company was forced to come to this government for a loan. He said in that letter that if this government did not grant the loan the work would have to stop. Could he more plainly say that he could not get the money any where else? Applying then to that case the reasoning of the Finance Minister in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway, we must come to the conclusion that the security the Grand Trunk Pacific have to offer is not considered good in the money markets of the world. Thus in one breath the Finance Minister argues that the security which the Grand Trunk Pacific has to offer is absolutely good, and in the other that it is no good at all. That is the only logical deduction to be made from his argument.

Aside from that point, I have endeavoured to take the government at their word and infuse the principles of banking into this Bill, but they decline my proposition. They put forward an alternative proposition and say we are in partnership with the Grand Trunk Pacific. Well, I am endeavouring to infuse some of the principles of partnership into this Bill since they reject the principles of banking. One of the principles of partnership is that those who contribute to the capital of a business shall also share in its proprietorship. Surely if there is a cardinal principle of partnership, it is that which is embodied in the amendment I beg to move. In section 26 of the Act of 1903, it is set out that the Grand Trunk Pacific shall be capitalized at $45,000,000, of which $20,000,000 shall be represented by the preference stock and the balance by common stock, and that the common stock shall go to the Grand Trunk Railway as one of the partners. For that $25,000,000 the Grand Trunk Railway said they would give their guarantee, which unfortunately has turned out not to be worth very much. Still they get that $25,000,000 common stock for that guarantee. And inasmuch as we have to give our guarantee for this loan, as we have to raise the money, why should we not get our share of stock as well as the Grand Trunk Railway? True the $25,000,000 of common stock has already been allotted the Grand Trunk Railway, but there is still $20,000,000 of the preference stock untouched, why should we not have a share in that? Why should we not let the Grand Trunk Pacific have one half of that stock and have the government take the other half, and thereby share in the partnership when we share so largely in the liability. I therefore beg to move, Mr. Speaker, the folowing amendment:

That the said Bill be not now read a hird time, but that it be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole with power to amend the same by providing that the Dominion of Canada, in consideration of the financial aid which it contributes o his underaking, shall receive paid up preference stock of the Company to the amount of $10,000,000.

Amendment negatived on the same division.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is moved that the Bill be read the third time.—Carried.

Mr. FIELDING. Carried on the same division reversed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No one called out 'no.'

Mr. FIELDING. There are no 'no's,' all right.

Motion agreed, and Bill read the third time and passed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business tomorrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will take up the civil service resolutions if convenient. Otherwise we will take up Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps it would be well to go into Supply at once, and take up the civil service resolutions another day. We can take them up any day after to-morrow that the right hon. gentleman suggests.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.15 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, May 5, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

BARRIEFIELD CAMP—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I wish to call attention to an article in the last issue of the 'Military Gazette' which charges me with having made statements involving the good name of a Kingstonian, and with bringing discredit and dishonour on the Department of Militia and Defence. These statements have reference to my criticism of the expenditture on the servants' cottages at the Royal Military College, Kingston. The justification for that criticism of mine is found in the fact that the Minister of Public Works himself, after giving consideration to the matter, reduced the item that I criticised, by $20,000. This article in the 'Military Gazette' also charges me with reflecting on the Commandant and the entire staff, as well as on every officer, non-commissioned officer and soldier that attended the Barriefield camp last year. That allegation on the part of the writer has reference to a statement as to the drunkenness and brawling which I witnessed at Barriefield camp one Sunday, last year. I wish simply to say, Sir, that my remarks with regard to the camp were preceded by some remarks of the Liberal member for Huntingdon (Mr. Robb), which remarks were concurred in, almost to their entire extent, by the Minister of Militia himself. By reference to the statement of the Minister of Militia, it will be found that the personnel of the militia was not what it should be, and that the canteen was a nuisance which the department was endeavouring to regulate. I believe that the Minister of Militia would receive the endorsation of the people of this country, if he made an effort to control the sale of liquor at military camps. Now, Sir, I did not say that the men at the Barriefield camp were vicious and drunken; I did say that those in charge of the canteen were charged with selling liquor, and I repeat that statement now. One of the men charged was tried and convicted and fined for selling liquor; and, as regards the other men charged, the charge was amended by consent to having liquor in their possession, instead of selling it. All of these people pleaded guilty, and all of them were fined. In fact, the only regimental corps that was not fined was the 47th Battalion, which did not have any canteen. I repeat that I did not state in this House, as the article says, that the men at the Barriefield camp were vicious and drunken. I could not have made that statement in truth, because I am very well acquainted with many of the men who attend that camp, and I know that some of them come from the most respected families in and around that district, and are orderly and respectable themselves. I repeat that there was drunkenness and brawling at the Barriefield camp on Sunday afternoon. I have made careful inquiry into the matter, and it is only fair for me to state that in my belief most of that drunkenness and brawling was on the part of civilians, and not on the part of the soldiers themselves. In fact, I was more careful to investigate, on account of this matter being called to my attention by some of the officers from my locality, and, although drinking no doubt did exist in the camp there, as probably it will exist in any camp, yet I think it is quite possible that had it not been for the civilians who visited that camp, the drinking of the soldiers themselves would not have been noticed. I wish, further, to say, that in no way did I in my remarks on that occasion attribute any wrong to the Commandant, Colonel Gordon, or to the officers under him. I believe, Sir, that the fault, if fault there is, lies at the head of the Militia Department. From all I have been able to learn, and I desire to say it here now, I believe that the District Officer Comamnding at Kingston is an officer who well deserves the high reputation he enjoys in the vicinity in which he is best known. I believe he is a gentleman who will carry out any instructions that are given him, and if the Minister of Militia should issue an order abolishing the canteen, I am firmly convinced that, so far as the camp at Barriefield is concerned, and so long as Colonel Gordon is in command, the instructions of the Minister of Militia will be carried out to the letter.

REPORT OF THE CENTRAL RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. FOSTER. Yesterday, I moved for leave to introduce, by unanimous consent, a motion, but the assent was not given and I let it lie as a notice that I would move it. I beg therefore to move:

That there be laid on the table of the House a copy of the order in council of the government of New Brunswick, dated June 5, 1908, of the statutes of the said province under which said order in council was passed and of the findings of the commission appointed under the said statute and order in council.

The reason why I am moving this is to place upon the table, for the information and inspection of all the members of the House, these documents so that there can be no question as to their genuineness in connection with a motion which will form the foundation of observations to be made hereafter by hon. gentlemen in pursuance of the busineses of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It will be sufficient to call attention to the fact that this motion is absolutely out of order for several reasons. At this moment I think it will be sufficient to mention one only, and that is that there has not been sufficient notice according to the rules of the House. There are several reasons which I might urge against the motion of my hon. friend, but this, I think, is sufficient.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is evidently very much afraid of these documents. That is apparent at once. He seeks to take refuge behind some supposed rule of order. Inasmuch as the report of this commission contains matters gravely affecting a member of his own government, I thought he would have been the first to rise in the House and move, as a matter of privilege, without any notice, that authentic copies of these documents should be laid on the table of the House. But the right hon. gentleman does not seem disposed to take that course. He is strong on rules of order in this connection. I think it would be a pity to set up the precedent in the public life in Canada that the report of a commission which, as every hon. member knows, gravely touches the public conduct of a member of the administration, should not be laid on the table of the House as soon as it has been presented.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member (Mr. R. L. Borden) can only discuss the point of order at this stage.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Very good.

Mr. SPEAKER. This is not the motion of which notice was given yesterday.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am discussing the point of order. I am saying that inasmuch as this motion touches the public conduct of a member of the government, my right hon. friend the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) should be entitled to move it as a matter of privilege and without any notice whatever. On that ground I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the motion should be adopted this morning as a matter of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would like to have any misunderstanding cleared up. This is not the motion of which notice was given yesterday.

Mr. FOSTER. I will explain that. I gave notice to the House yesterday in a general way of the subject matter which my motion would include. Afterwards, I wrote out, in obedience to a request of the clerk, a form of motion. A sufficient time, as I understand, has not passed to enable that motion to come regularly before the House. I gave notice of the substance of the motion, and this morning I moved a motion embodying the substance of the notice which I gave. It may not be in the same words and it is open to the House to accept or reject it. I move it for the convenience of the House in connection with subjects which are before the House, or which are imminent, and it is for the House to say whether or not, by consent, or as a matter of privilege, it shall be adopted.

Mr. FIELDING. It is unfortunate, if the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) desired merely to discuss the point of order, that he should have begun his remarks with the rather superfluous observation that the Prime Minister——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. FIELDING——was afraid to have these papers presented to the House. I think it will take even a more astute mind than that of my hon. friend——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FIELDING. What is wrong? What is the point of order?

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course, this motion cannot be presented at all, except by consent under rule 8, without two days' notice it cannot be discussed except by unanimous consent. If there is no consent it will have to stand for notice.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 172) to amend the Railway Act.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Explain.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Mr. Speaker, this Bill is intended to correct what is a manifest error in the Act in reference to train men. The clause of the Act that I propose to amend provides that when a train is being backed or pushed in front of the locomotive a man must be stationed on top of the car leading. This is quite right, but it goes farther and says that if an engine is being backed up a man must be placed on the tender behind the engine. Everybody knows that the engineer upon an engine can see just as well behind the tender as he can see in front of the engine. There is no place for a brakeman on the rear end of the tender. This rule is one which was avoided until the last year or two when the enforcement of the law became more stringent and trainmen were brought to book for what they did not do. It would be as fair to ask these men to sit on the cow catcher as to sit on the rear of the tender. The intention of the amendment is to strike out the line which says that a man must sit on the tender when the locomotive is backing up. A number of accidents have occurred and the men in my riding who are interested have requested me to endeavour to have this grievance removed. I hope the Minister of Railways will see his way clear to make this change in the law and to incorporate the principle of my Bill in any one of the many railway bills which he has on the order paper, before the end of the session.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (Simcoe) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 173) to amend the Manitoba Grain Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (Simcoe). This Bill is intended to correct a grievance under which the vessel men suffer. Most of the grain from the Northwest is shipped by rail to the head of the lakes and then carried by steamer to the terminal elevators on the lakes or to the sea-board. The law at present provides for the inspection of this grain, and that the certificates should follow it to the sea-board, which is a very wise provision. It provides also that the grain shall be weighed into the terminal elevator on the great lakes by special weighmen, and there is no provision in the law which renders it compulsory that the grain shall be weighed into the vessel and out of the vessel again. The result of that has been great loss to the steamship interests on the great lakes last year. The following were the shortages charged against the different companies named:—

CANADIAN VESSELS.

Summary of Shortages in 1908 Outturns.

	Net Shortages.
Northern Navigation Co.	3,160
Montreal Transportation Co.	10,357
The Canadian Northwest SS. Co.	1,152
The Midland Navigation Co.	7,592·06
The Farrar Transportation Co.	3,913·30
The Canadian Lake and Ocean Navigation Co.	5,557·48
The Canadian Lake Transportation Co.	2,819·38
The St. Lawrence and Chicago Steam Navigation Co.	6,005
F. E. Hall & Co.	380
Steamer 'Seguin'	1,264
Inland Navigation Co.	4,773·68
Collingwood Shipping Co.	785·42
Mathews Steamship Co.	652
Turret Crown, Limited.	1,028
Net shortage in outturns... ..Bush.	50,439·32

There does not seem to be any method by which the vessel owners can find out how this grain flies out of the hatches, but at all events it is alleged to disappear somewhere during transport on the lakes. The shortages charged for in the statement I have given are far in excess of what they naturally should be; so much so that it simply meant that these steamship companies were, last year, robbed out of $50,000, when the shortages actually should not have amounted to more than 5,000 bushels all told, allowing for shrinkage and everything else of that kind. The Marine Association held a meeting here and presented a memorial to the minister asking that something should be done in this respect. They also adopted a uniform bill of lading, which provided that they would not be responsible for shortages except to the extent of half a bushel for every 1,000 bushels carried. There was a dead-lock between the shippers and the carriers, with the result that this arrangement has now been broken, and the steamer interests have to fall back on the same old rules that prevailed before, and there is no doubt that this year they will be unjustly taxed with a shortage of 75,000 bushels. There is plenty of money in this business for all concerned; there is no necessity for there being any graft on the part of anybody. The law now provides that the official weighmen at the head of the lakes shall be remunerated out of charges on the grain, and the government is not out one cent on that score. The idea of the Bill is, by the insertion of a very few words in the present law, to provide that the grain shall be weighed in and weighed out, unless both the shipper and the carrier agree to the contrary.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES ACT—CLERICAL ERROR.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 174) to correct a clerical error in chapter 63 of the statutes of 1908 respecting railway subsidies.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. GRAHAM. This Bill is to correct a peculiar error in the statutes of 1908. At page 1409 of the Votes and Proceedings of July last, the House went into Committee of the Whole to consider resolutions respecting railway subsidies, and among the subsidies was one to the Vancouver, Westminster and Yukon Railway, to aid towards the construction and completion of a railway bridge across Burrard inlet, the amount of the aid being $200,000. That resolution went through the House in its various stages, but to the astonishment of everybody, myself included, when the statute was printed, it was an absolute blank, so far as the amount was concerned.

Mr. CROCKET. A typographical error?

Mr. HAGGART. Another typographical error.

Mr. LENNOX. They will occur.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is to correct that and to insert the amount in the statute that this Bill is introduced.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Under the circumstances stated by the minister, it may be regarded, I suppose, as a mere typographical error, and therefore a resolution would not be necessary. The minister does regard it as a typographical error?

Mr. GRAHAM. Oh, certainly; the records of the House show that it is in the omission in the Printing Bureau.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How did so unfortunate a typographical error occur?

Mr. GRAHAM. It must be in the air.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am glad that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways recognizes the possibility of these typographical errors. May I venture to hope that he will express to his colleague, the Minister of Public Works, the possibility of such typographical errors occurring even in well-ordered departments of the government. And may I cite this as the first instance within recent years at least, when such a typographical error has made necessary the enactment of a special Act of parliament. Perhaps the Minister of Railways will not be indisposed to extend the provisions of his Bill to certain other typographical errors to which attention has been directed in recent times.

Mr. OLIVER. At this very session of parliament, it was necessary to provide an amendment to the Dominion Lands Act to correct a printer's error.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is the reason the Minister of Railways said it was in the air.

Mr. GRAHAM. I consulted the law clerk, and he assured me it was not necessary, under the circumstances, to have a resolution.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

That from this date to the end of the session this House shall sit on Saturdays, the sittings to commence at eleven o'clock in the morning, and government business to have precedence.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Would my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) make a slight amendment to the effect that the House put a self-denying ordinance on itself and stop promptly at six o'clock on Saturday. You cannot work every night.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is no necessity to amend the order. But it shall be as my hon. friend wishes. I have no objection.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. Would it be proper to state that a number of the members of this year's Bisley team won their positions by using the Ross rifle?

SUPPLY—HON. WM. PUGSLEY AND REPORT OF THE CENTRAL RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. T. W. CROTHERS (West Elgin). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire to direct attention to a matter compromising and reflecting upon the dignity of parliament and the dignity of the whole country as well, a matter in which, therefore every member of this House and every good citizen of this country must feel a keen interest and because of which he must feel deep humiliation. Every one regrets the necessity of introducing anything unpleasant into the deliberations of this House, and the task of doing so which I have undertaken is to me by no means a pleasant or agreeable one. Indeed, I realize it as both ungracious and unpleasant. For my part, there is, however, in this matter no animus whatever, it is purely a strong sense of public duty which impels me to move in the matter, a duty which every member of this House ought to feel when the interests of the country are involved, a duty which may not be ignored without incurring the justly merited condemnation of public opinion. I take it to be the clear duty of this House to maintain at all times a zealous guard over its honour and standing. Representatives are sent to this House by their constituents to sift and inquire into public matters of every kind, to investigate everything of a public nature concerning the welfare of the country. The public acts of public men are public property, and the people have a right to know and, if need be, to inquire into these acts and ascertain of what character they are. The public conduct, past or present, of every officer of this House, of the Prime Minister of this country or any of his colleagues, of every member of this House, of every servant of this government adds to or subtracts from the aggregate public morality and dignity of this country. Any act in violation of strict rectitude on the part of public men, any want of zealous attention to the interest of the country, permeates the whole moral fabric of the people and causes its deterioration. And hence I have no apology to make for introducing the matters whch I am about to introduce. I regard it as a duty, and I have no doubt every member of this House will take that view of it after he hears all that is to be said on the question.

Perhaps you will permit me, before going into the details of this matter, to call the attention of the House for one moment to the tender regard in which the reputation of public men in England is held, not only by public men themselves, but by the whole people of the country. It is the practice in England, universally observed, that where a member of the government is reflected upon by the bench he does not wait to be asked to resign, he at once tenders his resignation. So careful are they in England to guard the reputations of their leading men, feeling and realizing that any other course, any imputation of improper conduct must be injurious to the whole moral fabric of the people. There are many cases that may be referred to, amongst others the Lord Lennox case, the Mundella case, the Mr. Stansfield case, and the Mr. Hayes Fisher case. When there was some question as to the conduct of Mr. Hayes Fisher as a member of a syndicate in consequence of remarks made by a judge upon the bench, Mr. Hayes Fisher used this language in the imperial House of Commons—Judge Buckley from the bench had said that Mr. Fisher and Sir Joseph Lawrence had left the entire management of the syndicate——

Mr. SPEAKER. I would like to know if the hon. gentleman intends to proceed against a member of the House or against a member of the administration. If so I would like to hear argument on the point whether it is in order to bring such a matter to the attention of the House on a motion to go into Committee of Supply. The rules laid down by May are very clear that any charge of the kind must be brought in by substantive motion and due notice given so that it can be amended and discussed; a proffered amendment to the motion to go into Supply cannot be amended.

Mr. CROTHERS. There is no member of this House who has a higher regard or solicitude for the dignity of the Chair than I have and I yield to none in my desire to assist in maintaining that dignity. There is now before the House a motion to go into Supply, and I have a grave grievance as I conceive to present to this House. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will proceed to present it to the House and when the time arrives, if it should arrive, during the progress of my remarks that I am contravening any rule of the House then I have no doubt you will call me to order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understood from the hon. gentleman's remarks that his speech was going to have the effect of calling the attention of the House to the position of a member of this House. If so, it is very clearly laid down that that course cannot be taken on a motion to go into Supply.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would think that the point of order is well taken, but it is the wish of the Minister of Public Works that it should not be insisted upon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was prepared with authority that would sustain the course which my hon. friend (Mr. Crothers) proposes to pursue.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman, if he pleases, may cite authorities, but there are certainly authorities to the contrary and which say that matters of this kind cannot be introduced on a motion to go into Committee of Supply. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) takes a different view. I do not question his view and perhaps he will not question mine, but at all events it is not the intention to raise the point.

Mr. SPEAKER. I thought it my duty to call attention to this matter so that I should be relieved of any responsibility in future. If the House is willing that this course should be followed I leave the responsibility to the House. But the course now being followed is clearly in contradiction of the authorities and custom.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Lest I should be held to be bound by any expression of opinion from the Chair, I would suggest that before the House should come to any such conclusion with respect to a motion which may be introduced in this manner, some authorities which I have taken the trouble to gather should be considered in order that we may arrive at no premature decision. However, it may not be necessary to consider that point now as the Prime Minister has stated that this supposed point of order will not be insisted upon. I merely make this statement because I have given some consideration to the matter, and with all possible respect to the view which you have submitted, Mr. Speaker, and purely for the purpose of saving my rights on a future occasion I ventured to make the statement which I have just made.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I desire to add one word to what my right hon. friend the Prime Minister has stated. So far as I am concerned I am desirous that no objection shall be raised to the fullest and most ample discussion of this matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. The House will see that it is better there should be no misunderstanding on the point, that any thing that is done now is done by the consent of the House.

Mr. CROTHERS. Mr. Speaker, I was about to refer the House to a particular case that occurred in England in the year 1903, the report of which will be found in volume 120 of the English 'Hansard' of that year at page 1254. Mr. Justice Buckley in his judicial capacity had referred to Mr. Hayes Fisher and to Sir Joseph Lawrence who were two directors of a syndicate, and the chief imputation he cast upon them was that they had during the last four years left the management thereof entirely to the chairman, namely, Mr. R. Wallace. Addressing the English House of Commons and referring to the observations that had been made by Mr. Justice Buckley, Mr. Hayes Fisher made these remarks:

It is true that this was done—

Referring to the statement that he and Sir Joseph Lawrence had left the management of the syndicate to the chairman:

It is true that this was done; but I should like to emphasize the fact that the syndicate was not and had never been a trading concern and that apart from the development of the invention there was no business to manage. * * In the result the syndicate was wound up being indebted to only a few creditors and for no very considerable amount. * * Although I am not a rich man, I will not have it said that anybody has lost money through me, and this is the view that Sir Joseph Lawrence also shares; and we yesterday handed our lawyers cheques for £5,000, which is more than sufficient to pay every creditor and the shareholders in question. The judge was good enough to state that in his opinion there was no ground for attributing to either of us any want of personal integrity. And I may also point out that we made no profit of any description—that we drew no directors' fees—that I took up and paid for in cash 1,000 shares and that I advanced the company money that I have not been repaid. So that I have lost sums in connection with the matter which to me are heavy and considerable. I can only say that Sir Joseph Lawrence and I have lodged the money and every shareholder and every contributor and every creditor can have back every single penny that is due to him, I have wronged no man. I have myself been greatly wronged and I bow to the full force of the terrific punishment which has come upon me for this error of judgment committed seven years ago. Some people may say why do you resign? I say emphatically not because I think I am unfit to hold the high office under the government I held until a day ago, but because I accept the judgment of those on whose judgment I rely—for we are not always good judges in our own case—that the censure of a certain judge to which wide circulation has been given renders me open to attack inside and outside this House in the conduct of the business of the treasury.

Mr. Balfour, who was leader of the government, and Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, who was leader of the opposition, both expressed their approval of Mr. Hayes Fisher in resigning under these circumstances, and, a gentleman who once occupied a very prominent position in this House, perhaps the most profound man that Canada has ever produced, sitting in the English House of Commons at the same time —I refer of course to the Hon. Edward Blake—made these observations with reference to the remarks of Mr. Hayes Fisher:

We heartily re-echo the expressions which have fallen from the First Lord of the Treasury and the leader of the opposition, believing that what has happened to-day, however painful it may be to the hon. member himself, has vindicated his own reputation and also maintained the honour and standing of this House.

Mr. Speaker, are the honour and standing of the Canadian House of Commons lower than that of the British House of Commons? I hope and trust not. It will be remembered that some three weeks ago an hon. member sitting on this side of the House called the attention of the right hon. leader of the government to a report which I will refer to later, and that the leader of the government at first said that he had not seen the report, or something of that kind, and that he was not in a position to say what course the government proposed to take in regard to it. But, at a subsequent period, when the question was repeated by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) the leader of the government said that he did not think the circumstances of the case called for any action on the part of the government, and that, therefore, he did not propose to intervene. That hon. members may have a clearer idea of the circumstances that I am about to refer to, I will give a very brief sketch of the conditions. Hon. gentlemen present familiar with the map of New Brunswick will know that the Intercolonial Railway running from Chatham to Moncton runs in a southeasterly direction and that from Moncton to St. John it runs in a southwesterly direction, that between these two points, and about thirty miles from St. John, is a place called Norton on the Intercolonial Railway, that about forty-five miles north of Norton is a place called Chipman, and that southwest from Chipman fifteen miles is a place called Minto. From Minto in a southeasterly direction, about thirty miles away, is a town called Gibson, and just across the river St. John is the city of Fredericton.

The legislature of New Brunswick, many years ago, determined upon the construction of two railways, one extending from Norton northerly to Chipman, forty-five miles, to be called the Central Railway, and the other from Chipman to Gibson, to be called the Chipman-Gibson railway, covering a distance of about forty-miles. The legislature passed an Act providing that a subsidy of $3,000 a mile should be paid towards the construction of both of these railways. A company was incorporated called the Central Railway Company for the purpose of constructing these two railways. A contract was entered into between the government of New Brunswick and the Central Railway Company for the construction of a road from Norton to Chipman, the legislature of New Brunswick contributing $134,000 as a subsidy towards the cost of construction and the government of Canada contributing $142,000 for the construction of the same road. That road was completed about the year 1890. In the year 1901 the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company was incorporated by an Act of the legislature of New Brunswick, chapter 77, and it was authorized to mine coal. The Act provided that:

> The company may lay out, construct and operate a line of railway from any points in the parish of Chipman, in the county of Queens, to Gibson, in the parish of St. Mary's, in the county of York, with the right to build branches thereto and connecting with any railway or railways in New Brunswick.

During the same session of the legislature an Act was passed authorizing the government of New Brunswick to guarantee bonds to the extent of $250,000 for any company that would undertake to construct the road from Chipman to Gibson, a distance of forty-five miles, which was then not constructed. That Act seemed to have several very full provisions for the protection of the people of New Brunswick in reference to the guaranteeing of these $250,000 bonds. It provides that:

> The Lieutenant Governor in Council is hereby empowered on behalf of the province to guarantee the principal and interest of first mortgage bonds or debentures of any company authorized to construct a line of railway from the terminus of the Central Railway at Chipman, in the county of Queens, to Gibson, in the county of York, to an amount not exceeding $250,000.
> The Lieutenant Governor in Council shall not be liable to be called upon for the said guarantee, or any portion thereof, until such railway has been completely constructed and in running order, properly equipped with sufficient rolling stock, and certified to be so by an inspector to be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

It is only proper that I should say here that I think it was in the following year that this section of this law was somewhat modified authorizing the guaranteeing of these bonds as the construction of the work progressed. You will observe that this section provides that none of the bonds should be guaranteed until the whole road was constructed and the rolling stock put on, but the Act of 1902 modified this somewhat so as to permit the guaranteeing of these bonds as the construction progressed. I would ask hon. gentlemen to bear in mind one or two sections that I am now about to read:

> The company shall keep such books and accounts as may from time to time be required by the Lieutenant Governor in Council; and such books and accounts shall at all times be open to the inspection of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, or such person or persons as he may appoint to inspect and audit the same. The company's books and accounts shall be audited each half year by an expert accountant appointed for that purpose by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. All expense of such inspection and auditing shall be borne by the company.

The company shall produce and file semi-annually with the Provincial Secretary, a statement of the business of the company, with the net profits, if any, for the half year immediately preceding, which statement shall be verified under oath by the president or seretary of the said company.

The salary of each officer and the amount of wages paid to any servant or officer of the company, shall be subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council who may fix or alter the amount from time to time so long as the said guarantee by the province shall remain outstanding.

The tariff of rates for the freight and passengers hauled upon the said railway, shall at all times be subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

The road bed, rolling stock and plant of the company, and likewise its tolls and earnings shall be conveyed by such company to a trust company, or other trustees, to be approved by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, by way of mortgage, to secure payment of the principal and interest of such bonds, which trust mortgage shall be in such form and contain such provisions as may be approved of by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

The Provincial Secretary and Attorney General for the province shall be ex-officio members of the board of directors of the said company, and shall have the same powers and privileges as any other member of the board.

The company shall bind itself to establish on the line of railway a plant for mining coal, to the satisfaction of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and capable of mining an average of not less than 500 tons per day.

At the time when the Act was passed the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) was Attorney General of New Brunswick and he is specially designated in section 11 as an ex-officio member of this board clothed with all the authority of every other director of the board. So that the legislature of the province of New Brunswick in authorizing the government to guarantee these bonds threw around the whole transaction the strongest safeguards in the interests of the people, and appointed the hon. gentleman who is to-day Minister of Public Works in this government, ex-officio director, to see to it that all the safeguards that the legislature did provide for the protection of the people were fully carried out. The Central Railway was conveyed to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company in the year 1902, I think.

Mr. PUGSLEY. 1903.

Mr. CROTHERS. Yes, in 1903. The road was operated; a contract was entered into between the government and this company to construct 15 miles of the road extending from Chatham to Minto and that 15 miles was constructed and completed in the year 1904. The remaining 30 miles of the Chatham-Gibson Railway remains unconstructed to this date. The road was operated by the company until the year 1905, when, by an Act of the legislature, or by an order in council authorized by an Act of the legislature, the whole road was taken over by the government of New Brunswick, and our familiar friend Mr. George McAvity, and Senator King, were appointed commissioners to manage the road. Now, in the month of May, 1908, an Act was passed by the legislature, chap. 19, authorizing the appointment of a commission to investigate, and with the permission of the House I will read a few sections of that Act to show the character of the tribunal appointed to make this investigation, and the purpose for which it was appointed:

1. The Lieutenant Governor is hereby empowered by and with the advice and consent of the executive council to cause a commission or commissions to issue under the great seal to three persons, one of whom shall be a judge of the Supreme Court or County Court, or a barrister of not less than ten years' standing, to hold an investigation or inquiry into:

(a) The expenditure of all moneys of the province, granted since the first day of January, A.D., 1901, either as subsidies or otherwise in connection with the railway from Norton to Chipman, and the railway from Chipman to Minto, and the branches thereof:

(b) The issue and sale, pledge, hypothecation or other dealing by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, or by any person or persons acting or purporting to act on its behalf, of or with all bonds and debentures guaranteed by or on behalf of the province and issued or purporting to be issued by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, or by the commissioners of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, guaranteeing of the said bonds or debentures by or on behalf of the province, and the expenditure of the moneys obtained by such sale. pledge, hypothecation or other dealing of or with the said bonds and debentures;

(c) The expenditure of all moneys made by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, upon or in connection with the Central Railway previous to the purchase of the same by the said company;

(d) The purchase of the Central Railway by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company from the Central Railway Company, and the facts and circumstances connected with such purchase;

(e) The money payment or satisfaction received by the holders thereof, or by any other person or persons acting or purporting to act for them, or any of them, on account of, or in connection with the bonds or debentures outstanding against the Central Railway at the time of the purchase of the said railway by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company;

(f) The money payment or satisfaction received by the Central Railway Company or by the shareholders thereof, or by any person or persons acting or purporting to act on behalf of the Central Railway Company, or the shareholders thereof, or any of such shareholders, in connection with the sale or transfer of the Central Railway by the Central Railway Company to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company;

(g) The receipts and revenues and the expenditures, whether made for working expenses or otherwise in connection with the railways and the branches thereof, taken over by the province from the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, from the time they were so taken over;

(h) The amount for which the railways and the branches thereof taken over by the province from the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company could, at their present standard of construction, have reasonably been constructed;

(i) All negotiations and transactions, relating to the foregoing subjects of inquiry, which were carried on or took place between the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company and the Central Railway Company or either thereof or any officer of either thereof or any person acting or purporting to act on behalf of the said companies or either thereof, or on behalf of any officer or shareholder of the said companies or either thereof, and the government of New Brunswick or any member or officer thereof or person acting or purporting to act on behalf of the government of New Brunswick or of any member or officer thereof, and the facts and circumstances connected with such negotiations or transactions.

2. As often as any vacancy occurs in the office of the commissioner acting under this Act by reason of such commissioner dying, resigning or declining or becoming incapable to act, the Lieutenant Governor in Council may, from time to time, fill up such vacancy.

3. The commissioners shall have, for the purposes of such investigation or inquiry to be instituted by them in pursuance of this Act, all such powers, rights and privileges as are vested in His Majesty's Supreme Court for the province or in any judge thereof, on the occasion of any action or suit in respect of the following matters:

(a) The enforcing the attendance of witnesses and examining them on oath, affirmation or otherwise as the commissioners may think fit;

(b) The compelling of the production of books, papers or documents which, in the opinion of the commissioners, are necessary to be produced;

(c) The adjourning of the court from time to time and from place to place within the province, as the commissioners may deem necessary;

(d) The punishing of persons guilty of contempt.

I will not take up the time of the House to read all these sections in full. There are provisions that different officers shall use their authority in maintaining order and shall be at the service of this tribunal just as they would at the service of a judge of an ordinary court. Provision is also made for the appointment of counsel to conduct the investigation, and also for the appointment of counsel to act for any one who desires counsel by way of defence or explanation.

Now, there was a court, Mr. Speaker, constituted as the ordinary courts of the land are constituted. The ordinary courts of the land are constituted by the various legislatures of the provinces, the legislatures determine the procedure, they determine the number of judges who shall be appointed, and when we are considering the report of this tribunal we are considering the report of a court regularly, legally, and constitutionally appointed, possessing all the powers and all the privileges and all the dignity and all the solemnity that attach to the courts of this land. The Minister of Public Works was a man who enjoyed nearly all of the highest honours that could be heaped upon him by the citizens of his native province. He was Speaker of the Legislative Assembly from 1887 to 1889, when he became Solicitor-General, and so continued until 1892; he was appointed Attorney General in the year 1900, and continued to be Attorney General until the year 1907, when for a short time he was premier, and afterwards in the month of August of that year, he was appointed Minister of Public Works of the Dominion. The order in council appointing the members of this tribunal is as follows:

The Hon. the Attorney General reports for the information of the committee of the Executive Council:—

That at the last session of the legislature an Act was passed intituled 'An Act authorizing an inquiry into certain matters connected with the Central Railway Company and the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company,' whereby the Lieutenant Governor in Council was empowered to cause a commission to issue under the great seal to three persons, one of whom shall be a judge of the Supreme Court or County Court, or a barrister of not less than ten years standing, to hold an investigation or inquiry into the matters particularly mentioned in paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h) and (i), of the first section of the said Act, and to report the evidence taken before them and their findings thereon, and the proceedings of the commissioners so appointed, to the Provincial Secretary, to be by him laid before the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

He now recommends, that in pursuance of the provisions of the said Act, that a commission issue to the Hon. Pierre A. Landry, one of the Puisne Judges of the Supreme Court of this province, Fulton MacDougall, of the city of Moncton, banker, and Almon I. Teed, of the town of St. Stephen, merchant, appointing them commissioners under the said Act to hold such investigation or inquiry so thereby authorized, and that for that purpose to have all the powers, rights and privileges vested in them by the said Act or by an Act of the legislative assembly of the province, authorizing the appointment of commissioners to make inquiries or hold investigations.

And the committee of council concurring in the recommendation of the Hon. the Attorney General,

It is accordingly so ordered.

(Sgd.) JOS. HOWE DICKSON,
Clerk of the Executive Council of New Brunswick.

Hon. gentlemen will see from what I have read that the present Minister of Public Works was Attorney General of the province of New Brunswick from the year 1900 to the year 1907, during nearly the whole period over which this tribunal was authorized to make inquiry, and was ex-officio a director of this company. As such he occupied towards the people of the province of New Brunswick the position of a trustee, and it is well known that the first duty of a trustee is to keep clear and accurate accounts and that the second duty of a trustee is always to have his accounts ready for the cestui qui trust to look at and satisfy himself that the accounts are correct. It was his duty as director of that company, as Attorney General, the man who was the managing director of the company——

Mr. PUGSLEY. I wish to correct the statement of my hon. friend. I was not the managing director of the company.

Mr. CROTHERS. I am simply making my observations based upon the judgment of this court.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend must pardon me. I say that there is nothing whatever in the evidence which would justify a statement of that kind, and the statement is absolutely untrue.

Mr. CROTHERS. I am not here for the purpose of discussing the evidence in this case.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CROTHERS. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to discuss the evidence in the case.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not surprised at that.

Mr. CROTHERS. I am here standing on the judgment of a court.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend can find anything in the evidence which will justify some of the statements in the report, I shall be greatly obliged if he will refer to them.

Mr. CROTHERS. As I said a moment ago, I am not here for the purpose of discussing the evidence in this case. I am standing on the judgment of a court, and while that judgment stands we have a right to assume that it is a righteous judgment; and I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the proper course for the gentleman to take against whom this judgment has been found, if he disagrees with the judgment, is in some way or other to appeal for a new trial.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend will pardon me, I may say that that is what I have done. I have begun proceedings in the Supreme Court in Equity of the province of New Brunswick to have an accounting made of the receipts and disbursements of this company. I waited until yesterday to see if the provincial government would take action. They have not done so, and I have now done so.

Mr. CROTHERS. I submit, Mr. Speaker, in accordance with well established practice in English-speaking communities, that the first thing for the hon. the Minister of Public Works to have done, when that judgment was pronounced against him by a court so constituted, was to step aside and resign his position as Minister of Public Works. I submit that while that judgment stands, it is an imputation, a compromise and a reflection upon the dignity of this House and upon the dignity of the people of this country. That was clearly his duty. I am not here to say whether that judgment is right or wrong; but I am here to assume that it is right, and I submit that it was the clear duty of a minister of the Crown against whom a judgment of that kind has been pronounced, in the meantime to stand aside. I was pointing out the position that the hon. Minister of Public Works occupied when that court was constituted. He was a trustee from the year 1901 after this company was inaugurated to the year 1907, and his first duty was to see that the sections of the Act giving the government power to guarantee $250,000 of bonds were strictly carried out by the company, that the company kept books, that the books were audited semi-annually, that statements were filed with the provincial secretary every six months under oath, showing that the transactions of the company were in the best interests of the people of the province of New Brunswick, or at least straightforward and honest. The hon. Minister of Public Works is not unfamiliar with large financial transactions. He is perfectly familiar with such transactions. He is not an ignorant man; he is a man of capacity, an astute lawyer, and a man who knew that both law and equity required that in the position he occupied he should keep strict account of the transactions of that company, and be in a position to render a strict and accurate and satisfactory accounting when it was called for. On the 3rd day of March, 1908, the government of the province of New Brunswick changed hands. Those who had been opposed to him in politics for some years came to power. He knew that this court had been constituted by the local legislature after the new government came into power. He knew that this court had been appointed to investigate the transactions respecting this company during the years that he was ex-officio a director of it, and therefore a trustee of the people of New Brunswick. He was subpoenæd, as I am informed and believe, and was asked to produce all the documents and papers that he had in his possession to assist this court in ferreting out the matters for which they were appointed. He appeared before that court. There was able and devoted counsel there, perhaps not appointed by him, but I understand appointed at his suggestion to assist him in cross-examining witnesses. The evidence before that court was given under oath, and I understand that the court adjourned several times in order to give the hon. Minister of Public Works every opportunity to explain any points that had been raised.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say to my hon. friend that that statement also is absolutely without foundation. On the contrary, when I went there to give evidence, the counsel for the commissioners said he did not want to hear me.

Mr. CROCKET. I may say that counsel denies that statement.

Mr. CARVELL. Mr. Speaker,——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) has the floor. It is customary in this House to allow an hon. member to ask a question. That rests with the hon. member for West Elgin, not with the other members of the House.

Mr. CARVELL. I simply want to ask the hon. member for Elgin if he was aware that counsel was denied the right to be present during the first two weeks and the commission would not withhold their sittings until counsel could be present.

Mr. CROTHERS. I answer the question of the hon. gentleman by saying that I do not know, that I was not present.

Mr. HUGHES. Nor was he.

Mr. CROTHERS. I understand that he was the counsel.

Mr. CARVELL. Yes, and I was not given time to get through with my parliamentary duties and the first two weeks of the investigation were conducted without me.

Mr. CROTHERS. I do not propose to be drawn into any discussion of the evidence.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Very wisely.

Mr. CROTHERS. I repeat that I am standing on the judgment of a court, and I am glad to know that the people of Canada are so familiar with the findings of the court so constituted that they are able to rely on their judgment, especially in regard to matters of fact; and the remedy of those against whom the judgment stands is to appeal from that judgment to some other tribunal, and in the meantime to act as if the judgment were a righteous one. Now, Mr. Speaker, I propose, with your permission, to read portions of this report, of which I have a certified copy; and if any hon. gentleman desires to follow me and has a copy of the report, I shall be glad to give him the pages as I go along. On page 4:

On October 4, 1895, a contract was entered into by the New Brunswick government with the Central Railway Company for the construction of the fifteen mile section and the granting of the subsidy of $3,000 per mile. The following day $7,000 of this subsidy was assigned by Dr. DeBertram to the Hon. William Pugsley and Mr. Skinner. On November 1, 1895, $36,500 of the subsidy was assigned to James Barnes for the building of the fifteen mile section. And on the 4th of the same month $1,000 was assigned to Mr. W. T. Whitehead.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will my hon. friend allow me?

Mr. CROTHERS. I do not think I will allow you to explain this as we go along.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wish to correct an error which I am afraid would be in the mind of my hon. friend, and I am sure that he would be glad to let me do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must be heard before I know what he is going to say.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, will you allow me to ask——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Minister of Public Works has the floor. He rose to a point of order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. member for Elgin will thank me when he hears what I wish to say.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the point of order?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is the point. The hon. member for Elgin has read from this report that in 1905 a subsidy was assigned to the Honourable William Pugsley and Mr. Skinner. My hon. friend is probably under the impression that I was then the Hon. Wm. Pugsley and a member of the government. I wish to say that I was not then in the legislature or in the government, but was a private citizen.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to ask if that is a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Here is the net result. The Minister of Public Works is practically being placed on trial here, contrary to the proceedings followed in England. I relieve myself of all responsibility, as the House has decided that this should be proceeded with. In the ordinary course I presume that the Minister of Public Works would be allowed to give a personal explanation on a matter which so intimately concerns him.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask you whether, under the rules of the House, under constitutional rules —these are what we are guided by— a point of order is a correction of a statement. If it is, the hon. gentleman has a right to make it. If it is not, the Speaker has no right to rule it so.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Speaker has not ruled anything of the kind.

Mr. CROTHERS. It is really the first time in my experience, Mr. Speaker, that a gentleman has felt that there was some imputation cast upon him by calling him the Honourable William Pugsley.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask my hon. friend to take back that statement. What I meant was this——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I appeal to hon. members, for the sake of the decorum and dignity of the House. The time has not come when a member asking to be allowed to make a personal explanation should be refused the opportunity. The Minister of Public Works is replying to a word which I am sorry the hon. member for Elgin uttered. We have not got down to the level of supposing that any member of this House is not an hon. member. Every member of this House is an hon. member.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, what I meant, and I am sure that my hon. friend must have known what I meant, was that it was a very different thing to make the statement that I had, while a member of the government, received an assignment of that subsidy, from what it would be that I had done so while I was a private citizen and a solicitor for some of the parties interested, and not even a member of the legislature at the time.

Mr. CROTHERS. The whole objection made by the Minister of Public Works has arisen from his misreading the words themselves. There is nothing in what I read to show that the commissioners meant to say that at that time he was the Hon. Wm. Pugsley; but the payment was made to the man who is now the Hon. Wm. Pugsley. That is the proper reading of the words, so that there was no ground for making the objection at all. (Reading):

The Colonial Iron, Coal and Railway Company having failed to proceed with the construction of the unconstructed section, a contract was entered into on the 21st of May, 1899, between the provincial government and the Central Railway Company reviving the agreement of the 8th of August, 1883, the government to pay the subsidy not on progress estimates but on completion from time to time of sections of ten miles. So far as the records show, the work done by the Central Railway Company on the fifteen mile section amounted to $23,000 and on account of this outlay $8,000 of the subsidy was paid by the government and distributed as follows: $2,200 on the orders given as aforesaid to—

If my hon. friend objects, I will leave out the Honourable—— —William Pugsley and Mr. Skinner, $300 on the order given to Mr. Whitehead, and the balance apparently on the order given to James Barnes. The Central Railway Company failed to complete its contract.

Then, at page 5:

At the 1901 session of the provincial legislature three Acts were passed—the first authorized the lieutenant governor in council on certain conditions to guarantee the principal and interest of £250,000 first mortgage bonds of any company authorized to construct the Chipman-Gibson Railway; the second Act incorporated the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, which company, for the purpose of convenience, we will hereafter in this report call 'the Company,' authorizing it to construct the Chipman-Gibson Railway and engage in the mining of coal; the third Act entitled the company so incorporated on the performance of certain conditions to the subsidy provided by the Act of 1882 before mentioned, on the whole Chipman-Gibson Railway. This Act also cancelled all subsidy contracts previously entered into with respect to the Chipman-Gibson line. In the month of May, 1901, the company applied for a lease of all available unleased coal areas in the counties of Queens and Sunbury, which were then owned by the government. The application was subsequently complied with and on the 18th day of October, 1902, the lease was granted.

The capital stock of the company consisted of one thousand shares of $100 each, only seven of which were subscribed for but nothing was ever paid on the same.

A contract was on the 22nd day of August, 1901, entered into between the government and the N. B. Coal and Railway Company for the construction of the Chipman-Gibson Railway. Previously to entering into this contract the company had called for tenders for the construction of the fifteen miles section, the contract not to include rolling stock or rails.

Mr. James Barnes on the 13th day of August, 1901, tendered for $117,000 and Mr. James Wheaton on the 14th of the same month tendered for $109,790. These, which were the only tenders, were referred by the Coal and Railway Company to a committee consisting of Messrs. Pugsley, Skinner and others. The contract was awarded to Mr. James Barnes, M.P.P., for the amount tendered by him, he having in the meantime paid Mr. Wheaton $5,000 to withdraw his tender. Mr. Barnes, at the time was acting for a number of persons besides himself, including Senator Thompson, W. T. Whitehead and others, who proposed to form and afterwards did form themselves into a company under the name of the James Barnes Construction Company. Although Mr. Barnes' associates knew in a general way of the negotiations to buy off Mr. Wheaton, it does not appear whether or not any member of the government was cognizant of them.

At one o'clock House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. CROTHERS. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with the reading of extracts from the report, I should perhaps refer to a point in my remarks of this morning to which the Minister of Public Works objected. I see from the dates I have that the hon. gentleman was Speaker of the legislative assembly of New Brunswick in 1887 and remained so until 1892, and that he was Solicitor General in 1892.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman is wrong again.

Mr. CROTHERS. He had been Speaker prior to October 4, 1895, the date of the $7,000 transaction. While perhaps it is not strict etiquette to refer to a gentleman who had been a member of the provincial government as the 'honourable' I think that it is customary to do so, and that it is generally considered as the proper thing to do in this country so that the commissioners in referring to the Hon. William Pugsley were perhaps relying upon that custom. I quite understand the objection of the minister and I want to be perfectly fair with him. I gather that what he objected to was that it might appear from this report that the intention of the commissioners was to say that when he was Attorney General of the province and a director of the company, this $7,000 was assigned to him. If any one should get that impression from that report I want to say in all fairness to the hon. gentleman that that is not the case; the $7,000 I was dealing with was not paid to the hon. gentleman after he became Attorney General of the province of New Brunswick, and ex-officio director of this company. While we are zealous to maintain the dignity of this House, we must be just as anxious to be just and fair to each other, and I want to be absolutely just and fair to the Minister of Public Works. I quite understand that it is difficult to do that; sometimes we become over zealous, we are all human. Even the Prime Minister confessed to us the other day that he was human——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very.

Mr. CROTHERS—and every hon. gentleman present, without any hesitation accepted his word, so that we are all in the same boat, and we all get a little overzealous on occasions.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You just want to down me if you can.

Mr. CROTHERS. I desire in this case to be absolutely just and fair to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), so far as I can.

On page 7 of the report I find:

In the summer of 1904 the Coal and Railway Company applied to the provincial government for financial assistance and during the year from the 1st of July, 1904, to the 1st of July, 1905, the government advanced the company about $50,000.

In 1905 the Lieutenant Governor in Council, under the authority of an Act of the provincial legislature passed in April of that year, declared the title to the whole railway vested in the King in the right of the province, and appointed Mr. George McAvity and Senator G. G. King, commissioners to manage it.

Then on page 9:

No record embracing the whole transaction of the company with Evans and Elkin seems to have been attempted. In this ledger there are less than fifteen entries after the 1st of July, 1904, although the company's business extended to the first day of July, 1905. All the accounts put together cover only seven and a quarter pages of the book.

Mr. Sharpe began what is called a cash-book about the 1st of July, 1904, which was continued by Mr. Corbett after Mr. Sharpe's death on behalf of Mr. McAvity, first as president and afterwards as commissioner. This book was also made up from such data as was afforded by stubs of cheque-books, letters, &c., but not posted concurrent with the transactions. It shows the expenditure of part of the moneys advanced by the government in connection with the railway since the 1st of July, 1904.

Outside of these books, strange as the statement may seem, no books of account were ever kept by the railway company or by the commissioners in connection with the railway although the financial transactions connected with it involved the expendidture of over $900,000.

Then on page 10:

At one of the above meetings, held on August 2, 1901, a resolution was passed to the effect that 'five hundred shares of the capital stock of the company should be issued as fully paid up and non-assessable stock of the company, and that ten of these shares be issued to each shareholder as a satisfaction of all their services as promoters of the company, and that such allotment be in lieu of any allotment which otherwise would be made by reason of shares subscribed by them, and in satisfaction of the shares so subscribed by them, and that the remainder of the five hundred shares, or four hundred and thirty shares should be issued to Charles N. Skinner in trust to distribute and allot the same to such persons as might in his opinion be entitled to receive the same as promoters of the company, and in consideration of services rendered to the company; and the acting of the said Charles N. Skinner according to his own judgment and discretion should be at all times considered a complete fulfilment and execution of the said trust.

Hon. gentlemen will notice that the number of 430 shares is mentioned in that paragraph and that, in a preceding paragraph which I read, the stock of the company was put at a thousand shares of $100 each, so that the 430 shares at $100 each would amount to $43,000 instead of $430,000 mentioned at another part of the report, clearly showing that nothing was added to the $43,000 making it $430,000. I mention that because it has been dwelt upon as a serious matter. In this way the 430 shares at $100 would clearly be $43,000 instead of $430,000. Another typographical error.

Then at page 11:

The first meeting of directors was held on May 10, 1901, at St. John. The following, having been duly elected, were present:

E. Byron Winslow, Fredericton	1 share	$100
Franklin Stetson, St. John	1 share	$100
A. P. Barnhill, St. John	1 share	$100
E. Hutchinson, Chatham	1 share	$100
C.A.C. Bruce per E. H., Chatham	1 share	$100
R. A. Irving, Buctouche	1 share	$100
Willard Kitchen per E. Byron Winslow, Fredericton	1 share	$100
Total shares held by directors	7	$700

Hon. L. J. Tweedie, director ex-officio.
Hon. William Pugsley director ex-officio.

By by-law the directors were qualified as the holders of one share each (on which however, nothing was paid).

The following officers were elected at this meeting:

Ernest Hutchinson, Chatham, President.
Franklin Stetson, St. John, Vice-President.
George W. Allen, Fredericton, Secretary.
E. Byron Winslow, Fredericton, Treasurer.

Mr. Hutchinson, the president, Mr. A. P. Barnhill, Hon. L. J. Tweedie and Hon. Wm. Pugsley were appointed a committee to confer with the Central Railway Company and others to see upon what terms the amalgamation, meaning the amalgamation of the Central Railway, might be made, &c. The last recorded meeting of directors was held in St. John, June 11, 1902.

Between the above dates the following directors' meetings were held: June 13, 1901; August 16, 1901; August 18, 1901, October 21, 1901; November 26, 1901.

It is recorded that at all of those meetings the Hon. Wm. Pugsley was present.

Mr. CROTHERS.

Then at the top of page 12 we find:

So far as the records show these were the only meetings held of the directors, in carrying on a work involving such heavy expenditures and extending over a period of more than four years. We must note here that the meetings of both shareholders and directors were few and unimportant and showed that at an early date there was a complete abandonment of corporate action and an assumption of individual control on the part of a few.

Then near the bottom of the page:

Mr. Willard Kitchen, at one time a director, was in the same position. Hon. L. J. Tweedie, who being provincial secretary, was an ex-officio director of the company, claimed to know nothing about its financial transactions except what happened in council, having left these matters to Mr. Pugsley and the officers of the company.

Mr. Pugsley, who apparently had the general management of the company's affairs, kept no accounts and did not give as much definite information; he had, he said, left the keeping of the accounts to Mr. George W. Allen and Mr. A. I. Trueman, both of whom had died before the investigation. On inquiry we were satisfied that Mr. Trueman kept no books that could throw light upon the disposition of the moneys. Indeed from his position in the company we cannot see how it would be especially incumbent upon him to do so, and we are also inclined to believe, after examining Mr. J. J. F. Winslow, who acted as Mr. Allen's clerk, that Mr. Allen, were he alive, could furnish little more data that that produced by Mr. Winslow, his successor. . .

Mr. George McAvity, the president and managing director of the company from July 1, 1904, to July 1, 1905, kept no books at all in connection with the company's business.

From July 1, 1905, to March 1, 1908, when as one of the commissioners he had the management of the road he also kept no books whatever. In very many instances Mr. McAvity was unable to produce any vouchers, other than his own cheques and in many cases the papers produced as vouchers were very unsatisfactory, and did not purport to be even connected with the company. In his evidence he gave us little more information than if he had not been connected with its business at all. From his evidence it might be fairly gathered that he considered the position he occupied an honorary one.

So much of the facts are given to show the absolute want of book-keeping, and we say that if an auditor, confining himself to the records in the books of accounts submitted to us alone, was to undertake to produce a statement of moneys expended, hundreds of thousands of dollars would be shown to be unaccounted for.

Page 16:

The total aid from the Dominion and provincial governments combined, to the whole railway, previous to and since January 1, 1901, amounts to $1,255,244.22. Of this amount the provincial government contributes $190,064,844, and the Dominion government $190,400.

ITEM No. 1.

Provincial subsidy, $57,000 was given by the government purporting to act under the authority of the Subsidy Act of 1882, as a subsidy towards the railway from Chipman to Gibson. Previously to this, as we have seen, $5,000 and $8,000 were given to the Central Railway Company or Dr. DeBertram, in 1891 and 1896, as a subsidy under the same Act for the construction of the same railway. In all, the provincial government has paid $70,000 in subsidies in connection with the railway from Chipman to Gibson, of which the fifteen mile section only has been built. As the Act of 1882 only authorized a subsidy of $3,000 per mile, the total subsidy which the government was authorized to issue in connection with the fifteen-mile section was $45,000. The question arises, why did the government give the remaining $25,000 of the $70,000 which it did give?

Page 17:

Of this $25,000 subsidy, $8,500 was, as it appears by the documents in evidence, paid on account of the orders to Mr. Pugsley, Mr. Skinner, Mr. Barnes and Mr. Whitehead, which have been previously spoken of as given in the months of October and November, 1895. Mr. Pugsley in his evidence gave no further explanation of this matter. We find the whole of this $25,000 of subsidy bonds were illegally issued. This amount, we believe, has been misapplied, and should the government in the future seek to extend the line from the terminus of the fifteen miles section to Gibson, $25,000 of the subsidy authorized to be paid for that portion of the line will not be available as it has been drawn and used.

ITEM No. 3.

This was a guarantee by the province of $250,000 par value of the company's bonds. A large percentage of these bonds were guaranteed illegally.

Page 19:

To briefly sum the matter up, the legislature authorized the guarantee by the province of $250,000 of the company's bonds, to secure the construction of forty miles of railway, fully equipped with rolling stock, and provided with a coal mining plant capable of mining 500 tons of coal per day. The province has obtained, not forty odd miles, but fifteen miles of railway, a few cheap sidings, a quantity of rolling stock costing between $20,000 and $30,000, with the work of construction on nearly thirty miles practically untouched, and not a dollar expended on the extensive coal plant. These bonds were guaranteed on reports showing the progress of construction of the fifteen miles section, which were signed by Mr. Evans, the company's engineer. On January 2, 1903, at which time less than $80,000 had been expended in the actual work of construction one of these reports attempts to show that $140,000 of the company's bonds were entitled to be guaranteed. Mr. Pugsley stated in his evidence that he himself drew up these reports and that Mr. Evans had signed them. It is not our province to suggest whether any or what action should be taken on behalf of the province to hold the members of the government who were instrumental in endorsing these bonds responsible for their illegal act.

ITEM No. 7 ($50,594.54).

This item is a cash loan made by the government to the company between the 1st of July, 1904, and the 1st of July, 1905. No legislative authority had previously been given the government to make these loans.

STATEMENT 'B.'

This shows all the moneys which since the incorporation of the company in April, A.D. 1901, were paid as government subsidies, loaned on bonds guaranteed by the government, or otherwise loaned, or paid, for the purposes of the railway. The moneys amount altogether to $958,799.75.

STATEMENT 'C.'

This shows the expenditures of the moneys mentioned in statement 'B' so far as we have been able to disover in our investigation. These expenditures amount to $824,764.40, leaving a balance of $134,033.35 of these moneys unacounted for.

Page 27:

How many of the directors received salaries, we cannot discover. Mr. Pugsley stated they received something, that he himself did not receive much. He thought Mr. Sharpe had once made a proposition that a round sum should be paid him (Pugsley) but that Mr. Tweedie would not admit it; however, Mr. Sharpe in the statement referred to inserted an item of $5,000 as salary to managing director, and only that Mr. Pugsley in his evidence stated otherwise, we would have taken the 'W. P.' item $5,000 referred to elsewhere in this report as being payment of this amount.

Page 29.

It will be noted that Hon. Mr. Tweedie retained 1 per cent commission, $500, on the sale of $50,000 bonds made by him in Chatham. Mr. Tweedie was provincial secretary of the province in October, 1903, when he made the sale and ex-officio director of the railway company and we do not see by what right he deducted this $500 commission. He stated in his evidence that he thought Mr. A. I. Trueman had authorized him to do so; where Mr. Trueman got his authority was not stated. This much must fairly be said of this transaction, namely, that Mr. Tweedie sold $50,000 bonds in October, 1903, at par, which was 2½ per cent more than the price received from Messrs. Robinson & Sons, who purchased $368,000 of the company's bonds in March 1905, at 97½, and 5 per cent more than was received by Mr. McAvity, president, for $8,000 of the same bonds delivered by him to a client by instructions of Mr. Pugsley in August, 1903, about two months before Mr. Tweedie made the sale, Mr. McAvity getting only $7,000 flat with no accrued interest for $8,000 of bonds.

Mr. Tweedie also promptly accounted for the accrued itnrest, $575.34, which in other cases we consider was not accounted for. Without condoning this transaction we think on the whole it is amenable to less censure than others spoken of in this report. It at least has the merit when it did come to light of being clear cut and definite, without any effort being made to conceal it from your commissioners.

Item No. 4.—Paid for gravel pit, $3,000—

This was paid to Mr. G. G. Scovil for gravel pit. Mr. Scovil stated that some time before he sold this gravel pit to the Railway Company, after conference with Mr. Pugsley he had bought the farm of about one hundred acres on which the gravel pit was located for $2,500, including the buildings, and afterwards sold that part of it to the company embracing the gravel pit about thirty acres for $3,000. As to whether or not Mr. Scovil bought the farm until he knew or had reason to believe he could sell the gravel pit and make $500 profit in addition to retaining the farm, which would cost him nothing, from the evidence we are inclined to think that he was sure of the sale of the gravel pit before he completed the purchase of the farm. He stated he had bargained for the farm before he negotiated with the company. He had heard there was a gravel pit on it. Mr. Pugsley had informed him of the company's desire to procure gravel and that Mr. Evans, the engineer, had examined the quantity and quality of the gravel before he completed the purchase of the farm. He received Mr. Pugsley's personal note for $1,000 on account which he never heard of afterwards but presumed it was paid. Mr. McAvity gave Mr. Scovil a cheque for $1,000 which we conclude was to pay this note. Afterwards Mr. McAvity paid Scovil the balance of the $2.000.

