House of Commons Debates

FIRST SESSION—ELEVENTH PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 6, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 123) respecting a certain Letter Patent of the American Barlock Company.—Mr. Macdonell.

Bill (No. 124) respecting the Hudson Bay and Western Railway Company.—Mr. Miller.

Bill (No. 125) respecting the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Miller.

Bill (No. 126) concernant le Chemin de fer de Colonisation de Joliette et du lac Manuan.—Mr. Dubeau.

BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved that from and after this day, the 6th of April, to the end of the session, government Orders have precedence on Monday immediately after questions to be put by members.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose that does not cut out members' opportunity to get at private Bills?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Private Bills remain first order.

Motion agreed to.

THE LOGBERG PRINTING COMPANY.

Hon. CHAS. MURPHY (Secretary of State) presented the return to an order of the House, showing amount of money paid to the Logberg Printing Company. He said: This return is the one that should have been presented on March 26 last. The one then presented was styled 'supplementary.' The one now presented includes the amount of the return presented on March 26 last.

PRIVILEGE—PURCHASES IN MARINE AND FISHERIES DEPARTMENT.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to raise a question of privilege. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), in speaking the other day, stated that the Prime Minister had allowed me to put my hand in the public chest and spend money for the purchase of one ladies' cloak, seven ladies' blouses and eight ladies' costumes. I was greatly surprised the other day when I heard my hon. friend the member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) use the following language in a speech which he was then making in the House. I will quote from this speech and I will put before the House the evidence which I have before me in order that we may ascertain whether the charge which has been made against me is well founded or not. The hon. member, as reported at page 4019 of 'Hansard,' spoke as follows:—

> I want to ask the minister how much mud this expenditure took out of the ship channel? The money is charged to the ship channel. He will find these accounts in the Auditor General's Report at page O—163:
> 7 ladies blouses at $13.
> Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.
> Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I am surprised that the right hon. Prime Minister can laugh at that. He is the trustee of the people of this country, and yet he will allow one of his ministers to put his hand in the public chest and spend money like this,
> 1 ladies cloak.. .. .. $25
> 8 ladies costumes, each.. 30
> The total of these accounts is $744.
> An hon. MEMBER. Who were the ladies?
> Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I do not know.

Then he goes on at page 4020:

> The Prime Minister laughed so hard that he did not hear what I read to-night, but I ask why we bought eight ladies costumes at $30 each which are charged to the ship channel?

If I remember aright the hon. member was then quoting the list of seven ladies blouses, one ladies cloak and eight ladies costumes from the Auditor General's Report. There is an item in the Auditor General's Report amounting to $744.50 and corresponding exactly with the amount which was mentioned by the hon. gentleman in his speech. The item is as follows:

De Tonnancour, L. C., Monl: caps, 28; blouses, 6 at $13.

Not ladies' blouses but purely and simply.

1 cloak at $25.

Not one ladies cloak as he said.

Costumes,——

Not ladies' costumes, but costumes.

—8 at $30; overcoats, 3 at $32, 9 at $25; pants and sweaters, 5 at $10.50.

There is no reference, as you see, to ladies costumes, to ladies blouses. I did not have the Auditor General's Report with me at the time. I suppose my hon. friend will apologize for me to the officers of my department whom I happened to meet the morning after the hon. gentleman made his remarks and with whom I remonstrated with regard to the purchase of these ladies' blouses. Of course, when I saw the hon. gentleman reading from a book I thought he was reading correctly, I took his word for it and I remonstrated with the officers. What did I find, as the officers immediately informed me, that this was absolutely erroneous. There were no ladies' costumes, no ladies' blouses, no anything purchased for ladies. It was all a part of the imagination of my hon. friend. In order to complete the record I will lay before the House the accounts themselves. They are in French and I will read them in French.

Mr. J. D. REID. Read them in English too.

Mr. BRODEUR. They are as follows:

Montreal, 12 août 1907.

Août	12—9 pardessus à $25	$225 00
"	12—8 costumes à $30	240 00
'	12—5 pants and sweaters à $10.50	52 50
"	casquettes	24 50
"	12—1 pardessus	32 00
"	12—1 pardessus	32 00
"	12—1 pardessus	32 00
"	12—1 manteau	25 00
"	12—1 coiffure	3 50
"	12—6 blouses	78 00
	Total	$744 50

Again there is no reference at all in these accounts to ladies' costumes, or ladies' blouses or ladies dresses. The translation which was made by the Auditor-General was not absolutely correct but I will not say that it was incorrect. At all events what I take exception to is the fact that my hon. friend has thought fit to charge me before the House with having purchased ladies' dresses, when, in the book from which he was then reading, these words were not included. I hope my hon. friend will take the first oportunity of withdrawing the charge which he has made against me and if he does so it will prevent him and some of his friends from going into the country and trying to state that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been purchasing ladies' dresses. I may say for the information of my hon. friend that these blouses, costumes, overcoats and cloaks were for the use of the sailors and that we have been in the habit of purchasing these articles for years. I hope my hon. friend will be kind enough to withdraw what he said.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat surprised this morning when I received the following letter:

Office of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Ottawa, 6th April, 1909.

Geo. Taylor, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Taylor,—I beg to notify you that I intend to bring before the House to-day as a question of privilege, when the orders of the day are called, the charge that you made against me in your speech the other day to the effect that I had put my hand in the public chest for the purchase of a lady's cloak and ladies' costumes.

Believe me,
Yours sincerely,
(Sgd.) L. P. BRODEUR.

In speaking the other day I made use of the following language:

I want to ask the minister how much mud this expenditure took out of the ship channel? The money is charged to the ship channel. He will find these accounts in the Auditor General's Report at page O—163:

7 ladies blouses at $13.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I am surprised that the right hon. Prime Minister can laugh at that. He is the trustee of the people of this country, and yet he will allow one of his ministers to put his hand in the public chest and spend money like this.

I said nothing personal against the minister for spending money for his own use or for the country's use. I had been talking about the sailors being supplied with three dress suits at $40 apiece.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. If the minister does not want this debate to be continued he will call off the bull dogs that set up a row every time I talk.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order, the hon. gentleman will have to withdraw that expression.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I will withdraw the word 'bull dogs' and say their supporters. They are acting like that

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I want to be courteous to the House and to the hon. gentlemen and I want to be treated that way, Mr. Speaker. If hon. gentlemen want to get up a row the same as they got up on Friday night we can have it out.

Mr. FISHER. I call the hon. gentleman to order. He is using threats towards members of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. No hon. gentleman has the right to use threatening language in any form whatever.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. There is no threat about that.

Mr. FISHER. I ask your ruling, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman has made a threat to this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I will withdraw it then. I always obey the Chair.

1 ladies' cloak.. .. .. $25
8 ladies' costumes, each.. 30
The total of these accounts——

I did not want to read all the items as I had given the page of the Auditor-General's Report—— —is $744.

The first item is caps, and the item does not say whether they are ladies or gentlemen's caps, but any one would assume that they are caps for the sailors. The next item is seven ladies blouses——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The word 'ladies' does not appear in the Auditor General's Report.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. But, as everybody knows, the Auditor General condenses his report, and, as any one familiar with the trade knows, as every merchant in this House knows—I have been in the mercantile trade 25 years and will make this statement—if the minister himself or any one will walk into Bryson and Graham's store or Ross', or Murphy's and ask to see blouses, he will be told to take the elevator and go to the first floor.

Mr. FISHER. Too thin.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The Minister of Agriculture knows nothing about it. He has never been in the mercantile trade. But I will leave it to any merchant on any side of the House, that if a person inquires for a blouse, he means a lady's blouse and nothing else. And when he inquires for a cloak, he means a lady's cloak, for that is a trade term. When he inquires for a costume, they will show him to the ladies' department. If these men gave theatrical performances and required costumes, they would have to specify actors' or actresses' costumes, but the term 'costume' is taken in the trade to mean ladies' costume, so that I was justified in using the word 'ladies.' A couple of years ago when I was discussing the purchase of some dickeys for the sailors, my hon. friend came back the second time and explained what the French meaning of the word 'dickey' is. He said:

My hon. friend found fault also with the cost of dickeys. Does he know exactly what a dickey is? I am afraid he does not. I may give him this definition: it is the correct term for the white flannel front that is part of the uniform of a sailor.

I tell the hon. minister that that is not correct.

Mr. BRODEUR. I understood my hon. friend to have withdrawn the word 'ladies' and to have said that it was not in the Auditor General's Report from which he read.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I do not think the minister is very anxious to expedite the proceedings of the session or he would not have brought up these trifles before the House, but as he has done so, I am entitled to give an explanation, and my explanation is the quotation I have read from the 'Hansard' of 1908, page 1082. When the minister contradicted me then, I did not think it worth while to take up the time of the House by replying. A dickey is a false shirt front made of linen, yet the minister said it is part of a sailor's uniform. I do not know that his explanation to-day is any better, and I think the best thing we could do would be to have the accounts produced at the next meeting of the Public Accounts Committee and call witnesses and find out by whom these blouses were purchased. But so far as regards the use of the word 'ladies,' that does not appear in the Auditor General's Report.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. But I used the word to show what the goods were according to the usage of the trade. Then my hon. friend said that he asked his officers and they told him that they never bought a dollar's worth for ladies. Well, I can go through the Public Accounts and find that any quantity of stuff was purchased for ladies and name the items.

An hon. MEMBER. For the 'Arctic'?

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. No, not ladies' hats on the 'Arctic,' but on the steamers and in the channel. In these are goods charged for the ladies. The hon. minister has laid down a challenge, and I will produce the items of ladies' goods from the Auditor General's Report. Then I will ask the hon. minister to apologize to the House for challenging my accuracy with regard to items which I quote from the Auditor General's Report. He could have been much better employed than in bringing up this matter before the House.

Mr. BRODEUR. I invite my hon. friend to make all the investigations he wants and he will find that the statement he made is not correct. He will find that all those goods were purchased for the sailors.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I say it is a waste of money. We might as well throw the money into the river as buy 8 blouses at $30 each for use of men working on the steamers and dredges in the ship canals. Then cloaks at $30. But cloaks are only worn by ladies. You do not buy cloaks for men working on dredges. I am surprised that the minister can get up and justify these items as a proper expenditure of the people's money.

CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINERS.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). After this grave and delicate matter has been disposed of, I would like to ask if the right hon. the Prime Minister has decided whether or not it is the duty of the government to bring down according to law, the report of the Civil Service examiners. I have asked three or four times for that report and it has not yet come down. In the meantime, I have inquiries from many sources as to the rules and regulations, which I cannot answer because nothing has yet been brought down.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There has been some misapprehension between the Civil Service Commissioners and the Secretary of State. I shall try to give my hon. friend an answer to-morrow.

PORT STANLEY PIER.

Mr. T. W. CROTHERS (West Elgin). I wish to call the attention of the government, and especially the Minister of Public Works, to information I have from a responsible citizen of the village of Port Stanley, to the effect that the wages of the labourers employed on the government pier there are three months in arrears. I had occasion to draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works earlier in the session to the condition of affairs there. I want to do him the justice to say that he very promptly saw that the wages then in arrears were paid. But if the information I have to-day is correct, the wages are again in arrears to the extent of three months, and I would ask the hon. Minister if it be the policy of his department that we should give him a reminder that these wages are due. If that be the policy of the department, I will make a note of it in my diary, and will see that he is reminded every month. If the information is correct—I have it from a responsible man living in the village—I would ask the Minister of Public Works if he would see that these men are paid. It is too bad that labouring men should have to go without their wages for three months especially in the winter season.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have received no information in regard to the wages of labourers being in arrears at Port Stanley, but I will look into the matter.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Hon. J. HAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. It is an innovation simply to read the number of each item and the amount. It is a rule of the House that the item itself must be read.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is mistaken as respects recent years. In my experience the practice has been precisely as at present. The presumption is that if any hon. gentlemen wishes to speak on any particular item, he will take note of it, and deal with it when it comes.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have been trying to find in the estimates the different items, and I cannot tell what we are passing. I see no way of finding the items.

Mr. FIELDING. There is no real difficulty, although it involves a little trouble. If the hon. gentleman will consult the Votes and Proceedings for each day on which the committee sat he will find the items.

Mr. J. HAGGART. The rule of the House is that the item shall be read, although that rule has not been adhered to.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am informed by the two previous Speakers that the custom with them was to read the amount. If the hon. gentleman insists on having the item read he is entitled to it.

Mr. FOSTER. The rule of the House is that in order to inform the House the subject matter shall be read out as well as the amount. That system, however, was found to entail great waste of time and in order to facilitate the transaction of business the practice has been adopted of simply reading the number of the resolution and the amounts of the several items. I would be disposed to adhere to that rule, and hon. members would understand what was under discussion by referring to the Votes and Proceedings.

Kingston Royal Military College, additional accommodation, $57,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I move that this item of $57,000 be reduced to $37,000.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. EDWARDS. I beg to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the item of $15,000 for a veterinary hospital which, I understand, was to be struck out.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that was struck out in the committee.

Mr. EDWARDS. It was voted in the committee and the minister said he would strike it out on concurrence.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thank my hon. friend (Mr. Edwards) for calling my attention to it. My recollection was that it had been considered in committee and had been struck out. But I will move now that the item be struck out.

Motion agreed to, item as amended concurred in.

Public Works—Chargeable to income—Harbours and rivers—New Brunswick—Richibucto cape—Breakwater wharf, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I move that this item be reduced from $10,000 to $5,000. The reason is that $5,000 is all we shall be able to spend to advantage this year.

Motion agreed to. Item as amended concurred in.

Department of Militia and Defence—Salaries, $111,690.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). I move in amendment that the words be added 'including the salary of C. L. Panet, $2,600.' There is no increase involved. The reason of the amendment is that the Auditor General will not pay the amount unless the name is mentioned. There is no provision under the new Civil Service law for private secretaries. This amount is precisely what has been paid, but it includes an amount of $500 for private secretary. I want these words added so that the salary can be paid.

Amendment agreed to.

Trent canal—construction, $1,000,000.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE moved that the item of $1,000,000 for Trent canal construction be reduced by whatever amount is contained therein for expenditure upon the Newmarket canal.

House divided on amendment.

SUPPLY BILL.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House went into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. FIELDING. The officials of the House, in accordance with the usual practice, have collected all the items which have been passed through their various stages in Committee of Supply and in concurrence, and, having made the necessary additions, have prepared resolutions to give effect to the wish of the Committee of Supply. I therefore beg to move:

Resolved, that towards making good the Supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending the 31st of March, 1909, the sum of $3,371,935.82 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING. I beg to move further:

Resolved, that towards making good the Supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending the 31st of March, 1910, the sum of $45,772,253.17 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolutions reported, read the first and second time, and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 117), for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial years ending respectively March 31, 1909, and March 31, 1910. He said: This Bill has been prepared by the officials of the House, following the usual course, and I think the House may fairly assume that it is correct, and pass it through the various stages.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC LOAN.

House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed resolutions of Mr. Fielding, to authorize the Governor in Council to advance by way of loan to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company a sum not exceeding $10,000,000.

Mr. H. B. AMES (St. Antoine, Montreal). On Tuesday last the Finance Minister, on behalf of the government, presented to this House for consideration and discussion a resolution, the opening words of which are as follows:

That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to advance by way of loan to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company a sum not exceeding ten million dollars for the purpose of aiding the company in the completion of the construction of the prairie section of the western division of the National Transcontinental Railway,

It is not necessary that I should read the whole resolution inasmuch as it will form the substance of the discussion upon which we are again entering. Although it may be perhaps unnecessary still I desire very briefly to review the historical aspect of this case. In 1903 the government came to this House and to the country with a proposition for building a transcontinental railway from Moncton to Prince Rupert. This railroad was divided into two portions, the eastern and the western division. The eastern division was to be built by the government and leased; that proposition is not to-day under discussion although it would form an ample subject for discussion in this House and on some future occasion we will doubtless deal with it. The western section is the one which is especially dealt with by this resolution, and I intend to confine my remarks to that portion of this great undertaking. The western division, as is well known, is divided into two parts, the prairie section, extending from Winnipeg to Wolfe creek, 916 miles, and the mountain section, extending from Wolfe creek to Prince Rupert, 836 miles. The terms under which these two sections are to be constructed, although similar are not identical. The prairie section, which was considered to be the easier portion as regards construction was to be built by the railroad company, the Grand Trunk Pacific. They were in the original proposition to be given the proceeds of $13,000 worth of bonds pere mile. This, however, as we know, was altered in 1904 so that the company should receive in net cash $13,000 per mile towards the construction of this prairie section. Six years have passed away and matters have changed greatly; to-day we have a resolution affirming that it is expedient that this company which was to have constructed the prairie section without any further assistance than a guarantee to the extent of $13,000 per mile, is coming to us and asking for additional help to the extent of $10,000,000, and this resolution, instead of opening with the formula that it is expedient, should, I think, read that it has become a regrettable necessity to authorize the Governor in Council to advance by way of loan this $10,000,000 It has been incorrectly asserted by some speakers in the House that the opposition have assumed and maintain a position of unequivocal hostility to this loan. That is what the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) endeavoured to put into the mouths of opposition members, and it was with those sentiments that he endeavoured to credit us. We must be permitted, I think, to make our own expression of our position in this transaction. Our attitude is that we are not opposed to the loan of the $10,000,000 if the claim be placed upon the proper basis, but that we must, as His Majesty's loyal opposition, have the right, nay it is our duty before granting our consent to such an unexpected and unusual proposition that we should be furnished with the fullest possible information as to how this regrettable miscalculation occurred, that we should be assured that the company has done its utmost before coming to the government for assistance, that we should be satisfied that the security which is offered is the very best that is obtainable, and the best that the Finance Minister, the guardian of this country, has been able to secure from these borrowers. Finally, I think, it is our duty to suggest, when the proper stage arrives, some amendments by which the Bill can be improved, bearing in mind the fact that we desire to prevent a repetition of the experience we are at present going through. No evidence has yet been adduced that the government has been at all severe upon this company, that they have been holding back when sanction was asked for this loan. It therefore behooves the opposition to provide the safeguards necessary to protect the public interest.

Were the matter not so serious it would certainly appear almost ludicrous to make a comparison between the promises that this government made in 1903 and the events as they have turned out. I venture to say that no body of men in Canada have ever made such an utterly hopeless miscalculation as has been made in respect of this national undertaking. In the 'Hansard' of 1903, we find passage after passage in reference to the eastern and western divisions, in the speeches of the Finance Minister and the Prime Minister upon which parliament granted assent to this proposition, and it was upon these promises that the country gave its concurrence. It is easy to prove that the promises that were then made have not been implemented in the slightest degree. Turn for example to a few of these extracts. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, on July 30, 1903, spoke as follows:

> I need not dwell upon the importance of this covenant on the part of the company. It practically takes away from the guarantee of the government all risk. There is not a dollar to be advanced by the government. We do give our credit and nothing else. And our guarantee of seventy-five per cent of the construction of the road is to be supplemented by the credit and all the backing of the Grand Trunk Company itself.

Mark you the Prime Minister says that not a dollar is to be advanced by this government. The Finance Minister, speaking with reference to the prairie section on August 12, 1903, said:

> With respect to the western division, we guarantee three-quarters of the cost, not exceeding a certain sum. Our guarantee—not the cost of the road, but our guarantee—is limited to $13,000 per mile on the prairie section and $30,000 per mile on the mountain section. If the road costs less than the figures on which these guarantees are based, we only guarantee three-quarters of that cost, but if the road costs more—and some hon. gentlemen argue that it will be very expensive—we do not increase our proportion, but the company must provide the increased cost without limit so that the road may be finished. The Grand Trunk Pacific agrees to do these things.

Again, the Finance Minister in that same speech spoke as follows:

> As respects the prairie section, we assume no obligation whatever, except the guaranteeing of the bonds, but my arguments are based upon the assumption that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company will carry out its undertaking, and I think that it has given a sufficient guarantee of its ability and good faith in the large sums it is putting into the enterprise. Assuming that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company fulfils its obligations under the contract, and that we shall only be called upon to do exactly what we have agreed to, we assume no obligation in respect to the prairie section, because the Grand Trunk Pacific Company agree that, from beginning to the end, they will pay the interest on that section.

And so, as I say, it was upon representations such as these made in this House and before the country that consent was granted to enter into this contract with this Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. It was distinctly stated that the prairie section would not cost the country one dollar, but all that we were to do was to give a guarantee which we should never be called upon to make good, to the extent of the first $13,000 per mile which would go into the construction of that road. And now we find that there has come a letter to the government, a letter which appeared shortly after the last general election, which tells what the truth is in 1908—a truth very different from the predictions made in 1903. I cannot but wonder whether that letter came forth spontaneously on the date on which it was written, I cannot but wonder whether the government had any previous inkling as to the demand that was about to be made upon them—and I cannot but wonder whether there was any agreement between the government and the writer of that letter prior to the last general election which might account for the excessive activity of the Grand Trunk, activity directed all in favour of one of two great political parties in this country. That is something that we would like to know about before this discussion is over—just when it was that the Finance Minister and his colleagues first had word to the effect that additional assistance would be necessary to this company, that the company would ask something far and beyond what was ever expected under the original contract. Well, we remember the original contract. We remember the estimated cost of the prairie section was from $18,000 to $20,000 per mile. But what does the letter of Mr. Hays disclose? It admits that, according to the claim of the company, that road has cost $35,000 per mile. Thirty-five thousand per mile for a road built over the prairie portions of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Instead of having, as was expected, a capital expenditure under $20,000,000, we have a capital expenditure of over $32,000,000; and that represents merely the cost of the road and does not include anything for equipment of rolling stock—a road that is not prepared to carry traffic.

Now, our first inquiry should be as to what has actually gone into that road. Here is what we are told has gone into it: The proceeds of the three per cent government guarantee bonds, $11,908,000, representing cash to the extent of $13,000 per mile, has first gone into that construction. We have been told that a second issue of bonds took place on the undertaking of the Grand Trunk Pacific, with the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway, and that this second issue of bonds resulted in putting $9,602,000 into that prairie section. We have heard that the Grand Trunk themselves claim to have advanced $7,094,000. And, last of all, we are informed that it will require $3,594,000 in addition to complete the construction of the prairie section. So that, all told, $32,197,351 has gone into, or will go into, that road, including interest up to January 1, 1910, if the estimate of the company is to be accepted as reliable. That, you will see, is $35,000 per mile—$35,000 per mile for the road without one locomotive, one car, or any attempt at rolling stock equipment. Other prairie roads, the history of which is easily obtainable, have been built for $15,000 to $20,000 a mile—so that this road has cost, or will cost, double the price of these others.

Now, this road has not been under any special disadvantage. It is impossible to claim for it the consideration that might have been claimed for the first transcontinental railroad. The country to-day is a very different country from what it was in 1881. This railroad, in its prairie section, does not pass through a wild and uninhabited wilderness. All the way from Winnipeg to Edmonton it goes over fertile and inhabited country. There is not a single point on the line between these divisional places where the construction work has not been readily accessible. To bring in materials, to bring in supplies, has been a very simple matter for this company in constructing the prairie section. Supplies in the way of food for the men working on the road, of oats and hay for the horses, and all that is required can, to a very considerable extent, be obtained to-day along the line as it is being built. And, when you think also of the great increase in population, the large amount of labour that is made available, you cannot but conclude, if you compare the conditions under which this prairie road has been built—with the conditions under which the pioneer prairie roads were built—that this road had every advantage which would make towards economy, while the early roads had every disadvantage which would make toward high expense. And yet the early roads have been built for a far smaller figure than the amount, which, it is claimed, has gone into the prairie section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad.

But it is claimed that this is a superior road. Mr. Hays, in his letter, gives by way of excuse that the government has forced him to build a superior road. Well, that was in the original contract; it was perfectly well understood in advance. It was thoroughly understood, when the estimates were given of this road, that a superior road was demanded, was expected, was intended. But I do not think we have as yet had submitted to this House any proof of the fact that this is a superior road. Have we been shown as to grades, for example, how much of that road is comparatively level? Have we been shown what is the ruling grade or the maximum grade? And, as to the curves of the road, have we been shown how much of the road is straight, what are the degrees of curvature and what are the sharpest curves? All these factors of railroad building can be reduced to mathematical statements, and can be submitted; and it should be possible for the government, in making this claim, to be able to demonstrate, by facts, figures and profiles, that this road is really superior. I venture to say that if to-day that road were in full running order, a load of forty cars could not be hauled over it from Edmonton to Winnipeg any more cheaply per mile than a similar train can be hauled from Calgary to Winnipeg over the Canadian Pacific Railway, or down from Prince Albert by the Canadian Northern. And until that statement can be disproved I think it will have to stand; and it devolves upon the government, first of all, before they ask us to assist in paying the debts of a road costing $35,000 per mile, to show that we really have a superior road for our money. It is hard to believe that $35,000 per mile has really gone into that railway. It is hard to believe it for more reasons than one. It is hard to believe it when we think of the experience that we ourselves had in this House only two years ago.

I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that in my opinion it is a necessary prequisite to any consideration of this demand for assistance that there should be prepared and submitted to this House a statement in detail of every item of expenditure which it is claimed has gone into the road, or will be required to complete the road, and that such a statement should be so prepared that it may be subject to audit, that it may be subject to examination, that it may be subject to study and criticism by one of the committees of this House. A few years ago we purchased from the Grand Trunk Pacific Company their surveys north of Lake Superior. How was it done? We appointed a board of three auditors, outside, independent men; they went down to Montreal, they went through every account, checked every statement of expense, and they satisfied themselves that the $350,000 we were called upon to pay for these surveys, did represent money that had actually been expended and for which we had value received. Is that going to be done in this case? Are we to have a similar audit before we are called upon to pay off the debts of this company on the prairie section of the road?

Now, among the papers that were subsequently brought down when we asked for details in connection with these proposals, are two important letters. These letters were produced on the demand that was made by the leader of the opposition, who wished to have a detailed statement of the amounts that had gone into the construction of this road. We find that the assistant deputy Minister of Finance, on the 26th of March, 1909, writes to the departmental auditor of the Department of Railways and Canals, and states among other things:

Mr. Borden also asked for detailed statements of the prairie and mountain sections expenditures. Please give such details as are available.

In reply to that Mr. Bell writes a letter, from which I will quote the major portion:

For your information I may state that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company have submitted monthly, statements in detail, under the different headings, as laid down in the standard classification, showing total cost to them of the mountain and prairie sections. From time to time, as these statements were received, I went to Montreal and by personal examination of each voucher and of the books of the company, have satisfied myself as to their correctness. Bearing in mind the interpretation of the words 'construction work' as defined by article 1, section 5 of the mortgage and schedule (A) to the Acts 4 & 5 Edward VII., chapter 98, certain vouchers have been disallowed by me as not coming within the meaning of 'construction work.' Certain other vouchers have been disallowed, not because they did not come within the meaning of 'construction work,' as defined by the mortgage, but because the company failed to produce sufficient detailed proof, to justify me, in my opinion, in passing these vouchers, as I have always taken the stand that burden of proof lies with the company. It is probable that when further promised details are obtained these items will be passed, some of these are of considerable amount. I have tried to make it clear, in the above, that while the cost of construction as arrived at from results of my audit, is considerably lower than that submitted by the company, this is the result of the company having to include in the cost of the railroad, certain charges which are legitimate from their standpoint, but which are not, in my opinion, so far properly vouched or are not permissible, under the definition of 'construction work' referred to.

So we see that in the company's estimate of the cost of construction there are a number of items which are not properly vouched for, and which are not properly chargeable to construction work. When we read the statement that is attached by Mr. Bell to that letter, we find that the cost as submitted by the company up to the 31st of December, 1908, on the prairie section, is $27,031,453; but that the amount allowed to December 31, 1908, is $26,256,445, a difference of $775,000 between the amount which the Grand Trunk Pacific claim as having been spent on that prairie section, and the amount which the auditor of the department feels he can, under the law, pass as legitimate accounts. Now remember that is pro rated for the prairie section, and does not include that which is chargeable on the mountain section. In that $775,000 we find preliminary and legal expenses, $303,000, which the auditor cannot pass; and in the mountain section $112,000 which the auditor cannot pass. Now we have had some experience in parliament with items that could not be accepted and passed by the auditor, for it will be remembered that two years ago we had a discussion in this House along those lines. When the Grand Trunk Pacific came in with their first series of vouchers and their first demand for release of funds that had been raised under the three per cent loan, it will be remembered that the first statement they presented contained $162,000 of accounts which the auditor would not pass. We remember too that this had been passed through several departments before it was finally blocked by the Finance Minister and his department, and that statement was given back to the company and was destroyed, and a revised statement was presented leaving some $80,000 of the original statement out of the second statement. Now when the second statement came back we inadvertently obtained a copy of it, and we found in that second statement many items which it would be very difficult to classify as properly belonging to the cost of construction. We found charges by Mr. Wainwright for coming to Ottawa, very heavy charges for very short trips; we found money paid to Sir Adolphe Caron for services which it is difficult to appreciate, we found frequent sums paid to H. B. McGiverin, and we have never yet learned what services he rendered to entitle him thereto. There were items, mind you, that were presented a second time, and a second time rejected. Who can tell what were the items that were rejected in the first place which the company did not have the face to ask payment for a second time?

We undertook to follow that up in the Public Accounts Committee, and what was the result? Our chief witness, after being subpœnaed hurriedly left for the Mediterranean; parts of the statements were found to have been burned; the result was that the committee finally decided—and I may say that I think they decided rightly—that inasmuch as no money had been actually paid on that $162,000, therefore the Public Accounts Committee could not investigate any further. That may be outside the functions of the Public Accounts Committee, but we asked that a special committee of this House should be permitted to look into it, and that request of ours was refused in the House.

Now, what did Mr. Power say, who appeared as representing the accounting department of the Grand Trunk? He said that every item of that $162,000 still remained on the books of the Grand Trunk as a claim against the Grand Trunk Pacific, which they regarded as valid, and payment of which they some day expected to obtain. Is it any wonder that we are suspicious when we come to look over the statement as the company makes it and compare it with the statement as the auditor passed it, and we find a difference of $992,000, a difference of $775,000 on the prairie section, a large difference on the mountain section as well, and that the preliminary and general expenditures, which were $162,000 in 1905, have now grown to $303,000 on the prairie section alone? Now, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we are being asked to reimburse to the Grand Trunk $7,094,000 which they are allowed to have advanced, which sum avowedly contains every claim that they have against the Grand Trunk Pacific, how can we be asked in this House to borrow money to loan to them to pay accounts which we have refused repeatedly to pay out of the guarantee funds that have been raised?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is surely mistaken. Not one dollar can be paid out of this fund except upon the certificate of the engineer that the amounts are properly chargeable to the construction account.

Mr. AMES. Very well, then we must look elsewhere. Where is that claim of $162,000 found on the books of the Grand Trunk Railway Company still against the Grand Trunk Pacific and how will that claim be satisfied?

Mr. FIELDING. It will not be satisfied out of these moneys.

Mr. AMES. It is to prevent this that I want the minister to lay upon the table of the House a statement of all the items and vouchers that have gone into this $35,000 a mile.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friends have asked for heaps of information and it has all been brought down. Every request that they have made has been complied with.

Mr. AMES. The minister has not yet submitted to the House a statement of the items which bring the cost of the prairie section up to $35,000 a mile.

Mr. FIELDING. We have placed on the table of the House the report of the engineer of the government, stating that he had examined the returns and that he had found that this is a correct valuation.

Mr. AMES. It must not be forgotten that that same engineer found no difficulty in passing the amounts given as composing that item of $162,000.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, he is rather a reputable engineer.

Mr. AMES. I think that the demand we are making is a perfectly legitimate demand, and a demand which is a necessary prerequisite to any consideration of this transaction. We know there are claims on the books of the Grand Trunk against the Grand Trunk Pacific which we have refused to pay. We now ask an assurance that there will be placed upon the table of the House a statement that will show the moneys that have gone into that road upon which we are asked to take a fourth mortgage. We want to know how much of real value has gone into that road. We want to know how much of the $7,094,000 represent labour, material and actual service. We want to know how much was spent in lobbying the Bill through this parliament. That is altogether a different matter and that is why, when we are taking a fourth mortgage on this road, we want to be satisfied that the property has the valuation that the company claims for it and that it represents dollar for dollar actual service rendered properly chargeable to construction.

Mr. FIELDING. That will have to be properly certified or not one dollar can be paid.

Mr. AMES. Well, let us have the statement. There is no difficulty about that. The vouchers are all in the vaults of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. There should be no difficulty about having a statement prepared showing how this $27,031,453, spent up to December 31, has been made up and how this $32,197,351 which it is expected will be spent by the time the prairie section is completed is arrived at. Can we have that statement? Now, there is some further information that I think we are entitled to. We find that 10,000 shares of the common stock of the company have passed into the hands of certain individuals. These individuals are alleged to have paid for that stock about $20 per share and it is said that $205,200 has thus been paid in and that this money has been used for the general purpose of the company. Can we have a statement of what general purposes of the company have been served by that? Are we not entitled to know also whether that money has gone into the road? Are we not entitled to know whether it has added value to the property upon which we are asked to take a fourth mortgage? We want to know if there is anything tangible to show for it. Has it gone into the property upon which we are asked to lend money? I think that is something we have a right to know. So long as important information of this character is not forthcoming, so long——

Mr. FIELDING. Is my hon. friend quite fair in suggesting that important information is not forthcoming? Hon. gentlemen have asked many questions bearing upon this whole matter, and, to the best of my knowledge and belief, every question that they have put before the House has been answered. Why does my hon. friend now say that there is any effort to prevent the information from being brought down?

Mr. AMES. I never spoke of preventing the information from being brought down. But I think the fact that the minister has brought down certain information does not necessarily close the door to a demand for further information, and in this particular case we are indicating additional information that we want before the Bill comes up for final discussion. The minister does not expect to pass this Bill to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly not.

Mr. AMES. He does not expect to pass this Bill for a fortnight and he will have ample time to satisfy our legitimate curiosity upon several other points of the Bill when it comes up for discussion, and so let me repeat what I have been saying as to the balance of the information which we will want—information as to the alleged superior character of the road of which we yet have no knowledge and information, as to the items which make up the expenditure at the rate of $35,000 per mile and information as to the application that has been made of the proceeds of the common stock that has been sold. Until we have that information can the government blame us if we say we are not prepared to give to their Bill the full consideration which it deserves, and if we say that in the meantime we must hold ourselves open to take such a course of action as may seem wise to us when all the information that we desire has been submitted to us?

Now, in anticipation of the committee stage of the Bill, I have a few further observations to make upon the balance of the resolution. The hon. Minister of Finance, in presenting this resolution to the House, characterized it as being 'rather in the nature of a banking transaction.' He undertook to persuade the House that the government was simply acting as the banker for the company and was doing what a bank might expect to do under similar circumstances. Now, I want to subject this banker's conduct to a little analysis to see whether it is the same line that would likely be pursued by the managing director of a large banking institution with the concurrence of his board of directors. Let us apply the banking tests to this transaction. The first consideration which a banking institution deals with when it is asked to make a loan is to find out whether it has the money to lend. Have we the money to lend? Well, hardly. It is one matter if you have money lying idle or out at a very low rate of interest and you are taking up this money and lending it on investment—that is one sort of proposition—but when you have to go and borrow money in order to lend it again that is a transaction of an entirely different character. Only a little while ago we floated a loan of £6,000,000 in London. Hardly had the money been transferred to our credit before two-thirds of it was absorbed by the outstanding floating obligations, and I venture to say that of the balance of that loan very little is now in the treasury of Canada. Can the minister now take $10,000,000 out of what he borrowed in February last? I doubt it. Probably at the expiration of this session he will have to put his hat on, pack his grip and start on the weary road to Europe in order to visit the various financial centres and once again make his plea for financial assistance. I think the minister might almost take a permanent office in Europe at the present moment because he will probably be called upon to spend as much time upon the other side of the water as upon this.

Now, take the second consideration. If you want to do a banking business you are expected to do it at a profit. Banking institutions, as a rule, do not borrow in order to lend at a lower rate of interest than that at which they have borrowed. We do not, in this particular case, even get as much for the money as it costs us to borrow it. I am reminded of the story of a certain postmaster who, upon the change of government in 1896, received a large official envelope from Ottawa in which was a notification that he had been reappointed to the position of postmaster at, let us say, Smith's Cross Roads. In the letter that was the statement that the salary would remain as before, and the postmaster wrote back to the department somewhat along these lines: 'For twenty years past I have received no remuneration for my services. It is very kind of you to say that the salary will remain as before, for I should hate to have to pay anything for the privilege.' That is about the position of the government in this banking case. In fact the government is going to make a loan to the Grand Trunk Pacific, and to pay for the privilege of making it. Suppose—which of course the Finance Minister will admit is an impossible assumption—he should have $10,000,000 left from the loan he made in February. What did he pay for the £6,000,000 he borrowed at that time? He paid 4⅛ per cent for the money, all charges included. If we were in a position to lend the Grand Trunk Pacific $10,000,000 from this amount, we would be paying $412,500 per annum, and receiving $400,000 per annum, an annual loss of $12,500, or during the ten years of $125,000. In other words we are to pay $12,500 per year for the privilege of being the banker for this company, and in the ten years—because the two loans are concurrent—that would amount to $125,000. We might be willing to lend our money to the Grand Trunk Pacific at what it costs us, but when it comes to paying for the privilege of being banker for that company, that is drawing it a little strong. The least the Finance Minister should have done was to have stipulated that the company, to whose help we are coming, should pay what that assistance costs us.

There is another consideration. The Finance Minister says that we buy their bonds. Of course we do. Now the buying of bonds is a perfectly legitimate banking transaction. Banks are accustomed to do it, but they are careful only to buy them at the market price. We, however, are buying them at par. We are paying $100 cash for a $100 bond.

Mr. FIELDING. I did not use the word 'buying,' it would not be correct.

Mr. AMES. I think it occurs in my hon. friend's remarks, or in Mr. Hay's letter

Mr. FIELDING. We do not buy. We take them as collateral.

Mr. AMES. Our collateral security is the mortgage on the Grand Trunk Pacific and the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway. The bonds are what we take.

Mr. FIELDING. We do not buy them.

Mr. AMES. It is on those bonds and similar bonds that this company raised its previous loans. Their mortgage bonds floated a short time ago to raise money for the rolling stock, were sold at 90; and deducting expenses, they netted 87½. This company then, in its preceding issue of debentures, found it necessary to incur a debt of $8 in return for $7 in cash, thus making their bonds carry, on the actual cash received, a rate of interest of over 4½ per cent. We therefore are to pay for their bonds $10 to $12.50 per hundred over their market value and are to receive one half per cent less than the market rate of interest. We are giving the company a better rate of interest by one-half per cent than they were compelled to pay in their previous transactions. Does that seem such a banking transaction as would commend itself to a competent and prudent financier?

Now, I come to the question of security. What security have we? We have the bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific, which we are to receive at par. But what is there behind these bonds? There is, first of all, a mortgage on 'the undertaking, equipment and property tolls, rates and franchises of the company in respect of the said prairie section'; and then there is the 'guarantee as to the repayment of the principle and interest thereon by the Grand Trunk Railway. First, let us consider the value of the mortgage. In that connection the important point is how many prior liens there are, because our mortgage is subject to any prior lien. There are no less than three other lenders who rank before us on the self same property. Take the matter of prior mortgages, the resolution states that our claim will be 'subject to any prior liens on the property.' What are these prior liens? First comes our own claim of $13,000 per mile or $11,908,000. This is our claim on the prairie section. Then comes the Grand Trunk Pacific bonds, guaranteed by the Grand Trunk Railway. It took £2,100,000 of these to get the amount required, equivalent to $10,220,000, par valuation. These constitute a second mortgage on the property. Then comes the rolling stock loan of February last. The Grand Trunk Pacific was authorized to borrow $25,000,000 for the purpose of purchasing rolling stock, and of that amount they have issued bonds to the extent of £3,000,000 or $14,000,000. These form a third mortgage, and our mortgage comes fourth. Therefore, before we can file at all with our fourth mortgage, prior claims amounting to $36,728,000, represented by securities, must be satisfied. These are equivalent to $40,000 per mile which must be paid before we get anything at all.

Further than that, the terms of our fourth mortgage are not as favourable as those granted to some of its predecessors. For example, when the Grand Trunk Pacific undertook, with the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway, to raise money on its second mortgage, it stipulated that 'all the rights and franchises, equipment and property to be hereafter acquired by the Grand Trunk Pacific, &c.,' should be pledged for payment. There is nothing of that kind in our mortgage clause. So that the second mortgage covers a wider property than does ours. So that in return for our loan we are to get a fourth mortgage, and that mortgage has less security than those preceding it. Would that be considered a good banking transaction?

As to the other element, the Grand Trunk Railway guarantee, will that be of any value to us in the repayment of the principle? Has the Grand Trunk Railway hithereto paid the principal amounts they have borrowed with such unfailing regularity that their credit is unassailable? We know that since many years they have owed the government $15,000,000 and that we have not the slightest chance of ever getting the money. Does my hon. friend the Finance Minister regard the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway as to principal of any value whatever.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, we can take the bonds at any time and sell them. They can be sold on the market. My hon. friend has admitted they can be sold at 90.

Mr. AMES. I said that the third mortgage could be sold at 90.

Mr. FIELDING. It is the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway which gives them value. It is not the mortgage which gives them value. The guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway is worth more than the immediate mortgage.

Mr. AMES. In my opinion the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway is worth little as regards the redemption of the principal. How about the interest? My hon. friend endeavoured the other day to persuade us that there was a large surplus on which we would have the first claim in case there was default in meeting the interest. I have here the report of the Grand Trunk Railway for the last half year in the list which the minister gave us. I find that, according to the Grand Trunk Railway's statement for the first half of 1908, there were the following prior claims on the earnings of the road: Rents, interest on $120,000,000 of debentures stock and bonds, the Canada Atlantic deficiency, and the deficit on account of the Detroit, Grand Haven and Milwaukee Railway. After payment of these prior claims, there yet remains a surplus for the half year amounting to £180,494. But what is there against that surplus? From this surplus must be satisfied our guarantee. But we are not alone in this position.

Mr. FIELDING. The sums I mentioned were available after the company had met its obligations as respects those guarantees to which my hon. friend now refers.

Mr. AMES. My hon. friend conveyed, I am sure unintentionally, a different impression to me. He led me to believe that the £180,000 was the surplus on which we had practically a first claim.

Mr. FIELDING. No, but others of like rank might have a claim with us. My hon. friend, I think, so understood it, because he asked who would be partners with us in that rank.

Mr. AMES. The hon. Minister of Finance gave me to understand that this loan would rank first, after the satisfaction of all guarantees.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend so understood it, how did he come to ask me who would be our partners of equal rank in our guarantees?

Mr. AMES. This is the statement I have, and I think it will be admitted to be absolutely accurate, that after providing for these prior claims for the half year ending the 28th of August, 1908, there was £180,000 left to satisfy the various guarantees. Now, what guarantees are there? Let us see the guarantees which the Grand Trunk Company have given in respect to this road. They have guaranteed $10,220,000 on the prairie section. They will need to guarantee before they are through $20,000,000 or $25,000,000 on the mountain section. They have already guaranteed $15,000,000, and will probably guarantee $25,000,000, on the equipment of the road. Then comes this loan.

So that, all told, the guarantees will amount to about $60,000,000, and we rank pari passu with the others, that is to say, if there is not enough in this surplus to satisfy all these guarantees, we get one-sixth of what there is. So that it seems to me quite possible that our guarantee may not be equal to the occasion, even for interest, and I am quite certain that the guarantee of the Grand Trunk will be of very little value to us in the matter of repayment of principal.

The minister's resolution speaks of the right of foreclosure—we are to be entitled to all the rights and remedies available to bondholders. I confess that I find it difficult to ascertain what are our rights by way of foreclosure, and I would be glad if the hon. minister would indicate what steps would have to be taken by us to foreclose if this $10,000,000 claim were not paid. It seems to me that we would have to pay off the second and third mortgages, not on the prairie section alone, but on the whole western division, because the prarie and mountain sections are inseparable, as I read the Act; and it is doubtful, if we paid them off, whether we could do more than put in a receiver and divide the proceeds. I fail to find that we could by foreclosure make that right as enacted here, of any considerable value.

To review this transaction as a banking proposition, let me again enumerate the points which I made. In the first place, we must borrow in order that we may lend this money. In the second place, we propose to lend it at a rate of interest less than we can borrow it for. In the third place, we agree to take bonds at 100 cents on the dollar which the company would be glad to get rid of at 87½ cents. In the fourth place, the security on which we advance the money is but a fourth mortgage. In the fifth place, the guarantee of the Grand Trunk is practically worthless so far as principal is concerned, and in the matter of interest we are only to participate as a one-sixth interest; and the right of foreclosure I have as yet been unable to find to be of any real value to us. So that as a banking proposition this transaction can hardly be commended. I cannot think that if the Minister of Finance were the manager of a bank he would on these grounds present a $10,000,000 loan to his directors and ask their concurrence.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 122) to incorporate the Cabano Railway Company.—Mr. Gauvreau.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC LOAN.

House resumed consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding with reference to a loan to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. AMES. When the House rose at six o'clock I was dealing with the statement of the Minister of Finance that this loan might be regarded as a banking transaction. I think I clearly demonstrated that any bank manager who submitted a proposition of this kind to his board of directors would be very likely to have the proposition turned down without a long debate. But before I leave that phase of the question, allow me to correct a difference of opinion which has arisen between us as to exactly what was said on Tuesday last. When we were discussing the value of the Grand Trunk guarantee, I said, after the minister had told us of the surplus that was available for meeting this guarantee:

> Do I understand that this sum will be available to divide up between ourselves and all the other guarantors on the same basis if it were necessary to secure the interest on these guarantees.

To this Mr. Fielding answered:

> No, I am advised that the situation is better than that; that all the other guarantors were provided for and that this amount would have been available to pay our guarantee if this proposed legislation could be in operation in any of the years which I have mentioned.

I certainly drew from that remark the conclusion that the minister considered the £180,000 to be available after the satisfaction of all other guarantees, and I certainly think his remarks would bear that interpretation. I understand that in the matter of the interest of the guarantee of the Grand Trunk we would simply rank pari passu with the others to whom that same guarantee has been extended, and as I roughly calculated that in respect of this one enterprise alone guarantees of upwards of $60,000,000 would be given, our $10,000,000 loan would come in for just one-sixth of the amount available in case there was any shrinkage in the fund from which the interest could be made payable.

Having disposed of the argument that this is a banking transaction—and I do not think the government would have presented this proposition to us purely on its merits in that way—I come to discuss it as a measure of relief. Mr. Hays' letter, by which the government were officially made aware of the fact that the company was unable to carry out without assistance the contract into which it had entered, in its closing paragraph reads:

> I would therefore urge that such measures of immediate relief be given as will enable us to do this and avoid the disastrous effect on the credit of both the railway and the country which would necessarily result from a stoppage of the work.

There we have the whole plea in a nutshell. The company frankly admit in the last line of their letter that you must either give them this money or the work will stop. It is the cry of a company in extremis; they come to us for a measure of relief simply because they can carry on the work no further. If the Finance Minister and the government submit the proposition to the House on such grounds, and it is to be considered that we have before us two alternatives, either to advance this money or see the work stopped, then, of course, the opposition may face this question in a different way. But we need first to be satisfied that the company have done everything that they can do before falling back on the government to help them out of the difficulty.

Comparison has been made between this loan and the loan of $30,000,000 that was made in 1884 to the Canadian Pacific Railway to help them out of their difficulty. But if you compare the two loans you will find that they do not travel on all fours by any means. The Canadian Pacific Railroad was nearly completed when the loan was asked; within two years afterwards it was an operating concern from one end to the other. Into that road there had gone $62,000,000 of cash, among the assets were 25,000,000 acres of land. The company were willing to pledge everything they had, even to the control of the enterprise and the $30,000,000 loan was a first lien on it all. There is no comparison between the two, and, further than that, before the builders of the Canadian Pacific Railway came to Sir John Macdonald's government and asked for this $30,000,000 loan, they had exhausted every possible alternative that was open to them; they had gone down into their own pockets, they had pledged their personal credit; George Stephen and his heroic associates had pledged $8,000.000 or more of their own personal assets to the bank, and if this railway had not been completed and if the government had not come to their assistance, every one of these men would have been confronted by ruin and penury. There is no evidence of anything of that kind in this case; we have not a tittle of evidence that the promoters and builders of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company have put up a dollar of their own money or are prepared to pledge or jeopardize their own credit. When the Grand Trunk gave the guarantee on second mortgage for the prairie section in consideration of this guarantee they were granted possession of the common stock. The government has given far more than the Grand Trunk has given towards the Grand Trunk Pacific, and is the government not entitled to some special consideration for what it has already done and is now being invited to do? Would it be an unreasonable proposition for this government to ask the Grand Trunk Pacific Company and its backers, the Grand Trunk, to put up their common stock, to issue their preferred stock and to place these in jeopardy until this loan is paid? What guarantee have we that this is not the first of a series of similar loans?—next session another ten millions, the session after that another, and so on. Why, the government is in the position of a banker who has given to a contractor a far larger line of credit that the contractor could ordinarily expect to have, and the government has to carry this contractor through in order to save itself. Now, I submit that the proposition as outlined by the Finance Minister contains no element that will, to the slightest degree, deter this company from coming back next session, and the session after, for additional assistance. Why should they not? They are starting out to complete the mountain section. It is expected that this section will cost $67,000,000;—that is the latest estimate. Probably we shall find that it will cost much more before we are through with it. The company expect to raise about $20,000,000 in order to provide their portion of the money for this construction. How can we prevent them coming back to us and asking us to help them by a repetition of what we have to-day? If they find that their bonds do not float readily, will not they come back and ask us to be their bankers again on these for them especially favourable terms? No; if we are to guard against a recurrence of that which we are now considering we must pay in jeopardy something which the promoters of the Grand Trunk Pacific regard as dear, and something which they wish to keep for themselves. Look, for example, at the various loans this company has obtained. Of all these loans, there is not one so favourable as the one they are getting from this government. It bears the lowest rate of interest, practically, that they are paying. They have borrowed upon their second mortgage, and they have borrowed for their rolling stock at a rate of 4½ per cent, if you include in the calculation the difference between the par value of the bonds and the value at which they have been sold. Are they going to pay off the loan made to them by the country when it is the lowest in rate of all the debts they have to deal with, the most advantageous financial transaction they have? Not at all. There is every inducement to cause the company to endeavour to postpone the repayment of this loan, because it is the most advantageous financial transaction they have on their books.

I do not see why this company should come in for any special consideration on the part of the government or on the part of this House. I do not see that this company has fulfilled the glowing promises which were made in its behalf in 1903-4 when the Bill was being put through the House. What were we then told? We were told that through the provinces of the west Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, this road was to open up new territory, fields where man had never trod; that it was to make Canada a hundred miles wider. Why, that was shown by the plan laid before this House. The plan showed the line passing north of Lake Winnipeg, and on to a pass in the mountains several hundred miles north of Edmonton. It was a splendid thing to talk about, this opening up of regions not yet even fully explored. But when they came to build the road, what did they do? From Winnipeg to Edmonton, they pass through the most fertile and most thickly-populated part of the three provinces and always within a few miles of existing railways. There is hardly a point of the whole distance between Winnipeg and Edmonton, where this line will be more than ten miles from an existing and operating railway. It opens up no new country any more than do a dozen railways that are branching out through these different provinces. It has entirely disappointed us in that respect.

Another claim was made for the line. This particular section, this prairie section, was going to reduce the rates on the farmers' grain, so that that grain would be brought down to the seaboard at unheard-of prices. Is there a chance of that prophecy being fulfilled? I cannot see it. When the Grand Trunk Pacific has to compete with railroads built at half its cost and with fixed charges not more than half what it must pay, will there be any reduction in rates? This railroad from Winnipeg to the foot of the Rocky mountains will cost, with its equipment and rolling stock, upwards of $50,000 a mile. If that be borrowed at 4 per cent, which is the lowest rate at which they can hope to borrow, it means $2,000 a mile or $1,830,000 of interest yearly on the prairie section alone. Do you suppose that company can afford to reduce rates with its fixed charges double those of its competitors? Not at all. I tell you, you are introducing an influence in the west not for the reduction of rates, but for the upholding and advancing of rates on the transportation business of the country. When there is a conference amongst the railway companies, do you think the Grand Trunk Pacific will be in favour of the reduction of rates? Not at all. They will be the company pleading with the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian Northern to keep up the rates, because unless the rates are kept up they cannot make money when they have to pay fixed charges on $50,000 a mile. In this respect also, the road is a disappointment. Therefore, I cannot see that the company has any reason to come to us and ask for special consideration such as we are not prepared to give to other companies,—to ask to be treated on a basis as if they and they alone had earned the right to special consideration.

Now, I come to another feature of the case—and it is a serious one—which, I feel, must be placed before the House. The last clause of this resolution gives authority to the government to go into the money market to raise the money to re-lend to this undertaking. It means another ten million dollar loan. That means, simply, the straining still further of the somewhat overstrained credit of the Dominion of Canada. We are not merely giving them a great advantage and assistance, we are not merely giving them money at a lower rate than we are able to borrow it, but we are adding to the load and burden on our already somewhat overloaded credit. We have been frequent borrowers of late. Since December 1, 1907, no less than seven loans or extensions of loans have been made on behalf of the Dominion of Canada. We have borrowed or extended loans aggregating £24,831,000. On the 1st June next, we have to repay or extend a loan of £5,000,000. On January 1, 1910, we have to repay or renew two loans which, combined, equal £10,443,136, then we shall require, probably during the present fiscal year, another £5,000,000 to go into our own part of this National Transcontinental line, and, after that, £2,100,000 which will probably be the amount of indebtedness we must incur in order to grant the relief to this company asked by the present resolution. Thus, you have all told an indebtedness incurred or renewed within two years and four months of £47,375,000, or $230,000,000, a sum nearly equivalent to the entire net debt of the Dominion as it stood three years ago. These are stupendous figures, and they are figures which the financial world is not altogether unmindful of. It is this constant and continual borrowing that is having its effect upon the financial standing of the Dominion of Canada. And let me tell the Finance Minister that if he finds it necessary, in order that this road may be completed, to again and again come to this House for additional loans, as he is now coming, the result will be that the credit of the Dominion of Canada will be considerably depressed.

When the Finance Minister in 1897 made his first loan, if you will read his budget speech in that year, you will see that he claimed for himself to have established a record which not only Canada but every part of the British dominions might be expected hereafter to follow; he had succeeded in making a record for cheap money for Canada and other British possessions. If you will examine his first loan you will find that the rate of interest was ·02863 per cent. That was an exceedingly good transaction, and the minister had every reason to congratulate himself upon it. This government had only been in power a short time, and the credit of Canada was high. But what has the minister paid for his last loan floated only a month or so ago? He paid ·04125 or 4-⅛ per cent; in other words, he is paying 50 per cent more for his money to-day than he was paying in 1897 when he first stepped into the position he now occupies. That shows how the credit of Canada and how the borrowing ability of Canada is suffering in consequence of the repeated drain that it is now being subjected to. But that is not all. The hon. minister knows perfectly well that each time he packs his grip and goes over to the money centres of Europe and raps first at one door and then at another door endeavouring to float some new loan, whenever he meets a money lender that gentleman will say to him, 'You will have to throw in a little more this time, Mr. Fielding, we cannot do quite as well with you as we did before. This loan will have to be a shade below par, you will have to throw in several months of unearned interest, this time you will have to agree that these bonds will be exchangeable for others to a little better advantage.' When the minister goes the next time he will have to offer greater inducements than heretofore, and each time he will find it harder to borrow money. There is no use shutting our eyes to the fact that this procedure is hurting the credit of Canada. Those who have already purchased our bonds are dissatisfied with the fact that each successive loan that the Finance Minister floats with special inducements tends to depress the value of outstanding securities. Let me read for the minister a very significant passage which occurs in the 'Money Market Review' of March 6, 1909:

> The seventy-third yearly general meeting of the Bank of British North America was held on Tuesday, March 2, 1909, at the office of the corporation, Mr. C. W. Tompkinson, presiding.

This is what Mr. Tompkinson said inter alia, in his annual report:

> Investments, so far as our British government securities are concerned, show no change, but we have increased our holding of Dominion of Canada bonds by £38,000, and, as stated in our report of June 30 last, we have written down our total holding from 97 to 95. These bonds are, as you are well aware, necessary for the securing of our note issue when it exceeds a certain limit, and, in view of this fact, it seemed advisable to increase our holding to a moderate extent. Since December 31, a further fall, we regret to say, has occurred in Canadian government securities, due principally to the issue of the late big loan, which gave investors more favourable terms than were afforded by the older issues, and it is likely that, should no recovery occur, we shall have to devote still further sums to writing off their depreciation in value.

Is there likely to be any recovery if the minister must go to Europe two or three times a year to borrow immense amounts at increasingly disadvantageous terms? Not at all. There is no doubt that this banker stated the true facts of the case when he said that our continuous applications upon the money markets of the world tended to reduce the value of all Canadian securities, and this bank found it necessary to write them down. Has it ever occurred in the history of Canada before that a bank has found it necessary, on two successive occasions, to write down the value of Dominion government securities? I think it has not; it certainly is a warning to those who have charge of the financial affairs of the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to build this road we are undertaking an enormouse burden, and the half has not yet been told. If there is anything to be made out of this road, others will make it; if there is anything to lose out of it, we shall lose it; the harvest will be for others, but the failure of the crop will be for the Dominion of Canada.

In conclusion let me say that if we are to consider this question, not as a banker's proposition, but as an urgent measure of relief, the opposition approaches it with no intention of refusing the aid, nor does it intend to obstruct the passage of this resolution nor of the Bill that will be founded upon it. We are willing to consider it as a measure of relief. We regret the necessity, and we cannot help laying the blame on the hon. gentlemen opposite who have succeeded in getting the country into the unenviable position it occupies to-day. We consider that this was an ill-conceived scheme from the very outset. It was hailed as the Laurier monument, I think that following generations will look upon it as the Laurier millstone. But, we must see the project through. Yet we believe that we should put a provision in this Bill of such a character that the company will feel, when they come back the next time, that it will hurt. As the measure stands to-day we are encouraging the company to return. We must amend that Bill so that the company will feel that they must complete this road, or if they cannot complete the road, must make way for one that can complete it.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the resolutions.

Mr. W. S. MIDDLEBRO (North Grey). Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words before this resolution is carried especially in view of the fact that some remarks were made the other night by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) in comparing this loan with the loan that was made by the Conservative administration when we were in power in 1884. Some idea seems to have gone abroad that the Conservative party are not in favour of the completion of the transcontinental railway. I desire to state most emphatically that as far as I am concerned, and as far, I believe, as all the members on this side of the House are concerned, that is an entirely erroneous impression, we are as much in favour to-day of completing the transcontinental railway as we were of completing the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1884 and I think if you compare the records of the two great parties as to which of these parties is entitled to the credit for completing transcontinental railways the comparison would redound very much in favour of the great Conservative party. There was a time when the hon. gentleman now ocupying the treasury benches were not singing the same song as they are singing to-day: 'We cannot wait as time will not wait; we cannot wait because time lost is doubly lost.' There was a time many years ago in the pioneer days of this country when the great northwest was an almost trackless wilderness, when the virgin soil was yearning for the hand of man, and when at that time the Conservative administration proposed to build the Canadian Pacific Railway for the purpose of opening up that country we found hon. gentlemen opposite opposing that transaction from beginning to end. Therefore, I say it is not fair and right to allow the impression to be created to-day that we are not in favour of completing this great transcontinental railway. The whole matter with us may be summed up in these words 'better terms.' It is a question of better terms and if we had a satisfactory assurance upon that point we would be quite willing to give our votes in favour of this loan. In 1884 the gentlemen who now occupy the treasury benches in parliament opposed the proposed loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Because the hon. member for West Lambton the other day made a number of quotations for the purpose of proving the stand that those now in opposition took in 1884 I purpose quoting from a few speeches made by prominent members of the then opposition. I will take first of all a statement which was made by the then Liberal leader, the Hon. Edward Blake, first upon the question of the building of a road in its inception and subsequently on the question of giving them this loan. Speaking in 1884, as will be found at page 131 of 'Hansard' of that year, Mr. Blake said:

Even those friendly to the proposal must see that it is unadvisable to accept it. We are face to face with a condition of things, financially, which will be the subject of discussion in a few days, and it behooves us to be prudent—to pause before imposing additional engagements at this time on the country. Face to face with this state of things, we are asked to enter into those large engagements for which no reason has been given, and for which I pretend no countervailing advantages are offered. I, therefore, cannot give my assent to this proposal.

And he voted against the resolution for the purpose of enabling us to grant a loan of $30,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Then I take the Hon. Mr. Fisher and I will quote his remarks then. I want to point out that this whole transaction is being discussed to-day as a business proposition. It is placed before us as a banker's proposition and if the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) will excuse me I will this evening discuss it from the banker's financial standpoint. The hon. Minister of Agriculture, speaking of the proposition before the House in 1884 said:

I think, however, that this, instead of being an occasion when we may be asked to deal generously with the company, is really a business transaction. We have a company, who are under an obligation to this government to fulfil a certain contract, coming to ask from the government—what? They ask, first a loan of $22,500,000, this loan to be repaid at the end of seven years. They ask, secondly, an advance of $7,500,000, which is to be repaid at the end of five years. Now, what are we to obtain in return for this advance? As far as I can make out from the speeches of hon. gentleman opposite, as far as I can make out from the statement of the Minister of Railways, all that we, all that the country of Canada, are to obtain in return for this advance is that the Pacific railroad is to be finished in two years instead of in six years.

We see that it was then no consideration whatever in the eyes of that hon. gentleman that the completion of the road was to be accelerated by five or six years, while to-day the cry is: 'We cannot wait; time lost is a doubly lost.' In 1884 the effect of the loan would be to accelerate the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway by five or six years while to-day there is no acceleration, but we have granted the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company an extension of three years. Then the hon. gentleman proceeds:

But perhaps hon. gentlemen opposite may think that this difficulty of meeting obligations is a reason why we should deal generously with the company. On the contrary, I think it is a reason why we should not deal at all with them, a reason why we should not enter into this liability towards this company. If, Sir, it is answered, as seems to be implied by hon. gentlemen opposite, that in default of this arrangement, the company will be obliged to rest for four or five years, and not go on with the work of construction, what will be the great loss to the country? The state of affairs which would result from that fact would be but the condition of things which the party on this side of the House, at the time of the original contract, argued, would be most beneficial to the country.

In other words the minister says that far from waiting five or six years being any detriment to the country it would be just such a condition of things as he and his friends argued ought to take place at the time of the original contract for the purpose of building the Canadian Pacific Railway. Then he says:

But, Sir, if the present state of affairs were to continue for three or four years, if, instead of giving this advance to the company, we were to allow the company to rest during that period—supposing always that this is the alternative—would it be such an unmixed evil to the country as hon. gentlemen opposite have said.

Then I take Sir Louis Davies as reported at page 238 of 'Hansard' 1884:

Is it such a great advantage to have that road built, or to have the promise that it shall be built within two years. 'I think not.' I oppose the present scheme, therefore, because of the want of information justifying the House in voting $30,000,000.

I oppose it because to my mind it has been proved demonstratively by my leader that a prudent expenditure of the means within their grasp would have enabled them to carry out this contract without asking Canada to expend another dollar. I oppose it because it presents no elements of finality and because I believe that before another ten years have passed over our heads we will be asked to add to our present endowment another $30,000,000.

Then I come to Sir Richard Cartwright, page 180. That hon. gentleman spoke as follows:

I have always held and I now repeat, although a great continental railway was a very desirable thing in itself, although I agree with the hon. Minister of Railways that we require a railway that is worth considerable sacrifice for—still I say that the terms of the original bargain with British Columbia, which was opposed by me, opposed by hon. gentlemen here present and others who are not now here, was an act of such indiscretion and folly that it has hung like a millstone ever since around the necks of the people, that it has led to national disgrace in one or two instances and that the present moment it is likely to entangle us in embarrassments of which no man can reasonably expect to see the end.

Then we come to the right hon. the Prime Minister, who, of course, was eloquent as usual; but I am sure, he will agree with me this evening, that the words he then uttered have not been justified by time:

I repeat, is this change to be the last? There is at present through this country a feeling of uneasiness, and I believe that a feeling is also pervading this House that this is not the last change——

There seems to be some such feeling today.

—but that the next change will be, that what is to-day before the House as an advance will will turn out to be a gift. For my own part, looking at the power already wielded by the company, looking at the appetite displayed by them and their capacity for engulphing public money, I would as soon believe that the waters would flow back from the sea to the lakes as that one cent of that money will ever come back from the Pacific Railway Exchequer to the Dominion exchequer.

Yet inside of two years the whole $30,000,000 was paid back to the Dominion treasury, and the laws of gravitation remained exactly the same and the waters of the sea did not flow back to the lakes, and the $30,000,000 assisted in the development of what is to-day the greatest transcontinental line in America.

What I want to point out is this, that the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) quoted the words he did for the purpose of proving that the loan we are making to-day is to use his own expression, upon all fours with the loan we made to the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1884. He thought it necessary to do that in order to justify the government in the action they are taking. Well, I propose now to show the distinctions and the different surroundings attending the loan made in 1884 as compared with the conditions and circumstances of the present loan.

In 1884, we were given a first mortgage upon all the property of the Canadian Pacific Railway—a first mortgage on the entire property of the company, real and personal, now owned or hereafter to be acquired by them, including their main line of railway, their extension, their branch lines, the whole of their equipment, rolling stock and plant, all their steamers and vessels, also land grants earned and to be earned except the mortgages on such extension and mortgages on the land grants and secured by land grant mortgages.

What did that mean? It meant that we were lending the Canadian Pacific Railway sufficient money to complete its line, and we had a provision in our contract under which, for every dollar we paid out we required a certificate to show that the money went into the railway. The money we granted was sufficient to complete the road, so that we had the security of a completed railway for our advance of $30,000,000. That is to say, we had the security of 3,393 miles of completed railway, and I put the value of that at $50,000 per mile. In doing so, I think I am fair, because the mountain section of the Grand Trunk Pacific is estimated to cost $80,000 per mile, its eastern section $63,000 per mile, and its prairie section $35,000 to $36,000 per mile. So that I think an estimate of $50,000 per mile for the Canadian Pacific Railway is very moderate. We were given a first mortgage on that completed railway, subject only to a mortgage of $5,333,000 due by the Canadian Pacific Railway to those companies from which it had purchased some branch lines—the Canadian Central, I think, among others. This amount of $5,333,000 was the only actual first mortgage against the Canadian Pacific Railway when we made the loan. We further got a mortgage on the 21,000,000 acres which the Canadian Pacific Railway owned and which was supposed to be worth $2 per acre. But I want to be very moderate and put the price at the figure at which we afterwards took it back, namely, $1.50 per acre, so that we got their 21,000,000 acres of land at $1.50 per acre. Then we got a first mortgage on all their steamships. Compare that with our agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific. In that agreement, there is an express provision excepting the steamships from our mortgage, so that they are not included. In our present mortgage agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific there is an express exception of all lands granted that company by way of bonus, municipal, provincial or otherwise. There is also an express exception of all branch lines over six miles in length. But in the loan we made the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1884, we got a mortgage, not only on its main line, but on its branch lines. In that loan, we also got a tranfer of the $35,000,000 of common stock, whereas in the case of the Grand Trunk Pacific, legislation has been passed permitting a transfer of the common stock to the Grand Trunk Railway, and that transfer has actually been made.

Let me just point out what security of the branch lines would mean in this instance. In our present loan to the Grand Trunk Pacific, the branch lines are excluded. Take the Lake Superior branch line; if the present contract had been on all fours with that of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that branch line would have been included and we would have the benefit of that security. What would that amount to? The Lake Superior branch line got a subsidy from the Dominion government of $6,400 per mile, amounting to $1,209,600. It also got a cash subsidy from the provincial government of $378,000. It also got a subsidy of 675,000 acres from the provincial government. We have no lien on any of these under our contract with the Grand Trunk Pacific. The Lake Superior branch line also got a subsidy from the towns of Fort William and Port Arthur of $350,000, but no part either of that is security for our proposed loan, whereas under our loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway, all these items would have been covered by the mortgage given us by that company.

Take another aspect of the case. Under our agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway it was a condition of the loan that the completion of the road was to be accelerated by five years, whereas in the present case, not only is there no acceleration but we have extended the time for completion by three years. Further we got an assignment from the Canadian Pacific Railway of the subsidy given it to carry the mails, but we have no security of that kind in the present contract.

Then in the case of the loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway, that company was prohibited from selling its bonds, but in our agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific, it has been allowed to sell its common stock for $203,000. Practically $25,000,000 of common stock has been transferred from the Grand Trunk Pacific and handed over to the Grand Trunk Railway for $203,000.

Then we come to the question of the power to sell. In the Canadian Pacific contract what did we have? We had a first mortgage on all the property I have mentioned. We had a first mortgage on all these properties that I have mentioned—a complete road of 3,392 miles, of three steamships, of their postal subsidy, the provincial subsidies, the land grant, and all other properties the company then owned; and in case they made default for twelve months, we were empowered by the contract to enter into immediate possession and become absolute owner of the whole road and everything the company owned, without any notice or any process of law. How different from that is the Grand Trunk Pacific contract, under which, first of all, we give the company seven years interest free, and if in the next three years they are not able to pay the three per cent, we allow them to capitalize that, and then allow them to go on for five years longer without paying a cent before we can move hand or foot. Fifteen years may elapse, and then we have not even the power to do that which we had within twelve months in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract. We must then enter into possession and do what we can to make the road prosperous, and of the earnings hand over 75 per cent to the government and 25 per cent to the Grand Trunk Company, pari passu, without any preference. If the road gets on a paying basis, instead of our becoming its owner, as in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, we hand it back to the Grand Trunk Pacific Company again; but if it is a failure, if it is bankrupt, if the earnings are not sufficient to pay expenses, then it is saddled on this country until it again becomes prosperous, when it is again handed over to the Grand Trunk Pacific. If that is not a one-sided contract, I do not know what is. What is the result? In the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, we had a first mortgage on 3,393 miles of railway, at $50,000 a mile, equal to $170,000,000; we had 21,000,000 acres of land, at $1.50 an acre, $31,500,00; a total of $201,500,000. Against that there was only a mortgage in respect of the Canada Central and other branch lines of $5,333,000; and land bonds outstanding to the net amount of $1,123,000; making a total encumbrance of $6,456,000. Deducting this from the total value of the security received, leaves $195,044,000 of clear absolute security for the loan of $30,000,000. In addition to that, we had a first lien on the company's postal subsidies, on their steamships, on their after-acquired land, on the branch lines that they might thereafter build, and Dominion, provincial, or municipal subsidies, and upon all the property that they owned. So I think I am safe in saying that we had a security valued at $200,000,000 on which we proposed to lend $30,000,000.

The proof of the pudding is in the eating; and, as the hon. member for St. Antoine justly said, this loan should be made on such a basis that it would be in the interest of the company to pay it back as rapidly as possible. The Canadian Pacific Railway loan was such that within two years or so the Canadian Pacific Railway Company paid back the $30,000,000 and every cent of interest. In the present case we have the Grand Trunk Pacific Company asking this country for a loan of $10,000,000 on what security? The hon. the Finance Minister from his place in the House the other day said: 'That mortgage is not one of high rank. There are several other mortgages before it, and I do not attach the greatest importance to the mortgage itself as a security, though it has some value.' And yet the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) says this loan stands on 'all fours' with the loan we made to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in 1884, when in that case we had a security of $200,000,000 for a $30,000,000 loan, while to-day the hon. Minister of Finance says that we have practically no direct security for the loan of $10,000,000. This disposes of the last leg of the hon. member's 'all fours.'

Upon the admissions, then, of hon. gentlemen opposite—and I am speaking from a banker's standpoint—assuming that the fourth mortgage which we have is practically valueless as direct security, we come down to the fact that this loan is going to be made solely and exclusively on the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway; and what is that worth? A guarantee is only valuable in proportion to the financial ability of the guarantor to pay, and I purpose now to prove the financial position of the Grand Trunk Railway. The hon. Finance Minister, in introducing this resolution, said that there was a prior lien or charge of $121,568,000 against the Grand Trunk Railway, and that this consisted of debenture bonds. That is quite true. As I understand, these debenture bonds are a first mortgage under the Act against the railway company. The Finance Minister said next that there was said to be a lien or claim for rent against the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway; but he said he did not think that this rent had any preference over the proposed guarantee that we were getting from the Grand Trunk Railway. Well, I take issue with the Finance Minister on that point. The hon. Minister of Finance said that the rentals which the Grand Trunk Company was paying in respect of certain leased lines did not form a prior lien or charge to this proposed guarantee. I make the statement that not only those rentals, but all the $121,000,000 of bonds against the Grand Trunk Railway, form a prior lien or charge to this proposed guarantee. By chapter 56 of the Statutes of 1862, section 20, I find that the expression 'working expenses' is defined as follows:

> The expression 'working expenses,' when used in this Act, shall mean and include all expenses of maintenance, &c., and also all such rents or annual sums as may be paid in respect of railways, warehouses, wharfs or other property leased to or held by the company, rent charges or interest on lands belonging to the company, purchased but not paid for or not fully paid for.

Now, we come to the Act of 1874, which created the consolidated debenture bonds referred to by the hon. Finance Minister. By chapter 65 of that year, sections 4 and 5, it is enacted as follows:

> 4. The company may, for the purposes of this Act, create and issue debenture stock to the nominal amount of eight millions of pounds sterling, &c.
> 5. The debenture stock as and when created shall subject to the priorities of all other preferential charges then existing, be and become the first charge upon and over all the company's railways, works, rolling stock, plant, property and effects whatsoever at the time being, including therein the interest of the company in the said International Bridge, and in lines leased, worked, or otherwise held by the company, and for that purpose shall rank immediately after the Equipment Mortgage Bonds (No. 2) of the class defined by section three of the Grand Trunk Railway Act, 1867, and also subject to the provisions of the Grand Trunk Arrangement Act, 1862, as regards the working expenses.

Therefore, these bonds which the Finance Minister has referred to are subject to working expenses, as defined by the Grand Trunk Arrangement Act, 1862. That Act says that they are a prior charge to the bonds referred to. Therefore I say that the rentals referred to by the Prime Minister are a charge not only over the guarantee in question but over the $121,000,000, the amount of these first mortgage bonds. What does that mean? The amount of the half yearly rentals as given by the Finance Minister is £77,673; that would be yearly £155,000 or $776,000 rental yearly. Capitalizing that at four per cent we have a capital of $19,000,000 which stands as a prior claim not only to the guarantee in question but also to the $121,000,000 of debenture bonds which the Finance Minister said were the only first charge over and above this guarantee.

I would refer the Finance Minister to another question. I find in looking at Poor's Railway Manual, 1908, relating to the Grand Trunk Railway, page 783, a table headed:

Statement showing securities held by the public and scheduled in the various Acts of the company outstanding December 1, 1907, but which may be acquired by the issue of Grand Trunk 4 per cent. debenture stock, by agreement with the holders.

The statement shows a list of stocks which the Grand Trunk Company may acquire by purchasing them with consolidated debenture bonds, amounting to £15,000,000. I am not sure of my ground in this and I would like information from the Finance Minister, but I understand that Poor's Manual is reliable, and the information given in that manual corresponds almost exactly with the other information brought down by the Finance Minister with reference to the financial condition of the Grand Trunk Railway. The point I desire to make is that this authority says that this $75,000,000 worth of outstanding stock in companies purchased by the Grand Trunk Railway may be purchased by the Grand Trunk Railway Company issuing to such holders consolidated debenture bonds in the Grand Trunk Railway. If that is so, the Grand Trunk Railway Company may issue their consolidated debenture bonds to the extent of $75,000,000, and if they can do that it means that they can place $75,000,000 of prior charge over this guarantee because once the bonds are issued they become, under the terms of the Grand Trunk Acts, a first mortgage and lien upon the Grand Trunk Railway. I would like to know from the Finance Minister whether or not this is so, that the Grand Trunk may issue these consolidated debenture bonds, buy up these other railway stocks and thereby place $75,000,000 as a further priority over the proposed guarantee. I would judge that to be so because as the case now stands we are to have no lien in any way against the Grand Trunk, to secure this guarantee we have no liquidated claim against the Grand Trunk and therefore that company is entitled to charge itself and guarantee and create obligations to any extent it chooses, and it will only be when our claim becomes a liquidated demand that we will be entitled to say to them what are the claims against the Grand Trunk Railway Company and then other guarantees rank with ours. I submit that this statement looks fair and reasonable as far as I can see, that the Grand Trunk may convert these other stocks into Grand Trunk Railway debenture stocks and thereby place $75,000,000 as a prior charge to this guarantee and to that extent impair our security.

I would further like to ask the Finance Minister whether or not in the amount of debenture bonds that he gave us, amounting to $121,000,000 he has included the $12,000,000 debenture bonds which this parliament this session authorized the Grand Trunk Railway Company to issue. From this manual again I assume he has not included that.

I would further ask the right hon. the Prime Minister and the Finance Minister whether or not any negotiations, verbal or otherwise, took place between this government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company or the Grand Trunk Railway Company prior to the elections of October, 1908. That is a fair question to put. I would like to know whether that is so, whether any negotiations took place, verbally or otherwise, prior to the elections of 1908, respecting the loan in question?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think my hon. friend had better make his speech.

Mr. FOSTER. This is in committee.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman would prefer not to answer. The reason I say that is that from a careful perusal of the documents before the House and a study of the whole matter, I believe that there were negotiations entered into between this government and some person on behalf of this government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, whereby it was tacitly understood before the elections that if this government were returned to power, they would grant the Grand Trunk Pacific a loan of $10,000,000. In proof of that we have first the fact that no railway company since confederation has ever accorded such active, aggressive assistance as did the Grand Trunk Railway Company in behalf of the 'government' candidates during the election of 1908. Then I would ask the government this. They will not say whether there were any negotiations prior to the election, but we have it on record that there was a communication three weeks after the elections took place, before the heat of the elections was over, on November 16, from the president of the Grand Trunk Pacific which is not in the nature of a first communication. The letter is not written as though it were the first communication or the first intimation to the government that the company was going to ask for a loan of $10,000,000; the government certainly knew at least on November 16 that the Grand Trunk Pacific were going to ask for a loan of $10.000.000. The granting of this loan of $10,000,000 to the Grand Trunk Pacific is one of the most important matters to be brought before this House during the present session, and I would ask the Prime Minister how it was that when he placed the speech from the Throne in the hands of the Governor General two months afterwards he made no reference whatever to the most important matter that was to come before this House. He made this reference only to the Grand Trunk Pacific in the speech from the Throne:

> The construction of the Transcontinental Railway has been vigorously pressed forward during the last year. The line was open for the carrying of the crops from Winnipeg to the Battle river, a distance of 675 miles.

He made a reference to some exploratory surveys re Hudson Bay Railway, to the attendance of a representative of Canada at the National Institute of Agriculture and to many minor matters, but he entirely omitted this, the most important matter of all. And why?

I find here an Act passed during this session, Bill (No. 13), to enable the Grand Trunk Railway Company to place another mortgage for $12,000,000 upon its property, or rather to issue consolidated debenture bonds for an amount on which the interest would not exceed £100,000, $500,000, at 4 per cent; in other words, capitalizing this issue to issue consolidated debenture bonds which would be a mortgage upon the Grand Trunk Railway Company amounting to $12,000,000 —and the $12,000,000 to be issued under that Act would rank as a prior mortgage to the proposed guarantee which we are now discussing. That Bill was introduced in this House on January 26, about six days after the House opened. The first reading was on February 1; the second reading on 16th February, it was reported by the Railway Committee, and the third reading had on 19th February. The Bill passed the Senate finally on March 10, and, within six days afterwards this resolution came before the House. Now, I may be wrong, but it looks to me as though that Bill had been allowed to go through this House and not a word said by this government that they were going to bring in a resolution to lend $10,000,000 to the Grand Trunk in order that the Grand Trunk could put a prior lien of $12,000,000 on their property and, to that extent, lessen the security or guarantee that they would give to us. Now, let me say a word or two in regard to the direct security given by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. It is a very peculiar thing that, according to the information brought down by the Finance Minister, first of all this Grand Trunk Railway Company of which the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said, 'we were not content that they should stand behind it, but we insisted and they readily consented that they should be in it and of it—and the whole thing,' it is very peculiar that this Grand Trunk Railway Company should become the owner of $25,000,000 of the common stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific for $203,000, that the directors of the company only actually invested cash of $5,200. And then, when we come to the lands question in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific, we find this state of affairs: the Grand Trunk Pacific is being financed by the Dominion; the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific enhances the value of land: there are something like eighty-one town sites lying between Winnipeg and Edmonton, which town sites are valuable only because of the building of the railway. It was only right that any increased value given to that land should belong to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, and it is only right that, as we are financing the road and again lending them $10,000,000 that they should give to us, as security this enhanced value of the land caused by the construction of that railway. But we find that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company hands over all its town sites to a separate company called the Grand Trunk Pacific Town Site and Development Company. I find that the directors of this company are C. M. Hays and friends. There are thirty thousand shares of stock in this Grand Trunk Pacific Town Site and Development Company. The directors, according to the return brought down by the Minister of Railways, are C. M. Hays, E. J Chamberlin, William Wainwright, W. H. Biggar and E. H. Fitzhugh, all of them directors of the Grand Trunk Pacific also, each of whom owns two shares and has paid $200. That is to say, these five directors who have the management and control of the Grand Trunk Pacific Town Site and Development Company have only invested $1,000, in the institution, which controls and owns eighty-one town sites between Winnipeg and Edmonton.

Mr. FOSTER. What acreage?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The acreage is 78,640 acres. There we have that acreage, composed chiefly of town sites made valuable by the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific, which we are financing, and these gentlemen who have only invested $1,000 are controlling the whole company. In addition to that, they own a three-quarters interest in the whole town site of Prince Rupert.

Mr. FOSTER. The same company?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The same company. Therefore, look at this question from whatever point you choose, and you find some private individual making more money out of this institution than the Grand Trunk Pacific itself, which is being made to act merely as a buffer and blind.

Mr. FOSTER. Where did they get this land?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I do not know where they got it, but they have it. Now, the hon. member for St. Antoine has given a very lucid and concise account of the position in which we stand under this proposed legislation. But I may summarize the matter in this way. As I have said, we are relying now entirely on the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. We have the Finance Minister admitting first the prior lien of $121,000,000 in respect of the debenture stock; second, I think I have proved that rentals capitalized are a prior lien amounting to $19,000,000; third, the debenture stock authorized to be issued this session amounts to $12,000,000 and will be a prior lien. This makes a total of $152,000,000 of undoubted prior incumbrance. Then, if I am right in my assumption, according to Poor's Railway Manual, the Grand Trunk have the right to buy in with their debenture bonds these outlying railway stocks of railways purchased by them, and pay for them with debenture bonds of the Grand Trunk Railway. That would place another $75,000,000 of a prior incumbrance over our guarantee—total $227,568,000. Now, I want to ask the Finance Minister one more question. I notice that in the Act of 1862 and subsequent Acts, there are what are called equipment mortgage bonds, which are also said to be a prior incumbrance against the Grand Trunk Railway. I refer to page 783 of Poor's Manual, 1908, which says:

> Perpetual 5 per cent. debenture stock (Grand Trunk section).—Created under powers of the company's Consolidated Debenture Stock Act, 1874, passed May 26, 1874. Secured by first mortgage on all the company's property, as also upon the company's interest in the International Bridge and in leased and operated lines, subject, however, to the priorities of all other preferential charges existing at date of issue; ranks immediately after the equipment mortgage bonds; interest 5 per cent. per annum, in perpetuity, payable January and July.

Either that authority is entirely wrong, or the Finance Minister is wrong. I would like the hon. minister (Mr Fielding) to tell us, whether in addition to the items I have mentioned, there is not also what is known as the equipment mortgage bonds of some $6,000,000 outstanding as a preferential claim, not merely to our guarantee but to the debenture stock referred to by the Finance Minister. If some of these bonds are not a prior lien, then Poor's Manual is wrong. The items I have mentioned amount to $233,000,000. As the hon. member for St. Antoine has pointed out, the Grand Trunk Railway have also guaranteed something like $50,000,000. We stand in the same position with respect to our $10,000,000 as the other guarantors do with reference to the other $50,000,000—that is, we are in no better position than they are, and all stand subsequent to the above prior lien. Not only that, but the Grand Trunk may hereafter mortgage their property and make another prior lien and they may contract other obligations, and these will also rank pari passu with our own. I would like to know whether, under these circumstances, the Finance Minister thinks the loan that is being made is sufficiently secured by the guarantee of the Grand Trunk? You can judge what the company will do by what it has done. And what is our position? At confederation, according to the information brought down, the Grand Trunk owed us over $15,000,000 of principal and $10,000,000 of interest, a total of $25,000,000 and over. That amount has been owing for forty-two years. Forty-two years' interest at 4 per cent would amount to $43,000,000, which added to the amount already stated makes a total of $68,000,000 which the Grand Trunk owes us to-day. Have we any reason to suppose that they will repay us the present loan any more rapidly than they paid the old loan, unless we force from them further and other security than that which the government are getting from the company? That remained from confederation down to 1884, and in that year an Act was passed to the following effect, chapter 52, section 19, whereby it was enacted:

> That the claim of the Dominion of Canada as it now exists. . . . shall rank after the common stock, and securities heretofore issued and authorized to be issued, and after the securities and common stock hereby authorized to be created.

Now where do we stand with respect to that? The consolidated debenture stock is $121,000,000; rentals capitalized, $19,000,000; 4 per cent guaranteed stock, $49,000,000; first preferred stock, $17,000,000; second preferred stock, $12,000,000; third preferred stock, $35,000,000; ordinary stock, $112,000,000. That makes $257,000,000 that is ahead of the debt of Canada to-day with respect to this $68,000,000. Then add to that the $75,000,000 of other stocks of this railway which the country has a right to purchase, add to that the debenture stock authorized this session but not issued, $12,000,000, and you have $344,000,000 standing ahead of this $68,000,000 which this company has owed the Dominion of Canada since 1867.

Now with respect to the loan of 1885, we are in the proud position of saying that every statement which we made then has been verified. Time has amply justified the assertions which we made, because we took precautions to take sufficient direct security from the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it was to their interest to pay it back again. With respect to the contract of 1903 and 1904, on the contrary, every statement which the government made at that time has turned out to be false. They told us, for instance, that the eastern section would cost $71,000,000, they said they had mountains of information on which to base that calculation. But we find that section now is costing $124,000,000. They told us the mountain section would cost $26,000,000; we find that to-day, because of the extra mileage and extra cost of construction, it is estimated to cost $67,000,000. With respect to the prairie section we find that they are coming back and asking for $10,000,000 more to complete that. So practically every statement which they made in 1904 has turned out to be absolutely falsified by the facts, and practically every statement made by the Conservatives at that time has turned out to be true. As for the mountain section and the eastern section we have so far only estimates, and there is no prospect that these estimates will fully cover the amount required to be expended. Under these circumstances we of the opposition feel that we are entitled to the fullest information with regard to these stocks I have mentioned, and I would like the Finance Minister to tell the House whether these extra securities are a preferential claim over the whole guarantee. The members on this side of the House, I understand, do not propose to move any specific amendment to this resolution at this stage, but they propose to reserve their ammunition, and their judgment as to what step they will take when the Bill has been introduced and is being discussed on the second reading. We have done sufficiently to-night to show that practically every prediction the government has made has turned out to be untrue, and therefore we are justified in proceeding with the utmost caution in granting this loan to the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. DONNELLY. Hon. gentlemen on the government side who have spoken in favour of the proposed loan of $10,000,000 to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, have dwelt at length upon the resources and importance of our west, and of the necessity of affording that country ample railway facilities. The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) read to the House a long list of figures showing the amount of grain produced in the west, and he endeavoured to leave the impression on the House that the members of the opposition were opposed to giving the necessary railway facilities to the west to enable them to take their produce to market. Permit me to say that in my opinion the hon. members on this side of the House have quite as much faith in the future of the west as have hon. members supporting the government. We are ready to assist any effort to give the necessary railway facilities for handling the increasing products of that portion of our country. It would not be in keeping with the traditions of the Conservative party, the party that laid the foundation of the present transportation system in the west by building the Canadian Pacific Railway, were we to place any obstruction in the way of the further development of the west by the buildings of more railways. True, the Conservative party did oppose, and strongly oppose, in 1903 and 1904, the policy of the government in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, and I think that subsequent events have justified the Conservative party in taking the position they did at that time. While some arguments may be advanced in support of that portion of the line from Winnipeg to Quebec, if we consider the nature of the country through which that road passes, the great expenditure that will be necessary for maintenance and keeping up the staff on that part of the road during the winter season, also the fact that during the summer season that road will have to compete with navigation, I fail to see how that portion of the road can be made to pay. As for that part of the road which runs from Quebec to Moncton, I have never yet heard a reasonable argument advanced in support of its construction. It practically parallels the Intercolonial, with which it will have to compete. The Intercolonial at present does not pay running expenses, without taking into account any charge for interest on the capital invested. The Grand Trunk Railway Company, in 1903, being anxious to extend their system into the west, approached this government and sought to obtain a charter authorizing them to build a line of railway from North Bay west. Had that proposition been taken up we have reason to believe that at the present time the Grand Trunk Railway Company would be in a very good position to handle its share of the western trade. The government did not look favourably upon that proposal, and they substituted the present Grand Trunk Pacific Railway scheme. That scheme was strongly opposed by the then Minister of Railways, a very able gentleman, the one man in the cabinet who was in the best position to judge of the merits of the proposition. The hon. leader of the opposition when this resolution was before the House a week ago, submitted a statement showing that under the terms of the contract this country will be called upon to pay at least $40,000,000 for interest alone, before the Grand Trunk Railway Company, under their contract, will be called upon to pay rent for the eastern section of the road. That is an amount about three times as much as the total cost of the road was estimated by the First Minister when this proposition was first placed before the House. We were told by the present hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) in 1904 that the Domiinon of Canada was bonusing this railway to the extent of from $12,000,000 to $20,000,000. In view of the information now before the House, it appears to me that the minister will require to revise his estimate. Although the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme may have been a mistake we are in this position at the present time; the country by the contract it has entered into and in consequence of having given its credit, is bound to see that road completed even although it may have been a mistake in the first place. So, the question for us to consider at the present time is what is the best course to pursue to secure the completion of the road. The Grand Trunk Railway Company have approached the government and have asked that the terms of the contract be varied by this government loaning them $10,000,000. During this present session of parliament we have heard the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) and, I think also, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) advance the argument that when a great railway corporation comes to this government and seeks special legislation this government should avail itself of the opportunity to secure better terms from that company. That was the argument advanced by these hon. members when the question of authorizing the issue of $50,000,000 of additional stock in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway was before the House. It does appear to me that this would be an opportune time for this government to put that policy into effect and to say to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company: 'If you are prepared, under the terms of the contract to go on and complete the road, all well and good; if you are not prepared under the contract to go on and complete the road, then we will take over the road, we will reimburse you your expenditure so far and complete the road, and own, not only the lean eastern section but also the western section which, it is expected, will prove profitable.'

Mr. PERLEY. There is no question but that it is absolutely necessary for us to go on and complete this Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. That was settled in 1903 and 1904.

It does not matter what differences of opinion we may have had at that time regarding the question; it was definitely settled then by statute and by the elections that followed, and it seems to me that now it is not only a question of expediency for us to complete this road after the great expenditure we have made and the great guarantees that we have given, but it is also a matter of good faith and honour for us to go on and finish it with as short a delay as possible. The only question to be decided to-day is how and on what terms we should give further assistance. The government speakers have neglected this part of the question altogether; they have spent their time, as far as I could understand, in endeavouring to leave the impression that the Conservatives are against it. They have also taken up a good deal of time in arguing how necessary the Grand Trunk Pacific is to the farmers of this country and particularly to the farmers of the western part of it. This Bill refers to the prairie section only, and there never was any difference of opinion between the two parties as to whether that section of the road should be built. Everybody was agreed in 1903 that it was necessary that the part of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway which runs through the prairie should be completed as quickly as possible. But now the government speakers stand up here and tell us about the great crops of the Northwest. They tell us about the increasing population out there and that we must hurry up and build this road. Are these hon. gentlemen so dense that they do not know that everybody realizes that, that it is acknowledged by everybody and that we are just as well up in the signs of the times and in the fact that we have a great country there as they are. I simply rose to say these few words and to make it clear that we are not against the finishing of this road. We believe in finishing it just as quickly as possible. There is no member of this House who is more anxious to see it completed as scon as possible than I am. The real question is simply whether the proposed loan is on proper terms and on proper security. Why did not the government speakers discuss that question? Is it because the security is bad that they cannot stand up here and justify the means and the method by which they propose to make this loan? With regard to the security of the Grand Trunk guarantee my hon. friend from North Grey (Mr Middlebro) has spoken so completely and thoroughly that I will not go into that fully again, but I simply wish to say that the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, to my mind, is at least, a very doubtful security. As far as I can make it out the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) himself does not feel too sure about it. In his speech the other day, as reported at page 3679 of 'Hansard,' he says:

Now the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada on any enterprise is a substantial security.

Well, that is a broad statement, but I will ask him why it is that the four per cent bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, guaranteed by the Grand Trunk Railway Company and put on the market at 90, were not taken up by investors if the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway Company is a substantial security? The minister goes on to say:

An hon. gentleman asked the other day what claims there would be ahead of this, what liens there would be ahead of this guarantee which the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada proposes to give us. I have had the matter looked into and I am advised that bonds to the value of £1,488,500 and Grand Trunk Railway consolidated debenture stock to the amount of £22,825,297, making a total of £24,413,797 are unquestionably a first lien and would come ahead of our guarantee. Next to that, as we claim, comes the guarantee that is proposed to be given here and the other guarantees of like character; the Grand Trunk Railway Company has several guarantees which would probably stand in exactly the same position.

All the minister says is, 'as we claim,' this guarantee is good. I am very doubtful about that. I agree with my hon. friend from North Grey, and I would even go farther and say that it is questionable to my mind under the legislation which has been passed whether the preference stock of the Grand Trunk Railway Company might not be ahead of this guarantee. I have put a question on the Order Paper to know whether the Department of Justice considers that that guarantee would be ahead of these stocks, but it has not yet come up for an answer.

The Grand Trunk Railway Company received practically the whole of the $20,000,000 of common stock simply for its guarantee of the Grand Trunk Pacific bonds. Canada has guaranteed a very much larger sum than the Grand Trunk Railway Company. We are providing some three times more than the Grand Trunk Railway, and we get no consideration for that whatever. I ask the hon. the Finance Minister whether it would not be fair that we should have some consideration as well as the Grand Trunk Railway. There are $20,000,000 preferred stock, which have not yet been issued, and I cannot see any reason why Canada should not receive these shares in order that the country may get some benefit from this enterprise should it become a financial success in the future. In this connection I wish to correct the assertion made the other day by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), regarding some remarks by the leader of the opposition. On page 3744 of 'Hansard' I find that the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) said, speaking of the leader of the opposition:

He spent some time criticising the securities which the government were getting for the advance of these $10,000,000, and how did he wind up? By saying that the common stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific was worth from $100 to $150.

Why should any hon. gentleman misquote statements made by others? It would be evidently absurd for any one to say that the Grand Trunk Pacific common stock is worth from 100 to 150, yet these are the words which the hon. gentleman put into the mouth of the leader of the opposition. But what did the leader of the opposition really say? What he said, as appears on page 3698 of 'Hansard' was this:

The people of Canada, who are providing the balance, or nine-tenths of the whole expenditure or guarantees, are to receive absolutely nothing in respect to any share whatever in the future developments which may result from this enterprise, when the mere influx of population and the progress of the country shall have made this $25,000,000 of common stock worth 100 cents or perhaps 150 cents on the dollar.

How different is that from the statement attributed to my hon. friend and leader by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). The leader of the opposition simply asked that in the long future, as Canada progressed, and her population increased—perhaps to 20 or 30 millions—and as value was given to this stock simply by that increase in population, possibly making it worth from 100 to 150, this country, which was providing the money for the building of the road, should get some benefit out of that increase. I am in favour of building this road just as quickly as possible. Every hon. gentleman on this side is in favour of doing what is necessary for that purpose. The question is simply how that should be done, and I would like to hear from hon. gentlemen opposite—not a discussion of the old terms of the Canadian Pacific Railway loan, not a description we all know of the growth and population and cereals of all kinds in the Northwest, not an endeavour to make the people believe that the opposition are against the completion of this road—but I would like to hear from them some attempt to justify the terms upon which this loan is being made and the security which is being acquired.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. I did not intend saying anything this evening, and in what I shall say, I shall speak only for myself. I have listened with great attention to the speeches delivered from this side, and have been thoroughly convinced, from the evidence and arguments presented to us, that this resolution is very defective, and that, if it is to become the basis of a Bill, which will involve this country in an expenditure of $10,000,000, it should be greatly re-arranged and remodelled. In its present shape, I cannot see my way to support it. In common with other hon. members on this side

I am quite in favour of our finishing the road. Canada is committed to the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific and that road must be completed. But if we continue to waste our money and misappropriate the funds of the country, as we appear to be doing under this resolution, the road will never be finished. Why, that part of the line between Winnipeg and Edmonton, is simply to be built over the prairie. There are no very high grades in all that distance, and very few curves. There is not timber to get out of the way and the right of way can be very cheaply obtained, so that the line should not cost more than $15,000 a mile. Other railways in the United States and Canada have been built for that price through very similar sections. Now we provided the Grand Trunk Pacific with $13,000 a mile to begin with and they are coming back to us for $10,000,000 more or nearly $10,000 per mile in addition. Certainly any one could build a railway if he had such backing. There is not a man in this House who could not build the whole railway between Winnipeg and Edmonton, if he had such backing that he did not require himself to put a dollar into it. But if we are to have this trouble with the prairie section, where will the money come from to finish the mountain and the eastern section ? If it costs that much to build over the level prairie, what will it cost when we have to cut through miles of solid rock in the mountains of British Columbia ? The country, at this rate, will not only be ruined, but will never get the road. It is not too late for the government to reconsider the matter and make some change in this resolution. We wish to see the resolution get through and the road built, but we want to have some security for our money; and after the evidence presented to this House to-night by the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) the hon. member from North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) and the hon. member for South Bruce (Mr. Donnelly), I must say that it seems to me we are getting no security at all for our $10,000,000.

If we are to become bankers for this company, we ought to act as bankers would. When I go to a bank for a loan, they look very carefully into the security I offer. They expect me to be able to show that I am worth the money I am asking for and a good deal more. Well, if we are to be bankers in one sense, we ought to act as bankers in another sense. When I go to a bank for a loan, the banker has the money and does not need to go and borrow it. In this case Canada has not the money herself. She must go to Europe to borrow before she can loan it. Any one could set up as a banker if he had credit. He could loan money to all his neighbours and make hosts of friends if he had the privilege of borrowing the money and the credit of the country to back him. It would have been quite time enough for the government to go into the banking business when able to pay their own debts. I am sorry, under the circumstances, that I have to express myself in this manner; but unless this resolution be changed very much I shall have to vote against it.

Mr. PERLEY. I would like to put a question to the hon. the Minister of Finance. I find that in his speech the other day he said—page 3676 of 'Hansard':

> Therefore we admit that in giving the company the benefit of this loan, we are taking at par a security which they could not float at par, and giving them the benefit of 4 per cent though they themselves could not borrow at that rate, and the government has recently had to pay over 4 per cent.

I would like to ask the hon. minister what earthly reason there is why we should lend this money to the Grand Trunk Pacific at a less rate of interest than we have to pay?

Mr. FIELDING. It does not follow that we are lending at a less rate of interest than we have to pay, because if the money has to be borrowed, it is possible that it will be borrowed at less than 4 per cent, and if so, we would make a profit. However, even if we were giving them an advantage to that extent it would be a relief to the company. A number of questions of a legal character have been asked this evening which I would not undertake to answer off hand. They are worthy of consideration, and if they justify further inquiry, we must take them into account. But what impresses my mind is that these securities which we propose to take, whatever their rank and standing may be, have at this moment a money value in the markets of the world to the extent of 90 per cent. Some of the securities were recently issued at 90 per cent.

Mr. AMES. With 70 per cent of them left on the hands of the underwriters.

Mr. FIELDING. Some of the best loans are left in the hands of the underwriters. But I say that the risk we take in this matter is the risk of the margin, which is roughly speaking about 10 per cent. We could put these securities on the money market to-day, and realize 90 per cent of their face value, probably with some charges for financing.

Mr. AMES. Could the company float the loan at 90 per cent?

Mr. FIELDING. I think probably they could not have done so a month ago, but there has since been an improvement in the condition of the money market. It is not worth while arguing as to the rank and priority of these securities. All these matters have been known and taken into consideration by the financiers who have fixed the value of the property, and that is roughly to-day 90 per cent.

Mr. AMES. The hon. minister's argument has put a completely different face on the question. We have been asked to grant this loan as a measure of relief to the company. That is the whole burden of the final portion of Mr. Hays' letter. As a banking transaction, it has not very much to commend it. But if the company could float these bonds with only 10 per cent reduction, we do not need to come to their help.

Mr. FIELDING. I think we do. I think the flotation of these securities at a very low price would affect the character of the enterprise and the character and standing of the company generally. The measure of risk we are taking is roughly speaking about 10 per cent. I do not hesitate to say that the value of these securities is to be found chiefly in the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada. The mortgage security will have some value in the future. To my mind it is not of great value to-day, though as the years roll on, it will be more valuable. But with the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, while the money market to-day would not have faith enough in these securities to take them at par, the improving conditions of the whole enterprise as the work goes on, as the road is put into operation through the prairie and other sections, as the country improves, as business improves, as money becomes easier, we have faith that these securities will be worth one hundred cents on the dollar, and on that faith we accept them. The amount at risk is simply the margin between the par value of the securities and what they might be sold for in the money market to-day. I admit that if they were sold to-day, they would have to be sold at a sacrifice, but we ask the House to adopt this measure on the faith that when the loan falls due they will be worth one hundred cents on the dollar, and therefore we are risking nothing.

Mr. PERLEY. Do I understand the hon. minister to say that the bonds to be given to the government for the loan will be the same as those placed on the market at 90 a little while ago by the underwriters and not taken up by the public?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not attach much importance to the question whether they were taken up by the public or not; but I said they are substantially of the same character, inasmuch as they are bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company guaranteed by the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada. The man who promises to pay and the man who endorses are practically the same in both cases. As to their precise rank and standing, I do not see that it is important.

Mr. PERLEY. The bond that was placed on the London market was a second mortgage bond, while the bond the government is now taking is a fourth mortgage bond. The mortgage given to secure the second mortgage bond has a substantial value—although it was not taken up by the public at 90—because it is not only a second mortgage immediately after the government guarantee, but it has special privileges in case there is default. It ranks largely in the same category as the first mortgage bonds. Therefore I ask the hon. minister whether it is not true that the mortgage securing the second mortgage bonds has a substantial value far and away in excess of any possible value of the mortgage securing this loan?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not attach as much importance to the point as my hon. friend seems to do. I think that in all these securities, the real thing to the investor is the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada. As to the other securities, my hon. friend is wrong. The securities I referred to were not second mortgage bonds, but the equipment lien established by statute. If you call that a mortgage, it was a third and not a second. But for all present purposes the valuable security is the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Company. The other securities will have value in the future.

Mr. PERLEY. However, according to what the minister has said they are putting a first mortgage on the rolling stock.

Mr. FIELDING. No, the rolling stock is really included in the first mortgage.

Mr. PERLEY. No, I think the minister is mistaken, the Act distinctly stated that the first mortgage did not cover the rolling stock.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it does although a special security was created to raise the money; I think it was all included in the first mortgage.

Mr. PERLEY I think the hon. minister is mistaken.

Mr. FIELDING. I find that the equipment is included in the first mortgage.

Mr. AMES. The equipment and the rolling stock are different propositions altogether.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know about that.

Mr. AMES. Certainly they are.

Mr. HUGHES. The rolling stock is a separate account.

Mr. FIELDING. What is the difference between the equipment and the rolling stock?

Mr. AMES. I think you will find that when the terms of these mortgages are studied in the schedules of the Act the equipment is always quite distinct from the rolling stock.

Mr. FIELDING. I think not; equipment means rolling stock.

Mr. AMES. As I understand it this third mortgage, that is the loan of the 25th of February, 1909, which was issued in London, and of which 77½ per cent was left on the hands of the underwriters, had by way of security the rolling stock, and after that came what equity was left after previous liens on the property of the Grand Trunk Pacific beside the guarantee of the Grand Trunk and that loan we know was a drug on the market. It was in a better position than this because it included the rolling stock.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend will find that equipment, meaning rolling stock, is embraced in the first mortgage and that their success in the market was due to the guarantee of the Grand Trunk; practically that money was raised on the security of the Grand Trunk. Any security on the equipment itself was a very inferior security.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in understanding that if we grant this $10,000,000 loan, $7,000,000 of it will be used in paying moneys advanced by the Grand Trunk and that therefore there will only be $3,000,000 left for the purpose of pushing on the work?

Mr. FIELDING. In a sense that is correct. We, of course, will not pay it to the Grand Trunk; it must be paid out to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, upon the certificates of the engineer; but we do know as a matter of fact that the Grand Trunk Railway has advanced out of its treasury a considerable sum of money and that the $7,000,000 which they have used to assist this work will be returned to them indirectly. We will not pay it to them, but we will pay it upon certificates showing that this money has gone into the work. No doubt the Grand Trunk Pacific will pay that back into the treasury of the Grand Trunk Railway, to which it properly belongs.

Mr. SPROULE. Will that be paid on certificates for work already done or for work which is yet to be done?

Mr. FIELDING. Of course we cannot pay out money upon any future work to be done; we can only pay it upon certificates for work already actually done.

Mr. AMES.

Mr. FOSTER. At the time you paid?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, and if they have already done that work and can furnish certificates to show that amount of money has in all good faith gone into the work, we can pay the amount. We will pay it to the Grand Trunk Pacific in the usual way and they having got money to do this work from the treasury of the Grand Trunk of Canada will, I presume, pay it back to that company. That is a transaction between the two companies. We will only pay upon the certificate of the engineer that the work has been done and the money expended according to the representations made.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the minister reason to believe that $3,000,000 will relieve their present financial embarrassment and enable them to push on the work rapidly until completion? It would seem to me such a small amount, having regard to the mileage yet to be built, that I would expect to find them in financial difficulties again before the summer is out and another application made for aid. What have the government done to satisfy themselves that they will be able, when this is advanced, to go on and complete the work within a reasonable time?

Mr. FIELDING. The government engineer certifies that this $10,000,000—there is a slight difference between the estimates of the railway and the government engineers—will complete the prairie section.

Mr. AMES. Have you any guarantee that the builders of the mountain section will not be back for aid?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know. Sufficient unto the day is the good thereof.

Mr. SPROULE. What government engineers have given this estimate and certificate?

Mr. FIELDING. The estimates were prepared naturally by the engineers of the Grand Trunk Pacific when they made their application. Their estimates were referred to Mr. Schreiber, the government engineer, and he has made a report which will be found among the papers brought down.

Mr. SPROULE. I have looked over a few of his estimates and have had occasion to inquire into some certificates before and I must confess from my experience in regard to these, that I would not attach the very highest values to a certificate from that source.

Mr. FIELDING. I would say in that respect that all engineers are human and imperfect and the best of them will make mistakes. It must be remembered that the Grand Trunk Pacific Co. are constructing the prairie section of the road and not the government. Hon. members speak of the excessive cost of the eastern division as some thing for which the government are to be blamed, but the prairie section is being constructed by the Grand Trunk Pacific, with the aid of the Grand Trunk, with all the paraphernalia of the Grand Trunk engineers, and we are told that the Grand Trunk and the Grand Trunk Pacific are rather severe in their dealings with contractors and employees, so there is no reason to doubt that every effort has been made to make the cost of the prairie section as reasonable as possible. Thus when we find that this road is being constructed by the railway company without any interference by the government, except supervision, and that this largely increased cost is rendered necessary, it should show my hon. friends that the increase must be for good and sufficient reasons. With regard to Mr. Schreiber's reports all engineers are human, and it is only fair to Mr. Schreiber, an old engineer who has been in the service of the country for a very long time, to say that although he may make mistakes, all who know him will feel that any estimate and report which he makes is made in the light of a long experience, in the light of the knowledge of a trained and very able engineer, and of an experience which I am sure we all recognize as the experience of a man who has, in the fullest degree, the confidence and respect of all who know him.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like very much to share in that opinion, but I frankly confess I do not and I think we have had sufficient evidence to justify a different opinion altogether. But if there was nothing else in the situation beyond the fact that the first estimates of the cost of this road and the second are so different, it would be quite sufficient to justify us in having very serious doubts as to whether the same thing would not occur with subsequent estimates. The experience of the past does not justify any strong ground for the belief that the present estimate is not likely to prove inaccurate just as well as the estimates which have been made up to the present.

Mr. FIELDING. It is our only means of judging, the estimate of a reputable engineer.

Mr. SPROULE. Talking about reputable engineers, I do not wish to do Mr. Schreiber any injustice in the world, but I frankly confess that I believe the government could get him to give an estimate to suit their own purposes on any subject.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend must be speaking of former times and other governments. I can only say that I have ever found Mr. Schreiber a most faithful and efficient public servant, and I never knew a man who would dare to suggest to him an estimate which did not respond in every way to his own conviction of what was right.

Mr. SPROULE. Do we require any better evidence than the contract of M. P. Davis, on the Cornwall canal? Under his own hand, Mr. Schreiber said that the amount was a proper one, that it was reasonable, and recommended to the Minister of Railways that it be paid. And the Minister of Railways did the same. But the Auditor General stood out, declaring that he would not pay it, because it was rank robbery. And the amount was reduced from $52,000 to $29,000—and this the Auditor General said was $10,000 too much—and it was accepted as payment in full.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not remember the details of the Davis case. But any man who knows Mr. Schreiber will believe that any estimate he ever gave was given in the most perfect good faith and that it was an estimate the government would have a right to accept as being that of an engineer of high reputation and ripe experience.

Mr. AMES. What was his estimate of the cost of the mountain division?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not recollect.

Mr. AMES. Thirty thousand dollars a mile, was it not?

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot recall it.

Mr. AMES. And now it is estimated at $80,000. That is very accurate for an engineer, is it not?

Mr. FIELDING. The conditions governing the cost of public works have changed enormously since that time. The very fact that the prairie section has proven so much more costly than was estimated——

Mr. HUGHES. Why?

Mr. FIELDING. For fifty reasons.

Mr. HUGHES. Give us forty-nine of them.

Mr. FIELDING. If time permits, I will give, later on, not only forty-nine but the whole fifty. Does not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) know that labour costs more than it did?

Mr. HUGHES. No.

Mr. FIELDING. I know it.

Mr. HUGHES. No, the hon. minister will pardon me—he does not know it.

Mr. FIELDING. I did not go out to pay the bills, but I have the reports of men who did, and I am satisfied and believe——

Mr. HUGHES. I know all about it.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman cannot know much more about it than I do. He gets his knowledge from other people, just as I do. But I state, from the best information I have been able to obtain, that the cost of labour is very much in excess of what it was.

Mr. HUGHES. And what else?

Mr. FIELDING. The rates paid for ties have doubled.

Mr. HUGHES. Why?

Mr. FIELDING. Because the men who cut the ties are getting higher wages. Go into the steel mills and ask in the office there why the road is costing more and they will tell you—it is because their men are getting better wages.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. HUGHES. What are the rails to-day?

Mr. FIELDING. I have the floor.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. HUGHES. I have the right to ask a question, with the permission of the hon. gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. FIELDING. I say, go into the steel mills, and they will tell you——

Mr. HUGHES. Will the minister allow me a question?

Mr. FIELDING. I am speaking just now.

Mr. HUGHES. All right.

Mr. FIELDING——they will tell you that their men are getting higher wages. The workmen who cut the ties are getting higher wages. Go into the contractor's office, and he will tell you that he is getting two prices where he got one before.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, oh.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. And the consequence is that the cost of these works has increased, almost double. Go through the list of all the items that enter into railway construction, and you will find that every great enterprise that has had to be constructed of recent years has proved much more expensive than the estimates of 1903. Now, Colonel, what is it ?

Mr. HUGHES. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, I would ask you to call the minister to order for not addressing the chair ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is right, I apologize.

Mr. HUGHES. Let me tell the Finance Minister that it is true that ties to-day are dearer when placed on the track, but they are not dearer in the woods. There is what we want to get at. Why should there be this increased cost between the woods and the placing in the track. Rails are about as cheap as they were in 1904—I do not know but what they are a little cheaper.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. They are cheaper.

Mr. HUGHES. I believe that they are cheaper than when this contract was made. The wages paid in this country are lower than they were when this contract was made. Why, the minister has only to take the case of the public works in the town of Lindsay. The contract there is not being carried out on the fair wage scale; the prices paid by the contractor there are considerably lower than in any other industry in the town. If the Minister of Finance is going into these details, we want to get the facts, for, with the facts, we can prove him to be wrong ? Let him give the fifty reasons of which he has spoken.

Mr. FIELDING. I think that forty-nine will be quite enough to prove the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) wrong.

Mr. HUGHES. On the National Transcontinental, where they pay for ties from 60 cents to 75 cents, the man who cut the ties, perhaps only a hundred yards away, from where this price is given did not get more than one-quarter of that for them.

Mr. FIELDING. The men who buy the ties get them at the best price they can.

Mr. FOSTER. It would help us if we could get down to the facts with regard to even part of these fifty reasons, and the minister has an easy method of getting at the facts.

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. If he will institute a little inquiry, he will find out the exact wages paid to the different grades of men in 1904, and he can find the scale of wages paid to the same grades of men in 1907 and 1908. This would be something authentic. If we had also an authoritative statement of the cost of supplies in the different years, we could make a fair estimate of what was due to the increased cost in that regard. Then, as to rails, it would be easy for the Finance Minister to have the information for us as to what rails were sold at in 1904 and in 1908. These are stock articles, and the price can easily be ascertained. One thing, I think, is quite certain, that it was much easier and cheaper to get the rails in 1908 than in 1903-4, because the facilities for carriage up along the line under construction are very much greater than they were at that time. So, there are two elements of expense—labour and steel—concerning which we could easily have the information.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a fair request. I agree.

Mr. FOSTER. Information could be given us also as to the cost of ties. With these facts, we could get somewhere near the added cost. But has the Finance Minister looked into the particulars sufficiently to satisfy himself that $35,000 a mile could have been economically put into that road under its present construction? I have talked to men who have built railways through that country as well as through other sections, and the Minister of Finance ought to have had curiosity enough to make inquiries also. Other roads have been built in this prairie country—the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian Northern are constantly building there. Has the minister made inquiry to find out what these other companies are paying per mile for the building of their roads? Has he that information on file? Before we come to the rescue by a ten-million dollar loan, ought we not to satisfy ourselves that there has not been rank extravagance—to speak of nothing else—in building that prairie section at a cost of $35,000 per mile? This amount, as I understand it, does not include equipment of rolling stock. Am I right in that?

Mr. FIELDING. The figures given for the mileage estimate do not include equipment.

Mr. FOSTER. So, you have the cost of making the track and putting it in order, but without equipment of rolling stock, $35,000 a mile. I venture to say that the best railroad builders can build a road in the prairie west at from $18,000 to $20,000 per mile, and that figure includes the roundhouses and equipment, if not all of it, the most of it. I am badly informed if that is not actually the case. You have to add a great deal to $18,000 per mile to make $35,000 per mile. Is the minister satisfied in his own mind that that road has really had put into it, by any man of reasonably economic mind, $35,000 a mile, and yet no equipment, no rolling stock, no roundhouses? There are two roads that are building continually, the minister has the matter at his own disposal, he can get information with reference to the building; and if it is found that I am fairly correct in the statement that from $18,000 to $20,000 builds prairie roads of a good type in that country, are we to be called upon to come to the rescue of a company that has paid out $35,000 per mile? The stock argument is: 'Oh, it is a better class of road!' How much better class of road is it than the Canadian Northern is to-day, running up to Edmonton? How much better road is it than the Canadian Pacific Railway which runs not many miles from it? It strikes any man on the street who knows something about railroads, with a chill to tell him that $35,000 has been put into that road. I say that if they have wasted their money, or worse than wasted it, and put it to uses which they should not, and make it cost almost double what it should cost, they ought not to come to us after they have done that—if that has been done—and ask us to help them out of the hole. Their father, and mother, and grandfather, the Grand Trunk Railway, ought to have had an eye over them. It was in it, and of it, the whole of it, as it has been stated over and over again, quoting one of the ministers—in it, and of it, and back of it, and a part of it. Has the Grand Trunk, an old hand in building and supervising railroads, had its eye upon it with the idea that there should be economical building? If it has allowed extravagance to creep in, and advanced the $7,000,000 in order to help that extravagance, let the Grand Trunk pay the $7,000,000. Why should they come to us and ask us to repay that? If they, being the fathers and mothers of the scheme, the guarantors, relied upon for almost everything, if they are responsible, if they have allowed this what I consider to be gross extravagance in building at the rate of $35,000 per mile, then let them keep their $7,000,000 in it, and let them have some share in building the road as well as having all the profits that are to come from it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if it be a fact, and the Finance Minister ought to know if it be a fact, that every bit of the cream along that Grand Trunk Pacific has been skimmed off by men for their own profit, private and corporate; if it is true that they have used their town sites solely for that purpose; if it is true that they have 81 town sites along the Grand Trunk Pacific, and 76,000 or 77,000 acres which they got, according to the returns brought down, for something like a song compared to what the values will be, and that none of that goes to provide money for this company which comes to us and begs for a loan, will the minister make a calculation? 76,000 acres in town sites, along a great line of railway through a rich prairie section, is pretty valuable land. Divided into lots and sold, it means a lot of money. A number of lots can be taken out of an acre of land. That acre of land costs these people somewhere about $3 an acre, so far as I have been able to get at the facts. This land put into lots and town sites and sold at $50, $75, $100, $200 and so on, totals up to a very large amount of money. Why should not the profits out of this go to help them build their road? Are they to build it on our guarantees, on our loans, at our burden, taking the stock which we gave to them and holding it for no return, or practically none, and in addition to that, to skim every bit of cream off in town sites and everything like that? All these profits ought to be directed towards building the road, and gettting capital into the road. The whole stream is directed into private or corporate profits, distinct entirely from the Grand Trunk Pacific. Are these things true? If they are, it is sufficient to make us sit up and think. You talk about the weary Titan, the old mother, but there is young Titan here whose back is being bent by the financial burdens that she is obliged to carry, and that young Titan is Canada itself. When we have to strain every nerve to get what we want for our own purposes, we allow these men to skim all the cream off the Grand Trunk Pacific, perquisites, town sites, lumber business and a dozen others, and we patiently bend our backs and add to the financial burden that we find already more than we can carry. It is time we become sober with reference to the debt and the obligations which are being rolled in upon this country. The Finance Minister comes to us and asks us for a loan. He is the man to give us the information. When we made a loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway we took a lien on their $35,000,000 of stock; the lien was a good lien and a strong lien for the $35,000,000. But we said: 'You come here to ask us for money to finish the contract; we will let you have the money, but we wont give it to you at any less per cent that we have to pay for it, and we will take all the liens you have. There is $35,000,000 of your stock, we want that as well,' and we took the loan upon that. But here, the company cannot offer us a security that is worth sixpence to this government. As the hon. Minister of Finance has said the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway gives its bond, but, as he says, its bond is not presently worth anything. We go to the Grand Trunk Railway Company which guarantees the bonds. That is really what we get. Now, when the company come with their $25,000,000 of stock, which, at some time, may be worth as much as the Canadian Pacific Railway stock to-day, why in the name of all that is reasonable should not we have the security of that stock as well; all the more so that it does not appear to me that any adequate product of that stock has gone into the financing of the Grand Trunk Pacific? The Minister of Finance knows how much. He can tell us. These are some questions which the Minister of Finance should undertake to answer, and to answer, I think, before we get through with this measure. We are now approaching the Easter holidays—days of peace and calm after some little excitement of the past. We do not want to get into another exciting time before that gracious season comes on and so we cannot carry out all our wishes to-night with reference to this resolution. We are going to allow this resolution to pass through committee with the reservation that every line and sentence of it stands yet to be approved, or amended or approved with such emendation as we can get; but when the Bill, which is founded upon the resolution, comes down in detail it can be taken up, acted upon and be amended much more easily than in the case of the resolution. But the Minister of Finance has to get more than forty-nine out of these fifty little reasons that he offered to the committee, and I am sure he will. There is another question that we want to get a little information on. How much money of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company has gone into rolling stock? When did it go into that rolling stock? Who has been using the rolling stock from that day to this? Is the rolling stock new or is it largely made up of repaired stock from another company and then taken as rolling stock into the Grand Trunk Pacific? We want to know why this new company, which has nothing to roll on, goes to work and spends, I do not know how many millions—the Minister of Finance knows—five, six, seven or eight millions—on rolling stock long before it has anything upon which the stock can roll. The company may say that they must make some provision or else when they got the road they would have to wait some time longer, but there are two questions that suggest themselves: How long have they had that rolling stock? What has it been doing in the meantime. Has it simply been used as a convenience for the Grand Trunk Railway, or has it been fairly and squarely built and bought as the necessities of the Grand Trunk Pacific called for it? There is another question. Who constitutes the company that builds the rolling stock? We would like to know something about that part of the matter. It would be interesting to us and altogether germane because the Finance Minister himself does not want to ask that Canadian credit be strained to the amount of $10,000,000 unless everything is square and fair. We do not want to have it go unless it is square and fair and if it is not square and fair we would like to know it. We would all feel better if we did know it. Looking at the cream skimming propensity which has shown itself upon everything in sight along that Grand Trunk Pacific without one drop of that going into the parched and hungry mouth of the Grand Trunk Pacific Corporation itself, we are also anxious to know whether that is going on in the car building process. We would like to know something about the constitution of the car building company that is furnishing this stock. These are some of the questions which come to the surface. The Minister of Finance, I think, has not quite properly settled another. He pretty nearly cut the whole ground from under his feet when he declared that they could go into the market to-day and get 90 per cent. of these securities. Why in the world, under these circumstances and under our circumstances at the present time, should we not allow this great company to take this discount of ten per cent and go on with this road? Other companies have to do it. There is not a railway company in this country of any size at all which has not had to submit to heavy discounts upon its stock and bonds. Here is an admission by the minister himself that they can go into the market and that the margin is only ten per cent against them. I had the idea that the plea of Mr. Hayes was that they could not float their certificates, but if they can be floated at a discount of ten per cent, there are lots of commercial companies to-day who would be glad to get their capital on that basis, there are lots of companies who are getting their capital at that discount, and they are glad to be able to do it. If what the Minister of Finance says is true it does not seem to me that there is any great necessity for us to put our neck under the yoke when we have already taken the heavy burden to draw and which we will have to draw. I do not know that it is necessary for me to make any other remarks at the present time but these are some of the things that I desire to bring to the attention of the minister. If this loan is necessary I say that the Minister of Finance has no business in a matter like this, after the regal support that we have given to this measure, when there is an emergency with reference to $10,000,000 of stock, to make another gift. Let them pay exactly the interest that we pay. I do not ask that they should pay more, but let him make his proposition so that he will exact in interest what the $10,000,000 costs us. At least I think that ought to be done. Why should we act the part of the beneficent mother to any greater extent than we have, for no man will deny that so far Canada, forced through it and into it by the government, has lifted and is to-day lifting nearly 90 per cent of the whole load. We will take other times to discuss this question and when the Bill comes on, founded upon this resolution, we will have something further to say, but these are some of the things that we were anxious to know about and things which, before the Bill gets through, we must know about. I am not satisfied at all as to the evidence we have of the $35,000 a mile that went into the road. I am not at all satisfied, and I think there ought to be some further research into that before we let it pass; my hon. friend the Finance Minister can get at that much better than any one else because he has all the sources at his command.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friends opposite are rather hard to please. At the beginning of this matter, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, framed a series of questions for the purpose of eliciting all the information he thought was necessary to enable the House to enter upon an intelligent study of this transaction. I thought that many of his questions did not have much bearing on the resolution; but as nevertheless they did have some relation to the Grand Trunk Pacific project generally, we brought down all the information desired. I think that in almost every instance everything my hon. friend sought was granted. But now we find my hon. friend from North Toronto speaking as if there were some dreadful neglect in supplying information.

Mr. FOSTER. I would not say neglect. So far I think my hon. friend has come up to the requirements very well indeed, but what I am now making is not a charge of neglect, but a modest request for some further information, because as the discussion proceeds other points arise which require elucidation.

Mr. FIELDING. Very much of the information the hon. gentleman desires is asked for in so indefinite and hazy a way that it may be difficult to give it precise form. If my hon. friends had framed their questions in a precise form as did the leader of the opposition, I should make every effort to comply, but it is rather difficult to know exactly what it is they do require. My hon. friend from North Toron (Mr. Foster) is very prolific in 'ifs'. It is very easy to found an argument on 'ifs.' If this is the fact and that is the case, and if something else occurs, then something else is bound to result. One can build a monument of arguments on an 'if.' I would be glad to understand what the hon. gentleman means by this cream skimming operation which he says, is to be found everywhere. The only allusion he made to anything specific was in relation to the town sites. I have not the information desired at hand, and I fail to see what bearing it can have on the cost of the prairie section, which was the subject under discussion, but if further information be desired on the town sites, no doubt my hon. colleague, the Minister of the Interior, will be able to give all the information necessary, which will show that whatever was done in that connection as between the government and the company was entirely justified. My hon. friend said, and it has been repeatedly said in the debate, that the government are lifting—to use his expression—90 per cent of the load in this matter. That is an entire misapprehension of the situation, but we will come to that later on, and I shall not take up time by dwelling on it now. The conversations we had with respect to the cost of labour and railway ties and materials generally were not confined to any particular section, but had reference to the increased cost of the road generally. I shall bring down information later, and in that respect I think the request of my hon. friend was fair and reasonable. But I do not agree that it is of the utmost importance, though it may be of interest, to us to know what sums other roads have cost. I do not think there is any prairie road which pretends to be of the same character as the Grand Trunk Pacific. If some other company has built for less money, that will be no evidence whatever that this road is too expensive. If the claim is made that it is too expensive, that must be established by other reasons than by what some other road of a different character may have cost. My hon. friend asks, am I satisfied this road has cost $34,000 or $35,000 per mile. I know only one way of being satisfied that the road has cost that much, and that is by our engineer's report. Every statement of cost by the company is referred to the government engineer, Mr. Schreiber. Mr. Schreiber cannot watch the construction of the line everywhere, but he has his own officers supervising it, and they report to him. And if they tell him, and if he tells us, that these figures, supplied by the company, represent fairly the cost of that road, I—being an innocent sort of a person—would be satisfied that the statement is a fair and proper one. If any other information be obtained, depend on it, I shall be very glad to lay it before the House, but I should think that information of the character I have mentioned might be accepted by the House as evidence that this road is costing that money and costing it intelligently and honestly. And if hon. gentlemen can be satisfied on that point, I do not think it matters what some other road of some other kind, built at a different time, actually cost.

Mr. FOSTER. What is it that Mr. Schreiber certifies to? Mr. Schreiber is an engineer. I do not know the modus operandi, but there are different ways of getting at the cost. Mr. Schreiber makes his annual or semi-annual or quarterly journeys over the road. He looks particularly after its engineering features as an engineer naturally would. But does he examine the accounts? Does he in any way look into the contracts and sub-contracts and contracts under these again? Does he look into the cost of material? Does he look into what is paid and compare the cost with the current prices? These are things that a business man, detailed to look into the question of cost, would do, but I do not take it that such is Mr. Schreiber's duty. He has certain figures placed before him. He finds that so much has been spent on labour, so much on material, so much on something else. He sees the vouchers, but does he get underneath all that in a business sense to find out whether there have been extravagant sums paid or not. The mere fact of a man looking as an engineer, after the engineering features of a road, its curves, its masonry, its culverts, and things of that kind, does not enable him to give an opinion as to the reasonableness of its cost. Does he do anything more than simply look at the vouchers placed in his hands and take the amounts there given as having gone into the different kinds of work, sum up the total, and then spread it over the mileage at so much per mile. Yet underneath all that there may be all sorts of extravagance, double payments, sub-contracts and the like, and the engineer would know nothing about them. It does not seem to me that it is his business to know because he is not sent there for that purpose. If he does not do what I have indicated he does not, then we have no certainty at all, even with Mr. Schreiber's certificate, that $35,000 per mile have gone into the work. I notice a letter from Mr. Bell. I think Mr. Bell is an auditor. I know nothing to his discredit, what I do know of him is entirely to his credit, and I have no desire to pass any reflection on him, but Mr. Schreiber says to Mr. Bell: 'What about these accounts?' And Mr. Bell says: 'I have gone through the accounts and examined the vouchers.' What does that show? It shows that bills have been paid and the vouchers produced. But does Mr. Bell go into the question of proper cost and all these other questions which would establish extravagance or otherwise in the construction of the road? Possibly he may, but I imagine that what he does is to examine the accounts and see whether they have been paid and whether the vouchers are all right. If that is Mr. Bell's work, there is something underneath it all that may not have come out, and what makes me suspicious is the extraordinary high cost. The Finance Minister says you cannot compare one road with another unless you have similar conditions. That is true; but I am bound to suppose that neither the Canadian Pacific or the Canadian Northern are running sheep paths up through that country. I think they are building good roads, and I am told that their grades and curves and road-beds, if not equal, are very nearly equal to those of this road. Of course, roads are always getting better where properly cared for; but when you come to compare $18,000 with $35,000 a mile, you have a very large margin for extra ballasting and improving curves and grades. I am told that the hauling capacity of the Canadian Pacific Railway and Canadian Northern is just about as great as that of this road.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Schreiber was here until a short time ago, when I released him from attendance, not supposing that he would be required. All the matters mentioned by my hon. friend are part of the engineering, because it is the duty of an engineer to report that a certain work is going to cost a certain sum, which necessarily implies that he must pass judgment on the reasonableness of the charges for labour, rails, ties, &c. Therefore I think it is reasonable to suppose that Mr. Schreiber, in making his certificates and estimates, assisted by Mr. Bell, a very expert auditor, who examines all the vouchers, does look into all these matters, and the certificate he gives is to be accepted as reasonable evidence that the road will actually cost the sum he mentions in his report, and we are disposed to accept it in that light. But before the matter comes up again, I will discuss these points with him.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is Mr. Bell ?

Mr. FIELDING. The auditor of the government Railway Department.

Mr. HUGHES. Would the minister also bring down a statement as to the cuts and valleys ?

Mr. FIELDING. I could not answer as to that.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the minister tell us when the first conference took place which led up to the negotiations for this loan between the government and the company ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think I would not know.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the Finance Minister must know; if not, the Prime Minister would know. I think the House would be pleased to have further information about it, in view of the circumstances surrounding this whole transaction.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend should not trust his imagination so far.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a good deal more than imagination in it. The very fact that $7,000,000 of this money is going to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and that it took such an active part in the election, and that a government running an election generally wants funds, and that within fifteen or twenty days after the election we have this letter from Mr. Hays stating that unless this is done the work is going to stop and financial ruin is going to stare us in the face and injure the financial status of Canada, causes suspicion that all the preliminary arrangements were made before the election, with the understanding that the scheme would be carried out after the elections in the event of the government being returned to power. Therefore we are interested in getting what information the government can give us about it, and I am quite sure that if they are willing to give it they are in a position to give it.

Mr. TALBOT. The hon. gentleman says something about the activity of the Grand Trunk during the last election. Let him tell us something about the activity of the officials of the Grand Trunk Pacific in the west.

Mr. SPROULE. I am talking to the Minister of Finance, who can give us the information we require.

Mr. FIELDING. The only information I can give as to the activity of the Grand Trunk Pacific in support of the government, is that I heard very much the other way. But these things are not business.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. minister tell us where he got his contributions ?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend has neglected his opportunities of testing all these things in the election courts, which is the proper place, and not here.

Mr. AMES. I understand the hon. minister to say that Mr. Schreiber has had resident engineers traversing this work, who are expected to know every thing that has been done.

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that Mr. Schreiber has had some inspection of the work; I have the impression that Mr. Schreiber had some officials acting for him in his absence.

Mr. AMES. I have no doubt that that is the case, and if so, these officials must have reported from time to time that the amount of money expended on the road was very much in excess of the estimate, and the minister has been for some time in possession of that information.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, we have known it for some time.

Mr. AMES. Then the hon. gentleman has had for some time the means for coming to the conclusion to come to the assistance of the company ?

Mr. FIELDING. We had that only a short time ago.

Mr. AMES. How long ago was the minister asked formally to come to the relief of the company ?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not remember.

Mr. AMES. It is a strange thing about the letter of November 16 that it drops, so to speak, from the clouds, an absolutely finished document and never since then does there seem to have been exchanged a single word altering its tenor.

Mr. FIELDING. Why should it be altered?

Mr. AMES. The resolution is drawn absolutely along the line of the letter. When the letter was written had an affirmative reply been promised to the writer?

Mr. FIELDING. I could not answer, I do not think it had. So far as I am concerned it had not.

Mr. AMES. How long before the 16th of November had the substance of that letter been matters of pour parlers?

Mr. FIELDING. I could not answer; the letter will have to speak for itself—that is the value of the letter.

Mr. AMES. The letter does not say how long prior to that date the matter had been the subject of discussion between the minister and the authorities of the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. FIELDING. I could not tell.

Mr. AMES. The minister would not have us erroneously believe that this letter suddenly fell upon him without any prior intimation?

Mr. FIELDING. It did not fall anywhere, it came in the ordinary way of business.

Mr. AMES. Absolutely unexpected?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know as to that. We probably have expectations of these things sometimes.

Mr. HUGHES. Did the Minister of Finance draft it?

Mr. FIELDING. No, is it good enough for that?

Mr. AMES. Did the minister revise the letter before it was signed?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is asking too many questions.

Mr. FOSTER. Any government going to the people does not want to conceal anything or exaggerate anything, it wants to put all the issues before the people. If the minister knew before October 26 that this $10,000,000 was looming in the air, does he think he did right towards the electors of Canada in not apprising them of the fact and getting their assent to it? It would have made a lovely refrain to the cry of 'Let Laurier finish his work' if the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister had told us what they knew, that $10,000,000 more had to be borrowed for the purpose? There is a great responsibility on the Minister of Finance in this matter. If he knew it, he did not deal rightly by the people and has no mandate from them; the hon. gentleman ought to go back and get a mandate for a matter so important as this. If he did not know, the difficulty is to understand how this letter could have dropped out, fully finished, from the clouds, meeting exactly the view of the minister, because he has taken no objection to it from the first. I never knew of any proposition that did not have two sides to it, propositions and counter propositions.

Mr. AMES.

Mr. FIELDING. A bolt from the blue?

Mr. FOSTER. As though an all-wise Creator had moulded it. It was perfect. It fitted exactly the views of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance and Mr. Hays, and the only people it does not seem to fit are the public of Canada who have to pay for it.

Mr. FIELDING. We do not agree with you there; we think it suits them.

Mr. HUGHES. Who constituted the company referred to by the Minister of Railways in a speech prior to the elections, when it was rumoured that the Grand Trunk Pacific were going to throw up the contract?

Mr. FIELDING. I have no recollection, I do not think I heard of it.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the character of the bridges and trestles?

Mr. FIELDING. I leave that to the engineers.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the minister get that information?

Mr. FIELDING. I will consider it.

Mr. HUGHES. Perhaps he had better do more than that.

Mr. FIELDING. All I can do is to consider it.

Mr. FOSTER. It would be wiser to do more. All he has to do is to find out the nature of the bridges and trestles, whether the bridges and trestles are of steel and the culverts of stone or wood.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend will put a specific question I will endeavour to get the information.

Mr. HUGHES. I put a specific question in each case.

Mr. FIELDING. Very good, we will consider it.

Mr. AMES. Would the minister endeavour to obtain for us some evidence that will enable him to convince us that this is really a superior road? That is readily reduced to a question of profile and figures.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a fair question; I appreciate it.

Mr. AMES. We want to know about the grades, the curves and the character of the structures. Would it be possible for the minister to deal with the question raised in order that the House shall be permitted, either now or at some future date, to examine the statement containing the list of vouchers that go to make up the $35,000 per mile and that the House through one of its committees would be able to examine and take evidence to satisfy itself that the money has gone into the road?

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot answer that off-hand.

Mr. AMES. He will take that into consideration?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. AMES. Will he undertake to show what has been done with the 20 per cent payment on 10,000 shares of stock. We have been told that it went to the general purposes of the road. We would like something more specific. Where has it gone into the road and what is there to show for it? Would he also take up more definitely than has already been done, what will be the probable fixed charges in respect to capital investment for construction and to provide for what rolling stock has been placed on the road, what will be the fixed charges by way of interest on that section of the road and how these fixed charges will compare with the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific Railway which run parallel to this road? It is a very important question because it will enable us to judge whether this company will be in a position to compete in grain rates or will be an active influence in keeping up grain rates.

Mr. FIELDING. If the roads are of different character I do not think such a comparison will be of much value. Of course if a better road is given, as we claim, it will have such increased hauling power that even although the fixed charges are more it will still be a profitable road.

Mr. AMES. It will still be a question of degree and of comparison.

Mr. HUGHES. The three roads, the Grand Trunk Pacific, the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific Railway run through similar country. Each road may be perfectly level for a long distance and then there may be a short grade of 4-10 per cent on the Grand Trunk Pacific and of 5-10 or 6-10 on the Canadian Northern Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway. In order to have the comparison a fair one, would the minister have his engineers state both in miles and in number the grades on the different roads?

Mr. FIELDING. I think the committee and the House are entitled to the fullest information as to the superior character of this road and any possible information on that question I shall endeavour to get. As to comparisons with other roads, that is a different proposition and we will have to hold it in reserve.

Mr. AMES. What steps are being taken by the Grand Trunk Pacific to provide their share of the funds for the construction of the mountain section?

Mr. FIELDING. They have some money in hand, as shown in the information supplied.

Mr. AMES. The minister cannot tell us off-hand how much money they have exclusively for the mountain section ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think the figures are in the printed statement, to which I would refer the hon. member (Mr. Ames).

Mr. AMES. Would it be pressing the matter too far if I asked whether any intimation has been given that further assistance of this character will be required regarding the mountain section ?

Mr. FIELDING. No such intimation has been received. Possibly, my hon. friend's suggestion that further assistance will be required may prove to be correct, but I have no such information now.

Mr. AMES. I can believe it to be quite likely that the railway company will come to the government again, inasmuch as they can borrow at a very much lower rate of interest from the government than they can by floating bonds. I would like to ask also: Where is the preferred stock today—has it been issued?

Mr. FIELDING. If that is not covered by the information already brought down, I will have to ask the hon. member to leave the question for further consideration.

Mr. AMES. It is not in this information. The question is what has been done under their right to issue $20,000,000 of preferred stock ?

Mr. FIELDING. I will have that looked into.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be interesting also if the minister could tell us who compose the Grand Trunk Pacific Town Site Company, how much land they purchased, from whom they purchased it, what they paid for it, and how much of that money went to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. Also, who compose the Grand Trunk Pacific Construction Company, and how much of the road is under contract to them ?

Mr. FIELDING. I will look into that matter and see if I can get the information for my hon. friend.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 128) to authorize a loan to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the Bill will be printed at once and distributed ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is in print now, and I suppose the printing for members can be expedited.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FIELDING. In moving the adjournment of the House, I may state that a desire has been expressed by hon. members on both sides, that if we dispose of this business to-night, the House might not find it necessary to meet to-morrow. The government have every disposition to concur in that suggestion. But His Excellency the Governor General will attend to-morrow in the Senate Chamber to assent to the Supply Bill and other Bills that are ready, and it will be necessary for a sufficient number of members to be present to attend His Excellency. I would suggest that it might be agreed to have the House meet pro forma for the purpose indicated, but that, by common consent, no other business be taken up. It is hoped that such hon. members as remain in town will attend the pro-forma sitting in order that there may be a respectable quorum to respond to the knock of Black Rod.

Mr. AMES. Can the Minister of Finance do one thing more? I understand that a return has been called for with reference to the indirect liabilities of the government, which return was to be presented to-morrow afternoon. Can this be rendered available before we adjourn?

Mr. FIELDING. I think the information is available. If it be possible, we will have it brought down. Failing that, I will send it to the hon. gentleman during the recess.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Many hon. members wish to leave town to-morrow morning before the House is called. May I ask the hon. Minister of Finance if it may be understood that to-morrow shall not be a session of the House so that it will not tell against the members in their fifteen days' allowance.

Mr. FIELDING. Whatever my disposition is, I am afraid I have not the power to assent to that suggestion.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 7, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 4.15 o'clock.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received a Message from the Senate, agreeing to the following Bills, without any amendment, viz.:—

Bill (No. 79) An Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Bill (No. 117) An Act for granting to His Majesty certains sums of money for the public service of the financial years ending respectively the 31st March, 1909, and the 31st March, 1910.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I notice that in reading the announcements from the Senate you say that the Senate has passed the Supply Bill 'without any amendment.' I beg to ask the minister if they have any right to amend it, or why they say that?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). We had better accept the situation.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the Senate is taking a little too much upon itself.

COAL MINERS' STRIKE.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. While we are waiting for the arrival of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod might I ask the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux) if he has received any late news from the west in reference to the coal strike? I see by the papers that there is a strike on in Alberta and British Columbia and I hear further rumours that it is likely to be settled. Perhaps the minister could give us some definite information.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Minister of Labour). Mr. Speaker, in answer to my hon. friend I may say that on the third of April, I received the following telegram:—

Hosmer Mines, B.C., April 3.

Agreement between scale committee representing United Mine Workers and Operators' Association was reached at Macleod. This agreement was submitted to locals for referendum and was carried by majority of over 200 votes. Upon meeting at Macleod to execute agreement Sherman, president district 18, refused to sign agreement. Believe Indianapolis officials will instruct officials district 18 to sign agreement as made at Macleod and will insist upon its execution.

(Sgd.) LEWIS STOCKETT.

Since the arrival of this telegram I have received another stating that the officials of the International Union had accepted the agreement and had urged all the miners to abide by that agreement. I regret that I have not this telegram in my possession just now. It is at my office, but from what I learned this morning I believe that by the end of this week all the mines will be in operation. From what I understand there is only one man in Canada objecting to the agreement. All the miners have accepted the agreement reached at Macleod.

MR. MACKENZIE KING.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it would satisfy the curiosity of a good many people if the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux) could give the House any information regarding the whereabouts of the prospective Minister of Labour. The Minister might tell us whether he has been taken possession of by the Mikado or in what part of the habitable world he is resident at the present time, and, if ever, when he is likely to return.

Mr. HUGHES. Was he sent away to get rid of him?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not know to whom my hon. friend refers when he speaks of the prospective Minister of Labour. Probably he refers to some rumours in the papers that Mr. Mackenzie King might be Minister of Labour. That is only a rumour. My hon. friend wishes to know where that hon. gentleman is. Mr. Mackenzie King has attended the sittings of the International Commission appointed to look into the question of the suppression of the opium trade. I understand that the sittings of the commission are at an end and that Mr. Mackenzie King is presently in Pekin. He will sail for Canada very soon now and he will probably report to the House the result of his mission. From the information that we have in the department the mission has been highly successful, and there is every hope that the trade will be regulated in such a way that within a few years it will be completely suppresed in the far east, thanks to the attitude taken by the British authorities who are leading in that very efficient movement. I must say that Mr. King had rather an easy mission so far as Canada is concerned, because, as my hon. friend is aware, last year parliament passed legislation to suppress that trade. A few months were given to the traders of British Columbia to get rid of what opium they had in stock. That time having elapsed a few days ago, Canada is to-day probably the first country on the continent in which the opium trade is completely suppressed except for medicinal purposes.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister has not yet told us the whereabouts of that gentleman and as opium has a narcotic influence we may assume that Mr. McKenzie King is asleep somewhere.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend is aware that Mr. Mackenzie King is never asleep, as he proved during last election.

Mr. HUGHES. What percentage of the mine owners and mine workers in British Columbia are British subjects owing allegiance to the British flag?

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the hon. gentleman will put that question on the Order Paper I will be glad to get a formal answer for him. There is something in the point that the trouble we have experienced in the west has been caused by the large percentage of foreigners there.

Mr. HUGHES. Sure.

THE OLD FORT, TORONTO.

Mr. FOSTER. I have received communications from certain associations in Toronto with reference to the old fort on the Garrison Common property, and I have not yet been able to place them formally before the House. These gentlemen fear that the street railway may be allowed to pass through the grounds and they have the idea that the government is now assenting to the transfer of the old fort property to the city without insisting on the condition that it shall not be used for other than park or exhibition purposes. I would ask the Minister of Finance if he would bring this matter to the attention of the Prime Minister, so that in the meantime, until I can present these petitions in a formal way, the government may do nothing which would lead to the result which these gentlemen fear.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not familiar with the case but I shall be very glad to draw the attention of the Prime Minister to it.

THE ROYAL ASSENT.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received from the secretary of His Excellency the Governor General the following communication:

Ottawa, April 7, 1909.

Sir, I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Administrator, will proceed to the Senate Chamber this afternoon at 4.15 o'clock, for the purpose of assenting to such Bills as have passed the Senate and the House of Commons.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. HANBURY WILLIAMS,
Colonel,
Governor General's Secretary.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

A message was received from His Excellency the administrator by the gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Administrator, desires the immediate attendance of your honourable House, in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House, went up to the Senate Chamber.

And having returned,

Mr. Speaker informed the House that his honour the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

An Act respecting the Kootenay Central Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.

An Act respecting the Collingwood Southern Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Brandon Transfer Railway Company.

An Act to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

An Act to amend the Post Office Act.

An Act respecting the Union Station and other joint facilities of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and the Midland Railway of Manitoba, at Portage la Prairie.

An Act to incorporate the Salisbury and Albert Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Huron and Ontario Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Alberta Central Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Southern Central Pacific Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Toronto, Niagara and Western Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Hudson's Bay and Pacific Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Guelph and Goderich Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Walkerton and Lucknow Railiway Company.

An Act respecting the Vancouver, Westminster and Yukon Railway Company.

An Act respecting the joint section of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company at Fort William, Ontario.

An Act to incorporate the Canadian Western Railway Company. (11.)

An Act to amend the Government Railways Act. (20.)

An Act respecting the Edmonton and Slave Lake Railway Company. (24).

An Act to amend the Railway Act. (21).

An Act respecting the Bank of Vancouver.

An Act respecting the Crawford Bay and St. Mary's Railway Company, and to change its name to 'The British Columbia and Manitoba Railway Company.'

An Act to amend the Dominion Lands Act. (8.)

An Act respecting the Winnipeg and Northwestern Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Burrard, Westminster Boundary Railway and Navigation Company.

An Act to incorporate the Western Canadian Life Assurance Company.

An Act to incorporate the British Columbia Life Assurance Company.

An Act to incorporate the Canada National Fire Insurance Company.

An Act respecting the St. Mary's and Western Ontario Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Athabaska Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Alsek and Yukon Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Abitibi and Hudson Bay Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Montreal Terminal Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Vancouver, Fraser Valley and Southern Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Mexican Land and Irrigation Company, Limited.

An Act respecting the Brazilian Electro Steel and Smelting Company, Limited.

An Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial years ending respectively the 31st March, 1909, and the 31st March, 1910.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 4.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 13, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 131) to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Mr. FOSTER. Explain.

Mr. BRODEUR. The purpose of the Bill is to add some words to the French version which were accidentally omitted in the translation from the English version of the Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CHARGES ON LOANS.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE (Ontario). I direct the attention of the Minister of Finance to the return brought down with reference to the expenses in connection with certain loans. It does not state the names of those to whom moneys were paid.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING. All these payments are made to the financial agents of the government, the Bank of Montreal. I do not think we have the names of the persons to whom the amounts are paid individually. The commissions are paid entirely to the Bank of Montreal and they arrange for the underwriting when underwriting is necessary. The advertising has been done through an advertising agency in London, and I suppose the details could be obtained.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. There is a large item of £32,000 under the head of miscellaneous and other charges, and no particulars of that are given. I think we should have that information.

Mr. FIELDING. Is that in addition to the underwriting?

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. Yes.

Mr. FIELDING. I will have attention called to the observations of my hon. friend and see whether any further information can be obtained.

LOANS ISSUED SINCE 1907.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Finance has not yet brought down the return with reference to the loans issued since 1907.

Mr. FIELDING. I will make inquiry. I was under the impression I had brought down all except one asked for by my hon. friend (Mr. Ames).

CENTRAL RAILWAY OF NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the orders of the day are called I would like to ask the First Minister if in view of the report of the Royal Commission which has been issued in the city of St. John, N.B., and which to a certain extent affects two of the officers of the government, he has yet decided upon any course of action, or if he has anything to communicate to the House with reference to it.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, I may say I have not seen that report. I have only seen extracts from it in the public press. At this moment I have no communication at all to make to the House.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH GERMANY.

Mr. MONK. I call the attention of the government to a telegraphic despatch in this morning's paper in reference to an article in the London 'Standard' which states that negotiations towards a treaty are going on between the Canadian government and Germany. I ask the Prime Minister if there have been at any time such negotiations, and if they are proceeding at present.

Mr. FIELDING. There are not nor have there been any such negotiations as those referred to. From time to time we have had opportunities of meeting gentlemen interested in German trade who have discussed with us the advisability of certain changes, but there are no negotiations; nothing which would correspond to the statement made in the press.

BUDGET SPEECH.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it the intention of the Minister of Finance to go on with his budget speech next Thursday ?

Mr. FIELDING. My present expectation is to bring the budget on Thursday. If anything intervenes to change that intention it will be announced to-morrow.

TARIFF CHANGES.

Mr. MONK. Is it possible for the Minister of Finance to give any information as to whether the government contemplates any changes in the customs duties? I specially refer to the duties on tin. This is a time of activity in that particular business; the farmers and the canning establishments are providing themselves with supplies, and as I have received many inquiries I bring the matter to the attention of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend reflects for a moment, he will see from his own experience that it is never possible for a Finance Minister to make any statement as to the intention of the government in tariff matters except in the budget speech, and I shall have to ask my hon. friend to be patient until that is delivered.

Mr. MONK. I merely wished to ask the Minister of Finance if he could state that there would be no change in the tariff.

Mr. HUGHES. The Finance Minister, having become a protectionist, will surely see that the tin plate industry is protected.

THE WOOLLEN INDUSTRY.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX. Mr. Speaker, I quite appreciate what the Minister of Finance has said, that he has locked up securely in his own mind the knowledge of the great benefits he is about to confer on Canada by the budget which he will bring down on Thursday next, and it is in order that we may improve, if possible, the text of the deliverance which he shall then make, and if possible bring about an improvement of conditions, that I propose to invite the attention of the Finance Minister for a few moments to the condition of the woollen industry of Canada at the present time. The importance of that industry very few, I think, will be disposed to question. There may or may not be some who feel some doubt as to the extent to which we can develop that industry. Speaking for myself, I am convinced that with proper governmental regulations there is in Canada a field for an enormous development of the woollen industry both as regards production and manufacture. As a farmer, of course my attention will be directed more particularly to the matter from the point of view of the farming industry; but I shall not forget that for an all-round industry we require not only the production but also the manufacture of wool. A business government, I presume, will keep in mind especially the main industry of the country. A wise business man, while giving regard to all details, will endeavour especially to conserve that which is his main source of income. Therefore I think I am right in saying that above all other interests the interest of farming in Canada should be the main concern of a wise and prudent adminstration.

In the early days of the session, in answer to questions I asked, the government informed me that in 1908 we had 575,000 farmers; that there were maintained and supported directly by farming 3,788,000 people, considerably more than one-half of our entire population; that there was invested in farming in Canada $1,761,486,180; that the field crops of last year were of the value of $432,000,000; and that our export of grains, animals, and other farm products, amounted to $129,000,000, after supplying all our own home wants. Now, the greatest industry of the greatest nations of the world is that of textiles, among them being France, Germany, Belgium, Holland, Great Britain, and the United States, and it ought to be of concern to us to consider very carefully whether we can develope in Canada a great textile industry, and particularily that branch of it known as the woollen industry.

Great Britain, with a population of 44,000,000, has 5,000,000, or more than one-ninth of its entire population, engaged in the textile industry; and it is surely a moderate computation to say that in addition to supporting themselves, each of these will on the average support two others. If so, we have the result that in Great Britain the textile industry gives employment to more than one-ninth and gives support directly to more than one-third of the entire population of the country. In acreage, Great Britain is of course a comparatively small country; yet it has developed an enormous woollen industry, both as regards the production of wool and the manufacture of woollens. In 1907 the woollen manufactures of Great Britain amounted to $464,000,000, of which $185,000,000 worth was for export and $278,000,000 worth for home consumption. Let me interject here that important as is the export, it is even more vitally important that every country should be in a position to clothe itself, so far as the staples of clothing for its people are concerned. Britain, within its narrow boundaries, produces 131,000,000 pounds of wool annually, while we, with our almost illimitable territory, produce 12,000,000 pounds annually. Britain within its narrow confines,is able to support 30,000,000 sheep, while we in Canada, with our vast extent of country, can only support about 2,000,000 sheep, although in 1905, showing to what extent this industry has declined, Ontario alone had more than 2,000,000 sheep. Canada is at present importing upwards of $22,000,000 worth of woollen fabrics to clothe its people, almost every dollar's worth of which should be produced and manufactured in our own country, if we had a tariff suitable to the conditions of Canada.

France has directly engaged in the textile industry 2,008,000 people, supporting a population of 6,000,000 or 7,000,000 people, equal or more than equal to the entire population of the Dominion of Canada. Germany, as we know, protects everything, and it has engaged in the textile industry almost two to every one engaged in any other industry.

Coming to the United States, we come to a country similar in almost all respects to our own. The history of the United States should be our history practically, as regards the woollen industry. I know that there are some divergencies, but they are of such minor character that what the United States has done in the century that was hers, Canada in this century, which the Prime Minister says is our century, ought to do in the woollen industry for the people of Canada. The conditions in our maritime provinces and in our western provinces of British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan are just as favourable to the production of wool as are those in the United States. In fact, a large and important element in the manufacture of woollens in the United States is derived from Canada. Among the best worsteds produced in the United States are those manufactured from Canadian wool. In fact the conditions in the United States are identical with those in Canada plus the protection they give their farmers on their native wool. That is about the difference reduced to actual analysis. It takes time for nations to realize what is in their interest. This government has had twelve years' time in which to realize it, and so far have failed to do so. It took time in the United States. There was a period when the United States was sacrificing its interests in favour of British wool manufacturing. As late as 1799 the United States was taking 40 per cent of the entire woollen export of Britain. As late as 1816—although the war of 1812 had checked the inroads and had made the United States, for the time being, realize the importance of being commercially independent of any other nation for its clothing—the United States were importing as much as an average of $70,000,000 a year from Britain. But the war of 1812 drew attention to the fact that it was necessary for the United States to do something. In the years preceding the war, in 1808, for instance, the United States was only producing a matter of 14,000,000 pounds of wool, but by the time the war was closing, it was producing 22,000,000 pounds. Now that country is producing 330,000,000 pounds and is manufacturing into woollens 500,000,000 pounds, so that the United States to-day, with conditions similar to our own,is actually producing upon its own farms two-thirds of the entire wool which it manufactures into clothing. What are we going to do? The question is an important one, and the history of the United States is pregnant with information to show us what we ought to be able to do. I might say that in 1812, before the United States had taken reasonable measures to protect its trade in that respect, prices had, by reason of the war increased to an enormous extent. As a matter of fact broad cloth sold in that country at from $8 to $12 a yard, and merino rams sold as high as $1,000 each. After the war scare was over, the United States became careless again, and Britain again obtained a foothold there, with the effect that sheep sold as low as $1 a head, and they were importing from Britain to the enormous extent of $70,000,000 of woollen manufactures.

From the history of the United States, I shall proceed to refer, in a moment or two to the history of Britain in this matter; but I deduce this proposition, which I submit for the consideration of the government, that a really successful national woollen industry in Canada involves a profitable production of wool as well as profitable manufacture of woollens, and it should be the aim of the government to harmonize, unite and merge these two great interests. Speaking from a farmer's standpoint more particularly, I am convinced that the first essential is the production of wool. The production of wool is a native industry of Canada. It prospered in the early settlement of Canada before tariffs began to interfere with it; and Tory as I am—if you call me such—I am yet prepared to say that as yet, neither Conservatives nor Liberals—the latter used to call themselves reformers when I was young, but reformers have gone out of business—have done all they could for the basis of the woollen industry in Canada, which is of course the production of our native wool.

We have been protecting the manufacturers, and it is important that we should do so. They are the great source of profit from the raw material, the production of which cannot reach its climax of profit until it is manufactured into woollens in this country. Therefore I do not ignore the great importance of protecting the woollen industry, but I would point out that both parties have been beginning at the wrong end. They should begin at the foundation and not at the upper story. They should begin by encouraging the growth of wool, which is the basis of a healthy, substantial, progressive woollen industry in Canada. We have no end of millions for industrial enterprises in this country. We have millions for iron and steel bounties, but we have not yet had a square deal for the farmers with regard to their woollen industry.

What did Britain do in this matter—free trade Britain, whose example our hon. friends opposite are so prone to praise but not to follow? Free trade Britain was the victim of other countries for a time. She took a long time to wake up. Six or seven hundred years ago she was paying tribute to the continent in the woollen industry. At that time Britain, which now stands supreme in the woollen trade, was hardly in the running at all, and Belgium and Holland were then leading the trade of the world in that respect. They were spoken of as clothing the world and they were making clothing to a large extent out of woollens manufactured from the fleeces produced in Britain; so that those countries were reaping a rich reward while the British were practically the hewers of wood and drawers of water or rather the clippers of wool for the continent. To such an extent was this the case that the expression 'rich as a Count of Flanders,' was generally used to describe the flourishing condition of those who were deriving large profits from raw material exported from Britain to be manufactured into woollen goods on the continent. Well, I have no objection that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, who is practically the King of Canada at present, should follow the example set him by some of the Kings of Britain and do something in this matter.

King Henry II. and King Edward I. tried to do something in this matter. But it was to King Edward III. that we owe the establishment of that great industry in Britain, the textile industry. He saw that Great Britain could never be supreme—and it never would have been supreme, either commercially, navally or nationally—if it continued under the system that prevailed in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, the system of exporting its fleeces for manufacture abroad, and buying back the goods at enhanced prices to clothe its people later on. So, King Edward III. took measures, and most effective measures. He first encouraged Flemish wool growers to come in considerable numbers and establish themselves in Great Britain. He then sent emissaries to the continent and placed such inducements before the people there as led large numbers of Flemish artisans and woolworkers to come and settle in Great Britain. All this was not accomplished without much negotiation and deplomacy or without marked hostility on the part of some sections of the people of Great Britain; as members of the House will recollect, thousands of these Flemish artisans were driven out by the hostile artisans and labourers of Great Britain. But the King persisted, and the government persisted too. And they went farther; they enacted a law which stands, perhaps at the very base of all the prosperity of Great Britain in connection with textiles, and which is probably the most drastic piece of protective legislation that has ever been enacted in any country. This was enacted in free-trade Britain in the reign of King Edward III. It provided that no Welshman, Irishman or Englishman—I do not know why it specifies the classes, but I give it as it is in the statute—should export wool or fleeces from Great Britain under penalty of death. And so the textile industry of Great Britain had its foundation and its growth. Statute succeeded statute, down through the various reigns, prohibiting the export of textile machinery, protecting and guarding the secrets in connection with the woollen industry and otherwise giving to the industry the assistance of the law. This continued down through the centuries until the reign of Queen Victoria and to the year 1854. And so it was only by centuries of protection of the most drastic character that Great Britain was able to build up its textile industry until it felt that for a time—and that time is now nearly exhausted—it could defy all trade competitors wherever they might be. And thus we see that the textile industry of Great Britain, like that of the United States, was fostered and built up by means of trade and tariff laws. It is clear that the conditions of Canada and the United States at least are so similar that what was done in the United States we can do in Canada by proper adjustment of our statutes. If that be so, then it becomes merely a question of what are the government going to do in this matter for the interests of Canada? There are a number of practical men here in the House, and these men know that one of the great ultimate profits in manufacturing to-day is through the utilization of the by-products. This may not be the largest profit in a manufacturing business, but it is in a sense the unexpected one, almost the unearned one, and it is one of the most important in connection with any manufacture. It is important that we should grow wool in Canada even if we do not manufacture it. It is important that we should grow wheat in Canada, although a large portion of it is exported in the form of wheat instead of being first converted into flour. It is important that we should bring the logs from the forest, even if we export them in that form. But it is far better, as everybody knows, if we can carry the process further and export the finished product in every case. The great national by-product of the raw materials of Canada is secured by the manufacture in Canada, as far as possible, of the raw materials into the finished article. In this way we shall increase the population and multiply demand. There will be more to be housed, more to be fed, more to be clothed, more to be carried, more to be lighted, more to be provided for in every way. In this way, you will secure that result which Conservatives have been trying to point out to Liberals for so long, which we tried to impress upon them for eighteen years while they were in opposition — that by this means we can enormously benefit the country nationally through extending and increasing the home market and benefiting our entire population. It would be as wise for us to export our wheat and import it back in the form of flour, paying for the carriage and paying for the foreign manufacture, as to export our wool and buy it back in the form of clothing, whether made up or otherwise. We cannot build up a great woollen industry so long as we export our fleeces and buy them back as manufactured goods. We must form a full partnership union—to borrow a phrase from an hon. member of this House—between these two great interests; we must not only raise wool, but we must spin it and weave it and wear it, if we are to develop a great and prosperous, all-round woollen industry in Canada.

If we survey our situation in Canada we have every reason to believe that we can develop a great woollen industry in this country. I would call the attention of the Minister of Finance to the fact that we have in Canada immense areas which are especially adapted to the growth and production of wool, but which are, perhaps, not adapted for any other profitable use. I have endeavoured to ascertain the extent of land of that character in Canada, but I have not been able to secure any very definite information upon that point. However, every one who takes any note of the conditions in the country is aware that we have immense areas of the kind I have described. Another important feature in favour of wool-growing in Canada is the peculiar immunity from disease of Canadian sheep. It is an absolute, well-established fact that perhaps in no other country in the world are sheep as free from disease as they are in Canada. As a matter of fact, it has been ascertained, and this information will be found in a publication of the Department of Agriculture, that herds imported into Canada and which had suffered from disease in other countries for generations have, after two or three generations in Canada, become entirely free of disease. Then, too, the exceedingly high quality of the mutton produced in Canada is an important factor. I admit that it is not equal in texture or in flavour to the English mutton, but it is equal to any other mutton in the world. To-day it is greatly sought after by people in the United States, hotel-keepers and others who want a high class article. That is notably the case in the maritime provinces where every fall purchasers for American hotels buy large quantities of mutton. Although there has been some doubt as to the quality of our wool, it is well established that we can grow not only the coarser, but also the finer grades, particularly since the west is opening up and we are now producing an excellent quality of wool which is being used in the United States. I do not know whether the Canadian woollen manufacturers are doing all in their power to assist the Canadian producer by using his wool. Then we have the important factor to which I have already referred, that our conditions are similar to those in the United States where they have developed an enormous woollen industry.

The last, and perhaps the most important fact, is that Canada contains, in a sense, the last great fields, the last sheep walks of the world. We know that as agriculture becomes more settled, the sheep walks are more circumscribed. That is the case in Australia and in the United States, and notably in England and on the continent of Europe; but for years, and I venture to say for scores and for hundreds of years, as we spread out and carry our railways further into the interior and the remote regions of Canada, more and more, we will open up valuable fields where we can produce wool with great profit to the people. I venture to predict that a business government, whenever it comes into power in Ottawa, if this government will not rise to the occasion, will so encourage and develop the woollen industry that it will become a great factor in planting on this northern half of the continent one of the greatest nations in the world.

Woollen manufacturing has succeeded in the United States and it succeeded here as long as the wool farmer and the manufacturer worked in harmony. It was a native industry with the French colonists in Quebec and Nova Scotia years ago, and with the English colonists in Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Ontario; they were successfully producing their own wool and manufacturing it into clothing. The industry prospered until thirty years ago, when the laws of Canada virtually divorced the interests of the farmers and the manuacturers. Now we are losing ground; I do not think there can be much doubt about that. It could hardly be otherwise. No attention is paid to this industry, the government knows it, they know they have been jollying the farmer and jollying the manufacturer. There is perhaps no greater instance of that than the speech of the right hon. gentleman at the manufacturers' convention at Montreal. But they have been doing absolutely nothing, and year after year these great industries of wool growing and wool manufacturing have been losing ground. The farmer has been keeping fewer sheep, producing less wool and receiving less money for it; he has been going out of the business because there has been no profit in it. The manufacturers, year after year, have been going behind; factory after factory has been closing up and selling its machinery, as this Montreal factory is now selling its machinery and returning it to Great Britain. It could hardly be otherwise, because when I asked the Minister of Customs the other day for statistics in reference to the woollen industry the minister, always accommodating, always kind, had to confess to me that he had no information; that there were no statistics and nothing available.

I find in a copy of the Yorkshire 'Post' of February 24 last, which was sent to me, a dispatch from Ottawa of the 11th of February, reporting a meeting of the Dominion Sheep Breeders' Association. These gentlemen have been gauging the situation and have come to the conclusion that this government are doing nothing and do not appear to be awake to the situation at all. The report reads:

> The Dominion Sheep Breeders' Association, acting on this advice, appointed a committee in January to wait upon the Minister of Customs to present the case for the protection of raw wool. At the annual meeting of the association, held in Toronto last Friday, this committee, whose chairman was Mr. John Campbell, president of the association, presented its report, which was read by its secretary, Col. D. A. McCrae. The committee, said Colonel McCrae, had been sympathetically received by Mr. Paterson, Minister of Customs, but found that both Mr. Paterson and his staff were lamentably unfamiliar with the actual situation of the wool trade. In Mr. Paterson's opinion, little could be done to remedy the situation——

Very much like the fly on the wheel policy of some years ago.

—he informed the committee, unless special legislation were enacted by the Dominion parliament——

Why don't you get a hustle on and enact the legislation if it is necessary? Why don't you do something for the sheep breeders of Canada? That is what I am after. We have not yet had the budget speech, and I have a kind of faith that even at the last hour the Minister of Finance may repent and see the wisdom of doing something for the wool grower and the woollen manufacturer of Canada.

Mr. FIELDING. What is it that my hon. friend asks to be done?

Mr. LENNOX. Oh well now, that is all right.

Mr. FIELDING. I knew that was all right.

Mr. LENNOX. That is all right. I did not want to move a vote of want of confidence in this government to day, but I may say that as far as my heart goes I could do it all right.

Mr. FIELDING. Hear, hear; nobody doubts that.

Mr. LENNOX. It would be perfectly right, but in the end I am going to summarize what I think the government ought to do. If this government do not know what ought to be done after all the interviews they have had with woollen manufacturers and sheep breeders' associations and representatives of the woollen industries generally in Canada it is time that they would leave and I think it is time now. I think there is good ground for believing that as these gentlemen, whilst they were out of power, failed to appreciate the conditions which would bring prosperity to Canada, so now they are not able, as regards the woollen industry, to appreciate the situation. Let me illustrate the matter, by quoting the following figures with reference to the sheep industry in Ontario, which is the only province for which we have statistics;

Number of Sheep in Ontario.

1907	1,106,083

In all Canada to-day we have about two million sheep less than we had in Ontario in 1895. We have had a shrinkage, since 1895, of 45 per cent in the number of sheep kept in Ontario, while in other lines agriculture is profitable. It is prospering in spite of the action of my hon. friends opposite, as the following figures will show:

Horses.

1895	647,696
1907	725,666

Milch cows.

or an increase of 30 per cent in Ontario.

Pigs.

Increase 58 per cent. We are losing ground in the sheep raising industry and we are losing ground notably and dreadfully in the matter of our manufacturing facilities. In 1899 we had in Canada 270 woollen mills in pretty steady operation, I believe. Now he have 190. We have lost 80 or 30 per cent of the lot. There has been a shrinkage of 30 per cent in the number of woollen mills in Canada, and a shrinkage in output of, I venture to say, at least 50 per cent.

My hon. friend the Finance Minister asked me what we would propose. Well, we are prepared to take upon ourselves the burden of doing what is in the best interests of Canada at any time, but I would propose that the government should do something that would prevent this industry, as far as the farm is concerned, from languishing from year to year. It is a necessary adjunct to the farm, and I would commend to the hon. gentleman a sentence from a pamphlet on wool and woollens which I dare say the Minister of Finance has read, and which I regard as a very careful and clever statement upon the subject. It is by Mr. E. B. Biggar. I quote as follows:

> The foundation of the woollen industry is wool, and the protection that Canada needs to re-establish this industry is a system that will begin with the sheep-raiser and continue by progressive stages to the spinner, the weaver and the knitter, and on to the clothing manufacturer.

I will read another sentence from the 'Yorkshire Post', and this is in connection with the position that the Dominion Sheep Breeder's Association take upon the question. The paper says:

> The argument of the advocates of duties on wool was, that if, along with duties on raw wool, the manufacturers were protected by compensatory duties, then there would spring up all over Canada a great many factories for the manufacture of worsteds, for which purpose the wools grown in Canada were especially valuable. They were at present being shipped into the United States, and were used there for the manufacture of what were described as 'the best clothes in the world.' There was no reason why the wool growers and the wool manufacturers should not be able to work in harmony to bring about a revival of what ought to be one of the greatest industries of the country. It was therefore resolved that the committee which had been appointed to interview the authorities at Ottawa should appoint a sub-committee to meet the representatives of the wool manufacturers and discuss the situation together.

As to what would happen as the result of our protecting ourselves, protecting the farmers and the industries of Canada, I want to read a line or two quoted from an interview in the 'Dewsbury District News' of September 26, 1908, with a Batleyite manufacturere, a very prominent manufacturer in England. He says:

> The near approach of the general election in Canada gives rise to a good deal of anxiety in their country. It is well known here that Canadian manufacturers are suffering most acutely from British competition.

That is the position as they view it in England. Then, after some other questions he is asked:

> 'Would it not be worth your while to establish mills in Canada?' 'Most decidedly' was the ready answer. 'We have spent a lot of money in recent years on new machinery. If we had put that plant down in Canada we could have made big profits, assisted by the present tariff, and if the tariff wall is raised so high that our goods are shut out, you will see new mills opened in Canada by English firms, who will beat the Canadians on their own grounds.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. LENNOX. I say 'hear, hear' with all gusto in response to my hon. friend. In other words if you protect our people, instead of protecting the people of Britain and other countries—and charity in this respect begins at home—you will have with respect to this industry what happened with reference to kindred industries in the United States, when 130 branch industries of the United States—such as the Deering Harvester concern—established their works in Canada. This Batleyite manufacturer says that if we had been ready to protect ourselves, or if in the workings of Providence the Conservatives had come into power and had asserted what is in the interest of the people of Canada, the English manufacturers would have established their mills in Canada. He says:

The Canadian manufacturers must not think that protection will save them. If they cannot make cloth at the price at which it ought to be made they will be driven out of the business by stress of competition, even if we are compelled to build factories in Canada to enable us to do it.

My own firm is prepared to open a mill there next year if such step is necessary to protect our interests in that country and to offer inducements to our employees to go there.

The right hon. gentleman must realize, the Minister of Finance must realize that you have only to adopt the square deal towards the people of Canada, and instead of having foreign goods, or even goods from Britain coming in and closing up our factories, you will have healthy competition in Canada, no increase in price, and you will have a large number of factories from England and elsewhere establishing branches and building up an immense woollen trade here. Then he touches a crucial point, and I commend this to my right hon. friend; he says:

The worst of it is that high protection tariffs drive industry out of our own country and that means loss to each of our local authorities through reduced revenues for gas, electricity, and in rates, and loss to the shopkeepers.

High protective tariffs in Canada entail loss on the foreign country, and on Britain, and the result is, as he says, that they have to transfer their industries into the protected country, and so the municipal revenues are transferred to the protected country. That is an item worth considering. So it is that if you will give reasonable and adequate protection to the industries of Canada you will be securing for Canada that great national by-product that results from the manufacture of the raw material into the completed article within our own country. I am not an expert in the woollen industry, but I pose as being a reasonably fair farmer. I believe that we farmers have to some extent been blameful ourselves, that we have not been doing everything we could in the way of bringing wool to the market in good shape, and I believe also that the manufacturers could have done more than they have done.

But there are incidental gains in sheep raising that should not be lost sight of. For instance, there is the extermination of weeds. The Minister of Agriculture, a farmer like myself though probably not such a tiller of the soil, will appreciate that sheep will do more than all the men you can employ to exterminate weeds. Then, there is the renewal of the fertility of the soil by raising large flocks of sheep. There is also to be considered the very important question of the health of the people. You remember the learned discussion we had here a few weeks ago about preserving the health of the people; the way to do that is for the people to eat more mutton. What makes Britain what she is; it is largely the eating of mutton.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I thought it was roast beef.

Mr. LENNOX. With a little roast beef added occasionally. Somehow or other we don't eat mutton in Canada to the extent they do in other countries. But, I am told by doctors—and I do not care to depend on the doctors, more than I can help, but I have to take their word in this case—I am told by doctors that there is no animal food so good as mutton. There was an inspection of animals in the United States in 1905 and of 8,000,000 sheep examined only 27 were affected with tuberculosis, whereas, of 6,000,000 cattle inspected 11,000 were affected, and of 25,000,000 hogs 207,000 had tuberculosis. For one sheep affected there were 555 cattle and 2,390 hogs, and yet the people will eat pork. I believe that the history of countries similar to Canada, particularly the history of the United States, shows that we can build up a great and profitable woollen industry here. I had intended to read from 'Sheep Husbandry in Canada,' issued by the Department of Agriculture but it will take less time if hon. members read it themselves. I believe it is prepared by Dr. Rutherford, anyway it is issued by the department and presumably reliable, and it shows that there are great areas of land in the various provinces fit for raising sheep, and that the conditions in Canada are such as to enable us to establish a large wool producing industry. We have a duty on wool but it seems to be a farce. In 1907 there were 8,000,000 pounds of wool imported, and I am told by those who profess to understand that 6,500,000 pounds of that should have been dutiable, and yet the return brought down by the Minister of Customs shows that we only derived a duty of $6 from all the wool imported into Canada in that year. I want to say as emphatically as I can that even at this late hour the government should do something to prevent the wool growing and the wool manufacturing industries from being wiped out. There is no doubt in my mind, there is no doubt in the mind of any thoughtful person, there is no doubt in the mind of any one who studies the conditions, that we can build up in Canada an enormous industry in the production of wool and in the conversion of that wool into clothing. And, although the quantity we are exporting at present is not very large because our total clip of wool is only 12,000,000 pounds, yet we can increase it so enormously that we can practically clothe our own people with wool grown in our own country. I do think it is high time for the government to cease jollying these two great industries. The government is trying to satisfy them with empty statements every time these people come to Ottawa, and yet the government does nothing. I want to read a line or two from an eloquent speech delivered by the right hon. the Prime Minister—the right hon. gentleman's speeches are always eloquent and graceful—at the Manufacturers' banquet in Montreal last year when the elections were coming on. He said:

> Their argument is that if the quality of British goods were equal to the quality of Canadian goods they could compete, but they say, that under the tariff the British manufacturer is able to send to Canada a certain class of article which is inferior in quality, though shining in appearance, and seductive to the customer, but worth less than the money he pays for it; in other words, that the goods which are sent over from Great Britain to Canada are shoddy goods, made up of a little wool and a good deal of tops and oil and waste, cobwebs and refuse, and similar things, which are given to the innocent Canadian consumer.

I want the House to note particularly how they are made up—of cobwebs and refuse and similar things—because of the advice my right hon. friend afterwards gives. Summing up, he said:

> If, after all, the man or woman, deluded or not deluded, chooses to buy the cheap shining goods, why, in the name of everything that is proper, do you not give him or her the cheap shining goods? Why is it that you cannot produce what is produced by the British manufacturer? Well, sir, if it be that the conscience of the Canadian manufacturer is too severe, that they will give only pure wool and nothing else, I say that is not business.

That is the advice my right hon. friend gives to the manufacturers and the people of Canada; and he opens that speech by saying that he is going to have a heart-to-heart talk with them. The heart-to-heart talk, all boiled down, is this: The British manufacturers unload these goods, made partly of wool, but considerably of cobwebs and refuse; you the Canadian manufacturers should adapt yourselves to the conditions, go into the same line of business, and when the innocent Canadian consumer, deluded or not deluded, comes to buy, give him the cheap shining stuff, and if your conscience is too severe for that, all I have to say is, 'that is not business.'

Mr. WM. THOBURN (North Lanark). Mr. Speaker, as a new member of this House, I crave the indulgence of the members for a short time while I discuss this question in which I am so very much interested. The remarks which I have to make may not be clothed in that grammatical form which is familiar to hon. members on both sides, owing to the fact that I have not been blessed with a college education nor with a grammar school education, nor even with an ordinary common school education. I have had to earn my living since before I was ten years of age; so that if the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) is a fair specimen of the farming community of this country, I claim to be a fair specimen of the working men of this country. Now, Mr. Speaker, the remarks which I have to make refer to a very large number of the working men, the working women, the working boys and the working girls of Canada who are engaged in the woollen industry. My remarks are not made from a theoretical standpoint or from what I have heard or read, but they are made from 28 years of hard practical experience. I have been here on several deputations to this government asking for a revision of the woollen tariff. I do not know whether the hon. Finance Minister is going to ask me before I am through what it is we want: if he is, I will answer him to the best of my ability. Although several deputations on behalf of the woollen industry have waited on the government during recent years, nothing has been done by the government other than to send to Great Britain a commissioner to investigate the causes of the difference in cost of manufacture in Great Britain and in Canada. I have the report of that commissioner, and I will say on behalf of the woollen manufacturers of Canada that we are thankful that the government have done even that much, because if they take the trouble to examine this report, they will realize the great disadvantage under which the Canadian woollen manufacturers labour as compared with the woollen manufacturers of Great Britain. The report is addressed to Mr. John Mc-

Dougald, Commissioner of Customs, Ottawa, Canada, and it says:

Inclosed herewith is a complete list of wages that are now being paid in the districts of Bradford, Leeds and Huddersfield to operatives in the manufacture of woollens and worsteds, when paid by the day or by the week.

After going very fully into the cost of the various branches of manufacture, the report says:

In order to make a comparison between the cost of manufacturing in Canada and in Great Britain, it would, in my opinion, be necessary to take into account the following items: 1, wages; 2 more expensive factory buildings; 3, extra cost of heating; 4, additional buildings; 5, extra capital employed in carrying larger stocks; 6, higher rate of interest on money; 7, increased cost of machinery; 8, more expensive motive power; 9, owing to Canadian mills having a limited market, they are compelled to show a large number of designs each season, and manufacture from comparatively short warps, which interferes with production and increases cost; 10, the specialization which is so general in Yorkshire has many advantages in lowering the cost of production.

In order to ascertain the actual difference in the cost of producing goods in Great Britain and in Canada, I have gone to the trouble of getting comparisons of five of the principal items enumerated in this list: 1, wages; 2, higher rate of interest charged in Canada as compared with Great Britain; 3, extra cost of fuel; 4, more expensive factory buildings; 5, increased cost of machinery. I took that report to a woollen manufacturer, who has a factory similar in size to the one on which the commissioner apparently based this report, that is, a ten-set mill, or one with ten sets of cards. I took it to the Rosamond woollen company mill of Almonte, which is conducted on the best principles, a mill whose exhibit of tweeds at the Centennial Exhibition in Philadelphia captured the gold medal against all American competition.

A woollen mill is divided into some eight or ten different parts. I have taken the five principal parts and made a comparison in respect of these between the factories in Great Britain and those in Canada. There are what we call the dye-house, the scouring plant, the carding room, the spinning room, the weaving and finishing room. These are the five principal rooms. While there are several others, these are the most important and are the ones with respect to the operation of which I have compared the prices. Here are the wages given by the commissioner, whom we sent to England, as paid in Great Britain and those paid for similar help in Canada. First, take the dye house. In Britain the overseers receive $12.16 per week. In Canada we pay them $20 per week. In England, the labourers who work under the overseers, receive from $5.16 to $7 per week. In this country we pay them $8 per week. In the carding room, the overseers in Britain are paid from $14.60 to $17.04 a week and in this country they get $24 per week. Their under help receive in Britain $6 per week and in this country $8. The women and girls employed in those rooms receive in Britain $3.65 per week and we pay them $6.16. In the spinning department, the overseers receive on the other side $9.73 a week and in this country $18 per week. The men working under them receive $3.40 per week in Britain as compared with $7.40 per week in this country. In the weaving department, the overseers receive in Britain from $12.16 to $13.38 per week and we pay them $18. Their assistants get on the other side $4.87 to $6.33 per week as compared with $11.20 on this side. In the finishing department, the overseers in Britain receive $8.52 to $9.73 per week and we pay them $18. The boys and girls in the different departments in the finishing room, receive in Britain from $2.43 to $2.92 per week, whereas we pay them from $5.40 to $6.16. Then the mechanics are paid in Britain $8.36 per week whereas here they get $10.12.

Those are the differences in wages paid in the five principal branches in a woollen mill, comparing the two countries. A very important question, to my mind, was to find out what difference that would make, comparing a mill of this country with one of similar size in the old land. I asked the Rosamond Woollen Mill Company if they would kindly let me know what their annual pay-roll amounted to. They replied that it amounted to $82.000 per annum, exclusive of office help. The difference in the rates of wages between the two countries, taking it at a very low average, would amount to 50 per cent in favour of the mother country, and in that average I think I am rather under the estimate according to the commissioner's report. How does that work out in a mill, the size of the one I have referred to? The Rosamond Woollen Company pay $82,000 in wages per annum. A mill of similar size in the old country would pay only $55,000 per annum. In other words if you add 50 per cent to the $55,000 you have $82,000. So that a mill of the size of the Rosamond Woollen Mill in Canada is paying $27,000 a year more in wages than a mill of similar size in Great Britain.

The next item that struck me is the difference in the cost of money in Canada as compared with Great Britain. Nobody knows that difference better than the hon. the Minister of Finance. When I say that it takes a pretty solid industry in Canada to get money at 6 per cent, I am putting the rate as low as possible. How does that compare with the rate in Great Britain? I have had money myself in an indirect way on goods shipped to this country, sold strictly on a cash basis, from the time the goods were shipped until the money was paid, and I was charged a rate of 2½ per cent per annum. But I am basing my calculations on a rate of 4 per cent in the old country, which I think is reasonable compared with 6 per cent in Canada. How does that work out in a plant the size of the one I have referred to? They have in use in that concern no less than half a million dollars, which, at 6 per cent, gives $30,000 interest per annum. A concern requiring the same amount of money in the old country can get it at 4 per cent or $20,000 interest, would have to pay $20,000 in interest, showing a difference against the Canadian manufacturer, in the case of a mill of similar size, of $10,000 per annum. The next item is the cost of fuel. In the old country, fuel costs exactly one-half, perhaps a little less, what it does in this country. A mill, such as the one I have referred to, uses $6,000 worth of fuel in a year. A mill of similar size in the old country will consume $3,000 worth of fuel. In other words it costs the Canadian manufacturer $3,000 more for fuel than it does the British manufacturer and he has to use more. The next item is the cost of buildings and machinery. Let me cite an actual occurrence. A couple of years ago the Rosamond Woollen Company advertised for tenders for the erection of a large weaving shed. The building was to be a large one of either brick or stone covered with iron. The lowest tender was $28,000, and the parties thought the price so enormous that they gave up the idea of erecting the building. Shortly afterwards one of the members of the firm had occasion to visit the old country for the purpose of purchasing some woollen machinery. While there in conversation with some manufacturers, he happened to refer to the building of this weaving shed. They asked him to submit plans and they would get an estimate. He gave them the dimensions, and to his utter astonishment, the estimated cost was $18,000 for a building for the construction of which $28,000 was the lowest bid on this side. That makes a difference between the two of 55 per cent. How does that apply to a plant similar to the one I have referred to? The cost of the building in that town was $130,000—a magnificent stone building, no better in the Dominion for its size. But in the old country a building of the same proportions would cost 55 per cent cheaper.

In other words, a building that, in this country, would cost $130,000 could be built in the old country for $84,000. There is the difference in that item alone, of $46,000. The interest on this amount is $2,760 a year. The next item is the machinery. In that plant, the machinery cost $150,000. I think there is about 37½ or 38 per cent difernce in the cost of machinery in Canada as compared with the old country. It may not be quite that now, but at the time these mills were supplied with machinery the difference was actually greater, the Canadian manufacturer has to pay for cases and freight delivered to Liverpool from the place of manufacture 12½ per cent, and when you add whatever duty there is and freight, it makes it, I think, not far from the figure I have given. Take this plant of $150,000 and deduct 37½ per cent, and you get $106,000. In other words, it costs $44,000 more to supply a mill of this size with machinery in Canada than it does in Great Britain. The interest on $44,000 is $2,640. So, with $46,000 extra for the building, and $44,000 extra for machinery, you have $90,000 as the added cost of such an establishment in Canada over the cost of a similar establishment in Great Britain. In summing up the annual expenditure, the difference in wages, the difference in the rate of interest, the difference in cost of fuel, the difference in interest charge because of extra cost of building and machinery, we find a total of $45,400. That is the amount, in round figures, which it costs the manufacturer in this country to run a mill like that in Almonte more than it would cost to operate a similar mill in Great Britain.

Now, there has been a good deal said in this country about inferior machinery. We are told that it is because the Canadian manufacturer has inferior machinery that he cannot produce cloth as cheap or as good as the manufacturer in the old country produces. I deny that charge, and I speak from experience. I venture to say that, in proportion to the machinery we have in operation in Canada to-day, we have just as good machinery if not better, than they have in Great Britain. And I would like nothing better than to have the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) visit the manufacturing town of Almonte and see if what I say with reference to machinery is not correct. These gentlemen may say: There is no use in our going there, because we are not judges of woollen machinery. I meet that argument by asking them to bring with them the best expert woollen manufacturer they can find in the Dominion of Canada, and see if he does not bear out my statement with reference to the character of woollen machinery used in this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you can understand, from the figures I have given, how difficult it is for the manufacturers in Canada to compete with the manufacturers in Great Britain. I do not know whether any of the hon. members opposite have ever visited the manufacturing districts of Great Britain; but I have done so, and I know that it is a sorry sight to see the operatives coming out of these woollen mills, wearing wooden shoes and with shawls over their heads, not as well clad as the squaws of our country are. Compare this with the manner in which our operatives are clothed; compare the homes of these people in Bradford and other manufacturing districts in Great Britain with the homes of the workers in woollen mills in Canada, and I do not think any member of this House would wish to see our operatives compelled to live in such homes as those occupied by the operatives of these great manufacturing districts in Great Britain. But I can say this also, give the Canadian working man the same chances as those enjoyed by the working man in the old country and he will produce goods faster and I think better. For some reason or other, we have to work faster in this country than they work in the old country. What the reasons may be, it is a little difficult to say, but I know, from what I have seen, that the fact is as I state. Possibly, some of the hon. members opposite, or some on this side of the House have travelled in Great Britain. If so, they can hardly help having noticed that the manner of working there is much slower than it is in this country. I went through Great Britain once in the harvest time, and I saw more help in one harvest field there than you would find in five harvest fields in this country. Help is so cheap that there is no difficulty in getting abundance of it. One of the most amazing things—speaking from a Canadian standpoint—I saw in travelling through the British agricultural districts was a man ploughing in the field driving three horses, tandem. I suppose every Canadian will know what I mean when I say 'tandem,' with two boys leading the horses. To the Canadian eye, nothing could be much more ridiculous. I will guarantee to take a Canadian boy of seventeen years old, put him behind the plough with a span of horses, and he will do more work in a day than that man was doing with his three horses and two boys. There is the difference between the workman in Canada and the workman in Great Britain.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). I should be sorry to interfere with the course of the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Thoburn) argument, for, I know this is his maiden speech, and he is speaking well. But, if he will permit me a question at this point, I would ask whether he has taken into calculation the very element of which he speaks? The figures he gave were based on the weekly wages here and in England. Does the Canadian manufacturer, with double the wages, get double the product out of his operatives? Does the hon. gentleman see what I mean?

Mr. THOBURN. No, I do not quite catch it.

Mr. PATERSON. I understand the hon. gentleman's argument to be that a Canadian workman will produce far more work in a certain number of hours than an English workman will produce. The hon. gentleman's comparison, I think, was with reference to the weekly wages of the operative in Canada and the operative in England. That has a bearing on the case because if the Englishman who gets $6 a week turns out, we will say, 10 yards while the Canadian who receives $12 a week turns out 20 yards, the product is the same as far as labour is concerned.

Mr. THOBURN. Such a difference is an utter impossibility because the product of an employee in a woollen factory is principally turned out by machinery; it is not the same as two labourers working in competition; it would be impossible to get the machine to turn out double the quantity in this country that it would in England.

Mr. SPROULE. The machine runs at the same rate in England as it does here.

Mr. PATERSON. Then the difference in wages is nothing.

Mr. THOBURN. There is little hand work in a woollen mill, it is practically all machine work. I was struck by an item which I read in the 'Glasgow News' in reference to our Canadian athletes. In discussing the Canadian curlers, it said:

> One cannot attempt to explain away the Canadian superiority. These are the real wizards of the game. The Canadian curler is the product of the Canadian climate and he cannot be produced north of the Tweed.

Whatever applies to the Canadian athelete as the result of our climate, applies in every sense of the word to the Canadian workman. Give the Canadian workman the same chance as the workman of Great Britain and I think he will defy the world as to the quality and the quantity of the work he will turn out.

Mr. FIELDING. What does the hon. gentleman mean when he says to give the Canadian workman the same chance? I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend who is speaking with great interest and with a knowledge of the subject, but what does the Canadian workman lack?

Mr. THOBURN. He lacks labour. All I ask the Finance Minister is to give labour and that is all the Canadian workman is asking for. It is on their behalf that I plead this afternoon, on behalf of the thousands of workmen in the woollen industry who are idle.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not see the point of my hon. friend's argument, I confess.

Mr. THOBURN. Another mistaken idea is prevalent in this country, that if you increase the duty you will increase the cost of the article to the consumer. That does not always follow. I am not speaking on behalf of woollen manufacturers generally in making this statement but I speak on my own behalf. I am not so very anxious whether I get an increased price for the article I am producing; all I am begging for is a market for the article I am producing. Let me illustrate. Supposing that one of the ministers was engaged in manufacturing, that he had a firm producing $1,000,000 worth of goods and that he was making a fair living and a reasonable profit. Then suppose that, say, through the introduction of a preferential clause, $500,000 worth of such goods as he was producing were allowed to enter this country and to get into the hands of his customers. Not because they got any more for the goods than he did, but from the very fact of their coming into this country, they would deprive him of one half of his customers, they would deprive one half of his workmen of their employment and what benefit is derived? That is the point I want to make so far as the increased duty is concerned. The hon. gentleman asks, what are you asking? I have not yet asked an increased duty but that is what I am aiming at, not so much that it will increase the cost of the article but that it will give a market for the goods I am producing. Let us go a little further. Supposing the re-arrangement of the woollen tariff did mean an addition of 5 cents a yard in the cost of the cloth for a suit of clothes—and even one half of five cents a yard would be a handsome profit for a woollen manufacturer who had a large factory. But suppose it did make a difference of five cents a yard, what difference would that make to the man buying a suit of clothes? Just 35 cents. How many men in Canada would object to paying 35 cents extra for a suit of clothes provided you give all the men in this country plenty of work? Not one in the whole Dominion. It would be almost a calamity to the people of Canada if they had to depend entirely upon foreign woollen manufacturers. We know from experience that when all Canadian factories of any kind are closed the cost of the article is bound to advance. Let me give you an illustration from practical experience. From 1870 to 1880 I was engaged in mercantile business and hon. members will remember that at that time the burning question was the tariff on sugar. There were only one or two sugar refineries in Canada but they were producing a first class article. The wily government of the United States, in an effort to close out that industry in Canada, paid the American sugar refineries an export bounty on sugar. What was the result? In 1877 we had to sell what we called a good article of brown sugar at 10 cents a pound and we thought we were selling it cheap. We sold it at 10 cents so long as there was competition between the Canadian manufacturer and the American manufacturer. The Canadian manufacturers waited on the government again and again in an effort to have that tariff so arranged that they could compete with the American manufacturer who was receiving an export bounty, but they could get no redress from the government of that day, and not a single Canadian refinery continued running, they had to close their doors. What was the result? It was utterly impossible for us to sell a pound of brown sugar at that time for less than 12½ cents. It may be a matter of surprise to hon. members of this House perhaps to know that only so recently as 1877 they paid 12½ cents a pound for brown sugar. But, such is the fact.

Mr. SPROULE. And after the duty was put on it was sold at from four to five cents a pound?

Mr. THOBURN. Yes. You know what the prices have been since you have had good healthy competition. So much with reference to competition in the manufacture of woollen goods. My contention has always been that the Canadian manufacturer is as great a benefit to the Canadian farmer as it is possible for one interest to be a benefit to another. I do not know that I was ever more interested in listening to a speech than I was the other night when the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) was advocating so zealously and so well the protection of the Nova Scotia coal mines. I thought, Sir, that that was one of the most patriotic speeches, one of the best speeches from a protectionist standpoint that I have heard for a long time, and I can only say that if it were to come to a vote in this House, although I am a consumer of coal in my business, I would not stand up in my place only once, but I would stand up twice, and, if the Speaker would allow me, I would stand up three times to vote with the hon. member for Cape Breton. Let me quote a few of his words:

While it is the interest of this country that capital should be safeguarded and capitalists the world over be given the assurance that in Canada we have a parliament and parliamentarians who always keep their eye upon the best interests of those who are willing to invest their capital in this country it is equally in our interest that we should likewise keep in mind the men, women and children who are dependent upon this particular industry in every part of Canada, and in doing this we are likewise improving the position of those who invest capital in Canadian industries.

I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, if there is anything more applicable to the Canadian woollen industry than these words as applied to the Nova Scotia miners? Then he goes on:

I would submit, Sir, that while it may be a hardship in some cases to buy coal, as we sometimes consider it dearer than we would like to pay, we should not forget that the people of the great country to the south of us have pursued the policy which I am advocating. The people in the New England states have no coal, they have to receive their coal from the west and they pay a higher price than they would have to pay for Nova Scotia coal. Still, there is enough national spirit——

That is what I like to hear.

—to induce them to bear with any little extras they would have to pay in order to develop in the west great coal centres and keep the trade within their own bounds.

I could not use language as eloquent as that in behalf of the Canadian woollen manufacturers. I only wish I could, but I am quoting the hon. gentleman's words to help me in my argument. Then:

I regret that this winter they have not been kept in continuous employment——

Referring to the employees engaged in the Nova Scotia coal mines.

—because of this displacement of Canadian coal in the home market by American coal.

I regret exceedingly that the woollen operatives in the manufacturing centres of the Dominion of Canada are not employed continuously and that a great number of them were not employed at all during the winter months through which we have just passed. But, Sir, further on he says in closing his address:

I have presented my views and these statistics to the House in the hope that the government will take into serious consideration the circumstances of those who are dependent on this trade for a means of livelihood as well as those who have had the courage and the enterprise to invest millions of dollars in the development of our coal areas in Nova Scotia and elsewhere in Canada.

That is what I am asking the government to do. I am asking the government to take into consideration the men who have invested their millions of dollars in the woollen industries of this country. I was pleased with the reply the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) made. He said:

I do not imagine that my hon. friend (Mr. McKenzie) desires to divide the House on this question to-night, especially as there is a very slim attendance of members present. I take it for granted that the purpose of his motion was to have an opportunity of presenting these very interesting statistics to us and to urge, if it be necessary to urge, the importance of this great mining industry. There will be no difference of opinion in that respect.

I hope and trust that there will be no difference of opinion between the hon. Minister of Finance, the Minister of Customs and myself with reference to this great woollen industry. It seems to me that every man in this House, irrespective of politics, is a national policy man, is a protectionist, when it is touching anything in which he is personally interested. Not only did I read with pleasure the speech of the hon. member for Cape Breton, but I have noticed the following proposed resolution by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Sealy) on the Order Paper:

That in the opinion of this House, so long as the Canadian tariff affords, incidentally or otherwise, a considerable degree of protection to manufacturers, some protection may fairly and properly be afforded by our tariff to Canadian agriculturists and stock raisers upon hogs, hog products, garden vegetables and such other items as it may appear possible to so protect with advantage to the agriculturist, and without undue injury to the Canadian consumer.

With reference to the very items that the hon. gentleman proposes to have protected, to my certain knowledge, no greater protection could be given to the Canadian farmer than that which he would secure by establishing and maintaining the woollen industries of this country. I know for a fact that in the town in which I live, the town of Almonte, the woollen manufacturers have paid out millions and millions of dollars for farm products, a large portion of which would not otherwise have been sold at all, it would have gone to waste. They have paid for wood alone, which in the early days would have been burnt in log piles, millions and millions of dollars. They have paid millions and milions of dollars to the farmers for the product of their orchard and gardens which could not be exported from this country. I claim that the manufacturers are as great a benefit to the farmer as it is possible for them to be from the fact that they buy such a large quantity of the products of the farm that cannot possibly be exported.

There are thousands and thousands of farmers in this country who cannot raise grain for export and who make out of the manufacturing industries of this country a living which in their absence they could not make. Speaking from the standpoint of a woollen manufacturer, and I know whereof I speak, I would ask the Minister of Agriculture if there is any branch of agriculture more profitable to the farmer than sheep raising? Let me give an illustration of that. Take a farmer having 100 sheep and at the very lowest estimate there would be 100 lambs. In our neighbourhood last year the lambs sold for $5 each, giving the farmer $500, and the lowest calculation would be one dollar's worth of wool for each sheep, giving another $100 or $600 in all, from the 100 sheep. Does the Minister of Agriculture think there is any other branch of farming which will give the farmer the same return for such a small capital invested and such small labour as would be bestowed on these 100 sheep? The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) dealt with the question as to the price of wool very lucidly and very ably, and I quote from the Montreal Trade Bulletin of a few days ago the following:

Canadian Wool and the Tariff.

The present tariff is about as discouraging recently at 12c. to 13c. About fifteen or he can get for his washed fleece in the west, is about 14c. to 15c., whilst we hear of sales recently at 12c. to 13c. About fifteen or eighteen months ago the farmer was getting from 27c. to 28c. for his washed fleece, whilst to-day he has to be content with the unprofitable returns of those figures cut in two; and the grim irony of the whole thing at present is, that our farmers are mainly dependent upon the highly protected American market as an outlet for his product. The tariff is not affording the farmers a chance to raise wool profitably, nor have the manufacturers a fair show to compete with foreign goods.

Let me give to the House an illustration of the fluctuations in the price of wool in say a period of 12 months. It may be a surprise to a goodly number of you to know that from our own Northwest Territories there come annually about 1,300,000 pounds of wool. The sheep industry is only in its infancy in that country. I am engaged in a woollen business in which I use exclusively almost Northwest wool, and I am proud to say, whatever the cause of it may be, they produce in the Northwest Territories a quality of wool such as cannot be produced in any other part of the Dominion. Until I commenced to use the Canadian Northwest wool I was using wool imported from the Cape of Good Hope, and to the credit of our own northwestern farmers be it said that they are now raising a wool nearer the texture of what we call fine Cape wool than we have been able to get from any other part of Canada. A short time ago the price of that wool was 20 cents a pound, and the 1,300,000 pounds brought to the farmers $260,000, but this year the price of wool is 14 cents per pound, or less, and on the same basis of production it would only bring $182,000 or a loss in one year to the farmers of Saskatchewan and Alberta of $78,000. Why does this state of things exist? I will tell you, and in doing so I will have to treat of a personal matter. The principal mills using that class of wool in Canada were the flannel mills, one of which I own and operate. The personal aspect of the case is this, and it is something that affects me and you cannot blame me for referring to it—when the government saw fit some years ago to insert that preferential clause in the woollen tariff I had no doubt that their idea was a good one and possibly the government expected that by giving that preference Great Britain would give us something in return. But, Sir, so far as I know Great Britain has never given us one dollar in return. On the other hand I will tell you what that preference has done for us. It has allowed millions and million dollars worth of manufactured goods to come into the country that were not coming in before. It has taken millions of dollars of wages out of the pockets of the working man, and the working woman, and the working boy, and the working girl of Canada and placed it in the pockets of the working classes of Great Britain. Let me bring the question still nearer home to myself. When, some years ago, for reasons best known to themselves the government changed that tariff, and restored part of the preference to tweed manufacturies, but they discriminated against the manufacturers of flannels and blankets. I now appeal personally to the Prime Minister, because I think from the very bottom of my heart that if he takes this matter in hand he will have it rectified. Nor am I speaking now so much for myself as for the Canadian woollen industry generally. The point I want to make is this: the flannel manufacturers of this country have been fighting with the whole force of that preferential clause against them, and I have come down here more than once with other flannel manufacturers and waited upon the government, and we thought we were not asking any favour, for all we asked was to be put on the same footings as other woollen manufacturers, we being woollen manufacturers in every sense of the word. But, for some reason or other our request was never granted. And what has been the result? Two flannel mills in my own town have closed down, and the demand for that Northwestern wool has fallen off, and the loss has amounted to a sum of $78,000. I cannot make my statement any plainer. I can only say in conclusion that I have seen the day, before I was a manufacturer of woollen goods, when we paid in Ontario as high as 52 cents a pound for Canadian wool. It may be a surprise to many members of this House to hear that, but it is a fact. In those days all the small mills in Canada were in operation and they were using Canadian wool. But, unfortunately, goods not anything like equal in quality, came into this country and from time to time these smaller mills which use the Canadian wool were forced out of existence so that to-day there is hardly a small mill in the Dominion. From 52 cents per pound the price of Canadian wool has gradually decreased, and I say right here, and I am glad I did not forget it, that no fine wool imported into the Dominion of Canada has decreased in price in the same ratio as has Canadian wool. I can come to no other conclusion than that the reason for that is that we have closed up the mills in this country that were using Canadian wool : It is worth to-day only from 12 to 16 cents as compared with 52 cents a few years ago.

Now, I am thankful to the members of this House for the very kind attention they have paid to my remarks. I do earnestly beseech of the government to rearrange the woollen tariff, by increasing the ad valorem duty a little, and by putting a specific duty on the shoddy goods coming to this country, so as to give some relief to the working class for whom I am pleading this afternoon.

Mr. CHARLES L. OWEN (East Northumberland). Mr. Speaker, I am glad to know that we are all learning. I was not aware until this afternoon that the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) was a farmer, or that the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Thoburn) was a labouring man. The woollen question is a very important question. I have been engaged in the woollen industry all my life. I do not claim to be a manufacturer; I have simply been a labourer in the woollen industry from the bottom to the top. We cannot at the present time manufacture in Canada all the classes of woollen goods that we import; but there are certain classes of those goods that we can manufacture. Last year we imported $20,962,753 worth of woollen goods. I claim that we could have manufactured about half of that in Canada. The question always comes up, does the consumer pay the duty? I claim that he does not always. Previous to 1878, during the time of the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie's government, we had a duty of only 17½ per cent. on woollen cloth, and in those days we received for staple goods, six-quarter, fifty-four inches wide, from $1.45 to $1.50 a yard. In 1885, after the National Policy had been in effect for some years, we sold the same class of goods, made from the same class of material, at from 90 to 95 cents a yard.

Mr. A. W. SMITH (North Middlesex). Can the hon. gentleman tell us what the farmers got for their wool in 1878?

Mr. OWEN. For the class of goods I speak of we were not using wool grown in this country.

Mr. A. W. SMITH. The farmers were raising it.

Mr. OWEN. The goods I am talking about were made from imported wool. All-wool gray flannels, 28 inches wide, sold previous to 1878 at from 37½ to 40 cents a yard; in 1885 the same goods sold at from 28 to 30 cents. Navy blue flannel, 28 inches wide, which sold previous to 1878 at from 42½ to 45 cents a yard, sold in the years from 1885 to 1889 at from 30 to 32½ cents a yard. You may wonder why we were able to sell these goods at these prices. It was because we virtually had the Canadian market to ourselves, under the duty of 30 per cent ad valorem on cloth, and the specific duty of 10 cents a pound. Every machine in the mill was run to its utmost capacity, the demand was so good. From 1885 to 1889 I was managing a ten-set mill, the output of which amounted to from $260,000 to $275,000 annually. In 1901 and 1902 the annual output of the same plant dropped down to $160,000—why? Because foreign goods were allowed to come in more fully and there was a diminished demand, and every machine was not run to its utmost capacity. Now, there has been a great deal said about shoddy goods. I think it would be better for the people at large if shoddy goods were barred altogether from coming to this country. Shoddy is made from mungo, and in many cases from the filthiest rags that can be picked up. Disease has been brought to this country in shoddy. In the districts in England where shoddy goods are made, you will find the people who labour in the shoddy mills diseased from head to foot, because they are always working among mungo and filthy rags. If a man who wears shoddy goods visits his neighbour on a cold winter night and sits near the stove, his clothes will smell like a filthy oil barrel. I hope the manufacturers of this country will never be compelled to manufacture this class of goods. With regard to Northwest wool, I had the honour of being the first manufacturer in the province of Ontario to use it, and I wish to say that that country is adapted to the raising of fine wool, as good wool as can be raised in the Cape of Good Hope or in Australia or in Montevideo, and it would be of great benefit to the farmers of the Northwest if there were a market for it. I remember when we paid from 15 to 16 cents a pound for what we called half-breed wool, and from it made beautiful tweeds, of about twenty-ounce weight, which we sold for 80 cents a yard, and there was a good demand for it. We have at the present time a duty of 30 per cent on cloth. I would not advocate increasing that duty, but I would put on a specific duty to keep out shoddy goods. There are mills in England which manufacture these shoddy goods from January to January, and there are other mills which run on doeskins or broadcloth all the year around, without a change. They do that because they have an immense market. We could not do it here, because our market is small at present. But if we encourage manufacturing in our own country, our home market will become larger. To show the value of a manufacturing plant, I may say that when the Trent Valley Mill was established 28 years ago in the town of Campbellford, where I live, the town had a population of 1,100; now it has a population of 3,000. During that time the mill has paid out in wages $1,000,000, and although the town gave it a bonus of $10,000 and exemption from taxes for ten years, it has during that time paid $30,000 of taxes, not to speak of the taxes paid by the employees.

You can see the benefit which that plant has been to the town of Campbellford. It has increased the population of that little village from 1,100 to 3,000 souls. Campbellford is the market town of East Northumberland. The farmers drive there with their vegetables, and no man ever came to the town of Campbellford and went away with his load unsold. That is because the people there are employed in its manufacturing establishments, and it is they who buy the products of the farm to a very great extent. In every town where there is a large manufacturing establishment you have a great market for the country miles around. Campbellford is the market town for East Northumberland. I shall not take up more time, as my hon. friend from Simcoe Mr. Lennox) and my hon. friend from North Lanark (Mr. Thoburn), have very well covered the ground, but I wish merely to raise my voice on behalf of a little more protection for our woollen industries, that is if you wish to keep them in the country. Many woollen mills have gone to the wall and millions of dollars have been wasted, and it has been proven that during the years when the national policy was in existence, woollen clothes were cheaper to the consumer than they are to-day or than they were previous to 1878. So that I think that in protecting our manufacturers, we are protecting our farmers. The farmer is the bone and sinew of the country, he is the great producer, but the farmer and the manufacturer must go hand in hand. The one cannot get along very well without the other. Let me point out that we are building through my riding the Trent Valley canal, which is bound to develop thousands of electric horse-power in the near future, and we want manufacturers to come and locate their establishments along the canal banks. Our people are looking forward to seeing city after city on the banks of the Trent Valley canal, but we need a little more protection before we can hope for any increase in the number of our manufacturing establishments. I hope the government will give this matter their earnest consideration; and if they do, they cannot but come to the conclusion that the woollen industry should have a little more protection than is now given it.

Mr. OWEN.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE (Strathcona). I propose, Mr. Speaker, to take up but briefly the time of the House in discussing this very important subject. Having listened with great interest to the speakers in favour of the resolution, it seems to me that the question before us is that of revivifying the old national policy. It is again the question of higher protection and bolstering up manufacturing industries. I ask if that is really the principle on which our national prosperity depends. My hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) and from North Lanark (Mr. Thoburn) tried somewhat to disguise the situation. They came before the House, the one as a farmer and the other as a labourer, and each wanted something done for the particular class of which he posed as a champion. But I am in the judgment of the House if the whole burden of their song was not a plea for special legislation on behalf of a special class, and of a class which seems to be doing, to say the least, as well as the average farmer. We were wont to think of my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) as a lawyer, and consequently might feel justified in regarding any argument from him as not altogether disinterested and consequently open to suspicion, but when we now find him posing on the floor of this House as a farmer, I presume we must necessarily take him at his word. But at the same time I cannot see that his argument for the farmer was as strong or convincing as he would like to have it. The fact of my hon. friend declaring that the proposition before the chair would be beneficial to the farmer is not proof. His whole argument must be based on the supposition that an increase in the protection to this particular manufacturing industry would mean the payment to the farmer of higher prices for his wool. But how would our farmers be paid higher prices for their wool unless you shut out foreign competition? So that we have my hon. friend practically pleading for a duty on wool. On the other hand the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Thoburn) speaks more particularly as a manufacturer, and as such a condition of things beneficial to him must be a cheap raw product and a dear manufactured product.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Not necessarily.

Mr. McINTYRE. That must be the condition if he is going to increase his production. The manufacturer wants protection. For what purpose? My hon. friend says to preserve the home market. But that must necessarily be, to a large extent at least, a subterfuge, because the thing he really wants is to shut out the finished foreign product from coming into competition with his own. There we have the old anomaly of protection. When you increase protection on the raw material, you must end by increasing it on the manufactured product, and thereby necessarily leave the farmer in the same position as before. If the argument of my hon. friend from Simcoe as a farmer, and that of my hon. friend from North Lanark as a manufacturer, obtain, I cannot see how the farmer is going to be benefited. The benefit to the farmer, as outlined by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), resolves itself into this, namely, that the increased demand for the raw material by the manufacturer, would necessarily benefit the farmer. But it must not be forgotten that in this country we have a rather rigorous climate which necessitates our purchasing large quantities of prepared woollen goods. Now the mere pittance which an increase in the tariff would give the producer of the raw material would be more than swamped by the extra amount he would have to pay for the prepared article. On behalf of the people in my county, I say that it is not the duty of the government to make it hard for the people who are struggling for an existence to buy the necessaries of life. It is not on these articles of woollen clothing that our present tariff should be made higher. At present we have a duty of 30 to 35 per cent on these prepared articles, and it seems to me that in exacting that duty we are bolstering up pretty well and taking pretty good care of our manufacturers. Since these hon. gentlemen appear so anxious on behalf of the labourer and the farmer, I would ask them if the living conditions of the average farmer on a homestead compare in any way, as regards luxuries and advantages of life, with those of the manufacturer in the city?

But we are told that our manufactories are the means of supporting a large working population. But the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Thoburn) himself pointed out that the conditions of labour in this country are vastly in advance of those in the old country, and he proposes to bring our labouring classes into somewhat the same condition. He wants cheaper labour. The fact is that every man who wants protection for his particular industry and who has some personal and peculiar advantage to gain by taxing other people, is in favour of the national policy. I do not believe it is a 'national' policy to support any particular class to the disadvantage of the great classes. I do not believe in raising the tariff for the sake of protecting an industry whose decadence—assuming that it is going backward—is due to the natural conditions that exist. The maintenance of an industry in this country must depend on whether the national resources are sufficient to support that or not?

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. Certainly.

Mr. EDWARDS. What does he think about the bounties on iron and steel?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. I am not discussing the bounties on iron and steel. I am quite willing to give my opinions on that subject at the proper time. There is a rule in this House to the effect that speakers should confine themselves to the matter under discussion.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What about the duties on agricultural implements?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. There is a rule in this House that speakers should confine themselves to the matters under discussion, and we are not discussing the duties on agricultural implements just now. But if he wants my opinion on that subject, I may inform him that I am not in favour of duties on agricultural implements and never have been.

Mr. THOBURN. For the information of the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. Wilbert McIntyre) I may say that his remarks indicate one of the difficulties that have always existed in this discussion—there is such a wide misapprehension of the facts. The hon. gentleman says that he believes the woollen manufacturers have a protection to the extent of 30 or 35 per cent. I want him to understand that I have been struggling under a duty of only 22½ per cent.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. I understand that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Thoburn) is a manufacturer of blankets.

Mr. THOBURN. No.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. However that may be, I believe I am correct in saying that the main articles of woollen manufacture are dutiable to the extent of 30 or 35 per cent.

Mr. HUGHES. No.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Can he tell us the price of blankets per pound, retail, in Winnipeg?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. If the hon. gentleman will ask a question pertaining to what I am discussing I will answer him. I am not a merchant in Winnipeg, as it happens, and I am unable to give him the information he asks for. The point is this: The principle of high protection is one, it seems to me, which we must shun if the development of this country is to be what we desire it to be. We tried high protection for eighteen years, and a pretty bitter trial it was. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) says that for eighteen years they have been trying to educate this House how to legislate for prosperity.

Mr. LENNOX. Excuse me; I referred to the eighteen years when the party now in power were in opposition and were denouncing the national policy.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. I understood the hon .gentleman to say that they were trying to educate this government with regard to the tariff. I can only say that we have had greater prosperity since we changed the tariff than before.

Mr. HUGHES. What do you call 'high protection?'

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. I know that the hon. member (Mr. Hughes) entertains the idea that we still have high protection. So long as he and his friends are happy in that delusion, and we get the benefit of the other, I do not see why either of us should complain. The prosperity of this country, in my estimation, depends to a very great extent on the development of western Canada; and I state again, as I have stated before, that when you initiate a policy in this country which increases the cost of the necessaries of life and entails hardship on the people who are developing this country and producing wealth as no other class are, you are stepping aside from the true function of national government. Hon. gentlemen opposite ask us: 'Why not look at this from a national standpoint?' And yet we find them speaking of this or that particular town or village, or the number of employees engaged in a single manufactory. I am not against manufactures. It is to the interest of the country that manufactures should develop, and they will develop naturally as the country develops, and without entailing hardship on the people as a whole. Surely when the farmers of this country have no protection, and when protection means that you put upon the farmers, who are the basis of the wealth of this country, burdens and restrictions, it is time for us to make known our opposition to legislative enactments of that kind. I trust that when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) comes to discuss this matter in his budget speech, we shall find that there is no change, or, if there be a change, that it is one toward a lower rather than toward a higher tariff. I think I speak for the majority of the people west of the Great Lakes; I am confident that the people in that part of the Dominion do not want a higher tariff. We have heard it said many times by hon. members on the other side of the House that the future prosperity of this country depends on the prosperity of the country west of the Great Lakes. That being so, it would be clearly unwise for this government to impose duties which, while possibly benefiting a certain manufacturing town or certain manufacturers, would injure the very people to whom we look for the substantial future progress of the country.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilbert McIntyre) is he in favour of protecting the pork industry?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. I may remark to the hon. gentlmean (Mr. Hughes) that the pork industry is not under discussion.

Mr. RICHARD BLAIN (Peel). I listened with a great deal of interest to the presentation of the case by my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) and from my hon. friend Mr. Thoburn from North Lanark. The hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. Wilbert McIntyre) has endeavoured to leave the impression with the House that the members on this side who have spoken on this question are in favour of a very high tariff for Canada. For my part, I am in favour of a tariff high enough to keep out of Canada every dollar's worth of goods that we can successfully grow or manufacture in Canada; and I think that it is in the interest of the people that the government of the day, finding that, last year, according to the figures given by my hon. friend from South Simcoe, there was $21,000,000 of woollen goods imported into Canada, the raw material for which could have been grown and the goods themselves manufactured in Canada, should see to it that Canadian interests are taken care of. This should be done by the Minister of Finance in the budget which he is to bring down in a few days. I am one of those who believe that it is possible to have a protective tariff that will assure the Canadian manufacturer our own Canadian market, under which consumers will be able to purchase their goods at low prices. If I were to take up the time of the House reviewing the national policy from its introduction in 1879, down to the time when hon. gentlemen opposite came into power in 1896, I am sure I should have no difficulty whatever in proving to the satisfaction of the majority of people of this country that when the national policy was introduced we were importing large quantities of goods from the United States and other countries, and that within a few years factories were established in Canada to manufacture these goods, and yet the goods thus manufactured in Canada were cheaper to the consumer than were those which had been imported before the national policy was introduced.

My hon. friend from Strathcona (Mr. W. McIntyre) in his remarks revived an old question. My hon. friend, of course, is not very sincere in his low tariff principles. I am quite sure of that because last year my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner) introduced a resolution to reduce the tariff on agricultural implements from 17½ per cent to 10 per cent. Where were my hon. friend's principles then?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. Does the hon. gentleman intimate that I voted against that resolution?

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend thought he would get me into the box of saying that he had voted against that resolution. My hon. friend declares in this House from year to year for a lower tariff to meet, I suppose, the wishes of the farmers of western Canada, and yet when an opportunity presented itself to vote for such a resolution my hon. friend was not in his place and he cannot say that he voted for this resolution. Of course my hon. friend's electors will have their own opinion of that kind of a representative.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. Hear, hear.

Mr. FIELDING. How did my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) vote?

Mr. BLAIN. The Finance Minister is not questioning me now, I will have to answer that later. For myself I am not on one side to-day and on another side to-morrow. From the moment I took my seat in this House and before that I was a strong advocate of protection for the manufacturing and for the farming interests of Canada and I am in the same position to-day. I may say to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that I have had the honour of moving several resolutions calling for an increase in tariff in the interests of the farmers of Canada.

Mr. FIELDING. I had forgotten about the agricultural implements, I was asking for information.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend does not require any information from me upon the question of tariff. He understands it very well. The only complaint we have against my hon. friend on that question is not that he does not understand it, but that he fails to act in the interests of the people of Canada. The question before the House is an increase in the tariff that will incidentally help the manufacturer and give him a larger market in this country instead of allowing the market to be supplied by manufactured goods from the United States, Great Britain and other foreign countries. On the other hand my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) has a declaration in the interests of the farmer. Personally I am in favour of both these propositions; I will vote for any resolution that will increase the duty upon the products of the farm and for any reasonable increase of duty upon goods which we can manufacture in Canada that will keep out foreign goods. That is my position, I have always occupied that position and I have no change to make this afternoon.

My hon. friend from Victoria has mentioned the question of pork. I would say to the Finance Minister that during this session he and the first minister have had a large deputation of the swine breeders of Canada asking them to remove the inequality between the Canadian and American tariffs on this question. Whether the hon. Minister of Finance will do that I suppose we will not know for a few days, but while he is considering it may I remind him of the condition of the pork industry in Canada during the past twelve months. The imports of pork from the United States alone in the year ending March 31, 1908, were as follows:

	Pounds.	Value.
Bacon and hams, shoulders and sides..	7,276,730	$ 847,215
Pork barrelled in brine..	8,849,779	693,071
Total..	16,126,509	$1,540,286

Now look on the other side of the picture. How much pork did the Canadian farmer send to the United States? I answer from the trade returns for the same fiscal year ending March 31, 1908. We exported to the United States the following quantities of pork:

	Pounds.	Value.
Bacon..	4,381	$ 834
Hams..	6,425	870
Pork..	130,774	16,242
Total..	141,580	$17,946

Subtracting the total exports from Canada to the United States from the total exports from the United States into Canada for that fiscal year we find a total balance of trade in pork against the Canadian farmer of 15,984,929 pounds, value $1,522,340.

The complaint of the swine breeders and farmers—and I think they have a just ground of complaint—is that when the American farmer comes to this country with his pork he is confronted with a duty of two cents a pound; but when the Canadian farmer approaches the border line of the United States he is confronted with a tariff of five cents a pound, more than double the Canadian tariff. The Swine Breeders' Association are not complaining particularly about the condition of things in Canada but they feel that they are not being fairly treated. They do not ask for a duty of 5 cents a pound, equal to the American duty, but they do ask that the government should impose a duty of four cents a pound as against five cents in the United States and then the farmers would be quite satisfied with the condition of trade. Surely that is a reasonable request.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend's argument is that we should adopt the American rate of duty, or something near it, because it is the American duty. If that is a good argument in relation to pork, is it not equally good for every other item in the American tariff? What is the difference?

Mr. BLAIN. The farmers of this country and the gentlemen in this House who agree with me upon this question will expect the Finance Minister to meet the wishes of the farmers. If he does not then he must give up making special appeals for the farmers' votes.

Mr. FIELDING. The party which appeals to the farmers of this country for the adoption of the American tariff will not receive their approval.

Mr. BLAIN. A deputation of my hon. friend's own political supporters was here the other day asking for this change. A gentleman who was a candidate in my own county a few years ago and who had the honour of a seat in this House for many years, was an ardent free trader in those days, but I noticed that my friend was one of a deputation who asked the government to put a higher protection on pork. What about my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Sealey)? I had the honour of hearing my hon. friend up in his county supporting the free trade government, so-called, and when my hon. friend came to this House, a few weeks ago, he placed on the Order Paper a notice, as read by my hon. friend from North Lanark (Mr. Thoburn) this afternoon, calling for higher protection on pork. My hon. friend is a convert as well. So, on the other side of the House, we have converts to the National Policy. That is the policy I am in favour of myself, the policy that I think is in the best interest of the people of this country. Some of our hon. friends from the west say that they do not want a higher protective tariff. May I suggest that the people of Ontario and eastern Canada are consumers of what they grow in western Canada? In almost every farm house in Ontario there is to be found flour manufactured from wheat grown in western Canada. That is a change that has been brought about in the last few years. We are not complaining about that. The wheat of western Canada has taken the place of our own wheat. We are quite willing to continue to consume the wheat and flour of western Canada provided it is grown and manufactured in Canada. But, at the same time we think that the people of western Canada should be willing to accept a reasonable protective tariff, so that, instead of the $21,000,000 worth of woollen goods that were imported last year from Great Britain, the United States and other countries, instead of the wages being paid to people in England and foreign countries, the wool might be grown on our own farms, in western Canada if you will, and the wages paid to our own people; so that the operatives, instead of being employed in Great Britain and the United States, might be employed in our own Canadian manufacturing establishments, and so that the farmers of Canada might grow wheat and other cereals to feed the large number of people who would be employed in connection with the woollen industry but who are at the present time out of employment.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CANADA LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

On the order being called for further consideration in Committee of the Whole of Bill (No. 56) respecting the Canada Life Assurance Company.—Mr. Clarke (Essex).

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. I would move that this Bill be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee, for the reason, first, that the opinion of the Minister of Justice may be considered, and for the reason in the second place that as the promoters of the Bill are advertising it, the policy-holders will wish to be heard before the committee. I do not think the Bill should be left on the Order Paper.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand they have given notice to reintroduce the Bill. The Bill cannot be dropped from the Order Paper, but why should it be referred back to the committee as it is practically dead?

Mr. SPEAKER. It has been the custom lately not to proceed in the absence of the hon. member in charge of the Bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. You cannot proceed with it at all.

Mr. SPEAKER. It will stand in the meantime.

CANADIAN NORTHERN QUEBEC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 38) respecting the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company.—Mr. Dubeau.

Mr. SPROULE. Explain what the amendments are.

Mr. J. A. DUBEAU (Joliette). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the only information I have regarding the section which has been added by the Senate, as section 3 of this Bill, is the following: The company is anxious to build a line of railway from Hedleyville to Montmorency river, near the mouth of Laval river; that is to say, over a distance exceeding six miles. That section has been added because, under the Railway Act, the company has no right to build a branch line more than six miles long. I understand that the distance between these two points is a good deal more than six miles. As regards the second amendment, I would prefer that its consideration be postponed in order that I may obtain the requisite information.

3. The Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company may construct a line of railway from a point on its line at or near Hedley ville, thence in a generally easterly direction to a point on the Montmorency river near the mouth of the River Laval.

4. The limit to the amount of the securities which the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company may issue and secure under sections 136 to 146 of the Railway Act, both inclusive, shall be a total of thirty thousand dollars per mile of the line hereby authorized and of all lines heretofore authorized to be constructed or constructed by the company or its predecessors by amalgamation, including the amount of the securities heretofore authorized; and such securities may be issued only in proportion to the length of such lines of railway constructed or under contract to be constructed.

Mr. SPROULE. Evidently the following new clause has been inserted by the Senate.

Mr. BRODEUR. As to the first amendment, under the terms of the Railway Act the railway company can construct a branch not longer than six miles, but this branch being more than six miles, power had to be given in the Bill. The hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill has not been informed as to the reason for the other amendments; but he will make inquiry and in the meantime I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 123)—from the Senate—respecting certain letters patent of the American Bar Lock Company.—Mr. Macdonell.

Bill (No. 124)—from the Senate—respecting the Ontario Hudson Bay and Western Railway Company.—Mr. Schell.

Bill (No. 125)—from the Senate—respecting the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Schell.

Bill (No. 126)—from the Senate—respecting the Jolliette and Lake Manuan Colonization Railway Company.—Mr. Dubeau.

SUPPLY—THE WOOLLEN INDUSTRY.

Mr. BLAIN. Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock I was urging that the government should increase the tariff on pork coming into this country, in the interest of the Canadian farmer. I notice that when this question of tariff is up for discussion in the House, hon. members from the west sitting on the government side are continually attempting to set the farmer against the manufacturer; but I believe that when we are protecting the manufacturer we are at the same time protecting the farmer. In my opinion it is impossible to enhance the interest of the one without assisting the interest of the other. In former times during the discussion of the national policy, when our hon. friends opposite were or were supposed to be free traders, attempts were made to array the farmers against the manufacturer and mechanics; but now that our hon. friends have reluctantly adopted some measure of protection as their policy, surely it can be said that the whole Canadian people are in favour of the tariff to protect Canadian interests. I am in favour of protection for the farmers of Canada, and I believe that if the Finance Minister were to increase the duty on pork, the $1,000,000 that went out of Canadian pockets last year to United States producers, would be used in purchasing Canadian pork, in the interest of the farmers and all the people of this country. There was a time when the far west and the far east of Canada were separated to a greater extent than they are at present. We have spent large sums of money and given largely of our lands to aid in the construction of railroads between the east and the west. Before these railroads were constructed, I could readily understand people in British Columbia favouring a tariff that would allow them to import such products or manufactured goods as they required from the United States; but since we have constructed these lines of railway, I believe that when there is scarcity in any article in one part of Canada, we should supply that article from some other part of Canada rather than import it from the United States. A deputation of market gardeners waited on my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture a short time ago pointing out that there had been sent last year from the centre of the province of Ontario large quantities of vegetables to Sydney in the province of Nova Scotia. If there is a scarcity in any product, hay for example, in one part of Canada, it is not likely that the same scarcity will be found in every other part of Canada. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs stated this session in answer to a question that there were imported into Canada last year 1,696,115 pounds of blackberries, strawberries, raspberries and gooseberries. Is there a man in this House who would suggest that every dollar's worth of these could not be grown on Canadian farms? Surely there is not. We allow bananas and oranges, which because of our climatic conditions cannot be grown in Canada, to come in free of duty, and there will always be sufficient of these to keep the prices of other fruits down to a moderate point in the interest of the consumer. The farmers of Canada realize that wherever there are prosperous towns with manufacturing concerns employing a large number of hands there are good markets for their products, and therefore they have learned that you cannot separate the interest of the farmer from that of the workingman and the manufacturer, that when you are protecting the one you are protecting the other.

The figures given by my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) this afternoon show clearly that the sheep raising industry in this country is diminishing, though we have millions of acres of land well suited for grazing and caring for sheep. Yet, that important industry is diminishing because of the condition of the tariff. I think that is a matter that should engage the very serious attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), who is always a very good listener to statements that are made, but is rather slow to move, even in the interests of the farmers. I think that, within the last five or six weeks, a golden opportunity has presented itself which, however, this government has allowed to pass. A presidential election was held in the United States a few months ago, the tariff being an important subject of discussion in that election—it is always an important question there as it is here. It was declared by the candidate who was afterwards elected president that a special session of Congress would be called to discuss and revise the tariff. That special session has since been called. That was a golden opportunity for this government to make an effort to have removed some of the inequalities of tariff as between Canada and the United States. I remember the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher)—that, when his party came into power, they would seek and would easily find a greater market for the products of Canadian farmers. One would think that, with such an opportunity as this, the minister would have acted, especially when he finds such inequalities of tariff as these—duty on hay coming into Canada $2 a ton; duty on hay going into the United States $4 a ton; duty on barley coming into Canada, 12 cents per bushel; duty on barley going into the United States, 30 cents per bushel. These inequalities should engage the attention of parliament, and especially of the Minister of Agriculture, whose duty it is to take care of the interests of the farming community. And might I suggest that this would be an important study for the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), for he is a foremost politician in Ontario, and whenever there is a cry for the farmers at election times, he is always ready to appeal for the farmers' vote. In days gone by—days that he has forgotten, no doubt he used to say ; 'What is the use of duties on farm products ? 'Farmers cannot be protected. When we get into power we will remove the duties.'

Mr. PATERSON. I do not remember saying that.

Mr. BLAIN. Why, a member of this government, Sir Richard Cartwright, made the statement—

Mr. PATERSON. But that is not I.

Mr. BLAIN—that protection is almost equal to highway robbery, and that when his party came into power they would abolish it.

Mr. LANCASTER. And he is still in the Cabinet.

Mr. FIELDING. And my hon. friend's (Mr. Blain) complaint is that we have removed too much of it.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) must not misunderstand me. I am pointing out the attitude of my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) when he was in opposition and now when he is in the government.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not remember saying that.

Mr. BLAIN. Of course not. The hon. gentleman does not remember making a charge against the late government, when he was on this side, that it was useless to send a tariff commission throughout the country to find out the condition of trade.

Mr. PATERSON. No; I do not remember that.

Mr. BLAIN. I quoted the hon. minister's words in this House not more than a session or two ago, and I will take the opportunity, before the session closes, if he wishes it, to read to him his very words. He condemns the Liberal-Conservative government for appointing a commission to go up and down the country and find out the condition of trade, but a few years passed and he himself was a prominent member of exactly that kind of a tariff commission.

Mr. LENNOX. But they forgot the evidence when they came to report.

Mr. BLAIN. Yes, they are always ready to collect evidence, always kept an open door to receive deputations, and especially ready to appeal to the farmers in this House and out of it. But when a deputation of farmers calls upon this government, as they did the other day, to urge upon them changes in the pork duties, pointing out that millions of pounds of pork come into Canada from the United States, interfering with the development of the pork trade of Canada, and asking, not that a tariff be a adopted equal to that of the United States, but only a duty of four cents per pound as aginst five cents per pound, the American tariff, we being six and a half million people against eighty-five million there, the hon. gentleman turns a deaf ear to them, unwilling to change our present duty of two cents per pound to four cents per pound, though the farmers of this country are so deeply interested in the question. I have no disposition to array the farmers against the manufacturers, for you cannot protect one without protecting the other. It is to the interest of the farmers of Canada, especially of those who are engaged in the production of small articles such as strawberries, potatoes, celery and many others that I could mention, to have a tariff equally as high as that of the United States in order to protect the farmers of this country against the surplus products that are sent in from time to time from the south.

It has often been said that under a tariff for the protection of manufactures, there would be combines to keep up prices and compel the consumer in Canada to pay these prices. I have no sympathy with combines; I believe that when manufacturers combine to raise prices the government should step in and, if necessary, take away their protection for the time being until they are ready to give proper prices to consumers But it is absolutely impossible to have a combine amongst the farmers—I think that statement will go without contradiction. If you have twenty manufacturing establishments turning out a given kind of goods, it is possible for them to get together and agree upon prices; but with millions of farmers producing the various kinds of farm products the government need not fear any combine in these articles. Therefore they can very safely give them a fair measure of protection so that the farmers, who are the taxpayers in the main, and at least as much interested in the development of Canada as any other class, should be treated on a par with other classes while there is protection in the country. I appeal particularly to my hon. friend the Finance Minister to revise his tariff. We pointed out to my hon. friend the necessity of doing this when we were enjoying buoyant revenue. I myself moved a resolution or two in the interests of our market gardens. I pointed out that it was in prosperous times that the government should alter the tariff in the best interests of our farming community. But my hon. friend was then too busy counting his dollars and to-day finds himself confronted with deficits. He has allowed the day of grace to go by. He has had $75,000,000 of surpluses since his party came into power. That was the time to alter the tariff. That was the time when the farming interests could be better taken care of than now. We urged the Finance Minister from this side to take that course, but he turned a deaf ear to all our arguments, and we again find it our duty to point out to him that several industries, in which our farmers are particularly interested, such as wool; pork market gardening, require better protection; and I am one of those who believe that if better protection be given, the people will not be the losers. I do not think there is a farmer in all Canada who will say that the tariff in the United States should be double what it is in this country. Our people believe in British fair play and that is what we are asking for. There was a time when certain agricultural products, for instance barley, had a market in the United States, and our farmers benefited by that market. But when the McKinley tariff put the duty at 30 cents a bushel, some of our farmers thought they were ruined. However, our farmers continued to grow barley and also paid attention to other agricultural pursuits, and instead of sending our barley to the United States we consumed it on our own Canadian farms in the production of beef and in other industries in which our farmers are engaged.

The former member for Toronto (Mr. Brock) pointed out some years ago to the Finance Minister that if something were not done for the woollen industry, millions of capital would be lost. The reply from the other side and in the public press was that the reason why the woollen industry in Canada did not prosper was because its machinery was not up to date but antiquated and not to be compared with the machinery in the American and British establishments. Well, my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Thoburn) who is a practical man, engaged in the business, pointed out this afternoon that the machinery in our Canadian establishments is equal to that in the factories of Great Britain and the United States. That such is the case must be evident because the machinery to be found in the woollen industries of Canada is chiefly manufactured in England and the United States and not in Canada; and no one who is investing his capital in the woollen industry would use it to purchase antiquated machinery. Therefore we no longer hear that argument advanced. My hon. friend (Mr. Thoburn) also pointed out that the wages paid in our Canadian woollen industry were much larger than those paid in the British factories. Surely it is in the interests of our people that we should pay a liberal wage to those engaged in our manufacturing industries. That is in the interest of everybody. This allows our mechanics to pay better prices and consume larger quantities of farm products and every other class of goods manufactured and grown in Canada. Therefore my hon. friend the Finance Minister, even at this late day, should see that some relief is given the woollen industry so that its raw products will be more profitable to our farmers and that the wages will be paid our own Canadian people, and we shall not import any class of goods which we can manufacture ourselves.

I do not want to repeat what has been so well said by my hon. friends who preceded me or to burden 'Hansard' with figures, but I want to emphasize the fact that the government will not find it to their advantage to neglect the farmers any longer. Our farmers are now manufacturers themselves; and when the government try to draw a distinction between the interests of the farmers and those of the manufacturers, they will find that our farmers realize that in protecting the manufacturers we are protecting the agriculturists, that there must be no western or eastern Canada, that we must manufacture in Canada all we require, grow on Canadian farms what we consume, build up Canada by tariffs in a way that will enable our farmers to raise on their farms what we consume in Canada and furnish our manufacturers the opportunity of manufacturing everything we are capable of manufacturing within the limits of our own country, and thus pay wages to our own people and keep the money in our own country.

Mr. W. O. SEALEY. I desire to draw the attention of the House to a notice of motion which has been on the Order Paper for some time back, but which, owing to various circumstances, could not come up for consideration according to the rules of the House. This resolution, proposed by myself, to be seconded by Mr. Turcotte, the hon. member for Quebec county, is as follows:

That in the opinion of this House, so long as the Canadian tariff affords, incidentally or otherwise, a considerable degree of protection to manufacturers, some protection may fairly and properly be afforded by our tariff to Canadian agriculturists and stock raisers upon hogs, hog products, garden vegetables and such other items as it may appear possible to so protect with advantage to the agriculturist, and without undue injury to the Canadian consumer.

Whether we are free traders, revenue tariff men, or national policy protectionists would seem to matter little because the policy of Canada has been settled for the next four or five years upon a revenue tariff basis and it would appear to be our duty whether we entirely approve of this policy or not, one and all to join in and produce the best possible results for Canada and her people from that revenue tariff. And as our agricultural interests are by far the greatest individual interests in Canada, it would only seem fair that the revenue tariff should be applied to preserve the home market for the home produce along agricultural lines, to equally as great an etxent as along manufacturing or any other lines, without asking for any special favours, but just equal consideration. Then if we are agreed upon that, the only reason I can see why we have not got it, is because as agriculturists we have not unitedly and forcefully asked for it, and without complaining or interfering with any other branch of industry, I may be permitted to illustrate the situation as it seems to me, along agricultural lines, as applied to the hog industry. During the years just previous to 1907, when times were good in the United States and still better in Canada, the United States surplus product interfered but slightly with us; as they had a fairly good home market they were not so anxious to look around for places in which to realize on their surplus products. During that time the hog product on foot brought an average in Canada of about seven cents, which made hog raising a profitable branch of agriculture. The supply then was sufficient for Canada's requirements and we also had a very large surplus for export to Great Britain. When the financial panic occurred over the world generally and less seriously in Canada than in any other country, the United States holders, packers and speculators generally looked about for a place in which to unload, with the result that with the very low tariff against their products entering Canada they were able to unload in this country at a considerably reduced or slaughtered price, but a price at which it paid the Canadian packer and speculator to buy from them. About that same time the filth scandals were exposed in Chicago and this created a distaste for United States products in Great Britain. The result was a further surplus of hog products in the United States. A rigid inspection was imposed upon all hog products being exported to Great Britain and millions of pounds were rejected, not altogether on account of disease but owing to the inferior quality, and this meat was slaughtered in both the United States and Canadian markets. This had the effect of bearing down the price in Canada to five cents or less on foot. It might reasonably be supposed that that condition would help the consumer to some extent, but we find that since the price of hogs declined from seven cents to five cents on foot the price to the consumer went up at least two cents. Thus the tariff conditions seem to give the packer and speculator generally an opportunity to arrange his combine or agreement so that his knife could cut both ways; he was able to reduce the price to the producer and increase the price to the consumer. That condition of affairs we do not think should exist and I do not think it would if we had a slightly higher tariff, say four cents a pound. The two cent tariff serves very well while times are good in the United States, when they are not seeking for a market, especially a dumping market, for their surplus products. But we know that in the United States they have a Wall Street in New York and a wheat pit in Chicago. We know that the Bulls, as they are called, control these markets largely for 25 days in the month on the average, but for the one remaining day in the month we find that the Bears get on top and they invariably force the price of pork down by two, three or four cents per pound with the result that Canadian packers, who have their agents there, buy sufficient supplies on these bear days to tide them over until the next bear day, so that it pays them to import and pay the two cent duty. If we had a tariff of four cents that would not be practicable or possible, and the benefit to Canada would be enormous.

It may be said, it will probably be said to-night, that the Canadian farmers and producers of hogs cannot furnish enough for the home requirements and the export trade, but as against that during the years 1904 and 1905, when we were exporting pork products to the extent of $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 annually to Great Britain, we were importing only about $500,000 worth of hog products. Since that time our imports have increased from half a million dollars, until in the last fiscal year ending March 31, 1908, we imported two million eight hundred and some odd thousand, almost three million dollars' worth of hog products, and yet the Trade and Commerce returns show that our exports had decreased from nearly $15,000,000 down to almost $10,000,000. The Customs returns show that the imports are constantly increasing and that for the six months from June to December of last year we imported one million seven hundred and seventy thousand odd dollars' worth; if the same rate of increase continues to the end of the year, we will have imported this year about $3,500,000 worth. I estimate that to supply the Canadian market with the quantity of pork products of the various classes which we now import, the product of about one million more hogs would be required. If we had one million more hogs supplied in Canada even at an increased cost it would not increase the price to the consumer a particle. To illustrate, three months ago the price of pork in Canada was five cents on foot. To-day it is eight cents on foot, but I venture to say that the price has not increased a particle in any retail store, in fact I see by the price in the windows that it has rather decreased. If one million more hogs were slaughtered in Canada they would provide for the higher class cuts that are imported at the present time and in addition would provide a very large quantity of the cheaper cuts, not suitable for curing and exporting, which would require to be sold at home.

At the present time the packers have scarcely enough of these cheaper cuts from the animals that they have to slaughter to supply the home market, with the result that they are able to charge about what they like, or from two to three cents more than is charged in the United States. If a million more hogs were produced and slaughtered here they would have the cheaper cuts, not of inferior quality but the cheaper cuts not suitable for curing for export but to sell at home. That would create rather a surplus instead of a shortage in our home supply. We would find our packers, instead of having a combine to increase the price, rivalling each other to get rid of that class of product and they would thereby reduce the price to the consumer in Canada. In fact the price to the consumer in Canada does not bear a fair proportion to the price the farmers are paid for his raw product. For the past couple of years, as far as my observation goes, considering the markets in Buffalo and Hamilton with reference to the freight rate to be about equi-distant, the price paid has been half a cent on an average higher in Buffalo than in Hamilton. According to the price reports that the Department of Agriculture here have turned out we find that to have been the case to quite an extent. I have these figures here if my word is doubted.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Would the hon. gentleman say what his authority is for these figures?

Mr. SEALEY. My authority is the price section of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Of this government?

Mr. SEALEY. Of this government. That same price department shows that notwithstanding that a higher price is paid for the raw material there than here, the wholesale price to the dealer in the United States, is, on the average, about two cents less than in Canada and the price to the consumer about three cents less. That all goes to show that the Canadian packer, whether he cannot handle the business as cheaply or not, requires for his purposes about two or three cents more than the United States packer. To my mind the Canadian packer is just as good a man as the United States packer and I believe he can do business just as satisfactorily, just as well and just as profitably on the same margin between the cost and sale prices. I have no disposition to interfere seriously with or injure the packer in any way, but I do think he is taking out of the customer too large a share altogether in proportion to what he is giving to the producer, and I believe that the producer should have a more equitable share.

Mr. LENNOX. The higher the tariff the smaller the price.

Mr. SEALEY. It may be said and argued that the United States price and the Canadian tariff as between Canada and the United States would have no bearing upon the price of the hogs, or of the pork, because, as we export considerably more than we import, our export price, or the Liverpool, or British price generally would rule. But the same price reports that I referred to a moment ago will go to show that while the price to the wholesaler in Canada is two cents higher than it is to the United States wholesaler, the price in Liverpool is from two to three cents less. The conditions are to-day that if pork is packed in this vicinity, if the freight is paid from here to Montreal or Quebec, if the ocean freight is paid and it is put on the market at Liverpool, I can go to Liverpool, buy that same pork at the market price there, pay the freight back to Ottawa, open a store next door to that of the packer and if the present prices are maintained I can undersell that store and make a good business profit out of the transaction. That condition of things should not exist and if it continues to exist it is a pity that the farmer, the actual producer, should not get his fair share of that difference.