Mr. Pugsley in his evidence made the statement that if a desire was evinced by the commission to trace the expenditure in connection with the roads that a competent auditor could make up an account in two days; that it was intended the banks would keep a record and that all that was necessary was to inquire of the banks as to payments to Messrs Barnes and others and the whole matter would be made clear. Mr. Pugsley's statement fairly suggests the idea, in the first place, that it was never the intention of the company to keep books.

We think the statement of facts which follow will show how very far astray he was in stating that a competent auditor by means of the information which the banks could supply or which could be gleaned from any other source could, during any period of time, much less two days, make up an intelligent balance sheet which would show the disposition of the moneys in question.

As the earliest financial operations, namely, those connected with the construction of the fifteen-mile section, were centred at Fredericton we began our investigation in that city on June 25, 1908, the first witness being Mr. Geo. N. Babbitt, Deputy Receiver General.

He showed us a statement made up from the department ledger account beginning August 31, 1904, closing on March 19, 1908, showing a total expenditure of $345,599,22; largely made up of payments to Mr. McAvity as president and as commissioner, payments to the People's Bank and old claims connected with the railway, and for interest, but he had no knowledge of bonds being guaranteed by the Provincial Secretary to the extent of $450,000 in 1903, until July 5, 1905, when the fourth half yearly coupons amounting to $9,000 were presented for payment.

Mr. CROTHERS.

The department had no record of the number or amount of these bonds or when or where they were guaranteed. In the one other case where bonds had been guaranteed by the province, viz., the Hartland bridge, a record had been kept. It seems to us remarkable that the Deputy Receiver General in charge of the department's office at Fredericton had never seen these bonds and was never given an opportunity to register same, or keep a record of a matter of such grave import, inasmuch as the credit of the province was pledged for the principal and interest of the large sum of $450,000. Indeed these bonds are now in fact a direct liability of the province. Later on during the investigation we secured much of the desired information form Mr. Shadbolt, manager of the Royal Trust Company of St. John, who had a very clear record of the matter.

As the bonds were dated July 1, 1903, it will be seen that three coupons on each bond, covering a year and a half, until December 31, 1904, being a year and a half interest on $450,000 bonds at 4 per cent (amounting to $27,000) had previously accrued. Apparently the most of these three first coupons had never been cashed and we could not find out what disposition was made of them. They should have been cut off by Mr. McAvity and cancelled, and record kept of the same. There is no guarantee that at some time in the future some of these coupons may not be presented for payment by holders for value.

Proceeding to locate, if possible, the account books (if any) of the company we called Mr. J. J. F. Winslow who stated he succeeded the late Mr. George W. Allen as secretary in 1904, having previously assisted Mr. Allen. He had kept no minutes of directors' meetings, as there had been none after his appointment so far as he knew. He produced a book in which was the last record of the directors' meeting held in St. John on June 11, 1902, and he also produced the ledger before referred to in this report.

We could not find a treasurer for the company who had ever been active. We noted by the minute-book that the late Mr. E. Byron Winslow was elected treasurer in May, 1901, but there is no record whatever of his having undertaken to discharge the duties of the office, and beyond the fact that he acted as chairman at one or two meetings held shortly after the company was organized, there is nothing whatever to show that he had any connection with the company beyond signing some negotiable paper for the company.

At page 35:

This account was checked out in seven amounts and closed March 8, 1902. It shows to whom the cheques were made payable, but these cheques were handed to J. J. F. Winslow by the bank on January 19, 1904, and Mr. Winslow could not find them, so he stated. Four cheques amounting to $5,262.68 were made payable to Geo. W. Allen, and we could find no trace of what became of the money. Two cheques dated February 8, 1902, of $4,000 and $15,000, respectively, were drawn payable to E. G. Evans. Turning to the account of Messrs. Evans and Elkins in the ledger produced by the former in St. John, which he swore contained an accurate account of all moneys received by Evans and Elkins on account of the sale of the road to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company we found that he credits in February only $9,500 received. As to what became of the difference, $9,500, he could not account for it or explain it.

At page 37:

After Mr. Hutchinson retired from the presidency in 1902—early in 1903—perhaps earlier, it would seem that difficulty was experienced at Fredericton in procuring further loans and financial operations were thereafter continued, in the main, in St. John. It is in evidence that there was no president from the date of Mr. Hutchinson's retirement in 1902 until Mr. McAvity was appointed, June 30, 1904.

At page 39 and page 40:

In January, 1903, Mr. Pugsley and Mr. Barnes began to discount the notes of the company at the Bank of New Brunswick, endorsed by themselves and secured by the guaranteed bonds of the province to extent of over $40,000 (we do not see why it was necessary for Mr. Pugsley or Mr. Barnes to indorse these notes personally nor do we know that the bank required them to do so, inasmuch as they already held the bonds guaranteed by the province with a safe margin. Proceeds of these notes were not placed to the credit of any current account, but were taken from the bank in cash, sometimes by Mr. Pugsley and sometimes by Mr. Barnes, the assumption being that the money was used making payments to the James Barnes Construction Company. We could not turn to the books of the construction company to see if this money was credited in order, because these books had been consumed or at least were not produced by Mr. Barnes, but we did find a sheet of paper in the before mentioned ledger shown us by Mr. Winslow at Fredericton which purported to give a statement of the moneys received by the Barnes Company from the railway company. The credits therein did not correspond with the amounts of the notes discounted by the bank. One or two illustrations: On October 5, 1903, the company's note for $13,500 was discounted by Mr. Pugsley and Mr. Barnes and on reference to Mr. Barnes' statement on that same date he only credits $10,000. On November 23 another note was discounted for $13,082—on that day, or a day or two after, Mr. Barnes' account shows only $8,400 as having been received. Mr. Pugsley stated in his evidence that the balance must have gone to the secretary of the company, but had no written proof to refresh his memory.

One thing seems very clear, namely, that the company as a corporation had never conducted business through one uniform medium or channel, as companies usually do, but presidents, directors and secretaries seemed to be doing business each on his own account, presumably for the company, and keping no record of the same. For instance the mere fact of Mr. George W. Allen's death should not have meant that all the company's records kept by him, if he kept any, passed away with him, and the same remarks also applies to Mr. A. I. Trueman, who also died before this inquiry commenced.

It is clear that Mr. Sharpe found a balance to the credit of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company in the Bank of New Brunswick, June 30, 1904, of $52,250, and the cash book he made up starts with that same amount on that very date. The first entry is '1904, June 30, government advances $52,250.' This total is carried forward and directly underneath, and not entered as a debit, as all other expenditures are, is found in lead pencil 'less W. P. $5,000,' and that $5,000 is deducted from the total, leaving a balance of $47,250. Nowhere else in the book is this item $5,000 mentioned. The $250 drops out of the book entirely.

Later on we discovered that a cheque had been drawn for $5,000 and paid by the bank, which had not been taken from McAvity's cheque book, from the stubs of which we conclude Mr. Sharpe was attempting to write up the book. The deduction of the above described $5,000 item enabled him, however, to bring the balance of the book to agree with that of the bank.

Mr. McAvity on being examined did not know anything about this item whatever. He had no recollection and could give no explanation of it, nor what 'W. P.' meant. Mr. Carvell, who was acting as counsel for the company, or making up his statement, presented to the commission later, included this $5,000 'W. P.' item, producing the cheque. It was dated June 30, the day Mr. McAvity became president, was filled out in Mr. Pugsley's handwriting, and signed by Mr. McAvity, as president, and was made payable to the New Brunswick Real Estate Loan and Trust Company, which owns the Pugsley Building, so-called, in St. John, is a close corporation, the shareholders being Mr. Pugsley and family.

When recalled Mr. McAvity stated in his evidence that he signed this cheque blindly because he was instructed to do so by his superior, Mr. Pugsley. He did not look to see that the company, of which he was president and seemingly treasurer, combined, owed a dollar of the money. Besides as president he had no superiors except his directors' meeting in formal session. He acted in this matter simply as an under-clerk assuming no responsibility, although as it will be seen later he drew the salary of a responsible general manager, and consummate man of affairs.

Mr. Pugsley explained on being examined that the money was in repayment of loans made by the Real Estate Loan and Trust Company to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, and as evidence of the same produced the following cheques:—

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is another typographical error there, the date of the last cheque should be 1904 and not 1902.

Mr. CROTHERS (reading):

It will be noticed that the above cheques total $9,220.

As they were drawn eighteen months previous to the payment of the $5,000, Mr. Pugsley could not be certain that they represented advances to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company by his company; but from the fact that the cheques existed together with Mr. Trueman's statement that the railway company owed his company upwards of $5,000 he concluded he was justified in drawing this $5,000. It was on the eve of his departure for Europe and matters were somewhat hurried. There was no record on the books of the railway company to show that loans for the latter had ever been made from the loan company, and Mr. Pugsley stated that his company kept no books.

If Mr. Pugsley is correct in his surmise that these cheques produced by him, amounting to $9,220 represented loans to the railway company it seems to us that it would logically follow that after the repayment of $5,000 above mentioned was made, the company still would be his debtor for $4,220, for there is no evidence anywhere of this balance having been claimed or paid. We, however, feel satisfied that Mr. Pugsley must have been recouped for all these moneys from the proceeds of bonds handled by himself or by Mr. Trueman for him, or in some other way.

On reference to a statement prepared by the late Mr. Sharpe, auditor, found among the papers, which purport to be a schedule of amounts owing by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company on the 31st of May, 1904, we do not find that the name of the loan and real estate company appears for any amount. This statement was made up one month previous to the payment of the above mentioned $5,000 to Mr. Pugsley.

Mr. McAvity states, though it is not confirmed anywhere else, that his directors fixed his salary at $5,000 per annum. If they did so, then taking all the circumstances into consideration, the nominal supervision of the company by Mr. McAvity, and the fact that he had a manager at Norton at a large salary attending to the actual work of the company, we say that giving Mr. McAvity $5,000 as salary was simply one way of indirectly robbing the treasury of the province. $5,000 per annum was equal to the amount received by the experienced manager of the I. C. R. system in 1904, and only one thousand less than he receives at the present time, and would have secured for the company the exclusive services of a railway expert and able man of affairs.

Mr. McAvity was not a railway man at all, and during the whole period of presidency was busy with his own affairs.

From all the facts and from the manner in which Mr. McAvity gave his evidence we believe that the payment on November 22, 1905, shown in his cash book to be his salary as president to July 1, 1905, was intended as stated to cover his salary for the first year. That he was to receive $2,500 per year is confirmed in more than one statement made by the auditors.

Therefore we believe that the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, or their assigns, now that for the first time the full account from Mr. McAvity has been produced, have a right to recover from him the two first mentioned amounts in the above statement, namely, $4,880.19.

During the time Mr. McAvity was president and commissioner his firm received large sums almost monthly for goods and materials supplied to the railway, at prices apparently fixed by himself.

The option given by Evans & Elkin to the Coal and Railway Company was simply for the purchase of the Central Railway for the fixed sum of $180,000 with no other special conditions in the document.

On October 31, 1901, the first payment on this option was made by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, but it was only $12,500 instead of $15,000, the amount of the first instalment. At various times afterwards payments were made Evans & Elkins, making altogether with the first payment $83,519.06. The agreement to purchase never was carried out, but in the summer of 1903 an arrangement was made between the company and Messrs. Evans & Elkin by which Evans & Elkin were to withdraw from the agreement of sale—the company to complete their option with Clark & Co. and Drexel & Co., and pay these firms the amount of $55,800, being the amount due on the option and for the loan of $5,000 and interest, the company also to pay an amount of $1,089.97 due the Intercolonial Railway. The agreement between the company and Evans & Elkin to withdraw, which was verbal, was negotiated for the company by Mr. Allen, Mr. A. I. Trueman and Mr. Pugsley, and under it Evans & Elkin agreed to forego the payment of the balance of $39,590.97 to which they were entitled under their agreement of sale.

The following is a statement showing the amounts paid to Evans & Elkin and the amount which they abandoned:—

To total amount due under option from the N. B. Coal and Railway Company		$180,000 00
By payments from Oct. 31, 1901, to June, 1904..	$ 74,769 06
By paid Clarke & Company on our account.	55,800 00
By paid balance due I.C.R..	1,089 97
	$131,659 03
Later payment, profit on deal..	3,750 00
Later payment, profit on deal..	5,000 00
		140,409 03
Short paid on option by railway company..		$ 39,590 97

Speaking of Evans, on page 51:

He swore that the above $140,409.03 was all he ever got under his agreement with the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company to pay him $180,000. What became of the balance, in round numbers $39,000, he could not tell and would not even attempt to surmise. He made several earnest attempts to get this balance which he thought was due him, but was told he did not give a complete title, &c., and getting tired out after a time, he accepted the last payments as a settlement.

It was stated in the House of Assembly the full $180,000 was paid for the Central Railway. This statement was made with the full knowledge that some $39,000 of the $180,000 had not been paid and was not to be paid. It was known besides that Mr. Sharpe had prepared under instructions, a statement that the full amount of $180,000 had been paid, and such statement was allowed by the government to be put on file at Fredericton without correction. In an order in council dated July 12, 1904, prepared, we believe, by the Hon. Mr. Pugsley, it was declared that this $180,000 had been paid for the railway from Norton to Chipman. These statements were made although Mr. Pugsley had participated in the negotiations with Mr. Evans by which the amount, about $39,000, was abandoned, and we cannot conceive how such a fact could have been forgotten by Mr. Pugsley.

Starting in 1901, when the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company was incorporated, down to 1904, many Acts were passed in relation to this company and to the road from Chipman towards Fredericton, each one having the effect of modifying, abrogating or rescinding the theretofore existing safeguards to the public interest, and opening new avenues for exploiting the public revenues.

If the object of legislation and of the preparation of orders in council since 1901 had been to subserve private purposes they could hardly have been more ingeniously devised.

In 1893 and 1897 further legislation was had but in effect it only related to the extension of time to do the work on the line from Chipman to Gibson. In 1901 appears the first entering wedge which thereafter insidiously worked its way, year after year, statute after statute, order in council after order in council, each succeeding Act and each succeeding order in council wiping away some of the protection to the public interest provided by former Acts, until all the protection was gone, finally landing this railway on the province after a public expenditure and an assuming of liabilities of somewhere in the vicinity of one and a quarter millions of dollars, the province alone contributing over one million in actual payments and in assumed liabilities.

At the same session, 1901, of the legislature, the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company was incorporated. This company was given the power to carry on the business of mining and raising coal, &c. Its authorized capital stock, subject to increase, must be $100,000. Here appears a dangerous departure from ordinary Acts of this kind, viz.: No provision for any particular amount of the stock to be subscribed for, nor for any stock to be paid for; hence there was not one cent of capital to start with, with only a responsibility possibly not exceeding $100 on the part of any member of the company, which possible liability was afterwards wiped out entirely by by-laws, so far as stock actually subscribed was concerned.

We have said that, with one exception, not one of the safeguards introduced in chapter 12 of the Act of 1901 to make the scheme acceptable was kept or heeded. The most of them were modified or abrogated by subsequent legislation, but without the authority of such legislation the most essential provisions we ignored, or got over by orders in council, some of which had apparently no reasonable ground of support. We will note one example. On the 2nd of July, 1901, the provincial secretary made a report to council in which he states that he is satisfied that the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company possesses sufficient capital to insure the construction of the line of railway from Chipman to Gibson, and that the company has given all necessary assurance of its possessing such ability. He further states that he has made careful inquiry with regard to the capacity and extent of the coal fields and affirms from reports mentioned by him that it appears there can be mined at reasonable cost at least 150,000 tons of coal per annum, and that such annual output may reasonably be counted upon during the whole term of fifty years. And he further reports that from the evidence which has been furnished to him that both the output of such coal and the market therefor would be more than sufficient to satisfy the requirements of section 16 of the said Act. Not only do results show the absurdity of such a report, but we cannot believe that at the time it was made the provincial secretary or his colleagues who acquiesced in the report had any reasonable grounds for the representations therein made. This report in reality is the beginning of the adoption of methods that sapped the whole fabric of the safeguards the legislation had thrown around the guaranteeing by the province of the bonds to the company. This report was according to the evidence of Mr. Tweedie prepared by Mr. Pugsley, and its phraseology is very similar to that found in almost every public document thereafter framed in connection with this enterprise.

To briefly sum up this whole matter:—

We have waded through a chaos of disconnected accounts, and have carefully weighed all the evidence submitted, as well as studying all the documents, orders in council, &c. Having thus patiently laboured to ascertain, if possible, the true facts of the case, we find a number of leading features governing the operations to which we call special attention.

First, It is clear that the enterprise was chiefly promoted by two members of the government, the controlling influence of one of whom was clearly evident from the beginning to the end. It is true a company was organized without any capital, which existed in name only, whose shareholders never attempted to influence its policy. Having everything to gain and nothing to lose they left the control to the ex-officio directors, as the government was putting up all the money. The company never performed the functions usually exercised by an incorporated company—it was in fact nothing but a disorganized department of the government of this province, whatever may be claimed for it in theory. The policy of granting government assistance to any company, whose shareholders have not on their own account a dollar at stake, is unsound if not vicious.

Second, On the face of it the motive of the promoters as stated was to develop the coal mines of Queens county. Responsible and respectable men from various parts of the province were obtained to lend their names as directors; and from the fact that——

Here is where the mistake occurs of adding a zero in each instance.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Better read it as it is.

Mr. CROTHERS (reading):

—$430,000 of the total $500,000 authorized capital was to be distributed as founders' shares, we conclude that the interested parties had visions of ultimate large profits, with absolute certainty of no personal loss.

Third, As shown in the earlier pages of this report, the coal mines failed to materialize. It was found expedient to even attempt to develop the mines in a large way. Thus at an early stage original visions of profit-making must have departed, and a decision called for as to the abandoning of the expenditure of the $250,000 intended for the coal development. However, it would seem that the prospect of spending large sums of money under cover of the company was too alluring to be resisted, accordingly a stage name was adopted, and the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company's existence was continued. How much better it would have been for the province had these moneys been expended by the government, and a yearly account of the expenditures published in the public accounts.

Fourth, It is also clear to your commissioners that it was never the intention of those controlling the company to keep books of accounts for public information. For there was never any complete working organization of the company, or special offices secured whereby method and system could have been pursued. The misuse made of the moneys, the fact that the advances far outran, particularly in the earlier stages, legitimate expenditure, made it imperative that to control the truth no uniform system of bookkeeping be adopted. It is claimed the Barnes Construction Company kept books, which could not be produced, but we are by no means satisfied that they were not destroyed, or that they were not intentionally concealed. From the evidence before us and from a careful study of the bank accounts and other matters by which we could trace the disbursements of moneys, we have no hesitation in stating that, especially during 1902, the moneys used up and liabilities incurred far outstripped any legitimate expenditure that was being made, the difference we believe to have been misappropriated, otherwise sufficient money would have been on hand to have paid current bills, leaving the government in this respect a clear sheet when taking over the road in 1905.

Fifth, In ordinary course of business the company's interests and those of the province, from whom it received all its resources, would have been in a business sense antagonistic. Therefore we believe good business demanded that the provincial secretary and the attorney general remain outside the company. Then as members of the government they would have been in a position to have seen to it that stipulations safeguarding the provincial treasury were lived up to; as it worked out, by their position in the company as members of the government, their influence was paramount, representing as they thus did all the capital invested. By their presence in the House of Assembly, on the other hand, they were able from their knowledge and control of the company's affairs to present such statements as were necessary to allay the suspicions of the legislature, and conceal from the country the true state of affairs.

Finally, we believe the directors of the company, and especially the ex-officio directors, are responsible to the province for an accounting. They should be called upon to submit an account showing the expenditure of $958,799.75 or at least that portion of it supplied by the province. What steps should be taken to enforce this finding we hardly feel called upon to determine.

We find, putting the most charitable construction on the entire transaction, that $134,035.35 stated in our recapitulation, following statement 'C' given as unaccounted for, was misappropriated, and diverted from its proper and legitimate channel.

Considering that the doors were never locked—that nearly a million dollars were tossed about without any special guardianship, or any reasonable prospect of any one being called upon to account, that temptation in its most seductive form was continually in the path of the politicians interested, it is not very difficult to understand how an amount even larger than $134,035.35 might well have been switched from its legitimate course. The $39,000 underpaid Evans & Elkins on their option, we have not the slightest doubt forms part of the total shortage.

As to who personally got this money we are unable to state. The want of records as shown by illustrations given in a former part of this report, the fact that the secretary, Mr. George W. Allen, and a director, or solicitor, Mr. A. I. Trueman, had died before the investigation began, greatly enhanced the difficulties of discovering anything definite on the above point. Then, too, many of the leading actors in this drama did not in their evidence disclose with any certainty their relations with transactions with which their names appear in written documents. A notable case was that of Mr. C. N. Skinner, whose memory appeared almost a blank as to his acts and the reasons therefor. Even the amount of the remuneration he had received had passed from his mind. We cannot but believe that had Mr. Skinner felt more personal responsibility in the duties he performed and better appreciated the ones in which we were engaged his memory would have been much improved.

Leading witnesses, without unfailing monotony, referred us to the two deceased officers of the company, Mr. George W. Allen and Mr. A. I. Trueman, when any critical point as to the disposal of moneys was in question.

We have become painfully convinced after examining the evidence and the documents submitted to us that in the expenditure of the public funds, provided for this enterprise, every person charged with a public duty in connection with the same, has been culpably negligent in the discharge of such duty. The degree of culpability attached to each individual has, perhaps, not been the same. Some were guilty of negligence in accepting positions of trust and in not acquainting themselves with what was transpiring in regard to same, but allowing others, unquestioned, to undertake the sole discharge of duties, the responsibility of which they themselves had assumed. They lent their names and allowed the moral influence of their high standing in the community to assure the province that legitimate business methods would be followed. The provincial secretary and the attorney general, ex-officio directors, who were specially appointed by the legislature to watch the company's doings in the interest of the province, we consider, by their conduct, open to the gravest censure. It is true the provincial secretary was not satisfied with matters as they were going, for more than once we find, by letter or otherwise, he registered objections—but it would seem he had assisted to call into play forces he could not control, if he wished to do so, and the bonds were in due course guaranteed and the moneys spent under the conditions stated in this report.

To sum up, on the evidence given before this court, under the sanction of an oath—the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) having appeared before the commissioners and counsel being present to act for and against him—this report constitutes the following findings:

1. That he was appointed a director ex-officio of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company specially to guard the people's interest and that he was in effect general manager of its affairs.

2. That, while he was occupying this position of trust, charged with the performance of a public duty, in the expenditure of public funds provided by the people of New Brunswick for a public enterprise, he was culpably negligent and open to the gravest censure.

3. That, although he was the controlling influence in the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, it never performed the functions usually exercised by an incorporated company and was in fact nothing but a disorganized department of the government.

4. That in order to conceal the truth he adopted no system of bookkeeping for public information.

5. That as a member of the Legislative Assembly and Attorney General of the Province, he made incorrect statements to the legislature to allay suspicions and to conceal from the province the true state of affairs.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will my hon. friend pardon me. Will he kindly state in what part of the report it states that incorrect information was given to the legislature?

Mr. CROTHERS. I said 'incorrect statements.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. I deny that incorrect statements were made or incorrect information given to the legislature, or even that the report says so.

Mr. CROTHERS. I do not know that I quite understood the hon. minister——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then, I may speak again——

Mr. CROTHERS. Just one moment. I understand that the minister (Mr. Pugsley) takes exception to the paragraph I have just read, namely that the report says that he made incorrect statements to the legislative assembly. What I said was: 'That as a member of the legislative assembly and Attorney General of the Province, he made incorrect statements to the legislature.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. The reason I interrupted is that this report, strange as it is in many respects, does not say that we presented false statements to the legislature. It says that we were able to do so, but does not say that we did so, and I defy my hon. friend to point to any single case where any erroneous statement was made to the legislature.

Mr. CROTHERS. I can not only point to statements in the report bearing out what I have said, but I can point to statements in the New Brunswick 'Hansard' on two occasions made by the minister in answer to questions that $180,000 had been paid for the Central Railway.

6. That a report prepared by him and made to the Lieutenant Governor in Council on the 2nd day of July, 1901, was absurd and was not founded on any reasonable grounds for the representations made therein.

7. That as such director he is responsible to the province for an accounting for that portion of $958,799.77 supplied by the province.

8. That in stating to the legislature on more than one occasion that $180,000 had been paid for the Central Railway, he stated what he knew was in fact untrue as he had conducted the negotiations which resulted in the abatement of $39,000 from that sum.

9. That he mixed up his private affairs with those of the company and of the public so that large amounts received by him are not satisfactorily accounted for.

10. That while he stated before the court respecting the salaries of directors that they received something and that he himself did not receive much, he was really paid $5,000 under cover of salary which, however, he was unable to explain.

11. That he was a party to the misappropriating of $134,035.35 and that the abatement of $39,000 aforesaid forms part thereof.

12. That he authorized and participated in the illegal issue of $25,000 of subsidy bonds part of which was used to pay orders given to himself before he became a member of the government.

13. That he engaged in the illegal issue of provincial bonds in connection with the Chipman-Gibson Railway.

14. That he authorized and participated in the illegal loan of $50,000 to the company.

15. In breach of the Act of 1902, he did not retain any of the $250,000 bonds to provide the mining plant estimated to cost $50,000, nor did he retain any thereof as security for the $40.000 for rails advanced by the Intercolonial Railway.

My attention has been called to page 51 of the report, part of which I read, but which I may now read again, in view of the hon. minister's statement:

It was stated in the House of assembly the full $180,000 was paid for the Central Railway. This statement was made with the full knowledge that some $39,000 of the $180,000 had not been paid and was not to be paid. It was known besides that Mr. Sharpe had prepared under instructions, a statement that the full amount of $180,000 had been paid, and such statement was allowed by the government to be put on file at Fredericton without correction.

That fully bears out what I stated. Now, in this report, we have the findings of a judicial tribunal composed of three men of the highest standing in their native province, men enjoying to the fullest extent the esteem and confidence of their fellow citizens, one of them a distinguished judge of the Supreme Court, eminent for his learning, integrity and absolute fairness, a tribunal constituted as a court by an Act of the legislature of New Brunswick, clothed with all the powers, privileges, dignity and solemnity of the superior courts of the land. Judgment having been given against the hon. Minister of Public Works, on all the foregoing indictments, serious imputations having thus been cast upon the business capacity and integrity of a minster of the Crown charged with the largest responsibilities, we are fully warranted in urging the government to take action thereon, to the end that the public interest may be safeguarded and the honour and standing of this House maintained. By this report and these findings the honour of this House is compromised As a member thereof I could not respect myself, if I had not the courage, in the face of this report, to do all in my power to remove the stigma it brings to this House and to the people of Canada. It must be the duty of parliament to purge itself from the unfortunate position in which it is placed by the continuance in the government of a minister of the Crown after such serious imputations have been cast upon him. Is there a member of this House willing that the indignity cast upon it by the findings of this court should continue without action or remedy? If such there be I venture to think he will not receive the approbation of the better thinking people of this country.

I have one other matter in this connection to present to the House. I have here the ' Hansard ' of the New Brunswick legislature for 1908.

I find that a certain return was brought down to the legislature of New Brunswick in answer to questions submitted to the government which show that while the Minister of Public Works was Attorney General of the province of New Brunswick from 1901 to 1907 both inclusive, he drew large sums of money from the public treasury that he was not entitled to draw.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask my hon. friend to withdraw that statement, a statement which is absolutely false. I never withdrew one cent from the public treasury of New Brunswick to which I was not entitled, never one dollar, and therefore I ask my hon. friend to withdraw that statement.

Mr. CROTHERS. I am simply stating what I find in the report.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But my hon. friend cannot do that, it is not before the House. The hon. gentleman cannot make a false statement himself, and he cannot be permitted to read a false statement which Mr. Hazen or some one else may have made.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is customary by the usage of the House to accept the word of an hon. gentleman.

Mr. CROTHERS. I understood the hon. gentleman to be anxious that everything we had to say about him should be brought forward.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, one thing at a time. We are now dealing with this report of the Central Railway Commission. I am prepared to deal with it at this time and upon any other appropriate occasion I am prepared to deal with any other charge or any other suggestion which may be made against me.

Mr. CROTHERS. The hon. gentleman has in all probability seen the motion which I propose to read at the close of my remarks and that motion sufficiently indicates this particular subject that I am about to deal with now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Withdraw.

Mr. CROTHERS. He said he wanted a full investigation.

Mr. SPEAKER. In the meantime, of course, if the word of an hon. member of this House is not accepted, I do not know what we will come to. It is customary to accept the statement of an hon. member.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. CROTHERS. I suppose, Mr. Speaker ——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Withdraw.

Mr. CROTHERS. Certainly I desire to obey the intimation by the Speaker——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as this matter is concerned, the hon. gentleman, because he is founding upon his statement a motion, has a right to set forth the matters referred to in his motion. The motion, of which the Prime Minister has had a copy, refers to the authorized reports of the legislature of the province of New Brunswick for the year 1908 and the allegation is that these reports as well as the report of the Central Railway Commission, contain serious matters affecting the public accounts and conduct of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). Under these circumstances to suggest that every statement with regard to the matter will be withdrawn upon the denial of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) would cut off any further discussion of the whole matter, therefore it is perfectly obvious that no such result can obtain under the rules of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If it were parliamentary, I would say that certainly there was an attempt made to deceive the House if it was intended to bring into this——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I say there would be an attempt made to deceive the House——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. The point of order is this that my hon. friend has stated that an attempt has been made to deceive the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes he did. The hon. gentleman who has just made his speech (Mr. Crothers) has been the only speaker and has been the only person who has made these statements. There could be only one meaning to the minister's remark, namely that my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Crothers) attempted to deceive this House.

Mr. CALVERT. No.

Mr. PUGSLEY What I was saying was that there would be an attempt to deceive this House if an effort were now made, by reason of the resolution, to mix up a matter which is entirely distinct from matters connected with the Central Railway, a matter of which I certainly had no notice and which I did not dream for a single moment was intended to be discussed upon this motion. I ask my hon. friend whether, until this moment, any intimation has been given to the House that it was intended to discuss anything else except matters connected with the Central Railway. Let us be fair and let me ask you, Mr. Speaker, if when we waived the rules to-day——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend need not proceed further, if he claims that this takes him by surprise.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I never dreamt of such a thing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We will discuss it some other day, and we will not discuss it to-day; we will take some other opportunity.

Mr. PUGSLEY. All right. We discussed it frequently before the people of New Brunswick and they have given their verdict.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If we are not going to discuss it we had better stop the discussion now. I have just told the hon. gentleman that as he claims he is taken by surprise we will not discuss it, but if he desires to embark on a discussion, we will go on.

Mr. CROTHERS. I quite concur in the suggestion of my honoured leader that we should not proceed with this portion of the indictment. As I said some time ago, there is no desire to be unjust or unfair to the Minister of Public Works, and if he is taken by surprise by this matter being taken up to-day, there is no one on this side of the House who desires to press it. Every member in this House is interested in seeing to it that every other member gets absolute justice and absolute fair play. I shall endeavour to assist in securing for every member of this House, whether on this side or on the other side, absolute justice and absolute fair play, as I would desire to have myself.

As the position of the Hon. L. J. Tweedie, Lieutenant Governor of New Brunswick, differed materially from that of the hon. Minister of Public Works in the transactions referred to in the report re the Central Railway, I have not introduced his name in the motion I am about to read, convinced that he should be made the subject of a separate motion to be made later.

The motion, Mr. Speaker, which I propose to read is in these words:

That all the words after the word 'that' to the end of the question be left out and the following substituted therefor:

The unanimous findings of the commission consisting of the Hon. Mr. Justice Landry and Messrs. F. MacDougall and A. I Teed, appointed by the government of the province of New Brunswick by order in council dated June 5, 1908, and the authorized reports of the proceedings of the legislature of the said province during the session of 1908 set forth serious matters touching the public acts and conduct of the Hon. Wm. Pugsley, formerly a member of the government of the said province and now Minister of Public Works;

That persons occupying high offices of state as constitutional advisers of His Excellency ought to be free from just reproach and from reasonable suspicion in respect of their public character and reputation;

That to this end the said findings in so far as they impugn the public acts or conduct of the said Hon. William Pugsley deserve the serious consideration of this House and demand such action thereupon as may be necessary to enforce worthy and proper standards of public duty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, before you read the motion, may I suggest that, as there were some words in that resolution introduced for the purpose of bringing up the matter now abandoned, it be amended by omitting the words:

And the authorized reports of the proceedings of the legislature of the said province during the session of 1908.

Those words were introduced for the purpose of bringing up the matter which we have now, on the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, decided not to proceed with. Would the Prime Minister agree to that?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman can take his own course.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not care to introduce the subject in the resolution if it is not to be discussed.

Mr. SPEAKER read the motion with these words omitted.

Hon. WILLIAM PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). Mr. Speaker, while I am sorry that matters relating to what may be called the provincial sphere of politics, with which I was connected some years ago, should engage so much of the attention of this House to-day, yet, for myself, Sir, I am glad that the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Crothers) has brought the matter before the House, because this report to which he has referred has been published broadcast in the newspapers, and the fact of his bringing the matter before parliament today gives me an opportunity of directing the attention of the House and of the country to it. I think, Sir, that, before I take my seat, I will be able to show that not only is this report one which ought not to be acted upon by men who desire to do justice, but that it is a report which, within the pages of the report itself, is discredited, shown to be of a partisan character and wholly unreliable. When I tell you, and when I tell this House that these commissioners, while attempting to give a statement of the interest that was expended by this company from the commencement of this transaction in 1901 down to the time when the commissioners, who had been appointed by the previous government went out of office, on the 31st March, 1908, only included two items of interest, one the interest upon the cost of the new line of railway during its construction and limited to the month of January, 1904, and another item beginning upon the 1st July, 1905, and closing upon the 31st March, 1908; when I tell you that these are the only two items of interest which they allow and which amount in themselves to, in the vicinity of, $5,000 more than the total interest which they allow; when I tell you that they leave out of this account every dollar of interest upon the total expenditure between the 1st day of January, 1904, and the 1st day of July, 1905, a period of eighteen months, and when I tell you further that they absolutely leave out of their calculation every dollar of interest upon the $180,000 which was paid for the Central Railway, upon the $77,000 of improvements which were made upon the Central Railway, upon the loss in operating, extending over a number of years, and upon other amounts, and that they have absolutely omitted these from the account and statement of interest which they give, I think you will be prepared to accept the statement which I shall make that this report is utterly unworthy of the consideration of any man who desires to see justice shown to a public man.

Without going further and dealing with other matters, let me prove this, because if I cannot prove this I have made a statement which ought to discredit me among the members of this House. Turn now, and let the hon. member for Elgin turn, if he wants to be fair——

An hon. MEMBER. He has gone out.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think he ought to remain here to hear the statement which I am to make, because I am satisfied that it will convince even him that this report, so far from having been prepared by an honest and non-partisan commission, so far from being a judicial report, has been prepared by a partisan counsel who has advised these commissioners in regard to it and who was instrumental in having it drawn up. My hon. friend has said that upon this report and without considering whether it is true or false, without considering whether or not there is evidence to support it and to justify these commissioners in making it, I, as Minister of Public Works, ought to resign my seat. He quotes a statement of Mr. Fisher in the British parliament that when a charge was made against him he felt it his duty to resign. But in that case Mr. Fisher said: I accept the judgment of the tribunal, in which I have confidence, and therefore I resign my seat. But, Sir, am I to accept the judgment of a partisan tribunal, a tribunal appointed not to inquire into the truth, but a tribunal appointed to find out something upon which a charge might be made against me in order that the wishes of those gentlemen who instituted these proceedings might be carried out, and whose typographical errors, as has been called to my attention, are already a joke throughout this country. I am prepared to take my position anywhere in this House or anywhere before the people of Canada and meet any charges which can be made against me, and I do think, Sir, that it would have been the more constitutional course, the more dignified and the fairer course for the hon. member for Elgin, who reads this report and seeks to discredit me in the eyes of the people, to have read the evidence and to have seen if there was anything in the evidence which justifies the report. Then, if he had read the evidence the manly course for him, if he believed in the truth of these charges, would have been to have made boldly and openly a charge against me on the floor of this House. But, the hon. gentleman does not do that. He simply reads a report made in another place, made in reference to matters which in no way relate to this parliament or to Dominion affairs. In that report there is no charge made against my personal honour, there is no charge made that one dollar of the moneys of this company ever came improperly into my hands. But, the hon. gentleman, upon that report, taking up its various paragraphs charging neglect of my duty as Attorney General of the province, asks this parliament to take action and invites me to resign my seat. Well, Sir, while I am prepared to fight my enemies, and I have some, I am not prepared to lie down and let them crawl over me. For twenty-four years I have fought them before the people of my native province, and whenever I have appealed to the people in my province I have not appealed in vain. I said that these commissioners had absolutely omitted the interest upon this whole amount of indebtedness for a period of a year and a half. I stated also that they had omitted the interest upon all the amounts which were paid for the Central Railway and the amounts which were disbursed for the improvement and operation of that railway, and I am going to prove it to you. At page 22 of the report, referring to the cost of the 15 mile section between Chipman and the coal fields of Minto and the branches to the various coal mines it says:

> There is included in the above item of cost $316,626.33, the cost of the rolling stock $26,800, and we have included in the item of interest in statement (c) the amount of interest which he (referring to Mr. Shannon, accountant of the Department of Railways) fixed at $28,234.63.

That is, Mr. Shannon fixed the interest at that amount. Then on page 23 it says:

Mr. LENNOX. One moment, the hon. gentleman did not finish the sentence and it is very important.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The end of the sentence is:

> both of which, Mr. Shannon omitted from his statement of cost.

and it is not important at all.

Mr. LENNOX. I think it is very important.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend says that because he does not know what bearing this has upon the discussion.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman will find I know a good deal about it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. At page 23 the commissioners say:

> and so far as the evidence shows they were paid they are included in statement (c). Mr. Pugsley also in his statement of cost adopts Mr. Shannon's statement of interest during construction, namely, $28,234.63.

That statement of interest was made by Mr. Shannon who was the accountant of the Department of Railways in connection with the contention which the railway company was making that the interest during construction of the new line should be added to capital, should form a part of the cost of construction, and therefore should be considered by the Department of Railways upon the question of whether they should pay the increased subsidy or not. Now then, the commissioners say they adopt that statement of $28,234, as the interest upon the cost of construction of the new line and they say it for two reasons. They say that Mr. Sharpe the accountant who made the interest at $33,000 had made it too large, and they take Mr. Shannon's statement which would be to the time of the completion of the first of January, 1904. They adopt Mr. Shannon's interest for that reason and they adopt it also——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought the language of the report was that the hon. gentleman himself adopted it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. Their other reason which I was about to state is that they say they adopted it because Mr. Pugsley himself adopted it at the time. When I adopted it was when I was urging the favourable consideration of the company's claim before the Department of Railways, putting forward that Mr. Shannon himself had found that the interest upon the cost of construction amounted to $28,234 and I urged that there was no other account to which it could be charged, that interest during construction should be properly added to the cost, and that therefore this should be taken into consideration by the Department of Railways. Now, we start there with the amount admitted by the commissioners and found by Mr. Shannon to be the interest upon the cost of construction of the 15 mile section and branches to the 1st of January, 1904, when the road was substantially completed, or at all events I think the main line was entirely completed. Then if you turn to pages 79 and 80 of this report you will find they give a statement of the moneys received and the moneys paid out in connection with the railway and branches since taken over by the province on the 1st of July, 1905. Let me read this again so that there may be no misunderstanding:

> Moneys received and moneys paid out in connection with the railway and branches since taken over by province, July 1, 1905.
> Interest on loans and coupons, $68,770.65

Now, if you add together the $28,234 which they say was the interest upon the cost of construction of the new line to the month of January, 1904, and the $68,770 which they say was expended in interest subsequent to the 1st of July, 1905, and you get nearly $97,000 of interest, and yet, Sir, upon page 76 of this report these commissioners in arriving at this shortage put in the total amount of interest over the whole period and upon all the expenditures of the company at $92,000, being $5,000 less than the two items alone of interest to which I have called your attention. Is that another typographical error?

Then, if you turn back a little bit farther in the report you will find that in giving a statement with regard to some moneys which were due to the Peoples' Bank at Fredericton alone, you will find that they show there that up to the 1st of January there was a note due to the Peoples' Bank of New Brunswick amounting to $169,314.94, and that interest charges to October 14, 1905, brought the total up to $176,611.53, or interest of about $7,000 which was paid to the Peoples' Bank of New Brunswick subsequent to the 1st of January, 1904, and with the exception of the interest between the 1st of July and October they have left that out of the account altogether as well. And as I have said, there is the total interest upon the cost of the new line, $316,000, which they find to be correct, upon the $180,000 expended for the purchase of the Central Railway, upon the improvements of $77,000 which were placed upon the Central Railway according to the report of these commissioners, and they leave all of the interest upon that large amount out for a period of 18 months during a portion of which period as the commissioners themselves say the company was paying interest at a rate of from 6½ per cent to 7 per cent. And in addition to that they leave out, prior to the 1st of January, 1904, all the interest upon the cost of the Central Railway and upon the improvements which were made to the Central.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall show a little later that in the desire of these commissioners to submit a report upon which some action might be taken adverse to myself, they either wittingly or unwittingly omitted to include interest which I venture to say would amount to somewhere in the vicinity of $60,000. And I would invite my hon. friend the member for Elgin (Mr. Crothers) to explain how it is that he can justify the report of the commissioners who, in an attempt to arrive at the expenditure on this road utterly and absolutely ignore the interest extending over these lengthy periods and upon these large amounts of money, which would necessarily come to a very large sum?

Now, Sir, there is no excuse for these commissioners. They were not bound to take Mr. Shannon's statement of the interest on the cost of construction of the new line down to January 1, 1904, they were not bound to take my statement either, because under the authority which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crothers) has read the statute clothed them with power to summon before them every person who they thought might give evidence which would be of importance to the commission. They were empowered to bring any acounts before them and they could have subpoenaed the managers of the various banks. They were notified that the loans for this company had been negotiated at the Peoples' Bank of New Brunswick, at the Bank of Montreal, Fredericton, through Mr. G. W. Allen, the secretary of the company, at the Bank of British North America in Fredericton, through Mr. Allen, the secretary of the company; that an account had at my request been opened for the company with the Bank of New Brunswick in the city of St. John, and they had before them also the fact that loans were negotiated with the Canada Permanent Mortgage Company and that there were loans also from the Bank of Nova Scotia in St. John. They had before them the names of all these banks and of the loan company from whom the company had received loans from time to time. As every hon. member in this House knows, when a note is taken to a bank for discount the proceeds of the note less the discount are paid to the credit of the person or company that obtains the discount. And in every case the accounts of these banks would show what was the discount taken off these notes from time to time and paid by the company. Therefore, these commissioners had it in their power to obtain from the managers and accountants of these various banks the interest which was paid by this company during that long period of seven years, extending from 1901 to 1908. But, Sir, I am told by my hon. friend who represents the county of Carleton, New Brunswick, (Mr. Carvell), and who was present at this investigation as council, that, so far as the evidence showed, never once did they inquire of those institutions what was the interest paid by the company from time to time during this long period of years; and from the beginning to the end they never hinted that they wanted any information from the company with regard to the interest, and they left me, and I presume my hon. friend to assume that they would, before they came to the close of their investigation, have an accountant go through the books of the banks, ascertain what the interest was, and make a correct statement with regard to it; because, without a correct statement with regard to the interest, I ask what is the value of this report? In making the statement that there is a great deficiency between the receipts and the expenditures, they simply convey false information to the people of this country. Surely, Sir, it was the very least of the duties which they owed to the public and to those whose reputation was to a certain extent involved in the investigation, to make an inquiry into the interest, instead of simply adding those two sums together, one on a certain portion of the cost down to January, 1904, and the other on the cost down from the 1st of July, 1905, lumping those two together, and arbitrarily throwing off $5,000 and fixing that as being approximately the interest which the company paid during that long period of years.

Mr. LANCASTER. I understand that the hon. gentleman had counsel there. If he had, why did not his counsel produce this evidence which he is bemoaning the loss of?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have already stated why. The commissioners subpœnaed the banks with the accounts. They had brought to the city of St. John, some two or three weeks before the general election, an accountant for the purpose of going into these matters, and we had a right to assume that they would endeavour to give an accurate account, and would not arbitrarily fix the interest at some $60,000 less than the interest amounted to.

Mr. LANCASTER. But when the evidence was not given——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANCASTER. I will ask the hon. gentleman's permission to ask him a question. I do not think the other hon. gentlemen opposite are acting very properly. If the Minister of Public Works does not want me to ask the question, I will not do so.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will be very glad to have the hon. gentleman ask it.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then I ask that hon. gentlemen do not interrupt in that very rude way. I wish to ask: Was there not a time in the investigation when the loss of this evidence was noticed? If so, why was not the evidence produced by the counsel appearing for the hon. gentleman?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was never intimated that there was any loss of this evidence. The commissioners never intimated to my hon. friend from Carleton or to me, but that they were having the interest accurately made up, and it came to me as a shocking surprise when I read this report and found that they had simply taken the interest during the cost of construction of the new line to January, 1904, and the interest for the last 18 months or so and added those together, ignoring some $50,000 or $60,000 of interest, the particulars of which we had a right to suppose they were obtaining from the banks. When I tell this House that there would be interest on the cost of the Central Railway amounting to $180,000, interest on the improvements amounting to $77,000 and upwards, interest on loss of operation amounting to some $19,000, interest on the cost of some of the rolling stock, which was not added to the cost of construction, and interest on other expenditures in connection with the preliminary work which the company did with a view to carrying on mining operations, and when, as the commissioners themselves say, in many cases interest at the rate of 6½ or 7 per cent was necessarily paid to the banks, they will see to what a large amount the interest would necessarily run up, and how necessary it was for these commissioners, if they wanted to give an accurate statement of the receipts and disbursements, to have a proper interest account made up. That they did not is itself evidence of the grossest possible carelessness on the part of these commissioners. It is more than that: It is evidence of a reckless desire to injure me and other members of the government in which I occupied the position of Attorney General. It is evidence that they thought that if they could get launched a report sufficiently strong, they might accomplish the mission for which they were appointed—bring about my resignation, and leave me afterwards to vindicate myself as best I could before the people of this country. It is evidence that these commissioners did not care whether they did justice or a gross injustice, because in order to do justice it was absolutely essential that the report should be accurate, and should show with as much certainty as possible what were the receipts and expenditures of this company.

That these commissioners and those advising them were actuated by partisan motives, I will show by another fact. It is this, that the public reports of the province of New Brunswick, the report of the Auditor General for the year 1908, show that in the month of October last, just before the general election, these commissioners employed Mr. Dunlop, a chartered accountant of, as I understand, the city of Montreal, and brought him down to St. John for the purpose of going into these accounts, and he made up a statement for them. That statement was published by Mr. H. A. Powell, the solicitor and counsel for these commissioners, and for the government of New Brunswick, and it appeared in the 'Daily Standard,' the Conservative organ of the city of St. John, in its issue of the 14th of October, 1908. What do you think, Sir, of commissioners who were engaged, as the hon. member for West Elgin says, upon a judicial inquiry, and who had not yet terminated their inquiry, upon the eve of an election in which I was a candidate, sending to the city of Montreal for an accountant and bringing him down to the city of St. John at the expense of the provincial government to have him investigate these accounts, and having published through Mr. Powell, the counsel for these commissioners, a statement of the professed receipts and disbursements doing that, as I say, before the commissioners had ended their labours and made their report, and doing it for no other purpose than to influence the people of New Brunswick against me? That statement, Sir, is worse than the statement which these commissioners have presented because it showed a deficiency of $117,000, and in addition Mr. Powell was reported in the newspaper as saying that Mr. Evans stated that there was a shortage in his payment of $47,000; and they put it before the people of St. John and the people of New Brunswick that there was a deficiency of $164,000 in connection with the Central Railway and the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, and because of this alleged deficiency they asked the people of New Brunswick to condemn me and my colleagues. I say that this is evidence of partisanship of the grossest character. I want to know what the commissioners had to do with the general elections of the 26th of October, and what business it was of theirs to employ an accountant for the purpose of spreading that statement broadcast before the people of New Brunswick pending the completion of their report. But they had that prepared and published on the 14th of October, some 12 days before the general election. Fortunately I was able to show, by facts of the most convincing character, that the statement published in the 'Daily Standard' alleged to have been made by Mr. Dunlop, was absolutely erroneous. I showed that certain facts and information must have been withheld from him which, if they had been furnished, would have compelled him to present a different report; and after I had made my statement and the errors in his report were shown, we heard little or nothing more of that report during the last few days preceding the general election.

Mr. CROCKET. Was that statement made before the minister was examined as a witness in that inquiry?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it was made on the 14th of October, 1908, and the general elections took place on the 26th of October. It was made with a view of influencing the general elections in 1908.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was the date of the hon. gentleman's examination?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Between Christmas and New Years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The statement was some two months in advance of the hon. gentleman's evidence.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Quite so, but just twelve days in advance of the general elections; and it would not have done for these non-partisan commissioners to have kept that back until after the elections. That would not have suited one of the purposes they had in view and which they signally failed to accomplish.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Having had this notice on the 14th of October, and not being examined before the end of December, why did the hon. gentleman not produce all this evidence which he said was available?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will tell my hon. friend why. This evidence was all available for the commissioners if they had chosen to ask for it; but from what I saw from the course of events in the newspapers—and my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) will corroborate what I say—these commissioners, perhaps because they were guided by their counsel, did not act as if they wanted it. They did not go along in a connected way to get the receipts and disbursements, but they got a little evidence here and a little there, they called first one man and then another, and presented the evidence in a disconnected way, so that no one could follow it or suspect what these commissioners were going to do when they finally decided to make up their report. They did not do what they ought to have done, if they expected to treat this company as trustees and were going to have a report or an accounting from them. If they had wanted to do that, what was the proper course open to them? Their proper course was to notify the president of the company that they were commissioners appointed by the provincial legislature to inquire into this matter, and ask this company to file an account from beginning to end, showing its receipts and disbursements. That is what is done every day in a court of equity.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When a trustee is called on to file an account, what does he first do? He prepares his account and files it with the referee and notice is then given the parties interested that evidence will be taken on a certain day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does he not file vouchers with it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not according to the practice in New Brunswick. He files his account first. A day is then appointed for hearing, when, if any account is objected to, that account is gone into, and evidence taken. When the referee, having taken the evidence and examined the vouchers, makes his report, he sends a copy to the solicitors, and a day is set apart to hear what they have to say. Was that done in this matter? No. These commissioners went to work and obtained evidence here and there in a disconnected way, without making any request to the company or directors to file an account. When they began to go through the evidence, did they intimate to any director or counsel of the company that they had any difficulty with reference to the disbursements so far with regards the interest. Not a word, not an intimation of any kind or description; and without notice to anybody, they make this report of the 29th of March, in which they declare they find this deficiency. I can point out—and intend to before I get through, even at the risk of wearying the House—as much as twenty statements in this report which are falsified by the facts. Let me just call your attention to one thing which I think is one of the most—what shall I say?—reprehensible I ever knew even the most prejudiced partisan to be guilty of—let alone a judicial body. I want to call your attention to page 35 of this report which says:

> We found they had discounted in the People's Bank at Fredericton a note for $10,000 on November 19, marked 'F.P.T.' and that as to this note we could not trace what became of the proceeds.

Well, everybody in New Brunswick would know that he initials F.P.T. meant the Hon. Senator Thompson, and these commissioners knew that these initials meant the Hon. F. P. Thompson. They knew it, not only because of his prominence in New Brunswick, but because they had evidence that he was endorsing, together with Mr. Whitehead, the notes of the James Barnes Construction Company, which enabled that company to proceed with this undertaking. Yet, during this investigation they never called the attention of Mr. Carvell, or of any witness, Mr. Thompson, or myself, to this note. They never said that they wanted an explanation with regard to it. When Senator Thompson was on the stand, they never referred to it; yet as they have put the matter in this report, any man reading it would suppose that Senator Thompson had received the sum of $10,000, the proceeds of one of the notes of the company, to which he was in no way entitled. And Senator Thompson is one of the public men of the province of New Brunswick against whom they make this imputation—not by a straight charge but by way of insinuation. They were not bold enough to come out with a direct attack, but it is the cowardly assassin who strikes in the dark. Had they asked Senator Thompson or myself or Mr. Barnes or Mr. Whitehead with regard to this note, they would have found it was a note given by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company to Senator Thompson and Mr. Whitehead, and was endorsed by them and discounted by the People's Bank and the proceeds placed to the credit of the Barnes Construction Company, and which entered into the construction of the railway between Chipman and Minto. The reason the note was marked this way was it was given before the company had taken the contract from the James Barnes Construction Company under circumstances I will mention later.

It was given upon the representation that the amount of the progress estimates was not sufficient to pay the labour employed, to say nothing of the materials, because the work had turned out much more difficult than had been expected when the contract was let. They came to the company and asked for an accommodation note in the meantime to carry them over, to enable them to raise the money to pay for the labour and material. This note was given and was ear-marked in that way so that Mr. Thompson could be called upon to make it good to the company. Later on, when, the company took over the work from the hands of the contractors, that note is charged by the railway company to the construction company, and in the accounts of the construction company produced before Mr. Shannon that note is credited to the railway company by the construction company. And yet, Sir, there appears upon this report the damning insinuation that Hon. F. P. Thompson had received as graft the proceeds of this note of $10,000. Now, does not this impress this House, and even gentlemen upon the other side, particularly the legal members, that if these commissioners and their counsel had been actuated by any sense of fair play, when they came across the entry of this note in the bank marked with the initials 'F.P.T.' they would have sent for Mr. Thompson and asked an explanation? It would have been a simple thing to say: We find your initials on this note, we cannot trace the proceeds, and would like you to give us information concerning it. Would not that have been the fair, the honest, the decent thing to do?—to say nothing more. Now, I will give you another evidence of the unfairness of these commissioners. By the statement which the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) has read, and by the order in council appointing these commissioners, they were limited in their duties to an examination into the expenditures which were made subsequent to January 1, 1901, in connection with this railway. Let me read it. You will find it at page 8 of the report:

> 1. The expenditures of all provincial moneys from the 1st of January, 1901, in connection with the road from Norton to Gibson and all branches.

Well, Sir, when these commissioners went through matters—as I suppose—as they came to their notice, apparently they were not able to find that there had been any money that had come improperly into my hands or into the hands of the other directors of the company, because the evidence shows that the proceeds of any notes with the discounting of which I had nothing to do were handed over to the contractors and the secretary of the company whose duty it was to keep the accounts. Not finding anything to impeach my honour, or to show that I have received any part of this money, they thought that they would extend their duties a little further. Though the Act limited them to 1901, they thought they would go back. They thought they might find something against the government in 1890, when Mr. Blair was leader of the government, and, in order to gratify their hatred of an old political opponent, they went back—how far do you think, Mr. Speaker? They went back to 1887, fourteen years before the time named in the statute and in the order in council appointing them. And they say that, in connection with certain matters regarding the subsidies, he was generously paid but the amount of which they had been unable to determine. And again they make a statement with regard to Mr. Blair in which they charge that there was a holdup or graft of which Mr. Blair, as leader of the government, was guilty, a statement which, I am informed by those who were interested in the company at that time, is absolutely untrue, a statement for which there is not a shadow of foundation. And yet these commissioners, in order to attack the memory of a man who never was afraid to stand up before them when he was living, and who has now passed over to the majority, go out of their way to make these charges of what took place fourteen years before the time concerning which their investigation was supposed to be held. They are not content to go back and attack the character of Mr. Blair, but they think they will get something against me by stating, as they do on page 4:

> On October 4, 1895, a contract was entered into by the New Brunswick government with the Central Railway Company for the construction of the fifteen mile section and the granting of the subsidy of $3,000 per mile. The following day $7,000 of this subsidy was assigned by Dr. de Bertram to the Hon. William Pugsley and Mr. Skinner.

They say afterwards that upon that order $2,200 was paid. Well, Sir, I would ask any hon. member of this House if the commissioners might not reasonably expect that the inference to be drawn from that statement would be that this order in council, this order upon the subsidy, had been assigned to me while I was a member of the government, and that I received this $2,200 while I was a member of the government? They speak of me as the Honourable William Pugsley and say that it was to me that order was given, that it was to me it was paid jointly with Mr. Skinner. It may be said: 'They do not say that you were a member of the government at the time.' But they do not take any pains to inform the country that I was not a member of the government at the time. It happened that I had been a member of the government between 1890 and 1892, but in the latter year I went out of politics and remained out of politics for seven years; and, at the time when this transaction took place, I was not a member of the government nor even a member of the legislature, but I was solicitor for one of the parties interested in that contract and in the undertaking and had something to do with the transactions between Dr. de Bertram and the James Barnes Company, but my relations with them were wholly those of solicitor and client. Yet, notwithstanding that, the impression is sought to be created by this report that I was at that time a member of this government.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the Minister (Mr. Pugsley) state that this also was for professional fees?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not stating what it was for. I think that what I have stated is enough for this House, though it may not be for those who would make insinuations or imputations against me. I know there are a great many small men in the province of New Brunswick, narrow-minded men who, though having no evidence or facts to go upon, are always willing to make insinuations against their neighbours, and particularly against those who have been a little more successful in life than they themselves have been. It is enough for me to say that I was in some way, I do not remember, just how, for it was a long time, 14 years ago, acting in that case, either for Dr. de Bertram or James Barnes, the contractor, but I was not in politics, I was not a member of the government and not even a member of the legislature, and yet these commissioners went back in this case six years before the time which was named by the commission in order to throw out something as against myself which might be taken hold of by people who were not thoroughly informed with regard to the facts.