Our western friends will feel that an increase in the tariff might seriously interfere with them and affect the cost of their supplies. To my mind I do not think it would. Our western friends are to-day producing quite large quantities of pork, and I think it will only be a short time before they will be producing all they require in the west. In fact, I think they are doing so to-day, and that they will have pork to export before very long. Another reason why I think we are able to produce more than we require and have a considerable amount for export is this: During the years 1904 and 1905 and for some time previously we were struggling in the British market to make a reputation, and, by that reputation, get a more profitable price. The Danish pork in the British market is regarded as the best pork and it commands a higher price. It brings about four cents more than United States pork, and Irish pork ranges about the same. Previous to 1897 our Canadian pork had improved in quality and in taste to the extent that we were getting about three cents more than the United States product would bring. Since that time large quantities of United States pork have been imported into Canada, and as far as it can be traced considerable quantities of it passed on through and were exported in the hope and with the actual result at times of realizing the better price that Canadian pork demands of three cents per pound. They pay two cents duty on coming into Canada, pay the freight over, realize three cents and make an extra profit of one cent. That has continued for some time. The American corn-fed pork of an inferior quality has been going to the British market to such an extent that it has dulled the taste of the Britishers for the Canadian pork, so much so that we find to-day that Canadian pork has backed down to about the level of United States pork, and in some cases less. By the introduction of American pork here we have lost the splendid reputation we had built up and enjoyed for a number of years, and I think our western friends could afford to join in this movement to protect the enviable reputation which they enjoy at the present time. They are producing in the west large quantities of wheat-fed pork. That wheat-fed pork makes the sweetest hams and bacon, being equal to the pea-fed product with which we built up such a reputation, and perhaps surpassing it to some extent. Unless that reputation that they are building up in the west is safeguarded they will perhaps meet the same fate that we have met here in Ontario. Within the last year, as far as I can gather from the trade and commerce returns, while we imported of pork products nearly $3,000,000 worth we only exported about $5,000 worth. The average invoice price of imports of hams and bacons was about ten cents, while mess pork averaged seven and three-quarter cents, whereas the average market quotation is about two cents higher than that or a little more. The $5,000 worth shipped from Canada to the United States was entered at about seventeen cents a pound. As far as I have been able to trace these exports they are the exports of hams produced at Edmonton, recently of this wheat-fed brand, and I gather they have been sold at seventeen cents a pound; five cents duty has been paid upon them when shipped to Chicago, making the cost twenty-two cents a pound. One cent per pound for freight is twenty-three cents, and two cents for the merchant's profit is twenty-five cents. These hams are sold to people who can afford to pay twenty-five cents a pound in preference to American products, which they can buy at fifteen cents a pound. I take that as evidence that the reputation of our western pork is well worth preserving, and when in a short time our friends from the west produce all they require for their own consumption then it may be safely said that they will not suffer by an increase of duty. If they can assist their Ontario friends without any detriment to themselves I am sure they will be only too glad to do so.

Mr. OWEN. Do you say that your experience is that where the duty was increased the price of the commodity was increased.

Mr. SEALEY. We have had no experience of the increase of duty on pork, but I can say that the decrease in the price on foot from 7 cents to 5 cents did not decrease the price to the consumer, but on the contrary the market returns show that price was increased during that period. Then, during the last three months when the price rose from 5 cents to 8 cents the cost of the article to the consumer has not been raised. Judging from this it would seem to be apparent that if we had a duty of 4 cents instead of 2 cents the price to the consumer would not be affected. I do not say it would apply to all articles in that way, but I do say that with the cheaper cuts that would be provided for our home market, if our packers slaughtered an extra million hogs a year, then, that class of meat being more than our home market would demand, a competition would be created that would decrease the price to the consumer. I may be wrong, but still I am firmly convinced that would be the result. The figures I have before me show that last year there were slaughtered 1,100,000 hogs (not including the returns from Montreal and some other places), and if an extra million were slaughtered it would about double the business of our packers. That being so, I am sure the consumer would probably get a cheaper article than he is getting to-day. There is no reason why the packers and producers should have any quarrel; indeed they have not except that the producers feel that under present conditions the packer is able to so manipulate that he gets all the profit, and that when it is possible for him to do so he puts the price down to less than a fair living price for the producer. It may be argued by some that if this condition were brought about, agriculturists who buy lard, a by-product of the hog, might have to pay a couple of cents more per pound for it. I do not believe that would be so, but even if it were the average 200 pound hog produces about 15 pounds of lard, and if the farmer paid two cents more for his lard and bought all the lard in the hog it would cost him 30 cents additional, whereas, if he were selling the hog to the packer, as most farmers do, and got 2 cents a pound more for it he would be $4 ahead, and it would be a very profitable transaction for him. I make a definite suggestion for the benefit of the powers that be in connection with the pork industry, and I ask for an increase of 2 cents a pound in the duty. I trust that in their wisdom they may see their way clear to make that increase. I have been much interested in the discussion on wool, and I notice that the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) who spoke as a farmer seemed to be more particularly anxious about getting the manufacturer an increase of duty of so much per yard on cloth and so much per pound on yarn. I failed to hear him make any direct statement as to what he would do about the duty on wool. Then, the hon. member (Mr. Thoburn) while he boasted as wishing to benefit the farmer, he thought the best way to benefit him was through the manufacturers getting considerably more protection on their products. He was looking after the manufacturers while he professed to be championing the interests of the farmers. The other gentlemen who spoke reasoned about the same way, but if they were interested in the farmers' side of the question one would expect them to be more definite. Our present tariff on wool is 2 cents for the preference, 2½ cents for the intermediate, and 3 cents for the maximum, and I think the way to benefit the farmer would be to double that duty from 2 cents to 4, from 2½ to 5, and from 3 to 6 cents. That is getting it right down to where it will benefit the farmer, and I have no fear that the manufacturer will look after himself. There is a definite proposition that will benefit the farmer.

Mr. LENNOX. Why don't you go higher?

Mr. SEALEY. If necessary for the welfare of the farmer do go higher.

Mr. HERRON. We will take you into our party.

Mr. SEALEY. My friend here remarks that I will soon be fit for his party, but so far as I remember the national policy days, while the Conservatives talked about the farmer it was the manufacturer who got all the tariff favours.

Mr. BLAIN. The present tariff on pork was put on by the Liberal-Conservative party.

Mr. FIELDING. Then why are you blaming us for it?

Mr. SEALEY. The Liberal party re-arranged the tariffs and reduced the customs duty on many of the necessaries used by the farmers, but all the same I do say that probably the Liberal government have not protected the farmers quite enough. I do not think that either of the political parties have given the farmers as much as they should have had, and although our Liberal friends have done the better of the two I am anxious to see them go further still. The growing of vegetables is an industry which is of increasing importance, and I believe that without serious inconvenience to the consumer an increase of the tariff along some lines would benefit the producer. Take, for instance, strawberries, on which there is a specific duty of two cents a box. It is said that that is equivalent to 40 per cent when strawberries are five cents a box. Well, that would be a first-rate tariff at that price. But at that time there are no strawberries coming in from outside, and it is the competition in our local production which brings the price down to that figure. When the tariff prevails, it is at a time when strawberries come in at anywhere from 25 cents to $1.00 a box. Two cents on strawberries at $1.00 a box is two per cent, at 50 cents a box it is four per cent, and at 25 cents a box it is eight per cent. If we can justify a tariff of 40 per cent when the consuming masses are buying berries, I do not see how we can justify two per cent, four per cent or eight per cent when imported strawberries are a luxury rather than a necessity; and if it is proper that our tariff should be imposed on luxuries, it does not seem to me that a better article could be found for the purpose than that particular article. It may be said that a 40 per cent or 25 per cent tariff on strawberries at the higher prices would prevent them coming in, and that we would get no revenue under it. With the small tax of two cents a box, there is not very much revenue; but a higher tariff would have one of two effects; it would either bring a greatly increased revenue, or it would reserve the appetites of the people who care for this luxury for the time when our Canadian berries come in, and when a duty of 40 per cent would afford a good profit for our growers, whereas they get no profit on berries at five cents a box. The same argument applies to cabbages, melons and other things. The duty on cabbages is thirty per cent, and at certain seasons of the year, when the early-ripening cabbages of the states to the south are produced in large quantities, they are brought into Canada. But we suffer seriously from imported cabbages when their crop is nearly finished and they ship them in by the carload at as low as $6 a ton, which, with the duty of thirty per cent, amounting to $1.80 added, makes a total cost of $7.80 a ton. The average cabbage weighs about five pounds, or 400 to the ton. That would be 400 for $8, or two cents each. The cabbages that are brought in at that season are generally of very inferior quality, but their importation has the effect of enabling the merchants to say: 'I can buy cabbages for that, and if the local producers do not furnish a first-class article at as low a price, we will import cabbages from the States.' With a tariff of three cents per head on cabbages, I do not think the average consumer would pay any higher price, while the duty would ensure to the local producer his own market when the later cabbage comes in. I believe a re-arrangement of the tariff in that respect would benefit the producer without injuring the consumer a particle. Another reason why I think the farmers should have some further consideration in the re-arrangement of the tariff is in connection with the recent French treaty. While I look for immense benefits to Canada as a whole from that treaty, one of the concessions made by Canada was in favour of French wines, which our grape producers, whether rightly or wrongly, feel has injured them seriously. They feel that in that respect their best interests have been sacrificed. Whether it will work out in that way or not, I am not quite clear, but that is the impression on their minds. These are some of the reasons why the agricultural interest should have more consideration in the arrangement of the tariff. I believe it would be thoroughly satisfactory to our manufacturers and our workingmen if they were occasionally perhaps compelled to pay slightly higher prices for agricultural products. To-day the average mechanic working in a city, without anything invested, if he has steady employment at the average wage going, which is pretty fair, is able to bring up and educate his family with greater ease than his country cousin is able to do. The special advantage of the agriculturalist is that he is independent and at all times is proof against starvation, which is not always the case in the city. But in a general way I am satisfied that our manufacturers and city consumers would welcome a better condition of things among our farmers. I believe I am voicing the views of the great majority of the agriculturalists of Canada and of a large number of the representatives of Canada in this House. As evidence of that I take the liberty of reading a resolution passed a year ago by the Swine Breeders' Association:

Whereas the pork producing industry is a very large and important one along agricultural lines in Canada at the present time, and we appreciate the efforts of the government in re-arranging the tariff so as to encourage its growth and improvement during the past, the results of which have been most satisfactory until recently, when we find that in the face of the present tariff large quantities of United States pork are coming into Canada, thereby reducing the Canadian price to producers of live hogs to such an extent, that under present conditions the industry does not offer a livelihood and in order that effort be made to remedy this condition of things, it is hereby unanimously resolved that we, the undersigned, members of the Swine Breeders' Association of Canada, request the Hon. Mr. Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, to cause immediate inquiry to be made as to the qualities of pork of various forms coming into Canada at present from the United States; also inquiry as to the tariff head under which it comes, as well as investigating the correctness of the price, weights, &c., as represented for tariff purposes and also that inquiry be made from those importing same as to the profitable business results of such transactions, and if after so doing all these matters prove correct and regular, then we can only conclude that at the present time Canada is being made the slaughter market for over production of the United States, and therefore the Anti-Dumping clause Tariff should apply or otherwise the tariff should be raised, for while we are all moderate tariff men, yet we believe that on any line the tariff should be fixed as to regulate the trade of so important an industry most favourable to encouraging home production, for with the present prices the packer receives in Britain as well as the present prices to the consumer in Canada the home producer should be receiving more than present prices per pound on foot.

While we hesitate to trouble your department in the matter we are prompted to do so by the alarming circumstances that there is 50 per cent less hogs produced to-day than there was six months ago, entirely as a result of low prices and the unfair competition, whereas if properly encouraged the resources are quite capable of producing double the quantity of six months ago instead of half.

In the above matter we feel conscious that being agriculturists ourselves and in close touch with the agriculturists generally that we are voicing the sentiment of every farmer in the whole Dominion or at least 95 per cent thereof, and if you deem it advisable definite assurance as to this would be forthcoming by petitions, signed by almost every farmer in the Dominion.

The packers can buy a stock of United States goods on a low market and tide themselves over until conditions are favourable to stocking up again. The fact of the United States being able to produce corn much cheaper than we can in Canada puts them in a position to trade on a par with us after paying the two cent duty.

While the matter is up, we deem it advisable to draw your attention to the splendid reputation Canadian pork has in Britain and to the importance of guarding this reputation and providing for the profits accruing therefrom coming directly to the Canadian producers and in that way avoiding the possibility of packers who own packing houses in both the United States and Canada as well, drifting a part of this profit to the United States by way of substituting the United States product for Canadian, made possible by the lack of thorough branding of the Canadian product, so the British consumer who is so anxious to support the made-in-Canada sentimental preference, as well as the actually better quality from being deceived by the substitution of the United States product.

In that connection the Minister of Agriculture did take considerable trouble and did cause a more rigid inspection to be made at the border and did improve the situation to quite an extent. The Minister of Customs also looked into his department and caused a more careful watch to be put on the entry price. When an article pays a specific duty, the average customs officer thinks it does not matter at what price it is entered; but if the dumping clause be applied, it is important that the entry price should be closely scrutinized. That pork is bought and entered under value can be established by the fact that at certain ports, where the people are not on to the racket of the bear market in Chicago and Wall street, we find small quantities of mess pork, for instance, entered and invoiced at 10 cents or a little more, whereas we find that the average of the year at other ports is down to seven and three-quarter cents per pound. The reason is that the price of some bear day is taken, and as any one can buy at that price on a bear day, the application of the dumping clause is not so easy to enforce. If it be difficult to enforce on that account, that is another reason for a little increase in the tariff which would counteract the practise of constantly buying on that bear day only and entering the pork at that low price. The Minister of Finance promised to take the matter into his serious consideration, but if the other two departments fail to bring about satisfactory results I hardly know whether we can expect something from the hon. gentleman or not. However, representations have been made and the circumstances and conditions are known, and I do hope that the Minister of Finance will see that there is something in the budget speech for the agricultural interests, especially along the line of pork, vegetables and fruit, and others that could be improved and remedied without unduly injuring the consumer.

True, with rural delivery, 2 cent postage, &c., the government are doing well for the farm life comfort, but another step could be taken, by extending the same protection to farmers as to manufacturers, and in this way take one large step farther forward.

As to the packers, from the drift of my remarks it might be said that I am hostile to them, but I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I have nothing but the kindliest and best feelings for them, and if my views should prevail, I believe their business would double. And if they made a little more than half their present profit on double the business, they would still be ahead at the end of the year.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (Simcoe). Is it not a fact that half the packing houses in the country are running at half time now?

Mr. SEALEY. I think that is true, but I believe they would be running at full time if they had paid the 6½ cents instead of cutting the price down to 5 cents, or less than the farmers can produce pork for. When our packers are paying less for their raw material than the packers in Buffalo and are charging 2 cents more to the wholesale and 3 cents more to the retail dealers, there is no reason why they should not be running at half time. It would be better for them to pay the higher price and encourage our farmers to produce the pork. In 1904 and 1905, when we were not bothered with this stuff coming in, we produced more than sufficient for our own requirements, whereas to-day we export millions less and import three and a half million pounds more. Of course the excuse given by the packers is that the hogs on foot are not produced here, but by way of evidence on that point let me just read a report from the 'Farmers' Advocate':

A Side Light on the Packing Business.

As a result of a friendly action at law, brought by the executors of the estate of Mrs. Wm. Davies against several interested parties, statements have been recorded showing that the value of stock (shares $100 par value) in the provision business of the William Davies Co., Toronto, is placed at from $300 to $400 per share, and that during thirteen years past the dividends on the stock have ranged from 15 per cent up to 120 per cent per annum.

In placing the value of the stock, information was provided the court to the effect that the stock was worth $300 on January 12, 1907, and that J. W. Flavelle had paid $400 per share for stock during the past year.

A table was also placed in evidence, showing the dividends which the stock has paid during the past thirteen years to be:

For the year ending March 31, 1893, 65 per cent; 1894, 34 per cent; 1895, 40 per cent; 1896, 45 per cent; 1897, 100 per cent; 1898, 120 per cent; 1899, 82 per cent; 1900, 60 per cent; 1901, 27½ per cent; 1902, 27½ per cent; 1903, 15 per cent; 1904, 30 per cent; 1905, 41 per cent; 1906, 25 per cent.

Surely when this business was paying these handsome dividends, it does not seem to me that they have good cause for saying that Canada cannot produce the raw material they require and that their factories are running half time. These dividends warrant their paying better prices. The prices they actually receive warrant their paying better figures. If they paid a fair price, consistent with the conditions I have shown, there would be a superabundance of pork or hogs on foot produced in this country. The article goes on to say:

On a capitalization of $750,000 this would mean that in 1906 the company made a profit of $187,500. The capitalization in 1898 was smaller, but at the same capitalization the profit would have been $900,000.—Toronto 'World.'

The Davis Packing Company slaughtered last year only 260,000 hogs and $900,000 would be nearly $4 per hog.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE.

I do not think I can be accused of being unfair to the packers. I have stated their side of the case as fairly as I could and in the way it appeals to me and in which it should be fair to them. I have another resoultion, passed at the recent meeting of the Vegetable Growers' Association of the Niagara district:

We, the members of the Ontario Vegetable Growers' Association in convention assembled, respectfully submit that the protection now afforded Canadian vegetable growers is insufficient, and that we simply ask that even-handed justice be accorded us. The tariff imposed by the United States government is, on some of our products, prohibitive, and our door is practically left wide open. We would, therefore, respectfully urge that the federal parliament, now in session, place the same tariff tax on the products of our competitors as they impose on ours, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. R. L. Borden.

The Ontario Association writes as follows:

The Ontario Vegetable Growers' Association ask that the customs tariff on vegetables be made specific instead of ad valorem, which we believe would prevent our markets from becoming a dumping ground for culls, as they are at present. We would advise a specific duty equal to 30 per cent on a fair cost of productions, on the market value of average quality on vegetables imported, which would not prevent the importation of vegetables at times of scarcity, or when the Canadian grower cannot supply the demand; the market price being high at such times the specific duty would be smaller relatively.

A specific duty would prevent our market from being flooded with the surplus or damaged products sent here at a low valuation, at a time when Canadian growers are prepared to supply an abundance of fresh grown products. At the same time it would improve conditions for the Canadian consumer by improving the quality of the goods imported.

We also wish to draw your attention to the fact that a very large part of Californian grown vegetables imported into Canada are produced by Chinese labour, especially is this the case with celery, practically all of which is grown by them, and the low price at which it can be invoiced at point of shipment is largely determined by that fact.

The parliament of Canada having imposed, and we believe rightly so, a tax of $500 on this class entering the Dominion, as a protection to Canadian labour, it appears to us unfair that the product of such coolie labour should enter into competition with the product of the Canadian vegetable grower, and by an ad valorem duty evade the protection which our laws are intended to afford. We would ask that the following duty be imposed on the vegetables mentioned, viz.:—

Cabbages.. .. .. 2 cents per head.
Celery.. .. .. .. 20 cents per dozen.
Onions.. .. .. .. 20 cents per bushel of 50 lbs.

THOS. DELWORTH,
Weston, Ont.

Now, it may be said that the vegetable growing industry in Canada is small. Perhaps it is, when compared with our great agricultural interest, but it is a development of agriculture, and the more encouragement it receives the better field is left for general agriculture. But it is by no means so small as a hasty glance would lead one to believe. I am sorry I cannot, at the moment, quote the amount invested in vegetable growing, but it is equal to about half the investment in manufactures in Canada; it is something enormous, something wonderful; and in view of its great importance and of the number of people to be benefited without injury to the consumer, I trust the Minister of Finance will take it into his serious consideration, and that when the budget comes down we shall be able to welcome the benefit. While it is true that considerable increases of duties, as a general thing, may encourage combines, I am confident that, in this case, the increases asked for would have exactly the opposite effect. While there has been some slight inquiry into the pork packer's combine, success has not been attained in actually securing a conviction, though success has gone to the extent of disorganizing their methods somewhat when the Crown Attorneys and other officers whose duty it is to follow this line have got after them. But it requires constant pursuit and constant vigilance to prevent their methods from playing greater havoc with the pork-producing industry than they do. I think we have clearly proven that this case of pork industry is one in which the theory of the export price governing the situation does not apply, for the facts show that, while, three months ago, the prices in Liverpool was slightly higher than here, when the price here went down the price went up in Liverpool.. In view of what I have said—that the agricultural interest must to some extent, bear the advantage given to the manufacturing interest and to the iron and steel industries, both by way of tariff and by way of bounty, and that the agricultural interest itself represents such a very large portion of our population—it does seem to me that it should receive thorough and careful consideration. In fact, I am satisfied that it is receiving that consideration. But it is results that we would like to have, and we would like them quick. I hope we shall get them the day after to-morrow when the hon. Minister of Finance brings down the Budget.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). My only object for detaining the House for a short time on this question is the important interest involved in it, and the important class primarily affected. I do not propose to touch on the pork question, except incidentally, or to attempt to follow the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Sealey) in his argument, for he has covered ground which was not contemplated when this subject was introduced, the matter brought forward for discussion being the case of the woollen industry. But I cannot refrain from congratulating my hon. friend (Mr. Sealey) that, after the missionary work of twenty-eight years , in him we have succeeded in converting an extreme free trader into a thoroughly up-to-date, approved protectionist.

Mr. SEALEY. Only so far as agriculture is concerned.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sealey) is an example of the kind of protectionist we find on the other side of the House; they are invariably protectionists in matters affecting their own interest, but free traders in matters affecting the interests of others. But that is not consistent, it is not proper; it is not fair. The principle of protection must be right, or it must be wrong; if it is right it must apply all round, if it is wrong it must be discarded all round. If it is right it must be applied all around and if it is wrong it must be discarded all round—protection cannot be right as applied to the farmer and wrong as applied to the manufacturer. The principle is either right or wrong. We hold that it is a correct principle for the conditions in Canada and therefore we have agitated it and supported it.

I was glad to hear the hon. member (Mr. Sealey) discard a theory that we heard advanced many times in this House by the Hon. John Charlton. Mr. Charlton was the father of that argument which was presented to this House time after time as absolute evidence that protection on agricultural products could not raise the price that the farmer would receive for those products because we raised more than we consumed, and therefore had to export and that the price received for what was exported always regulated the price of the whole product. The hon. member says to-night that that is not so. I agree with him, and members on this side have said that over and over again. His friends have advanced that argument hundreds of times in and out of this House. The argument was fallacious, unsound, illogical, and I am glad to know that the hon. member at last realizes this.

My sole reason for touching this question to-night is its great importance to the agricultural class. We are told that the agriculturists represent about 750,000 farmers in this country. If they represent that number directly they represent about five times that number indirectly; consequently they must represent over two millions and any question that affects 2,000,000 people must be important to Canada. It is an opportune time to deal with the wool and sheep question, which is of deep interest to the agriculturists. The Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) will make his budget speech in a few days and what we are afraid of is that the many representations and appeals that have been made to him by protectionists as well as by free traders may not have convinced him that it is his duty to give better protection to the sheep raisers and manufacturers of woollen goods in Canada.

Last year we raised in Canada about 16,700,000 pounds of wool. That represents a very substantial return to the farmers of Canada. Washed wool last year averaged about 16 cents a pound, so it represented at least $1,000,000 to the farmers of Canada. We do not know the amount realized from sheep in addition to that but we do know that there are to-day over two and three-quarter million sheep in Canada, and if you value them at $5 a head they represent between $12,000,000 and $15,000,000. The farmer derived from this source last year $1,000,000 in wool and probably $2,000,000 in mutton.

The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) presented clearly to the House the value of sheep raising to the farmer. First, sheep raising does not require a high degree of intelligence; second, sheep require little care; third, they are great foragers, and for nine months out of twelve provide their own food; fourth, they are valuable weed destroyers and every good farmer likes to have a number of them on his farm to destroy the noxious weed seeds; fifth, they require but little care and will thrive where cattle cannot live; sixth, they are the best fertilizers of any animal, they fertilize the land thoroughly and evenly. For all these reasons, sheep raising is a highly valuable adjunct to farming.

We are asking that the government raise the duty upon woollen goods and do something for the manufacturers of wool. Why do we ask that? Because every year since this government came into power men engaged in that line of business have been failing. I wonder if the Minister of Finance has examined the list of woollen factories that have gone down in the last 12 years during which he has been in power and has been every year plied with arguments to induce him to assist these manufacturers. I have here a list prepared by the Hamilton 'Spectator' some time ago from which I find that no less than 61 factories have gone down in 12 years. Over 3,500 operatives have thus been thrown out of employment. If every operative is the head of a family, and most of them are, this would represent at least 15,000 people who were dependent upon work in these establishments and who are in a state of starvation to-day if they have not been able to turn their hands to some other line of money-making. The breadwinners on whom these people were dependent have been deprived of their means of livelihood and have been obliged to go into some other line of business. Let me read to the minister a list of the factories that have been broken down by the policy of this government in reducing the duty on woollen goods coming in from England. The factories are as follows:

There are 61 villages and towns in Ontario that have suffered and suffered severely by virtue of the policy introduced and carried out by the present government. Although they have been appealed to year after year.

Mr. SEALEY. Would it be in order for me to make a little correction?

Mr. SPROULE. After I get through.

Mr. SEALEY. I would like to draw attention to the fact——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sealey) can only ask a question with the leave of the hon. gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. SPROULE. He does not want to ask a question but to make a speech and I think it is rather out of time to break in now. I listened to the hon. gentleman saying a good deal that I did not agree with but I did not interrupt him. I am taking the list as it appears here and I assume it to be correct. As far as I know it is correct. I am taking it as it has been published to the world by the Manufacturers Association. What has thrown these three thousand operatives out of employment, what has injured these 61 towns and villages in Ontario, what has deprived the farmers of the country of the additional market for their produce to the extent of millions of pounds of what it would have been if these factories were in operation to-day? What has done all this? It is the special preference given to England on woollen goods by the present government. It is the refusal of the Finance Minister to come to the assistance of the farmers and woollen manufacturers of the country and put up the duty to such an extent as would save these industries that have gone down. They have gone down. Who is suffering? First the man who has his money in the machinery is suffering. The machinery is either sold for scrap iron or is rusting out. These spindles and these looms are not in operation. Then the operatives who were supporting their families have been thrown out of employment. The farmers have been deprived of the opportunity of feeding these people and of obtaining a better market price for everything that they produce on the farm and which was consumed by these industries or by those employed in them. It injures directly and indirectly, first the men who are supporting their families, second, those who have money invested in the machinery and, third, the farmers who are deprived of that additional market. Yet the government are absolutely indifferent to the wants of the people. Is it not about time that we should try, by some means or other, to make a stronger impression upon the Minister of Finance than has been made heretofore? He has been obdurate up to the present time. He is about to make his budget speech. He has told us over and over again that he cannot announce in advance what he is going to do with the tariff, whether he is going to raise it or lower it. We are trying to urge him to raise it and we are plying him with arguments why he should do so because we believe it important in the interest of the people that he should raise the tariff. Take the town of Hespeler alone; two mills have gone down there. They have been obliged to shut down. What was invested in these two mills. The people that were running these mills had invested $750,000 in them and they were employing over 600 hands. Take 600 operatives out of any small town and see how it paralyses the place, see how it reduces the consumption. These families must move away because they are educated in that line, they will follow it and if they are denied the opportunity to labour at home many of them will go to the United States to secure work. If they are deprived of employment in Hespeler they will go somewhere else and if they go to Almonte and find the factories are closed there they will ultimately be driven to the country that gives them employment in this line. See what it means to that small town. This is one of the live towns of this country inhabited largely by Germans. What does it mean to have $750,000 worth of machinery thrown out of operation? There you have 600 hands out of employment and a consequent loss to the farmers who supply the wool to keep the factories going, and who supply the other products of their farm to feed the working people. In that one small town the farmers' market has been reduced to the extent of at least what is necessary to supply 1,800 people. Take these 61 towns and look what it means in the aggregate to the province of Ontario. And yet, although the woollen mill owners and the farmers have appealed to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs over and over again and told them that the industry was going to the wall, they remain obdurate. We make a last appeal to them to-night. I can tell the Minister of Finance that there was no more potent argument than this in favour of the Conservative policy in my last campaign, and night after night many reformers told me that they were surprised their friends were so indifferent to the interests of the farmers. We appeal to the government on this question for the last time to-night. We tell the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs that if they do not take action that industry will go to the wall as sure as the sun rises and sets, and the time will come when many of the friends of the minister, protectionists as they are to-day, will be so disgusted with the policy of the government that they will vote against them in hundreds, and sooner or later the government will reap the reward of its ill-designed policy. Most of the farmers in my constituency raise sheep and I myself have experience in that branch of agriculture. A few years ago I sold out a flock of 150 sheep because they did not pay. Unwashed wool was running from seven to eight cents, and washed wool from 14 to 16 cents per lb. Last year washed wool was 26 cents or 27 cents but we may take it at an average of 15 cents for many years, and while lambs are worth $5 each when they weigh over 40 pounds in the spring of the year, in the fall they are only worth $3, and sheep raising does not pay at these prices. Why is wool so cheap? It is because we are importing 6,000,000 pounds annually and killing off the factories that use the long Canadian wool. There are not nearly as many sheep in Canada now as there were years ago, and the number will be getting fewer in the future. The shoddy imported goods are taking the place of the solid woollen goods which were formerly made out of Canadian wool. You can buy cheap horse blankets all over the country, and although they appear all right they are simply made out of shoddy, and in a few months they fall to pieces. So long as they are cheap they will be bought.

Mr. FIELDING. Once only; my hon. friend will not do it again.

Mr. SPROULE. I bought them once and only once, but I have seen them all over the country. It seems to be human nature, especially when money is not plentiful, to buy a cheap article although in the end it may not be as good value as the more expensive kind. As long as you give that British preference as it is to-day, and allow these shoddy goods to come in, so long will the woollen manufacturers of this country suffer and the farmers suffer with them. Last year we imported $22,894,000 worth of wool and woollen goods, and there is not the slightest doubt whatever that under paternal protection three-fourths or four-fifths of the woollen goods would be made at home, giving employment to labour and giving better markets and better returns to the farmer. Sound economic principles require that each should work for the other; we are not living for ourselves; the artisan in the woollen factory works for me as I work for him, and the wise policy is that the people of a country should work within themselves to produce everything within the country that it is possible to produce. It is because we are not doing that in Canada that I appeal to the government to-night. If we pursue that policy we will be doing what is best for the farmers, and for the settlers who will get into our illimitable western regions to raise sheep by the millions; we will be doing good to the manufacturer and to the artisan who must support his family from the product of his labour. If we pursue that policy we will be helping along the progress of our country. I trust the scales have at last fallen from the eyes of the Minister of Finance and that he has come to the conclusion at last that he should be a protectionist.

Mr. PATERSON. My colleague the Minister of Finance has never shown indifference to any of the deputations that waited upon him, nor has he been indifferent to the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) and others who have spoken to-night. But if they are really desirous of having a duty on wool would he have any objection to state what that duty should be?

Mr. SPROULE. Personally I cannot say because it is a question that would require to be figured out very accurately by experts. We do not know that all who are regarded as experts say that this duty is necessary. It is not for us to say how much or how little the duty shall be raised.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman says that wool is selling at 16 cents when it should sell at 25 cents or 26 cents, but the figures presented to us show that it is selling at a much lower figure.

Mr. SPROULE. Unwashed wool is selling at seven cents or eight cents.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes. Now, is it the idea of the hon. gentleman that in order to increase the price to the former figure there should be a duty of 10 cents a pound?

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know how much it would take.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman is finding fault with us, and he should have thought that out.

Mr. SPROULE. I know that all this wool is supplied by some other country. If we were making all these woollen goods at home, our factories, instead of using about 12,000,000 pounds of wool, as they are doing to-day, would be using between 30,000,000 and 40,000,000 pounds, and the result would be that our farmers would get a little better price for their wool and what is coming in would be kept out.

Mr. PATERSON. The American tariff imposes a duty of 10 or 12 cents a pound on wool. I would like to ask the hon. member for North Lanark: supposing 10 cents a pound were put upon wool by our tariff, what would have to be the tariff on manufactured woollen cloths which now bear 30 per cent?

Mr. THOBURN. It would require some little figuring to say exactly what the corresponding duty should be; but if the duty on wool going into the United States is ten cents a pound, then, as far as I can see, we would want the same duty on the manufactured article that is imposed on the manufactured article going into the United States, whatever that duty is.

Mr. FIELDING. That is 100 per cent in some instances.

Mr. THOBURN. If you put the same duty on wool that the United States puts on, why should we not have the same duty on the manufactured article? I am not advocating that, but I am asking that question.

Mr. PATERSON. I only want it to be known to the people of the country what duty must be put on wool to protect the farmers, according to the ideas of hon. gentlemen opposite, and what duty must be put upon woollen cloths. If the people of the country will have to pay 70 or 80 per cent on their woollen cloths, they ought to know it. Does the hon. gentleman think that the people of the country, the farmers and the workingmen, would ask for that?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. gentleman forgets that it would be very easy to carry the ten cents a pound on the finished goods coming into the country. That has been done before, and that is the plan adopted in the United States in a number of cases.

Mr. PATERSON. But you want to reduce it to an ad valorem basis to see where you are.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. gentleman is all ad valorem. He never thinks of putting on a specific duty. It is not necessary to reduce a specific duty to an ad valorem basis. If it is a specific in the one case, why should it not be in the other?

Mr. TALBOT. If you put a duty of ten cents a pound on wool, would not the cheaper quality of woollen goods be taxed higher than the other?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. gentleman's question answers itself.

Mr. LENNOX. Has the Minister of Customs forgotten all the statements put before him and the other members of the government by the various parties interested, dealing with the very questions which he is now discussing? For instance, the Sheep Breeders' Association came here and represented what duty they wanted on wool; and the manufacturers have been here time and again representing what they thought ought to be done. Has the Minister of Customs forgotten completely what these gentlemen have been representing to him?

Mr. PATERSON. No, I have not forgotten.

Mr. LENNOX. Then I do not think the hon. minister needs information.

Mr. PATERSON. The manufacturers did not propose any duty on wool.

Mr. LENNOX. They proposed a duty on what they were interested in, and the sheep breeders proposed a duty on wool when they waited on the minister.

Mr. PATERSON. I had an interview with the sheep breeders within a week, I think.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I must call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that all this is irregular. There is a debate going on, and a number of members wish to speak.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken, but it was the evident desire of the House to have these questions discussed, and I have not interfered.

Mr. PATERSON. As a matter of courtesy I may be allowed to reply to the hon. gentleman's question. I had an interview with the sheep breeders within a week, and their representation was that if there was a higher duty placed on woollen goods, there must be a duty placed on wool. I therefore ask the hon. member for North Lanark if the woollen manufacturers would not be in a worse position under such circumstances than they are now, with free wool and a reasonable duty on woollen goods?

Mr. THOBURN. If I may be permitted to answer the hon. gentleman, I may say that I pointed out clearly that when the woollen industry of this country was in a flourishing condition, there was a much higher price paid for wool, with the duty as it is at the present time. If the hon. gentleman will take my advice and rearrange the tariff on woollen goods, I cannot see why that state of affairs should not come around again, from the natural demand that will be created by the increased manufacture of woollen goods in Canada, and the increased price of wool to the Canadian farmer. I pointed out that there was a time when we paid as much as 52 cents a pound for Canadian wool, with the duty just the same as it is now. Why were we able to do that? Simply because the mills were all in operation, using Canadian wool. But owing to the change in the tariff on the manufactured article, there has been such an importation of English woollen goods into this country that they have displaced the demand for Canadian wool, and consequently the price of Canadian wool decreased until it has reached the price at which it stands to-day. Just what corresponding duty would be required on the manufactured article if you put ten cents a pound on wool I am not prepared to say. I am not engaged in the manufacture of tweeds; I am engaged in the manufacture of flannels, and speak from that standpoint; but I would not like to speak for the general manufacturers of tweeds in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. A. W. SMITH (North Middlesex). Mr. Speaker, as a farmer and a producer of wool I would like to say a few words on this question. I notice that there is a tendency on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to extol the position of the farmer as compared with that of other classes, and to call upon the government on every possible occasion to do something for him. That is all very fine if it were only genuine and honest, but the trouble is that whenever they call on the government to do something for the farmer we find a rider attached to their proposition, the effect of which is that for every $5 bill the farmer will get, which in the end is likely to prove worthless, he is asked to contribute $10 or $20 out of his own hard earned money.

In this proposition regarding the great woollen industry, there have been some statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite which I should like to correct. For instance, they have made several references to what the sheep breeders have asked from the government. Well, I am myself interested in the sheep industry, probably as much as any other man in the Dominion, and I am in a position to speak with a knowledge of the business at first hand. When a deputation of the sheep breeders waited on the government they submitted the proposition, as the Minister of Customs has stated, that if any bounty or increase in the tariff were to be given the manufacturers, a corresponding bounty or increase should be given the producers of wool. But at the same time they pointed out that, in their opinion, it was a matter of very grave doubt whether any imposition of duty on wool would be of any benefit to the farmers of this country. In that connection I wish to express my most emphatic approval of the opinion that we cannot put a tariff on wool which is going to be of any benefit to our producers. If we follow up the argument of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), who has said that a duty on foreign woollens would increase the manufacture of Canadian woollens and thereby benefit our farmers, we will find that that theory was exploded long ago. As the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) has said, the Conservative government, during the eighteen years it was in power, took upon itself to teach the Canadian people what tariff protection was going to do, particularly for our farmers and incidentally for the people at large. But what was the result of their teaching? I sincerely trust we shall never have a repetition of that eighteen years rule which ended so disastrously to our farmers. It was the hon member for North Lanark (Mr. Thoburn), I think, who said that the duty simply meant a trifling matter of 35 cents to 40 cents per suit of clothes which a farmer would have to pay extra to our Canadian manufacturers. Let me tell that hon. gentleman that at the end of that eighteen years it was a very small revenue which the manufacturers of woollen goods of any description got from the agricultural community, because it would take the accumulated savings of years to enable the farmer to be in a position to purchase that suit of clothes. When he only got 15 or 16 cents a bushel for his oats; when he had to draw his wheat to market and sell it at 45 to 50 cents; when a buyer could take the pick of his horses at any price he was willing to pay, and when he got correspondingly low prices for his cattle, and had to sell his lambs at $2 to $2.50 a piece, then was the time when he felt that the eighteen years of teaching along the line of protection had brought him nothing but disaster.

Mr. BLAIN. What has this government done to increase the prosperity of the farmer by the way of changing the tariff?

Mr. A. W. SMITH. I shall endeavour to answer that question. When the present government appealed to the people to give them control and the opportunity to improve our condition, they promised to reduce the tariff where possible and in that way make it easier for our farmers to succeed in their business.

Mr. LENNOX. We never heard any of those statements.

Mr. A. W. SMITH. My hon. friend must have been living very far back in the back woods if he did not hear them. I recollect quite well hearing them. In fact, I made the statement myself that such and such things would follow if the Liberals were allowed to take the reins of power. Well, some hon. gentlemen have spoken about a commission going to the people and asking what should be done. As soon as the present government came into office they took just such a course. I myself had the privilege of appearing before that commission on more than one occasion to represent the interests of the farmers, and the result was the tariff was removed entirely from quite a large number of products which the farmer required and lowered in the case of a great many others. A corresponding decrease in the duties on the raw products of the manufacture was made, the wheels of commerce were set in motion again, and prosperity came back to the farm. As an actual result we have had for several years great prosperity among our farming community. They do not expect to become millionaires, but they do claim the privilege of enjoying a good fair living and making probably a little more than they need for the actual wants of themselves and their families.

The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) has suggested that after a very high tariff was put on woollens in the United States, prosperity followed and that on the other hand, under the 25 or 30 per cent tariff in favour of woollens manufactured in Canada, our sheep industry has become practically paralysed. I wish to point out to the hon. gentleman that in the United States, with their very high tariff, there has been a corresponding decrease in the number of sheep. These things do not hang together very well. I desire to point out, further, that our sheep industry does not depend upon the price of wool. We produce sheep not for wool but for mutton products. These are more profitable than any other class of sheep we can raise on the farm; we can raise them more cheaply and they command a higher price. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) at great length dealt with the advisability of sheep raising and how profitable it was, and then he wound up by saying that we had discarded sheep because they were not profitable. That has not been the experience of the sheep raisers of this country. The sheep raisers have found, as I have said, that if they raise the proper class of sheep, the class demanded by the market, they can make the industry more profitable, and make larger gains out of it, and do it with less work.

Mr. SPROULE. If that be the fact, how does the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. W. Smith) account for the reduction in the number of sheep as compared with a few years ago?

Mr. A. W. SMITH. I will try to answer that question also. One of the principal reasons for the reduction in the number of sheep in this country is the lack of protection from dogs.

Mr. HENDERSON. Dogs with two legs?

Mr. A. W. SMITH. No, dogs with four legs. Efforts have been made by the farmers for many years, through their associations, to induce the provincial government to put a law upon the statute-book of Ontario—and I believe the same has been sought in other provinces—that will protect the sheep from the ravages of dogs. When dogs get into a flock of sheep, though they may kill only four or five out of the whole flock of perhaps a hundred, the loss is not so much in those that are killed as in the loss of flesh and loss of constitution caused by sheep being overheated and over excited by the worrying of the dogs. There is another reason for the reduction of the number of sheep in the older provinces, and that is that it is found that better fencing is necessary in order to keep sheep. When the farmers were allowed to pasture their sheep on the roads there was less necessity for fencing their farms. In the old days, when there were plenty of rails, the farmer could keep his sheep wherever he liked, because a rail fence is sheep proof, but the ordinary wire fence is not sufficient to keep sheep, and consequently it is necessary to put up more expensive fencing or go out of the sheep business, and many farmers prefer to go out of the business. These are two of the principal reasons why the number of sheep has decreased in this country.

Now, I do not wish to speak at length, but simply to say, from the farmer's standpoint, that we do not want more protection given to the woollen industry. With duties of practically 30 per cent—for, I understand that the preferential tariff does not apply to all the goods imported—and with practically free wool (only $6 was collected in duties last year)—if the manufacturers are not in a position to stand with this rate of protection, the only conclusion we can come to, I think, is that our country is not suitable for this business. But we know that the manufacturers that make the best class of goods from wool the produce of this country are doing well. A great proportion of the wool produced in this country goes to the United States, and is used in the mills there for the production of this class of goods, worsteds. If the woollen mills of this country would use the wool that we produce, they would be in the same position as the woollen mills in the United States.

Mr. SPROULE. How is it then so many of them break down?

Mr. A. W. SMITH. Because they are trying to make goods that they cannot make at a profit. If they would manufacture the worsted goods for which they could find a market, and in which they could compete with other countries, they could keep their mills running. The hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Thoburn) spoke of the difference in the value of labour in Canada and in Great Britain. I think he represented the matter very fairly when he said that one good Canadian was capable of producing more valuable results of labour than the three he saw engaged in certain work in Great Britain. The hon. gentleman told us of seeing in Great Britain a man and two boys running a plough, doing work which one good Canadian boy of seventeen years old would do. I am happy to say that a Canadian boy, in the country at least, is a man for all practical purposes. While wages here may be higher, the Canadian labourer, whether he be engaged in running machinery or in other labour is capable of producing a greater result than the labourer in the old country, about in the proportion that the hon. gentleman stated. In the illustration the hon. gentleman used, the work done was ploughing. I would like the hon. gentleman to understand that this is the machinery on the farm; he is working machinery, and is able to handle these three horses—or four, or even a larger number if necessary as is frequently done in the west—one boy would use that machinery quite as well as three or four in England.

The same thing, I believe, will apply in the woollen manufacture as on the farm. One good Canadian will be as good as the three who are employed over there. Therefore we do not stand in as bad a position proportionately as the hon. gentleman would represent.

I would like further to correct the statement of the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) that the committee appointed by the Dominion Sheepbreeders' Association to meet with a committee appointed by the Manufacturers' Association to endeavour to come to some amicable arrangement by which they could meet the government on common ground, had reported and that their report was as he read. That committee have not reported at all. They were appointed to report to the Executive Committee of the Sheepbreeders' Association. I chance to be one of the Executive Committee—

Mr. LENNOX. I read from a report that was communicated to an English paper on February 11 of a meeting that had taken place two days before in Toronto, at which a committee was appointed to confer with the Manufacturers' Association, but I did not carry it further as I had no information on that point.

Mr. A. W. SMITH. That committee have not reported. They have endeavoured to meet the manufacturers on a common ground, but have absolutely failed to get anywhere near them. The resolution mentioned by my hon. friend as having been passed by the Sheepbreeders' Association was offered to the association by Mr. Biggar, the editor of 'Textile Fabrics,' but it was not passed or endorsed by the meeting except that because of that resolution as representing the views of the manufacturers the Sheepbreeders' Association appointed a committee to meet a committee from the woollen manufacturers to see if they could not come to some arrangement: the resolution was not adopted by the Sheepbreeders' Association.

The hon. gentleman from South Simcoe gave the number of farmers in porportion to other occupations in Canada and then proceeded to speak of the great benefit that was to come to these farmers through the imposition of a higher duty on wool. It would be very difficult indeed to persuade the farmers of Canada that it was to be such a benefit to them and I would suggest to the members of the opposition that if they wish to become popular with or to be endorsed by the farmers when they appeal to them for election, they must drop very largely the idea that they can make the farmers believe that by giving them one dollar and taking five from them they will make the farmers wealthy.

Mr. HENDERSON. We do not need to drop that idea. we never had it.

Mr. FIELDING. You do not put it in that plain form.

Mr. A. W. SMITH. That proposition is involved in the speeches made to-night by the hon. gentlemen. You cannot possibly benefit the manufacturer if you keep the duty on the raw material the same as that on the manufactured goods; you must give him a sufficient additional duty to make up the disadvantage under which he says he is working and give him a profit or the change will be of no benefit to him. I believe that the woollen products manufactured in Canada last year were worth some $6,000,000 and there was collected in duty on woollen goods coming into this country about $7,000,000. It would surely not be fair for the sake of that $6,000,000 of manufactured goods to ask that the $7,000,000, already $1,000,000 greater than the annual product of our woollen mills, should be increased and that we should be asked to pay $8,000,000 or $9,000,000 or possibly $10,000,000 in duty. That would be absolutely unfair to the farmers of this country and they would not accept such a proposition. The farmers of Canada are thoroughly conversant with the affairs of this country, and when any one endeavours to make them believe that black is white that person is going to be very much left; they will not accept that statement from the opposition in any case.

Mr. SPROULE. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that you could not convince the farmer that the duty was going to help him?

Mr. A. W. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Then how does the hon. member account for the fact that when the duty on pork was raised, within two years the importations were reduced from $21,000,000 to between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000? Did that convince the farmer that it did him any good or not?? If it did the farmers no good, does the hon. gentleman think the present government were right in continuing that same rate of duty up to the present time?

Mr. A. W. SMITH. The only benefit that it could have conferred upon the farmer was to increase the selling value of what he produced. As a matter of fact six months after that duty was put on the price of live pork actually dropped to a lower figure than it was before that duty was put on.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it not rather due to the fact that it increased the market at home to the extent of about 15,000,000 pounds for his product?

Mr. A. W. SMITH. No, it could not have done that at all. The export price in the old country is the one that governs the price of our pork here.

Mr. SPROULE. If he sold a million pounds of pork and had two cents a pound on that and if after the imposition of the duty he sold 10,000,000 pounds he would not have ten times as much?

Mr. A. W. SMITH. As a matter of fact the production of pork did not increase by 10,000,000 pounds.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes it did.

Mr. A. W. SMITH. No, we just exported that much less.

Mr. SPROULE. There is where it actually came in. It did increase.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention at this late hour to make any lengthened remarks on what seems to me to be a very intricate question. We have listened this afternoon to what was, to my mind, one of the most valuable speeches that I ever heard delivered in this House on a practical question. I refer to the speech delivered by the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Thoburn). I have listened to a great many speeches in this House, but I have never listened to one, from a practical standpoint, that conveyed the idea better than the speech of the hon. gentleman and I want to congratulate him upon his deliverance. There are other hon. gentlemen here whom I would like to congratulate, my hon. friend and neighbour from Wentworth (Mr. Sealey) has certainly made a most astounding turn. I remember, a few years ago, going over to the county of Wentworth when that hon. gentleman was a candidate for parliamentary honours in opposition to Mr. E. D. Smith. I remember well spending some days in the endeavour to educate his constituents along the lines of protection to the hog, fruit and vegetable industries. I am glad to think that some of my remarks have come to have weight with the hon. gentleman. He comes out to-night practically as a full grown protectionist with reference to agricultural products, fruits and vegetables. He has only to go one step farther until he will be duly qualified to vote with us on this side of the House. I am sure we congratulate him for the progress he has made. I am sorry I cannot say so much about my hon. friend from Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre). He seems to be groping in the dark yet; in fact, he is very far in the dark. He had the impression that practically nothing but free trade would suit the country. He does not see any use in tariffs. He does not know any reason why there should be such a thing. He has a great deal to learn yet along the line of legislation. But I hope if he only pursues the study he will become a follower of my hon. friend from Wentworth. The hon. gentleman who sat down a few moments ago (Mr. A. W. Smith) certainly made some astounding statements. My memory may be short. I may have forgotten a great deal that occurred during the long eighteen years when that hon. gentleman and his friends were wandering about in opposition wondering when they were going to reach the goal of power. I may have forgotten a great deal but I confess that I was not aware that 16 cents per bushel for oats represented the value of that commodity during that time or during any particular period of that time. Would it be fair of me, in answer to the hon. gentleman, to say that on the 20th June, 1895, whilst the Liberal-Conservative party was in power, wheat, in the city of Toronto, sold at 20 cents a bushel higher than it did in the city of Liverpool? I might make that statement and make it truthfully. The market reports will verify what I have said, but for me to say that during the entire regime of the Conservative party that was the fact, would be an entirely different thing. I would not desire for one moment to convey any such idea. My recollection is that during these years we had fairly good prices for the products of the farm and I am sorry to hear the blue ruin speech that the hon. gentleman has delivered or to see the terrible picture he has painted. It makes me feel sorry to think that we were so poor during all those eighteen years. Yet I never realized it. I was in business during those eighteen years and business was always very fair I thought. We had nothing special to complain of.

Mr. A. W. SMITH. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no objection but I do not wish to continue the debate for any length of time.

Mr. A. W. SMITH. Will the hon. gentleman give an approximate idea of the value of farm lands in 1878 and in 1896?

Mr. HENDERSON. I did not come prepared to give the approximate value of farm lands either in 1878 or in 1896, but I can tell the hon. gentleman that this country was mighty flat and the people were pretty much dissatisfied away back in 1878. They embraced the opportunity of making a change whenever the opportunity occurred and when they did make a change they held on to it. They never seemed to regret for eighteen years and they never did regret it along the line of the fiscal policy. We all know that the Conservative party were not driven out of power on account of their fiscal policy. It was something else that caused them to loose their hold on the government of the country. The hon. member for Middlesex made a very strange statement here tonight. I understood him to tell the House how much the Liberal party had done in the way of placing raw material on the free list to assist the industries of the country. I confess I do not know what raw material they have placed on the free list.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. Corn, binder twine and fence wire.

Mr. HENDERSON. The most iniquitous kind of protection is, so the Liberals told us, a bounty. And to-day the government is compelling the farmers to put their hands into their pockets and hand over their money to the manufacturers of binder twine. Is the hon. gentleman who interrupted me proud of that? let him go and tell the farmer if he is. Short wool, raw cotton, and almost all raw materials that enter into manufactures have since 1878 been practically on the free list, and I do not know of any special article that the Liberal government has placed on the free list that would materially assist the industries of this country. The hon. gentleman from Middlesex (Mr. Smith) told us what the Liberal party had done to improve the condition of the people, but I wonder if he knows how much change in the tariff they did make. Let me tell the hon. gentleman just how much the tariff has been changed, in the words of the Finance Minister, who, speaking in the House, said:

> It was of the utmost importance that we should maintain a strong financial position, and in view of the uncertainties as to the amount of revenue that might be produced by this lower rate of taxation it became necessary that we should take some steps to make good any possible loss that might result. It was thought that it might fairly be met by providing for the raising of some additional taxation in order to balance, or make good, the loss occasioned by the reduction of duties —it was necessary to have an increased revenue in certain directions when we were to lose revenue in other directions.

According to the Finance Minister the government were taking a little off here and putting on a little there, and I am not sure that they did not put on more than they took off. In the last revision the government was very particular to put a little more on than they did take off. The Conservatives left a duty on grey cottons of 22½ and the Liberals increased it to 25, and white cottons which were at 25 were left at 25. But two years ago in regulating the preferential tariff they increased the preferential duty on the white cotton and reduced it on the gray, they being shrewd enough to know that there was more white than gray cotton imported into Canada, and so they increased the duty on the article of which there was a larger importation, so as to get a larger revenue. I want to say a word about the British preference, and I am glad to hear it spoken of as a British preference, because I don't suppose it ever was intended to be a Canadian preference. I have always understood it was given exclusively for the benefit of the people of Great Britain. Some people think we get goods into Canada at a lower rate of duty, and we do, but the main question is do we get goods at a lower price. Do you think the manufacturer in Great Britain does business for the fun of it? If he knows he can send his goods into this country at a better price he is certainly going to exact it, and if you put coloured cotton at 35 per cent when it was formerly 30 per cent, and leave the British preference at 23 per cent, do you think the British manufacturer, knowing that we cannot import this cotton from any other country less than 35 per cent, is going to be foolish enough to send his goods into this country at a low price? Not by any means. I visited the old country some years ago and I was astonished to see how they understood our tariff system. They appear to watch it more closely than we ourselves do. They know exactly when to put on the price and when to take it off, and for my part I can never conceive of a British manufacturer, knowing that we cannot import goods of the same class from any other country at a lower duty than 35 per cent, shipping his goods to this country at 23 per cent unless he exacted from the purchaser a very much higher price than he otherwise would.

Mr. PATERSON. How does that work with reference to woollens?

Mr. HENDERSON. Do you mean woollen goods?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I intend to make special reference to woollen goods in the budget debate, and I think myself the time has come when a readjustment of the tariff on the woollen goods is required.

Mr. PATERSON. My question was: if the English manufacturer takes advantage of the preference to sell his cotton goods at a higher rate, will he not do the same thing with woollen goods?

Mr. HENDERSON. I trust the hon. gentleman will not consider me discourteous if I do not answer to-night, because a reply might involve longer time than I have to speak. But I will deal with the question at no distant date, and I think myself there is a good answer to it. I cannot attempt to discuss the woollen industry side by side with the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), who has made a special study of it, and the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Thoburn), who has rare technical knowledge on the subject. He made a speech this afternoon which I think was a splendid speech. I heartily endorse what he said. I have enough knowledge of mercantile business to appreciate fully the advantages which he contends would come from a change in the tariff on woollen goods. I have always regretted very much the change that was made at the time the British preference was introduced, because I felt that it was not in the interest of the people of Canada, though it may have been very materially in the interest of the old land. With regard to the reduction of duty on hog products, I can well remember the time when there was a duty of only one cent a pound on hogs coming from the United States. It was afterwards raised to two cents, but later that was reduced to one and a half cents. I was glad when the duty on hog products, such as lard, bacon and hams, was raised to two cents a pound. It has been a great boon to this country. Whatever has been the cause of the present depression, or whether an increase of duty would help it, I am not prepared to say, but I think we are importing too much of American hog products. Why should we import into Canada in one year 11,000,000 pounds of lard? Does not this country possess productive powers enough to produce that? We imported also 7,335,000 pounds of other hog products, such as bacon, hams, shoulders and sides. I think we should arrange our fiscal affairs so as to prevent the invasion of our market by that large quantity of hog products. Of pork in barrels we imported last year 9,204,247 pounds. Altogether our market was invaded last year by hog products to the extent of 28,325,695 pounds, according to the Trade and Navigation returns. Every pound of that ought to have been produced in this ccuntry. I do not mean to say that I would favour a tariff that would keep everything out. I am not one of those extreme protectionists by any means. I claim to be a moderate protectionist.

Mr. PATERSON. Not like the member for Peel (Mr. Blain).

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not know that the member for Peel is so very extreme. I am sorry the Minister of Agriculture is not in his place. He went into my county during the recent election to speak at a great mass meeting. Four lines of railway coming into the county town, from the east, the west, the north and the south, were induced to give special rates in order to gather a large crowd to hear the Minister of Agriculture, and one of his grievous complaints against me was that I was a high protectionist. He told the farmers that I was willing to put a Chinese wall around the country. The Minister of Customs nods, but he would not say it just as the Minister of Agriculture said it. The Minister of Agriculture referred to a remark which I made here some years ago, but he was not fair enough to me to say that the remark was applied only to agricultural protection. My hon. friend from North Middlesex (Mr. A. W. Smith) warns me and others to be careful not to ask the farmers to support anything like even moderate protection; but I may tell him that this terrible assault upon me by the Minister of Agriculture, which you might have considered sufficient to have driven me from the House of Commons forever, only resulted in my majority being increased fifty per cent. I am not afraid in my county to talk about increased protection on hogs, on apples, on vegetables, on a variety of things. Our people appreciate that sort of thing. So strongly has that feeling got abroad in the county of Halton that it is actually overflowing into the county of Wentworth, and if my hon. friend the Minister of Customs is not careful we may soon capture that riding with our protectionist ideas, because the farmers there want to have the privilege of raising more hogs, more fruits more vegetables. I heartily endorse what the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Sealey) has said; I think he is wise in taking the line he has done, because it is the line along which I believe his constituents would want him to go. I hope and trust the minister will not turn a deaf ear to the appeal that hon. gentleman has made. There must be justification for it when a gentleman of the standing of my hon. friend feels it to be his duty to stand before this House, and, in the face of gentlemen with whom he has voted and associated, declare that he has broken away from their erroneous ideas and is now going to stand by the farmers of the country and demand increased protection for their hogs, fruit and vegetables. I have said before, and I repeat, that we are just as much justified in using the tariff of this country to prevent an invasion of our markets as we are in calling out the militia to defend the soil of the country. The greatest asset we have in this country is our home market, and we have a right to defend it by the tariff or in any other way. We find that our market was invaded last year by an importation of $20,962,753 worth of woollen goods. When our Canadian market was overloaded with that amount of woollen goods how can we expect our woollen industry to live? It seems to me that with such an invasion of manufactured goods, there is not much left for the man who is carrying on the industry in this country. Some of those goods paid a very high rate of duty; under the surtax over $1,000,000 paid 46 per cent. What do some of our low tariff friends on the other side of the House think of a 46 per cent duty on woollen goods? Why, that beats the Conservative party altogether. We never dreamt of such a thing.

Mr. FIELDING. Then my hon. friend thinks the duty is too high?

Mr. HENDERSON. Most assuredly, I do.

Mr. FIELDING. I commend that to my hon. friend's colleagues.

Mr. HENDERSON. I decidedly say so. I do not think 46 per cent is needed. Not at all. We paid dearly for that 46 per cent. It is put there, for what purpose? It was brought about by the preference. It is a part of the preference; it grew out of it. If we had never given the British preference we would never have had the surtax. I regret that surtax; I regret even to-day that there was occasion for it. Under the general tariff we imported $3,717,569 worth of woollen goods at an average duty of 34.41 per cent, very nearly 35 per cent, on these imports, and the average of woollen duties last year was 29·10 per cent, 30 per cent, we all understand was the minimum preference; but under the preferential tariff, the duties imposed on all classes of woollen goods averaged 26·81 per cent. I make special reference to that because I think it was misstated by some hon. members who assumed that all kinds of woollen goods were paying a minimum of 30 per cent.

Having said so much and having congratulated my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Sealey) on his change of heart, and having extended my congratulations to my hon. friend from North Lanark (Mr. Thoburn)) on the admirable speech he delivered to-day, and the very valuable information he gave us concerning this woollen industry—having done that, I feel I should not prolong the debate further. If there are others desirous of saying something, I shall reserve any further remarks on the question until the budget comes down, when the hon. the Minister of Finance will probably give me the opportunity of saying a few words.

Mr. G. E. McCRANEY. At this hour of the night I have no desire to take up the time of the House except to express briefly the public sentiment of that portion of the west I have the honour to represent. The question before the House is the one which has been raised ever since this parliament began, which will be raised from year to year until it closes, and no doubt will continue to be raised throughout every successive parliament. It is the old struggle of the privileged manufacturer against the consumer. My hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Sproule) said that in his own election contest this very question of an increase of duty on woollens was a prominent issue, discussed at every public meeting. Well, in the course of an election campaign there are many questions discussed and very few members who come to parliament can say that it was because of one particular issue they were sent here. But I can say that in the contest in which I took part this question of woollens was also discussed; and if there is any mandate given me by my constituents, it is to oppose any increase in the duties on woollen goods. We have had the standpoint of the manufacturer of these goods discussed, and also that of the wool grower. The people whom I represent use, perhaps to a greater extent than any other portion of Canada—because our people in that western country have no very great means and must use the coarser kinds of clothing—woollen goods on account of the rigour of our climate. I was specially interested in this matter because in my own constituency the statement was made by my Conservative opponent that it was the Conservative party which represented the low tariff idea in this country and that to return me as a supporter of this government was to return a supporter of a protective policy. I was therefore very glad to hear the statement of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain), who took the position that we should have a tariff high enough to keep out every dollar's worth of foreign goods which can be grown or manufactured in Canada. That is a good enough statement to convince my people that the policy of the Conservative party, of which he is a prominent member, is not a policy of low tariff but of very high protection. My hon. friend referred to the question of agricultural implements. That also was one very much discussed in my riding. In one of the first discussions that took place in my own town of Rosthern, at which the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) was present, with the member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake), and where I was among the audience, I was rather amused to hear the hon. member for Qu'Appelle give credit to the Conservative party of having advocated a reduction in the duties on agricultural implements, and I was also amused at the attitude of the hon. the leader of the opposition who sat there and took the applause, which the speaker's words brought forth, as a tribute to himself and his party. I have never taken any other position before my people than I did, when the question came up, as it did in this House in committee, that I was not favourable to the resolution then submitted by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner). The House will recollect that the only discussion which took place at the time was in committee, so that there is no record of the vote on the division. But the opinions expressed at that time by the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) were certainly not favourable to the attitude of the hon. member for Souris. In my opinion, had the people of our western country been satisfied that the attitude taken on the question of duty on agricultural implements by the hon. member for Souris was that of any great political party in this country, which would become effective law in the event of that party coming into power, the political results throughout the whole west would have been entirely different; and if it had been the Conservatives who, as a party, had taken that position, the province of Saskatchewan would not have sent only one member to support that party.

Mr. BLAIN. Did my hon. friend say he was opposed to the resolution of the hon. member for Souris?

Mr. McCRANEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Then we do not differ on that subject?

Mr. McCRANEY. I however would remark that our point of view and our reasons differ very much indeed. From my experience of the western people, I am satisfied that, as time goes on and our representation increases and as the policy of the Conservative party in the west becomes more advanced than at present along the lines of a revenue tariff—which was their position in the last election—never again will we have in this country an election fought by the Conservative party on an out and out protection programme.

It is almost amusing to me, having heard the statement of Conservative leaders in the west as to their attitude on the question of low tariff, to come here and find in this discussion a reversion to old positions, to find that the Conservatives in this House are asking that the duties, having special reference to woollen duties, should be increased, and declaring that the duties that we already pay are not sufficient, but that the manufacturers must be allowed to take more money from our people. In all these discussions, representations concerning prices are always rather discursive. If it were possible to bring about the results which hon. gentlemen opposite wish to bring about, to increase rates of duty without increasing the prices of the manufactured goods, I do not think that anybody would stand in their way. But I think it is a bad principle. There has been some discussion to-night with regard to the protection of the farmer. I must say that, if you have a bad principle in the way of a tariff for the protection of your manufacturers, it is just as well to carry out that principle and give protection to the farmers. But I always feel, as has already been expressed in this debate that, though, as in the case of the wheat duty, you may tell the farmer that he is getting a similar benefit to the other fellow, and so prepare his mind for burdens which are very much greater than any burdens which he may think he is putting on anybody else to support him in his business, that I should certainly want to go very cautiously even in giving so-called protection to the farmer. In the portion of the country from which I come, there is a great deal of grain which does not grade very high, perhaps as a result of frost or some of these causes which arise in the fall of the year. One would think that there should be there a great production of pork. As a matter of fact, there is not. It is a commodity which is used very much in that part of the country, but I certainly would not propose in this House a duty on pork to get our farmers to go into that business. I think that what our people have to do is to get out of straight wheat farming. They have got to understand that they can make use of their grain by feeding it. But I would rather give them that kind of information than tell them that if they will only put a duty on some product coming from another country, they will be able to raise pork. I was told by a man in Winnipeg two or three years ago that the Christmas turkeys sold in Winnipeg had been shipped in from Ontario. That seemed to me a very singular thing, a thing which should not be in a grain-growing province like Manitoba, where fowl could be grown, perhaps, cheaper than anywhere else in Canada. But, if our western people want to go into fowl-raising, I think it would be a good thing if they did it to a certain extent, but I would not suggest a duty on chickens and turkeys that might come in from St. Paul. I do not think these things are brought about by tariff duties so much as by farmers' institutes, experimental farms and that sort of thing. We on the prairies use a great deal of fruit. The argument is put forth here that farmers in one part of the country should be taxed to help farmers in another part of the country who are growing fruit. By doing that, you only increase the cost of living, and in our western country what we want to do is to make the cost of living as light as possible, so that the standard of living may be as high as can be with the income which the farmer receives.

And I do not feel that this is a farmers' question alone. It is a question which affects our cities, towns and villages as much as it does the residents on the prairie. This matter was discussed in my own campaign, and in the city of Saskatoon and in all the towns and villages of the constituency, with one exception, the Liberal party got large majorities. I am satisfied that any proposition of higher duties on woollen goods would certainly not meet with any favour.

Mr. BLAIN. What about the province of Manitoba?

Mr. McCRANEY. There is no accounting for the province of Manitoba at the present time. But I think that they will come to the view I have stated. Now, our people in the west are Canadian people; they want to pay their share of taxes and they are doing it. What we want as far as possible is to avoid the protective features of the tariff. We want to eliminate as far as it can practically be done these features of the tariff which do not put anything into the public treasury, but which do put something into somebody's else's pocket. There is nobody putting anything into the pockets of our western farmers, and I am not advocating that anything should be done by which that result should be brought about. My hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) suggested that because the east had put a lot into the railways of the west and had given a lot of land to the railways—I presume that was with special reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway—that that was a reason why we should put up with a protective tariff in favour of the eastern people.

Mr. BLAIN. No.

Mr. McCRANEY. I do not wish to misquote my hon. friend.

Mr. BLAIN. What I said was that as the Canadian people had expended large amounts of money on transcontinental railways, therefore it was quite possible for one portion of the country to supply the other portion with any article of which they might be short at any special season.

Mr. McCRANEY. That is hardly the point I had in view.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL (South Oxford). I do not propose at this late hour to make a speech, but owing to the great interest I have taken in this subject, especially the hog industry, the production of bacon and hams, I feel constrained to make a few remarks. Before the McKinley tariff was brought into operation we exported largely to the United States market, we produced a heavy class of hog, heavy bacon, hams, &c. When the McKinley tariff came into operation we were practically shut out of the United States market and consequently we were compelled to look to the English market for our output with the result that by careful attention to the requirements of that market, we were soon able to increase our exports from some $8,000,000 in 1897 to some $15,000,000 in 1904. It was at once recognized by the farmers of Ontario, and I think of Quebec, that this was one of the best paying industries that the farmers had ever taken up. Until 1904 our exports continued to increase and everybody seemed to regard this as an industry that might be developed to an almost unlimited extent. You could hardly find a farmer who would not claim that the growth and production of pork was giving him perhaps a larger profit than any other branch of his farming operations. Since 1904 there has been a decline in our exports and during the last year or two the situation has become so serious that our Swinebreeders' Association have approached the government with a view to seeing if something could not be done to relieve the situation. Particularly during this year, we find that something must be done or else the pork packing industry in which we have so much capital invested, will be in a very critical position. We know that to-day they have not more than one-half enough hogs to keep them running full time. Several factories have closed down and a great deal of money has been lost, especially during the last year. The packers have paid fair prices to the farmers, more, I think, than the English market would warrant. During October, November and December I know that the price, while not as high as it is to-day, was still higher than the pork packers of this country could afford to pay and export their product to the English market. They were losing heavily on the product they sent to the English market during those months. The price of bacon in England was 42s. and 42s 6d, and at that price our packers could not afford to pay 6½ or 6 cents a pound live weight. We know that as a consequence the packers have lost very heavily. We know that our own Canadian market has been fairly satisfactory for what we were able to sell here. I am not in favour of a high tariff for any of our commodities. I do not think that any industry should be bolstered up if it is not able to stand on a basis of a moderate tariff. Some would say, I suppose, that two cents per pound on pork is a good protection. I think it is on barrelled pork, a very fair protection and I am not in favour of an increased duty, so far as I understand the situation, on barrelled pork. Two cents a pound duty on pork that is worth 10 cents a pound is fairly good protection—and what is more we are not producing that kind of pork in Canada. Our trade has been cultivated and developed with a view to producing a lean, light type of hog, suitable especially for the highest class of bacon, and we have developed that trade to such an extent that I believe our packers are curing their bacon infinitely better than it is cured in the United States, equal to the Danish bacon, and I believe equal to the Irish bacon. I do not believe that there is any better bacon produced in the world than is produced in Canada to-day. A duty of two cents a pound on bacon that is worth 15 cents a pound is not, I think, high protection; I do not think it is protection at all, it is only an incidental protection if it is any, it is only a revenue tax and a very low rate of duty. I do not think that four cents would be too high a duty on bacon. Some might say that it is protection. Possibly it is, but it is not a high protection, it is a very moderate protection.

Mr. LENNOX. Would the hon. member say that five cents was a high protection?

Mr. SCHELL. It is getting higher.

Mr. LENNOX. Four is getting higher than two.

Mr. SCHELL. I do not consider two cents a protection at all in the sense in which the word is usually used. Three cents might help to relieve the situation. But the point I want to impress on the House is that our farmers are producing a special high class bacon and yet our dealers are importing from the United States not nearly as good bacon and selling it in competition with our high class bacon to the extent of over $800,000 worth of bacon and hams and possibly a few shoulders in this past year. There is no reason in the world why we should not have our own Canadian market for this high class of bacon, and I believe that our own people will not object to this moderate increase, when they know they are getting Canadian bacon, the best bacon, better than they can get in the United States—and I do not believe it will cost them a cent more per pound if a duty is put on to protect this portion of our industry. If we could produce more hogs incidentally we would have more lard. I am not advocating an increase of duty on lard. If we could induce our farmers to raise more hogs and develop this high class trade and hold it for our own farmers and packers I think we would be doing a good service to this country. I do not think we could be considered as advocating high protection. When you take into consideration the quality and value of the article it is only a revenue tariff. I believe it would help very materially to solve the difficulty. The farmers would be induced to go more fully into the production of the hog that is specially required for the production of bacon. I believe the farmers of the western provinces could be induced to go more fully into this industry. We find that the government of Alberta have had a commission investigating this question and that they have reported to the government of that province advising them to build a plant to help to develop the industry. As soon as there is an assurance that Alberta will produce a thousand hogs a week, say, they advise the government of Alberta to help promote this industry by building a plant and carrying it on in the interests of the farmers generally. Alberta should be one of the greatest hog producing provinces of the Dominion along with Saskatchewan and Manitoba. I believe they would be induced to give greater attention to this industry and I believe the farmers of Ontario, instead of raising less than they were five or six years ago, as they are to-day, would be induced to give more attention to it. I know this is one of the best paying industries in Ontario. Farmers are making money to-day out of this industry. We know that feed is high and that is one of the reasons why they have dropped out of it to some extent. We know that Danish pork is coming into competition with our pork in England and we know that in October, November and December, the price dropped to an abnormally low figure. Packers were losing money and they were not paying the farmers quite as much as the farmers thought they were entitled to receive considering the high price of feed. I believe it would help materially to solve the situation if a slight duty could be put on bacon and hams. I am not going to dwell at any further length on this question. I had thought of entering into some statistics but the ground has been pretty thoroughly covered. The present conditions of the trade and the quantities that are imported have been referred to and I am not going to weary the House by the quotation of figures along this line, but I would like to impress upon the House and the government that the industry to-day is not in a condition that is at all satisfactory to the packers or to the growers of pork. I believe that this incidental or very slight increase would help to a considerable extent to relieve the situation and I believe it might have the effect of stimulating the trade. It would give an impetus to the trade and it would not be amiss to make the experiment. We would not suffer from it. The advantages might not be commensurate with what we may expect to receive but nobody would suffer. We are producing plenty to supply our own home market. Our home consumers would not be compelled to pay a cent a pound more and they would at least have the advantage of having the best bacon on their breakfast table that it is possible to obtain either in Europe or in the United States.

Mr. TURCOTTE (Quebec County). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, at this late hour of the night I do not wish to detain the House very long, but I have promised to my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Sealey) that I would say a few words in support of his remarks. I think that the time is well chosen, principally for a member who represents an agricultural county, when a question like this pertaining to agricuture is being considered by this House, and the least he can say is to vindicate the rights of the farmers. It is important that the country should know how the people's representatives look after their interests in the House and after all that pertains to the farm.

We are confronted with the question of principles. We have been discussing tonight theoretically free trade and protection, and naturally both parties took up arms. I don't want to enter on this ground, but if I was obliged to do so I would take side with the Liberal party in favour of free trade, whose battles we have fought for so long a time. We all know the struggles of the Liberal party for the triumph of the free trade principles. These principles have been discussed before the people, and the people had approved them. I think that the constant development of the public wealth in Canada proves that it is in the true interest of the people not to resist to the utmost against the foreign industry because, in the long run, it is the poor people, the large class of consumers who pay the protective duty. These are the people who are paying the toll-gate of the customs. Being so, we believe that it is in the interest of the people that these duties should be the lowest possible. The true theory, the theory adopted by our party, is a revenue tariff, giving the means to administer decently public affairs, and I think we should not go beyond that.

I will, therefore, avoid using the words free trade and protection. I will confine myself to figures that will show a lamentable state of things. The 'Yearly Book' of last year shows us the difference there is between the exportations of Canadian pork to the United States and the importations of American pork into Canada. This is what I have noticed, and which seems to be very extraordinary. During the years 1904-5-6-7, that is five years, we have exported to the United States only 489,757 pounds of pork, which represents a sum of $64,912 during these five years, and we have imported during the same period 34,192,107 pounds, or for the sum of $2,521,436. In the last year, 1907, we have imported from the United States 7,500,848 pounds of pork, representing $615,000. We must remark that these figures cover only the nine months of the fiscal year 1906-7; when we have exported during the same period only 84,518 pounds of pork, representing $13.493. This is an enormous difference. These are facts which indicate that, for one reason or another, the pork which is eaten in Canada or put in tins or transformed into bacon and ham comes for the greatest part from the United States. This is a subject of humiliation for our national pride, because we have in our country all what is necessary for the raising and fattening of these animals. How is it that the production of pork is so small in our country? This is a state of things which deserves the attention of the government. The proposed remedy might not be adequate. It is possible that if we raise the duties on pork from 2 to 4 cents a pound we would not protect the farmer sufficiently to increase his power of raising pork, but, nevertheless, it is a question worthy of consideration.

It might be the same for meat pork as it is for some manufactured products. We all know that when there is over-production in some line of goods, the manufacturers of the country combined themselves to dump in Canada a large part of this over-production at low prices in order to create a disastrous competition to Canadian industries. We know also that measures have been taken by the government to protect us against this way of killing our industries.

I have reason to believe with the hon. member for Wentworth that the same means have been adopted in this case, and that at certain times the over-production in meat pork in the United States is sent to Canada in the same condition; that is to say, in a way to make disastrous competition in our own industry. I think that the time has come to put a stop to this illegitimate and disastrous competition to our farmers. But most of the members of this House who are sent here to study the economical conditions of the country are not able, in a case like this, to discuss this question with the same knowledge of professional men. We have to guide us the resolution adopted by the Pork Raisers' Association of Canada and other associations of the same kind. These resolutions have been adopted after a thorough investigation of the grievances and a complete study of the remedies that could be applied. We have thus a congregation, a collectivity of farmers, of men of experience, who come and say to us: It is necessary to bring afloat this industry which is essential to the progress and to the wealth of Canada. We ask our legislators to give us the means to fight this disastrous competition from the States. It is proposed to raise the duty from 2 to 4 cents per pound. It might be a good way; it might not. I know that the hon. members opposite will not say that it is bad, because it is in accord with their protectionist principles.

As for the Liberal party, I fully agree for my part with the hon. member who has spoken before me, that this is not really a question of protection. Protection, as we generally understand it, has for its object to prevent competition in manufactured goods and in arts. I do not think that we can assimilate the pork industry to manufacture. There is no similitude, and consequently we cannot apply, when speaking of the products of the farm, the same reasoning as we do to the industry.

I think that the government, who has its eyes open upon all which might contribute to the development of the resources of the country, will note the remarks which have been offered to-day upon this question, principally upon the figures which have been brought to the attention of the House, and which show an abnormal state of things. If we import in one year from the states more meat pork and for a larger sum than we have exported during a period of five years, and we have there an economical phenomenon absolutely disastrous and humiliating for us. It is for the government to study this question, and I know that the ministers are able to take the necessary measures to have a stop put to this state of things.

I have received from the farmers of the county of Quebec verbal representations and letters in which they point out to me the absolutely disastrous competition suffered by those who take up the hog industry. Those farmers supply some of the pork-packing establishments of the city where large quantities of pork are used for the production of hams and bacon. Now the manufacturers, the dealers of that city cannot successfully compete with the products from the other parts of the country, and even from abroad, because they cannot obtain the necessary raw material under such conditions as to permit of their carrying on their industry on a paying basis. But I may be told, and this is the capital argument advanced by our opponents : 'Why, if your Quebec friends cannot produce raw material as cheaply as the similar product coming from abroad, and you have no right to complain, the less so as the consumer will no doubt ultimately pay less for his food.' Quite true, but matters have to be considered from a different standpoint. As I just stated, that meat being imported from abroad does not enter here in the most normal conditions; it is the surplus which is fraudulently dumped into the country. It is not the regular trade, as those who are conversant with the matter know perfectly well.

At any rate, as matters stand nowadays, seeing that tariffs are being readjusted all the world over, the United States protecting itself against Canada, and as commercial treaties are negotiated between two or three countries in order to protect themselves against foreign competition, I say that in commercial matters, as on every other question of vital importance for a nation, there is no cast-iron rule or theory that can be applied. Principles have to be more or less mitigated.

Now, I say that if ever there was an occasion upon which the rulers of a country or those who are at the helm were bound to mitigate those principles it is at a time when we are called upon to deal with the interests of the farming community in this country, which will be one of the great factors in making of this Canada of ours one of the leading nations of the twentieth century. Such are some of the grounds upon which I hope the government will take such steps as they may think proper for coming to the assistance of the farming community, for which service the country will owe the government a well-deserved debt of gratitude.

Mr. T. A. LOW (Renfrew South). Mr. Speaker, at so late an hour my remarks will necessarily be brief. We have had this subject discussed to-day by the member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), who posed as a farmer, and by the member for North Lanark (Mr. Thoburn), who said he spoke on behalf of the workingmen, and now I purpose saying a few words from the standpoint of one who is interested in a woollen mill. Judging from the pleasant frame of mind in which the hon. member (Mr. Lennox) spoke, I cannot imagine that he intended the House to take his remarks seriously, nor do I think the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Thoburn) was serious in all that he said. Up to a certain stage of his speech the hon. gentleman appeared to be solemn enough, but when he told us he was speaking on behalf of the workingman I could not help doubting. Then the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) could not have been serious because he held the government of the day responsible for certain woollen mills which were burnt twenty and thirty years ago.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the hon. gentleman mention any mill that was burnt 20 or 30 years ago?

Mr. LOW. I am told that the Ancaster mill was burnt 30 years ago and that the Flamboro mill was burnt 20 years ago. Now, before I proceed further, I do not wish the House to misunderstand my position on this question. I do not wish it to be supposed that I am a free trader, because I believe that we should keep the trade of this Canada of ours for the benefit of the Canadian people. But, Sir, I do not believe in building up a high protection wall for the benefit of any one class. While I cannot boast of the long experience my hon. friend (Mr. Thoburn) has had in the woollen mill business, yet I can say that I have had more experience in it than the hon. gentleman from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox). In the town of Renfrew for 40 years there was a woollen mill, and three years ago that mill came to grief. If I listened to the speeches of the Conservatives in the recent campaign I would be led to believe that that mill came to grief through the tariff policy of the present government. But that is not so. Three years ago the people who were running that mill failed by reason of bad management, and we reorganized the company, and I want to tell the House that never in the history of that business has it been so prosperous as during the last three years. I want to tell the hon. member (Mr. Lennox) that last year the net profit on that business was 29 per cent; the preceding year it was 26 per cent, and the first year we ran the business the net profit was 21 per cent. I wish to say one word in reply to a statement made by the hon. member for Lanark. He told us that the charge had been made that because of inferior machinery the woollen millmen of this country are unable to compete with the foreign market. Let me tell my hon. friend that to a large extent that statement is true. A few weeks ago I had the pleasure of visiting a large Montreal woollen mill with a view of buying some of the idle machinery, and I remarked to the former manager that it was a very sad thing to see the machinery standing idle, and he replied: That is due to the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his government. He did not know then that I was a supporter of that government.

Mr. LENNOX. Has the hon. gentleman seen the published statemeent of that same gentleman in the public press, saying that it is by reason of the reduction of the preference that they were compelled to close their mill?

Mr. LOW. I care not a whit for the statement of that gentleman and before I am through I will convince my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) that it was the inability of these people to manufacture goods at a minimum cost that led to their misfortune. I will show him where their equipment was absolutely unfit to enable them to manufacture goods at the lowest cost. Now, Sir, I was in that mill a few weeks ago, as I have said, and I had with me a practical man, and when we left he said to me: 'How did these people ever expect to turn out goods at a low cost; see their dilapidated building and see their machinery in such a shape and so close together, that they could not produce cheaply.' I could not judge of that personally but that was the opinion the expert expressed to me. So I say, that is the best answer to the people who are making the charge that the tariff policy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his government is injuriously affecting the woollen industry of Canada. I speak from the few short years' experience I have had in the trade, I speak from the experience of that woollen mill that is closed down in Montreal to-day, and as one who is interested in a woollen mill I say that the present tariff suits me.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand from the hon. gentleman that the machinery in the woollen industrial establishments of Canada, speaking generally, is not up to date?

Mr. LOW. I am speaking of what I saw; I am not in a position to judge of the rest. I only speak whereof I know.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) I hope the hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House this afternoon will not think it discourteous if I make no extended remarks in reply. They will of course quite understand that this is a subject in which the members of the government are all deeply interested, but still we are not free to express conclusions in advance of the budget speech. I do not think it would be desirable if I were to make comments on the remarks that have been made by some of the hon. gentlemen, even though I might think their arguments were not so strongly put as they themselves imagine. I can only say that the whole question has been considered in the past, is being considered, and will be considered by the government. That is all I feel at liberty to say at the present time.

Motion agreed to and the House went into Committee of Supply.

Some resolutions reported.

BUDGET SPEECH.

Mr. FIELDING. Before moving the adjournment permit me to say that two or three hon. gentlemen to-day requested information by way of return or otherwise before the budget speech would be taken up, and as I find I probably will not be able to bring down the information to-day or to-morrow I desire to say now that we will fix the delivery of the budget speech for Tuesday next and in the meantime the various returns will be completed.

Mr. HENDERSON. I presume 'Hansard' will report what the minister has said so that hon. gentlemen who want the returns will be aware of the fact.

Mr. FIELDING. The object is that they may get the information before proceeding with the debate.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask what business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. We will take up first the motion that stands in the name of the hon. the Postmaster General, and after that Supply, beginning with the Minister of the Interior.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.30 a.m. Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 14, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 134) to incorporate the Canadian Medical Association.—Mr. Roche, by Mr. Daniel.

Bill (No. 132) respecting certain letters patent of Franklin Montgomery Grey.—Mr. Rankin.

QUESTIONS.

OTONABEE RIVER DREDGING.

Mr. BRADBURY—By Mr. Blain—asked:

1. When was the work at or near Hunter Street Bridge, in Otonabee River, Peterboro', commenced, what is the total amount paid up to date on this work, and what amount is still unpaid for which estimates have been sent in?
2. What is the total number of yards dredged, and has anything been paid for same? If so, to whom, and how much per yard? Or if by day, how much per day was paid or allowed for the dredge, tug or scow?
3. Is anything still due for dredging? if so, what amount?
4. When will the work be completed, and what is the estimated total cost?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. (a) 27th October, 1905; (b) $35,979.60; (c) $894.00.

2. (a) 63,564 cubic yards. (b) Yes. (c) From 1905 to 1907, the dredge which performed this work was loaned by the Department of Railways and Canals, the Department of Public Works paying running expenses and maintenance. During 1908, the dredge was hired from Conroy Bros., at the rate of $6 per hour. The tug was paid for at the rate of $10 per day, which included fuel and crew, and was hired from Geo. Lipsett.

3. Yes, $894.00.

4. The Resident Engineer reports that to complete the turning basin would require an expenditure of $5,000, and that the work should be done within three or four months after date of commencement.

CHICOUTIMI WHARF.

Mr. GIRARD—By Mr. Brown—asked:

1. Has the government been obliged to expropriate Cote Boivin and Company of Chicoutimi before the commencement of the works for the extension of the wharf at that place? If so, why?
2. What price has the government paid to these gentlemen for the site of this wharf, as well in money as in rights reserved by them?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. (a) Yes. (b) The company insisted on reservation to have free use of wharf after completion.

2. The sum of $3,000 was paid for wharf property, the company reserving for themselves 40 feet of land from the north side of the extension of their warehouse and the whole length of their frontage, this portion to be filled in with earth by the department.

RIVER SAGUENAY BOOM.

Mr. GIRARD—By Mr. Brown—asked:

1. What companies have asked the government to construct booms on the River Saguenay?
2. In what year was this request made and in what year did the government accede to this request?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. A request was made by the Chicoutimi Pulp Company for themselves and on behalf of all the other lumber merchants of the district, viz.: Price Bros. & Co., Battle Island Paper Co., Alf. Godbout & Co., and La Société Industrielle de Chicoutimi.

2. (a) In 1904. (b) Construction of booms commenced in 1905.

SAGUENAY RIVER BOOMS.

Mr. GIRARD—by Mr. Brown—asked:

1. What amount is due the government by the Pulp Company of Chicoutimi, year by year, since 1903, for right of way for timber through the booms of the Saguenay, and for contribution to the maintenance of these booms?
2. Does the government not think that, in justice, it should force the company to pay this unquestionable debt?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1.	Tolls.	Contribution to Maintenance
1903	Nothing.	Nothing.
1904	"	"
1905	"	"
1906	$1,116 92	"
1907	1,801 00	$2,446 32
1908	1,533 30	3,578 66
Totals	$4,451 22	$6,024 98

Matter now in the hands of the Department of Justice.

RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS.

Mr. BOYCE—by Mr. Blain—asked:

Is it the intention of the government to increase the salaries and other remuneration of railway mail clerks in Canada? If so, has the scale of increases been decided upon, and when will it go into operation?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). The matter is under consideration.

NIPIGON RIVER DREDGING.

Mr. BOYCE—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. Was any money voted by parliament during the session of 1908 for the dredging done at the mouth of the Nipigon river and Nipigon bay in Lake Superior, by the Great Lake Dredging Company, Limited, under contract dated 9th October, 1908? If so, when was such amount voted, what was the amount, and what is the item in the estimates which authorises the expenditure?

2. If there was no appropriation, by what authority was the contract let to the Great Lakes Dredging Company, Limited, for the work, and out of what moneys was the sum of $5,459.45 paid in 1908, and out of which moneys is it proposed to pay the balance of $50,012.25, alleged to be due for work done under the said contract during the year 1908?

3. In what newspapers were the advertisements for tenders inserted, and between what dates?

4. When did the work cease in the season of 1908?

5. Was any effort made to obtain any other tenders than that of the Great Lakes Dredging Company, Limited, which was the only one submitted?

6. What was the date of the tender of the Great Lakes Dredging Company, Limited, and on what date was it received at the Department of Public Works?

7. What were the respective dates of payment of the moneys aggregating $57,459.25 paid on account in 1908, and what, if any, further moneys have been paid to the contractors since the last-mentioned payment?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. No.

2. Payment already made has been taken from appropriation 'Dredging, Ontario and Quebec,' granted in 1908, and it is proposed to pay the balance from appropriation of the same name in the supplementary votes of present session for 1908-9.

3 and 5. It was intended to include the name of Nipigon river in the advertisement calling for tenders for dredging required at Bowmanville, Green Shoals, Jackfish Bay, Leith, Newcastle, Rainy River and Spanish River, which was published in the newspapers between the 3rd and 17th of July, 1908 (list of newspapers annexed). But the name was inadvertently omitted, and, as soon as this was discovered, the following letter was sent to Messrs. W. L. Horton, A. F. Bowman, Manley & Co., W. E. Phin, Weddell & Co., the Canada Construction Company, Limited, the Canadian Dredge and Construction Company, Limited, the Randolph Macdonald Company, Limited, the C. S. Boone Dredging and Construction Company, Limited, the Penetanguishene Dredging Company and the Windsor Dredging Company, Limited, who are the only contractors, to the knowledge of the department, doing dredging in that part of the country:

Ottawa, July 10, 1908.

Gentlemen,—I inclose herewith advertisement for dredging in the province of Ontario, tenders for which are to be received up to the 17th instant. Please consider Nipigon river as added to the list of places mentioned in the advertisement, where dredging is to be done.

I have the honour to be, &c.,
(Sgd.) R. C. DESROCHERS,
Assistant secretary.

4. 5th December, 1908.

6. (a) 16th July, 1908. (b) 17th July, 1908.

7. (a) October 16, $27,459.45; December 22, $30,000. (b) None.

3. R. Crawford at $2.19 per ton.

4. Chestnut and egg coal, P. Walsh, at $4.94 per ton.

Screenings, R. Crawford, at $2.43 per ton.

5. 4,920 tons.

KINGSTON PENITENTIARY—COST OF GUARD.

Mr. EDWARDS—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. How many prisoners were confined in Kingston penitentiary on the 31st of March in each of the years from 1900 to 1909, inclusive?

2. How many guards and keepers were employed at the said institution on the date in the years mentioned?

3. What were the salaries of the guards and keepers in 1900, and what are their present salaries?

4. What are the hours of service of the guards and keepers at present?

5. Does the government contemplate any increase in the salaries of these officials or any increase in the number?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice):

1. 552, 525, 477, 452, 447, 449, 464, 458, 488 and 569 respectively.

2. Including industrial keepers, who are police officers, watchmen, who are night guards, and temporary guards: 62, 63, 62, 62, 63, 64, 66, 66, 63 and 65 respectively.

3. From 1900 till 1906 keepers were paid $600 per annum and guards $500 per annum. Since 1906 keepers have been paid $700 per annum and guards $600 per annum.

4. Day staff, in summer, (15th March until 14th October), from 6.30 a.m. until

6 p.m. In winter, (15th October until 14th March), from 6.30 a.m. until the prison closes at sundown, except a few guards who remain in charge until 6 p.m., at which hour the night staff take charge. Night staff, from 6 p.m. until 6.30 a.m., every night.

5. The salaries are now the maximum allowed by the Penitentiary Act. Any question of increase in the number of police officers will depend upon the population.

KINGSTON PENITENTIARY—SUPPLY OF POTATOES.

Mr. EDWARDS—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. How many bags of potatoes were purchased last year for the use of the Kingston penitentiary and at what prices?

2. From whom were they purchased?

3. Were tenders called for? if so, from whom received and the price in each case?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice):

1 and 2. 1,782 bags from the following parties at prices stated:—

Date.	——	Bags		Price per bag.

3. No. We endeavour to raise potatoes for our own use, but when the crop fails, as it did last season, we buy on the open market at best prices available.

Mr. AYLESWORTH.

PUBLIC EXPENDITURES IN WEST MIDDLESEX.

Mr. THOS. CHISHOLM (Huron) asked:

How much public money has been expended during the past twenty years by the Dominion government on public works in the territory now constituting the constituency of West Middlesex?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works.) $69,271.87.

SIDEWALK AROUND CHARLOTTETOWN POST OFFICE.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR asked:

1. Did the government construct a concrete sidewalk around the post office in Charlottetown, P.E.I., in the year 1908? If so, was same let by public tender or by contract, and who was the contractor or contractors?

2. What was the measurement of the work, and from whom were the materials purchased?

3. What was the cost of labour, sand, cement and other materials, respectively?

4. What was the total cost, and to whom paid, and when?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works:

1 and 3. Yes. A price was asked from J. P. Nicholson, city engineer of Charlottetown.

2. 6,383 sup. feet concrete walks at 24c.. .. ..$1,531 92
2,315 sup. feet gravel walks at 10c.. .. .. 231 50

G. T. R. Co.—PRIOR LIEN ON ASSETS.

Mr. PERLEY asked;

Is it the opinion of the law officers of the Crown that the guarantee of the Grand Trunk Railway Company is a prior lien or charge on the assets of the company ahead of the first, second and third preferred stocks, as set forth in the answer to a question on March 31, 1909?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

Geo. F. Shepley, K.C., was charged by the Minister of Justice with the settlement of the proposed bill and of the mortgage which is scheduled thereto. The foregoing question was accordingly submitted to Mr. Shepley by the Deputy Minister of Justice. The following is the conclusion of his formal opinion 'with which,' the Deputy Minister of Justice states, 'I quite agree.'

'The Bill introduced to provide for the loan to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company empowers the Grand Trunk Railway Company to become a party to the mortgage or deed of trust scheduled to the Bill, and to enter into the contract of guaranty which the third section of the Act makes one of the securities to the government for the repayment of the proposed loan to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

'The guaranty referred to is fully set out in the mortgage or deed of trust, and is an unconditional contract under seal by the Grand Trunk Railway Company for the prompt payment of the principal and interest of the bonds secured by the mortgage or deed of trust.

'The second section of Article 4 of the deed of trust expressly constitutes the guaranty in question a liability of the Grand Trunk Railway Company in priority to all the share capital of that company, whether guaranteed stock, preference stock or ordinary stock.

'It is not, I think, strictly accurate to speak of either preferred share capital or the guaranty as creating a lien or charge upon the assets of the company. The preferred share capital is, under the statutes relating to it, an obligation on the part of the company towards the holders of it. Similarly, the guaranty is an obligation the non-performance of which would make the company a debtor.

'It is perfectly clear, in my opinion, that the terms of the proposed Bill and of the mortgage or deed scheduled to it, make it impossible for the company to pay dividends upon the preferred capital in priority to any debt that may arise out of the non-performance of the guaranty. In this sense, the obligation created by the guaranty has priority over the obligation existing in respect of preferred share capital.'

LITTLE ST. PIERRE RIVER—DRAINAGE.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask leave to move the adjournment of the House in order to refer briefly to a definite matter of urgent public importance. Under subsection 3 of rule 37, I would state that the matter of urgent public importance is the immediate drainage and sanitation of the valley of the Little St. Pierre river. I have mentioned the matter to the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham), and if I have the necessary support of the House, I will state as briefly as I can what is urgently needed in this matter. Mr. Speaker, if this had not been a matter affecting largely the public health of the city of Montreal and its vicinity, I would have deferred the discussion until the question might be brought up in the regular course on the discussion of the estimates. But I deem it such an urgent matter and of so much importance that I have decided, with the consent of the Minister of Railways and Canals, to bring it at once to the attention of the government and the House.

As most of the members of this House are aware, the government in building the Lachine canal, so placed that important work as to interfere materially with the drainage of an area extending from Lachine down into what was then only the outskirts of the city of Montreal. The canal follows the bank of the St. Lawrence river from one end to the other of the Lachine rapids. On one side is Mount Royal, and this canal constitutes, in reality, a kind of dyke which prevents the flow of water from a very large area, extending between the mountain and the river, to the river to which these waters would flow naturally. The effect of this was to cause, even at the very beginning, yearly floods in that part of the district of Montreal. The government, from the first, recognized that it had there an obligation of drainage, which, from time to time, it has endeavoured to satisfy, but in an imperfect manner. The administration that preceded the present one executed a work of considerable magnitude, at a cost, I believe, of over $100,000, to drain the upper part of the area just referred to. That drain was constructed in the early eighties, and it was constructed because the government recognized that the building of the canal prevented the regular flow of waters across the district. Of course, at that time the drainage and sanitation of the area was not of very great importance, because the section was very sparsely settled. There were a few farmers there, but the government arranged with many of them by paying them indemnities after arbitration on account of these periodical overflowings and the prevention of drainage. At times, I believe, the government constructed one or two conduits under the Lachine canal for the surface water; and even to-day that mode is still open to the government of preserving this area from yearly inundation lasting for a considerable time in the spring. At this time, and for a few years past, a great number of municipalities have sprung up within the limits of the undrained area, and a very large number of houses have been built, making this question of drainage and sanitation one which calls for immediate solution on the part of those who are bound to see to it that the obstacle in the way of drainage is removed. The government of Canada, either before 1896 or since that date, permitted the municipality of Lachine to empty its drainage into a main drain which started from the the upper part of Lachine and came down a considerable distance and emptied into the St. Pierre, a little river which flows between the Lachine canal and the mountain, through the municipality of Notre Dame de Grace and into the city of Montreal, and through a part of that city to the St. Lawrence. At that time the municipality of Lachine, which to-day has a population of nearly ten thousand souls, was, comparatively speaking, a small village, and the government at that time did not think it a matter of very great importance that the drainage of that village should be allowed to flow into this main drain. But since that time, as I have said, a number of important municipalities have sprung up within a short distance of this area or within its very limits. There are the municipalities of Westmount, Boulevard St. Paul, the rural municipality of Notre Dame de Grace, the municipality of Montreal West, and probably others which I am omitting. All these municipalities desire to drain into the river St. Pierre, or, if not that, to drain as far as the St. Lawrence, they are obliged to cross the Lachine canal, which is a matter of very considerable inconvenience, even if at all possible. As I have stated, the government has recognized on many occasions its share of responsibility in regard to the drainage of that area.

The provincial board of health, since more than five years, has had this question under its particular observation, and time and again has brought to the notice of the municipalities and the government the absolute urgency of draining that area in particular and the very grave objection which exists to the sewage of Lachine—a town of considerable extent and daily increasing—passing into the River St. Pierre, all along that river, and into the city of Montreal, thus forming an open drain over an extent of some 5 or 6 miles. Last year the grave danger which thus threatened these municipalities and the city of Montreal itself, induced all these municipalities, as well as the board of health, to send a delegation to interview my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals regarding the best means of putting an end to this nuisance and daily peril. To use the words of Dr. Lachapelle, the president of the provincial board of health, who formed one of this delegation, the state of affairs existing constitutes a fever nest which is a source of daily danger for nearly 400,000 people who inhabit the island of Montreal, not only in the vicinity of this exposed area but throughout the whole city and island. At any time this drain may generate fever among our population —among the poor people and also those in better circumstances who live in that immediate vicinity, whence it may extend over the city.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Where does the River St. Pierre enter the St. Lawrence?

Mr. MONK. It passes through St. Gabriel ward in the city of Montreal below the canal. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways, who understood perfectly the gravity of the situation, made the suggestion, which was accepted by all the mayors and the representatives of the boards of health, and the delegation generally, that if the government had some responsibility in the matter, there was also a responsibility upon the municipalities which drained into that river or desired to do so, and that consequently all should share in the expense of devising some plan which would be submitted to the interested parties, after which a determination would be arrived at as to what should be the basis of contribution by each. That suggestion was accepted by the delegation. That was about a year ago. The government named as its expert engineer, Mr. Chipman of Toronto; the city of Montreal named Mr. Janin, superintendent of water works; and the other municipalities joined in suggesting, as their representative, Mr. Fellows, engineer of the muncipality of Westmount. It was admitted by all that the danger was immediate and increasing, and that it was absolutely necessary to proceed without delay to remove it. But that view does not seem to have been acted on by those who were charged with the preparation of plans and the devising of the best means of overcoming the difficulty. This year that area is inundated by the overflow of the St. Pierre river with all its affluent sewage and I was moved to find out what these three experts had done. In so far as I have been able to ascertain, they held one or two meetings and selected the engineer in charge of the canals of the province of Quebec to prepare some plans, and the suggestion was made that some young engineer should be employed to take levels. In order to do that some money was necessary. The municipalities contributed $600, Montreal contributed $600, the government gave $600, and a fund was constituted, and I understand that this young engineer is busy from time to time taking levels and doing some preliminary work. The object of my rising to-day is to urge my hon. friend and the government to hasten the work of these experts. My hon. friend might say that that is not more the concern of the government than of the other parties interested. I do not think it is reasonable to expect that the mayors of these municipalities would take a lively interest in this work. They cannot act without consulting their councils and without consulting among themselves, and the best proof that action on their part is difficult is shown by the fact that nothing has yet been done practically to overcome this grave condition. On the other hand my hon. friend the minister has under his control the means of hastening the preliminary operations. His deputy is fully conversant with the situation. He has all the plans which have been made and the claims for damages, which from time to time have been produced and settled. My hon. friend has also in the canal office in Montreal the superintendent of provincial canals under his control. That gentleman is thoroughly conversant with the situation.

At any rate, whether this is more particularly my hon. friend's business or that of the other interested parties to whom I have referred, I would ask my hon. friend, in view of the danger attending the situation, in view of the urgency, to bring all possible pressure to bear upon these experts in order that they may finish their work and lay before the government their report, their plans, their suggestions as to the best means of overcoming this serious difficulty without delay. My hon. friend's department, or, at any rate, the government, has undertaken very considerable work in St. Johns, in view of the rising of the St. Johns river and the flooding of the district in that vicinity. It was urged, as I understand, upon the government, that the canal there was one of the principal causes of this flood. But the district was, if I understand it aright, interested as a rural district. This is a question of doing justice to the farmers and it is a question of importance, I admit. In the instance I am now bringing to the notice of the House and of the government it is a question of the health of a very large multitude of people who undoubtedly stand in great peril of suffering and who at present suffer because the population is becoming more dense all the time. To children playing on the shores of this little river the danger is continuous, and the prevalence of fever there has been most marked. Under these circumstances I think my hon. friend should take the matter in hand, and I have no doubt that if he brings pressure to bear upon the experts I have named he will have the report without delay and that the work will be undertaken immediately, because once that report is before my hon. friend and the interested parties there will undoubtedly be an agreement as to the proportion of the cost of the work to be borne by each. I agree with the suggestion that I have heard more than once made during the present session in this House that it is during the time of depression that public works should be executed. There is no doubt at the present moment we have in the city of Montreal, as well as in other large cities of this Dominion, a very large number of unemployed people. They could not be better employed than this. The only thing that is necessary is to make the experts understand the urgency, the gravity of the situation, as depicted to us by the provincial board of health, call for tenders and have this work executed without delay. I beg to move the adjournment of the House.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Mr. Speaker, the question of public health is a paramount one, one that deserves the attention of this House and I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I understand the importance of the question he has discussed. Some months, or perhaps a year ago, this matter, as outlined by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, was brought to my attention and steps were taken along the lines indicated by him. But this much ought to be remembered, that this is not a government work. My hon. friend rather assumes the position that the government has undertaken the drainage of this section of Montreal. That is not the position. The question of public health lies wholly with the provincial and municipal authorities. If this government be liable for any act it ought to be prepared to meet that liability. It was along the lines of sympathy for the grievances of the residents in this locality that the question was approached. It was asserted that the government had become responsible to a certain extent by allowing the sewage of Lachine to pass through a certain sewer. The conditions at that time were altogether different. We did not have any of these smaller municipalities that have grown up in that particular locality. In discussing the question, feeling the responsibility and the gravity of any situation that would militate against the health of the people, I felt that it was the duty of this government, if it had any liability, to meet it in reference to the matter. I agreed readily on the part of the government to appoint an engineer to associate himself with the engineers that the municipalities and the province might appoint to look into the matter, but, mark you, the Department of Railways and Canals did not assume this as a government work. The work, if carried out as it ought to be, and the protection of the public health, lie wholly in the hands of the provincial and municipal authorities themselves under the board of health regulations and under the provincial Municipal Act. As a party, if it be a party, the government is prepared to do its share towards the remedying of the grievance. Just what the engineers have done I am not prepared to say, as my hon. friend's note was just handed to me a few minutes ago. The city of Montreal surely is the party really interested. These smaller municipalities in which this state of affars is said to exist, certainly form the community that is really interested, but the provincial board of health, having charge of the health of the people, is certainly deeply interested, and if this government is prepared to pay any share of the liability that may appear as belonging to it and to perhaps act generously in that regard, certainly, it is doing all that it is called upon to do. We are prepared to do that and perhaps to be a little generous along that line, but I would not like my hon. friend to retain the idea that this government ought to undertake it as a public work. It is a purely local or municipal work for the protection of the public health. As far as we are liable this government and this parliament ought to meet that liability and we will gladly do so. I will call the attention of the officers of my department to the remarks of my hon. friend, and I will see in what position the report of this board is, what they have done and what they have placed before the department as the result of their labour.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Mr. Speaker, I am pretty thoroughly acquainted with this question, as the circumstances which have been alluded to occurred when I was managing the Department of Railways and Canals. The liability of the government in reference to this particular affair is that we, in constructing the Lachine canal, rendered it almost impossible for the people of Lachine to drain that municipality without passing the drain under the Lachine canal. The liability of the government with respect to that was assumed long ago. We built a drain along the Lachine canal, built works under the Lachine canal for the purpose of draining this particular locality, and I think we deepened the St. Pierre river from the Lachine canal down to the city of Montreal. The extent of the liability of the government is confined to this: How much more difficult have we made it for the people to drain that municipality for the purposes of sanitation than it was before? It was nearly impossible for the people of Lachine to drain under the mouth or entrance of the canal. There was no way but by building a ditch alongside of the Lachine canal and putting culverts under the canal for the purposes of drainage. The government, rightly or wrongly, assumed that work and allowed the people of Lachine to drain under the canal; in fact, it was built for no other purpose than for draining the village of Lachine. When we got under the canal we found that we were lower than the bed of the St. Pierre river and we were obliged to deepen the St. Pierre river from the Lachine canal down to Montreal. When we built the Lachine canal we made it impossible for those on the north side to have drainage without a drain underneath the canal, and for that reason the government is bound to see that all reasonable and safe facilities are given for drainage purposes. This river is simply an open sewer, it is a disgrace, it is a menace to the health of the community, and the government some day will have to take measures to abate the nuisance. To what extent the government is liable must be a question of arbitration between them and the different municipalities.

Motion (Mr. Monk) negatived.

NEW BRUNSWICK CENTRAL RAILWAY —REPORT OF PROVINCIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER. Before the orders of the day are called I would like to ask the First Minister a question, in addition to the one I put to him yesterday, and that is, as to whether he has yet received any copies of the report of the New Brunswick Commission, and if when he receives them he will lay one upon the table of the House, so that it may, if the House thinks proper, be printed for the information of the members of the House.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In regard to the latter request of my hon. friend, I have no hesitation in stating that I do not think we are called upon to lay the document upon the table of the House and to have it printed. I may say to the hon. gentleman that I this morning sent to the library to get a copy of that report and I received it about twelve o'clock.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). May I be allowed to make just one remark: What has been printed is only a part of the report. I think the report must mean the evidence and the documents. It is only when these are printed that one can understand what the report really is.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, OUTSIDE SERVICE—PAY OF LETTER-CARRIERS, &c.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Post Office Act and the Civil Service Act and to provide as follows:—

That in the outside division of the Post Office Department the salaries of messengers, porters, letter-carriers, mail transfer agents or box collectors shall, in Grade A be at the rate of $1.75 per day, in Grade B at the rate of $2.00 per day, in Grade C at the rate of $2.25 per day, in Grade D at the rate of $2.50 per day, in Grade E at the rate of $2.75 per day; that the salaries of the fourth-class clerks shall, on appointment, be $500 with annual increases of $100 up to $700; and that if the salary of any stamper and sorter or fourth-class clerk is at present less than $500, it shall forthwith be increased to that minimum.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into committee.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I wish to give a very brief explanation of this resolution. The salaries of letter-carriers are fixed by the Post Office Act and the salaries of the fourth-class clerks by the old Civil Service Act so that both will require to be amended. Since I took office, and during many years previously, representations have been made to the Postmaster General and to the government, by commercial bodies, by municipal councils and other representative institutions, not to speak of members of parliament on both sides, asking that the salaries of the letter-carriers should be increased. In 1902 Sir William Mulock, then Postmaster General, increased the salaries of the letter-carriers to some extent. Two years ago, the commission appointed to inquire into the Civil Service included in their report the following recommendation:

Your Commissioners find that a few years ago the laws regarding the employment of letter-carriers were considerably altered. The letter-carrier was changed from an official drawing a yearly salary to an official drawing a daily salary, and in cases of absence through sickness or otherwise, deductions of pay were enforced. No doubt in the best interests of the service these laws require to be rigidly enforced. Nothing comes so much into the daily life of the community as the delivery of the mail. It is a service requiring prompt and efficient action. In certain places favouritism is alleged on the part of high officials towards certain letter-carriers who were allowed leave of absence with pay, but others of the same cuass were fined. Your Commissioners do not, however, think this worthy of attention, but they are of opinion that it would be desirable as far as possible to bring the services of letter-carriers to an eight-hour a day service. They would also suggest an additional week's leave of absence be allowed this branch of the service, and on consideration they recommend that at least the schedules of salaries laid down by Mr. Ross, Superintendent of Post Offices, should be adopted. Mr. Ross has filed an extensive memorandum which is to be found appended to his evidence.

I may say that the resolutions now before the House are based on the report made by Mr. Ross chief superintendent, and a higher official of the Post Office service. The present scale of salaries paid to letter-carriers is provided for in sections 39 and 40 of the Act, and the same scale prevails in the smaller cities as well as the larger cities, wherever the system of free delivery exists. Briefly, the scale of salaries is as follows: In grade A, on entering the service, during a probationary period of one month, a letter-carrier is paid $1.25 per day. If the man is found sufficiently well equipped, intellectually and morally, at the expiration of the probationary month, he is immediately put into grade B at $1.50 per day.

Mr. HUGHES. That is for week days only?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes. We have no Sunday work in this country. Afterwards he goes into grade C, where he receives during two years time $1.75 per day; and from grade C he goes to grade D, where he is paid at the rate of $2 per day. If he is an exceptionally good letter-carrier and performs a longer or more difficult service than others, he is promoted to grade E, where he gets an additional 25 cents a day, together with a leave of absence every year of two weeks with pay and may also be granted an additional leave of absence with pay for a period not exceeding ten days in each year or a bonus at the rate of two dollars for each day of such additional leave.

Mr. HUGHES. Do they all get that leave of absence?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes. Some of them do not avail themselves of it, because they are anxious to come under the exceptional grade of $2.25 per day. Let me refer, by way of comparison, to the salaries paid to letter-carriers in the United States. For the first year letter-carriers in the United States receive a salary of $600; in Canada only $469.50. In the second year, in the United States, $800; in Canada, $469.50. In the third year, in the United States, $900; in Canada, $547.75. In the fourth year, in the United States, $1,000; in Canada, $547.75. In the fifth year, in the United States, $1,100; in Canada, $626; after which, for the performance of work of a specially arduous and responsible nature, a letter-carrier may be promoted to grade E, where he receives $704.25 per annum. I may say that in New Zealand, the smallest colony in the British empire, the salaries of letter-carriers are a little higher than the salaries paid in Canada.

Mr. HUGHES. Who pays for the uniform?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Post Office Department furnishes uniforms, boots and helmets. In addition, in the large cities we give letter-carriers in uniform free transportation on the street cars, for which we pay a fixed sum to the Street Railway Company. Under the proposal before the House, if the resolution carries, letter-carriers, during their first month, the probationary period, instead of receiving $1.25 per day, will hereafter receive $1.75; after their probationary period, in the first year, instead of $1.50, they will receive $2 per day. In the second year, instead of $1.50, they will receive $2 per day. In the third year, instead of $1.75, they will receive $2.25. In the fourth year, instead of $2.25, they will receive $2.50, or, for specially arduous duties or specially long runs, $2.75 per day. The rate of pay attached to each grade is proposed to be increased 50 cents per day. But the great advantage, in my mind, is that a letter-carrier, from his entrance into the service, receives sufficient for the maintenance of himself and his family in a fairly adequate manner. I need not refer to the representations that have been made to the government and to the members individually by the letter-carriers and their many friends in the country. I freely admit that under the old system they did not receive enough to maintain themselves properly, with the increase in the cost of living during the last ten years, and even during the last five years.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? In the various post offices of the country there are postal officers looking after the work of the Customs Department, and these men are simply scandalously paid. I think something should be done for them.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Of course under section 142 of the Post Office Act, every postal clerk is deemed to be employed for the prevention of smuggling and for the enforcement of the revenue laws of Canada. But the special class to which the hon. gentleman refers comes under the Customs Department.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Will the hon. minister tell his colleague the Minister of Customs?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will take a note of my hon. friend's suggestion. This increase in the pay I consider a reasonable increase. It will be an inducement to our letter carriers to serve the public better and besides will give us better men, though, generally speaking, we have a good class of men working for the department. In our cities they give really very good service.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Does the scale of increase cover those who are under the old Civil Service law?

Mr. LEMIEUX. When Sir Wm. Mulock introduced his amendment to the Post Office Act by which he brought letter-carriers under the grade system and increased their pay, many of the old letter-carriers refused to come under that system although they received less pay under the former one. The object of the amendment was not only to increase the pay, but to obtain better service. Under the old Act many of the letter-carriers were subject to malingering or simulation of illness. They knew they would be paid in any event, and frequently were indisposed much to the detriment of the service. But under the grade system a man is paid for every day of work. If absent he is not paid unless he satisfies the authorities that he has been the victim of an accident while on duty or was really suffering under serious illness contracted in the service. We thus put a brake on what was really an abuse, and we notice that to-day we have, practically speaking, no more absentees. The letter-carriers are scarcely ever absent and avail themselves of the annual leave of twenty days with pay. On three different occasions Sir Wm. Mulock extended the delay given the old letter-carriers to come under the grade system, and nearly all of them did so. But about 75 or 80 have refused up to date, and in order that they may benefit by the new increase we shall have to make further amendments.

Mr. MACDONELL. Will they be given the opportunity of coming under the grade system?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Act under which they have been appointed has been repealed and we cannot amend it. I am glad, however, that my hon. friend has called my attention to this matter, and will look into it, as I do not wish to take advantage of the disadvantageous position under which these letter-carriers agreed to remain since many years.

Mr. JOSEPH RUSSELL. Does the hon. minister really think that $1.75 per day is sufficient pay for these men when they start in? In our city $2 per day is about the smallest wage a common labourer gets. If you would increase the minimum to $2 per day and the other grades by 25 cents per day, that would be none too much, considering the extra cost of living. Civil servants were under a certain schedule for many years and no doubt when this increase is made it will remain in force a number of years to come. It would not be unjust to give these men $2 a day to start with, as no man with a family can save much on that wage and live in decency and comfort.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is easy to suggest that the letter-carriers should receive $2 a day at the start instead of $1.75, but the present increase will cost the country $200,000 per annum in round numbers, so that we must be careful. I shall, however, take a note of what my hon. friend has said. No doubt some other hon. members will argue in favour of a larger increase, but the money is not my own, but that of the people, and whilst I would be pleased to give $4 or $5 per day to every man employed in the departments, yet I have to keep within limits. On the whole, the letter-carriers are satisfied with the increase given them at present. Judging by the deputations I have received since I have been in office, this amount is considered as fairly adequate to the exigencies of the present day.

To come to the fourth class, the stampers, sorters and other lower grades, their pay is governed by the old Civil Service Act, which was wiped out from the statute-book as regards the inside service, but still remains as regards the outside service. According to the Civil Service Act, the fourth-class clerks are treated as follows:

The minimum salary attached to a fourth-class clerk, the lowest clerkship in the service, is $400 per annum

The fourth-class clerk enters the service at $400 a year, and by annual increases of $50 reaches a maximum of $700 a year. We found that young men entering the service under these conditions remained a few months, perhaps a year or so, but, when they had become fairly efficient clerks, they left the service. This was rehearsed every year in that class of our employees. The fourth-class clerks are not sufficiently paid when they enter the service, and therefore they almost invariably leave when they find an opportunity. We believe that they should receive from the beginning a salary of not less than $500, and should reach their maximum by annual increases of $100 instead of $50.

Now, as regards stampers and sorters—and this class must be differentiated from the fourth-class clerks—I recommend that they should receive, at the beginning, $500 a year, instead of $360 a year, as at present, and should receive annual increases of $50 instead of $100, because their functions are of the simplest nature so that they are not to be considered as of the same degree of usefulness as are the fourth-class clerks. Their maximum should be $600 per annum. When they reach this maximum they will be eligible for promotion at once to the position of fourth-class clerk, beginning in that class at a salary of $600, at which they leave the class of stampers and sorters. That is, let us say, a stamper comes into the service in Montreal at $500; after two years he reaches his maximum of $600. If he has given good service, he is promoted to the position of fourth-class clerk at a salary of not less than $600, and goes on by annual increases of $100 to the maximum of that class, $800.

Such are the changes I propose in these resolutions. I may say, in conclusion, that these increases will affect the salaries of 1,500 men in round figures, throughout the length and breadth of this country, and that the amount involved in these increases is estimated at $217,880.50.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, for the first year.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes. I have statements showing how many letter-carriers there are in each city and the number that will be affected by these increases, also how the total of increases is made up.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I congratulate my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux? on having rendered justice, to a certain extent, to the Post Office employees. Their claims have been neglected for a very long time. I do not know of any class of public employees—judging by those in Montreal—who perform their duties more creditably or under greater hardship. People generally do not realize what a difficult business is the carrying of letters in a city like Montreal. The loads they have to carry are heavy, they have to face the weather whatever it may be, and, owing to the number of tenements in the city, they have to do a great deal of climbing. In view of the nature of their work, I think they have been, up to now, insufficiently paid, and my hon. friend is rendering them a bare act of justice in this increase. But I wanted to support what was stated by my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. A. C. Macdonell) a moment ago. I think that a man who fulfils carefully the duties of a letter-carrier in a city like Montreal ought to begin with the remuneration of not less than $2 a day. It seems to me that, in that regard, my hon. friend the Postmaster General might well make a distinction between large cities like Montreal and Toronto, and smaller cities in which free delivery is carried on. The Postmaster General stated in the House the other day that any town that gave the government a postal revenue of $20,000 and had a population of 10,000 was entitled to free delivery. It is evident that in a town of ten thousand inhabitants, the cost of living is very much less than in a city like Montreal or Toronto. As soon as you begin to live in one of these cities you must face at once a heavy item of expense in rent and taxes. For this reason, it seems to me, a beginner in a big city who carefully fulfils the duties of this position should receive an indemnity of at least $2 a day. Without dwelling on the matter at length, I would urge my hon. friend to consider whether, in these larger cities, $2 a day ought not to be the minimum to the beginner. A man who has a family, and is in a position of trust of this kind and has so much work to do, ought not to have less than this sum. Another point to which I wish to call attention was referred to by my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell). I do not think that the government ought to penalize those who have availed themselves of the option given to them by Sir William Mulock, to remain under the old Act. Representations have been made to me by several of these employees in Montreal. I regret that I have not their letters with me. They remained under the old Act, and therefore are not graded. They are receiving $400, $500, or $600 a year, being paid by the year and not by the day. There was nothing wrong about their availing themselves of the offer of Sir William Mulock. I am sure my hon. friend will find some way of getting over the difficulty, because these employees have performed their duties as well as the graded employees have done, and surely they are entitled to the same increase. I hope my hon. friend will be able, particularly in regard to that class, to render justice, and put them in the same position as the others

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Like the hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), I am glad to see this measure, though belated, brought down by the Postmaster General. It deals with a class of employees, who, in the past, in my opinion, have had very insufficient pay. Their duties are arduous; it is unnecessary to dilate upon them, because I think the Postmaster General has a thorough appreciation of their duties. The scale of increases is not large, though it is certainly a great improvement on their present position. I do not think, however, in considering what they are justly entitled to, that it is fair to consider only what they have been receiving in the past. What they have been receiving is but a modicum of what they are entitled to. I think it would be fairer to have regard to the services they perform, and to the compensation which men of their education and competency receive in other avenues of life. I certainly concur in a remark made a few moments ago that no person, no able-bodied man, educated and intelligent as a postman must be, should receive less, when he is permanently employed, than $2 a day. I trust the Postmaster General will consider that point before the Bill is brought down, and that he will treat them, having regard, not to what they have been receiving already, but to what in all human decency they are entitled to receive. I would also emphasize the remark of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), that men in large cities like Toronto and Montreal, performing the duties of postmen, are entitled to a higher rate of pay than men living in small places where the expense of living is much less than it is in large cities. We should also keep in mind that the duties of postmen in large cities are much more arduous than they are in a village or town. In the first place they have to be men of high intelligence in order to find the location of people to whom the letters are addressed, and they have to carry a class of letters generally of more value, registered letters, and they are consequently burdened with greater responsibility than postmen in country places where they usually carry only ordinary correspondence.

Now with regard to what I mentioned a moment ago, namely, letter-carriers who are under the old Civil Service Act, I trust the minister will take this opportunity, not only of doing justice to a class of men who are now discriminated against, but also of simplifying and making uniform the entire letter-carrier service of the country. At the present time, I am informed there are only 80 letter-carriers who are under the old Civil Service Act, and as long as they remain under that Act you will have a dual system.

Mr. LEMIEUX. They would not join the new system.

Mr. MACDONELL. They were given an opportunity of either joining the new system or of taking their status under the old system. An hon. member well says that the door ought to be still left open for them to join in the new system. I think they should be given another opportunity now, and I apprehend the minister will afford these men an opportunity, if they so desire, of coming in under the new grade system. There is a special reason for it now. Some men are receiving 50 cents a day more, and having regard to their changed condition, it would be fair, in my opinion, that those men who are under the old Civil Service Act should be given another opportunity of coming under the grade system. I am informed that the maximum those men now receive is $600 a year, that no man under the old Civil Service Act can receive more, or earn more, than $600 a year. Now these men who are under the old system are old men, old in the service, they have proved their competency by many years of faithful service, and I think they should be given an opportunity of coming into a class with the graded men. It would certainly seem to be in the public interest to have uniformity with regard to the employment of civil servants in this department. I hope that before the Bill is brought down the minister will be able to make such changes as will, if not reduce all men to a uniform and simple basis, at least give the men who are under the old Act an opportunity of being graded with the other men.

Mr. FOSTER. On the second reading of the Bill we will be better able to take up a number of these matters, and at that time I shall have something to say with reference to the system by which they enter the service, the system of grading, and promotions, and the lie of that. Not only ought we to try to keep our Civil Service on the pay basis, to make them fairly independent, but we ought also to surround them with such safeguards that they may not be led to look to what we call political pull for the maintenance of their position, or for preferment. I would like the minister to think that matter over. We will also discuss the case of those men who, having twice had an opportunity of making their choice, have not all made it, and I am sure the minister will arrange that the door may still remain open, and that they may have another opportunity in that respect.