The commissioners go on to say also that there was something wrong with regard to a payment of $5,000 made to Dr. de Bertram when Mr. Blair was leader of the government. What that has to do with the matter I am unable to say, but since they mention it I will say that I made inquiry with regard to that and the circumstances were these: The provincial government, away back in 1889 or 1890, at a time when Mr. Blair was the leader, had entered into a contract with the Central Railway Company of which Dr. de Bertram was the assignee and contractor, for the construction of the line between Chipman and Fredericton. Shortly after he had commenced work, this House, at the instance of the government of Sir John A. Macdonald, passed an Act for the construction of a railway between Harvey and Salisbury, what is known as the Harvey-Salisbury line, and that railway, for a considerable part of its course, would traverse the same route as was provided for in the contract between the government of New Brunswick and the Central Railway Company. Mr. Blair was of the opinion that if the Dominion government was going to subsidize the line it should not be built at the expense of the provincial government and that no subsidy should be given by the New Brunswick legislature. He introduced an act in the legislature or had an order in council passed, authorizing him to stop the work which Dr. de Bertram was doing and had a right to do under the terms of his contract. Although Dr. de Bertram had done work to the extent of some $13,000, if I remember the figures correctly, or perhaps a little less, he was stopped and the work was not proceeded with for the reason I have mentioned. The government of New Brunswick then led by Mr. Blair, paid to Dr. de Bertram as compensation for this work, which amounted to some $9,000 or $10,000, or $13,000, the sum of $5,000, and that was all that Dr. de Bertram got out of the transaction at the time, even although he had a perfect right to go on with his contract, and although it seemed to me that the provincial government might well have paid him a larger sum under the circumstances in view of their having prevented him from having completed the work for which the government had agreed to pay him a subsidy. The commissioners speak further with reference to that and say there was some $8,000 which was paid illegally by the old government. As they have referred to it of course it is my duty to speak of it, because I notice that the commissioners say, and this was dwelt upon by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Crothers), that the $25,000 of subsidy which was paid under the old agreement and upon the work between Minto and Fredericton, or if you like between Chipman and Fredericton, it makes but little difference which so far as the argument is concerned, was illegally paid. The ground on which they based that assertion is that the subsidy was not to be paid except as each ten miles was completed. These commissioners do not deny that the work was done, they admit that Dr. de Bertram did between $33,000 and $36,000 worth of work, but they say that he had not finished up his ten mile section and that therefore the government of Mr. Blair acted illegally in making a payment of subsidy to him. These commissioners have forgotten that although under the terms of the contract the government was not bound to pay until and unless each section of ten miles was completed, yet, under the terms of the statute by virtue of which the subsidy was payable, the government was authorized to make a payment of 40 per cent as $20,000 worth of work was done from time to time. In other words they could pay on progress estimates 40 per cent of the work actually done and if this work was done to the extent of $33,000 or $36,000, 40 per cent of that would amount to some $13,000, which would quite justify the government of Mr. Blair in paying the total amount of subsidy to Dr. de Bertram as they did. Yet it is strongly put forward in this report that the whole issue was illegal and therefore I suppose that is part of the indictment which my hon. friend says he has presented against me because I was at one time a member of the government of Mr. Blair. Now we will see if we cannot find a fourth misstatement in the report.

Mr. FOSTER. On what page does my hon. friend find that statement of the commission with reference to the illegality and wrong of paying that $13,000?

We find the whole of this $25,000 of subsidy bonds were illegally issued.

They go out of their way, as I have said, to show illegal conduct on the part of Mr. Blair away back many years before the time which was fixed by the statute and the order in council for their work, and show that money was wrongly paid by Mr. Blair and one of the grounds on which they put it is that the subsidies were not payable except on the completion of each ten-mile section.

Mr. FOSTER. Was it Mr. Blair who issued the subsidy bonds?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was Mr. Blair who issued the $13,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Was it he who issued the $25,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He issued $13,000 of the $25,000. These commissioners mix all in together. Now there was a further amount. I am going on to show the misstatements of the commissioners, and how partisan and how reckless they were with regard to the facts of the case.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to contend that these commissioners were restricted in their investigations to 1901 and subsequent years?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Then how does the hon. gentleman explain the second clause of the matter referred to them?

The issue and sale and pledging of all bonds guaranteed by the government and the expenditure of money realized out of same.

Mr. PUGSLEY. For the reason that no bonds were guaranteed by the province until after 1901.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Were not the $25,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The $25,000 were not guaranteed bonds, they were bonds issued for cash subsidy, simply cash subsidy.

Mr. MEIGHEN. They were bonds?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They were not guaranteed bonds, they were not what is referred to by the reference at all. The reference was distinctly confined to the year 1901, by the statute.

I wish to invite attention to another statement which I think is of great importance, and which no member of this House should have been prepared to practically support by bringing this matter before the House unless he had made some inquiry and satisfied himself of its truthfulness. I find, on pages 18 and 19 of the report of the commissioners, a very important statement, and I am going to press this with a great deal of force, if I can press any point with force. I am going to urge upon the consideration of this House, the fact that not only is the statement to which I am about to allude false, but that it is, I am obliged to say, either knowingly or recklessly false. It has been made either knowing that it was false or with an utter disregard of the facts of the case. On page 18 they say:

Notwithstanding this fact, it appears conclusively from the evidence that the whole $250,000 par value of these 3 per cent bonds had been guaranteed and delivered to the company up to the 6th day of August, 1903.

That is a charge of the most serious character to make against the provincial government. That is a charge that we, in violation of the statute, in violation of our duty, when we had no legislative authority to do it, prior to the passing of the Act of 1904, which extended the powers as far as the guaranteeing of bonds was concerned, prior to the 6th of August, 1903, guaranteed the whole of this issue of $250,000 of three per cent bonds and that they were delivered to the company. They say that that appears conclusively from the evidence. I say it does not appear, not merely conclusively from the evidence, but that it does not appear at all from the evidence and that the evidence is entirely contrary to that statement. So far from the whole $250,000 having been guaranteed prior to the 6th of August, 1903, the total amount which was guaranteed was $138,500, a difference of $111,500, between what was actually guaranteed and the statement which these commissioners make as the amount having been guaranteed. There is no excuse for that and it cannot be a typographical error either.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is a typical error.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it is a typical error though not a typographical one. On the 6th August, when the completion of the purchase of this Central Railway was about being effected and in respect to the Central Railway, the government was, by an Act of the legislature, authorized to guarantee bonds to the extent of $200,000.

Mr. FOSTER. $180,000 for the purchase?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, but $200,000 altogether. There was a sum of $20,000 for improvements already made on the Central Railway by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company. The legislature authorized the guaranteeing of $200,000 of bonds upon the title being completed and delivered to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, a mortgage being executed on the whole system of 60 miles of railway to secure the new issue. I have in my possession a copy of the order that I, as attorney general of the province, gave to Mr. E. M. Shadbolt, the manager in St. John of the Royal Trust Company, which was the trustee for the bondholders of this mortgage, and which is as follows :

To E. M. Shadbolt, Agent Royal Trust Company at St. John.

,You will please deliver the bonds of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company guaranteed by the province, as follows:

To the Bank of Montreal, 140 bonds, 141-280..	$ 70,000
To the Bank of British North America 40 bonds, 281-320	20,000
To the Bank of New Brunswick, 54 bonds, 321-374	27,000
To the Bank of New Brunswick, for People's Bank of New Brunswick, 140 bonds, 1-140..	70,000
To Arthur I. Trueman, 171 bonds, 507-677	85,500
To Bank of New Brunswick, in addition to above, 132 bonds, 375-506 ..	66,000

(Sgd.) WM. PUGSLEY,
Attorney General.

August 6, 1903.

If you deduct the $200,000 which was authorized by the legislature to be guaranteed on the title to the Central Railway Company being acquired, there is a balance of $138,500 out of the bond issue of $250,000 which was previously guaranteed, leaving $111,500 still unguaranteed. Therefore, I cite that charge, that statement, as being false. Mr. E. M. Shadbolt, the manager of the Bank of Montreal and of the Royal Trust Company at St. John, in his evidence, produced a copy of this order before the commissioners, and it appears in the evidence upon which they ought to have made their report. If they had based their report upon the evidence, they would have known, they must have known that the total issue at that date included the $200,000 authorized to be guaranteed for the purchase of and improvements upon the Central Railway making a total of $338,500 or $111,500 more than these commissioners state had been issued.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the minister state that the whole of the $200,000 that was authorized to be issued on account of the purchase of the Central Railway was a new issue?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. And that the conveyance was not made until the date that the minister has referred to?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. The conveyance was made at that time simultaneously with it, and I may say to my hon. friend that as a portion of the conveyance and showing the care which I, as attorney general, exercised in connection with it, I insisted that some $66,000 of the bonds should be used in the Bank of New Brunswick and that all the outstanding mortgage bonds upon the road, amounting to $540,000, should be transferred to the vaults of the Bank of New Brunswick and kept there for the protection of the government and of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company until we had the whole title completed and everything carried out in accordance with the provisions of the Act of the legislature. The provisions of the statute were carried out to the letter and the complete title was vested in the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company. Under these circumstances, when the hon. member for Elgin talks, and when these commissioners talk about our having deceived the legislature, if they will look at the synoptic report of the proceedings of the legislature for the year 1904 they will find a full, a complete and a true statement in regard to the issue of the bonds. I have here a copy of the synoptic reports from the year 1901 to the year 1907 which I will be glad to submit to any hon. member of this House. They contain a statement of the total cost of the railway, of which I am going to speak in a little while, and of the issue of bonds, and so far as the cost of the construction of this railway is concerned, so far as the receipts and disbursements are concerned, so far as the issue of bonds which were made from time to time are concerned, so far as the various orders in council which were passed from time to time are concerned, I challenge any hon. member to take these reports from 1901 to 1907, during the time when these matters were being discussed, and point out where a single erroneous statement in regard to the cost or the issue of bonds was made to the legislature or that we in any way deceived them. It is all very well for these commissioners to say, as they do say, in a part of their report, that the fact of our being ex-officio members of this company gave us the opportunity to present such statements as were necessary to allay the suspicion of the legislature and to conceal from the country the true state of affairs. Surely it was the duty of these commissioners, before making a charge of such a serious character against public men, and before sending that report broadcast throughout the country without the evidence, because the evidence has not been printed to this day, the provincial government, when requested to do so by the opposition in the New Brunswick legislature having refused to print it, to have shown, that we had presented false statements to the legislature, that we had concealed from the legislature the number and amount of the bonds which we had guaranteed from time to time and that we had made false statements as to the cost of the construction of this line, seeing that they were a judicial, and an impartial body prepared to do justice. Do you not think that the hon. member for Elgin, in carrying out the strong desire which he expressed to do justice even to the Minister of Public Works, notwithstanding his recent visit to St. John and consultation with those who were seeking to post him in regard to this inquiry, and before he would have placed upon the records of this House the statement that the attorney general and provincial secretary, by reason of their being ex-officio members of this company, were able, from their knowledge and control of the company's affairs to present such statements as were necessary to allay the suspicions of the legislature and conceal from the country the true state of affairs, would have felt it to be his duty to have shown that we had concealed from the legislature the number and amount of bonds which had been guaranteed from time to time and that we had concealed the amount which this road was costing.

Why, Sir, if you will turn to the debates of the legislature you will find that this matter came up for discussion session after session for a number of years and that every information was given in relation to it. It was a fruitful theme for discussion, the people were interested; the road was costing more than we had anticipated, the Central Railway upon which considerable improvements had been made and which was the key of the situation as connecting the Intercolonial with these large, valuable coal fields, had been unfortunate because of an accident that happened to one of the bridges; large expenses had to be incurred and there was a great deal of disappointment. The people were taking a great interest in the matter and it was discussed from time to time in the legislature, and we were asked from session to session: What is the amount of bonds that have been issued, what is the cost of the road, to what different people is the company indebted, what is the output of the mines, what is the traffic upon the road, what are the receipts and the operating expenses? And, session after session in the minutest detail all that information was given to the House and to the people. I defy any hon. gentleman in this House to take the synoptic report of the debates of the legislature and show that there was any mis-statement in regard to all this or any concealment in the statements presented to the legislature. I wish to point out another fact which will show the unfairness of these commissioners and the absence of a desire on their part to do justice. These commissioners say that the legislation was altered from time to time and that we were given power to issue bonds to a greater extent than the legislature gave us in the first instance. That is true. But is that the business of these commissioners to inquire into? Have they the right to set themselves up against and above the legislature of New Brunswick and to say that the legislature had no right to pass statutes modifying the original legislation? I never before heard that commissioners had the right to do that. I never heard that these commissioners were appointed for the purpose of questioning the policy of the legislature. I never understood that and I do not think anybody else ever did. But what these commissioners say is: It is true that by statute the legislature in 1904 made a change in the original legislation and authorized the granting of the whole issue of bonds upon and in respect of the new line and its branches without making a provision for a coal plant and without making certain provision for the building of the line through to Gibson. And then, at page 19 of the report the commissioners say:

> After this the Act of 1904 was passed and an obscure section introduced which allowed the government to guarantee bonds for any section of the road to a greater proportion, and so on.

Well, Mr. Powell says this obscure section——I beg pardon Judge Landry says: This obscure section was put in the Act of 1904, which allowed us to do just what we did do, but these commissioners say that the members of the legislature who consented to it could hardly have understood that they were giving authority to the government to guarantee the whole issue of $450,000 of bonds. And this is one of the grounds of attack which they made on us: That we guaranteed the whole $450,000 of bonds without having a mining plant and without having the road built to Fredericton. In another part of the report they condemn us most strongly for that and they say we were guilty of a great breach of our obligations to the public, and yet on page 19 they say we were fully and completely authorized by the legislature to do exactly what we did, but that the members of the legislature could not have understood what was the effect of the statute. They speak of it as an obscure section. Well, Mr. Speaker, in 1904, when his Bill was introduced, we fully explained to the legislature the situation of affairs. We explained to them the fact that whereas in the first instance we had entered into a contract which we supposed would have enabled the road to have been completed right through from Chipman to Fredericton or to Gibson, that owing to the difficulties of construction being greater than anticipated, owing to it becoming necessary to take the work off the hands of the contractor, that the company would not be able to establish a mining plant and that these bonds might all have to be used in connection with the 15 mile section and the branches and the repairs and improvements which were being made to the Central. We stated that fully to the House and if hon. gentlemen will look through the discussions which took place in 1904 they will find that one of the points which were made against us by Mr. Hazen, then the leader of the opposition, was that we were providing by this Bill so that the whole issue of bonds might be used and so that there would not be sufficient bonds left for the purpose of carrying the road right through to Fredericton. And yet these commissioners say that was an obscure section which the members of the legislature could not have understood. As against that statement I present the fact, which any hon. gentleman can see for himself, that in the discussions in 1904 in the legislature this very point was raised by the leader of the opposition, and that the premier of the province at the time explained what was the effect and the intention of the Act. And the legislature in full knowledge of what these provisions of the Act were, passed the Bill authorizing the government to do exactly what was done.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the minister going to read a statement of Mr. Hazen?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I had intended to but I could not find it at the moment. I have it now. At page 169 this discussion is reported:

Hon Mr. Tweedie,—When this company started it was intended that they should establish a mining plant and they made every afford to obtain one. Their attention was directed to the Butler elevator, which operated on what was termed the land dredging system. Mr. Butler visited the mines, but they were unable to come to terms with him. Mr. Butler would not sell his machine, which was valued at $150,000, but demanded a dollar and ten cents for every ton of coal mined. He also wanted a straight run of half a mile or a mile for the machine to operate in. It was discovered that the seams did not run so as to admit of this. It was then thought best to build branch lines to the mines that were already in operation. A line five miles in length was built to the Gibbon mine and it also served several other mines. A shorter line was built to Senator King's mine. There was no doubt as to the success of the mining operations in Queens county, but the road had only been opened a short time and its possibilities had not been developed.

Mr. Hazen stated that the section with regard to the provincial secretary being allowed to guarantee bonds, although the amount of guarantee might be greater than the mileage completed justified, was the most objectionable in the Bill. It appeared that although only 15 miles of the road had been built most of the bonds had been issued so that there would be no funds with which to build the road from Newcastle to Fredericton.

There you have the statement made by the government that the idea of building the mining plant had been abandoned, that it had been thought better to build branch lines into the various operating mines and to encourage the existing mine owners and and you find the statement made by Mr. Hazen, the leader of the opposition, in criticism of this 'obscure' section, that it did just what we told the legislature it would do and what the commissioners admit in their report it authorized us to do. And you find also that not only Mr. Hazen but all the members of the legislature were fully informed of the necessity which had arisen to make the guarantee of bonds which had been made, and also of the desirability of abandoning the policy of establishing a mining plant and building branch lines to the various mines in order to encourage the exsting mine owners and in order to induce the development of other mines. Then I am going to cite another statement to show the reckless character of the report of these commissioners. This will be number six or number seven ; I have about fourteen more before I get through. On page 71, referring to this Act of 1904, they say :

Before this provision was enacted, perhaps in anticipation of it, the whole issue of $450,000 bonds was out and had been nearly all, if not absolutely all, guaranteed and used.

And yet. in another part of the report they state that in June 1904, months after this statute had been passed which authorized the additional guarantee, this company had put into the Bank of New Brunswick $52,500 bonds, and received on these bonds an absolutely new loan, and those bonds were not guaranteed until after the statute of 1904 had been passed which fully authorized the guarantee to be made. There you find two utterly different statements on different pages of this report, showing either that the report was drawn by two different people and that the different parts of it had not been compared, or the utter recklessness of the statements which these commissioners made.

Let me speak of another matter to show the great length to which these commissioners have gone in their desire to make an attack upon the members of the late government. At page 29 they say with regard to Lieut.-Gov. Tweedie:

It will be noted that Hon. Mr. Tweedie retained one per cent commission, $500 on the sale of $50,000 bonds made by him in Chatham.

Let me explain the circumstances of that. Mr. Tweedie was Provincial Secretary, but he was doing what the members of the government of New Brunswick did then, did before his time, and do to-day—he was practicing his profession. The Hon. Mr. Blair continued the practice of his profession while he was in the government, Mr. Tweedie continued his, I continued mine, Mr. Hazen continued his, and until the province pays larger salaries—I believe our successors have made a move in that direction, although they have not been very long in office—the members of the government will continue to practise their professions. Mr. Tweedie was at that time practising law in the town of Chatham in the county of Northumberland. This company had issued those bonds some months before the transactions which these commissioners refer to took place. They had got a loan from the Bank of New Brunswick on which they were paying 6½ or 7 per cent interest, as these commissioners state. The company were desirous, if possible, of getting a loan on the bonds at a lower rate of interest, so as to save all the interest possible; but they did not want to sell the bonds, because at that time it was expected that the Grand Trunk Pacific would come through the town of Chipman, and that this road would form a junction with the Transcontinental at Chipman, as has actually taken place since, and they wanted to keep control of the bonds, so that in the future, if it was thought better, this railway might amalgamate with or be absorbed by or be leased to the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the bond issue might be cancelled and the liability of the government wiped out, and in that way the province be freed from this guarantee. Mr. Tweedie had a client, Mr. Hickson, living at Miramichi; my hon. friend from Northumberland probably knows him very well. Mr. Tweedie learned that he was anxious to make an investment in good securities, and he saw him and made an arrangement with him under which he took $50,000 of those bonds which were then held by the Bank of New Brunswick as collateral for a discount. Mr. Hickson took the bonds at par, they bearing interest at 4 per cent, and gave to the company an agreement that if at any time within five years they wished to redeem the bonds, they could do so on paying par and 5 per cent premium. This was an exceedingly good arrangement for the company. It at once saved them the heavy interest by from 2 to 2½ per cent, and was to all intents and purposes a loan, because of the right the company had to redeem the bonds at any time within five years by paying 5 per cent premium. And what do you think is the crime with which Mr. Tweedie is charged and which these commissioners cannot condone? That in making that sale of bonds he charged a commission of 1 per cent, amounting to $500, and did it with the approval of the executive committee of the company. It was done openly and aboveboard. If it had been done by brokers, the company would probably have had to pay a commission of 2 or 2½ per cent, He made an excellent arrangement for the company, and the company gladly allowed him that commission on the sale, which was executed at his law office in Chatham. This is what the commissioners say:

This much must be fairly said of this transaction, namely, that Mr. Tweedie sold $50,000 bonds in October, 1903, at par, which was 2½ per cent more than the price received from Messrs. Robinson & Sons, who purchased $368,000 of the company's bonds in March, 1905, at 97½, and 5 per cent more than was received by Mr. McAvity, president, for $8,000 of the same bonds.

They further say:

Mr. Tweedie also promptly accounted for the accrued interest, $575.34, which in other cases we consider is not accounted for. Without condoning this transaction, we think, on the whole, it is amenable to less censure than others spoken of in this report. It at least has the merit when it did come to light of being clear cut and definite, without any effort being made to conceal it from your commissioners.

What would you infer from that? Would you not infer that in some way these commissioners had brought that matter to light. and that when they had done so Mr. Tweedie had accounted for the interest, which was something others had not done. Sir, the bringing of it to light was this. When Mr. Tweedie was on the stand he was asked in regard to the sale of these bonds, and he replied: 'You will find a full statement in the Bank of New Brunswick'; and he went to the bank and brought up a statement showing that four years before that time he had obtained from Mr. Hickson $50,575.34, being the principal and the accrued interest on the bonds, he had deducted his $500 of commission, and had then sent a cheque for $50,075.34 to the Bank of New Brunswick. And yet these commissioners speak of this as if he had accounted for it only when they brought it to light.

Mr. LENNOX. Is that not what the commissioners say?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it is not. I think the fair inference to be drawn from their report is that it had come to light before them, and that then Mr. Tweedie had accounted for the interest. So far from his accounting for it then, he had accounted for it to the company four years before and had accounted for it in the proper way. The whole business was done openly and above board. Yet notwithstanding the fact that this was a purely business transaction, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Tweedie by this saved the company 2½ to 3 per cent in interest, and that the company entirely approved of his commission as reasonable, these commissioners, in their anxiety to say something against Mr. Tweedie, who was formerly provincial secretary, say that without condoning the transaction, on the whole it is amenable to less censure than the others spoken of. There is the statement that these commissioners cannot condone that transaction. There is their statement that this transaction has one thing to commend it and that is that when it came to light, Mr. Tweedie promptly accounted for the interest.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the hon. gentleman contend that this phrase means what he says or that Mr. Tweedie promptly accounted at the time he made the sale:

> Mr. Tweedie also promptly accounted for the further interest of $575.34, but in another case we consider it was not accounted for.

Does that say he accounted for it at the time?

Mr. PUGSLEY. One cannot tell, from the phraseology these commissioners use in their report, what they really meant, but it is clear that they endeavoured to convey wrong impressions. I cannot say what they meant when they used these words:

> Mr. Tweedie promptly accounted for the further interest of $575.84. Without condoning this transaction, we think, on the whole, it is amenable to less censure than the others spoken of. It has at least the merit, when it did come to light, of being clear cut and definite, without any effort being made to conceal it from your commissioners.

I appeal to the House if it is not a fair inference that this was something which had been concealed, but which, through the probing of these commissioners into the depths of everything, had come to light; that then Mr. Tweedie had promptly accounted for the interest, and in that respect he was better than the others.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, before recess I was pointing out some statements contained in the report, which statements show how little reliance is to be placed upon this report. I am doing this without troubling the House by referring to the evidence. I may say that I could not refer to the evidence even if I desired to do so, because I have not been able to obtain a full copy. I have copies of, I think, two volumes, but have not been able to obtain the rest, because, though this report states that the commissioners transmit to the provincial secretary the evidence as a part of the report, yet the evidence has not been printed although request that it should be printed was made in the provincial legislature. Of course, it would be quite impossible, even if there were a copy of the evidence here, for hon. gentlemen who are called upon to base their opinion upon this report to form an intelligent judgment upon the evidence without having an opportunity of carefully perusing it. Therefore it is that I am limiting my observations mainly to the report itself. I was giving a number of examples of contradictory statements contained in the report which fairly show that portions of it are false. As evidence of the unfairness and carelessness of these commissioners, I wish to call your attention to the fact that in attempting to disparage and depreciate the value of the Central Railway, the part of the road between Norton and Chipman built some years ago, before the new road was undertaken, the commissioners say, at page 19 of the report:

> The province has obtained, not forty odd miles, but fifteen miles of railway, a few cheap sidings, a quantity of rolling stock costing between twenty and thirty thousand dollars.

Now, Sir, in the report itself it appears that the new rolling stock purchased by the company amounted to $26,000. The report shows also, at page 74, that there has been purchased additional new rolling stock to the amount of $23,779.88. These two items together make over $53,000 worth of new rolling stock, and this is addition to the rolling stock obtained as part of the purchase of the Central Railway. I doubt very much whether the $23,779 is correct, for the reason that the report of the Auditor General of the province of New Brunswick for 1907 states the new rolling stock at something over $30,000. But assuming that it is only $23,779, as this report states, you have there with all the rolling stock upon the road worth, including what was purchased as part of the Central, $78,500—a road fairly equipped with rolling stock.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where is the other item?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is what was taken over as part of the Central. It may appear in one of the documents, and not in the report. In another reference, these commissioners speak of the promoters' stock. My hon. friend (Mr. Crothers) has referred to that as evidence of a typewritten error in the report, to which very little attention should be paid. It can hardly be a typewritten error in the ordinary sense, because it is this printed report which is signed by the commissioners, filed with the provincial secretary and presented to the legislature as the report of these commissioners. That this report was gone over by the commissioners before they signed it and after it was printed is shown by the fact that they were careful to insert at the very beginning certain errata. For instance:

Page 55, 26th line: outside of the Salmon River bridge, there are, &c., '60' instead of '50.'

Page 55, 19th line, insert: 'as was intimated' after the words 'it is not.'

These are the only errors which they corrected in this printed report before they signed it. They did not sign a typewritten copy, but they signed the printed report, and that is filed as the report of the commission. And on page 63 these commissioners seek to magnify the importance of the large amount of stock which is being distributed among the promoters, because they use this language—the language of exaggeration, calculated to throw ridicule upon the promoters, and show that they had visions of great wealth from the distribution of this large amount of stock:

On the face of it the motive of the promoters as stated was to develop the coal mines of Queens county. Responsible and respectable men from various parts of the province were obtained to lend their names as directors; and from the fact that $430,000 of the total $500,000 authorized capital was to be distributed as founders' shares, we conclude that the interested parties had visions of ultimate large profits, with absolute certainty of no personal loss.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the hon minister (Mr. Pugsley) think that was a deliberate mis-statement?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have seen so many mis-statements in this report that it is hard for me to distinguish those which are deliberate and those which are the result of mistakes. I cannot imagine men of fairness, men exercising sound judgment, men desirous of simply stating facts, putting forward the statements which are contained in this report. Why did they ignore evidence on this point? These commissioners had it in evidence, in the testimony of Mr. Skinner, that, after this company was formed, those who were interested in the company started in to organize the company for the development of the coal mines, and they made a change with regard to any distribution of this stock and that these shares were handed over to Judge Trueman by Mr. Skinner to hold in trust for the company. And, Sir, the statement was made in the legislature, in answer to a question put by the leader of the opposition there, that this stock was held in trust for the company with the exception of a few shares which were sold to raise money in connection with the preliminary work looking toward the development of the coal mines. And what would you expect under those circumstances? Although Judge Trueman has passed away, would you not expect that in his safe, among his private and confidential papers, there would be found those shares of stock handed to him in trust for the company? And yet, Sir, so afraid were these commissioners that they would discover some of the truth in regard to these shares which would prevent the suspicion going abroad that they had been delivered over for the benefit possibly of members of the government, that they never called one of Judge Trueman's executors to show whether or not this stock was there in his safe and from statements which Judge Trueman made to me in his lifetime I have not the shadow of a doubt that these shares of stock, whenever the examination takes place, if it does take place, will be found among his papers in the place where, being entrusted to him, it would be expected they would be found. In this connection I shall speak of one other matter. It was shown that by the order of the 6th August, 1903, bonds of this company, guaranteed, were handed over to Judge Trueman for the purpose of completing the title to the Central Railway, because, as I am going to explain to you, Evans and Elkin were not able to complete the title for the reason that they only owned the bonds and a portion of the stock, there being something like $300,000 of par value stock outstanding. They were aware that a quantity of the bonds were handed to Judge Trueman, in order that he and Mr. Allen might complete the title to the property, and these commissioners never made the slightest inquiry under oath, never called any one connected with Judge Trueman's estate, to ascertain whether or not there was a record of these bonds. What is the explanation they give of this? That having made some inquiry they believed there would be no advantage in having any testimony before them so far as the late Judge Trueman was concerned. Judge Trueman was a man of the highest integrity, a man occupying a very high and honourable position in St. John, a man who had been for a good many years judge of probates of that city and who at the time of his death, was chairman of the board of school trustees, a man universally respected and on whose honour and integrity every one would have the most implicit reliance. When these bonds were entrusted to him, to have the title to the Central Railway completed, we all knew that he would faithfully and honourably discharge the trust and when later on it was reported to Mr. Sharpe, the auditor, that it had cost the company the amount of the original option, the amount which the company was bound to pay to Evans and Elkin or to whoever should be entrusted with the money in order to complete the title, Mr. Sharpe believed and rightly believed and we all had the right to believe that the sum which it was agreed in the first place should be paid for the Central Railway was actually paid to complete the title and that sum was $180,000. Yet, although the commissioners in this report seek to throw discredit upon the conduct generally of the officers of the company, they did not think it worth while to make any inquiry under oath as to what documents there were in Judge Trueman's possession or what record there was in his possession in respect to these bonds or any other matters connected with the New Brunswick coal and Railway Company.

Mr. FOSTER. Unfortunately I came in late and I wish to understand the hon. gentleman clearly. Do I understand that he has been speaking of the 4,300 shares of stock which, according to the report of the commission——

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend is a thousand per cent out of the way, it is only 430 shares.

Mr. FOSTER. We understand there is a typographical mistake such as is sometimes made even by ministers. It is of that stock, however, that I am inquiring. Am I right in understanding that that much is reported as having been, per minute of the directors, handed over to Judge Trueman, and with reference to the shortage of the $180,000 for the purchase of the Central Railway that about $40,000 of those bonds were handed over to Judge Trueman to complete the title? Is that the statement my hon. friend makes?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will repeat my statement in order that there will be no misunderstanding. It appears from the evidence of Mr. Skinner that there had been a change in the plans of the company; it was proposed to form a coal mining company and Mr. Skinner had delivered to Judge Trueman this stock which had been issued to him, some 430 shares. It was stated in the legislature, as will appear from the synoptic reports in an answer to a question put to me, that that stock was for the benefit of the company and, as I have said, I have not a shadow of doubt that if the executors of Judge Trueman had been called and had been asked to look into the strong box where he kept private documents, that stock would have been found there. I assume it would, it ought to be. These commissioners, notwithstanding that Mr. Skinner said that he had handed that stock to Judge Trueman, and notwithstanding that there was in evidence before them the order given to the manager of the Royal Trust Company on the 6th of August, 1903, when the title to the Central Railway was being completed, bonds to enable him to complete the title to the Central Railway, the commissioners did not call representatives of Judge Trueman's estate and they gave no explanation as to their not calling them beyond the fact that on making inquiry they had been led to believe there would be no advantage in calling such representatives.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the minister mean that the bonds were handed over to Judge Trueman to acquire the balance of the stock of the Central Railway?

Mr. PUGSLEY. To complete the title to the Central Railway.

Mr. CROCKET. When the minister says to complete the title, does he mean to acquire the balance of the stock?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all, to complete the title; whatever was necessary to complete the title Judge Trueman was entrusted with.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was necessary?

Mr. PUGSLEY. All things necessary. During the progress of events the minority shareholders, so it was reported, claimed that these bondholders in Philadelphia were not the actual owners of these bonds, but that they had loaned money on them and that they were in the position of mortgagees in possession and objected to Evans and Elkin getting the whole amount of the $180,000 less what would be going to the American bondholders, and the evidence is that Messrs. Evans and Elkin, or Mr. Evans, engaged with Messrs. Allen and Trueman that anything reasonable which was necessary to quiet the minority shareholders and prevent any objection being made to enable them to get the title, they were authorized to do, and Evans and Elkin finally settled with them taking themselves a less amount by some $38,000 than what the original agreement and option provided for.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman said he had not all the evidence here but does he say that Mr. Evans gives evidence to the effect that they were at liberty to hand over stock to satisfy the Central Railway Company in the way the minister indicates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The evidence is that they were authorized to use part of the purchase money to complete the title.

Mr. LENNOX. I have never found that in the evidence although I have read it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is my recollection of the evidence and as a matter of fact we have it in evidence that on one occasion, when Mr. Evans gave to the company a receipt for $60,000, being for the first four payments of $15,000 each, there was a deduction made by Mr. Allen pursuant to an arrangement they had, proportionate to the amount. That is in evidence and is referred to in the report. I will refer to that later. All I speak of now is that these bonds were used, and I have no doubt legitimately and properly and honestly used, for the purpose of acquiring the title. Evans and Elkins were not the owners of the Central Railway. They only had two-thirds of stock and the bonds and therefore, in order to procure the title and carry out their agreement to sell they would, unless the minority shareholders were willing, have been obliged to have taken foreclosure proceedings and my hon. friends opposite, especially those in the legal profession, will understand what it means when a mortgagee in possession undertakes to foreclose as against a minority interest. It would have taken months and perhaps years, there might have been protracted legal proceedings and they were quite willing to make an arrangement with Messrs. Allen and Trueman to satisfy the minority shareholders and to get a perfect title, and it was done in that way without the expense and delay of foreclosure proceedings.

Mr. FOSTER. At what time did Mr. Trueman die?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot tell my hon. friend just at this moment. It would be, I think, two years ago. Now, I will show you another instance——

Mr. FOSTER. Did the minister, as representing New Brunswick and as being a member of the company as well, convince himself by seeing the documents and knowing exactly what had been done, that the title had been cleared?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, that the title had been completed. There was a certificate to that effect.

Mr. FOSTER. From whom?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From Mr. Trueman or Mr. Skinner. The title was searched, everything was completed and, in the meantime, $540,000 of bonds were held as security until the deeds were recorded and the title was completed. Messrs. Evans & Elkins agreed to give it, but they were not in a position to give it without the concurrence of the other shareholders. As another evidence of the recklessness of these commissioners, of the want of care, it will be found, at page 25 of this report, that they make this statement:

Large sums of money, amounting in all to $190,873.04, were from time to time expended it is alleged for improvements on the Central railway between July, 1902, and March 31, 1908; and on the fifteen mile section and branches from July 1, 1904, to March 31, 1908.

This is an allegation that a large amount of money was expended in improvements on the Central Railway, and the conclusion is sought to be drawn that the road could not have been originally worth as much as was given for it. Well, if you turn to page 74 you will find that out of an expenditure of $190,873.04 the large sum of $23,779.88 went for absolutely new rolling stock. Yet, in another part of this report they say that the whole of it was for improvements made upon the railway. I call attention to it as an evidence of the utter carelessness with which these commissioners apparently have had this report made up and have put it forward as a report of the facts when it is a report of everything else but the facts.

Then, I come to what is even worse. Take page 14 of this report. This is a dreadful statement to make. It is a strong indictment:

So much of the facts are given to show the absolute want of book-keeping.

What would be taken from that? Is it not that there was shown a total want of book-keeping, that there was no attempt to keep a record of the expenditures of this company? Then, again on another page of the report you will see that they state it was claimed that the Barnes Construction Company kept books, but that they were destroyed and not produced before these commissioners. Well, Sir, if you turn to another part of this report you will find that they are speaking of the reliability of Mr. Shannon's statement as to the interest and as to the cost of the construction of this road. They say, at page 22, that Mr. Shannon ——had the benefit of Mr. Evans' statement, the books of the James Barnes Construction Company * * * and of all information that he could derive from Mr. Sharpe, the company's auditor.

There, they put forward the positive statement that Mr. Shannon had the benefit of the books of the James Barnes Construction Company, which they had not, and on another page they state that it was claimed that the James Barnes Company kept books, but that they were destroyed, casting a doubt upon the sworn testimony of James Barnes that they had books, that the work being done, the accounts being closed, the business being off his hands four years before this investigation took place, they were either lost or destroyed, because he had no further use for them, and, in another page of that report, stating positively, as we all know was the fact, that Mr. Shannon had had the advantage of going carefully over the books of the James Barnes Construction Company. An absolute want of bookkeeping, say they! Turn to page 8 of this report and compare this statement that there was an absolute want of bookkeeping with what you find there.

Books of account——

They say:

——in connection with the operation of the railway were kept in the company's office at Norton. These books besides showing the revenue and operating expenses, show the amounts expended for betterment outside of the cost of the construction of the fifteen mile section and branches, and were well kept.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the hon. gentleman satisfied that he is putting that fairly?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, absolutely word for word as the report gives it. Then turn again, Sir, to the statement of the cost of this new railway. These commissioners sent out their emissaries in all directions, issued their subpoenas to the officers, to Mr. Barnes, to Mr. Evans, to Mr. Fowler, the clerks at Norton and others, and, Sir, after it is all over, what do they do? They adopt absolutely the statement of Mr. Evans, the chief engineer and the manager of the company at Norton, as to the cost of the fifteen-mile section and branches Let me read what they say at page 21 in regard to it. After they had spent months and months endeavouring to find out what this road cost, hoping that they would be able to throw some discredit upon somebody connected with the government, or some friend of the government in connection with these matters, what do they say?

Mr. Evans' statement of cost is a very methodical and comprehensive one. He places the cost of the fifteen mile section and branches at $316,626.33, the figures which we have adopted.

Even down to the 33 cents. Who was Mr. Evans? He was the chief engineer and general manager of the company. He was looking after the office at Norton, where was situated the great spending department of the company and where it was proper that the accounts should be kept. We had presented to the legislature in March, 1904, a statement of cost down to March 31, 1904, being $321,000 or just $5,000 more than Mr. Evans made it on the 1st of January, 1904. These commissioners, in the end, after all their inquiry for months, adopt Mr. Evans' statement as being the correct statement of the cost of the fifteen miles and branches. They say there was no book-keeping. How did Mr. Evans arrive at that statement. It was not made for this examination; it was made four years ago, it was submitted to the government and to the legislature at that time as being the correct cost of the new line and of the branches. I want to say, Sir, that from month to month during all the time that this work was in progress Mr. Evans as chief engineer furnished to the company and to myself as representing the government, a full and detailed statement of the cost, made up minutely as engineers of railway companies make up such statements, and we knew from month to month exactly what that road was costing. These statements of Mr. Evans were placed on file in the office of the executive council and I have a sample copy here which if any gentleman chooses to examine he will see is in minute detail. It seems to me to be a refutation of the statement that there was an absolute lack of bookkeeping. There were the books of the James Barnes Construction Company kept while they were working as contractors and also while they were carrying on the work under the force arrangement with their percentage added, and there were books, as the commission admits, at Norton, showing all the receipts and the expenditure of the road, and all the improvements made on the road amounting to many thousands of dollars. The statement of Mr. Evans, the company's chief engineer and general manager, the commission say, is a most methodical and comprehensive one, and they adopt that to the very last cent as being a correct statement of the cost of the construction of the 15 miles and branches.

Mr. FOSTER. Am I right in thinking that Mr. Barnes was not a member of the company but a contractor?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Barnes was a contractor but afterwards when the contract was taken off his hands he became the manager of the construction work of the company, and it was his duty to keep accounts and he did keep accounts and I believe they were correct accounts and they were submitted for the inspection of Mr. Sharpe the auditor, and also of Mr. Shannon the auditor for the government. Let it be remembered that this work began away back in 1901, seven years ago, and it is all very well to talk now at this late date, when, unfortunately the secretary of the company has passed away, the solicitor of the company has passed away, the auditor of the company who went thoroughly for months over all these accounts—because when the work was about completed we felt it was necessary to have a thorough complete and correct audit—he also has passed away. Mr. Winslow has passed away and the vice-president of the company has passed away. There are five gentlemen who were prominently connected with the company and all of whom have died since the road was completed. And these commissioners rather put that forward as if it were almost our fault and as if we ought to account for what was done or ought to have done by these gentlemen in their lifetime.

Now, Sir, what we did so far as bookkeeping was concerned at the start in the way of organization was this: In the first place we had an examination made of the coal areas; we sent a committee of council there to look into the existing coal mines and we got that committee to inquire into possible markets. Communications were opened up with Mr. Blair who was then Minister of Railways and we informed him that we were about developing these coal areas if it were possible to do so and if we thought we would be justified in the attempt. Many attempts had been made in that direction in the past, but because of the expensive nature of the work to get from Chipman to Minto it had not been found possible to make this extension, and here were lying close to the surface and capable of being easily mined these vast undeveloped deposits of coal estimated at about 100,000,000 tons and belonging to the province. We opened up communications with Mr. Blair as I have said, and we asked him if the railroad were built whether he would undertake that the Intercolonial Railway should use a certain quantity of the coal per year. I have in my possession a letter from Mr. Blair which I am quite willing that anybody should see and he as Minister of Railways states that as soon as the road was finished, which it was contemplated would be early the next year, the government would take for the Intercolonial Railway 30,000 tons of coal provided it was of good quality and the price was reasonable, and further, that under these conditions the company might calculate upon a sale to the Intercolonial Railway of about 60,000 tons per year. That in itself opened up good prospects for the company. It would give a good traffic at about 60 cents per ton amounting to $36,000 per year, and it would give to the province a royalty of 10 cents per ton. Then, inquiry was made among the manufacturers who had been using this coal and it was found that it had been highly approved of and that a large market could be expected in St. John. Something has been said about the fact that the gentlemen who went into the company did not put any of their own money into it. Well, Sir, I state frankly—and it was so stated to the legislature and to the people in 1901, and we had a general election since and the people approved of our efforts to develop these coal areas—it was never understood that these gentlemen should put their own money into it. It is exactly like the case of a company which was incorporated by the New Brunswick legislature the other day for the purpose of endeavouring to procure the construction of a railway down the valley of the St. John. People upon both sides of politics united for the purpose of forming a company to build that line in order to give accommodation to the people. It is not understood, it never is understood in cases of this kind that those people are going to put their own money into such an undertaking. These gentlemen were got together; men as the report says of high standing, men of integrity, men who patriotically desired to see these coal areas developed associated themselves in this company. I should also say that an arrangement was made with Mr. Blair at that time to get rails from the Dominion government which were to be paid for in coal from time to time. We believed that having made that arrangement we would be able, with guaranteed bonds amounting to $250,000, to secure the construction of the railway between Chipman and Fredericton. The estimates of the engineers showed there would be sufficient margin for this purpose and also to provide a small amount of rolling stock. Then the question was as to how this company could finance in the meantime, because under the terms of the legislation which we first proposed in 1901 and which was agreed to, none of these bonds were to be guaranteed until the whole road was completed. We felt at the time that even with that condition, hard though it was, the road could be completed. The James Barnes Construction Company put in a tender for the first 15 miles and there was another tender from Mr. Wheaton for the same section. Mr. Wheaton's tender was a little less than the tender of Mr. Barnes and I observe that a strong reflection is made upon the company, and made I suppose indirectly upon myself as ex officio member of the company, because we consented to allow Mr. Wheaton to withdraw and gave the contract to the next tender, the James Barnes Construction Company.

If I had been consulted—I do not remember whether I was or not, but very likely I was—I will tell you why I would have approved of giving the contract to the James Barnes Construction Company instead of to Mr. Wheaton. Mr. Wheaton was a contractor of considerable experience, it is true; but he had failed in railway construction work. He was without means, and it would have been utterly impossible for him to have carried on that work unless he was paid from month to month on progress estimates. On the other hand, Mr. Barnes was able to arrange, through Messrs. Thompson & Whitehead, with the Peoples' Bank of New Brunswick, for advances of all the money necessary for the completion of the fifteen-mile section; and Mr. Barnes agreed to pay them the small commission of ½ of 1 per cent for endorsing the company's notes to enable him to raise the money for the work. Therefore, as between the two contractors there is no question that the proper thing was to accept the tender of the James Barnes Construction Company, although it was $4,000 or $5,000 higher than that of Mr. Wheaton. And yet, apparently, without knowledge of the circumstances, these commissioners put that forward as a most reprehensible thing to do, and attribute the difficulties which occurred afterwards in large measure to the fact that the contract was given to the James Barnes Construction Company instead of to Mr. Wheaton.

Mr. FOSTER. Could the minister turn to the page where they make that attribution?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On page 6 they speak of it, but there is another page (p. 55). in which they attribute the difficulties which arose afterwards largely to that fact. I am told that the commission which Messrs. Thompson & Whitehead were to get was never exacted by them, by reason of the enterprise not turning out to be as successful as it was expected to be.

Having referred to the fact that the commissioners speak of Mr. Evans' statement of the cost, $316,626.33, as very methodical and comprehensive, I want to call your attention to the fact that that statement does not include interest during construction, which is stated by the commissioners to have been $28,234. But you must bear in mind that that amount is limited to the cost of construction and during construction, which closed, so far as the main line is concerned, in January, 1904.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose interest on the cost of construction means interest on the moneys necessary—

Mr. PUGSLEY. The moneys which made up the $316,626.33.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be bank accommodation and the like of that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, discounts. Now, I thought it well, while speaking of Mr. Evans, to refer to the fact that he has seen this report of the commissioners; and observing the small amount which they have allowed for interest, he communicated with me to give me his idea of the interest which was paid out during the period down to 1st July, 1905, when the commissioners took charge, and I will give this statement to the House. I think it is one to which very great weight can be given, because of the accuracy with which Mr. Evans seems to do his work, and because of the credit which has been given to him by the commissioners themselves. This is his letter:

Montreal, April 29, 1909.

Dear Dr. Pugsley,—I inclose a statement of interest re Central Railway, which is my idea of a fair interest account on advances made for construction and improvement and the purchase of the Central Railway and loss in operation.

Then the statement is as follows:

MEMORANDA OF AMOUNTS FOR INTEREST COMPUTATION RE CENTRAL RAILWAY.

$316,626.	Shannon's estimate on interest to the first of January, 1904..	$28,234
	Interest January 1, 1904 to July 1, 1905 at 4 per cent..	18,997
77,000.	Improvements from August 1, 1902, to July 1, 1905, divided as follows:
$16,000.	August 1, 1902, to July 1, 1905, 7 per cent..	2,240
16,000.	August 1, 1903, to July 1, 1904, 7 per cent..	1,120
45,000.	July 1, 1904, to July 1, 1905, 7 per cent. Estimate this amount would be on an average for 6 months.. ..	1,575
17,000.	Loss operating August 1, 1902, to July 1, 1905. Estimated an average of $10,000 for three years at 7 per cent..	2,100
180,000.	July 1, 1903, to July 1, 1905, at 4 per cent..	14,400
	At least $70,000 of above had been borrowed before issue of bonds, for at least one year at 7 per cent..	4,900
	Representing the total interest account to July 1, 1905.	$73,566

Instead of $28,234 which had been allowed by these commissioners, I will give to the House before I get through a statement which I have endeavoured to make up. I do not know how accurately it has been made up. Probably it may be considerably out of the way, because, being engaged with my duties at Ottawa as I have been, I have not had the opportunity of going to the different banks, as the commissioners have had, and obtaining, if they had chosen to do so, an accurate statement of the interest. But I will give the statement to the House, and it will be for my hon. friends opposite, if they think it worth while to do so, to point out any error in the interest account as I have made it up. It is beyond question, as shown in Mr. Evans' statement, and as I showed this afternoon, that there is the interest from 1st of January, 1904, to 1st July, 1905, upon the total expenditure of which these commissioners have evidently taken no account. There is also the interest upon the cost of the Central and on the other accounts of the road from the beginning down to 1st July, 1905, extending over a period of four years, with respect to which they have paid no interest. There is also the loss in operation which began in 1902 and which reached pretty high figures in 1903, amounting altogether to $17,000, upon which they have also allowed no interest, and there are a number of other accounts, and also they even deducted some $5,000 off the interest during the last period.

Before I go to another part of the case, I would like to state what was the arrangement with regard to financing of the company and the way in which the road was to be built. As I have said, Mr. Evans—an engineer of considerable experience and of great ability and on whose report these commissioners placed reliance, because they adopted it so far as the cost is concerned—was in charge at Norton. Norton was the headquarters of the expending department in the way of construction work. Then it was arranged that all the financing was to be done at the People's Bank in Fredericton. From time to time, as the estimates of the engineer would be sent in, there would be a percentage deducted from the progress estimates, the company would give its note to the contractors, the contractors would have that note endorsed by Senator Thompson and Mr. Whitehead and discounted by the bank, and the proceeds would be taken by the constructing company. That is the way the thing was organized, and I think every one will admit that was a proper way, so far as the construction of the road was concerned. The business went on in that way for a considerable time. Mr. Geo. W. Allen was the secretary of the company. It was his duty to perform the ordinary work of a secretary. That was what he was paid for doing and what he was expected to do, and it is what, I cannot help believing, he did do. Mr. Allen was a good business man against whom nobody so far has said a word impeaching his integrity, and he would understand thoroughly what were his duties. He was in every respect well adapted for his position. From time to time Mr. Allen would receive these estimates, he would deduct the ten per cent and give the notes to the company, which would be signed by the treasurer and president or vice-president, and then given to the construction company, and that company would have them discounted. Then there came a time when it was necessary to obtain moneys elsewhere because the People's bank did not feel that it could continue to make advances very much beyond what were already made. The company therefore did some financing elsewhere. It will be found from the report of the commissioners that a loan was effected with the Bank of Montreal in Fredericton and another with the Bank of British North America in the same place. There is one peculiarity in the report of the commissioners. They make the statement that they cannot trace the moneys which were the proceeds of these notes discounted at the Bank of Montreal and the Bank of British North America, because, they say, these notes were not placed to the company's credit but were drawn out on discount slips. They do not say who signed those slips, but they leave it to be inferred that possibly myself or Mr. Tweedie, as the other member ex-officio of the government, may have negotiated these loans. I presume however that they looked at the discount slips and that they saw that these loans were negotiated and those discount slips signed by G. W. Allen, the secretary of the company. Yet these commissioners do not say so. They do not say who signed the discount slips, but lead the people to infer, according as might be their feelings and desires, who got the proceeds. But would it not have been fair and honourable for the commissioners to have said that they had seen the discount slips and that these slips were signed by G. W. Allen, the secretary of the company, which fact would trace the money directly to the company through its secretary? When I read the report and saw that extraordinary omission, I thought that these commissioners and their counsel wanted to throw out the inuendo that possibly Mr. Pugsley had to do with the negotiation of these loans, and that possibly the proceeds may have gone into his hands, which might go far to accomplish the mission with which they had started out, and that was to make a report strong enough to compel me to leave the government. Afterwards notes were discounted at the Bank of New Brunswick in the city of St. John and loans were also obtained from the Canada Permanent.

I want to refer, just for a moment longer, to Mr. Allen. I assume that he kept a memorandum of the notes given by the company from time to time. I assume that he kept a memorandum of all the checks he gave when the notes were placed to the company's credit, and that the check stubs, or the checks themselves, would show to whose order the moneys were payable, because he was not in the habit of paying out money except by cheque. And I assume also that he kept a cash-book or memorandum which would show the discounts from time to time. Well, these commissioners say that they could get no evidence of what these cheques were given for, so far as the banks at Fredericton are concerned, because, they say, the banks gave up the cheques. But if they did, they must have given them up in the ordinary course to Mr. Allen. the secretary fo the company. There is nothing suspicious in a bank giving up its cheques. The banks always give them up each month when the credit or debit slip, as the case may be, is signed. Yet the fact is put forward as if it were something suspicious that these cheques were given up by the banks. When the late Mr. Sharpe was appointed accountant to audit these books and accounts, I know that the cheques in the banks in St. John were, by direction, handed over to him, and I assume that all the cheques on the banks in Fredericton were handed over to the auditor by Mr. Allen, the secretary, and that the stubs and everything which would let in light on the accounts would be given to him, including any memorandum or cash-books which the secretary of the company might have. After the lapse of years, and these accounts and books had not been got back from Mr. Sharpe, who unfortunately died just as he was completing his work, but who fortunately submitted an audit just before he died, because these cheques and Mr. Barnes books had not been got back, these commissioners sought to draw inferences against those of us who had to do with the formation of the company. I said, and the commissioners ridiculed the statement, that an accountant, sincerely desirous of getting at the facts of the case, could in two or three days make up a complete statement of the receipts and expenditures of that company. I am the more confirmed in that statement, the more I read the report of the commissioners. Because they say that at Norton there was a complete account of all receipts and expenditures so far as the betterment of the road and the operation of the road were concerned. They adopt finally the statement of Mr. Evans, manager and engineer of the road, and say that his statement is comprehensive and methodical. They could go to the Bank of New Brunswick, the Canada Permanent—and it appears they did have both of these before them—the People's Bank, the Bank of British North America, and the Bank of Montreal, and get a statement of the discounts put through from time to time the proceeds of which went to the company's credit or were drawn out by discount slips. In that way, they could get with almost absolute accuracy the interest accruing from 1901 to 1908. That is the statement I made before the commissioners and that is the statement I adhere to. I am sorry, not so much for my own sake as for the sake of these commissioners, that they did not think it worth while, with all the machinery they had at their command, to endeavour to arrive with some degree of accuracy at the amount of interest, but jumped at it in the way I have spoken of. When this report came out stating that the interest was $92,000, I thought it might be well to have an inquiry made in the legislature as to how that interest was made up, because I took it for granted that the commissioners, particularly when one was a judge, would be in a position to furnish all the details. I do not want to contradict the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) who says that this gentleman is an eminent judge, if he knows. But if any hon. gentleman were to tell me that Judge Landry, when appointed to the bench, was specially selected for his great eminence in his profession, I should feel that he had but little knowledge of the transaction of legal business in the province of New Brunswick and but little knowledge of the leading counsel who in the past have appeared before the various courts in that province. He is a judge as other judges are, but that he is specially eminent I am not prepared to admit. I am not here to-night to disparage Mr. Justice Landry. I have great respect for the bench, but I have more respect for those judges who uphold the dignity and honour of the bench, and I like to see them endeavouring to do that. I like to see them, when they go upon the bench, forget that they have been in political life, but I hate to see a judge, when a general election is coming on, begin to coquet with one of the great political parties with regard to his becoming a candidate, of the party. It tends to prevent his mind from settling down to that judicial calm which is necessary to enable one to adorn the high position of a judge. With regard to the other commissioners, I have but little to say. Mr. Macdougall has been a manager of a branch of the Royal Bank. He has been for a good while manager of a branch, and a not very important branch either. It has been his misfortune to see men younger, far younger, who have been appointed to minor and inferior positions long after he went there, passing on over him to higher positions in that great institution. He is a man who, for many years, while Mr. Powell was engaged in his profession in Westmoreland county was engaged with Mr. Powell in business transactions, particularly with regard to one manufacturing company. It is a somewhat curious fact that, in selecting this commission, they did not look to the chief justice of the Supreme Court, they did not look to any gentleman who had been a Liberal before he had been appointed to the bench. They were careful to see to it that the three members of this commission should be good solid Tories,—at least that one of them, before appointment to the bench, had been a good solid Tory and the other two should be such at this time. They were careful to see, also, that the counsel to guide them with regard to the evidence brought before them and to assist them in making up this report should be Mr. H. A. Powell, who has been a member of this House and has been a candidate in the Conservative interest in a good many contests in the province of New Brunswick, in not all of which he was successful in being returned to parliament. While this is the case, I am not of the opinion that I should bow down to and worship any member of this commission or give any undue respect to the report, but that I should only give to it that respect which the report upon its face seems to deserve. Now, as I was saying, when this statement was made of interest of $92,000, and when there was no statement as to how it was made up, and when we found other items put in in the lump and financial matters divided up in such a way that no person could tell from the report whether there had been left out large or small sums in the way of disbursements, I suggested to a friend of mine in the legislature that a question should be put to the government with regard to the interest—this amount of $92,000—how it was made up, to what banks it had been paid, what rate of interest had been charged, and also whether it was compounded. I took it for granted that these commissioners, while they only put summaries into the report, would have statements which could be readily furnished to the government, showing the way in which this amount had been arrived at. And this was the answer given:

In answer to questions 2, 3 and 4—

The items of expenditure making up the total of $77,611.82 referred to in the second question are contained in the books and schedules of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company at Norton.

The items making up the total amount of $28,325.30 mentioned in question 3 are given in the so-called 'cash book' begun by Mr. Sharp for Mr. McAvity, president, and continued by Mr. Corbett for the commissioners, Messrs. McAvity and King.

The details asked for in question 4 of the total amount of $92,000 interest appear, the government is informed, in the report of Mr. Shannon and in the statement of Mr. Pugsley, both of which were in evidense, in the so-called 'cash book' in the books ot fhe Receiver General at Fredericton and in the accounts of the different banks and monetary institutions with which the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company dealt.

As the items and details asked for in questions 2, 3 and 4 are very numerous, would require a long time to prepare, and would entail large expense in transcription, and the books, reports and schedules which contain them were open to the inspection of the counsel, Mr. Carvell, who stated he appeared at the request of Hon. Mr. Pugsley for the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, and to Mr. Barnhill, who appeared for Messrs. McAvity and King, commissioners, and to the Hon. Mr. Pugsley who was during several days present representing himself, the government feels that it should not go to the expense of furnisning the details without the order of the House.

So, you have these commissioners submitting a report which jumps at an amount of $92,000, apparently furnishing to the government no statement as to how they made it up, and when the question is put to the government, they confer evidently with the commissioners—because the chairman was in Fredericton as I am informed on the very day that this question was answered—declare that it would take many months for them to make up a statement and would entail so large an expense that they could not undertake it without the order of the House.

Now, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether this gives evidence of even the barest attempt to treat public men with any degree of fairness. It does seem to me that, before the commissioners sent broadcast over this country a statement which, though not charging me with the receipt, improperly, of a single dollar of the money of this company, yet is calculated to cast reflection upon somebody connected with the company as showing carelessness and want of regard to the duties of those who have to do with the company, they should have asked through their accountant the bank managers to make up for them a statement of the interest. For they were entitled to it. Bear in mind that, under the law, when Mr. Tweedie and I ceased to be Provincial Secretary and Attorney General respectively and Mr. Flemming and Mr. Hazen took these offices, they became ex-officio directors of this company. They have been since 1907 the ex-officio directors of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company and they had a right—

Mr. LENNOX. It is not in business now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is in business.

Mr. FOSTER. What is it doing?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It owns property today.

Mr. LENNOX. That is not in business.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That makes no difference; they are the directors in law and they have a right to go to these banks and ask a statement of the account. But more than that, these commissioners, by the terms of the statute, were invested with the fullest authority to get a statement of this interest and they led us to believe that they were making a full and searching inquiry, they led us to believe that among the disbursements they would have a statement of interest. Would that not go without saying, that they would obtain a statement in detail of the interst? We had a right to assume that; yet they issue this statement, simply jumping at the interest, and when they are asked how it was made up they say it would take many months to prepare a statement and would involve too much expense.

These commissioners say that the chief engineer's report made on January 2, 1903, in effect contained a false statement as to the cost of the road. At page 19 that statement is made. They suggest that somebody should be held responsible for that. In other words, they say that the chief engineer of this company signed a statement prepared by me which in effect showed that $140,000 and upwards had been expended in the new work of this railway when as a matter of fact less than $80,000 had been expended. Is that not the inference to be drawn from that report? When I tell you, Sir, that I have here the report which shows exactly what had been expended upon the new line at that time, you will, I think, agree with me that that statement is entirely without foundation and one which ought not to have been made. It is in this report of January 2, 1903 that the commissioners say I induced the chief engineer to represent this new line as having then cost $140,000. Here is the report:

To His Honour the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

I, the undersigned having been appointed by Your Honour to report upon the work done upon the railway being constructed by The New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, with a view to determining as to the amount of bonds of the said company which it would be proper for the provincial secretary to guarantee on behalf of the province, beg to report as follows:—

This report will be a repetition to a large extent of the ones previously made by me, but I think it well to make it for easier reference.

The value of the work previously done on the first section of fifteen miles, including foundations of large bridges across Salmon river, acquired by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, which was estimated in 1896 to be $20,000.

Sir, is that statement false? These very commissioners, at page 4 of their report, put the cost at $23,000, or $3,000 more than as stated in this report.

In addition to this there was work done in 1890, which was estimated by the engineer to be of the value of about $13,000.

And the engineer's report is there upon record to show that was his estimate of the cost at Fredericton.

There was paid by the company for surveys of the whole line and for rights of way, including plans, &c., exclusive of the bridge plans..	$11,500 00
There has been work done on sidings of coal mines..	1,576 29
Engineering during construction paid by company to date:
Amount of proportion applicable to the second section of thirty miles is..	2,000 00
There has been paid for rights of of way of second section of thirty miles..	600 00
There has been paid for engine house at Newcastle which, by reason of its central position and by reason of arrangements having been so made, will save one stall at the Frederiction end, being a saving of.	1,000 00
There has been provided track scales applicable to the whole at a cost of $500—proportion applicable to the second section would be.. ..	322 00
The estimated relative cost of the first 15 miles, exclusive of rails, bolts and fish plates is..	130,434 00
Original estimate of second 30 miles..	213,848 00
Add for extra weight on bridges and ballast..	19,250 00
Total..	$233,098 00

Making the estimated cost of the first 15 miles relatively to each 15 miles of the second section greater by $13,885.

It is proper to consider the above first 8 different sums and the $13,885 in arriving at a judgement in reference to the question submitted to me for my report. They amount altogether to $63,883.29, and it is also proper to take into consideration the following:—

The New Brunswick Coal and Railway way Company found it necessary to purchase the Central Railway, with a view to operating the whole road from Norton to Gibson as one system. Owing to the accident which occurred by the destruction of a bridge, it became necessary to rebuild the same, and in view of the large traffic which it is expected will have to be carried upon the road as soon as the railway is completed to the coal mines, and in order to ensure the efficient haulage of freight and to secure the safety of passengers, it was regarded as absolutely necessary to make extensive improvements to the Central Railway, for which arrangements could not be made except through the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company. These repairs were essential not merely in order to carry on the traffic when the road was completed to the coal fields, but in order to get in rails and other supplies which were essential for the construction of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company's line.

The New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company has actually paid upon the purchase of the Central Railway the sum of $47,500 and there is a further liability of $12,500 upon an instalment of option now due, which the company is providing for.

As a part of the purchase the New Brunswhich Coal and Railway Company has acquired from the Central Railway Company:

2 engines worth $3,000..	$6,000
1 passenger car (combination)..	1,800
15 flat cars, $200 each..	3,000
Snow plough and flanger..	500
1 motor and push car..	400
	$11,700

all of which will be available for operating the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company's line. Adding this to the above amount makes a total of $75,583.29, over and above said sum of $47,500 paid on account of purchase of the Central Railway.

The improvements necessary to be made by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company to the Central Railway for the purposes above mentioned will amount approximately to $25,000, of which to first December $9,852.85 was actually expended.

It is certainly proper to consider the improvements made to the Central, and more especially those in connection with the terminals at Chipman, in forming a judgment as to what amount of bonds it would be proper to guarantee.

The value of the work done by the present contractor upon the line between Chipman and Newcastle, including the branch to coal mines and engineering expenses during construction to 30th November, 1902, is $74,-547.35.

Not $140,000 as these commissioners would have the public believe, but $74,-543.35.

Having carefully considered the matter, and keeping in view the work done relatively to that to be done, I think it would be proper for the Provincial Secretary to guarantee bonds of the company on behalf of the province to the amount of $140,000. This amount, however, to include bonds previously guaranteed.

In making this estimate I leave out of consideration the amount paid on the purchase money of the Central Railway, although it seems proper to refer to it as above.

There you have a statement giving in minute detail the cost of the work done up to that date upon this line of railway. You have a statement of the cost of the new work, of the bridge at Salmon river, a large and expensive bridge which had been previously built and had been taken over and had become the property of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company as a part of the purchase of the Central Railway, for which $47,500 had then been paid. You have a statement as to the engineering expenses, as to the cost of the rights of way, but as to the new work the statement was made absolutely, as was the case with the money actually spent up to that time upon the new work, that it was only seventy-four thousand and some odd dollars.

I speak of this in order to show that these commissioners have not hesitated, wherever they could do so, to cast reflections upon the late provincial government. Surely if they wanted fairly to criticise the judgment of the chief engineer in furnishing this report and the judgment of the government in guaranteeing bonds, it would be proper to set these out in detail. But instead of doing that they make a statement which would leave the ordinary reader to believe that the engineer, although there had been only $80,000 of work done upon the railway, had actually represented that work to the extent of $140,000 had then been performed. I mention this as another illustration of the unfairness of this report. I want to call attention to still another matter as showing how thoroughly unreliable are the expressions of opinion which these commissioners give. They speak upon the 56th page of this report of what this new line of railway could have been built for and I mention this for the information of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways. I had been urging, the company had been urging, the previous government had been urging that this company should have an increased subsidy because the cost of the road, instead of being $15,000 per mile, had reached $20,000 or $21,000 per mile. Mr. Hazen, the premier of the province, has been urging also that there should be this increased subsidy, but his commissioners say that this new line, in their judgment, could have been constructed at an average cost of $11,000 per mile. Well, Sir, if Mr. Hazen and his government place any reliance in the estimate that these commissioners have formed as to the value of the road then good-bye to the application of this railway company for an increased subsidy and the provincial government will have to pay for the rails which were obtained from this government and for which it is owing to the Dominion. But, how absurd this is! Did they have an engineer go over the road? No, these commissioners never thought it worth while to get a railway engineer to go over this railway to make an examination of it, but, they say, forsooth, in effect, that Mr. Powell and we went over this road and made an examination of it. Mr. Justice Landry, Mr. Macdougall, the manager of a branch bank, Mr. Teed, a small merchant carrying on business in the town of St. Stephen's and Mr. Powell, a lawyer, going over this railway and estimating its value to be $11,000 per mile! As against that we had the report of one of the most experienced railway engineers in this country who had gone over the road, walked over every foot of it, examined it with the utmost care and he reported that although the rails were lighter than the rails upon the Intercolonial Railway, yet they were of excellent character and in all other respects this road was built up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway and was well worth $21,000 per mile. Yet, Sir, having a knowledge of that report, because we read it before the legislature in 1904, and, I think again in 1905, these commissioners, without taking the trouble to have a railway engineer go over this line, coolly put forward in the report, in order to disparage us, the statement that this line, upon the average, is only worth $11,000 per mile. Hon. gentlemen can, from that statement, judge what reliance is to be placed on the opinions, at all events, which these commissioners give.

I want to call your attention to a very unfair statement which occurs upon page 38 of the report. They say:

To make the matter as clear as possible it is necessary to go back to June, 1901, when the first issue of $250,000 3 per cent bonds was made. These bonds being held in various banks for money advanced were replaced by Mr. Shadbolt, of the Royal Trust Company, in August, 1903, with $250,000 of the now total issue of $450,000 4 per cent bonds, leaving a balance of $200,000 which were handed to Mr. Pugsley and Mr. Trueman and afterwards found their way into various banks as security for advances.

I have already shown you, by the order which was given Mr. Shadbolt, the manager of the Royal Trust Company, on the 6th August, 1903, that this statement is false, I have already shown you that the total issue at that time, when the $200,000 of bonds which were isued under the authority of the statute upon completion of the title to the Central Railway, was $338,500 being only $138,500 beyond the $200,000 provided for the purchase of and improvements upon the Central Railway, I have shown you how these bonds were distributed, $70,000 going to the Bank of Montreal in Fredericton, $20,000 going to the Bank of British North America in Fredericton, $27,000 to the Bank of New Brunswick, $70,000 to the Peoples' Bank, who are financing the contractors, $66,000 to the Bank of New Brunswick, which were used for the purpose of taking over the bonds upon the Central and which were then owned by Clark and Company and Drexell, and Company and upon which Messrs. Evans and Elkin held an option and $85,500 which were handed to Judge True man the solicitor of the company for the purposes of the company. Can you place title and the balance to be turned over to Mr. Allen, the secretary, to be used for the purposes of th company. Can you place any reliance upon the report of these commissioners in view of the fact that this order not only gave the amounts of the bonds but gave the numbers of the bonds so that if these moneys or bonds were stolen as suggested, they could easily be identified. Do you think that I, as the Attorney General, would have given to the manager of the Trust Company not only the amounts of these bonds but the numbers of the bonds which were to be handed over to the various institutions and to the various parties at the time of completion of the title of the Central Railway Company in 1903 if there had been any desire to misapply them in any way? Doing that as I did, these bonds could be traced in any bank in which they were placed because the bank would have on the hypothecation sheet and on the record a statement of the numbers and amounts of the bonds. But, what I complain of is that, having this record before them, having this order at their disposition, they make this general statement that it left $200,000 of bonds which were handed to Mr. Pugsley and Mr. Trueman and afterwards found their way into the various banks as security for advances. The evidence before these commissioners will show that every bond which came into my hands was hypothecated as security for the notes of this company and that the proceeds of these notes were placed to the credit of the company and were checked out by the secretary of the company with the exception of one or two instances when Mr. Barnes, the contractor, at a time when the company was hard up, at a time when it seemed as if they had nobody to turn to except myself, at a time when, owing to delay which was caused by having a thorough audit of the accounts of the company made, they could not get money to pay labour bills, when hundreds of men were clamoring for their wages and when material men were threatening to sue the company, come to me and asked me to help the company by going to the bank and assisting them in raising some money. I felt, as a director of this company, that my honour was involved in having that road completed and in seeing that the wages of the men were paid. I felt that if we allowed that enterprise to collapse and break down before the road was completed to the coal fields it would be a public disaster and, to assist the company, I remember upon more than one occasion going to the bank, to Mr. Stavert, who was then manager of the bank and who now occupies a prominent position in the Bank of Montreal—and I make this statement publicly because I know that he will remember what I am now stating—and that, upon my persuasion and upon my consenting, with Mr. Barnes, to endorse the notes of the company, moneys were advanced for the purpose of enabling Mr. Barnes to go to Norton and away to the end of the track by special train that afternoon for the purpose of paying these men. These are the only cases in which the proceeds of any notes came into my possession.

These moneys were handed at once to the contractor and they were necessary to enable him to pay the labour bills and the other charges. I want to say for Mr. Allen, the secretary of the company, that wherever there was a note discounted where it was not done through himself, and there were comparatively few except in the way of renewals, he always made an accurate statement with regard to the notes and with regard to the proceeds of them, and in every case he appeared to be and I believe was seeing that the proceeds were used for the legitimate purposes of the company. Mr. Allen is dead, but I am satisfied that were he living he would corroborate the statement I make. I am satisfied he gave satisfactory evidence to Mr. Sharpe, the auditor, that the moneys which came into his hands or into the hands of any others for the company were properly applied. Mr. Sharpe was appointed to audit the books of the company in the early part of the year 1904, I think, and his appointment was by direction of the government. At that time the company was making application to the government for further assistance, and we were greatly in doubt as to what course to pursue. We recognized that the cost of the road had run greatly beyond what we anticipated, and that if the enterprise was to be carried to a conclusion assistance would have to be given. It has been intimated in this report of the commission, nay it has been more than intimated that we had some object in view in not keeping accounts and that we were willing that the treasury should be looted, and that the moneys of this company should be taken by any one who wanted to get hold of them. I want to ask you, Sir, if it is consistent with such a suggestion, that when this company wanted further assistance in the winter of 1904, we said to them: 'We shall give you no further assistance until an auditor has been appointed and the books have been gone over from beginning to end, and all the expenses of the company gone into most carefully, and then and then only will we consider whether or not we shall give assistance.' Is that the conduct of men who intended to do wrong; is that the conduct of men who were careless of the public interest? Notwithstanding that the company was greatly embarrassed, the government refused to give further assistance to them until that audit was made. Mr. Sharpe, who made that audit was the one man in New Brunswick who seemed to be recognized by all as most competent to do work of that character. He was an able man, he had a large practice, he was a man of great experience and I believe he did his work thoroughly. He made up an account of the cost of the road and I believe the commissioners say that if you take off the interest and the salaries from Mr. Sharpe's report which were not included in Mr. Evan's statement, there was only a difference of $159 between his report and Mr.. Sharpe's report. Mr. Sharpe was handed over all the accounts, he was given authority to get a full statement from the banks in St. John, he got all the cheques and all the vouchers—vouchers from Mr. Trueman and others, and he was directed to go into the accounts most thoroughly so as to satisfy himself as to their correctness. And Sir, I want to say that although Mr Sharpe had been engaged for months in this work, yet up to the time in the latter part of June, or the early part of July, 1904, when I left for England on business, although I had many conversations with him, he never intimated to me that he had found any difficulty in auditing the accounts or that there was anything in connection with the expenditures which was not absolutely proper and right. I received a letter a few days ago from a gentleman who is not a political friend of mine but who I believe was actuated by a sense of justice. I refer to Mr. J. J. F. Winslow, of Fredericton and he states that in his judgment the interest allowed by the commissioners is not very much over one half of what it ought to be. He was in Mr. Allen's office and with the late Mr. Sharpe, during a considerable part of the time he was engaged in the work of auditing the accounts, and Mr. Winslow says:

> I might add that during all the time in which I was engaged by Mr. Sharpe upon this work he never for one moment intimated in any way to me that he considered any moneys were misappropriated.

It does seem to me that the testimony of such a man should have weight, particularly in view of the manner in which this report has evidently been prepared, and in view of the criticism I have made on many statements contained in it.

There is another statement which is false. These commissioners make the statement that there was $11,500 paid by the company in 1901, to Mr. Evans, for bridge plans and surveys and transfer of subsidies, and they say at page 6 in effect that this was included in the option from Messrs. Clarke & Company and Drexell & Company. I suppose that in this statement they seek to convey the impression that it was improvident to pay the $11,-500 in addition to the money which was paid for the purchase of the Central. There is no foundation for that statement. There is nothing in the evidence to warrant that statement. These plans, these surveys, these rights were for the part beyond Chipman, and formed no part of the railway between Norton and Chipman, and did not pass in any way under the option from Clarke & Company and Drexell & Company to Mr. Evans. Then these commissioners say, on page 30, that the $11,500 paid for these plans were the first money which the provincial government paid to the company in 1901. That statement is also not supported by evidence. The government did not pay that $11,500. All the subsidies which were payable by the government were paid either to Mr. Barnes under the order he had, or were paid to the People's Bank of New Brunswick, which had an assignment of the subsidies from the provincial government. I do not know why this statement is made, but at all events there is nothing whatever in the evidence to warrant the commissioners in making it.

Mr. CROCKET. This $11,500 was paid by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. Did the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company have any money except what they got from the government?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This money was borrowed by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company from the bank.

Mr. CROCKET. And the bank was paid by the government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all, my hon. friend is wrong about that. What these commissioners state is that this was the first money which was paid by the government in 1901. That money was not paid by the government but it was paid by the company. The money was borrowed from the bank, it formed a part of the expenditure of the company, and it would afterwards be covered by the bonds of the company which were guaranteed by the province. But it was not paid by the province in the sense in which these commissioners put it. They would lead the public to believe that this money was one of the first payments made and that it was paid out of the subsidy.

In that connection, I want to correct an impression which the report is calculated to convey, that from the very outset the government was to guarantee the bonds for the purchase of the Central Railway. It was nothing of the kind. The government, in the exercise of its judgment, thought it best that the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company should amalgamate with or acquire the Central Railway Company; but they had no thought in 1901 nor in 1902, of guaranteeing the bonds for the purchase of the Central Railway. If my hon. friend will turn to the synoptic report of the debates of the New Brunswick Assembly for 1902, he will find that the premier, in answer to a question, then stated that the company had made a proposition under which they were going to buy the Central Railway by means of an issue of six per cent bonds which they were then about negotiating; and Mr. Tweedie as Provincial Secretary stated that the government were in considerable doubt as to the propriety of allowing that to be done, because he said that in case there was one set of bonds on the Central Railway, which was the connecting link between this new line and the Intercolonial, and another set of bonds on the new line from Minto extending westward, guaranteed by the government, in case of default, the railways might again become separated into two systems, and the new line would be at the mercy of the line extending from Chipman to Norton. It was only when the legislature met in 1903, that the government came to the conclusion that they would guarantee bonds sufficient to enable the company to complete its purchase of the Central Railway and complete the improvements then being made, and make an issue of new bonds on the entire system, so that in reality and for all time the entire line, which is sixty miles in length, and including branches of eight or nine miles, should form one system of railway. I speak of that because the conditions would be somewhat different in the first instance if the government had guaranteed the bonds for the purchase of the Central Railway. At the time the option was acquired from Messrs. Evans & Elkins there was no thought of that. The acquiring of that option was the business of the New Brunswick Coal & Railway Company alone. It was some two years afterwards that the government decided, in the then condition of affairs to guarantee bonds on the entire system and wipe out the old issue which was standing against the new line.

I want to come to another statement which I think is unfair and not supported by the evidence. You will find on page 43 a reference to myself. Perhaps I ought not to deal with this, but rather leave it to my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) if he should do us the favour of making some remarks, because the matter was I think brought particularly to his attention. But as it concerns myself, I think I perhaps ought again to call attention to the unfairness of these commissioners. It appeared in my evidence that the $5,000 which has been spoken of as having the initials 'W.P.' opposite it, was a cheque given on the 30th of June, 1904, just before I was leaving for England, to the order of the New Brunswick Real Estate Loan & Trust Company.

These commissioners refer to this company as a loan company, and make the statement that it kept no books. Well, Sir, a loan company carrying on the business of a loan company which kept no books would be an extraordinary institution; yet they convey that impression. As a matter of fact, although the name of this company is the New Brunswick Real Estate Loan & Trust Company, it has never done any business as a loan company or a trust company. It is simply a real estate holding company, holding the Pugsley Building in the city of St. John; and what I said was that Judge Trueman, who was the Secretary and the Treasurer of this Company, kept ordinary rent books, in which rents, taxes, and the general disbursements of the building would be entered. I explained that it was a real estate holding company and that was all the business it was doing. But these commissioners put forward the suggestion that it was a loan company in order to discredit the evidence I gave, a proceeding which it strikes me was not fair and not what one might expect from commissioners claiming to be regarded as non-partisan. I also stated that the cheques of this company were given by myself and my wife, because we were the owners of the stock in the company, and we had in the Bank of New Brunswick a considerable amount of money which belonged to this company having been received from the sale of western lands belonging to the company, but which had been put in our names in order to ear-mark it, as it were, so as to keep it apart from the ordinary real estate business of the company; and I produced before these commissioners the cheques dated on the dates given on page 43, except the last one, which should be March, 1904, instead of 1902, and I stated what the amounts were for as shown in the cheque stubs and in the cheques themselves: one in favour of E. C. Elkin for $2,000, another in favour of E. G. Evans for $2,000, another to A. I. Trueman, for $2,750, another in favour of A. I. Trueman for $198; another in favour of E. G. Evans, for $1,000; and another in favour of the Canada Permanent Loan Company for $1,272, being for interest for the half year due on the 1st of March, 1904. I stated that positively. I stated that I remembered distinctly paying the interest to the Canada Permanent, and loaning this money to the railway company for that purpose, and I actually produced before the commissioners the receipt of the Canada Permanent Company for the payment. I also stated that in order to make a payment to Evans & Elkins on their option, the company had borrowed money from a number of people in St. John, whom I named—Mr. Frank Stetson, Mr. McAvity, Mr. Connell, Mr. Barnhill, Mr. Trueman, and Mr. Skinner. I said that the company had paid one-half of the amount, and that there was a balance of $2,750 due, for which those people held notes, and that was the amount of the cheque which we lent through Judge Trueman to the railway company. I not only gave the names of these people, but produced the cheque in favour of Judge Trueman. I remember as if it were yesterday that after I produced the cheques Mr. Powell said: 'You need not mind going any further; you have the cheques,' I said, 'Yes, it is fortunate that I have the cheques.' Yet, notwithstanding that, these commisioners choose to distort the record and say that I was not sure that these moneys were loaned to the New Brunswick Coal & Railway Company, but surmised that they had been loaned. The record shows that I stated positively that I loaned these moneys and produced the cheques and the cheque stubs to verify the statement I made; yet they chose to to throw doubt upon my statement and say that if I did lend it no doubt I got the money back. All I can say is there is the testimony which I gave, and I produced the cheque stubs which contain the memos made at the time; and if they wanted to discredit my testimony, they ought to have called Mr. Connell and Mr. Barnhill who, they say, gave exceedingly satisfactory testimony, and these other gentlemen, and asked them if it were true this amount was lent the company and this $2,750 was paid under the circumstances and the notes given up to Mr. Trueman. Should they not have done that before throwing aside the testimony I gave that the loan was for the purposes of the company and was a loan to the companies.

There is another matter with regard to which these commissioners have done a great wrong to those who were interested in the carrying forward of this undertaking and to Mr. Evans, a member of the firm of Evans & Elkin who gave the option to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company upon the Central Road. The statement which was made by Mr. Evans was—and the document was produced—that having an option on the bonds and two-thirds of the stock of the Central Road, he and Mr. Elkin gave an agreement to sell the road and give a complete title to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company for the sum of $180,000. He also said that there was then important work under way, work of reconstruction of bridges and trestles and certain other improvements, on which some $24,000 had been already expended and which, it was estimated, would cost something like $50,000 more, and he swore that they went on and completed those improvements before the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company took over the road. They completed those improvements at their own expense, outside the money altogether which the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company expended on that line. But these commissioners say: Why, we cannot believe Mr. Evans, because he was not under a written obligation to make those improvements; true, he was under a moral obligation, but not under a written obligation, and it passes our comprehension that a man like Evans could be so honest as to carry out what he was only obliged to do by a verbal and moral obligation. Well, the answer to this statement is two-fold. First, that there is nothing in the conduct of Mr. Evans, from beginning to end, which would warrant these commissioners in refusing to believe him; and second, that this was an option which the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company held upon the Central; and if Evans and Elkin had not carried out in good faith what they had undertaken to do, the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company would not have been bound to exercise, and would not have exercised, their option, and Evans and Elkin would not have succeeded in selling the road. But Mr. Evans produced a ledger showing the payments from month to month; and if these commissioners had wanted the details, all they had to do was to send to Mr. Fowler at Norton, who was keeping account of the expenditure, and he would show it in detail. But they did not want that, they did not ask it, and they tried to throw discredit on the testimony of Mr. Evans in this way.

They say that they got no explanations about that expenditure. Well, I was on the stand and they never asked me about it. The commissioners go out of their way, in another part of their report, to say that they looked upon me—and my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Crothers) has said the same thing—as having the whole management of the road—that I was, to all intents and purposes, managing director. Yet, when I was upon the stand they did not ask me to explain why Evans and Elkin spent $74,000 on the improvement of the Central. Had I been asked, I would have been able to state that, before making a payment on the Central, the representatives of the railway company, which held the option, examined from time to time the accounts and books of Evans and Elkin and saw the moneys they were expending on improvements. And Evans and Elkin submitted to me, as I stated in the legislature, their statement showing they had expended a total of $74,000 on improvements on the Central Railway. Yet, without asking me a single question with regard to it, without apparently making any effort to get hold of the books kept by Mr. Fowler, which would show the details, and in the face of the positive testimony of Mr. Evans, the commissioners discarded his testimony because they could not believe that any man would be honest enough to carry out an obligation which was only a verbal and a moral one. If that be the idea of the commissioners, as to the motives and impulses which would influence an ordinary, honest man, they are welcome to it. But there is the fact that these expenditures were made and that the accounts were duly shown the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company before that company exercised its option and completed the purchase of the road.

On page 59 the commissioners say:

> The apparent object of the company, judging from results, was to secure the moneys provided by the Act without any effort to establish a plant, and the apparent functions of the executive, judged by the same standard, was to make the way easy and profitable to the company to accomplish that object.

Let me say that although, in the first instance, the legislature provided that a mining plant should be established, yet in the progress of events, that policy was departed from, and it was determined that the better way to secure the development of the coal areas was to encourage the men who were already engaged in a small way in these mining operations, to build branch lines to the various lines so as to facilitate the output of coal and to place it on the market. That was explained to the legislature prior to the passing of the Act of 1904, and by that Act the company was relieved from the obligation of establishing a mining plant. They were relieved of this obligaton because the legislature chose to substitute the obligation to build branch lines in the place of the obligation to establishng a mining plant.

Again the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Crothers) says that these commissioners justly attack the members of the provincial government, and particularly myself, for the statements which were made, when assistance was being asked from the legislature for this company, with regard to the coal deposits and the ability to turn out 150,000 tons per annum and the possibility of finding a market for the output. Sir, I do not take back one word of what I said regarding the possibility of developing the coal areas of New Brunsiwck. Let me call attention for a moment to the development which has already taken place, notwithstanding the fact that we have not been able to sell as much coal to the Intercolonial Railway as we were led to believe we would be able to do. Let me show the progress this road has been making as a result of its extension to the coal fields. When the road was undertaken in 1901, the total freight carried over it was 5,410 tons and the number of passengers, 946. Here is a statement of the different years:

	Freight.	Passengers.
1901..	5,410 tons.	946
1907..	40,358 "	14,297
1907..	40,358	14,297
1908..	54,860	20,087

And, Sir, I have no doubt, in a very few years, with the rising popularity of New Brunswick coal upon the market, with th increased number of men who are being induced to come there and settle down an live in cottages which the various coa owners are building, and in view of th fact that the Grand Trunk Pacific is com ing there, that the expectations which I held out to the legislature and people of New Brunswick will be far more than realized, and that it will not be many years before there will be considerably more than 150,000 tons of coal a year produced in these coal mines in the vicinity of Minto. And yet these commissioners make that a serious ground of attack upon us, say that we were deceiving the legislature, and that we ought to be condemned by the general public. And my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Crothers) says that for that reason among others we ought to be condemned by this parliament, and that action ought to be taken with reference specially to myself.

I wish to call attention to another instance of the unfairness of these commissioners. At page 33 they seek to convey the impression that there has been something very lax. And here I would invite the attention of the hon. gentlemen who are seeking to figure out the interest:

> As the bonds were dated July 1, 1903, it will be seen that three coupons on each bond, covering a year and a half, until December 31, 1904, being a year and a half interest on $450,000 bonds at 4 per cent (amounting to $27,000) had previously accrued. Apparently the most of these three coupons had never been cashed, and we could not find out what disposition was made of them. They should have been cut off by Mr. McAvity and cancelled, and a record kept of the same. There is no guarantee that at some time in the future some of these coupons may not be presented for payment by holders for value.

Well, Sir, four years have passed away and they have never been presented yet, and I think we may reasonably conclude that they never will be presented. As a matter of fact, I am informed, they were cut off and cancelled. These commissioners say they were not paid by the province. They were attended to by the company which had borrowed money upon them. They were cut off and cancelled, and though these commissioners say they 'could not find out what disposition was made of them,' they should have been cut off by Mr. McAvity and cancelled, what will you say, Mr. Speaker, and what will this House say as to the fairness of the commissioners when I tell you that I am informed by telegram from Mr. McAvity that upon the stand he was never asked a single question with regard to these coupons?—his attention was never called to them. Yet these commissioners coolly put it forward as if there might be some dreadful harm come to the province if these coupons should turn up. Could not find out what had become of them! Why did not they ask those who knew? These commissioners seem to think that the way to find out these things is to ask the people who know nothing about them, and to refrain from asking those who do know, and then throw out the suggestion that they have not been able to get the information. Again, they make the reflection, on page 33, because in the office of the Receiver General there was not a statement as to the amount of bonds which had been guaranteed. I am not sure but that that would have been the proper place to have that record; it may have been an oversight that it was not sent there. But in the office of the Executive Council to which Mr. Powell, the counsel, and the commissioners had access—because it is in evidence that Mr. Powell had gone over all the records of the Executive Council with regard to the company—there were the orders in council drafted from time to time for the guaranteeing of these bonds, and a statement of what had been guaranteed, giving the amounts and the date of guarantee. But these gentlemen say they have only got information on this point from Mr. Shadbolt, manager of the Royal Trust Company, of St. John, who had a clear record of the matter. I do not know whether misapprehension of Mr. Shadbolt's duty led the commissioners into making some of the extraordinary statements they made as to the time when these bonds were guaranteed and the amounts, because they have evidently ignored the orders in council and have made absolutely false statements as to the amount guaranteed, in some cases going so far as to say they were guaranteed in advance of the legislative authority for that purpose. But Mr. Shadbolt, in the ordinary course of business, would not have the time when the bonds were guaranteed, what he would have would be the time when, as trustee, he countersigned the bonds, when the issue would be made. As a matter of fact, with regard to the $250,000, they were made as one issue, because they were to rank pari passu, and, if my memory serves me, were left with the People's Bank for safe keeping, to be issued from time to time as required. Mr. Shadbolt could show when they were countersigned, but not when the Provincial Secretary guaranteed them. I have a telegram from Mr. Shadbolt in which he says, confirming what I have said, that he knows when $338,500 was countersigned up to August 6, because that is the time when the exchange took place, and I think he knows when another small amount was guaranteed, but as to the others he knows nothing as to when they were guaranteed. Yet these commissioners have taken his evidence as to the time when they were guaranteed. But, as I have said, there were the orders in council showing the bonds guaranteed at different times. I repeat, and repeat as emphatically as possible, that the statements which these commissioners have made in various parts of their report, contradictory statements in some cases, are contrary to the evidence, and the commissioners have no warrant for making them.

Now, these commissioners say that, in figuring out this shortage, they have no doubt that this $39,000 which they say was the shortage on what they found paid to Messrs. Evans & Elkin form a part of the total shortage. How naive are these commissioners! They had to put that in to make the total shortage, and they made it for that purpose. These commissioners gravely say that they have no doubt it does form part of the total shortage, when nobody else would dream but that they had put it there for the very purpose of making the deficit as large as possible. Let me repeat just what I have casually mentioned, and that is that the statement that was made to the auditor, Mr. Sharpe, by Mr. Allen, the secretary of the company, that the amount paid to the Central Railway was $180,000, that that, in my belief, was a correct statement, and that Mr. Sharpe was quite justified in making the statement in his audit.

Bear in mind that the agreement which was made in the first place was for $180,000. No one questions that being a bona fide contract entered into between Messrs. Evans and Elkin and the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company. It is true that these commissioners say that if the company had held out for a while they might have been able to squeeze these people into allowing the road to go at a smaller figure. I dispute that. There had been a very considerable public agitation before this option was acquired for the development of the coal areas. The policy of the government and the legislature, approved of by both sides of the House, was to develop these coal areas. Messrs. Evans and Elkin had an option upon the bonds of this road and knowing that it formed the connecting link between the coal fields and the Intercolonial Railway, where the best market for the coal would be obtained, and they would not be disposed to part lightly with this road, particularly when it was well ironed, when it was well known that the steel rails, spikes and bolts alone would be worth pretty nearly $4,000 a mile, the amount which it had been agreed to pay for this railway, and bearing in mind also that Evans and Elkin were to complete the improvements they then had under way, and which, as their accounts showed, amounted to somewhere in the vicinity of $74,000, it did not strike the government or myself, as ex officio member of this company, that the price of $4,000 a mile was an unreasonable price to pay for this road. It did not strike me that, knowing this was our policy, to develop the coal areas, anything would be gained by waiting and we thought it was a reasonable proposition to pay $180,000, or $4,000 a mile for the 45 miles, upon their giving a complete and absolute title to the line and also making these improvements which they then had under way. That was the agreement, Messrs. Evans and Elkin were entitled to the $180,000 on their completing the title, but not until then. As the evidence shows, as the matter went along, it was found that there were other shareholders besides those whom Messrs. Evans and Elkin represented, whose holdings amounted to something like $300,000. Among them Dr. de Bertram was only one. Whether there were others interested with Dr. de Bertram in his stock or not, I do not know, but there were other shareholders for whom Messrs. Trueman and Allen were acting and they represented to Mr. Evans that their clients, people interested in the minority stock of the company, were not satisfied that they should receive the whole amount of $180,000 and it was stated that Messrs. Evans and Elkin, while they wanted to get out of it as much of their contract price as they could, did not want to have a foreclosure suit which would mean a long delay and great expense. The evidence shows that they were informed that it was claimed by these shareholders that the bondholders were mortgagees in possession and various questions as to what they had earned or might have earned would necessarily arise in a suit for foreclosure. They were willing that the amount should be given by Messrs. Allen and Trueman to the other shareholders and I find that along in the winter of 1903, when Mr. Evans gave to the secretary of the company a receipt for $60,000, the four first payments of $15,000 each, he did allow Mr. Allen to use a part of that money to satisfy the demands of the other shareholders. It went on down to the summer of 1903 when Mr. Evans and Mr. Allen consented to take something in the vicinity of $140,000, leaving it to Mr. Trueman and Mr. Allen to do what was reasonably necessary to acquire the property and satisfy the minority shareholders in this company.

Mr. CROCKET. Did the minister say that Mr. Evans allowed Mr. Allen to use the amounts that were deducted from the cheques for that purpose?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is evident that he did. He must have done so for he signed a receipt on behalf of himself and Mr. Elkin to the company for that $60,000 and gave it to Mr. Allen, the secretary of the company, who handed it into the government as being the receipt and showing the payment of $60,000. Mr. Evans says that a question was raised with regard to the title and without having a very clear understanding of the matter he left himself in the hands of Messrs. Allen and Trueman, and in the end, in August 1903, he was content to take the $140,000. The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) has intimated, and I suppose my hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket) who has asked these questions will intimate and contend, that this money should be accounted for to the government. Sir, I am not able to see why they should do so. I could understand if, in the first instance, instead of it being understood that the price of $180,000 should be paid, it was understood that a smaller price should be paid and that there should be a commission or a rake-off or something of that kind, the hon, gentlemen might make the contention they do, but conceding as these commissioners do, conceding as all the evidence shows that this was a bona fide arrangement in the first instance for the sale not of the bonds and stock which Evans and Elkin held upon which they had an option but of the complete title to this property for the $4,000 a mile, amounting to $180,000, whatever money Mr. Evans and Mr. Elkin allowed to Messrs. Allen and Mr. Trueman, was their money, not the money of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, not the money of the government and it was no part of my duty to inquire what was the arrangement between Allen and Trueman and Evans and the minority shareholders whom Allen and Trueman represented. What we were concerned with was to get a complete title, bona fide made in the first instance and the title completed and as I have said, Messrs. Evans and Elkin, not being able for reasons best known to themselves, to complete that title and feeling that they did not want to run the risk of expensive and tedious foreclosure proceedings—whatever arrangement they made with Messrs. Trueman and Allen was their own business and not the business of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company or of the government because they were dealing with the money of Messrs. Evans and Elkin and not the money of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company.

Mr. Allen, as the secretary of the company, handed into the auditor the statement that the $180,000 had been paid, as I have no doubt whatever it was paid, and we were quite correct in making the statement that it was paid. We did not say it was paid to Evans and Elkin, we said it was paid for the title to the property according to the option taken in 1901 or 1902, and which all parties agree was a bona fide option, and the price for which was finally agreed upon and fixed at $4,000 a mile.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Can the minister say who were the persons who got the balance and what each of them got?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I do not know. I did not feel it was part of my duty to inquire. It was a matter entirely between Messrs. Evans and Elkin and Allen and Trueman. All I know is that we were asked to make the provision which we did that the payment was to complete the title, and the title was obtained. Evans and Elkin handed over their part of it and the company executed the title.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What conveyance or assurance, if any, was given by the persons to whom the money was paid?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The title was obtained.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I mean the balance of $30,000 which Evans and Elkin did not receive. What conveyance or assurance was given by the persons to whom that was paid?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not able to inform my hon. friend as to that. Messrs. Allen and Trueman were to complete the title and did complete the title.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How?

Mr. PUGSLEY. For that purpose they settled with the shareholders. There were no proceedings taken and a purchase was made from Dr. de Bertram for which, I think, Mr. Skinner made the statement that he paid a small amount.

Mr. FOSTER. Very small?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was a small amount as far as Dr. de Bertram was concerned. As to the other people interested in the stock concerned we have no evidence. They got enough to give them three-quarters of the stock and then the president made the transfer under the seal of the company. I repeat that it was a matter entirely between Mr. Evans on the one hand and Mr. Trueman and Mr. Allen on the other. I did not feel that it was a part of my duty to intervene. What we wanted for the company was a complete title. We wanted that pursuant to the agreement which we had approved of, pursuant to the agreement which had been in existence for two years and upon which all parties had acted. Evidently Mr. Evans thought i was of advantage to make the arrangement which he did. The arrangement was made, it was carried out in good faith, the title was obtained and the mortgage to secure the $540,000 of bonds was discharged so that a complete and unencumbered title was vested in the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company and the mortgage, as securings the bonds to the Royal Trust Company, was also registered giving a first security upon the whole system from Norton to Minto and also including the branches to the coal mines.

Now, as I stated, I have obtained from Mr. Evans, in a letter which he has written me giving me his statement of the interest I have also the letter of Mr. Winslow, who was in the office of Mr. Allen, the secretary of the company, giving me his statement. I have taken occasion to make up a statement myself and I may say that in doing so I have been obliged to accept many of the figures which have been given by the commissioners, because, from the way in which they are given in the report, it is impossible for me to tell whether they are correct or not. Therefore, for the purpose of this statement which I have made up, I assume that they are correct as far as they go. If you will allow me I will read this statement and it will very near close the remarks which I have to offer to the House.

Paid for plans, right-of-way, &c., less portion included in cost of 15 mile section, as per commissioners' statement, page 76..	7,300 00
Sundry other items paid by company, not already included, as per commissioners' statement, page 76.	859 94
Sundry expenditures paid by government, not already included, as per commissioners' statement, page 76	28,325 30
Cash paid over to new commissioners, Messrs. Archibald & Stone, as per commissioners' statement, page 76.	4,372 12

Down to that I have taken the different items of the commissioners' report and I have assumed that they are correct. Then, I take the interest that the commissioners say is correct upon the cost of construction as found by Mr. Shannon down to the 1st January, 1904.

Interest on cost of construction of the 15 mile section to Jan. 1, 1904, as per S. L. Shannon's report adopted by the commissioners' as correct (see pages 22 and 23).. ..	28,234 00
Interest paid from July 1, 1905, to March 31, 1908, as per report of commissioners, page 80..	68,770 65

Now, I add the following items which have been entirely omitted from the commissioners' report:

Paid George G. Scovil for ties purchased for 30 mile section and subsequently used on Central Railway	7,000 00

I understand that these commissioners have ignored and omitted that because they say that the payment of the subsidy was illegal. As a matter of fact, Sir, that $7,000 was paid under the contract which the government had with the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company for the completion of the second section between Minto and Fredericton. Mr. Scovil had delivered along the line of railway something like 60,000 sleepers and the government thought proper, in the exercise of its best judgment, to pay to the company, on account of that material, the sum of $7,000 which forms a part of the payment upon subsidy account.

Mr. FOSTER. What became of these ties?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They were used upon the Central Railway which is now owned by the government.

Paid E. G. Evans for bridge plans for 20 mile section..	$1,025 00
Paid James Barnes amount of order given by Central Railway Company against subsidy on account of work done prior to 1901, and paid out of the subsidy..	8,500 00

They paid over this to Mr. Barnes. As hon. gentlemen will see by the statement given by these commissioners upon page 4 of the report, he had done work upon the Central Railway, and particularly in connection with the building of the Salmon river bridge, to the extent of $23,000. He had an assignment of the subsidy contract. He had received on account $8,000, but Dr. de Bertram had gone away owing him a considerable amount of money and Mr. Barnes refused, and I am not going to blame him for doing so, to transfer the subsidy contract to this new company unless they would agree to pay him $8,500 more on account of this $23,000 worth of work which he had done and which this company acquired on taking over the new line of railway. The company agreed that out of the subsidy of $3,000 per mile they would pay Mr. Barnes the sum of $8,500 and he assigned over the subsidy contract to the new company. That accounts for $8,500.

Paid for right-of-way on the 30 miles section, $300.

It would appear from a report from Mr. Evans, the engineer, that that should be $600.

Paid Barnes Construction Company loss on boarding house account, noted on page 80 of commissioners' report, but not included in Evans' statement of cost, $6,789 02.

Mr. Evans has informed me that that is not included in his statement.

Balance of purchase price Central Railway improperly deducted by commssoners, making the $180,000		$39,590 97
Interest on $60,000 paid on account purchase of Central Railway from, say, Jan. 1, 1903, to July 1, 1905, at average of 6 per cent, 2 years and 6 months..		9,000 00

That I am satisfied is a low rate of interest because during a considerable portion of the time, the interest, as these commissioners themselves say would be 6½ to 7 per cent.

Interest on $120,000, balance of purchase price of Central Railway, from August 6, 1903 to July, 1905, an average of 5 per cent say 2 years..	$12,000 00
Interest on $60,000 expended for improvements between August, 1902, and December 31, 1904, given on page 68 of synoptic report of legislative assembly, to July 1, 1905, this amount forming part of the item of $77,611.82 shown on page 74 of commissioners' report, say 2 years at average 5 per cent..	6,000 00

Interest on balance of the $77,611.82, $17,611.82 for say 3 months at 5 per cent..		$ 240 00
Interest on loss on operation from August 1902. to December 31, 1904, $17,500, say 1 year at average 6 per cent..		1,050 00
Interest on cost of construction of the 15 mile section and branches, from completion of main line January 1, 1904, as follows:—
Evans' statement	$316,626 33
Add interest during construction as per Shannon's report..	28,234 00
	$344,860 33
Deduct advances by I.C.R. in rails and iron as per statement, page 73.. ..	39,485 00
	$305,375 33

I think it is fair to deduct the advance by the Intercolonial Railway because the company would not be paying interest on these rails and so I take it off.

Interest on this amount of $305,375.33 from January 1, 1904, to July 1, 1905, 1½ years, at average 5 per cent	$ 22,903 00
	$940,903 03

I think that is a low average rate of interest because as I have said these commissioners recognize that for a considerable part of the time the company was paying from 6½ to 7 per cent. For a part of the time they would be only paying 4 per cent on the bonds actually sold and therefore I average it at 5 per cent.

Forward..		$940,317 03
Additional new rolling stock
Amount given in Auditor General Report of 1907, page 228..	$30,500 00
Amount allowed by commissioners..	23,779 88
Snow plough not included in Evans' statement..		1,800 00

There you get $948,000 in all or within $10,000 of the total receipts from the bonds and from the subsidies both provincial and Dominion. But, Sir, that does not include the salaries which were included in the statement of the audit by Mr. Sharpe and therefore I think it is not unreasonable to take the difference between the cost of construction as given by Evans including interest during construction and the statement of Mr. Sharpe.

Difference between cost of construction as given by Evans, including interest during construction.. ..	$344,860 33
And cost as given by auditor Sharpe....	368,056 33
	23,196 00	23,196 00
		$972,033 16

Amount received from sale of guaranteed bonds and Dominion and province subsidies as per statement of commissioners..	$958,000 00
Difference..	$ 14,033 15

Adding these altogether you have a total of $972,033.16 or $14,033.15 more than the total receipts which were obtained from the bonds and also from the provincial and Dominion subsidies. I assume therefore that we may very well deduct for salaries a part of the amount which was allowed by Mr. Sharpe. These commissioners think a certain amount ought to be deducted and if you do deduct in the vicinity of $14,000 you will have the receipts and expenditures about balancing each other.

I do not know and I cannot say whether I have figured this interest correctly or not, but what I do say is that no statement is correct, no statement ought to be given to the people of this country, no statement ought to be presented to this parliament which does not take account of the interest during that long period from 1901 to the 1st of July 1905, upon the cost of the Central and upon all the improvements to the Central. No statement ought to be presented to this House or to the country which does not take account of the interest upon the cost of construction between the 1st of January 1904 and the 1st of July 1905. I have endeavoured in this statement of interest to figure upon a moderate basis. I have not figured at the higher rate, but I figured upon a low average and I am satisfied that if these commissioners had gone to the trouble of ascertaining what the interest actually paid was and had sought to make out an interest account, it would be larger than the amount I have stated to the House. At all events I leave the matter for the consideration of the members of this House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the minister leaves that—he has reflected upon the commissioners two or three times in respect to their alleged default in not obtaining data as to the interest, and he says that the whole account could be made out in two days. It is two weeks since he has had notice of this matter. Why has he not procured a correct statement of the interest if it is so easy to ascertain it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will tell my hon. friend why; I have not access to these various banks.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Because I have not the right to have access to them. That was the duty of the commissioners and why did they not do it? These commissioners were charged with the duty of doing it. They were charged with the duty of reporting as to the receipts and the expenditures of this company. Although Mr. Hazen, the premier, is a director ex officio of this company and was then, and although the provincial secretary was then and is now an ex officio member of this company they did not choose themselves to ascertain what had been the expenditures but they charged this commission with the duty of doing it and they gave them power of summoning before them all parties and having brought before them all books, and all accounts. And the hon. member from Elgin (Mr. Crothers) has put this before the House as a report which is worthy of the confidence of this House and upon which the House should Act. And, when asked as to how this interest account was made up, the premier of New Brunswick said it would take months to make out a statement as to how they arrived at the interest. What I do submit to the members of this House and to the people of this country with all confidence is that when these commissioners issued this report they ought to have ensured that the interest amount was absolutely accurate; they ought to have known that it could be relied upon.

Now, Sir, what do these commissioners recommend? They recommend that the directors of this company, and more especially the ex officio directors, the Hon. Mr. Tweedie and myself, should be called to render an account to this company for its receipts and expenditures. Sir, I have always been ready to render an account of my dealings with this company as an ex officio director. I would have been glad if, instead of transferring the matter to this forum and taking up the time of this parliament, the provincial government had taken some steps to carry out the recommendations of these commissioners and to have an account taken. But, Sir, the legislature of New Brunswick has now been prorogued and no action of any kind was taken on this report by the provincial government. The only reference that was made to it so far as I have observed, and I read the papers daily, was to put two series of questions to the government, one of which was answered in the manner to which I have directed attention. Sir, I have waited until now, waited since the last of March, when this report was signed and published. I have waited until now for some action to be taken on the part of the provincial government to have the report of these commissioners carried out and to have some steps taken to have an accounting. They have not chosen to take any steps to that end, although under the law the present Attorney General and the present Provincial Secretary are ex officio directors of the company and are entitled to call upon me and every other director for an accounting. They have taken no steps to do so, and why? Because they knew that if they brought an action in the Supreme Court in Equity, the objection would probably be raised in this parliament that the matter was sub judice and therefore could not properly be brought up in this parliament, and they would have been further away than ever from their cherished design of driving me from the government. They have not done so, and I have taken the only course open to me: I yesterday instructed my solicitor—the legislature having prorogued only a few days ago, to issue a summons in the Supreme Court of Equity of the province of New Brunswick, making the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company and the other parties defendants, so as to bring all parties before the court for the purpose of having an accounting as to the receipts and expenditures made by that company, and for the purpose of having a decree made as to the state of its accounts. Having taken that course, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that I have done all that I can properly do, and what it is right and proper that I should do.

While I may not perhaps be as careful as I ought to be, particularly in reference to my own affairs, and although in respect to those loans which were made to the company, I ought perhaps to have taken a receipt or a promissory note from the company, yet I want to say that the man has yet to live who can stand up and say that I have ever wronged an individual or the public in respect to a single dollar. I have always been prepared, in the legislature of New Brunswick, where I spent many years, and before the people of the province, who know me, to meet any charges that have ever been made or can be made with regard to myself. In this parliament I am a comparative stranger, but I have endeavoured to present the facts of the case as I believe them to be. I have endeavoured to point out errors, inconsistencies, falsehoods, inaccuracies of the grossest kind, evidences of the greatest partisanship, in this report. I think I can acquit my conscience of having done anything but what I should do in presenting the facts of the case to this House.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I submit myself to the judgment of this House. I recognize that I could not remain a member of this House or a member of this government if I ceased to have the respect and regard of the members of this House. I feel that I could no longer be worthy to sit among hon. gentlemen who occupy seats in this House if I had been guilty of any act unworthy of a public man. I desire therefore to leave my case in the judgment of this House; and, Sir, with your permission, in order that the members on both sides of the House may feel the more free to discuss this case and comment upon it, I will ask the liberty to retire while the discussion is going on and until the House comes to a conclusion upon it.

Mr. O. S. CROCKET (York, New Brunswick). Mr. Speaker, I would not have thought that any hon. member of this House, much less one occupying the responsible position of a Minister of the Crown, would have ventured to defend himself against such grave findings as are contained in the report of this Royal Commission, upon such flimsy pretexts as those that have been advanced by the Minister of Public Works this afternoon and this evening. I ask hon. members on both sides of this House to ponder for a moment the passages which have been quoted from that report by my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Crothers), and then ask themselves if in all the heat and verbosity and repetition which the Minister of Public Works has exhibited, there is one single statement that breaks down or in any way impairs the force of the arraignment with which he stands confronted before the country to-day. I ask the members of this House what they think of all this talk about a typographical error, which does not affect in the slightest degree one single transaction of the very many transactions for which this commission has condemned the Minister of Public Works. My hon. friend from West Elgin has already dealt with that typographical error. I was surprised that the Minister of Public Works would attempt in this House to represent that that error in the statement regarding the capital stock of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company was a deliberate attempt on the part of the commission to deceive the public. Why, if the hon. minister had looked at the opposite page of the report he would have seen that the commission set out fully that the capital stock of the company was $100,000 and that the number of shares Mr. Skinner disposed of amounted to $43,000, and could not possibly have amounted to $430,000. But, Mr. Speaker, as in a former case in which the Minister of Public Works was involved, this typographical error has been used for the purpose of drawing a herring across the trail. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have read with the greatest care this report, I have read also with the greatest care the evidence on which that report is founded, and I am prepared to say, speaking as a member of this House, that there is not one accusation or finding in that report that is not absolutely borne out by the evidence. The Minister of Public Works has stated in his closing remarks that he has endeavoured to show the inconsistencies and errors and mistakes that appeared in that report. I am here to-night to show by the evidence, which I have with me, that the statement which the hon. gentleman has made to this House to-night with reference to these matters is absolutely contradicted by the evidence, and much of it by his own statement before the commission; and I regret very much that the Minister of Public Works, under the pretext of giving us an opportunity of discussing this question freely should have seen fit to withdraw from this House, because I intended to put a few questions to him in reference to the matters which I say he has represented, in a false manner before this House.

Mr. FOSTER. Let him be called back.

Mr. CROCKET. This report finds that the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, of which the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) was the leading spirit was guilty of every conceivable form of malfeasance. After a full examination of every officer and member of the company, of every banker who did business with it, of the company's solicitor, of every man who was supposed to have any knowledge of its affairs, this commission found that there was a misappropriation of $134,000, that bonds had been illegally endorsed and granted, that subsidies had been illegally paid, that books and accounts had been falsified. In short they found this company guilty of a violation of every principle and rule of conduct which should govern the administration of trust money, and in addition found it guilty of the violation of every one of the statutory safeguards which were thrown around it in the public interest. I would like to know if the editor of the Toronto 'Globe' will be agreeably disappointed when he reads the speech made by the minister this afternoon and evening. I would like to know if the editor of that journal will be of the opinion that the Minister of Public Works has defended himself in so convincing a manner that any fair minded man can fail to acquit him at the bar of public opinion.

Contrast the statement made by the minister with the evidence he gave before the commission. The hon. minister denied that he was the general manager of this company and characterized the statement to that effect as absolutely false and not borne out by the evidence. He sought to create the impression that he was not the head and front of this company. Well, in this connection I desire to refer to the evidence of that bosom friend of the minister, Mr. Geo. McAvity, who was president of this New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company. Mr. McAvity stated, as will be found in the report of his evidence at page 534, that Mr. Pugsley was the financial head of the company. And at page 363, Mr. McAvity further said that Mr. Pugsley substantially controlled the whole business. Again at page 534, Mr. McAvity, when asked:

If your manager told you, would you issue a check?

Mr. Powell—Mr. Pugsley was your manager?

Ans. We called him the financial head of the company. He was the representative of the government in the company.

Mr. CARVELL. Where does the general manager come in? You said you were going to prove from Mr. McAvity's evidence that the Minister of Public Works was the general manager.

Mr. CROCKET. Mr. McAvity's statement was that Mr. Pugsley was the financial head of the company.

Mr. CARVELL. That is right.

Mr. CROCKET. And further, that Mr. Pugsley substantially controlled the whole business. What further evidence does my hon. friend from Carleton want of the Minister of Public Works acting as general manager, than the statement by the president of the company that he controlled the whole business? There is another piece of testimony on this account also, which will be found in the statement the Minister of Public Works has himself referred to. That is the statement made by Mr. Sharpe, and it is spoken of as an audit of the accounts of this company. It will be found at page 199 of the report, orders in council and other documents. On the 31st of May, 1904, there is a charge, in that statement of the managing directors salary and fees, $5,000. I would ask my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell), seeing that the Minister of Public Works has departed, to whom that could have reference, if not to the Minister of Public Works? Mr. Pugsley, when asked what salary he got, if he got any as managing director, replied that Mr. Sharpe had submitted a proposal that he should get $5,000, but that the other ex-officio director of the board, the provincial secretary, now lieutenant governor of the province, had turned the proposal down. And this, I take it, is the $5,000 which the minister referred to as the salary of the managing director. There can be absolutely no question that the Minister of Public Works was the controlling spirit, the head and front of that company. There can be no doubt at all either that he not only managed all the financial affairs of the company but that the idea of the formation of that company originated in his fertile brain. As has been pointed out, there was the late A. I. Trueman, who was the partner of the Minister of Public Works, there was his friend Mr. McAvity, there was Mr. Skinner—every member of the directorate and every member of that company was known as belonging to the Liberal machine in the province of New Brunswick. And also as has been pointed out, not one of them put a single dollar into the treasury of the company; every dollar that the company handled they got out of the treasury of the province of New Brunswick or out of the treasury of the federal government at Ottawa.

Now, the Minister of Public Works has sought to cast discredit upon this commission by representing to this House that they were not justified in the statement that this company kept no books, and he—rather ingeniously, I thought—quoted from the report the statement in reference to the books which were kept at Norton and which related to the portion of the Central road from Norton to Chipman, and asked the members of the House, in view of that statement, what they thought of the statement that this company had no books or records. Why, at the very bottom of the page from which the minister quoted was a statement that outside of these books there were no records kept by the company, and more than once in their report the commissioners state that the books at Norton and so far as that portion of the road was concerned were well kept. But the books, the lack of which the commissioners comment upon, are books relating to the construction of the so-called 15-mile section and the other expenditures in connection with the purchase of the Central Railway and the receipt and disposal of moneys procured as subsidies and raised upon bonds, &c. This company was incorporated in 1901 to build a line of railway from Chipman to Gibson, opposite the city of Fredericton, a distance of 45 miles. A contract was entered into between the government and the company, the government granting the subsidy for the building of that line. There is not a book to be found, and there was not a book available for the examination of this commission with reference to that portion of the work. There was a secretary to that company, and a treasurer and a president. The Minister of Public Works referred to J. J. F. Winslow, of Fredericton, who became, after the death of Mr. G. W. Allen, the secretary of the company, and who, in Mr. Allen's lifetime, acted as his clerk. And it appears by the evidence of Mr. Winslow, who was actually the secretary of this company, that he did not know even who the treasurer of the company was, that Mr. Allen kept no books, that he (Mr. Winslow) after he became secretary, endeavoured to make up a book from scattered data which Mr. Allen furnished him, a statement which is on the face of it incomplete, and which never professed—and nobody ever stated that it professed—to represent the complete transactions of the company. It is in the evidence of Mr. McAvity that he had no books. He states in his evidence not only that he had no books, but that he could not find any books except the books of the company at Norton. And there had been no contention made, until the effort of the Minister of Public Works to-day, to controvert the statement that there were no records or books of account that could be relied upon to show the expenditure of the large amount of money that passed through the hands of the company. Not only had this company no books of account, but the books of account of the Barnes Construction Company to whom they let the contract for the construction of the Fredericton-Gibson section were not available. The Minister of Public Works sought this evening to create the impression that again this commission had attempted to deceive the public by stating that the company had no books by making reference to the statement that Mr. Shannon, the auditor of the Intercolonial Railway, made when he examined the books of the Barnes Company that he was making up a statement of cost for the purpose of obtaining a federal subsidy. Why, that statement appeared in the report itself, that Mr. Shannon had access to the books that the Barnes Company had at the time. But when the commission sought to obtain these books, they were not available, the books had disappeared and the commission made an effort to find the books of the Barnes Construction Company, and notwithstanding this they were not produced before the commission. But I propose to read from the evidence of Mr. Barnes with reference to that. I refer to page 643 of the evidence:

Q. Have you any cheques or drafts that were given by you or accepted by you in connection with this transaction

A. I did not keep track of them.

Q. Have you any cheques or drafts in connection with this matter between you and company?

A. I don't think it. The business was wiped out and that was the end of it.

Q. Did you destroy your drafts?

A. I did as a general thing.

Q. Your cheques?

A. I destroyed them. At the end of the year the cheques are checked over and that is the end of them.

Q. Is that your invariable custom?

A. As a general thing I do.

Q. Have you heard any one tell of your books since?

A. No.

Q. Have no idea where they are?

A. No.

This is the evidence of the manager of the Barnes Construction Company with reference to the books which this commission sought to get before it, to determine as to the correctness of the payments made to him. Not only with reference to the Barnes Construction Company were books found to be missing, but when we come to the loans alleged to have been made by the New Brunswick Real Estate, Loan, Trust and Investment Company, of which the minister was practically the sole owner, the evidence is that there were no books. I desire to give the evidence with reference to that, which will be found at page 697. Judge Trueman, of whom the Minister of Public Works made mention, was the secretary, it appeared, of this company, a company that kept no books and made loans without any record, and without charging interest:

Q. I should like to know about the credits or payments made to you before this $5,000 was got by you?

A. If Judge Trueman were living, I would assume you could get it from him or from Mr. Allen, the secretary.

This, it will be understood, is the examination of the Minister of Public Works.

Q. Mr. Allen had no books?—A. Mr. Allen told me he was keeping a correct account.

Q. You cannot give us the amounts that were paid to you on account of these advances you made to Mr. Evans or the company or for the use of the company, down to the 1st day of July, 1904?—A. No, I can't; my reason is this, I keep no personal trace of my money matters at all.

This is the evidence of the Minister of Public Works:

Judge Trueman had a power of attorney and my secretary had power of attorney as well; these accounts I know were loaned and Judge Trueman reported to me on the 30th of June that there was considerably more than $5,000 due to the company.

That is the New Brunswick Real Estate Loan and Investment Company.

Q. I was asking you if you could give us the amounts?—A. That is the reason.

Q. We are to understand that you did not keep books of your own financial transactions?—A. Yes, I could say that, I can say that I did not. Since I have been in business I have kept partial books of accounts, no credit amounts. All these matters I trusted entirely to Mr. Allen and to Mr. Trueman.

Further, on page 698:

Judge Trueman was treasurer and secretary and was running the transactions.