Mr. DOHERTY. I would like to add a word of encouragement to the Postmaster General to treat with greater generosity as well as justice the class of men who are under consideration. Certainly we are all agreed in recognizing that they are entitled to better treatment. I would like to join the hon. members who have preceded me in urging upon the minister the importance of considering whether the minimum wage for letter-carriers should not be somewhat increased. Speaking for my own city of Montreal, I think that anybody who sees the work these letter-carriers have to perform, and who realizes the degree of intelligence they must possess in order to perform their duties satisfactorily, must agree that $2 a day is very small compensation in view of the responsibilities which rest upon them. I have the advantage of knowing a large number of this class of employees in the city of Montreal, and particularly in my own constituency, I have observed the diligence with which they perform their duties, and I desire to commend them to the most favourable consideration of the Postmaster General when he arranges the scale of salaries in this Bill. I hope he will see his way to make the pay at all events somewhat larger than is proposed.

Mr. CROTHERS. I would like to add my expression of appreciation of the proposals made by the Postmaster General. The only suggestion I would like to make is one that has already been mentioned by other hon. members, that is, that the minimum should be $2 per day instead of $1.75. I understand the Postmaster General proposes to pay $1.75 for the first year, $2 the second year and $2.25 for the third. Now, rather than place them at $1.75 at the start I would prefer that they should receive $2 per day from the beginning, and that it should remain at that for two years, and that the increase should not commence until the third year, rather than restrict them to $1.75 the first year. I quite agree with my hon. friend who has just spoken that $2 a day is the very lowest that any one could undertake to live upon.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend unavoidably makes a mistake there. At present the letter-carrier, during his probationary period, receives $1.25 a day. That lasts one month and then he receives $1.50 per day. Under the proposed scale he will receive, during his probationary period of one month, $1.75 per day and then he will receive $2 per day.

Mr. CROTHERS. When is it proposed that the increase shall date from?

Mr. LEMIEUX. When the House prorogues.

Mr. CROTHERS. It is only one month of probation instead of one year?

Mr. LEMIEUX. One month of probation.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the minister tell us what the estimated increased cost to the department will be and whether he has taken into consideration the clerks that are under the postmasters in different towns? I have called attention on several occasions to the small salaries that are paid to clerks who are under the postmasters in small towns and I would like to ask the minister whether he is making any provision for these clerks?

Mr. LEMIEUX. As to the increase in the cost of the service I gave to 'Hansard' a moment ago a statement which I did not read, but, in round figures the annual expenditure involved in this increase is $217,000. That will affect the salaries of about 1,500 employees. As to the other question brought up by my hon. friend and as to the condition in some of the cities where they have the letter system but where they are on the semi-staff basis, I may say that the letter-carriers will benefit by this increase just as the letter-carriers in the larger cities will. The clerks in these offices will not be affected however. My attention has been called, especially by the hon. member for Essex and by the hon. member for Brant, to the subject. The question is now before the department. No legislation is needed to bring these offices under the general rule and to place them on the Civil Service list. It is departmental action that is required in each case.

Mr. LANCASTER. Which offices is the hon. gentleman speaking about?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I mean offices like Brantford, Windsor, Fort William, Sarnia, offices in cities where they have a population of not less than 12,000 and a revenue of not less than $20,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does not this Bill aply to those letter-carriers?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes. The letter-carriers in these cities will benefit by this increase. But my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) referred to clerks in these offices. The clerks in many of these offices are hired by the postmasters.

Mr. LANCASTER. Who gets the gross sum?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Who gets the gross sum—but we are gradually eliminating this system because of the grave complaints against some of the postmasters. However, it is a matter which requires departmental action and not legislation. The attention of the government has been called to it by several of the members who happen to represent some of those cities which are under the semi-staff system and action will be taken in due course upon the matter.

Mr. LANCASTER. I understand there is no exception in regard to letter-carriers, that this Act will apply to all?

Mr. LEMIEUX. All come under the same rule.

Mr. LANCASTER. As to the matter which my hon. friend has mentioned, I rather agree with my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) that the system in some of these post offices where the postmaster gets the gross sum and pays what he likes to the clerks is not fair to them. They naturally do not want to complain and lose their positions and yet they do not know what their rights are and do not get their rights. I know that a great many are underpaid and I believe that something should be done to see that these postmasters who get the gross sum are at least required to pay according to some rule so that there will be some check upon the amount they pay these men who do all the work in these offices. In most cases the postmaster does nothing but the bossing and the receiving of the salary. The laborious part of the work is done by these men who have to take what he chooses to give them or else give up the work entirely.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am satisfied that if the Postmaster General will investigate the conditions in the towns having a population of 5,000 and up to 12,000, he will find in many instances that the clerks who are working in these offices get a mere pittance for the amount of labour they do. I would ask the Postmaster General, when he comes to discuss the Bill in committee, if he would be good enough to explain why the cost of the delivery of the mail and of general postal facilities in the Yukon was $127,000 while the income from all sources apparently in that country only amounted to about $14,000 and whether the increased amount will be paid to the civil servants in that part of the country. I would also ask him to be good enough to explain, when the Bill is in committee, why it is that in the city of Montreal the contingent expenses last year amounted to $52,000 and in Ottawa to $60,000, while in Hamilton they only amounted to $4,000, London $5,000, Halifax $2,000, Quebec $5,000, Toronto $29,000 and Winnipeg $17,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Without going into details, but speaking from memory as regards the Yukon, from the beginning of the establishment of the postal service in that far away district, the amount has always been the same. The revenue is somewhat limited, more limited now than it was during the rush period because the population has decreased as my hon. friend is well aware. But the reason why it costs so much money is on account of the distance and the difficulties in performing the service. We have to pay what I call an enormous amount of subsidy to one railway company. That railway company practically ties the hands of the government because it has the only railway between Whitehorse and Skagway. Between Skagway and Dawson again there is only one steamship company on the lakes in summer and in winter that same company performs the sleigh service. If the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Congdon) were in his seat he would inform my hon. friend that what can be purchased for one dollar in this section of the country costs $5 or $6 in that district. My hon. friend referred to the amount paid for contingencies in the Montreal post office, for instance. We have been obliged to employ a somewhat greater number of men in Montreal than in Toronto, although the revenue of the Toronto post office is higher than that of Montreal. In Montreal the ocean mail is made up for the different parts of the country and as there is more mail for the west than for the east we require a larger force there. My hon. friend may rest assured that we do not overload the service in Montreal. On the contrary, I resist as much as possible demands made by the Montreal postmaster and by his very able assistant.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That should not apply to Ottawa.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Well, hitherto men have been presumably employed in the Ottawa post office and paid out of contingencies when as a matter of fact they were working in the inside service. That of course would be remedied by the new Act.

Mr. MACDONELL. Are the railway mail clerks affected by this Bill?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No. This is a year of retrenchment and we must provide for the most—I will not say the most deserving—but we must provide for the most appealing cases first. I freely admit that the railway mail clerk performs very arduous duties and has many difficulties to encounter especially that of securing insurance owing to the hazarduous nature of his employment. He enters the service at a salary of $400 per year for the first six months and then he gets $500 a year in addition to his mileage of one cent per mile in the night time and half a cent per mile in the day time. He increases rapidly until he gets $1,200 salary in addition to his mileage. That is a fairly good salary. I do not say it is an extraordinary salary or that the railway mail clerk is not deserving of more, but in view of the retrenchment we are practising this year I thought we should take the most deserving cases first. I have received several delegations from the railway mail clerks during the last two or three years and I may say that they have my warm sympathy. When the proper time comes I will see that they receive not cold justice but warm justice.

Mr. RUSSELL. How long is it since the railway mail clerks had their salaries increased?

Mr. LEMIEUX. In 1903, when Sir Wm. Mulock was Postmaster General. My hon. friend must remember that they reach a maximum of $1,200 a year in addition to their mileage so that some of them receive $1,800 a year. I recognize however that they have to perform difficult and arduous duties.

Mr. BARR. What has the population of a town got to be so that the clerks in the post office are paid directly by the government and not by the postmasters out of their revenue? In many cases these postmasters put boys and girls into the post office and give them hardly enough to live on. In many of these small towns the postmaster receives quite a large income out of which he has to pay two or three clerks but he gives them so little that he cannot secure persons capable of doing the work and consequently the public service suffers.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is no fixed departmental rule but the custom of late years has been to put on a semi-staff basis the offices which have approximately an annual revenue ranging between $20,000 and $25,000. In some cases places with a small population will contribute more to the postal revenue than others where the population is larger so that population cannot be taken as a test, I have received representations on this matter, especially from the members from Essex and the member for Brant and it is under the very serious consideration of the department. Some postmasters are really not acting as they should, because they receive a very nice salary and they under pay their clerks. The representations under that head have been so strong that the department intends to put an end to the grievance.

Mr. BARR. I hope the hon. minister will not forget that matter, because it is very important and very urgent. In many cases postmasters who receive a large enough salary to enable them to pay their assistants a fair remuneration, pay them as low as $200 a year and sometimes less. The result is that the public is not served as it should be. The government should look into that matter without delay.

Mr. BRADBURY. I want to congratulate the minister on bringing down this Bill and doing this measure of justice, even though it is a little late. I wish to draw his attention to the fact that the cost of living in a city like Winnipeg is at least 25 per cent greater than it is in a city like Ottawa, and I ask him if he is making any provision for giving the Manitoba letter-carriers a greater increase than those in Montreal or Ottawa, so as to put them on an equal footing.

Mr. LEMIEUX. We do recognize the fact that the cost of living is higher in the west than in the east, and every year a provisional allowance is voted and paid pro rata to all our employees in the west, including Winnipeg.

Mr. BRADBURY. One other point I wish to refer to. There are in Winnipeg a number of men who do not come in under the old Act, and I think it would be a great hardship if the door were now closed upon them, and they were prevented from coming in under the new classification.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think the railway mail clerks are as much entitled to an increase as the other civil servants. Their work is of a dangerous character and they require to be clerks of a superior class. It is some six or seven years since they have had an increase, and I think they are now entitled to a flat increase of $150 or at least $100 a year. I would ask the minister to consider their case before he brings in a Bill.

Resolution reported, read the first and the second time and agreed to.

Mr. LEMIEUX moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 136) to amend the Post Office Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. LEMIEUX moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 137), to amend The Civil Service Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—THE MAYES AFFIDAVIT.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. J. W. DANIEL (St. John city). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I deem it my duty to bring before the House a subject which is of great importance, one in which a great deal of interest has been taken and which has excited a great deal of curiosity as to what was to be the outcome. I refer to statements which were made in October last publicly in the city of St. John, in an affidavit of Mr. Gershon S. Mayes, a contractor of that city. That affidavit was read by the premier of the province of New Brunswick in a very large and crowded mass meeting of citizens during the election contest then taking place.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that this question has been discussed already in a previous sitting, and I am not quite sure whether the hon. gentleman can bring it up now without reviving a previous debate.

Mr. DANIEL. When this matter was referred to in the House before, you distinctly stated, Mr. Speaker, that it was out of order. If it was out of order then, surely it is in order now.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am not saying that it is out of order. I am simply asking the House whether it can be discussed now without reviving a previous debate.

Mr. FOSTER. What is your ruling?

Mr. SPEAKER. I want to see in what way it is to be brought up.

Mr. DANIEL. I propose to offer a resolution, and one that I think will be quite in order. I had hoped that the government itself would have thought this matter to be of sufficient importance for themselves to have taken it up in the same way that they took action in the Hodgins matter last year. In order to refresh the memory of hon. members, I may state that on the 24th day of April, 1908, the Right Hon. the Prime Minister stated in this House that he had received from Mr. Parent, the chairman of the Transcontinental Railway Commission, the following papers, which he desired to lay before the House. The first was a letter from Mr. Parent, addressed to the Prime Minister, in which Mr. Parent says:

> A letter from Major Hodgins, lately our district engineer in northern Ontario, has been given wide publicity in the press, namely, by the Manitoba 'Free Press' and the Ottawa 'Morning Citizen,' where it was commented on. There are insinuations and statements in it that should not be allowed to pass unanswered. Without laying any specific charges, Major Hodgins makes vague, general accusations that are absolutely groundless. It is plain that the object in view is to cause us annoyance without any regard to truth or public interest.

Then, Mr. Parent goes on and concludes as follows:

> In conclusion the commissioners would respectfully request, as they do not wish to remain under the aspersions which such reports pass on them, that the whole matter be referred to and looked into by a committee of the House and that Major Hodgins be assigned to appear before the same and repeat his charges in a specific manner in order to substantiate them if he can.

The action taken by the right hon. the Prime Minister on that letter consisted in his moving the following resolution on the 27th of April, a few days later:

That the memorandum of the chairman of the Transcontinental Commissioners to the Prime Minister dated 23rd of April and laid on the table the 24th of August and the papers accompanying the same be referred to a special committee of five members with instructions to investigate the matters and charges therein mentioned and that the said committee be composed of ..... and that they have power to send for persons, papers and reports.

They were afterwards given power to examine witnesses under oath. That is the action which I thought the government would have taken in this case, for it appears to me that the two cases are on all fours, with this exception that what Major Hodgins did was simply to write a letter containing statements which Mr. Parent thought were not true, reflecting on himself and his co-commissioners, and therefore should be investigated. In that case there was simply a letter written by Major Hodgins, but in the case I am now referring to we have the solemn declaration or affidavit of Mr. Mayes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend assert that there is an affidavit and has he got it?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, I have it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would my hon. friend be good enough to allow me to read it while he is speaking.

Mr. DANIEL. I propose to read it and then have it laid before this committee.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If there be an affidavit, I shall be glad to have it laid on the table.

Mr. DANIEL. I shall read it. It is as follows:

I, Gershon S. Mayes, of the parish of Lancaster, in the city and county of St. John, in the province of New Brunswick, contractor, do solemnly declare:—That on the 1st of September, 1905, on the advice of the Hon. Wm. Pugsley, then Attorney General of the province of New Brunswick, and now Minister of Public Works of Canada, I had a conversation with Mr. Geo. McAvity, of the city of St. John, in the said province, merchant, relative to tenders for dredging which was then to be done in the harbour of St. John by the Public Works Department of Canada, of which the Hon. C. S. Hyman was then minister. Mr. McAvity proposed that I should go to Ottawa on Monday, the 4th of September, as he was going, and he would meet me up there at the Russell on the 5th inst. We did meet according to appointment. Mr. McAvity wanted to know what price I wanted. I told him I had tendered in June for 50 cents per cubic yard. He said, why not ask 55 cents and give him (McAvity) 5 cents per yard or 10 per cent. I said, why not do as we talked of at St. John, which was that he should go in with me and take one-quarter or one-half the cost of the dredge and receive his proportion of the profits. He said, yes, he could do that when he got home and might put $10,000 to $20,000 into it and perhaps get some friends in it with him, but for the present he would go in on a percentage basis and would see Hyman right away. Well, I said, what would I do about financing it and what was he going to do to help me. Oh, he said, you can easily arrange with the banks; no trouble at all when you have got the contract. We went to see Mr. Hyman at 2.30 p.m. McAvity went in and I stayed outside. I had told McAvity to arrange if possible to have at least 400,000 yards to dredge. Mr. McAvity came out and got me to go in, and I explained to Mr. Hyman the difficulty of bringing a big plant and only dredging a small quantity. Mr. Hyman agreed to see that if I got the contract—that is if I was the lowest tenderer—I should receive 400,000 yards. Afterwards McAvity said I had better arrange an agreement. I said why not wait until we get back to St. John to hear whether my tender has been accepted or not. He said he had a copy of the agreement all ready. I said, how did he get it? He said, oh, they were all ready here. I then read it over and told him it was all one-sided; I was to do the work, he was to get the profit. Well, he said, what do you want me to do? I told him I still thought he should be financially interested he and his friends, to the extent of some $20,000 or $30,000 at least, that it was a long back load for me to carry. Oh, he said as before, the banks would help me and wait until I got home. No, I said, I have got to go right to Boston and close a contract with the dredge-owners. Well, he said, better sign the agreement. No, I said, he should be bound to do something. He said for me to write something at the bottom and he would sign it. I said I was not a lawyer. Oh, go ahead, he said, and I wrote what came to me and he signed it.

The next day I was informed by Mr. Hyman that my tender was accepted, and months afterwards I learned that mine was the only tender received. The engineer of the department wrote me a letter giving 400,000 yards to be done, and I left for Boston via Montreal and afterwards secured a dredge and brought her to St. John.

I want now to say——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Better go on reading the affidavit.

Mr. DANIEL. I want to say specially to the Minister of Public Works——

Mr. PUGSLEY. I'd sooner you would read it just as it is.

Mr. DANIEL. This affidavit as typewritten had '1907' in it. That was a mistake, and I will put it as it ought to have been, '1905.' I may say that I was present at the meeting at which this affidavit was read by Mr. Hazen. He read it as he had it before him, the figure being '1907.' But he evidently saw that the date was wrong, as he turned to Mr. Mayes, who was sitting behind him on the platform—I myself being on the same platform only about ten feet from both of them, and asked Mr. Mayes: 'What is that date?' Mr. Mayes told him it was 1905, and repeated it. Mr. Hazen then read it '1905.' As I have said, I was present and know exactly what I am talking about.

Mr. PUGSLEY. All I am asking is that the affidavit shall be read as it was sworn to.

Mr. DANIEL. I am going to read it exactly as it is now, as that figure has since been changed, and the whole affidavit re-sworn to. So, I intend to read it as Mr. Hazen read it on the night of October 12. It was re-sworn to on March 24 last.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Some four months after it was read at the meeting.

Mr. DANIEL (reading):

On October 15, 1905, I received a telephone message from Dr. Pugsley, asking me to call and see him next day, which I did. He said, 'Mr. Mayes I am in need of money, and it would be nice if you could help me.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. I desire now formally to take objection to my hon. friend reading any statements reflecting on myself——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PUGSLEY. One moment, please. I invoke the rule of order which was invoked by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) not many days since in this House. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), as hon. members will recollect, made the statement 'I have never had anything to do with the manipulation of trust funds.' My hon. friend from North Toronto took that as an intimation that, at some time or other, he had been charged with manipulating trust funds, holding it to be a reflection upon his character or as something unpleasant and offensive with regard to him, and that being the ruling of Your Honour, my right hon. friend the Prime Minister very properly withdrew the observation he had made—or, rather, the question he had asked. Now I was perfectly willing that my hon. friend from the city of St. John (Mr. Daniel) should read the affidavit as it was read by Mr. Hazen at the public meeting previous to the election in St. John, and as it was published throughout the Conservative press of Canada. But an affidavit purporting to reflect upon me, which was made months after that affidavit was read at the public meeting, being, as the hon. gentleman said, altered and re-sworn to—that affidavit I do object to being read as relating to myself. If the hon. gentleman will read the original affidavit as it was read at the meeting, I am more than willing. I have asked for it, have inquired for it in different directions, but have never been able to have it produced.

Mr. SPROULE. Before you rule upon that point, Mr. Speaker—if you must give a ruling upon it—I would draw attention to the fact that the hon. minister (Mr. Pugsley) objects to this affidavit because it comes from outside and reflects upon the honour and integrity of a member of this House. But if we suppose—and I do not know as to this—that the reading of this ends with a direct charge, that charge must be substantiated by some evidence, and, even though that evidence comes from outside, it is allowable here, and it is within the right of a member to read it and make the charge.

Mr. PUGSLEY. With the permission of the House, I would speak one word in reply. If my hon. friend from the city of St. John (Mr. Daniel) or any other member of this House desires to make a charge against me, and to take the responsibility of making it, he is at liberty to do so, and I shall welcome any such charge. But he must take the responsibility as a member of this House, and must take the consequences which devolve upon a member—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But, by the rules of this House, which, as I have said, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) invoked the other day, and invoked successfully, the hon. member (Mr. Daniel) cannot read a statement, whether made under oath or otherwise, by a person outside of this House reflecting upon a fellow member——

Mr. DANIEL. Before you decide the question, Mr. Speaker, I may be permitted a word. The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) has just stated that he is perfectly willing that I should read this affidavit as it was read by Mr. Hazen on October 24. I may tell you, Sir, that that is exactly what I have been doing and am doing. Under these circumstances, I consider that you have nothing to decide, for there is no request for me to do anything other than I am doing.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What I said I was willing to have done was that the hon. gentleman should read the affidavit as it was sworn to by Mr. Mayes——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, as sworn to by Mr. Mayes. It is the affidavit read by Mr. Hazen and published throughout Canada that I want read, if any is to be read.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the hon. minister (Mr. Pugsley) remember that some time ago in this House I was proceeding to read that affidavit, as it was published, and he objected.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all. In that case, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) did not profess to have the affidavit, but read from the newspaper report.

Mr. CROCKET. On that occasion, I was asked by the minister to read from these newspaper publications, and I proceeded to do so, but, when I reached some statements that, if true, involved the minister in a corrupt transaction, he took objection to it, and I was stopped from reading, notwithstanding that my first reading was—

Mr. PUGSLEY. Very properly so, too.

Mr. SPEAKER. I presume it will be admitted by both sides, that, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Daniel) intends to conclude with a motion asking that certain matters be referred to a committee for investigation, it is perfectly regular for him to read the document in question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is the motion? We should know.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have not seen the motion, but I take the hon. member's word for it that he will conclude with such a motion. Would the hon. member (Mr. Daniel) have any objection to my seeing the motion?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly not; I have much pleasure in sending it to you, Mr. Speaker. I maintain that I am in my right in reserving the reading of the motion——

Mr. SPEAKER. I took the hon. gentleman's word for it, and in asking if he would let me see the motion, I was only seeking to clear up the misunderstanding.

Mr. DANIEL. I have no objection. (reading):

On October 15, 1905, I received a telephone message from Dr. Pugsley——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DANIEL. I believe I am quite in order. (reading):

—asking me to call and see him next day, which I did. He said, 'Mr. Mayes, I am in need of money and it would be nice if you could help me.' I said——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is an expression of opinion. 'That in the opinion of this House.' I think there is a misunderstanding of the matter. The motion reads:

That in the opinion of this House, in view of the serious character of the matters aforesaid, the allegations contained in the said solemn declaration and all relevant matters touching the said dredging contract ought to be referred to a committee of this House to inquire into, to investigate the same and to report thereon in order that the truth or falsity of the said allegations may be determined; and that any public moneys improperly paid out in connection with the said dredging contract, may be recovered and restored to the public treasury.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Of course, that is not making any charge against the Minister of Public Works. I have turned up the journals of the House of 1891 where I find that the then member for Montmorency, Mr. Tarte, made a charge against the Minister of Public Works at that time, but he made it on his responsibility as a member of the House. So I do not think, under the circumstances, that the hon. member can read the words of the affidavit on this motion, though I am prepared to hear further remarks on that point.

Mr. FOSTER. All my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) is doing is what has been done a multitude of times in this House, and will be done a multitude of times hereafter, that is, after having gathered certain information, having that information in hand, believing that information is vital, in the exercise of his public duties, he wishes to bring that information before the House and ask that a committee be appointed by the House to investigate it. That is what he is doing, and what he has a perfect right to do, and it seems to me that there is no possible rule of order that can keep him from doing it. Upon what does he form his request for a committee? If he had got up and said nothing and asked that a committee be appointed to investigate nothing, it would be perfectly absurd. He has to lay a basis for his demand that a committee be appointed, and that basis is this affidavit, with numerous other circumstances which he is bringing in, and upon which he is forming his motion, that is the foundation. Do you mean to say, Mr. Speaker, that he cannot bring in these affidavits, these statements, these facts that have come to him, and upon which he wishes to formulate his motion? He must have something upon which to formulate his motion. I think, Mr. Speaker, with all due deference to the Chair, that there is a vital difference between his position and the position of a man making a charge against a minister. What we are asking for to-day is a committee of this House to investigate what we declare to be certain facts. These facts are made up of various ingredients, amongst them is what is contained in the affidavit of Mr. Gershon S. Mayes; therefore, we are simply doing what we have done a hundred times in this House, and what I think we will do a hundred times yet. The idea that I cannot make a motion, cannot lay my information before this House and ask that a committee be appointed, is new to me in parliamentary practice; I cannot see any reason in it at all. Now, the Minister of Public Works says that this is a matter which reflects upon himself. That can hardly be avoided. If he, whether as Minister of Public Works or not, has been a person in connection with the business that is referred to in this affidavit——

Mr. PUGSLEY. This was two years before I was Minister of Public Works.

Mr. FOSTER. That makes no difference. If it was two years before the hon. gentleman was Minister of Public Works or became a member of this House, then it is all the more reason for saying that there is no reflection upon him as a member of this House. But what is my hon. friend going to move; what is he going to read? He is going to read from that affidavit of Mr. Gershon S. Mayes. Mr. Mayes says, and he swears to it, that in 1905 he met the Hon. Wm. Pugsley, who at that time was not a member of this House, that certain conversations took place between him and Mr. Pugsley. Does that reflect upon the Minister of Public Works? The affidavit goes on to say that he asked that a sum of money be given to him. He then replies that he does not owe him any money. Then he says that in 1905 the Hon. Wm. Pugsley said to him: 'It would be nice for you to have some one at Ottawa.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I ask the hon. gentleman to take back that statement which he has made.

Mr. FOSTER. What do you want me to take back?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman is taking advantage of his position as a member when he professes to give what is contained in this affidavit, this re-written this revised affidavit. Before your honour has ruled that that affidavit itself can be read, he is professing to give what is in the affidavit before the affidavit is read. His language certainly does reflect upon me, because he is proceeding to make a statement that I wanted money; that in some way, in connection with Mr. Mayes, I asked for money. Now, if that is not reflecting upon me, why does he want a committee to investigate whether that statement is true or false? Because this committee is asked to investigate all the statements of this affidavit, not those which relate merely to the dredging contract, but as to what took place between Mr. Mayes and myself, when Mr. Mayes was my client, when I was his counsel, and when relations between us were confidential.

Mr. FOSTER. I had no intention whatever of being unfair to my hon. friend. I have not been unfair to him, and I am sure when he thinks it over he will not say that I stated that he asked for money. The question before the House is as to what may be read. The trouble is that the Speaker proposes to give a ruling on an affidavit which my hon. friend wants to read before he has read it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But he is telling what is in the affidavit.

Mr. FOSTER. I am trying to elucidate the point by saying that what is to be read from the affidavit is what I have stated.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That you cannot do.

Mr. FOSTER. Why not?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The question is whether the affidavit should be read or not, and as long as that question is in issue, the hon. gentleman cannot be allowed to state what is in it.

Mr. FOSTER. Then you are asking the Speaker to rule as to whether an affidavit may be read or not when the Speaker does not know what it is, and no body else knows it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The question is whether a motion is in order which asks for an investigation, and whether this affidavit can be read into the motion. If the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) has done what has been done in previous cases, taken the responsibility of making a charge against the Minister of Public Works, there could be no question at all. But he has not done so; therefore, it is a question for the Speaker to decide.

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for St. John has the floor.

Mr. HUGHES. It is always in order to raise the point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for St. John wishes to answer the remarks of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. DANIEL. I can hardly understand the objection which the Minister of Public Works makes to this affidavit being read, even though, as he states, it accuses him of something of which he is absolutely guiltless. The very resolution which we are asking for to appoint a committee to investigate these things will give that gentleman an opportunity of showing the falsity of these things and of sending the information in regard to them all over this country. Certainly, if the minister wants anything I should think he would want to have himself absolutely cleared of these suspicions. If there is one gentleman in this House——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DANIEL—who ought to ask for a committee of investigation is is the hon. Minister of Public Works. It is a small matter to me, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry to have to be the one to bring this up but some body has to bring it up. I am well acquainted with and I am friendly with every one who is interested in this matter and I would much rather that the duty had fallen upon any body else to bring this matter before the House than myself. But, you, Mr. Speaker, will have to decide this matter. I believe I am absolutely in order in reading this affidavit which has been spread broadcast through this country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was not. It was spread broadcast in another form altogether.

Mr. DANIEL. I am making no charge against my hon. friend—none whatever. The charges, whatever they are, have already been made. I am presenting this to the House. The Prime Minister presented the statement of Major Hodgins to this House as if that were a subject to be investigated. I say this is quite as important a subject to be investigated.

Mr. CONMEE. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DANIEL. I would expect, Mr. Speaker, that you would rule in favour of this matter going on.

Mr. HUGHES. In discussing the point of order I would like to say that the hon. the Speaker has pointed to a case that occurred some years ago. A thousand cases occurring on the same basis as that which Mr. Speaker has cited would have no bearing on this case whatever. The mere fact that Mr. Tarte, at that time member for Montmorency, made a specific charge against a member has no bearing on this case whatever. The two cases are on an entirely different basis. It is moved that an inquiry into the Public Works Department should be extended to the public works of this country, to the misspending of public money and if the present Minister of Public Works, then not a member of this House, has been brought into it in any way, no statement that can be made in this affidavit can in any sense reflect upon the present Minister of Public Works in his capacity as Minister of Public Works or as a member of this House, and as far as I understand no objection can be taken by the minister on the ground of the reading of this affidavit. This is merely an inquiry the same as the inquiry which took place not long since into the Department of Marine and Fisheries along similar lines.

Mr. LENNOX. I think it would be wise that we should thoroughly understand this matter before we have your ruling upon it, in order to see just exactly what it involves. There is a good deal more at issue than the mere question that appears on the surface at this moment. It is the conduct of public business in this House. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is responsible for that more than any body else. I listened to what he said a few moments ago about a charge being made against a Minister of the Crown or against a member of this House. I do not understand that the hon. gentleman who brings forward this matter is making any charge whatever against the conduct of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). I do not understand it so and I have some reason to know about the situation of this matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why should he read false paragraphs in an affidavit regarding myself?

Mr. LENNOX. If the hon. gentleman will possess his soul in patience for a moment or two I will endeavour, as far as I can, to show why he should read the affidavit and why it is the duty of the members of this House to present such matters before the House and have them investigated. At the city of St. John a solemn declaration was made and was read at a public meeting—a solemn declaration having the force and effect of an oath. It made grave reflections against a minister of the Crown—not, as I understand, against his conduct while he was a minister of the Crown here, but against him as a public man.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The affidavit as sworn to reflects upon me as a minister.

Mr. LENNOX. That became known to the public. At the time that the affidavit was read the minister says that it contained the date 1907. Put it that way and read it that way and much more reason is there for having the matter investigated because it would then contain an explicit charge against a minister of the Crown. We have a statement of the hon. gentleman who is about to move this resolution as to what the facts were at that time. We have a solemn declaration—it matters not whether it was read as 1905 or 1907—which reflects very gravely upon the conduct of a public man in the city of St. John.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw that statement.

Mr. LENNOX. I cannot withdraw it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman must withdraw it.

Mr. LENNOX. I cannot withdraw it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No member of this House has the right to say that an affidavit is about to be read which reflects in the gravest manner upon a member of this House.

Mr. SPROULE. He has a perfect right to say so.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is as offensive a statement as possibly can be made with regard to a member of this House and I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw that statement.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LENNOX. I like to fight my own battles out. I have made no reflection upon a minister of the Crown.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I ask you to withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) knows the rule.

Mr. LENNOX. Certainly, I know the rule.

Mr. SPEAKER. Rule 19 provides that no offensive words may be used against another member. The rule contains these words

Nor use offensive words against either House, or against any member thereof.

Mr. LENNOX. We do not need the rule, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr LENNOX. If I had used any offensive word against any minister of the Crown or against any member of the House, I would be willing to withdraw it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw that statement.

Mr. LENNOX. I never made that statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LENNOX. If the Speaker says that I have made any offensive statement reflecting upon the minister I will immediately withdraw it but I shall want to know what the words are that I am to withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think that I understood the words of the hon. member.

Mr. LENNOX. I have not made any reflection whatever upon the minister in any shape or form. I accepted as a fact the statement which the minister has repeated time and again in this House that the affidavit or solemn declaration was read in the city of St. John. I am telling you, as a matter of fact, that the solemn declaration was read at a public meeting in the city of St. John, and I am telling you as a fact, as the minister has told you time and again, that that was put forward as a statement against him.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will my hon. friend pardon me for a moment, what I said was that the affidavit as read in St. John by Mr. Hazen at this public meeting, and which was circulated throughout Canada, charged me with having, in the year 1907, when I was Minister of Public Works, received certain moneys from a contractor. Now, then, the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) said that he was going to read a new and revised affidavit and what the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) said was that he was about to read an affidavit which reflected in the gravest possible manner upon the Minister of Public Works. That is the statement of the hon. gentleman. Those are the words he used. My hon. friend must see that he is offensive.

Mr. DANIEL. I might remark, Mr. Speaker, that the resolution before you.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I ask that the statement be withdrawn.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I ask that the hon. gentleman withdraw those words.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman has used offensive words I think they would be withdrawn.

Mr. LENNOX. If Mr. Speaker will tell me what offensive words I used I will be most desirous to withdraw them.

Mr. SPEAKER. The words complained of, as I understand, referred to an affidavit which has not yet been read to the House, but which it is said reflects on an hon. member.

Mr. LENNOX. The statement I have made——

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. member denies having used the words that is an end of it.

Mr. LENNOX. I certainly say I made no reflection on the minister.

Mr. CONMEE. That is evading the question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LENNOX. I took the statement of the minister himself.

Mr. CONMEE. Why not have the words read?

Mr. LENNOX. I took the statement of the minister himself that there was an affidavit read in the city of St. John in reference to a transaction which is said to have taken place in 1907.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. And that a declaration had been made and was read at a public meeting in the city of St. John, and that declaration which was presented at that time is here in the House of Commons today.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No; it is a new one altogether.

Mr. LENNOX. That declaration that was read in St. John that night is here in the House of Commons to-day, and the date has been amended and it has been re-sworn.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend is wrong about that.

Some hon. MEMBERS Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am asking my hon. friend now to withdraw the statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have the floor.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is customary to allow a Minister of the Crown to explain to the House anything that the House has an interest in knowing.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sure the hon. gentleman from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) misunderstands me. What I did say was that the declaration as read at a public meeting at St. John, and which declared that in 1907 I received moneys from a contractor, did reflect upon me as Minister of Public Works.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is all he says.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, that is not what my hon. friend said. That declaration has been changed. My hon. friend says it has been re-sworn. That makes it a new declaration. Now, what my hon. friend says is that the declaration which the member from St. John is about to read reflects in the gravest way upon a minister.

Mr. LENNOX. No.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is what the hon. gentleman said, and I ask him to withdraw it.

Mr. LENNOX. You are begging the question.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend says he did not say that, then it is another matter.

Mr. LENNOX. I say I did not say it, and I am surprised that the minister thought so. Now let me proceed. The fact is that the minister states a declaration was made and a declaration was read which reflected upon him, and it is proposed now to lay that declaration before this House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. To lay another declaration before the House.

Mr. LENNOX. You can read the date as 1907 or you can read it as 1905, which ever you like.

Mr. TALBOT. It makes a big difference.

Mr. CONMEE. It is an accommodation.

Mr. LENNOX. It is neither an accommodation train nor an express train.

An hon. MEMBER. It is a special.

Mr. CONMEE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LENNOX. Order.

Mr. CONMEE. I rise to a point of order in regard to the hon. gentleman's remarks. The hon. gentleman has made reference to a special train and an election train.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CONMEE. Now, if the hon. gentleman will say that he did not intend his remarks to refer to me——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. LENNOX. I did.

Mr. CONMEE. If he says he did not refer to me I can perhaps allow him to proceed.

Mr. LENNOX. I intended my remarks to refer to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee).

Mr. CONMEE. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he did intend his remarks to refer to me?

Mr. LENNOX. Yes.

Mr. CONMEE. Then I want him to withdraw them. Some hon. gentlemen in this House, and he is not the first, have been rather amused about a special train.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. CONMEE. Excuse me I have the floor and I know when to stop.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Simcoe has the floor unless the hon. member for Rainy River rises to a point of order. Do I understand the hon. member for Rainy River to ask that certain words be withdrawn?

Mr. CONMEE. Yes, I have asked that.

Mr. LENNOX. I will be very glad to have the Speaker's ruling on the matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not see that the words used are unparliamentary.

Mr. CONMEE. Well——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I repeat the ruling I gave the other evening; the words may be open to an inference but I cannot draw the inference.

Mr. CONMEE. But, Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CONMEE. Just one moment please.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. TALBOT. Make him explain what he meant.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We should try to proceed with some dignity—

Mr. LENNOX. I think so too.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. For my part I do not believe that my hon. friend from Simcoe intended to be offensive to my hon. friend from Rainy River, but if he did I would ask him to withdraw.

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Speaker has ruled upon that question so that the right hon. gentleman is out of order. Now, what I wanted to say in reference to this matter is, that there is no attempt by any hon. gentleman on this side of the House, so far as I know, to make any insinuations or reflections upon the Minister of Public Works either as a private citizen or as a public man. But I do understand that a grave reflection—probably wrongfully—has been, by a certain declaration which the hon. minister refers to, cast upon a public man in the Dominion parliament, namely the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And which was admitted to be false.

Mr. LENNOX. No hon. gentleman on this side, so far as I understand it, will hesitate if we get fair-play upon this side of the House, to take the statement of the minister as to a matter of fact, but in the meantime a grave public scandal has been circulated in reference to a Minister of the Crown, and the object of my hon. friend, as I understand him, in moving this motion is that that matter being a matter of public interest shall be investigated. And what we want to know is: does the First Minister desire or does the Minister of Public Works desire that this thing shall be throttled and shut out, or shall we have a public investigation?

Mr. W. NORTHRUP (West Hastings). It seems to me we are wandering a little afield in this lengthy discussion. The motion before the House is that Mr. Speaker should leave the chair for the House to into committee of supply and there is no better understood constitutional principle that on such a motion the people should have a right to air their grievances and that the members of this House have the right to say anything within the bounds of parliamentary propriety at such a time. Whether or not a motion is to be made is a matter of utter indifference. It is true that in this case the hon. gentleman who intends to make a motion has put the motion in the hands of Mr. Speaker, but that after all is a matter of private courtesy between the member and Mr. Speaker. The question is whether or not the hon. member who had the floor was out of order when the point of order was raised by the Minister of Public Works. In fact two points of order were raised, one by the Minister of Public Works and one by the leader of the House. The point taken by the Minister of Public Works, as I understand it, is, that there was something that would contravene rule 19, not in what was about to be said but in what had been said by the hon. member. I submit that rule 19 has no application to the future; it applies only to the present or the past. If a member uses objectionable language, he can be called to order after he has used it; but there is no power of foresight given to the Speaker or to a minister to enable him to foretell what a member is about to say. Therefore an objection, to be in order, must have reference to something that has already been said. The right hon. gentleman who leads the House raised the point whether or not an affidavit could be read. I venture to think that the right hon. gentleman would hardly discuss that question. Every member of this House will admit that an affidavit can be read. It might be of such an utterly improper character that it should not be read, and a member might be called to order for reading it; but that it could be read is, I submit, beyond question. What is the rule to which reference has been made?

No member shall use offensive words against either House or against any member thereof.

That is plain language. It is along the same lines as the law that forbids individuals outside of this House under the pains and penalties of the law to use offensive language against their fellows, for fear it might lead to a breach of the peace. So in this House members are not to use offensive language towards each other for fear that, not a breach of the peace, but a breach of decorum might ensue. What is the meaning of offensive language? Let us assume that a judge sitting on the bench had solemnly given utterance to a judgment which reflected most severely on a member of this House or on a minister. Surely in such a case it could not be said that a member of this House was using offensive words against the member or minister in question if he merely, in the face of the House, read that judgment. Words uttered by a member of this House, as expressing his opinion of another member, would be offensive and out of order; but if a member quoted from a judgment of a judge of the Supreme Court, it is clear that he would not be using offensive words within the meaning of the rule. The only question would be whether he was quoting truly or not. Mr. Justice Cassels in his report, reflected in very strong terms on the administration of several departments, and we know that the head of each department is responsible for the administration of his department. Any member of this House who quoted from the report of Mr. Justice Cassels was, according to the opinion of the Minister of Public Works, using offensive language towards the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The report was before parliament.

Mr. NORTHRUP. What difference does that make? The question is the construction of rule 19, and it says nothing about anything being before parliament. In one sense every word uttered in this House to show that hon. gentlemen opposite are not doing their duty may be considered offensive to them; but surely that is not what is meant. If the ruling of the Minister of Public Works now asks for were sustained by the Chair, what would be the result? No judgment or report of a Royal Commission, or a judge could be referred to in this House by any hon. member except under pains and penalties. Therefore, I submit that when the hon. Minister of Public Works raises the point that the language which the hon. member for St. John was using was out of order, his objection could only apply to the particular words or clause then read, because any objection of that kind must be taken instanter, or it does not hold. The Speaker can only deal with the particular words uttered, and as soon as they are disposed of, the hon. member for St. John can proceed to read the next clause of the affidavit, and the objection to each clause must be threshed out in that way; unless the Speaker decides that there is something in the affidavit which would be improper to be read, and therefore does not allow it to be read.

Mr. CONMEE. I think the House understood the hon. member for St. John to state that it was his intention not only to read the affidavit, but to present a motion to the House. The reply from the Chair was to the effect that if it was the hon. member's intention to follow the reading of the affidavit with a motion, the affidavit might be read. But when the motion went to the Chair, my recollection is that the Speaker's words were that it was not a motion of the character to which the hon. member had referred.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. CONMEE. There is where the issue stands at present, as I understand it. The motion contains no charge; it is not a motion of the character which the hon. member for St. John stated that he was going to place before the House, and therefore if he read the affidavit, he would read it misleading the House as to the character of the motion he intended to introduce. That is the exact position he is in.

Mr. NORTHRUP.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will the hon. member for Rainy River tell the House what motion would be of such a character as to warrant the reading of the affidavit, if the motion in the hands of the Speaker is not?

Mr. CONMEE. The records of this House show a large number of such motions. One of them was referred to here to-day. Mr. Tarte made a motion charging the then Minister of Public Works on his responsibility as a member of the House. Mr. Edgar made a similar motion; Mr. Worthington and Mr. Lister made similar motions. Each one was made specifically by a member on his responsibility. They were of the character of a motion which any hon. gentleman opposite must take the responsibility of making if he wants to bring a charge against any member of this House. That is his privilege.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I understand that your ruling was——

Mr. SPEAKER. I have not ruled. I have only applied to the House, to the old parliamentarians here. I understand that the long standing custom is that no member of this House should lay any charge against a fellow member without assuming the responsibility for it. An affidavit may be read in the city of St. John, but it is a very different thing to read that affidavit in this House without assuming the responsibility therefor. It is on that point that I ask the advice of the House before giving my ruling.

Mr. DEVLIN. Mr. Speaker, as the matter stands now before the House, it would seem that the whole question is this: The hon. member for St. John wishes to place on record a certain document which he has in his possession purporting to be an affidavit of a certain individual in the city of St. John——

Mr. CROCKET. And which the Minister of Public Works asked him to read.

Mr. DEVLIN. I will come to that in a moment. That affidavit, from what knowlege we have been able to gather concerning the incident, deals with certain transactions between a certain Mr. Mayes, and the present Minister of Public Works, not as a minister nor as a member of parliament, but simply as an individual citizen of the city of St. John. The hon. Minister of Public Works tells us further that the affidavit deals with a case between himself and Mr. Mayes, who was then his client. The point to consider, it seems to me, is how far this parliament has the right to go into the conduct of individuals in this country, and to deal with them in this House. I can readily understand that this House would have the right to deal with a motion calling for a committee to investigate the conduct of a member of parliament or a minister of the Crown. But I think that this House has no right to inquire into the conduct of individuals before they become members of parliament. It may be argued that even if a man has committed some crime, he may afterwards lead an honourable life.

Some hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh——

Mr. DEVLIN. Suppose, for argument's sake, that hon. gentlemen opposite who are always finding something criminal, who are always ready to cast insinuations——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEVLIN. Hon. gentlemen opposite are always ready to call order when we speak of the insinuations they cast at their political opponents. In my opinion the matter now before the House is altogether out of order, and this House has no power to inquire into anything any hon. member may have done before he became a member of it, any more than we have a right to inquire into the conduct of any private individual.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to mention the fact that we have had several commissions of inquiry appointed on the basis of allegations read in this House regarding what took place outside of it. We always did that with regard to any member's right to sit in this House, when we desired to refer any such question to the Committee on Privileges and Election. In such cases, there were allegations made outside the House, on the strength of which we asked for the appointment of a commission to investigate and decide whether they were true or false. If they were true, the member in question had not the right to sit in this House. If they were false, he ought to be exonerated and his character vindicated. On exactly the same principle we are asking that a committee be appointed to inquire into the allegations made so as to determine whether they are true or false.

Mr. CROCKET. No hon. gentleman can seriously claim that it is not competent for this parliament to express an opinion on a matter which has become a grave public scandal. If the point of order raised by the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) should be sustained by you, Mr. Speaker, that would mean that the House of Commons had not the right to express an opinion upon such a matter as the one just referred to. We have heard the statement frequently made by hon. members that if a member of this House has any charge to make, he should make it from his seat. Does the Minister of Public Works claim there has not been a specific charge solemnly made against him as Minister of the Crown ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I say this; I say that at a great Conservative meeting held in the city of St. John, just before the elections, a charge of the gravest character was made against me. That charge was that I, when Minister of Public Works, had received money from a contractor. That charge was published broadcast throughout Canada, but it was afterwards withdrawn. What however the hon. member for St. John proposes to do is to read a new affidavit altogether, which professes to divulge certain things that took place between my client, Mr. Mayes, and myself, two years before I became a member of this House. I heard what my hon. friend began to read, and I declare that the statement he is making is false and he is bound to take my word that it is. Surely, it is absurd to say that no member of this House can rise in his place and make reflections on the character of another member with respect to circumstances dating back two or three years before he became a member, and yet maintain that he can do the same thing by reading the affidavit of some one who is not a member of this House ?

Mr. CROCKET. The Minister of Public Works has admitted that there was a grave charge made against him in St. John as Minister of Public Works——

Mr. PUGSLEY. And withdrawn since.

Mr. CROCKET. The hon. minister spoke of a mistake in the date of a certain interview he was alleged to have had with Mr. Mayes, but is he not aware that that affidavit in addition to that statement also alleged——

Some hon. MEMBER. Order.

Mr. CROCKET. I am asking the Minister of Public Works a question. I am asking him if he is not aware that that affidavit, in addition to the statement——

Some hon. MEMBER. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I rise to a point of order. I have said that I will make no objection to having the affidavit read, word for word, as it was read at that public meeting in St. John. I am quite willing that the original affidavit should be read.

Mr. DANIEL. Then I will go on with the affidavit.

Mr. SPEAKER. Do I understand that the point of order is not insisted on ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The point of order is insisted on, but I say that if my hon. friend will produce and read the original affidavit, sworn to by Mr. Mayes, which was read at that public meeting, and lay it on the table I shall not object to his doing so.

Mr. DANIEL. That is what I have been trying to do the last half hour. If the minister were as anxious to have that affidavit read as he says he is, we should have been through with this matter half an hour ago. I hold in my hand the very affidavit which was read by Mr. Hazen—the original affidavit——

Mr. PUGSLEY. What date? The affidavit sworn to in October, 1908, is the affidavit I want read.

Mr. DANIEL. He said: 'Mr. Mayes, I am in need of money——'

Mr. CONMEE. What is the date?

Mr. SPEAKER. I would call the attention of the hon. member for St. John to rule 19: 'No offensive words can be uttered against a member of the House.' If the words the hon. gentleman proposes to read are offensive they will be out of order.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not know. Here is this affidavit, which was read the 12th of October last. The Minister of Public Works says that it contains serious charges against him and yet he has been willing that those charges should hang over him from that time to the present, without his taking a single step to vindicate himself.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They were withdrawn.

Mr. DANIEL. If they were so little offensive to him that he took no action, they cannot be offensive if I read them now.

Mr. SPEAKER. If every word which is offensive is taken out of this amendment, it will be in order. Otherwise it is out of order.

Mr. DANIEL. How am I to know what is offensive to the minister and what is not?

Mr. SPEAKER. I have declared that no offensive word may be read or spoken in this House against any hon. member. That is rule 19.

Mr. McKENZIE. Do I understand you to rule, Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McKENZIE. I am in order, and I will not be put down.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the hon. member (Mr. McKenzie) asks an explanation; he did not hear my ruling. I have ruled that, under rule 19, no offensive word may be either spoken or read in this House against any hon. member.

Mr. McKENZIE. That is not the point.

Mr. LENNOX. Hear the judge.

Mr. McKENZIE. I have a perfect right to be heard, and the sneering of the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) does not move me in the slightest.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to know your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to know your honour's ruling, and to submit to it. Do I understand you to rule that this affidavit, on the conditions before you, can or cannot be read?

Mr. SPEAKER. The affidavit has not been read. But if the affidavit contains any offensive language, it cannot be read.

Mr. McKENZIE. I submit that it cannot be read.

Mr. R. F. SUTHERLAND. The point of order, after all the various discussions that have been had, it seems to me narrows down to this: There was a declaration made, it, appears, which apparently reflected upon the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). The original declaration made a statement to the effect that a certain event had taken place in 1907, that is after the Minister of Public Works became a member of this House. That was objected to by the minister. The date has since been changed, I understand, to read '1905,' which was before the hon. minister became a member of this House. Now, there is a clear distinction between what the House can investigate and what the House cannot investigate as regards a member of this House and as regards a private individual outside this House, and that is plainly laid down by the high authority, May, at page 81:

> Libels upon members have also been constantly punished; but to constitute a breach of privilege they must concern the character or conduct of members in that capacity; and as is explained on page 274——

And this is the pertinent principle.

> —the libel must be based on matters arising in the actual transaction of the business of the House. Aspersions upon the conduct of members as magistrates, or officers in the army or navy, or as counsel, or employers of labour, or in private life, or otherwise than in relation to parliament, are within the cognizance of the courts and are not fit subjects for complaints to the House of Commons.

The moment it appears that this is a charge having reference to something that happened during the private life of the Minister of Public Works, and that the statement about to be read contains grave reflections upon him—and that has been stated by two members of this House—it is taken without the scope of this House and relegated to the courts and is not a fit subject for inquiry here.

Mr. LANCASTER. I might agree, in what has been so well said by the hon. member (Mr. Sutherland), if we both knew what was the motion to be brought before you. But I have as much right to assume that this is a motion to take steps to get back money that was wrongfully obtained from the public as the hon. member has to assume that it is a motion against the Minister of Public Works. I gather—I do not know whether from something read by you, Mr. Speaker, or from some words spoken by hon. members—that the main object of the motion is to get back money that belongs to the people. If so, I imagine you cannot prevent it by drawing the herring across the trail by saying that the character of a member of this House is involved. It is a serious question, one which——

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) will allow me; it would be perfectly in order to ask by this motion for an investigation into such a matter. But what is not allowed is to use offensive words in support of the motion, unless the hon. member from St. John city (Mr. Daniel) assumes to make a direct charge in the usual way.

Mr. LANCASTER. I quite agree with what has been said in that respect, but I am going to point out what it may lead to. No hon. member of this House can expect members to vote for a motion for an investigation without giving some evidence in support of his motion. If he brings that evidence before the House in the form of an affidavit duly sworn to, is he to mutilate that document by cutting out certain words or by changing certain words of the deponent? Is he to say: I have evidence showing that money has been wrongfully obtained from the people by somebody, but, in presenting that evidence as given under oath, I must garble it? Because the reputation of some particular person is involved? We must be practical. If we have the right to get a committee appointed to see whether money belonging to the people has been wrongfully obtained by an individual and should be paid back, surely that right cannot be denied simply because my character or that of anybody else in this House is involved?

Mr. CONMEE. Then, why have not you the courage of your convictions and make a specific charge?

Mr. FOSTER. Before you make a ruling, Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire order, Mr. Speaker. Before you make a ruling, I wish to put in this plea: As I understand the ruling, it is that no language can be read or spoken in this House which is offensive to any member. If I am wrong, I hope you will correct me, Mr. Speaker. Now, I want the House to think about that for a moment as to the absolute revolution in parliamentary practice it may involve and the powers the House of Commons will possess hereafter if that becomes the permanent rule of this Chamber. For instance, suppose that, in carrying out my duty as a member of parliament, I make an investigation into some branches of the Marine and Fisheries Department, and suppose I find that there has been malversation of funds, the paying of bonuses, the taking of presents—suppose that I find that a dozen things that are wrong have been done. And suppose that I get affidavits to prove this. And suppose that one of these solemn declarations sets forth that an officer of the government, it may be a minister of the Crown——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. FOSTER. An officer of the government, it may be a minister of the Crown, was cognizant of these proceedings. I cannot say to the man who is prepared to give me an affidavit setting forth the facts: Cut out this word, or do not use that word. He must make his affidavit, for it is his statement and he is swearing to it. I bring that affidavit into the House and upon that——

An hon. MEMBER. Make a charge.

Mr. FOSTER. 'Make a charge,' my hon. friend says. Let me make my own statement. I put the facts before the House, reading the affidavits and I ask the House to appoint a committee to inquire into the whole matter. As I make my statement I must read the bases upon which I make it, and one of those bases is the affidavit. When I make my statement I am at perfect liberty to show that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, or the Minister of Public Works, has been lax, has lacked foresight, has lacked direction; I can go on and say that he has lacked in fair and honest supervision in the matter. I can make these statements in the House, I think I can make them the basis for asking for an investigation committee. The rules of the House allow that. Under the present ruling that is proposed by the Speaker, I ask you where you would be with reference to investigating anything, and where an opportunity would have any locus standi. Now when you come to read this resolution you will find that it is a resolution asking for the appointment of a commission for a specific purpose; that specific purpose is to look into and make an investigation under oath, get witnesses and bring documents. Investigation into what? Investigation into certain transactions whereby a contract was got from this government, and whereby a person who was outside the contract entirely, got a rake-off, as we call it, of five cents per cubic yard. That is what is to be looked into, and that is all that is to be looked into.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, let us be quiet for a moment whilst I state what takes place, according to the affidavit.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If it be a motion as to whether there has been a rake-off, is it not a fact that the motion would be just as complete without any reference to the Minister of Public Works?

Mr. FOSTER. The reference is not to the Minister of Public Works. Now, we have heard a lot about that affidavit. All men are fallible, the Prime Minister and myself not excluded.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a belated admission on the part of the hon. gentlemen.

Mr. FOSTER. All men are fallible; Mr. Mayes made an affidavit which he swore to, and which affidavit was read in the city of St. John on the 12th of October. In that affidavit was the date 1907 instead of 1905, as Mr. Mayes declared it was his intention to make it. We will say for the sake of argument that it was read as 1907. An attempt was made at that meeting to have the date corrected and make it 1905. But it was read 1907, and so it came out. The Minister of Public Works says: That is absolutely false with reference to myself; it was in 1907 that I was Minister of Public Works, and in 1907 that thing did not take place. But just as soon as the affidavit was published the man who made it, and who ought to have knowledge, made the correction, and said, 1907 is wrong; I did not mean 1907, I meant 1905. Now, was that or was that not the fact? I appeal now to the Prime Minister. He can read the documents and see for himself. I myself, in the city of Toronto, read in the papers of the 13th, the next morning, that Mr. Mayes himself had made the correction, and said that he meant 1905.

Mr. NESBITT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order; the hon. gentleman has spoken twice before.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to finish my statement with reference to the point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the member for North Toronto is speaking now with the consent of the House.

Mr. NESBITT. He is not speaking to the point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The House must either proceed with this matter or not. My ruling has already been given. But as this is a matter which may affect any member of the House to-morrow, I want to apply rule 19, which says:

> No member shall use offensive words against either House, or against any member thereof; nor speak beside the question in debate.

The moment offensive words are read to me by any hon. gentleman I shall have to stop him. They may be read in a public meeting at St. John, but they cannot be read here, without the hon. gentleman assuming the responsibility thereof, as a matter of public procedure. He cannot lay a charge against the Minister of Public Works without assuming responsibility therefor.

Mr. SPROULE. What responsibility?

Mr. SPEAKER. The responsibility of the member himself, speaking from his seat in the House.

Mr. HUGHES. Has any one assumed to lay a charge against the Minister of Public Works here to-day?

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand the amendment contains one.

Mr. HUGHES. The charge was made against a former Minister of Public Works, and not against the gentleman who got the contract. There was no charge made against Mr. Pugsley the private member whatever.

Mr. FOSTER. When I was cut into by my hon. friend over there, I was going on to show what were the facts of the case. I was showing that an error had been made by Mr. Mayes; Mr. Mayes corrected that error, as I said, on the 13th, when the affidavit was originally read on the 12th.

Mr. TALBOT. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has already spoken once, and I for one object to him speaking again.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Several points of order have been taken. I think the hon. member for North Toronto is speaking now on a matter in which the House is interested.

Mr. TALBOT. I for one object. The hon. gentleman should not speak oftener than the rules of the House allow. He has no right to speak twice.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the member for North Toronto is in order. Several points of order have been raised, I have not kept a record of them. A number of members have spoken, and it seems to be the sense of the House that the hon. member for North Toronto should be privileged to speak again.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. TALBOT. That is where I raise the point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to speak twice on the same subject. If he raises another point of order——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot say that the hon. member for North Toronto has spoken on this particular point of order.

Mr. TALBOT. We want to know what he is speaking about. I for one want to know what he is speaking about.

Mr. FOSTER. All I have to say now is that if we are really a parliament and not a madhouse, let us make up our mind which we are. I leave the whole matter in the hands of the right hon. gentleman who leads the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It certainly devolves upon me as leader of the House to give my opinion on this matter. It is a duty which is not always pleasant, but it is a duty which we have to discharge. At all events, we must endeavour on both sides of the House to bring this matter to a conclusion, with a proper sense of the dignity of the House and a proper application of the rules of the House. If I may refer to a past debate of only a few days ago, I said that I should give an example myself, and I will give it again. The rule of the House is that no one is allowed to speak disrespectfully of another member. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) the other day put the matter in a more complete form. He said that no member should be allowed to use words which were not only offensive but painful to another member. If we accept that interpretation we should have no difficulty in coming to a conclusion upon this matter. But, there is an exception to the rule that no member is to be spoken of disrespectfully. If a member rises in the House and says: I charge Mr. So-and-so, a fellow member—that, in itself is offensive, and under such circumstances the rules of the House allow it. But that does not give a member of the House, under ordinary circumstances, the right to speak of another disrespectfully. If he says that, acting under his sense of duty, he brings such and such an accusation against a fellow member he subjects himself to certain conditions and certain penalties. It is expected of him that he shall prove the charge and if he does not he will render himself liable to very grave censure. That has been done on more than one occasion in this House. Taking the cases historically, it was done on the occasion of the Pacific scandal when Mr. Huntingdon, a member of this House, brought a charge against certain members of the administration. It was done at a later date by Mr. Tarte when he brought a charge against a member of the government of that day. It was done on a subsequent occasion by Mr. Edgar when he brought a charge against a member of the government. Upon all these occasions the member was allowed to speak disrespectfully and offensively of another but it was upon a charge being made. Now, as I understand it, the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) does not make any charge against my friend and colleague the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). He wants to bring in a motion to have certain matters investigated in which the public interest is concerned, and, as I understand, by reason of certain transactions which have taken place the public revenue has been defrauded of a certain amount of money.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very well, my hon. friend has the right to make such a motion. I do not know whether his motion should be granted or not—I express no opinion upon that—I have not heard it—but, if it is in order to have such a motion made and to have such an investigation entered upon, is it allowable to him to make an insinuation against a fellow member? Is it allowable that he should say of a certain member things which are offensive and painful? According to the rule of the House, as I understand the Speaker to lay it down, it is now allowable for him to do so. Certainly, he has the right to say everything that is conducive to the motion which he has in view, that is conducive to the object which he has in view, but I do not think he has the right to say anything offensive of a fellow member. That is the position that I would take. If my hon. friend wants to make a motion to have a certain investigation, or, to use the hon. gentleman's own words, more particularly an investigation into a transaction which it is said took place between Mr. Mayes and Mr. McAvity and which resulted in a certain transaction in the Department of Public Works I think he has a right to make that motion. I do not know whether it would be granted by the House or not, but if this is so, as far as I can see, it does not violate any rule. But, I think we should pause and consider before we acquiesce in the introduction of any matter that is offensive to the Minister of Public Works. The matter is one which is of great importance. Mr. Speaker has taken it into his consideration and he has given his ruling. I think my hon. friend ought to proceed with his speech, keeping in view always the caution which has been given him by the Speaker that it shall contain nothing offensive to a fellow member. Keeping that in view, he has the right to proceed with his motion. But I would appeal to him, to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and to the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), who are old parliamentarians, that if we want to preserve the dignity and respect of this House the well known rule that no member should speak offensively of another ought to be rigidly maintained.

Mr. LANCASTER. May I ask the Prime Minister what are we going to do about that affidavit? A man makes an affidavit in which he tells the story showing that the people of this country have been defrauded of their money. Are we going to garble the reading of that affidavit and are the public and the members of this House not to have the benefit of it?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend wants to have an investigation made there is no necessity of him reading that affidavit at all.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then it would be said that there was no evidence of any body having done anything wrong.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No; if the hon. gentleman says he has reason to believe that these things took place from that affidavit he can bring in anything provided it is not offensive to another member. If the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) believes that the Minister of Public Works has been guilty of improper conduct it is open to him to make a charge against him, but he does not make a charge against him. He says I want to prove that the public revenue has been defrauded to a certain extent. He can bring in any statement provided it does not reflect upon another member of the House.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. This is a question with regard to which we have had a good deal of experience in this House. It has been said that a charge to be made against a member of parliament, must be such as to affect the seat of the member in the House, that if he is convicted of it he is to be turned out of the House and that it is a sufficient objection to a charge against a member to say that it does not affect his seat. Any charge made must be made on the personal responsibility of a member. We hear a good deal about personal responsibility. It is a thing of the past. There is no penalty imposed upon a member of parliament for making a charge against another, none except a feeling in the House against a party making a charge which he cannot prove. He is put into what, in the old country, is called Coventry. No member of the House associates with him for making a false charge, but there is no penalty. Look at the position in a case of this kind. There is no charge in the affidavit, which, even if it were 1907, would affect the party's seat in the House

Mr. PUGSLEY. If this took place in 1907 I could not sit in the House.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. You were acting as an attorney in 1905?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. Suppose it is proven up to the hilt that you made an arrangement with this contractor and with the government of the country by which he was to get an extra price and you divide the money; you were not a member of the House at that time. Had you not a right to make that arrangement with the contractor?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not happen to have made it.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. It might have been wrong or anything else, but it is nothing upon which a charge might be made against a member of parliament which might affect his seat in the House. The charge, if the other part of the affidavit is true, is something that we have the right to inquire into and which we ought to have the right to inquire if any one, solicitor or contractor, made an arrangement by which a certain sum of money was filched out of the public treasury for what purpose we know not. We have the right to inquire into it, and we have the right to inquire who the individuals were who benefited by it, even if one of those individuals at the present time is the Minister of Public Works. If he was not the Minister of Public Works at the time——

Mr. PUGSLEY. At what time?

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. In 1905; have we not the right to inquire into it? Are we going to abridge and restrict the rights of this parliament because it may be said that something is offensive to a member of parliament? The idea of urging rule 19 against the introduction of an affidavit of this kind is absurd. The rule says:

> Nor use offensive words against either House, or against any member thereof.

It is not an offensive word against a member of the House. Even if everything is true that is in the affidavit it does not come within the description of language contained in the rule. 'Offensive words' means statements made in the House reflecting upon the character or honour of a member of parliament. This does not come within that category at all. This is a childish objection to the introduction of the affidavit which has been repeated in the House again and again. The minister says that the affidavit which was read in the city of St. John bore the date 1907, and that it was a reflection on him as a minister at the time because he was then the minister. The correction has been made again and again. It is childsh; it is boyish; it is babyish! The affidavit has been corrected.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It may sound all right to my hon. friend, but I would not think it all right.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. But the affidavit has been corrected. It was corrected on the floor of the House in which it was read.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, Sir, and it was published broadcast throughout Canada.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. I will take the statement of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel), who says he was there, and on his honour states that it was 1905 that was mentioned.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman state that he was there?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. He has said that he was there over and over again.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have the statement of half a dozen people who were there and it was read 1907.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. Talk about the rules of the House! My hon. friend gets up and says that he was there and the Minister of Public Works gets up and questions the accuracy of his statement.

Mr. SPEAKER. The statement of the hon. gentleman from St. John will have to be accepted.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman from St. John tells me he was present——

Mr. DANIEL. I have already told you that.

Mr. PUGSLEY—and that he heard the affidavit, I will accept his statement.

Mr. DANIEL. Did the hon. minister not hear me say that I was at that meeting and hear the affidavit read.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not hear my hon. friend say that. I heard the hon. gentleman say there was an attempt made to correct it but I did not understand him to say he was present. Now let me ask the hon. gentleman this question: If it was corrected that night at the meeting how came it to be given to the morning papers in St. John and telegraphed all over the country with the false date to it.

Mr. HAGGART. Did the hon. gentleman not hear the hon. member for Toronto say that the correction was made next day in the Toronto papers.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was made in the evening papers after I had corrected it, but no correction came from Mr. Mayes until after I had made the correction.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Six o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. Just one moment.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Six o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. Just one moment if the House will allow me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Six o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. I appeal to the Prime Minister now. I want to ask the Prime Minister and the House not to consider such a decision made as the Speaker has intimated he will make. It won't harm us to think this matter over until we meet here another time. It is so grave that I do not want to see it go as the Speaker has intimated it is possible it will go.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker has given no such ruling as I understand.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Might I ask the Prime Minister one question. He said it becomes a matter of imperative duty to maintain the dignity of this House; does he not think it is equally important to maintain the privileges of this House?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certainly.

At six o'clock the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 15, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 139) authorizing the Ottawa Fire Insurance Company to change its name to the Ottawa Assurance Company.—Mr. Perley.

Bill (No. 138) concerning the Quebec and Oriental Railway Company.—Mr. Lavergne.

Bill (No. 130) for the relief of Frank Parsons.—Mr. Tolmie.

Bill (No. 133) to incorporate the Kootenay and Alberta Railway Company.—Mr. Knowles.

QUESTIONS.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC, LAKE SUPERIOR BRANCH.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO asked:

1. How many miles of the Lake Superior Branch of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway have been completed, and the cost thereof to date, without terminals, and the total estimated cost of this branch without terminals?
2. What subsidies in lands or money have been granted by the Dominion or provincial governments or municipalities, respectively, to said Lake Superior Branch?
3. What other branch lines of the said Grand Trunk Pacific have been constructed, the mileage thereof, and the cost and the cost per mile without terminals, respectively?

4. Of the $205,200 proceeds sale of stock mentioned in answer to Mr. Borden's question 9, brought down by the Finance Minister, what part was paid in cash, when was it paid, and how was the balance paid or accounted for?

5. Who are the directors of, and who are the owners of the stock in the Grand Trunk Pacific Town and Development Company, and the amount of paid up capital held by each?

6. How many townsites and what other real estate and the acreage thereof are owned by the said company, last named, on the prairie and mountain sections, respectively?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals).

1. The company state as follows: A. 188.77 miles now in operation, but under construction department, not yet having been taken over by operating department. B. Cost, including bond interest, but exclusive of terminals as at January 31, 1908, $9,686,457.98. C. $9,986,457.98.

2. The company state as follows: Dominion government, $6,400 per mile, on a total not to exceed 220 miles.

Ontario government, $2,000 per mile, not to exceed 200 miles and 675,000 acres of land.

Town of Fort William, $300,000 to be applied on Fort William terminals, and $50,000 on the Kaministiquia bridge.

3. The company state as follows: No other branch lines have been constructed.

4. The company state as follows: Proceeds sales of Grand Trunk Pacific stock mentioned in answer to Mr. Borden's question 9, were all paid in cash at the time the stock was issued.

5. The company state as follows: The directors, Chas. M. Hays, two shares; E. J. Chamberlain, two shares; Wm. Wainwright, two shares; W. H. Biggar, two shares; E. H. Fitzhugh, two shares.

The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company is the holder of 29,990 shares of paid up stock. Total common stock, $3,000,000 all issued; preferred stock, $2,000,000, not issued; total common and preferred stock, $5,000,000.

6. The company state as follows: Eighty-one townsites and three-quarters interest in the Town of Prince Rupert, the total is about 78,640 acres.

The Department of the Interior furnish the following additional information:

Crown Lands.

The acreage of Crown lands sold to the Grand Trunk Pacific Town and Development Company at $3 per acre is 12,905.45 acres; and for which at this rate the government have received $38,716.35. In addition to the above payment the company has also agreed to pay over to the government one-quarter of the net profits on the sale of these lands. The patents for these lands have issued to the company within the last four or five months.

Homestead lands.

The acreage of lands which the government permitted the company to buy from the holders of unpatented homesteads is 11,279.81 acres. The company paid the government $1 per acre for the privilege, granted on these lands, which amounted to $11,279.81; and in addition the company paid the various holders of these homesteads the price which the homesteader in each case demanded.

CANADIAN WATERWAYS AND BOUNDARIES TREATY.

Mr. BOYCE asked:

1. What steps are being taken by the government with reference to the rider or condition attached by the United States Senate to its ratification of the Canadian Waterways and Boundaries Treaty, as a conditional acceptance by the United States of America?

2. If no official investigation has been made by the government into the claims of the United States to a greater portion than one-half of the St. Mary's river, as set forth in the rider to the said treaty attached by the United States Senate, is it the intention of His Majesty's government in Canada to make any such investigation before submitting the treaty to the House for ratification?

3. If so, when is it anticipated that such investigation be made, and where is it being carried out?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). The true interpretation of the resolution of the Senate of the United States is a question of legal nature which the government has now under consideration.

After a conclusion has been reached on the subject the House will be informed of any action which may be taken in the matter.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. What are the total imports and exports of merchandise for Canada for the fiscal year 1908?

2. What are the total imports and exports of merchandise from and to Great Britain, the United States, France and Japan, respectively?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs):

1. The total imports and exports of merchandise for Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1908, were: Imports $364,237,864; exports, $263,368,952.

2. The total imports and exports of merchandise from and to Great Britain, the United States, France and Japan, during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1908, were as follows:—

	Imports from.	Exports to.
Great Britain	$ 95,313,730	$134,477,124
United States	214,787,269	96,921,138
France	10,251,717	1,806,732
Japan	2,196,284	740,958

WINDSOR, NOVA SCOTIA, PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. BLACK asked:

1. Were tenders called for the work of renovating the interior of the post office and customs building at Windsor, Nova Scotia? if so, who called for the tenders?

2. What are the names of the persons who tendered, and the amount of each tender?

3. Whose was the lowest tender?

4. Was the lowest tender accepted, did the person making this tender get the contract and do the work, or was it awarded to another who made no tender at all?

Hon. WILLIAM PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1, 2, 3, 4. The department considered that it had become necessary to clean, paint, kalsomine, repair and refinish furniture in the Windsor, Nova Scotia, public building. A tender was secured by the caretaker from Benjamin J. Barns for the work for the sum of $360. The price asked was considered reasonable and he was authorized to do the work.

DEFENCE OF OUR SEA COAST.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. What interpretation does the government place upon the resolution re naval defence passed unanimously by the House on March 29?

2. What steps does the government propose to take towards carrying out the purport of the resolution, and when is it proposed to commence action in this respect?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The government have decided that, as shortly as possible after prorogation, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) and the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) shall proceed to London for the purpose of conferring with the Admiralty as to the best means to be adopted to give effect to the resolution of March 29.

DOMINION RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES—COST OF NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. What are the expenditures for the fiscal year 1908-9? on consolidated fund and capital account, respectively?

2. What are the receipts for customs, excise and miscellaneous, respectively, for the same year?

3. What amount has been paid for interest on loans payable in Canada and outside Canada, respectively, for the year 1908-9?

4. What amounts have been paid for commission, brokerage and other expenses, respectively, on loans made since December 31, 1909?

5. What amount has been paid on account of Grand Trunk Pacific Eastern Division in each year up to March 31, 1909, distinguishing between the Winnipeg-Quebec and the Quebec-Moncton sections?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1, 2 and 3. The accounts for the year are not yet closed, and so I cannot give these figures definitely. But I will send to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) the latest statement which will give him the information now available.

4. The hon. member will see that there is evidently an error in this question and that it does not admit of any answer.

Mr. FOSTER. It should read '1908'.

Mr. FIELDING. The calendar year?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. FIELDING. Then I will ask that sections 4 and 5 of this question stand; No. 4 to be corrected, and No. 5 because the answer to it would require the collection of information from the National Transcontinental Railway Commissioners.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC—PROPOSED LOAN.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO asked:

Were there any communications or negotiations, verbal or otherwise, prior to the 26th October, 1908, or prior to November 16, 1908; between the government or any member therof, or any person by or on behalf of, or with the knowledge or consent of the government, with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, or the Grand Trunk Railway Company, or any person on behalf of either of said companies, with reference to the proposed or any loan by the government to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company? If so, when?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Members of the government have had frequent conversations with representatives of the Grand Trunk Pacific on all matters relating to the affairs of the National Transcontinental Railway. So far as these conversations affected the matter of the loan, the substance of them is covered by the papers before the House.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO asked:

Was the government or any member or members thereof, consulted or communicated with, by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, or the Grand Trunk Railway Company, or by any person on behalf of either of said companies, as to the form or substance of the letter of the 16th November, 1908, from the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway to the government, and was such letter first submitted to the government or any member thereof for approval or amendment? If so, when?

Mr. FIELDING. I beg to repeat the answer given to the former question.

PRIVILEGE—MR. CONMEE.

Mr. JAMES CONMEE (Thunder Bay and Rainy River). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. There was a reference by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) yesterday to a 'special train' or 'express train.' I may say that a reference of that kind has been made previously in this House. I happened to meet the hon. member this morning, and I told him it was my intention to ask him for an explanation. I thought the remarks were directed to me. I asked yesterday if I was correct in thinking so, and the hon. gentleman replied that he had directed his remarks to me. I am sorry the hon. member is not in his seat, but I see there is another sinner on the other side, and perhaps I may be able to get some information from him—

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

Mr. CONMEE——he having used the same language. I refer to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster).

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the word 'sinner' should not be employed in the debate.

Mr. CONMEE. I will withdraw that word, and I will refer to the hon. member as the spotless dove that represents North Toronto.

Mr. FOSTER. Do I understand that the opprobious epithet has been withdrawn?

Mr. CONMEE. I may say to the House that I am indebted to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) himself for this word, he having applied the same name to me last year. If he wishes to deny that he is spotless and wants us to assume that he has spots all over him, I can tell him of some of them——

Mr. FOSTER. I think I must ask you, Mr. Speaker, to keep the hon gentleman (Mr. Conmee) to the point. Surely, we are not going to have a bear garden again.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) has risen to a question of privilege, and he must confine himself to that question.

Mr. CONMEE. May I ask the hon. gentleman for an explanation of his remarks in regard to this 'special train'—what relation he supposes me to have to that subject, and why he used the expression in the House?

Mr. FOSTER. What remarks?

Mr. CONMEE. A few evenings ago the hon. member used the same expression, 'Send him away on his special train'——

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member (Mr. Conmee) had better confine himself to the present debate.

Mr. CONMEE. Very well. I see two or three members on the other side who indulged in a good deal of mirth over this question. I think they nearly all clapped their desks. Among them, for instance, was my venerable friend from North Grey (Mr. Middlebro). Surely, he will give me an explanation; surely he will condescend to give me some information with regard to this particular train.

Mr. HUGHES. How can they give information when they had nothing to do with it?

Mr. CONMEE. I think I saw the gallant colonel (Mr. Hughes) also——

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask the hon. member (Mr. Conmee) a question: How can any one on this side give information concerning that train when the hon. gentleman himself seems to be the only one posted concerning it?

Mr. CONMEE. I assumed that the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) had the courage of his convictions, but it seems that he indulges in remarks at the expense of his fellow members and, when asked for an explanation, has none to give.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) had better confine himself to the question of privilege.

Mr. CONMEE. I see that the hon. member for Simcoe, who used the words of which I have spoken, is now in his seat. Perhaps he would be good enough to give an explanation of what he referred to.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. member refers to——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. member has referred to 'the member for Simcoe.' I am one of the members from Simcoe, and I do not wish to be catechised by the hon. gentleman, as I said nothing concerning the matter.

Mr. CONMEE. I do not think the hon. member (Mr. J. A. Currie) had any idea that he was referred to. I referred to the hon. member for East Simcoe.

Mr. FOSTER. He is on your own side.

Mr. LENNOX. South Simcoe. Let us have it 'South.'

Mr. CONMEE. I see the hon. member (Mr. Lennox) is now in his seat. I ask him if the remarks he made with regard to 'special train' or 'express train' were directed to myself. I would like an explanation from him now as to why he coupled me with that transaction.

Mr. LENNOX. I had not the advantage of being in the Chamber at the time the hon. gentleman began his remarks; I understand him, however, to refer to something that I interjected across the floor of the House yesterday. When the hon. member from Rainy River spoke of an accommodation affidavit, I said it was not an accommodation train, nor was it a special train, nor was it, I might say, a Sunday ' nighter ' either. The train I referred to was a Sunday night train—if I recollect correctly—whether the hon. gentleman had any connection with that train I am not prepared to say. If it is in order, I would like to elaborate more fully what I did refer to. I referred to an incident that occurred in connection with the last general election on a certain Sunday night previous to the Monday of the election. A certain train started from Port Arthur, I think, for a bush poll, and that bush poll was in the hon. gentleman's riding where an attempt was being made to conduct a special and peculiar election in the hon. gentleman's interest. A number of young and inexperienced, and I am afraid, somewhat ignorant boys were upon that train, were got upon that train, and they were taken to that poll; and the sworn evidence in the court of justice was that these young men, or some of them, voted several times, and voted, if I recollect the evidence rightly, in the interest of my hon. friend from Rainy River. The incident was a very disgraceful and unfortunate one, and it reflected no credit upon the manner of conducting elections in the Dominion of Canada. It was a special train, and it had the distinguished honour of having a very distinguished name applied to it, 'the Conmee special.'

Mr. CONMEE. I expected just such an explanation from my hon. friend. He is entirely misinformed as to the facts. He has not hesitated to make insinuations which I cannot help but think reflect upon me, because the hon. gentleman wished to convey that there was some wrong-doing on my part in connection with a special train during the last election. Now he has made to the House a statement which, to use parliamentary language, is entirely incorrect. I happen to have in my possession a little bit of evidence on that point to which the hon. member referred.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it would be an abuse of the privilege of the House to introduce that evidence. The hon. gentleman may properly make a statement now.

Mr. CONMEE. I am not going to attempt to give the evidence further than to say that there was no evidence of any special train. Perhaps I may be permitted to read the words which the judge used in his address to the jury. The judge, in addressing the jury in regard to this matter, called their attention to the fact——

Mr. LENNOX. What is the name of the judge?

Mr. CONMEE. Judge Britton. I have in my hand the official report; anybody is welcome to see it. He said that reference had been made to a special train, and he called their attention to the fact that there was no evidence, that nobody had given any evidence, that there was a special train; nobody pretended to say there was a special train. The judge, for the benefit of the jury, defined a special train; he said it was a train engaged for a special purpose, to start from a specific point. The train in question was a construction train, a usual construction train used in the construction of all railways. This was a Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, or the branch from Fort William west. The line was not then completed; it was not opened for traffic. Everybody who wished to go on that line, either for election purposes or for any other, took advantage of the train, the work train going out at a certain hour on that evening. The evidence goes to show, not only that some voters did go—that is true—but a great many others went on that train. The train carried supplies for track laying, coal and other things for the work, just as it did on other occasions. There was nothing special about it. Now, I notice that some hon. gentlemen seem to be very much interested in this particular train. Let me say to them that there is nothing to their credit in the case that came before the courts, and nothing to the discredit of the member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River. No person ever suggested that I had anything to do with it, or any knowledge of it, or the slightest thing to do with regard to it. I do not propose to discuss the evidence now, but it goes to show that there was a prostitution of justice, manipulated by a government other than the government that forms this cabinet.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Those words exceed the limit of debate.

Mr. CONMEE. I think I am trying to keep within the rules of debate.

Mr. SPEAKER. I refer to the words 'prostitution of justice.' I invite the hon. gentleman to withdraw them.

Mr. CONMEE. I will change them, and say there was a miscarriage of justice. There was one man in connection with that transaction—I do not want to mention names, it is not fair—but I have no hesitation in doing so if hon. gentlemen wish me to do so. The culprit in the whole case, as the evidence showed, and as the jury found, was the brother of the Conservative organizer in that particular riding.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question of privilege of course relates to the hon. gentleman himself, and he should not depart from that point.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I think Mr. Speaker, you should compel the hon. member for Rainy River to take his seat when you are giving a ruling.

Mr. CONMEE. An hon. member has a right to make an explanation, because the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) stated that there was a fraudulent transaction in connection with that poll, that a special train was the Conmee special. I say these words are untrue, they are entirely incorrect, and I ask the hon. member to withdraw them.

Mr. LENNOX. I rise to a point of order. In the first place I did not say there was a special train, I said it had been spoken of as a special train, as the Conmee special.

Mr. CONMEE. The House has heard the words of the hon. gentleman, and surely when that question is raised——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is bound to accept the statement of the hon. member for Simcoe as to what words he did use. That is the rule of the House.

Mr. CONMEE. I do not see that his present words make it much better.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is the rule of the House. The hon. gentleman is bound to accept the statement of the hon. member he is referring to the moment he says, 'These are the words which I uttered.' That is the rule of the House.

Mr. CONMEE. But, Mr. Speaker, have I not a right to object to the words if they are not correct?

Mr. SPEAKER. You must accept his statement of the words that he used.

Mr. CONMEE. I bow to your ruling. The hon. member now says that what he said was that the train was spoken of as a special train, as the Conmee train. I say that is equally objectionable, because it casts a reflection upon me. The hon. member went further than that, he referred to the personation of votes, and he said they were all cast for me. The evidence does not show that; the evidence shows that votes were cast for both candidates.

Mr. LENNOX. I rise to a point of order, I did not say that the votes were all cast for my hon. friend (Mr. Conmee).

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman made the statement that the votes were cast for me. Whether he used the word 'all' or not, I am not going to say but he did make the statement that the votes were cast for me. That statement is incorrect and I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not understand the hon. member's point.

Mr. LENNOX. No, nor nobody else, I think.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) in his remarks stated that this poll was a bush poll, that a train was got up on Sunday after evening to take the voters there. The whole tenor of the hon. gentleman's remarks was that this was a manipulation, a wrongful manipulation under the law, a disgrace to the elections in the country.

An hon. MEMBER. So he said.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CONMEE. That the illegal votes that were cast were cast for myself as the candidate.

An hon. MEMBER. In your interest.

Mr. CONMEE. In my interest. Now I say that is not the evidence——

Mr. HUGHES. That is the evidence.

Mr. CONMEE—but the evidence disclosed was that there were at that poll improper votes but that they were cast for both candidates. The hon. member has made a statement that he should withdraw and I ask that he do withdraw it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot compel the hon. member to withdraw any statement; I have not read the evidence. It is a matter of appreciation on one side or the other. The hon. member has made a statement, he has denied a statement made by the hon. member on the other side, and I think the question of privilege does not arise.

REPORT OF THE NEW BRUNSWICK COMMISSION.

On government orders being called.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, before the government orders are called, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he has yet any statement to make with reference to the disclosures made by the commission in the province of New Brunswick, and about which I asked him yesterday and the day before.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I stated to my hon. friend yesterday that I had sent for the report and the evidence. I have not received the evidence. As to the report I have not yet read it through but so far as my information goes and my judgment at the moment, there is nothing to call for government interference in this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to give notice to the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that at the very earliest opportunity, I hope not later than Monday, we will challenge the judgment of the House with reference to that matter. I would be very glad if my right hon. friend could arrange that it be taken up on Monday. I do not think it will take very long but it would be satisfactory to have a date arranged for it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection to accommodating my hon. friend in that matter.

SUPPLY.

ST. JOHN DREDGING CONTRACT.

On the Order:

Further consideration of the motion of Mr. Fieding, that the Speaker leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to draw attention to the fact that this order is improperly on the Order Paper. It was superseded by the adjournment of the House, it was an undisposed-of motion and should not appear on the Order Paper as it is. Bourinot refers to a similar motion as follows :

On another occasion the House adjourned while a motion for the Speaker to leave the Chair was under consideration, and it became necessary on the next sitting day to move that the House do immediately resolve itself in Committee.

As I understand and interpret the rules a motion falls to the ground and must be renewed under such circumstances and therefore this order is improperly on the Order Paper.

Mr. SPEAKER. Since Bourinot wrote his work, the House in 1906 adopted a new series of rules. Rule 32 reads:

If at the hour of six o'clock, p.m., on a Wednesday or Thursday, or at the time of the adjournment of the House, a motion on the notice paper be under consideration, that question shall stand first on the order of the following day, next after orders to which a special precedence has been assigned by rule or order of the House.

I have consulted the officials of the House in this matter and from what I can learn this rule is susceptible of two interpretations. I am giving it now the most favourable interpretation and allowing the question to remain on the Order Paper. As the rule here evidently requires, in spirit if not in letter, I have allowed the motion to remain on the Order Paper and I think it is now in order.

Mr. J. W. DANIEL (St. John City). Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPEAKER. Before the hon member proceeds I suppose the House will want to dispose of the point of order raised by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley).

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). If you, Mr. Speaker, and the House will pardon me, I have a statement to make to the House with regard to the objection I raised yesterday. You remember I stated yesterday that if my hon. friend would produce to the House the original affidavit which was declared or sworn to upon the 12th of October, 1908, I would make no objection to the reading of the whole of it. This morning I had the opportunity of having a conference with my hon. friend the member from St. John (Mr. Daniel) and he has undertaken to produce and file with the clerk — which I presume would be done before I make any observations to the House—the original declaration sworn to or declared upon the 12th of October. Upon that undertaking of my hon. friend I withdraw all objection to the reading of the declaration which was made at a later date.

Mr. DANIEL. I am very glad to hear the statement of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). I stated yesterday that I had the original affidavit in my possession, and I was only anxious to lay it before any committee which this House would appoint.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is to be laid on the table, is the understanding with my hon. friend,—and filed with the clerk of the House. Is there any misunderstanding between us as to that?

Mr. DANIEL. I have no objection at all to take that course.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Very well.

Mr. DANIEL. And I will have much pleasure, after reading it, in placing it in the hands of the clerk of this House. I am very glad indeed to hear the statement of the Minister of Public Works. I think the stand which he has taken to-day is one not only in his own interest but in that of the public life of Canada generally.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I never objected to that.

Mr. DANIEL. When these charges are made and solemly declared and sworn to in various parts of the country I certainly think, especially when they affect a person so high up in the country as a minister of the Crown, that the least parliament can do is to investigate these charges to see whether they are true or whether they are false.

Mr. HUGHES. May I interject a question?

Mr. SPEAKER. Only with the consent of the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. HUGHES. With the hon. gentleman's permission, are we to understand that there is any procedure taking place to-day different from what would necessarily take place under the rules of parliament? As I understand, when a member reads a document in the House it must be laid on the table.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As I understand there are two declarations, one declaration which was made and signed, or rather alleged to have been made and signed, on the 12th October, 1908. My hon. friend says he has that declaration with him. That is a declaration which I have for months been seeking to obtain access to. My hon. friend has undertaken now that that declaration shall be filed with the clerk of the House

My hon. friend has stated he has also in his possession another declaration which makes a slight change in the previous one, and declared to in the month of March of the present year. That is the one my hon. friend is going to read and that is the one which in the ordinary course will be laid on the table. But my hon. friend has also undertaken that he will also lay on the table a declaration which was originally made or declared to on the 12th of October, 1908.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the House allow me for a moment. I wish to guard the House against a possible error. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel) stated not once, not twice, but three times that he had the original affidavit and that was the affidavit he proposed to read, and was only too anxious to have read.

Mr. DANIEL. I have not only the affidavit referred to but I also have the other affidavit which so far has not been referred to, and made by Mr. Gershon S. Mayes, I think the day following the original affidavit.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Don't let my hon. friend misunderstand me; surely there is no need of misunderstanding.

Mr. FOSTER. There is not any.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was an affidavit or declaration professed to have been made by Mr. Mayes on the 12th of October, 1908. That declaration is alleged to have been read at a meeting in St. John. It was published in the St. John press upon the morning of the 13th, and was published broadcast throughout Canada the same morning. It must have been telegraphed to the various newspapers, the Conservative newspapers particularly, throughout Canada. Now, that is the declaration which I understand my hon. friend has with him and which he has undertaken to file with the Clerk of this House. I am quite willing he should read the other upon that undertaking, and then of course they will both be filed, but don't let my hon. friend misunderstand what I say.

Mr. DANIEL. I have been making great efforts to get this affidavit before the House, and I leave it to the judgment of the House if it is my fault that I have been prevented. Perhaps I should go over it all again.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HUGHES.

Mr. DANIEL. I don't want to do that,—because I purpose laying a motion before the House and in that motion there are extracts from the affidavit.

Mr. LENNOX. Read it all.

Mr. DANIEL. Very well, I will read it all:—

I, Gershon S. Mayes, of the parish of Lancaster, city and county of St. John, province of New Brunswick, contractor, do solemnly declare:—That on the first day of September, 1905, on the advice of the Hon. Wm. Pugsley, who was then Attorney General of the province of New Brunswick, and is now Minister of Public Works of Canada, I had a conversation with George McAvity, of the city of St. John, and the said province, merchant, relative to tenders for dredging which was then to be done in the harbour of St. John by the Public Works Department of Canada, of which the Hon. C. S. Hyman was then minister. Mr. McAvity proposed that I should go to Ottawa on Monday the 4th of September as he was going and would meet me there at the Russell House on the 5th inst. We did meet according to appointment. Mr. McAvity wanted to know what price I wanted. I told him that I had tendered in June for 50 cents per cubic yard. He said: Why not ask 55 cents, giving him (McAvity) five cents per yard or 10 per cent. I said: Why not do as we talked of in St. John, which was that he should go in with me and take a quarter or half of the cost of the dredge and receive his proportion of the profits. He said: Yes he could do that when he got home and might put from $10,000 to $20,000 in it and perhaps get some friends in it with him, but for the present he would go in on a percentage basis and would see Hyman right away. Well, I said: What should I do about financing it and what was he going to do to help me? Oh, he said, he could easily arrange with the banks, no trouble at all when you have got the contract. We went to see Hyman at half past two p.m. McAvity went in and I stayed outside. I had told Mr. McAvity to arrange if possible to have at least 400,000 yards to dredge. McAvity came out and got me to go in and I explained to Mr. Hyman the difficulty of bringing a big plant and only digging a small quantity. Mr. Hyman agreed to see that if I got the contract, that is, if I was the lowest tenderer, I should receive the 460,000 yards. Afterwards Mr. McAvity said that I had better arrange an agreement. I said: Why not wait until we get back to St. John and hear whether the tender has been accepted or not. He said that he had a copy of agreement already. I said: How did he get it? He said: Oh they were all ready here. I then read it over and told him that it was all one-sided, I was to do the work; he was to get the profit. Well he said: What do you want me to do? I told him that I still thought he should be financially interested, he and his friends, to the extent of from $20,000 to $30,000 at least; that it was a long back load for me to carry. Oh, he said as before, the banks would help me and wait till I got home. 'No, I said,' 'I have got to go right to Boston and close the trade with the dredge-owners.' 'Well', he said: 'Better sign the agreement now. 'Well', I said: 'Why not you be bound to do something'. Well, he said for me to write something at the bottom and he would sign it. I said: 'I am not a lawyer'. Oh, go ahead', was the reply. So I wrote what came to mind and he signed it. A copy of this agreement is hereto annexed marked 'A' and the part written by me is marked 'A1.' I then made up the tender at 55 cents per yard for soil and $8.90 for rock and boulders, inclosing $20,000 cheque.

These agreements I may say are as follow:—

Memorandum of agreement made fifth day of September, in the year of our Lord 1905, between Gershon S. Mayes, of the city of St. John, province of New Brunswick, contractor, and George McAvity, of the same place, merchant.

Whereas, the said Gershon S. Mayes has made a contract with the government of Canada to dredge a certain portion of the harbour of St. John for 55 cents per cubic yard;

And whereas, the said George McAvity is interested in the said contract with the said Gershon S. Mayes, and it has been agreed between them that the said George McAvity shall receive all moneys paid to the said Gershon S. Mayes for the said work over and above 50 cents per cubic yard;

Now, this agreement witnesseth that the said Gershon S. Mayes in consideration of one dollar in hand well and truly paid at or before the ensealing and delivery of these presents and of divers other good causes and considerations him thereunto moving, hereby agrees with the said George McAvity to pay the said George McAvity, his executors, administrators, or assigns, all moneys which may be received by the said Gershon S. Mayes, for dredging the said harbour of St. John upon the above mentioned contract or any continuation thereof, over and above 50 cents per cubic yard, and the said Gershon S. Mayes agrees to pay the said moneys to the said George McAvity as the same are received by him from the government of Canada or from other persons paying the said Gershon S. Mayes for the said dredging. In witness whereof the said parties hereto have hereunto set their hands and seals, the day and year first above written.

(Sgd.) GERSHON S. MAYES,
GEORGE McAVITY.

That is the agreement marked 'A.' The agreement marked 'A 1' is as follows:—

And whereas the said George McAvity is to receive moneys out of the performance of the above contract, he agrees and promises to use his influence and endeavours with the Minister of Public Works or officer of the government at Ottawa, to increase the number of yards to be dredged at the aforesaid site of contract.

(Sgd.) GEORGE McA.

The next day, the 6th, I was informed by Mr. Hyman that my tender was accepted. Months afterwards I learned that my tender was the only tender received both times; that is in June and in September. Engineer Lafleur wrote the letter giving 400,000 yards to be done and I left for Boston, via Montreal, and afterwards secured dredge and brought her to St. John. On October 15, 1905, I received a telephone message from Dr. Pugsley asking me to call and see him next day which I did. He said: 'Mr. Mayes, I am in need of money and it would be nice if you could help me.' I said: 'Dr. what for? You know I have paid you some $1,300 in my second case against Connolly which you have in a way offered to pay back because you have said that Mr. Emmerson was so slow in bringing up the matter and I have not the funds. I am carrying a big back load and am paying large amounts to the Bank of Montreal for overdrafts.' Just then Mr. George McAvity came in and Dr. Pugsley said that Mr. Mayes business was getting along so well that a little money would be very acceptable. I again stated that I was carrying a big back load and that I could not see why Dr. Pugsley should ask me for money. I said: 'What do you want it for? A loan?' 'Well,' said Dr. Pugsley 'you see it will be nice to have some one who could do something for you while in Ottawa'; there was always something to be done, and if I could not give him a cheque that I could give him a note for three or four months. I asked how much and he said: 'Oh about $2,500 or $3,000.' I said, 'This is too much but I suppose I will let you have a note for four months for $2,000.' Dr. Pugsley then made the note out and I signed it. He said he felt sure that he would give me good return for it or pay it back. I went out and was followed shortly after by Mr. McAvity, who asked me what in the devil I gave Dr. Pugsley so much for. He thought $1,000 more than enough. I asked why he had not said so and he replied that he could not interfere but thought it a pretty hard time to ask me for money. I said, 'yes and what did he do for it?' and McAvity said that he (McAvity) had arranged with Mr. Hyman.

On November 11, 1907, while I was seeing Dr. Pugsley about some troubles I was having he casually remarked, had I seen Mr. McAvity yet? I said I had met him quite often. He said had I squared accounts with him lately, that he did not wish to know anything about it but surmised that perhaps it would be well to get things going along smoothly. The next day, November 12, I saw McAvity at his office and spoke of money matters. He said that he had been at Ottawa and had got the amount from the accountant and that I owed him $8,633. I said that it was a large amount to pay and that I was not earning much. However I paid him the amount by cheque. I further say that the following is a complete record of my payments to Mr. George McAvity under agreement:

January 29..	$ 4,000
July 6..	2,000
August 8..	2,000
August 24..	2,000
October 20..	4,000
October 30..	2,000
November 23..	2,000
1907.
April 6..	4,300
August 1.	5,000
November 12..	8,633
	$35,933

On 24th July last I wired the minister that my contracts were completed. The engineer in charge had given his certificate, and I was then entitled to receive the balance of all moneys earned as well as all moneys retained for the performance of my contracts.

Not having received any money I saw the minister on 21st August at St. John. He insisted that I should pay McAvity the balance which he claimed to be due under the agreement before he would let me have my money. I said: 'Can you, as a minister of the Crown, hold my money that way? He said he thought he could. I saw the minister again the next day to see if I could get my money and he told me that he was anxious that I should see McAvity and fix matters up right away and that he did not wish to have the affair in the courts. I then wrote the minister stating that I could not understand why he should use his position to hold up the man who had earned the money in order that a middleman should exact his satisfaction. He then wrote me that he would give instructions for the payment but I did not receive any of the money that was due me until about a month afterwards though the minister had with him when in St. John an account showing exactly what was due me.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true and knowing it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

Declared before me at the city of St. John, in the city and county of St. John, this 12th day of October, 1908.

(Sgd.) GERSHON S. MAYES.

(Sgd.) W. HENRY HARRISON,
A Commissioner for taking affidavits
to be read in the Supreme Court.

Declared before me at the city of St. John, in the city and county of St. John, this 24th day of March, A.D. 1909.

(Sgd.) W. HENRY HARRISON,
A Commissioner for taking affidavits
to be read in the Supreme Court.

(Sgd.) GERSHON S. MAYES.

Now, the affidavit which I have read perhaps places in as succinct a form as I could do it the various statements which have been laid before the public. The statetments, in short, are to this effect, that in June, 1905, Mr. Mayes sent in a tender to the Public Works Department offering to do certain dredging in the city of St. John. The price which he asked for that dredging was 49 cents per cubic yard.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He swears to fifty cents.

Mr. DANIEL. Forty-nine.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No sir, he says fifty in the declaration.

Mr. DANIEL. I am aware that Mr. Mayes spoke of it as fifty cents and I am aware also that the hon. Minister of Public Works, in this House, a few days ago, spoke of it as fifty cents.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I spoke of it as forty-nine cents.

Mr. DANIEL. It has been spoken of as a fifty cent contract.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I spoke of it as forty-nine in the return which I gave.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister also spoke of it as fifty cents. It is very easy to turn it up. I looked it up on purpose to see whether the minister had made that reference or not and I am absolutely sure I am stating what is correct and that 'Hansard' will bear me out. That first tender has been carelessly spoken of by every one almost as a 50 cents tender, but in reality it was a 49 cents tender for that class of material and was not accepted by the Department of Public Works. Mr. Mayes, however, was anxious to get a contract with the government, so he looked around for help and applied to my hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), who was then, I believe, his solicitor and also Attorney General of New Brunswick, and he advised Mr. Mayes to consult Mr. Geo. McAvity. In that, there was nothing out of the way that I can see. Mr. McAvity was then, as he is now, a prominent business man in the city of St. John, financially able in every way. Mr. McAvity, however, also occupied the position of active business manager of, or the hub around which the whole Liberal party machine in the city of St. John turned. In that statement, I think I am entirely within the truth, because it is well known by every one in that city that Mr. McAvity was the chief executive administrator, so to speak, of the Liberal party in St. John at that time and is still, for all I know. Mr. Mayes took the advice of his solicitor (Mr. Pugsley) and consulted Mr. McAvity, with the result that they both came to Ottawa. They had a consultation here about the prices to be charged for this dredging. Mr. McAvity interviewed Hon. Mr. Hyman, who was then Minister of Public Works, and afterwards interviewed Mr. Mayes; and on the strength of those interviews, Mr. Mayes put in a tender at 55 cents. Then he was asked by Mr. McAvity to sign an agreement to pay him five cents per yard over and above what he had told Mr. McAvity he was willing to do the work for. He signed that agreement. But Mr. Mayes, although he signed that agreement, was not entirely satisfied with it. He thought it was altogether one-sided, that under it he was to do the work and Mr. McAvity was to get the profit. He therefore urged the latter to take a financial interest in this dredging, but Mr. McAvity would not consent to do so and did not. If it were necessary to give any proof of that, I might refer to the affidavit which Mr. McAvity himself made and published in the city of St. John as a reply to the affidavit of Mr. Mayes. But I do not think it necessary, because it is generally known that Mr. McAvity had no financial interest whatever in that dredge and did not claim any. Consequently the only interest he had in the matter was in the obtaining of this percentage on the money paid Mr. Mayes for the dredging; and what Mr. Mayes got in exchange for that five per cent was the political influence of Mr. McAvity with the Department of Public Works. That agreement, I submit, is something which this parliament has the right to take seriously into its consideration and ought to deal with. All that Mr. McAvity had to give or to sell in connection with this dredging contract was his influence with the Department of Public Works. He makes no claim to have any financial interest whatever in the dredging plant. In fact, according to Mr. Mayes, he declined to take any financial interest in the matter at all. All he gave was his political influence, so that, under these circumstances, the agreement between Mr. McAvity and Mr. Mayes was, I submit, a corrupt and immoral one. I think I am justified in going further and saying that it was an illegal agreement. If hon. gentlemen will look up section 158 of the Criminal Code, subsection (f), they will find it is as follows:

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a fine of not less than $100, and not exceeding $1,000, and to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year and not less than one month; and in default of payment of such fine, to imprisonment for a further term not exceeding six months who, by reason of, or under pretense of, possessing influence with the government, or with any minister or official thereof, demands, exacts or receives from any person any compensation, fee or reward, for procuring from the government the payment of any claim, or any portion thereof or for procuring or furthering the appointment of himself or any other person to any office, place or employment, or for procuring, furthering the obtaining for himself, or any other person, any grant, lease or other benefit from the government; or offers, promises or pays to such person, under the circumstances and for the causes aforesaid, or any of them, any such compensation, fee or reward.

Now, I make no claim at all to be learned in the law; but looking at that section as an ordinary layman, it appears to me that such an agreement as the one I have mentioned must come under the clause I have read. Therefore, I think I am justified in declaring that that agreement was not only corrupt and immoral but also illegal.

From what I can see, it appears to me that this $35,933, which was paid to Mr. McAvity under this agreement, was nothing but plain plunder of the public purse and undisguised robbery of the public treasury.

I do not intend troubling the House with any extracts from newspapers, although there was a great deal published in connection with this matter, except to refer to an editorial in a St. John Liberal newspaper, edited by a man well known in public life, who has always been a consistent Liberal, who is so constant to his Liberal principles that even when he held the office of postmaster, while his party were out of office and the Conservative party were in power, that newspaper still stood by its Liberal principles and criticised the government of the day, although its proprietor and editor was an official under the Conservative administration. And he afterwards resigned his position and gave up whatever financial emoluments he was receiving from it rather than give up anything of his Liberal convictions. The paper I refer to is the St. John 'Globe,' and in its issue of October 16, 1908, the following editorial appears:

Thirty-five Thousand Dollars.

While the air is blue with affidavits, declarations and letters in regard to the dredging transactions between Mr. Mayes and Mr. McAvity, and while there are several statements and counter statements, there is danger of having one important matter overlooked. That important matter is that the Dominion of Canada is out over thirty-five thousand dollars upon the Mayes dredging contract, and that, apparently, somebody ought to pay that sum of money back to the Dominion treasury. It really belongs to the people of Canada; and indeed the sum may be more than the amount named. The former Minister of Public Works—Mr. Hyman—Mr. Mayes and Mr. McAvity would seem to be the principal parties concerned. Mr. Mayes was willing to undertake to do the work of dredging for fifty cents a yard, and tendered to do it for that price in June, 1905. Apparently this price was for a smaller quantity of dredging than was eventually done. And the natural inference is that if Mr. Mayes could dredge a smaller quantity at fifty cents a yard, the much larger quantity which he eventually had assigned to him could have been done at a lower price. However, that is not material. Nothing came of the June tenders, but early in September of that year Mr. McAvity and Mr. Mayes were in Ottawa together and Mr. Mayes got the enlarged quantity of dredging at a higher price per yard—five cents more—than he originally offered to do the work for. There is no clear indication at all why Mr. Hyman allowed the higher rate, but possibly he may not have given the matter much thought, or have regarded the increase per yard as not very serious. It is quite clear now that if he took this simple view of the matter he was in error, for it enabled Mr. Mayes to pay Mr. McAvity a very large sum out of the profits of his work, over, as we have stated, thirty-five thousand dollars. As it would be unreasonable as regards Mr. Hyman to assume that he knew of the arrangement between Mr. McAvity and Mr. Mayes, it would be unfair to assume that he ought to make good out of his own means the higher price paid out of the treasury to Mr. Mayes. This leaves the matter as between Mr. Mayes and Mr. McAvity on the one part and the Canadian people, whose money they got, on the other part. Mr. McAvity is not very clear in his statement as to why Mr. Mayes should pay him the amount which he did pay him, although he does seem to have done some service in going to Ottawa several times in connection with Mr. Mayes's business. Mr.

Mayes, capable business man as he is assumed to be, seems not to know clearly why he paid the thirty-five thousand dollars over to Mr. McAvity, and asserts that he has taken proceedings at law to get it back. If he gets it back, it ought surely to be returned to the Canadian people to whom it would seem in equity to really belong. But, perhaps, if Mr. McAvity were to send the money back to the treasury, and Mr. Mayes were to stop his suits to recover it, that would seem to be the best settlement. Hon. Mr. Pugsley, who is now the Minister of Public Works, standing in the interests of the people, would certainly do the right thing in endeavouring to secure some such settlement in the interests of the country, for it appears to be quite clear now without any reflection upon his predecessor's management then ,that Mr. Mayes could have done the work for the price at which he first tendered. After all is said——

I would ask the special attention of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to this:

After all is said, the main consideration is the public welfare, and the safeguarding of the interests of the people whose money has been so improperly taken from them. This whole matter is a vivid illustration of how the people may be preyed upon. A crisis will come in the administration of affairs in this country if there be not close attention given to the real interests of the people.

The other two principal points in the affidavit relate, I think, to the statements with regard to Mr. Pugsley, when, in 1905, he was Mr. Mayes' solicitor and attorney general of the province. The statement is made by Mr. Mayes that he paid Mr. Pugsley $2,000. The statement that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) made in reply to that is: Yes, Mr. Mayes did pay that money to me, but he paid it for professional services which I rendered him. Now, Sir, that is a perfectly good reply. The point is one that can be easily proved, and if this committee of investigation is given—and I presume and hope that it will be—nothing will be easier for the Minister of Public Works than to give his detailed bills to that committee and show the services for which that $2,000 were charged. The other matter is with reference to the allegations which Mr. Mayes makes, that the present Minister of Public Works, since he has been Minister of Public Works, held back payments from Mr. Mayes which were due him on his dredging until he had satisfied the commission of Mr. McAvity. Now, I am not going to argue whether that is true or whether it is not true; I take it as a matter of evidence to be given before the committee of inquiry. I may say this, however, in going over the papers that were brought down in connection with these matters, I have seen some telegrams, a few of which I will read and which will show the House at all events, that there is some slight evidence to support the statement of Mr. Mayes that he was held up. These documents, of course, were taken from the files of the department and were brought down and laid on the table. The first is a telegram, addressed to the chief engineer of the Department of Public Works:

St. John, July 24, 1908.

Eugene D. Lafleur, Ottawa.

Contract No. 5745 completed, also No. 6791.

J. K. SCAMMELL,
Engineer in charge.

The contracts referred to were Mayes' contracts. The telegram is to be found at page 171 of the return. Then, at page 172, there is the following telegram:

Ottawa, July 25, 1908.

Scammell, resident engineer.

Has Mayes' contract been satisfactorily completed? He is applying for return of security deposited.

EUGENE D. LAFLEUR.

At page 179 of the return, there is the following telegram:

St. John, July 27, 1908.

E. D. Lafleur,
Chief Engineer, Ottawa.

Your telegram received. I would consider contract No. 5754 satisfactorily completed.

J. K. SCAMMELL,
Engineer in charge.

Also at page 179 of the return there is another telegram as follows:

St. John, July 31, 1908.

E. D. Lafleur, chief engineer, Public Works Department, Ottawa.

All dredging of contractor Mayes completed except city's contract at Sand Point, berths 2, 3 and 4. Soundings now being taken show considerable work to be done there before I can pass upon this.

J. K. SCAMMELL,
Engineer in charge.

On page 180 there is the following telegram:

St. John, July 31.

To E. D. Lafleur,

Final estimates for accounts on all government dredging contracts controlled by this office have been sent to you. Mayes dredge hauled up yesterday to be dismantled.

(Sgd.) J. K. SCAMMELL.

Then on the 5th day of August, page 181 of that return, there is a memorandum to the chief engineer, signed by Hon. Wm. Pugsley, Minister of Public Works:

Mr. G. S. Mayes, dredging contractor, writes me that his work is completed. Kindly let me know if you have received a certificate from resident engineer Scammell to this effect. Mr. M. is anxious to have the whole matter closed up, and if the necessary certificates have been furnished I shall be glad if you will have the matter attended to with as little delay as possible.

(Sgd.) WILLIAM PUGSLEY.

On that same memorandum the following is written:

All contracts with this department completed. Security deposits can now be returned.

(Sgd.) EUGENE D. LAFLEUR,
Chief Engineer.

That is on the 5th day of August. Now, as opposed to that, it would seem that notwithstanding the statement which I have just read signed by the chief engineer of the Public Works Department 'That all contracts were completed, and no reason why payment should not be made, and even security deposits returned,' we find that on the 22nd day of August, Mr. Mayes was still without his money, and he wrote the following letter to the Hon. Wm. Pugsley, Minister of Public Works. It shows that no matter what the reason of the delay was for the payment to Mr. Mayes, Mr. Mayes himself at all events, considered that he was being held out of his money because Mr. McAvity had not been paid up. It is as follows:

St. John, N.B., Aug. 22, 1908.

Hon. Wm. Pugsley, Esq., M.P,
Minister of Public Works, St. John, N.B.

I understand that the Minister at that time was in the city of St. John.

Dear Sir,—I regret you have seen fit to withhold from me payment of my July estimate and the balance of my contract in consequence as you stated to me, of Mr. Geo. McAvity having wired you that I owed him some money. I do not think that this is a consistent position for you to take. Mr. McAvity's bills against me are a personal matter and are different entirely from anything between the government and myself. I consider that I have overpaid Mr. McAvity to a very large amount. He proposed to have certain conditions carried out by which I would obtain more dredging work, and would receive fairer and more equitable treatment from the officials of the department. He has utterly failed in this, and I now propose to enforce my rights by bringing suit against him to recover the very large amount which I have paid him, some $36,000. You are perfectly aware that Mr. McAvity's claim against me is for percentages on my contracts with your department in consideration of his services in helping me to get a contract, and his promise that he would do all in his power to assist me to get others. Knowing this as you do, I cannot understand why you should use your position to hold up the man who has earned the money that a middleman may exact his satisfaction. I will therefore thank you to have the balance of my account, $56,591.63, remitted to me at once as my work has been completed and certified to by your officers. I may say further that I have claims against the department which I propose to forward at an early date, based on improper measurement of the barge loads, and also for the extra work of digging boulders of a size not contemplated or covered by my contract, together with other items, to all of which I will thank you to give consideration.

I remain, yours obediently,
G. S. MAYES.

Now, Sir, I think I have given fairly good reasons why these matters which have taken up so much time this afternoon, should be investigated by a committee of the House. I referred yesterday to the Hodgins case; I will refer to only one more before I take my seat. It will be remembered that in 1907 a paper in New Brunswick spoke of the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) in a manner which reflected on him very seriously, a reflection which he stated himself was not true. But what was the result in his case? The hon. member for Westmoreland, although he denied the truth of the statement, felt that the very fact that a reflection had been made upon him was a reason why he should, for the time being at all events, retire from his position in the ministry, and defend himself and clear his character. It is a painful subject to recall, and I will not read his letter to the Prime Minister; but I will read the Prime Minister's letter to the hon. member for Westmoreland, then Minister of Railways. The Prime Minister in referring to the hon. gentleman's letter to himself, says:

To this communication I sent to Mr. Emmerson the following reply:—

My dear Emmerson,—I have come to the conclusion that the course which you take is, under existing circumstances, in the public interest. You owe it to yourself, to your colleagues and friends, to clear your character of the charges levelled against you. You could well ignore mere insinuations, but direct and specific charges you do well to face as soon as uttered. I will place your resignation in the hands of His Excellency.

Now, Sir, taking those cases as precedents of what should be done where charges are made against the public administration of affairs in this country, charges as in this case solmenly made—because if Mr. Mayes had been stating what is not true, he knows, as every one knows, that he is liable to be prosecuted for perjury—I say that under the circumstances we must take some notice of this very serious statement which has been published broadcast over this country, reflecting on the administration of the Public Works Department, reflecting also upon the present Minister of Public Works.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I beg to move that all the words after 'that' be struck out, and the following be substituted therefor:

That in the month of September, 1905, a contract was awarded by the Public Works Department to Gershon S. Mayes, of the city of St. John, for dredging at Sand Point, St John, N.B., at the price of $8.60 per cubic yard for materials specified as of class 1, and 55 cents per cubic yard for materials specified as of class 2, and that before the signing of the said contract the said department, through its chief engineer, guaranteed by letter to the said contractor 400,000 cubic yards of all classes of material as the quantity to be removed under the said contract.

That on the fifth day of said month of September, before the signing of said contract, the said Gershon S. Mayes entered into an agreement with George McAvity, of the said city of St. John, whereby the said Gershon S. Mayes agreed to pay the said George McAvity all money which might be received by the said Gershon S. Mayes under the said contract or any continuation thereof over and above 50 cents per cubic yard, and the said George McAvity agreed to use his influence and endeavours with the Minister of Public Works or officer of the government at Ottawa to increase the number of yards to be dredged at the aforesaid site of contract.

That in the month of June, 1905, the said Gershon S. Mayes had submitted to the Department of Public Works a tender to do the said dredging of material of class 2 at 49 cents a cubic yard.

That in reference to the said contract and agreement the said Gershon S. Mayes at the city of St. John, on the twelfth day of October, 1908, made and published a solemn declaration in which he alleged that on the first day of September, 1905, on the advice of the Hon. William Pugsley, then Attorney General of the province of New Brunswick, and now Minister of Public Works, he had a conversation with the said George McAvity relative to tenders for the said dredging and that as a result he was induced by the said George McAvity to increase his tender to 55 cents per cubic yard; that under the said agreement with the said George McAvity he paid the latter at various times during the years 1906 and 1907 sums of money amounting in the aggregate to thirty-five thousand nine hundred and thirty-three dollars

That the said solemn declaration also contained the following statements:

On October 15, 1907, I received a telephone message from Dr. Pugsley asking me to call and see him next day, which I did. He said, 'Mr. Mayes, I am in need of money and it would be nice if you could help me.' I said, 'Doctor, what for? You know that I have paid you some $1,300 in my second case against Connolly which you have in a way offered to pay back because you have said that Mr. Emmerson was so slow in bringing up the matter and I have not the funds. I am carrying a big back load and am paying large amounts to the Bank of Montreal for overdraws.' Just then Mr George McAvity came in and Dr. Pugsley said that Mr. Mayes' business was getting along as well that a little money would be very acceptable. I again stated that I was carrying a big back load and that I could not see why Dr. Pugsley should ask me for money. I said, 'What do you want it for, a loan?' 'Well,' said Dr. Pugsley, 'you see it will be nice to have some one who could do something for you while in Ottawa'; there was always something to be done and if I could not give him a cheque that I could give him a note for three or four months' I asked how much, and he said, 'Oh, about $2,500 or $3,000.' I said, 'This is too much, but I suppose I will let you have a note for four months for $2,000.'

Dr. Pugsley then made the note out and I signed it. He said he felt sure he would give me good return for it or pay it back. I went out and was followed shortly after by Mr. McAvity who asked me what the devil I gave Dr. Pugsley so much for. He thought $1,000 more than enough. I asked why he had not said so and he replied that he could not interfere, but thought it a pretty hard time to ask for money. I said, 'Yes, and what did he do for it?' and McAvity said that he (McAvity) had arranged with Hyman.

On November 11, 1907, while I was seeing Dr. Pugsley about some troubles I was having, he casually remarked, had I seen Mr. McAvity yet? I said I had met him quite often. He said, had I squared accounts with him lately; that he did not wish to know anything about it, but surmised that perhaps it would be well to get things going along smoothly.

* * * * * * *

On 24th July last I wired the minister that my contracts were completed. The engineer in charge had given his certificate and I was then entitled to receive the balance of all moneys earned as well as all moneys retained for the performance of my contracts. Not having received any money, I saw the minister on 21st August at St. John. He insisted that I should pay McAvity the balance which he claimed to be due under the agreement before he would let me have my money. I said, 'Can you as a minister of the Crown hold my money that way?' He said he thought he could. I saw the minister again the next day to see if I could get my money, and he told me that he was anxious that I should see McAvity and fix matters up right away, and that he did not wish to have the affair in the courts. I then wrote the minister stating that I could not understand why he should use his position to hold up the man who had earned his money in order that a middleman should exact his satisfaction. He then wrote me that he would give instructions for the payment, but I did not receive any of the money that was due me until about a month afterwards, though the minister had with him, when in St. John, an account showing exactly what was due me.

That it subsequently appeared that the date 15th October, 1907, was inserted in the said solemn declaration in error, and that the said date should be 15th October, 1905, and the said original declaration has since been amended accordingly and again solemnly declared to.

That the said George McAvity had no financial interest in the said dredging contract except such as was due to his political influence, and the sole consideration for the payment of the said moneys received by the said George McAvity out of the moneys paid by the government under the said dredging contract was the political influence of the said George McAvity in connection therewith.

That the said solemn declaration was publicly read by the Hon. J. Douglas Hazen, premier of the province of New Brunswick, at a large political mass meeting in the city of St. John on the evening of the said 12th day of October, 1908, and the allegations contained therein, as well as the said corrections in the date above referred to, have since been published in many leading newspapers throughout Canada.

That in the opinion of this House, in view of the serious character of the matters aforesaid, the allegations contained in the said solemn declaration and all relevant matters touching the said dredging contract ought to be referred to a committee of this House to inquire into and investigate the same and to report thereon in order that the truth or falsity of the said allegations may be determined, and that any public moneys improperly paid out in connection with the said dredging contract may be recovered and restored to the public treasury.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will thank my hon. friend if he will send over the affidavit sworn to on the 12th of October, 1908.

Mr. DANIEL. I might say that I lay that affidavit on the table of the House, as I stated at the outset of my speech.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I asked my hon. friend to send me the original affidavit sworn to on the 12th of October, 1908. He now sends me the affidavit, not with the date '1907' in it but with the date '1905,' corrected. Is that all my hon. friend has that he is going to send me?

Mr. DANIEL. That is the original affidavit that was read by the Hon. J. D. Hazen in the city of St. John on the 12th of October, 1908.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend can see in a moment that that cannot be the affidavit which was read.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker——

Some hon MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. minister has the floor and he is certainly entitled to a hearing.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) must see that. I say this, not intending to say anything that would hurt the hon. gentleman's feelings or wound his susceptibilities, but as a fact which he must be aware of, because the hon. gentleman in the very resolution which he has read makes the statement that the affidavit read upon the 12th of October declared that I had received these moneys from Mr Mayes in the year 1907 and that it appeared subsequently that the year 1907 was inserted through error. Now then, in the affidavit which my hon. friend has sent to me apparently, the year—I cannot tell exactly what the figure previously was—but it reads now 'October 15, 1905.' Of course, if that is all the hon. gentleman has; if he has simply the one affidavit which was corrected some four or five months afterwards and two months after parliament had been in session; if he sends that to me as being the original affidavit of October 12, 1908, then all I can say is that I regret that my hon. friend inadvertently misled me when he made the statement that he had two affidavits, the one of October 12, 1908, and the other of March, 1909. The hon. gentleman made that statement to the House; he acquiesced in the question which I put to him. I put the question distinctly to my hon. friend as to whether he had the two affidavits in his possession, the one of October 12, 1908, and the one of March, 1909, and my hon. friend assented to that and led me to believe that he intended to lay the original affidavit with the figures '1907' upon the table of the House.

Mr. DANIEL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) holds in his hand both of these affidavits.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is only one affidavit here.

Mr. DANIEL. He holds in his hands the affidavit solemnly declared to on the 12th of October and also on the 24th of March.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, it may be that my hon. friend is not aware of the statement which he is making, but he has only forwarded to me one declaration, and that declaration contains, it is true, two jurats, but it only professes to be an affidavit giving the date as '1905.' Now, what I thought my hon. friend had, and what I wanted to have laid upon the table of the House, and what I made numerous inquiries about—inquiries, through my solicitor, of the premier of the province of New Brunswick, who is the Attorney General of that province, and who read that false affidavit before that public meeting; who read that affidavit, and read it, I believe, with the intention of inducing the people who were present at that meeting to believe and had it circulated broadcast throughout Canada in the morning papers following that meeting, so as to make the people of this country believe, and intending to make them wrongfully believe——

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; sit down.

Mr. PUGSLEY. —that I——

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. —that I as a minister of the Crown, that I as Minister of Public Works of Canada——

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. member rise to a point of order?

Mr. DANIEL. I rise to a point of order. The minister stated that Mr. Hazen read that date as 1907 down in St. John and that he did it with the intention of deceiving. I say that Mr. Hazen read the date——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DANIEL. I am in order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will understand that a point of order may be raised in reference to a breach of the rules of the House. The statement now being made by the hon. member does not apply to the rules of the House.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, I am speaking to this point of order: I made the statement yesterday that the Hon. Mr. Hazen read the date as 1905.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is impossible for the Speaker to give a decision unless he hears the point of order.

Mr. DANIEL. I am simply raising the point of order that the Minister of Public Works says he does not believe my statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No. No.

Mr. DANIEL. That is what I am stating.

Mr. FISHER. No such statement was made by the minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will tell you why I believe that this clause in the affidavit——

Mr. HUGHES. Order.

Mr. LENNOX. I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. I will not allow three or four points of order to be raised one after another until the first is decided. The point of order by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) is no point of order at all.

Mr. LENNOX. Then, if the Speaker has ruled, I wish to speak to a point of order. The hon. member (Mr. Daniel) yesterday stated that he was at this public meeting, that he was within 10 or 12 feet of the hon. Mr. Hazen, that he heard the affidavit read——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LENNOX. One moment—that he heard the affidavit read——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, that is no point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. I want to know what the point of order is.

Mr. LENNOX. That the hon. member for St. John heard the affidavit read, that when it came to that point where the date 1907 is set out that the Hon. Mr. Hazen paused, and turned to Mr. Mayes and he questioned the matter of the date, and that Mr. Mayes then corrected the date, making it '1905,' and then the hon. member (Mr. Daniel) says that the hon. Mr. Hazen read the affidavit as 1905, and that the hon. member for St. John——

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is no point of order.

Mr. LENNOX. Let me state my point of order and I will bow to the decision of the Chair.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LENNOX—that the hon. member for St. John heard the statement read in that way at the meeting at St. John, and therefore the hon. member for St. John now rises to the point of order that he made the statement of his own knowledge that it was read as 1905, and the Minister of Public Works now refuses to take the statement of the hon. member for St. John, and he is bound Mr. Speaker to take it.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no point of order in that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not understand the Minister of Public Works to contradict the statement made by the hon. member (Mr. Daniel).

Some hon. MEMBERS. He did.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not so understand it. The hon. member for St. John gave his version of what occurred at the meeting at St. John and the Minister of Public Works is giving a different version.

Mr. LENNOX. He was not at the meeting.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order; the Minister of Public Works has a right to speak, he has a right to give his appreciation of what occurred at the meeting at St. John just as the hon. member (Mr. Daniel) has, and there is no breach of the rules of the House in that.

Mr. CROCKET. Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. CROCKET. I have a perfect right to speak. Do I understand your honour to rule that a member of this House——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. CROCKET—that a member of this House is not bound to accept——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) is putting a question to the Speaker.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He cannot speak after you have ruled.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down while the Speaker is standing.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then let the hon. member for York sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. It is impossible for the business of the House to be conducted in this way. I understand that the member for York is putting a question to the Chair.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then let the hon. member (Mr. Crocket) sit down when Mr. Speaker is standing.

Mr. LENNOX. And you sit down.

Mr. CROCKET. Do I understand your honour to rule——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. member has a right to put a question to the Chair.

Mr. CONMEE. Not without the permission of the member who has the floor.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. CONMEE. Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I sincerely appeal to the House that if the House has any intention of transacting business it will assist me in maintaining the rules. I would ask both hon. gentlemen who are on their feet to sit down.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down; sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is a rule of this House that when the Speaker rises members should be seated.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HUGHES. Let the Minister of Public Works——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have not had as long an experience as I would like to have had in this Chair, but I sincerely appeal to both sides of the House to assist me in maintaining the rules which are to the honour and credit of the House. I hope I will get the support of both sides of the House in endeavouring to maintain the decorum and dignity of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Now, I will proceed.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) did not hear my ruling. He is merely asking a question as to my ruling. I suppose that would be permissible.

Mr. CROCKET. Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I intend to do so in the most respectful manner. I wish to understand if your honour rules that a member of this House is not bound to accept the statement of a fellow member made upon the floor of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I ruled merely that the hon. member for St. John city and county (Mr. Daniel) was giving a version of what had occurred at a public meeting at St. John and that the Minister of Public Works was giving a different version. If the hon. member for the city and county of St. John had made a statement in reference to himself the Minister of Public Works would certainly have been obliged to accept it. That is a rule of the House. What occurred at a public meeting is an altogether different matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call your attention to an extraordinary feature of this declaration and one which I think, will cause you to regard with considerable astonishment the remark which has been made that there was no intention of leading the people to believe that I had received this money while Minister of Public Works in the year 1907. I find that this affidavit, which, it has been said, has been corrected, contains now the year 1905, the figure five being inserted in ink and, I presume, it is written over the figure 'seven' which was in typewriting. In the original affidavit it says that 'on the 15th of October, 1907, I—that is Mr. Mayes—received a telephonic message from Dr. Pugsley asking me to call and see him next day, which I did'—and, Sir, after this affidavit being re-sworn to this alteration from the year 1907 to 1905 is initialed 'W. H.H.' March 24, 1909. So, there, Mr. Speaker, we have this admittedly false affidavit sworn to by Mr. Mayes on the 12th of October, 1908, the original of which I was seeking for, which my solicitor had demanded from Mr. Hazen, the premier of the province who had read that false affidavit at that meeting, as I was informed. We asked for the original affidavit. We find it kept concealed, no attempt made to correct it and not until the 24th day of March, 1909, is it corrected by Mayes and re-sworn to by him. Now, then, there is another important matter to which I would like to call your attention, and to which I would like to call the attention of the hon. member for the city of St. John, because he professes to have great pain that he is compelled to bring this matter before parliament. Let me ask him, if he was at that meeting and he knew that the date of 1907 was wrong and that it should be 1905, what he thought next morning when he saw in the 'Daily Standard' and in other St. John papers the statement that I had received this money in 1907 when I was Minister of Public Works. What did he think of the editorials which charged that as a minister of the Crown I had prostituted my office and received these moneys from a contractor under my department? Let me ask him——

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Let me ask him what efforts he took to correct the wrong impression that had been given to the public?

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker,——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DANIEL. The Minister of Public Works has asked me what I thought when I saw in all the press that mentioned it that the date was 1907. What I thought was that the reporters who were present at that meeting failed lamentably in doing their duty.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, let me ask my hon. friend as the candidate of the Conservative party in the city of St. John, as the candidate in whose interest this affidavit was read, as the candidate on whose behalf the Conservative party had taken to its bosom this self-confessed boodler, according to his own statement, Mr. Gershon S. Mayes, and upon whose friendship and support they were relying, what he did to let the public know, to let the evening papers know that the affidavit was wrong and that so far from my receiving this money as Minister of Public Works I had simply received a fee from Mr. Gershon S. Mayes, who was my client some two years before I became a member of parliament? What does he think of the fact, that, from the night that the affidavit was read, an affidavit which put me in a most unfortunate position in the minds of thousands of people in this country, because that affidavit was calculated to shock the people of Canada because it was a startling statement that a minister of the Crown, the Minister of Public Works, had taken moneys from a contractor who had dealings with his department, and with whom it was his solemn duty to deal simply from the standpoint of the public interest, no effort was made to make a correction? What does my hon. friend think of the failure of duty upon the part of Mr. Hazen and upon the part of himself with regard to this matter? What does my hon. friend think of the fact that from the night that this affidavit was submitted to the meeting up to the day ot the election, neither my hon. frined nor Mr. Hazen ever expressed the slightest regret for the great wrong which they had done me? My hon. friend has made the statement that Mr. Mayes immediately corrected this error. When did he do it?

Mr. BOYCE. On October 13, 1908.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will tell my hon. friend when he did it. He did it upon the evening of October 13, and how did he do it? He wrote me a letter and that is the only way in which he did it. He did not do it by letter to the public press, and my hon. friend did not do it by letter to the public press.

Mr. BOYCE. Why did the hon. gentleman not do it?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the evening papers of October 13 there appeared my denial of this, there appeared my statement that this took place not in 1907 but in 1905. In these papers, Sir, I referred not in mild language to what had taken place. I referred in language, which, under other circumstances, might have been considered harsh, to this matter. I denounced the man who had made the affidavit as an infamous liar, and I denounced the men who had availed themselves of his services in as strong terms as I was able to summon. My denial of this statement and my denunciation of this man appeared in the evening papers of the 13th of October, and it was then and not till then that Mr. Mayes wrote me a letter stating that he had observed in the evening papers the statement which I had made and he desired to express his regret that the date had been given as 1907 instead of 1905. He said that the error as to the date was the error of a typewriter.

Does it not strike you as strange that through the error of a typewriter, these newspaper reporters should have fallen into the same lamentable error? These newspaper men were not typewriters and were supposed to have taken down what was said at that public meeting, and it was very singular that they should have fallen into the same error. The error was stated afterwards to have been a typographical one; but is it not equally singular that every Conservative newspaper, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, should have been guilty of the same typographical error?

I have another reason for charging the people in St. John who had to do with the preparation of this affidavit, of having deliberately gone to work with the intention of inducing the public to believe that I had received these moneys in 1907, when I was Minister of Public Works. There is strong and clear evidence of that contained in the paragraph itself, outside of the date; and I wish now to denounce that paragraph as absolutely false and concocted for the purpose of inducing the people to believe that I had been guilty of a corrupt act as minister of the Crown. This is what the paragraph states:

> He (Mr. Pugsley) said, 'Mr. Mayes, you see it will be nice to have some one who could do something for you while in Ottawa,'; there was always something to be done.

What is implied by that? It is implied that I was then a member at Ottawa, and that going to Ottawa, I would be able to confer services on Mr. Mayes; and they weaved the whole thing together and put it into October 1907, and it is difficult for me, it is impossible, to believe that it was not done deliberately with that intent. Is it not strange that if it were a mere mistake, the date should have been put forward two years? Is it not strange that the date should have been put forward from a period when, as solicitor for Mr. Mayes, it would have been perfectly right for me to receive money from him, to a time when, as member of Parliament and minister of the Crown it would have been criminal for me to have received money from him, as a contractor, when to have done so would have made me guilty of grave public wrong? That would have been sufficient to drive me from public life. Is it not strange that such a mistake should have occurred and be attributed to an error of a typewriter in the one case, and to a typographical error in the other? And I here denounce the statement as absolutely false, and declare that I never made any such statement to Mr. Mayes. Let me further say that for years I had been the solicitor and counsel for Mr. Mayes in important legal proceedings, and that he was indebted to me in a very considerable sum of money. I performed, it is true, some service in connection with this matter, and it is true that I asked him for some money on account of these professional services, and that I accepted his note, which he subsequently paid. Let me ask my hon. friend whether there was anything in that which could to-day do me any discredit as minister of the Crown or make me in any way unworthy of occupying the position I do. What was there in 1905, when I was not a member of this House and when I was solicitor for Mr. Mayes, and had been for years acting for him in my professional capacity as such, to prevent me taking his note for $2,000 in payment of such services?

In the affidavit of Mr. Mayes there is another statement equally false and unfounded, and that is the statement that upon one occasion I declined to pay him any moneys unless he settled with Mr. McAvity. I denounce that statement as absolutely without foundation. I desire to denounce also another statement, and that is that I held up moneys which were coming to him. There is not a shadow of foundation for it. So far from holding Mr. Mayes up, the facts were these: In the summer of 1908, I received from Mr. McAvity a telegram stating that he was interested in the contract with Mr. Mayes, that there was money due him, and asking if I could not retain these moneys until settlement could be come to between them? Of the relations between Mr. McAvity and Mr. Mayes, I knew nothing. Whether they were full partners or not I knew not. I had not the slightest intimation as to what were the relations between them, or what agreement they had together, but on receipt of that telegram, I understood that they were in some way interested together. I then communicated with Mr. Mayes, and called his attention to the fact that Mr. McAvity had said he was interested in the contract and had asked me to delay payment until they could arrange matters. That is not an unusual thing for the department to do. It is not unusual for the department to receive information of a dispute between the partners and to be asked by one of them to delay settlement on that account.

Mr. FOSTER. Were they partners?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know but I assume they were. Mr. Mayes himself makes the statement, in the declaration my hon. friend has read, that he requested Mr. McAvity to put in $20,000 to $30,000. I assumed that they were partners, but what their actual relations were I had no knowledge, not having been informed by either of them, and that was a matter with which I had nothing to do. True, on the 22nd of August, Mr. Mayes wrote me the letter which my hon. friend read; and in order that hon. members may judge for themselves whether or not I was holding up this gentleman with a view of assisting some one else, let me read the letter which I wrote Mr. Mayes two days after:

> G. S. Mayes, St. John.
> Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of yours of the 22nd instant, and in reply would remind you that when I informed you of the notice which I had received from Mr. McAvity that he was interested in the moneys coming to you from my department and had requested me not to pay them over until the matter was adjusted, you admitted that there was an amount coming to him, which you said you were prepared to pay, provided I would allow a further claim which you said you proposed making, and would buy your dredge. The impropriety of your proposal, which I told you I could not possibly entertain, did not seem to impress you as it ought to have done.

As you, in your letter, deny any indebtedness to Mr. McAvity, I do not propose to intervene in the matter, and shall give instructions for the payment to you of the amount found to be due you by the accountant of my department. If you have any further claim on the department, it will be dealt with on its merits. Whether or not you owe Mr. McAvity or have overpaid him, or whether or not there should be litigation between you, is, I beg to assure you, a matter of perfect indifference to me.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me ask you and the members of this House to say whether, either from Mr. Hyman when Minister of Public Works or from myself, after I became minister, either Mr. Mayes or Mr. McAvity received any favour of any kind or description, which any ordinary contractor was not entitled to receive from the department? In fact, his ground of complaint was the very reverse. And this, I suppose, induced him to go from step to step, first asking me to buy his dredge, then asking me to recognize claims which he was making against the department, and, when he found he could not succeed in that, making threats of what he would do in the way of exposure, which, I suppose, he thought some of our friends would be afraid of, and finally making this affidavit in the hope of injuring me and the Liberal party. Let me say that from beginning to end Mr. Mayes was constantly claiming favours from the department. After I became minister he sought to have his contract, which he said he was willing to have carried out at fifty cents, raised to ninety cents, claiming that it was fairly worth that; he wanted to have an allowance made for boulders of $19.60 instead of $8.60. And you will see in the records brought down letters and telegrams from him, and I have in my possession letters and telegrams from Mr. McAvity asking me to grant certain favours. And if you look over the correspondence from beginning to end, read it line by line, you will not find anything to show that I treated Mr. McAvity or Mr. Mayes as if they had the slightest claim upon my friendship or upon my consideration, but that in all cases I discharged my public duty and held Mr. Mayes to the absolute performance of the contract which he had with the Public Works Department. Surely that is of some importance when this House is considering whether or not there should be an investigation. Let me say to my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) that if he, as a member of this House, can find in the correspondence brought down—which, no doubt, he has perused with the utmost care—any affidavit of Mr. Mayes or any words upon which he, as a member of this House, would feel that a charge can properly be made against me as Minister of Public Works, I invite him to make that charge. And let me say to my hon. friend—and I speak as one who has had some parliamentary experience—that that is the proper and the manly course to pursue. Let me say to my hon. friend that it is neither manly, in my judgment, nor is it honourable, nor is it conduct to be expected of public men, that they should, by mere insinuations seek to destroy the character of their opponents when they are not prepared to take the reponsibility of submitting definite charges for investigation by parliament.

Mr. DANIEL. I think the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), while I am willing to give him every latitude, is going rather beyond the limit when he accuses me of taking an unmanly course and a dishonourable course. I would ask the minister to take those words back.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not hear the word 'dishonourable.'

Mr. DANIEL. I will ask the minister if he did not make use of that word? He was referring to the action——

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. member (Mr. Daniel) insist on these words being withdrawn?

Mr. PUGSLEY. What I was endeavouring to do was to point out, in language which could not be mistaken, what is the duty——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. PUGSLEY. —of a member of this House. Sir, I could not by any possibility withdraw that statement——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. PUGSLEY, —because, Sir, I was simply laying down a rule which ought to govern every hon. member of this House.

Mr. DANIEL. I rise to a point of order. I ask the Minister of Public Works to withdraw those expressions. If he does not, I shall then have the liberty of following suit. And, if it is the rule of parliament—

Mr. SPEAKER. The words 'unmanly' and 'dishonourable,' if used, I think, are not parliamentary.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I did not use the word 'unmanly'; I did not use the word 'dishonourable.' What I said——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. It is impossible for a member to be heard if he is interrupted in this way.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What I intended to say, and what I have no doubt I did—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. This is very unbecoming.

Mr. PUGSLEY,—what I have no doubt I did say was that the honourable and manly course for a member of this House. instead of making insinuations, was to make a charge so that it could be investigated. And these are sentiments that it would be impossible to withdraw.

Mr. DANIEL. I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Sit down.

Mr. DANIEL. My point of order is that the minister says I have been making insinuations against his character. I have made no insinuations, and I ask him to withdraw that statement.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think on that score the minister (Mr. Pugsley) can accept the statement of the hon. member (Mr. Daniel) that he made no insinuation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, I have——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw, withdraw.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Give him a chance.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. It is impossible for the minister to speak if he is interrupted in this way. I merely want order to be upheld in the House; I understand the desire of the House is that order should be maintained. It is useless to put a question to an hon. member, and, when he rises to answer it, interrupt him. How can he speak if order is not maintained?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) says he did not insinuate anything against me, I accept his statement.

Mr. DANIEL. The hon. minister (Mr. Pugsley) and every member of the House knows very well that I never insinuated anything. Every member of the House knows that any insinuations or charges against him have been made by Mr. Gershon S. Mayes on oath.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then, I understand that my hon. friend did not make any insinuations against me?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He certainly has not made any charges against me. But he has intimated in language pretty clear and plain that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) ought to accept my resignation as a minister of the Crown.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker—I will endeavour to make you hear.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. I do not want language of that kind used to the Chair.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPEAKER. I have no instructions to receive. Order.

Mr. HUGHES. If the hon. gentlemen on your right will be quiet, people will be able to be heard. You, Mr. Speaker, have ruled that the Minister of Public Works should withdraw a certain statement and he has not withdrawn it.

Mr. SPEAKER. He has withdrawn it. I understood the hon. minister to withdraw his statement.

Mr. HUGHES. We take the Speaker's word for it—the minister has withdrawn it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And yet my hon. friend says that he has made no insinuations against the minister. Might I ask my hon. friend, when he comes to think it over after he has had a night to think the matter over, whether there is not an insinuation contained in that suggestion of his that the Prime Minister should ask me to resign. Let me ask my hon. friend to tell us, after he has thought it all over, what he meant by calling up the case of my hon. friend who now so worthily represents the county of Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) in my own province; what was the sense of my hon. friend referring to that case, also making a suggestion as to the duty of the right hon. the Prime Minister in the circumstances? Now, I desire to repeat the well known rule, I repeat it for the information of my hon. friend from the city of St. John, that if a member of parliament desires to have a minister's conduct investigated, if he thinks the minister has been guilty of any wrong-doing, then it is not only the proper and manly course, but the parliamentary course, the course which appeals to the good judgment of all decent men, that he should have the courage to prefer his charge before the House and undertake the responsibility of producing ground for his charge. That is a fair course to take towards a minister, and it is the course which I am sure, upon reflection, the hon. gentleman will see he should have pursued.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to some further false statements in the affidavit or declaration which my hon. friend has read. It makes the statement that Mr. Mayes was informed that he was the only tenderer upon both occasions; and my hon.

friend in fathering that affidavit, in making himself responsible——

Mr. DANIEL. I wish to correct the hon. minister. I am not the father of that affidavit.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, I am sure the hon. gentleman is not the stepfather.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Perhaps he is the dry nurse.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That may be. At all events, my hon. friend does assume a certain responsibility, in fact a large measure of responsibility, for any affidavit which he submits to this House. Now no member of parliament should allow people lightly to make affidavits, take them up and read them to this House, where they reflect upon the character of either private citizens or members of parliament. Therefore when a member of this House does read to parliament an affidavit and asks parliament to take certain action upon it, his action ought to be a guarantee that he has made some inquiries to satisfy himself as to the truth of the statements which are there made. Now, what has my hon. friend done? He has read to this House, in the first place, an affidavit which it was admitted at the time it was read to the public meeting, contained a false statement of a most material character, and which continued to contain that false statement down to the 24th of March of the present year, an affidavit which neither Mr. Hazen nor anybody else could alter, except Mr. Mayes himself, by taking it back and going before the notary before whom it was sworn, and correcting it and re-swearing to it. He has read here an affidavit which states that Mr. Mayes was the only tenderer on both occasions. Yet my hon. friend knew from the statement which was brought down to this House, or if he did not know he ought to have known it, a statement brought down in answer to a question put by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), that so far from Mr. Mayes being the only tenderer, upon both occasions there were two tenderers, and that he was the lowest upon both occasions. Now, what does my hon. friend think of that? Does he think that is honorable and fair?

Mr. DANIEL. I will tell the hon. gentleman what I think of it. I ask him to recollect what was stated in that affidavit with regard to that matter; Mr Mayes says that he was informed months afterwards.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DANIEL. You can 'oh, oh,' as much as you like, I am stating what I have just read in that affidavit, and it should be in the memory of every one listening to me now. He does not state that he was the only tenderer, he says that he heard months afterwards that he was the only tenderer.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If it were not for the information from the department before this House, would anybody suppose for a moment but that Mr. Mayes was the only tenderer? Would anybody suppose for a moment but that he intended to convey the impression that he was the only tenderer, and had got this contract at his own price? and that without any further tenders being received, Mr Hyman, the then Minister of Public Works, had awarded him this contract—without having any other tenders between which and his a comparison could be made? Surely the position which my hon. friend has taken in reading this affidavit is very different from the actual position. He puts it forward in this affidavit as if on each occasion there had been no other tenderers, and that this arrangement had been made between him and the Minister of Public Works. Surely the position is very different, because we find that early in the summer of 1905 there were tenders called for, and the specifications contained the condition that the tenderer should own a dredge registered at the time in Canada; we find that there were two tenders received, that the tender of Mr. Mayes for ordinary material was 49 cents per cubic yard, and the next tender, which was that of Messrs. M. J. Haney and Roger Miller, of Toronto, who were prepared to comply with the condition, and who named the price of $3.50 per cubic yard of material described as class 1, and $1.25 per cubic yard for material described as class 2. There you have experienced contractors, the firm of Haney & Miller, of Toronto, tendering to do this work at the price of $1.25 per yard for ordinary material. Now at that time, if the Minister of Public Works had chosen to waive the condition with regard to dredges, and given the contract to Mr. Mayes, there being that great difference between them, I suppose possibly he could have done so, but it would not have been a fair discharge of his duty as Minister of Public Works, because in asking for tenders he had attached a condition as a result of which, of the two tenders, only one was by parties who were prepared to comply with the condition, and that was for a price considerably higher than the Minister of Public Works thought the work was fairly worth. Now then, did he do the right thing in calling again for tenders? I submit he did. He found that the only firm which was prepared to tender for this work and which had a dredge registered in Canada, tendered at a price which he thought in the public interest he ought not to pay, and thinking that the price was excessive, he called again for tenders. That it seems to me was what it was his duty to do. So far as the affidavit shows, so far as any statement my hon. friend has made to the House shows, up to the time, at all events, of calling for new tenders, there was nothing which could be impugned in the conduct of the Minister of Public Works, or of the officials of the department. Now, he called again for new tenders, and upon the second occasion, it is not true, as Mr. Mayes suggests, that he was the only tenderer. Again tenders were received from Messrs. Haney & Miller, of Toronto, and also from Mr. Mayes, and upon this occasion Mr. Mayes altered his tender for material of class 1. He reduced that. From this affidavit you would suppose that he did nothing but increase his tender, but as a matter of fact he reduced his tender in respect of one kind of material, of which it was supposed and afterwards proved there were large quantities in the harbour of St. John, that is large boulders. He reduced his tender on this class of material from $8.90 to $8.60 per cubic yard, and raised his price on the other material by 6 cents, making it 55 cents a cubic yard. For one class of work, large boulders, he reduced his tender by 30 cents, and for other materials he increased it by 6 cents, and his tender went in in that form. The affidavit read by my hon. friend shows and the records of the department conclusively prove that his tender and that of Messrs. Haney & Miller, of Toronto, went in in the regular way in accordance with the rules of the department. When the tenders were opened it was found that the tender of Messrs. Haney & Miller was $3.75 per cubic yard for materials of class 1 and $1 per cubic yard for material of class 2. Thus there was a difference of 45 cents per cubic yard between the tender of Mr. Mayes and the tender of Messrs. Haney & Miller.

In the face of the departmental record, in the face of the fact that there were these two tenders, I ask what justification can be given by my hon. friend for reading to this House an affidavit which would lead the members of this House and the people of Canada to believe that no tender was submitted upon the second occasion but the tender of Gershon S. Mayes.

Mr. SPROULE. Was the specification the same on each occasion when tenders were called for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The tenders in both cases were the same except that when they were called for early in the summer a provision was inserted that the tenderer must have a dredge registered in Canada and when they were called for in September that stipulation was omitted. In all other respects the tenders were the same. No tenders for what the Minister considered a fair price could be got for the work with that provision in as the tender of Messrs. Haney & Miller had shown, but, in order to meet competition when that condition was done away with, Messrs. Haney & Miller, who are very experienced contractors, tendered at the price of $1 a yard and the tender of Mr. Mayes was 55 cents a yard.

I ask what was the duty of the Minister of Public Works? He had invited new tenders by public advertisement in the various newspapers which would come to the notice of contractors. Two tenders were put in, one from an experienced firm, at $1.00 for ordinary material and the other from Mr. Mayes at 55 cents for the same class of material. What was the duty of the minister? Was it not to accept the lowest tender? My hon. friend will say that having invited new tenders it was the duty of the Minister of Public Works to go to Mr. Mayes and say: Why, you tendered before at 49 cents, although now, in response to a public advertisement, you are the lowest tenderer, although you are 45 cents per cubic yard below the next tenderer, a firm of experienced contractors, yet I will not give you this contract on your tender, you must come down to the lower price. Was it the duty of the Minister of Public Works to do that? I do not think so. Bear in mind that Mr. Mayes in this extraordinary affidavit, prepared and read under extraordinary circumstances on the eve of a general election, when there would be a desire to put forth everything which could be put forth against the department in order to injure the Liberal party, nowhere ventures to insinuate that Mr. Hyman was informed of Mr. Mayes' readiness to tender at 50 cents per cubic yard. Nor does he venture to insinuate that he ever intimated to Mr. Hyman that he would accept less than 55 cents per cubic yard. All he says is that he went to Mr. Hyman and asked if he could have this larger quantity because he said he was going to buy a dredge in the United States which would cost a large sum of money and he wanted to be sure of a large contract, which was not unreasonable. What did Mr. Hyman say, according to Mr. Mayes' own statement? Mr. Hyman immediately said: 'You will get such a quantity provided you are the lowest tenderer, that is all.' He happened to be the lowest tenderer and he got the contract at his price of 55 cents per cubic yard. Surely it is important, in considering the adoption of this resolution and the granting of this committee of inquiry to ascertain whether or not in this whole transaction, from the beginning to the end, there is anything reflecting upon the conduct of the Minister of Public Works, either the previous minister or myself since I have had charge of this department. I say, that so far as Mr. Hyman is concerned, there is not a particle of evidence and there is not even a suggestion that he swerved one iota from the duty which he was sworn to perform. What does my hon. friend ask? He asks that without a particle of evidence, wihout a charge, without even an insinuation so far as Mr. Hyman is concerned, a committee of this House should be solemnly appointed in order to inquire as to whether or not Mr. Hyman did his duty as a Minister of Public Works. Sir, Mr. Hyman, is not here to answer for himself, but I would be sorry as one member of this House, to be a party to the appointing of a committee to investigate the conduct of a former minister of the Crown who is not now a member of parliament, without some member at least having ventured to make some suggestion against his conduct.

Mr. LENNOX. What about the present minister?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend will hear about the present minister by and by. I am speaking now with regard to the late minister, because when this House is asked to appoint a committee to investigate the awarding of this dredging contract it is not to investigate any charge against me, but to investigate the conduct of a gentleman who formerly occupied the position which I have now the honour to fill, it is to investigate the conduct of Mr. Hyman when he was Minister of Public Works and I can appeal to those gentlemen who knew Mr. Hyman when he was Minister of Public Works, who knew how well he performed his duties as minister, to say whether some charge or some statement or some evidence or some fact should not be presented to this House before a committee should be appointed to inquire into his conduct as Minister of Public Works in connection with the awarding of this contract. There is, as I have said, no pretence upon the part of Mr. Mayes that he had any improper communication with Mr. Hyman, there is no pretence upon Mr Mayes' part that Mr. McAvity had any improper communication with Mr. Hyman; and, with the evidence, as I have said, all the one way, the evidence that tenders were invited in the ordinary public way by public advertisement, that the tenders were received in the ordinary way and that the contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer, it does seem to me that so far as Mr. Hyman and his conduct in connection with the awarding of this contract are concerned, there is nothing to lead in any way to the suspicion that he did not act in an entirely proper manner and entirely in the public interests. Does my hon. friend suggest that Mr. McAvity and Mr. Mayes were informed of what the tender of Messrs. Haney & Miller was? Does he suggest that?

Mr. DANIEL. Not at all, not at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Very well, not at all. My hon. friend does not even insinuate that?

Mr. DANIEL. No reason to even suspect any such idea.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Very well, I am glad to hear my hon. friend say that. Then what does it come to? It comes to this: That my hon. friend admits that there was no collusion between Mr .McAvity and Mr. Mayes, and the minister.

Mr. DANIEL. I admit nothing more than I have stated.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend must admit that Mr. McAvity and Mr. Mayes had no information as to what was the amount of the next tender, and that being so, they simply put in their tender at 55 cents per cubic yard, and they took their chance of that being the lowest tender. And, Mr. Speaker, the very fact that there was a difference of 45 cents per cubic yard between their tender, which was the lowest, and that of Messrs. Haney & Miller, which was next to them, is the very strongest evidence of the fact that there was no collusion. Then there was the other fact that the tender of Mr. Mayes on boulders was reduced by 30 cents per cubic yard as compared with what it was under the first tender, and that there was also a change made by Haney & Miller in the price they asked for boulders as well as in the price they were asking for ordinary material. But everything connected with the letting of the contract in the departmental records, and everything which Mr. Mayes has stated, is absolutely consistent with the fact that so far as the minister was concerned, and so far as the officials of the department were concerned, everything was regular and proper. And yet, Sir, we are asked under these circumstances to investigate the conduct of a former minister of the Crown in awarding this contract in a regular and proper manner to Mr. Mayes. Let me say this to my hon. friend, and I say it as a lawyer; I say it as one who has had very considerable experience—I have seen the question asked in the newpapers: 'Why does not the Crown proceed against Mr. McAvity?' Let me say, Sir, that if the Crown could proceed against anybody it would not be against Mr. McAvity, but it would be against that bosom friend of the member for St. John, Mr. Gershon. S. Mayes.

Mr. DANIEL. I want to say, Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Because, Sir, it was to Mr. Gershon S. Mayes this money was paid. The Crown had no contract with Mr. George McAvity; the Crown paid no moneys to Mr. George McAvity, and the Crown would have no case and no claim of any kind or description against Mr. George McAvity. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) is solicitous for this inquiry in order to see whether the Crown has a claim.

Let me say to my hon. friend that if it is true, as he says, that Mr. Mayes and Mr. McAvity had no knowledge of what was the next tender; if it is true, as will appear from all the evidence and all the facts we have before us, that there was no collusion of any kind between Mr. McAvity and Mr. Mayes and the minister, and that there was no irregularity in the letting of the contract, let me say that the Crown could have no action against Mr. Gershon S. Mayes. The only ground upon which an action could be founded is that there was collusion. Suppose two people are about tendering for work with any department, and one of them says to his partner: 'Now, I control this matter and I am willing for myself to do this work at a certain figure,' and the other partner says: 'No, we can get more for that; I do not think there is anybody else in the country who will do it for the low figure at which you think of tendering, and we are perfectly safe in tendering at a larger figure;' and a tender is put in and it is dealt with in a proper manner, and upon the advice of the officers of the department that contract is awarded, and the Crown discovers afterwards that one of the partners who might have controlled it would have been quite willing to put in a tender for a smaller amount, could the Crown turn around and bring an action against the firm to recover back the money which it might have saved? Now, in the absence of collusion, that is exactly the case here. My hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) says that Mr. George McAvity became interested with Mr. Gershon S. Mayes in this contract, and if it had not been for Mr. George McAvity Mr. Mayes would have tendered for a lesser figure. But Mr. Mayes did not tender for a lesser figure, and he did not tell the minister that he was willing to do the work for a lesser sum.

Mr. DANIEL. He did tender and he could not get the contract.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend need not have brought that in because it has no bearing on the point. He tendered some months before.

Mr. DANIEL. Exactly, for the same work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was under another call for tenders and at that time he had not a dredge and the contract could not be awarded to him, and so far as the Minister of Public Works could know he might have changed his mind a thousand times between June and September. He might have ascertained in the interim that the work was more difficult than he anticipated and the minister would know nothing about it. The point I make is, that his tender being put in in the regular way in response to a public call for tenders, his tender having been accepted by the minister in good faith, I care not how much he may have paid Mr. George McAvity, the Crown has no claim against Mr. Gershon S. Mayes for one dollar of the money which was paid under that contract. And, my hon. friend might as well face it first as last, that the only ground upon which any claim could be made by the Crown against either Mr. McAvity or Mr. Mayes is that there was collusion between them and the department, that there was fraud upon the part of the late Minister of Public Works, that he conspired with these people to enable them to get the contract in fraud of the public and against the public interest. That is the only ground upon which a claim could be made, and if my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) wants this committee appointed, and if he wants to see whether this money can be recovered back, let him have the courage to say that the Hon. Charles S. Hyman, while a member of this House, and while Minister of Public Works, was guilty of this fraudulent act and that he was a party to this money having been taken from the public treasury——

Mr. DANIEL. Will the minister allow a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. DANIEL. If I am out of order I will sit down.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no objection to the hon. gentleman asking his question.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the minister say whether in his opinion that was a legal contract between Mayes and McAvity.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would not be at all adverse to giving an opinion to my hon. friend on that question if it were at all before the House, but that is a question between Mr. McAvity and Mr. Mayes.

Mr. DANIEL. And the minister too.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would say this to my hon. friend, and I will not charge him any thing for this opinion——

Mr. DANIEL. That is a very unusual thing.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would say to my hon. friend that I understand that Mr. Mayes has sued Mr. McAvity, and why? Because Mr. McAvity did not get any favours from the Department of Public Works.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DANIEL. If the minister would allow me I may say——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. DANIEL. I would consider that a good cause for action, because the understanding on which Mr. McAvity got into the agreement was that he would get favours.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) has actually read to this House a letter—he has actually fathered this letter, too—in which Mr. Gershon S. Mayes complains of Mr. George McAvity that he has not succeeded in getting favours from the Department of Public Works. And that is the ground upon which, just a few days before the election, almost simultaneously with the reading of this affidavit—and let me say, Sir, that the people of St. John accepted it at its true worth, and let me say further, Mr. Speaker, the people of the whole province of New Brunswick accepted it at its true worth. While we had in that province a splendid cause to fight for, and while we had most acceptable candidates in every county in the province, yet I am almost inclined to think that some small measure of the success which we achieved in that contest was owing to the unfair tactics of our opponents, was owing to their determination, shown day after day and week after week, to resort to all kinds of slander, to hesitate at nothing in order to achieve success, winding up with the reading, by the premier of the province, of this false affidavit, at the great Conservative meeting in the city of St. John.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When the House rose at six o'clock, I had made the remark that perhaps the great success which the Liberal party had won in the province of New Brunswick was to some extent—possibly only to a small extent—assisted by the conduct of the members of the Conservative party in that province, particularly the leader of that party and the present premier of New Brunswick in reading this affidavit at the great Conservative meeting held in St. John on the 12th of October. That was but the culmination of the attacks and of a course of action of a very discreditable character, which, it was hoped, would injure the Liberal cause in the province of New Brunswick, but which signally failed. True, my hon. friend from St. John, (Mr. Daniel) succeeded in getting back to parliament, but he and his colleague who sits beside him (Mr. Crocket) represent all that is left of the once great Conservative party of that province. Of course, they did not spring this affidavit on the public until a comparatively short time before the election, but still where the people had the opportunity of studying the whole question, where they have known me a great many years—because I have lived among the people of St. John upwards of a quarter of a century—they gave a pretty emphatic verdict with regard to these attacks, so far as I myself was concerned. And so far as the hon. gentleman who represents the city of St. John (Mr. Daniel) is concerned, while he has succeeded in being elected, the Conservative majority of very nearly 1,000, which he had in 1904, was cut down to 192. And the majority of about 600 which the late lamented Dr. Stockton had in 1904 was converted into a majority of nearly 6,500 for myself in the constituency which I represent. I have always been ready and willing to meet any attack made upon myself, and it has given me great pleasure to day to have the opportunity of meeting the insinuations which are contained in the statement presented to the House. What I always desire is that I shall meet my opponents in the open, that I shall have the opportunity of facing them, and I have never been afraid—and I trust never shall—to meet my enemies under any circumstances. My hon. friend who represents one of the constituencies of Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) asked the question before recess: What about the present Minister of Public Works? Well. I shall tell him, so far as this contract is concerned. But first let me ask him if he would join in the insinuations now being made in the Conservative press that I was in some way, directly or indirectly, connected with Mr. McAvity in the advantages got from this dredging contract. If he, or any other hon. gentleman, would join in that suspicion or insinuation, let me ask him whether, if what they suspect were the case, he would not think it strange that I should have asked Mr. Mayes for money instead of going to Mr. McAvity, who, it appears, was to get considerable advantage out of this contract. Or does he not think, if it were understood that I was interested, directly or indirectly, that Mr. Mayes would have referred me to Mr. McAvity instead of giving me this $2,000 for services which he ays was not due me at all and to which I was in no way entitled. I desire to say—and I say it in the most emphatic manner and in the strongest language possible—that I had no interest at any time, either in 1905 or any time since, directly or indirectly in that contract, that I was not benefited in any way directly or indirectly, by it, or in whatever was derived from it by Mr. McAvity. In 1905, I acted simply as the solicitor of Mr. Mayes and was discharging towards him the duty which I thought, as his counsel and solicitor, I might fairly perform. He came to me as his legal adviser, as one who had advised him during a great many years in many important matters, and he asked me if I could refer him to any business man in St. John who would be likely to engage with him in this dredging enterprise. I mentioned Mr. George McAvity as a man of means and large experience whom I thought it would be greatly to his advantage to have as a partner. It was under those circumstances, and for that reason and no other, that I referred him to Mr. McAvity. What their arrangements or relations were I never knew, beyond having the general knowledge that they were interested together in the dredging contract, and I assumed that their relations were those of ordinary partners engaged in an ordinary business transaction.

If it is asked: What about my own conduct? I think I can fairly answer that the best way to judge is to look at the record and see whether or not I honestly and faithfully discharged the duty which I owe the public as Minister of Public Works. If any hon. gentleman can find in the correspondence any statement made by Mr. Mayes or anybody else that I ever showed towards him or Mr. McAvity, in connection with this contract, any favour or consideration which might not fairly be shown the veriest stranger, then an indictment might fairly be brought against me. But if I am able to point to the record and show that, although requests were made me from time to time to grant certain favours to Mr. Mayes, and although those requests were made both by Mr. McAvity and Mr. Mayes, I refused them in every instance and held Mr. Mayes strictly to the performance of the contract, and if I can show specially that there is strong evidence that neither had I any interest in the matter nor was I influenced by friendship towards either party, then I submit that all these insinuations fall to the ground.

I wish to refer again for a moment to the statement that in the interest of Mr. McAvity I held back moneys which were due to Mr. Mayes. I have given that statement an unqualified denial. It is said that he should have been given this money in the summer of 1908—in the month of August, if I remember well. I made inquiry from the deputy minister of my department with regard to the day when the final estimates were submitted, and I received this certificate from him:

Ottawa, Ont., October 19, 1908.

Hon. Wm. Pugsley, St. John, N.B.

Final estimate fifty-five cent contract July 29, check mailed September 17; final estimate core July 29, check mailed September 21; final estimate four hundred foot extension, 90 cents, September 19, check mailed September 22; final estimate South Rodney wharf and six hundred foot extension September 21, check 9,000 dollars mailed September 29. 5,091 dollars, 90 cents still owing.

Sgd. J. B. HUNTER.

I will tell you why I held back that amount. I had given directions for the payment of the entire sum to Mr. Mayes. But when I went to St. John, I found that certain of the ships berths there which, under the arrangement between the government and the city Mr. Mayes had contracted to dredge out,—or, rather to sweep out, using the more correct expression—had not been swept out. So far from his performing his contract, he had left a very considerable amount of sweeping undone, and it was reported to me that the big ships would not be able to berth there by reason of his not having performed his contract. Finding this to be the case, I at once telegraphed to the chief engineer—or had Mr. Scammell telegraph, I am not sure which—to hold back certain moneys until Mr. Mayes should perform his contract. I did this in the interest of the people of St. John. And, let me say if I had known at that time facts which have been disclosed since, I would have had more of the money coming to Mr. Mayes held back, because over upon the northern side of the Sand Point slip, in these ships' berths which he was supposed to have dredged, we have discovered a considerable number of boulders which it was Mr. Mayes' duty to remove, and which the department has been called upon since to remove at very considerable expense. Mr. Mayes received money to which, I am bound to say, I do not think he was fairly entitled. And if I had known what I know now, a further amount beyond the $5,000 would have been held back. I state definitely—and I defy contradiction; I defy my hon. friends opposite to look through the correspondence and find anything to contradict me—that I have never held back any money from Mr. Mayes to which he was entitled, and I have never delayed the payment, except, as I have said, in the case of the $5,000 held back by reason of his not having performed his contract for the work of which I have spoken.

Now, I wish to take up some correspondence which has already been published. I speak now only of matters of which I have personal knowledge. If I had not personal knowledge, I would not read from the copies contained in the newspapers, but I am aware they are correct, and my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) if he looks at the files, I have no doubt, will see the letters there. The first letter is dated November 23, 1907, after I had become Minister of Public Works. Mr. Mayes wrote me this letter:

St. John, November 23, 1907.

Hon. Wm. Pugsley,
Minister of Public Works, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Permit me to call your attention to the fact that I have not been paid for any work for the last three months. This is entirely due to the appropriation having been exhausted and does not reflect upon anybody. Notwithstanding this, at your request, I have prosecuted this work under my contract just as diligently as if I were receiving the money regularly.

I may say that it was necessary to go on with this work in order to get ready for the steamships expected in the then coming winter.

I am sure you can understand what a burden this has imposed upon me when you consider the extreme difficulty of getting money from our banks for any purposes. I have a large overdraft for which I am paying a heavy rate of interest. Had I so chosen, I could under the terms of my contract have stopped work altogether and thereby practically stopped my expenses, but the result would have been that the work would not have been advanced to an extent necessary to provide for the opening of the winter port season, which it practically is to-day. Under these circumstances I would suggest that you should cancel my old contract from the date of the last payment under it and substitute a new contract embodying all the work which remained unperformed at that date, together with the work since awarded to me and which has recently been surveyed by Messrs. Valiquet and Holt, this work to be at the same schedule as paid to the Dominion Dredging Company for similar, though in many instances, not so difficult work as we have had, the section, which contains nearly all the boulders in that vicinity, entailing serious breakage and great expense and loss. Besides this, you will find upon inquiry, that before I entered upon my first contract a great portion of the high water work which belonged to it had been removed by the local government dredges. Consequently, I have always had an undue proportion of low water work which has added very materially to the difficulties of my work.

Trusting that this request may receive your most favourable consideration.

I remain, yours sincerely,

G. S. MAYES.

This gentleman, whose affidavit is now presented to the House, is represented as being eager to take the contract at 50 cents a cubic yard. Yet his request is that, owing to the difficulties of the work, he should be allowed to cancel his old contract and be given a new contract at 90 cents per cubic yard, the rate which he was getting under a later contract awarded to him after public tender by the gentleman who was acting Minister of Public Works previous to my appointment. Mr. Mayes made out a strong case, but not strong enough to warrant me as I thought, in the public interest, in acceeding to his request. I wrote him this letter :

16th December, 1907.

Dear Sir,—I have had under careful consideration your letter of the 23rd ult., asking to be relieved of your contract of the 30th September, 1905——

That is the contract in question.

—and after consulting with the chief engineer of my department and examining the contract and specifications very carefully, I have come to the conclusion that it will not be possible to comply with your request, and I have therefore to ask that you will proceed as rapidly as possible and complete the work required under said contract.

I shall be glad to learn from you how soon you will be able to complete the work.

I am, your very truly,

WILLIAM PUGSLEY.

G. S. Mayes, Esq., St. John.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Then I find another communication relating to this matter—and I intend to read this in order to show you that I endeavoured to perform my duty to the public and was not in any way influenced in the manner which these gentlemen would have you, Mr. Speaker, believe I was influenced; that I did not, as they have intimated, use my position for the purpose of aiding and assisting Mr. McAvity. This is a telegram which came to me:

St. John, October 10, 1907.

Mayes defies me. In his work absolutely refuses to dredge in accordance with instructions given in writing and also personally delivered. He stated that we had no power over him; have cancelled all his work until he shows his obedience. Kindly wire as soon as possible.

Have wired the chief engineer.

J. K. SCAMMELL.

I replied by telegram as follows:

Ottawa, 12th October, 1907.

J. K. Scammell, C.E., St. John.

Your telegram received. Carry out instructions of chief engineer.

WILLIAM PUGSLEY.

Which meant that he was to keep Mr. Mayes right down to the performance of his contract. Now, we come down to the spring of last year.

Hon. Dr. Pugsley, Ottawa, Ont.

My dredge 'Beaver' has been working nearly three years without being registered. Is there a necessity for registering next week for tendering other works, prefer not to.

G. S. MAYES.

To which I replied on the 18th as follows

G. S. Mayes, St. John, N.B.

Same condition is in all advertisements issued calling for dredging tenders. Regret find it impossible to make exception in your case.

(Sgd.) WM. PUGSLEY.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. minister one question. Before six o'clock I put a question regarding the second dredging contract into which Mr. Mayes entered, and asked if the same conditions were in the second notice calling for tenders as in the first. One of the conditions was that the dredge must be registered in Canada, and because he did not have a dredge registered in Canada, he failed to get the first contract for which he tendered. I wish to know if I understood the minister aright to say that the condition had been omitted from the second notice and that consequently he got the second contract. Now if that be so, how can that telegram be correct, that the same conditions applied in all cases, and therefore it was absolutely necesary for him to have the dredge registered in Canada ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This telegram relates to a new work entirely that I was about to undertake in 1908, and in respect of which the advertisement went out in the ordinary way, with the condition that the dredge should be registered in Canada. We have more dredges now than we had in 1905.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister read the answer he gave?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is the answer:

G. S. Mayes:

Same condtion as in all advertisements issued calling for dredging tenders.

That is, all advertisements that my department is now issuing calling for tenders.

Regret, find it impossible to make exception in your case.

Now here comes another. In July 1908 I received from Mr. Mayes a letter under the date of 25th of that month, as follows:

Hon. Wm. Pugsley,
Minister of Public Works.

Dear Dr. Pugsley,—I wired you yesterday, that my work was completed and now beg to confirm it by letter. So far as the removal of the core was concerned this was a great surprise to us all, including your engineers. The plan, dated June 1, last, showed dimensions which were also included in the specifications, calling for the removal of 12,000 yards. It was rather surprising, therefore, when the removal of 3,000 yards completed the job. As it is very evident that another error has been made, perhaps you will be good enough to point out some 9,000 yards for me to do elsewhere. I understand that the Railway Department want the berth at the Ballast wharf cleaned up. If so, I am ready and willing to do the work.

I remain,
Yours truly,
(Sgd.) G. S. MAYES.

And probably under this original contract, whatever work Mr. Mayes would get, Mr. McAvity would get a share of it, and if I wanted to aid Mr. McAvity as a friend, I would naturally be disposed to encourage Mr. Mayes in getting additional work, and consent to his request for additional work. Then he says:

If so, I am ready and willing to do the work.

P.S.—May I call your attention again to the very large amount of money in holdbacks on progress estimates which are now due to me on these accounts. Please have the payment made as soon as possible as I have use for funds.

That date is in July, 1908. On August 10 I received this telegram from Mr. Mayes:

Have kept crew on dredge awaiting possible word from you as to dredging Ballast wharf berths. It can be done more satisfactorily this time of year as place is badly exposed to fall and winter weather. Can you kindly arrange this now.

G. S. MAYES.

To which I replied on the same date as follows:

Regret unable to comply with your request.

My reason being that when the time came for this work to be done, I intended to put it up to public competition, and was not disposed to let it to Mr. Mayes by private contract. Now in addition to the letters which I have read, there are other letters on file which my hon. friend has had an opportunity of examining, and in which Mr. Mayes was contending that he had a claim against the department because my inspector had not allowed him full measurements; he was making a claim also that he should be allowed $19.60 for the removal of boulders instead of something over $8 which his contract provided for, and his requests in all these particulars I refused and held him down firmly to his contract. Then when he began to feel that he was not going to be shown any favours by me, he writes intimating that he is going to appeal to other members of the government for that justice which I was denying him. Let me say here that the man who gives to Mr. Mayes, from my experience of him, what he thinks is justice, may possibly be doing an injustice to other interests which might be entrusted to his charge. At all events, I simply did what I thought was my duty, I refused to accede to Mr. Mayes' requests. Along in the summer of 1908 he made up his mind that he would like to get out of the dredging business, and he approached me to see if I would not buy his dredge for the Public Works Department, and the price which he wanted was $150,000, or thereabouts. He began to intimate to friends of mine that if I did not buy his dredge there would be some disclosures made which would be very injurious to the Liberal party. He did not expect, I think, that I would be influenced by any of his threats, or by any of his intimidations which he was making, but I think he hoped that by going to my friends and telling them, perhaps half the story, he might induce them to endeavour to bring some influence to bear upon me to purchase his dredge. Well, my department required a dredge, and I was willing to buy his dredge if I could get it at a fair and reasonable price. I desire to say here that word came to me from most reputable friends, and amongst others from Mr. C. J. Osman, who was formerly speaker of the Legislative Assembly of New Brunswick, a gentleman of the highest character, a man whose word would be taken more quickly than the affidavit of many people, and a gentleman whom I think my hon. friend from St. John also knows and esteems.

Mr. DANIEL. The Hon. Mr. Osman is a very respectable gentleman, formerly a member of the legislative assembly; I believe he was defeated at the last election. I have great regard for him, as I have for Mr. Mayes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, it happens, Mr. Speaker, that there is a difference between the two gentlemen. Mr. Osman has occupied a very high and responsible position in the province of New Brunswick; to-day he is manager of a great manufacturing enterprise in the parish of Hillsborough in the county of Albert. He is a gentleman whose word will be taken everywhere in the province of New Brunswick as a man of the highest honour. He has been my friend for a good many years; and one day, during the time of the general election, he came to me in the city of St. John, in a state of considerable excitement, and he said to me that Mr. Mayes had seen him and shown him a photograph of a promissory note for $2,000 which he had given me, and I think also the photograph of the cheque which he had given in payment. He led Mr. Osman to believe, so Mr Osman told me, that he had given me that note at a time when I was Minister of Public Works. Mr. Osman was greatly disturbed about it, and thought that he would come to me as a friend and as a member of the party, and give me notice of what Mr. Mayes had said.

Mr. CROCKET. Did the note bear the date on its face?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Apparently Mr. Osman did not notice it if it was in the photograph. Mr. Osman did not tell me as to that, but he has said to me and has stated over his own signature that Mr. Mayes led him to believe it was given when I was Minister of Public Works. I said: 'Did he tell you when the note was given?' He said: 'No.' I said: 'It was in 1905, when I was solicitor for Mr. Mayes,' and I told Mr. Osman he need not worry. Mr. Osman said he was glad to hear it and he returned to his home in Albert county. Mr. Mayes intimated to Mr. Osman that if he could get $150,000 for the dredge, good Conservative as Mr. Mayes was, and I judge still is, there would be, out of this price of $150,000, a contribution of $20,000 towards the Liberal campaign fund. Mr. Speaker, that statement was made not only to Mr. Osman, so Mr. Osman told me, but to several other people of great repute in the city of St. John who all had the same story to tell of these approaches which were made to them by Mr. Mayes, and to different people the threat was made that unless this dredge was bought and an arrangement made to settle these claims, some dreadful and damaging disclosures would be made. To Mr. F. W. Holt, as Mr. Holt has declared by a solemn declaration, Mr. Mayes showed all the documents and photographs and said he was about proceeding to Fredericton to have them published in a newspaper with which my hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket) is familiar, viz: The Fredericton 'Gleaner,' and that they would be published before the election and of course go broadcast throughout the country and do great damage to the Liberal cause. It happened that Mr. Mayes did not succeed either by these intimations made to my friends or by influences of any other kind, in accomplishing his desires. Among others whom he had approached was Mr. John B. M. Baxter, an alderman of St. John and then vice-president of the Liberal-Conservative Association, whom Mr. Mayes had got to interest himself in the hope of selling this dredge to my department. On the 30th day of September, 1908, Mr. Baxter sent me this telegram:

St. John, N.B., Sept. 30, 1908.

Hon. Wm. Pugsley,
Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa.

Client impatient at not receiving word from you or inspector——

And the client is Gershon S. Mayes—

Client impatient at not receiving word from you or inspector. Quotes your purchase and payment for dredge 'Industry' by order in council——

That is the dredge which the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has been inquiring about—and I wonder if he has been having communications from Mr. Mayes on the subject—

Quotes your purchase and payment for dredge 'Industry' as sufficient precedent for buying his dredge with complete equipment, ready for instant work at smaller price. Points out that fund for purchase is not exhausted or arrangement could be made similar to British Columbia purchase.

Mr. Mayes keeps in touch with all the dredge purchases made.

Advise act immediately, and wire definitely as client insists on prompt decision.

JOHN B. M. BAXTER.

In reply to Mr. Baxter's telegram the following letter was sent by myself:

St. John, N.B., Oct. 7, 1908.

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your telegram of the 30th ult. in regard to dredge 'Beaver' which was recently examined by the general superintendent of dredging. I regret to say that his estimate of the value of the spares is very much less than the estimate given by Mr. Mayes; and upon his report it would be impossible for me to recommend the purchase of the dredge at the price Mr. Mayes puts upon it.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) WM. PUGSLEY.

Mr. Speaker, I have given you a part of the correspondence and I invite my hon. friends opposite, if there is any one who ventures to believe or who would like this House to believe that I ever showed Mr. Mayes or Mr. McAvity any favour in connection with this dredging contract or that I ever deviated one hair's breadth from the line of my duty as Minister of Public Works, I call upon him to read it to this House, I call upon him to give to this House and to the country information which he has upon that point. I declare, Sir, that every letter, every telegram which passed between us, every departmental act of mine, every act of mine as Minister of Public Works, will show that I faithfully discharged my duty as between Mr. Mayes, the contractor, and the people of this country.

Now, Mr. Mayes, having tried first by suggestion that there would be a contributon to the campaign fund, a suggestion which did not succeed, because I suppose we did not require any campaign fund——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PUGSLEY —At all events, Sir, we did not require any campaign fund to be contributed to by Mr. Gershon S. Mayes, nor by anybody else in return for any favours to him or any one else having dealings with the government of this country. After he had failed to accomplish his object by these suggestions, after he had failed by an attempt at blackmail, and after he found that he could not dispose of his dredging plant to the government and could not get his claim settled except in the ordinary way, and get just what he was entitled to get, after he found too that he could not get his contract cancelled, and could not get me to engage to give him a larger amount than he was in justice and by law entitled to, what did he do? He then went to the leader of the Conservative party in New Brunswick and handed him this affidavit for the purpose of having it read at the great Conservative meeting in the city of St. John on the 12th of October. That meeting was attended by prominent Conservative statesmen from other parts of Canada, among whom was Sir James Whitney, the premier of the province of Ontario. I am told, Sir, and I believe it is just possible, that the reason why my hon. friend succeeded in saving his bacon in the election in St. John was that he and his friends repudiated all knowledge of this affidavit until after it was read; my hon. friend said that this was a great bombshell which Mr. Hazen had been keeping up his sleeve for the purpose of exploding that night, and he and his friends admitted that instead of being a bombshell it proved to be a veritable boomerang and did great damage to the Conservative party. As I said, Mr. Mayes handed to them this affidavit and they made the most of it before the elections. It did not do them any good then and I do not think the fathering of it by my hon. friend and the reading of it in this House is going to do him and his party very much good now or in the future.

I fear I have already taken too much of the time of the House, but I felt it was necessary that I should refer to these matters in order that the members of the House and the people of the country generally might know just what are the facts of this case, so far as they have come under my own observation and so far as I am able to speak with regard to them. I simply wish to say this, and I say it with a good deal of sorrow, Sir, that the tactics which were used in the city of St. John and which culminated in the reading of this affidavit were calculated to bring disgrace upon the public life of this country. There is nothing more discreditable, there is nothing more unworthy of those who are seeking the confidence of the people than that instead of trying to build themselves up on their own conduct and merits, they should seek to discredit and to destroy the reputation of their opponents by false statements and by slanders. But, Sir, my personal experience in the city of St. John was not very different from that experienced by others in other sections of the country. In the province of Quebec we found the name of Sir Lomer Gouin, the premier of that province, forged to a telegram designed to assist his opponents in the election. Out in the province of British Columbia, upon the eve of the election, when the public mind was excited upon the Asiatic question, when everything depended upon the attitude of the two great parties on that question, we found there a forged telegram read at a public meeting, which no doubt was intended to and designed to and which no doubt did have a most material effect upon the election in the city of Victoria. Down in my own constituency, a few days before the election when the people were in the midst of the excitement of a political contest, at this great Conservative meeting they sought to destroy my character and to injure the Liberal party by reading a false affidavit and publishing it broadcast in the newspapers of this Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Such were the tactics of the Conservative party, and I regret to have to say it. They sought to make me suffer by these disgraceful tactics, but, Sir, I am happy to say that the people of the province of New Brunswick viewed such conduct as it should be viewed, and they not only returned me as the representative of one of the most important constituencies in that province, but they sent back ten staunch Liberals with me to support the government. That is the best answer that can be made to the tactics which were used at that time, and which I may say are of a similar character to those which have for a good many years been directed against me.

I want to say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that while I have made mistakes, as every man who has been a long time in political life has made mistakes, they have been errors of the head and not of the heart. I have endeavoured at all times to do what I thought was in the public interest. While I was in the provincial arena I endeavoured to discharge my duty to the public, and when I received the very high honour of being called by the Right Hon. the Prime Minister to take a seat in his cabinet, I made up my mind that I would be even more zealous than I ever was before for the public weal. I have endeavoured at all times, Sir, to perform my duties, not only as a member of parliament, but as minister, in what I conceived to be the best interests of the country. And let me say that if there is any gentleman on the opposite side of the House—my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel) included—who feels that there is any ground for an attack against me in reference to this contract, or any other, then I say the fair and manly course is to make a charge against me with regard to the administration of my department. And let me say also to these Conservative newspapers which are levelling their vile attacks upon me and seeking to injure my reputation and my character that it would be fair for them to appeal to some gentleman upon the other side of the House to make a direct and specific charge against me so that I may know what I have to answer, so that an inquiry may take place, and so that witnesses may be called to the end and that we may know whether I am guilty or not guilty of those insinuations which are hurled against me. That, it seems to me, is the fair and manly course to take, and that, it seems to me, is but a small measure of the justice which every public man in this country is entitled to have meted out to him.

Mr. O. S. CROCKET (York, N.B.) Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate the Minister of Public Works upon the theatrical success he has achieved. He has certainly attained to the full limit of affected wrath and righteous indignation. I am bound to say that he won my admiration in that respect. I have heard the hon. gentleman when he was a minister of the Crown in the province of New Brunswick making similar exhibitions upon similar occasions in the New Brunswick legislature; I have heard him rend the air with rugged denials and with swelling assertions and denunciations such as we have heard from him this afternoon, but, when following some of these occasions in the legislature of New Brunswick there were investigations, investigations under oath, the denials which the hon. gentleman so solemnly made upon the floor of the legislature were completely dissipated. Now, Mr. Speaker, what was passing through my mind when I was admiring the affected indignation of the Minister of Public Works, and when he was denouncing his alleged traducers as infamous and malicious liars, was, why if he had such a feeling against these traducers, and why if these statements which he characterized as infamous, are really falsehoods, why has he not sought to punish those who have done him such wrong. The Minister of Public Works is a lawyer, and no one knows better than he that if the statements which are contained in that solemn declaration (which has now been spread upon the pages of 'Hansard' and which is now upon the table of this House) be untrue, he has a remedy to punish Mr. G. S. Mayes; he has a remedy to punish the Hon. J. Douglas Hazen, premier of the province of New Brunswick. If these statements be false, as the minister has claimed, the man who made them is unquestionably liable to prosecution for perjury in the courts of this country.

Why then, I ask you, has not the Minister of Public Works resorted to the remedy which the law affords him and instituted a prosecution for perjury against Mr. Mayes? Why has he not instituted an action for libel against the premier of the province of New Brunswick? The Minister of Public Works, I think, went far afield this afternoon when he made such a violent and wholly unwarranted attack upon the honoured premier of that province and I desire, as a member representing one of the New Brunswick constituencies, to resent that unwarranted attack which was made upon that distinguished citizen of the province. What was the reference which the minister of Public Works made to the Hon. J. Douglas Hazen? —that he deliberately read an affidavit knowing it to be false, that he was a party to an attempt to deceive the electorate of the province with respect to the date that the interview which is spoken of in the affidavit is alleged to have taken place between the Minister of Public Works and Mr. Mayes. I thought that, after the statement which the hon. member for the city of St .John (Mr. Daniel) made in this House yesterday, the Minister of Public Works even would have hesitated before making such an attack upon the hon. Mr. Hazen. The hon. member from St. John city stated clearly and distinctly in this House yesterday afternoon that he attended the political meeting at which this solemn declaration was first read, that he was on the platform on the occasion upon which Mr. Hazen was reading this affidavit and that when Mr. Hazen approached the paragraph in which this mistake occurred he hesitated at the figures '1907', that he turned around to Mr. Mayes, that Mr. Mayes then said '1905', and that Mr. Hazen read the affidavit as of 1905. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is one hon. member of this House who would hesitate to accept the statement which was made by the hon. member for St. John yesterday afternoon. And, that being the case, I ask the members of this House if they think the Minister of Public Works did himself any justice or any good this afternoon when he sought to represent Mr. Hazen as being guilty of an attempt to read a false date into an affidavit.

But, Mr. Speaker, I ask you again: Why is it that the Minister of Public Works, if these statements are untrue, if this affidavit is false, if this is the greatest outrage that was ever committed with respect to a public man in the Dominion of Canada, has not, in the past five or six months, taken the action which the statutes of this country enable him to take against Mr. Mayes and against Mr. Hazen?

Now, the minister has seen fit to refer to the result of the election in the province of New Brunswick, he has boasted of the result of these elections as a sort of vindication of himself with respect to these charges. He said furthermore that he thought the small measure of success which was attained by the Conservative party in New Brunswick was largely owing to the unfairness of his opponents in the use they made of this affidavit in the city of St. John. I think I can give this House pretty well the reasons for the return of eleven Liberal candidates from the province of New Brunswick. I think that the minister's friend, Mr. George McAvity, who is the very same gentleman who, the minister dared not deny this afternoon, got away with $35,000 of the money of the people of this country, had as much to do with the result of the elections in the province of New Brunswick as any other cause. Will the minister deny—I do not think he will—that the same Mr. George McAvity, who got away with this plunder from the public treasury, was associated with himself in the purchase of the St. John 'Telegraph' and the St. John 'Times'. The minister dare not and will not deny that statement because it is a fact that he was associated with Mr. McAvity in the purchase of these two papers which had been advocating the Conservative cause in that province for some months before that time. Not only was he associated with Mr. McAvity but he was associated with Mr. John Moore, another gentleman who has formed a dredging company in New Brunswick and who is obtaining many contracts at exorbitant rates from the Public Works Department. I am not sure but that if the truth were known it would be found that some portion of this $35,900 enabled, at least his friend Mr. McAvity, to assist in the buying of these papers from the owners at that time. These papers, as I have said, were the only Conservative papers that were being conducted in the city of St. John. The purchase of these papers by the minister and his friend, Mr. McAvity, took away from the Conservative party the only means they had of spreading the issues before the people of New Brunswick. The Liberal party not only had these two papers, but they had two other papers, the St. John 'Sun' and the St. John 'Star' which had been bought some time previously by other gentlemen who had been very close to the treasury of this Dominion—the Hon. B. F. Pearson whose name, I think, will be familiar to every member of this House who takes any interest in the public accounts of the Dominion. So that, I think the less that the Minister of Public Works says in this House with reference to the causes of the so-called Liberal victory in New Brunswick the better for himself. With respect to the election in the city of St. John, it seems to me that if there is one constituency in New Brunswick where this question would have formed an issue and where the verdict in this particular matter would have had some significance it was in the constituency in which this affidavit was read. What was the result in that constituency? My hon. friend who addressed the House so fairly this afternoon on this question is here to-night to confront the Minister of Public Works notwithstanding all the efforts which that hon. gentleman made to cause his defeat and notwithstanding the fact that he had not one single paper to espouse his cause in the city of St. John, owing to the action of the hon. Minister of Public Works and his friend Mr. McAvity, in buying up the papers which had formerly been advocating the interests of the Conservative party. In that election the minister sought to make a great deal of this very transaction. He appealed to the electors of St. John not only to elect himself, but to elect his colleague, Mr. Pender, my hon. friend's opponent in St. John, and appealed to them upon the ground that if Mr. Pender was not elected with him there would be no vindication with respect to these charges which he alleged were so foully uttered against him. But the electors of St. John did not respond to that appeal. My hon. friend from St. John, as I have said, is here to-night despite these influences. Now, I think that is all that is necessary to say with respect to the result of the election in New Brunswick.

I have heard the minister say it here and I have heard him say in the legislature of New Brunswick in the same way: Take the manly and honourable course, if you have any criticism to make and make a charge. I have heard him use the same expression in the legislature of New Brunswick. It is an expression I have heard very frequently in this House—so frequently that it has become a veritable chestnut. 'Make a formal charge.' Does the minister not see that there is to-day on the table of this House a specific charge more solemnly made than could be made by any hon. member speaking from these benches. I venture to say that never in the history of politics in the Dominion, has a charge been more solemnly and publicly made, or more widely circulated, than this charge which was made in the city of St. John on the 12th of October last. It has been circulated broadcast in every newspaper in the Dominion, and was read in the province of New Brunswick at that great meeting, in the hearing of the premier of Ontario. No charge could be more publicly or more specifically made than that which is now on the table of this House. The hon. minister said yesterday that he would welcome the fullest and freest investigation. That is also a statement I have frequently heard made by him on the floor of the New Brunswick legislature. But if he would welcome the fullest and freest inquiry, why does he not consent to this investigation? What does it matter, so far as his character and reputation are concerned, whether the charge be made by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel) or in the shape of the solemn declaration made by Mr. Mayes in that city. The matter is as fully before the people as any proceeding taken in this House could be; and if the hon. gentleman has any regard for his reputation or character, he would not split hairs upon the manner in which the charge should be presented.

The speech which he made this afternoon was full of denials and strong denunciation of his alleged traducers. But was it not to be expected that the minister would make the denials he did? Is there an hon. member who would suppose, for one moment, that the minister would not deny the allegations of this solemn declaration? Now, I ask my hon. friends on both sides of the House to consider thoughtfully the pretended defence which the Minister of Public Works made this afternoon. Leave out his general denials and his denunciations of the members of the Conservative party and see if he has touched for one moment the gravamen or the gist of the accusations contained in that affidavit. Did he deny the fact, or did he even refer to it at all, that there was an agreement entered into between Mr. Mayes and Mr. McAvity, precisely as alleged in that solemn declaration? No, he did not deny it because, unfortunately for him, we have in that case the documentary evidence which was read this afternoon by my hon. friend from St. John. We have the evidence that Mr. McAvity did not put a dollar into this contract, that he had no pecuniary interest in it or other interest beyond his political pull with the Department of Public Works, and that, because of that political pull, he received an undertaking for Mr. Mayes to pay him five cents per cubic yard on every yard of material of that class dredged in the harbour of St. John, and that under that agreement he received from Mr. McAvity, out of the money he got from the department the enormous sum of $35,933. The Minister of Public Works did not choose to address himself to that aspect or the case at all. Yet, that is the feature of this case which is the most important from the standpoint of the electors of this country. Under that agreement the public treasury of the Dominion has been defrauded of that sum of money, given to Mr. McAvity as a pure and absolute rake-off in exchange for his influence with the department. Of that there can be no manner of doubt, and therefore the minister passed over that phase of the question.

He did not however attempt to justify the inaction of the government in that connection, upon the ground that neither Mr. Mayes nor Mr. McAvity would be liable to an action for the recovery of that money unless there was collusion between the Minister of Public Works and one or other of those gentlemen. I know that the Minister of Public Works is an able lawyer, but I do not think that the proposition he advanced this afternoon in that respect would commend itself either to the lawyers or the laymen of this country. It would seem to me a most remarkable proposition that the only ground upon which an employer can recover back money of which he had been defrauded was that he himself had been in collusion with the parties who had defrauded him. Yet that is the effect of the contention which the minister made this afternoon. It was that the corporation which had given out a contract could not recover from its employee or contractor money of which it had been defrauded unless it was in collusion with the party who had committed the fraud upon itself. It seems to me that the contention is so utterly absurd that it would not to be considered even by some of the hon. gentlemen on the other side.

But my hon. friend from the city of St. John quoted this afternoon our Criminal Code with reference to this question of the liabaility of Mr. Mayes and Mr. McAvity. I have no doubt myself that this transaction came within the terms of the section which my hon. friend cited and that this was, in the terms of that section, a corrupt and illegal arrangement between Mr. Mayes and Mr. McAvity. But in addition to the section which my hon. friend quoted, there is this other one which bears upon this legal question:

Sec. 159. Every person convicted of an offence under the last preceding section shall be incapable of contracting with the government, or holding any contract or office with, from or under it, or of receiving any benefit under any such contract.

Since that is the law—of which there can be no question—then this was an illegal arrangement and consequently absolutely void, and Mr. Mayes was not entitled to receive from the Department of Public Works any portion of that money. So that, speaking as a lawyer, it seems to me that there can be absolutely no question as to this phase of the controversy. There can be no question that that amount of money was fraudulently obtained by Mr. McAvity out of this contract and that the Department of Public Works and the treasury of this country have been to that extent defrauded. This government has not seen fit down to the present to take any action. I have already pointed out that the Minister of Public Works has not seen fit to take any steps to prosecute Mr. Mayes for that perjury which the hon. gentleman says he committed when he swore to that affidavit, and that he has not ventured to prosecute the premier of the province of New Brunswick for the alleged libel he committed when he read and published that affidavit in the city of St. John. I point out further, that neither the Public Works Department nor the Justice Department has taken—nor does either intend to take—any action for the recovery of this money of which the treasury has been defrauded. Now, I seriously ask the members of this House to consider if the conduct of the minister (Mr. Pugsley) is consistent with the conduct of a man who is wholly innocent of these charges. If any man against whom such a vile slander as he alleges has been——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) misunderstands me entirely. I said that the slander was with regard to the fact that I had received these moneys while I was Minister of Public Works. That is the slander which was uttered in St. John, that is the slander which was sent broadcast throughout Canada. I do not see where there is any charge in the affidavit as now read, making the date 1905, which one could complain about. There is not very much of a charge in it so far as I am concerned.

Mr. CROCKET. I must express astonishment that a gentleman who occupies the high position of Minister of Public Works in this country should state in his place in the parliament of Canada that he does not see any serious charge in the affidavit read here this afternoon with respect to the interview which, Mr. Mayes alleges, took place between him and the present minister on October 15, 1905. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) forget—do members of this House forget?—that in that paragraph the present Minister of Public Works is charged with having asked of Mr. Mayes and having received from him $2,000 in connection with this work as a rake-off?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It did not say that.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the minister say the statement does not mean that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not take it so.

Mr. CROCKET (reading):

'Mr. Mayes, I am in need of money, and it would be nice if you could help me.' I said, 'Dr., what for? You know that I have paid you some $1,300 in my second case against Connolly which you have in a way offered to pay back, because you have said that Mr. Emmerson was so slow in bringing up the matter and I have not the funds. I am carrying a big back load and am paying large amounts to the Bank of Montreal for overdraws.' Just then Mr. George McAvity came in and Dr. Pugsley said that Mr. Mayes' business was getting along so well that a little money would be very acceptable. I again stated that I was carrying a big back load, that I could not see why Dr. Pugsley should ask me for money. I said, 'What do you want it for, a loan?' 'Well,' said Dr. Pugsley, 'you see it will be nice to have some one who could do something for you while in Ottawa;' there was always something to be done, and if I could not give him a cheque that I could give him a note for three or four months. I asked how much, and he said, 'Oh, about $2,500 or $3,000.' I said, 'This is too much, but I suppose I will let you have a note for four months for $2,000.' Dr. Pugsley then made the note out and I signed it. He said he felt sure that he would give me good return for it or pay it back.

Does the minister say that the correction of this date takes all offence from that paragraph? Was he not attorney general of the province of New Brunswick at that time, a minister of the Crown? And I ask him if he regards it as creditable to himself or to any other citizen of this country to have it said of him that he spoke to a contractor under the Public Works Department of this country, promises to use his influence to help that contractor in connection with that contract, and asked and received from him the sum of $2,000? If the Minister of Public Works does not regard that as a serious accusation, I am satisfied he differs very markedly from the great majority of right thinking people in this country. That is an offence under the laws of Canada, whether the hon. gentleman was Minister of Public Works or not. The Minister of Public Works waxes very indignant about this mistake in the date, and, as I pointed out, has accused the leader of the Conservative party in New Brunswick of deliberately reading that '1907' for the purpose of making a charge against him as Minister of Public Works. Now, I want to put this to the Minister of Public Works: If the fact is, as he alleged it this afternoon to be, that this note for $2,000 was received by him for professional services, what difference does it make if it was in 1905 or 1907? The question is not when the note was paid; the question is: What was it paid for? As to that, there is a serious conflict between the Minister of Public Works' statement made by the Minister of Public Works on the floor of this House and the statement made under oath by Mr. Mayes subjecting himself to prosecution for perjury if the truth of that statement cannot be established. If the fact is as the minister states, why should he object for a moment to having the matter investigated? Does he object to going before a committee of this House and making a statement under oath? If the facts are as alleged, the falsity of the statement can be determined in ten minutes by an examination of the Minister of Public Works before a select committee of this House. He would only have to produce his books, and if the case is as he alleged, that the money was paid for professional services, his books will show it. That is if he keeps books, because it has been found by a commission which has been investigating certain matters in the province of New Brunswick—

Mr. PUGSLEY. I call the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) to order. I think my hon. friend is out of order in attempting to refer to what took place in another place reflecting upon myself. At the proper time I shall be ready to answer anything in regard to it.

Mr. CROCKET. That is very pleasantly put—under the circumstances. But, surely, when I am discussing this question I can use any illustration which occurs to me. I referred to that matter to show that if the statement of the minister on the floor of this House this afternoon, that this $2,000 was for professional services, represents the facts, and if he went before a select committee, the matter could be settled in ten minutes by the production of his books, if he had books; and I was about to remark that, if he had not books, as it seems that the loan company of which he was the whole thing——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Order. I really think my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) ought not to transgress the rules. We have had so much of this that even my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), who will stand a good deal and give a good deal, had to object. I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) will not persist.

Mr. FOSTER. That is perfectly in order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the point of order?

Mr. CROCKET.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman has no right in this debate to refer to a loan company with which he says I am connected and its books. It is entirely irrelevant to this discussion. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will remember that the same question touched him the other day with regard to something which indirectly might reflect upon him—

Mr. CROCKET. Surely, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) does not think there is anything offensive in that. If the hon. gentleman happens not to keep books, even when he conducts a large loan company, he should not consider it offensive to have that fact pointed out.

So much, Mr. Speaker, for the paragraph in this affidavit with reference to the note. But does the hon. gentleman say that that is all there was in the affidavit of which he had reason to complain? From the interjection which he made a few moments ago, I assumed that when this date was corrected there was nothing in the affidavit with which he could find fault, or which would warrant him in taking proceedings against Mr. Mayes and Mr. Hazen. But is that a fact? Why, my hon. friend from St. John has placed the whole affidaivt upon the 'Hansard,' and we find that in addition to that charge there is a specific charge that the Minister of Public Works, as minister, was cognizant of this corrupt agreement with Mr. McAvity, and that he sought to hold Mr. Mayes up in the interest of his friend McAvity. I ask the Minister of Public Works if he attaches no importance to that accusation. Silence, I suppose, Mr. Speaker, gives consent——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not necessarily.

Mr. CROCKET. —and that he attaches no importance to such a serious accusation as that. Yet he would have the members of this House believe that because a typewriter's error had been corrected in the previous paragraph, which did not alter the gravity of the accusation with respect to his character as a public man, that was a reason why there was no necessity for taking these proceedings. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that will go down with even hon. gentlemen on the other side of this House, and I can assure you that it will not go down with the people of New Brunswick. Now, I do not intend to follow the hon. gentleman with respect to the correspondence which he has read this evening. He read that, I suppose, for the purpose of rebutting, so far as it would rebut, the statement of Mr. Mayes with reference to his being held up. But I would point out this fact: the minister claimed that he had given Mr. Mayes no favours, and he read correspondence which began, I think, some time in the summer of 1908 to bear out that contention. The Minister of Public Works is aware, I presume, that there was a break between Mr. Mayes and his friend McAvity during the summer of last year. The Maritime Dredging Company, with the minister's friend, Mr. John E. Moore, had come upon the ground at that time, and there was not so much anxiety then to promote the interest of Mr. Mayes as there was to promote the interest of the Maritime Dredging Company, and after that, it is true, Mr. Mayes was turned down by the Minister of Public Works. I think, Mr. Speaker, if there was an investigation there might be some very interesting disclosures in reference to that feature of the case.

Now, there was one thing that struck me as tending strongly to corroborate the statement of Mr. Mayes, and that was the letter read by my hon. friend from St. John, dated, I think, the 22nd August, in which he put it up to the minister, in a letter addressed to him as minister, that he had been endeavouring to hold him up in the interest of Mr. McAvity. Now, I ask if it is reasonable to suppose, if such was not the case, that Mr. Mayes would address such a letter to the Minister of Public Works himself. It seems to me that that letter which was read by my hon. friend had more significance with respect to this matter than any correspondence which the minister brought down referring to the negotiations after the break had occurred between Mayes and McAvity. Then I find in analysing the minister's speech that he devoted a great part of it to an attempt to vindicate the Hon. Mr. Hyman. Why, Mr. Speaker, there are no allegations in this affidavit affecting the character or the conduct of the former Minister of Public Works. I thought it would have been better for the minister to have devoted a little more attention to these charges which relate to himself than to attempt to defend Mr. Hyman from charges which have never been made against him.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to follow this subject further; but I do wish to express my desire and my strong opinion that it is the duty of the Prime Minister to see that an investigation is held. So far as the interests of the Conservative party are concerned I think I can say to the Prime Minister that they will be better served by refusing the investigation and allowing these charges to hang over the Minister of Public Works and the cabinet. But there are more than party interests to be considered in this affair. I think the public interests are those which should determine an issue of this kind. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman and the members of this government ought to have some regard for the good name and the honour of their administration, and they ought to have some regard for public morality in the Dominion of Canada. I ask you, Sir, to consider if it tends to promote public or political morality in this country, or morality of any kind, to allow such grave charges as those which are now upon the table of this House to remain uninvestigated, following the remarkable and extraordinary silence or inaction of the minister who has complained so indignantly concerning them.

My hon. friend from St. John mentioned two cases which it seems to me are analogous to the case now before the House. He referred to the charges which were made by Mr. Hodgins against the Transcontinental Railway Commissioners. In that case what was the conduct of the Chairman of the Transcontinental Railway Commission? Was he content to sit down, as the Minister of Public Works has done, without demanding an investigation into these charges? No; in that case the Chairman of the Transcontinental Railway Commission at once communicated the charges to the leader of this House and caused them to be laid on the table, and the Prime Minister felt it to be his duty to have them investigated in order that their truth or falsity might be determined. As pointed out by my hon. friend, that was a case not nearly so strong nor so grave as the case now before the House, for the reason that the charges of Mr. Hodgins were contained in an unsworn letter published in a newspaper in British Columbia. They were not attested under oath; there was not that solemnity about them, and, furthermore, they did not relate to the conduct of a minister of the Crown, but to an appointee or appointees of the government. Yet in that case the Prime Minister felt it to be his duty to cause an investigation of those charges to be made. I ask him to consider if that case can be distinguished from the case that is now before the House, and if he felt it his duty in those circumstances to cause an investigation, how can he justify himself in taking no notice of these charges, charges made under oath, made in the most public and emphatic manner that a charge has ever been made against a minister of the Crown in this country.

My hon. friend from St. John gave another illustration; it is one that I take no pleasure in referring to, and I refer to it simply as a precedent in matters of this kind. Almost precisely two years ago there was an unfortunate publication in a newspaper published in the province of New Brunswick which reflected on the character of a minister of the Crown, not in his public capacity, not in connection with the administration of his department, but in his capacity as a private citizen of this country. What was the action of the Prime Minister then? The predecessor, as the representative of New Brunswick in the cabinet, of the Minister of Public Works—and by the way the Minister of Public Works acted as that gentleman's counsel in that matter—made denials of the accusations brought against him. In that case a newspaper article was the sole foundation of the proceedings which the Prime Minister felt called upon to take. The matter came before this House and the hon. gentleman who was involved in that case rose and in the most emphatic manner possible denied the truth of the charges made against him. Hon. gentlemen opposite applauded just as they applauded this afternoon the denials of the minister. What was the action of the Prime Minister, what do the records show? That in accepting the hon. gentleman's resignation from his cabinet he stated: 'You can afford to ignore vague insinuations and innuendoes but specific charges you do well to meet as soon as uttered.' That was the opinion of the Prime Minister with reference to a matter which did not affect the administration of a department of this government. If that was the Prime Minister's opinion upon that subject, what has he to say to-day? Would not those words have been very appropriately applied to his Minister of Public Works? Was it not a specific charge? As I have said, no more specific charge was ever made, no charge was ever made with greater detail, than the charge which is contained in that affidavit. It was uttered on the 12th of October, 1908, and the Prime Minister's opinion in the former case was that a minister would do well to take proceedings to vindicate himself so soon as any specific charge was made; yet we have his Minister of Public Works in this matter lying down, as has been pointed out, for a period of five or six months without taking any proceedings of any kind and now greatly to my surprise, apparently opposing an investigation in this House. If the Prime Minister thinks that that conduct on the part of his minister, backed up, if it is to be backed up by the administration, will inure to the benefit of his government or his own reputation, he will find that he is greatly mistaken and that it will not be long before he will very deeply regret the course which he has seen fit to take with reference to this matter.

I do not desire to say any offensive word with reference to the Minister of Public Works or any other member, but I do think, as a member of this House, that the dignity of the House and the honour of the government require an investigation of these charges, and if the minister's statement is true, then the Minister of Public Works should be the most grateful man in the country for having the charges investigated and having his course vindicated, if vindication can be had.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.). Mr. Speaker, after the very lucid and able argument of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) I feel that it is unnecessary for me to spend very much time in discussing this question. But, Sir, as a representative from the province of New Brunswick, as this is a New Brunswick matter, I feel that it is not only my duty but my privilege to address the House for a short time, in order to give my views on what I consider the most dastardly attempt ever made in the history of Canada to drive a public man from public life.

I wish first to call attention for a few moments to the conditions prevailing when this preposterous document was made public in the city of St. John. You must remember that it was only about a year ago that the Conservatives of the province of New Brunswick imagined that they were absolutely the owners of the province of New Brunswick for the next 25 years, when I was told to my face 20 times in the month after the 3rd of March by two members whom I do not now see in this House, that I would never get back here again, when every Liberal member in the House from New Brunswick was told that his days were numbered, when the principal diversion of the member for York (Mr Crocket), and the late member for Kings and Albert, consisted in going around to the Conservative clubs in Ontario and telling them that not more than two Liberal members would be returned from the province of New Brunswick. When these hon. members went down to the election in 1908 they confidently believed they would be able to send back 11 or 12 Conservative members from that province. After they had been engaged in the campaign for a few weeks they commenced to get their eyes opened, and to see that the chances of breaking even were very few indeed and that they had to do something to rehabilitate themselves. They had sent their premier—a man who is possessed of wonderfully good looks, and when you have said that, you have said the most that can be said of his virtues—on a junketting tour throughout Ontario and Quebec with the other members of the 'big four.' They had failed to make good and they had come back, to use a slang expression, dragging their tails behind them. They came to St. John and it was felt that they had to do something in order to revive the drooping spirits of their followers in the province. They held this great meeting, all the Conservative magnates of the province were present and the premier read this affidavit. I am bound to accept the statement of the hon. member for St. John City (Mr. Daniel) that the premier of the province turned to Mayes and asked him if this date should not be 1905 instead of 1907, but I am of the opinion that it must have been uttered in a whisper and not in an audible voice. If it had been uttered in a voice which was capable of being heard, why on earth did not the audience hear it; why could they not get some man in St. John next day who would make an affidavit that he had heard the correction?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why could not the newspaper reporters hear it?

Mr. CARVELL. Why could not the newspaper reporters who heard the premier read it as 1907, hear the correction as 1905? I say again, I am bound to accept the statement of the hon. member for St. John City, but I do not think I am bound to say that the words were uttered in a voice loud enough to be heard by anybody else than the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel).

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CARVELL—and I say here to-night that the hon. member for St. John sits in this House as the result of that false affidavit.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CARVELL. What is the trouble?

Mr. DANIEL. If the hon. member wishes to insinuate by the remarks that he has just made that Mr. Hazen did not make the statement I said he did, I am bound to say that——

Mr. CARVELL. I rise to a point of order. If the hon. gentleman wants to raise a point of order, let him raise it or else sit down. I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, that I——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CARVELL. If he has any point of order to raise let him raise it and sit down.

Mr. DANIEL. I am sorry the hon. gentleman is so excited.

Mr. CARVELL. I am not. Raise your point of order now.

Mr. DANIEL. The statement I made this afternoon was that when Mr. Hazen read the affidavit and turned around to Mr. Mayes he spoke in his usual voice and Mr. Mayes——

Mr. CARVELL. Mr. Speaker, that is no point of order; I am going to insist it is no point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand it is a question of personal explanation.

Mr. DANIEL. Exactly.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Carvell) has the floor, and of course the hon. gentleman (Mr. Daniel) can only speak now with the consent of the hon. member having the floor.

Mr. DANIEL. Well, I will ask the consent of the hon. member to make a statement.

Mr. CARVELL. I do not propose to consent to the hon. member (Mr. Daniel) making another speech. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, we have had too much of this interruption from the other side of the House. We have a number of members on the other side of the House who will say anything against a man on this side and the moment you begin to hit them back they begin to squeal and whine.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER. I demand that these words be retracted.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not hear the words.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member spoke them in a very loud voice, Mr. Speaker; I heard them; his statement was this: There are gentlemen on the other side of the House who will say anything against a member on this side of the House. I demand that these words be taken back.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPEAKER. These words are very general in their application, but still they might as well be taken back.

Mr. CARVELL. If, Mr. Speaker, you want to rule against me I have no objection. I thought I would raise the member for North Toronto.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not a question of raising me; it is a question of the hon. member taking the words back.

Mr. CARVELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. FOSTER. Do I understand he takes it back? Do I understand that these words have been retracted?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member is going to speak now.

Mr. CARVELL. If my hon. friend objects to it, and I knew he would, I am willing to withdraw it, because he would object to most anything.

Mr. FOSTER. Coming from that quarter.

Mr. CARVELL. Now that the hon. member for North Toronto has had his usual diversion and has objected to my saying something, I presume I will be allowed to go on with my speech.

Mr. CONMEE. He is a privileged character.

Mr. CARVELL. He is. At this date in the history of the campaign, when it was necessary to do something to raise the drooping spirits of their friends, they went to Mr. Mayes and they got the affidavit which has been read. This affidavit was read by the premier of New Brunswick on the evening of the 12th of October and in the afternoon papers of the following day a statement was made by the Minister of Public Works of exactly what did happen. Later on that afternoon a letter was received by the Minister of Public Works from Mr. Mayes admitting there was a mistake in the affidavit, and while my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) may say that I am not justified in referring to the premier of New Brunswick—this great personage in their eyes who must not be referred to—I want to tell him that this grand lhama, as a hon. gentleman beside me says, never had the manhood from that day until the 26th of October, or down to the present time so far as I know, to stand up and publicly acknowledge his mistake and declare that what he had said against the Minister of Public Works was not true. And I will say more than that, and I will give my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) a chance to correct me if I am wrong. I never heard of the member from St. John himself being manly enough to correct the statement which was made for his benefit by the premier of the province.

Mr. DANIEL. He never made it.

Mr. CARVELL. These were the reasons which drew forth this preposterous affidavit at the time, and I will have something to say why it is rehashed now. There are insinuations in this document that the Minister of Public Works sent Mr. Mayes to Mr. McAvity with some wrongful purpose. We have the statement of the Minister of Public Works, and it is not denied, that Mr. Mayes, who had been his client for a great many years, came to him to ask with what responsible person he could associate himself in the dredging business and he pointed him to Mr. McAvity. And just here I want to say something about Mr. McAvity. In my opinion there is no man in the Dominion of Canada who has been hounded with the tenacity with which Mr. McAvity has been hounded by the Tory party of the province of New Brunswick for the last year. And I want to tell them more than that, that the name of McAvity will be honoured in the records of the province of New Brunswick when his traducers are entirely forgotten. I am willing to stand up here to-night and claim Mr. McAvity as one of my friends, and I am proud to do so. I challenge gentlemen opposite to read this affidavit carefully and to truthfully say that a particle of blame can be attached to Mr. McAvity or that he played any role than that of a business gentleman. We have heard a good deal about rake-offs; we have seen cartoons in the Conservative papers for the last three or four months about Mr. McAvity and his rake-off, and I will read this document to show that there is no evidence of wrong-doing on the part of that gentleman. Mayes says they went to Ottawa; he says he wanted McAvity to put up $20,000, and I think I am safe in saying that Mr. McAvity did not want to put it up. Mr. McAvity and this man went to Ottawa to make a contract as partners, and it was up to Mr. McAvity to make the very best trade he could—my hon. friend smiles over there.

Mr. LENNOX. So do we all.

Mr. CARVELL. I would like him to show this House where there was one transaction there which they could even insinuate is dishonourable on the part of Mr. McAvity.

Mr. LENNOX. It was all dishonourable and dishonest.

Mr. CARVELL. Mayes says:

I had told Mr. McAvity to arrange if possible to have at least 400,000 yards to dredge. McAvity came out to me and got me to go in and I explained to Mr. Hyman the difficulty of bringing a big plant and only digging a small quantity. Mr. Hyman agreed to see that if I got the contract, that if I was the lowest tenderer I would receive the 400,000 yards.

I want to know what Mr. McAvity had to do with that. Here was an arrangement made between Mr. Hyman and Mr. Mayes that if Mayes was the lowest tenderer he would get 400,000 yards in order to justify him in going to Boston and buying a dredge, and we have the declaration to-night of the member for York (Mr. Crocket) that there are no reflections to be cast on Mr. Hyman. If there are no reflections on Mr. Hyman, against whom are they? Why should there be any reflection against Mr. McAvity? Mr. Hyman told Mr. Mayes that if he was the lowest tenderer he would get the 400,000 yards, and all this took place before there was any transaction between Mayes and McAvity as to McAvity's share of the contract.

I want to repeat this contract, or this arrangement with the Minister of Public Works, against whom the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) says there is no reflection to be made, was made by Mr. Mayes and the Minister of Public Works before any agreement was made between Mayes and McAvity and in the face of this I would like to know how hon. gentlemen can say that McAvity has been guilty of any wrong-doing. Again Mr. Mayes, I say purposely, and I do not know whether the gentleman who prepared the affidavit for him knew it—purposely and falsely, and knowing it, I believe, stated that there were no other tenders in for this work excepting his. Then another inference is drawn in order to show that there is crooked work somewhere between the Public Works Department and this man Mayes. Mr. Mayes got his contract and then he made an arrangement with Mr. McAvity for good and sufficient considerations, I presume, that he would give Mr. McAvity five cents a yard on his contract. Is there any hon. gentleman in this House who will say that the government of this country are not justified in giving a contract to the lowest tenderer providing he submits anything like a reasonable tender? There had been tenders called for earlier in the season and one of the conditions of these tenders was that the dredge must be a Canadian dredge. Mayes tendered at by far the lowest figures, less than half of the highest tender, but because that clause was in the specifications the Minister of Public Works could not award the contract to him. Therefore, he called for new tenders and cut out that clause in order to give the people of Canada the benefit of getting that work done at the lowest possible price. That clause was cut out, new tenders were called for, two tenders were received and the lowest tender was accepted. I would like to know how any man can go to the people of this country, tell them the truth and say that there is anything wrong in that transaction. I am glad to have the privilege of standing up in this House in a public manner and saying that Mr. McAvity played the manly part in this transaction. As far as Mr. McAvity is concerned, let me tell hon. gentlemen that he will welcome all the lawsuits they want to bring against him. Mr. McAvity has nothing that he wants to retract and he is willing to face these people any time they come along. They have already started a suit against Mr. McAvity, but that was months ago, and we have heard nothing more about it since then. I would be very much surprised if we ever hear anything more about it.

Now, these hon. gentlemen make an onslaught upon the Minister of Public Works. It is not necessary for me to defend that hon. gentleman because he has done it himself. He has pointed out the unfairness of the statements made; he has pointed out that he knew nothing about the arrangement made between Mayes and McAvity; he has pointed out that this $2,000 transaction was a personal, professional matter between himself and Mr. Mayes, and he has pointed out, of course, that this transaction did not take place in 1907. We come down now to the statements, the insinuations, I call them, made in the effort to drag in the Minister of Public Works, in some way or other, as being a party to this transaction in order to blacken his character. I am not going to read extracts, but I am going to call the attention of the House to the letter written by the Minister of Public Works to Mayes on the 24th of August, 1908. Mayes had written him a letter which comes, to my mind, the nearest to a case of blackmail of anything I have seen in the public documents of Canada and the Minister of Public Works sends back a letter which no man, I do not care how much nerve he may have, would dare to write and make it a public document if he were guilty of the charges which hon. gentlemen are insinuating against him. He quotes Mayes' letter to him and then says:

You admitted that there was an amount coming to him—

That is to Mr. McAvity.

—which you said you were prepared to pay, provided I would allow a further claim which you said you proposed making and would buy your dredge.

What is the answer:

The impropriety of your proposal, which I told you I could not possibly entertain, did not seem to impress you as it ought to have done.

And then he turns around and tells him he can have whatever money is coming to him and that it has nothing to do with Mr. McAvity. I ask him if these are the words which any man would dare to pen if he were in the guilty position which my hon. friends attempt to insinuate he was in at that time. I am not going to read the correspondence which my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works read this afternoon, but after reading that correspondence and after listening to it I ask again if his is the conduct of a guilty party.

Mr. Mayes came to Ottawa about a year ago or a little less. He came while the estimates were going through last May or June, and I am credibly informed that he carried this story to the Conservative party, and that a member of the Conservative party came to a gentleman who occupies a seat in this House from the province of Nova Scotia, and told him the story. That gentleman came to me, told me the story and he thought that there was something which might get some one into trouble. Mr. McAvity was telegraphed for, he came to Ottawa and Mr. McAvity said: You go back to your friend and you tell that friend to crack on the moment that he wants to. I think the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) knows who carried the story back. I can tell the hon. members of this House that nothing further was said about the Mayes business and that the estimates for dredging at St. John went through without opposition.

Mr. DANIEL. I might say to the hon. gentleman that I have not the most remote idea of what he is referring to.

Mr. CARVELL. I will accept the statement. Then we follow this down a little further. Mr. Mayes who was here last May or June, tried to get a renewal of his contract. He commenced to blackmail the Minister of Public Works in August and he failed. Then the vice president of the Tory party in St. John went with an offer or a bribe of $20,000 for the Liberal campaign fund if they would buy his dredge. They would not buy it.

Mr. CROCKET. Is the non. gentleman not aware that Mr. Baxter, to whom, I presume, he refers, has denied that under oath?

Mr. CARVELL. Yes, and I am aware that a gentleman whom I would believe a great deal quicker says he did.

Mr. NORTHRUP. That seems to be a case for investigation then.

Mr. CARVELL. After everything had failed, after every device known to crooked men had failed——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CARVELL. Mayes comes out with this affidavit. All I have to say about this Mayes affidavit is simply this: A man who, according to his own confession, will play the game that Mayes played in this matter from the beginning, a man who will play the hand that he played down a few weeks before the 12th of October would not hesitate to go further if he found it necessary, and draw an affidavit for the purpose of injuring the Minister of Public Works or of obtaining something which he thought might possibly help out his own personal ends. I am prepared, knowing the transaction and all the parties interested, to take the word of the Minister of Public Works against the whole bushel of affidavits made by a man like Mayes. When the Minister of Public Works tells this House that he had nothing to do with that contract, that he did not make anything out of it, there is nothing that I can see to investigate, and I would like to know why this thing has been brought up at this moment. There is no apparent reason for bringing it up. There are no great issues at Ottawa. There does not seem to be any reason on the surface why this matter should be launched at this particular time and two or three days of the valuable time of parliament taken up discussing it. But there is a reason beneath the surface, and I can tell you what it is. This was brought to the front for the first time last October when the Tory party were in dire distress, and again it is brought up in this month of April when that party are again among the breakers down in New Brunswick. I am prepared to say that it would be possible to have that party out of power in twenty-four hours by a rebellion among their own supporters in the New Brunswick legislature; and consequently this matter is now revived, not for the benefit of the people of the Dominion as a whole, but for consumption in the province of New Brunswick, in the hopes of diverting the attention of the people of that province from the troubles they are now having with their own local administration. That administration which was elected a year ago, with the support of over two-thirds of the representatives in the House of Assembly, that government which has since violated every pledge it ever made, either to friend or foe, which has only gone to the polls twice in the last year and got a black eye each time, which dares not open a constituency in that province to-day, whose supporters are seething in rebellion, and which feels bound to do something in order to draw awav public attention from its own sins, has taken this course, and imagines it will achieve its object by trying to blacken the fair fame of the Minister of Public Works. A similar attempt failed in October, 1908, but I am bound to say that, in my judgment, the present member for the city of St. John (Mr. Daniel) occupies a seat in this House as a result of this false affidavit of Mayes. I cannot, therefore, agree with my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works that this affidavit did no harm to the Liberal party. It did do some hurt in many parts of the province of New Brunswick. I was some thirty miles out in the country the morning after the affidavit was read, and I was telephoned to come into town to meet my executive committee, and was told that if this thing were true I would have to denounce the whole matter or they would abandon me. I telegraphed the Minister of Public Works immediately and got back an answer, and when the afternoon papers came out, my people believed his reply, and I lost nothing by this affidavit. But I went to the city of St. John and I had occasion, after nomination day, to make a pilgrimage to the town of Sussex. I referred to this question there, and on my way back next morning, I met a clergyman—a gentleman who occupied the high position of president in the Methodist conference—and he told me that the ministerial association of the city of St. John had held a meeting the day before, and had decided that they could not vote for the government because of the revelations made in that affidavit.

Mr. CROCKET. I thought the hon. gentleman said there was nothing in it.

Mr. CARVEL. It was a whole tissue of falsehoods. That man told me that he believed Sir Wilfrid Laurier was right and the people needed his services another term, but in the face of that affidavit, he could not vote for the government candidate and would not do it, and I assumed there were sufficient people in the city of St. John of the same mind as this clergyman to give my hon. friend the seat he occupies.

I have no hesitation in saying that in my opinion there is no charge laid against the Minister of Public Works which requires investigation. If there be any hon. gentleman opposite who believes the statements in this affidavit—there seem to be two of them who do—let him get up like a man and make his charge. If any one will do that I shall hold up both hands to give the committee of investigation asked for, and I believe that every member on this side will do the same; and I have no doubt that Mr. McAvity will be the first man in New Brunswick who will welcome the opportunity to come here and tell what he knows about the transaction. Let these men come out in the open, and not remain under cover of a false affidavit, and let them, on their own responsibility, make their statement and they will have no trouble in getting an investigation.

Mr. W. B. NORLTHRUP, (East Hastings). I trust that I shall be able to avoid following in the footsteps of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr Carvell) and of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), who addressed the House at such length to-day, and confine myself to the subject before the House. I am encouraged to do so by the fact that it is perfectly evident that some gentlemen who have spoken on this resolution have not taken the trouble, Mr. Speaker, to read the amendment which has been put in your hands. And consequently we have lost half a day listening to very interesting historical disquisitions and to the whys and wherefores of many pregnant matters to the total neglect of the particular subject before the House. I trust that I shall be able to discuss this matter dispassionately, without saying a word to hurt the feelings of any hon. gentleman opposite, for, as I understand the question—and I think that other hon. members, on a moment's consideration, will take the same view—there is no necessity for the hard feeling and excited language given vent to so frequently to-day, and which have been aroused mainly by the fact that the Minister of Public Works has been so absorbed in some imaginary attack on himself and some of his friends that he has not had time to read the amendment. My hon. friend who last spoke (Mr. Carvell) after declaiming against the affidavit in question as a tissue of falsehoods, as absurd and inconsequential, wound up by telling us that in his own province the feelings excited were so great that people there, from clergymen down, were unwilling to support their old love, the Laurier government, if the statements in this affidavit were true. And we on this side, wishing to see the will of the people carried out, challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to give us the opportunity to find out whether or not this affidavit be true. I believe the Minister of Public Works to be too good a lawyer and too old and experienced a politician to have imagined for one moment, either this afternoon or any other time, that there was any attack made on him in this amendment.

What is the case before the House? This House is not a fit body to try whether or not certain statements are true. From what we have witnessed to-day, this House is preeminently unfitted to occupy a judicial position and decide whether or not certain charges made against a minister of the Crown, or his late colleague, are true or not, and this amendment does not ask the House to try this question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. NORTHRUP. It sets forth a certain momentous series of statements, and I venture to say that even the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Carvell) would not contradict the statement that if Mr. Mayes' affidavit be true—and it is not for me or any member on this side to say it is—then the right hon. gentleman who leads the House owes it to himself to see that an investigation is made into its allegations. If that affidavit be untrue, then the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) is one of the most deeply wronged men in this country, and the man who does him the most wrong is the right hon. gentleman who refuses to give him an investigation in order that he may clear his reputation. It is unfortunate, perhaps, that we do not agree as to just what the nature of the charge is. Let me illustrate one point: The Minister of Public Works has taken a great deal of the time of the House to-day and on other occasions to dwell upon what he would have us believe to be a momentous error made in the original declaration. '1907, appearing instead of '1905.' I have read the affidavit very carefully, and I have listened to the statements made by the Minister of Public Works; and I venture to say that there is not one lawyer in Canada —not one lawyer in Canada—even the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) himself, who would not say that, in relation to the question before the House, it was a matter of utter indifference whether that declaration said '1907' or '1905.' And I will tell the minister why: There are two explanations of certain facts. Mr. Mayes gives one statement and the minister gives the other. And which ever you accept the result is the same, so that it is immaterial whether that declaration related to 1905 or 1907. If the Minister of Public Works has stated the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, and if the $2,000 he received was in payment of legitimate legal costs, he had just as much right to receive those costs after he became Minister of Public Works as before. If, on the other hand, what Mr. Mayes swore is true, and if that $2,000 was paid for the assistance, the influence of the Attorney General of New Brunswick to be used in Ottawa to secure undue favours for this contractor, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) had no more right to receive that $2,000 before he was minister than afterwards. Why, the law read this afternoon, the Criminal Code of this country, places it beyond peradventure that if Mr. Mayes' story is true the Attorney General of New Brunswick, though not a member of this House then, was taking part in a transaction which is contrary to the law and the parties to which are liable to seven years in the penitentiary. Now, I wonder if there are not enough facts in this case for hon. members on either side who wish to do what is right, and who wish to know what the facts are, to agree upon and dispose of the question. I suppose we can start with the indisputable fact that Mr. Mayes was a client of the Attorney General of New Brunswick, and that they had conversations, and that Mr. McAvity was acquainted with the Attorney General of New Brunswick, and that he was the head centre for the city of St. John of the Liberal party, and that Mr. Mayes and Mr. McAvity had conversations about getting a contract in Ottawa. And I suppose that there is no dispute, as the Minister of Public Works allows, that Mr. Mayes had tried to get a contract at 49 cents for a certain kind of dredging. And there is no dispute that Mr. McAvity and Mr. Mayes came to Ottawa, and that they came to see about a contract, after a conversation between Mr. Mayes and the Attorney General of New Brunswick. There is no dispute that Mr. Mayes and Mr. McAvity came to the office of the then Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman), that Mr. Mayes remained outside and that Mr. McAvity went in. What took place within that room, I do not pretend to say. But so far, I think everybody will agree as to the facts. Up to the time that Mr. McAvity went into this office, Mr. Mayes had no contract, and, apparently, could not get one. Mr. McAvity came out and Mr. Mayes went in and got the contract at six cents more than he had tendered.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It does not state that. What the affidavit says is that Mr. Mayes went in and spoke to Mr. Hyman and asked him if he could get the contract for 400,000 yards, as he wanted to know that prior to bringing in his plant. And Mr. Hyman said he would get it if he were the lowest tenderer.

Mr. NORTHRUP. What does the minister complain of in my statement?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman said that the contract was closed then.

Mr. NORTHRUP. No, I said that Mr. McAvity went in, leaving Mr. Mayes outside. After a time, Mr. McAvity came out and Mr. Mayes went in. We do not know what took place, but we do know the fact that Mr. Mayes got the contract at six cents more than he had been trying to get it for months. And that very same day, or the following day—I think the same day a letter was written by the chief engineer of the department, promising Mr. Mayes 400,000 yards more. Now if Mr. Mayes got a contract for an additional 400,000 yards, I think the minister will admit that that contract was not given after public competition. We have no evidence as to the amount of advertising. I do not know about it, nor do I care; it is not material. Mr. Mayes got a certain contract which he had been trying to get, and, after a conversation with Mr. Hyman he got that contract increased by 400,000 yards.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not the evidence at all. It does not say that the 400,000 yards was additional.

Mr. NORTHRUP. It was not 400,000 yards originally. The amount was greatly increased.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The other tenders would cover 400,000 yards.

Mr. NORTHRUP. He was to have a guarantee of 400,000 yards, and the fact that a letter was written by Mr. Lafleur to that effect showed that it had not been closed in the first place. And then he went to get the dredge. And the very day he heard that his contract would be so much better even than the one he had tried to get and failed, Mr. Mayes signs an agreement to give Mr. McAvity all he got out of the contract over and above 50 cents. These are the facts. What did Mr. McAvity do for the difference between 50 cents and the contract price? That is one matter we want to have investigated. Nobody on either side has made the suggestion as to anything that Mr. McAvity did except to use his influence. Perhaps he did, perhaps he did not. But surely when a man gets a contract at six cents a yard more than he was willing to take the work for, and gets a much larger quantity of work than he had hoped, and when in getting it he was assisted by the head of the Reform party in his city, and when, immediately after, he makes the agreement under which he is to pay $36,000 out of his contract, surely the subject is one for investigation. It is not for me to say Mr. McAvity did anything wrong. I am not concerned about that. It is not for me to say Mr. Mayes is a saint; I know nothing of Mr. Mayes. But it is the duty of the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who is responsible for the honour of parliament and of the proper conduct of the various departments, and who is responsible to the people of this country to whom he owes so much and who have trusted him so often, to see that their interest is protected, which interest, evidently, has not been protected when Mr. McAvity was getting out of such a transaction as this the sum of $36,000. One need not go further than this far with the admitted facts to show that there is sufficient ground for an investigation. But there is another fact. The Attorney General of New Brunswick was paid $2,000 by this very man Mr. Mayes. It is not for me to say whether it was paid for the influence of this gentleman in obtaining the contract or in payment of legal costs. But when a man pledges his oath, thereby running the risk of going behind the prison bars if he has told an untruth, and declares that this payment of $2,000 was practically a rake-off for the Attorney General for his province in connection with getting a contract, I am not bound to believe it, but I am entitled to say to the right hon. gentleman who leads the House: Surely, Sir, this is a matter for investigation. It is all very well for the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) who has just taken his seat to say in the most theatrical way that he has such confidence in the Minister of Public Works that he would accept his word against a bushel of affidavits. That very statement perhaps shows the utter unfitness of this House as a judicial bench to try a question of this kind. Now it is perfectly certain, too, that after Mayes had finished his contract he was not immediately paid, there is no doubt about that. There may be a difference of opinion as to why he was not paid. Mr. Mayes may give one reason, and the Minister of Public Works may give another reason why he was not paid, but the stubborn fact remains that he was not paid promptly after he had finished his contract.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He was paid in the ordinary course.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Surely in the face of this letter of the 22nd of August protesting against holding him up, the letter which was answered by the minister on the 24th of August, surely in the face of that correspondence the minister will not say that he was paid promptly. Just imagine the moral obliquity of Mr. Mayes if, when he had been paid promptly for the work which he had finished in July, he should write on the 22nd of August such a letter as this:

Hon. Wm. Pugsley, Esq.,
Minister of Public Works, St. John.

Dear sir—I regret that you have seen fit to withold from me the payment of my July estimates and the balance of my contract in consequence, as you state to me, of Mr. Geo. McAvity having wired you that I owed him a sum of money.

Now he was held up, and held up by Mr. McAvity, the gentleman who, he said, had been holding him up all along:

I do not think this is a consistent position for you to take. Mr. McAvity's bills against me are a personal matter, and are different entirely from anything between the government and myself. I consider that I have overpaid Mr. McAvity to a very large amount. He proposed to have certain conditions carried out by which I would obtain more dredging work, and would receive fairer and more equitable treatment from the officials of the department. He has utterly failed in this.

And the agreement under which he was to do that was executed on the 6th of September after he got his $400,000. and before he got his $36,000 for what he had done. Now, Mr. Mayes says he has not done any more for him. and so the rogues fall out—no, I do not wish to use hard terms—but these gentlemen fell out.

He has utterly failed in this, and I propose now to enforce my rights by bringing suit against him to recover the very large amount which I have paid him, some $36,000. You are perfectly aware that Mr. McAvity's claims against me is for percentages of my contracts with your department in consideration of his services in helping me to get a contract, and his promise that he would do all in his power to assist me to get others.

This is his opinion of the minister on the 22nd of August:

Knowing this as you do, I cannot understand why you should use your position to hold up the man who has earned the money that a middleman may exact his satisfaction.

Now I would like to ask the minister——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Read my reply.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I will with pleasure, if you will send it over to me.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It has gone into the 'Hansard' office. I will send for it.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I will read it if the minister gives it to me at any time before I resume my seat. But the point I wish to make clear is this, that Mr. Mayes, on the 22nd of August told the minister that he, Mr. Mayes, and Mr. McAvity had made a criminal contract under the statute law of this land, that McAvity was given his percentages in violation of the very clauses read by the hon. member for St. John. He wrote to the minister saying: You know this is the case, you knew it on the 22nd of August. And here the minister is being told by the contractor in the most remonstrating tone, I am surprised at you holding me up, I, the man who did the work, you, who know all the facts, that McAvity was only being paid to use his influence later, and you are holding me up and letting the middleman have the money and letting the man who did the work go without it. We will see, when we get the answer of the minister, what he said to this charge that he had known before of this state of affairs, and if he did not know it before, he knew it on the 22nd of August, and then the minister writes a letter in a jaunty tone saying: This is a matter of indifference to me. One would think that the minister who was guarding the treasury, when he found this statement made by the contractor, Mr. Mayes, would have felt himself entitled to bring an action against Mayes and McAvity for collusion, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice, if he were here. if the Crown had brought an action against Mayes and McAvity, and put McAvity in the witness box with that sworn declaration, what the verdict of a court would be in that case. We know what McAvity himself swore to, and it would be interesting to see the explanation McAvity would give, a gentleman whom I am not attacking, but who is lauded to the skies by the hon. member for Carleton, N. B. (Mr. Carvell); I would like to hear what his explanation of the reason by which he raked in $36,000 when, according to Mr. Mayes, he had done not one single thing, invested not one solitary dollar, and had merely used his influence with the minister to obtain a contract. Now that contract was an honest and proper contract or it was not. It is not for me to say whether it was one or the other, that is a subject for investigation. But if that was an honest contract, don't you think, Mr. Prime Minister, that McAvity obtained the money under false pretenses, when he represented to Mayes: This is such a dishonest government that you will have to have my influence to get you an honest contract. And if it was an improper contract, don't you think Mr. Prime Minister,——

Mr. NESBITT. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman should address the chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The point of order is properly taken.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the speaker, then, to ask the right hon. gentleman who leads this House what he thinks about these statements, whether he thinks that was an honest and proper contract that was made with Mr. Mayes or not, and if it was an honest and proper contract, one that any body might reasonably obtain, then I ask you to inquire of the right hon. leader of the House why McAvity got $36,000 out of it. Would it not strike an ordinary person that he must have obtained that money under false pretenses? And if it was an improper contract, then I think the right hon. gentleman owes it to himself and his party to see that there is an investigation to show how such a contract came to be made. Now here is the letter of the minister dated the 24th of August, which is a reply to the letter I have just read of the 22nd of August:

To G. S. Mayes, St. John.

I am in receipt of yours of the 22nd instant, and in reply would remind you that when I informed you of the notice which I had received from Mr. McAvity that he was interested in the moneys coming to you from my department and had requested me not to pay them over until the matter was adjusted, you admitted that there was an amount coming to him, which you said you were prepared to pay, provided I would allow a further claim which you said you proposed making, and would buy your dredge. The impropriety of your proposal, which I told you I could not possibly entertain, did not seem to impress you as it ought to have done.

As you in your letter deny any indebtedness to Mr. McAvity, I do not propose to intervene in the matter, and shall give instructions for the payment to you of the amount found to be due you by the accountant of my department. If you have any further claim on the department, it will be dealt with on its merits. Whether or not you owe Mr. McAvity or have overpaid him, or whether or not there should be litigation between you, is, I beg to assure you, a matter of perfect indifference to me.

That letter is in answer to the letter of the 22nd August, in which Mr. Mayes told the minister that a corrupt arrangement had been made between McAvity and himself. How long before, we do not know. Some people might think that that was corroborative evidence of Mayes' affidavit, that the Attorney General, the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) knew of it from the beginning. But as the minister did not deny the statement in Mr. Mayes' letter, that he knew of it prior to being told by Mayes on the 22nd August, I think the right hon. the Prime Minister should consider that as a proper subject of investigation to find out when the minister first learned of this transaction. The matters to which I have referred so far are not in dispute between the various parties and the only question seems to be, when an affidavit is laid on the table of parliament setting forth these serious charges, what should parliament do? Parliament must do one of two things, either declare that these charges, solemnly sworn to, are of such trifling importance that we will decline even to investigate them, or else allow an investigation to be made. I do not for a moment wish to dispute the word of the Minister of Public Works when he says there is not a word of truth in this, that or the other charge. I would be doing very wrong if I did question his word, particularly in view of the way in which the presentment of this case strikes me. I think it will strike every hon. member that nothing could be much more absurd than that, when charges are made, charges which the right hon. gentleman himself will admit, if true, will lead to some very serious results after investigation, it should be held to be a sufficient and complete answer to this House and to the people of this country, a sufficient vindication of the honour of the government, for the Prime Minister to say, as he may be assumed to say by the words of the last speaker: 'I place more confidence in the word of the Minister of Public Works than in a bushel of affidavits and therefore I shall allow no investigation.'

We have to remember that matters such as this strike different people in different ways. Perhaps the Minister of Public Works perused an article in 'The Globe,' Toronto, a paper by no means hostile to himself. The editor of that paper, and it will not be said that he was animated by Conservative sympathy, out of the fulness of his heart poured out his regrets, almost his maledictions, on the Conservative party because they had driven out the Minister of Public Works who would have to return to his lucrative practice in St. John until after the matter was investigated, and charges similar to these cleared up. The article is a long one and I shall read only the concluding paragraph. It reads:

Mr. Pugsley's enemies will thus succeed in depriving the country——

Mr. PATERSON. That has nothing to do with this.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That has no reference whatever to the Mayes matter.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Certainly, I am——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is entirely irrelevant to this.

Mr. NORTHRUP. The charge made in the other case is different from this. I have not said that this charge is true, I have not said that the charge which the 'Globe' referred to is true, but I am endeavouring to show that such charges produce an effect on the public mind and that the only way to meet such an effect is to have an investigation.

We have precedents in the mother land, to which the Prime Minister is so fond of referring, that shed a light on the standard of public life in that country. Many members will remember the case of Lord Henry Lennox in 1876. Lord Lennox was then a member of the Conservative administration and he was also a director of the Lisbon tramways, an unfortunate company which had as a promoter a man who made improper promises and led certain shareholders to grief. One of the shareholders sued the promoter and the judges in giving judgment against the promoter said that the directors of the company must have neglected their duty or the company would not have found itself in such a condition Lord Henry Lennox was a director of the company, and also a minister of the Crown. These events had taken place five years before and I think that Lord Lennox was not at that time a minister, as I do not believe a Conservative administration was then in power. A gentleman on the opposite side of the House dropped a line to Disraeli, the premier, to say that he intended to give notice of a question asking the government practically what they proposed to do in view of the utterance of the judges in the case, to which be it remembered, Lord Lennox was not a party at all, so that any remark of the judges was obiter dictum; yet as soon as this letter was sent to the premier he sent it to Lord Lennox, who at once tendered his resignation to the premier; the following day in the House Lord Lennox gave his explanation, and the premier followed saying that it was a painful thing to him to have received and accepted the resignation, but he praised the honour of Lord Lennox, who insisted on defending his own personal honour without the responsibility of office and without asking his colleagues to share the responsibility with him.

There was another case in the old country in 1903 when a Mr. Fisher was a member, I think, of the Conservative administration. Mr. Fisher was engaged with certain other gentlemen with regard to a patent. Matters went wrong and the undertaking was not a profitable one, but Mr. Fisher personally had no more to do with the matter that went wrong than you, Mr. Speaker, or I. But in the course of litigation it was evident that certain people who had taken stock were going to lose and it was suggested to Mr. Fisher that as some of these people might have taken stock relying on his name as a minister being connected with the company, it was his duty to see that they did not lose. Mr. Fisher paid them 20 shillings on the pound and resigned his seat in the House in order that no blame might rest on his colleagues, no matter how innocent he might be. Mr. Balfour spoke with regret at the unfortunate result of the disclosures, and spoke of Mr. Fisher's resignation as a loss to the country. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman spoke to the same effect, and a gentleman whose voice has often resounded through this House, the Hon. Edward Blake, could not allow the matter to pass without a few graceful words. He said:

What has happened to-day, however painful it may be to the hon. gentleman himself, has vindicated his own reputation——

And here, Sir, is the point to which I wish to call the attention of the right hon. gentleman:

—and also maintained the honour and standing of this House.

It is as a member of this House, it is as a Canadian, that I appeal to the right hon. gentleman to allow this amendment to pass, to allow an investigation to be held, and, Sir, if an investigation is held, and it is found that this affidavit is untrue, that this man Mayes has been maliciously endeavouring to blast the reputation of a man who in that case would be far better than himself, the right hon. gentleman and his followers need not have the slightest fear that we on this side will do anything to save him from well-merited punishment, and if, on the other hand, the investigation should show that there is some foundation for his charges, then this House, having a report from a committee which had heard the evidence, which had placed Mr. McAvity on oath and had heard from him personally and not through his representative, for the time-being, in the House, then parliament would be able to vote what should be done by way of commendation or punishment of the gentlemen really concerned.

It seems to have been lost sight of in this discussion that if Mayes' story be true, then of course the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) would be implicated in the latter part of the charge, with reference to holding up the payment until McAvity was settled with. If that were not true and the first part were true, if it were true that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) had received $2,000 for the use of his influence in Ottawa, it would not be a matter so directly concerning this House. The hon. gentleman says: Let a member make a charge and I will welcome investigation. I wish the Minister of Justice was here in order that I might ask him on what ground any gentleman on this side of the House should stake his reputation and his seat in order to punish a man for what he did before he became a member of this House, for which we could not punish him even if the facts stated in Mayes' affidavit were proved to be true right up to the hilt. Nobody would pretend to say, that if it were true—and I guard myself again by saying that I do not express an opinion myself—but if it be true that the then Attorney General of New Brunswick was paid $2,000 for his political influence at a time when he was not a member of this House, it would be idle for any one to pretend to say he had forfeited his seat in this House because of something he had done some years before he became a member. And while both sides will accept that proposition, it is another matter altogether, if it can be proven to be true, whether the Prime Minister would allow one of the most important posts in his administration to be held by a gentleman who had such a conception of his duty as a public man. This is so serious a matter that in the interests of the country we are entitled to have an investigation so that the truth may be declared one way or the other. I have tried to discuss the question without using any harsh language against any one. I think it is a simple question as to whether or not enough has been shown in this affidavit of Mayes, if true, to justify an investigation. We cannot here try whether or not it is true, but we can appoint a committee to try that question. And surely, it must be evident to every one that if Mayes' character is so bad and his reputation so shaky and his affidavit so worthless as has been said by gentlemen opposite, surely the biggest mystery in Canadian political life today is that the Minister of Public Works would not welcome an inquiry to roll aside the cloud. One other point and I am done. If the affidavit of Mayes be true, then there was the very collusion that the Minister of Public Works has spoken of, and if there was collusion--apart altogether from the question of conspiracy which has been dealt with by my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket)—if there was collusion, then without doubt McAvity is liable to hand back the $36,000 which he got for doing nothing.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mayes does not say there was collusion with the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Mayes tells his story.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He does not say there was collusion with Mr. Hyman.