And yet there is the statement of the Minister of Public Works that the secretary and treasurer of that company, with this name, the New Brunswick Real Estate, Loan and Investment Company, carried on its business without keeping any books. Yet the minister reflects upon the commission because they had not brought before them the executor of the Trueman estate to question him with regard to Judge Trueman's books and papers. He does this although when before the commission he himself stated that there were no books kept by this company. Not only in reference to these two companies—the Barnes Construction Company, to which thousands of dollars were ostensibly paid out of the treasury of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, and the New Brunswick Real Estate, Loan and Investment Company by which loans were alleged to be made to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, were the books missing and the records lost, but even in regard to the firm of J. M. Robinson & Company, who discounted bonds to the amount of $373,000. Would you believe that when Mr. Robinson was before that commission and was asked about the record of that transaction, he stated that he could not find his books or the record of that transaction.

Mr. CARVELL. I want my hon. friend to tell me where he finds that evidence, because he must know that Mr. Robinson produced his books, statements and accounts for every cent of it and we have the accounts submitted to the commissioners containing every cent of that amount. I think my hon. friend is not doing himself justice.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Do not worry about him.

Mr. CROCKET. At page 649 this evidence of Mr. J. M. Robinson will be found.

Q. Did you find your books of that year?—A. No.

Q. Have you instituted a search for them?—A. I searched all over my papers and was not able to find them; I presume they were destroyed.

Q. Were the books of that year destroyed?—A. Yes,—well I cannot find them.

Mr. Robinson's brother was also brought before the commission and gave precisely the same evidence, that the books could not be found. I think, after hearing these extracts from the evidence, the House will be able to measure at their true value the statements made by the Minister of Public Works with reference to the books and records of the company.

Furthermore there is the evidence of Mr. Corbett who was appointed to make an audit and who claimed that he could not make an audit from the data put before him. At page 175 of the evidence, Mr. Corbett said that he could not find any book of account from which he could make these things up. So I might quote from several other witnesses. Mr. C. N. Skinner has been referred to. I believe he acted as solicitor for this company. Mr. Skinner was asked in reference to an item of $1,800, that he seems to have got out of the treasury of the company. He stated that he had nothing to show what he got the $1,800 payment for and he had no account against the company. That was the class of evidence with which the commission had to deal. As I stated before, every officer of this company, including the president and every director who was living, was summoned before the commission and questioned in regard to all these transactions, and there is line after line and page after page in that report of nothing but: I cannot remember, I do not remember, I do not know anything about it. Yet in view of a record of that kind, the Minister of Public Works has the temerity to come before the parliament of Canada and draw upon the fact that the great majority of the members of this House are not familiar with these transactions, making a statement which he hopes to spread broadcast throughout this country for the purpose of discrediting this commission.

One of the first errors in the report which the minister pointed out was a statement that there was a note of $10,000 which was discounted by the Hon. F. P. Thompson in the month of November, 1902, of the proceeds of which no trace could be found. The minister stated that if the commission had turned up the account of the Barnes Construction Company they would have found that amount credited there. I have the account of the Barnes Construction Company with me here now, and I would challenge the Minister of Public Works, if he were here, or his counsel the member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) to show——

Mr. CARVELL. I accept the challenge—

Mr. CROCKET. In the month of November, 1902——

Mr. CARVELL——if my hon. friend will permit me—just give me time to look up my papers. I presume my hon. friend has the Barnes Construction account here. I ask him to turn to page 502.

Mr. CROCKET. Yes, find me a payment of $10,000 in the month of November.

Mr. CARVELL. Now, I will tell the hon. gentleman that if he will look down under the date of February 21,——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CARVELL. Hold on, now.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. CARVELL. I tell my hon. friend and he knows it, the $10,000 is there and—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh, order.

Mr. CARVELL. And if he will turn up to——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CARVELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. I rise to order and the hon. gentleman will please take his seat. The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) was speaking, I understand, with the permission of the hon. member and in that case he should be heard.

Mr. CROCKET. I was quite willing that the hon. gentleman should point out that payment. He accepted my challenge to point out the payment in the month of November, 1902, of $10,000 and he has not done it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick, in accepting the challenge and privilege granted to him should confine himself exactly to the terms of that privilege.

Mr. CARVELL. I will explain this at a later date.

Mr. CROCKET. In that connection, the statement of the commission was clear that there was a note discounted in the month of November, 1902, marked 'F.P.T.', which are the initials of the Hon. F. P. Thompson and that no trace can be found of the proceeds of that note which were obtained from the bank in the month of November, 1902. The Minister of Public Works stated that if they had looked at the account of the Barnes Construction Company they would have found that amount credited there. That statement is absolutely contrary to the evidence and the account of the Barnes Construction Company will show that that statement is not correct. Nearly every other statement that the Minister of Public Works made this afternoon is capable of contradiction and of refutation from the evidence brought before the commission. He spoke of the Hon. F. P. Thompson as a prominent and honourable man against whom nothing should be said. I have no desire to reflect in the slightest degree upon the Hon. F. P. Thompson, but, I think, in view of the reference which is made in this report itself to the Hon. F. P. Thompson, the Minister of Public Works would have been well advised if he had left out the high encomium which he pronounced upon that gentleman. At an earlier page in the report it is stated, and the evidence is on record in this book, that when this contract was entered into between the government of New Brunswick and the Central Railway Company and when the contract in pursuance of this contract was let by the Central Company to Dr. de Bertram for the transfer of the provincial subsidies. Dr. de Bertram was required to assign to the same Hon. F. P. Thompson and a friend in Fredericton no less a sum than $28,000 before the government would consent to the transfer of these subsidies to Dr. de Bertram. The Minister of Public Works this afternoon, notwithstanding what was admitted by Senator Thompson and Sheriff Sterling on the stand, comes into parliament and states that some gentlemen who are thoroughly familiar with the affairs of the Central Railway Company have told him that this statement is absolutely false. As a matter of fact, there is no man in Canada to-day who is more familiar and has been more familiar with the affairs of the Central Railway Company from their inception down to the present time than the Minister of Public Works himself. I may say in that connection that there was a memorial presented to the Lieutenant Governor in Council in New Brunswick in the year 1892 containing seventeen specific charges of corruption and malfeasance against members of the government at that time, amongst whom was to be found the Minister of Public Works. Paragraph 5 of the memorial reads:

That the said Central Railway Company, or those representing their interests and managing the earning and obtaining payment of the subsidies under their contract with the provincial government, were unlawfully and corruptly asked and compelled to pay and did pay the said Attorney General Blair and the Hon. Wm. Pugsley, then and now Solicitor General, and members of the executive government of the province, large amounts as part of the arrangements for and to enable them to get payments of the said subsidies under their said contract, and the payment of the said subsidies were delayed until payment was made to or for the said Attorney General and Solicitor General, and other members of the executive, to aid them in their elections, or the election of their supporters of the general assembly.

So, you will see that the name of the Minister of Public Works has been connected with the affairs of the Central Railway Company from their inception away back in the year 1889.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that $28,000 paid to Messrs. Thompson and Sterling for construction work?

Mr. CROCKET. It is hardly necessary for me to say that it was not. That was paid—and there is no evidence to the contrary—for no other purpose than graft. I have no hesitation in saying that it was a pure graft. There was no evidence adduced before that commission to justify in any manner at all the payment of that $28,000 of public moneys out of subsidies voted by the government to these two gentlemen, absolutely none. But, Dr. de Bertram, who obtained the contract, was required to assign the subsidies and that amount was paid to these gentlemen. So much for the very first inaccuracy or error that the Minister of Public Works has pointed out in this report.

Now, he has also stated that there is no foundation for charging illegal payment of subsidies in connection with the construction of the 15-mile section from Chipman to Minto. In order that the House may understand this matter I will give a brief resume of the legislation under which the subsidies were paid. In the year 1882 there was a general Railway Subsidy Act passed by the legislature of New Brunswick which was called the Lobster Act and which provided for the payment of subsidies to the Central Railway among many other railways that were projected at that time in New Brunswick. That subsidy Act provided for a payment of $3,000 per mile. The distance from Chipman to Gibson was 45 miles, which would make a total subsidy payable for the whole 45 miles of $135,000. Of that amount, before New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company was incorporated, $13,000 had been paid on account of work that had been performed under previous contracts in the years 1890 and 1896. Out of the subsidy $5,000 was paid, in 1890, on account of work performed by Dr. de Bertram and $8,000 on account of work alleged to have been performed under a contract in 1896. Of the subsidy voted by the legislature $13,000 was exhausted before the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company obtained its contract, and the right to receive any moneys from the government. That $13,000 had been paid on account of the 15-mile section which, at the rate of $3,000 a mile, would entitle it to a subsidy of $45,000. But $13,000 had been paid which left a balance available under the Act of $32,000. This contract, which was entered into with the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company for the construction of the 45 miles of railway, provided, not for a subsidy of $3,000 a mile as provided for by the Act, but for a subsidy of only $2,500 a mile and in that regard there is a very interesting order in council to which I wish to direct the attention of the House. The order in council is dated July 2, 1901, and this extract from it appears on page 4 of the proceedings.

That the provincial aid so to be given shall be at the rate of $2,500 per mile, for a distance not exceeding 45 miles, and that the Lieutenant Governor shall cause the first mortgage bonds of said company to the amount of $250,000 to be guaranteed by the Receiver General pursuant and subject to the provisions of the said Act passed at the last session of the legislative assembly.

Under the order in council a contract was entered into by which the government granted a subsidy of $2,500 per mile to this company. At $2,500 a mile the total amount that would become payable to this company for the construction of the whole 45 miles would be $112,500, or the total amount for the 15 miles which were constructed would be $37,500, $13,000 having been paid under the prior contract. That would leave a margin of $22,500 between the amount of the subsidy fixed by the legislature at $3,000 per mile and the amount that the government contracted to pay over to this company. There is a very interesting story in connection with how that difference of $22,500 was disposed of. I have already referred to the order in council of the 2nd of July, 1901, and that order in council, after providing for the payment of a subsidy of $2,500 per mile to the company although the Act provided for $3,000 per mile, makes this further provision:

The Provincial Secretary also reports that there has been paid by the Receiver General to the Central Railway upon and on account of the subsidy of $3,000 per mile, payable under the said Act, 45 Vic., chap 34, in respect to the line between Chipman and Fredericton the sum of $13,000, and the said Central Railway Company has also lodged with the Receiver General orders against such subsidy to the additional amount of $8,500, and as the subsidy payable under such Act is $3,000 per mile, and the work done on said line has by reason of the lapse of time since it was done and for other reasons become of comparatively little value, he recommends that the said sum of $13,000 shall not be deducted from said subsidy, and also that the amount of such orders or such portion thereof as the Lieutenant Governor in Council may deem just, shall with the approval of the legislature be paid to the holder or holders of such orders, said amount to be paid pro rata as each section of 10 miles is completed.

Now, the orders for $8,500 which are there referred to are orders, $7,500 of which were held by William Pugsley and C. N. Skinner and the order in favour of Mr. W. F. Whitehead for $1,000, Mr. Pugsley had himself received $2,250 and Mr. Whitehead $300 on these orders previous to the passing of this order in council. And yet this order in council makes that provision, an order in council which on its face appears to have been drawn by the then Attorney General himself. There is another order in council passed on the 12th of April, 1902, which is to be found on page 44 of these documents and that makes further reference to the $8,500 of orders which were held by the Minister of Public Works and Mr. Whitehead. This second order in council on this subject is rather interesting and it sets forth——

Mr. FOSTER. What is the date?

Mr. CROCKET. 12th of April, 1902.

Mr. FOSTER. He was then Attorney General?

Mr. CROCKET. Mr. Pugsley was then Attorney General. It says:

That there was paid by the Receiver General to the Central Railway Company on account of the subsidy of $3,000 per mile, payable under said Act, between Chipman and Fredericton, the sum of $13,000, and the said New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company have shown to the satisfaction of the Provincial Secretary that they are liable to pay the sum of $8,500 for work done on the railway between Chipman and Fredericton, which the company undertake to pay and for the payment of which the Lieutenant Governor in Council engaged to ask legislative authority to pay.

Bear in mind that the only orders amounting to $8,500 that were lodged with the Deputy Receiver General were orders lodged by Mr. Pugsley and Mr. Skinner for $7,500 and another order for $1,000 lodged by another member of the New Brunswick legislature, W. T. Whitehead, another member of the Grit ring in the province:

That on further considering the provisions of the said 45 Vic., chap. 344, the Provincial Secretary is of opinion that the company is by law entitled to be paid a subsidy at the rate of $3,000 per mile. No legislative authority for payment of said $8,000 is necessary.

These are the orders of Messrs. Pugsley, Skinner and Whitehead:

That the said sum of $13,000 as paid on account of work done by the Central Railway Company, and said amount should be deducted from the subsidy to be payable to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, that the company is, however, willing that in addition to the said sum of $13,000, there shall also be retained by the province the further sum of $1,000, which, as the distance from Chipman to Gibson is 45 miles, would make the subsidy actually available to this company $2,500 per mile. It is recommended that there be paid to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company the said sum of $8,500, the same to be chargeable against the said subsidy of $3,000 per mile, the same to be paid on the understanding with the said company that the said sum of $13,000, said sum of $8,500 to be now paid and said amount of $1,000, or $22,500 in all, shall be deducted from the subsidy of $3,000 per mile, payable under the said Act, so that the total remaining subsidy to be paid to the company (including said $5,000) shall be at the rate of $2,500 per mile, and that provincial debentures for the said amount to be issued by the Receiver General in amounts of $500 each, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 4 per cent per annum, such debentures to be signed by the Provincial Secretary and to be under the great seal of the province; that the said debentures be issued as provided for by section 6 of the said Act, that the same be sold and the proceeds thereof applied to the payment of the said sum of $8,500.

That is the way, Mr. Speaker, that the difference in the aggregate of the amount in the subsidy payable under the contract with the company and the subsidy provided by the Act is accounted for; $13,000 having been previously paid, $2,250 of that on the orders of the Minister of Public Works and Mr. Skinner, and $8,500 more on the same orders upon which $2,250 had been paid and another $1,000 that seems to have been lifted at the same time. In view of these records, I think that the statement made by the Minister of Public Works about there being no ground for saying that there was any illegal payment of subsidies will not carry very much weight. The records show indisputably that the company received on account of this fifteen mile section $57,000 although under the contract they were entitled to be paid only $37,500 on account of the fifteen mile section. The statement will be found on page 42 of this case. There was paid on account of the fifteen mile section and the branches $77,000, of which $20,000 was for the branches, leaving $57,000 of subsidy paid to this company for fifteen miles where $45,000 was the maximum that was payable to the company under the provisions of the Act. There is no question but that that amount of $70,000, including the $13,000 previously paid, has been paid in subsidies under the Act of 1882 in respect of the main line and exclusive of the branches on account of which $20,000 was paid under a later Act, notwithstanding that only fifteen miles of railway have been built, which would justify a subsidy of $45,000. So that there has been illegally paid in connection with that fifteen mile section $25,000 of subsidy. I have already indicated what became of $8,500 of this amount, that amount having been paid under these orders which were held by the Minister of Public Works and Mr. Whitehead, and which appear in the records here as having been lodged with the deputy receiver general, and having been a first charge on the subsidy as it should be earned under the contract. There is another interesting fact in connection with the payment of this $2,250 to Mr. Pugsley and Mr. Skinner. I will put on the record the references in the report so that there may be no misapprehension. There will be found on the record an assignment from Dr. de Bertram to Wm. Pugsley and C. N. Skinner for $7,500 on pages 92 and 93. Then there is an order from Mr. Pugsley and Mr. Skinner to the receiver general to pay $2,750 to the Bank of New Brunswick at page 97. Then, the Attorney General, the late Mr. Blair, writes to the Deputy Receiver General inclosing the order of Messrs. Pugsley and Skinner and directing him to write to the Bank of New Brunswick stating that that $2,750 will be a first charge on the subsidy, and will be paid out of the first moneys earned—at page 98. The Deputy Receiver General accordingly writes to the bank—page 99. Then there is an order from Messrs Pugsley and Skinner to the Receiver General directing him to pay David O'Connell $2,000, and Mr. Pugsley incloses order to Mr. Babbitt, deputy receiver general, the same day and asks that a letter be sent to Mr. O'Connell similar to the one that was sent to the Bank of New Brunswick. Mr. O'Connell, I may say, is a money lender in the city of St. John; so that Messrs. Pugsley and Skinner do not seem to have lost very much time in hypothecating the assignment of the subsidies they obtained. Then there is a further order signed by Messrs Pugsley and Skinner to the Receiver General for $550, and a letter asking the Receiver General to send to Mr. Trueman a letter addressed to the bank similar to the one that was sent to O'Connell; that is dated the 4th of January, 1896, and is found at page 103. So that there were orders outstanding against the $7,500 assignment, amounting to $5,300. I have already referred to the order in council that was passed providing for the payment of a further sum of $8,500 on account of these orders; and it is very significant that the Deputy Receiver General should be instructed later on to make a payment of $5,630 out of the subsidy that was paid under the order in council of 1902 to David O'Connell, the money lender, who was Mr. Pugsley's creditor under the other assignment, and that he should receive a payment out of a further subsidy that was voted by the provincial legislature and out of a subsidy that was paid illegally. So that when the records and the evidence are examined, it will be found that there has been no warrant, to say the least, for the statement that the Minister of Public Works has addressed to the House on this subject this afternoon. The Minister of Public Works has also stated that the reference made in this report to the guarantee of bonds is unfounded and false; he spoke of it as one of the most serious misrepresentations made in the report. The reference is to be found at page 19, beginning at the bottom of page 18:

> Notwithstanding this fact, it appears conclusive from the evidence that the whole $250,000 par value of these 3 per cent bonds had been guaranteed and delivered to the company up to the 6th of August, 1903.

The evidence bears out that statement, but before proceeding to discuss that point and in order that the House may have a clearer understanding of this question of the guarantee of bonds, let me further refer to the legislation passed in that connection. In the session of 1901 an Act was passed incorporating the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company. During the same session another Act was passed authorizing the Lieutenant Governor in Council to guarantee the bonds of any company which would undertake to construct a line of railway from Chipman to Gibson to the extent of $250,000 upon the conditions, however, set out clearly in the statute, that the province should not be liable for one cent or that any portion of the bonds should be guaranteed until the line was completely constructed and in operation and a certificate to that effect given by the government engineer. That Act was subject further to this distinct provision that the bonds should not be guaranteed until this company had established and in working order a mining plant capable of mining 500 tons of coal per day. Those were the conditions precedent to the right of the government to guarantee any bonds under the Act of 1901. There was an Act passed in 1902 by the legislature amending that Act to this extent. Section one provides that notwithstanding the provisions of the Act of 1901 the Governor in Council may guarantee bonds upon progress estimates subject, however, to their not exceeding in amount the cost of the work already completed relatively to the whole cost of the road, and also providing that there shall be retained such an amount of first mortgage bonds, until the establishment of the mining plant provided for by such Act, as will, in the opinion of the Lieutenant Governor in Council be sufficient to provide the cost thereof. That provision has never been removed or modified in any way with reference to the retaining of the bonds providing for a mining plant. This amendment I have quoted, although it provided for the issue of bonds upon progress estimates, provided also that there should be kept in mind the cost of the work already completed relatively to the whole cost of the road.

In the session of 1903 there was a further Act providing that there might be a further issue amounting to $200,000 for the purchase of the Central Railway, the Act setting out that $180,000 was to provide for the purchase price of the Railway and $20,000 to recoup the company for expenses made for the betterment of the road. In 1904, a further Act was passed and that Act is rather an interesting one. It contains the section which the commission has spoken of as an obscure section, and which opinion the Minister of Public Works tried to make light of this afternoon. When hon. members see the manner in which this was smuggled into the Act they will conclude that the commission were quite justified in speaking of this provision in the way they did. The Act in question is entitled an Act to amend the law authorizing the granting of aid to certain railways. There are five sections in it. The New Brunswick Coal Company and Railway Company is mentioned in the recital and the first section confirms the purchase of the Central Railway by that Company. The second section relates to a distinct and separate railway, the Restigouche and Western Railway, and refers to an Act affecting entirely that railway. Then the fourth reads:

If by reason of work on any section of the said line of railways being or having been found to be more than ordinarily expensive, it is found necessary to do so, the Provincial Secretary, by and with the authority of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, may endorse such guarantee on the bonds required to complete such road, and the amount of such guarantee may be greater than the mileage completed bears to the whole mileage of the line.

That section related to the Restigouche and Western Railway, and when the references made in that statute are looked up, it will be seen that they deal entirely with that road. But what does the ingenious Attorney General of that province do in the same Act? He adds this as section 5:

Section 5. The said Act, Edward VII., chapter 41, shall be construed as if the provisions of section 4 had been enacted at the same time as said Act and as part thereof.

What member of this House is there who, reading the provisions of that Act would have taken them to amend the Railway Act governing the guaraantee of bonds to the Central Railway. The provision for the guarantee of bonds regardless of mileage in section four related entirely to the Restigouche and Western. I ask if the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) who was then Attorney General of New Brunswick had wished the legislature to clearly understand the effect of the Act he was attempting to pass, he would have made a provision in the way it appears in this statute I have quoted. Why, when that Bill was brought down, the Hon. Mr. Hill, who was a strong supporter of the government, stated that he could not support the Bill because it referred to two different railways and was so mixed up that he could not understand its effect.

That was the way in which provision was made for the guaranteeing of bonds beyond the progress estimates proportioned upon the completed work in comparison with the whole mileage of the road. Now, bearing in mind this legislation, and bearing in mind the Act of 1901, I say, and the statement cannot be controverted, that there never was an amendment made to the Act of 1901 which did away with the provision requiring bonds to be retained for the purchase of a coal plant capable of mining 500 tons of coal per day, and which plant was estimated to cost $50,000. Furthermore, when we consider the Act of 1902, although it provided for the issue of bonds upon progress estimates, it was subject to the provision I have pointed out, that there must always be borne in mind the cost of the completed work relatively to the cost of the whole line, so that, until the Act of 1904, this section of 15 miles was not entitled to any more than its proportion of the $250,000. The fact is that, notwithstanding that, before the Act of 1904 was passed, just as the commission has stated in its report, every dollar of the $250,000 bonds were guaranteed. The Minister of Public Works cannot dispute that statement. And not only that, but a further amount of $200,000, which was provided in the year 1903 for the purchase of the Central Railway, also had been exhausted, with the exception of $52,000, before the Act of 1904 was passed. Now, I ask any lawyer in this House, or any member of this House who cares to examine these statutes and orders in council, if it is possible for any one to claim that under that legislation, speaking of the issue and guarantee of bonds before the Act of 1904, the whole issue could legally have been guaranteed. There is absolutely no question whatever that these bonds were guaranteed in contravention of the provision of he law, and, in that connection, it should be borne in mind that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) was responsible not only as ex officio director of the Coal Company for the distribution of moneys that went into the treasury of that company, but he was responsible as Attorney General and as a member of the Executive Council for the payment to that company of all moneys from the treasury of the province of New Brunswick. He not only disregarded all these provisions that had been mentioned, but did so in absolute violation of the law and without excuse or justification of any kind.

Proportioning the guarantee of bonds of $250,000 for the whole line of railway, 45 miles from Gibson to Chipman, the 15-mile section would have been entitled, of course, to one-third of that amount. But the Minister of Public Works, as Attorney General of the province, claimed that the first 15-mile section was costing more per mile than the unconstructed 30-mile section would cost, and that for that reason the 15-mile section was entitled to get more than one-third of the bonds. Now, if the evidence is turned up, it will be found, and found in the very document the Minister of Public Works read, bearing the signature of Mr. Evans, and dated 2nd January, 1903, that the estimated cost of the 15-mile section was $130,434, and of the 30-mile section $213,848, making a total of $344,282. That would leave less than 39 per cent for the 15-mile section and more than 61 per cent for the unconstructed 30-mile section. In addition, the Act provided that $50,000 should be retained for the mining plant. Deducting that, you find that $200,000 would remain and that the 39 per cent for the 15-mile section would amount to $78,000 and the 61 per cent for the 15-mile section would amount to $122,000. Besides this, the government had passed an order in council guaranteeing to the federal government the payment of $40,000 for rails advanced by the Intercolonial Railway for use on the 15-mile section and providing that the company should deposit their bonds with the Receiver General to cover the purchase price. This would leave but $38,000 as the maximum amount that could before the passing of the Act of 1904 have been legally guaranteed. Notwithstanding that, the Minister of Public Works was compelled to admit this evening that on August 6, 1903, $338,000 of bonds had been issued and guaranteed. It is true that he said $200,000 would be bonds authorized for the purchase of the Central Railway. But taking him even at that, there would be left $138,000 of bonds that had been issued before the passing of the Act of 1904 for the 15-mile section when, under the statute and orders in council, that section was entitled to receive but $38,000. So that, on his own statement, we find that the government of which the hon. gentleman was a member—and there is no doubt that he was responsible for all these transactions—issued bonds to the amount of $100,000 in absolute violation of the law.

There are some other matters to which I wish to refer, and, as the hour is late, I will ask your permission, Mr. Speaker, to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the House adjourned at 12.15 a.m. Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, May 6, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

That on Friday, instead of the time devoted to Private Bills being limited to one hour, under rule 25, the time be extended until the Private Bills order be exhausted or otherwise disposed of.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does this require notice, or has some arrangement been made? I do not understand it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It should be on the Order Paper. This matter was discussed and the understanding was arrived at on Tuesday last.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think perhaps the reason that it is not on the Order Paper is that the notice says that the right hon. gentleman will move it on Friday.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, on Thursday.

Mr. HENDERSON. The notice, I think, says that it should be moved on Friday.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, I think not. If my hon. friend will look at the Votes and Proceedings, he will see it says Thursday.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, it is on the Order Paper.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS.

COLLECTION OF MAILS AT GLACE BAY.

Mr. MADDIN—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. Who collects the mails from the boxes in the town of Glace Bay, in the county of Cape Breton, and what does he receive for his services?
2. Was the contract given after tenders? If so, how many persons tendered, what are their names and the amount of each tender?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. Daniel McIntosh, $400 per annum.
2. The contract was awarded to the lower tenderer after public tenders were invited. Only two tenders were received, one from Mr. Daniel McIntosh at $400 per annum, and the other from Mr. Daniel Merlin at the rate of $314, for six trips per week, or $470 for twelve trips per week. As 12 trips per week is the frequency of collection, Mr. McIntosh's tender was the lower.

DREDGING AT PORT ARTHUR AND MISSION RIVER.

Mr. BOYCE—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. What are the contract prices for dredging at present paid by the government in Port Arthur harbour, in the Kaministiquia river, and at Mission river, respectively, per cubic yard, scow measure, for rock and other materials?
2. Who are the contractors, and what amounts were paid during the year 1908?
3. Who were the inspectors on the dredges in the three places above referred to?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (for the Minister of Public Works):

1. Port Arthur Harbour:
   Rock excavation, $3; other materials, .26.
   Mission and Kaministiquia Rivers:
   Rock excavation, $2.
   Other materials, .09.
2. Port Arthur:
   R. Weddell, $3,627.67; The Great Lakes Dredging Company, no payment made yet under above contract.
   Mission and Kaministiquia Rivers:
   The Great Lakes Dredging Company, $390,966.67.
3. Port Arthur:
   I. W. Cousins, dredge 'No. 6.'
   Mission and Kaministiquia Rivers:

POST OFFICE AT GREENFIELD, P.E.I.

Mr. FRASER asked:

1. Has the post office at Greenfield, Prince Edward Island, been removed from where it was formerly kept by James Ennis?
2. Who is postmaster at present at Greenfield?
3. Why was the reported removal made, and who asked to have the change made?
4. Were any complaints made against the former postmaster? If so, what was the nature of the complaints?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). Information having reached the Postmaster General that the post office at Greenfield was not in the most central location, a report was obtained which was to the effect that the office was too far in what is known as the 'Upper end of the District,' and accordingly steps were taken to remove the same to a site better calculated to serve the postal needs of the people. Before the transfer of the office took effect, the proposed postmaster refused to accept the position, and the actual postmaster notifying the inspector to take delivery of the equipment, no other course remained except to temporarily close the office, pending further inquiries which the inspector desires to make after a personal visit to the ditsrict. Apart from the alleged inconvenient site of the office, there were no complaints against the postmaster.

MAIL CONTRACT BETWEEN LORNE VALLEY, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND, STATION.

Mr. FRASER asked:

1. How many tenders were received by the Post Office Department up to March 26, 1909, for the carrying of the mail between Lorne Valley, Prince Edward Island, and the station on the Prince Edward Island Railway called 48 Road?
2. What is the name of the tenderer, the amount of each tender, and which tender was accepted?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. Five.
2.

Andrew Finlayson	$50 00
Ed. A. MacGrath	54 00
Malcolm MacDonald 35 cents per double trip	54 60

James McLeod $60 00
Wesley MacLeod.. .. .. 70 00

The tender of Mr. Andrew Finlayson was accepted.

TRENT VALLEY CANAL—CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to mention to my hon. friend the acting Minister of Public Works——

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX. Pardon me, I am not acting Minister of Public Works. I simply answered a question in the absence from the Chamber of the Minister of that department.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, pardon my misapprehension. I would like to ask the government to lay upon the Table of the House, before the end of the session, a statement of the payments for damages in connection with the Trent Valley canal, from and including the city of Peterborough to the county of Victoria; I am referring only to those within the county of Peterborough. I wish to have the names of the persons, the date, the amounts paid and the purpose for which paid. There ought to be no difficulty about giving me this information before the end of the session.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is in the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, the Minister of Railways will pardon me for overlooking him.

Mr. GRAHAM. Oh, certainly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am informed that part of it is in the Public Works Department.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will ask the Minister of Public Works if he has any such information.

SUPPLY—HON. WM. PUGSLEY AND THE REPORT OF THE CENTRAL RAILWAY COMMISSION.

The House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding, 'that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply,' and the proposed amendment of Mr. Crothers thereon.

Mr. O. S. CROCKET (York, N.B.). Mr. Speaker, before the adjournment of the debate last night, I was discussing the defence of the Minister of Public Works to the charges contained in the report of the Royal Commission, that this company of which he was the head and front, had no records or no books of account, and to the further charges, that the government of which the Minister of Public Works was a member had illegally paid subsidies over to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, and had also illegally endorsed the bonds of that company. I quoted several passages from the evidence with respect to the books and the records which were kept by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, or rather with respect to the lack of those books, which I think fully bears out the statements and the reflections contained in that report. I desire to add one or two passages from the evidence in this connection. In the first place, I wish to quote from the evidence of Mr. J. J. F. Winslow, who succeeded the late G. W. Allen as secretary of the Coal and Railway Company. At page 41, Mr. Winslow was asked:

Q. Was there a treasurer of the company?—A. I do not think there was. I kept track of the expenditure pretty well during the time I was secretary. I would not know about all the expenditures. What I did know I kept account of.

That is the answer of the secretary of the company.

Q. Had you anything to do with the transfer of the railway to the government?—A. I did not know anything about that.

Here we have the answer of the secretary of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, who was supposed to have all the records and accounts, and he states he knew absolutely nothing about the transfer of the Central Railway to the Company.

At page 47, referring to the accounts which Mr. Winslow had made up after Mr. Allen's death from scattered data we have this evidence:

Q. You made up the account yourself?—A. Yes, in fact I made up a new account.

Q. From whom did you receive vouchers?—A. I received Mr. Allen's own vouchers from what I found in the former secretary's office.

At Page 50:

Q. If I understand you right when you entered Mr. Allen's office you found no books of account being kept when you commenced to work for the railway?—A. No, sir.

There is the statement of the secretary after this company had been in business for three years that he found no books of account being kept.

Q. You went to work at that stage to make up an account?—A. Yes.

Q. You gathered all the data you could from Mr. Allen and the papers in his possession; how far did you go back in making that account?—A. I went back in the case of the Peoples' Bank to the start, that was the first of these items, November 22, 1901; they started to build the railway in October, 1901.

At Page 52:

Q. All accounts you know of which were kept by the company for any other people, person or corporation?—A. When Mr. McAvity became president he wanted to get things straightened out as they should have been. He got Mr. Sharpe and myself to make up the best sort of a statement we could out of what material we had.

Mr. SPROULE. That is fine book keeping.

Mr. CROCKET. Then on page 55 Mr. Winslow says:

When we had any payment to make prior to my being secretary, money would be paid to Mr. Allen. He would get enough to pay Mr. Barnes on his running account and then pay into his private account and from that check out.

At Page 58:

Q. From his private account and the funds of the company were in his private name in the bank?—A. He would make provision for anything he knew was coming due by getting the money from the Peoples' Bank. It would be deposited to Mr. Allen's account.

Now Mr. Speaker, I ask the members of this House what they think of the financial business of this company amounting to over $900,000 being transacted upon such a basis as that. And yet the Minister of Public Works would endeavour to make the members of the House believe that there were adequate records and adequate data from which this commission could have arrived at the expenditure of every dollar of the money of the Company. The Minister of Public Works made reference to a statement made by Mr. Shannon, the auditor of the Intercolonial, who went down to investigate the affairs of this company in order to determine the question of the payment of the Federal subsidy.

At Page 476, of the volume entitled Orders in Council and Documents we have a report of Mr. Shannon, and I notice in it this statement:

After the contractors relinquished the work——

That was of the 15 mile section from Chipman to Minto which they had undertaken to build for $117,000.

After the contractors relinquished the work, the company requested them to go on and complete the work, and the company would pay the actual cost of the same. To ascertain therefore the actual cost, I requested that I should be furnished with all vouchers, cheques, &c., but this I found to be impossible.

That is the statement of Mr. Shannon, auditor of the Intercolonial Railway, the same gentleman to whom the Minister of Public Works referred last night as having examined these accounts in detail. Furthermore with reference to the absence of records and books, I wish to quote from the evidence of Mr. G. N. Babbitt, Deputy Receiver General of the province of New Brunswick. There has been issued by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, bonds to the amount of $450,000, all of which were guaranteed by the Provincial Secretary on behalf of his government. Mr. Babbitt was asked whether there was any registration or record of these bonds in his office at Fredericton, he being the deputy receiver general and the one who should have that record. On page 27 I find this evidence:

Q. After this, did you or did you not yourself personally know that the government guaranteed any bonds which had been issued by the company?—A. Yes, I knew there were orders passed to do it.

Q. In the way of information in your office?—A. The bonds were not brought to the office and recorded.

Q. Did you ever see the bonds yourself at all?—A. No, I never did.

Q. They never came near your office at all?—A. No.

Q. Personally you do not know to whom they were delivered or what became of them?—A. No.

Q. You say that no registration was made of these bonds in your books?—A. Yes.

What do you think of that way of transacting business by the government of any province in this Dominion? Here was an issue of $450,000 bonds guaranteed by the province and no register or record kept of them in the government office at Fredericton. Furthermore on page 28:

Q. Had any coupons been paid by you as Deputy Receiver General in connection with the bonds which has been guaranteed?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Have you any idea as to the amount of general coupons you paid?—A. Yes.

Q. About what amount?—A. The full amount.

Q. What would that be?—A. About $18,000, $9,000 on the half year.

Q. They would be coupons on how many thousand dollars worth of bonds?—A. $450,000 at four per cent.

Q. That is the only way you know the bonds had actually been issued, was by paying the interest coupon on them?—A. Yes, I might say that.

Q. You said the first coupon—the first conpon was presented for payment in what year? Was all that issue of $450,000 out then?—A. The July coupon, 1905, due July 2, 1905.

So that the Deputy Receiver General actually had no knowledge of the issue of these guaranteed bonds until 1904 after the great bulk of them had been issued and disposed of and had no record of them at Fredericton. Further I want to refer to the evidence of the then provincial secretary, Mr. Tweedie, now governor of the province, upon the question of the accounts, page 524:

Q. As a matter of fact, did you ever look to see if they did keep accounts?—A. Yes.

Q. You found they did not?—A. They did not keep them satisfactorily to me. I raised the devil with them.

But he does not seem to have raised any books. We have the evidence of the Minister of Public Works himself upon this question at page 703:

Q. Did you ever see an account-book of the company showing the moneys received or disbursed by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company?—A. No.

That was the answer which the Minister of Public Works gave—the gentleman who made the speech yesterday.

These books will probably be kept by Mr. Winslow, the treasurer of the company, or Mr. Allen, the secretary.

Both these gentlemen unfortunately died before this investigation began.

Q. I have the only book, so they say?—A. Who says?

Q. Here is the book and the only book of account except what was kept at Norton, I think there are about half a dozen pages in it. I do not see any account at all of this there?—A. I cannot help that.

Q. Notwithstanding that you were in the interests of the province, you and the provincial secretary, appointed to see that the provincial moneys were correctly accounted for and expended, you never took pains to see whether the company kept books or not?—A. Mr. Allen was a gentleman of high standing and Mr. Winslow was the treasurer.

In view of the evidence I have quoted, hon. members ought to know pretty well what value to attach to a statement made by the Minister of Public Works. All this, I wish hon. members to bear in mind, despite this section 2 of the Act of 1901, which authorized the guaranteeing of these bonds. Section 6:

The company shall keep such books and accounts as may from time to time be required by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and such books and accounts shall at all times be open to the inspection of the Lieutenant Governor in Council or such person as he may appoint to inspect and audit the same. And all books and accounts shall be each half year audited by the expert accountant appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and the expense of such audit shall be borne by the company.

Think of the record of evidence such as I have adduced this forenoon, in the face of a statutory provision of that kind. Then I ask hon. members if they take any stock in the statement made by the Minister of Public Works yesterday afternoon that there was no justification for the reflections made upon him.

I also dealt in part last evening with the minister's defence to the charge that the government had illegally paid subsidies out of the treasury of New Brunswick and in contravention of the provisions of the Act. I pointed out that under the Act of 1882, there was a subsidy of $3,000 per mile for the line from Chipman to Gibson, a distance of 45 miles, and that the total subsidy was $135,000. Of that line only 15 miles have been built up to the present which, on the basis of $3,000 a mile, would make the maximum subsidy available $45,000. Prior to the appearance on the scene of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, $13,000 of that subsidy had been paid on account of work done on that 15 miles. So that there was payable in subsidies to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, on account of this 15 mile section, under the Act of 1882, but $32,000. Notwithstanding that the government of New Brunswick, on representations made to it by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), paid $57,000, or $25,000 for which there was no authority of any kind in law. I pointed out further that of that $25,000, $2,550 had been paid on orders which were held by the Minister of Public Works and by Mr. W. T. Whitehead, another member of the Liberal machine; in New Brunswick. These orders had been obtained a few days after the contract was entered into between the Central Railway and Mr. de Bertram in the year 1895. Mr. Pugsley obtained his order the very day after that contract was entered into—Mr. Pugsley and Mr. Skinner jointly. In order that there may be no misapprehension, I propose to put on the record these assignments because the Minister of Public Works referred yesterday afternoon to these statements of these assignments to him as something with reference to which there was some error. I shall have to crave the indulgence of the House to put these statements on record. At page 92 of vol. labelled 'orders in council relating to the Central Railway,' we have this document:

St. John, October 9, 1895.

To the Hon. James Mitchell, Provincial Secretary.

Dear Sir,—I hereby request that you pay to Wm. Pugsley and Chas. Skinner, or their order, the sum of $7,500 out of part of the subsidy made payable to me under the agreement dated October 4, 1905, and made between the Central Railway and Her Majesty Queen Victoria, represented by the provincial secretary, and which agreement is for the building of a line from Chipman to the Newcastle coal fields, a distance of 15 miles, so soon as the same may fall due and as it may become payable. And for the purpose of securing such payment to the said Wm. Pugsley and Chas. Skinner, or their order, I hereby, in consideration of the sum of $1 to me paid by them, receipt of which I acknowledge, assign to them, their executors, administrators or assigns, the said sum of $7,500, part of said subsidies aforesaid.

LOUIS G. DE BERTRAM.

That is the day after the contract was entered into, this assignment was made by Dr. de Bertram, who got the contract, to Pugsley and Skinner. Then there was an order a little later in favour of W. T. Whitehead of which I have made mention. At page 97 we have this further communication:

St. John, New Brunswick,
November 18, 1895.

To the Honourable
The Receiver General of New Brunswick,

Sir,—You will please pay to the order of the Bank of New Brunswick the sum of $2,750 out of the first moneys which shall be coming to us from you as such receiver general, under the letter of order of Louis G. de Bertram, dated the 5th day of October, 1895, and filed with you on the 8th inst., said moneys being a portion of the subsidy to be paid by the province for and in respect of the extension of the Central Railway from Chipman to the Newcastle coal fields.

C. N. SKINNER,
WM. PUGSLEY.

Then there is a letter on page 98 to Mr. Babbitt:

St. John, New Brunswick,
November 18, 1895.

Geo. N. Babbitt,
Fredericton, New Brunswick.

Dear George,—I inclose you order of M. M. Pugsley and Skinner on the Central Railway subsidy, and I would like you to write a letter in the usual form addressed to the Bank of New Brunswick, stating that the order for the $2,750 will be a first charge upon the subsidy earned under the contract with the government by the Central Railway Company, and will be paid out of the first moneys earned and payable under such contract for the extension of the railway mentioned in such order.

Yours faithfully,
ANDREW G. BLAIR.

Then there is a letter on the following page from Mr. Babbitt to the manager of the Bank of New Brunswick in accordance with this instruction. At page 100 there is this further order to the Receiver General of New Brunswick:

November 26, 1895.

To the Receiver General of the Province of New Brunswick.

You will please pay to David O. Connell of the city of St. John, in the city and county of St. John, or to his order, the sum of $2,000 out of the moneys which will be coming to us under a certain assignment or transfer from Louis G. de Bertram to us, bearing date the 5th day of October, 1895, of the sum of $7,500, portion of the subsidy which will be payable by the province of New Brunswick to the said Louis G. de Bertram as the assignee of the Central Railway Company in respect of the extension of the Central Railway from Chipman, in the county of Queens to the Newcastle coal fields, and which subsidy to the said amount of $7,500 was by the said transfer dated the 5th day of October, 1895, and assigned and transferred to us. The transfer hereby given to the said David O'Connell of the said sum of $2,000 is subject to a previous assignment heretofore made by us to the Bank of New Brunswick of $2,750.

C. N. SKINNER,
WM. PUGSLEY.

Then there is a letter from Mr. Pugsley to the deputy Receiver General asking him to send to Mr. David O'Connell a letter similar to the one he had sent the Bank of New Brunswick, so that the House will see that, as soon as this assignment was procured from de Bertram, the Hon. Mr. Pugsley at once pledged it and raised money, through the bank and from Mr. David O'Connell, who was a money lender in the city of St. John. At page 103 there is a further letter to the Deputy Receiver General as follows:

St. John, June 4, 1896.

G. N. Babbitt, Esq.,
Deputy Receiver General,
Fredericton, N.B.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Skinner and I have handed to Mr. Trueman, which he will forward to you, a further order against the subsidy coming to us re Central Railway for $550. Will you kindly send him a letter addressed to the bank, similar to the one sent to Mr. O'Connell. This comes next after the orders to the B.N.A., B.B.N.A., and Mr. Connell on file with you

Yours truly,
WILLIAM PUGSLEY

So that there were outstanding against this assignment of $7,500 of the subsidy for Messrs. Pugsley and Skinner, orders to the amount of $5,300. Now, on May 28, 1896, an order in council was passed authorizing the payment of $8,000 of subsidy on account of work to the amount of $23,000 that had been done on that 15 mile section, and immediately we find further correspondence and directions from Mr. Pugsley. At page 105 will be found the following letter

St. John, June 3, 1896.

To the Receiver General of the province of New Brunswick.

You will please pay to the Bank of New Brunswick the sum of five hundred and fifty dollars out of the subsidy which will be payable by the province in respect of the extension of the Central Railway from Chipman to the Newcastle coal fields on account of the assignment to us by Louis G. de Bertram of $7,500 of said subsidy. This amount is to be a charge on the balance due us on said amount as per memo, below next after balance of $1,250 due said bank, $700 due Bank of British North America and $1,550 due David O'Connell.

Yours truly,
WILLIAM PUGSLEY,
C. N. SKINNER.

This is the further memo:

Amount of assignment to C. N. Skinner and W. Pugsley	$7,500
Amount paid on first estimate	2,250
	$5,250
Amount due B. N. B.	$1,250
Amount due B. B. N. A.	700
Amount due D. O'Connell	1,550
	$3,500
Balance now pledged for $550	1,750
	$5,250

Now, on page 131 of this file there is a statement of $8,000 of bonds that was issued to pay this subsidy and the disposition of them, and this is the statement as it appears on record:

Central Railway—Date of Bonds.

	Forward	$139,000
May 28, 1870 to 1885, sold to O'Hara & Co., proceeds used to pay—
	Merchants Bank	$2,000
	Bank B. N. A.	300
	Bank N. B.	1,500
	W. T. Whitehead	300
	D. O'Connell	450
	J. Barnes	3,450
		8,000
See ledger, 1896, page 636.
		$147,000

Now, hon. members who have followed the documents which I have read will see that these payments to the Bank of British North America, the Bank of New Brunswick and D. O'Connell were under the orders of Messrs. Pugsley and Skinner, totalling $2,250. The Bank of New Brunswick was paid $1,500, which left a balance of $1,275 referred to in Mr. Pugsley's memo. D. O'Connell was paid $450 on account of $2,000, which left $1,550 due to Mr. O'Connell. There was a further payment of $300 to the Bank of British North America, presumably on the order of Mr. Trueman. Then, Mr. Whitehead was paid $300 on his order for $1,000. So that is the way in which the $8,000 was disposed of that was authorized by order in council of May, 1896.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in view of these facts the order in council to which I referred last night, dated 12th April, 1902, which was after the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) had re-entered the New Brunswick cabinet, becomes very interesting. That order in council, as I pointed out, provided that there should be deducted from the subsidies payable on account of the 15 mile section, not only $13,000 previously paid under the old contract, but a further sum of $8,000 to pay these very orders on account of which the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) had already received $2,250, and Mr. Whitehead $300. And another portion of the record, which is very suggestive, I think, in connection with the assignment of these subsidies to Messrs. Pugsley and Skinner, is a letter which will be found at page 192 of the book entitled 'Orders in Council and Documents.'

St. John, May 16, 1904.

G. N. Babbitt,
Deputy Receiver General,
Fredericton.

Dear Mr. Babbitt,—A note of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company of $14,106 came due to-day at the Bank of New Brunswick and I have given the bank a sight draft on you for the amount. Attached to the draft is a letter from Hon. Mr. Tweedie engaging to pay the bank the $14,000 on the 4th of April last, and the $106 is for the interest.

An order in council was passed for the payment, and I am sending a copy of Mr. Tweedie's letter to him to-night asking him to instruct you to pay the amount and likewise to pay an amount of $5,600 odd to David O'Connell.

Mark that, Mr. Speaker, a direction in the year 1904 to pay out of further subsidies provided by an order in council the sum of $5,600 to the same David O'Connell, who held Mr. Pugsley's order under the first assignment and who was Mr. Pugsley's creditor in that connection.

This cheque can be given to the Bank of Nova Scotia at Fredericton to-morrow if you get the Premier's authority for payment. The exact amount is $5,630. These two accounts together will make less than $20,000 which is the sum which I assume the Premier will direct you to pay on subsidy account. This is pursuant to the statute passed at the last session, which authorized the payment on branch lines and is authorized by the engineer's report. He reports 7·7 miles completed, and there is grading for some distance further, and also the chief engineer of the company reports about a mile of additional rails ready to be laid upon the extension to another of the coal miles. You need not accept the draft until you hear from the Premier, and if it should be necessary to hold it over for a day or two, get the bank to so instruct its Fredericton agent.

Yours very truly,
WM. PUGSLEY.

And in that way the entire amount of the subsidies which were authorized for the construction of the branch lines was disposed of, ($20,000) and of that sum David O'Connell, money lender, of the city of St. John, received $5,600 under the direction of Wm. Pugsley. Now I think, in view of this record, the statement which the Minister of Public Works made, and the strictures he passed upon the commission for commenting upon this matter, will not carry very much weight, either in this House or with anybody who reads his speech, and who reads the record that I have adduced.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with reference to the illegal guaranteeing of bonds. Last night I quoted the several Acts that were passed from the year 1901 to 1904 in relation to the guarantee of bonds of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company. I showed that under the Act of 1901 not one dollar of these bonds was entitled to be guaranteed until the whole line of 45 miles from Chipman to Gibson was completed and in operation. I showed furthermore that in 1902 a further Act was passed amending the Act of 1901, in this way, that the bonds might be guaranteed upon progress estimates, but always bearing in mind the cost of the completed work relative to the cost of the whole line; providing furthermore, that there should be retained out of the bonds of the company a sufficient amount to provide for a coal plant, which was valued at $50,000. So down to the year 1904, under these two Acts in relation to the issue of bonds on the Gibson-Chipman section, the government only had authority at any time to guarantee a proportionate amount on this 15 mile section. I showed furthermore that under this Act of 1902, an estimate which was made in January, 1903, by the engineer, Evans, of the relative cost of the two sections, the 15 mile section and the 30 mile section which is unconstructed, the 15 mile section being estimated at $130,000 and the unconstructed section at $213,000, showed that the unconstructed portion of 30 miles of this railway was entitled to at least sixty-one per cent of the guarantee of these bonds, and that there was available for the constructed portion of the 15 miles less than thirty-nine per cent. Now working that out, it would be clear to anybody who cared to examine the record, that deducting, in the first place $50,000 to provide for bonds for the coal plant, which was never done away with, there was left for this whole section of 45 miles $200,000. Sixty-one per cent of that amount would give $122,000 to the 30 mile section, and $78,000 to the 15 mile section, and that allows for the increased estimate of the cost per mile of the 15 mile section over the cost of the construction of the 30 mile section. So there was left $78,000. Now from that $78,000 should be deducted an amount of $40,000 which the provincial government by order in council guaranteed to pay to the Dominion government for rails supplied by the Intercolonial to the contractors for use on the 15 mile section, amounting to $40,000. That order in council specifically provided that the company should deposit with the Receiver General bonds covering the purchase price of those rails, $40,000, and that order in council had never been altered, and has never been altered down to this date. So if you take $40,000 from the $78,000, the government could legally guarantee only $38,000 bonds in respect of the 15 mile section. Notwithstanding that, the rails have never been paid for, the government in New Brunswick owe the federal government for those rails to-day, the coal plant has never been provided, and the whole amount of $250,000 has been guaranteed for the construction of 15 miles of this railway. And yet the Minister of Public Works criticised and attacked, and vehemently attacked, this Royal Commission for holding that he as a member of the government was responsible for the illegal guaranteeing of bonds of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company.

Now, Sir, the Minister of Public Works produced a statement which he said he addressed to the late Mr. Shadbolt, manager of the Royal Trust Company in St. John, on the 6th of August, 1903, in reference to the distribution of certain bonds which the company had. In 1903, after these Acts were passed to which I have alluded, there was a further Act passed authorizing, in addition to the guaranteeing of $250,000 for the construction of the Gibson-Chipman line, a further guaranteeing of bonds to the amount of $200,000 for the purchase of the Central Railway from Norton to Chipman, $180,000 of which was said to be for the purchase of the road, and $20,000 to recoup the company for improvements they had put upon it. I will quote a section from the Act of 1903, this is the proviso:

> Provided however that before guaranteeing the said bonds hereby authorized to the amount of $200,000 in respect to the said Central Railway, it shall be made to appear to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that a clear title has been obtained by the said, The New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, to the said Central Railway, and that the bonds so to be guaranteed, together with the said bonds to the amount of $250,000 authorized by said Act 1 Edward VII, chapter 12, are secured by a first mortgage upon the said whole line of railway from Norton to Gibson.
> Before such bonds in this section provided for shall be so guaranteed hereunder, all bonds of the said, The New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, which are secured by mortgage to the Royal Trust Company of Montreal, shall be cancelled and a new first mortgage to secure the whole issue of $450,000 to the satisfaction of the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall be executed covering the said whole line from Norton to Gibson.
> 2. The rate of interest upon the said bonds so to be issued under this section shall not exceed four per cent per annum.

The rate of interest provided on the $250,000 bonds for the Chipman-Gibson line was three per cent. This Act provided for a new issue covering a loan of $450,000 and for the substitution of four per cent bonds for the three per cent bonds that had been previously issued. Bearing that section in mind, I wish to draw the attention of the House to a statement to which the Minister of Public Works referred yesterday afternoon. This statement will be found at page 518 of the documents relating to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company:

Bank of Montreal, St. John, New Brunswick,

Memorandum for E. M. Shadbolt, Esq., agent Royal Trust Company at St. John.

You will please deliver the bonds of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company guaranteed by the province, as follows:

To Bank of Montreal, 140 bonds.. ..	$ 70,000
To the Bank of British North America 40 bonds..	20,000
To the Bank of New Brunswick, 54 bonds..	27,000
To the Bank of New Brunswick, for Peoples' Bank of New Brunswick, 140 bonds..	70,000
To Arthur I. Trueman, solicitor of company, 171 bonds..	85,500
To Bank of New Brunswick, in addition to above, 132 bonds..	66,000

(Sgd.) WM. PUGSLEY,
Attorney General.

August 6, 1903.

The Arthur I. Trueman referred to here was the solicitor of the company and the partner of the Minister of Public Works. That statement bears date the 6th of August, 1903. So that, over the signature of the Minister of Public Works we have the evidence that there were issued and guaranteed at that time $338,500 of these bonds. By the Act of 1903 that I have already quoted, the government could not guarantee any bonds for the purchase of the Central Railway until the title was completed and vested in the government. The deed of conveyance to the coal company bears date the 21st of August, 1903. So that, even in respect to the further issue of $200,000 which, the Minister of Public Works states, is included in the $338,500, there was an illegal guarantee of bonds. But, take the minister's own statement, give him the $200,000 as having been issued, admit that the whole issue of $200,000 was exhausted on account of the purchase of the Central Railway, and we have $138,000 of bonds which were issued and guaranteed to that date, the 6th of August, on account of the fifteen-mile section. That, Mr. Speaker, is just exactly what the commissioners say in their report, a statement which the Minister of Public Works has characterized as being absolutely false.

Furthermore, there is another memorandum in addition to the memorandum that I have already read, at page 519, to this effect:

Bank of Montreal, St. John, New Brunswick.

MEMORANDUM FOR BONDS SIGNED AND DELIVERED LATER.

That is later than the 6th August.

November 6, delivered to Arthur I. Trueman, 40 bonds..	$ 20,000
November 16, delivered to Dr. Pugsley, 40 bonds..	20,000
December 23, delivered to Arthur I. Trueman, 30 bonds..	15,000
1904—
January 20, delivered to Dr. Pugsley, 8 bonds..	4,000
January 29, delivered to Dr. Pugsley, 105 bonds..	52,500

Now, that exhausted the whole issue of $450,000 of bonds. Every one of these bonds was guaranteed, with the exception of the last $52,000, before the Act of 1904 was passed which authorized the guarantee without respect to mileage. That Act was passed on the 18th day of April, 1904—that very suspicious Act which I submitted to the attention of the House last night, an Act which related to another railway entirely distinct from the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, but which, in its last section, which scarcely any lawyer and certainly no layman in any legislature would understand, and passed on the last day of the session, provided that the bonds of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company could be guaranteed without respect to mileage.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is to say without regard to the cost of the work?

Mr. CROCKET. Yes, without regard to the cost. But it is a fact and it appeared from the record that every one of these bonds was guaranteed by the government excepting the last $52,500 before the passing of the Act of 1904 on the 18th day of April. The section which authorized the guaranteeing of bonds irrespective of the mileage reads as follows:

If, by reason of the work on any section of said line of railway being or having been found to be more than ordinarily expensive, it is found necessary so to do, the provincial secretary, by and with the direction and authority of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, may endorse such guarantee on the bonds required to complete such section and to provide rolling stock therefor, although the amount of such guarantee may be greater than the mileage completed bears to the whole mileage of the line.

I would submit that there is no court in this country which would hold that, even in the face of that section as it exists on the statute book to-day, the government were authorized to exhaust the whole issue of $450,000 or the $250,000 with respect to the Gibson-Chipman section. How can it be so contended, in view of these last words, 'although the amount of such guarantee, may be greater than the mileage completed bears to the whole mileage of the line'? That provision must be read with reference to the former legislation which provided, in the first place, that there should be no guaranteeing until the whole line was completed and as modified by the Act of the following session which provided for progress estimates upon a pro rata basis. But, I say that even to-day, with the law as it stands on the statute book, the exhausting of the entire issue of $250,000 was a distinct violation of the statute which the Minister of Public Works or no other lawyer in this country can justify for one moment. I want, in reference to the minister's statement as to the guaranteeing of the bonds and the incorrectness of the commissioners' finding, to refer to the evidence of Mr. Shadbolt at page 267. Mr. Shadbolt, as I have said, was the manager of the Royal Trust Company, the institution which was looking after the substitution and exchange of the three per cent bonds for the four per cent bonds. His evidence is as follows:

I think the whole issue was guaranteed by the government, that is my understanding of it.

There is the statement of Mr. Shadbolt who was the custodian of all of the $250,000 of bonds that it was his understanding that the whole issue had been guaranteed on the 6th day of August, and that, Mr Speaker, is the statement which the commision have put in the report and which the Minister of Public Works has stated was false.

Q. A guarantee was placed on the bonds?—A. Yes.

That is Mr. Shadbolt's evidence conclusively that the guarantee of the province was placed on all those bonds on the 6th of August, 1903. Then, an interesting question arises with regard to the disposition and the use which was made of these bonds. In that connection I wish to put before the House the evidence of the Minister of Public Works himself, when he was on the stand before this commission in the month of December last. At page 720 of the evidence, I quote the Minister of Public Works:

Q. On the 6th of August I see a letter by you to the bank of Montreal in which you say you will please deliver the bonds of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company guaranteed by the province as follows, to the bank of Montreal $70,000, to the bank of New Brunswick $20,000, to the bank of New Brunswick $20,000, to the People's bank of New Brunswick $70,000, to the bank of New Brunswick $66,000, A. I. Trueman $85,000. Can you tell us have you any record as to what these bonds were given to the bank of Montreal for?—A. To the bank of Montreal they were given for the purpose of taking the place of bonds which the bank of Montreal held.

Q. Central security?—A. Central security.

I suppose that should be 'collateral security,' but it is printed 'Central' here.

Q. Have you any record as to what was done with these moneys for which these bonds were hypothecated?—A. That was all done through Mr. Allen the secretary.

Q. Did you know at the time what it was for?—A. I have no doubt that Mr. Allen informed me.

Q. Have you any recollection of his informing you?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the hypothecation for? A. Mr. Allen communicated with me very frequently. I may say Mr. Allen gave me evidence that it was for the purpose of the company.

There was the evidence of the Minister of Public Works that Mr. Allen gave him evidence that it was for the purposes of the company, although he had not a receipt or a letter or a document of any kind to show it.

Q. Would this remark apply also to the bank of British North America?—A. Yes.

Q. To the Bank of New Brunswick?—A. No, a note may have been negotiated through myself or Mr. Allen so far as the Bank of New Brunswick is concerned.

Q. The People's bank of New Brunswick?—A. That would be bonds left with the People's bank as security for the advances they were making or loans making to the contractors.

Q. To the Barnes Construction Company?—A. The Barnes Construction Company.

Q. At that particular time the way Barnes was paid, it appears in evidence was by notes of the company for the discount of which arrangement had been made with the People's bank?—A. Yes.

Q. Altogether I see to the bank of New Brunswick $93,000, who had negotiated the loans for which these bonds were held as collateral by the bank?—A. Either Mr. Allen or myself.

Q. Can you give us any statement of what became of the moneys that were got from the bank, some by the hypothecation of these bonds?—A. I could not do this for the reason I told you it was four or five years ago when Sharpe was making his audit.

There is the Minister of Public Works admitting that these bonds were negotiated by himself or Mr. Allen, and when he was asked as to what was done with the money that was received on account of them he says that he could not tell for the reason that it was four or five years ago, and not a record or letter of any kind to account for the disposition of the money.

Q. It is in evidence that the audit never was made. Mr. Corbet says things were not in a position to make it?—A. I can tell you this, Mr. Sharpe's instructions were to look over that with the utmost care, I can say this that all statements that would in any way assist Mr. Sharpe were handed to him by me that were in my possession, at this time it would be impossible for me to give details.

Mr. Chairman.—What date was this given to Mr. Sharpe?—A. The spring of 1904.

Now, I want the House to bear that statement in mind in connection with a statement which was made in the report of the commission that there was a false and fraudulent statement in the audit of Mr. Sharpe; I want the House to bear in mind that Mr. Pugsley, the Minister of Public Works, gave Mr. Sharpe the papers and data from which that statement was made.

Then at page 722 Mr. Pugsley said:

Mr. Sharpe was ordered by me to make an audit up to the 30th of June 1904, till some time in that year.

The Chairman.—Up to the time Mr. McAvity took charge?—A. Yes, it had to be made before Mr. McAvity would take charge, I think for that purpose all the vouchers and statements which I had and which I understood Mr. Trueman had were delivered over to Mr. Sharpe for his information.

The members of the House heard last night what the Minister of Public Works said as to its being the business of the commission to get the papers which Mr. Trueman had, he said they should have gone to his executor. But here is the minister stating under oath before the commission that all the papers that Mr. Trueman had and that he had, had been passed over for the purpose of this audit.

Q. The $66,000 was for this purpose, arrangement was made with the bank of New Brunswick, I think. I negotiated the loan for the company under which the bank was to loan the company sufficient money to pay the accounts that Mr. Evans and Mr. Elkins were to pay to Drexell & Company and Clarke.

Mr. Pugsley says he negotiated this loan. In fact, Mr. Speaker, practically all the negotiation of moneys was conducted by the Minister of Public Works, and the evidence shows it from one end to the other.

Q. This $55,000?—A. Something more than that, $66,000 was the amount of bonds given to the bank of New Brunswick for that purpose, they made a loan against these bonds of the amount to pay Drexell & Company and Clark & Company their claim.

Q. It was from that source that the money purchased the option that Evans and Elkins had from Clarke and Drexell?—A. Yes.

That is the only account that the Minister of Public Works gave in reference to what became of the money that was raised on bonds, the $66,000 out of which he said the Clarke & Drexell option was paid amounting to $55,000.

Q. Do you know what became of this $85,000?—A. Of these, Mr. Trueman as I understand, that is my recollection, out of these Mr. Barnes was settled with and Messrs. Evans and Elkins what was needed to get the title, also what was necessary to get the title from the minority shareholders, and the balance was applied for the purposes of the company.

Q. What was done with it you can't say?—A. I can't tell now from recollection.

Q. What was done with the bonds that were hypothecated to raise the money I suppose, do you know of your own knowledge what was done with the money that was got from the banks when these bonds were hypothecated with the bank?—A. I suppose it would be known whether these bonds were collateral to notes of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company or were not, the bank records would show that.

Q. On the 6th day of November, 1903, I see Mr. Trueman got 40 bonds amounting to $20,000, do you know what became of these?—A. I do not know unless you call my attention to something in connection with them, I presume they were for the purpose of the company, I might say, why I cannot tell as to the bonds, there were outside all these loans by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company loans obtained from me personally, or through my having endorsed notes, it may be that some of the proceeds would be used in returning these moneys, they were used for the purposes of the company.

There is the statement of the Minister of Public Works that he received out of the proceeds of bonds hypothecated by himself moneys for the return of loans made by himself personally. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that will have some bearing in connection with the 'W.P. $5,000' loans that were set up. There is not one of these cheques that are set out in the evidence as money loaned the H. B. Coal and Railway Company by the Pugsley's N. B., R. E. and W. Company, that bears the name of the N. B. Coal & Railway Company, they were all payable, some to Elkins, some to Evans, and one I think to the Canada Permanent Loan Company. But not one of these cheques bears the name of the N. B. Coal & Railway Company upon its face, and there is no doubt, and nobody can read this evidence without coming to the conclusion, that the Minister of Public Works whilst kiting these bonds through all the banks was giving cheques of his own and mixing up his own transactions all through with the transactions of the Railway Company and kept no books.

Q. If you had made these loans, do you know what loans you made and what you did with the proceeds?—A. Not at this late date.

Q. There are no records from which you can tell us?—A. There were records handed to Mr. Sharpe, as to what was done with the different bonds.

Q. On November 16, 1903, there were 40 bonds, $20,000 were got by yourself, do you know what you did with these bonds?—A. They were used for the purposes of the company.

Q. What did you do with these bonds?—A. My impression is they were handed to the Bank of New Brunswick.

Q. What became of the loan that went through the bank —A. I presume that you would find that a note of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company was discounted.

Q. Does that tell what became of the money which came from the bank?—A. It would tell you that the money went to the company. Then I presume Mr. Allen, the secretary, or Mr. Winslow would have an account of it.

That presumption of the Minister of Public Works is quite erroneous for neither had an account of it.

Q. Mr. Allen and Mr. Winslow have both passed over to the great majority?—A. Yes.

Q. To come to the next one, 23rd December, I see where Mr. Trueman got $15,000 of bonds, do you know what was done with them?—A. On my order?

Q. Yes.—A. They were for the purposes of the company.

Q. What was done with them?—A. I cannot tell you now from memory.

Q. You have no record to show?—A. Tell me the numbers of the bonds and I have no doubt I can go to the bank and see the records.

Q. That would not show the disposition made of the money?—A. It would show whether these bonds were used as collateral.

Q. Only to what loan put up as collateral, not to how applied?—A. It would not show what Mr. Allen, the secretary, did with the money, but it would be traced to the hands of the company.

Q. The ultimate destination you do not know?—A. I could not be supposed to tell you from memory.

That is the kind of evidence which the Minister of Public Works, the gentleman who negotiated these bonds and the loans on the securities of these bonds, gave to the commission in December last. I ask hon. members to bear that evidence in mind and contrast it with the statement which the minister made here yesterday.

There is another feature commented on in this report, and which I think deserves the attention of the House, and that is the misleading character of the reports which were made to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, on which reports these orders in council were issued for the endorsement of the bonds. The Minister of Public Works complained very vehemently of the reference which is made to the report that was signed by Mr. Evans, the engineer of the company, on the 2nd of January, 1903, and he read that report in an attempt to show that the commission were wrong in their reflections respecting him. The commission referred to only one of these reports. The evidence, however, gives three just such reports as the minister quoted last night, including the one he quoted. The first is dated April 2, 1902, page 143 of the documents. That report states that work had been done under the contract to the extent of $20,029.25. That is all the work the report showed had been done, but there was an attempt made to show expenditures for the purpose of rolling stock and the payment on account of the option for the purchase of the Norton-Chipman branch, which had no right however to figure in the estimate of cost for the purpose of issuing the subsidy moneys on the fifteen-mile section. That is what the commission, I suppose, alluded to. There are two or three pages of that report having reference to this and other matters having no relation to the question of issuing subsidies. The only amount that did not come under the Act was the money expended on that particular section, $20,229.25. Yet upon that report, prepared by the Minister of Public Works, an order in council issued authorizing the guarantee of $60,000 of bonds on $20,000 of work.

There is another dated the 1st of September, 1902, on page 148. That proceeded, on the same line as the first with respect to the expenditure on the Norton and Chipman Railway, and sets out that the work down to that time amounted to $67,634, and upon that report an order in council was issued authorizing the guarantee of bonds to the extent of $120,000.

On January 2, 1903, and that is the report of the Minister of Public Works I have referred to, there was a statement of work only to the value of $74,574, and on that the recommendation was made that bonds should be issued to the extent of $140,000.

From the report of September, 1902, to the report of January, 1903, there had been less than $17,000 of work performed between these dates, yet there is a report recommending an increase on the bond issue to the extent of $20,000.

These reports the commission characterizes as misleading, and no one can read them without coming to the conclusion that they were made for the purpose of procuring an issue of bonds against the spirit and letter of the Act. So that the Minister of Public Works is as far astray in this as in almost every statement he made in connection with these matters.

Now, I come to what I consider the most grievous accusation contained in this report, the one to which there can be absolutely no reply, and in respect to which I say it is a disgrace that any one guilty of the conduct therein charged should remain in the government of Canada in control of its greatest spending department. I refer to the statement regarding the misappropriation of $39,000 in respect of the purchase of the Central Railway, and I am going to read what the commission say with reference to that. It will be found on page 51 of their report.

Mr. Evans stated the small ledger was all he had seen out of the wreck in the way of books, and the others must be at Hampton showing expenditures. These, however, could not be found.

He swore that the above $140,409.03 was all he ever got under his agreement with the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company to pay him $180,000. What became of the balance, in round numbers $39,000, he could not tell and would not even attempt to surmise. He made several earnest attempts to get this balance which he thought was due him, but was told he did not give a complete title, &c., and getting tired out after a time, he accepted the last payments as a settlement.

It was stated in the House of Assembly the full $180,000 was paid for the Central Railway. This statement was made with the full knowledge that some $39,000 of the $180,000 had not been paid and was not to be paid. It was known besides that Mr. Sharpe had prepared under instructions, a statement that the full amount of $180,000 had been paid, and such statement was allowed by the government to be put on file at Fredericton without correction. In an order in council dated July 12, 1904, prepared, we believe, by the Hon. Mr. Pugsley, it was declared that this $180,000 had been paid for the railway from Norton to Chipman. These statements were made although Mr. Pugsley had participated in the negotiations with Mr. Evans by which the amount, about $39,000, was abandoned, and we cannot conceive how such a fact could have been forgotten by Mr. Pugsley.

I ask you if any more serious accusation could be made against any public man than that contained in the quotation I have read. It charges misappropriation of Public Works participated in the negotiations in this connection, that he had the full knowledge of the facts; and although the commission does not say that the misleading statement in the legislature was made by Mr. Pugsley, I will prove from the record that it was. Let me say that, from my reading of the evidence, if the commission have erred at all in this case, it has been on the side of leniency. There are many matters in that report upon which they could have framed a strogner indictment than they have done. The commissioners do not mention Mr. Pugsley as having made that statement, but I shall show that he did make it, and made it twice. Not only did he do that, but, as a member of the government, he allowed to be placed on file a statement prepared by Mr. Sharpe, under instructions, in which that false allegation appears. I have already read the evidence of Mr. Pugsley himself in which he said that he gave the data and papers to Mr. Sharpe, and I can give a further quotation in which he admits that he himself instructed Mr. Sharpe with regard to the preparation of that statement. Furthermore in an order in council, drawn up by the Minister of Public Works, when he was attorney general of New Brunswick, I find that false and fraudulent statement, and of course it was made with his knowledge. Can there be any more serious charge presented against any public man? It is completely confirmed by the evidence. Mr. Evans had been manager of the Central Railway from Norton to Chipman a number of years. The stock in that railway was held by Clarke and Company and Drexel and Company, bankers of Philadelphia. They held 6,365½ shares of the total capital stock and in addition $545,000 worth of bonds. The road was losing money very rapidly and in the spring of 1900 the owners came to the conclusion to cease operating, Mr. Evans, who had been managing the road for them, obtained an option from Clarke and Company and Drexel and Company for the whole road, 45 miles, rolling stock, franchise, &c., and in addition another railway known as the St. Martin and Upham Railway, for $50,000. Then the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company was shortly after organized. Whether it was organized in connection with this scheme is not made clear, but there is much in the evidence to justify the conclusion that this fact was known at the time of the incorporation of that company and that it was part of the scheme. However, after a time the New Brunswick company obtained from Mr. Evans, who had this option on the two railways for $50,000, an option on the Central line for $180,000. That option was obtained on the 28th of August, 1901, and it provided for the payment by the New Brunswick Company of $180,000 in the following manner: $15,000 in one month from date, which would be due on the 1st October; $15,000 in five months from date; $15,000 in 12 months from date; and $15,000 in 15 months from date, and the balance, $120,000 in two years. That was the agreement entered into between Evans and Elkins and the coal company. Mr. Evans stated that after a time that agreement was modified and it resulted in an agreement being entered into by which Evans and Elkins were to pay a large amount for improvements and betterment, amounting I think to $50,000. But the upshot of the whole thing was that, after a number of payments had been made, this amount of $39,000 was abandoned. Mr. Evans, as stated in the report did not receive $180,000, or within $38,000 of that sum I will quote from the evidence, so that there will be no mistake:

In addition to that the company was to assume the management of the road and operate it, and as soon as the other fifteen miles was completed and in running order?—A. Yes.

Q. They had to bear all the expense of maintenance of way while they were so operating?—A. Yes.

Q. I find no provision that you, in the meantime, were to lay out and make any expenditures on the road, you and Mr. Elkins, capital expenditures?—A. That is correct, there was nothing in the agreement.

Q. That is the only agreement you had, including all the terms of the agreement between you?—A. I want to say, that there was an understanding that I should put the road in shape, between me and the company, there was a sum mentioned, I think, but it was a moral obligation on my part to put the road in as good shape as I could.

Q. There was a sum mentioned between you and the Coal and Railway Company, which would be the amount of expenditure you were to make on the road?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember what the amount was?—A. I think it was about $50,000.

Q. That was not in writing?—A. No, it was an understanding I had.

Q. A loose understanding, not put in writing?—A. Yes.

Q. Up to this time a considerable portion of this $50,000 had been expended in August, 1901?—A. That $50,000 was to extend over and include the indebtedness on the road; I had to assume the indebtedness existing on the road when Clarke & Co. gave us their option.

So that, perhaps, I should correct the statement. The understanding was not subsequent, as I stated, but seems to have been collateral with the original agreement that Evans and Elkins should make these expenditures on the road, although it was not put in writing. Then, at page 368:

Q. You paid the expenses on the road after you had given the option to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company?—A. Yes.

Q. From recollection can you say what the amount of those expenditures were?—A. The total expenditures up to the time the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company took it over was somewhere about $77,000.

Then, at page 369:

A. The New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company took it over the 1st of August, 1902, I think.

And on the same page:

A. I was financed by myself personally, by Mr. Elkins personally, and by the two of us jointly and by moneys we received from the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, from time to time.

Then, at the following page, which appears here as 520, not 320, apparently a typewriting error:

Q. Are you able to give us the moneys you actually received from the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company?—A. I can, using the books.

Q. With the aid of this book, can you give us the moneys you actually received from the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company?—A. Yes.

Q. And the dates at which they were received?—A. I take it for granted that the dates are the dates they were received.

Q. You can, from this book, tell us the moneys you got from the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company?—A. Yes, up to that time.

Q. Call out the moneys you actually did receive. (Witness refers to book and gives the following figures):—

October, 1901..	$12,500 00
February, 1902	9,500 00
July, 1902..	5,000 00
September, 1902..	$ 5,000 00
October, 1902..	5,795 00
November, 1902..	3,000 00
December, 1902..	2,000 00
January, 1903..	3,750 00
February, 1903..	3,500 00
March, 1903..	3,000 00
April, 1903..	15,000 00
June, 1904..	22,224 06
	$74,769 06

Q. Since that date, have you received anything since June, 1904?—A. There was $3,750 and $5,000. I am not getting that out of the book.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. Have you the dates for that?—A. No, I am just giving this out of memory.

Mr. POWELL. That makes a total of $83,519.06. Take the first amount, $12,500, I see a statement in the recital in an order of council that $15,000 had been paid you at that time, what about that?—A. I only received that amount.

Q. Did the cheque drawn for $15,000 come to you, do you know?—A. No, I don't know whether it was cheque or in cash. But if it were a cheque it would be for that amount, $12,500.

Q. At any rate that is all you got?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you give a receipt for $15,000?—A. I don't know, sometimes a receipt was given and sometimes not. If I gave a receipt it was for $12,500.

Q. I see also there is an entry of an amount you had received, another $15,000, that is stated in an order in council, is that correct, second payment?—A. The second payment was $9,500.

Q. You find these books to be correct?—A. I do.

Q. The second payment of $15,000 would be due under the terms of the option, it was not paid to you at that time?—A. No.

The order in council stated that he had been paid $15,000.

Q. I see that by the records you are credited by Mr. Shadbolt, who was acting for the Royal Trust Company, acting as agent for Drexel & Company, with a payment of $55,800, I think?—A. The option was for $50,000. I borrowed $5,000 from them, I was in need of money and borrowed that from them.

Q. Do you remember that that $55,000 was paid by you to the Royal Trust Company for Clarke and Drexel?—A. Yes.

Q. And some interest?—A. Yes, I think it was $800.

Q. Paid in settlement of the option you held from Clarke and Company and Drexell and Company?—A. Yes.

Q. You then received from them on that payment, from the Royal Trust Compnay, the stock that you had the option for, and the bonds you had the option for in connection with the Central Railway?—A. I presume they were turned over to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company.

Then, at page 574:

Q. How much cash did you get from the Coal and Railway Company in connection with the sale to them of the Central Railway Company?—A. $74,769.06 and $3,750 and $5,000.

Q. Altogether the cash received by you from the Coal and Railway Company was $83,519.06?—A. Yes.

Q. In connection with the sale to the company of the Central Railway Company?—A. To the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, yes.

Q. You told me that, in addition to that, there was an amount that was paid in to Clarke and Company and Drexell and Company in satisfaction of your option of $55,000?—A. Yes.

Q. That made a total of cash?—A. $139,319.06.

Q. That is correct?—A. Yes.

There is the statement of Mr. Evans that the total sum paid to him under the agreement with the Coal and Railway Company was $139,319.06, and that statement was never controverted by any witness who was examined before the commission, and indeed, it was known to Hon. Mr. Pugsley himself, as I will show by quoting from Mr. Pugsley's own evidence.

Q. In addition to that, did you either, as cash or in any other consideration receive from the company anything on account of the sale?—A. Yes.

Q. What are the two items and dates (refers to book)?—A. June, 1904, $1,089.97.

Q. That was an amount incurred as a liability to the Intercolonial Railway when you left?—A. Yes.

Q. One amount is Intercolonial Railway, $1,089.97?—A. Yes.

Q. What is the other amount?—A. Vouchers, $1,570.85 in June, 1904.

Q. Explain this item, Intercolonial Railway?—A. It was a matter of indebtedness to the Intercolonial from the Central Railway, a matter of the Central Railway Company under the option due the Intercolonial Railway.

Q. That under the option you should have paid?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, then, this $1,570.85 is vouchers, explain that?—A. There would be sundry accounts.

Q. Incurred which had not been paid?—A. Yes.

Q. Which you, under the option, should have paid?—A. Yes.

Q. These two items you should have paid, amounting to $2,660.22?—A. Yes.

Q. So that, adding these two items——

One of which was not paid for, Mr. Speaker.

—if the Coal and Railway Company has paid these two items, the total amount you have received in cash and otherwise from the company in connection with the sale of the Central Railway is $141,679.82?—A. Yes.

Q. Outside of that, did you receive, directly or indirectly, from the Coal and Railway Company, any money or other consideration in connection with the sale of the Central Railway?—A. No; I take it for granted that these figures are correct.

Q. Then, as I understand it, there is a balance of $38,028.12 in connection with the sale of the Central Railway to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, which you have never received?—A. Yes.

Q. The last payment you received was in June, 1904?—A. Yes, according to the book.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. CROCKET. Mr. Speaker, at one o'clock I was quoting from the evidence of E. G. Evans in regard to the amount that was paid for the Central Railway from Norton to Chipman, and I desire to put on record one or two further extracts from his testimony. At page 593 he was asked this:

Q. You say you had negotiations with Mr. Pugsley and others. Did you ever ask for the balance of this sale of the Central Railway—$38,000?—You knew you were to get $180,000?—A. Yes.

Q. You know that amount was voted by the legislature of the province?—A. Yes.

Q. You understood that $180,000 was charged as having actually been paid to you and Mr. Elkins?—A. I don't know that.

Q. Notwithstanding all that you say, all you ever got was this $140,000, odd?—A. Yes.

Q. All you ever got?—A. Yes.

Page 594:

According to the contract, $15,000 in two months, $15,000 again, $30,000 and $15,000, none of these were made on time, I could have cancelled the agreement if I had wished, under the agreement because the agreement was never carried out.

Q. You were worried and simply threw it up?—A. Yes.

Q. Threw it up, without being paid any more than $140,000?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you any idea who got the balance?—A. Not the slightest.

Q. You knew the province had paid it?

I wish to call the attention of the House to that evidence in view of the statement made by the Minister of Public Works in answer to a question which I put to him that the deductions from this amount were made by arrangement between Mr. Evans and Mr. Allen. The minister stated that distinctly. There is Mr. Evans' evidence. When he is asked:

Have you any idea who got the balance?

He says:

Not the slightest.

Q. Have you any idea who got the disposition between the $12,500 and $15,000?—A. No.

Q. No information?—A. No.

Q. No belief about it? (Objected, Mr. Carvell.)—A. I can't say what I don't actually know.

Q. You have no information about the matter?—A. No.

Q. Neither you or Mr. Elkins got it, you are positive about that?—A. Yes, I am positive; I don't think Mr. Elkins did, for I would have known if he did.

At the bottom of the page the chairman asks:

Q. Can you, from the figures, give us just how much you did receive out of that $180,000? Was there an understanding with somebody as to what you did receive and that there was a balance, or does it still stand in that way?—A. I understand the matter is closed. I would be perfectly willing to receive it.

A. The matter was discussed with two or three parties.

Q. Who were they?—A. I think Mr. Allen, Mr. Trueman and Dr. Pugsley was another.

The chairman.—You afterwards gave them to understand that the thing was closed, you did not expect any more?—A. Yes.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that that evidence is pretty conclusive upon the question as to the amount that was actually paid for the Central Railway. The evidence was not disputed by anybody. There was no pretense made by the Minister of Public Works, or by any witness who was examined before the commission last summer, that this statement was not based upon fact and no attempt was made to dispute the statement in any single particular. It must be, I submit, taken as indisputable that only that amount of money was paid to Mr. Evans for the option on the Central Railway between Chipman and Norton. Mr. Evans could not have been more emphatic or explicit than he is in his statement as set out in the testimony which I have now read. Further, in Mr. Evans' evidence. to show that these negotiations were carried on with the knowledge of the Minister of Public Works, we find, at page 597, the following:

Q. Do you remember with whom negotiations were had by you with respect to the abandonment?—A. No, I don't remember, my impression is, I think there were two or three, I think Mr. Allen was there and Dr. Pugsley, I think so.

There is Mr. Evans' statement that Dr. Pugsley was cognizant of this arangement. But I can establish from the evidence of Dr. Pugsley himself. at pages 712 and 713, that he was fully aware of the abandonment of that sum.

Q. Eventually, Evans was settled with, was he not?—A. Eventually, he was settled with, yes, and Mr. Elkins and they gave an order on the trust company.

Q. Mr. Evans said that he was not paid in full. There was a balance, about $38,000 was struck off from his account, at the settlement?

This is to the Minister of Public Works himself:

A. I can't tell you as to the correctness of the amount. I think there is some error, I would not suppose he was not settled with, because the agreement was that the company was to have a clear title to the road, that they did not do and never were in a position to do. Mr. Evans and Elkins were settled with and, I understood, to their satisfaction.

Q. Did you participate in the settlement and negotiations?—A. I can't recall that, very likely I was informed of them.

Further on:

Mr. CROCKET.

At any rate a settlement was made. By the terms of this settlement Messrs. Elkins and Evans handed over all the bonds and stock to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, all they had?—A. That was the effect of it, they gave an order to the Loan and Trust Company, then the bonds were handed to the Bank of New Brunswick, I don't recall the particulars of the settlement with Evans and Elkins, but I find a memo. which would show that I was informed of it at the time.

I want the House to bear in mind that, from the evidence of the Minister of Public Works himself, he had a memorandum which showed that he was informed of the settlement which was made with Messrs. Evans & Elkins at the time by which this sum of $38,000 was abandoned. The Minister of Public Works has endeavoured to create the impression in this House that $180,000 was, notwithstanding the evidence of Mr. Evans, paid for the Central Railway and he has sought to create the belief that the balance of $38,000 was for the acquisition of the stock of the Central Railway Company which Evans & Elkins did not hold. As I pointed out from the evidence this morning Evans & Elkins held 6,300 odd shares of the stock of the Central Railway Company. The Act which provided for the purchase of this railway contained a provision that the directors of the Central Railway Company representing three-fourths of the stock could give a complete title to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company. The stock which Evans & Elkins acquired from Drexell & Company and Clarke & Company did not quite represent the three-fourths of the stock which the Act provided should be acquired before the transfer of the line, and consequently it was necessary to acquire an additional amount of stock. That stock was acquired from Dr. de Bertram and the evidence of that is to be found on pages 651 and following. Mr. Skinner was examined at this stage about $1,800 he appeared to have received from the treasury of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company.

Q. When you speak of getting something like $1,800. I understand it is as solicitor for the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company?—A. I have nothing to show, I have never looked into it. As I understand it, it was for the Coal and Railway Company; I transacted a whole lot of business between the two companies.

Q. When you speak of this $1,800, you are not able to state whether it was from the Central Railway Company or the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company?—A. I do not think I could state that now.

Q. What about the $1,000, would not that date help you?—A. (Referring to paper) 29th August, 1903, that would be the last.

Q. That would be merely in connection with your trip to New York?—A. No, that was all done separate.

Q. What consideration did you give de Bertram?—A. Between $400 and $500.

Chairman.—Would that be in the interest of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company?—A. I have no idea now, I cannot say.

Q. And the particular object was to get the stock?—A. I got all the stock.

Here we have it, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Skinner, who acquired the additional stock that was necessary to effect the transfer of the railway under the terms of the Act, states distinctly that he got all the stock and that all he paid for it was between $400 and $500. And yet the Minister of Public Works will attempt to leave the impression upon this House that the difference between the amount that Elkins and Evans received and the amount that was charged the province, $180,000, or nearly $38,000 in all, was appropriated for the acquisition of that stock, which the evidence shows was got for $400 or $500. Now, Mr. Skinner having got that stock the transfer was made, and that is all that was ever paid in the purchase of the Central Railway from Norton to Chipman. For that sum of $140,000 odd paid to Evans and Elkins and the aditional sum of between $400 and $500 paid to de Bertram, the transfer of that railroad property was made to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company. I say it is absolutely indisputable that that is all that was paid for that purchase, and I have referred to the evidence that the Minister of Public Works participated in the negotiations and that he had a memorandum showing that he was informed of the particulars at the time. Bearing that in mind, what do we find? I will take up now this indictment just in the order in which the commission has presented it. In the first place, I think I have established beyond controversy the first statement in that report that that was all the money that was paid for the Central Railway. Then the report says:

It was stated in the House of Assembly the full $180,000 was paid for the Central Railway.

If that was stated, Mr. Speaker, it was an absolute falsehood and misrepresentation made to deceive the legislature of New Brunswick which had voted this money for that purpose. The commission did not say that the Minister of Public Works made that statement, but I say it was the Minister of Public Works who made that statement on the floor of the New Brunswick legislature. I have here the debates of the legislature of the province of New Brunswick for the year 1905, and at pages 34 and 35 of the official 'Hansard' of the legislature of New Brunswick is this statement made by Hon. Mr. Pugsley in reply to Mr. Hazen:

Hon. Mr. Pugsley, in reply to Mr. Hazen's questions in regard to the New Brunswick Railway, stated that some of the questions could not be answered until he had heard from the president of the company, which he hoped to do early next week. In the meantime he would answer such questions as he had the information with regard to. The total mileage of the road is 69 miles, 45 miles from Norton to Chipman, and 23 miles beyond Chipman including branches. By the Act, the company was authorized to acquire the railway from Norton to Chipman, and were required to do so as a condition of obtaining the $200,000 worth of bonds which were authorized. Of these amounts $180,000 was for the purchase of the road and $20,000 for repairs. There were $540,000 of first mortgage bonds against the road, and for this sum of $180,000 a clear title was obtained. As to the amount expended in construction from Chipman towards Fredericton he could only speak up to the time of the audit of Mr. Sharpe, to the 31st of May, 1904. The auditor's statement shows that up to the 31st of May the sum of $368,056.33 had been expended. In addition to that $180,000 had gone to the purchase of the Central Railway, and there were $34,000 additional.

There is the statement recorded in the official debates of the legislative assembly of New Brunswick that the Minister of Public Works represented to that legislature which authorized the guarantee of these bonds that $180,000 had gone to the purchase of that property, when the fact, as proved by this evidence, was that less than $141,000 had gone to that purpose, and the Minister of Public Works knew it when he made the statement. But that is not the only time the Minister of Public Works made the statement in the legislature of New Brunswick. On the 22nd of February, 1906, at page 63 of the report will be found another very emphatic statement on the point:

Hon. Mr. Pugsley, in answer to Mr. Clarke's inquiry as to whether the attention of the government had been called to the charge made in the 'Gleaner' that close friends of the government had obtained a sum of $150,000 in connection with the Central Railway, and as to what steps the government proposed to take to disprove the charge of corruption thus made, said: The attention of the government has not been called to these charges except through the inquiry that has been made in this House. My own information with regard to this charge is that the statement is absolutely false. It is absurd on the face of it, for the total amount paid by the New Brunswick Railway Company for the Central Railway was $180,000, and to assume that $150,000 of this was given away to the friends of the government is too absurd for serious contradiction. As to how the money given to the New Brunswick Company was disposed of last session, the government furnished the fullest information to this House; it also insisted on a thorough audit of all the accounts of the railway, and two experienced auditors were selected to do this work.

And I have shown, Mr. Speaker, that these audits were not audits at all. Mr. Corbett, who was examined, stated that he had not sufficient data to make an audit, and he refused to assent to the statement that the statement which he had prepared was an audit, saying that it was simply a statement made on the basis of the information furnished to him.

One of these was F. S. Sharpe, who has since died, and after his death Mr. Corbett, another experienced accountant, completed the work. In that way the government satisfied themselves that everything was bona fide. For a further answer to this question I may say that when the members supporting the government authorized us to go to the limit of $250,000 for the purpose of improving this road made a condition that before any of that money was expended there should be a thorough audit. The government after a complete examination of the accounts advanced the money and has thus taken every possible means of ascertaining the whole truth in regard to this road. I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that no statement could be more false that that made by the 'Gleaner.'

So there were two separate occasions on which the Minister of Public Works, while Attorney General of the province of New Brunswick, made a statement which was false to the legislature of New Brunswick, and the evidence that I have adduced shows that at the time he made it he was aware of its falsity. That establishes the second statement in the indictment. The commissioners also say:

This statement was made with the full knowledge that some $39,000 of the $180,000 had not been paid and was not to be paid. It was known besides that Mr. Sharpe had prepared, under instructions, a statement that the full amount of $180,000 had been paid, and such statement was allowed by the government to be put on file at Fredericton without correction.

Now, what is the record with regard to that? The statement to which the commissioners refer will be found on page 198 of the orders in council and documents in connection with the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company. It is headed 'Approximate Balance Sheet of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company as of 31st May, 1904,' and among the assets is the item: 'Central Railway Purchase, $180,000.' I have already referred to the evidence showing that this statement was prepared by Mr. Sharpe after all the data and information had been furnished to him by the Minister of Public Works and his partner Mr. A. I. Trueman; and further, it appears from the evidence that it was the Minister of Public Works while Attorney General of New Brunswick who particularly instructed Mr. Sharpe to make that statement.

There is this further statement by the commission:

In an order in council dated July 12, 1904, prepared, we believe, by the Hon. Mr. Pugsley, it was declared that this $180,000 had been paid for the railway from Norton to Chipman.

That order in council is also in the records, and it will be found on page 82 of this volume of orders in council and documents. This is the passage that refers to the payment for the Central Railway:

An audit has been made by Mr. F. S. Sharpe, a chartered accountant, from which it appears that the cost of construction and rolling stock amounts to $368,056.33, and adding to this the amount paid for the line of 45 miles from Norton to Chipman of $180,000, and also $38,892.90, being the cost of improvements made to the Central Railway and charged to capital account.

There is the evidence to justify the third statement contained in that very serious indictment, that an order in council, prepared, they believe, by the Hon. Mr. Pugsley, contained that false statement. Then, the commissioners sum up as follows:

These statements were made although Mr. Pugsley had participated in the negotiations with Mr. Evans by which the amount, about $39,000, was abandoned, and we cannot conceive how such a fact could have been forgotten by Mr. Pugsley.

Now, I ask any hon. member of this House who is disposed to give this question any fair consideration if he has any doubt that the commission were amply justified in every detail of that statement. If that is the fact, then I ask the Prime Minister if a gentleman who has been found guilty, and who is guilty under this evidence, of such a serious offence is a fit and proper person to be in charge of the greatest spending department of the federal government. So much for that which I consider the most serious finding contained in the report.

I propose now to give some few samples from the evidence of how this money has disappeared; and the commission do not set out all the examples that might have been set out from an examination of the evidence. They set out three or four, but there are at least half a dozen others just as glaring which they have not embodied in the report. I have already quoted the evidence of Mr. Evans as to the payment which he received on account of the first instalment on account of the purchase of the Central Railway. He was entitled to receive $15,000. An order in council had set that out. The evidence I have already quoted shows in the most positive manner that he received only $12,500 of that $15,000. That evidence will be found on pages 590, 591, and 594 of the evidence. So that on the very first payment under this agreement for the purchase of the Central Railway there was a switching of $2,500. Mr. Evans was asked who got that. He said he had not the slightest idea; and yet the members of this House heard the Min ister of Public Works say last night that Mr. Evans arranged with Mr. Allen for the deduction of these amounts so that they could go for other purposes in connection with the railway.

The second instalment of $15,000 was due in February, 1902. I have also read from Mr. Evans' evidence showing that of this he received only $9,500. His attention was called, on page 572 of the evidence, to the statement in an order in council that he had received $15,000 before and also this $15,000; and notwithstanding that, he affirmed most positively that all he had received of the second $15,000 which was checked out of the funds of the Company for that purpose, was $9,500—a switching in that instance of $5,500 from its legitimate course.

On pages 35 and 36 of the report, speaking of the difference between the aggregate of the discounts that had been made by the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company at the People's Bank, and the amount that had been received by the James Barnes Construction Company, the commission say:

> This difference is pretty well accounted for by three notes; first one for $1,250 discounted January 22, 1902, marked on account A, G, B, of the proceeds of which there was no trace, the second being the fifth note discounted by the bank, on February 5, 1902, amounting to $25,000, marked on account Evans, and third by a note for $10,000 discounted on November 19, 1902, marked F, P, T. As to the latter, you could not trace what became of the proceeds, but in the case of the $25,000 note, discounted February 5, 1902, above mentioned, we found that the proceeds thereof were placed to the credit of the company, thus opening the only really checkable current account ever kept by the company with the Peoples' Bank.

At page 35:

> This account was checked out in seven amounts and closed March 8, 1902. It shows to whom the cheques were made payable, but these cheques were handed to J. J. F. Winslow by the bank on January 19, 1904, and Mr. Winslow could not find them, so he stated. Four cheques amounting to $5,262.68 were made payable to Geo. W. Allen, and we could find no trace of what became of the money. Two cheques dated February 8, 1902, of $4,000 and $15,000, respectively, were drawn payable to E. G. Evans.

So that the House will observe that the $25,000 placed to the credit of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company at the Peoples' bank, is the only checkable account of all the transactions of that company. The $25,000 was obtained on account of Evans and presumably destined for the hands of Mr. Evans on account of the purchase of this railway. Yet, Mr. Evans states most positively that all he received was $9,500 out of the $25,000 so marked as his cheque. There were two cheques on that $25,000 after it had been placed to the credit of the company in the Peoples' bank. One was for $4,000 and the other for $15,000, dated February 5, which were marked in the account in the People's Bank, one was for $4,000 and is the sum I have already referred to, off which there was sliced $5,500 in transit to Mr. Evans. Then the $4,000 seems to have gone astray in toto. So that there were two cheques for $19,000 in all which were presumably intended for Mr. Evans, but out of which he only got $9,500 or only fifty per cent.

Those are two instances which the commission have mentioned in their report, but there are others. There are the notes which were discounted by Mr. Barnes of the Barnes Construction Company and Mr. Pugsley. In the first place there is a note for $13,500, which was discounted at the Bank of New Brunswick on the 3rd of October, 1903. Those were the notes to which I suppose the Minister of Public Works referred when he boasted last night of his having financed a loan to the great benefit of the people of New Brunswick. The commission remarked that they cannot understand the necessity of either Mr. Barnes or Mr. Pugsley endorsing the notes, because the banks held as collateral bonds guaranteed by the province and which were ample security for the advances made. On that day there was a note discounted for $13,500 as will be found in the bank account at page 652 of the documents, and on the same day there is credited to Mr. Barnes only the sum of $10,225.04. The note for $13,500 was to pay on account of the work of the Barnes Construction Company. That company received only $10,225.04, leaving $3,274.76 which was switched in transit.

There is another note to which the commission make no reference. It was given on the 18th of November, 1903, for $13,000, discounted by Mr. Pugsley and Mr. Barnes in the Bank of New Brunswick. It is entered in the bank's account at page 652. Barnes' account is credited only $8,400 on that day or three days afterwards. $8,400 credited on a note discounted for $13,000, leaving a shortage of $4,600. There is another note for $14,000 and this is not mentioned in the report either. It was discounted by Mr. Pugsley and Barnes the 23rd of December, 1903, at the Bank of New Brunswick. It will be found in the bank's current account also, and of that sum Mr. Barnes appears to have received $10,781.40, or $3,218.60 was switched off before it reached Barnes. So that there were four notes endorsed by Pugsley and Barnes, presumably on account of the 15 miles section under the Barnes contract. These four notes amounted to $52,336, and the lifts which were taken off them reached a sum of no less than $12,525.93; or nearly twenty-five per cent, which should have gone into the construction of that road, disappeared in transit after Mr. Pugsley had got the money from the bank. That is fully borne out by the evidence, and I defy the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) or the hon. Minister of Public Works—if he would reconsider his decision and return to the House—to show that statement is not fully borne out by the evidence.

In addition we have upon that point the evidence of Mr. Barnes at page 646 and 647. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works said last night that the commissioners would not put any questions about any of these matters, but his statement in that regard is, like all the others, directly contrary to the evidence and the fact. At page 646, Mr. Powell examined Mr. Barnes as follows:

On October 3, I see in your account you are charged with $10,225.04 in the Bank of New Brunswick and the same date there is a discount of $13,100, now the difference is about $3,300, what became of that difference? —A. I don't know.

And further:

On October 20, $11,836, proceeds of Bank of New Brunswick also, on that date there is $11,800 odd dollars, got by discount, you were charged with $10,408.65, the difference would be about $1,400; do you know what became of that?—A. No.

Q. Who were on the note?—A. I can't say. 'I can't say,' though the records show that he and Mr. Pugsley were on it.

Q. On the 23rd December, $14,000 is got out of the Bank of New Brunswick, St. John, on the company account (1903); on that date you are charged with $10,781.40 only. Do you know what became of the difference, $3,300? —A. No.

So, I think that any hon. gentleman who should attempt to reflect upon the commissioners for setting out these facts, in view of the evidence I have quoted, would be a very bold gentleman indeed. Now, it is but fair to say that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) himself was questioned when he was on the stand as to one of these notes. His evidence will be found on page 706.

Q. I find a note of about $13,000 or $14,000 discounted by you and Mr. Barnes in the Bank of New Brunswick or the British North America, out of which Mr. Barnes got $10,000. If this thing is so easy and properly kept, please tell me what you did with the balance between the $10,000 and the proceeds? —A. Any balance to pay Mr. Barnes went to the secretary, Mr. Allen.

Q. Will you swear to that?—A. I am positive about that.

Q. Where is the record?—A. Mr. Allen had the record. I would not keep a record, why should I keep a record?

Though the Minister of Public Works states that he received that money, that he had it in his hands and that Mr. Barnes received only $10,000 of the proceeds, we find that he states that he sent the balance to the secretary of the company. I ask you if it is reasonable to suppose that any custodian of funds would send such an amount of money as that to anybody without being able to produce a letter either from himself to Mr. Allen or from Mr. Allen to himself, or a receipt or record of any kind bearing out his statement? He is asked for the record, and he says that Mr. Allen has the record. I read the evidence of Mr. Winslow, who succeeded Mr. Allen as secretary, showing that Mr. Allen had no books of account at all and that what data he had Mr. Winslow was familiar with, and there is not one entry in the account or one document that could be produced accounting for this difference between the amount Mr. Pugsley received on the discount of that note and the amount which Mr. Barnes received.

So, these are a few samples of the manner in which the money has disappeared. There are one or two others to which I wish to refer, and to quote a little evidence concerning them before I conclude my remarks. The name of Mr. Geo. McAvity is rather familiar in this chamber, as I think it is all over the country, and it will remain familiar, associated with that of the Minister of Public Works, so long as the government refuse to take any action to recover that $35,000 which he lifted out of the treasury here at Ottawa. Mr. McAvity became president of this company on July 1, 1904. There had been no president for about two years previous to that. Mr. Ernest Hutchinson, who was the first president, got so disgusted with the manner in which things were going, that he refused to lend his name any longer to the company. But Mr. McAvity was called in as president in 1904. In the Legislature, the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) made a statement as to the great things that were to be expected by reason of Mr. McAvity having condescended to accept the trust and management of this great institution. At page 106 of the Debates of the Legislative Assembly the hon. gentleman is reported as saying:

As stated, the premier insisted upon a change of management. Not that Mr. Evans the then manager was not a competent man and thoroughly conversant with railway management, but the premier thought it would be wise to place affairs in the hands of an experienced and thoroughly competent business man, if such could be found, to take hold of the enterprise. Such a man was found in Mr. George McAvity, of the city of St. John. I am accused by the opposition of being optimistic, of looking upon the rosy side of things, of having large ideas regarding the future of our province. I confess to that. I am glad that I am optimistic. I had far rather be an optimist than to stand like some members of the opposition with my eyes upon the ground blocking the wheels of progress. Of Mr. McAvity it need only be said that he is known throughout the length and breadth of this Dominion, and beyond its confines, as a progressive and successful business man, a member of a firm which has made an eminent success of its business and has built up one of the leading industries of the city of St. John.

I am inclined to think that members of this House will agree with the statement made by the minister that Mr. McAvity is known throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion, and that statement is truer to-day a great deal than it was when Mr. Pugsley made it on the floor of the New Brunswick Legislature in 1905.

But, bearing that statement in mind, let us see how the minister's optimism with respect to Mr. McAvity has been justified in the management of this road. At page 364 of the evidence, will be found Mr. McAvity's own statement as to the manner in which he executed this trust.

Q. When you became president in 1904 and continued at the head office, didn't you control the finances?—A. I took the presidency in 1904, they were starting a new set of books, Mr. Sharpe was auditing the books, and a new set of books had to be opened up.

Q. Where is this set of books?—A. They never were opened to my knowledge.

That is the way Mr. McAvity started in to execute this important trust.

Q. From the time you became president to the present time, you have not a single book kept in your office or under your supervision except the book you now bring and which was made up from other books?—A. But the books that were held at Norton, at the head office. This book is made up from one received, I had paid me and from data in my office.

Q. Not from a book you had yourself?—A. I had no books to keep.

Page 368:

Q. Do you know what books were opened?—A. Not of my personal knowledge.

This is the eminent business man who managed this road. Then at page 380:

Q. I will call your attention here on page 5 'brought forward $52,250,' this was during your regime?—A. That is since I took charge.

Q. I see in lead pencil 'less W. P. $5,000'—that is carried forward a total credit item on the 5th page. I see this in lead pencil 'less W. P. $5,000' ?—A. I never saw that before.

Although it subsequently appeared that Mr. McAvity had signed a cheque which was filled out in the handwriting of the Hon. Wm. Pugsley for that amount.

Q. That $5,000 so far as this cash book appears from view?—A. That would be previous to my taking charge.

Q. That is carried forward in pencil, on page 7 it is reduced to $47,250, then on page 9 it is carried forward in ink $47,327.70—can you give any explanation of this, how W. P. would get $5,000?—A. I did not make the entry, I have not the slightest idea.

Q. Do you know who W. P. was?—A. I have not the slightest idea.

Money of which he was the custodian, $5,000, had gone into the hands of W. P. and he had not the slightest idea as to how it got there.

Q. Do you know who W. P. was?—A. I have not the slightest idea.

Q. Do you know anybody connected with the business to whom W. P. would refer?—A. I have not the slightest idea.

Q. Do you know a person with the initials W. P. prominently connected with the business of the company?—A. I know persons with those initials.

Q. You know a man connected with the financial affairs?—A. I cannot say why they were put there.

That, Mr. Speaker, was the evidence of Mr. Geo. McAvity, whom the Hon. Wm. Pugsley recommended so highly on the floors of the New Brunswick legislature as a man who was going to straighten out the affairs of this road. At page 360:

Q. As director, would you inquire into the business of the company?—A. No. In the position I was in I never gave any time or attention to it.

At page 361:

Q. There were no meetings of directors?—A. None that I attended.

Page 363. He says that Mr. Pugsley substantially controlled the whole business. Now for these services, I may say, Mr. McAvity charged $5,000 a year, and the evidence shows that $2,380 had been paid him as interest on some coupons from the month of January to the month of March, on the sum of $216,000. This amount, $2,380, he did not know anything about, and could not account for it. In this investigation he was asked about it, and had no explanation. But a few days afterwards his counsel, the member for Carleton, appeared with a statement showing that it had been charged up by Mr. McAvity as salary. When he was questioned, he had no knowledge and could not account for the money; but when he came back upon the stand, after a consultation with his counsel, he is questioned with respect to the money and said that he had put it in his pocket on account of his salary. Now, there is another section in the Act of 1901 which I read this morning, with reference to the conditions upon which this guarantee should be endorsed. There is a specific section in the Act providing that shall be subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, who may fix or alter the amount from time to time as long as the said guarantee of the province shall remain outstanding.

Notwithstanding that provision there was nobody who knew the salaries of any of the officers of this company. They seemed to be taking money exactly as they needed it, and as they desired it, and to be taking it in very large sums. On that head I wish to quote from the evidence of the Minister of Public Works himself. Page 742:

Q. What salary did Mr. Allen get?—A. I don't remember.

The ex officio director of this company representing the government in the interest of the people of the province, with that provision in the Act I have referred to, that the salary should be fixed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, states in his evidence that he was not even aware what salary was paid to the secretary of the company, or that he did not remember.

Q. Do you know what salary Mr. Trueman got?—A. I do not remember.

Q. Did the directors get any remuneration?—A. They got some remuneration.

Q. You all got some?—A. I do not believe I got much. Take the accounts, and I think I am out of pocket, I think outside the New Brunswick Real Estate, Loan and Trust Company you will find I am out of pocket personally.

Q. Had you any arrangement as to what you would get?—A. No.

Q. You did get something as director or manager?

Now, mark that question. The member for Carleton said there was no evidence that Mr. Pugsley was manager of this company. He did not dispute it on the ground that he was manager. He says:

A. I do not think so. It was proposed to give me something, I think Mr. Sharpe submitted it for consideration. There were certain accounts had to go before Mr. Tweedie, as premier, for payment, and he refused to allow anything for me.

Q. He was not generous?—A. He was extremely careful, he was heartbreaking at times.

Now, that is the evidence of the Minister of Public Works in regard to his knowledge of the salaries that were paid the officers of this company. He could not give the commission any information of any kind on that point, notwithstanding that under the terms of that Act he and the Provincial Secretary were appointed a board to see that those terms were carried out.

Now, in reference to this proposal of Mr. Sharpe, the Minister of Public Works told us in his evidence that this employee of the company, and a temporary employee, had proposed that $5,000 should be paid to him, Mr. Pugsley, as managing director. I quoted last night the statement of Mr. Sharpe, of the 31st May, 1904, in which the $5,000 was written down as salary and fees of the managing director. Is it any wonder that the commission, in their report state that had it not been that the Minister of Public Works swore to it they would have believed that that $5,000, with reference to which the only entry was a lead pencil entry of W. P., was salary, and not a loan which he, the Minister of Public Works, stated that he made to the company.

I do not propose to discuss further the question of the 'W.P. $5,000.' I just ask the members of this House to consider this fact. There was a loan company, the New Brunswick Real Estate Loan and Trust Company, incorporated for the purpose, if we are to attach any importance to their name, of loaning money amongst other things. That company, as I showed last night from the evidence of the Minister of Public Works, had no books of account. The only entry in reference to the matter was 'W.P. $5,000,' which was a lead pencil entry in the bank book of Mr. George McAvity. Neither in the books of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, nor in the books of the New Brunswick Real Estate Loan and Trust Company was there any entry of the amount of $5,000 or of the amount of the loans that the Minister of Public Works alleged that he had made to the company in the name of the New Brunswick Real Estate Loan and Trust Company. I ask if there is any jury in this land which could be expected to believe for one moment the statement which the Minister of Public Works submitted to that commission? Is it any wonder that the commission declined to give that statement credence? The Minister of Public Works, on the stand, produced these cheques; not one of them was marked or made payable to the New Brunswick Railway and Coal Company. They all bore the names of other parties who, no doubt, had some connection with the old Central Railway. There was Elkins on one cheque, Evans on another cheque, Trueman on another cheque, and, I think, the Canada Permanent Loan Company on another. I ask the members of this House if a loan company making a loan to any other company would make it in the way in which the Minister of Public Works has alleged that he made the loans of this amount of money? The thing is, I have no hesitation in saying, absolutely incredible, and I showed by reference to the evidence of the Minister of Public Works this morning that he admitted that out of the proceeds of these bonds he had recouped himself for loans that he had made. I think the explanation will be found there of how he received the amount of these alleged loans to this company.

Now, in reference to the lack of books and the confusion in the business of this company, I am going to put upon record further extracts from the evidence of Mr. Barnes. There was one question with regard to four drafts which he had charged the company with having paid, amounting to $1,026.50, $3,600, $2,620 and $1,127. He was asked, at page 642 of the evidence, what that money was for, and he replied:

I don't remember. It was the company's place to keep these cash accounts.

Q. You don't know, you can't give us any explanation of a single dollar of that $8,000 advance?—A. No.

Q. You don't know who got them?—A. No.

Again:

Q. Have you any cheques or drafts that were given by you or accepted by you in connection with this transaction?—A. I did not keep track of that.

Q. Have you any cheques or drafts in connection with this matter between you and the company?—A. I do not think it. The business was wiped out and that was the end of it.

Q. Did you destroy your drafts?—A. I did as a general thing.

Q. Your cheques?—A. I destroyed them.

Q. Have you heard any tell of your books since?—A. No.

Q. Have you no idea where they are?—A. No.

And he actually told the commission that he had never seen a document in reference to the settlement that the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company made with him on account of his construction contract. I say, if these witnesses were examined before any jury in this country there is not the slightest doubt but that they would render a unanimous verdict, declaring their refusal to believe witnesses who gave such evidence as that, and yet that is the class of testimony that this commission have had to deal with. The Minister of Public Works, speaking in the House last night, asked: 'Why did the commission not call so and so? They did not want any information; they did not want to give us a chance.' It was very amusing to me, and I have no doubt, to the majority of the members of this House to hear the Minister of Public Works criticise and actually attack Mr. Hazen and Mr. Flemming as attorney general and provincial secretary of the province of New Brunswick because they were now ex-officio directors of this company and they were not able to make up the interest account in connection with moneys that were handled by the Minister of Public Works himself while he was an ex officio director of the company.

There is another matter which was referred to in this report and to which the Minister of Public Works has made reference himself. That is the buying off of Mr. Wheaton who tendered for the construction of this fifteen-mile section. There were two tenders, as appears by the report and by the evidence sent in for this work. One was that of Mr. James Barnes, amounting to $117,000, and the other was from Mr. Wheaton, amounting to $109,000, or $8,000 less. These two tenders were referred to a committee of the railway company, consisting of Mr. Pugsley, Mr. Skinner and others. The contract, although Mr. Wheaton was the lower tenderer and was an experienced contractor, as the commission state, notwithstanding what the Minister of Public Works stated last night, Mr. Wheaton was bought off pending the decision of the executive of which Mr. Pugsley was a member. He was paid $5,000 to withdraw his tender so that the contract went to Mr. Barnes, or the Barnes Construction Company, for $117,000 for the construction of this fifteen-mile section. That did not include the rails or the engineering expenses and another item or two which Mr. Shannon, in his report, says would have amounted to $70,000.

Mr. HUGHES. Nor the ties.

Mr. CROCKET. It included the ties, I think, but not the rails. The contract went to Mr. Barnes, and, let me say in reference to Mr. Barnes, that he was also a member of the New Brunswick legislature, a member of the Grit machine of the province of New Brunswick, as every member of this directorate was a member of the Liberal machine in that province and he had associated with him in the Barnes Construction Company the Hon. F. P. Thompson and Mr. W. T. Whitehead and other prominent figures in the Liberal party of the province. They were his chief associates. The commission do not find that Mr. Barnes' associates were advised of the buying off of the lowest tenderer, but if hon. gentlemen will look at the evidence they will find that there is abundant evidence in Mr. Barnes' own statement to justify the finding that these gentlemen were advised of the buying off of the tender of Mr. Wheaton. The upshot was that the contract went to Mr. Barnes for $117,000. What occurred? Last night the Minister of Public Works said that the reason that the contract had been awarded to Mr. Barnes was that he had been such a successful contractor and that Mr. Wheaton had been a failure. The evidence is just to the contrary and the result shows that the minister's statement in regard to Mr. Barnes was absolutely unfounded, because, certainly, if he had never made a failure before, he made a failure of this contract for he was compelled to throw up the contract in the spring of 1903 and, do you know, that the company actually took that contract off his hands and entered into an arrangement with him for the construction of the road upon a percentage basis agreeing to give him the actual cost of construction plus 15 per cent and that is a way a lot of the grafting was done in connection with this business. I have no hesitation in expressing it as my opinion that the importation of Mr. Barnes into this and the awarding of the contract to Mr. Barnes under these circumstances was with that particular end in view. The Minister of Public Works has spoken about the cost of this fifteen mile section and the unfairness of the commission in allowing only $316,000. Why, Mr. Speaker, that $316,000 is $25,000 more than the Minister of Public Works himself figures in the statement which is on the files. Although the commission express the opinion that this was entirely too much to allow for the construction of that line, they do nevertheless allow the whole amount of $316,000. Mr. Shannon in his report points out that if the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company had done its duty and held Mr. Barnes to his contract the road could have been built for less than $200,000. Mr. Barnes agreed to build his end of it for $117,000 and Mr. Shannon shows that the rails and the engineer's expenses and another item or two would not have amounted to more than $80,000 extra. Furthermore, Mr. Wetmore the provincial engineer was instructed by Provincial Secretary Tweedie to visit the locality and make an examination of the work, and a letter from Mr. Tweedie is on file in which he expresses the greatest dissatisfaction with the manner in which things have been going on. I think it is in reference to this, that the commission used the expression that he had called into play a force which he could not control, and the force which he could not control was the force of the Minister of Public Works. In August, 1903, Mr. Wetmore made a complete report of the value of the work up to that time, and he valued it for the branches and all at $195,000, and that report was sent to Mr. Tweedie. Mr. Tweedie wired Mr. Wetmore for an estimate of what it would cost to complete the road and Mr. Wetmore made another report saying that $31,000 would have completed it. Therefore, on the report of the engineer of the government this road was worth only $226,000. Before the commission evidence was offered as to the cost of similar roads in New Brunswick, and while they have allowed the whole $316,000 it is clear from a perusal of the report that they allowed many thousands of dollars more than was honestly spent in the construction of the railway.

Before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I feel that I cannot, as a member of the New Brunswick Bar, allow to pass unchallenged the bitter, vindictive and malicious attack which the Minister of Public Works saw fit to make upon an honoured member of the Supreme Court Bench of New Brunswick. I say this, and no one knows it better than the Minister of Public Works, that we have never had upon the Supreme Court Bench of our province—and we have had many eminent judges there—a judge who occupied a higher place in the esteem of the people of the province than does the Hon. Mr. Justice Landry. Not only is Mr. Justice Landry respected and honoured by the people of his own race—and let me say that he is recognized as the most distinguished man the Acadian race has given to the province of New Brunswick—not only is he honoured by the people of his own race and his own creed, but he is honoured by the whole citizenship of New Brunswick irrespective of race and irrespective of creed. And, Sir, it will require far more than the denunciation of the Minister of Public Works to detract from the high reputation which Mr. Justice Landry enjoys, not only in New Brunswick, but throughout this whole Dominion. If there is one quality more than another for which Mr. Justice Landry is distinguished it is his absolute fairness, honesty, and integrity. I repeat that no one knows that better than the Minister of Public Works. I was very much surprised, as a member of this House and as a member of the Bar of New Brunswick, that a gentleman occupying the high position of a minister of the Crown, should make such an unwarranted and malicious attack upon that distinguished citizen of our province. As a member of this parliament and as a member of the Bar, I resent in the strongest possible terms the conduct of the Minister of Public Works in seeking to besmirch the good name of that honoured man. I challenge the Minister of Public Works to point to one single act with which Mr. Justice Landry can be connected either in his public career or his judicial career which does him other than the greatest credit. Mr. Justice Landry was a member of the provincial government of New Brunswick in the days when we had no New Brunswick Coal & Railway frauds. In the regime of that government of which Mr. Justice Landry was a member there was never a single scandal of any discription that could be charged against the administration, and in that government Mr. Justice Landry was the minister of the spending department. I have the feeling that no one will regret more than the Minister of Public Works himself the attack which he was so unwise and so indiscreet as to make in this House last evening upon that honourable and distinguished member of the New Brunswick judiciary. I do not think that Mr. Justice Landry requires any defence from me. In the documents that I have read to-day and the citations that I have made from the evidence is to be found a vindication of Mr. Justice Landry if vindication were needed. I challenge any member of this House to show wherein the evidence given before that commission does not bear out to the fullest extent every finding made. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but if this commission has erred at all it has erred on the side of leniency. I have already pointed out three or four instances in which the name of the Minister of Public Works should have been set forth in the report and where it was omitted, I suppose, out of consideration for the high office he occupies. But if, as the Minister of Public Works said, the commission was actuated only by a reckless desire to destroy him, is it likely that they would have refrained from mentioning his name in reference to some of these transactions where his name is mentioned in the most discreditable manner in the evidence which was adduced before the commission.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as to the character of this commission, perhaps some members of this House who are not familiar with the public men and with the judges of New Brunswick may take some stock in the statements of the Minister of Public Works, but I can assure them that these the commission, to prove this. The editor ple who live in the maritime provinces. I could quote from an editorial of the St. John 'Globe' of April 12 last, which refers to these violent attacks made upon the commission to prove this. The editor of the 'Globe,' is one of the most consistent Liberals in the Dominion, who is one of the most honourable Liberals in the Dominion, and who though possibly he may not be, an intense admirer of the Minister of Public Works, has certainly up to this time enjoyed a good standing in the Liberal party. I could point to this editorial in the St. John 'Globe' to show that it resented these attacks and stated that the commissioners are men of the highest character, as everybody in New Brunswick knows. And, Sir, it will require more than such an attack as was made upon that commission last night to disturb the effect of the findings in that report. I apologize for detaining the House at such great length, but in view of the position which the Minister of Public Works took with regard to the evidence I thought it was necessary. He started out by stating that these findings were not borne out by the evidence and he expressed regret in his own speech and in some of the interruptions during the speech of the hon. member for West Elgin that the matter was to be confined to a discussion of the report, because what he wanted was the evidence. The Minister of Public Works acknowledged that he had two volumes of the evidence of the witnesses, and there are only two volumes. Yet did he allude to the evidence from the beginning to the end of his five hours' speech yesterday? Not to one syllable, and why? Because he knew that the evidence condemned him more strongly than the report. He made a great talk in the newspapers about the necessity of having the evidence; he admitted yesterday that he had it; but he declined to use it, for the reason I have stated. Now the House has the evidence, and I think I have established by quotations from it that there was not one shadow of justification for the position the Minister of Public Works took in his speech yesterday.