Mr. NORTHRUP. He did not pretend to say there was collusion because he was not present, but if the facts set forth by Mayes are true, I do not think any judge or jury in the land would have any difficulty in finding there was collusion.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The member for York does not concur in that statement.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I frankly admit that I differ from the law as laid down by my hon. friend from York. I do not think it would be possible to have an investigation of this matter without the standing of the Minister of Public Works of that day being concerned. And certainly the standing of the Minister of Public Works of to-day would be concerned, first as Minister of Public Works if the charge as to the payment to McAvity were held to be true, and secondly, if the other charge of receiving $2,000 for his influence were true. I do think that the right hon. the Prime Minister is practically concerned in this matter, because he being responsible to the people of this country for his ministers, it is his duty when a prima facie case is made—and nobody would deny that there is a prima facie case when a man makes an affidavit with all the surrounding evidence to corroborate that affidavit that we have here—surely it is a duty that the right hon. gentleman owes to himself to see that his departments of government are kept pure and clean. I sincerely trust, from the national standpoint, from a Canadian standpoint, from the standpoint of a member of this House, that the right hon. gentleman will allow an investigation. I am sure the right hon. gentleman will believe me, I am sure every member in this honourable House will believe me when I say, that if I were not speaking for the interests of the country and of the House; if I were speaking merely as a Conservative partisan I should hope from the bottom of my heart that an investigation would be refused.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer). Mr. Speaker, I should like to make the promise to the House that was made by the hon. member (Mr. Northrup) and that is, that I shall endeavour to stay with the question before the House, although I sincerely hope that I shall have more success in keeping that promise than he had. The hon. member began in what he seemed to consider was a very judicial frame of mind, and, he rebuked the member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) for not keeping to the question before the House, but to my very great surprise the hon. gentleman (Mr. Northrup) very soon showed considerable partisanship in charging the hon. member for Carleton with a theatrical manner in the delivery of his speech. Without being an absolute authority upon the meaning of that adjective, I could not help thinking that the hon. member for Carleton probably owed the favour of having that epithet hurled at him to the fact, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Northrup) thought he was usurping a function that is not altogether foreign to the manner of the member for Hastings himself. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Northrup) told us that in his opinion this House was not a fit tribunal to consider this question, but he immediately proceeded to give evidence that he thought there was in his own person at least one exception to that general rule, because in his speech he himself made a very exhaustive examination of the case. In the course of his speech the very strongest partisan attitude was taken by the hon. member (Mr. Northrup) himself, because he quoted the affidavit and all that Mr. Mayes says in the affidavit, against the word of the Minister of Public Works which we heard reiterated again and again with the most ample evidence to support it, in the speech which the hon minister delivered in his defence to-day. I could not help wondering that the hon. member (Mr. Northrup) should have said that he could dispute the word of the minister, almost in the same breath in which he quoted the details of Mr. Mayes' affidavit against the word of the minister. One word more in regard to the member for Hastings will enable me to fulfil my promise to stay with the question. I must say that the honourable member was extremely unfortunate in the old country precedents which he cited to endeavour to prove his arguments. In the first place, the offence charged against the ministers in the old country was alleged to have occurred while they were ministers of the Crown and members of the House. That is not the present case at all. In the second place the ministers in the old country who were charged practically admitted the truth of the charge by at once resigning their positions. But in this case we have a diametrically opposite situation. We have the minister not only denying the charge which is brought against him but giving the most ample evidence that it is possible to give that the charges are foundationless. I would like to say that in my judgment this House is acting well with an undoubted right in having brought before it a resolution asking for a committee of investigation. It would be acting within its right to grant that committee, but I take it that the possession of a right is one thing and the light, frivolous or thoughtless exercise of that right is another thing.

Mr. BOYCE. All things are lawful, but all things are not expedient.

Mr. M. CLARK. I do not recognize the relevance of the interruption of the hon. member.

Mr. BOYCE. I did not suppose you would.

Mr. M. CLARK. In fact I think I would be getting within the toils of rule 19 by saying that my hon. friend is as irrelevant as he frequently is. I was saying that it is not always wise to exercise a right, and I take it that the very strength of this right of investigation on the part of parliament, is that parliament, whether in this country or in the old country, has recognized that the demand for such a committee and for such an inquiry is so very serious a thing that it should not be acceded to except upon the very strongest case that can be presented to parliament. I would like to say, Sir, that the appointment of a parliamentary commission for inquiry into the conduct of a member of the House, who is also a minister of the Crown, is not an ordinary expedient to be lightly undertaken. It is an extraordinary expedient, only justified by a very strong case. What is the fact, Sir, that relates to the ordinary procedure of this House with regard to every member of it? We have had it stated again and again in the last week and it is that in the ordinary procedure of this House when a member, not a minister, but a member, rises in his place and makes a statement as to a fact, we accept that statement as true. Yet this commission is proposed to investigate a statement of the utmost detail, made with the very greatest ability and supported by evidence drawn fully from the correspondence in this case. In regard to the basis upon which it is proposed to build this commission, the man Mayes leaves upon my mind two very distinct impressions. I differ from my hon. friend from Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) in that I am not from New Brunswick, and anything I know about this case I have learned to-day. I have listened with as much care and as much impartiality as I am capable of to the charges on the one hand and to the reply of the minister on the other, and I have gathered two very distinct impressions about this man Mayes. The first one which I have does not depend upon the unsupported statement of the minister, but it came out clearly in the correspondence which he read and which he had had with this man. The first impression I gathered about him, founded upon the minister's statement and supported by the correspondence, is that he is a disgruntled seeker of government favours. I take it that that was clearly brought out by his correspondence with the minister. He wanted a higher price for a dredge than that dredge was worth. The minister refused that higher price, and doubtless the man who wanted to sell the dredge did not feel quite so well pleased as if he had been met by an agreement instead of a refusal. We have heard something in this debate about the minister holding up Mr. Mayes. Why, it seems that the boot is entirely upon the other leg. It was Mr. Mayes who unsuccessfully attempted to hold up the minister. I take it that that fact was brought out in the debate, and brought out by the correspondence without any possibility of dispute on the part of any fair-minded man amongst my opponents in this House, and I take it that that fact justified my first impression and justifies me in describing Mayes as a disgruntled seeker of government favours. The second fact about this man is that, by mistake or otherwise, he promulgated a false affidavit. I do not think that any member of the opposition benches will be able to deny the truth of that statement. He promulgated a false affidavit. He was either so careless about it that he got the wrong date inadvertently or he was so wicked about it that he got it on purpose. My hon. friends opposite may take which ever horn of a not altogether pleasant dilemma that suits them best, but I take it that the fact is clear that he promulgated a false affidavit. He proved the falsity of the affidavit by correcting it himself. On the strength of a corrected affidavit this House is asked to throw over the circumstantial and complete statement of a minister of the Crown and to appoint a commission of investigation. To investigate what? To investigate a case hanging upon, depending for its sole foundation upon the statement of a corrected affidavit by a disgruntled seeker of government favours, who admits that in the first instance he promulgated a falsehood. I do not know what the opposition may think about this way of putting the case. That is how it strikes a plain man from the west, and I must say that in my humble judgment there are very grave and very strong reasons why we should not grant this commission of investigation on this kind of a foundation. Let me say that there are two grounds, and only two possible grounds, that occur to me which can justify motions of this kind or debates of this class in the House. The first is that they are undertaken for the public good, for the raising of the tone of public morality and public life in this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. M. CLARK. I take it from the feeble 'hear, hear' that there are at least some members of the opposition who claim that this is the ground upon which this debate has been carried on. Well, we of the Liberal party cannot have the slightest objection to the results along that line because I say deliberately that I do not think that when the statement of the minister is carefully and calmly read from beginning to end it will be considered any misfortune for the Liberal party that he was allowed to make the magnificent defence of his conduct to which this House has listened. I have just a little suspicion as to how far the public good is really paramount in the minds of my hon. friends on the opposition side when I reflect on the somewhat chastened countenances which they displayed when that statement was made. That chastened appearance would be much more easily explained if the second possible cause to which I wish to refer was more immediately in their mind when they moved this resolution and set in motion this debate. If they were not actuated by a desire for the public good, then there is only one other purpose which could have moved them and that was to secure a party advantage by discrediting the good name of the people of Canada and the public life of the country in the person of a chosen minister of the majority of the people. I know that members on the opposition side are a litle touchy when any reference is made to the result of the last election. My hon. and agreeable friend from Elgin (Mr. Crothers), I think it was, grew very warm in a recent debate on this subject, and asked whether the last election was to be held as an approval of all that had taken place in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. If I am in order in answering that question, I should like to say that having talked with many electors in that part of the country I have the honour to represent, the verdict in the general elections, in my judgment at any rate, conveyed a disapproval of a campaign of that kind. I am convinced, from private and personal intercourse with many people not of the Liberal party, that the result might have gone the other way if the opposition had based their fight upon a policy instead of the class of fight they put up. My hon. friend from St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) took a very prominent part in that contest and he came to my constituency.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. M. CLARK. I think this has a very distinct bearing on the question before the House. I am examining into the motives which underlie this resolution and I think that what I am saying is strictly pertinent. In any case, I can gratify my hon. friend by saying that however disagreeable it may be to them, there will not be very much more of it. My hon. friend from St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) came to my constituency. He came, so far as I know, in a perfectly honourable way, accompanied by some unusual apparatus—an apparatus never required by William Pitt or Gladstone and which our own Prime Minister has hitherto not needed to enthuse the audiences he is in the habit of addressing. I must say that I do not think the class of campaign carried on by my hon. friend there did any good to the Conservative party. I had ample evidence only last evening, that many members of the House, when they want to see moving pictures go to Bennett's theatre, and I have every reason to believe that when they want to hear good public speaking they will go to an orderly conducted public meeting.

I shall vote against the motion to appoint an investigating committee because I believe in the first place, that to use the power of appointing such a committee on frivolous grounds would encourage the appointment of similar committees every day in the week. If you take the affidavit of a man, who has been described in terms which were not greatly objected to even on the opposition benches, as your basis for appointing a committee of investigation, you can get such men by the dozen in every constituency who will make affidavits to defame the character of members on either side. I shall vote against the resolution in the second place, because, in my judgment, to appoint such a committee, except upon the very strongest ground, derogates from that public esteem which deservedly is attached to the high and responsible position of a minister of the Crown. A minister of Crown is the result of years of hard and honest service to the people in whatever county he lives. That position is the result of constant service to the people, and, as a general rule, of many contested elections, and you will lower that high position and very great responsibility in the public estimation if you appoint an investigation committee, such as is now asked for, except upon the very strongest possible grounds. In the third place, I shall vote against this motion because the only ground urged for the appointment of such a committee is the affidavit furnished by a man self confessed and proved to be a disgruntled seeker of government favours. I shall never give a vote in this House with a clearer conscience—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. M. CLARK—with a clearer conscience that what I am doing is in the best interests of the country and the dignity of parliament.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think I owe it to the House to declare what are the views which the government entertain upon this question and the reasons which have induced them not to accept the motion moved by my hon. friend from the city of St. John (Mr. Daniel). I do not intend to discuss in any way the reasons which have been set forth in support of this resolution because I believe that every one of them has been refuted, and triumphantly refuted by my hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). My hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Northrup) concluded a speech, which on the whole was moderate, by the statement that he hoped, as a Canadian, this investigation would be granted, but as a party man that it would be denied. My hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket) expressed the same sentiment. He put it a little more emphatically perhaps, and added that if it were the bad fortune of the government and the good fortune of the opposition that the motion would be denied, the people would not fail to visit their disapproval at the proper time. Well, that is a matter of judgment, and I have some claim to my own judgment, and, in the words of my hon. friend who has just addressed the House (Mr. Clark), it is with a perfectly clear conscience and without doubt or hesitation that I say that this motion should not be entertained. This is not the first time unfortunately that the honour of a minister of the Crown has been impugned. Perhaps too frequently for the honour of this country, motions of this character have been made. This is not the first time a member of this House has thought it his duty to bring charges against a fellow member and sometimes against a minister of the Crown, which, if proved, would drive the member accused out of public life. I agree with my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) that, if the charge that is levelled at my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works in this affidavit were true, he could not remain a member of the government—I do not think he could remain a member of this parliament. But this is not the first time such charges have been made. Whenever a member of this House has thought he owed it to himself and to his position to bring a charge of this kind against a fellow member, he has done it by rising in his place and stating that he was credibly informed and had reason to believe that such and such statements made against that fellow member were true. I quote several precedents, but I will be satisfied with one. Here is the motion made by Mr. Tarte in 1891 against a member of the government of that day:—

That J. Israel Tarte, Esq., the member representing the electoral district of Montmorency in this House, having declared from his seat in the House that he is credibly informed and that he believes he is able to establish by satisfactory evidence——

Then follow the statements of fact. Is this the method followed by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel)? That hon. gentleman has this affidavit in his hand, this sworn declaration which was read most solemnly at a public meeting by no less a person that the premier of New Brunswick, making certain charges against the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). But though the hon. member (Mr. Daniel) has this document in his hand, does he dare to say that he is credibly informed that these accusations against my hon. friend are true? Does he dare to say that he has reason to believe them true? No, he does not take that responsibility. He incorporates that affidavit in a motion which he places before the House, but he has not sufficient faith in the statements of the affidavit to declare that he believes them true, and that he can prove the facts therein alleged. I am not surprised that my hon. friend the member for the city of St. John will not, even with this affidavit, say that he is credibly informed that the facts therein alleged can be substantiated by evidence. This affidavit bears on its face the evidence of falsehood,—I do not think I am speaking too strongly when I say so. In the first place, it is the evidence of a man, who, if we are to take his word, is a self-confessed boodler. What faith will you place in the words of a man who makes a charge against another, but who cannot make that charge without accusing himself? Do hon. gentlemen on the other side place very much faith in the statement of a man who thus comes before the House and confesses his own turpitude? If they place any faith in a story of that kind, they have the faith that will move mountains. But I do not think they should make allegations against any hon. member of this House upon such an affidavit as that.

Let us go into the statements in this affidavit and see what it discloses. Mr. Mayes states that on a certain occasion he entered into a contract with Mr. McAvity. I do not characterize that contract in any way. He said that when he made that contract with Mr. McAvity he paid $2,000 to the Minister of Public Works. This allegation is not new, it has been before the public for four months at least. It has been discussed by the press in all its bearings, and we know all about it. The Minister of Public Works, when that charge was made, met it immediately by admitting frankly that, in October, 1905, he had received money from Mr. Mayes, but said that it was money honestly paid to him for legal services. Mr. Mayes in his affidavit states—No, he does not state, but insinuates—that the money was not for professional service but for political influence. Now, we are men of common sense in this House: does anybody believe, after what we know of Mr. Mayes and the matter he has been prosecuting in an effort to help his own interest, that he would pay $2,000 to any man unless he got consideration for it? If this money was paid for political services where were these services rendered? This contract for dredging was given openly and squarely, without possibility of influence from anybody; it was given upon tender openly called for, and the contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer who happened to be Mr. Mayes. What opportunity was there to use political influence? Yet, that is the charge made against the Minister of Public Works. On one side we have the statement of a self-confessed boodler that he paid this money for political services and on the other we have the statement of an honest man that the money was paid for legal services. Which are we to believe? Are we, under these circumstances, to take anything out of this affidavit? It would be a different thing if the hon. member for the city of St. John (Mr. Daniel) had risen in his place and said: I have reason to believe that these statements are true. He does not say so, but simply lays this document upon the table of the House. His statement, in effect, is: I have not sufficient faith to believe this affidavit upon it, but we want the House to take action upon it. That is something new to our procedure and is not consistent with the rules and precedents of this House. The affidavit goes on to say that all this was before the Minister of Public Works had become a member of parliament or a minister of the Crown of the Dominion, but that since my hon. friend became a member of the government he had held up Mr. Mayes for the payment of moneys due to him. On this part of the case, I altogether agree with the words spoken by my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark) that if there has been a holdup it was not a holdup of Mr. Mayes by the Minister of Public Works, it was the case of Mr. Mayes trying to hold up this minister of the Crown. The facts are before the House in the documents that have been brought down. There is the letter by Mr. Mayes to the Minister of Public Works, and the letter by the Minister of Public Works in reply, showing that when, upon one occasion, Mr. Mayes was pressing the minister for the payment of money, he stated, in effect: Unless I receive my money immediately, and moreover, unless you take over my dredge at a certain price, I will hold you up. He followed that up with threats to the minister, trying to induce the minister to buy his dredge. This was a clear attempt at a holdup. But the Minister of Public Works, answering like the honest man that he is, said that he would have nothing to do with it, and showed Mr. Mayes the door. And then Mr. Mayes went to the leader of the Conservative party in New Brunswick.

Reference has been made to the Hodgins case, and the question is asked: Why does not the Prime Minister do in this case what he did in the Hodgins case? When Mr. Hodgins made his statement in the press I thought it my duty to refer it to the chief commissioner of the Transcontinental Railway, and that gentleman asked for an investigation. Does it not strike hon. gentlemen opposite that there is a difference between the case of Mr. Hodgins and the case of this man? Mr. Hodgins did not accuse himself, he accused some one else, he accused the commissioners. Mr. Hodgins, I think, is an honest man. He stated that there had been something wrong going on in the classification on the Transcontinental Railway. Believing that to be the statement of an honest man, I thought it my duty to call the attention of the commissioner to it, and the commissioner finding that his action was called in question, asked at once for an investigation. But are we to be told by hon. members opposite that whilst it is logical, whilst it is right to take action upon the statement of an honest man, we must take the same action upon the statement of a self-confessed boodler? I see a great difference between the two cases. So with the case of the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson). That hon. gentleman, to his credit be it said, when he saw a statement in a respectable newspaper reflecting upon himself, thought it was his duty at once to take action. But this again is a different case altogether, and I repeat that I refuse to be carried away by the statement of Mr. Mayes, unless his statement is corroborated by some other witnesses.

There is another consideration. This is the first time, as I have said, that we have such a motion made in this matter. The hon. member for the city of St. John has taken a course different from any other that has been taken under similar circumstances. I go further, and say that the hon. member for St. John has made it impossible for the government or any supporter of the government to accept his motion. This is a motion made on going into Committee of Supply, it is a motion which, according to the rules of the House we cannot amend. There is a statement in this motion referring to a past action. The House should not be called upon to investigate under any circumstances the conduct of a man who was not a member of this House. I think this is according to the rules of the House. If we wanted to limit that inquiry, we could not do it. The rules of the House do not allow us to take a syllable from that motion, and do not allow us to add a syllable to it. We must take it as it is, holus bolus, swallow it all or deny it all. Well, under such circumstances the only thing left for us to do, even if the substance of the motion under other circumstances warranted action, is to deny it altogether. But the last and supreme consideration is that this is a motion of want of confidence. I would not press that argument under different circumstances; but in the present case, we are not disposed to vote want of confidence in the Minister of Public Works for the reason that we are proud of him, and this evening we are prouder of him than ever before. I have frankly stated to the House the reasons why we cannot accept this motion.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Before reviewing the reasons given by my right hon. friend why he and those who sit behind him cannot accept this motion, I wish to say a word with reference to Mr. Mayes. I do not know whether my right hon. friend personally knows Mr. Mayes or not.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I never saw him.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) personally knows Mr. Mayes or not. But any one can easily see that unless there is a personal knowledge, it is quite possible to do a very great wrong to a private citizen who is not able to defend himself on the floor of the House, and to do it under the shadow of the privilege of a member of parliament. Therefore I take the very first opportunity of saying that I know Mr. Mayes very well, I have known Mr. Mayes for a long period of years, and I know nothing to the discredit of Mr. Mayes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not even this?

Mr. FOSTER. I know nothing to the discredit of Mr. Mayes. If you take Mr. Mayes as a citizen, I think he is just as reputable, has just as good a character, and stands just as high as the Minister of Public Works, and I am not saying anything to the disparagement of the Minister of Public Works in saying that. Mr. Mayes is a business man who, on the streets of St. John, or on the streets of any other city, enjoys a credit as good and his word is as good, as the credit or the word of the Minister of Public Works, and in saying that I am not saying anything to the discredit of the Minister of Public Works. Mr. Mayes is a self-made man, he has conquered hard circumstances, he has made a place for himself, he has made a certain patrimony for himself, and I have yet to find the first man who can point to Mr. Mayes and accuse him of dishonest or dishonourable action in the accumulation of that patrimony. Now I take this opportunity of saying these things because of what I think are the unfounded aspersions that have been made upon his character, made by some gentlemen who confessedly do not personally know him, and therefore have no knowledge upon which they can go.

But my right hon. friend says, do you consider him as good a character as the Minister of Public Works after this affidavit which he has given? Yes, I answer that in the affirmative, Mr. Speaker. Let us now for a single moment, as sensible men, divesting ourselves of party preferences, follow the force of evidence given every day in every court of the land. Here is a man who is brought into the witness box. He is put upon his oath, he is asked questions and he gives answers. He swears to the answers he has given. Maybe before he has got half through his evidence, maybe after he has gone down from the box and others have given evidence, he asks for the privilege to return to the box, or his lawyer asks it for him, and he corrects the evidence which he gave an hour before, or the evidence which he gave the day before. No judge upon the bench, and no lawyer conducting a case, calls that man an infamous liar because he makes a correction. That is a thing which is liable to take place with my right hon. friend, it is liable to take place with myself, it is liable to take place with any man. Now if that be true, no one has a right to call a man an infamous liar when he is not in his place, because he swears to a statement, and afterwards corrects it. For instance, he had in his mind a certain thing, his lips formed that, and his pen followed the direction of his mind, and a date was written down which he fully believed was the date he intended to have written down. When a few minutes afterwards that is read out by Mr. Hazen, on the platform in the city of St. John, and Mr. Hazen, thinking that the date is wrong, turns to the gentleman and queries as to the date, and is instantly told, 1905, that 1905 was the date he intended. When he finds 1907, as against 1905 which he intended, he immediately writes a letter to the gentleman who is chiefly interested, and in that letter says, it was 1905 I meant, and not 1907. That letter informed the Minister of Public Works, that letter became public property and informed the public of Canada. When a man under these circumstances made an error—he did not intend to make the error—he did not himself make the error—is it quite fair for an hon. member protected by the privileges of parliament, to call him an infamous liar? I cannot take that view of it nor can any sensible man who knows what goes on in business, on the street, in courts of law every day and almost every hour. A great deal has been made of that. The Minister of Public Works said: Why did not the reporters hear it? I put this simple question to my right hon. friend. At a large meeting of this kind, where there was more speaking than any reporter could take, would a shorthand reporter take down that long affidavit as it was read? No body thinks that. Why did not the reporters take it? Because the reporters said to themselves, there is a typewritten copy of the affidavit, we will take what we can of the speeches, that affidavit will be given to us and we will have it for our papers. In that typewritten copy of the affidavit which was signed by Mr. Mayes the date was 1907 because Mr. Hazen, when he read it, did not take his pencil and change the figure from seven to five

Mr. FIELDING. How could he change another man's affidavit?

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose it would have been stated——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does it not strike the hon. member that the explanation which the hon. member for St. John city (Mr. Daniel) said was made at the moment would strike the reporters as well as anybody else and would be such a marked thing that they would make a note of it?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend thinks he has put a very important question. What idea would present itself to the mind of a reporter in the hurry of an important meeting when an affidavit was being read, of the whole purport of that affidavit? He did not know when some one said: 'Is that date correct,' and another answered: '1905;' it would go in at the ear but it was not a thing which a reporter would take down. The reporter would look to the document itself and he would give that to his paper. I do not think there is any doubt about that and to the man who will try to imagine the actual circumstances, that will commend itself as a reasonable explanation of this error getting into the newspapers instead of being corrected there and then.

What matter on earth is it whether it was 1907 or 1905? For the space of a few hours the Minister of Public Works had a grievance because there was going abroad in the press a statement that he received money in 1907 when he actually received it 1905. To that extent it was a hardship upon my hon. friend and he had a perfect right to complain of it and make what he could of it, but to the man who went to the affidavit itself and analysed it, it did not make a pin's difference whether it was 1907 or 1905 as far as the personal action of the Minister of Public Works was concerned. The other fact is that following straight on the heels of the 1907 issue came the correction of 1905. You can make what grievance you like of that, I think the Minister of Public Works tried to make that his whole case in order to create sympathy for himself as a much-abused and much-maligned man. It was not in keeping with my hon. friend's abilities, standing and experience as a public man. It seems to me it would have been far better to say: 'Well, I was grievously wronged by that date being given as 1907 when it should have been 1905, but this man made a mistake, he corrected that mistake as soon as he knew it had occurred, and within 12 or 15 hours the whole country got the right statement of the case and had it alongside of the other.' Thus, I think undue stress has been laid upon that matter.

Let me now check off for a moment the reasons given by my right hon. friend as to why this motion should not be adopted. He says the government are precluded from allowing the motion to pass because it is made as a want of confidence motion. Are we to go over that old ground again and again? How often has my right hon. friend himself, the leader of this government, accepted and voted for motions which have been made as want of confidence motions if every amendment to Supply is to be considered a want of confidence motion. My hon. friend knows that he has accepted them again and again. He can accept this just as easily as he could accept the half dozen others which he accepted in the last parliament and allowed to be carried without challenging a vote, in some cases saying that he accepted the motion. These motions were consequently passed, and then by the proper mechanism we returned to the consideration of Supply. My right hon. friend therefore is not opposing this motion because it is moved as an amendment to Supply. Am I out of order in saying that the objection which he raises on that score is a herring trailed across the track in order to take away the sense of smell from the real objection of the right hon. gentleman, his real objection being that he does not believe the motion should be allowed to pass under any consideration. My right hon. friend will not deny that that is the position he takes, he does not believe the motion should pass under any consideration. Why? Well he says that no member on this side of the House has had the hardihood or the courage to get up and say: 'I myself as a member of the House take the responsibility of charging the minister,'—and that consequently this motion was not properly brought before the House.

Will my right hon. friend quote me a parliamentary rule which makes it necessary that a member in proferring his motion to the House for whatever purpose, is bound to take that line. I have heard the Speaker say that is a rule of the House. I have heard other gentlemen over and over again declare the same, and declare that we are not in earnest because we do not take that method. But, the main point is the essence of the thing that we want investigated. The manner in which we shall have it brought before the House in order to get an investigation is within the choice of the member himself, so long as he conforms to the rules of the House. It will not go down with this House and it will not go down with this country, that simply because of a form which does not agree with the opinion of my right hon. friend, that therefore the substance shall not be investigated. What we want to do is to have the substance investigated, and the substance is very material indeed. Let me exhaust the two examples my right hon. friend has given. He sees no analogy at all between the Hodgins case, the Emmerson case, and this case. I admit that the analogy is not complete because to my mind this is a stronger case than either of the others. In the Hodgins case you have simply a series of newspaper articles; you have no affidavit. But says my right hon. friend: I choose to consider that Mr. Hodgins is an honest man ; I do not choose to consider that Mr. Mayes is an honest man, and therefore I will take a simple letter written by Mr. Hodgins, whom I consider to be an honest man, rather than take the sworn statement of Mr. Mayes, whom I do not consider to stand in that light. That is a mere matter of taste. My right hon. friend had no right to order an investigation into the Hodgins case simply because he thought or did not think that Mr. Hodgins was an honest man ; the point was, what was the accusation conveyed in what Mr. Hodgins said, and, whether Mr. Hodgins was an honest man or not, if the accusation was one which made against what was improper in administration and government, my right hon. friend as premier of this country is bound to take it up and have it investigated. But let me press once more upon my right hon. friend this fact : my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works is an influential and able and experienced lawyer; he is able to conduct his own case; he has not been foreign to libel suits for, if my memory serves me right, he has threatened several and brought some. Does my right hon. friend think it is reasonable that if the Minister of Public Works had an unimpeachable case he would allow that which he designated as the foulest outrage which could be done to any public man, to be put in the form of an affidavit where the man brought himself within the grip of the law and the toils of justice; does my right hon. friend think he would allow that to lie there undisturbed for four months and suffer and sweat under the grossest slander that a public man in this country has had inflicted upon him, and never issue a writ, never make a single step forward towards punishing the dastardly outrage which was perpetrated against him as he has declared over and over again in this House? My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has a good deal of the courteous and of the amiable about him, but he also has some human nature, and the man who could so righteously and indignantly declare against this outrage and the perpetrator of it is a human being by the very indignation that he shows. And it would be his very first impulse to say: 'I will show that man that I can keep my reputation; if there is any law in this country I will take him before the courts and I will preserve my character.' That, the Minister of Public Works has not done. But if he thinks that Mr. Mayes is below his rank, which I beg leave to doubt, the Hon. Mr. Hazen is equal with him in every respect; in point of public view, in point of private character, and the Hon. Mr. Hazen laid himself open when he read the fabricated—what was it that my hon. friend here behind me called it—a 'promulgated' falsehood?

Mr. M. CLARK (Red Deer). I rise to a point of order. The hon. member (Mr. Foster) has mistaken what I said. What I did say was (and I tried to speak grammatically), that he had promulgated a false affidavit. It may be foreign English to my hon. friend, but that is not my fault.

Mr. FOSTER. I owe my learned and cultured friend from Red Deer a debt of gratitude which I am afraid I will never be able to repay, for this much needed instruction which he has been good enough to give me to-night. But here is the premier of the province of New Brunswick who in a public assembly, in the eye and in the hearing of this Dominion of Canada, read this promulgated falsehood and by still further promulgating it and giving it further currency added to the gravity of the outrage perpetrated upon the Minister of Public Works. And the Minister of Public Works wants us to think that he is of such angelic and such seraphic disposition that he lies quietly under the double-promulgated falsehood and does not take action. Well, it seems to me that we have got to have a great deal of that faith which my hon. friend from Red Deer has in ministerial dignity and ministerial excellence, to quite reconcile these matters one with the other. Now, let us take these two cases; I have traced to a certain extent the case of Mr. Hodgins, and my right hon. friend thought that should be investigated, and he appointed a commission and it was investigated. Take the case of Mr. Emmerson. Did my right hon. friend commit an injustice, or allow a man to commit an injustice against himself, in the case of Mr. Emmerson? Did he rise when that allusion was made in this House and say: 'If any man in this House will stand up and declare that he is credibly informed thus and so, and charges the minister then he shall have an investigation at once?' The Prime Minister did not do that Why was it? Was it that the then minister was of a different mould, of a little more sensitive nature, and felt he ought to relieve his colleagues of any possible imputation that might come upon them, and that therefore out of his generosity he sacrificed himself when no man stood up in this House and made a charge against him? Or was it because my right hon. friend procured the resignation of the then minister without demanding that a single man in opposition should have the courage to get up and pledge his seat? These two cases do not hold water when compared with the action of my right hon. friend in this case. Why the difference? If my right hon. friend wishes this motion not to pass, but still wishes an investigation, we will not stand upon the order in which it goes. We will not tie ourselves to any particular amendment or any particular mode. Let my right hon. friend have the investigation and he may make the investigation upon whatever method or plan he likes. All we ask for is the investigation. Suppose Mr. Mayes had a seat in this House, suppose he sat here by my side, suppose he did not make an affidavit, did not make a declaration, but simply rose as a member and stated what he had stated in his affidavit, my hon. friend would grant an investigation. Why? From the mere mechanical fact that the man who made the statement happened to be here in this House, while the man who made the affidavit is not in this House. Does some one say 'character'? Would his character have been any better if he had been sitting here in this House than it would be if he were on the streets of St. John? Does not my right hon. friend see that this is simply switching straws? There is the absolute affidavit of a man who is just as reputable and just as honourable on the streets of St. John as he would be if he happened to be a member of this House. But my right hon. friend swings clear of another thing. He says that Mayes was a self-confessed boodler. Suppose my right hon. friend takes this view of the question. Suppose it comes to be a matter of common notoriety that if a man will enjoy the patronage of the government he has to have a pull to get it. Suppose he cannot get it unless he gets the pull, there is the compulsion of circumstances to make a man league himself with one who has the pull in order to get the work which he ought, as a free Canadian, to get in competition and without pull at all. Well, Sir, suppose that happens to be the case. I will tell you cases that I know of. I know of case after case where, in order to carry out the business that had been formerly carried out, a Conservative has to league himself with a Liberal and lie as a silent partner in order that the Liberal may get from the government the employment, the contracts, the work which is denied him in open and fair competition. That is an undoubted fact. Over and over and over again that is proved.

Mr. MILLER. Will the hon. gentleman cite an instance of that?

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, my hon. friend (Mr. Miller) must not be quite so fresh.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, shall I say soft? My hon. friend must not think I am to be switched off from my argument by a remark which is not at all pertinent in this case. I do not say it was impertinent, though that could be applied to a remark but not to a person.

Mr. MILLER. May I ask again if the hon. member will cite an instance to prove what he says?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend puts to me the question if I will cite an instance. At this time I will not cite an instance.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, will my hon. friend answer me a question? What inference does he draw from my answer?

Mr. MILLER. That the hon. gentleman is not very well able to prove his own statement.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to my hon. friend that I am very well able to prove it over and over again when I wish to and as I wish to. Now, Mr. Speaker, where was I when this——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER—mild friend of mine broke in upon me in such an unaccustomed way? My right hon. friend stated that Mr. Mayes was a self-convicted boodler. Did my right hon. friend sense, when he stated that, what characterization he would have to make of Mr. McAvity, the bosom friend of the Minister of Public Works? My right hon. friend did not think of that. If Mr. Mayes was a self-convicted boodler, Mr. McAvity would be that ten times over and he has been caught with the boodle on him. No man in this House can deny that Mr. McAvity, acting with what my right hon. friend calls a self-convicted boodler, has taken out of the treasury of the country $35,900 for which he dug no mud. For all that Mayes got he did actual work. Now my right hon. friend sees how dangerous it is to play with phrases looking only to one side and seeking only for his own advantage. I call upon him as leader of the government and keeper of the treasury to go after Mr. McAvity and to get the peoples' money back. Mr. McAvity was the tempter, if there was any temptation, of Mr. Mayes. It was Mr. McAvity who engineered the transaction, it was Mr. McAvity who said: 'Come along; I am going up to Ottawa; meet me there.' He came with an introduction given to him by the present Minister of Public Works. Now, let it be known that the Minister of Public Works and Mr. McAvity were not strangers who had met in 1905 for the first time. Mr. McAvity was at one time the president and a director of the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, appointed thereto by my hon. friend, paid therefor by my hon. friend, and all the time that he was president and director having the patronage of the railway in the matter of such supplies as appertained to his particular line of business. My hon. friend therefore knew him, employed him, put him in positions of trust, saw that the patronage went to him and he was well acquainted with him in party and political matters. They were brothers together; they were bosom friends. Did my right hon. friend think, when he used that pet phrase of his, that he was thereby giving his own characterization of this gentleman so trusted by the Minister of Public Works, so favoured by that minister and who profiited so well out of the public chest, as he did in this instance? My right hon. friend forgets that phase of the question, and that is the phase in which the people are most interested. That is the very crux of this resolution, and we want an investigation to know just how much money Mr. McAvity got; how he got it; what influences he brought to bear in order to get it, and how it came to be so easy in that department for a man to procure a contract from it for another and then draw from it this $35,900. That is what the people want to know. The right hon. gentleman never had a truer friend than the editor of the St. John 'Globe.' I do not know that he has a truer friend to-day. The editor of the St. John 'Globe' does not see any particular virtue in Mr. McAvity's rake-off of $35,933. My right hon. friend has other good friends in the old Liberal party. Let him read what the press is saying to-day. Let him take his own papers that support him loyally and truly, and let him read their straightforward, honest declarations to-day. To-morrow morning when the news floats out on the wires and is read by the people that an investigation was refused on the flimsy pretext that no man got up and on his honour said he was prepared to prove this sort of thing, or on the equally flimsy pretext that the resolution was moved as an amendment to Supply, and, therefore, was a want of confidence motion, and when it goes out to the people that, according to the statement of the Minister of Public Works, Mr. McAvity did a proper thing when he took the $35,900, that he cannot be proceeded against, that no law in this country can take this money from him—let the right hon. gentleman believe that when that statement of his minister goes out and his own refusal to investigate the matter, it will be hard reading for many of his best friends, and will not be a thing of which this country of ours can be proud. I do not know that it is necessary for me to say anything more on this matter. I have simply to make one plea more to my right hon. friend, and that is to give free course for investigation in this parliament. When matters of this gravity are brought up, at least allow the people, whose affairs we are transacting, the slight privilege of a fair examination. You have one man making a certain statement on his word; you have another making a contrary statement on his oath, and you are in doubt between the two. Why is it not a proper thing to have an investigation where both can be taken on oath? Is there anything wrong or unfair in that? Let my right hon. friend tell me of one interest that will be injured if he grants this committee? If the Minister of Public Works took that $2,000 and took it as a solicitor's fee, it will be any easy matter to bring him before the committee and ask him to show his books, bills and receipts and checks and question him upon them. With all my deep admiration for the splendid dignity of a minister of the Crown, I still think that sometimes it is better to have these things established on oath as is done in suits at law and vexed questions before the courts. It seems to me that no judge would turn out, no lawyer would ask to debar from giving evidence a man who was an accomplice in the thing charged. Every day in our courts of law such men are relied upon as witnesses. So that I make my plea to my right hon. friend that if there is no interest which will be injured, if the Minister of Public Works, who declares his innocence in such indignant tones, is really innocent, then that can be easily proved before the committee. If the affidavit made is false, that can be proved and the man who swore to a falsity can be punished. What interest would be injured by sending this matter to a committee and having it fully investigated?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Am I to understand the Minister of Public Works denies having received the $2,000?

Mr. FOSTER. No, as I understand it, he admits having received it, but what he says is that it was for professional services.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Mayes says it was for very different services. Mayes swears to his statement and we have the word of the minister denying it. But it would be more satisfactory if both these men were brought where they would be sworn and cross questioned and the truth brought out by examination of their books and checks and the like. Therefore, I again press upon the Prime Minister, that if no interest would be injured in the matter, let the people have the chance to know the truth by a full, free and impartial investigation.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I am sure that, at this late hour and at this stage of the debate, no one could hope to add anything new, by way of information, to the subject which has been so thoroughly discussed all this afternoon and evening. All that I care to do is to try to emphasize two or three points, which seem to be the points of vital importance, and which have been fully covered by my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works in his admirable address, but which it would be well to emphasize again. But first let me say a word or two on the general question of investigations. I believe that the people will distinguish carefully, as they have done in the past, between motions which are made for the bona fide purpose of investigation and motions made purely and simply for the purpose of manufacturing political capital; and the manner in which these different classes of motions may be made from time to time will have much to do with enabling the public to distinguish between the two.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order. Has the hon. gentleman the right to impute motives with regard to a motion before the House?

Mr. FIELDING. There is no rule to prevent my imputing motives.

Mr. SPROULE. I think there is.

Mr. FIELDING. There might be an objection to imputing improper motives, but I am sure my hon. friend will not labour to find an authority to say that I may not impute motives. I may impute to the hon. gentleman some highly honourable motives, and that would not be contrary to the rules of parliament. Sir, I have in this case imputed no motives, I have only drawn a distinction between two classes of demands for investigation. And I wish to consider that point as illustrated by what we have now before us. Now, this matter of the Mayes' affidavit is not something which transpired to-day or yesterday; it transpired many months ago. My hon. friend from the city of St. John, and all those who have been interested in the matter, have had these documents in their possession for many months; and if they had desired an investigation they have had abundant opportunity to seek it in a different way and at an earlier stage of the session when the House could have dealt with it. But, for their own purposes, they have not sought that; for their own purposes, they have kept these documents in their pockets, or—

Mr. LENNOX. If the hon. minister (Mr. Fielding) will allow me a question: Is he aware that the papers in connection with this matter were moved for and that they were only brought down eight days ago?

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member is referring to papers of a different character from this. The Mayes' affidavit was not moved for in this House. That affidavit is the basis of these proceedings and it has been in the hands of my hon. friends for months, and they have had every opportunity to challenge investigation if they had so desired. I want to invite the attention of the House and the country to the different forms of procedure in the matter of investigation. I had occasion to do so recently in the case of another subject that we were considering, and I wish to treat the same thought to-day. If an hon. member wishes to make a motion for an investigation of any public matter, he can put a notice on the paper setting forth the nature of his proposal, and when it is reached in due course, if the House is disposed to grant an investigation but not to limit it by the particular terms of the motion, an amendment can be moved. Thus, the House can declare in words that are deemed fitting its desire either to have an investigation or not to have an investigation. And, when an hon. member wishes to make the investigation of a general character, that is the method contemplated by the rules and procedure of parliament. But if a charge is to be made against a minister of the Crown that is a different matter. If an hon. member is prepared to take the procedure illustrated by my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to-night, if it be deemed necessary to attack the honour of a minister and charge him with any act of corruption in relation to the matters of which he is a trustee, it is the right of an honourable member to avail himself of the form of motion which is usually a vote of want of confidence and to come forward with a specific charge. And, when this is done, no government would refuse an investigation. But, while that would be the case where a member is prepared to make a specific charge of corruption against a minister, it is not the same when you come to deal with ordinary talk and to demand an investigation of nothing in particular. My hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark) put the case fairly when he said that the honour and dignity of parliament require that we should not order investigations on mere frivolous statements for which there is no strong foundation. And that is the case here to-day; there is no foundation for an investigation. We are concerned in maintaining the honour and dignity of parliament. It happens that one party is in the ascendency to-day; some day another party will be in the ascendency——

Mr. HUGHES. Hear, hear.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) says: 'Hear, hear'. But it will be a long time before my hon. friends of the Conservative party can win by the tactics which they have adopted in this case. There is a manliness, a sense of fair play among the people of Canada which will respond to such statements as those of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) when he shows the dastardly attempts made in the city of St. John to destroy him. I say, we are concerned in maintaining the honour and dignity of parliament; and, if it be laid down as a rule that a member can pick up a statement in a newspaper—whether an affidavit or an editorial article does not matter—and come before the House and say: 'I personally know nothing about this, but I will read it and will move for investigation by a special committee,' we are following a course that is not consistent with the honour and dignity of parliament. But when a motion of that kind is proposed, shall the House accept it? I ask hon. members of both sides to think seriously of the view I present. So, we have this motion in the form of a non-confidence motion. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) is always very ingenious on this question of non-confidence motions. He has the remarkable faculty of believing that a motion made manifestly in a spirit of antagonism to the government is not a non-confidence motion. It is quite possible that an amendment may be moved to the motion for Supply setting forth some public principle, laying down a line of policy, declaring some great view that the House would wish to give expression to, and on which it finds this to be the most convenient mode for declaring itself. It is one thing for the Prime Minister to accept such a motion in amendment to Supply, and quite another thing to accept a motion which, while shirking the responsibility of a charge, is full of insinuations. And it is because this motion partakes of that offensive form that the Prime Minister has, very properly, said he must treat it as a vote of want of confidence and decline to give it his approval or support. The hon. member for North Toronto speaks of the Hodgins case, but he forgets a vital difference between the Hodgins case and this. In that case, the motion was not one in amendment to Supply. The case arose out of conversations in the House and publications in the press, and the chairman of the Transcontinental Railway Committee came forward and said: I want a committee to investigate. And that committee was appointed. This is not a parallel case; this is a motion in amendment to Supply that no self-respecting government could accept.

Much has been said about Mr. Mayes. I believe gentlemen who have spoken on this side, with the exception of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), have said that they do not know Mr. Mayes. I do know Mr. Mayes. I have not known him intimately, but I have known him for a number of years. And I wish to say that I never knew anything, nor do I now know anything, against the character or reputation of Mr. Mayes except what he has written in his own affidavit. And that is the thing that is painful to me. I will not use the expressions that my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) used concerning Mr. Mayes because I have had friendly relations with him—not intimate but friendly—that make it a matter of regret to me that he should have put himself in this position. But, if I take the affidavit of Mr. Mayes, and that alone, I find that he has described himself as a man who ought not to ask this House to take his statements very seriously. The hon. member for the city of St. John spoke of this transaction between Mr. Mayes and Mr. McAvity—no, I am wrong; the hon. gentleman said this transaction with Mr. McAvity was not only a corrupt and improper transaction, but that it was illegal, and he read from the Criminal Code a statement that if any man shall receive money for the purpose of influencing any government and so on, it shall be deemed a crime. But toward the end of the sentence, the hon. gentleman read—not very loudly; his voice fails at times—

Mr. DANIEL. Not at all.

Mr. FIELDING. Not very loudly——

Mr. DANIEL. Just as loudly as the other.

Mr. FIELDING—that the man who gives the money commits the crime.

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, both of them.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. McAvity has not confessed any crime; he has denied it.

Mr. DANIEL. No.

Mr. FIELDING. He has denied any crime.

Mr. DANIEL. He has not denied receiving the money.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. McAvity, as appears, says he was engaged in a business transaction which was right and proper and one which he is prepared to defend. But, whatever may be said about Mr. McAvity, Mr. Mayes by his own affidavit declares that he entered into an improper, corrupt arrangement for the purpose of extorting from the Dominion of Canada money which he could not lawfully receive. You may hold Mr. McAvity in suspense—I offer no opinion at this moment as to his position. But I say that Mr. Mayes, by his own statement, in his own affidavit, declares that he entered into what he meant to be a corrupt arrangement whereby he might, as my hon. friend said, filch this money from the public treasury.

Mr. DANIEL. It took two to make a bargain.

Mr. FIELDING. Very good. The second party is not in dispute, we have yet to know what is the fact with regard to the second. But I am judging Mr. Mayes by his own affidavit, and I say that by his own statement in his own affidavit he puts himself in a position which must be exceedingly painful to every man who would like to call himself his friend.

Mr. HUGHES. Why not then take McAvity's evidence in favour of Mayes, if you are going to take it the other way?

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friends had been really anxious to have an investigation, we would have heard of it a long time ago. Now let us come to what I regard as the two important points in this discussion; and first, the affidavit. Why, my hon. friend from St. John says, it was a mistake. The affidavit had in it a certain date, 1907. He admitted that rather reluctantly, but pressed by the Minister of Public Works he admitted it.

Mr. DANIEL. No reluctance about it.

Mr. FIELDING. I am bound to accept the hon. gentleman's statement. At all events, he had that affidavit in his possession and he claims now there was a mistake made in it as to a given date. The hon. member for North Toronto spent considerable time in arguing that it made no difference at all; what difference did it make whether it was 1907 or 1905? Why, Mr. Speaker, it made all the difference in the world. The date was the essence of the whole thing. A document saying that in the year 1907 the contractor Mayes gives Dr. Pugsley, the Minister of Public Works at that time, $2,000—that was a thing that would startle the country. But when you change the date to 1905, what value had the affidavit? What concern could it have been to a public gathering in the city of St. John to know that two years before, as between Mr. Mayes, the client, and Dr. Pugsley, the lawyer, there had been some business transaction involving the payment of fees?

Mr. LENNOX. Does the minister forget that if the statement made by Mr. Mayes were true, that the transaction occurred say in 1905 instead of 1907, that then, under the statute, the party who was guilty of it, the present Minister of Public Works, was guilty of a crime which would render him liable to seven years' imprisonment, and therefore he would be a criminal, and could not be a member of this House?

Mr. FIELDING. No, I do not know that. If my hon. friend says it is so, I am not going to deny it.

Mr. HUGHES. In that affidavit, as I heard it read, is it not clearly stated that Mr. Hyman was the Minister of Public Works at that time?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes; but let us consider the circumstances under which the affidavit was produced. We had an election in the city of St. John. Mr. Hyman was not a candidate; the hon. gentleman who is now the Minister of Public Works was the candidate; and it was to damage the Minister of Public Works of to-day, it was to damage Dr. Pugsley, and try to elect the hon. gentleman who sits to-day for the city of St. John, that that affidavit was brought forward; and if it had been stated in the beginning that the date in question was 1905, two years before the hon. gentleman became a minister of the Crown, what value would have had that affidavit? The whole value of the affidavit, for the time and circumstances, was in that date, and that date was given as 1907, and it went out in the press and was circulated the following morning that the Minister of Public Works had received $2,000 from a contractor in a corrupt transaction, while he was a minister of the Crown. I say again that the whole value of the affidavit was in the date; and if they had brought forward the affidavit at first with the date 1905, it is not probable that it would have been read in that meeting at all, because it was absolutely worthless as political capital except they put in a date which would involve my hon. friend in his capacity as Minister of Public Works with that transaction. But what concern was it to the electors of St. John that Mr. Mayes, a well known contractor, and Mr. Pugsley, a well known lawyer, should have had business as between client and legal adviser? Who were concerned in that? Who cared to know whether Dr. Pugsley received $2,000 or $200 for his services? These lawyers in the upper provinces sometimes get very liberal fees. I do not think anybody would say the payment of $2,000 to a gentleman who was the legal adviser of a prominent contractor, was a very large sum. You would not get a big Toronto lawyer to do very much for $2,000. And if it be assumed that because the $2,000 was paid to my hon. friend it is an evidence of corruption, why, any member of the legal profession would say it was utterly preposterous. The whole value of the affidavit turns on the date, and if that affidavit had been sent in with the present date, 1905, the probability is that it would have been flung out. They would say: 'What do we care about the affairs of Mayes and Pugsley as lawyer and client?' It was only by the falsification of that date, it was only by the insertion of the year 1907 in place of 1905, that the document became of any value politically. It was used with that date in it to damage my hon. friend, and if in the end he escaped damage, no credit is due to the men who used the affidavit in that way.

Now the other feature of the matter which I think is important, is the tenders. Tenders were invited for some dredging, and the specification contained the condition that the party who took the contract must be the owner of a dredge registered in Canada. Two tenders were brought in, Mr. Mayes was the lowest, but Mr. Mayes had not complied with the conditions of the specification. Now, suppose the Minister of Public Works had ignored that defect, suppose he had said. Well, never mind, we will give Mayes the contract all the same. Suppose he had got the contract, I can imagine my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) rising up the following session and saying: What did you do? You put in your specification a certain condition, and you thereby shut out from tendering many people who would have tendered, but they could not comply with that condition. Mr. Mayes' tender did not comply with that condition, but you gave him the contract in violation of your specification—and hon. gentlemen opposite would have been strong in their denunciation of the Minister of Public Works for violating the condition of his own specification. So the Minister of Public Works said: Well, I am going to have difficulty in getting dredges registered in Canada, but I will give everybody a fair chance, I will invite new tenders, and let all have a fair chance. New tenders were invited, and that clause with respect to the dredge being registered in Canada was omitted from the specification. What is wrong with that? I put it to any business man—was not that a fair business arrangement? Can any man say there was any wrong up to that moment? Surely not. Then new tenders came in; and it appears that in the meantime Mr. Mayes decided to increase his tender. Can any body find fault with that? When a number of people tender, and their tenders are thrown out and they are asked to tender again, are they all bound to put in the same figures? Surely if the minister has a right to refuse to accept the old tenders, a man who sent in a tender has a perfect right to revise his tender and ask what he pleases. Suppose that in the meantime Mr. Mayes had made up his mind that he had tendered too low,—and we know there are occasions when men do tender too low—suppose that for any reason Mr. Mayes made up his mind that he wanted to get a higher price, and he sent in his tender at a higher figure, in open competition with the world, in response to the invitation, what fault could be found with such a transaction? What is wrong with that up to that point? First the tenders were asked for with a specification as to the dredge. Then it was found that nobody was willing to comply and the department said: 'We will give no favour, we will open the doors to everybody free; ' and they called for new tenders. That is right. When they gave the contract to the man whose tender was lowest.' I submit to any business man in the House that there is nothing wrong in that. We are not concerned in the relations between Mr. McAvity and Mr. Mayes, that is their own business transaction. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) says: Why not get the money back from Mr. McAvity. Mr. McAvity got no money from the government, Mr. Mayes was the contractor. Mr. Mayes sent in his tender, he had his association with Mr. McAvity, whether it is good or bad is their own private business. Tenders were called for publicly, tenders were sent in in open competition and the man who offered the lowest price got the work. I submit to the people of Canada who care to interest themselves in the matter that in those few sentences that you have the whole story. It is Mr. Hyman who is accused in this matter. Although the attack is levelled against the present minister (Mr. Pugsley), whatever reflection is cast is cast on Mr. Hyman, who is no longer here to defend himself, and unless there are some good grounds for believing, unless somebody is prepared to say on his responsibility, ' I have reason to believe and do believe there was collusion between the minister or the deputy minister or the engineer or somebody in that department and that contractor,' I submit there never was a business transaction between the government and contractors that was fairer, straighter or more above-board than the transaction respecting the dredging of the harbour of St. John.

Mr. SPROULE. I raised a point of order, Mr. Speaker, on which I did not get your ruling, and I was afterwards contradicted by the hon. member in his speech. I asked your ruling as to whether an hon. member could attribute motives? The Minister of Finance said that the motive of the party who moved this was a political one. I asked your ruling as to whether he could or could not. I have here Bourinot's ' Parliamentary Procedure,' third edition, edited by Dr. T. B. Flint, which says:

> No member can be allowed to apply the expression ' impertinence ' to another member, or to attribute motives.

It is upon the strength of that passage that I asked a ruling and on account of the difference between the Minister of Finance and myself and for the direction of the House I would like very much to have your ruling on it.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is a well-known rule that no improper motive can be attributed. I did not rule because the Minister of Finance declared he was not imputing any improper motives.

Mr. SPROULE. He declared he had a right.

Mr. FIELDING. A good motive.

Mr. SPEAKER. A good motive, he facetiously said.

Mr. SPROULE. The words are: ' Or to attribute motives.'

Mr. SPEAKER. The intention is that improper motives should not be applied.

Mr. SPROULE. If this resolution was only introduced for a political purpose, would it not be for an improper motive and not for the good of the country?

Mr. CROCKET. If the tenders were increased in order that a rake-off might be paid for political influence would the Minister of Finance hold that that was not a corrupt arrangement?

Mr. FIELDING. If the tenders were open to the public, if there was free, open competition without collusion, they are not called upon to inquire into the motive which led any man to increase his tender.

Mr. CROCKET. Without reference to the other tenders, if the tender was increased in order that a rake-off might be paid to a man for political purposes, would the minister say that that was not a corrupt arrangement?

Mr. FIELDING. Everything would depend on whether there was collusion or not. If a matter is open to public tender and a man sends in a tender to-day at a dollar and then further tenders are called for and he sends in a second tender at $1.50, I say that if he gets the contract because he is the lowest tenderer in fair and open competition, without any collusion or any allegation of collusion, there is no ground for inquiring into the reason which led him to make an increase in his tender.

Amendment (Mr. Daniel) negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Lisgar has not voted.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). I am paired with the hon. member for Kings-Albert.

Mr. CALVERT. The Hon. the Minister of Public Works has not voted.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I thought in view of the character of the motion it was better I should not vote and I trust the House will excuse me.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) agreed to and the House went into Committee of Supply.

Progress reported.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will take up the Bills and resolutions on the Order Paper so as to prepare work for the Senate when they meet again.

Mr. FOSTER. What Bills ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will take them all except those that are contentious.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the Civil Service Bill will not be brought up ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If there is any one as to which there is objection we will not take it.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.50 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 16, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 145) for the relief of Isaac Moore.—Mr. Wallace.

Bill (No. 143) for the relief of Mildred Gwendolyn Patterson.—Mr. Harris.

Bill (No. 140) respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company.—Mr. Miller.

Bill (No. 141) respecting the Manitoba Radial Railway Company.—Mr. Molloy.

Bill (No. 144) for the relief of Charles Bowerbank Lowndes.—Mr. Wallace.

Bill (No. 142) to incorporate the Governing Council of the Salvation Army in Canada.—Hon. Mr. Sutherland.

Mr. FIELDING.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—AGRICULTURE ESTIMATES.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to inquire of the Minister of Agriculture when he purposes bringing down his estimates. I may say that there is a general complaint on this side of the House among those representing agricultural constituencies, that for the last two or three sessions these estimates have been left over until a very late period in the session, and last year they were brought in on Friday night when most of the members were out of the House. This is one of the most important departments in the interest of agriculture, and I think it very unfair that these estimates should be left over to be rushed through at the latter end of the session, without giving an opportunity to discuss them properly.

Mr. FISHER. I shall be most happy to give my hon. friend and his friends every opportunity they desire to discuss these estimates. I have not brought them down earlier, because the Experimental Farm report was only laid on the table a week ago, and I wished to give hon. gentlemen opposite time to consider it before taking up the estimates.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. If we expect to get through in a few weeks, they should be proceeded with at once.

Mr. FIELDING. You might have had them yesterday.

THE DUMPING CLAUSE.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would ask the Finance Minister if he would be kind enough to lay on the table of the House copies and a statement of the orders of the Treasury Board in reference to the computations of prices on imports. The government sometimes allows imports under the dumping clause of the Customs Act to be admitted at 7½ or 5 per cent below the fair market price, and it requires a treasury order to do that.

Mr. FIELDING. I understand the hon. gentleman refers to the operation of the anti-dumping clause. I will endeavour to get the information for him.

PAYMENT OF SECRET COMMISSIONS.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) moved that an amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 31), to prevent the payment or acceptance of illicit or secret commissions and other like practices, be now read the second time and concurred in. He said: The amendment which has been made by the Senate will be found printed in the Votes and Proceedings for the 1st of April, at page 518. It consists simply in adding to the Bill a sub-paragraph. The Bill as it passed this House consisted of a provision that every one was guilty of an offence and liable, upon conviction, to certain penalties who being an agent, did certain things, to which the Senate has added this paragraph:

Every person who is a party, or knowingly privy, to any offence under this Act shall be guilty of such offence, and shall be liable, upon conviction, to the punishment hereinbefore provided for by this section.

The general law, under a provision of the Criminal Code, is that every accessory before the fact is guilty as a principal. This amendment possibly goes a little further; that is a matter upon which I would hesitate to express any definite opinion. But if it does go any further than the general law, it is in a direction which I think will meet the approval of the House. It is simply providing that any person who is party or knowingly privy to the offence or offences which this Bill prohibits, shall be deemed to be equally guilty with the principal offender. I thought that there could be no objection to that clause being added to the Bill, and therefore I move the second reading.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT.

House resumed adjourned debate on the motion for the second reading of Bill (No. 17) respecting Immigration.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I wish to say that we have been proceeding before the Immigration Committee with the examination of Mr. Scott, and his examination was postponed a few days ago until a later meeting of the committee. When the committee met, the day before yesterday, it was agreed by the committee that the chairman would see the Minister of the Interior and ask him to suspend the consideration of this Bill until we had concluded the examination of Mr. Scott, because much of that examination turned upon questions which are raised by the new legislation in this Bill. I do not know if the chairman of the committee has had occasion to communicate with my hon. friend the minister; but it seemed to be agreed by the committee that it would be proper to finish the examination of the Superintendent of Immigration before going on with this Bill.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no desire to force the Bill forward, but I have not heard from the chairman of the committee, as my hon. friend has mentioned. I do not know the conclusion reached by the committee. The Bill has been before the House for a long time, and I was naturally anxious to take the first opportunity of carrying it forward from the stage in which it now stands. If there is a reasonable objection to it being proceeded with at the present time, I will postpone its consideration. But as the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has remarked, the session is getting well advanced, the Bill is long, and I am anxious to get it forward.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to endorse what my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has said. The hon. member for Oxford, who is chairman of the Agricultural Committee, promised to consult with the minister and to get his approval to allowing this Bill to stand until after the further examination of Mr. Scott. That was agreed and generally understood by the committee.

Mr. MONK. We were proceeding in the committee to examine the Superintendent of Immigration with regard to the expediency of examining immigrants on the other side before they embark for America. I have no desire to delay the Bill, but I think it would be well to know what Mr. Scott has to say upon that point.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Let the Bill stand.

GOVERNMENT HARBOURS AND PIERS.

Bill (No. 89) to amend the Government Harbour and Piers Act—Mr. Brodeur—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. BRODEUR. The existing law provides that municipal councils may lease certain wharfs. It is proposed to give to the Governor in Council the right to lease wharfs to shipping and railway companies also. This Bill is framed on the same lines as the legislation now existing with regard to piers and breakwaters under the control of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. SPROULE. What control does the government keep over the rates to be charged on wharfs so leased?

Mr. BRODEUR. The rates will be the same as they are to-day in the case of wharfs leased to municipal councils. The main object of the Bill is to enable the department to commute the tolls in order to avoid the great difficulty of collection. We have a number of wharfs leased in this way to the Richelieu and Ontario Company, although I do not know that the leases are strictly legal; the arrangement is giving great satisfaction and I think we receive more revenue than from similar wharfs that are not leased.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister not think that this might lead to great injustice to some shipping companies which would be placed at the mercy of their competitors? Charges of that kind were made with reference to the Standard Oil Company in its dealings with other companies upon railroads owned by it. Is there any tribunal to which these rates may be submitted from time to time?

Mr. BRODEUR. We intend to take that power by the leases which will be granted under this Act.

Mr. SPROULE. Why not put it in the Act? If by accident, for instance, it should be omitted from the lease it would be most unfair.

Mr. BRODEUR. Care will of course be taken that that provision is put in the lease.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. What increased powers are given in this Act over the powers given in the Act of 1906?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no change in the first section from the Act of 1906, except that power is given to lease not only to municipal councils and provincial governments but also to shipping and railway companies.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would make the following suggestions to the minister: That the wharfs or piers should be leased after public tender; that the leases should be given for a limited number of years and that the government should fix the tolls to be charged before calling for tenders. If the leases fell in after a number of years it might be possible to obtain a much higher rental for the second term owing to the development of business. I am not making these suggestions in any spirit of hostile criticism, as I think it is perhaps better to have the government lease a wharf than to maintain a staff and receive little or no revenue.

Mr. BRODEUR. Our object is to secure a larger revenue. My hon. friend is probably aware that we have many wharfs from which we derive practically no revenue. It is a matter of great difficulty to get any revenue at all from these wharfs under the present system by which the consignees of the goods are charged five cents, or ten cents, or fifteen cents, a package, and it often costs more to collect it, if you can collect it at all, than the debt is worth. The idea is to average the business done at each wharf during the past few years, and after having ascertained the amount of business done by each steamboat company using the wharf, to fix a rental for its use on that basis. I believe in this way we will get a revenue from these wharfs which it is impossible for us to get under the present arrangement. In the case of several wharfs in the lower St. Lawrence the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company has been authorized by order in council to commute the rates and the object of this Bill is to legalize that system and to extend it. Under the Bill we take the power to lease the wharfs as is done in the Public Works Department, and we also take power to commute the rates. Possibly the steamship companies may add the wharfage dues to the freight rates but whether or not the system will be more convenient to the public and to the department. My hon. friend (Mr. J. A. Currie) has suggested that we should lease these wharfs by tender and that might be a satisfactory system if there were several persons or companies who were competing for the same wharf, but in the great majority of cases I think only one company uses the wharf.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The charges on these wharfs are paid by the shippers and not by the carrying company, and there is nothing in the Bill which says that the tolls shall be fixed by the government. Neither is there anything in the Bill to prevent the lessee of the wharf excluding the general public or other steamship companies from the use of that wharf.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is not the intention to create a monoply.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It is well known that in many cases the steamship companies have wharfs of their own which they will not allow the public to use except on the payment of fees, so that the only relief outside steamers have is to tie up at the government wharf and discharge their cargo. Before this Bill is passed there should be provision made to take care that the public shall have the free use of government wharfs. It is quite true that a number of government wharfs do not pay any revenue, but it is also true that the only place certain steamers have to land their cargo is at the government wharfs as distinguished from privately owned wharfs.

Mr. BRODEUR. In any case, where more than one company would wish to use a government wharf, it would of course be stipulated as a condition of the lease that others should have the right to its use. It is not the intention to create a monopoly at all. As to the leasing of the wharfs I do not know whether we will take a great deal of advantage of this legislation or not, because, so far, I do not think there are four wharfs leased to municipal councils. I do not know whether there are two even. I know of one only. Perhaps there has been another one leased during the past year. But, so far, the provision has not been taken advantage of. So, it was thought that if we had the same legislation as they have in the Public Works Department, under the Public Works Act, we might induce some railway and shipping companies to take advantage of it. The part of the Bill to which we attach the greatest importance is that which makes provision for a commutation of rates for a certain sum of money so as to avoid the necessity of undertaking to collect small sums of money from different individuals, an undertaking which is not always successful. I am under the impression that the Act will be taken advantage of by companies which may use those wharfs. We will make arrangements with three or four companies for the use of a wharf according to the volume of business they are doing at that wharf. There will be no monopoly. It will be an advantage to us not to have to collect these wharfage rates but to charge these companies a lump sum for the use of the wharfs.

Mr. WRIGHT. I would like to draw the minister's attention to the fact that in the building of some of these wharfs the government have monopolized the only approaches to them so that the general public have no method of getting into the towns and villages in which these wharfs are situated except over the property that the government have taken advantage of in the building of the wharfs. Consequently, any man coming to town to buy a few groceries or a bag of flour can only get his goods into his boat or conveyance over the property that the government have taken possession of. If this property is handed over to some steamboat company which would naturally like to cut out that means of transportation they could very easily prevent people from getting in or out of town by charging a toll which would be exorbitant. I think that in handling this matter the government ought to protect the people who would be affected in this way. There is only wharf accommodation to a limited extent and they should not be subjected to a toll in getting in or out of town with a small boat such as I have referred to. In many of these places there are little boats and tugs that are perhaps not controlled by any one particular company, and I do not think the full control of these wharfs should be handed over to any steamboat company. It would be in the interest of the government and of the public if these small wharfs—I am referring now more particularly to the small wharfs—were handed over to the municipal councils. You are taking the power to do that but at the same time you are taking the power to hand them over to steamboat companies.

Mr. BRODEUR. This provision has been in the law for many years but unfortunately it has not been taken advantage of by the municipal councils. I am informed there are two municipal councils which have taken advantage of it. This law has been in existence since 1886.

Mr. WRIGHT. I would draw the minister's attention to the fact that the Department of Public Works has only handed over a few of the wharfs to his department. Consequently there has been no opportunity for the municipal councils to assume control of these wharfs. In the riding which I represent three wharfs have been built, two in rather an important place and in the important places the Department of Public Works has kept control of them. Nobody is in charge of them, and everybody is using them as he likes. One of the unimportant wharfs has been handed over to the minister's department, a wharfinger has been appointed and he is exercising his sweet will and charging the general public whatever he likes to go over this wharf. There should be some control in a matter of this kind.

Mr. BRODEUR. Unfortunately, that legislation by which municipal councils can get possession of wharfs has been in existence for many years and no advantage has been taken of it except in two cases. It is probably because municipal councils are afraid of some burden being put upon them for keeping up these wharfs. If they took over these wharfs they would have to make some ordinary repairs to them. We propose to extend the provision to shipping and railway companies which would take advantage of it because they are more interested than the municipal councils. I do not know what effect it may have but it is in order to obtain a better administration of the wharfs than we have to-day that we are taking this step. As I said a few moments ago the main object is to get a commutation of rates so that we may charge the shipping companies who are using these wharfs a certain fixed sum of money instead of being obliged to collect the small wharf rates that are very difficult to collect. There are several wharfs which have been transferred to this department. It is proposed, after this legislation is passed, that all these wharfs shall be transferred and that active steps shall be taken to secure the good and proper administration of them.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask the minister how it happens that the policy of the department is to get rid of these wharfs by leasing them to private individuals, corporations and councils on the one hand while on the other he is buying up wharfs, as for instance, at Oshawa, Bowmanville, Whitby and other places After buying these wharfs with the object of getting friends of the government out of a hole they are going to turn around and lease them to somebody else. Another point is that in many places, especially along the rivers and inland lakes, the wharf occupies the only available site in the town. It is the intention of the government to lease a wharf that costs a few hundred or a few thousand dollars, to some individual and allow him to charge rates for traffic with the creation of which he had absolutely nothing to do? My hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. Wright) has referred to the wharf at Bracebridge which occupies the only available point along the shore of the river.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is a private wharf.

Mr. HUGHES. The government assisted in building it. It was promised by the former Postmaster General as an election bribe some years ago.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. HUGHES. Not at all; I want no order about it. He told the electors that if they returned a certain man they would assist them in the building of that wharf.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He is a judge of the land now and that makes it all the worse.

Mr. HUGHES. I hope this will bring him to his senses. He is a little off colour on the Dreadnought business and this may remind him of his duty.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order, order.

Mr. HUGHES. I want the minister to look into this matter and, where wharfs are being let, to take particular pains to see that no monopoly shall be given to the man who occupies the wharf which is in the only possible place where a wharf can be located in the town.

Mr. SPROULE. I think there is the possibility of grave abuses growing up under this system. I can understand why there are not very many of these wharfs rented by municipalities as the government could desire. One reason is because they do not want to assume the responsibility for the damages in the event of injury. A portion may be swept away or other damages may be done for which they may be liable, and that is one reason they do not want it. Another reason is that it must be kept safe for use. That implies responsibility, the extent of which may be unknown, and therefore they are reluctant to assume it. But what seems to me of more interest is this. The minister speaks always of these corporations and wants to commute the rates and receive so much in a lump sum in return for the use of the wharf, and the lessees will have the right to fix the rates on every ton of freight that passes over the wharf. The individual gets a lease of that wharf at a given lump sum per year and then will charge as much as he can to the public for the use of it. If the government do not keep control over the rates and have the power to reduce them from time to time injustice will be done the public.

Mr. HUGHES. Another objection is the length of time for which a wharf may be rented. In the case of some towns, a wharf is of very little importance in early history, and might be leased for a very small figure, just as the water-power of the Cornwall canal was leased for 84 years; but as the town developed, the amount of freight passing over that wharf may increase very considerably and the lease be a very profitable speculation. Again, where one line sends large quantities over the wharf, it may be allowed a lower rate than the ordinary public who ship small quantities. Unless there be some safeguard in the Act itself to prevent the possibility of such abuses, the public may seriously suffer. Take for instance the case of the town of Thornbury, in connection with which I had something to do with getting the Act passed. They had to submit their schedule of rates to the inspection of the department. If it was reasonable, the department ratified it, but the municipality which had control could not make a charge until the rate was consented to by the government.

Mr. BRODEUR. It will be provided that the rates must be approved by order in council. You must not mix up the two things, the leasing of wharfs and the commutation of rates. In the first instance, if there be several companies,the wharf will not be leased, as that will not be necessary, but it would be in the interest of the revenue that we should say to the companies: 'You will pay us each a certain amount for the use of the wharf.' We will then not be obliged, as we are to-day, to collect those small amounts which it is almost impossible to collect.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose a lumber company owns the wharf and the government commutes the rates, and the lumber company bring in their own lumber free over that wharf, the public may be obliged to pay 50 cents a 1,000 feet for any lumber they bring over it.

Mr. BRODEUR. They will not be in that position because we will know exactly the business they are doing before we lease the wharf, and under the law we can only lease it for a term of three years.

Mr. HUGHES. Who will keep the docks in repair, and what control will the government retain?

Mr. BRODEUR. The company which leases the wharf will make the ordinary repairs.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the government have an inspector to see that the docks are kept in proper repair.

Mr. BRODEUR. My idea is to have a wharfinger who will look after the docks and will report on the way the business is carried on.

Mr. HUGHES. Why not have a provision in the lease requiring the lessee to keep the dock in repair subject to the inspection of the government?

Mr. BRODEUR. That is a good suggestion.

Mr. BLAIN. This is rather dangerous legislation. Looking over the total revenue from the wharfs of this country and comparing them with the enormous amount expended on these wharfs since this government has been in power, it seems to me that a considerable amount of carelessness is chargeable to some department. The minister has stated this afternoon, as he has frequently done on the estimates, that there is no revenue from certain wharfs because they have not been handed over by the Public Works Department to his department. There are cases where the Public Works Department has expended large amounts on wharfs which have not been handed over to the Marine and Fisheries Department, and from which there is no revenue to the country, although completed years ago. My hon. friend does not deny that. Well, if it is the policy of the government to spend large amounts on wharfs in the public interest, I am not going to complain, provided the money is well expended and the expenditure required in the public interest. No legislation should be passed that would allow the minister to lease these wharfs to any private individual or corporation. I believe the proper policy is for the government to own the wharf, to fix rates of toll and to appoint their own official to look after the business, thus placing everybody who wishes to use the wharf on the same footing. This Bill will allow the minister to select a friend—I am not speaking from a political standpoint—and give him the absolute power over any given wharf. It is true, the minister says the government will fix the rates. But if they fix the rates, why should not they appoint a wharfinger to collect those rates and let the money come into the public treasury? If this is not done, some one company will get control and will squeeze out other people who wish to do business at the wharf. This is already being done at some wharfs in eastern Canada that I could name. It is the public money that has been spent in these works, and the department go so far as to say that they will not expend a dollar of money upon a wharf that is not owned by the government. I would not complain of that if the government would only carry it out in every case—and I am free to say that they do not carry it out in every case. If it is the policy of the government to own these wharfs, to spend every dollar that is spent upon them in construction and repairs, why not appoint a public official to take charge and give everybody equal opportunities ?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. What case has the minister in mind in which he will be justified in leasing?

Mr. BRODEUR. The wharfs on the St. Lawrence and great lakes especially. We have been trying to lease these wharfs to municipalities, but so far we have not found the municipalities ready to take charge of them.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. And never will.

Mr. BRODEUR. But, though the municipalities are not ready to lease these wharfs, perhaps we can find steamship companies or railway companies that will do so. And the object of this legislation is to extend the existing power to lease to municipalities so as to authorize the lease to shipping or railway companies. Since 1886, we have had legislation authorizing the lease to municipalities or provincial governments, and, except in two cases, this legislation has not been availed of. If we lease to a private company, the department will be relieved of the necessity of looking after these wharfs as closely as it does to-day. My hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) has drawn attention to the fact that we could continue the existing system——

Mr. BLAIN. I did not ask the government to continue the existing system, because it is a very bad one; it allows the Public Works Department to keep control of wharfs for many years instead of handing them over to the Marine and Fisheries Department.

Mr. BRODEUR. Even if handed over to the Marine and Fisheries Department, we might still be in the same position as we are in many cases to-day. In some cases we cannot get anybody to take charge of the wharfs, cannot get wharfingers, because we pay them only a percentage of the receipts.

Mr. LENNOX. Pay them what is right.

Mr. BRODEUR. We have no money provided in the estimates for that purpose, and so these wharfingers are paid by fees. But the amount collected is so small in many cases and the collection involves so much difficulty that we cannot find people to take these positions. The man who occupies the position of wharfinger is obliged practically to quarrel with all the persons in the locality. He has to ask them for small sums of money, it may be ten cents or it may be as much as a dollar, and it is always a great source of trouble for him. That is why we suggest the commutation of rates with shipping and railway companies, they to pay a certain amount and to receive the right to charge the rates which are charged to-day.

Mr. BLAIN. Does not the statement the hon. minister has just made suggest to him that his government have been expending large amounts of money in small places where the expenditure is absolutely unnecessary?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is not so much a question of expense, but because this is a very arduous job and it is very unpleasant for a man living in the locality to be obliged to collect these small sums from his neighbours. Many who have accepted the position of wharfinger have resigned.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I think there can be no possible objection to clause 2 of this Bill, and I think it is absolutely necessary to have such a provision. As the minister tells us, it is much easier to collect an annual rental from a steamship company or an individual desiring to use the wharf than to collect tolls on an amount of freight landed on the wharf.

Mr. BLAIN. Does not the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. K. Maclean) see that some person will have to deal with the public? And is he prepared to state that it would be better to have a steamship company deal with the public in an arbitrary way——

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Under clause 2, the company will simply have the use of the wharf; it is not leased to them. But instead of paying a toll for each use made of the wharf they pay a fixed sum. They have no control over the wharf, and the arrangement with them does not affect the user of the wharf by other people. So I do not think there can be any possible objection to the second clause of the Bill.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. A. K. Maclean) is astray. The minister proposes to give the steamship company the exclusive right to collect tolls.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. This second clause simply provides that any company or person may pay a fixed annual sum for the use of the wharf.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. And he collects the toll.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. It does not exclude other people from the use of the wharf.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The company collects in place of the officer who is there now.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. No.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. That is the way the minister explained it.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. No, they pay a fixed sum for the use of the wharf. I do not see why there should be any opposition to this clause. There may be some cases in which it would be well for the department to have the power to lease the wharf, but still I would submit to the minister that such instances would be very few indeed, and that very great care should be exercised by the department in leasing a wharf. A word with regard to the remarks of the hon. member from Peel (Mr. Blain) as to the collection of tolls. There are many cases in which it is very difficult and a hardship to exact toll. The wharf may be erected at a place where there are but a few people, and yet the wharf may be a great necessity and may mean a great deal to the people of that place. It may be a great hardship even to exact tolls from them, and the public as a whole would be pleased to make the expenditure even though they have no hope of receiving revenue by way of tolls.

Mr. BLAIN. Would my hon. friend suggest how this change will improve that condition of affairs.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I am not saying that it will improve it, it would operate in the direction which my hon. friend desires. I merely wish to say that the Department of Marine and Fisheries will find many cases where it will be difficult to exact tolls, and where the public will justify the department in giving free use of the wharf to the public.

Mr. BOYCE. The minister says there is no change in the principle with regard to leasing wharfs; but at the same time he says there is a change with regard to the classes of persons who may use these wharfs.

Mr. BRODEUR. The existing law is found in section 20, chapter 39 of the Revised Statutes, applied to the Department of Public Works, and which reads as follows:

> The minister may enter into arrangements with any provincial government, municipal council, or other local corporation or authority, or with any company in the provinces of Ontario or Quebec, incorporated for the purpose of constructing or holding the works mentioned in this section, or works of like nature in the same province, for the transfer to them of any of the public roads, harbours, rivers or river improvements, bridges or public buildings, whether within or without the limits of the local jurisdiction of such municipal council or other authorities, which it is found convenient to place under their management.
> 2. On the completion of such arrangements, the Governor in Council may grant and, by so granting, transfer and convey forever or for any term of years, all or any of such roads, harbours, rivers and river improvements, bridges or public buildings, to such provincial government, municipal council or other local authority or company, upon such terms and conditions as are agreed upon; and the said governments, municipal councils or other local authorities may enter into such arrangements and may take and hold any works so transferred.

So here is a principle which has been embodied in our legislation for 25 or 30 years, but so far it has not been taken advantage of by the Public Works Department. As my hon. friend is aware, after a wharf is constructed it may be transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries to be administered. Then we have a law in our department which is to be found in the Revised Statutes, chap. 12, sec. 16, providing that we may lease these wharfs to municipal councils. In this case provincial governments are not mentioned. This legislation has never been taken advantage of except in two cases; no municipal council has been willing to lease and take charge of these wharfs. When the legislation was introduced in 1886 it was thought that municipal councils would be willing to take advantage of this legislation, but they have not done so. We are considering the policy of extending this privilege to some other persons who probably would take more interest in the administration of these wharfs, and we thought that shipping companies and railway companies might do so if we introduced into the Act the same provision that exists with regard to the Public Works Department. That is the reason why we are extending this legislation, that is why we are asking power to lease, not only to municipal councils, but also to shipping and railway companies. Perhaps they will not take advantage of it; but it may be that some public body will take advantage of this legislation if they are allowed to do so.

Mr. BOYCE. Now the minister has made it clear. This is not an extension of the same principle, but it is an entire alteration of the principle with regard to dealing with such piers and wharfs as are handed over to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The minister will see there is a vast difference between leasing a wharf to a provincial government, thereby putting that wharf within the control of a government for the benefit of all the people, and giving the minister power to put that wharf under the jurisdiction of a steamboat, or a railway company, or a private individual. It is rather a dangerous invasion of a public right which is given under the old section, and one which I think, as the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Maclean) says, should be exercised with extreme caution. My hon. friend says he proposes to apply this to wharfs on the great lakes. I am particularly interested there. My hon. friend will see that if he applies that principle to wharfs on the great lakes as he does to any other part of Canada, it would be liable to grave abuses, particularly where there are few transportation companies, and these are operating where traffic is small and where distances are great. Where possibly a transportation company may be the only large corporation using a wharf, the power may be open to serious abuses. Once give a steamboat or a railway corporation, or a person, any vested rights, any exclusive rights, subject to whatever conditions or restrictions the minister may see fit to impose, and he thereby excludes to some extent the rights that the general public enjoyed. For instance, let the minister give to a local steamboat company along the shores of Lake Superior, or along the rivers, the exclusive privilege by lease of a pier, and that steamboat company will at once begin to dictate terms to the public, will begin to act in a drastic and sometimes tyrannical manner towards the public, and subject the public to serious inconveniences which may not come to the notice of the minister for a considerable time. I do not see any necessity for departing from the principle which was laid down in 1886, and which is referred to by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain). Let these wharfs be public utilities, let the public have equal rights with respect to them; let John Jones have the same rights to a wharf as a steamboat company or a railway company, and do not let it be possible, if John Jones wishes to use that wharf for his little traffic, for him to run foul of a steamboat company, or a transportation company, or some person, whose business is served by that wharf, and be told forsooth that they have a lease in that wharf from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. It would involve a great deal of correspondence with Ottawa, from a long distance, before the matter could be set right by the minister. There is a danger in the extent of power which is granted to the minister.

Another thing occurs to me. There are appropriations for new wharfs on Lake Superior, and is it not competent, under the first part of section 16, for the Department of Public Works to make appropriations for the building of government wharfs and piers in places where they would substantially serve the interest of only one individual, or one corporation trading in the vicinity, such as a lumber firm, or a merchant carrying on extensive business in the vicinity. When a wharf is erected and paid for by the government it may then be leased to a lumber or transportation company or a private merchant, say for 20 years, at such rental and under such terms and conditions as the minister sees fit to impose so that no monopoly of that wharf may be given to the detriment of the people of the district.

I simply wish to point out the dangers of abuse under the proposed legislation.

Mr. LENNOX. Do we collect tolls from all government wharfs or are there some from which we collect no tolls?

Mr. BRODEUR. There have been transferred from the Department of Public Works to the Department of Marine and Fisheries 416 wharfs and we have been collecting revenue from 224 of these. In some cases we cannot get a man to act as wharfinger as his duties may involve him in difficulties with his neighbours. That of course is generally in small places where there is little business.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. How about the wharfs on the Great Lakes?

Mr. BRODEUR. They are the best we have, we have the least trouble with them.

Mr. LENNOX. Where the revenue is so small that you cannot get a wharfinger, I would suggest that it would be better to make the wharf entirely free for the benefit of the people in the district. Do not let us go into this partnership business with companies and individuals in regard to the building of wharfs.

Mr. BRODEUR. We will draw the line.

Mr. LENNOX. I would draw the line more strictly than the government has been drawing it in reference to the building of wharfs. Wharfs have been built at many places where they are not needed and I would suggest that in these places too where the revenue is only $25 or $50 a year, the wharfs should be made free. There are many of these unnecessary wharfs and whatever benefit there is to be obtained from them should go to the public and not to the middleman, the intermediary, the friend of the government. The minister speaks as if this Bill were simply enlarging the scope of section 16 of chapter 112 of the Harbours and Piers Act, extending a system that has been in vogue for many years. As a matter of fact we are adopting an entirely new principle. The original Act provides that where the annual receipts from any wharf for the three years previous have not exceeded $100 the minister may lease the wharf to the municipality within which it is situated, for a term not exceeding three years. The proposed amendment permits the Governor in Council to lease any wharf, whether the lease be $100 or $10,000 for any length of time to any company or person under any conditions they see fit to impose and they need not make any provision as to whether the public shall or shall not be accommodated or whether the tolls shall be reasonable. The government is not bound to do that, because under section 2, before the matter goes to council, the minister has the alternative of entering into an agreement, in cases where there is not sufficient revenue to support a wharfinger, to divide the revenue with the company or person to whom the wharf is leased. The minister may divide that little pittance and he may say to the company: I will commute the rates with you and there shall be an amount payable yearly by you and we shall have to engage a wharfinger annually as to the balance. I am entirely opposed to anything of this kind. I am speaking of it more because there is a principle involved. If we build railways and pay for them let us control them; if we build canals and the people pay for them let the people have them; if we build a transcontinental railway and the people dip down into their pockets and provide all the funds it is unfair that the company should reap the reward. This is just a means of having a certain amount of truckery that we don't want. If the people supply the money to build these wharfs let the people have the accommodation they afford. If a wharf is not necessary do not build it, but if you do build it let it be used in the public interest and not in the interest of middlemen and hangers on, which would be the result of this legislation. This will result in a large army of people coming and pestering the ministers and members to build more wharfs. Lumber companies that have timber away back in the interior which they cannot get out will want the government to build wharfs for them.

Mr. PORTER. As in the Grande Vallée case.

Mr. LENNOX. Grande Vallée is one of them and there are others. They will get the government to build a wharf on the understanding that as soon as it is built it shall be controlled by them for a nominal rental, and the public shall have the pleasure of paying, and the private company shall have the pleasure of getting all the benefit.

Mr. SMYTH. I wish to point out another danger that must occur if the government wharfs are handed over to private individuals. My riding borders on one of the great lakes and even at present while the wharfs are under the control of the government we have this difficulty: That a vessel is lying at a particular point in the wharf and occupying a particular space, and for reasons of their own they do not want to move her far enough in or far enough out to allow another vessel to lie at that side of the wharf where it would have protection from storms. I have seen the government wharfingers having to throw the lines off a boat and let her go adrift if they refuse to move her up or down. If that wharf were controlled by the owners of the vessel that was lying there you could see what difficulty the owner of another vessel would have in getting his vessel to the wharf. That is a danger you have to take into account in leasing these wharfs to private individuals. Then again, a lumber company could so pile up that wharf with lumber and keep it there for storage all summer that the public would be greatly hampered in the general use of that wharf. I know something about these difficulties because I have been up against them myself, and I hope the minister will not hand the wharfs over to private individuals.

Mr. BRODEUR. After hearing what has been said by hon. gentlemen opposite I think we should not go the length of giving private individuals the right to lease these wharfs. It would probably bring more trouble on the department than it has now, and I would be willing to strike out the provision about leasing to private individuals.

Mr. SMYTH. And to companies as well.

Mr. BRODEUR. The transportation companies are in a different position because they are serving the public. On Lake Erie, the Canadian Pacific Railway has the exclusive use of a wharf and I think it should be leased to them for the special purpose they use it for. In the same way the Grand Trunk has a wharf at Parry Sound which is used by them exclusively.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. You would not have to pay a wharfinger in that case at all.

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, yes, we will require wharfingers.

Mr. PERLEY. There is no provision in the Bill giving the Railway Commission or any other body supervision of the tolls which may be charged by railway companies on these wharfs.

Mr. BRODEUR. One of the conditions of the lease would be that they should charge the rates provided by the order in council.

Mr. PERLEY. But under this section, as I read it, the department would have the right to build a new wharf and lease it to a steamship company or a railway company without any provision for maintaining the rights of the general public.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is not the intention. In cases in which we have leased wharfs to the municipal councils they have been required to charge the same rates as were charged by the public wharfs under the control of the department. It is intended to continue that system.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. The Department of Public Works controls a certain number of wharfs and the Department of Marine and Fisheries controls others, and let me suggest that all the wharfs should be transferred to the Marine Department. Then, the Minister of Marine should make out a statement by next session of parliament of the total number of wharfs owned by the government, and if there are special ones which he wants to lease to certain companies let him bring down a Bill empowering him to do so. I fancy he has not studied those as thoroughly as he ought to have done because he now offers to withdraw a portion of it. Let him come down and place a statement of all the wharfs the government owns before the House. Then let him propose legislation dealing with a certain number that the government ought to lease to steamship and railway companies and make regulations governing the whole of the balance as to what the rates shall be, defining those that will be under wharfingers and those that the government will allow to be used free of rates by the public. It would be better to come to a business arrangement with regard to the whole system of wharfs and introduce new legislation with regard to all the wharfs owned by the country. I think that would be a better plan than perhaps getting us into trouble by passing this legislation now when neither side of the House thoroughly understands it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think there would be any trouble, because, as far as the wharfs which are to-day under the control of the Department of Public Works are concerned, legislation similar to this has been in existence and has not been taken advantage of. However, in view of the suggestion which has been made by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), and the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce), I think we might make a modification in this Bill. Perhaps some abuses would be created if we were given power to lease to private persons. Lumber companies have been referred to, and perhaps these companies would like to have the power to lease these wharfs. Possibly that should not be done. I am willing that they should not have the power to lease these wharfs notwithstanding the fact that this power has been in existence under the Public Works Act and that no abuses seem to have resulted from it. But in view of the discussion which has taken place, I realize that some abuses might occur. This is an experiment in order to meet the situation which exists to-day. To-day the situation with regard to these wharfs is far from being satisfactory. We have legislation in the Department of Marine and Fisheries providing that these wharfs should be leased to municipal councils, but it has not resulted as we had expected it would. This clause has been on the statute-book for twenty-three years and it has not been taken advantage of except in two cases. Now, we are proposing to extend this power to shipping and railway companies and also to private individuals. But, in view of the discussion which has taken place we might drop out the portion which concerns private persons and confine it to municipal councils, harbour commissioners, shipping and railway companies. I am sure that with the conditions that are put into this law there will be no abuses in so far as the public are concerned, and it will give the department a better means of administering these wharfs.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Let me tell the minister what happened in our town. We had two or three private wharfs. A railway company acquired control of them and nobody could land at the town without going over the railway property. They, of course, charged for every trunk and everything else that passed over these wharfs, and the result was that in order to satisfy the requirements of the people the town itself had to spend $2,000 or $3,000 to build a public wharf. They have that wharf now free to the citizens of the town. That might happen in a number of towns where my hon. friend would rent wharfs to shipping or railway companies. They might collect wharf rates where people have been in the habit of using the government property at lower rates or practically free. The railway and shipping companies will not allow this. I think it would be better for the minister to look into the whole question of the wharfs controlled by the Public Works Department and his own department, ascertain which of these wharfs can be properly leased to railway and shipping companies and then let the government lay down a tariff that they cannot exceed.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is what is to be done.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. No, this does not make provision for that.

Mr. BRODEUR. In case of a wharf being leased it will be provided that they will not be able to charge more than the order in council allows. The company leasing the wharf will have the administration of it and they will probably relieve the department of the repairs which appertain to it.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Why would not the second clause meet the case of railway and steamship companies?

Mr. WRIGHT. I think the clause giving power to the minister to lease to railway and shipping companies is a most dangerous clause. The public might be affected very injuriously by the power which would be conferred upon a steamboat company to charge exorbitant rates as against any other steamboat company using that wharf. I think that provision ought to be made, if you are going to lease a wharf to a steamboat company, that other companies shall have equal powers to utilize that wharf. I think there should be no charge for all small shipping as against farmers and others who may have occasion to go over a leased wharf. If there is no limitation of this kind it will shut them out from using a leased wharf when they desire to go to the town to do their shopping or attend to their business. These people have to get over the wharf some way, and the steamboat company which has a lease from the government will be able to charge them a toll which may be prohibitive. I would like to ask the minister a question with regard to the present condition of affairs. Do the wharfingers have to submit the toll charged to the minister for his approval?

Mr. BRODEUR. Orders in council have been passed at different times giving the rates which are to be charged on these wharfs. My hon. friend speaks of the danger of a company charging exorbitant rates for the use of a wharf by other persons. There is no danger because it has always been provided in the law and it is the intention to provide in this law that they shall not have the right to charge anything more than the rates provided for in the order in council. Everybody will always be on the same footing.

Mr. WRIGHT. I see very great danger in handing over the exclusive control of a wharf to any individual or steamship company. They can go up to a wharf, transfer their goods over it and shut out every other man. Even if another company had a right to the wharf under a lease it would be almost impossible to enforce that right. I have seen these wharfs built by the government and supposed to be under the control of the Public Works Department, utilized by a single steamboat company to the detriment of all others. I have even seen them used for the piling of a hundred cords of wood which may be allowed to remain there for weeks and months and the people have to go around and land as best they can on the river frontage. I do not think a steamboat company should have any lease that would give them greater power than any other company or individual.

Mr. BRODEUR. In a case where there is only one shipping company that goes to a wharf it would be advantageous to have it leased to that company in order that the company might look after the wharf.

Mr. WRIGHT. In all the northern waters there are gasoline launches, canoes, row-boats, and lumbermen's boats, and craft of all kinds, which might not be described as steamboats, and which might be put in the unenviable position of being refused landing facilities by the steamboat company in charge of the wharf.

Mr. BRODEUR. It could not do that.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I agree to some extent with hon. gentlemen in their opinion against the policy of leasing wharfs, and I do not see why the second clause does not give the department ample power to deal with any case such as that described by the minister in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway. If the Governor in Council is to be given power under clause 16, there should be some amendment to that Bill in order that the public rights be more amply protected. There should be some terms and conditions defined. I suggest that the hon. minister, after the discussion we have had this afternoon, should let the Bill stand over in order that some amendment may be devised to clause 16. It is rather difficult to draft one off-hand.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have no objection to having the Bill stand in order to see whether an amendment might not be drafted to protect the public against any possible danger. Our intention is not to give any undue privilege to anybody, but simply to obtain the power to better administer the wharfs under our control.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would call attention to the fact that the proposition may be very serious to Manitoba. We have in Selkirk a wharf with about 2,000 feet frontage, and if it be possible to lease that to one shipping company, a dangerous monopoly might be created. Under the present arrangement, there is one company, which has a large business in lumber and fish, which practically monopolizes the wharf to-day. There is so much lumber piled on it at times, that it is almost impossible to walk down the docks. I do not know whether it has been passed over to the Marine Department or not.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not see it in my list.

Mr. BRADBURY. There is the trouble. I presume it is under the control of the Public Works Department, and the public have no recourse against the inconvenience from which they are suffering.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. There is no mention of it at all in the public accounts.

Mr BLAIN I presume we get no revenue from it at all. If this Bill becomes law, there are two or three companies doing a large business at this wharf and the minister will be compelled to make a selection among them.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, my intention is simply to provide for places where there is no competition, and where consequently no one company can be given preference to the detriment of another. In cases where there is only one company, it would be an improvement to give that company a lease under the control of the department and on the condition specified in the lease.

Mr. BLAIN. Would not that be creating a monopoly?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, because there would be only one company. Where there are two or three companies, there would be no necessity to exercise the power given by that Bill.

Mr. BRADBURY. Who controls the wharf at Selkirk? There is a wharfinger there who is paid some $300 a year. Is he paid by the government or the steamboat men?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know about that. That wharf is not on my list.

Mr. BRADBURY. There is nothing in the blue-book to indicate who pays this man.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know about this wharf. I will make inquiries.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. So far as the records show, there is no wharf there at all—no account of it in either the Public Works or the Marine Department. Money was voted to build a wharf there, but there is no revenue, no wharfinger appointed, no further record of it. It may be like the armouries in Toronto—nobody seems to know who owns them or what department holds them. The Public Works Department seems to get a certain distance with these works, and even to finish them, but without turning them over to any department to take charge of them. There is no account of any revenue from the wharf at Selkirk. I approve of the proposal of the minister to have these wharfs taken over and administered by his department. It should have been done long ago. As to the matter of tolls, in case of a lease, to prevent exorbitant rates, could not the matter be left to the Railway Commission to deal with on complaint of parties who feel aggrieved? Other things of this kind are left to the Railway Board, and perhaps this suggestion may meet with the approval of the minister.

Mr. BRODEUR. In the case of a railway it might be done, but not in the others. These rates are fixed by the Governor in Council.

Mr. CURRIE. I was suggesting to the minister that if a man leased a wharf he might be permitted to make his own schedule, subject to the control of the Railway Commission.

Mr. BRODEUR. The rates would be fixed by the order in council.

Mr. LENNOX. We have lost two hours over a Bill which might have been put through in half an hour if proper preparation had been made. The minister tells us that this is an experiment. We do not want experiments. This matter had not come under public attention, but now that it has come before the House a certain amount of attention has been drawn to it. Bills have often been introduced in this House and allowed to stand over for a year. If that were done in the present case, no harm would result and good would be done. I can well understand that the minister wants to get the power he is asking for. But first let him get control of all the wharfs. Between now and next session let him take an inventory and let his officers report as to every wharf. Then next session let him bring down to parliament the information that parliament has a right to have, that members may know what they are doing. Then let the minister bring down, not a statute such as this, which is virtually a direction to the government to do whatever they like in the matter, but a statute which embodies the main conditions under which these wharfs should be dealt with. As to the lease, let us have not a mere promise, vague and unwritten, but the necessary conditions of the lease, so that in this statute, as in other statutes, the terms upon which this public property is to be handed over should be known and understood. Among other things, that the rights of the public may be safeguarded let it be provided that after the wharf is under the control of any lessee all persons should have the right to use it upon reasonable specified terms. With this before us we can put through a statute in half an hour, and do it intelligently, and do it in a way to respond to the duties we owe to our people. As it is now, we cannot do that. I ask the minister to let this stand over until next session. None of these wharfs will run away—of course, some of them may be swept away—in the meantime——

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Business will not stand still. If the minister is seized of the situation, he can bring down amendments to the Bill this session.

Mr. BRODEUR. After the discussion I can realize what my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) is asking.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not agree with the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie). I think that hasty legislation is worse than no legislation. The law now on the statute-book has been there unchanged for twenty-five years, as I understand it. No great harm will be done by waiting another year. The minister, if necessary, can make temporary arrangements with parties in the meantime.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have no power.

Mr. LENNOX. Ministers often do things they have no power to do. It can be done all right. I appeal to the minister, in the interests of the public to let the matter stand. It will go to the public, and their attention will be attracted to it. Next session we can have before us a great deal of information which we have not now. I venture the opinion that very few members have any instructions from their constituents in regard to the matter. The public generally do not know there is such a Bill before the House. But, with the information that we ought to have, next session we can put through a good Bill and do it quickly.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS.

Bill (No. 90) to create a Department of External Affairs.—Mr. Murphy—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I understand that the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) wished to speak on this Bill when it came before the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I was not aware of that, but if it is desired, we can postpone the consideration of it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I understood the leader of the opposition to say that he would have something to say about it when it came up.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) will be here after dinner, and the Bill might stand over until then.

CANADA—FRANCE STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to enter into a contract or contracts for a term not exceeding ten years with any individual or company, for the performance of a steamship service between a port or ports in Canada and a French port or ports, on such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council deems expedient, and to grant therefor a subsidy not exceeding two hundred thousand dollars a year, based upon a minimum service of fifteen round voyages a year, and a subsidy therefor not exceeding one hundred thousand dollars, and so in proportion for a more frequent service.—Mr. Brodeur.

Mr. LENNOX. Would the minister explain how these two sums work out? There is first a subsidy of $200,000 a year, based, as I understand it upon fifteen round voyages.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). If my hon friend (Mr. Lennox) will permit me, I will explain it. Last year we passed legislation of the same character as this; but this year, instead of taking power to make only one contract, we take power to make one or several contracts. Last year legislation was passed for the purpose of enabling the Governor in Council to pay a subsidy to the Allen Line, which is doing the service between France and Canada, and it was contended that the fact that we had made a contract for only one year precluded the government from making another contract. We did not intend to make a contract for a long period, in view of the fact that we did not know whether the French parliament would ratify the treaty. But now that the treaty has been passed by the Senate, who were formerly objecting to it, we expect it will come into force very soon. We therefore take power this year, not only to make a contract for the present year, but to make a contract for a period not exceeding ten years. Then, whereas we provided by statute last year a sum of $5,555 for each trip, this year we propose to improve the service, and for that purpose to give a mimimum sum of $6,666.66 per trip. Those are the two changes made; first, we take power to renew the contract at discretion, instead of being obliged to come to parliament next year for new authority; and in the second place, instead of giving $5,500 a year, we propose to give $6,600.

Mr. LENNOX. On that basis, for 15 trips, it will be in all $200,000?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not notice anything about the size of the boats, or their capacity, or the tonnage. Should there not be provision that the boats shall be of a certain tonnage, and some guarantee of the quality of the service?

Mr. BRODEUR. The conditions my hon. friend mentions have never been heretofore put in the Bill. It is provided however, that instead of having a 10 knot service as at present, we will have a 12 knot service.

Mr. SPROULE. You think it is unnecessary to specify any minimum of tonnage for the boats?

Mr. BRODEUR. That is provided for in the contract. The hon. gentleman will find the conditions of the contract in the report of the Trade and Commerce Department.

Mr. WRIGHT. I presume the purpose is to promote trade between France and Canada as a consequence of the present French treaty. Could the minister tell us if France is giving a like amount, or what amount is she giving on her part to promote commerce between the two countries.

Mr. BRODEUR. The French government proceeds in a different manner from ours, it encourages shipping from its ports by the payment of a certain sum of money to vessels plying to other ports. In Canada we subsidize a mail service between different countries and our own, but in France they subsidize the boats themselves. I am told, however, but not officially, that perhaps the French government will put on a line of their own between Canada and France.

Mr. HENDERSON. I assume the object of this subsidy is to promote trade between France and Canada. We wish to find better markets in other countries for the products of the Canadian farms and industries. I notice that the difference between our exports to France and our imports from France last year is very great. If we are going to derive no greater trade advantage than we have done in the past, it seems to me that we are paying a very large sum of money for something that is not of great value. I notice, in the answer made by the Minister of Customs to a question of the hon. member for North Toronto, that for the year ending 31st March, 1908, our imports from France totalled $10,251,717, while our exports amounted to only $1,806,732. Now, it does seem to me that we are simply providing a means of furnishing a market in Canada for the people of France, instead of doing what I think we ought to do, trying to find a market in France for the products of Canada. If there is to be no great advantage by reason of the French treaty—and I must confess that I have very little faith that we are going to derive any material advantage, even if we get the minimum tariff of France—if we are not going to change the relative difference between imports and exports very much, Canada is certainly paying a very high price for the privilege of trading with France. We are practically paying $200,000 a year to enable France to come into our markets to the extent of $10,251,717, while all the advantage we get in return is that we are able to send to France $1,806,732. I think the aim of the government should be to find new markets for Canada, instead of continuing the policy of finding new markets in Canada for every other country in the world. I think the government has absolutely failed in carrying out the promises that were made to us many years ago, that they were going to find new markets for Canada. We have heard a great deal about the sixty million market in the United States, but practically the promise made in that respect has never materialized. We heard a good deal about the Japanese treaty; I am not aware that we have secured, for the products of the soil at any rate, any advantage from that treaty, although we have given to Japan very material advantages in our markets. The same in regard to the French treaty. Whilst we permit the people of France to trade with us on certain terms under this French treaty, we extend the same terms to some twelve or thirteen other countries from which we receive no concessions. We should think seriously before we throw away $200,000 a year for such a very small advantage to Canada. I think we are paying very dear for the privilege of trading with the French republic. Surely the government must have some assurance that our market in France is going to be very materially increased before they would feel warranted in asking parliament to pay out $200,000 a year for such a trifling advantage. I have not looked at the schedules of the French treaty during the past year, but my recollection is that there is very little in those schedules that will inure to the benefit of Canada or enable us to get into their markets on favourable terms. Their tariff is so high that I do not think we would be able to get over it, and I certainly hesitate to support a resolution to give away $200,000 a year largely for the purpose of finding a market for French products in Canada. It is easy to throw open our doors and ask people to come and trade with us, but surely the policy of the government should be rather to find markets for Canadian products than to open the Canadian market to the goods of every other country. We have a British preference now which provides a market in Canada for the products of Great Britain and nothing was ever done by the government to assist us in getting a better entry into the British market. The Minister of Agriculture even failed to secure the removal of the embargo on cattle, which would have been a tremendous boon to the people of Canada. I doubt if the minister will be able to do anything along that line owing to the stand he and other members of the government, especially the Prime Minister, have taken in educating the people of Great Britain to believe that we do not want anything in return for the preference.

It looks to me almost as if we were making a free gift to France. Are we to pay $200,000 a year to enable us to give them that gift absolutely free? Not only are we going to open our doors to them and furnish a market for their products, but we are practically going to pay the transportation charges on their products into our country. What material advantage is that to the people of Canada? Even suppose we do get wine a few cents a gallon cheaper, we have the grapes in this country and we could manufacture the light wines in sufficient quantities for our own use. There may be a few items like silk which are put down at a low rate of duty, so that we could get them more cheaply. But silks are not very expensive in Canada and the people of Canada could afford to buy them on the ordinary terms. I do not think it would pay us to give a bounty of $200,000 a year in order to get silk and wines and a few other articles cheaper from France than we have been getting them. I cannot see my way to support this resolution. I think we are paying too much for the whistle, and I hope the minister will have some explanation to give to us which will show that there will be an advantage to Canada commensurate with the large amount of money we are paying. In ten years this subsidy would amount to $2,000,000, a very considerable sum. We talk about millions now as though they did not amount to anything, but we have to provide a great many millions in order to carry on our government and we must be careful of our millions because when they are multiplied by tens they become a serious charge. I hope the minister, before pressing this resolution, will be able to show us that we are going to get something in return for the large amount we are called upon to pay out.

Mr. BRODEUR. If the government did not think that this resolution would improve the commercial relations between Canada and France, we would certainly not have introduced it. This is not a new policy, it has been in existence for many years. The first legislation subsidizing a line of steamships between Canada and France was passed in 1884. The Act of that year provided for a weekly service between Canada and Great Britain, calling at a French port, and offered a subsidy of $500,000. In 1894 another statute was passed increasing that subsidy to $750,000. In 1896 provision was made for a weekly service with a subsidy of $750,000 and a section was added providing for a five-years' contract, and a fortnightly service between Canada, France and Belgium at a yearly subsidy of $50,000. This was increased to $100,000 in 1901. Nothing was done even under this offer of $100,000 until a few years after this subsidy had been on the statute book. At last the Allan line agreed to undertake that service and for some years past they have been performing it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. They were doing it previously for $100,000 a year.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, but they were giving only a tri-weekly service with slow boats, and the proposal now is, to increase the payment for each trip from $5,500 to $6,600.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. Is the French government aiding in this subsidy ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The policy of the French government is to subsidize the construction of the steamers, but they have no subsidy similar to that which we pay in Canada. Some years ago there was informal negotiation with a view of the French government contributing to this subsidy but the question came up as to under what flag the ships should sail and it was found impossible to reach an agreement. My hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) has spoken of the trade between Canada and France, and I might point out that the treaty of 1893 included but a very few articles which were subject to the French minimum tariff.

Mr. DANIEL. What ports will be served by this line ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Quebec and Montreal in summer, and St. John in winter.

Mr. DANIEL. What ports on the other side ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Havre. Under the treaty of 1897 with France, a very long list of Canadian goods will be allowed into France under the minimum tariff, and in return we have given to some 80 articles of French production the benefit of the intermediate tariff. My hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) is not sure that we will derive any benefit from the French treaty but I hold a contrary opinion. In view of the fact that before the treaty of 1907 Canadian goods generally had to pay the very high maximum tariff and came into competition with goods from countries contiguous to France which paid only the minimum tariff, it was impossible for us to do any extensive trade with France. It is natural to expect, now that Canadian goods have the benefit of the minimum tariff, that there will be a large development of Canadian trade with France. Indeed, since the establishment of this steamship line, and notwithstanding all the difficulties that had to be encountered in the past, we have increased our trade to some extent. There are many commodities which we might export to France with profit. There are some other articles of fish that we could export to France. Now we are having the benefit of the minimum tariff on our fish we may also expect to sell more of that product in France.

Mr. HENDERSON. How much lower is the rate on lobsters than was the rate under the tariff of 1893?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is the same.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well then we do not expect to get any advantage.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, but I was telling my hon. friend that under the treaty of 1893 we have been exporting lobsters there and we may expect, when we are enjoying the minimum tariff, not only on that article but also on 150 other articles, that the development of trade which has taken place in regard to that specific article will also occur with respect to the other articles which are mentioned in the treaty.

Mr. HUGHES. Could the minister tell us the value of the lobsters shipped to France ?

Mr. BRODEUR. $500,000 or $600,000 worth, if not more.

Mr. DANIEL. Over $600,000 worth.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think perhaps it is over $600,000 worth.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then that would be about one-third of the whole shipment to France.

Mr. BRODEUR. Precisely, but my hon. friend has not caught the argument that I am trying to make. I say that we have been able, due to the fact that we have a minimum tariff on this article, to develop a large trade with France. Now, we have the minimum tariff not only on this article but on 150 other articles which we are producing in this country. Take, for instance, cheese, butter and other products of the farm.

Mr. S. SHARPE. What is the tariff on cheese and butter ?

Mr. BRODEUR. On cheese, 25 francs maximum and 12 and 15 francs minimum. The tariff on butter is 20 francs minimum and 30 francs maximum. It was absolutely impossible for us to compete with regard to butter or cheese with Denmark which is enjoying the benefit of the minimum tariff.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like the minister to state whether the government have made any calculation as to the quantity of farm products that we may expect in the coming years to export from Canada to France under the new treaty?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know whether any calculations have been made by the Department of Finance or not. I have not got them under my hand, but I may mention a case which was brought to my notice when I was in France two years ago in connection with this treaty showing the great advantage it would be to us to enjoy the benefit of the minimum tariff. It has reference to the export of hams. I got this information from a gentleman who had been importing from Canada to France. He told me that at one time he was doing a very fine business with France because there was only one duty. Ham was not enjoying any minimum tariff so that we were in the same position as competing European countries which are neighbours of France. He told me that in 1903, I think, they changed their tariff in France and put on hams a maximum and minimum tariff. The result was that the countries which had treaties with France, like Austria, Russia, Germany, Switzerland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Spain and Italy, could export their ham at the minimum rate while we had to pay the maximum rate. This business was lost to the Canadians and this firm which had established a very fine business between France and Canada was obliged to cease business in that line. What is the situation under the new treaty? Under the new treaty we enjoy the benefit of the minimum tariff so that we will be in the same position in France as that occupied by our European competitors. We expect to develop a business which has been absolutely killed by the absence of a treaty.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Perhaps my hon. friend could get these statistics, if they are made up in the Finance Department or in the Trade and Commerce Department, and give them when the Bill is under discussion and let us pass the resolution and have the Bill introduced before six o'clock.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will inquire in the Department of Trade and Commerce whether they have these figures.

Mr. BARR. When the treaty was passed the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) promised to make an effort to prevent the importation of absinthe. I would like to know if any progress has been made along that line or if there is any hope of that change being made. I noticed a short time ago that Germany had taken steps to prohibit the importation of absinthe into their country. Also with regard to the importation of wines, there is great danger that we may ruin our own wine business because we can raise all the grapes we require. It would be important to know whether steps have been taken in these directions.

Mr. BRODEUR. We probably will have to introduce this session some legislation with regard to the approval of the change which has been made in the treaty and I will draw the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to the question which has been put by my hon. friend from Dufferin.

Mr. BARR. I hope the minister will do so in very strong terms for I do think the danger from the introduction of absinthe is greater than any advantage which we receive from this Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it contemplated to have any control over the freight rates in connection with these boats?

Mr. BRODEUR. There has been an undertaking by the company and it was stipulated in the contract which was passed last year that the rates between Havre and Canada shall be the same as those between Havre and New York.

Mr. McKENZIE. Before this resolution passes, I think this would be an opportune time to bring to the notice of the hon. minister and the government the great necessity which exists for a port of call in Nova Scotia for those lines in the summer time. Take this proposed line of steamers which ply between Montreal and Quebec and some port in France, we are told by the hon. minister that fish, particularly lobsters, is one of our largest exports to France. It would therefore be a great boon to Cape Breton and the coast of Nova Scotia if we had a port somewhere in the Province to which these steamers would call and on which we could ship our fish and other exports to France, where there is an excellent market for them. These steamers will pass by our doors practically within a few miles, and it will be too bad if provision be not made for them to call at North Sydney. At that port there is considerable French trade. It is the headquarters of the French trawlers, a trade which has only been developed the last few years. These steamers also take a large quantity of coal, and it would be much cheaper for them to purchase it at North Sydney rather than at Montreal or Quebec. If they were to call at North Sydney, they would there get their bunker much more expeditiously and cheaply, which would be an inducement to them to call there. What I have said regarding this new line between Canada and France also applies to the steamers plying between Canada and Mexico. In the maritime provinces, we have no chance of communicating with those lines unless they call somewhere on the coast of Nova Scotia, and North Sydney is the nearest point and not at all out of their way. The English mail has been landed there, and if that does not put the mail steamers much out of their course, the delay would be still less of a disadvantage in the case of freight boats. Besides North Sydney being the terminus of the Intercolonial Railway, it would become the point of shipping for the whole province of Nova Scotia and the provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island during the summer thus giving to those provinces the advantage of the French market. In winter of course the steamers will go to St. John. but in the summer we have no better means of accommodating them than by their calling at North Sydney, which would give us the advantage of shipping to the French and the Mexican markets, and give them the advantage of cheaper coal. I do not think I would be justified in allowing this opportunity to pass without bringing this matter to the notice of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Resoution reported, read the first and second time and concurred in.

Mr. BRODEUR moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 146) to amend the Act relating to Ocean Steamship Subsidies.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

At six oclock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SENATE AMENDMENTS.

On the order being called for Consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 59) to incorporate the Victoria and Barkley Sound Railway Company.—Mr. Smith (Nanaimo).

Mr. SPEAKER. Is it the intention of the House that these Bills be not proceeded with in the absence of the promoters?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. In the case of the Bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Claude Macdonell) my hon. friend requested that it should be proceeded with.

SECOND READINGS.

(Bill No. 129) for the relief of Evelyn Martha Keller.—Mr. Pardee.

Bill (No. 132) respecting certain letters patent of Franklin Montgomery Gray.—Mr. Rankin.

Bill (No. 134) to incorporate the Canadian Medical Association.—Mr. Roche.

Bill (No. 130) for the relief of Frank Parsons.—Mr. Tolmie.

Bill (No. 133) to incorporate the Kootenay and Alberta Railway Company. — Mr. Knowles.

Bill (No. 138) respecting the Quebec Oriental Railway Company.—Mr. Geoffrion.

Bill (No. 139) respecting the Ottawa Fire Insurance Company, and to change its name to Ottawa Assurance Company.—Mr. Perley.

AGRICULTURAL FERTILIZERS.

Bill (No. 110) respecting agricultural fertilizers.—Mr. Templeman. Read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The present law respecting agricultural fertilizers, which has been on the statute-book, I believe, for twenty years, has been found inoperative and ineffective to secure the object for which it was passed, that is, to protect the purchasers of agricultural fertilizers. It is proposed to repeal the existing Act absolutely, replacing it by the Bill now before the House. The present law requires the manufacturers to submit their fertilizers to the Department of Inland Revenue for analysis. The Department of Inland Revenue publishes in bulletins the results of these analyses. These bulletins are supposed to inform the farmers or purchasers of the quality of the fertilizers. The manufacturers are required by the law to send in their samples for analysis in the month of January. As a matter of fact the samples this year did not arrive in the department very much before February or March and before the issue of the bulletin in April this year the farmers had already purchased all they required for the year and the work of the department was useless.

Mr. SPROULE. Why?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Because the analysis was made too late.

Mr. SPROULE. The Act provides that they shall.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. But they don't do it; and even if it comes in in the month of January, the bulletin could not be got out in time to place the evidence before the purchasers and enable them to judge from the analyses the value of the fertilizers they are purchasing. At all events, it has been found after years of experience that the issuance of these bulletins, with the analyses of the department, has not accomplished the object for which they were issued, that is, to inform the farmers of the character of the fertilizers placed on the market. The new Act is a radical change. We do not propose to analyse for the manufacturers. The law as it exists has been altogether in the interest of the manufacturer rather than of the purchaser. The department has been analysing these samples all these years for $3, whereas it costs the department $7 to make an analysis of a fertilizer.

Mr. SPROULE. What was this chapter of the old Act?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think it is 132. We propose under the Act now before the House to require the manufacturers to register their brand with the department, they will receive a number, and they will sell their brand of fertilizer under a distinctive number. That is necessary from the fact that many of the fertilizers now on the market have names very similar, so that in the event of prosecutions for failing to live up to the guarantee they are supposed to give of the merit of their fertilizers, it is hard to distinguish what particular fertilizer was bought, because there are so many of practically the same name. It is proposed that every manufacturer should receive a registered number under which he will sell his fertilizer, the trade mark and the name of the brand. We propose that he shall himself place on the label or tag of the fertilizer a guaranteed analysis of the component parts of the article; that is, the manufacturer shall put on the parcel, bag or box, as it may be, a guaranteed analysis of the fertilizer. That is the main principle of the Bill. Then when it is on the market we can collect samples, and by analysis ascertain whether the manufacturer is living up to his guaranteed analysis as published by himself.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Did the minister say that the manufacturers' goods were only analysed once a year?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No, I did not say that. Under the proposed Bill the manufacturer will place upon the bag, or box, or tin can of the fertilizer he is selling, a label with the name of the brand, the registration number, the name and address of the manufacturer, and an analysis as guaranteed by him, which analysis will show the percentages. A guaranteed analysis means the valuation of a fertilizer in terms of its contents of phosphoric acid, nitrogen and potash. They would place that on the label, and they must live up to that guaranteed analysis. All the fertilizers they place on the market must be of the value which they guarantee. Samples will be collected from the dealers from time to time, and will be analysed, and we will thereby ascertain whether the manufacturer is living up to his guaranteed analysis as published.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I understood the minister to say that under the old Act the manufacturers have their goods analysed only once a year; will the minister tell us how often their goods are likely to be examined under the new Act?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. In the first place, the manufacturer must publish with his goods the analysis thereof, so that every purchaser can read it. The department will then from time to time procure samples of the fertilizers on the market and analyse them, and ascertain if the manufacturer is living up to his guaranteed analysis. A farmer purchasing any particular fertilizer may, under the Act, procure an analysis of a sample of the fertilizer; therefore any particular brand of fertilizer may be analysed as often as samples are sent in to the department.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Then you will publish in a bulletin the results of analyses of the different samples you have gathered?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

Mr. BARR. Will any farmer have a right to send down samples to be examined without charge?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Not without charge. The charge in the Bill is $5.

Mr. BARR. Couldn't that charge be much cut down?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The actual cost to the department of analysing a sample of fertilizer is $7. It is a difficult analysis to make. Section 10, providing for the fee, reads thus:

> Any purchaser of a registered fertilizer may obtain from the minister an analysis of the fertilizer as delivered to him, by making application for such analysis accompanied by a sample of the fertilizer of at least one pound weight and taken in accordance with the directions given in schedule B to this Act, and on payment of a fee of $5.

The House will readily understand that if there was no fee or only a very small fee imposed, the department would be flooded with requests for analyses. The inspectors will send in the samples and the results of the analysis will be published in a bulletin. It will then be known whether the manufacturer is living up to his guarantee, and if he is not there is a penalty provided.

Mr. SEXSMITH. If a farmer sends in a sample and the analysis does not agree with the statement published by the manufacturer, who will prosecute?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Under section 12 it it is the duty of our own officers to collect samples and if the analysis proves that the fertilizer is not up to standard we prosecute. Although this Act does not provide for prosecutions when a sample is sent in by a farmer or any person other than an officer of the department, I would be of opinion myself that in the event of a sample being found deficient it would be the duty of the department to prosecute.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Would it not be well to have that provision included in the Bill?

Mr. BARR. What officers will be appointed under this Act?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The inspectors under this Act will be the same as the inspectors under the Adulteration of Food Act. It is not the intention of this Act to appoint any new or special officers.

Mr. TAYLOR. If a farmer wanted to send in a sample, his most convenient way would be to hand the five dollar fee and his sample to an inspector.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The most convenient way would be to get the inspector of food to take the sample.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I would assume from the statement of the minister that if a farmer were suspicious that a manufacturer was selling a fertilizer which was not up to the government standard, all he need do is to write to the inspector and the inspector would take samples.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is no standard fixed by the government. The standard is fixed by the manufacturer, who places that standard on a printed label on the package guaranteeing his own product as being equal to that standard. He must live up to that, so that the purchaser knows what he is buying.

Mr. BURRELL. What was the original charge for analysis?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Three dollars.

Mr. BURRELL. It seems to me that the manufacturer who is putting immense quantities of fertilizers on the market, should at least be compelled to pay the full fee when samples are analysed in the public interest. The weak spot in the Inspection of Food Act is that the fines imposed are not heavy enough, and I believe that will be found to be the weak spot in this Act. Fraudulent manufacturers should be fined sufficient to pay for the operation of all the machinery for carrying out the law.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The Bill proposes to protect farmers without any cost to them whatever. The manufacturer pays $2 for registration and an annual license fee of $5 for selling, and as we do not analyse for the manufacturer under this Bill we do not charge; he has got to do the analysing himself.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose he puts a sample on the market that is not up to the standard, what protection is there for the farmer? The farmer who buys a small quantity is not going to pay $5 and send the sample down to Ottawa to be analysed.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is the duty of the department to collect samples of every fertilizer on the market and to analyse the same to know whether the manufacturer is living up to his own guaranteed analysis. We do not debar persons from collecting samples and sending them in, but in that case we propose a fee of $5.

Mr. SPROULE. It would shut them off.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It would deter many, but if a farmer or other person buys a large quantity of fertilizer and has reason to think that it is not up to the standard, a fee of $5 is not prohibitive.

Mr. BARR. Would it not be fairer if, in case a farmer sends in a sample and it it is proven that it is not up to the guarantee, the manufacturer and not the farmer should pay the fee?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. In the case of a prosecution of a manufacturer by an officer of the department, or by a private individual, as the result of an analysis made by the department, there is a penalty of $50 provided under clause 15.

Mr. BARR. But it would be fairer that the farmer should not be called upon to pay the fee if the article is not up to the standard.

Mr TEMPLEMAN. It might be. I do not think that, under this Bill, there will be many prosecutions by private individuals. Nor do I think there will be many analyses made at the request of individuals. There are only two or three hundred fertilizers all told on the market. It would not be difficult for the department to analyse one or two samples of each kind every year and publish the result.

Mr. BARR. How will the work of the inspection be carried on?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Under the Adulteration of Food Act there are fifteen or sixteen inspectors. As I said a moment ago, that word 'inspector' is a misnomer. These men are officers of the department with other duties to perform. When instructed they purchase samples of food and divide each sample into two, sending one part to Ottawa and leaving the other with the vendor. The vendor knows that the sample is to be analysed, and if it is not up to the requirements he is liable to be prosecuted. One inspector or purchaser of samples of fertilizers could in one week collect samples of all the fertilizers sold in Ontario.

Mr. BARR. The danger is that manufacturers may be sending out to retail dealers all over the province stuff that is not up to the standard, but the inspector inspects that which he finds in the factory.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. If the manufacturer sends out fertilizer not up to the standard, he is liable to punishment.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The minister will see that there is a clause applying to fertilizers made to order and not intended for sale.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Of course.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The only person this law can get after is the manufacturer. And it is provided that the sample must be taken 'in the presence of the manufacturer or his agent.' Why not make the vendor responsible, as well as the manufacturer? If you do that, the vendor will see to it that he is getting the right article in the first place. As the hon. member for Dufferin (Mr. Barr) suggests, suppose there is dishonesty or collusion between the manufacturer and the retailer there is nothing to prevent the manufacturer making an arrangement under which he could give out a fraudulent fertilizer. After the fertilizer has left the manufacturer's hands and gone into that of the dealer, there is no machinery in the Act to provide for the prosecution of either the manufacturer or the dealer.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Every fertilizer is sold under a registered number, and that carries back to the manufacturer, who is the party who ought to be prosecuted. My hon. friend spoke of making the vendor liable. Under the Adulteration of Foods Act, one of the difficulties is that the innocent dealer is held liable for the adulteration of the manufacturer in many cases. I appeal to the House that the guilty party is the manufacturer rather than the innocent seller?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. But how do you catch him? Suppose he is an American manufacturer?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Under section 4, every foreign manufacturer has to appoint a resident agent in Canada who, for all the purposes of this law, is regarded as a manufacturer.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. But the minister will notice that the sample must be taken 'in the presence of the manufacturer or his agent.' How can a farmer go into the factory and take a sample of the fertilizer in the presence of the manufacturer or his agent? If you were to say that the registration number is prima facie evidence that the article was made by the manufacturer represented by that number, and if the vendor proved that he purchased it from the manufacturer, he should be free, you could follow it up on that line. But you bar out everything of this kind by providing that the samples must be taken in the presence of the manufacturer or his agent.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I have here an amendment which I shall propose that samples must be taken 'in the presence of the vendor or his agent.'

Mr. WRIGHT. Suppose the manufacturer in Toronto turns out these goods, sells them to a wholesale dealer in Winnipeg, who sells them to a retailer in Calgary, through whom they finally find their way into the hands of a farmer in that section of the country. In case of a violation of this law in the case of those goods, where would the trial take place? If the manufacturer is to be prosecuted, do you propose to go out to the place where the purchaser lives to collect your evidence? I am afraid there will be a great deal of difficulty in enforcing this law.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Because the prosecution in that case should be of the manufacturer.

Mr. WRIGHT. At Toronto?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. At Toronto, and the material evidence is found in the city of Ottawa by the analyst who makes the analysis and proves that it is not up to the standard. The inspector who makes the purchase would be a material witness in a case of that kind. This Bill throws the onus on the manufacturer to live up to his guaranteed analysis.

Mr. WRIGHT. How would you get your evidence to substantiate the fact that the farmer purchased the identical goods and that he sent the identical goods down to your department for analysis? You would have to bring the retailer, the wholesaler and the farmer down to enable you to produce your evidence.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Not at all.

Mr. LENNOX. What section is it that throws the liability on the manufacturer?

Mr TEMPLEMAN. Section 15.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not read it in that way.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN (reading):

> Every person who sells or offers or exposes for sale——

That certainly includes the manufacturer.

Mr. LENNOX. That is not what the minister said I understood him correctly. I would not take that to mean what the minister said a moment ago. I do not know what the minister's aim is. I understood the minister to say that the object of this Bill was to throw the liability upon the manufacturer. Section 15 provides that:

> Every person who sells or offers or exposes for sale——

That is not limited to the manufacturer, or the first purchaser or the second purchaser or any intermediate purchaser. It applies to every purchaser who happens to sell this article, from the manufacturer down to the last retail dealer. Would not that be the case? Is that what the minister intends?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes, the intention is to make the manufacturer liable if his guaranteed analysis as printed on the label is not lived up to.

Mr. LENNOX. That is quite true. I understand that part of it.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Every sample of fertilizer is sold under a number, it is registered, the manufacturer's name is on it, his guaranteed analysis is on the label and if it does not comply with the guaranteed analysis he may be prosecuted under section 15. If it is not clear that section 15 refers to the manufacturer, then we will make it so because that is the intention.

Mr. LENNOX. While I think it is quite clear that it does include the manufacturer, I think it is also quite clear that it includes everybody else who sells the fertilizer. If the minister does not intend to include any one but the manufacturer I think an amendment would be necessary. It certainly does include the manufacturer but it includes a great many others as well.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not know that we should confine it absolutely to the manufacturer. It may be that after it leaves the manufacturer and passes through two or three hands some person may manipulate the goods.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you not think that a heavier penalty should be inflicted upon the manufacturer for selling, because he knows what he puts into it, than upon some innocent purchaser who bought it on the strength of the tag attached to it and who believed it to contain the full percentage.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I want to move an amendment to paragraph (d) of section 2, being the definition of the word 'agent.' I am afraid that the definition as printed is too general. I propose to substitute the following.

Agent means any person whose name has been filed with the department as provided by section 4 of this Act.

An agent under this Act means the representative of a foreign manufacturer and not a retail merchant who may be selling fertilizers.

Mr. SPROULE. Why do you say 'foreign' manufacturer?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. He must have an agent in Canada to represent him.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, but there are a lot of fertilizers being manufactured in Canada. For instance, there is the production of phosphate and almost every slaughter house is manufacturing fertilizers.

Mr. SEXSMITH. In case a farmer, or any one purchasing a fertilizer, has good reason to believe that the article he has purchased from the manufacturer is not up to the standard as designated by the tag, if he notifies the inspector, giving his reasons, would it not be the duty of the inspector to come and take samples?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Unquestionably, and if any farmer has reason to think that any fertilizer is not up to the analysis he can notify the inspector or, better still, notify the department in Ottawa which would instruct the inspector to secure samples of that particular fertilizer. It is important that the inspector, or whoever purchases, must do it in such a way that he can give evidence in court that the specimen he bought was a specimen of the particular fertilizer and the specimen that he sent to Ottawa to be analysed and then our analyst proves in court that it is not up to the standard.

Mr. SPROULE. If the sample were taken under such circumstances by the inspector would you still charge the farmer $5 for analysis?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No. The $5 fee imposed by this Act is more to guard against the department being flooded with requests for analyses that are really unnecessary than anything else. We will analyse all the samples that are necessary if no person sends them in, but still we want to leave it open to any person to send in a sample if he wishes. The department has been flooded with requests for work of this kind. We do a great deal of analytical work in the laboratory and it is necessary to put a check upon it in some way. It is not necessary in this Act that we should make a free analysis of all the fertilizers.

Mr. HENDERSON. A farmer has to pay $5 for an analysis, but what is going to arouse his attention to the fact that a certain fertilizer is not up to standard? How is he to determine whether there is anything wrong with it or not?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. He ought to have some reason for sending in a sample to be analysed. What is going to arouse his attention, I do not know, unless he has used it for several years with poor results.

Mr. HENDERSON. There will be no use then in throwing away $5 to have it analysed. He would simply not buy any more of it.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The Act supposes that every fertilizer put on the market must be analysed by the department and the result printed in a bulletin, and the farmer will know from this analysis, whether the particular fertilizer he has bought is up to the standard or not.

Mr. HENDERSON. When a man buys a box or sack of a certain fertilizer, it is impossible for him to tell whether it is up to the standard or not, and I fail to see how he is to get the information which will enable him to do so.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR I think the present Bill better than the old one, because the manufacturer under the old one, could send a sample to the department and have it analysed and a bulletin issued showing that it was manufactured up to such a brand.

Then he might manufacture an adulterated article and put it on the market. Of course, he can do that now but is liable to be caught, because the department will be likely to analyse it.

Mr. MARSHALL. Would not the sample to be analysed be similar to the samples of the jellies and jams?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It will be sampled the same way.

Mr. MARSHALL. The department is collecting these every day, and I do not think there will be any difficulty in that respect. Would it be possible to raise the standard of fertilizers that are manufactured and make them come up to a standard fixed by the department?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We do not attempt to fix any standard. The manufacturer himself fixes the standard by printed analysis. I am also advised it would be very difficult to fix a standard for any particular fertilizer. There would have to be scores of standards according to the different characters of the different soils. A certain soil might require a fertilizer containing more nitrogen or more phosphoric acid and so on. We require that the manufacturer shall state distinctly what constituents are in his fertilizer and he must live up to that standard, and the purchaser judges whether the particular number is the quality he wants. The standard is created by the manufacturer and all we do is to compel him to live up to his own standard.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The discussion is too general. The Bill should be taken clause by clause. Section 2 is now under consideration, and there is an amendment moved to subsection (d) providing that the words 'not a manufacturer who sells or offers for sale any fertilizer' be struck out, and in its stead the following inserted:

Agent means any person whose name has been filed with the minister as provided by section 4 of the Act.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Should we not define the word 'vendor'?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not think the word 'vendor' need be defined at all. The word 'agent' refers solely to a person appointed by a foreign manufacturer to represent him in Canada.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. In the Bill as printed the word 'agent' meant vendor. Is that intended?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Then, under schedule B, there will be no method by which we can attack the seller.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We are going to change schedule B.

Section 2 as amended, agreed to.

Mr. G. TAYLOR.

On section 3,

Fertilizers shall be considered as distinct brands, when differing either in guaranteed compositions, trade mark, name or in any other characteristic method of marking.

Mr. SEXSMITH. We have been discussing whether a certain standard could not be devised. I think it would not be wise to have a standard set because any manufacturer can describe the standard on the back of the package, and according to the quality the price will be fixed. I would be perfectly satisfied with that.

On section 4,—Name of Foreign Manufacturer's Agent or Representative in Canada to be filed with the minister.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What is to prevent the manufacturer from putting up a man of straw as his agent?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is hardly probable that a large manufacturer would put up a man of straw as his agent, considering that he has to register every year and get his license to sell. He might do it once, but he could not do it a second time, because he could not get his license to sell in Canada again.

Mr. LENNOX. In some subsequent part of the Bill is there provision for prosecuting the agent instead of the foreign manufacturer?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The object of section 4 is to require the foreign manufacturer to name an agent in Canada who registers and who can be proceeded against, I assume, as the representative of the foreign manufacturers.

Mr. LENNOX. I would not like to 'assume' about it, but I would like to know from the minister if there is provision in the law for reaching the agent. I have not paid very close attention to the measure, but I have not seen any provision under which we can reach the agent in that way.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I inferred that the agent of the foreign manufacturer could be proceeded against. If it should appear, when we have gone through the Bill that that is not the case, we can make an amendment. The object of having an agent appointed is to have the representative of the manufacturer where he can be reached.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not wish to embarrass the minister, but he will understand that we cannot leave a matter of this kind to mere probability. I do not know of anything in the Bill to enable us to deal with the agent. Section 15 provides that the person who offers or exposes for sale may be prosecuted. Unless under that clause, I do not see any way in which we can deal with the agent. Will that cover it?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think so. Under section 2, 'guaranteed analysis' means the valuation of a fertilizer by a manufacturer or agent in terms of its content of phosphoric acid, nitrogen and potash. It seems to me that the agent would be liable to prosecution as the representative of the foreign manufacturer who gave this 'guaranteed analysis.' However, that is a legal point on which I would not care to be too positive. We can make the point clearer if necessary.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. We all know that frauds are being perpetrated on the farmers right along in these fertilizers, and that is the reason why this Bill is before us. Suppose that a bunch of these fraudulent dealers in fertilizers in the United States get together and call themselves the Diamond Fertilizing Company. They send a sample of their brand to Canada, and it is analysed by the department and proved of high value. A man from Buffalo or from Chicago, perhaps unknown to fame, is appointed to act as agent, and establishes himself in an office that is not too conspicuous. With the certificate of analysis given by the department, the representatives of this brand go all over the country and sell large quantities, because they have a certificate, and because they are underselling the dealers here. All the material sold comes into Canada within a week. After ten days or two weeks an analysis is incidentally made with a sample taken by the inspector. But by this time the machinery of the department is put in motion, the 'agent' is out of the country and all the small storekeepers and dealers are left loaded up with worthless fertilizers. Then, the same gang get together again to put out, let us say the 'lightning' brand, and puts it through the same process. These methods have been carried on in other lines of business, and even manufacturers have been swindled in this way. This is done, for instance, with a brand of steel. This material is sold all over the country, perhaps at fifty cents a pound, and when the man gets his five or ten or twenty pounds, he finds that it is not better than wrought iron. But what I would suggest is that any foreign company appointing an agent in this country should be called upon to deposit with the Inland Revenue Department at least $500 as a guarantee of good faith, so that if they turn out to be a fraud you will have something.

Mr. BEATTIE. I should think the common law would cover that. In any case, a manufacturer would hardly appoint an agent for the purpose of defrauding decent people. Certainly such a thing is unknown in my experience in business.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. member (Mr. Beattie) knows very well that fully 50 per cent of the goods sold in the United States by manufacturers, so-called, are not manufactured by these people. The goods of Smith, Jones & Robinson, 'manufacturers,' may be all made in the same place.

Mr. BEATTIE. That is a different thing. But the manufacturer who sends out a brand of goods expects to continue in the business and he would not spoil his reputation for the sake of selling a few hundred dozen.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. This Bill is designed to prevent a specific kind of fraud, fraud that has been committed on the farmers so often and so widely that the government deems it necessary to pass special legislation on the subject. As to nine-tenths of these brands of fertilizers, there is not even an office at the headquarters of the so-called factory.

Mr. BEATTIE. But it would ruin the manufacturer's business to send out an inferior article. If I were a manufacturer I certainly would not send out a spurious article if I intended to remain in business.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. I think the difficulty could be met if the minister would adopt the suggestion of my hon. friend from North Simcoe, and make the agent subject to all the pains and penalties of a defaulting foreign manufacturer. If the agent is subject to these liabilities, he will stand between the manufacturer and the public, he is a guarantee and protection to the public.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. Another thing the minister might do is not to license or appoint an agent unless he is a responsible man.

Mr. SPROULE. Here is where I see a difficulty. An agent sells goods in wholesale lots to a druggist, the druggist sells to a farmer, and the farmer finds that he has a lot on hand that is not up to the standard. Now how is he going to get redress? According to Schedule B, samples for analysis must be taken in the presence of the manufacturer or his agent; but the seller is not the manufacturer's agent.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We are going to change that to vendor.

On section 6—Application for registration number.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you mean by 'guaranteed analysis'?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Guaranteed analysis means the valuation of a fertilizer by the manufacturer or agent in terms of its content of phosphoric acid, nitrogen, and potash. These are the three ingredients which I understand, compose the fertilizer. I understand these include all the essential chemical combinations.

Mr. SPROULE. Your old Act provides that the samples shall contain so much ammonia, and so much phosphoric acid, and some have a combination of the two. Which one are you going to take as the standard? Because many of these fertilizers contain two ingredients in the same sample.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The manufacturer will state that on his label.

On section 7—Registration number, how affixed. Statement required.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I propose to strike out the word 'importer' so that we will deal only with the manufacturer or agent.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Again I wish to call the attention of the minister to this matter of agency. Does the minister presume to think that nobody will import a fertilizer into this country except through an agent? There is nothing to prevent me importing a fertilizer from the United States or Europe for any purpose, and selling it here, and no law will compel me to have a registered agent.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We are passing that very law now.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I wish to impress upon the minister the importance of this agency. There is no use in having anybody appointed agent unless you have somebody responsible. I would suggest that when a foreign manufactured article of this description is brought into the country to be sold under guarantee, there should be a deposit made of a sum of money with the government, so that in case of default there would be something that you could lay your hand upon.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I would not care to impose conditions that would be too onerous. I think my hon. friend is too much afraid that a man of straw may be appointed an agent. I am disposed to think that any reputable manufacturer would appoint an agent of some repute, and there is little fear that the department will have to deal with that agent. We might not recognize him if we thought he was a man of straw. I agree that if you were to require a deposit of $500 or $100 from a manufacturer, his bona fides would be better established. But it might be that in imposing restrictions we would hamper trade when it was not necessary to do so.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I am not desirous of imposing onerous conditions. This Bill is intended to deal with reputable manufacturers, it is intended to meet a condition which has existed in this country to a large extent, not only in relation to fertilizers, but to nursery stock and other matters of that kind. For instance lawn shrubs are sold all over this country as nursery stock from the Aurora Borealis Nursery of Syracuse, or some other high sounding names. It has turned out that people have found themselves with this stock on hand and could not get satisfaction. The minister will recognize that if there was a bona fide guarantee required the company desirous of obtaining a market here for its brand of fertilizer would willingly pay a deposit as I have suggested, whilst if it was a fraudulent concern that desired to do business, they would hesitate. When you ask a company, before they do business in this country, to appoint an agent, then you must specify that that agent must be an attorney, acting in a position of trust.

Mr. S. SHARPE. If the agent was required to be resident in Canada and acceptable to the government it would meet the objection of my hon. friend (Mr. J. A. Currie).

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am willing to amend it in that way.

Section 7, as amended, agreed to.

On section 4,

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I would move to add after the word 'agents' 'acceptable to the minister and resident in Canada.'

Mr. SPROULE. Supposing the agent is a travelling saleman, perhaps selling drugs, who carries this as a side line, a perfectly respectable man, but not a man of financial standing, would he be considered acceptable?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. If he was a respectable man, well known in the community and vouched for, I think he would be.

Mr. SPROULE. But such a man might have sold $200,000 worth of fertilizer and might then leave the country. You only impose a fine and what could be done if you could not collect the fine?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Then we would lose. It is of course impossible to so regulate the sale of fertilizers or anything else that some man cannot circumvent the law.

Mr. BEATTIE. I think the discussion has taken a very wide scope. I do not think that any responsibility rests on the agent; the whole responsibility in practice falls on the merchant. As a merchant I go to the United States or to England and buy what I consider a good fertilizer. When I bring that to Canada and sell it to my patrons I am responsible for that brand. It is very unlikely that a manufacturer will send an agent here to sell his product; the man who imports direct is more likely to buy direct from the manufacturer so as to get the article at a lower price. I think the man importing is more reliable than the agent. If he sells a fraudulent fertilizer this year, where will he be next year? I am rather astonished that hon. gentlemen think manufacturers will commit frauds. That has not been my experience; I have very seldom been caught by an agent. I have generally dealt with houses that when a complaint was made to them would rectify it.

Mr. BARR. Evidently the hon. gentleman is not a farmer or he would know that very large quantities of useless fertilizers are brought from the United States and sold to the farmers. There is great danger that an agent may be a man of straw. I am inclined to think the amendment will be an improvement, and will be some protection to the farmers against fraud of this kind. It is necessary to watch carefully the fertilizers which come from the United States.

Mr. BEATTIE. If the hon. gentleman thinks a manufacturer is going to make an article that will only last one season, his argument is good. But if the manufacturer expects to remain in business for years to come he will not put a fraudulent article on the market. That is my experience, and I do not think the manufacturers as a rule go into business to sell an article which is a fraud on the public. I am sorry to think that we have a class of people in this country or the United States who will sell articles not up to the standard represented.

Mr. BURRELL. I would suggest that some such method be adopted as we adopt in British Columbia in reference to the agents of United States nursery men. In order to protect the purchaser who may not be able to get a remedy against the producer in the United States the agent has to put up a $2,000 bond, and if anything goes wrong there is a direct recourse against the agent.

Mr. S. SHARPE. In default of paying the money penalty I suppose there will be a term of imprisonment provided ? In that case the agent will see that the fine is paid and the brands kept up to grade.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. If we insert the words that the agent must be acceptable to the minister it means that the minister will be responsible for the action of the agent, and if the agent is guilty of fraud the minister would have to take the responsibility.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I will take it.

Mr. BEATTIE. Suppose I should go to the United States or to England and buy a brand of fertilizer from a manufacturer who has no agent in Canada, who would be responsible then? If I should prefer a certain brand of fertilizer the manufacturer of which was not represented by an agent here, I do not see why I should be prevented from buying it. Dealers do not always want to buy the same brand that everybody on the street keeps; they want if possible to sell an article that their competitors have not got.

Mr. S. SHARPE. The hon. gentleman from London (Mr. Beattie) has suggested a difficulty. Suppose a resident dealer goes to the United States and purchases goods and imports them himself, who is to be responsible?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. He cannot purchase them for sale unless there is a resident agent in Canada.

Mr. S. SHARPE. But he may become the agent as well as the importer.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. If the importer brings it into Canada he is the agent.

On section 10,

Mr. S. SHARPE. Do I understand the minister to say that the actual cost of the analysis will be $7?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. During past years it has cost $7 for each analysis of fertilizer.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I suppose you have an official in the department to do that work?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes, quite a number.

Mr. S. SHARPE. It seems a large fee.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is, but I am advised by the chief analyst that it costs the department more to make an analysis of fertilizers than of ordinary food stuffs.

On section 12,

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not see that it is anybody's business to prosecute under this Act, and there does not seem to be any machinery provided for a prosecution. The report of the department, issued a couple of days ago, contains a list of a large number of samples of coffee and other articles that were found to be adulterated, but there is no machinery under the Act for punishing the people guilty of manufacturing and selling these adulterated articles. I think there should be a clause added that the inspector, if he finds the article adulterated, shall proceed against the party who is responsible under the Act. This would throw the onus on the inspector. At all events, it will then be somebody's duty to institute a prosecution.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not think that would be feasible. It would be the duty of the minister to prosecute, just as it is the duty of the minister now, under the Adulteration of Foods Act, to prosecute. The knowledge of the fact that the guaranteed analysis has been violated by the manufacturer is not possessed by the inspector. The chief witness will be the chief analyst in Ottawa, who makes the analysis.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. You provide that his certificate shall be taken as evidence, do you not?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes. Prosecutions, under the Adulteration of Foods Act, are by the Justice Department under instructions of the Inland Revenue Department. As a matter of fact, the number of prosecutions under that Act has not been as numerous probably as it ought to have been, for a good reason indeed. We have no food standard as yet. We have failed in some prosecutions because we had no standard. The question of fixing the standard for all food products in Canada has been engaging the attention of the department for the last year or two. It is a work of considerable magnitude to formulate a standard for all food products. At the present time the officers have the standard pretty well prepared, and we hope to put it in force by order in council under the Adulteration of Foods Act before long.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you got another difficulty under the Act? Formerly it was provided that you had to comply with certain provisions of the law, but as the result of an amendment made to the Inland Revenue Act some years ago I understand you could not prove your case. Therefore, prosecutions were practically dropped. This matter was brought to my attention by a prominent lawyer, and I remember discussing it in this House at some length while it was under consideration. The contention of the department was that there was nothing in it whatever, but afterwards it was frankly admitted, I think, by the minister at the head of the department, that prosecutions could not succeed because of this difficulty.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is true that prosecutions have failed because of the fact that we have no standard. One case in particular was with respect to maple sugar or maple syrup.

Mr. SPROULE. I think there were more than that.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We have had a great many analyses. We have had prosecutions, some of which succeeded and some did not. But the penalty, under the Adulteration of Foods Act, to the party adulterating, has been almost wholly from the publicity which is given to the publications of the bulletins. We are going to try to establish a standard under the Adulteration of Foods Act. We are specifying the standard in this Act. The standard is what the manufacturer says the article is.

Mr. SPROULE. You had a standard under the old Act for fertilizers. They shall not contain less than four per cent.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That was quite an impracticable standard, I am advised by my chief analyst.

Mr. SPROULE. Was not the effect this, that the law provided that certain evidence shall be admissible? That was the evidence of a certain analyst, I do not know whether the chief analyst or not. That law was changed so as to enable the minister to select analysts all over, but when the certificate of any such inspector was taken into court it could not be accepted as evidence, because the Act provided that only the certificate of another analyst could be accepted, and that other analyst had never analysed the sample.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would suggest that this amendment be added to clause 12:

All inspectors of fertilizers shall, whenever so instructed by the minister, obtain for analysis a sample of every fertilizer for sale in the district for which he is inspector, and shall forthwith lay the information and prosecute, in the event of the provisions of this Act not having been complied with.

The minister says that the chief analyst is the man who should prosecute. I wish to take issue with him. I know it is very difficult to get any authority away from the central department at Ottawa, but, as a matter of fact, the man who takes the sample from the parcel and sends it to the department in a registered letter, where it is analysed and a certificate given, is the man who should lay the information before a magistrate in his district. It is not the high court, I think, which deals with the matter. I make this suggestion because, under Acts of a similar character, for instance the Ontario License Act, the inspectors are the parties who prosecute and not the government. It is the duty of the officers, who are appointed to see that the law is carried out, to lay an information before a magistrate if they find that the law is broken.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am afraid this would be delegating to officials of the government the authority to enter prosecutions.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. That is right.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. But all prosecutions are entered by the Justice Department. Speaking for the Inland Revenue Department, I am certain of that.

Mr. SPROULE. What about the Customs?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am not sure.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Take the Marine Department; when there is a breach of the Marine Law, the inspector of hulls may seize the vessel and prosecute the party.

Mr. BURRELL. Under the Fruit Marks Act, the local inspector has authority to lay the information.

Mr. CONMEE. It is always objectionable to make an inspector a prosecuting officer as well. There is a great difference between the customs officials and those under this Act. And the customs officers do not in all cases prosecute. They report to the department and get instructions. They cannot put the law in motion of their own free will. The hon. gentleman is mistaken about the license inspectors under the provincial law. They are not prosecuting officers or detectives in the sense he assumes. If a complaint is put into their hands they can act on it; in ordinary cases they act when they get their instructions.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose an inland revenue inspector finds an illicit still?

Mr. CONMEE. If he is instructed to take action he does so; but an inland revenue officer, under provisions which might justify action regarding an illicit sale or manufacture of liquors, would be in a very different position from an officer under this Act taking the law into his own hands of his own sweet will. The people do not want to be dragooned in that way. It is bad legislation, and I do not think any member should propose it.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No doubt the officers of the Inland Revenue Department make seizures in the case of illicit distillation or for any infringement of the excise law, but every prosecution is made through the Justice Department.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I quite agree with the hon. minister, but the point I wish to make is this: somebody must lay the information, and the party who lays it is invariably the inspector. As regards the customs officers, the Customs Department is supreme in itself. There has been a clause in the Customs Act from time immemorial under which the Customs Department can seize an article and confiscate it and fine the guilty party. That department is above the Justice Department in that respect. Various attempts have been made in England to change that clause, but parliament would never grant authority to narrow down the powers of the Customs Department in that respect. An officer of the Inland Revenue Department can seize an article, and the department can impose a fine, and does not even have to take him before a magistrate.

Mr. CONMEE. Where does the hon. gentleman get that information?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The Inland Revenue Department does impose certain conditions. If the party who has tried to defraud the revenue is willing to pay into the treasury a certain sum, he has the power to do so, but if he thinks that the department is trying to impose too onerous conditions, he can allow the matter to go to court, and then he is prosecuted by the Justice Department. If the department imposes a certain fine, he has the right to refuse to pay and to have his case heard in court.

Mr. SEXSMITH. One of the most satisfactory inspectorships we have in the province of Ontario is that of milk inspectors. They have power to inspect factories and to prosecute offenders. I do not think there has ever been an inspector in that province that has done so much good and has given the people so much satisfaction. But they are not responsible to the minister, nor to the government, nor to anybody, but their duties are defined by an Act of the legislature, and they are doing very effective work.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. There must be somebody responsible to authorize the officer to proceed.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That somebody more responsible than the inspector is the Minister of Inland Revenue. The enforcement of the law is in the hands of the Minister of Inland Revenue.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I would like to see this Bill made workable. Let the minister suggest an amendment himself that would relieve him of responsibility. I think that if there were a great many requests coming in for prosecution, the minister would not feel so favourable to handing out his authorization. But if some inspector had the authority, it would relieve the minister, and the Act could be better enforced.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I have no objection to an amendment, say: 'And shall prosecute the offender whenever instructed by the minister to do so.'

Mr. CONMEE. I do not think that would make the law workable. What would be the result of that? The inspector knows that he has to make a report to the minister, that entails delay. Then he has to get instructions. Why, the whole position might be changed in the meantime, he might not be able to find the parties, and the whole conditions might be changed from what they were.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Where is the objection to empowering the inspector to prosecute under certain restrictions? If we pass an Act without providing any machinery to carry it out, what good will it do? There will have to be so many preliminaries before prosecutions can be undertaken that the manufacturers will not fear the Act much. But if there is an inspector appointed, like the milk inspector in the province of Ontario, with power to prosecute for violations, I think the law would be much more workable.

Mr. CONMEE. There is great objection to giving power to a single individual to become a prosecuting officer on his own discretion. Such laws as that are of pretty ancient date, they have gone out of existence.

Mr. S. SHARPE. The liquor license inspectors have such power.

Mr. CONMEE. He can only prosecute under certain conditions. In the great majority of cases he makes his report to the government, and he is instructed to act. He has no more authority than a policeman, and a policeman can act in certain minor cases if he see the law being broken, but otherwise he has to get authority from a magistrate to act under certain conditions. So it is with the license inspectors.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong as regards the province of Ontario. I know a case in my own county where the inspector goes to the hotel, and finding liquor there contrary to law, he seeks a magistrate, lays information and then proceeds with the charge.

Mr. CONMEE. This motion is to compel an officer to be prosecuting official. He has no choice, he would have no discretion in the matter.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The word is 'may' not 'shall.' It is not obligatory upon him.

Mr. CONMEE. Where the word 'may' is used that means 'shall' in the law.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Under the Ontario Act no man other than the inspector has any thing to do with prosecutions. He lays the complaint and he prosecutes. I have been director of a cheese factory for many years, and I know how these cases are conducted. Under certain conditions the inspector is allowed to go on and prosecute, even without any preliminaries. In the present Act I would not put in a clause compelling him to go on, but I would provide that he shall have power to go on.

Mr. BEATTIE. The milk inspector is an officer of the public health, and these officers have very wide powers. But a license inspector would not prosecute without referring the matter to his license board.

Mr. SEXSMITH. It is done every week in the year.

Mr. BEATTIE. No. I have had some experience in this matter, and no license inspector would take action without reference to his commissioners.

Mr. SEXSMITH.

Mr. SPROULE. I have seen it done more than once. The inspector goes into a place, finds a hotel violating the law, gives information, and lodges a complaint within two hours.

Mr. BEATTIE. That is not my experience.

Mr. SPROULE. The methods in the small places and in the cities are evidently different.

Mr. CONMEE. I understood the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie) to say that there are certain officers in the province of Ontario empowered to impose a fine without going to a magistrate. Is that what the hon. gentleman said?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. No. The idea is to have somebody charged with the duty of conducting these prosecutions. If a farmer feels that he has been defrauded in a purchase of fertilizers, and, when he asks that a sample be taken and analysed, it is found that the material is wrong, the farmer who was the means of making known the case should not be called upon to lay the information against the storekeeper; outside officers should do that. I think the amendment proposed by the minister is acceptable.

Mr. CONMEE. If I understood the amendment, I object to it also.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My hon. friend wants to give the inspectors power to prosecute, and I suggested that it should be under instructions by the minister. But, the amendment in that form would mean nothing, because in the case of a prosecution under this Act, the prosecutor is the minister, or the official of the department under the minister, which is the same thing. We may require our inspectors under the Adulteration of Food Act or under this Act to prosecute offenders through the Justice Department,—all our legal business is done through the Justice Department.

On section 15—penalties—proviso as to evidence of fraudulent intent.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister intend to leave this only a money penalty? Is there to be no penalty in case of failure to pay the fine?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I should think the money penalty would be sufficient. However, I am in the judgment of the House on that matter.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Make it read that in default of payment of the fine the party should be imprisoned.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am not averse to that if hon. members think it necessary.

Mr. SPROULE. The person prosecuted may be a man of straw, and it is better that there should be something more than a money penalty.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I move that after the words 'penalty not exceeding one hundred dollars' the following words be added: 'and in default of payment of such fine to a term of imprisonment to one month in the common jail of the county or district where the prosection is laid.'

Mr. CONGDON. It is unnecessary to specify the place of imprisonment; that is provided for in the General Act.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Very well, leave that out.

Mr. SPROULE. It should be 'thirty days,' as 'one month' is not a definite time.

Mr. CONGDON. There should be a discretion in the magistrate. It should read 'not exceeding 30 days.'

Amendment agreed to.

On schedule (a). Provisions for taking samples, analysis, &c.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I object to the very high price placed on that analysis, $5.

Mr. S. SHARPE. The resident agent is not made liable to the penalties under the Act. I would suggest a substantive clause making the resident agent of the foreign manufacturer liable for a breach of the Act.

Mr. CONMEE. Did the minister accept the suggestion of the reduction in the amount of the fee? I agree with the hon. member in that respect.

Mr. FISHER. I would suggest to my hon. friend (Mr. S. Sharpe) that it would be better to make clause 4 at line 25 read:

And such agent shall be subject to the same penalties and have the same responsibility as a manufacturer under the terms of this Act.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister said that any one who offered the article for sale would by that act become an agent, the vendor would become an agent.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I would think that in clause 15 'every person' includes the manufacturer and agent.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Under that provision the corner grocery man is responsible.

Mr. TALBOT. In the province of Quebec he would be responsible for the goods he sells.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Then the grocer will have to have an analysis of every sample he sells?

Mr. FISHER. I would like to have a lawyer's opinion as to whether the words in section 4 'for all purposes of this Act' would include the responsibility upon the agent.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I do not think you can makes a man responsible under the Code by inference.

Mr. FISHER. I think the words mean he would really take the place in Canada of a manufacturer.

Mr. LENNOX. It would be better to have it clear as it is a penalty clause.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We might pass the last schedule and leave the Bill in committee so that we can make that point clear.

Progress reported.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS.

House in committee on Bill (No. 90) to create the Department of External Affairs. —Mr. Murphy.

1. There shall be a department of the government of Canada to be called the Department of External Affairs, over which the Secretary of State for the time being shall preside.

Mr. CONGDON. The words 'for the time being' might be omitted.

Mr. MURPHY. That section is exactly the same as the similar sections in the other statutes creating departments.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There seems to be a great diversity in the language of the sections creating the different departments, and one would think it desirable to have them as uniform as possible.

Mr. MURPHY. I do not see how we can have uniformity without recasting the other statutes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The statute creating the department of Secretary of State uses these words:—'and the Secretary of State shall have the management and control of the department.' Was there any reason for omitting these words here.

Mr. MURPHY. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I wonder why the words were omitted, but it does not make much difference.

2. The Governor in Council may appoint an officer who shall be called the Under Secretary of State for External Affairs, and who shall be the deputy head of the department, and may also appoint such other officers and clerks as are requisite for the due administration of the business of the department, all of whom shall hold office during pleasure.

Mr. LENNOX. The section says that there shall be an under Secretary of State for External Affairs but there does not seem to be any Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. MURPHY. The position would be analogous to the Interior Department and the Department of Indian Affairs which are under one minister, and also the Labour Department and the Post Office Department which are in the same position.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken on Monday?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. After private Bills, and motions, and questions we shall go into Committee of Supply so as to give an opportunity to the member for North Toronto to bring up a certain matter of which he has given notice.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I have mentioned to the Prime Minister privately, the hour may be so far advanced that the hon. member for North Toronto would not think it desirable to bring on his motion that day. That will depend on circumstances. He is absent at present but as soon as he returns from Toronto I will ascertain from him his views and communicate with the Prime Minister.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 19, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

COLD STORAGE ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No.147) to amend the Cold Storage Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Please state the purport of the Bill.

Mr. FISHER. It makes a change of only one or two words, and is designed to enable the department to make better provision for the cold storage of fruit.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS TREATY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to inquire from the Prime Minister whether the government has yet come to a determination respecting its acceptance or non-acceptance of the rider or amendment to the Waterways Treaty proposed by the Senate of the United States; and if no decision has yet been arrived at, when we may expect some intimation as to what the determination of the government will be.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The government has come to no conclusion yet whether they will accept the treaty with the amendment that has been made by the Senate in its acceptance thereof. The matter is under consideration. I cannot say at present whether I will be in a position to give an early answer to my hon. friend.

CANADA LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE moved that the order for further consideration in Committee of the Whole of Bill (No. 56) respecting the Canada Life Assurance Company be discharged, and that the said Bill be referred back to the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders to inquire and report to this House what notice has been given to the public and to the policy-holders concerning said Bill. He said: I think the proper course to pursue would be to refer this Bill back to committee to inquire and report upon what notices have been given. On the 25th of March last, after reference to that committee, a report was made that two of the sections were within the terms of the published notice—the notice did not sufficiently indicate the nature of the powers to be granted under section 2,—and that the last two sections were not mentioned in the notice or in the petition, without recommending what course should be taken by the House. Since then, I am informed that these defects have been remedied by further notices.

Mr. HENDERSON. I did not understand from the promoter of the Bill that a notice has yet been given sufficiently long to enable the Standing Orders Committee to deal with the matter. I presume we will have to wait for at least ten days?

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. I understand that the last notice will be this week. I thought that this might as well be got out of the way, and the committee can regulate its meetings. By the time the committee will be convened, no doubt the last publication will have taken place.

Motion agreed to.

ONTARIO AND MICHIGAN POWER COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 34) to incorporate the Ontario and Michigan Power Company.—Mr. Conmee.

Mr. LENNOX. When this Bill was before us on the last occasion the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), I think, asked to have it stand inasmuch as the Minister of Railways and Canals was not present.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The Minister of Justice.

Mr. LENNOX. Possibly it was the Minister of Justice. I thought it was the Minister of Railways and Canals. I think it would probably facilitate the consideration of this Bill if the government would indicate what attitude they propose to take in reference to it. There is a good deal of feeling in reference to what should be done in this case and probably if there were a clear statement made as to the attitude which the government would take we could save time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are the amendments printed?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The Bill appears reprinted as amended and reported by the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I am authorized to speak for anybody but myself in reference to this measure; nor do I understand exactly what it is that the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) or any other hon. member of this House would desire from me in regard to this Bill. As far as the question of the power of this parliament to pass a measure of this sort is concerned, I do not suppose any one will have any question. I do not have any idea that in that respect, or upon what may be called the constitutional aspect of this question, I can say anything which will be an enlightenment, or will add in any way to the knowledge, of any hon. member of this House, whether or no that member happens to be of the legal profession or happens to be an ordinary business man. I think our constitution, the British North America Act, is very plain in its intention and in its expression of that intention in regard to the incorporation of companies. What are the provisions of that Act, that we are concerned about? I take it that they are, the distribution of legislative powers in regard to the incorporation of companies, the assigning to the provinces of the power to incorporate companies of a certain class and the assigning to the Domniion of a like power to incorporate companies of another class. I think it is reasonably clear, upon the language of the British North America Act, what the line of demarcation between the two jurisdictions was and is. The incorporation of a company by Act of Parliament, or by the issue of letters patent under the authority of some general Act, is simply the creation, by the proper authority in that behalf, of a new artifical, legal being with power to transact business of the character specified in the articles of incorporation. If here was but one legislative authority in Canada no question could arise. That legislative authority would have the power to create such an artificial, legal being for any and all legitimate purposes. But there being throughout Canada a dual legislative authority the British North America Act sought to define the limits of the authority with respect to the incorporation of companies which each of these legislative bodies had. Certain subjects are declared to be within the exclusive legislative power of the Dominion parliament. Certain other subjects are similarly declared to be within the exclusive legislative power of the provinces. No one would imagine—I have not heard any one suggest—that either of these legislative jurisdictions could encroach upon the authority of the other as to the class of subjects in regard to which or for the purposes of which companies may be incorporated. For instance, no one would suggest that the provincial legislature had any power to incorporate a company for the purpose of transacting business with regard to navigation or shipping, or with regard to banking or any of the other subjects which by the 91st section of the British North America Act are assigned to the legislative jurisdiction of parliament. In a similar way exactly no one would suggest that this parliament had power to incorporate a company whose business was limited to the purposes mentioned in the 92nd section as assigned exclusively to the control of the provinces. But the business which a company desires, when it comes into being, to carry on may be of a general character and may not deal exclusively with regard to banking, navigation, shipping, or any other subject which is assigned exclusively to the jurisdiction of the one parliament or the other, and accordingly there is another line of demarcation pointed out under the statute in the most distinct manner as the one that is to govern, and a boundary line laid down over which neither jurisdiction ought to step in the way of encroaching upon the authority of the other. That boundary line is very clearly and distinctly expressed. In the 91st section it is declared that the parliament of Canada has exclusive jurisdiction to legislate in regard to subjects which are, by the British North America Act itself, taken out of the jurisdiction of the provinces. We look at section 92 to find, with regard to companies, what those subjects are which are excluded from the jurisdiction of the provinces and we find in article 10, paragraph a, of the 92nd section, a provision that the provinces may legislate with regard to local works and undertakings other than such as are of the following classes. Then are mentioned works and undertakings extending beyond the limits of the province. So that, the constitution has very plainly stated that with regard to any work or undertaking which is to extend beyond the limits of the province, not the province, but the Dominion, has the exclusive power to legislate. With regard to the incorporation of companies that is a line of demarcation between the two jurisdictions which is certainly very clearly expressed in the statute and I think ought not to be difficult to follow. I am sorry to say that in practice it seems to have been difficult to adhere to that line of demarcation. In the three years during which I have had charge of the Department of Justice it has been an annual occurrence, and I think the same is true of the past, that legislation of different provincial legislatures has required to be noticed in which by special Act some company has been incorporated with the apparent intention that its business operations should not be limited to the province which had incorporated it. It has been and is not an uncommon thing to see in a special Act of a provincial legislature a provision with regard to a company that its head office is to be within the province, but that it is to have authority to establish offices and agencies at its pleasure outside the limits of the province. It has been a not infrequent thing that a railway company, for instance, would be incorporated by a provincial legislature with power to build its line of railway from some point in the province to a point mentioned upon the boundary line of the province, nothing being said as to what was to happen to the line of railway when it reached the boundary line, the inference plainly to be drawn being that it was to carry that line farther either into an adjoining province or across the international boundary and that the same company, or the same individuals under a separate incorporation elsewhere, were to carry on their works and undertakings beyond the limits of the province. Indeed so far has this practice gone in provincial legislation or in the operation of provincial general Acts that I am aware of at least one case where a company has been incorporated in one of our provinces with the exclusive and sole object of doing business in another province altogether, and I think that in the forty years of confederation the idea has grown up in the minds of business men, possibly in the minds of lawyers as well, and in the minds of our provincial legislatures, that the authority of the provinces, in the matter of incorporating companies, is practically, if not absolutely, co-equal with the authority of the Dominion parliament, and that a company once incorporated by a provincial legislature has the power, if it pleases, to do business at its will the wide world over. Lawyers frequently refer to the principle spoken of as the comity of nations, and it is argued that by the comity of nations, by the good fellowship or the neighbourliness of other jurisdictions, a company once incorporated by any competent jurisdiction anywhere in the world may transact its business at pleasure anywhere else on the face of the globe. While I think it of the utmost importance that this parliament should not overstep the limits which in the matter of incorporating companies, as in other matters, have been assigned to it by the British North America Act, it is of at least equal importance to the body politic that the provincial legislatures should not on their part overstep those limits either. But no question of course arises, so far as this measure is concerned, of the character I have been adverting to, where provinces for any reason have seen fit to incorporate companies and have conferred upon the companies so incorporated powers apparently to transact business beyond the limits of the province. That is a large question, about which lawyers might differ and it does not arise for consideration here.

The practical question for consideration upon this measure is whether or not this parliament ought to exercise the power, which in my humble submission it undoubtedly possesses, to constitute these gentlemen named in the Bill, and others who may associate themselves with them, a new legal being, entitled to do the business which this Bill sets out. This measure, in essence, proposes that a company shall be incorporated which shall have the power, as set out in section 8 of the Bill, to carry on, among other things, the business of manufacturing electricity or electric power, heat and light, and transmitting the same for use in any manner at any place in Canada and the United States. I think it goes without saying that no provincial legislature would have power to incorporate a company with the right to do the business defined in the Bill. I do not think any one would contend that a provincial legislature had that power. If any one does so contend, I can only say that it is entirely contrary to my opinion of what the British North America Act, in plain words, states. I think that under the British North America Act no provincial legislature has any power to incorporate a company whose works and undertakings are intended to extend beyond the limits of the province. No provincial legislature has the power to incorporate a railway company whose line is to be laid down in more than one province, nor any railway company or telegraph company or any other company of like character whose works and undertakings are intended to extend beyond and across the provincial boundary line. The works of this company, as stated on the face of the Bill, are proposed to be carried across the international boundary and into the United States. If that is so, it is from this parliament, and this parliament alone, that such a company can seek and obtain valid incorporation in Canada, and the question reduces itself, I submit, to a simple question of the propriety of this parliament taking the action which the supporters of this Bill desire. That is a question of policy in regard to which I do not suppose that my opinion is desired by anybody. I think that we ought, in considering a measure of this kind, unless there is some evidence to the contrary, to attribute honesty of intention to those who propose the legislation. If any number of men come to this parliament and declare that they wish to be incorporated for a certain legitimate business purpose, it is perfectly competent for any one who suspects the honesty of the statement which they make as to their business intentions to question that statement and to investigate and to demonstrate if it is possible that the statement is not made in good faith. But unless there is some evidence to the contrary, I think one ordinarily, in common business affairs, takes the statement of intention which any one makes to him in a matter of business as being correct. But, having regard to the stage which this Bill has reached, it would seem to me that this committee ought to consider that any question of the honesty of the intention of the promoters of this Bill had been disposed of by the committee which has considered this measure and reported it to the House. That was the place, when this measure was before the special committee to which it was referred, when inquiry into the bona fides of the applicants for incorporation could have readily been made. I do not know whether that inquiry was made or not, but I have no doubt that this Bill was not reported by the special committee which had it in charge without such questions being there discussed. The necessary inference from the action of the committee in reporting the Bill is that the committee was satisfied that this measure was being put forward in good faith, and that it was the honest intention of the promoters of the Bill to use their power to transmit their product across the international boundary for sale in the United States. Not many years ago there was a precisely similar enterprise at Niagara Falls, a company desiring incorporation for the purpose of manufacturing electric power upon Canadian soil, but with the intention to export that power to the United States to sell it to United States consumers. That company obtained its incorporation at the hands of this parliament; that company is doing business to-day under that incorporation; and the validity of that incorporation has been authoritatively passed upon by our Supreme Court in the course of litigation, declaring that this parliament had undoubted power to give the incorporation which that company obtained. That decision of the Supreme Court would undoubtedly settle any question, if there were such a question, of the power of this parliament to pass the Bill now under consideration; and giving credit as I do to the promoters of this Bill for honesty of intention, in stating that the powers which they wish and which they consider to be of vital consequence to their enterprise, should go the length of authorizing them to transmit their electric energy across the line into the United States, and that they should have power to construct and operate lines of telegraph and telephone along with their lines for the transmission of electric energy beyond the limits of the province, it seems to me that all questions fall to the ground as to whether or not this parliament has the power to pass the Bill which it is desired to enact, and as to whether or not this parliament is the proper place to which the promoters of this measure ought to come. With regard to the special provisions of the Bill, no doubt other considerations arise. I do not suppose at this stage of the discussion it is necessary or would be appropriate for me to go into the details of the measure. As to those details, opinions may differ. This House in its wisdom may not see fit, even though the Bill itself is passed, to grant the company all the powers which it asks here. That is a question simply of policy, upon which every member of the committee will make up his own mind and vote according to his views. I might mention one feature of the Bill which stares one in the face the moment he looks at it—the second section, which declares that the works authorized by this Act shall be for the general advantage of Canada. That is a declaration which no other body than this parliament has power to pronounce. It is a declaration which probably we all think has in the past been too freely made, a declaration which it would be well in the general interests of Canada should not be made unless clear reason was shown for it in any individual case. I must say, so far as my individual opinion goes, that I cannot see any reason on the face of this measure, or in considering its provisions and details, for making that declaration in this case. It would not seem to me to be the truth. I cannot see how this undertaking, which appears to be entirely local in its character, so far as its area of operation is concerned, can be truthfully said to be for the general advantage of Canada. It is no doubt for the advantage of all Canada in the same sense that any new undertaking or enterprise, no matter where in the Dominion it may be situate, is for the general advantage. But I cannot see anything special about the undertakings described in this measure which would make those undertakings any more for the general advantage of Canada than the establishment of any manufactory in any town or city between the Atlantic and the Pacific. It is primarily at any rate for the advantage of the immediate locality in which it exists, and it can only be, I think, in the most remote degree that these works can be said to be for the general advantage of the whole of Canada. I am not able to see, I must say, any advantage there is to anybody in making the declaration in question. Of course, we all know its effect. Once this parliament sees fit to declare that any undertaking, no matter what its character, is one for the general advantage of Canada, thenceforward this parliament, and this parliament alone, has power to legislate in regard to that undertaking. That undoubtedly is the jurisdiction which was conferred upon this parliament of Canada by the imperial parliament in the British North America Act. But the question whether or not in any given case we ought to make that declaration is for us to consider, and in my humble opinion is a question which we ought always to consider with the utmost care. This Bill proposes an undertaking which in my opinion this parliament alone has the power to sanction, because the proposition is to extend its operations beyond the limits of the country. If this parliament agrees in that view and passes this Bill without the declaration that the works are for the general advantage of Canada, the undertaking will remain one in regard to which this parliament and this parliament alone can legislate hereafter.

Mr. SPROULE. That only applies to one of the rivers. It does not apply to the Nipigon river, which is not a boundary river.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have not made my meaning clear to my hon. friend if he thinks my remarks do not apply to the Nipigon river. This Bill proposes, as I have pointed out, to incorporate a company to manufacture electric energy by water-power on the Pigeon river and on the Nipigon rlver, and the electric energy so manufactured, no matter whether on the Nipigon or on the Pigeon, this Bill proposes that the company shall have the power to transmit and sell for use at any place in the United States. There is no distinction, on the face of the Bill, between the power to be manufactured by the water of Pigeon river and that which is to be manufactured by the water of the Nipigon river. I speak without knowledge but my supposition is that the company do not intend to distinguish at all, in their operation, between the power manufactured at the one place and that manufactured at the other. The Nipigon is some 60 miles to the eastward of the cities of Port Arthur and Fort William, the Pigeon river is some 40 or 50 miles on the other side, and my supposition was that the corporators named in this Bill intend to manufacture electric power on both these rivers to supply any market there might be in Port Arthur and Fort William, which lie between, and to export the surplus power across the Pigeon river into the state of Minnesota or from the Nipigon river, through Lake Superior, across the international boundary, and to the discontinued mines of Isle Royale. I have seen it stated that one of the principal markets this company expects to obtain for its electric power is the copper mines on Isle Royale, now shut down, and that that market would probably be of equal value to them with the home consumption in Canada. At all events that is the proposition on the face of the Bill, and the observations I have made apply as much to the water-power of the Nipigon as to that of the Pigeon river. I cannot understand how water-power could be utilized on the Pigeon river otherwise than by the construction of a dam across that river, which would have one end necessarily on United States' soil, and this parliament alone would have the power to incorporate a company for that purpose.

The question here resolves itself simply into this. You have a body of gentlemen before you who say: 'We have the financial means necessary to carry on this undertaking, we ask power to carry it on, and we ask power to transmit our product by wire laid across the international boundary, whether across the boundary between Ontario and Minnesota or between Ontario and Isle Royale'. In either case that is something with regard to which the Dominion parliament has already acted and in regard to which no local legislature has the power to act, and in regard to which unless we are satisfied—and I have not been able to satisfy myself—that these promoters are not honest in stating their intentions, it seems to me this parliament alone has the power and ought to act.

As respects the details of the Bill, apart from the actual incorporation of the company, that is entirely another question. Powers may be asked incidentally which this House may not see fit to grant. As regards the declaration that these works are for the general advantage of Canada, I cannot see any benefit it will be to the promoters to have these words included, and as that declaration has in the past been far too freely granted, my view would be against including it in this Bill.

Mr. BOYCE. I have sent a question over to the hon. minister. Would he kindly answer it ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) asks me if in my opinion the fact that this Bill empowers the company to sell its products beyond the boundaries of the province gives this parliament exclusive jurisdiction over it. If I am to answer that question exactly as it is put, I would say yes. At the same time it is a legal question by no means free from doubt and one which has been recently under consideration, indirectly rather than directly, by the Supreme court. There was a division of opinion on the point among the judges of that court, and substantially an equal division, so that we shall require no doubt the views of the judicial committee of the Privy Council before that point can be said to be settled. But in my opinion the British North America Act by the words 'extending beyond the limits of the province' intended that any company incorporated for the express purpose of transmitting its products into a foreign country should be incorporated by this Dominion parliament alone.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. While personally I do not like to disagree with the hon. the Minister of Justice, at the same time I am forced to an opposite conclusion on the point last referred to. He says that the only reason why jurisdiction is given this parliament is because this company is given by this Bill power to export its products. It occurs to me that this parliament has no jurisdiction to authorize the construction of any work in a foreign country, so that no matter what we do here to-day our authority only extends to the boundary line. In that respect, therefore, the operation of the company will be exclusively confined to the province of Ontario. Let me point to a case on this very point, in which a company in the province of New Brunswick was proposing to build a railway in that province and also to carry on its operations into the State of Maine. It was held that the fact that the legislature of a foreign country had authorized the construction of a line of railway in that country for the purpose of connecting with the provincial railway does not in any way affect the authority of the provincial legislature to legislate with respect to the railway within the boundary of the province. (European and North American Railway Company vs. Thomas, 2 Cartwright, page 439). The point in that case is that, notwithstanding that the railway company in the province of New Brunswick applied for and obtained a charter from the provincial legislature for the purpose of constructing a railway which was to extend not only through a part of the province but into the State of Maine, it was held that the local legislature of the province of New Brunswick had exclusive jurisdiction to pass that charter, I submit that, this being the case, the mere fact that a company, wholly local in its character, is going to export some of its products into a foreign country is no justification for our assuming jurisdiction. We might as well say that because a sawmill company in the province of Ontario is going to export some of its product to the United States and because that this fact is stated in the Bill, the charter is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament and the province has no legislative authority with respect to it. We have a very striking precedent, the incorporation of the Niagara Power Company under the provincial law. I understand that, subsequently to their incorporation by the province, the company came to this parliament, believing that if they had their charter ratified by this parliament it would be more within the law. But I am told that when they came here their application was refused and they are operating to-day under a provincial charter and carrying on their affairs as effectively as if incorporated by this parliament.

Mr. SPROULE. Notwithstanding that it is a boundary stream.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Notwithstanding that there is no doubt whatever about the Niagara river being a boundary stream. But I am glad to hear the Minister of Justice say that the mere fact that either one of these is an international stream does not affect the right of this parliament to grant this charter. I understand that the Pigeon river is partly an international river, but so far as the Nipigon river is concerned, it is wholly within the bounds of Ontario. Even as to the Pigeon river, one-half its bed belongs to the province.

Mr. BURRELL. The member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) says that the Nipigon is an international river.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I take issue with him on that point; I believe that the Nipigon is not at all an international stream, and the Pigeon river is only partly international. But, one-half the bed of the Pigeon river belongs to the province of Ontario, and, that being the case, the province certainly has the power to grant incorporation to a company such as this. This company applied for incorporation in 1906 under the name of the Port Arthur Power and Development Company. This was a purely local name. I understand that it did not purpose exporting to the United States.

Mr. CONMEE. I desire to correct the hon. member Mr. Middlebro). If he looks at the Bill of that year, referred to, he will find the same declaration for exportation as in this.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I observe that the name is a purely local name—the Port Arthur Power and Development Company. But that Bill was thrown out. The matter came up again in 1908 in its present form. I understand that that Bill was introduced in the Senate and thrown out by the Senate Committee, and now we have the Bill before this House. As the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) has said, this is a question of expediency as well as a question of power. I think the time has come when we should be very careful in disposing of our national assets. We have arrived at a time when we think these assets of such importance that we have established an international commission to care for them. The object of the North American Conservation Commission is stated in its declaration of principles as follows:

We recognize the mutual interests of the nations which occupy the continent of North America, and the dependence of the welfare of each upon its natural resources. We agree that the conservation of these resources is indispensible for the continued prosperity of each nation. . . We agree that those resources which are necessaries of life should be regarded as public utilities, that their ownership entails specific duties to the public, and that as far as possible effective measures should be adopted to guard against monopoly.

One thing seems to me certain—that the incorporation of this company is not pro bono publico. If it is incorporated, it is not, as the Minister of Justice has said, for the general advantage of Canada. We have in Ontario a public utilities commission known as the Hydro-Electric Commission, which was expressly constituted for the purpose of taking charge of the great public assets of the province of Ontario, such as are covered by this Bill. These are public assets, and it will not be many years before they are required by the province as motive power for our manufacturers. Our fuel must be depleted, but the 'white coal' will go on—men may come and men may go, but this, we hope, will go on for ever. It is the most useful and economical kind of power, and it behooves us to pause long before we grant incorporation to such a company, not for the public good but for the purpose of enriching a few private gentlemen.

If we look at the public press, we find everywhere throughout the country that they are alive to this matter. I have here an editorial of the Toronto 'Globe,'—and no person will say that that journal is unfriendly to the present administration. This is from April 1, 1909.

Mr. Conmee's Little Bill.

It is disappointing, to say the least, that thirty members of the party which is identified with the maintenance of the provincial rights should be found voting for the Bill of the Ontario and Michigan Power Company. The province was represented by counsel in opposition to granting a charter, but his protests were of no avail, as the committee seems to have been lobbied on a party basis, and, with the exception of Mr. Black, the Liberal member for Hants, the committee was divided on strictly party lines. Mr. Black is to be honoured for his vote.

As Mr. Calvert said, it was more a question of policy than of jurisdiction, and, as policy strongly calls for leaving provincial matters alone, it is a pity he did not vote that way. The contention that the Nipigon river is an international stream, as Mr. Blackstock says, affronts common sense. Even if it were, it is surely not so distinctly an international stream as the Niagara river, over whose power rights the Ontario government has exercised complete jurisdiction.

The Liberal members in parliament are not sent there to get in behind Mr. Conmee's Bill or to promote his commercial ventures, if he has any. We do not pretend to settle the constitutional or legal question raised. All that we——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think it is against the rules of order to quote from any newspaper in this House reflecting upon the action of members of parliament in parliament. I think it is not in order for the hon. member (Mr. Middlebro) to quote from a newspaper in that respect?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Does the Chairman say that this is against rule 19 and is offensive?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No, but there is a distinct rule of the House, to be found in Bourinot and May, that newspaper articles reflecting upon the action of members of the House in the House may not be read.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I am just reading the comments in the public press. If you, Mr. Chairman, rule that editorial articles to be found in the 'Globe' are offensive and unfit to be read to the Liberal members of the House——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have risen to order. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Middlebro) will please take his seat. It is not in order to comment in any way on the ruling of the Speaker or of the Chairman; his ruling must be accepted, unless there is an appeal against it to the House. I think it proper to say as well that, inasmuch as I would refuse to allow my decision to be discussed, I think approbation or disapprobation of it by applause or otherwise, is also out of order.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it out of order, on any question that comes up from time to time in this House, to read the comments of the press, because that would apply to the budget speech, to protection or to anything else which is constantly referred to in the press?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the circumstance arises I will endeavour to rule at the moment, but I am not supposed to answer hypothetical questions.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I bow to your ruling. Now, a word as to what the Minister of Justice said with reference to provincial powers. As I understand the British North America Act, all powers which previously belonged to the provinces, and which have not by the express terms of the British North America Act been conveyed from the provinces to the Dominion, still remain within the exclusive jursdiction of the provinces; so unless there is something in the British North America Act which expressly takes away the former power of the provincial legislature to incorporate such a company as this, then it certainly remains within the exclusive power of the provincial legislature. The section to which the Minister of Justice refers is subsection 10 of section 92. Among the exclusive powers of provincial legislatures are:

> Local works and undertakings, other than such as are of the following classes:—
> a. Lines of steam or other ships, railways, canals, telegraphs, and other works and undertakings connecting the province with any other or others of the provinces, or extending beyond the limits of the province.

Now, unless it can be said that a company that simply exports its product, extends its operations beyond the limits of the province, then it does not come within that limitation. My contention is that the mere fact that this Bill proposes to give a company power to export its product does not make it of an international character, therefore it comes within the exclusive jurisdiction of this parliament. Now, the Minister of Justice has said that this company is entirely local in its operations, and, therefore, he does not think it would be correct to say that this company is for the general advantage of Canada. Now, if that is so, it seems to me it must be a local undertaking; if it is not for the general advantage of Canada it must be a local undertaking, and if it is a local undertaking, then it is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the provincial legislature. Apart from the question of the legality of the Bill, I say that as a matter of policy it would be extremely inadvisable to pass it, especially in view of the fact that we are now taking action for the purpose of conserving our national resources, and in view of the fact that we have established in the past few years in the province of Ontario a hydro-electric commission for the very purpose of developing the powers which this Bill proposes to place in the hands of private parties.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman has asserted that I had claimed at some time that the Nipigon river was an international river. I never made any statement of that character. The hon. member for Hastings on a former occasion made some reference to a statement of mine on that matter, and I corrected him. What I really did say can be found in the 'Hansard.' I merely pointed out that the Nipigon river is one of the main tributaries to Lake Superior which is a boundary water, and in view of that it necessarily became more or less of an international character. I think my position is supported by good authorities. It is difficult in some instances to draw the line and say where a river commences, or to say where a lake begins into which the river flows. The Nipigon river is one of that class. There is a large estuary of the Nipigon river and it would be a difficult matter to say exactly what part of it is river and what part of it is bay. As a matter of fact, the river is navigable for three miles above ith mouth, and both American and Canadian vessels have frequently navigated it for that distance; in fact the river is navigated for twelve miles further up and in other stretches. I think the river must necessarily be more or less of an international character. It is claimed by Mr. Moore in his 'Digest of International Law,' referring to Tributary Streams, volume 1, page 677.

> Both parties, Great Britain and the United States, have the right of navigation from the highest navigable source of the lake to the sea, through all the water connections by which they are connected with one another or the ocean.

I think that is all that is necessary to say on that point. The stream has that character for a certain distance. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, I think, has been a little unfortunate in his reference to the British North America Act. But let me first call the attention of the committee to what the Bill really says. Section 8, subsection (b). provides that the company may:

> Construct, maintain and operate all necessary works, dams, wing dams, canals, intakes, tail-races, channels, conduits, tunnels, transmission lines, structures, buildings, machinery, plant appliances, instruments and devices, and erect and maintain poles and towers, and lay and maintain pipes, cables, wires or other conductors and connect them with similar lines in other provinces and in the United States.

Now, these are very different things from selling or exporting power. When hon. gentlemen read this Bill and ignore all the provisions in it for the sake of making an argument in regard to the export of power, they are simply begging the question. The construction and maintenance for the business of the company, and connecting the line with similar lines in other provinces and in the United States, are certainly substantial matters. There is no question that the Bill does provide that the company may export a certain portion of its power.

But apart from that consideration, the works of the company, the cable and transmission line and so forth, must be constructed, maintained and connected with other lines either in the other provinces or in the United States. When the Bill was before the committee maps were placed upon the wall showing the position of these two rivers and the position occupied by Isle Royale, which is a portion of the United States. Isle Royale is 40 or 50 miles east of Port Arthur and Fort William. It is directly opposite the mouth of the Nipigon river. This island is 45 or 50 miles in length. It is also practically opposite the mouth of the Pigeon river although these rivers are a long distance apart; so that the transmission lines naturally converge upon that island. These maps were produced and I think the committee was fully satisfied of the bona fides of the proposed company in that regard.

As some suspicion has been cast upon the action of this company I wish to call to the attention of the House who the parties are who are asking for this legislation. There is Mr. Herman Finger, of Port Arthur. Mr. Finger is a well-known lumberman and a man of considerable wealth; another is Mr. J. C. Hunter. Mr. Hunter is a banker. He is the gentleman who came into our country and established the furnaces that are now at Port Arthur. Another is Mr. D. C. Cameron, of Winnipeg, a large lumberman and a wealthy man. Another is Mr. J. D. McArthur, a well-known contractor in this country, a man who was able to put up $4,000,000 of security that he would carry out his contracts. These certainly are not men of straw. They are not men who should be treated as some hon. gentlemen opposite would desire to treat them, and they are not men against whom insinuations can be made with regard to this undertaking.

I think that the hon. member was a little unfortunate in his statement about the British North America Act. I followed very closely the remarks of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) and I think the force of his argument in regard to the legislative jurisdiction of this parliament must have been apparent to everyone who gave attention to it. But, I claim that this legislation is within the competence of the Dominion parliament upon grounds other than those stated by the Minister of Justice. There is no other legislative body in this Dominion that can pass this legislation. I think it will be acknowledged by all those who have paid any attention to the subject that for a great many years, parliaments, led by both political parties, have held practically the same view as regards navigable waters. They have been regarded as being under the legislative control of the Dominion. Indeed, some of the Ministers of Justice went very much farther. Sir John Thompson held that they were the absolute property of the Dominion. An Act for the building of a bridge across the Red river at Winnipeg passed by the legislature of Manitoba, was disallowed upon the report of Sir John Macdonald, acting Minister of Justice, because it was proposed to be constructed across navigable waters. A similar Act to provide for the building of a bridge across the Assiniboine river was vetoed upon the report of Mr. Blake when he was Minister of Justice. I could go on and show the House what the various Ministers of Justice have held in the past. I might refer the committee to the opinion expressed by Sir Oliver Mowat on this question. Some gentleman has seen fit to assert that there is a question of provincial rights involved in this Bill. I do not think so. There can be no question of provincial rights unless this legislature goes outside of its sphere of action and enters into that of a provincial legislature. If this Bill proposed any step of that character the question of provincial rights might arise. Touching on the question of the navigability of the rivers, my argument is that, because these rivers are navigable, quite apart from the question of their international character, if they have any, this parliament, and this parliament alone, can create this company and give it the legal authority to carry out the undertaking embodied in this Bill. I will refer the committee to the decision of the Privy Council and to the answers which it made to a series of questions submitted with regard to a similar matter. I may say that in this submission the provinces, not only of Ontario and Quebec, but the other provinces, joined with the Dominion. One of the questions submitted was this:

> Is the Act of the Dominion parliament, revised statutes of Canada, chapter 92, entitled 'an Act respecting certain works constructed in or over navigable waters' an Act which the Dominion parliament had jurisdiction to pass either in whole or in part?

That is very plain language. The Act is very well known to hon. members. It provides that no bridge, no dam, no construction of any character may be placed upon navigable waters or upon foreshores that would affect such waters except with the aproval and consent of this parliament. If the contention of the hon. gentleman who has taken his seat be correct that Act was an evasion of provincial rights. The province it contended owned the entire river in one case and to the centre of the river in the other case. I am not going to split hairs about how much it owned, or as to whether it owned, in the case of an international stream, to the centre of the river or not.

Mr. BOYCE. Does the hon. gentleman concede that the province owns half the bed of an international stream?

Mr. CONMEE. No, I do not, and I will give my reasons for that. I am just proceeding to do that. In the very case that I am calling the attention of the committee to, it was held that:

Whatever proprietary rights were vested in the province at the date of the British North America Act, 1867, remained so unless by its express enactment transferred to the Dominion. Such transfer is not to be presumed from the grant of legislative jurisdiction to the Dominion in respect to the subject matters of these proprietary rights.

These are the words of the Privy Council. I have already stated the question submitted. These words which I have just quoted are the general remarks preceding the reply, and then the reply is in these words:

Held that the Dominion legislature had power to pass the revised statute of Canada, sec. 92, entitled 'An Act respecting certain works constructed in or over navigable waters.'

That Act is now contained in Section 115. According to the Privy Council, the highest court in the realm, that point seems to be definitely settled. I would call the attention of the hon. member for West Algoma, who asked me a question as to whether the provincial government owned the bed of the river or not, to the distinction that is made here between proprietary rights and legislative jurisdiction; these are two different and distinct things.

Their lordships point out that the distinction between the question of the ownership of proprietary rights and the question of legislative jurisdiction are very broad and quite distinct one from the other. Therefore I submit that, by that judgment alone, there can be no doubt that the authority rests with this parliament as having exclusive legislation.

Mr. BOYCE. What judgment is the hon. gentleman referring to?

Mr. CONMEE. The judgment in the Privy Council appeal cases, 1898, pp. 700 and 701.

Mr. BOYCE. That is the fisheries case?

Mr. CONMEE. The fisheries question was involved in the same judgment, certainly. My contention is that the declaration there is to the effect that in some instances proprietary rights remained in the provinces absolutely, notwithstanding the formation of the Dominion, that in other cases proprietary rights remained in the provinces but that, notwithstanding that, the legislative jurisdiction was given to the Dominion in regard of the subject matter of these proprietary rights. I think that is quite clear. I shall read the words again in case the point is not fully understood.

Whatever proprietary rights were vested in the provinces at the date of British North America Act, 1967, remained so unless by its express enactments transferred to the Dominion. Such transfer is not to be presumed from the grant of legislative jurisdiction to the Dominion in respect of the subject-matter of those proprietary rights.

I think that language is very clear. Then the following words are to be found in their decision:

Held, further, that the Dominion legislature had power to pass the revised statutes of Canada, c. 92, entitled, 'An Act respecting certain Works constructed in or over Navigable Waters.'

I contend that this decision is a declaration that notwithstanding certain proprietary rights may have remained or did remain in the provincial legislature, the Dominion and the Dominion alone had the legislative authority to deal with them. I think that is clearly borne out by some of the decisions of our own courts in the matter. I wish to refer to one or two cases respecting the findings of the Supreme Court of Canada. I would refer to the case of the legislation affecting the rights of the Dominion and the province, the Quiddy River Driving and Boom Company, 3rd Cartwright, 2 and 3.

Mr. Justice Strong in that case at page 297 used the following language:

No one can deny that by subsection 10 of section 91 of the British North America Act, exclusive power to legislate respecting navigation is conferred on the parliament of Canada, and as little is it open to any one to dispute that this power respecting navigation includes the exclusive right to legislate so as to authorize an obstruction in a navigable public river.

That I think is a very plain finding and there are others. The last speaker dealt with some of the power companies. Let me say that a considerable number of power companies have the same powers as are asked for in this Bill. The Hamilton Erie Power Company got their Act in 1895. The Grand Falls Water Power and Boom Company also got theirs in that year and the Erie Ontario Power Company got theirs in 1903. There was an issue in the courts as to the Ontario Niagara Power Company. The Parliament of Canada by the Act of 51 Victoria, 1897, chapter 120, incorporated the Canada Power Company. The company was authorized to develop a waterpower on the Welland river, to distribute electric power and to connect its wires with those of companies in the United States. Let me say for the information of the committee that the Welland river is in exactly the same position as the Nipigon river, it is entirely and wholly in the province of Ontario. It is a tributary of the Niagara of course, but it is no more a tributary of a boundary stream than is the Nipigon river, so that these two rivers are on all fours. By subsequent legislation the name was changed to the Ontario Power Company of Niagara Falls, and I think that is the same company to which the hon. gentleman referred, saying it was operating under a provincial charter. I am informed that none of these companies are operating under provincial charters, that although they obtained provincial charters in the first instance they later came here and got Dominion charters. If they are operating under provincial charters, then from the information which I have been able to obtain they are doing it illegally, and any shareholder or any creditor could set their incorporation aside because if they are operating under such a charter it is an encroachment upon the federal jurisdiction. It not only gives to the company the right to make use of the Welland and Niagara rivers, but it gives them the right to take the waters of Lake Erie, about which there can be no question, for the purposes of their power company. There can be no question about these waters being international, but whether they are international or not they are navigable. If they are operating under such a provincial charter it is only because no one has objected to their doing so.

However, I wish to continue my reference to this particular case. The Act of incorporation did not contain in any enacting clause, a declaration that the works of the company were for the general advantage of Canada, but in the preamble it was stated that it was for the general advantage of Canada that a company should be incorporated for the purposes mentioned. This Act was held intra vires of the Dominion parliament by the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of Hewson vs. the Ontario Power Company; and, although the judgment is rather long, I would ask the indulgence of the committee while I read it, because I think it deals pretty fully with a similar case:

> Mr. Justice Davies in his judgment in that case (with which Mr. Justice Sedgewick concurred) said (p. 605):
> The chief contention on the part of the appellant was that the charter of the respondent was null and void as not being within the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada and as being a purely local work and undertaking which the legislature of Ontario could alone authorize.
> The Court of Appeal for Ontario held the charter of the respondent to be intra vires of the Dominion parliament on two grounds: first, that the general recital in the incorporating Act, that it was desirable for the general advantage of Canada that a company should be incorporated for the purpose of utilizing the natural water supply of the Niagara and Welland rivers, was a sufficient declaration within section 92, subsection 10 (c) of the British North America Act; and, secondly, that the power given by section 2 of the company's charter to connect its wires with the wires of any electric or other company in the United States, made the work one extending beyond the limits of the province and so within section 92, subsection 10 (c).
> As at present advised I do not think the general declaration in the preamble of this private Act such a declaration as that contemplated by subsection 10 (c) of section 92 of the British North America Act. In my present view of that section I should be inclined to think that with respect to a work or undertaking of a purely provincial kind solely within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature, and with respect to which parliament was assuming jurisdiction on the sole ground that the undertaking was for the general advantage of Canada or two or more of the provinces, the declaration intended, was an enacting declaration to the effect required by the Imperial Act. Such a declaration is not, I think, one which might be spelled out of the charter granted or inferred merely from its terms or deduced from recitals of the promoters in the preamble, but one substantially enacted by parliament. It is not necessary for me, however, to decide the point now, as I hold the charter valid on other grounds and wish to leave the point open.
> The jurisdiction of the legislation of Ontario is limited to the incorporation of companies with provincial objects only, and such legislature could not confer on a company incorporated by them such extensive powers as are conferred on this respondent company.
> It is true that the location of the works where 'electric power is to be generated is near Niagara Falls and solely within the province.' But the undertaking of the company is not simply to generate power, but to supply such power 'to manufacturers, corporations and persons for use in manufacturing or any other business or purpose.'
>
> Now the subject-matter of the charter is obviously not merely a local one. On the contrary, it is obviously one which contemplates extension over large areas. I do not find in the Act any words importing or implying a limitation upon these powers as to area. I should read the second section of the Act as giving powers to extend if found necessary or desirable to any part of Canada which was found practicable.
> The second section, as I read it, not only gives them general and unlimited powers of supplying electric power to parts of Canada beyond the province where their generating works are to be situate, but expressly auth-crizes them 'to connect with the wires of any company in the United States.'

Mr. Lafleur felt himself obliged to contend that the local legislature could grant similar powers of connection, and I was disposed at the argument to agree with him. But a closer examination of the clauses of the British North America Act has led me to entertain very grave doubts that this is so. It seems clear to me that the legislature could not grant a local company power to connect its wires with those of a local company in any of the other provinces. If it could, each company would cease to be one of a 'local or private nature' and become interprovincial and general. How then could the legislature grant power to connect the wires of the company it was creating with those of the companies of a foreign country. The local or private company on such connection taking place would at once cease to be 'local or private' within the British North America Act and become international.

It was argued that the province has as much right to confer powers beyond its jurisdiction upon the corporations it calls into existence as the Dominion parliament has beyond Canada. In a certain sense that may be true. But there is a difference and a rational one too. Provincial charters are defined by the British North America Act as matters of a local or private nature not 'connecting the province with any other or others of the provinces,' and 'not extending beyond the limits of the province.' Dominion charters are not controlled by any such statutory limitations, and while the exercise of the powers they confer upon a company connecting at the international boundary line with the works of a foreign company may be subject to the municipal law of that country and permitted and controlled by the comity of nations, there is no statutory prohibition in the British North America Act preventing the granting of the power by the Canadian parliament to a company it incorporates to connect with a company of the United States at the boundary line.

It is not necessary, however, for me to decide whether a grant by the legislatures of the province to a company created by it to connect its wires with those of a foreign corporation, at the frontier, would be necessarily beyond its powers or would invalidate the charter altogether or simply in part. That question was not argued excepting incidentally, because the validity of a provincial charter was not an issue on this appeal. Whether there exists a concurrent jurisdiction in the Dominion and the province to confer such a power, I am not called upon now to decide. I do hold the power to exist in the Dominion parliament; and that, because of its exercise with respect to this special corporation and also because of the general extent of the powers granted, the Act of incorporation here in question is legal and valid.

That is a case pretty much on all fours. There are a number of other judicial findings to which I could refer, but I think sufficient has been said to show that, quite apart from the question dealt with by the Minister of Justice the legislation asked for by this company should be granted. I was somewhat surprised at some of the remarks of the hon. Minister of Justice; if he has suspicions they are not well founded. The declaration in this Bill that it is for the general advantage of Canada is an honest one. What works are covered by it, which are not of that character? If this company goes on with its undertaking, that will mean the investment of several million dollars in the establishment of hydraulic works.

Mr. J. D. REID. To supply power to the United States.

Mr. CONMEE. If the hon. gentleman were to treat this Bill fairly, he would not make that remark. The Bill provides that the company must retain half of its power for consumption in Canada. In what other Bill is there that restriction?

Mr. J. D. REID. Why should not all the power be kept for Canada?

Mr. CONMEE. When these other Bills were going through why did my hon. friend not insist on their containing a provision of that kind? He must have been asleep.

Mr. J. D. REID. What Bill does the hon. gentleman mean?

Mr. CONMEE. I have reference to a Bill regarding power on the Welland river. There is no provision that they shall not export their power.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is an international stream.

Mr. CONMEE. Not at all. It is entirely within the province of Ontario, and not more an international stream than is the Nipigon. Neither is the Welland river an international stream in the sense my hon. friend means. The company will have to establish manufactories to use that power and employ large numbers of men. Take the case of the water-power at Sault Ste. Marie. There was just about as much suspicion and nonsense with regard to giving that charter and developing that power as there is in this case. We had the same difficulty then as now and the same suspicion. But that company has done good work. It has established great works there. The customs revenue collected there has reached nearly half a million dollars a year in consequence of its establishment. Take the Shawinigan company in the province of Quebec. At that place formerly there was no revenue at all, but since that company has been established, it now gives a revenue to the customs of $100,000 per annum. Take all works of that character and you will find they are a source of great public revenue. Besides you do not get from the revenue returns in the immediate locality of the works, anything like the general advantage to the country which such works bring about. The labour employed sends its wages away, and revenue is derived from the amount of business done in return for these wages at hundreds of places throughout the country. In this case the company propose to manufacture pulp, paper and electric appliances. These are articles of commerce which serve the wants of the people throughout the entire country. I would ask hon. gentlemen to point out what other class of work is of greater general advantage than establishments of this kind, which develop the resources of nature now going to waste. I want to dwell on that subject just a little. I think that the best declaration on that point was made in the language which I propose to quote: I am reading from a work published by Mr. Farnham, on water and water-rights, edition 1904, volume 1, page 29:

The gifts of nature are for the benefit of mankind, and no aggregation of men can assert and exercise such rights and ownership of them as will deprive others, having equal rights, and means of enjoying them, of such enjoyment.

That is about as strong a contention in that regard as can be made. I am a subscriber to the principles enunciated there. There is nothing in this Bill to interfere with the rights of the public, there is nothing in it to take from the use of the public any advantage these water-powers can give, I had something at stake in presuming to introduce this measure. I have no more interest in it than simply as being the one who introduced it. I am free to say that I believe it will aid in the development of the section of the country from which I come. I believe the measure will be for my advantage in that respect, but I had a good deal of trouble with some of the promoters to get them to consent to clause 14 of the Bill. I submit that no Bill which has passed through this House or the legislature of Ontario within the last 20 years, contains as many safeguards for the people's rights. Let me read section 14:

In case of any dispute or difference as to the price to be charged for power or electrical or other energy, for any of the purposes in this Act mentioned, in use or to be provided for use upon the Canadian side of the international boundary, or as to the methods of distribution thereof, or as to the time within which or as to the quantity to be furnished, or the conditions upon which it shall be furnished for use, such dispute or difference shall be settled by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada on the application of any user of or applicant for power, electrical or other energy produced by the company, or upon the application of the company.

Mr. LENNOX. May I ask a question, so that we may follow exactly the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) as he goes along—was this clause in the Bill of last year?

Mr. CONMEE. I do not think it was in quite the same words.

Mr. CONMEE.

Mr. LENNOX. But substantially the same thing?

Mr. CONMEE. Well, I think, pretty much. I would not say it was in the same words. But I want to point out to the committee how far-reaching that is. The language covers every dispute that can arise in the interests of the people, not only in the interests of the people in that particular district, but the people of Canada so far as they may be affected by the action of this power. But, further, this parliament created the Board of Railway Commissioners, it is a high court for the purpose of dealing with the rights of the people as affected by corporations. And parliament never, in my judgment, passed a better Act for the benefit of the general public than when they established that court. Now, parliament has control of that court, so that if this Bill passes, the people of Canada, the people of the district, the government of Canada, the representatives of the people on the floor of this Chamber, have just as much control and just as effective control over that water-power and the works that are established and the development that takes place there, as they have if the Bill does not pass or if any other power in this land passes it.

Some hon. members opposite would probably tell me that there is in Ontario a Hydro-Electric Commission for the purpose of dealing with water-power. Giving all due credit to the government that established that commission, recognizing that their purpose was to preserve, as far as they could, the benefits of their water-powers to the people of the province by preventing extravagant charges for water-power, and that through the machinery and instrumentality of this commission they are going to control these prices, I am not going to debate that question further than to point out that they have been a good while at it, and they have not reduced any prices yet.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. member has been a good while at this Bill.

Mr. CONMEE. Yes, I have. And as they are not going to give up their commission, I am not going to give up my Bill either. But what is the provision? The people of that portion of the province within a certain distance from Niagara, within a comparatively short distance of the source of the electric energy—for electrical energy can be transmitted commercially for only a short distance—may receive all the benefits we are told about, but, if the highest hopes of the legislature can be realized they can only reach a very small area of the province.

Mr. BLAIN. Will not that be a very good thing for the province?

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. member (Mr. Blain) asks if that will not be a good thing for the province all over? I say no. I am not arguing that the time may not come when this will benefit all parts of the province, but that will not come while the hon. member and I are on earth—what may happen in the great future I know not. This Hydro-Electric Commission is only a board composed of so many gentlemen. Are they more capable, are they of a higher class, are they better qualified, are they more zealous for the public interest generally, or more ready to protect the rights of every man than would be the Board of Railway Commissioners? I do not think they are. Giving them all due credit, I do not think there is any possibility of that board protecting the public interest more than it is protected under this Bill.

Let me refer to another matter in this connection. Has this Hydro-Electric Commission protected the public interest in the past? We can judge it because it exists and has acted. Take the case of the Kaministiquia power: that company developed power on the river within 20 miles of the city of Fort William. The hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) read from the columns of the 'Globe.' If he will look at the back numbers of the 'Globe,' and see what it has had to say about the Kaministiquia power——

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) does not take recent copies of the 'Globe'?

Mr. CONMEE. I do. But I deny that a gentleman sitting behind a desk in the editorial office of the 'Globe' or any other paper has better qualifications of moulding the public policy of this country or has better opinions in regard to the great questions of public interest than the men whom the people have chosen to represent them in this House. That is my position with regard to the 'Globe' or any other newspaper. But I tell my hon. friend that if he will go back far enough he will find that the 'Globe' for months and years—certainly for more than one year—was telling the people of the great power there was in the Kakabeka falls and how it should be conserved for the benefit of the people and how the rates to be charged for power should be controlled by the then government, which was a Liberal government. I have the references here, and I could give them to the House, but time will not permit. When I ceased to be the representative of that section in the local legislature, the power was still in the hands of the government to control these rates, if the provincial legislature could control them. I may say I then had different views from those I hold now. What has happened since that time under the Hydro-Electric Commission? What the previous government had done was to refuse to deed the land except upon condition that the rates should be controlled. But this government came to the conclusion that they had their Hydro-Electric Commission, and therefore had control. They deeded the land in fee simple, without conditions—and the company is now operated and charging what it pleases; nobody has any control over it; there is no control. In that connection, let me say that there is a question of dealing with a navigable river. Under chapter 115 of the revised statutes no works may be placed upon a navigable river without approval of those works under provisions of that Act. These works on the Kaministiquia are placed there under the Act of the Ontario legislature without any such approval.

Mr. BOYCE. When was the Act passed?

Mr. CONMEE. In 1899.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) had charge of the Bill?

Mr. CONMEE. I had. That is why I know something about it. But it was renewed in 1903 or 1904 so far as relates to the power of the company to divert the Kaministiquia river. Of course no provincial legislature has the power to authorize the diversion of the water of a navigable stream. But the provincial legislature gave this company power to divert the waters of this river for twenty miles and to cause them to empty not into the river but into Thunder bay. This is the river which forms the second largest harbour in the Dominion. The volume of traffic in the harbour of Fort William, formed by the Kaministiquia river, is next to that of Montreal. But I submit that even under the powers of section 115 there is no authority for the Minister of Public Works to approve of plans of that nature, they are confined to the building of a wharf, dock and works of that character, or a bridge, or works connecting or necessary therewith, all specifically defined in section 115, none of which contemplate a diversion. Therefore I submit there is no power to ratify works of an entirely different character which are involved in the diversion of a stream. No water-power development can take place without the diversion of the waters of the stream. I think I need not argue the point very long that no provincial legislature could give authority to divert navigable waters from the natural bed of a stream. Now, Sir, some very peculiar legislation has been passed by the provincial legislature, and I want to call attention to it. I have in my hand an Act in regard to the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, passed by the parliament of Canada in 1895. Among other things the Act provides that the company shall not export any of its power to the United States —meaning that half of the power which belongs to Ontario or to Canada—except by order of the Railway Board of Canada. It also provides that the Railway Board shall have control in fixing the rates to be charged to the municipality of Fort Francis or the township of McIrving, in which it is situated. It goes on to stipulate in regard to the character of the works, and provides among other things that the company should not in any way obstruct or interfere with the lock at Fort Francis. I may explain that term by saying that a lock was built many years ago at Fort Francis, under the Mackenzie administration. It was nearly completed for the depth of water then thought to be necessary, with the exception of the gates. The Act of this House provides for the protection of the flow of water, and provides that navigation may be obtained both above and below the dams and structures which the company may make, and also in regard to the level to which the water may be raised in the river, or in Rainy lake. Now I want to make a short statement as to what has happened in regard to that Act. I assume that hon. members are not generally aware that the province of Ontario has assumed power to veto Dominion legislation, as appears from an Act which I have in my hand. This is an Act of the Ontario legislature in the following year, 1896. The statute of Canada, 1905, was passed on the petition of the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, Limited. The Ontario Act provides:

> And whereas certain provisions thereof as to the supply of power in Canada from the water-power on the Rainy river at or near the town of Fort Francis, are in the interest of the province of Ontario, and whereas notwithstanding the provisions in the said statute contained, it is contended that the company are not bound thereby but are entitled to deal with the said water-power free from the restrictions in respect thereof imposed by the said Act.

That is what I call a veto.

Mr. LENNOX. It is the other way, it is carrying out the objects which the legislature had in view.

Mr. CONMEE. My hon. friend is entirely wrong about that. It is setting aside all the provisions of the Dominion Act.

Mr. LENNOX. Just the opposite.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is the enactment?

Mr. CONMEE. The Act goes on to provide for some of the same provisions that are contained in the Dominion Act.

Mr. LENNOX. This is the Ontario Act which supplements the Act of the Dominion parliament.

Mr. CONMEE. It will be time enough for the hon. gentleman to give an opinion after he has read this Act.

Mr. LENNOX. I have read it.

Mr. CONMEE. Well, I shall have to ask you to read it again. All I can say is that if you are a lawyer, as I believe you are, and you have read this Act and are going to contend as you do just now, I would be very sorry as a client to employ you.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member will please address the Chair, and not the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox).

Mr. CONMEE. Under the provisions of the Dominion Act disputes were to be settled by the Board of Railway Commissioners; under this Act, there is a very different provision:

> In case of any dispute as to the price of power or electrical energy in use or to be provided for use upon the Canadian side of the international boundary line, or the methods of distribution thereof, or the time within which, or the condition on which, the same shall be furnished for use, such dispute shall be settled by the Lieutenant Governor in Council on the application of any applicant for power, or of the company or the town of Fort Francis.

That changes the jurisdiction of this parliament. Under the Dominion Act it is provided that a portion of the power, if it was so ordered by the Board of Railway Commissioners, might be exported for use on the American side under such conditions as the board might impose. Now this Act provides in a different way:

> No part of the power or electrical energy to be provided for use on the Canadian side of the said boundary line shall be diverted to or used in the United tSates without the order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Now the Lieutenant Governor, under this statute, takes away from the Board of Railway Commissioners, the power which was given by Dominion statute, and takes to himself to say just what power shall be exported. I want to say to the hon. member that I do not believe the Act is worth the paper it is written on. But, it just goes to show where the question rests. It goes to show that there is a necessity for action on the part of this government with regard to this question. This was an international stream. Why the provincial legislature should have assumed to set aside the Acts of this parliament and to deal with an international and a navigable stream is something that I do not know. It is certainly taking a very extreme course, to say the least about it. But, if hon. gentlemen are questioning the propriety of passing this Act, what have they to say as to the propriety of their friends at Toronto in passing that Act? If these gentleman say, 'You may possibly be invading our rights,' surely they should come here with clean hands. That is a principle of British law and British practice. I will point to only these two Acts, although I could refer to a dozen Acts, in which the same principle was involved. This is a clear case of usurping the authority of the parliament of Canada. Let me give another case in point. Nipigon lake is a large body of water, with about the same coast line as Lake Ontario; yet, the Ontario government have assumed control of it. They have undertaken to forbid anybody to navigate it unless he gets a license from the provincial government. I would like to ask hon. gentlemen where they get any authority for that? If there is anything clear about the British North America Act, if there is anything that is fully established by the statutes of Canada based on that Act, it is that the Dominion has control of navigable waters. Yet, the provincial government assumes to exercise the paramount control over one of the great lakes of the country. Well, I will leave that question for hon. gentlemen to think over. Now, what I have to say with regard to this Act, is, that in my humble opinion, it is evidently an Act that should be passed by this legislature. But, I would like to meet the views of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, and I have this suggestion to make if it will meet with his approval. I recognize that that section 2, which contains a declaration that these works are for the general advantage of Canada, may be open to some objection. Let me say to the committee that this is not at all the Bill that was defeated last year in the Senate. The reason for the defeat in the Senate in part was that the Bill of last year provided for the company going out along all the branches of the Nipigon and Pigeon rivers and erecting storage works for the control of the flow of the water. That has been entirely cut out of the Bill because of the criticism in the Senate Committee. It was pointed out that some of the streams might partake of a different character from either the Nipigon or the Pigeon rivers and might not be fairly classed as navigable streams. In view of the force of that statement the clause of last year has been entirely cut out of this Bill, so that, in that respect, it is quite a different Bill. I propose that section 2 shall read in this way:

> The works authorized by this Act, in so far only as relates to the development of water powers and electrical transmission, are declared works for the general advantage of Canada.

That would confine it to the two objects alone. I do not know whether that will meet the views of the Minister of Justice or not, but it seems to me that it would be a very fair declaration. Some hon. gentlemen have asked: 'Why have that declaration at all? What is the purpose of having that declaration?' In answer I may say that this company is proposing to expend a large sum of money. They will have to go into the money markets and borrow upon their security, no doubt, to carry out their undertaking. They do not want any doubt as to their rights. They do not want any doubt as to whether the Act which they obtain is beyond dispute or not, and in that sense the declaration is regarded as being of some advantage to them. Whether that is a sufficient reason or not I am not prepared to say, but I do say that it is a shield against attack. We see that some of these companies have been dragged into the courts and from court to court under one pretence or another in regard to their charter and the idea was that as a shield against such attacks a declaration, framed as I have just read it, would be of advantage to the company. I cannot see wherein any interest or any individual could possibly be prejudiced by the insertion of that declaration in that section.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman think we could insert in a section like that, the declaration that a certain part of the works are for the general advantage of Canada while excluding a certain other part?

Mr. CONMEE. Certainly; you can declare that certain works are for the general advantage of Canada, and if you do not declare that other works are for the general advantage of Canada they will not come within that classification.

Mr. SPROULE. But it is part of the same works.

Mr. CONMEE. No. This would cut out the manufacturing works. This company propose to create manufacturing establishments. They propose to manufacture pulp and paper and land and marine motors. They would not come under that declaration at all. As I understand the Minister of Justice, if that amendment were not put in all the works of the company might fall under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Dominion. Whether that would prejudice anybody or not I am not prepared to say, but I thought that the amendment which I have submitted would be a pretty fair proposition.

Mr. BOYCE. I am sure that the committee has been very gratified to have listened to such an excellent dissertation upon law and fact as we have listened to during the last hour from the hon. member for Thunder bay and Rainy river (Mr. Conmee). He has given to the consideration of these questions a great deal of thought and in his remarks he has brought to bear upon the consideration of the many matters involved vast experience and learning. But I must confess, Mr. Chairman, that as the hon. gentleman struggled through, as he did in a most able manner, the various intricacies, the constitutional by-ways and the various decisions affecting the respective rights appertaining to the Dominion and the provinces under the British North America Act, recalling, as the hon. gentleman's remarks did, to my mind, various other statements and arguments that in days long gone by I had heard the hon. gentleman make, both from the public platform and in the legislature of Ontario, of which he was then a member, I was forcibly reminded, Sir, of the story of a western statesman who, having argued volubly from a public platform in favour of the policy which he was advocating, concluded his remarks with these words: 'Now, ladies and gentlemen, these are my views and if you don't like them they can be changed.' The hon. gentleman peculiarly has arguments which, according to time and season and the expediency and exigencies of each situation can be made to adapt themselves as the situation requires. I think that it can be said that there is no question upon which the hon. gentleman has varied his policy and has changed so diametrically his views as he has upon the questions which are involved in and which form the main principles of this Bill. Why, from 1885, when the hon. gentleman first went into the political arena and became a supporter of the late Hon. Sir Oliver Mowat, that doughty champion of provincial rights, whose policy the hon. gentleman so loyally followed—

Mr. CONMEE. And still follows.

Mr. BOYCE. Yes, and still follows, the hon. gentleman in every campaign in which he was following loyally declared in favour of provincial rights, everything for the provinces, the mines, the lumber, the licenses, the fisheries, the surrendered Indian lands —everything should go to the provinces, including the water-powers. But a change suddenly came over the spirit of the dreams of the hon. gentleman. It was not a gradual change, it came suddenly, almost in a night, and that was the night of the 25th day of January, 1905. Why, Sir, from 1886 until the night of the 25th of January, 1905, the hon. gentleman from Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) had the most implicit confidence in the fullest possible powers of the legislature of the province of Ontario to pass such legislation and to control companies of this kind which were exclusively within their jurisdiction. What do we find? The first step the hon. gentleman took was with regard to a company with which he was intimately connected, of which he was an incorporator and provisional director and which from 1886 to 1904 had been incorporated and kept exclusively within the jurisdiction and control of the province of Ontario.

Mr. CONMEE. What company was that?

Mr. BOYCE. That was the Pacific and Atlantic Railway Company.

Mr. CONMEE. Oh.

Mr. BOYCE. Yes, yes, yes.

Mr. CONMEE. I would like to know what the Pacific and Atlantic Railway Company has got to do with this.

Mr. BOYCE. My hon. friend from 1886 to 1905 laboured, I presume, under the delusion, as he would have us now believe, that these matters were within the legislative control exclusively of the province of Ontario. He secured the incorporation of that company in an Act of the Ontario legislature which gave it very large powers. He renewed that charter and renewed it, and renewed it, without having performed one of its stipulations. Session after session he secured from the legislature of Ontario unconditional renewals of the powers granted by this Act until this awful calamity happened on the 25th of January, 1905. After that calamity he knocked but once more at the doors of the legislature and he was met with the condition that he must proceed with the work and must spend $300,000 in one year. What did he do? Not one single thing to carry out the conditions.

Mr. CONMEE. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is addressing his remarks to me. I had nothing to do with the railway company of which he speaks for more than 20 years.

Mr. BOYCE. Except as an incorporator, a provisional director.

Mr. CONMEE. My name was used on one or two occasions. I never had a dollar's interest in it, I never was a promoter, I was never anything more to the company than the member who introduced the Bill.

Mr. BOYCE. I was proceeding to say that the moment the Ontario legislature, as constituted in 1905, directed the company to do something to carry out the objects of incorporation and spend $300,000 in one year, the company, without having done one single thing, without having spent a dollar as ordered by the legislature, came to the parliament of Canada of which the hon. gentleman was then a member, and he said: 'This is a matter entirely and exclusively within the control of the Dominion parliament, it must be relegated to Dominion jurisdiction and there it must stay,' and that railway, which for all these years, had nestled snugly and safely in the lap of the provincial legislature, the moment something was to be done, the moment terms were imposed by the Tory administration, the hon. gentleman comes here and says: 'Jurisdiction over this company must be taken away from the province of Ontario and it must be declared a work for the general advantage of Canada.' The hon. gentleman argued from his place that the work mentioned in that Bill was a work for the general benefit of the Dominion of Canada, and he gave no other excuses for the non-performance of the conditions imposed by the legislature of Ontario in regard to promoting and safeguarding the interests of the public than that it had suddenly grown, by reason of this awful calamity, a work for the general advantage of Canada and this House so declared it.

Mr. CONMEE. Does the hon. gentleman say I was an incorporator of that company?

Mr. BOYCE. Yes, I say he was that.

Mr. CONMEE. If the hon. gentleman looks at the Act he will find he is mistaken.

Mr. BOYCE. Has he the document?

Mr. CONMEE. No.

Mr. BOYCE. Neither have I.

Mr. CONMEE. Then he should not make the statement.

Mr. BOYCE. I have made the statement before and you never denied it.

Mr. CONMEE. I deny it now.

Mr. BOYCE. I accept the hon. gentleman's denial.

Mr. CONMEE. I understood the hon. member to say that I was one of the incorporators of the company when it came here. I was not one of the promoters, not when it came here.

Mr. BOYCE. I did not say that. I do not want to do any injustice. I say that the hon. gentleman was one of the original incorporators and directors of that company when it was originally incorporated in the Ontario legislature.

Mr. CONMEE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say 'then what did the hon. gentleman do? He came down to this House,'—and then he went on to state what I had done here. I had nothing to do with the Bill for many years before it came here. Mr. Clergue and his companies had control of it.

Mr. BOYCE. I accept entirely the hon. gentleman's explanation of what happened after the incorporation of the company. This is one of the questions on which the hon. gentleman who has become an authority on these great constitutional questions, has changed his views. There are others. We listened to a learned disquisition on this subject from the Minister of Justice, and while the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Conmee) did not agree with the Minister of Justice in all respects, he went a little further in some respects. The hon. gentleman said in this House that this Nipigon river was an international stream.

Mr. CONMEE. No.

Mr. BOYCE. Was international in its character. At page 1068 of 'Hansard' the hon. member said:

> The Pigeon river is an international water and the Nipigon is a navigable water, and, in my opinion, also international in character.

Then at page 1069 we find:

> Mr. BOYCE. That is an international water.
>
> Mr. CONMEE. Certainly, so is the Nipigon river, to a certain extent at least, in my opinion.
> Mr. BOYCE. Not seriously?
> Mr. CONMEE. Yes, I am quite serious, and I am quite prepared to back up my opinion with sufficient evidence.

That was on the 15th of February, 1909, upon this very same Bill, and yet the hon. gentleman now argues solemnly before this committee that the Nipigon river is not an international stream, but that as a navigable stream it should be subject to the jurisdiction of this parliament.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman will pardon me for a moment. He has made the statement that I stated in the House that the Nipigon river was an international stream.

Mr. BOYCE. I read the hon. gentleman's remarks in 'Hansard.'

Mr. CONMEE. It does not matter what the hon. gentleman has read from 'Hansard.' I never made the statement. Another thing, I cannot find those words in 'Hansard.' The hon. member for Hastings repeated——

Mr. BOYCE. I gave place to the hon. member to ask a question, not to make a speech.

Mr. CONMEE. If the hon. member wants to insist on that sort of buncombe, I suppose he can do it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member should not use an expression of that kind.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I did not say that it was necessary for the hon. member to withdraw the expression. I think that much liberty of expression the Chairman has. I called his attention to it as an inappropriate expression, but it does not follow that on all occasions such expressions must be withdrawn.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman seems to be very scrupulous. I said I did not want to do him any injustice, and I quoted his words from 'Hansard'; and yet the hon. gentleman gets up and says he did not use those words and cannot find them. I will give him the pages—1068 and 1069, dated February the 15th, unrevised 'Hansard.' The first ground the hon. gentleman took to argue himself into a position to assert that this parliament and no other should have jurisdiction over the Nipigon river was that it was an international water—international in character; I suppose he means of international reputation. I think the hon. gentleman's remarks this afternoon have sufficiently disposed of that argument. Now, the hon. gentleman argues that by reason of the Nipigon river being a navigable river, this parliament should have jurisdiction over it. I take issue with my hon. friend upon that point; and in the next place, conceding for the sake of argument that the Nipigon river may be considered to be a navigable river for the purposes of this Act, the legislature of Ontario has full legislative jurisdiction. Looking at a sketch of the Nipigon river which I have I see that very close to the mouth of the river there are rapids, and that the river is navigable for a distance of only about three miles beyond those rapids until there is another rapid; that is, it is navigable in the sense of being deep enough for boats to travel between those two points. From there on it is not in any sense a navigable river. But if we concede for the sake of argument that the two or three miles between those two rapids make of the Nipigon river a navigable stream, what then? My hon. friend has quoted voluminously and learnedly from a case in law to establish the fact that where there is a navigable stream, the jurisdiction of the province must perforce cease; but there is where I must take issue with the hon. gentleman, and upon the very case which he has cited. He quotes from the decision of the Privy Council in the fisheries case, reported in Appeal Cases of 1898, at page 700. Lord Herschel was one of the Lords Justices who delivered judgment in that case, and this is what he said at page 714—and I commend it to the mature deliberation of my hon. friend from Thunder Bay and Rainy River, because he must have omitted this paragraph from the judgment which he read:

> Lord Herschel expressed the view that R.S.O., 1887, chap. 24, sec. 47, is within the legislative authority of Ontario, except so far as concerns lands in public harbours and canals, if any of the latter be included. This section authorizes the Lieutenant Governor to make sales or appropriations of 'land covered with water in the harbours, rivers and other navigable waters in Ontario, under such conditions as it has been or it may be deemed requisite to impose, but not so as to interfere with the use of any harbour as a harbour, or with the navigation of any harbour, river or other navigable waters.'

That is a part of the dictum in the fisheries case. Where does that leave my hon. friend? There is no part of the Nipigon river which the hon. gentleman proposes to develop under this power Bill which can by any stretch of imagination be said to be navigable. Nothing that the Ontario legislature could do in the exercise of its legislative jurisdiction could possibly interfere with the navigation of that river. My hon. friend must therefore see that where there is no interference by the actual exercise of jurisdiction by the local legislature, there is no clash of jurisdiction with the Dominion parliament, and the matter rests solely within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature. But my hon. friend has experienced, even in this connection, and it is lamentable to notice it, a great change of heart—a great reversal of judgment; and I cannot understand why he should have reversed his judgment when he thought that the judgment he expressed to-day was so much in line with what Lord Herschel and the Lords Justices had said in deciding the fisheries case. The hon. gentleman's argument to-day was in line with the way in which he read the fisheries case, when he said that where there was a navigable river and where the works proposed to be constructed would interfere with the navigation of that river, then the jurisdiction passed to this parliament. After first approving of that decision of the Privy Council, after removing for all time any doubt as to what their lordships really meant, after having given the people of Canada his dictum as to what was in their lordships' mind, when they gave that judgment, although not expressed in it, my hon. friend said—and I refer to his remarks because they are very pertinent in this connection. They will be found on page 66697 of 'Hansard,' June 30, 1906:

> Whatever power is available for the Canadian side is a question entirely within the jurisdiction of the Ontario government, first, as regards the use of the bed of the river for that purpose, and second, of this government as regards the use of the stream, because it is an international stream.

Does the hon. gentleman say that to-day?

Mr. CONMEE. Certainly. I have never argued that the provincial government had not rights. But what I say is that whatever rights they have, whether in an international stream or a navigable stream, are not interfered with by this Bill.

Mr. BOYCE. The quotation I have read refers to the St. Mary's river, which undoubtedly is an international stream, and in that connection he says you have to go to Ontario in order to get your rights.

Mr. CONMEE. Not at all.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman said:

Whatever power is available for the Canadian side is a question entirely within the jurisdiction, as I understand it, first, of the Ontario government as regards the use of the bed of the river——

The hon. gentleman was talking about the St. Mary's river, which is an international and navigable stream, and he says that the first thing you have to do is to go to the Ontario government because it owns the bed of the stream.

Mr. CONMEE. If the hon. gentleman will only use my words and not enlarge on them the committee will understand him better.

Mr. BOYCE. I must ask my hon. friend to allow me to retain the floor.

Mr. CONMEE. Go on and make all the misrepresentations you please.

Mr. BOYCE. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman must withdraw those words.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member has no right to charge misrepresentation, and I hope he will withdraw the expression.

Mr. CONMEE. Surely no one is obliged to sit and listen to another misrepresenting his words without making some protest.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has no right to make comments on my ruling, but must withdraw the expression which I have ruled out of order.

Mr. CONMEE. I said that I never made use of the words the hon. gentleman attributed to me, and under the rules of the House he is bound to take my word.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has the right to make an explanation on the point of order, but not to make a speech or any lengthy remarks.

Mr. CONMEE. What I say is that I never used the language the hon. gentleman has attributed to me. I went on to correct him and he objected. I never used the language or contended for the principle he imputes to me.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman said to the hon. member for Algoma that he could go on and make misrepresentations to any extent he saw fit.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That was the expression I thought not in order, and the hon. gentleman must withdraw both the use of the word 'you,' thus addressing a member directly insisted of the Chair, and the charging of an hon. member with misrepresentation.

Mr. CONMEE. I bow, Sir, to your ruling, but let me ask that the rules of the House be enforced equally against all members. I rose in my place and said I had not used the words which the hon. gentleman cited as mine, and he continued to repeat them, and was not called to order. I ask now that he be called to order regarding the statement he has made.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is too late now to raise a point of order with regard to words uttered some time ago. Had I noticed any unparliamentary words I would have had them withdrawn, but my attention was not called to any such. I understand that the hon .member for Rainy River has withdrawn the expression I ruled out of order.

Mr. BOYCE. You state, Sir, that the hon. gentleman has withdrawn the expressions. I have read the hon. gentleman's words as they appear in the records of the House. The hon. gentleman stood up and said he did not use these words.

Mr. CONMEE. I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw that statement. I have no objection to his reading any words I have uttered, but what I do object to is the misrepresentation he applies to them. What I object to is his misrepresentation of my words and not to his reading them.

Mr. BOYCE. I was proceeding to state that the position which the hon. gentleman found it then expedient to take was a position, as appears by his own words, that in St. Mary's river, an international, navigable stream, whatever powers are there available for the Canadian side come entirely within the jurisdiction, first, of the Ontario government as regards the bed of the river, and secondly, of this government, as regards the use of the water. He could not have made use of a broader example, because, if there be any stream in Canada in which there would be an interference by the provincial government in the exercise of what it conceived to be its legislative jurisdiction, it would be that river because it combines the two elements about which my hon. friend has argued separately. Because, in the Nipigon river he has, according to his own contention, a navigable, but—contrary to his own contention on the same Bill a few days ago—not an international stream; and in the Pigeon river, he has an international, though I understand that he does not argue it to be a navigable stream.

Mr. CONMEE. I argued that both were navigable.

Mr. BOYCE. Then, I misunderstood the hon. gentleman. But, as I say, the hon. gentleman has stated as strong a case as possible for the contention that where you have an international and navigable stream, you must go to the provincial legislature for whatever power you require. And therefore I say to him now that I accept his word as contained in that argument, and I say that is the place for him to go and that is where he ought to be.

Mr. CONMEE. I again call attention to the hon. member's (Mr. Boyce's) course. In the language which he read, I merely stated that the ownership, or control if you choose to use the word, of the bed of the river was in the provincial government, and the hon. gentleman continues to misrepresent in that respect.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) did not say that. In order that he may not forget the words to which I have referred, I will read them again:

> Whatever power is available for the Canadian side is a question entirely within the jurisdiction, as I understand it, first, of the Ontario government as regards the use of the bed of the river for that purpose; and, second, of this government as regards the use of the water, because it is an international stream, and I assume they would have to get the consent of this government.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BOYCE. When you left the Chair, Mr. Chairman, I was proceeding to discuss the question of a navigable water as affecting the question of jurisdiction, and as being one of the excuses which the hon. member who is promoting this Bill has put forth, supported by the Minister of Justice, for interference with what I conceive to be the exclusive jurisdiction of the province of Ontario in this case, and of other provinces in cases of a similar nature. The main contention of my hon. friend, as I understand, is that because the Nipigon and Pigeon rivers are navigable to some extent, any works for the development of power, or any works which in any way encroach upon these navigable rivers, would be beyond the jurisdiction of the province, and therefore ultra vires of its legislature. Now I do not understand that there is any longer any virtue in that argument, I understand that such arguments have been at least discussed by the fisheries case, and disposed of by another case with which I suppose my hon. friend is familiar, that is the case of McMillan vs. South West Boom Company, reported in 2 Cartwright, page 542. The gist of that decision is that the fact that a river is navigable does not in itself alone transfer that river to the Dominion jurisdiction. That is the gist of the decision in the McMillan case, and it runs through the Fisheries case, as I have shown, and is in accordance, as I understand it, with the views laid down by my hon. friend himself three years ago. If I were to go further along the line I was following before recess, I would point out to my hon. friend the position in which he found himself when he advocated that principle. He was asking this parliament to declare as a work for the general benefit of Canada a railway company which was incorporated in Ontario and continued to be under provincial jurisdiction. I know he will remember, and that other members of the committee will remember, the strenuous objection that was raised from this side of the House on the ground that the declaration of that work as one for the general advantage of Canada would seriously interfere with provincial jurisdiction, and would deprive the province of certain water-powers which were in a state of semi-development on that river. My hon. friend's contention, in order to get his measure through, was this: 'We cannot take your water-powers, we are not interfering with your water-powers; if we wished to interfere with your water-powers we could not for the reason'—and the reason is given in the quotation I made to my hon. friend of his own words—'that these water-powers are entirely within the jurisdiction, first, of the province of Ontario as regards the river bed, and secondly, of this parliament as regards the question of an international stream.' Now my hon. friend has said that these are powers which should not be given by the Ontario legislature, that they are powers ultra vires of the Ontario legislature. My answer to that is what my hon. friend announced as his principle on the 30th day of June, 1905, and that he had consistently adhered to prior to that time; because I find on reference to the Acts of the Ontario legislature so far back as 1886, which was the year after my hon. friend first entered public life and became a legislator in this country, that he introduced a measure, or was the promoter of a measure, called the Ontario & Rainy River Railway Company, incorporated by chapter 75 of the Ontario Act of 1886, and I commend to my hon. friend the reading of some of the powers which are given to that company by that Act. It was an Ontario railway which was promoted towards Rat-Portage, and by section 33, these powers were given to that company:

> It shall and may be lawful for the company at any point where the railway, or any branch thereof, approaches within two miles of any navigable waters, to purchase and hold as its absolute property, and for the use of the company, wharfs, piers, docks, water lots, water frontages, and lands; and upon the said water lots, water frontages and lands, and in and over the waters adjoining the same, to build and erect elevators, storehouses, warehouses and engine houses, sheds, wharfs, docks, piers and other erections.

'On navigable waters,' which are as my hon. friend contends now, absolutely and exclusively within the jurisdiction of this parliament. So we find the hon. gentleman, during the time the late Hon. Mr. Mowat was Prime Minister of Ontario, promoting and advocating a Bill and getting it carried into law, giving to this company all sorts of powers which are exercised upon navigable waters. Well, if I wanted to elaborate and multiply instances, I might also refer my hon. friend to the Bill incorporating the Pacific and Atlantic Railway Company, the very railway which we were discussing before recess. Section 6 of the Act, which is chapter 76 of the Ontario statutes of 1886, gives the company power:

To purchase, lease, or acquire at any point where their railway or any branch thereof touches, or approaches within two miles of any navigable waters, sufficient land for the uses of the company, their railway and vessels run or navigated in connection with said railway, and the company may erect warehouses, elevators, docks, wharfs, stations, workshops, and such other buildings as may be necessary for the purposes of the company, and may sell and convey such land as may be found superfluous for any such purposes.

These are similar powers to those given to the Ontario & Rainy River Railway Company. My hon. friend admitted that he was the promoter of this Bill. I also noticed that by section 1, one J. Conmee is an incorporator of the company and a provisional director. So that my hon. friend was doing——

Mr. CONMEE. When was that?

Mr. BOYCE. In 1886——

Mr. CONMEE. Oh.

Mr. BOYCE. Do I understand my hon. friend to say that that was not he?

Mr. CONMEE. No, I was only asking the date. Go ahead; it is all right.

Mr. BOYCE. 1886. So that what my hon. friend was doing, in the Ontario legislature in 1886, a year after he came into public life, when he had drawn the first innocent breaths of his political career, before he had become contaminated by his associations and by different spheres of activity——

Mr. CONMEE. Be careful now.

Mr. BOYCE. What he was doing, as the promoter of a Bill of which he himself was incorporator and a provisional director, was exactly what he now says the Ontario legislature has no power to do, namely, to give power to construct works upon navigable waters. The other excuse that my hon. friend puts forward, and one which was emphasized very strongly by the Minister of Justice, had reference to the right given to this company to export power. I must confess that it was a somewhat shocking and sweeping proposition for the Minister of Justice to say that because this company purported to have power to export its surplus product to the United States, the Ontario legislature was deprived of jurisdiction to legislate with reference to this matter and that therefore the question was brought exclusively within the jurisdiction of this parliament. I was not absolutely certain that that was what the Minister of Justice meant to say and I sent him over a written question in order that I might be sure. He read that question over and sent an answer in the affirmative. Let us see where that leads us. Because there is inserted in any Dominion Bill introduced on behalf of a company seeking power to export its surplus product to the United States the Ontario legislature is deprived of jurisdiction. What is to prevent any power company under the sun from coming to this House, putting in its Bill the right to export its surplus product and thus take away from the province of Ontario every vestige of power rights it has? I think this committee will desire something more weighty from the Minister of Justice than a proposition like that. It certainly does not appeal to me as being founded on sound common sense from the legal point of view, and it is certainly not such an opinion as we should expect to receive from that hon. gentleman. But it does seem to me that if ever there was a paltry, flimsy excuse by which the jurisdiction that the Ontario government is exercising with regard to the power question can be stolen from it the Minister of Justice gave it to this committee this afternoon in the speech which he made.

Now, I want to refer for a moment to some of the Ontario legislation with respect to power. I will first refer to the Act which was passed by the Ontario legislature respecting water-powers in 1898. By that Act, Chapter 8, the commissioner of Crown lands was given power to:

Reserve from sale any water-power or privilege on the Crown lands of the province, and a sufficient area of land in connection therewith for the erection of buildings and plant, together with the right to lay out and use such roads as may be necessary for passage to and from such water-power or privilege and land, and may under regulations to be approved by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, make terms and conditions upon which such water-power and land so reserved may be sold, or leased, and developed.

That was assented to on the 17th January 1889. At that time the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River was a supporter of the government in the Ontario legislature, and I do not know that he lifted up his voice or made any very strenuous objection to the Ontario government exercising control over the waters or over the bed of the river when they took that course. Then again, following the history of Ontario legislation in regard to power, we find an Act passed in 1903, just before the late government went out of power. That was an Act providing for the construction of municipal power works and the transmission, distribution and supply of electrical and other power and energy. I shall not take up the time of the committee by reading it at length, but I would commend to my hon. friend and to other members of the committee the full powers which are given to the municipal commission under this Act for the acquisition and the control of power rights. Then, we find that the present government, in the year 1906, introduced an Act which was passed by the legislature of Ontario, being chapter 15, and entitled 'An Act to provide for the transmission of electrical power to municipalities'; otherwise known as the Hydro-Electric Power Commission Act. It gave certain powers to a commission to examine into, to inquire and to report upon water-powers in the province of Ontario. By section 11 that Act provides :

The commission may, from time to time, report to the Governor in Council, designating such lands, water privileges, water-powers or the lands, works, machinery and plant, or any portion thereof of any company or person owning, or holding under lease or otherwise, or developing, operating or using any water privilege or water-power, or transmitting electrical or other power or energy in the province of Ontario which should, in the opinion of the commission, be purchased, acquired, leased, taken or expropriated, developed, operated or used by the commission for the purposes of this Act, or may designate what quantity of the product of any such corporation or individual developing electrical power or energy in the province of Ontario, or purchasing such power or energy the commission requires for the purposes of this Act.

Again, by section 12, the Lieutenant-Governor was authorized:

to acquire by purchase, lease or otherwise, or without the consent of the owners thereof, or persons interested therein to enter upon, take and use the lands, works, plant and property of any company or person owning, using and developing or operating lands, water, water privileges, or works, plant and machinery for the development of any water privilege or water-power for the purpose of generating electrical power or energy, or for the transmission thereof in the province of Ontario, and to develop and supply electrical power or energy.

That was an absolute legislative assertion of the right of the province of Ontario to deal with and to exercise control of, to expropriate and to manage exclusively any water-powers in the province of Ontario and to control the rates. That power policy has been approved of by the people of Ontario and is now being carried out by the government of that province to the great and lasting benefit of the people. The power commission appointed by the Ontario government made a special report with regard to the water-powers in the Algoma, Thunder Bay and Rainy River districts. In that report the very water-power sought to be acquired by this company is dealt with as a part of the power policy of the Ontario government. At page 17 of the commission's fifth report there is a reference to the Cameron Rapids development, the very power which my hon. friend in committee admitted this company proposed to use. How then could this parliament authorize a company to utilize that power without a direct clash of authority?

Section 8 of this Bill provides:

The company may—

(a) acquire, develop, improve, maintain and operate water-powers, use, supply and sell water-power for any purpose, by any means of application, generate, by means of water-power or otherwise, electricity, heat, light and any other form of energy, and transmit the same by any means to, and supply and sell the same for use in any manner at, any place in Canada and the United States.

The one point on the Nipigon river is the very point referred to in the report of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission.

The last report of the Waterways Commission, which is a Dominion commission, expressly seeks to prevent the giving away of any further water-powers until such time as a thorough examination shall be made as to their extent and development. Supplementing that I would quote from a newspaper account of a very interesting lecture delivered here by Professor Shortt before the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers, on 'Water-powers.' The keynote to his address was: 'Keep your water-powers, do not give them away or dissipate them now because therein lies the future welfare of the manufacturing industries of this country.' May I quote from the report of Professor Shortt's address in the Ottawa 'Citizen' of April 5:

The people of Canada were beginning to wake up to the fact that the resources of the country were being rapidly depleted and from this awakening the movement for the conservation of resources had sprung. The recent conference at Washington had been a very hopeful sign, and the document sent to Canada as the result was a wise one. It was vital that the idea of conserving resources should be brought home to the individual realization of the people of the continent. The steps already taken should be augmented by the full awakening of public sentiment.

The water resources of Canada were of special importance on account of the immense economic possibilities of the water regions of the country.

Professor Shortt is an eminent authority upon economic questions and has devoted a great deal of study to the question of our natural resources. It will be a serious handicap to our industrial development if the government continues to give away our water-powers.

We were told in one of the committees of the House the other day by a gentleman who was called before that committee as an expert that the National Transcontinental Railway Commission had now under consideration the electrifying of their railway right in this Nipigon region. It is the most expensive part of the railway to run, the part where fuel is most difficult to get, and the part where the cost of operation will be most heavy. Therefore, it is surely very much in the interest of the people of Canada that the cost of operating that railway should be minimized as much as possible. But if the largest water-power in that district, the Cameron Rapids, is given to a private corporation, where is the benefit of that power to the people of Canada? Where is the opportunity for the National Transcontinental Railway Commissioners in the future, ten or twenty years from now, to give to the people of Canada on that portion of the railway which is being built for and will be owned by the people of Canada, the advantage of lessening the cost of operation of the railway, which will be enormous in any event? The future of the towns on the great lakes is a manufacturing future. Large manufacturing industries will undoubtedly be established there, it may be in a very short time. The natural fuel there is white coal, from the water-powers which nature has so lavishly bestowed on that country, and if we are to have, as we all hope we shall have, large manufacturing centres established on the great lakes, what greater impetus can there be to the easy and expeditious establishment of such industries than the fact that we are conserving the magnificent water-powers which will give the power to turn the wheels of those great industries? My hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) has just placed in my hands an extract from an address before the Ottawa Canadian Club on this subject by Mr. Gifford Pinchot, in which he said:

> Coal will be finished by the middle of the next century. High grade iron ores, oil and gas will disappear by the middle of this century. Waste by erosion of lands easily prevented was incalculable. Forests were not producing anything like what they should; of every 1,000 board feet of lumber in the woods only 310 was made into lumber. The reasonably available water-power in the United States could operate every railway, run every trolley car, light every home, turn every spindle in the country. If coal disappeared at once, water-power could easily take its place. The commission (the International Conservation Commission of the United States) found that these water-powers were fast becoming controlled by far-sighted capitalists. If this were carried on the nation would find itself, when coal was used up, at the mercy of the greatest monopoly ever formed in the world. For when fuel disappears for motive power, heat and light, every one must go to the water-power for it.

There is one of the most cogent hints ever given by a man well versed in the subject to this government to conserve the water-powers and to refuse to put the water-powers of our country under the control of capitalists and corporations. Now, a word with regard to the position taken by the hon. Minister of Justice. That hon. gentleman, in a speech delivered in this House during this session, stated that his party was the champion of provincial rights. In contrast with the attitude taken by the hon. minister upon this Bill, his prior statement is open to some exception. He virtually tacitly assents to the measure now before this committee, which takes from the legislative control of the province of Ontario the whole of the bed of the Nipigon river and half of the bed of the Pigeon river, upon the legal or legislative fiction, first, that these rivers are at those points navigable waters, and, secondly, that power is to be exported to the United States of America in each case. Both of those arguments could be applied to every river and stream in the province of Ontario. If it is because the Nipigon river is navigable for two miles, several miles below the point at which my hon. friend's company proposes to take its power, that this government claims jurisdiction, as in the case of the Pigeon river, the same legislative fiction could be applied to every river and stream in the province of Ontario, because at some point or other every river and stream can be said to be navigable by the application of the same logic by which my hon. friend reaches the conclusion that the Nipigon river and the Pigeon river are navigable. Then you have no reason for denying to any company the right to come to this parliament and ask for the water-powers on any stream or river in Ontario. My hon. friend has referred to the Bill respecting the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company. If the hon. gentleman had carefully considered the situation before he cited that Bill as a part of his case, he would have hesitated. Let us see where it would land him. My hon. friend is claiming that this parliament has power and that the legislature of Ontario has no power to give to the Ontario and Michigan Power Company the right to own, control, develop and operate water-powers on the Pigeon and Nipigon rivers. He cites the case of the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, which in the year 1905 came to this parliament to ask by private legislation for certain powers. My hon. friend was the promoter of that Bill, and certain powers were granted subject to certain conditions.

Mr. CONMEE. No, I was not the promoter. I opposed the Bill.

Mr. BOYCE. That legislation passed and certain powers were granted over an international stream practically along the lines of this Bill. My hon. friend referred to it as a precedent for the very legislation he is now introducing.

Mr. CONMEE. I did not cite the case of the Ontario and Minnesota Power Bill as a justification for this measure, but as a case in which the interests of the people were not guarded by provincial legislation.

Mr. BOYCE. That legislation passed, and in the year 1906, we find that company going to the Ontario legislature for the Act to which my hon. friend has referred. Why did it go to the Ontario government after having come here?

Mr. CONMEE. They went there to escape the obligations which this parliament imposed upon them in the interests of the people.