A word or two in reference to a statement that was made by the hon. member for Carleton and also by the Minister of Public Works while the hon. member for West Elgin was speaking yesterday; that was, that they had not had an opportunity of giving evidence, and that the commission had attempted to cut them off. Does my hon. friend from Carleton say that he did not appear as counsel for the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company? Does he say that Mr M. G. Teed did not appear as counsel with him? Does he say that Mr. A. P. Barnhill did not also appear as counsel for the ex-commissioners, Messrs. McAvity and King? I ask the hon. member for Carleton to contrast the conduct of this commission with the conduct of the Insurance Commission which was appointed by this government some years ago, the chief purpose of which I have always thought was to get a crack at the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). An attempt was made to shatter the reputation of the hon. member for North Toronto by the operation of that Insurance Commission. There were charges made of every description. Mr. Foster appeared before that commission, and he was refused again and again the privilege of putting questions through the mouth of his own counsel. And yet a party which issued instructions for the conduct of a commission on such lines as that has the temerity to criticise the conduct of the commission appointed by the New Brunswick government under which the fullest possible opportunity was offered to every counsel who desired to appear on behalf of anybody who had any conceivable interest in the inquiry. I cannot give a better idea of the fairness of Mr. Justice Landry than to quote from pages 61 and 62 of the report of the evidence:

St. John, July 8, 1908.

Commissioners met, pursuant to notice, in the Admiralty Court Room, at 10 a.m., to hear evidence.

The Chairman. This is, virtually the first session of the commission for the particular purpose of taking evidence. It is true, that we met at Fredericton and sat there a short time, but, employed most of the time on the examination of legislation concerning the railway, and in examining certain documents. We called some witnesses but, inasmuch as this is a public investigation, and as everybody who is interested should have every right to be present, personally, or by counsel, we would like it understood that what we did at Fredericton in the matter of taking evidence is open to the inspection of anybody. The evidence is typewritten, and the witness may be recalled for the purpose of cross-examination or for other purposes.

Mr. M. G. Teed, K.C., who was present, said: A few moments ago I received a telegram from Mr. F. B. Carvell, at Ottawa, stating that he had been retained to appear for the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company in this investigation, and he wished me to appear to-day and ask for an adjournment. We all know he had his parliamentary duties to attend to, but I am not otherwise aware of the reasons he has for assisting the adjournment. But I should think it would be very important that the company should be represented. I hope your honour may make such an adjournment and allow the hearing to go over until after prorogation of parliament, which, I understand, will be the end of next week.

Mr. Powell. I do not see how this application can be complied with. It cannot be for the reason of the absence of counsel. There are numerous counsel in the city of St. John who could be engaged. I certainly would oppose a postponement. It does not look like a bona fide application. If there was any real necessity for an adjournment I would consent.

The Chairman. I think we can hardly accede to this request just now, at any rate. I appreciate the interest which this company would have in the proceedings, and perhaps the necessity of their being present—certainly we would be assisted if they were present, but this investigation is likely to take some little time, and I think it is impossble for us to commence by adjournments to accommodate everybody. If we so commenced we would not know where we would land. Mr. Carvell is employed at Ottawa, and he cannot leave until after adjournment of parliament, the date of which is doubtful. If we were to commence by acceding to all the requests that were made for adjourning, I do not know when we would be liable to close. I think we would meet so as to have the evidence transcribed, and it would be open to these people to have witnesses recalled at any time for the purpose of examination or anything else.

Mr. Teed. Inasmuch as this is the first application on behalf of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company—while I can understand the force of much Your Honour says—I think in this case they might consider themselves prejudiced if not represented.

The Chairman. There is a great deal in what has been said by Mr. Powell that counsel could be obtained. I have had a similar application from the Minister of Public Works, asking an adjournment that he might be present, himself. That letter was written some time ago, and I replied to it, and in his answer he does not insist on an adjournment. If counsel could state a definite time at which he could be present, we would endeavour to accede to his wishes, but, we could hardly adjourn unless there was some fixed date at which we could be assured that the meetings would be held.

After that Judge Landry wrote to the Minister of Public Works as to the importance of his being examined as a witness, and request after request was made by the Minister of Public Works for an adjournment, and his convenience was consulted absolutely. At that very sitting of the commission Mr. Teed appeared as counsel for the company. At the next sitting, in the following week, the hon. member for Carleton appeared as counsel for the company and Mr. A. P. Barnhill appeared as counsel for the ex-commissioners, and on the 20th of August, three months before the Minister of Public Works was examined, he himself appeared as counsel and I happened to be at a session of the commission in which he was conducting an examination of witnesses. In view of this record, it seems to me to have been very bold on the part of the Minister of Public Works to hazard any criticism of the commission in reference to their treatment of the parties and the privileges of counsel. But could any sane or sensible man be expected to take any stock whatever in the argument that was put up by the Minister of Public Works last night, that he, the managing director of this railway company, who had the responsibility of the company upon him more than any other man, who was familiar with its transactions from beginning to end, who negotiated practically every loan with the banks—that he, having attended the sessions of this commission, having followed, I assume, as every other citizen did, in the press of New Brunswick, the evidence that was given, would go on the stand in the month of December and not be able to clear up those matters with reference to which there was any doubt. Would anybody believe for one moment that a gentleman of the ability of the Minister of Public Works and of his ingenuity would come forward to give evidence and then simply, because he was not asked a certain question, fail to give any information which would tend to clear up the tangled affairs of the company. But, as a matter of fact, he was asked, as I pointed out by the evidence, what became of the proceeds of the notes which were discounted on the guarantee of these bonds and which he handled, and his evidence speaks for itself. He had no record, no receipts, everything had been handed over to two men, both of whom had gone to their majority, and he could give the commission no information or enlighten ment. Then he criticised the Attorney General of New Brunswick and the provincial secretary because forsooth they have not been able to supply the evidence which the Minister of Public Works failed to give us regarding his own manipulation of the funds of the company. In view of this evidence, the statement of the Minister of Public Works made yesterday cannot have much weight in the minds of impartial men.

Mr. O. TURGEON (Gloucester). I have no intention, Mr. Speaker, of following the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House through the many tortuous windings of the lengthy speech he has made. When my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) brought in a resolution yesterday to the effect that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) should be asked to resign or be dismissed, he appealed to the very tender regard which the English people have always had for the character of their public men, and he hoped that the high record they had shown in that respect would not be departed from in this instance in Canadian public life. With that sentiment, I am in perfect harmony with my hon. friend and so is every true Canadian who has the honour at heart of the men to whose guidance are entrusted the destinies of this great nation. But because we are jealous of the character of our public men is no reason why we should fall into the opposite extreme and create bad impressions, not only among our own people, but in countries outside of Canada, regarding the conditions of Canadian public life. The time has come, it seems to me, when we ought to cry halt in our endeavour to achieve political success by suspecting scandals where they do not exist. Changes of government have taken place before this session. We have had recently a change of government in New Brunswick. A few years ago we had a change of government in Ontario, when the party which had held the reins of power for many years was compelled to give place to its opponent. Inquiries of all kinds have been made, commissions appointed and changes have also taken place in other provinces, but are we to expect that whenever there is a change of government, its successors must appoint commissions to find out evils in the administrations of its predecessors, and have those reports brought before the federal Parliament, as in this case, which are foreign to our jurisdiction. My hon. friend from Elgin, to add to the solemnity of his language, made several times the declaration that he was standing for the report of a judicial commission. Well, for my part, every time I took up the report of this judicial commission, I found it impossible, according to my own conscience and my own intelligence to reconcile my judgment with every assertion made in that report.

Fearing, perhaps, that if the name of Judge Landry did not appear at the head of that commission, there would be less respect for its findings, my hon. friend from York county made a reference to the standing of Judge Landry before the bar and the people of New Brunswick and the people of the Acadian race whose interests he has advocated so ably on so many different occasions. Well, no man in this House could have a greater respect for Judge Landry than the member for Gloucester who is now addressing you. One of my proudest recollections is to have had the good fortune, in the starting years of my public life, to have had the honour of collaborating with him in his endeavour to bring the Acadian race, by means of education to the level of the other races.

Meanwhile my respect for Judge Landry, the respect in which he is held in the province of New Brunswick and which he specially enjoys as a judge of the Supreme Court of that province, does not grant him the gift of infallibility, and his judgment with that of the other commissioners, of whom my hon. friend has spoken so highly is not necessarily to be accepted without question. When I study this report of the commission, I find myself at times unable to find in it any evidences of the judicial attitude. I am not a lawyer or, as the saying is, the son of a lawyer—I am only the father of a lawyer;—but I appeal to every man of legal training and legal ability in this House to say if he can find in this report the judicial tone which the hon. member for west Elgin (Mr. Crothers) has endeavoured to make the House believe it had and because of which, apparently, he sought to invest it with infallibility. When I look at this document, I fail to recognize the wisdom, the lucid explanation of legal matters characteristic of my old friend Judge Landry and shown by him on many a previous occasion. I fail to see the evidences of careful thought in this report. I wholly fail to appreciate the conclusions resting upon assumptions which, at times, can hardly be said to be sound. I find in some of the conclusions of this report rather the characteristics of a political harangue by a stump speaker, regardless of the responsibility of his utterances. There are only a couple of points to which I wish to call attention, and which particularly struck me from the first. These points I cannot explain to myself; I believe they are enough to cast suspicion on the judicial findings of this report based upon evidence which is not at our command to-day, we are here called upon to pass judgment upon the political life of one of the biggest men, to use the expression of my hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket), whom the province of New Brunswick has ever produced. We are called upon to eliminate from public life a man who has been at the head of affairs in his own province, and who in this parliament has taken a foremost place and since he has been amongst us has commanded the sympathy and admiration of every hon. member. And why should we be called upon to discuss this report? The legislature to which it belongs has not seen fit to discuss it. This report was placed upon the table of the House of Assembly of the province of New Brunswick, and for thirty days thereafter that House was in session, and no action was taken, or attempted to be taken, upon the report. What is the reason that the present leader —the temporary leader I may say—of that House did not see fit to call the attention of the legislature to this report and ask the legislature to review it? But we, the great parliament of Canada, are called upon to discuss a question beyond our sphere and foreign to our duty while the legislature of New Brunswick for whose benefit this report is made, has left the discussion of it over for another year at least.

One of the first points to which I wish to call the attention of this parliament is to be found in the second paragraph of the conclusion of the report. It may be said again that I am appealing to that figure which is called a typographical error. In saying that $430,000 and $500,000 are misprints here for $43,000 and $50,000. But leave out the possibility of a typographical error, and I ask you again, if these commissioners were really alive to the responsibilities of their actions and findings, could it be possible for such an error to be allowed to pass?

> On the face of it the motive of the promoters as stated was to develop the coal mines of Queens county. Responsible and respectable men from various parts of the province were obtained to lend their names as directors; and from the fact that $430,000 of the total $500,000 authorized capital was to be distributed as founders' shares, we conclude that the interested parties had visions of ultimate large profits, with absolute certainty of no personal loss.

If this was a typographical error, if the commissioners had in view merely the sum of $43,000, then there was no reason for 'visions of ultimate large profits with absolute certainty of no personal loss,' and therefore these words should not have been used in this report. Another point to which I wish to call attention is the great difference in the conditions of railway building as they exist now and existed twenty or thirty years ago. It strikes me that if I were called upon to require an estimate for the construction of a railroad I would apply to engineers with experience in railroad construction; I would not be simply guided by the estimates which may have been given by engineers twenty or thirty years before the date of the construction of this 15-mile section, and conclude that because a few miles of railroad may have been built in the early days in New Brunswick for $10,000 a mile or less, to-day you can build in other sections of the province a railway for a somewhat similar amount or double the amount. We must remember that conditions of railway building have changed completely, in the cost of labour, in the cost of materials, and in every other way. There can be no possible comparison between the cost of railway building in the two periods. Thirty years ago you could get labour for the asking. I knew men in those days working on railroads in my own county for 75 and 80 cents a day, and they were paid out of the stores of the contractors whatever price the contractors chose to ask for their goods. In those days railway ties could be bought for a few cents apiece. I have the testimony of my hon. friend from Kent county who, in his early years, sold railway ties for 15, 13 and 12 cents apiece. Now I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how much has the present Minister of Public Works or his predecessor had to pay for railway ties? Why, Sir, the prosperity of Canada has advanced the value of every possible commodity. I am safe in saying that in Kent county to-day it costs 200 per cent more to construct a railway than it did in the former period. It is also to be remembered that modern railways are much more solidly built, they are built for the purpose of transporting coal and heavy freight, whereas in former days they were built for the transportation of a few boxes of fish and a few passengers. And because this railroad has cost 100 per cent more than our friends think it should have cost, they say there has been a misappropriation of $242,000 upon that section. I say, Mr. Speaker, that such a conclusion lends itself to doubt and suspicion on the part of every honest man who wishes to come to a correct conclusion. These two points are sufficient, I think, to answer the contentions of our hon. friend opposite. It is not my intention to follow in detail the long speech of the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Crocket). It was not my purpose in rising to defend the hon. the Minister of Public Works. That hon. gentleman has proved on many occasions that he is quite able to defend himself; he has proved it twice already during the present session; he proved abundantly last night that he needs no one to come to his defence when he is attacked, that he is well able to stand against the calumnies of his political opponents. I may say that since this debate was begun yesterday I have had some conversation with hon. members, both of this House and of the Senate, and they are by no means in sympathy with the motion of censure. I am confident that this motion does not meet with the approval of every Conservative in the Dominion of Canada, nor even of every Conservative member in this House. I am sure that the Minister of Public Works yesterday satisfied every member in this House who desires to form an impartial judgment, that as ex-officio director of this company he knew everything that was being done; and if at one time when he had to take over this road it was found that the company had got into financial difficulties, I say it is no new thing in our province of New Brunswick. We have found in the past that when our public men were endeavouring to develop the great resources of our country they did not meet with the encouragement they were entitled to. To-day we are doing everything possible to develop the west, knowing that its development will mean the progress of the east. I think that when our public men enter into schemes for the development of our province of New Brunswick, and of the Dominion of Canada, they are deserving of more encouragement than they receive That has been a trouble that has existed in the past. I hope that after all, when this matter has been thoroughly sifted, when the judgment of this parliament and of the country has been pronounced, it will be that these men who were acting in the interest of the province are deserving of more encouragement than they had received. Hon. gentlemen opposite contend that $20,000 a mile should have been sufficient to build that railway. What did we find in the legislature of New Brunswick when that very report was laid upon the table of the legislature of the local legislature?

Only two weeks ago, and since that report has been placed upon the table of the House, Premier Hazen, the leader of the government, has undertaken to give the guarantee of the province of New Brunswick for a railway with the same objects as this one had, that is for the development of an iron mine, for a railway which traverses the county of Gloucester from Nipisiquit river to Bathurst, and which will assist in the development of the iron ore deposits there. He does not estimate the cost of the railway construction in New Brunswick at $5,000 or $10,000 but he gives a guarantee of $15,000 a mile and this when he knows that the very same company are also applying to this government for a subsidy of $6,400 a mile. The fact that he is willing to give the guarantee of his province to the extent of $15,000 a mile is an admission that railway construction in New Brunswick cannot be carried on for $8,000 or $11,000 or even for $20,000 a mile. Therefore, his action, patriotic as it may be, in giving this guarantee, which I approve of, and I have advised his supporters to second his efforts in this matter, is a contradiction of the finding of this commission as to the cost of railway construction in New Brunswick. In conclusion, I wish again to say that, whatever the vote upon the opposition side of the House may be, we, on this side of the House, feel convinced of the moral innocence of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works. He has devoted a lifetime to the public affairs of the province of New Brunswick and in every sphere into which his activities have entered he has won a high place in the affection and esteem of patriotic Canadians in all parts of the Dominion who have observed his public conduct. To-day every Liberal in the province of New Brunswick, every unbiased man, to whatever party he may belong, feels, as my right hon. friend the Prime Minister said a few days ago that he felt, proud of the Minister of Public Works. Every friend of ours in the province of New Brunswick is satisfied that the Minister of Public Works has faithfully discharged the trust which was reposed in him when he was called to the federal arena to give his important services, not only to the great Liberal party to which he belongs, but to the Dominion at large. I shall consider it my duty to vote against the resolution and I feel that in doing so I shall have the confidence and support of all of my constituents in the county of Gloucester. I feel also that I shall have the sympathy and support of the great Acadian race in the province of New Brunswick, of which the hon. member for York has spoken, which has shown its appreciation of the development of the resources of this country under a Liberal government for the last thirteen years and which has no ground to alter its views with regard to any public man because of anything contained in the report of this commission.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Crothers).

Amendment (Mr. Crothers) negatived.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) agreed to, and the House went into Committee of Supply.

Immigration—salaries of agents and employees in Canada, Great Britain, and foreign countries, $200,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Minister of the Interior give us an explanation of this decrease of $100,000 as compared with the previous year? I notice that the Minister of the Interior is not ready. I am inclined to think the Minister of Finance will not make much progress between now and six o'clock and may be we might go now and come back five minutes earlier and by that time we may have the Minister of Public Works with us.

Mr. FIELDING. I did not know that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was so anxious to have the Minister of Public Works here.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh yes, I am.

Mr. FIELDING. I think perhaps that owing to the absence of some of the officials it would be convenient to call it six o'clock, and as the Minister of the Interior cannot be present then we will resume with the estimates of the Agricultural Department unless something unexpected occurs.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Could the Minister of the Interior say when we will go on with his estimates?

Mr. FIELDING. Perhaps later on in the evening.

Mr. FOSTER. Time would be saved if we knew the day before what estimates would be taken up.

Mr. FIELDING. The expectation was that the debate would continue until the evening and the officials are not present.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any reason why the debate did not continue?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, I understand that several hon. gentlemen opposite who intended to speak were so absolutely knocked out by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) that they abandoned their case.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very glad we have official intimation that the answer of the government to the attack of my hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket) is to be found in the speech of the hon. member for Gloucester.

At six o'clock, Committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

For the development of the live stock industry, $52,000.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). This is the usual item for the live stock division of my department. The reduction of $13,000 is due to the fact that a considerable number of employees in the city of Ottawa, having been brought into the inside service, have been transferred to civil government. Otherwise the item is the same as that of last year.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. I think I must, on behalf of the agricultural constituencies, protest against the Minister of Agriculture waiting until a week or ten days of the end of the session before bringing down his estimates. I do not think it is fair to the farmers. We should be in a position to spend several days in criticising this department and getting information. If we are to get through by the 19th, as it is intended to try to do, we cannot do more than ask for a little information on one or two items. I trust that the minister will next session see that his estimates shall be the first taken up, so that those representing agricultural constituencies will have a chance of getting as much information as possible.

Mr. FISHER. I may say that I tried to get on with my estimates in the early part of the session, but hon. gentlemen opposite wanted to put them off, and did not allow me to proceed. Then, other work was taken up by other ministers, and I had not a chance to go on with my estimates. I can assure my hon. friend that I will give him all the information that is asked from me. In fact, he is one of those who on some occasions have stopped me giving information. I have been rather accused of deluging the House with information, and I am ready to do it again. I can assure my hon. friend that he need not hesitate to ask questions. If I have the information, I will give it; if I have not got it, I will get it as soon as possible.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I can only say that if we allowed the hon. minister to take the time he usually takes in giving information, we would not prorogue on the 19th, which the Prime Minister is very anxious that we should try to do, and which we on this side have agreed to try to do, and we always live up to our agreements.

Mr. J. D. REID. I understand that there was about $75,000 expended last year on developing the live stock industry?

Mr. FISHER. About $65,000, less $4,000 or $5,000 that was unexpended.

Mr. LAKE. Is the whole of this reduction due to transferring the employees to another vote?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. LAKE. I see that the total vote for the Department of Agriculture is reduced by about $380,000. Does that mean the same thing?

Mr. FISHER. Practically, yes.

Mr. LAKE. I think it would be a pity if the votes were cut down. There should rather be a greater expenditure on this particular service.

Mr. FISHER. We expect to have to pay a very much less amount for compensation for the slaughter of animals, which as far as I can remember at the moment is the only direct reduction. I am asking just as much generally for agricultural work, and in some instances a little more than last year, as the work extends.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister explain how the money was expended last year?

Mr. FISHER. I have here a general detail of the expenditure. For British Columbia we allotted about $3,000, which was made up as follows: For farmers' institutes and stock judging, $500; for annual fair, including stallion show and auction sale of thoroughbred stock, $650; for expert judges at fairs, $300; for development of the sheep industry, $600; and for a general representative of the department in the province, $1,000; making $3,000 for British Columbia. In Alberta, a total of $2,668, the items are practically the same as those in British Columbia, but a little larger. In Saskatchewan, $2,668, in Manitoba the same kind of thing. In Ontario a lesser amount, only $1,200.

Mr. BLAIN. How is that?

Mr. FISHER. Because its provincial government does so much on these lines that there is no demand for us to do that kind of work. The work is done and the farmers are receiving the benefit and we are able to economize in that province. In Quebec about $2,500. That is partly to help the live stock association. It is unfortunate perhaps that there are in Quebec associations which are not affiliated to the General Dominion Association. Still they are doing good work in their own province; and if they were not kept up, there would be a very serious damage to a very important industry in that province. I am obliged to give them assistance to the extent of $600. We have also taken upon ourselves to do a good deal more in the way of institute work in the province of Quebec among the French Canadian farmers because the provincial government does not do as much and here is a great demand for assistance and addresses. We are therefore spending a larger amount there than in the other provinces, where a great deal of that kind of work is done by the provincial authorities, and the language being different makes the cost a little more. In New Brunswick, $1,000; in Nova Scotia, $1,100. We give to the Maritime Special Breeders' Association, which holds a winter fair in Amherst, New Brunswick, assistance to the extent of a little over $2,500. Then we have a special work for the encouragement of what is called a record of performance among dairy stock. This was inaugurated two years ago by my department to encourage the breeders of thoroughbred dairy cows to test their animals and establish a record of performance. That is a very useful work. The stock breeders have taken advantage of it very greatly and we have been obliged to increase the expenditure. To-day we have three men, whose whole time is taken up by it. It is a work which requires a government official so as to insure absolute confidence in the test. We began with only one man but we had so many demands for the test that we had to add another. A third has to be added and I think shortly more still. This shows that the people are taking an interest in the work and that it is effective. We also publish reports of the live stock branch and have some general expenses for travelling and office expenses, and we also deal in this branch with what are called national live stock records. A few years ago there were thoroughbred records of the different kinds of animals in the different provinces, and my department undertook, after discussions with the different breeders of thoroughbred live stock, to establish national records. To-day we have national records, recognized, not only all over Canada but outside of Canada, as absolutely trustworthy and these certificates are received in foreign countries with confidence. That costs about $10,000 a year. We also do a little in the way of developing and encouraging the sale of thoroughbred stock from one province to another. In the old days the only good market, if not the only market, for the thoroughbred breeders in Ontario was in the United States. There was a great demand for thoroughbred stock in the west and the east when my department undertook to bring together the purchasers and sellers and give them facilities for the transfer of stock. That takes $1,500 or $1,600. We have besides a general representative in Manitoba and the west, whose salary and office expenses come to about $1,600. I wish that time would allow me to give a more complete description of the work, because I am rather proud of it, and I think it is doing good for our farmers and live stock breeders.

Mr. LAKE. Has anything been done with regard to the removal of the cattle embargo in England this last year?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. LAKE. Has the minister taken anything into consideration in connection with a project mooted in the west for the shipment of chilled meat rather than shipping it in live condition?

Mr. FISHER. Within the last few days I have had representations made me by some gentlemen from Manitoba, who propose a very large scheme indeed and ask government assistance. The scheme, as submitted to me, was so large, I had to tell them frankly it could not be considered. They have modified it materially and propose a smaller scheme, which is still a very large one. At this stage of the session, it will be impossible for me to pass the necessary legislation, but I will carefully examine into the matter, and if between now and next fall a more economical scheme can be worked out, I shall be very glad to recommend assistance. I believe that the establishment of a dead meat export trade from Canada would be very valuable to our Canadian stock producers. There are, however, difficulties in the way which so far no one has been able to overcome. Whether this scheme will overcome these difficulties or not, remains to be seen.

Mr. LAKE. This is of the greatest importance to every raiser of live stock in Canada, and I am glad to hear the minister declare that he will take it into his consideration. He should certainly try and evolve some scheme which will enable us to put our meat to the very best advantage on the markets of the old world. I am sorry to hear that nothing was done to have the embargo on our live stock removed. It seems to me we ought to be taking steps all the time to have it removed or have some alternative scheme adopted such as this dead meat scheme, so that our stock raisers may get something far nearer the value of their stock than they are now getting.

Mr. STAPLES. Has the Minister of Agriculture had any communication from the live stock association of Manitoba asking for assistance to ship their stock to the exhibition at Seattle during the coming summer? I have had a letter from the association which I presume the minister has received also and therefore shall not read it. We have not bothered the minister much during the session, but those interested in agriculture think that this great industry is not getting the consideration it ought, and I regret very much that the hon. minister held up his estimates as usual to this late hour. I believe the minister (Mr. Fisher), from the way he looks at me at this moment is in a better humour than he was just before six o'clock when he took his hat and hurriedly left the building. I am glad that he has come back and that he appears to be in as philosophical a state of mind as he does to-night. I hope he will use his influence to get for the agriculturists of this country a due proportion of the appropriations for the development of their great industry. On a previous occasion this session, I accused the minister of sitting back quietly and allowing other ministers to dip their hands into the treasury and get large appropriations for their departments, while the Department of Agriculture was allowed to suffer. I have pointed out to him, and I would do the same to-night, that nearly all the money that is paid into the treasury comes from the farmers of this country, and yet they are not getting the consideration they are entitled to. I hope the minister will see his way to granting to the agricultural associations of Manitoba the small request they make for an appropriation of $7,500 to enable them to take their stock to this great exhibition which is to take place in the near future. It would be a great boon not only to the prairie provinces but to the whole of Canada. No doubt, the minister will answer that these appropriations must be made from the federal standpoint and that Manitoba stands in the same position as other provinces in relation to such claims as this. But I think he will appreciate the fact that, owing to the agricultural situation of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, they have not been able to take advantage of the appropriations made to them on previous occasions to assist exhibitors to the same degree as other provinces lying close to where these exhibitions have been held. I hope the minister is in good humour to-night and will give us the consideration we deserve.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend (Mr. Staples) seems to think that I was not in a good humour this afternoon. I was in a very good humour; I was out at the Experimental Farm where I like to be. I left the House under the impression that hon. members were going to continue the debate for some time; I was told, in fact, that it might continue until two or three o'clock in the morning. When I came back, I was surprised, and, I confess, pleased, to find that the question was closed, and that something else might be taken up. I am consequently in a very good humour because this debate is closed and we are able to go on with the proper work of the session, instead of it being interrupted in the way it has been. The hon. gentleman advises me to get larger appropriations for the benefit of the farmers. I know that hon. gentlemen opposite often suggest individual increases of expenditure; but, unfortunately, the sum total has to be considered, and the same hon. gentlemen object very much to the increase there. But individual items cannot be increased without increasing the sum total. Therefore, I have to regard the treasury of the country and the criticisms which are levelled at the government as a whole and try to keep the sum total down as low as I can. If I am successful in doing that, my hon. friends must not criticise me too hard for my success in economy. At the same time, I think I have shown that I do not hesitate to ask for money for agricultural expenditure when necessary, and when I can see my way clear to spend it for the real advantage of the farmers. The increase in the agricultural expenditure, which is so great, is the evidence of what I have done. The hon. member asked me with regard to communication from the live stock men of Manitoba regarding live stock exhibits at Seattle. I shall have to answer the hon. gentleman much as I did the secretary of the association. It has been known for a long time that Canada was going to exhibit at Seattle—the announcement was made long ago. All preparations for this exhibit were made four or five months ago. Money was put into the estimates for this exhibition, and the money was allotted to the different parts of the work in connection with it. It is only within the last few weeks that the Manitoba farmers have waked up, apparently, and the request has been forwarded to me by the secretary of the association. As I have said, all the money voted for the exhibition has been allotted, and there is none available for the exhibit of live stock. I must say, however, that I do not consider that a matter to cause us very deep regret.

Why? For two reasons: In the first place, the quarantine arrangements on the United States border are such that the sending of live stock to the exhibition at Seattle would be almost impossible. I do not think any live stock owners in Canada would care to undergo the restrictons which the quarantine regulations of the United States impose on them in sending their live stock to Seattle. Hon. gentlemen may say that these quarantine regulations may be suspended or some modification ot them may be reached. Well, I have information that the authorities of that exhibition have been trying to secure a suspension of the regulations or some modification of them, and have failed.

Mr. STAPLES. Did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) as Minister of Agriculture, endeavour to have them set aside?

Mr. FISHER. No, I did not, for I think it has been shown in times past that that has been done by the exhibition authorities. We have never meddled in the matter. And I might say that of late years the representations which I have made to the department at Washington to modify their quarantine regulations have not been very successful, and the quarantine regulations against animals from Canada going across the border have been made more and more severe of late years. Another thing: that exhibition is an exhibition for the Pacific slope. They have practically very little if any market on that Pacific slope for Canadian live stock. And I venture to think that the majority of the breeders of Canada, whether in the west or in the east, would not consider it worth their while—and if they did make the attempt it would not be very profitable—to exhibit at Seattle. Again, to allow an exhibit at Seattle and give that assistance which the hon. gentleman hints at for the province of Manitoba, would mean that that assistance would have to be given to the other provinces as well.

Mr. STAPLES. I understand it is asked for the three provinces.

Mr. FISHER. If I were to give assistance in this respect to farmers of the west, I would have to give similar assistance to farmers in the east. Looking back on what has been done in years gone by for this work, I could not undertake to give the assistance asked for without getting at least $20,000 to make me sure to be able to meet all demands, and I think it would be run up to $25,000 or more. That is equal to about one-third of the expenditure anticipated at the Seattle exhibition, and I could not, with justification, honestly and conscientiously ask parliament to grant me the appropriation for that purpose, because I do not think the results would be commensurate with the expenditure.

Mr. STAPLES, The hon. minister (Mr. Fisher) seems to have given this subject consideration, not only at present, but at former times, and appears to have come to the conclusion that the agricultural association which has written this letter has not considered all the points before writing. I do not know personally whether they have or not. But my knowledge of the farmers who are identified with this association is that they are very careful to consider all these points before they will make a request the nature of which is indicated in this letter. However, since the minister has told us that he does not see his way clear to make this small grant, I suppose the farmers will have to be content to go without the advantage they would have, had they been able to get their stock to that exhibition. While I am on my feet I want to ask the minister if he has given any further consideration to the request that has been made by Mr. J. R. Ryan of Montreal with reference to disseminating through the Dominion certain thoroughbred stock, stallions for breeding purposes. The minister knows that we had Mr. Ryan up here after the convention a short time ago, and the minister said he would take a little time to consider the request which was made by Mr. Ryan's company. I would like to know what conclusion he has come to. As I listened to Mr. Ryan I thought he had a proposition from which, if the government saw fit to give it a little support, the breeders throughout the country especially would reap some benefit.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend I think was present when I received Mr. Ryan and some of his friends regarding that matter of breeding. The proposition was one which sounded very attractive, and I can understand how attractive it would appear to many farmers throughout the country who would keep the stallions and take the fees which would be paid for their service. I was not at all surprised that a large number of petitions in favour of the proposition were signed by people all over the country. But I myself looked upon the proposition with a little suspicion because of its very attractiveness and apparent lack of reason why a group of gentlemen should make such an offer. However, I received the deputation along with several gentlemen of the House, and we had a little discussion on it. As a result, I asked Mr. Ryan to make me a definite proposition. The proposition which he submitted at that time was one for an assistance of $50,000 to be paid to the National Bureau cf Breeding, in consideration of their distributing 100 thoroughbred stallions in Canada, in other words, at the rate of $500 a horse, they to provide the animals and look after them. I asked Mr. Ryan why he needed that assistance. He had stated to us that he got the horses for little or nothing, and he did not want consideration for the price of the horses. I asked him, therefore, to submit to me a scheme in detail, and he did submit a scheme on a smaller scale, asking for $25,000 a year subsidy for this particular association, in consideration of providing 50 thoroughbred stallions to be distributed over the country, and to be put into the hands of the farmers who would receive the fees, and they would charge $10 a service for the horses. I asked why they needed this $25,000 from the government. He submitted to me a scheme of their expenses. When I came to examine that scheme I found it on so large a scale that I thought I could understand the proposition. I knew perfectly well that through the officers of my department and through the machinery which I had, all the work Mr. Ryan and his friends were proposing to do for $25,000 a year, could be done for about one-third or less by the department. I was not prepared therefore to pay that liberal subsidy for this purpose.

But I found other difficulties. This was a scheme for the purpose of spreading English thoroughbred blood in the country. Now, no man in Canada is more appreciative of the value of English thoroughbred blood among the horses of Canada than myself. I think it would be a very good thing indeed to get a considerable infusion of that blood into the horseflesh of the country, and I would do a good deal to accomplish that. At the same time I cannot help remembering, as a minister, that if the country subsidizes thoroughbred stallions we are creating a keen competition to the owners of other stallions in Canada, that the owners of hackneys, the standard breed horses and others of the lighter kind, would be injured by such subsidizing of the English thoroughbred stock; and if they felt so injured, they would be perfectly justified, and I might expect they would ask me to do just as much on behalf of the other breeds. I realized that such an arrangement as this for the propagation of English thoroughbred stock in Canada would necessarily and legitimately lead to the calling for a similar expenditure on behalf of the hackney horses, and on behalf of the standard bred horses, and perhaps some other breeds, and I could not see my way to recommend to parliament an expenditure of this character. Some people may say that it would not interfere with the other horses. But it stands to reason that if to-day, in a particular neighbourhood, there is a pure bred hackney stallion and no other pure bred stallion, and you subsidize a pure bred English stallion, he would certainly take away some of the custom of the hackney stallions, and the hackney breeders would be justified in saying that the country's money was being used to hurt them; and if that money was paid out for the one class of stock it ought to be paid out for the others, and I would not be able to answer their objection. Under these circumstances I could not see my way to accepting the proposition that was made, and I wrote to Mr. Ryan saying that I could not entertain his proposition.

Mr. BARR. I would like to ask the minister if he has taken any steps to provide accommodation for the housing of cattle when they reach Liverpool. Cattlemen and shippers complain that they experience great difficulty in that respect when they reach Liverpool. They frequently cannot find accommodation for their cattle during the time that they are effecting a sale. A great many of them think that the governmen should take steps to remove that difficulty. I am sorry to see that this estimate is reduced this year by $15,000.

Mr. FISHER. I have explained that this is not a reduction, that this amount represents the salaries which have been transferred to civil government in Ottawa, and that the expenditure is the same.

Mr. BARR. I am glad to know that it it not a reduction. Still, the expenditure is very small and we do not find that the whole reduction has been very large.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. BARR. The whole reduction of $585,000 is not due to the change with regard to the salaries?

Mr. FISHER. The reduction of $380,000 is on account of exhibitions.

Mr. BARR. I think there should be no reduction as far as agriculture is concerned. We find that the Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) is able to obtain some $7,000,000, while the Department of Agriculture is only obtaining less than a million, and if you take away archives, patent records, census and statistics, which are certainly not for the benefit of agriculturists any more than any other class in Canada, you take away about half of the appropriation. Under these circumstances I quite agree with the last speaker that the agriculturists are not receiving justice at the hands of this government. I believe that the vote should be increased, notwithstanding the condition of the money market. I think that almost any other branch of the government could better afford to suffer than the Department of Agriculture. There is certainly a reduction that I am glad to know is not as bad as it looks.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend made a suggestion with regard to the receipt of Canadian cattle at Liverpool. I do not think he quite understands the situation. When Canadian cattle land at Liverpool they are obliged to go into government lairages, where the imperial government provides the accommodation and where the cattle are slaughtered. I have never heard that there was any want of accommodation for cattle arriving in any part of England. We have no control over these lairages. The imperial authorities maintain them entirely and Canadian cattle must go into them. In regard to the comparison of expenditure between the Department of Agriculture and other departments, I must not say anything in defence of my colleagues, but I do not think that the Department of Agriculture is suffering.

Mr. BARR. I suppose the minister has done all he could to relieve the situation which requires that cattle shall be slaughtered upon arriving in England?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. I will take this opportunity to direct the minister's attention to the hog raising industry in Canada, which, I think, would properly come under this item. My hon. friend is the master of the agriculture interests of Canada——

Mr. FISHER. The servant.

Mr. BLAIN. Well, we do not always think that he is the servant. Sometimes he is the master. I had the opportunity of presenting some very important figures to the House during a former discussion this session as to the condition of the hog raising industry. My hon. friend had before him a deputation of the Swinebreeders' Association of Canada complaining of the condition of the hog trade and pointing out that while there was a large importation of hogs into Canada a very small amount of hog products were exported to the United States. They also brought the condition of the tariff to his attention. The tariff rate on hogs coming into Canada is two cents a pound, while the United States tariff rate is five cents a pound. Last year we inported over $1,000,000 worth more than we exported and it seems to me that this would be a legitimate question for my hon. friend to turn his attention to. When the Swinebreeders' Assocation, representing the farmers of this country, point out that the condition of the hog industry is such that it requires special protection this government should devote some attention to it. It may be that it would require a sum to be placed in the estimates to make a complete examination into the condition of the trade in Canada. Perhaps my hon. friend could take some portion of this money and devote to it. We have some converts on the subject and if my hon. friend will not listen to myself or to any hon. gentleman on this side of the House he may listen to some of his own friends. This session we have the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Sealey) and the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Schell) as converts to the idea of affording protection to the swine industry of Canada. The hon. member for Wentworth, in the early part of the session, placed a resolution on the Order Paper calling upon this government to increase the duty on hog products. My hon. friend, of course, withdrew it, but he ventured to suggest to the government that it was the duty of the government to comply with the request of the Swinebreeders' Association and he was endorsed by the hon. member who represents South Oxford, also a supporter of the government. My hon. friend is asking the committee to vote a considerable sum of money for the improvement of the stock industry in Canada. While my hon. friend is a supporter of a government that is supposed to be giving some protection to the industries of the country, I hope he will not forget the farmers. My hon. friend has an opportunity now to do something for the farmers by complying with the request of the Swinebreeders' Association and it seems to me that it would be an opportune time to place a sum in the estimates, or see that some portion of this money is used to make a thorough investigation of the hog industry so that the government will know whether it is in the best interests of Canada that a higher protection should be placed upon hog products. My hon. friend had a special opportunity during last year. We had a great presidential election in the United States in which the tariff question occupied a foremost place. My hon. friend has treated this House in days gone by to statements of what he was able to do with the United States government. This ought to be an opportune time for the Minister of Agriculture to use his influence with the United States government, and if he is not able to persuade his own government to increase the duty on pork to four cents a pound perhaps he may be able to persuade the United States government to decrease their duty on pork so that the farmers of Canada might have an equal opportunity with the farmers of the United States to share in the growth of this industry. I suppose the minister will have to tell the committee that he has paid no attention to the revision of the tariff in the United States. When he was in opposition he told us that it would only take a moment to open the United States market to the farmers of Canada, but probably he has not lately been reading ancient history. My hon. friend shakes his head at that, but I would impress upon him that it will not do for this government to profess that they are the friends of the farmers when they turn deaf ears to deputations of farmers who come to them, and when they refuse the demands of their own supporters in this House that the farmers be given equal justice under the tariff. If my hon. friend does not prove his own statement that he is the greatest friend of the farmers, then the farmers must turn a deaf ear to the hon. gentleman when he comes to Halton and other places and tells them of all he has been doing for them. Let the Minister of Agriculture tell us now whether he intends to do anything for the farmers in connection with the hog raising industry, and whether he will expend some of this vote in finding out whether the Swinebreeders' Association were right when they told the government that the Canadian market is being flooded with pork from the United States. These gentlemen did not ask that the duty on pork should be five cents a pound as it is in the United States, our own tariff being two cents, but they made the humble request that the Canadian duty shall be four cents. I am surprised that the Minister of Agriculture has nothing in the estimates for the purpose of helping this industry and that he has no comforting assurance to give now to the farmers of Canada.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I wish to point out—!

Mr. FISHER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to answer the hon. member for Peel?

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. No, I want to take your part and to convince the hon. member for Peel that the Minister of Agriculture has done something for the hog raising industry.

Mr. FIELDING. Anything about blouses?

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Now, if the hon. gentleman from Peel will look at the Auditor General's Report page D—43 he will find that the Minister of Agriculture has done something for the hog industry. He expended last year $44,656 on the development of the live stock industry and out of that vote he paid a gentleman named C. Beaudry at Ottawa $13.50 for 18 hours work in drawing plans for piggeries. It will be seen that the Minister of Agriculture is making a start in assisting the hog industry. He paid $13.50 for plans for piggeries and the rest of it he paid out to his friends for their time and travelling expenses in parading up and down the country. Here are some of the items we find here: F. Charlan, travelling expenses, February 27 to March 13, 1908, $50.75. A. T. Charron, expenses attending meetings $106.85. George W. Clemons, expenses, $156.33. E. B. Elderkin, Amherst, travelling expenses, $346.83 and services 335 days at $3 a day, and so it goes on, and he gives $13.50 to his friend for drawing plans for piggeries. That is what the minister is doing for the benefit of the swine breeders of Canada.

Mr. STAPLES. Now that the hon. member (Mr. Geo. Taylor) has pointed out what the Minister of Agriculture has done in the way of providing plans for piggeries, and seeing that the Minister of Public Works has just returned to the government probably the Minister of Agriculture will put in a vote for the construction of some of these institutions.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) reads an item or two from the Auditor General's Report and he ignores all the others, but I do not take him very seriously. The work of the live stock division of the department in the country at large has been so beneficial that I can leave it in the hands of the farmers much better than I can in the hands of the man who makes the agricultural implements for the farmer and who is well protected therefor. My hon. friend from Peel alludes to a deputation of swine breeders who came to Ottawa, and I may tell him that I sympathize very much with those who are engaged in that industry. There is no doubt that the industry has been suffering of late years. Representations were made as to a proposed remedy and my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) alludes to it as higher protection. I will tell my hon. friend frankly and freely that I do not consider higher protection a panacea for all the evils in the world.

Mr. BLAIN. The deputation that waited on the minister, after consultation with the farmers of Ontario, decided upon the remedy—and I take it they know what is best for their own industry—and the remedy they suggested was an increased duty on pork so as to make it about equal to the United States tariff.

Mr. FISHER. That may be and these gentlemen like most people in Canada and elsewhere look at the question from their own standpoint.

Mr. BARR. Quite right.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend says 'quite right.' He seems to be of the opinion that it is well if possible to raise prejudices between the different classes and the people who are engaged in the different industries in the country. To me that is not the proper statesmanship to apply to the solution of difficult questions. I think that if a remedy can be found for any particular industry which will not hurt any body else, it is much better than to adopt a remedy which does hurt other people. My hon. friend (Mr. Blain) says that higher protection would be the panacea, but I tell him frankly that I do not agree with him.

Mr. BLAIN. Then my hon. friend differs from the farmers.

Mr. FISHER. I do sometimes. There are farmers and farmers; there are some farmers who think one thing and there are some farmers who think another thing, and I thank God that in Canada all the farmers as a class do not set their interests against the interests of other people in the community, but believe that the industrial classes and the consuming classes as well as the farmers have to be considerd in dealing with such questions. I am glad that I belong to the class that thinks that way and acts that way in the public interests. My hon. friend seems to think that is the only remedy—higher protection. It matters not whom it hits or how much it hits the rest of the community. That I do not consider to be true national policy or true statesmanship. I think it is well that any class in the community should be helped and that in helping that class we should at the same time help the rest of the community. The farmers of Canada have generally condemned the policy of exclusive protection for a few people at election after election. My hon. friend knows well that when this government brought down their tariff. the essence of which is not protection, he and his friends allowed it to be passed without daring to put themselves on record by challenging a vote of the House on a single item. Did my hon. friend and his friend two weeks ago, when the Finance Minister brought down his tariff, move for any changes in it? No. They allowed it to be passed unanimously by this House, and it has gone out not only to this country but to the world that the Fielding tariff is the best tariff Canada has ever had, and I venture to think that in the future as in the past the electors of Canada, especially the farmers, will support the government which brought that tariff down and put it on the statute book of this country. My hon. friend talks about the swine-breeders. I am ready to help the swine-breeders, very ready. They are an intelligent people; they have been doing good things not only for the swine-breeders of Canada, but for the people of Canada at large. It has been only since the first tariff of Mr. Fielding was brought down in 1896 that the bacon industry of Canada has grown to any appreciable extent; and it is through the information that has been spread abroad through the country to a large extent that the swine-breeders of Canada have been able to produce in the last ten years over $100,000,000 of swine products for export. I am ready to go further and continue that policy of education and information, which helps not only the people concerned, but everybody in the country. I do not wish to raise the price of the pork which the labouring classes of this country have to buy. I wish to help the farmers of the country to produce the pork so that they can sell it at present prices and make a splendid profit on those prices.

Mr. BLAIN. Will my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. FISHER. No. I wish to continue my argument unbroken, and my hon. friend can argue against me when I am done. I believe that the best profits in every industry are made by cheapening the cost of production rather than by raising the cost of the article. When you raise the cost of the article, you hurt the consumer of the article, though you may possibly for the moment increase the profits of the producer, but when you lower the cost of production, you give the producer his profits without raising the cost to the consumer, and therefore the consumer is not hurt. In this particular industry of swine breeding and pork production our greatest rivals are the Danes and the Irish. They have beaten us in the English market in the sale of pork products. Now, instead of raising the prices of pork products to the people of Canada, who have to buy them, I want to find out how the Danes and the Irish succeed in beating our people in the British market, and for that purpose I have asked and have obtained permission from my colleagues to bring down a vote in the supplementary estimates for the purpose of sending a special commission of farmers interested in the swine breeding industry of Canada, to Ireland and Denmark to investigate the methods of production in those countries. My hon. friend seems to think that I am not taking care of the interests of the swine breeders in Canada because we do not bring down a higher tariff. I believe I am doing what is better—better for the swine breeders themselves, and certainly better for the whole consuming public of Canada; and I believe it is better than my hon. friend's sole panacea for all the commercial troubles of the country—higher and higher protection. My hon. friend alluded to the United States elections. I watched those elections with interest, because anything that goes on in the United States is of interest to us in Canada, and also because conditions in the United States are similar to conditions in this country. If my hon. friend had watched those elections closely, he would have seen that the tariff was one of the most important issues, and he would have seen lately that President Taft declared that he was elected in November last to revise the tariff downwards and not upwards, not to increase protection, but to decrease protection. If there is any lesson to be learned from the success of the Republican party in the last elections, it is that even that party, rabid and extreme protectionists as they are, were obliged to promise the electors that they would reduce their tariff and not increase it. If this is the case, the idea that my hon. friend brings forward, that we must remedy all our evils in this country by raising our tariff higher and higher on everything, is not following the example of the United States, but is something quite different; and I believe that what I am prepared to do for the swine breeders of Canada is more in their interest, more in the interest of consumers, and better altogether for the country. I am prepared to do that. I have not ignored their demands. One of their demands was that a commission should be sent to Denmark and Ireland, and I am glad to be able to say to the House and the country that the government are going to bring down an estimate for that purpose, and I trust that hon. gentlemen opposite, who are so solicitous at the moment for the interests of the swine breeders, will assist us in passing that item unanimously.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is rather surprising to me that under an item in the estimates we should branch off on a discussion of the tariff; but as the Minister of Agriculture has set us such a good example, perhaps we had better deal with that question for a while. The hon. gentleman's policy, I admit, is a policy of importation, as against the old policy of production, which existed prior to his coming into office. The tariff of the Liberal-Conservative government was framed to produce all we could in Canada, but the hon. gentleman seems to think that the proper policy is to promote importation. Now, I am not going to advocate any increased protection. I do not need to do so, because the hon. Minister of Agriculture and his associates have done that for me. I do not know that we have ever had a higher protectionist government in power in Canada since 1878 than we have to-day. I had occasion a short time ago to enumerate a number of articles—and I gave only a very few, though I might have gone on by the half hour enumerating article after article—on which they raised the tariff away and beyond what the Conservative party ever thought of. What induced the hon. gentleman to agree two years ago that a woman's shoe should be raised from 25 to 30 per cent, and how can he say he is a free trader or a low tariff man? Why does he tax the women on their shoes? Is it because he himself has no women to look after? Even if he has not, he ought to have some regard for those who have. He ought to have some regard for those who have wives and daughters. But he says: 'Let the women pay the duty; a tariff for revenue only is what I want.' All he thinks of is the money. On ladies' furs, cloaks, muffs and tippets he has increased the duty from 25 to 30 per cent, and then he tells us he is a low tariff man; but if raising the tariff makes him a low tariff man, the hon. gentleman must be in a class by himself. Even the porridge we get for breakfast had to be increased in duty in order to satisfy his low tariff proclivities; and now he wants to make us believe that if we have a higher tariff on pork products, that will increase the price to the consumer, and he says he is looking after the consumer. Let me tell him that if we can increase the raising of hogs and their products in this country, we will do more to cheapen the market for the consumer than anything else we can do. But so long as you permit hog products to come in and invade our market in such a way that our producers are driven out of business, our consumers will have to pay high prices for these products. I have a statement here prepared by officers of the hon. minister's own government—men who speak with authority. Do they say that food products are cheaper to-day than they were under the Conservative regime? Quite the reverse. Let me give a few illustrations. Fresh meat and bacon, they say, have increased 45 to 50 per cent the last ten years; bacon has advanced 45 per cent; beef, 50 per cent; veal, 57 per cent; mutton, 55 per cent. Does this show the hon. gentleman has done anything for the consumer? Has he done anything for the producer? We are not producing the quantity of hogs and bacon that we did many years ago. By promoting a policy of importation, the hon. gentleman, instead of causing a large number of hogs to be raised and a larger quantity of bacon to be supplied, has reduced the production. But what does he care so long as he gets a revenue? Promote importation, kill off the industries of the country if you can, never mind the farmer. The hon. gentleman was kind enough to come to my county during the last election and make a strong appeal to the electors to reject me, who, though not a farmer myself, have always advocated the interests of the farmers, who has always stood by them in advocating protection of their fruits and their grains and in urging the adoption of a farmers' policy all along the line. The hon. minister went all the way to a town in the heart of my county to address a mass meeting. About 400 were present, 200 of whom were Conservatives who went out of curiosity to see what kind of a man that was who would advise them to take a man from Toronto who knew nothing about farming and elect him as their representative instead of one who for 20 odd years had advocated their interests. Not only did he do that, but he went to South Ontario and opposed the late representative of that county, a representative live stock man, and urged the people to turn him down and put in a man who had no claim to represent them in parliament. I am not finding fault with the hon. minister for having done that, but if he has no sympathy with the farmers, why does he not say so? He went to East Elgin and endeavoured to defeat a gentleman who was aiding the farmers by buying their products as largely as any man in this country. His policy is importation. Get your hog products, bacon and hams and pork from the United States, if you do not import these things, we will get no revenue. That is his policy. What he is looking after is customs revenue, and he has no care for the farmers. We do not want class legislation, he says, which will help one class and hurt another. Well, I undertake to say that legislation which will help the farmer will help the business man. The more you reduce the amount of pork produced in this country the higher the price. That is fully born out by this statement prepared by officers of the government.

Mr. FISHER. What is that?

Mr. HENDERSON. It is a statement prepared by the civil servants, officers of this government. It is thoroughly authentic. The hon. minister based his Civil Service Bill on it. I think the minister had better just make up his mind that the farmers have some rights and that it is not for him to cry them down on every occasion and say that they come to him as a class and want something for themselves which will hurt others. I do not think that this will hurt others. Let him give a little consideration to the swine breeders. I do not know what their requests are. I am not going to tell him what he should do, but I think something should be done. He complained in Halton that I had advocated a higher tariff on hog products. Well, what do you think the people said? They said, 'He is the man we want, we will stick to him' and they elected me by a larger majority than ever. The minister had better take warning. The farmers know what they want and are not going to be turned away by any such representation. I am convinced that a tariff which would give a little better encouragement to the hog industry would be a very good thing. But that question is not before us now, and I am not here to advocate it to-night. I would be glad, however, to see that done. My impression is that it would increase the production of hogs and their products, and if you could increase that production by 25 per cent that would reduce the price to the consumer; and instead of having bacons and hams increase 45 to 50 per cent over what they sold at ten years ago, the consumer would get them at a lower price. If the farmer could sell twice as much hog products, he would make more. Now he is not carrying on the business to the same extent simply because he does not find it remunerative.

Now, the minister has my ideas on that question. But I do not think he has any reasons to cast reflections upon the farmers and to say they want class legislation. They are a class and a large class, and they have just as good a right to have their class considered as any other in the community. I think anything that will help the farmers will help every other class, the manufacturers, business men, private individuals and even the gentlemen who prepared this document, for I believe it will be the means of increasing the supplies in the market and so lowering the price,—it will be better for all classes. In considering the live stock industry along these lines, the minister will be doing more for the farmers and all other classes.

Mr. FISHER. When I visited the county of Halton, I did my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) the credit of saying he was one of the most convinced, consistent and outspoken protectionists in Canada.

Mr. HENDERSON. I notice that the hon. minister did that, and that he misrepresented me. He did not tell the truth about me. I am not referring to what he says now, but here is what I charge him with: he declared that I had made the statement in the House that I would put a Chinese wall about this country. If the hon. gentleman had been fair, he would have stated, what I think he knew, that that remark was made with reference to agricultural products, and agricultural products alone, but he gave the impression in that mass meeting that that was the kind of protection that I demanded for everything, that I was an all-round protectionist along that line. I hope, if he goes to the county of Halton again, he will say that he made a mistake, for I never made use of such an expression. 'Hansard' reveals the fact that I was speaking of agricultural products. I am a moderate protectionist, and not as high a protectionist as the hon. minister in many things. I do not believe that it is essential or necessary. I would be satisfied with a lower tariff in many cases in which he has increased the tariff. I think it would be better to move along the line of reducing the duty on certain things, and, if the effect of high duties is to enhance the price, to secure these articles to the people at a lower rate. I make this statement because I want to put myself right. I thank the hon. gentleman for the explanation which I hope he is going to give of what he said in the county of Halton.

Mr. FISHER. I have no doubt that I said in the county of Halton what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) quotes me as saying, because I confess that I understand now for the first time that he limited his expression.

Mr. HENDERSON. 'Hansard' will show.

Mr. FISHER. I accept the hon. member's statement. He is one of those who do not attempt any subterfuge, do not deny what they have said; he has the courage of his convictions and stands by those convictions. If I expressed myself as he says I did, it is only because I thought I was stating his opinion. I regret if I have misrepresented him. He has spoken of the effect of the tariff and increased cost of certain articles, pork products, beef, meats, &c. I will point out to him that we have not raised the duty on one of these articles since we came into office.

Mr. HENDERSON. No, you are encouraging importations.

Mr. FISHER. The proposition of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) is that we should raise the duty on pork products so as to raise the price.

Mr. BLAIN. Let the hon. minister speak for himself.

Mr. FISHER. That is a part of it, but only a part of it. We contend we do not require to raise the duties to raise the price; the price has gone up because of other causes. The hon. member for Peel said that a deputation came and asked me to raise the duties. They also asked me to send representatives to Denmark to inquire into the swine industry. I propose to do that, I think it will do the swine industry more good than the other and will not raise antagonism between that industry and others. As to questions of tariff, and introducing it into this discussion in Supply, I plead not guilty, because the hon. member certainly brought it in and I only had to reply to what he said. I believe our course is the right one and that the results will be better than if we had followed the course he proposes.

Mr. BLAIN. I did not suppose for a moment, when I ventured to direct the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to the condition of the hog industry that he would altogether lose his head in this discussion. He has branched out into the whole tariff question in Canada, as he is quite willing to do sometimes; and, if the time of this House is being taken up, at this late date of the session, with a discussion of this kind, the hon. gentleman must be held responsible for it. I was clearly within my right when I undertook, on an agricultural item to direct attention to one specific industry, and if my hon. friend had dwelt upon this for half an hour as he has, dealing with the whole tariff question, it is a matter for himself and the House to consider and one for which I am not responsible, and no man within the sound of my voice would venture to hold me responsible for the course the discussion has taken. I am sure the farmers would have been very pleased if the minister had been as frank with the deputation that came to see him and his government as he has been with this committee. He says that the farmers want special legislation for themselves. He had not the courage, when the farmers' deputation met him a few weeks ago, to tell them, as he did this committee, that he was opposed to an increase of the duty on pork. Will he venture to say that he did? He has views and opinions on this question, he says. But he would allow the farmers to come down, as he did a few weeks ago, and meet him and his government with their specific request, a request which has been read in this House by one or two of his own supporters, a request for an increase in the duty on pork coming into Canada. They pointed out to him and his government that the duty on pork coming into Canada was two cents per lb. while the duty on pork going into the United States was five cents per lb. The farmers pointed out that this was unfair to their interest as between 85,000,000 of people on one side and 7,000,000 on the other. And the deputation, without going into a general discussion of the tariff, asked one specific thing, and that was that the government should increase the duty on pork from two cents per lb. to four cents per lb. And my hon. friend had not the courage to stand up before the deputation and tell them that he was opposed to their request. I will allow him to interrupt me, if he wishes to do so; I will not be so discourteous to the hon. minister as he was to me in the discussion. I am prepared to say he was afraid of the farmers; he did not have the courage to tell them squarely that he was opposed to it, but sent them home with the thought that possibly they might get the reform they asked for. It will be my business to tell the farmers that the hon.

minister says that the farmers are asking for class legislation, specific legislation in their own interest. And why should they not have protection If we are to have a tariff why should not the farmers have some benefit from it? I may say to my hon. friend that the member for Wentworth read a portion of a resolution from the Swine Breeders' Association and this is a part of it:

While we hesitate to trouble your department in the matter, we are prompted to do so by the alarming circumstances that there is fifty per cent less hogs produced to-day than there was six months ago, entirely as a result of low prices and the unfair competition, whereas if properly encouraged the resources are quite capable of producing double the quantity of six months ago.

That was the specific statement of these farmers. I may say that the farmers of this country have a right to some consideration. The members of the government, including the hon. gentleman himself, have been playing fast and loose upon this very tariff question. He goes up into the county of Halton and misquotes my hon. friend who represents that county (Mr. Henderson), and tells the farmers that my hon. friend who represents the county is in favour of a Chinese wall upon everything. My hon. friend corrects him now, and he accepts the statement. The minister could have found my hon. friend's statement in the 'Hansard' before he went up to Halton county, if he had wished; but he wanted to misrepresent him I suppose.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must recall those words.

Mr. BLAIN. I will keep within the rules.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have ruled that the hon. gentleman must not state that another member of this House desired to misrepresent an hon. gentleman, and these words must be withdrawn.

Mr. BLAIN. I bow to the ruling of the Chair, without any lecturing.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman must not comment on a ruling of the Chair in that manner.

Mr. BLAIN. I say that the minister went up into the county of Halton and misrepresented my hon. friend.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think it is undesirable that that expression should be used; I think the hon. gentleman should use a form of expression less open to objection.

Mr. BLAIN. I bow of course to the ruling of the Chair. My hon. friend from Halton made a statement here that the Minister of Agriculture went up into his county and told the electors that my hon. friend was in favour of a Chinese wall, meaning that he wished to prohibit everything coming into the country. That is not my statement. My hon. friend from Halton has made that statement in the presence of the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture accepts my hon. friend's statement. It is not mine, I am not discussing it. That is the condition. Now then for myself, Mr. Chairman, I say that the Minister of Agriculture is misleading the farmers of this country, or making an effort to mislead them.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. To say that an hon. gentleman is endeavouring to mislead the people is to attribute to him something that I think is not within parliamentary usage. It may be possible to say that the words of the hon. gentleman have misled; but to state that an hon. member endeavours to mislead, is I think not within parliamentary rules.

Mr. BLAIN. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the minister is not frank with the farmers of this country when he allowed a deputation to come before him with a specific request, he is not frank enough to say to them that he is opposed to their request. But he takes the opportunity, in this general discussion, to make the statement that he is not willing to increase the tariff on pork. Now, the minister has stated that I was not ready to divide the House upon the question of the tariff, or rather that I was quite willing, as a representative of the people, from time to time to point out the faults of this government when they did not measure up to the requirements and wishes of the farmers. I am here to say that the minister is well aware that at every session of parliament since I have been a member of it, I have directed the attention of the government to the condition of the farmers. I had the honour of moving more than one resolution calling upon the government to increase the tariff upon the products of market gardens, and my hon. friend and his leader and every member of the government recorded their vote against that motion. They said to the farmers of this country, not only in speech but in vote, that they were opposed to increasing the tariff upon farm products, upon pork, and upon other things wherein the farmers requested a change of tariff. I admit that this is perhaps not an opportune time to bring this matter up. But I am glad I have brought it up, because we have a frank statement from the minister to-night that he is opposed to my request, and the farmers will understand his position and the position of the government. This very session of parliament I presented, on the floor of this House, the condition of the hog raising industry before the revision of the tariff. If I had left it until after the revision of the tariff, the minister would have said: 'You should have directed the attention of the government to this matter before the budget was brought down.' We took good care to direct the attention of the minister to this question before the tariff was brought down, and the government had an opportunity to make that correction. The minister, therefore, cannot say to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House that we have not directed the attention of the government to this condition of things. I have no hesitation in saying that the farmers of this country believe that it would be in their interest to get even-handed protection as long as we have a protective tariff. If the time comes when we are able to have a lower tariff the farmers will be prepared to submit, but they are not prepared to submit that the manufacturers of this country and other interests shall have a high protection when they get along with a reasonable protection upon the articles they produce. To all their arguments the Minister of Agriculture turns a deaf ear, and then goes out upon the hustings and says: 'This government ought to receive the support of the farmers because we are very much interested in their success.' I must congratulate the Minister I suppose if he is in any better humour now, because he has told the House that he is going to expend a sum of money in trying to open up a market, or rather looking into the hog industry in other parts of the world. I suppose he would say this was in the interest of the farmer. Anything that will make the hog raising industry more profitable to the farmer I am in favour of. But I have no hesitation in saying that I am opposed to a tariff that allows, and did allow last year during six months alone, one million dollars worth of American pork to come into this country under our low tariff, while we have been able to send so little to the United States under the five cent tariff they impose against the Canadian hog products. I think it is the duty of the Minister of Agriculture to look into this matter, and to see to it that while he is taking care of the manufacturers and others, he pays some attention to the interests of the farmers. I believe that the farmers know their business, and when they come to this government and state that the tariff should be increased from two to four cents a pound, I am one of those who believe that the farmers know what they want, and I am very glad to hear the minister state frankly that he is opposed to the request of the farmers.

Mr. FIELDING. It seems to me that there is some difference of opinion in regard to the political economy in my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson). I confess that I had thought that he was quite a high grade protectionist, but he rather intimates to-night that that is not so. I must say that what we heard from him to-night is more in the direction of the old free trade idea than we expected to find from that side of the House. But, it is really sad to find this difference of opinion among hon. gentlemen who hitherto have been proud to represent themselves as protectionists. If there is any difference of opinion regarding the hon. member for Halton I am sure there can be no difference of opinion as to the high grade protectionist views of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain).

Mr. BLAIN. On farm products.

Mr. FIELDING. Whatever may be said regarding the views of others, he is a high protectionist. On farm products? Does my hon. friend mean to say that he is going to be a free trader on every thing else and a high protectionist on farm products? That would prove that the farmers were seeking some exceptional legislation and on their behalf I deny that such is the case. I say that the farmers do not want any consideration that will not be given equally to all other branches of industry. I want to take exception to the right of my hon. friend to stand on that side of the House and, in a lordly manner, speak in the name of his party and tell us what we should do on the tariff question. I want to point out to my hon. friend that he has been repudiated by a high authority in the Conservative party.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to say that when I speak in this House I speak for myself.

Mr. FIELDING. Oh.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend will not find me speaking for my party. It is to be expected that with a party as progressive as ours we will have gentlemen holding different views.

Mr. FIELDING. Quite so; but I rather think that my hon. friends on the other side of the House have a policy on this tariff question which has had varied names but which was last known by the almost forgotten expression of 'adequate protection.' We had a tariff discussion this session. My hon. friend spoke in that debate. I do not remember that he spoke for himself alone. I do not remember that he said: 'I know the men sitting around me do not believe in my views and I stand here alone.' I do not think my hon. friend presented such an idea as that. I think that when he takes the ground he is taking that the government should do what he wants them to do, he tries to convey the impression that that is what his political party want the government to do. If he only means that it is his individual opinion, I say that opinion is entitled to great respect, but I do not think my hon. friend has usually conveyed the impression that he occupied a position of splendid isolation on that question. I find that after my hon. friend made his tariff speech not many days ago a very excellent journal devoted some attention to it.

Mr. BLAIN. I did not see that.

Mr. FIELDING. Then my hon. friend will be very glad that I am reading it. I hope that I shall be able to lend to the rhyme of the poet the music of my voice.

We suppose——

Says this Conservative journal:

—that any particular line of industry for which increased protection is demanded is entitled to have its special claims presented, no matter how doubtful a case anybody may beforehand fancy it to have; but when at this era a proclamation is heard such as Mr. Blain of Peel uttered, that there should be a tariff high enough to keep out of Canada every dollar's worth of goods that we can produce, one is prompted to express some amazement. Mr. Blain is a Conservative. If the party were to father his views, we fancy that it would injure itself seriously, indeed probably remain out of power indefinitely in Canada. We doubt if there was ever a time when a country in which such a doctrine was or could be very sensible; and the present time, when in the home and citadel of high protection, namely, the United States, there is a popular revolt which is forcing the protectionist and ruling party to scale down the tariff, would, we imagine, be a peculiarly inopportune time for the Conservative party in Canada to allow itself to go further than it has in the direction of high tariff.

I would not feel justified in delaying the committee to read the whole article, but if any hon. gentleman wishes to read what this important Conservative journal says upon this subject, I shall be glad to send him over the paper.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What is the name of the paper?

Mr. FIELDING. I will give my hon. friend the name of the paper in a moment.

Canada could produce (i.e., manufacture) numberless things, to attempt to produce which would be folly. If this country were to adopt such a dictum as Mr. Blain's, that we should keep out every dollar's worth of goods that we can produce, we would keep out great quantities of manufactures which could certainly be produced in Canada, but only at such a comparatively high cost that if our people were compelled to pay the proportionate retail prices, the expense of private living here would be desperately increased. We imagine that the people of Canada would refuse to have this sort of thing fastened upon them to any greater degree than at present. At any rate, whatever might be argued as to the possibility of such a doctrine being tolerated in eastern Canada, there is no chance of the new western Canada putting up with it; and, so from merely a party point of view, if the Conservative party hopes for any gain in the prairie provinces—where it needs to gain if it is to succeed—the less said about high protectionism the better. Canada has a tariff more than high enough to contribute efficiently towards national solidarity, a tariff high enough to give ample protection to every Canadian industry which has a fair excuse for existence; a tariff apparently well calculated to produce as large a revenue as our governments need to be entrusted with. We fancy, then, that it is a good tariff to let alone, except to cut down where undue business combines are shown to be sheltered by it.

That is the declaration of a Conservative journal in this Dominion of Canada. That is the declaration of the Ottawa 'Evening Journal.' Will some one say that it is a mere individual opinion? The Ottawa 'Evening Journal' is published by a gentleman who was a candidate for the Conservative party in the city of Ottawa and the night before that article was published he was chosen to be president of the Conservative association of Ottawa. So, they bid farewell to adequate protection.

Mr. HENDERSON. I confess I was more than surprised to hear the Finance Minister stating that he had understood in the past that I was one of those high protectionists. Apparently he thought I belonged to his class. Can he not recall that year after year, time after time, I have declared myself against the high protection of the Minister of Finance; at any rate, against the high taxation methods—what I think the minister means by high protection.

Mr. FIELDING. I read the article; I did not mean anything.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has he never heard me denounce the government for putting over $2,000,000 a year on the poor man's luxury his tobacco, while they required the duty on wine? Has he never heard me denounce the high duty that he has placed upon the sugar which goes into the consumption of every family? The policy of the Conservative party was free raw sugar and only at the last moment, for revenue purposes, was the ex-Minister of Finance compelled to put half a cent a pound on sugar which, no doubt, would have been removed, in accordance with the policy of the Conservative party as soon as the revenue righted itself. During the present session the Minister of Finance has heard me denounce again and again the increased duties put on articles of ordinary consumption and of absolute necessity. He talks about the west——

Mr. FIELDING. I simply read the article.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then you are responsible for all it says.

Mr. FIELDING. Oh no.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentlemen threw in a little comment.

Mr. FIELDING. Very little.

Mr. HENDERSON. Just enough to try and make the people of the west believe that the Conservative policy was not in their favour. But he did not tell the people of the west that, knowing that if they went out to shoot a bear or a fox or a chicken, the Liberal party actually increased the duty on guns from 20 per cent to 30 per cent.

Mr. TALBOT. What about gophers?

Mr. HENDERSON. My hon. friend may have lived on gophers, but ordinary white men do not eat them. However, I do not think they shoot gophers, I understand they catch them with snares. But anyway I am only joking and I do not intend to say anything offensive to the hon. gentleman. My argument is that so long as the government get revenue out of the tariff they don't care who is hurt. They tell the western man that he may buy his guns in England and get the benefit of the preference, but the fact is that guns are imported largely from the United States and not from England, and they pay 30 per cent. I see the Minister of Customs is smiling when I mention the preferential tariff. He thinks the preference brings money into the treasury; well, it puts the money into the British manufacturers' pockets and the Canadian pays the bill. Let me show my friends in the west the effect of this tariff for revenue only, and I will give a few examples. The Minister of Finance says we have almost forgotten the words 'adequate protection,' but the fact is that we do not need to advocate adequate protection now because the government has given us something more than adequate. I have often heard them ask what was the meaning of 'adequate protection,' but a reference to the dictionary would tell them. I never had any doubt but that it meant a tariff that would give the Canadian producer and the manufacturer a fair share of the markets of this country for his products.

Mr. M. CLARK. Will the hon. gentleman accept the definition of 'adequate protection' that was given to him by his own leader?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not know what that definition was, but I have the greatest respect for any opinion given by my leader.

Mr. M. CLARK. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to tell him that in the debates of 1902 in this House, Mr. Borden defined it as a tariff against the United States at least as high as the tariff of that country against us.

Mr. STAPLES. I challenge the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) to read that from 'Hansard'.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. Mr. Borden never made that statement.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not recall that the leader of the opposition made that statement in 1902, and the leader of the opposition is a very careful man who does not make statements that he has not well studied out. At all events what was good in 1902 in the tariff might not be very good to-day.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Borden never said it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Five years ago 25 per cent was sufficient protection on a woman's shoe, but two years ago the Minister of Agriculture raised it to 30 per cent. The tariff changes according to conditions. I do not remember that Mr. Borden ever made the statement attributed to him, and no doubt to-morrow my hon. friend from Red Deer will bring 'Hansard' to me to verify it if he can, but anyhow it is not worth quarrelling over. I have my own idea of what 'adequate' means, and my hon. friend from Red Deer, who is a scholar, has also a conception of its meaning. The Minister of Finance has a better conception of it than any of us, because he is a scholar and he has studied all these things, but I never understood adequate protection to mean anything else than a tariff that would give a reasonably fair share of the markets of this country to the Canadian producer and allow him a reasonable profit on the money he has invested. I do not know if my hon. friend from Red Deer is satisfied with that definition, but at all events that is my understanding of it. We do not ask for anything more than adequate protection, although the Minister of Agriculture is willing to give a woman's shoe more than adequate protection. The Minister of Finance is willing to raise the duty on the sportsman's gun from 20 per cent to 30 per cent although 20 per cent was adequate. The government was also anxious to make the ladies of the western country who need fur jackets and fur mitts and fur coats in that cold climate, pay more than adequate protection on these articles. My difficulty with the Minister of Finance is——

Mr. FIELDING. You and I have no difficulty.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, perhaps we have not. I am a moderate, reasonable protectionist, and the Minister of Finance has no difficulty I am sure in being the same. If there is any quarrel over the word 'protectionist,' I would ask the Minister of Customs to reduce the duty on biscuits from 27½ per cent down. I am not saying he has anything more than adequate protection to-day, but I believe 27½ per cent is adequate protection, and if it were more than adequate I have confidence enough in the Minister of Customs to believe that he would reduce the duty.

Mr. PATERSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. Nobody is asking him to increase that duty. We have been told by gentlemen opposite to-night that we have never challenged the tariff. How could we challenge it?

Mr. FIELDING. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is high enough. The Minister of Finance says 'hear, hear.' Nobody on this side of the House has asked for any increase in the duty on many articles. If the Minister of Finance wants my opinion on the tariff, I will give it to him. I believe our duties are sufficiently high; what we want is a readjustment. You have too much on one thing and too little on another. For instance you have too much on tobacco and too little on wine. I do not know that a general increase of the tariff is being asked for by any one; if such were the case, you would find me in opposition to it. The Liberal policy was not to increase the tariff all along the line. They simply on one day increased one item and on another day increased another. They worked these increases so insidiously that the people in the west as well as in the east did not know that they were worked into the tariff; and consequently these gentlemen go through the country and boast that they are the low-tariff party. They know they are not. They point to their preferential tariff; but the Finance Minister told us the other day practically that it was a curse to the country, because the sugar planters of the West Indies had taken advantage of it to form a combine. They increased the duty on linen from 25 to 30 per cent, and the old country linen producer puts the price up until with the duty it is just under what you would have to pay if you imported linen from the United States. Let me enumerate a few articles on which the prices have been increased, taken from a table prepared by officers of the government:

Articles.	Price, 1897.	Price, 1907.
Shirtings	15 cents.	18 cents.
Sheetings	22 "	32 "
Factory cotton	5 "	8 "
Prints	12½ "	15½ "
Muslins	25 "	30 "
Ginghams	12½ "	15 "
Denims	15 "	20 "
Ticking	18 "	25 "
Bedding	15 "	20 "
Flannelette	8 "	10 "
Canton flannel	9 "	14 "

I need not go on with the list, I think I have given sufficient to show how this tariff encourages importation instead of encouraging production. Under the Conservative policy of promoting production on the farm and in the factory, people got articles at a reasonable price, but under this new policy of promoting importation in order to get revenue, you see the prices we have to pay. Possibly we get goods at a lower rate of duty; but what signifies that if we have to pay thirty or forty or fifty per cent more on the cost of the goods? I do not regard it as of moment that we are able to fill the treasury with money to build municipal bridges or wharfs where there is no water, or to do a great many other things that are not called for in the country, if you are taking it out of the pockets of the people by compelling them to pay a higher price for what they consume. Now, I think I have made the Minister of Finance thoroughly to understand my position on the tariff. I am a moderate protectionist. I do not believe in raising the tariff simply to get revenue. Readjustment is what we want. If I had my way, I would put the duty on agricultural implements down to 10 per cent. I would say to the men who are manufacturing reapers and mowers: 'If you do not put the price down ten per cent below what it was last year, I will bring down the duty.' If they will not reduce the price, I say reduce the duty. But if they will reduce the price, I am not so unpatriotic as to say that these things should not be made in Canada. The government should use the tariff as a power to regulate the prices of manufactured articles. My hon. friend, the Finance Minister, has told us that the people of the Northwest want a low tariff. Why then does he not lower the duty on agricultural implements to 10 per cent? The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) told us the other day that the government had reduced the duty on ploughs and some other agricultural implements to 17½ per cent. I am sure that was a surprise to the Finance Minister as it was to me. I hope the hon. member for South Grey did not intend that speech to go to the Northwest. The only two articles on which the duties were reduced to 17½ per cent were mowers and binders. If the minister wants to do something for the west—and I do not believe that the people there are free traders, I do not believe that even my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) would want absolutely no duties at all, I believe the people there are willing to pay their fair share to the revenues of the country—but there are certain lines on which they want the duties reduced. Take agricultural implements, I will say put the duty on these heavy implements that cost a lot of money and which the farmers must have, down to a lower figure. I think the manufacturer can stand it, especially on the larger implements such as binders and mowers, because they are large exporters and do not rely on the home trade. They have an enormous foreign trade, and if their home trade were wiped out they could live on their foreign trade.

Mr. TALBOT. What about buggies and carriages?

Mr. HENDERSON. The duty on these is just where the hon. gentleman contended it should be.

Mr. TALBOT. Adequate protection.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is where his own government put it. If he has any fault to find with it he must tell the Finance Minister or the Minister of Customs that he made a mistake. I do not think he will because I believe his own vote supported the government in placing the duty exactly where it is.

Mr. PATERSON. If you will bear with a usually silent member, as you have with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, I will not take up much time. My hon. friend has mentioned one article which, better than anything else, will explain the dfference between the two poltical parties, so far as the tariff is concerned. He says that the Conservative government put raw sugar on the free list. That is true. We have made it dutiable, and there is the difference. But the people of this country do not use raw sugar. They use refined sugar. My hon. friends opposite put a duty of 80 cents on refined sugar, which the people had to pay, and not one cent of which went into the treasury because the raw sugar came in free. It all went to the refiners. The late government got no revenue from their duty, but the consumer was taxed 80 cents on every 100 pounds he used. What did we do? We put a tax on the raw sugar and have thereby put millions into the treasury. Have we raised the price to the consumer? Certainly not, because the people do not use raw sugar. My hon. friend laughs.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am laughing at the idea that a duty on raw sugar did not increase the price.

Mr. PATERSON. Under my hon. friends there was no duty on raw sugar, but the people paid on the refined sugar which they did use, 80 cents per 100 pounds. Under our policy we put a duty on the raw sugar, which has brought millions into the treasury, and the people do not pay any more on the sugar they consume. Under the policy of the party opposite the people paid on the sugar they used a tax of 80 cents per 100 pounds but the refiner got it all. Sugar is not higher now because we give the refiner only 36 cents protection against 80 given by hon. gentlemen opposite. That is the way our tariff is arranged. When the hon. gentleman alludes to biscuits, they are just the same as scores of other articles in the tariff. The duties are lower to-day than they were then. In all the changes made, out of the hundreds and hundreds of articles in the Trade and Navigation Returns—they run up to fifteen hundred or sixteen hundred different articles—in all you will not find that half a score under the general tariff are higher than under their tariff ,and the $60,000,000 or $80,000,000 of British goods come in at a reduction of 33⅓ per cent. As we dealt with sugar, so we did with other manufactured goods. We lowered the duties in many cases, but that did not injure the manufacturers because we reduced the tariff on their raw material. One word with reference to my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture's allusion to the Chinese wall speech of the hon. member for Halton. I am sure he will accept the explanation of the hon. gentleman. I can only tell my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) that if I had been there and were making a speech, I would in all good faith have said what the Minister of Agriculture did. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he would put a Chinese wall around the country or words to that effect, and would shut out everything we could produce. I understood the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) to say also that he would shut out anything we could produce or make in the country.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Can the hon. gentleman tell the House the difference between ordinary raw sugar and the brown which is manufactured by the refiners in Montreal?

Mr. PATERSON. The sugars which are admitted free are sugars that are under No. 16, Dutch standard.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The custom of the trade now is to use the granulated sugar. But at the time the hon. gentleman's government came into power the bulk of the sugar used was the ordinary brown sugar, and it was right for the Conservative party to admit it free.

Mr. PATERSON. My hon. friend has only established this, that under the national policy the people had to use unwashed sugar.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. My hon. friend is fond of his little joke.

Mr. PATERSON. That is not a joke, it is the fact.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. He thinks that he is the only man in this House who knows anything about the tariff. Let me point out to him that the competition of the beet root sugar from Germany, which is a white granulated sugar, compelled our refiners to make white granulated sugar out of the raw cane sugar, and everybody to-day buys the white granulated sugar and not a pound of the brown sugar. The brown sugar that comes from the West Indies is raw and which was admitted free in those days is just as good as the raw sugar of commerce that you buy from the manufacturers in Montreal.

Mr. PATERSON. But it paid 80 cents per 100 pounds on coming in.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It does now.

Mr. PATERSON. It did then. Oh, you can't tell me anything about sugar.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Just a moment while I am on my feet; I do not wish to delay the estimates. I think we had better come back to a few of these agricultural items. Hon. members opposite are continually making believe that there is a difference between the manufacturer and the farmer. To my mind, the farmer is the largest manufacturer in the country. He employs more labour than any body else, he pays more for his tools and uses more tools than other producers do, and he works harder than the man of any other class. If there is any one who should be protected, to my mind it is the farmer, for he produces fully 65 per cent of the products of this country. Now, I call the attention of hon. gentlemen to a few figures —and I will permit the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the Minister of Agriculture also (Mr. Fisher) to sleep on the items that I have to bring forward. I took occasion to go through the Trade and Commerce returns to ascertain the amount of goods imported into this country that might be raised and should be raised on the farms of this country. In the first place, I find that of farm animals we imported $1 649,574 worth. Of breadstuffs, our imports amounted to $16,524,968—and we proclaim ourselves a great country for the production of breadstuffs, and the government takes credit for being good to the people of the Northwest whose chief product is breadstuffs. Of green fruits, our imports were $5,312,798. The green-fruit growers claim that they are not protected but are under unfair competition from the growers in the United States who can get into the market here earlier in the season than we can. In gloves and mitts, which our mothers and grandmothers used to make years ago, we imported $2,987,556. Of axle grease—which used to be a common article manufactured in this country—we imported last year $878,268 worth. Hides are a product of the animals grown on the farms of Canada, and one would think that we could produce our own hides. But, on the contrary, we find that we imported last year $4,908,871 worth of hides. And still we pride ourselves in being a great cattle-growing country, and speak of ourselves as doing everything to protect the farming interest of our country. Of honey our imports last year amounted to $35,405. Hops—something our farmers grow in Kent county and all through the western part of the Ontario peninsula—used to be exported from this country. Last year, we imported $235,923 worth. Turn again to the leathers and manufactures thereof; one would think that when we import the hides we would surely make the leather, but we find that we imported of these goods $3,780,303 worth. Milk, that surely is the product of this country yet we find that last year we imported $199,624 worth. Then we come to plants and trees — we have nurseries of our own, and yet we bring in $276,683 worth. Our imports of provisions, such as butter, cheese and articles of that description amount to no less than $4,655,980. And still we are told the farmer is not in need of protection. Of seeds and roots—and these articles surely should be produced in this country—we imported $4,559,454 worth. And now I come to the item of sugar. Hon. gentlemen opposite have claimed that they have endeavoured to stimulate the sugar industry, and surely all must agree that the sugar industry should be successful in this country. One or two factories have been successful, but owing to some cause, whether the lack of proper protection or not, a large number of these factories have gone out of business. The result is that instead of producing our own sugar, as is done in Germany and France under virtually similar conditions of climate and soil, we imported last year $12,433,111 worth. Then we come to tobacco. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has an item in his estimates for the encouragment of the growth of tobacco in this country. The tobacco industry is certainly a growing industry and the tobacco growers of Canada have shown clearly that they can produce as good tobacco as can be produced anywhere in the world. In spite of that, instead of protecting the tobacco industry of western Ontario, we imported last year $4,356,820 worth of tobacco.

Mr. FIELDING. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. A. Currie) wish a higher duty on tobacco?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think that some method should be adopted to encourage the growing of tobacco in this country. I feel satisfied that, if the tobacco industry of this country is properly encouraged, within a very few years, instead of merely producing our own supply of tobacco, we shall become an exporting country. If the hon. minister (Mr. Fielding) will turn up the returns of this country back in the forties and fifties, he will find that in those days Canada exported tobacco. But he will not go back that far. The next item I have here is that of green vegetables, representing an industry in whose success my hon. friend from Centre York (Mr. Wallace) has shown a deep interest. Last year, we imported $1,117,253 worth of green vegetables. The last item is an article that we on this side are all agreed should be produced in this country—woollens. Last year, our imports of woollens amounted to no less than $23,145,029. Certainly, a very large proportion of these goods should be produced in this country. Now, how much is represented altogether by these imports of goods that might be produced on Canadian farms? Last year, the Northwest produced wheat to the value of perhaps $80 000,000. Yet we find that articles imported into this country in direct competition with the product of our farms represented a value of no less than $87,157,628.

Now, the hon. minister (Mr. Fielding), I suppose, has such a fine, keen, acute mind that he would try to put questions to me to show that I must be either a protectionist or a free trader or nothing. I can tell the hon. minister that I find that his party is in practically the same shape as they were in 1878, when Alexander Mackenzie was defeated. At that time, their policy was one of tariff for revenue only, which is the policy they claim to have now. The question of tariff for revenue only was never fought out on the platform in this country except in 1878, and then it was swamped so badly that it is only of recent years we have heard anything more about it. The hon. minister knows that Sir John Macdonald pointed out that the policy of tariff for revenue only was one which put upon the farmer and the artisan the greatest amount of taxation. Sir John Macdonald introduced his national policy in opposition to the policy of Alexander Mackenzie. It was not a policy of high protection, but of adjustment of the taxation so as to increase the industries suited to the country, while taking a minimum of taxes out of the pockets of the people. I would recommend the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark) to read the speeches in the campaign of 1878. He will find there a great distinction between free trade and tariff for revenue only, and a great distinction also between the national policy and the policy of high protection. I do not think any Conservative can stand up and defend the policy of high protection. We are said to be high protectionists. I have always understood that protection, as advocated by Sir John Macdonald and the Conservative party to be in the truest sense a national policy for this country. Now, what is it that causes trouble to the farmers with regard to the sale of their products? The market was all right when they had good times in the United States, and they could find a high market for their products. But hon. gentlemen know that within the last two or three years there have been hard times in the United States, and the farmers there have had difficulty in selling their products, and the result is that their surplus is shipped into this country at a lower price than our farmers were getting, and our farmers must take a lower price. I think the discussion perhaps has gone a little further afield than it should. But so far as I am concerned, I believe that the welfare of this country lies in a proper system of protection for the articles the farmers produce.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The discussion has been very broad. I have no desire to stop it if the committee really desires to engage in a discussion of tariff issues; but I think I should remind the committee that the item is that for the development of the live stock industry.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK. I am perfectly sure, Mr. Chairman, that you as well as the committee will have no reason to complain of the length of any observations I address to the House, because I have from the beginning of this discussion had exactly the view you have expressed, that our opinions upon the tariff would have been better expressed in the budget debate. I did take what I hoped was a pardonable liberty in asking my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) if I might introduce him to his leader's definition of adequate protection in the debates of 1902. With his usual courtesy he granted me leave to give his leader's definition. I have the definition which I gave here, and I think the House will corroborate what I noted down immediately, and it is substantially what I said: 'A tariff against the United States at least as high as that of the United States against us.' Now the hon. member for Halton is not only very courteous, but he is a somewhat wily old member of this House, and he had far too much sense to contradict me, because he knew I was perfectly correct. He had this advantage over the member for Macdonald (Mr. Staples), that he had a better memory of what his leader had said; so he did not expose himself in the way that the member for Macdonald did. Some other members gave the member for Macdonald their moral support by asserting—referring to the leader of the opposition—'He never said it.' I have in my hands now the 'Hansard' of 1902, and I will read from the speech of the leader of the opposition what he said in that debate, as found on page 1334 in volume 1:

One would expect that if we intend to maintain and build up our own products and manufactures against such powerful and tremendous competition as that which we must anticipate from the United States, we would fix our tariff of customs against that country on a scale at least as high as is that of their tariff against us.

Mr. STAPLES. The hon. gentleman asked my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) if he would accept the definition of adequate protection as given by his leader, and my hon. friend from Halton answered that he would, and I said that the leader of the opposition never did make any such definition of adequate protection. I say still that he never made any such definition, and I challenge the hon. gentleman to read from 'Hansard' the context in that speech, and he cannot find that the leader of the opposition defined adequate protection in the terms he has used.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK. If I am not wearying the patience of the House, I will take up the point as it has been raised by my hon. friend from Macdonald. The speech from which I am quoting——

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I rise to a point of order. This discussion has no reference at all to the item before the Chair. I think we ought to adhere to the item under discussion. We have wandered far away from the item, and I ask that we now come back to it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The point of order raised by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) is certainly well taken. The discussion for the last hour has been almost entirely out of order. I have not felt called upon to insist on the rule, because it appeared to be the desire of the committee to discuss the tariff generally. But now that the point of order has been raised, I must rule that the committee come back to the discussion of the item for the development of the live stock industry.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I think my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) was within his right when he sought to show the Minister of Agriculture the necessity of making some improvement in the hog industry, in view of the manner in which it is languishing at present. I feel it is my duty to call upon the Minister of Agriculture to take immediate steps to improve the position of that industry. If he will examine the agricultural press he will find that he is being severely condemned for the manner in which that industry is languishing. In turning up the trade and navigation returns I find that last year 11,770,000 pounds of lard, valued at $1,000,000, came into this country. Of bacon, ham, shoulders and sides, 7, 304,000 pounds, valued at $851,000, came in from the United States. Of pork, barreled in brine, 9,204,000 pounds, valued at $713,000, came in. Surely my hon. friend from Peel was within his rights in calling the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the position of the swine industry. In view of the fact that in the neighbourhood of 30,000,000 pounds of swine products are annually coming into this country, surely my hon. friend was within his rights in calling the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the fact that the swine industry was not increasing, but that it was an industry that was in need of a radical change. The Minister of Agriculture tells us that he is going to send a few farmers over to Denmark to see if they can bring back some new ideas. If these men return within the next few months it will take years for the swine industry to get back to anything like the position it held some years ago. Let him look at the pork manufactories in Canada and see the small amount of pork that is being exported and he cannot help but come to the conclusion that his department is responsible for the position of the swine industry to-day. When you take into consideration the very large imports of that product from the United States and other countries you cannot help but come to the conclusion that the minister has been neglecting that industry. He may look at the butter industry and the man who is at the head of the dairy department in the country may tell the people just as much as he likes that we are producing just about the same quantity as we ever did, he can say that it is because of the increase of population, or he can offer other excuses along these lines, but the fact remains that instead of these products having largely increased as they have in other countries, the increase has been very much less. Let the minister go to New Zealand and see the wonderful developements in production and increase in exports that have taken place there. Let him go to the Argentine Republic and see what they are doing in the live stock industry there. If he compares the exports of these countries with our exports he cannot help but feel humiliated, as every Canadian does in this agricultural country, at the lack of advancement in the development of this live stock industry. I do not wish to take up the time of the House——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles) says 'hear, hear.' If the hon. member for Assiniboia would take a little more interest in the development of the farm industry of our great west than he does in this House, instead of yelling 'hear, hear,' when he knows full well that the Minister of Agriculture has been neglecting his duty in regard to these important subjects, he would be doing something for the general benefit of the people of his province.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I have listened painfully to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) many times in this House, and I have never thought that the Minister of Agriculture has neglected any of his duties.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is no question of privilege in the remarks which the hon. gentleman has made.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. gentleman is naturally interested in his constituency, and after the remarks we have listened to I do not know that I will attempt to make any reply. When I call attention to the fact that we are making these large importations of the products of the farm, I cannot help but feel that something should be done, and done immediately, whereby our farm products could be increased and whereby the swine industry, the butter industry and the live stock industry could be developed along more extensive lines than at the present time. I feel that if the minister would take into consideration not only the question of developing the swine, the butter and the live stock industries of this country, but the question of securing the best possible markets for the products of the farm, he would be doing a greater measure of justice to the farmers of this country than he is doing at the present time.

Mr. ELSON. I desire just to say a few words in reference to the question of the development of our live stock industry When I take up the trade figures issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce it seems to me as if the money expended for the development of the live stock industry during the last couple of years has not produced results such as we could desire. We see that the export of live cattle in the year 1906 was about $2,000,000 greater than in the year 1908, showing that we are falling back to a very great extent in the development of our cattle industry. While the number of cattle exported was 25,000 less, the number of horses was several hundred less and the value very much reduced. The export of sheep was just about the same. In the products of the hog—ham and bacon—we have fallen back about a million dollars. It appears to me that the money which has been expended in the past couple of years has not had the desired effect in developing our live stock industry. How does the Minister of Agriculture account for this great falling off in our exportation of live stock? It is true that our population is a little greater than it was two years ago and no doubt consumes more, but still the increase in the production of stock and animal products should be greater than the increase of population. Parliament has voted a considerable amount every year for the development of the live stock industry. We are willing to vote for that purpose, provided we can obtain good results, a still larger sum. But, when we see that the results are not satisfactory and that our country is going backward in regard to its live stock industry, it seems to me that something should be done to improve this condition. I would ask the minister how he explains the falling off in the exportation of live stock?

Mr. FISHER. Unfortunately we have not complete statistics year by year of home consumption or of the number of animals in the country. I have no doubt whatever that the falling off in the export of horses is due to the increased demand in this country to supply the needs of the new settlers in the Northwest. I do not understand the exact reason for the falling off in the export of cattle, but the decrease in the export of dairy products in the last few seasons would doubtless be due to the diminished production of milk on account of the drought; the decreased production of Canadian butter not keeping pace with the relatively increased consumption at home. The dry season has also affected the hog industry very seriously. It is largely dependent upon the dairy industry, and when dairying is short the cost of producing pork and its products increases. The price of grain and feed stuffs during the last few years has been exceptionally high, with the result that our farmers have been discouraged in rearing hogs. Although the price of pork has been rather high, and very high lately, the farmers say that the margin of profit between the cost of production and the price to them was not sufficient to encourage them to increase production. It is for the purpose of finding out whether there are methods of production in Denmark and Ireland which are more economical than our own that I propose to send this commission to these countries. If we can get any hints which will help our industry it will be well worth the expenditure. I would prefer to send farmers who themselves are engaged in the industry rather than officers of my department, whose reports might be criticised and might perhaps not be considered so acceptable.

Mr. ELSON. The falling off in the export of butter is really astonishing. In 1907 about $7,000,000 worth of butter was exported and in 1908 only $1,000,000 worth, showing a falling off of $6,000,000 in one year. The inference might possibly be that the farmers were making cheese instead of butter, but there is a falling off in the export of cheese to the extent of $2,000,000 worth. All along the line of the live stock and dairying industry there seems to have been an immense falling off during the past year.

Mr. HERRON. I was sorry to hear the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture with regard to the Alaska-Yukon-Seattle exposition. It would seem strange if the stock raisers of the west do not themselves know what is for their own interest in that respect. I have the very strongest requests from the executive officers of the association representing the three western provinces asking for some small assistance to enable them to exhibit their live stock at Seattle. But the minister positively refused to entertain that request. I should have thought that these gentlemen must have taken into consideration the difficulty regarding the quarantine and that they believed this difficulty could be overcome. The western breeders have invested very large sums of money to improve the breed of horses and cattle; and as we do a considerable trade with that part of the United States the Seattle exhibition would be a grand opportunity to show what western Canadian farmers have succeeded in accomplishing. About $8,000 is all that these gentlemen ask; it is a small sum for such a worthy object, and I have had numerous letters and telegrams from them asking me to urge the minister to give this aid.

Mr. FISHER. The returns which have reached me have come from Mr. Bell of Winnipeg, representing as I understand the Western Farmers' Association. The hon. gentleman is more fortunate than I am with regard to receiving letters and telegrams of that kind.

Mr. LAKE. I have received copies of resolutions from the farmers' associations in Saskatchewan, which I understood had been sent to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. FISHER. I think the only communication I have received was from Manitoba.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I would remind the minister that a number of British Columbia breeders exhibited at the Portland exhibition a few years ago and did very well indeed. Are the quarantine conditions more onerous now than they were then?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I would recall the attention of the minister to an application from a resident in my district, Mr. Page of Matsqui which engaged the attention of this House on a former occasion. I understood the Minister of Agriculture to say then that Mr. Page had a claim; perhaps not a legal claim, but sufficient of a claim to warrant the government in giving consideration to it, and this led Mr. Page to hope that at some time or other he might get compensation from the government. The facts of the case are: Mr. Page was a breeder of horses and he sent quite a large consignment to the United States, feeling that the regulations then in force permitted him to have them entered free of duty as they were imported to be sold for breeding purposes. The customs officers of the United States told him his interpretation of their law was wrong, and, as he had irregularly imported these horses into the United States they were seized and confiscated and sold, resulting in the loss to Mr. Page of the entire shipment. Mr. Page then made a claim to the Department of Agriculture, stating that his exportation was under the terms agreed upon between the two countries and as understood by the Canadian department, and being led into error by accepting the Canadian interpretation of the American regulations his claim comes before the department as a matter of compassion, or perhaps I should say of common justice. I undrstood the minister to say on the occasion I have referred to that he was disposed to do something for Mr. Page. Does the hon. gentleman consider that incident entirely closed, or is it possible that something may yet be done?

Mr. FISHER. I have considered the incident entirely closed for some years. The question is not a question of any action on the part of this government. The action was taken by the American authorities, and we have no control over their interpretation of their own law. The actual fact was this: Under the American regulations horses imported for breeding purposes are free of duty. This gentleman brought horses into the United States to sell, and the American authorities interpreted the regulations to mean that that was not bringing them in for breeding purposes. This government have nothing whatever to do with the action of the American authorities, and I never understood that Mr. Page expected or asked for compensation from this government. I think he asked that we should deal with the American authorities, and we did so. We represented to the Secretary of State at Washington that it was a case of hardship, and asked that it should be reconsidered. It was reconsidered and discussed at headquarters at Washington, and I think it was the Attorney General of the United States who declared that the interpretation put upon the American regulations by the officers at the frontier, was a legal and proper interpretation. I do not see how we could possibly have done anything more than we did, and I cannot understand how Mr. Page or any body else could claim that the government of Canada could be held responsible for such an action.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. My recollection is that the hon. minister said something which led Mr. Page to believe that this government would do something for him. I have had a letter from him asking me to mention the matter again.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot remember any words of mine that could be so interpreted.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the hon. minister before him the request in writing that was made by the Swinebreeders' Association?

Mr. FISHER. No, I haven't it here.

Mr. BLAIN. Did my hon. friend say that it referred to anything except the unfair competition found in the Canadian market?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say that the writing did, but the deputation that came to me made a request for this commission. My hon. friend accused me a few minutes ago of lack of courage in not telling the swinebreeders what I have told the House to-night. My hon. friend ought to know that the government always refuses to say to any deputation what they are going to do with regard to tariff matters.

Mr. BLAIN. Do I understand that another deputation waited on the hon. gentleman, but that it had no reference to the tariff?

Mr. FISHER. Certain swine breeders approached my hon. friend the Minister of Finance and my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, as well as myself, in regard to the tariff. Then a deputation of swinebreeders came to me in my office and asked for this commission. I am inclined to think that they were largely the same men. I can remember some of them—Mr. Brethour, Mr. Featherstone and Mr. Flatt—and there were several members of parliament with them.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Are these the men to be sent over?

Mr. FISHER. No. They said they did not wish swine-breeders to be sent; they preferred that swine feeders should be sent.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is there not some way in which the minister could make better progress than by sending over a commission? It appears to me that it is not a bad suggestion in itself, but it will be many months before this commission will be able to make a report, and a still longer time before the people will be educated up to their ideas. Could not the minister take some more aggressive course to remedy this state of affairs?

Mr. FISHER. We have always acted on the line of educating the farmers, impressing upon them what has been found by experiment to be the best method of fattening hogs. That, of course, does not affect the price of the hog or the cost of the feed. All we can do is to explain the relative values of different feeds, and leave them to find the best feed, and feed it in the cheapest way possible. We propose to continue that work of education, and I hope it will have some effect. In the past it has had a very great effect. But largely because feed has been scarce and high lately, the profits on hog feeding have not been as great as they were a few years ago. During the last two years the price of hogs sold on the Canadian market has been usually high. It is always the case in the fall of the year that the price of hogs goes down; but I may say that the average price during the last two years has been higher than it was in the two years before.

Mr. SEXSMITH. One reason to my mind why the farmers are going out of the raising of hogs is the very unstable condition of the market. The minister knows well that it is very irregular. At one time of the year there is a price that will perhaps make the raising of hogs profitable. The fall of the year, when the bulk of the hogs are marketed, and when the farmer expects to receive his profit, is the time when the price is very low. There is a general impression in the part of the country that I come from that the packers have an organization, and at a time of the year when they are about to put in their supplies for home consumption, they put the price down. I would like to ask the minister if he does not think that if the Canadian farmer had the home market for himself, it would help to regulate the price to a considerable extent. I am not going to advocate high protection, but I do believe in fair trade; and if my neighbours charge us five cents a pound to get an article into their country, I think we would be justified, to a certain extent anyway, in protecting our own industries. However, we have not time to discuss that question now, but I cannot agree with the minister that such a policy would raise the price to the consumer. He said he was very pleased to belong to the agricultural class. I agree with him, as I am a farmer myself. He also said that the farmers were very charitable and did not ask for a tariff which would raise the prices to the masses. I quite agree that they are charitable or they would not have supported this government so long in return for so little; but the farmers in the riding I represent believe in protecting their own market to the extent, or very nearly so, asked by the Swine Breeders' Association. Does the hon. minister not think it would be well to look into the matter from the packers' standpoint so as to ascertain whether the general belief be true that they combine to unduly press the prices down, especially in September and October?

Mr. FISHER. I did have an investigation made into the comparative prices of the live hog at the station to the packing houses and the wholesale price of the finished products in the shape of bacons and hams and the retail price to the consumer. What I had done was to compare the prices in these different articles in Chicago, Buffalo, Toronto, Montreal and Liverpool over a period covering six months. We took the prices as we found them reported in the Trade journals every week, beginning in September or October, 1907 and during the six months following. The result showed that if we took the price paid for the live hog at the station and made reasonable allowance for the cost of manufacture, transport, &c., the price received for Canadian bacon on the Liverpool market, wholesale, delivered there, was not an undue profit over the price paid the farmer. But if you take the price paid by the Canadian consumer in Montreal or Toronto for the finished bacon over the counter, it was much larger on that portion of the hog sold in Canada than on the portion sold in England. In other words, the retail price in Canada showed a profit much larger than the retail price in England. As far as our investigation went, the figures would indicate that the increase lay between the departure of the pork from the factory and its sale by the retailer, but just how it was distributed we had no means of finding out. My impression, from that investigation, is that if to-day the packers are making very large profits, they are doing that on the retail sale in the Canadian market and not on their sale in the English market. The price paid to the Canadian farmer at the station for the live hog seemed to be as high as the packer could pay and make a fair profit on his business when he sold at the prices in the English market. That investigation took place a year ago, and I have not had time to have it repeated, but I will see that it is repeated this coming season and find out more information for the benefit of the farmers and the trade.

Mr. OWEN. Is the hon. minister aware that thousands of cattle are slaughtered in this country every year, affected with tuberculosis and sold to the people? I have had several complaints recently.

Mr. FISHER. I am not aware that thousands of cattle affected with tuberculosis have been sold in the country. In the meat establishments, which are under the control of my department since the Meat and Canned Food Act has been passed, here are no carcasses affected with tuberculosis which are allowed to pass through and enter into consumption. There is a small percentage of the cattle slaughtered in those establishments found affected with tuberculosis, but I would be sorry to admit for a moment, in the general way my hon. friend uses the term, that there are thousands of cattle slaughtered in Canada which are thus affected.

To encourage the production and use of superior seeds of farm crops and for the enforcement of the Seed Control Act, $49,000.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. There is a reduction here of $19,000.

Mr. FISHER. That is due to the transfer of the salaries to the civil government.

Mr. LAKE. Is the hon. minister distributing seed at present?

Mr. FISHER. The only distribution is in small packages by post from the Experimental farm.

Mr. SEXSMITH. How is it proposed to expend the money?

Mr. FISHER. There are salaries to officers outside of Ottawa amounting to $7,500. There is a very considerable amount of travel of the staffs, which costs about $8,000. The printing and stationery take $6,000. The book called 'The Farm Weeds of Canada' will call for an expenditure from this year's appropriation of $6,000. Part of the expense of the new edition has already been paid out of this year's vote. We also propose to issue a publication on grasses, clovers and forage crops, which is expected to cost $6,000. Supplies for the laboratory will cost $1,250, and supplies for the Calgary laboratory $750. The expense of enforcing the Seed Control Act, apart from the salaries of officers, is $2,000. Then, we assist in conducting seed fairs and field competitions in the growth of seed grain, and assist the associations. This costs $12,000. There is a special grant to the Canadian Seed Growers' Association and Provincial Seed Exhibition of $5,500.

Mr. SEXSMITH. You have lecturers going about?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, that is included in the salaries. They also assist in enforcing the Seed Control Act.

Mr. LALOR. Are the farmers still permitted to sell seed grain without inspection? I know from inquiry among some of the men dealing in seeds that they doubt very much whether this Act can be made very successful so long as the farmers are permitted to sell to their neighbours seed grain that is not inspected. As I understand it, the inspection reaches only the dealers, but one of the great sources of trouble in the distribution of foul seed is the farmers selling seed grain to one another.

Mr. FISHER. The Seed Control Act has a provision under which a farmer growing seed can sell it to his neighbours. That was discussed when the Seed Control Act was passed, and there has been no amendment to that section; the law remains as it has been for some years. My hon. friend (Mr. Lalor) was here, I think, when the Act was passed, and knows the reasons why the provision was put in. I need not dwell upon them now.

To encourage the production and sale of Canadian tobacco, $5,000.

Mr. FISHER. I was glad to hear an hon. member say that we ought to encourage the tobacco growing industry of this country. He will approve a vote for that purpose. I have been doing a little work in this way for some time back, and this year hope to do still more. What I did before was not under a special vote, but under the general encouragement of markets and agricultural products of the country. But this year, expecting to do more, I am asking for a special vote. The work we have been doing has been to give instruction to the tobacco growers and to carry on experiments especially in the curing of the tobacco. I think there is no doubt that Canada can produce a very large quantity of tobacco. The soil is suitable, and the climate seems to be suitable. But the curing and handling by the farmers has been deficient. We are trying to help them in this matter. In the coming season I propose, partly through this vote—but there will have to be a vote for special buildings—to establish three experimental stations, one in Essex county, Ontario, one in Montcalm, and one in Rouville, in Quebec, these latter two very small ones not costing as much as the single one in Essex, to carry on experiments in the way of growing tobacco and some new kinds, and especially in the curing of the tobacco in accordance with the experiments we have been conducting, and also with the experiments in handling that have been carried on in the United States.

Mr. BURRELL. Is there to be any expenditure for the encouragement of tobacco growing in British Columbia?

Mr. FISHER. I was not proposing to establish an experimental station in British Columbia this year. My tobacco expert has not been able yet to study the conditions in British Columbia and work out what is the right thing to do, but I propose to have him go there and study the situation, and if we can do anything in the way of experimental work there we shall be glad to undertake it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am glad the minister has decided to establish an experimental station in the western peninsula. I know the need of it there, and I hope he will give it his energetic attention.

Mr. BLAIN. How does the minister make his statement correspond with the statement in opposition to the manufacture of cigarettes in this country?

Mr. FISHER. If they would use no tobacco in Canada but export it all, I should be glad. I do not use it myself, and should like to see others follow my example. But if they are going to use tobacco, I would like to see them use good tobacco.

Contributions towards maintenance of and expenses of representation at International Institute of Agriculture, $10,000.

Mr. FISHER. I suppose I should give an explantion of this.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. A short one.

Mr. FISHER. I will try to be short. I have this to say to my hon. friend, however —I sympathize with his desire to put these items through as quickly as possible, but he must not expect that his friends are to be allowed to say just what they wish and we to say nothing. This International Institute of Agriculture was finally established in Rome last year, the initiative having been taken in 1905, when the representatives of the great powers in Europe and America practically joined and decided to establish it. It seemed to me—and on investigating I am confirmed in the opinion —that this is an institute which may be productive of the greatest good in the agricultural world. It is an organization of an international character for the purpose of collecting statistics and other information and distributing it. It is practically a clearing house of agricultural information. And, although we in Canada sometimes plume ourselves on the advanced state of our agriculture, and our experimental progress in all agricultural subjects—I confess that I pride myself on that as a Canadian —there is no doubt that we can learn from other countries, and we can learn very much from the older countries of Europe and Asia, as well as from the newer countries of America. This institute is for the purpose of collecting information from all these countries and placing it at the disposal of the members. On the invitation of the authorities, we agreed to adhere, first in a modest way in what is called the fourth class. But when I came to examine the matter, I found that that was hardly commensurate with what I believed to be the importance of Canada as an agricultural country and the importance of our agricultural interest, and so asked that Canada be raised to the second class, where we have to pay a somewhat larger contribution toward the expenses of the institute. Another thing we have to do is to have an officer or representative of the country in the management of the institute. I was fortunate enough, last fall, when I went to represent this government, to be able to secure the services of a gentleman from Montreal, Mr. Arthur Boyer, well known in the public life of Quebec, a gentleman who has lived in the city, but is familiar also with the agricultural conditions and the country life of Canada. He was also familiar with the French language, and a gentleman of high character and great intelligence. So well were we represented at the meeting in Rome last November, that the Hon. Mr. Boyer was chosen one of a small executive committee of five to manage the affairs of the institute. We have also to prepare and send to the institute agricultural and statistical information from our own country in order that it may be tabulated along with such information from other countries, and I am asking for $10,000 for the purpose of doing this work.

Mr. SEXSMITH. How is that information to be made available to the farmers?

Mr. FISHER. The Department of Agriculture will get the information and distribute it. The information, however, will probably be of a character rather suitable for students and the scientific farmer, than the ordinary farmer. But we hope to be able to distribute to the farmers abstracts of the statistics. A farmer who wants this information can send to the department and get it. This institute at Rome will secure information from all countries in the world with regard to any new process that it may be desirable to introduce, or any new discovery that may be made of importance to agriculture generally.

Steamers to replace 'Argus' and 'Challenger,' $40,000.

Mr. FISHER. These are vessels required for the quarantine service and have been so long in use that they are now almost unsafe, and our engineers report that they must be replaced.

Mr. CROSBY. What has the 'Challenger' been doing?

Mr. FISHER. The 'Challenger' is one of the boats at the Grosse Isle station in Quebec, the 'Argus' is stationed at Halifax.

Mr. CROSBY. What does the hon. gentleman expect it will cost to put a boat on the quarantine station at Halifax to replace the 'Argus'? I understood the minister to say that that boat was about to be condemned. As a matter of fact that boat has not been in use for over a year.

Mr. FISHER. She has been under repairs.

Mr. CROSBY. I think she has been out of commission altogether for over a year.

Mr. FISHER. She has been somewhat out of repair, and not working.

Mr. CROSBY. For how many months?

Mr. FISHER. Perhaps six months.

Mr. CROSBY. The crew of that boat has been doing nothing all that time. If the minister intends to put a boat on that service that will be equal to the requirements at Halifax, I do not think that he can possibly do it with $10,000.

Mr. FISHER. If I find I cannot do it with this vote I will have to ask for more in a supplementary vote.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Last year the hon. gentleman had $30,000, and this year he is asking for $40,000.

Mr. FISHER. We were not able to use the $30,000 and it lapsed.

Mr. CROSBY. The hon. minister has a crew there now, who are being paid, and it is essential that we should have a boat to do the work. There is a great necessity for that boat. It is important that he should try at the earliest possible date to put a boat on that service.

Mr. FISHER. Before the end of the last fiscal year we advertised for a boat to be purchased. A large number of boats were presented to the commission appointed to examine them. and the commission condemned them all. They were of all prices, of all sizes and of all shapes, and none were satisfactory to the commission. The commission was composed of an officer from the quarantine staff, one from the Marine Department and one from the Public Works Department, all experts. Not having been able to buy a boat, plans and specifications are now in course of preparation for the purpose of getting a boat built. I think before long or before next fall we will succeed in having a boat.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Surely the statement that the hon. member for Halifax makes that the minister has kept a crew under pay a whole year doing nothing and no boat on which to employ them is not correct?

Mr. FISHER. The crew have other work at the station which they have been doing.

Mr. CROSBY. I would rather have the crew kept idle for a year than have a boat put upon this service that is not suitable. I am glad to hear that the minister has made efforts in the direction he has indicated. If the hon. gentleman finds it impossible to get a boat already constructed, and I imagine that he will find it difficult to do that, it would be really better to build a boat for that service, and I hope that this will be done as speedily as possible.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to carry all but the experimental farm item.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Reserving that item for a general discussion on any other item?

Mr. FISHER. Certainly, any question any hon. gentleman wishes to ask on any other item may be asked upon that.

Mr. LAKE. Any other item that has not already been carried or discussed?

Mr. FISHER. On any other of the items, except those which we have discussed, any hon. gentleman may ask any question when the experimental farm item comes up.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Item 42 stands.

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then I understand that it will be quite in order to discuss any of these subjects?

Mr. FISHER. Any one of these items which have been carried just now.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose it will be understood that any item which any hon. gentleman wishes to bring up and discuss will be discussed on this item which is allowed to stand?

Mr. FISHER. Not the ones which have been passed and discussed.

ROYAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. McCRANEY moved that Bill (No. 177) respecting the Royal Victoria Insurance Company and to change its name to the Royal Life Insurance Company of Canada be read the first time.

Mr. LENNOX. This is a Bill in reference to which quite a number of gentlemen in this House have instructions. It is a matter that there is a very great deal of feeling about. I have already brought this to the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, and I do not think it ought to pass to-night. I think it ought to stand over. It is a matter of very great importance. It is an effort to change the name of the Royal Victoria Insurance Company to the Royal Life Insurance Company.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the almost invariable practice with a Bill coming from the Senate is to place it upon the Order Paper for the first reading; otherwise, it cannot get into the possession of the House. It does not commit any body to anything. I have no knowledge of the Bill but I do not think that we should refuse to give it its first reading.

Mr. LENNOX. If it will come up again.

Mr. FIELDING. It will be put on the Order Paper and be reached with Private Bills in due course.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the object of the Bill?

Mr. McCRANEY. I have no personal knowledge of the Bill. I am moving it in a formal way to get it on the Order Paper.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 178) for the relief of John Wake.—Mr. McCraney.

SECOND READINGS.

Mr. McCRANEY moved that Bill (No. 166) respecting the Central Railway Company of Canada, Bill (No. 171) respecting the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company and Bill (No. 176) to incorporate the St. Maurice and Eastern Railway Company be placed upon the Order Paper for second reading at the next sitting of the House.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. May I ask the hon. gentleman who introduces this motion to explain about the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company. Is that the railway that we were discussing here to-day?

Mr. McCRANEY. I have no personal knowledge of the company.

Motion agreed to.

MANITOBA AND NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. FIELDING. We have received a message from the Senate calling our attention to the fact that an error was made in a Bill which has been transmitted to this House. They have asked that the clerk of the Senate may be permitted to make a correction in the Bill rather than the Bill itself should be recalled. I understand that there is a precedent for that course. I therefore beg to move:

That leave be given to the Clerk of the Senate to make amendments to the Bill (No. 81) an Act respecting the Manitoba and Northwestern Railway Company of Canada, as desired in their message of this day, and that a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours therewith.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Are they in the habit of making typographical errors in the Senate as well?

Mr. FIELDING. Some one stated yesterday that that sort of thing is in the air. I may say that the message requests this House to permit the clerk of the Senate to correct a clerical error in the amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 81) by substituting the words 'section 9' for the words 'clause 8,' and also to substitute the word 'are' for the word 'is.'

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. These are clerical errors, not typographical.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 175) respecting the Canadian Patriotic Fund.—Sir Frederick Borden.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. At the morning sitting it is intended to take up a number of Bills on the Order Paper.

Mr. LAKE. The Immigration Bill?

Mr. FIELDING. The Prime Minister requested me to speak of Bills generally. I cannot say as to the Bills that may be controversial. At the afternoon sitting the House will be moved into Committee of Supply, so that the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) may have an opportunity to bring some labour matters before the attention of the House, as to which he made a request to the government some days ago. In the evening session, as already understood, private Bills will be taken up for the whole evening.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I thought the motion of the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) had the right of way.

Mr. FIELDING. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) is content to let the Empire slumber for a few days longer.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12 o'clock midnight.