Mr. BOYCE. I accept, so far as it goes, my hon. friend's explanation, but I do not know that it places him in any better position. They went because it was contended that the company was not bound by the conditions imposed by this parliament but was entitled to deal with the water-power free from the restrictions imposed by the Dominion Act. What is the provincial legislation which was granted? Clause 1 gives the company the right to provide power on the Canadian side of the river. Subsection 2 provides that the works shall be on the Canadian side. Subsection 3 provides for the settlement of any dispute regarding the rates to be charged for the power, bringing the whole question back within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislation. In answer to my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) my hon. friend said that the Ontario government were usurping the jurisdiction of this parliament in passing that Bill.

Mr. CONMEE. Yes.

Mr. BOYCE. He further said that that Act was ultra vires the province of Ontario. The Minister of Justice made a similar argument this afternoon. If what he said was the case with regard to the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, as it should be with the Ontario and Michigan Power Company, that Act was ultra vires the province of Ontario. But did we hear of any application for disallowance? Did my hon. friend make any such application? Why did he, with all his knowledge of constitutional questions, not suggest to the Minister of Justice that that Act was ultra vires of the province of Ontario and a usurpation by that province of the rights of this parliament? I do not know that the argument of the Minister of Justice could have any more conclusive answer than my hon. friend has given him in the case he cited of the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company, because if there be any virtue in the argument of the Minister of Justice or of my hon. friend, the Ontario government had no power to pass that Act and it should have been disallowed. However, it was not disallowed and remains to-day as law, although to-day it is recognized as a usurpation of the jurisdiction of this parliament by that same minister, before whom it came up in order to determine whether it was a proper Act for the Ontario legislature to pass or not. He must therefore be assumed to have passed upon its validity and to have recognized that the Ontario government had the power to control the water in an international and navigable stream. Consequently his action in that matter negatives his argument to-day.

One more word and I am glad to see the right hon. the Prime Minister in his place. The right hon. gentleman has adopted the policy of the conservation of our natural resources. But the most important of those is our water-powers. Is he going, notwithstanding the warnings of men like Prof. Shortt and Mr. Pinchot and the speeches made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), to allow the water-powers of this country to be given over to the control of corporations, which will thereby obtain vested rights in them to the great disadvantage of our people, particularly in the future when our New Ontario will have blossomed as the rose. Of what use will be the committee which the right hon. gentleman has appointed on our forests, waterways and water-powers, unless such questions as this are to be brought before it? Why could not this Bill be referred to that committee? I again appeal to him to carry out his policy of conservation and to stick to his principle of provincial rights. There is here a very serious conflict of jurisdiction from which he cannot escape. The Ontario government takes control of certain powers in certain rivers and streams in Ontario and provides for the regulating and developing of those powers and the rates that shall be charged the public for their use. That policy is a popular one endorsed by the people of that province. This Bill cannot be regarded as other than a direct and flagrant interference with that policy and an attempt to wrest from the province of Ontario the jurisdiction given it by our constitution, by our laws, by the precedents of our judges in contested cases, and by the right of user. Therefore, I say to the right hon. the Prime Minister that I sincerely hope, before he allows this Bill to go, either now in committee or before it has received its third reading, he will consider well these two questions, the question of provincial rights, and the question of conservation of our natural national resources, that he will look to the future, and will stay this Bill with what I conceive to be its iniquitious provisions and the extraordinary powers it grants.

Mr. LENNOX. There has been a great deal of argument on this Bill which we should take very seriously into consideration. I do not think I shall go into the question, interesting as it is, of jurisdiction. I think that has been presented so very well from this side of the House that it is almost useless to argue it further. Of course I was very much interested in the elaborate argument of the hon. member (Mr. Conmee) who is promoting the Bill. It is always interesting to hear him speak, and especially to hear him deal with questions of law. In fact, we had rather a rare treat this afternoon, because we had first the learned and clever argument of the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Aylesworth) which I think I can compliment myself on having elicited, and then we had the speech of what I may call the junior counsel, the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee). It is always particularly interesting to hear him deal, with such complete confidence as he shows with legal questions, especially those questions that are probably more difficult than any others, the questions of jurisdiction between the province and the Dominion. I am sorry that I cannot transfer to 'Hansard' and embalm in its pages a very pretty little picture I clipped some time ago from the Toronto 'Telegram.' It expresses the situation very nicely. It shows upon the platform the hon. gentleman who is promoting this Bill—an excellent likeness of him, as any one who looks at the picture will recognize—He is in an eloquent attitude, and fortified with a glass and pitcher—I presume, of water—and evidently intends to discuss the question at any length as he discussed this afternoon the question of law. Sir J. P. Whitney is figuratively at the feet of this Gamaliel, below the platform. He ventures a suggestion, 'You cannot give a charter contrary to provincial rights.' Sir. J. P. Whitney has not been in the House of Commons, or he would recognize that that is limiting our power very decidedly, and that we can and that we do grant charters contrary to provincial rights. But my hon. friend from Thunder Bay and Rainy River sets Sir J. P. Whitney right, and expresses the situation in a few words. I may say that the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Aylesworth) is represented in the picture also, in a somewhat less conspicuous attitude than the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River, and a very excellent likeness of the Minister of Justice it is as well. To Sir J. P. Whitney replies James Conmee, J.P., M.P., expressing himself much to the same effect as he did this afternoon: 'If me and me learned friend Brother Aylesworth read the British North America Act aright, we kin give a man a charter to take the furnace out of your cellar for the general advantage of Canada.'

Mr. CALVERT. Is that sarcasm?

Mr. LENNOX. Perhaps? I am not responsible for it. It is from a leading daily newspaper, the 'Evening Telegram' of Toronto.

Mr. CONMEE. Mr. Chairman, I would call your attention to the action of the hon. member (Mr. Lennox). I do not think he has any right, according to the ruling this afternoon, to read articles that reflect upon members of this House.

Mr. LENNOX. I might just interject here that this——

Mr. CONMEE. I have called attention to a point of order.

Mr. LENNOX. I suppose I may address the chair on the point of order—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is a definite rule under which I ruled this afternoon. I scarcely think the item desirable, but I am not prepared to rule it out of order as a reflection upon the hon member (Mr. Conmee).

Mr. CONMEE. I call attention to the language. I do not object to the picture, but the language used would certainly fall under rule 19 as well as other rules of the House as I understand them.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If I thought the article really reflected injuriously upon the hon. gentleman, I would not allow it, but I do not think it does.

Mr. LENNOX. This matter is really becoming a roaring farce—

Mr. CONMEE. I think so.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is not allowable to characterize any proceeding of this House as 'a roaring farce.'

Mr. LENNOX. I withdraw 'roaring farce,' Mr. Chairman. It would be a roaring farce if it were outside. But I may be permitted to say that we can carry to an absurd length the practice of constantly objecting to statements made in the House. The matter I have referred to concerning my hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) is such that a man has to be very sensitive and thin-skinned indeed—my hon. friend is a very sensitive gentleman, I presume—to feel hurt or injured by it. I do not know anybody who could be more perturbed than I would be if I intentionally caused any worry to the hon. gentleman. I recognize that he has the greatest consideration for every hon. member on this side of the House, and it would be very bad taste on my part to say anything that would cause him annoyance. I hope he will not object to my paying him a little special attention, if he would so designate it, in reference to his Bill—without any covert meaning on the word 'special' either. But I regard his Bill as of sufficient importance to call for very careful attention, not to say special attention, on the part of hon members of this House.

Now, I said I would not discuss the question of jurisdiction. But I want to say as distinctly as I can that it is our duty to consider his measure very carefully from the point of view of policy. If you admit that we have jurisdiction to pass this Bill, still, as the Minister of Justice said this afternoon, there remains the great question whether it is judicious, expedient, wise, to enact this legislation, and it is from that point of view, Mr. Chairman, that I wish to speak for a few minutes. Like all legislative bodies, we do unwise things at times. I venture to say that we will do nothing more unwise this session than we will do if we pass this legislation, speaking from the standpoint of expediency alone. What are we doing? We are giving a company which is incorporated, not for patriotic purposes, not for the development of any portion of our territory, but for purely speculative and profitable purposes; and we are giving them without one dollar, a right to exploit our rivers, and to collect the latent energy that lies in those rivers, the enormous wealth those water-powers afford to the people of the province of Ontario, and this in face of the fact that the Whitney government have adopted a policy for developing this power throughout Ontario for the benefit of the people, which we are handing over to a corporation to use for their own advantage; and worse than that, to export at least one-half of that power, at their will, into the territory of a foreign power, and by means of that exported energy to enable those people to build up rival institutions in the United States to the detriment of the Dominion of Canada—that is what we are doing. From that standpoint I for one will oppose to the utmost this legislation and this class of legislation. I have no quarrel with my hon. friend. He and I have had some little passages, and with pleasure I have read the graphic accounts of it in the organ of the Minister of Agriculture, my hon. friend the 'Farmer;' I have read the manner in which I was raked fore and aft by my hon. friend, and how I was completely wiped out the other day. But all the same, I have no hard feelings towards my hon. friend, I am only trying to guard the interests of the people of Ontario and of the people of Canada. We are going to send abroad that which would be our capital at home, which would build up industries in our own country, which would afford occupation for our people, which would develop markets for every person in the country, markets for the farmer, markets for the butcher, markets for the baker, markets for the artisan, and employment for the doctor, and for that most deserving class of all, the lawyers, and work for all; and whilst we are robbing ourselves, we are doing the double injury to this country of building up rival institutions on the other side of the line. We can do nothing more insane than that. An hon. gentleman said to me to-night in conversation 'why, we have done it before.' Yes, we have done lots of unwise things before. I am ashamed to recollect that whilst I listened to that Bill going through, yet because I did not feel I could effectually oppose it, I let it go through virtually without protesting against it. But I venture to say we will be doing less than our duty if we allow any more of these Bills to go through. We should say in every case—and I appeal to the Prime Minister on this matter—that we will not allow any private corporation to develop power from the energy of our rivers, from that great wealth Providence has given us, and export that into foreign territory, with the result that our young men will have to go out and work in that foreign territory, and we shall be compelled to buy back the goods which should be manufactured within our own borders.

Now let me refer to what was said about this matter a year or two ago when this Bill was before parliament on a previous occasion. I think I may say that whilst we are to form our own opinion about these matters, yet surely if we are to live in harmony and work in harmony for the development of Canada, it ought to be the object of this parliament at Ottawa, as far as possible, to work in unison with the interests and the aims of the legislatures of the various provinces. Now, the Ontario government has developed and has set in operation a great scheme for serving the people by means of the energy and the power latent in its water-powers. When the Bill was before the Canadian parliament to incorporate the Ontario and Michigan Power Company a year ago, Mr. Whitney introduced the following resolution in the Ontario legislature. After reciting the Bills, the resolution affirms:

That the effect of the proposed legislation will be to enable the company, without the consent of the province, to possess itself of valuable water privileges and powers owned by the province, and to export from Ontario the power generated by means of them.

That the proposed legislation will have the effect of preventing the province from utilizing, in accordance with its declared policy, the valuable water privileges and powers of the Pigeon, Nipigon and Sturgeon rivers for the benefit of the public, and will enable the proposed company to exploit them for private gain.

That this House views with alarm the repeated encroachments of the parliament of Canada on the rights of the province, and its efforts to withdraw from provincial jurisdiction and control works of a purely provincial character, and earnestly protests against such action, which this House believes to be contrary, if not to the letter, to the spirit of the British North America Act and to the intention of the framers.

That in the opinion of this House the proposed legislation would be an unwarranted and illegal interference with the territorial sovereignty of the province, and with its exclusive legislative authority under the British North America Act, and this House earnestly and firmly protests against the proposed Bill being given the form of law.

And this House hereby declares its readiness and determination——

Remember that this resolution passed unanimously, Liberals as well as Conservatives supporting it.

And this House hereby declares its readiness and determination to support with all the means, constitutional and material, which it can command, the government of Ontario in taking such measures and proceedings as may be deemed requisite to assert, maintain and defend the legislative and territorial sovereignty of the province against all aggression and encroachment by the federal government and parliament, and if necessary in appealing to the imperial parliament for such amendments to the British North America Act as will safeguard the sovereignty of the provinces therefrom.

It has been ruled this afternoon that we are not at liberty to quote here, for the benefit of hon. gentlemen, and in order to remind them of what they are forgetting, from editorials of the 'Globe.' But we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that the press of the country, the 'Globe' amongst other leading papers, are being aroused to the circumstance that members of this parliament, led by the right hon. gentleman, is receding far from their former declarations as to provincial rights, and that no people are more alarmed than the Liberals themselves at the attitude that the government has assumed in this regard. I am sincerely glad that, although there is not that evidence of complete amendment which we could desire, yet there is some evidence of improvement, of contrition, on the part of the government in the announcement made this afternoon by the Minister of Justice. We have been fighting strenuously against that iniquitous proposition which has been incorporated in so many Bills declaring, absolutely without evidence, that the enactment is for the general advantage of Canada. I am glad that the Minister of Justice, to-day, has to some extent come over to the views of the opposition by declaring that he cannot support that declaration in this charter. As regards the second clause he says that it is impossible to say that this is an enactment for the general advantage of Canada and that the clause should be struck out. In 1905 I find that Sir Wm. Mulock, in this House, enunciated sentiments somewhat along the same line, but I am sorry to say that the government has had a sad relapse since then. Sir Wm. Mulock said:

I think there is much in the observation of my hon. friend. The parliament of Canada has, in the past, been too careless in seizing and usurping jurisdiction by declaring works to be for the general advantage of Canada without having some inquiry to justify that declaration.

We have been doing that and there is nothing fraught with greater danger to the maintenance of the proper relations between the provinces and the Dominion. There is nothing fraught with greater danger to the Dominion as a whole than in the parliament of Canada, with a strong hand, in defiance of fact and evidence and without justification, seizing to itself certain rights which it does not, in justice or in fact, possess, by merely making the bald declaration that the work is for the general advantage of Canada. We will have that provision eliminated from this Act. On the other hand, I ask the government at this stage to pause and consider whether some other policy, aside altogether from all technicality and keeping in view the best interests of Canada, with the object of conserving our great waterfalls for the development of the industrial interests of Canada, for the building up of enterprises within our own limits, and increasing our population and wealth should not be adopted. I would ask the government whether it is wise or expedient to permit a private corporation to have control of a great source of wealth such as this, to exploit it and to export it to a foreign land in rivalry with the industries of the people of Canada?

Mr. BARR. Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to detain the committee with any extended remarks on this occasion, but I would not like to see this Bill, that I consider so important to this country, pass without entering my solemn protest against the interference with the rights of the province of Ontario which is involved in the measure. I do not think that any speaker on the other side of the House contended that this Bill does not enroach upon provincial rights. I was somewhat surprised at the speech of the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth). Brilliant and strong as it was thought to be and as it was, and no doubt intended as it was to make an impression on this committee, I could not help noticing that he balanced and turned one way and the other to as great an extent as it was possible for him to do. I do not believe that he liked the task imposed upon him of defending so iniquitous a Bill as this one is. The only argument that he put forward in support of this Bill was that it had passed the committee, and he said that, in having passed the committee, this House should adopt it. I think that is the most dangerous doctrine that can be put forward. It would be a severe blow to the independence of this House if we were to consider that any Bill that had passed the railway or any other committee should go through this House in the form in which it had come from the committee. That committee is only intended to investigate and inquire, but it was never intended that the consideration of a Bill by the committee should ensure its passage through this House. What are the facts in connection with this Bill? If there was ever a Bill which had passed the Railway Committee which should receive careful consideration at the hands of this House it is the Bill which we have now before us. There are a number of the members of the committee who take a deep interest in the different Bills that come before it, but I am sorry to say—and I am not speaking of one side or the other—that there is a large quantiy of voting material available when it is required. Whenever a Bill is presented which is difficult to get through the committee and this House there is a certain amount of drumming up in order to fill the back seats of the committee—the smoking department of it—and the result is that when voting time comes these members are on hand to give their votes although many of them do not know anything of the merits or demerits of the Bill. This is a Bill in which the drumming up process was in evidence to a greater extent than in regard to any Bill which we have had before the committee this session. When this Bill was before the Railway Committee, while we pointed to the iniquitous part of it, we had only to look around and see behind the force that could vote down our objections, no matter what arguments we employed, no matter what position we took upon this great question that we consider of the utmost importance. It was under these circumstances that a vote was not insisted upon in the committee. We said: Let the Bill go through and throw the responsibility upon them. We could scarcely get in a remark because we could not occupy five minutes without such a noise being made behind us that we could not be heard. That was the reason why we let this Bill go through, and it was not because we did not believe it was a most iniquitous measure. We believed that when the Bill came to this House there would be such a weakening of the support of those who were promoting it that it would not be possible for the measure to pass. It is not now so iniquitous as it was when it was before the committee. At that time we were convinced that it was so flagrant an attempt to violate the principle of provincial rights that it could not pass the House, but we are free to admit that the amendment which has been proposed makes a little improvement in it. Still the Bill is one which should not pass. Our water-powers are amongst the greatest assets we have. We can only look forward to the time when our water-powers must supply a want which no other resource in this country can supply. It is a well-known fact that year after year fires are sweeping away our forests and that our supply of coal in the lower provinces is becoming less. Under these circumstances I think it is a most unfortunate thing that we should alienate our natural resources. In looking over the history of the parliament of Canada and that of the province of Ontario, I think my hon. friend the member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) will agree with me when I say that as far as these natural resources are concerned my hon. friend has figured largely not only in this House but in the provincial House. I well remember in the dying days of the session of 1904 a fight over the Kakabeka falls when my hon. friend and his friends secured the right to that water-power from another company. We thought that was unjust and unfair, and there is no doubt that my hon. friend's action then alienated a large number of voters. The responsibility of that dying government seemed to be thrown upon my hon. friend and he was deserted by his former friends as well as the Conservatives. The result was that the action of two years before was reversed, and that company is now going ahead under the control of other men. Now we find my hon. friend going along a different line.

Mr. CONMEE. I rise to a point of order. The hon. member states or insinuates that I was one of the parties interested in the Kaministiquia Power Bill. The hon. member should withdraw that. I never had any interest direct or indirect in that Power Company.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That can scarcely be called a point of order, it is rather one of personal explanation. But I may say to my hon. friend who has the floor that it is desirable to keep as closely as possible to clause 1, the incorporation of the company.

Mr. BARR. I think my hon. friend had charge of the Kakabeka Falls Bill; he certainly had charge of one that passed some time before that.

Mr. CONMEE. My hon. friend is wrong; I was opposing the Bill.

Mr. BARR. The question of water-powers has engaged attention in the past, and it is a subject that we should carefully guard. It is important to consider whether it is in the interest of the country that the province should have control of water-powers. It would appear from the success of the Ontario government in developing water-powers during the last few years that as far as possible we should leave them under provincial control. The result of the last provincial election in Ontario demonstrated that the people of that province strongly approve of the policy of the provincial government in developing water-powers and in guarding provincial rights. In the early days of the government of Sir Oliver Mowat, the Liberal party proclaimed themselves the champions of the rights of the provinces. We have to-day in Ontario a government that consistently follows the same policy and guards the rights of the province against every attempt at encroachment. I believe that it will be no longer possible to dissipate our natural resources and to give away this great asset which we are to-night endeavouring to guard. It seems unfair for the Dominion government to endeavour to encroach on the rights of provincial governments. My own view is that a large number of these questions which may give rise to friction at any time should be referred to the Privy Council in order that the rights of the Dominion and of the provinces may be more exactly defined. In the meantime before the committee an able lawyer representing the government of Ontario voiced that government's objection to this Bill, and it was evident that that government considered it of the greatest importance. Under these circumstances I submit that in passing this Bill we would not be acting in the best interests of the country. I hope the government will carefully consider this question, and that the House will vote down the Bill.

Mr. J. D. REID. I wish to enter my protest against the passing of this Bill. It is of course advisable that many of these private Bills should pass, and I am glad to say that in the committees they are nearly always considered entirely independent of party. Members of each party differ among themselves and as a rule the Bills are fairly discussed, but when this Bill was before the committee it seemed that the very minute opposition was raised by members on this side it became a party measure and the whip of the Liberal party immediately rounded up all the Liberal members to vote and make this simply a party question. I feel that this is unfair, and I think that the Bill should have been treated on its merits. There are two rivers mentioned in this Bill, the Pigeon and the Nipigon. There may be some justice in stating that the Pigeon river is an international river, but the Nipigon river is entirely in the province of Ontario. When this Bill was before the committee, there was no deputation from Port Arthur or Fort William or any other place to urge the passage of the Bill as being necessary for the development of that part of the country. This Bill, if passed, will give this company power to dam the Nipigon and Pigeon rivers, which will practically give them the control of those two rivers for all time to come, because any other person who attempts to dam either of these rivers would be liable for damages. It therefore seems to me unreasonable that this parliament, even if it has the right, should legislate away such a valuable asset, when there is no call for doing so at this particular time. The Bill proposes to give these parties the right to transfer to the other side of the line one-half the power they develop. This means that they can export more than half the power, because it is also provided that they can refuse to supply less than 500 horse-power to any one person. A great many manufacturing establishments employing a great many hands would probably require not more than 200 or 300 horse-power. That provision is inserted, I believe, simply for the purpose of enabling this company to export more than half the power to the other side of the line. Had the Bill provided that all the power must be used in Canada if it could be used, a certain part of the objection I have to it would have been removed. With regard to the rates, some of the provinces have absolute control of rates, prescribing the maximum rates to be charged for power developed from any of the water-powers they grant. The water-power question is now so important to Canada that we should be careful not to give away these valuable privileges too freely. For these reasons I think the government should hesitate about allowing this Bill to go through during the present session. It has been up before, and no harm would be done by allowing it to stand over for another year; and as the country develops, if it is found necessary for that part of the country that this company or any other should have the right to develop water-powers on conditions that are fair and just and in the interest of the people of this country, I believe the members of this House would be unanimous in granting that right so long as the interests of the people were protected and the powers were distributed for the building up of that part of Canada, which I believe we are all anxious to see done at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. W. R. SMYTH (East Algoma). As one of the members from that part of Ontario known as New Ontario, I desire to enter my protest against this Bill. If all the members of this House were as familiar with that great country as some of us who are sitting on this side, they would think twice before they would allow our great water-powers, which should be conserved in the interest both of the province and of the Dominion, to pass into the hands of private corporations. The government of Ontario have seen fit, after a great deal of argument and persuasion by the members from northern Ontario, to conserve those water-powers for the people; and I might just remark that they have a solid vote from that part of the province, due no doubt to the action of the members from northern Ontario in urging the conservation of our natural resources. As this House is no doubt aware, the northern part of Ontario is considered to-day to be the greatest asset the province has—the national treasure house, as my hon. friend from West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) has called it—especially in timber and minerals; and recognizing that the only means of developing these great resources is by our water-powers, the Ontario government has been very careful during the last few years in conserving them for the people. Time and again private individuals have made application for water-powers, and some water-powers which have been held for years by companies incorporated under the old Ontario Act, have been cancelled by the government in the interest of the people, and they are not allowing any water-powers to pass into the hands of private corporations. I am not in a position to discuss the question of what are provincial rights and what are Dominion rights as well as some of my hon. friends who have preceded me.

My hon. friend from West Algoma, who knows the subject quite well, has gone very fully into that question, as have other hon. gentlemen who have discussed it. What I wish particularly to do is to enter my protest against the water-powers of this country being allowed to pass from under our control. I appeal to the right hon. the Prime Minister to see that our water-powers are conserved in the interests of the people, along the lines adopted by the Ontario government. That government did not act hastily but only after due deliberation and after many a fight in the local legislature and the committees, and after a fight to the finish, as it were, by the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee). This is not the first contentious Bill which that hon. gentleman has brought before parliament. In the old days, in the local legislature, every time the hon. gentleman's name was at the foot of a Bill, we knew there was a fight on because we always found something behind the measure which we could not very well see through, and we took the precaution of knocking it on the head as a matter of prevention. I think there is something behind this Bill which we have not seen, and in my opinion, in the interests of the people of Ontario and of Canada generally, it should not be allowed to become law; and I appeal to the right hon. the Prime Minister to see that the interests of Ontario in particular and of Canada at large are served by his refusing to allow this measure to pass.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice there are quite a number of Bills on the Order Paper, which, in my judgment, are not of a contentious character, and could be disposed of in a reasonably short space of time; and as the present measure is likely to occupy considerable time yet in discussion, I would suggest the desirability of the committee rising, reporting progress and asking leave to sit again, and thus allow us to get on with the other Bills.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman is not speaking to the question before the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, I am asking that the committee rise and report progress in order that we may expedite business by going on with other Bills, which are of a non-contentious character and can be easily disposed of, and then resume the consideration of this measure. I suggest this proceeding to the right hon. leader of the House and would like to have his answer.

Mr. FOWKE. I was very pleased——

Mr. SPROULE: Might I ask the right hon. gentleman for a reply?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is a new member, and we ought to hear him.

Mr. FOWKE. It is with much pleasure indeed that I heard the tribute paid by the hon. gentleman who last addressed the House on this Bill (Mr. Reid), to the spirit in which the deliberations of the various committees of this House are conducted; and I might add that I am glad to see that he, as a leading member of the opposition, has set a splendid example in that respect. In the various committees he has shown complete freedom from partisan spirit in approaching the questions that there come before us. But I was sorry to hear him conclude his remarks by saying that the committeee which dealt with the Bill under discussion was rounded up by the whip on the government side, and that the Bill was treated by it altogether from a partisan point of view. Now, Mr. Chairman, I happen to be a member of that committee, and also a supporter of the government, and I was not one of those who was rounded up by the party whip. I was there to hear the pros and cons and to act on my judgment; I supported the measure in the committee with the view of having it brought down to the House and there discussed, and I told its promoter there and then that I reserved to myself the right to act as I might see fit when it reached the House. I listened very attentively in the committee to the argument advanced by Mr. Blackstock on behalf of the Ontario government; and as nearly as I can remember he did not differ materially in his expressed opinion from that given this afternoon by the hon. member the Minister of Jusice. That hon. gentleman told us that the question of jurisdiction would probably have to reach the Privy Council before it can be definitely and clearly settled. However, I am not troubling myself very much with the question of jurisdiction when I say that I do not feel inclined to support the Bill. It proposes to give very large powers of expropriation of provincial utilities and interest which in my judgment ought not to be granted, but there is another feature in connection with the measure to which I am decidedly opposed and shall ever be opposed and it is that of giving franchises in perpetuity of the natural resources of our country. For that reason, if for no other, I should deem it my duty to vote against the Bill. I shall not detain the House by any lengthy remarks, but I did not wish to give a silent vote. I intend to oppose the measure in its present shape for two reasons. First because it is bartering away one of the natural resources of our country in perpetuity; and second, because it is granting expropriation powers and privileges over Ontario interests which I do not think ought to be granted. No doubt at present large volumes of water are going to waste, and perhaps for the present this Bill would serve a good purpose in distributing those powers to be used in various communities in this country and the United States. I do not object to the power in the meantime being sent out of the country if need be and if the country gets paid for it; but I can readily understand that the day will come when, in all probability, we shall require all the power within the limits of our own Dominion, and I believe we would then experience great difficulty indeed, after an investment of half a million dollars had been made in a power plant, should we conclude to take hold of and administer that power ourselves. That might lead to international difficulties. At any rate when large investments are made, vested rights and interests are thereby created which it becomes very difficult to deal with, and I would rather deal with them now, before the privileges asked for are granted.

Mr. J. D. REID. My authority for the statement I made was the editorial of the Toronto 'Globe.'

Mr. ARTHURS and Mr. Sproule both rose to speak.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for Parry Sound has the floor.

Mr. SPROULE. Will you, Mr. Chairman, allow me to make an explanation? I rose to address the committee on the Bill, but before proceeding with my argument I put a question to the right hon. the Prime Minister. I only resumed my seat in deference to his expressed wish that I should give way to a new member.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for Parry Sound has the floor and the hon. gentleman has consequently no right to address the Chair.

Mr. ARTHURS. I have no desire to take up time in discussing the constitutional question, which has been pretty thoroughly threshed out, but I wish to express my conviction that legislation, such as that now asked for, will create great confusion, particularly throughout the northern part of Ontario, and more especially if granted on the grounds urged by the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River. The principal argument used by the hon. member was that all navigable streams, including the water-powers upon them, are under the control of the Dominion government, and any stream that is navigable for any part of its length is a 'navigable stream' according to his definition. If we accept this definition, we find many streams in northern Ontario which are navigable for a greater portion of their length than the Nipigon. For instance, there is the Maganatawan, which is navigable for fifty or sixty miles in different stretches. If the hon. member's contention is right, that the Dominion government alone has power to grant water-powers on a navigable stream, the men who have located on the Maganatawan, and have large factories established, are there illegally. The hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River, in fact, used this argument in the case of a certain power company at Niagara Falls and stated that, in his belief, they were operating illegally because operating under a charter from the legislature of Ontario.

The principal argument put forward by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) was that this company should be granted this charter on the ground that they will develop electrical power for export to a foreign country. I think it will be just as reasonable to say that a company that was going to use water-power to manufacture lumber or flour for export should be given a Dominion charter. The hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Smyth) has already called the attention of the House to the fact that these water-powers of northern Ontario are practically unknown to many members of this House, and also to the fact that the time is coming,—and, we believe, is about due—when it will be absolutely necessary that these powers be conserved for the people of those districts. These people will require these water-powers for the development of their mines and the operating of factories that will necessarily be established there. The policy of the Ontario government, so far as the water-powers there is concerned, is to grant only short leases on water-powers capable of developing more than 75 horse-power, and in all cases they reserve the right to take over these water-powers at any time. I think that the fact that this is the policy of the Ontario government is the real reason why this House is asked to pass this Bill. These men have unsuccessfully tried to get a charter from the province of Ontario, and we are asked virtually to override the decision of the Ontario authorities in regard to this water-power.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, first I must thank the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) for the contempt with which he receives my suggestions—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Did I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) to refer to me?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If I did not answer my hon. friend's (Mr. Sproule) inquiry, it was not from want of courtesy but because I saw other members wished to speak, and I did not wish to deprive them, especially the new members, of an opportunity to express their views. With regard to the suggestion that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, I must say that I am disposed to regard it favourably. We have been six or seven hours on this Bill, and it has blocked the passage of other Bills and it is evident from the temper of the House that it is very questionable whether my hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) can have his Bill this evening, if he can get it at all, because there seems to be a wide difference of opinion regarding it. Therefore, I would suggest to my hon. friend that he accept the suggestion that the committee rise and report progress, so that we can proceed with the other business of the House. In the meantime, let me say a word which may possibly contribute to clear the atmosphere. This Bill, as I understand, has been carefully considered by the Railway Committee. As a rule, so far as I am responsible for the business of the House, I have always deemed it my duty to support, as far as possible, the findings of the Railway Committee. Not that that is a law absolutely binding upon us, not that every member of the House must abdicate his judgment when the Railway Committee has spoken; but I have always thought that when a matter of importance has been discussed in the Railway Committee or any standing committee, and a conclusion has been reached, then, unless there is some strong reason to the contrary, the finding of the committee should be followed. In this instance, there is very strong reason why we should question the finding of the committee. The question of jurisdiction has been brought to the attention of the House. It has been stated and argued with great force by my hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) that this House has no jurisdiction, that the jurisdiction in matters of this kind belongs to the local legislature. It has been argued with no less force by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) not only that this House has jurisdiction, but that, in his opinion, this House alone has jurisdiction. At the same time the hon. Minister of Justice stated very frankly that it is only his personal opinion, it is not an opinion to be taken as law. He has stated that there is a good deal of conflict of opinion as to the right in this matter, but he gives us his opinion that this parliament has exclusive jurisdiction, and not the local legislature. In such a case, I would be disposed to follow the opinion of the Minister of Justice. But that is not the kernel of the discussion we have had at present. It matters not whether this parliament has jurisdiction, or whether the local legislature has jurisdiction, the point is this: Are there provisions in this Bill which affect the power of the local legislature and the local government? That is the only point which weighs with me. Section

2 of this Bill is a clause with which we are familiar—and it was not invented I may say to my hon friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) by the Liberal party; it is a relic of former days, and, perhaps in the case of this as in the case of other relics, we may be wrong in not doing away with them. At all events, the hon. gentleman and I may agree that it ought to be eliminated from the Bill. But the whole discussion we have heard this afternoon has been directed to one point, and one point alone—and that is that the power of expropriation of water-powers belonging to the local government of Ontario contained in this Bill should be eliminated. I think if these two sections were amended, there would not be so much objection to the Bill. I would have some objections to another which I shall come to presently. I was struck by the argument put forward by the hon. members on either side—especially that of the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Smyth) that the local government of Ontario has a policy on this question reserving to themselves the exploitation of all water-powers, refusing to give them to private companies. If we pass this Bill we interfere directly with this principle; and under those circumstances, holding as I have held all my life, to the sacredness, if the word is not too strong, of provincial rights, while we have the brute power to override those rights, it is a question whether we should do so, and it is a question upon which I would invite the serious consideration of my hon. friend who is promoting this Bill. There is another feature of this Bill to which I would call his attention; that is section 13, which says:

The company shall at all times be prepared to furnish for use in Canada one-half of all power then developed.

That is to say, the power developed is divided into two parts, one-half for exportation and the other half for local consumption. I would be disposed to go much further than that, and to say that if we grant this legislation we should reserve for local consumption not only one-half but the whole of the power.

Mr. CONMEE. If the right hon. gentleman will permit me—I think section 15 provides for that; the works of this company would be subject to the electricity and Fluid Exportation Act, and this government would be in a position at any moment to stop it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Then if that be the intention, I would make it perfectly clear, and say that the provisions governing the exportation of power at Niagara should govern at the Nipigon river. Therefore, if the Bill is to go through, I think it should be amended so as to make it clear that there will be no conflict between this Bill and the laws mentioned in clause 15. But there is a serious conflict of opinion, I am afraid, with regard to the power of expropriation. On the whole, seeing that if we proceed with the Bill we shall not be able to get it through to-night, I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

PATENT OF THE SUBMARINE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 77) respecting a patent of the Submarine Company.—Mr. Proulx.

On section 1,

Mr. J. D. REID. Why is this patent extended?

Mr. PROULX. The company have not paid their fees.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it going to be the policy of the government to allow patents to be renewed simply because the owners have not paid their fees? Why, all the patents in the country could be renewed after they have been allowed to expire. The original patentees of this article have had the use of it for a number of years, and now when the fees have not been paid they come and ask for a renewal. I suppose this is under the Department of the Minister of Agriculture. I am not objecting to this Bill particularly, but this Bill may form a precedent in consequence of which any number of patentees may come along and ask for a renewal. I think the government should state their policy, whether they are going to renew patents simply because a man comes along and says that he did not remit the fees and now wants the patent continued for another term of years. The owners of this patent knew well enough when the fees were to be paid.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend has appealed to me as being the minister in charge of the administration of the Patent Act. I do not know this particular Bill.

Mr. J. D. REID. How long since this patent expired?

Mr. PROULX. Since 1906.

Mr. FISHER. This Bill has apparently been passed upon by the Private Bills Committee, of which I am not a member. It is the practice for the deputy commissioner of patents to go before the Private Bills Committee and make a statement with regard to each Bill. In many cases Bills of this kind come before us, in consequence practically of the negligence of the attorneys of the patentees or the owners of the patent. These delays are only for a few weeks or months. Under these circumstances it seems rather hard that the patentee should suffer. In this case, however, apparently a much longer time has expired. I can only take it for granted that the Private Bills Committee received some information to justify the passage of this Bill and the sending of it back to this House. On the face of it I think it hardly comes within the category of the ordinary Bills which are passed by the Private Bills Committee and come before this House. Personally, long ago I took occasion before the Private Bills Committee to object to the very frequent practice of the reinstatement of patents which had lapsed through the fees not being paid. But the Private Bills Committee seem to have thought, and perhaps rightly, that where the patentee has not been himself at fault, or where the negligence has been very slight, it is rather hard to annul the patent for ever and that the punishment of forcing him to come before parliament with a private Bill and pay the necessary expenses therefor has been sufficient. In cases of a different character frequently the deputy commissioner of patents has given the Private Bills Committee information and stated the policy of the department in such a way that the Private Bills Committee have thrown out these Bills concerning patents.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. If the minister looks at clause 2 he will notice that the Private Bills Committee have made a reservation that anybody who commenced manufacturing this article since the expiry of the patent may continue to do so.

Mr. FISHER. That clause is included in all these Bills to secure the rights of anybody who has acquired rights during the lapse of the patent. The only proposal, however, that can be brought forward for undertaking to treat this Bill differently from most of the Bills that come before us is that the time since the patent was allowed to lapse has been longer than in most other cases. The Private Bills Committee I think must have had some information before it which justified it in reporting the Bill, because otherwise it is not likely that it would have reported favourably to the House.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman who has the Bill in charge ought to give us the reasons which were given to the committee.

Mr. PROULX. A full explanation was laid before the committee. The Bill was passed without any opposition. The solicitor for the promoters of the Bill explained that no person in Canada had manufactured any of the appliances that are proposed to be manufactured under this patent. The apparatus covered by the patent is very costly and the promoters have already expended $100,000 in making this apparatus. There have been three assignments of this patent. Probably that explains the omission in paying the fee.

Mr. WRIGHT. I notice that in the preamble they give the date of the patent as the 12th November, 1900; so that this patent is nearly nine years old.

Mr. PROULX. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. It is given for six years.

Mr. WRIGHT. That is the date of the patent.

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think that if the fees had not been paid there is not sufficient evidence before this committee to warrant it in extending its time.

Mr. FISHER. The fees were paid for six years. The practice is to pay on taking out the patent for six years and then, before the expiry of these six years, to pay for another term of six years and then again for another term of six years. So that this patent was valid for a period of six years from the time it was taken out. The fees were unpaid only for a little over two years.

Mr. WRIGHT. If they have had a patent for nine years and this article has never been manufactured, it would seem to me that they have no claim for an extension of time. I think there is perhaps too much laxness in regard to extensions of time and in regard to many matters that come before this House. The fact that it has passed the Private Bills Committee is not a sufficient reason why it should pass this House. There are many members of this House who are not members of the Private Bills Committee. If there is any member of this House who may be conversant with the reasons that can be advanced as a justification for renewing this patent he should give us the benefit of them. If the hon. member who is promoting the Bill has not a valid reason why the Bill should pass perhaps some other member has. I have an intimation that there are probably a good many members that could give good and sufficient reasons why an extension of time should be granted.

Mr. GOODEVE. As a member of the Private Bills Committee I might explain that this Bill passed unanimously for this reason: This patent has reference to an appliance for breaking rock under water; it is a very heavy class of machinery, and the promoter of the Bill explained to the satisfaction of the committee why the patent was allowed to lapse. They had expended a considerable amount of money in building models and showing the working of this appliance. It is done by means of a tower. They felt that there was no great work going on in Canada at that particular time that would warrant them in building the necessary machinery and bringing it into this country. They pointed out that unless they had some protection nobody would build it because of the large amount of money involved and because of the limited opportunities of using the machinery. I have no interest whatever in it, but I am simply a member of the committee explaining why it was unanimously passed by the committee.

Mr. LENNOX. I have no objection to this Bill going through if the minister thinks it ought to go through.

Mr. FISHER. I know absolutely nothing about the Bill except what has come up now, but I know that the Private Bills Committee generally lay a matter of this kind before the Deputy Commissioner of Patents, and I take it, from the fact that it has recommended the Bill to the House, that it was satisfied in regard to it.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not rise for the purpose of trying to obstruct the passage of the Bill which may be quite right, and of course it is a matter that the minister would know more about than I would. But, I am trying to ascertain whether the company accomplishes anything by this legislation. Is there not a provision in the Patent Act that if a patented article is not manufactured within a certain limit of time the patent ceases and the right becomes public property. How would that operate here?

Mr. FISHER. I think in 1900, parliament amended the Patent Act by providing that patents for articles which could not be manufactured easily, that could not be kept in stock or put on the market for ordinary sale, could be placed under a special clause by which the requirement of manufacture within two years would not be operative. Judging from the description of this patent I should say it was of this character. Probably these people applied when they got their patent or immediately afterwards to be put under that clause of the Patent Act. This is likely an article that would only be manufactured to order; it may be that accounts for the negligence in the payment of fees and that a demand has now arisen for the article so that the patentee is asking to be reinstated.

Mr. J. D. REID. I know nothing about this Bill but years ago the House objected very strongly to the renewal of patents in this way. If the patentee did not fulfil the conditions of the law the patent became available for public use. I presented a Bill for a renewal of a patent for one of my constituents when the fees had been mailed the day before expiry of the time, but for some reason were 24 hours late in reaching the department. The fees were not accepted and we had to prove to Sir John Thompson that the fee had been mailed the previous day before he would consent to a renewal. Other similar cases have occurred. Here the patent has lapsed for over three years and to renew it might establish a dangerous and troublesome precedent. I have warned the minister and if he wishes to establish a precedent by allowing this Bill to pass he must assume the responsibility.

Mr. FISHER. Long ago I took the ground my hon. friend is taking to-day, and objected to the reinstatement of patents. I think the practice has grown lately and every session we have Bills of this kind, although I must say I cannot remember any case where the lapse has been as long as this.

Mr. SPROULE. I remember one case of a two year's lapse.

Mr. FISHER. I know nothing of this particular patent. Under the clause I have referred to, the article must be manufactured in Canada if it is manufactured at all. Therefore if there is a demand for it in Canada it cannot be imported. I suppose the Private Bills Committee satisfied themselves that there was some justification for the long delay. If they have not done that I quite agree that the House should not grant a renewal after such a long delay.

Mr. HENDERSON. I happened to be in the committee room when the committee dealt very severely with a patent renewal Bill; they threw it out unhesitatingly. A similar Bill will come before the committee perhaps at the next meeting and will be seriously contested. I do not know the merits of this case but it seems difficult to pass one application and refuse the other. I think it would be well for the minister to allow this to stand over until the other similar Bills have been dealt with by the Private Bills Committee, so that this cannot be quoted as a precedent. I am saying this as a protection to myself in connection with a vote I must give when another Bill comes up.

Mr. FISHER. The precedent of renewing a patent when the trouble arises from nonpayment of fees is an old one. Each case of this kind must be decided on its merits. That is the business of the Private Bills Committee and the committee having passed this Bill I would be disposed to support it. If another Bill was rejected by the Private Bills Committee, I would be disposed to endorse their action and if the Bill was brought up by some other means in the House, I would oppose it. But this Bill seems to be quite innocent and quite satisfactory. Some hon. gentlemen opposite say that it is. I have no knowledge of it myself. I do not think that because any other Bill has been rejected by the Private Bills Committee, that is any reason why we should reject this one.

Mr. SPROULE. I have listened to discussions with regard to many Bills of this kind before the Private Bills Commission, and we have always made it a rule to have a good and sufficient reason given why the patent had lapsed before renewing it. It was generally the fault of the attorney who had instructions to renew the patent, and failed to do so. We considered it wise to insert a clause in any such Bill to protect those who had gone into the manufacture of the article, by allowing their right to manufacture to be continued. From that time on, I think every case we decided on its merits. In this case, having regard to the nature of the patent, and to the fact that the article, if built in Canada, would have to be built where it was going to be used, and that it would not be advisable for any one to build except on an order, I think we are amply justified in passing the Bill. I do not see any objection to it at all.

Mr. J. D. REID. According to the statement of the minister, he never knows anything about a Bill for the renewal of a patent until it is presented to this House. When a Bill affecting any of the other departments is brought before the House, as I understand, the deputy watches it and informs the minister of the position, so that he is thoroughly posted in regard to it.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman did not listen to what I said. I said that it was usual for the Deputy Commissioner of Patents to be present in the committee to give the necessary information in regard to any Bill of this nature. He always brings to my notice any Bill that interferes with a patent, but a Bill which is usual he does not bring to my attention. This Bill he did not bring to my attention and therefore I take for granted that he passed it as satisfactory.

Mr. J. D. REID. Would it not be expected that any Bill affecting the department would be submitted to the minister? Here is a Bill to renew a patent which has lapsed for three years. It is forming a precedent; I defy the minister to produce one case like it; and yet he says he never heard anything of the Bill until he heard of it to-night. It is a strange proceeding; yet if he wants the Bill to go through, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection.

Mr. JOSEPH TURCOTTE (Translation). Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the Private Bills Committee, and when this Bill came before the committee the principle of it had been discussed at length. The result of the discussion was the following:

We gathered information as to whether any injustice would be done or not through the renewal of this patent. We desired to know if this patent, delivered a few years ago—in 1900, I believe—had not, one way or another, become a public property, that is, if other companies or individuals had not availed themselves of the same invention, and put similar articles on the Canadian market. We were answered that nobody had taken advantage of the fact that this patent had become a public property. Consequently, nobody could suffer from this renewal. Under these circumstances, we have deemed this renewal to be equivalent to an original application for the patent. Advantage being taken by nobody of this invention and no similar products having been put on the market, we have considered this second application as an original one. We had contradictory discussion. The hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), who is now in his seat, will be able to give information to the House if he is willing to do so, because he took part in this discussion. It has been decided that this application for renewal was bona fide and that it should be granted under such circumstances, because there was no objection whatever to it. Subsequently another application of the same kind was made, but then it was about explosives and we answered : 'This very patent the renewal of which you are now asking for, is now on the market, and we would cause considerable damage to those who are working this patent if we granted the same privileges.' That is all the difference. Accordingly, we have granted the application in one case and refused it in the other.

Bill reported.

Mr. PROULX moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think it would be better for the hon. member to let the third reading stand over until the next time Private Bills are called.

Mr. PROULX. For what reason?

Mr. HENDERSON. In order to allow an opportunity for members to look into the Bill. There has been considerable discussion on it in committee. I do not think the hon. member will lose anything; he will get his Bill as readily.

Mr. PROULX. The amendments were only clerical.

Mr. SPROULE. It is a Bill with amendments, and if objected to it cannot be read the third time now.

Mr. SPEAKER. At the next sitting of the House.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 145) for the relief of Isaac Moore.—Mr. Wallace.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose that we will have the budget speech to-morrow.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 20, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

WAYS AND MEANS.—THE BUDGET.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into committee to consider the ways and means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty. He said: In the presentation of the budget it is usual to devote some attention to each of three fiscal years. First we have to consider the completed year, the accounts of which have been laid before parliament in due course; next we have to consider the current year, or as in the present instance the year which actually ended a few days ago, but the accounts of which have not yet been closed; and lastly we have to consider what is the outlook for the year that lies ahead of us. It is now some time since the accounts for the fiscal year 1907-8, were submitted to parliament and probably most hon. members who are interested have given them consideration; nevertheless for the convenience of reference it is always well to note in the budget speech the principal features of these accounts and therefore I desire to call attention to the chief points in them. The results of the operations of the fiscal year 1907-08 (that is, the year which was closed on the 31st of March, 1908) did not differ very materially from the anticipations expressed in the last budget speech. My expectation was that we should receive a revenue of $96,500,000; the actual revenue was $96,054,505.81, or $445,494.19 less than my expectations. I had counted, however, on an expenditure chargeable to revenue fund of $77,500,000, but the actual expenditure proved to be $76,641,451.59, or $858,548.41 less than the estimate. The falling off in the expenditure was more than sufficient to balance the shortage of the revenue, and the net result was that whereas I had anticipated a surplus of $19,000,000 the actual result was a surplus of $19,413,054.22.

CONSOLIDATED FUND—1907-8.

—	Actual.	Estimated Budget Speech 17th March, 1908.	Greater than Estimate.	Less than Estimate.
	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
Revenue	96,054,505 81	96,500,000 00		445,494 19
Expenditure	76,641,451 59	77,500,000 00		858,548 41
Surplus	19,413,054 22	19,000,000 00	413,054 22

The previous fiscal period was one of nine months and therefore it would not be convenient to make any comparison between that period and the last fiscal year. It may however not be without interest that I should call attention to what are the sources of revenue as shown in the accounts of that year:

Sources of Revenue, 1907-8.

Customs	$57,543,811 25
Excise	15,782,151 68
Post Office	7,107,886 86
Dominion Lands	1,883,619 88
Railways	9,534,596 20
Miscellaneous	4,202,439 94
	$96,054,505 81

It is to be noticed that the customs revenue was the largest in the history of the Dominion. It is also gratifying to be able to state that that very large revenue was realized with a lower rate of customs taxation than had existed in former times, as will appear from the following comparison:

Average Rates of Customs Duty.

	Average Rate on Dutiable Imports.	Average Rate on Dutiable and Free.
1896	29·974	19·129
1897	29·967	18·613
1908	26·582	16·480

Particularly gratifying was the continued increase in the revenue of the Post Office Department. The affairs of that department for 1907-8 show a surplus of $1,101,957.12. I am sure the House will agree with me that this is a most gratifying return, especially when we bear in mind that there has been a wide extension of the service, that we have cheaper rates of postage, and that this department a few years ago was a constant burden on the treasury, showing year after year a very large deficit.

I have dealt so far with the consolidated fund expenditure. There is, however, a large expenditure in addition, known as capital and special expenditure. For convenience of reference I put in a statement showing what this expenditure for the year amounted to :

Capital and Special Expenditure, 1907-8.

Capital Expenditure.
National Transcontinental Ry	$18,910,253 58
Railways	4,761,299 54
Canals	1,723,156,07
Public works	2,969,049 08
Dominion lands	768,243 94
Militia	1,297,904 65
		$30,429,906 86
Special Expenditure.
Railway subsidies	$2,037,629 30
Bounties	2,787,354 21
Charges of management	682,337 91
		$ 5,507,321 42
Total		$35,937,228 28

A large proportion of this capital and special expenditure was provided out of the revenue by means of our surplus of 19½ millions of dollars. Deducting from the total capital and special expenditure of $35,937,228, the surplus of $19,413,054, sinking fund expenditure of $2,234,263, and a small refund of $910, in all $21,648,228, it will be found that the increase of the net debt on the 31st of March, 1908, was $14,288,999.88, notwithstanding the fact that in that year we expended $18,910,253 on the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway alone. But for that outlay, there would have been a reduction in the debt of $4,621,253.

Coming now to the affairs of the fiscal year 1908-9, which ended a few days ago, I have to point out that our practice with regard to the closing of the accounts of the fiscal year in Canada differs from that of the mother country. There the fiscal year closes on the 31st day of March, and the accounts are closed up immediately. That is quite possible in a country with conditions such as those of England with comparatively short distances and complete means of communication. But in a country like Canada, with a vast territory and public business going on all over the wide Dominion, it has not been possible to close up the accounts so early. The law permits three months for closing the accounts, though we always endeavour to close them in less time. Consequently, although the fiscal year has actually closed, we are not by any means in a position to determine precisely what has been the revenue and what the expenditure for the year. The best we can do is to take the figures as we have them up to date, and make reasonable allowance for probabilities, and thus reach an estimate of what is likely to be the outcome for the year. The revenue of the year, I need hardly remind the House, was affected by a world-wide stringency which started in the fall of 1907. The revenue of 1908-9, as received and accounted for up to the 10th of April, 1909, was $84,352,581.30. My estimate is that when the returns are completed and the account is closed, the revenue will be found to have amounted to 84½ millions of dollars. This is 11½ millions of dollars less than the revenue of the previous year, or a shrinkage of 12 per cent. In the face of such a falling of revenue, in view of the trade depression so well known, in view of the difficulties which Ministers of Finance the world over are experiencing in the preparation of their budgets, it would not be surprising if it became my duty to report a very considerable deficit on the operations of the last year. I confess that at one time I viewed the situation with anxiety, and would not have been surprised if on the closing of the accounts there had turned out to be a balance on the wrong side. I am happy to say, however, that my apprehensions in that di rection are not to be realized. I am glad to be able to say, as far as the accounts at present indicate, that we shall close the affairs of the last fiscal year with a surplus of $1,500,000. The expenditure, as shown by the returns up to the 10th of April, 1909, amounted to $72,939,642.22. Taking the expenditure for the balance of the year at about the same as it was in the previous year, we estimate the total expenditure of the year chargeable to income at about $83,000,000 ; and, as I estimte a revenue of $84,500,000, this will leave us with a safe margin of surplus to the extent of $1,500,000, and I am not without a hope that on the final closing of the accounts the surplus may be even somewhat larger. I am sure it will be felt that this statement, if it be realized, will be a most satisfactory one for Canada, for we are dealing with a period when throughout the world there have been financial conditions which have much disturbed business, and when in the natural order of things a very unfavourable balance might have been expected. That statement, of course, deals only with the consolidated fund revenue and expenditure, what for convenience I may call the ordinary expenditure of government.

There is of course to be considered capital and special expenditure. We estimate that it will take twenty-five and one-half million dollars to pay the outlay of this year last past for the Transcontinental Railway. The taking over of the Quebec bridge adds to our debt the sum of $6,424,000, and other capital and special charges amount to $17,300,000. These sums aggregate $49,224,000. From this we will hve to deduct the surplus, estimated at one and a half million dollars, and sinking fund amounting to $1,675,000. These two aggregate $3,175,000 which, deducted from $49,224,000, would leave a balance of $46,029,000, in round numbers $46,000,000, which will be added to the net debt of Canada for the year closing on the 31st of March of this year. This is a very large increase but it is to be noted at once that $32,000,000 of that amount is accounted for by the National Transcontinental Railway and the Quebec bridge, which is to be deemed hereafter a part of the National Transcontinental Railway. So it will be seen that if we have a very considerable increase in our debt, it is due to the very special expenditure that we are incurring in connection with the great work of the construction of the National Transcontinental Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. Can my hon. friend give the items of revenue, customs and excise?

Mr. FIELDING. No, I have not these figures at hand in detail. I gave my hon. friend a day or two ago the latest information we had on the subject, and a simple computation for the few remaining days of the year will enable him to work it out for himself.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the minister give me the amount paid out for bounties in the Consolidated Revenue Fund Expenditure for the year just closed?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not the figures at hand, but from memory about $2,238,000. If that is not substantially correct I shall give my hon. friend the exact figures later.

I freely say that we might have avoided this addition to the public debt. In the first place, we might have avoided it by refraining from the construction, in the whole or in part, of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway. I have occasionally heard suggestions of something of that kind from the members of this House. Particularly have I heard criticisms of the construction of that section of the line which lies between Quebec and Moncton. Now, whatever may be said by people living in more remote districts, who are not familiar with the needs of that line, there was no portion of the Transcontinental Railway which was so unanimously demanded by the people particularly connected with it as the line between Quebec and Moncton, no portion, I say that without reserve. Time and again representations were made to the government of Canada as to the need for the construction of that road. Not to have built the eastern division, particularly that section, would have been a narrow, almost a provincial policy. The people of the maritime provinces, without regard to party, without regard to any differences they might have on other questions, were practically unanimous in demanding that if Canada was to engage in the enterprise of another transcontinental railway they should have connection with that road by some line which was better suited for a transcontinental service than the old Intercolonial Railway. The legislatures of the provinces, boards of trade, the various representative bodies of that portion of the country, again and again called upon the government of Canada to build that section of the road. Therefore, when hon. gentlemen criticise the construction of that road, I would have them bear in mind what I stated a moment ago, that there was no portion of the whole transcontinental line which was more universally demanded by the people immediately concerned, than that between Quebec and Moncton.

There was another way in which we might have avoided this addition to the public debt. We might have followed the example of our predecessors as to the manner of aiding the construction of a transcontinental railway. I do not say this in order to criticise the action of our predecessors. We know very well that aid was granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway in three forms. There was a gift of finished road, costing an enormous amount of public money, a gift of $25,000,000 in cash and of 25,000,000 acres of land. Leaving out of consideration the cash bonus and gift of finished road to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and considering only the land grant, I venture to say that if we had been willing to give the Grand Trunk Pacific 25,000,000 acres of land in the west, we could have devised a scheme which would not have added one dollar to the public debt of Canada. But would it have been a wise policy? I am sure upon that question there will not be a very wide difference of opinion. Whatever may be said of the wisdom of the government of that day in granting such a large land subsidy to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I have no desire now to criticise that policy, whatever may be said as to the merits of that policy judged in the light of the time when it was devised, it is but the simple truth to say that as the years rolled on that policy caused widespread dissatisfaction in the western country, and if it had been proposed to again adopt the policy of subsidizing a great transcontinental railway by giving a large block of land in the Northwest territory, I am satisfied that such a policy would not have commended itself to the judgment of this House or of the country. The land for the settler, not for the railway corporations, is the demand of the western people.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FIELDING. So I say that if we had regard only for appearances, if we were afraid of adding to the public debt, we might have avoided it, we need not have responded to the wish of the maritime provinces as to the construction of the eastern division, we need not have paid the large sums that we are paying out now from time to time. We might have given land and I am sure the Grand Trunk Pacific would have received a policy of that kind with great favour. But we were of opinion that a policy of that kind was not a wise policy and that our true course was to build the eastern division of that road as a government work, to pay for it out of the public treasury, to face the responsibility it would bring on us for a short time until that responsibility becomes, as it will at an early period in its history, an interest-bearing asset. While the cost of construction will remain as a debt, there will come a time in the early history of that road when the Grand Trunk Pacific Company must pay 3 per cent on its cost. Practically therefore, that portion of the debt of the country will be wiped out because it will be represented as an interest-bearing asset. So we say that while a few short-sighted people, well-intentioned no doubt, might say that we should not have incurred this debt, I am sure that the sounder judgment of the country will say—not necessarily condemning the policy of former times because conditions may have differed then—that it would have been a mistake to-day to adopt that policy of land subsidy, and that we did well to face the financial responsibility which is involved by these additions to the public debt.

Our trade statistics for the past year will necessarily be unfavourable, but they will not be more unfavourable than the statistics of other countries. The year 1907 was only a partial year, a period of nine months in our financial accounts, and therefore it is difficult for us to make comparisons. The total trade for the fiscal year 1908 reached a very high figure, being just $100,000,000 more than that of the fiscal year 1906, the last full period of 12 months.

In 1906 our exports amounted to $256,586,630. In 1908 they increased to $280,006, 606. Our imports in 1906 were $294,286,015, and in 1908, $370,786,625. Our total trade in 1906 amounted to $550,872,000, and in 1908 to $650,793,131. I do not attempt any comparison with the previous year because our fiscal period then covered nine months only. For the fiscal year 1909, we have no official returns that are complete; but from the best information we can obtain in the uncompleted returns, our exports in 1909 amounted to $261,379,904, and our imports to $292,358,021. Our total trade thus amounted to $553,737,325. Our exports have fallen slightly, but there is a marked decline in our imports. In this respect we are able to make very satisfactory comparison with the United States. As regards imports, Canada and the United States stand on even terms, the decline being about the same in both cases. But taking the figures of the calendar year, it would appear that the exports from Canada have decreased but a small degree, whereas those of the United States have decreased very largely.

Coming now to the year 1909-10, with the adequate resources and widely recognized energies of the Canadian people, it is only fair to assume that we shall speedily be able to overtake the falling off of the past year. It is only reasonable to suppose that the conditions of the past year are quite abnormal and due to special circumstances, which I think will disappear to a sufficient extent the coming year to enable us to receive a very considerable increase of revenue over that of the year just past.

Of course I do not think we would be justified in expecting to reach the very high revenue of 1907-8, but we do think that the revenue of 1909-10 will considerably exceed that of the year which has closed. The year just closed we are estimating to give a revenue of 84½ million dollars. For the coming year we estimate that we shall realize a reasonable percentage over that, but we do not expect to approach at all the revenue of the previous year which was $96,000,000. It will take us undoubtedly another year to overtake that and possibly a little more. We think there is every reasonable probability that the turn of the tide has come, and that from this out our revenue will steadily increase. But for the present the revenue of 1907-8 must stand as the high water mark of our income.

With this condition of revenue and with the very many demands being made upon us, it would almost seem unavoidable that we should meet the difficulties by an increase in taxation. In some other countries that seems to be the remedy for the financial conditions that have there arisen. In our judgment, however, there is no need here of increased taxation. We think the truer and sounder method is to meet the situation by a substantial reduction in our expenditure, and that is the method we have adopted. Unquestionably if we were to continue the same rate of expenditure as that which has prevailed in recent years, we should be obliged to add to the burdens of taxation; but we have come to the conclusion that the part of wisdom is to ask all concerned to be patient with us for the time while we put the brakes severely on expenditure. I have prepared a statement showing the reductions in the estimates for 1909-10 as compared with 1908-9. It is but fair to say that the estimates for 1908-9 which I quote are the complete estimates for that year. That is to say, they are the estimates submitted in the previous session and the supplementary estimates of the current session. The estimates for 1908-9 on consolidated fund amounted ta $89,412,868. For the new year now beginning, the estimates for the same account have been reduced to $80,078,624. So that in that account there is a reduction of $9,324,243. If we turn to the expenditure on capital account, we find that in 1908-9 our estimates amounted to $43,658,365, and for the coming year the figures are $30,411,150. So that, taking the decrease of $9,334,243 on consolidated fund account and $13,247,215 on capital account, we have a total decrease in estimates on the whole expenditure of $22,581,458. Here are the details:

*Including all Estimates of the Year.

The reductions, therefore, that we are making in the estimates are very considerable. We have yet to bring down some supplementaries for the current year, but they will not materially alter the figures. They will be very moderate. The supplementaries which have to be brought down towards the close of the year are one of the unseen things we cannot determine in advance, except to say that it is the determination of the government to keep the expenditure of the year within very moderate figures. We ask hon. members to appreciate the difficulty we have in making reductions. There are demands from hon. gentlemen of both sides and from all over the country for many public works, and undoubtedly, in many instances, these works are urgent and important, and with better conditions it would be our duty to respond to those demands. But we wish to point out to those interested that they must submit to the sacrifice, if a sacrifice it be, for a short time, and consent to a severe cut in our expenditure in order that our burdens may not be too heavy and our credit be well maintained. We know that in many parts of the country great works are projected—railways, canals, and other enterprises which may in themselves be worthy enough, some of which will have to be undertaken at a later date and will figure largely in the development of Canada; but it is much more important that we should, in the present condition of affairs, await an improved financial condition. Therefore we say to the promoters of all the enterprises, no matter how worthy they may be, that they must be content to let them stand aside for the present.

Mr. FOSTER. What amount of capital expenditure is proposed for the eastern section of the Grand Trunk Pacific?

Mr. FIELDING. $20,000,000. We think that our aim ought to be — and we shall endeavour to accomplish it as far as possible — to provide out of our revenue, during the year now opening, for all the ordinary expenditure and for a considerable part of our capital expenditures—if possible even for all of them. There is one work as to the wisdom of borrowing for which there can be no question, and that is the Transcontinental Railway. If we can succeed in keeping down our borrowings for new works during the coming year to the sum which we wish to expend on the Transcontinental Railway, I am sure we shall have a very good statement to present. I do not know that we can accomplish this, but it is to be our aim, and I am sure that if for the works of the year we have to borrow any sum in excess of that required for the Transcontinental Railway, it will not be very large.

Now it has been our good fortune to be able to present an uninterrupted series of surpluses for a long period of years. For the first year of this government, 1897, a year in which we had only what I may call a partial control of public affairs, there was a deficit of $519,981.44. Since that, we have had, if I include the estimated surplus for the year just closed, twelve surpluses amounting to $115,059,087.83. If we deduct the $519,981.44 of our first deficit—if it be chargeable to us—we find that for the twelve and three-quarter years we have had a total surplus of $114,539,106.39. This represents a net average annual surplus for these twelve and three-quarter years of $8,983,459.32.

Now, I am not unmindful of the fact that, as regards one item, the method by which these surpluses have been estimated has been occasionally questioned in the House. I refer to the item of bounties, which is charged to a special account. I have explained this point on several occasions, but, as there are many new members this session, it may possibly not be wrong if I again state the view the government entertained when the change was first made. Under the former government, the bounties, which did not amount to a very large sum, were treated as a drawback. It seemed to be assumed that there was money paid in some way into the treasury, and that it was received back by way of drawback; at all events the common understanding of a drawback is the repayment of money which has been received.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They were charged to revenue, were they not?

Mr. FIELDING. That was the result, although it did not take that form. They appeared to be treated as a reduction of the customs duty—the customs duties were understated, in reality, because they were subject to this drawback of moneys which had never been paid in. It reduced the revenue and so was equivalent to a charge on revenue account. We thought that was not the best way of dealing with the matter, that the account should be treated differently. And, as, at that time, the whole bounty question was being re-considered, we came to the conclusion that bounties being a temporary aid to industries,—they have been somewhat longer in existence, it is true, than was expected at the time—they might properly be treated in a special account in the same way as a railway subsidy was treated. When you pay a sum of money as a railway subsidy, you receive nothing for it; you do not get any property, you have no assets to represent it, but you give these sums as temporary aids to a great enterprise, which, no doubt, will bear fruit in future years in the development of the country. And we thought that the bounties, which were to be regarded as temporary assistance to great industries, might properly be treated in the same way. Therefore, they were treated in what is called a 'special account,' the same as railway subsidies. I am aware, as I have said, that the propriety of that has been questioned, but I think that the reasons which led us to take this view are sound reasons. But, without arguing that, I have thought it better to present the calculation of what would have been the surplus if the bounties had been charged to income.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. minister state how much these bounties have amounted up to the present time—in other words, what is the amount of this special account?

Mr. FIELDING. Speaking from memory, something over twelve million dollars or $1,000,000 a year. If we charge the bounties in this special account all to ordinary revenue account we shall find that the result will be to show a total surplus for the twelve and three-quarter years of $99,832,075.55, and an average annual surplus for the twelve and three-quarter years of $7,869,182.39. It will be seen, therefore, that while the change in the method suggested by some hon. gentlemen would make a difference in the surpluses of that period, it is by no means a very large difference—the surpluses have been so large for the whole period that a change in the method of keeping the account would not materially affect the result.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. What deficit would there be this year if the bounties were charged to revenues instead of to capital?

Mr. FIELDING. Both sides of the account would come pretty close together; there might be a small deficit; and this is the only year in twelve and three-quarter years when this change in the method of keeping the accounts could possibly have affected the question whether there was a surplus or a deficit. The heaviest item of these bounties, the bounty on iron and steel, will expire in 1910. The bounty on lead will expire in 1913. There is a bounty on electric smelting which runs for two years longer than the other iron and steel bounties, but I do not think that much will be claimed under that item. So, whatever may be said with regard to these bounties, the heaviest items will expire shortly, and I suppose there will hardly be much room for contention as to their proper place in the accounts. I merely wished to emphasize the fact that if a different method of keeping the accounts had been employed, while the surplus would have been reduced on the whole, yet the bounties have played no very large part in that result.

There is another point I wish to deal with relating to surpluses and deficits. I have regretted to observe a disposition on the part of some of the public press to create a new standard in these discussions of surpluses and deficits. One Conservative newspaper sets forth in flaming headlines the statement that in the public accounts for the year there is a deficit of $30,000,000, with more to come. I have seen similar statements also in the other newspapers. Now, I submit in all fairness that that is not a candid way of dealing with the public accounts. The word 'surplus' and the word 'deficit' have a meaning, a well established meaning, in the finances of Canada. It is not a meaning which I have created, it is not a new meaning, it is a meaning which has existed throughout the public accounts of Canada from the beginning of confederation to the present moment. If we go back to 1867 and look through the public accounts from that year down to the present, we shall discover that if this modern method of computing the surpluses be accepted, we shall be forced to the conclusion—a conclusion which I refuse to accept—that the Finance Ministers from Sir John Rose down to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), juggled with the accounts, falsified the accounts of the each year's operations. I say I do not make that charge; I say that it is not the case. But I say that this tendency on the part of our critics to take the balance at the end of the year, the balance which is added to the public debt, as a deficit is altogether unfair and at variance with the established practice of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. AMES. What is the established practice of Great Britain?

Mr. FIELDING. I was dealing with the established practice of Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the Finance Minister whether this system, which we have undoubtedly in Canada since 1867, of dividing the expenditure into capital and revenue, prevails in any other country, and if so, in what country? I would like also to ask whether if our practice is different from that of all other civilized countries it would not be a good time to conform our practice to that of other countries when we have been having an enormous superabundance of revenue during the past eight or ten years?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not agree with that. I think we are more concerned with what has been the established practice of Canada than with what has been the established practice in other countries, the conditions of which may be utterly unlike those of Canada. I say that when we find the public press treating deficits in this way, when they say: Your total expenditure for the year in any class was so much and your revenue so much, and the balance is a deficit, I say that is a misleading statement, it is an unfair statement, and it ought not to be made by any respectable journal in this country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the practice of the United States?

Mr. FIELDING. Really I would not like to answer definitely. I think in England the practice is different. But there are reasons why this practice in Canada would not be a sound practice. I think a country which has to engage in large operations, a country which needs to borrow money in order to develope its resources, must establish a different condition from that in an old settled country which has hundreds of years of experience.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the practice in Australia and New Zealand?

Mr. FIELDING. I am bound to say that I am not aware. But I do not think it is important.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They are like us, are they not?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not admit they are entirely like us. I think my hon. friend should recognize that I am not at present discussing the practice of Australia; I am not concerned in discussing the practice of England and the United States; I am chiefly concerned in showing the unfairness of my Conservative friends in applying to the finances of the present time a test which they never applied to the finances when their own friends were in power. That is the point I wish to make, that is the point I may expect to make with any fair-minded man in the Dominion of Canada.

Now, let us see how this would work out. Let us go back to the early days of our confederation in 1869 when Sir John Rose was Minister of Finance. The accounts of Sir John Rose for that year showed that he had a surplus of $341,090.52. Now, according to the present contention of my critics, these accounts were deceptive, Sir John Rose had no surplus that year, but he had a small deficit of $102,184. His accounts were misleading. But he was considered to be a pretty good Minister of Finance, and the fact that he adopted that method is a reason why I, his junior for so many years, should pay profound respect to the method; I believe he adopted it for good reasons, and I think reasons which were good then are good to-day. Then we had another eminent Finance Minister in the person of Sir Francis Hincks. In the year 1872 Sir Francis Hincks published a return showing that he had a surplus of $3,125,344.86. But if the present method which is advocated by my Conservative friends in the press is correct, a method which is occasionally heard of in this House, instead of having that surplus of $3,125,000, Sir Francis Hincks had a deficit of $4,480,554.39. So you see the effect of applying to the Ministers of Finance of earlier days the very criticism that is now offered respecting our methods with this subject. Sir Leonard Tilley was Minister of Finance in 1873, when his accounts showed a surplus of $1,638,821.53; but, according to the present contention, instead of having a surplus for that amount, if the same criticism had been applied to Sir Leonard Tilley that is applied to the surplus of the present Finance Minister, it would have shown that instead of his having a surplus that year of $1,638,000, he had a deficit of $17,661,389.60. Then we come again to Sir Leonard Tilley in 1881, when he showed a surplus of $4,132,743.12, but, according to the present contention, he should have shown a deficit of $2,944,191.79. Again, in 1883 Sir Leonard Tilley showed a surplus of $7,064,492.35, the largest surplus ever reported by a Conservative Minister of Finance, but, according to the present contention he had no surplus at all, but he had a deficit of $4,805,063.68. Now, let us come nearer home. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), and my immediate predecessor in the post of Finance Minister, in 1889 showed a surplus of $1,865,035.47. But, according to the contention of my critics and their friends to-day, his accounts were wrong; he juggled with the accounts; he misled the people, for he should have shown a deficit of $2,998,683.49. In 1890 my hon. friend showed a surplus of $3,885,893.94, the largest surplus he ever had. He was not very lucky in the matter of surpluses; but in that case, if he had shown the accounts in the way that his friends now demand I should show the accounts, his surplus of $3,885,000 would have been wiped out, and he would have been obliged to show a deficit in the accounts for the year.

Now I do not mean to say for a moment that Sir John Rose, Sir Francis Hincks, Sir Leonard Tilley and my hon. friend from North Toronto falsified their accounts, but the Conservative critics of to-day would say that, because they demand a standard of declaring a surplus which, if applied to the years I have spoken of, would show that these accounts were incorrect. On the contrary, I claim that my hon. friend, my predecessor, treated the accounts in a proper way. In a country like Canada, with large needs, a country which must borrow a great deal of money for development, a country which cannot possibly, as a rule, manage its public affairs with the ordinary revenues, I say it is a proper distinction to make between charges to income and charges to capital. There may be room for dispute as to a particular item, whether it should be charged to one account or the other, but that does not touch the principle. There always will be room for difference of opinion in that matter. But I am dealing with the principle, and I say the principle which was adopted by Sir John Rose, by Sir Francis Hincks and by Sir Leonard Tilley and by the hon. member for North Toronto, is the principle on which accounts are made up to-day, and therefore the very criticism that is offered by some of my Conservative friends as to my method of making up the accounts is entirely unjustified.

A very interesting feature of our expenditures in recent years has been the very large amounts of money that have been applied to expenditures upon these capital or special services with a very moderate addition to the public debt. Now the very purpose of making a distinction between charges against income and charges against capital, is to indicate that you may probably need to borrow money to meet your capital account. That is, the assumption that you cannot provide out of your ordinary revenue for these special and large needs. Well, what do we find? We find that the total capital and special outlay for the period I have spoken of, for twelve and three-quarter years, has amounted to $212,449,526.42. I say that represents a class of expenditure as to which, if it had not been charged to capital account, and if the financial condition of Canada to-day obliged us to charge it to capital account, no just criticism could have been offered against such a course.

But what is the fact? While we have spent the enormous sum in the twelve and three-quarter years of $212,449,000 on these capital and special charges, we have only added to the public debt during that time $65,500,000. We have paid no less than $147,000,000. less a fraction of that large expenditure upon capital and special accounts out of the ordinary revenues of the country; we have provided 69 per cent of that class of expenditure out of the ordinary revenues. I venture to say that in no previous period in the history of this Dominion has there been such a large expenditure on capital and special accounts with so small an addition to the public debt.

We have had during recent years very large loan operations. For a number of years Canada went but seldom to the English money market, but during the last year or two we have been obliged to go there more frequently. There are several causes for this. First we have had considerable sums of old loans maturing and these have had to be provided for; second, we had heavy obligations arising on account of the construction of the National Transcontinental Railway; third, considerable sums were required for the taking over of the Quebec bridge; fourth, there were considerable withdrawals from the government saving banks; fifth, we required a considerable sum to be loaned to the Montreal Harbour Commission; sixth, we had to provide considerable sums of money in connection with the seed grain distribution, and then we had a very heavy falling off in our revenue during the past year.

Parenthetically I would say that a much respected member the other day in discussing another subject to which I am not permitted to refer, said that one of the first things before you begin to lend money to any one is to have it to lend. I am afraid if we had adopted that principle in respect to the Montreal Harbour Commission my hon. friend would not be able to see the great improvements which now greet his eye when he visits his beautiful city.

The consequence of all these demands was that we have needed to go to the money market more frequently than usual. We have borrowed the following sums since the last budget speech:

June, 1908, £5,000,000, 3¾ per cent, due 1st May, 1912.

October, 1908, £5,000,000, 3½ per cent, due 1st July, 1950, with option of redemption after 1st July, 1930, after six months' notice.

January, 1909, £6,000,000, 3¾ per cent, due 1st July, 1919, with option to redeem after 1st July, 1914, on three months' notice.

This last mentioned loan of £6,000,000 which was offered at 99¼, was the largest colonial loan ever placed on the London market. It was at first only partially taken by the public. That is not an unusual thing in the London money market, but very soon after it was issued it was readily taken.

Mr. FOSTER. What proportion was taken by the public?

Mr. FIELDING. Forty-one per cent was taken by the public, the balance for the moment remained on the hands of the underwriters. That loan now stands at a premium of nearly 3½ per cent, so that if the loan was not immediately taken by the public it was no reflection on the credit of the Dominion. There were special reasons for placing this loan at the time and in the way we placed it. A 3½ per cent loan may now be regarded as our standard security. Many years ago we issued one at 2½ per cent and then one at 3 per cent, but in the present conditions, and they are likely to continue for the early future, I suppose we will have to regard the 3½ per cent loan as our standard security. With improving conditions we may get back to the 3 per cent rate, but in the meantime we must be content with 3½ per cent, and so it was important that we should keep our 3½ securities on a good basis in London.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the minister give the brokerage and commission on the 1909 loan?

Mr. FIELDING. The answer to that question was ready yesterday but as I was not in the House it was not given. My hon. friend's question was :

What amounts have been paid for commission, brokerage and other expenses, respectively, on loans made since December 31, 1908?

The answer is:

	£	s.	d.
(a) Commissions..	90,000	0	0
(b) Brokerage..	13,790	4	6
(c) Other expenses..	13,900	18	11

As I said, a previous issue of 3½ per cent which had been taken by the underwriters on terms quite satisfactory to the government, had not been fully absorbed by the investing public. Under the conditions it would have been difficult to place another 3½ per cent loan on the market and after full consultation with our agents, we concluded that the best way to meet the situation was to issue a different class of loan of special character which would meet the then existing conditions of the market and which would prove attractive to investors. We thought that in that way we would not materially depress the value of our 3½ per cents. We decided therefore to issue this loan at the rate of 3¾ per cent and to make it a short loan for a period of ten years with the right to redeem it after five years if we so desired. Another reason why we fixed that period of ten years was that the loan will thus fall due at a very convenient time, when we will not be embarrassed by other maturities.

Hon. gentlemen who have devoted attention to the condition of the public debt of France will know that a large part of the French national debt is held by the French people who buy the bonds in very small sums. It was suggested that an effort should be made to reach the same class in England, and after careful consideration we came to the conclusion that we might appeal to the small investors in England. It was not that we expected thereby to get any large sum of money, as it takes a great many small contributions to cover a loan, and I have no doubt that if we had considered our own convenience only we might have done as well without appealing to the small investor. My idea was that this plan had a value apart altogether from the mere getting of the money. There are thousands of men of small means in England who seldom or never invest in Canadian securities, and I thought it desirable that we should reach these people, not merely to get money from them, but to interest them in the affairs of Canada. I thought that such a thing was most desirable and therefore, after very careful consideration, because it was somewhat of a departure from the established practice in the English money market, we decided to issue this new loan in bonds as low as £10 each. That experiment was watched with a great deal of interest by the financial public and by the public generally. The British Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. David Lloyd George, did us the great honour and great compliment of approving of the project, and in order to show his approval he publicly subscribed for one of these modest £10 bonds in order to set a good example to the moderate class in England, and I wish here to thank Mr. Lloyd George for that evidence of his good will to Canada. He has been adversely criticised; he has been told that he had better look after the finances of England and leave other people to look after the finances of Canada. I hope he may have success in looking after the finances of England; I know that in the step he took he meant to pay a compliment to the Dominion of Canada and I avail myself of this opportunity to express my appreciation of it. Well, the financial journals of England gave this their hearty approval and the greatest of them all, the London 'Economist,' gave us the most cordial commendation and expressed the hope that the British government would follow our example. I may say also that others than the financial publications in England commended our course in this respect. We hope and believe that the experiment will be of value to us, not because of the amount of money it produced, but because of the interest which it has aroused amongst the smaller investors. We had no less than 603 applications from persons who subscribed for £90 or less, so that we had quite a large number of applicants although the total value of their subscriptions was not very great. We could have got the money just as easily by going to one big broker and inducing him to subscribe to the loan, but in view of the experience of France in such matters and in view of the interest which was being manifested by thoughtful men in England in this question, we deemed it well to make the experiment of trying to interest the men of small means throughout the United Kingdom in the securities of Canada, and I believe we have succeeded.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the comparison in cost between the two methods?

Mr. FIELDING. It really makes very little difference; it is a mere question of the clerical labour and the printing. It is no doubt somewhat troublesome to the gentlemen who are employed in the office of our financial agents in London, but besides the greater volume of clerical work and the printing there is no increased cost. I am hopeful that when we have occasion to go again on the money market, we will have these same people and others interested in our loans, and not only interested in our loans but interested in anything that concerns the welfare of Canada.

Since the issue of that large loan we have borrowed some other sums which I should state to the House. We have made two loans, one of £1,000,000, and one of £500,000, or a total of £1,500,000; one of these loans for 12 months and the other for 15 months. They have been negotiated quite recently in view of the improving conditions of the money market and the rate of interest we paid for them was 2⅞ per cent; that is the net rate to the government, it covers all bank charges of whatever nature. Therefore, our latest financial transaction in the way of short loans is to borrow £1,500,000 at the very low rate of 2⅞ per cent.

Mr. SPROULE. If that be so, how do you reach your conclusion that our average is 3½ per cent?

Mr. FIELDING. Because, these were short loans, for one year in one case and for fifteen months in the other case, and it is quite imposible to compare them with a long term loan. Excluding temporary loans which are soon repaid, we have issued from 1896 up to date loans to the amount of £27,470,242, an enormous sum of money. But it is important to note that a large part thereof was not for present operations but for the repayment of old loans maturing. I have here a statement of the loans which have matured and which we have paid off since 1896; they are as follows:

LOANS MATURED AND PAID OFF SINCE 1896.

We have had some sinking funds against these and the balance we have had to provide. These loans which we have paid off account to a very considerable extent for the large borrowings we have had to make. Up to 1885, with the exception of one loan, we had provided small sinking funds ranging from one-quarter per cent to one per cent in connection with our various loans. In later years, from 1885 onward, the sinking fund policy was abandoned as it did not seem to be necessary. My own observation of the London money market leads me to the conclusion that it would be a wise policy for us to return in some degree to the sinking fund policy, and it is my intention in any further loans I may have to issue to attach a moderate sinking fund to them. As to the precise rate we may attach it is a matter of detail, and it is not necessary at present to make a statement, but I think it well to return to our former policy of having some sinking fund attached to each of our loans.

In connection with the earlier budget speeches of some years ago a return was published giving the cost of all loans for many years. This year a supplementary return was brought down, and I think as a matter of convenience it would be well to have it included in the budget speech, and if there is no objection I will hand it to 'Hansard.' It will then be in the possession of the House and it will be more easily referred to in the budget speech than if it is only to be found in the form of a return:

I have noticed some criticism as to the cost of our loans, but I am glad to be able to say that there is no ground for the charge that the expenses in connection with our loans are very high. Of course we have had very large transactions, and we have had to pay on very large sums. We have handled enormous sums of money in our finanical transactions during the last few years and you cannot carry on these enormous operations without large expense. I am glad to be able to say that in every instance, so far as I am able to ascertain, the expenses are fair and reasonable. We are now paying the same charges generally as we paid in former years. Our financial agents in London (The Bank of Montreal) charge precisely the same rates now that they have been charging for a long time, and we have no reason to doubt that they are fair and reasonable. There is only one item that is new, only one item which did not appear in the charges of former times, and that is the charge for underwriting. We have sometimes paid three-quarters per cent for that, and sometimes when the money conditions were not so favourable we have had to pay one per cent. and one per cent is about the best rate that first-class loans will be underwritten for in London. This underwriting is simply an assurance that the money will be provided. The underwriters are the very best judges of the character of a loan; they are better judges in a certain way than the public themselves, and experience has shown that it sometimes happens that the public are not ready to take up a loan. Then, the underwriter who is an experienced financial man and who weighs every element in the money market is able to come to an understanding of what is the fair value of a loan, and if the Minister of Finance is satisfied with the price at which the underwriter is willing to do the business then the transaction is closed and the Minister of Finance knows at all events that he is going to get the money; he need not care very much whether the public come in and subscribe or not. In some respects it is always better to have the public subscribe, but if the public should subscribe too readily, if the public should come in and rush after the loan and subscribe to it many times over, the Minister of Finance would be open to the charge that he had made a mistake, that he had fixed the price of his loan at too low a figure, or in other words that he was selling his goods too cheaply. In the case of our loan recently issued only 41 per cent was taken by the public, which was the best guarantee that the underwriters gave us the full value of the money. If we had not agreed to the underwriting of the loan, we would have been obliged to have named a lower price for it. So I am satisfied that the modern system of underwriting, while we may regret that we have to resort to it, has the advantage of securing to the government the best possible price for our loans. No colonial government now borrows money in London without underwriting. I think I am correct in saying that no foreign government now borrows money in London without underwriting. It has become the established practice of the money market. The imperial government, in dealing with the last India government loan, which is practically an imperial government loan, and which was placed on the market very shortly after our £6,000,000 loan, had to adopt the policy of underwriting, and, I understand, paid for that loan precisely the same price that the government of Canada paid for its loan. Hon. gentlemen will see, therefore, that in this underwriting, which is the only new item, we are simply following the established practice of the money market, which all other governments, including the imperial government in the case of the last India loan, have had to adopt, and I think it may be assumed that we do well to conform to this practice, in view of the fact that the rate paid for our loan was precisely the same as that paid for the recent India government loan. The effect of underwriting is this, that the public know that they have a second chance to buy. If it is thought the loan is not much in demand, an individual investor, even though he wants a large sum, will say to himself: 'I will not send in a subscription, and the loan will be left on the hands of the underwriters; then it will fall to a discount, and I can come in and buy more cheaply.' Sometimes that happens, but it did not happen with us. The public did not take all of our loan at once, but immediately after it was announced that 41 per cent of the loan had been taken up by the public, investors began to run after the balance in the hands of the underwriters, with the result that according to the latest quotations it stands at a premium of 3½ per cent in the money market.

I should call the attention of the House to some early maturing loans, that is, the loans we shall have to deal with during the three calendar years 1909, 1910 and 1911. The £5,000,000 3½ per cent loan of 1884 gives the option to the government of redeeming it between the 1st of June, 1909, and the 1st of June, 1934, on giving six months' notice. We could, therefore, take up that loan, if we so desired, during this year, but under present conditions it is of advantage to Canada to carry this on at the present rate, for we have no reason to suppose that we could do better than 3½ per cent, and no notice of redemption has been given. On the 1st of January next the Canada Reduced 4 per cent loan of £6,443,136 matures. Of this loan there is held in the sinking fund £2,205,573, leaving £4,237,563 to be paid off in cash. The 4 per cent loan of 1885, for £4,000,000, is redeemable at any time between January, 1910, and 1935 on six months' notice by the government. We are not called upon to touch that matter for the present; we will consider it later on. On the 1st of October, 1910, the 4 per cent guaranteed loan of 1875 for £1,500,000 matures, and for that we have a sinking fund of about one-half the amount. On the 1st of May, 1911, we have a 4 per cent loan of 1874, amounting to £1,831,398, maturing. These are the loans which we have to provide for within the next three years, besides which we have, of course, to provide for what may be required for the possible needs of our work, notably the Transcontinental Railway.

I regret to notice that some very erroneous statements have been made from time to time, both in this House and outside, made no doubt with the best intentions, with regard to the credit of the Dominion. Although I am a strong party man myself, I do not believe that there is any man in tihs House on either side who desires to depreciate Canada's credit. I am sure that any erroneous statements which have been made have been the result of erroneous information, and not of any intention to state other than the facts. We have heard it stated, for instance, that because we borrowed money for 2¾ per cent or thereabouts in 1897, on long term loans, and because we recently paid 4 per cent, therefore the credit of the Dominion is going down. There is no warrant for any such statement. In the first place, in making any comparison of this kind, it is necessary to observe the distinction between the different classes of loans. A long-term loan on the money market should elicit the best terms. For a short-term treasury note, you may sometimes get money cheaply, just as in New York money is occasionally borrowed at a very low rate on call. But for the purposes of the ordinary investor, in a favourable condition of the market, a long-time security, such as a fifty-year loan, is the security most favoured. Our recent loan was for ten years, with the option of five years, while the loan of 1897 was for fifty years, and was issued in a most favourable condition of the money market. Another consideration which we have always to keep in mind is that money is a commodity which rises and falls in value like any other commodity, and the man who wants to buy it goes into the market and pays the market price. To say that because we borrowed money in 1897 at 2¾ per cent and that we now have to pay 4 per cent, therefore our credit is suffering, is an entire mistake. In 1897 monetary conditions were exceedingly favourable, and we were able to place a 2½ per cent loan at a remarkably good price. We seemed to have struck the psychological moment, and obtained the most favourable terms ever obtained for a colonial loan. We have never been able to do it again. Of late years there has been a change in the appetite of the English investor. There was a time when he wanted a gilt-edged security, such as British consols or a Canadian government security, and to get this he was willing to pay a high price and was content with a low rate of interest.

The British investor is becoming somewhat more wide-awake. He is beginning to be willing to take a little risk by putting his money into foreign loans; and at the very moment when we were trying to borrow at 3¾ per cent, a Russian loan was offered at 4½ per cent, and sold at a price under 90. A great many British investors, who at one time would not touch these foreign loans at all, are now disposed to invest in them. The result is a lesser demand for gilt-edged securities, and it becomes a little more difficult to float securities of that character at the best prices. Take, for instance, the drop in British consols, the very highest standard of securities in the world. In 1897 these bore interest at 2¾ per cent and were quoted at 113⅞. The rate has since been reduced from 2¾ per cent to 2½ per cent, which would account for some of the reduction in the quotations but not for all of it. I have the latest quotation, and find it is 85 1-16, and not long ago British consols sold as low as 80. It would not be reasonable to infer that because the price of consols has dropped and the British government have practically to pay a higher rate for money, the credit of that government has suffered. The drop in price does not mean that. It simply means that money is a commodity which rises and falls, and the British, the Canadian, and every other government must be content to pay the market price. Let me give you another comparison. One of the best classes of investment in England is what is known as the Metropolitan Stocks—the stocks issued by the London County Council, a very high class security, probably next to that of the British government itself. In 1896 the Metropolitan 3½ per cents were quoted at 128¼, being their highest point, and Canadian 3½s were quoted at 111⅜. The two classes bear the same rate of interest, yet there was a difference against Canada in 1896 of 16⅞. Coming to 1908, Metropolitan 3½s were quoted at 104⅛ and Canadian 3½'s at 101¼, being a difference against Canadian of 2⅞. The best way to gauge the credit of Canada is to take some other standard stock, and compare the rates at which that standard stock was quoted in former years with that at which Canadians sold in the same time, and then take the difference in quotations between the same two stocks at present. Taking the Metropolitan stocks as a good example, we find that in 1896 they stood 16⅞ above Canadian and in 1908 only 2⅜ points. My hon. friends will therefore see that the mere fact that we had been paying a somewhat higher rate for our money does not indicate any diminution of Canadian credit.

Mr. AMES. Has the hon. gentleman the figures with reference to our 3 per cents?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not, but I have no doubt that, comparing our 3 per cents with the Metropolitan 3 per cents the result will be the same. I had these quotations made in all good faith. If the others show something different, I shall be happy at a later date to call attention to them, but I am advised that they will show substantially the same results.

Our net debt on the 31st March, 1908, was $277,960,859.84. I have stated that the increase in 1909 would be $46,000,000. Our net debt, on the 31st March, 1909, taking our estimates as near as we can make them, will be in the neighbourhood of $323,960,859.84. Our net increase since 30th June, 1896, amounts to $65,463,427.07, and the average increase per year in 12¾ years amounts to $5,134,386.43. Of this net increase the National Transcontinental Railway is responsible for $52,574,131.71. Excluding that amount, the net increase of debt during the 12¾ years would be $12,889,295.36, or an average per year of $1,010,925.12. So that it will be seen, apart from the National Transcontinental, which is a special item, our additions to the public debt during the whole period have not being excessive.

As to the burden of debt, to which an occasional reference is made, in a country like Canada it is to be expected that from time to time there will be some additions to the public debt. It cannot be expected that the development of a new country like ours can be carried on without any additions to our public debt. On a number of ocasions, when I had the pleasure of submitting statements showing reductions of the public debt, I was always careful to point out that the circumstances were exceptional, and that we must expect from year to year some additions to the public debt. But if we are to consider the public debt as a burden, we must take into account the number of burden bearers. We do not take a census every year, but our census office makes estimates from year to year, which I believe are in the main substantially correct. Take the returns of the last official census, making allowance for what experience has shown to be the natural increase of population, taking careful account of the immigrants coming into the country, we obtain fairly correct annual statements of our population. I have had such a statement prepared, and am glad to be able to say that, for the first time in our history, we are able to claim a population of more than 7,000,000 souls. I submit here a statement showing the debt of Canada for every year since 1891 and also its population, the net debt each year, and the net debt per capita. I think it will be admitted that if you are to measure the burden of the debt, you must consider the number of burden bearers. What do we find? We find that in 1896, 13 years ago, the net debt of Canada was $50.82 per head of our population, and on the 31st March just passed, according to the returns of the Census Department—which we have every reason to believe are substantially correct—on a population of 7,085,219 the net debt of Canada amounts to $45.72 per capita against $50.82, 13 years ago. So that we have the very gratifying fact, having regard to the number of burden bearers, that the net debt of Canada to-day is not an increasing burden but is less of a burden than it was when this government came into power 13 years ago.

I submit the figures for each year:

* Estimated.

There is another view of the matter. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), in one of his speeches on the budget, said that one of the ways of judging the burden of the debt was to take the amount of interest which had to be paid. That is a fair statement, with this proviso, that you must consider the number of burden bearers. In 1896, the total amount of interest on the public debt was $10,502,429.90, and the amount received as interest on investments was $1,370,000.56, leaving a net amount of $9,132,439.34, or $1.79 per capita. The net interest we had to pay in 1896 on the debt of Canada, therefore, was $1.79 per head. Taking the same computation for the year ending 31st March last, we find that the interest on the public debt will be close to $11,636,550.87. The interest received on investments was $2,168,601.04, making the net interest paid for the year, when the accounts are finally closed, approximately $9,467,949.83, or $1.33 per head for the year, as compared with $1.79 per head for the year 1896.

I think, Sir, that these figures, in which we take into account not only the increasing amount of debt but the increase in the number of burden-bearers—and I am sure that every hon. member will admit that that is a fair method of calculation—show that, while, in the development of our country, we have been obliged to add considerably to the public debt, these additions have not kept pace with the growth of our population, but that our interest charges are materially less of a burden to-day than they were thirteen years ago.

There has been some discussion here and elsewhere with regard to our statement of assets. There are some assets appearing in our accounts that are not of much value—some practically of no value at all. No such asset has been added to the list in recent years; such assets of that kind as appear have been there a long time; it has been thought well not to make changes, but, as a matter of convenience, to allow them to remain. Once in a long period of years the statement is revised by the Committee on Public Accounts. I am glad to know that that is being done this year, and that a number of these items will be thrown out. But I am satisfied that the amount of the items thus thrown out—items placed there many years ago, before I had anything to do with the finances—will not be large, in fact that it will be very small indeed when compared with the total amount of our assets. I am very glad to agree in the view that that statement should be revised and that we should have a statement down to date.

I desire to confirm a statement that I made earlier in the session with regard to the savings bank accounts. I was asked whether we intended to increase the rate of interest paid on these accounts. My answer was that such was not our intention, that this was practically money on call, and it was not to be expected that the same rate would be paid upon it as upon an ordinary investment. But I stated also that I would be glad to provide for the transfer of any of these deposits into stock of a more permanent character. I repeat that now. If it be agreeable to any of the savings bank depositors, we shall be glad to issue new stock for amounts of $50 or upwards to bear 3½ per cent and redeemable in 1925. Therefore, if it be found that any of the depositors in the savings banks wish to take up a more permanent investment, they can have their deposits transferred into savings bank stock at the rate I have named.

Mr. J. D. REID. At par?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. Frankly, I do not expect that there will be a large demand for this stock; I think the savings bank depositors attach more importance to the convenience and security of the savings banks than to the rate of interest.

Mr. NESBITT. Would the minister say how that interest is to be paid—yearly or half-yearly?

Mr. FIELDING. Half-yearly. We do not propose any extensive changes in the tariff; the one or two changes to which I wish to call attention are rather in the way of regulation than in the way of changes which would affect the finances of the country. For some years, considerable attention has been given to the cultivation of the beet in Canada with a view to the production from it of refined sugar. I think there is no longer any question that we can produce in Canada beet-root of the quality suitable for that industry—I think it has been established that the beets grown in Canada are well suited for the manufacture of sugar. The question has come, whether with the encouragement usually given to other industries in Canada, we can make that industry permanently successful from an economical point of view. The advocates of the industry say that this can be done, but they have asked that special aid be given them in the initial stages of their enterprise. So, for several years, we granted them concessions in the way of free admission of machinery. Several years ago we granted another concession in the way of importation of foreign sugar on the same terms as preferential sugar from the West Indies. In other countries, the beet industry is so carried on that they produce not only refined sugar, as is done in Canada, but also an intermediate grade known as raw sugar, which can be kept in store, handled and shipped, as it is being shipped, to all parts of the world. We have not yet reached that stage in Canada; we carry the manufacture from the beet-root itself quickly into the refined article. And I suppose it is admitted that at Wallaceburg they are turning out a fine grade of sugar as a result of that operation. But this enables them to run their factory only for a short time. In order that they may run their factory for a longer term, and so run it more economically, they ask to be permitted to import foreign sugar at the preferential rate. It is not convenient for them to use the West India sugar, and they thought it a hardship. when they imported a foreign sugar, to be obliged to pay the higher rate. So, two years ago, we agreed to allow them for three years the privilege of bringing in foreign sugar at the same rate as if it were British grown sugar. The limitation was that they should be allowed to import two tons of foreign sugar for every ton of refined sugar they produced from Canadian beet. That concession remains in our tariff, but it expires at the end of the current year. The promoters of the industry, not only the refiners, but a large connection including farmers, dealers and others, who are interested in the beet industry, have asked us to make a further concession in the same direction. We have decided to allow a continuance of the present system for three years longer and then for two further years on a reduced scale. That is, for three years they will be allowed to import as at present, two tons of foreign sugar for every ton of refined sugar they produce in their factories from Canadian beets, and for two years thereafter they will be allowed to import one ton of foreign sugar for every ton of refined sugar they produce from Canadian beets.

Mr. HUGHES. The minister means two tons of foreign raw sugar?

Mr. FIELDING. Surely.

Mr. HUGHES. Raw beet sugar?

Mr. FIELDING. They prefer the raw beet sugar, but we could not limit it to that. So much with regard to the beet industry, which, as I have said, enlists the interest and sympathy of a large number of people, and to which we have every desire to give a helping hand in these ways at the beginning. We trust that in a short time it will be able to be conducted without these special aids, and, that with the measure of protection given to other branches of industry in Canada, it will be permanently and profitably established.

Another phase of the sugar question has given us some perplexity. The duties on British-grown raw sugar are based on the assumption that the Canadian refiner—I speak now not of the beet sugar refiner, but of those who refine sugar in all forms, the eastern refiners and those on the Pacific coast—will import their raw sugar under the preferential tariff, paying only the preferential rates, and the duty on the British refined sugar is adjusted accordingly, so that our refineries may have what is deemed a moderate rate of protection. The refiners have represented to us that they cannot get a sufficient quantity of British sugar to enable them to import it under the preferential tariff, and to avail themselves of what seemed to be the intention of the tariff in that respect. They say there are two difficulties in the way. In the first place, they are not able at times to obtain a sufficient quantity of West Indian sugar—and when we say British-grown sugar it properly means West India sugar, because that is the only near market—they say they are not able at times to obtain a sufficient quantity of that British-grown sugar of a proper grade and quality for their purposes.

Now they make a more serious complaint. They say that there is a combination amongst the West Indian planters, among the growers of sugar in the West Indies, through their agents and brokers in London, whereby the Canadian refiner is not permitted to buy that West Indian sugar upon the same terms as it is purchased by the British refiner. This question of who shall profit by the preference has been much debated. At one time the West India merchants complained that the refiners in Canada managed to take the whole preference to themselves. Now the accusation is the other way. Our Canadian refiners say that this combination so manages that it will only sell West India sugar at a price which makes the thing of really no more advantage to them than if they were to buy the foreign sugar and pay the higher duty. Of course, no matter what they pay for West Indian sugar, they would only pay a lower rate of duty. But it is claimed that though they do not pay any more duty they are obliged to pay a higher price. They say that the growers in the West Indies, through a broker and agent in London, ascertain just at what price sugar can find admission into the Canadian market, and they only sell at that price, with the net result that while the British refiner who competes with the Canadian refiner in the finished product, practically buys in a free market, the Canadian refiner is only allowed to buy on terms which oblige him to pay in addition to the price of the sugar, the amount of the preferential duty.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you confirmed that by any inquiry ?

Mr. FIELDING. We have not had any official inquiry, and it is well to hear both sides of the story. I am bound to say that the refiners, who are generally of excellent standing, and who I am sure mean to act in good faith, have made a strong impression upon my mind in their presentation of the case. However, we have come to the conclusion to suggest a remedy which can do no great harm to West India men, and which will meet the difficulty, if a difficulty exists, will meet it at all events in a moderate degree. We propose to allow the refiners, other than those engaged in the beet industry—we have already dealt with them —we propose to allow the refiners the privilege of importing foreign sugar at the preferential rate, to the extent, however, of only one-fifth of the quantity of the refined sugar which they produce.

An hon. MEMBER. Is that raw sugar?

Mr. FIELDING. All this has reference to raw sugar. The effect of that would be this: If there exists the combination which is alleged, then the refiner will have access to the foreign market at the same rate to the extent of a moderate quantity. I think the effect of it will be that probably, if that combine exists, it will not continue. When we adopted the West India preference we certainly felt that by lowering the duties on the products of any other country we were doing a friendly act and encouraging trade with that country. But all good trade must profit both the seller and the buyer. It certainly was not contemplated that either the one or the other should use this preference as an instrument of oppression. However, that is a matter which demands careful inquiry. If we were to allow the introduction of a very large amount of foreign sugar at the preferential rate, we should probably strike down the preference, and that we do not wish to do. But we think, to the extent of this moderate quantity, we will be assisting the refiner, and we will be giving at the same time a general intimation to the West India grower that he must be prepared to give and take, and not use the preference as a means of treating our Canadian refiner in a different manner than he would treat the refiner in any other country.

We have been asked to join a commission of inquiry to be appointed by the British government for the purpose of inquiring into the trade relations between Canada and the West Indies, and we have intimated our concurrence. The matter has been discussed for some time. It may be remembered that a year or two ago a conference was held in the Island of Barbados, a conference which was originally designed to be merely an intercolonial conference, but which later on opened its doors to Canada. We sent down two gentleman, Mr. Parmelee, late Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, and Mr. A. E. Jones, of Halifax, an experienced West India merchant, who attended the conference, and some progress was made in the direction of better trade relations. The colony of Barbados, following that movement, adopted a preferential tariff whereby Canada would receive a preference on a number of articles provided that Canada in return would give, not only the existing preference, but some further preference. We felt that it was difficult to deal with one island alone, and therefore we did not respond to the proposals of the government of Barbados. But we have intimated to the Imperial authorities, who are responsible for the management of these Crown colonies, that if they desire to go into the question more fully, we are prepared to join in a general inquiry into the trade relations between Canada and the West Indies. Now if that commission be appointed. Canada will be represented on it. At the present moment I am not quite sure—although some communication has taken place—as to who should represent Canada. At all events, Canada will be represented on the commission, and we should have a careful inquiry. This question of combine will be taken up, and if it be established that such a combine exists, we hope and believe that our friends in the West Indies will realize that that is not the proper response to the efforts we have made to encourage trade with that country. We certainly did seek to encourage trade with the West Indies, we certainly did feel that in giving a better market to West India sugar we were giving, in a modest way, some helping hand to the West Indies people; but we certainly did think at the same time that our own consumers would profit by the lower rates of duty that were to be established. So as a temporary means of dealing with this matter, and pending that further inquiry to which I have referred, we propose to permit eastern refiners, all the refiners except those engaged in the beet root industry, to import at the preferential rate foreign raw sugar to the extent of one-fifth in weight of the quantity of refined sugar which they produce in their factories. Our expectation is that they will to some extent meet the difficulty of the moment, pending that further inquiry which we hope will take place during the year.

Mr. AMES. Is it proposed to apply the remedy before the inquiry or after?

Mr. FIELDING. We think the evidence is sufficient to justify us in going this far; and if the inquiry thoroughly satisfies us, we will probably have to apply a more drastic remedy than this. I think the information we have is sufficient to justify us in granting this measure of relief to refiners here. But we do not propose to grant it to them for any fixed period; it is to be granted indefinitely, with a distinct understanding that parliament gives them no vested right in it, and that we may, after the inquiry, withdraw it at any moment.

Mr. AMES. By vote of parliament?

Mr. FIELDING. Only by vote of parliament. We think it should be made definite in the tariff itself, and not be dependent upon mere order in council.

I have said that we do not propose any other tariff changes. In saying this, it is not necessary to contend that our tariff is perfect. I do not suppose that we should ever have a tariff instrument in Canada that will not leave room for much debate, and we shall never have a tariff with respect to which some person will not feel that it is not working well.

But we remember that it is only two years since our tariff was revised and we think that the idea of tariff stability is worth something to the business of the country. We thought the business men of the country, other than the particular ones who would like particular changes, will readily concur in the view that tariff changes should not be made very frequently, and that it is even better at times for us to bear some little disadvantage that might seem to arise than to be constantly making these changes. Therefore except for these items with respect to sugar, which do not in any way affect the rate of taxation, which do not touch the revenue at all, we have no tariff changes to propose.

For the long period of 13 years it has been my good fortune to present to the parliament of Canada that annual statement of our financial affairs which we commonly call the budget. In almost every one of these speeches I have been able to present to the House a story of expansion of trade, of growing revenues, of satisfactory business, of increased population and of all the things that make for the progress and prosperity of our country. During the past year the conditions have been somewhat less favourable. The monetary stringency, almost world-wide in its character, which began in the autumn of 1907, created much disturbance of the trade and commerce of all countries. Our neighbours to the south perhaps suffered more than any other country. A panic in that country created a paralysis of industry, a paralysis of business. It was not to be expected that under such conditions we in Canada could entirely escape. We know that we did suffer somewhat from the influences of that panic, and yet as we look back we have reason to feel proud of the manner in which Canada has passed through that crisis. It is something creditable, I am sure, whatever may have been the cause of it—and I will not stop to enter upon that—that in that time of trial, Canada, her business, her institutions, everything Canadian, stood well and though here and there the pinch of the money stringency was felt, if we look back over it, we feel proud that Canada came through that period of stress so successfully and so well.

I feel now Sir, that we are at the point when the tide is turning. Already we think we can see signs of the betterment which we believe is to come. With the conditions that we have in Canada, with an energetic people, with vast resources, with an incoming population, with constantly improving conditions in the west, our future is bright. It was stated in the public press the other day that 70,000 people will come this year from the United States alone, bringing with them, according to the estimate of a careful observer, at least $1,000 each in property in addition altogether to their interest in the country. When we think of these 70,000 people coming in, bringing with them, we are told, $70,000,000 of addition to the wealth of the country, when we think of our great natural resources, when we think of the bright prospects of the west and see all around us such signs of energy, we feel, Sir, that we can look forward hopefully to a revival of business and a continuance of that progress and prosperity with which for so many years Canada has been blessed. We may not progress as rapidly as before, we may not have a revival of anything like boom times—nay we would not have it so if we could—but what we do feel is that the business of the country is in a natural and sound condition and that indications go to show that business will be better from this time forward. The money stringency has passed away, it is no longer a barrier to the progress of our country. The banks, which for a time had to curtail their accommodation, are now ready to aid every legitimate industry; the last bank statement shows that more money is being sent out into the various avenues of trade. This means a revival of business and with such a prospect surely we can say, with gratitude for the past, that we have every confidence in the continued progress and prosperity of Canada.

I beg to lay on the table the resolutions to be introduced in committee in accordance with the changes in the sugar duties. The resolutions are as follow:

That it is expedient to amend 'The Customs Tariff, 1907' as follows:—

	British Preferential Tariff	Intermediate Tariff.	General Tariff.
The following items shall be inserted in schedule 'A':
135b. Raw sugar as described in tariff item 135, when imported to be refined in Canada by Canadian sugar refiners to the extent of twice the quantity of sugar refined during the calendar years 1909, 1910 and 1911 by such refiners from sugar produced from Canadian beet root, and an equal quantity of sugar to that refined during the calendar years 1912 and 1913 by such refiners from sugar produced in Canada from Canadian beet root—the whole under regulations by the Minister of Customs.

	British Preferential Tariff.	Intermediate Tariff.	General Tariff.
Per one hundred pounds testing not more than seventy-five degrees by the polariscope..	31½ cts.	31½ cts.	31½ cts.
And per one hundred pounds for each additional degree over seventy-five degrees..	1 cent.	1 cent.	1 cent.
Provided that sugar imported under this item shall not be subject to a special duty.
This item to expire December 31, 1914.
135c. Raw sugar as described in tariff item 135, when imported to be refined in Canada by any sugar refining company not engaged in refining sugar from the product of Canadian beet root, to the extent of one-fifth of the weight of sugar refined from raw sugar by such refining company in Canada during the calendar year in which such raw sugar is imported, under regulations by the Minister of Customs.
Per one hundred pounds testing not more than seventy-five degrees by the polariscope..	31½ cts.	31½ cts.	31½ cts.
And per one hundred pounds for each additional degree over seventy-five degrees..	1 cent.	1 cent.	1 cent
Provided that sugar imported under this item shall not be subject to a special duty.

Hon. G. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I must say that I miss a great deal in the tone and manner of my friend of ancient days, the Minister of Finance, using the words 'ancient days' comparatively, and having reference to former budget speeches which he has made in this House. In fact the whole speech had a remarkably soporific effect on me and I am not sure that I shall be immediately able to throw off the influence. The hon. gentleman evidently felt that there were some points to be avoided, and it was almost painful to see the great care with which he dragged in a number of considerations to which we would hardly have thought a Minister of Finance would have given much attention. Why he did it I do not know if it were not in the exercise of that ingenuity and finesse of which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is a master. We have not heard much to-day about the fine facility with which the Minister of Finance so directed the financial affairs of this country that he was able to guide it through a series of years of very large expenditures and great growth and development without adding to the public debt. To-day he has had to acknowledge that there is a considerable addition to the public debt. We have not heard so much to-day about the surpluses except in a particular way. The Finance Minister was able by his peculiar arithmetic to figure out that on the 12 months of the year there would be a surplus of $1,500,000. That evoked a cheer, not a very hearty one, from my hon. friends opposite. But he still was able to evoke a cheer. One simple consideration will show the importance of maintaining a proper continuity in the system of bookkeeping employed by the government. If the Finance Minister had charged, as the Liberal-Conservatives did, the bounties to revenue and not to capital, as the amount so charged this year was $2,250,000, the Minister of Finance would not only not have had a surplus of $1,500,000, but he would have had to announce a deficit of $750,000. That would not have evoked any cheer, that would have made a difference to the party press. They then could not have jubilantly declared that in this, a year of adversity and financial distress, our Finance Minister had so piloted us that we had a surplus of $1,500,000. How did the Finance Minister get that surplus? He did it, not to use an offensive term, by juggling and falsifying the record——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, we will let that sink into the mind—by juggling and falsifying the record in so far that he adopted a system of bookkeeping for which he could not give any substantial reason and under which it would not be possible to give a fair comparative statement of expenditures.

So, that little episode of to-day where the surplus is so small that it is absolutely wiped out by an item in the accounts wrongly charged compared with the former system of book-keeping, shows what the Minister of Finance has been doing all the way through; and, up to date, sixteen million dollars and odd have been credited to his surplus in the books of this country which could only be credited there because he had changed the system of accounting from what it was before he came into power. Having declared that there was an increase of the debt amounting to $46,200,000 in this one year, he began to find reasons why we should not be very much concerned about that. He told us it could have been avoided in the first place by the government not undertaking to build the Quebec and Moncton section of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and he gave as a reason why the government must build that section that its construction was most earnestly demanded by the people of the locality. I could not help but think of the argument used by the Prime Minister the other day with reference to the Aylesworth ditch. The Prime Minister declared then that $1,200,000 of the people's money must be dumped into that Aylesworth ditch because there was a very urgent demand from the reeves and the wardens and the councillors and a number of the inhabitants in the vicinity of Holland landing and Newmarket. To-day, the Finance Minister tells us that the Quebec-Moncton section of the Grand Trunk Pacific must be built because it was urgently demanded by the people of the locality. The cardinal defect in that argument is, that these gentlemen opposite seem to think that they are here for no other purpose than to give adhesion to the bequests of individuals in scattered localities, and that because somebody comes and urgently and repeatedly asks that money be spent it is a sufficient justification for the expenditure of large sums.

The other day the Minister of Railways declared that there was no hope for the Intercolonial Railway unless it either were linked up with a western road, or that it built and acquired branches, but his chief point was that if it were to be successful it must be linked up with some great western railway. And yet the Minister of Finance declares to-day that a parallel line with the Intercolonial must be built, the only result of which will be to make it a competitor for the present scant freight and passenger business of the government railway. I think sir, that a far better thing to have done would have been to have lessened the grades on the Intercolonial, straightened its curves, and shortened its distances, and as the promoters of the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme represented to the Prime Minister and his government when the undertaking was first mooted, link the Intercolonial system to the west through the Grand Trunk and other connections from the Lakes to Montreal. That was the very proposition that Mr. Hays made to the right hon. gentleman; that was a proposition which under an agreement between the government and the Grand Trunk would have secured a western outlet for the Intercolonial and have avoided that immense expenditure of money not only for the road between Quebec and Moncton but also for the road from Quebec to the head of the lakes. That would have sufficed for the present at least, and so we would not have had this burden, this veritable old-man-of-the-sea which is crushing down upon Canada to-day. We would not have had to raise this immense amount of money in order to build a road long before its time and long before the necessity arose for our undertaking huge financial obligations in connection with it. The Minister of Finance said that we might have given 25,000,000 acres of land as in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but the main objection in his mind to giving land was because he said it was a cardinal article in the creed of the Liberal party that the land must be reserved for the settler. Well, Mr. Speaker, that was particularly rich coming from this government which from 1896 until 1907-8, to come no further down, seemed to make it their chief object in administrative life to get rid of blocks of lande as fast as they could, and in no case, if they could possibly avoid it. let them go to the settler at first hand. The Minister of Finance was optimistic in thinking that the eastern section of the Grand Trunk Pacific would be a good asset, that it would in a very short time cease to become a burden and pay us back the interest upon the whole investment. The hon. gentleman must be optimistic indeed if he believes that within any reasonably short period of years there will be any appreciable income from that railway which will ease the burden of capital expenditure which the people have to bear. Anyway, at present it looks that the money which we put into the eastern section will cost this country an even four per cent or very close to it, and even if the Grand Trunk Pacific Company takes it over and operates it it only has to pay three per cent, so that so far as the people are concerned it will not be a very striking financial or business arrangement for their benefit.

The Minister of Finance slipped carefully and quickly over the depreciation in trade; he noted that there was a decrease of $78,000,000 in imports and of $19,000,000 in exports, and he handed out to us the consoling reflection that we have not suffered as badly as the United States of America. Well, it was ever thus; when the imports were going up and the exports were advancing it was the policy and power of the Liberal government that caused prosperity. It was not of course because of world-wide conditions, and we perceived from the Liberal benches in those days no disposition at all to make comparisons with the general prosperity prevailing in the outside world. But when imports come down and exports are diminishing, then it is not the fault of the government or its policy, but the fault of world-wide conditions. The same spirit seems to have got hold of my hon. friend in this connection as in connection with the bounty business and the surplus. He changes according to the necessities of the case and the further necessity of making good his own position as far as he can. He is hopeful with reference to 1910; he gave a wonderfully precise forecast for that year. Here we are already in the year 1909-10, and yet the only forecast the Finance Minister can give us is that he hopes there will be a reasonable percentage of increases in the revenue over that of last year, while with reference to the expenditure he did not even hazard a guess as to what it would be. Former finance ministers have been a little more daring than that. They have, at least when they were near to the year, made what they considered a fair forecast of both revenue and expenditure, and they put their forecast to the test. My hon. friend did not seem disposed to do that. He says that we must not put on greater taxation, but must rather find relief in a reduction of expenditures. That is a good theory, and I hope my hon. friend will carry it out. But I, and I think others on either side of the House, could not fail to ask ourselves why he as Finance Minister, in 1907, when every third-rate man in a bank, not to speak of the managers and directors of banks, knew that the stress of weather was coming on, felt the forebodings and set themselves by every possible means to strengthen themselves financially for the blast, took no precaution at all. He crowded on all sail, and in that, the worst year in our experience for fifteen years, authorized and carried out his largest, most lavish and most wasteful expenditures. It would have seemed befitting in a Finance Minister who was careful and prudent to have made his provision when the danger was coming, to have drawn in his sail when the storm was about to burst. My hon. friend did not do that—why? Because sound principles of finance were against such a course? By no means. All sound principles of finance and every consideration of good business were in favour of that course. Our hon. friends opposite were not in favour of it—why? Because they lacked the sound business sense, or because they were making preparations for a general election? If the former, it is sad; if the latter, I venture to think it is infinitely more sad; because, of all things, for a government and its Finance Minister to imperil the credit of a country by failing to take the proper precautions when they see a difficulty approaching, in order to help their party fortunes, that is about the limit, it seems to me, and ought to be the strongest possible condemnation of any government or any Finance Minister. And now he appeals to the members to be patient and to be self-sacrificing. Let me add to that appeal by asking the Finance Minister himself to be patient and self-sacrificing. Look at the records of Shelburne and Queens, and compare the expenditures on all sorts of imaginable things in those two counties with the expenditures in the adjoining counties of larger coastal extent and greater importance. Run your eye over them and see the lavish and un-self-sacrificing way in which he provided for Queens and Shelburne, even in the teeth of the storm that burst upon him in 1907. When he appeals to the back benches to be self-sacrificing and to be merciful, maybe some of them will pluck up courage to say to the Finance Minister that it would be well for him to take a lesson out of the same book. For of what avail can a chancellor of the exchequer be as a watch on the treasury if he will not himself be self-sacrificing and self-denying? No chancellor of the exchequer in any country can successfully do what the country wishes him to do, and what the country feels that he ought to do, unless he denies himself even to the limit in order that he may stand well as the sleepless watchdog of the treasury, and prevent it from being raided by his supporters in parliament and by friends outside. But the Finance Minister was not satisfied with the appeal which he made to his followers in timid fashion, but he said that there was another reason—we must maintain our credit. But the credit of this country would have been far better maintained, and my hon. friend would have received a far better reception in Great Britain, and would have paid less of the money of this country to the underwriters, if he had taken the precaution two years ago—yes, and during the last five or six years, in times of heavy surpluses and abounding prosperity—to have strengthened the credit of the country by reducing the figures of the public debt and to have laid up in that way a reserve for the hard days. If he had done that, as he could have done it, he would have gone to the money markets of the old country in 1907 and 1908 with far better results to himself and with far better results to this country. For, let him spend as much time as he pleases in an endeavour to show to the contrary, it is a fact that under his management the credit of Canada has been strained. I shall deal with that more fully later.

My hon. friend, finding no men to engage in the combat on the floor of the House, must perforce spend a half hour of his time in dragging in from the outside a newspaper, setting it up as a contestant, and buffeting it as well as he could with his argument. He declared that some bold and shameless Conservative newspaper, in regard to the surplus and the difference between consolidated fund expenditure and capital expenditure, was accusing him of juggling with and falsifying the figures, and he undertook a wordy warfare in due form with the newspaper. Well, it seemed to me to be unnecessary, and to be, if I may be allowed to say so, rather outside of the province of a Finance Minister to drag in an outside contestant in that way, and have a long discussion with him about something that did not amount to anything anyway. The Finance Minister will have enough to do if he takes up the contests that are waged with him in this House, on this and other matters.

My hon. friend went into a long laboured discussion and displayed figures to show that all the Finance Ministers in Canada, from 1867 to his time, had kept the accounts in these two ways. That is they had a consolidated fund account and also a capital account. Then he went on to demolish really the grounds for any difference between the two by saying that all governments—his own as well as others—had indiscriminately paid capital sums from revenue and revenue items from capital, so that therefore there is really no generic difference between the two in so far as application goes. The very fact that the hon. gentleman himself does not keep the lines between capital expenditure and consolidated funds expenditure on any basis of principle is sufficient proof that the system is one on which we might very well change, and substitute for it a system followed in all the great countries of the civilized world. My hon. friend was asked two or three straight questions as to whether this was the condition in Great Britain, the United States, Australia, or New Zealand, and he ventured the statement that there were differences in the conditions in different countries. But he was not sufficiently sure of himself to state whether the system followed in Canada is followed in Great Britain, the United States, Australia, or New Zealand. If it be not the one adopted in Great Britain and the United States, we have in these two countries two very good examples. If it be not the one adopted in New Zealand and Australia, we have there two examples, with conditions the same as ours—a sparse population, insufficient revenue and large expenditures which have to be made and which have to be met by raising loans. For myself I have no hesitation in saying that the system is a bad one.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Tardy repentance.

Mr. FOSTER. My right hon. friend would do very well sometimes if he would only repent, but the trouble with him is that when he sees he is wrong, he does not repent. I am surprised that he should interject a remark which would lead one to suppose that he took the ground that no one should learn anything and consequently should not change, but my hon. friend cannot surely mean that. His interruption was no doubt simply a pleasantry interpolated and without very much point, so far as any argument is concerned. My hon. friend then went on to discuss the debt of this country and the burden of that debt. He did this by taking the population and dividing the amount into the sum of our debt. So far as that goes, the argument is good, but the argument does not go a very long way. It may be true that, in proportion as our population increases, our per capita debt decreases. So it does, and if you will go to the United States with its 80 or 90 million of people, you will find that its debt per capita is very much less as a burden. Also if you keep the interest about stationary it becomes less per individual in proportion as the population increases. But there is another point about which my hon friend was careful not to say anything, and it is a vital point. The vital point is what you take out of the individual citizen for all purposes. If my hon. friend had taken up that branch of the argument, he would have shown a different state of things. Whereas in 1896 we took from the people in taxes $5.46 per capita, last year my hon. friend took $11 per capita. That is the vital point. Our people paid last year in Customs taxes $57,000,000, and in excise taxes $15,000,000. These two added together are what you had better contrast with the amount paid in 1896, if you want to show the difference. Take the population in 1896 and what it is to-day, and you find that in 1896 we paid $5.46 in taxation per head whereas to-day we pay $11 per head.

As regards what my hon. friend has said about the small changes that have been made in the tariff, so far as I can see, the changes seem to be reasonable. But the proper place to discuss these will be on the tariff item.

PRIVATE BILLS.

PATENT OF THE SUBMARINE COMPANY.

On the order:

Third reading of Bill (No. 77) respecting a patent of the Submarine Company.—Mr. Proulx.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see the promoter of the Bill (Mr. Proulx) or the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) here.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not advised as respects this Bill. I have no doubt it has received the attention of some other minister. I observe that it has been reported by the Private Bills Committee.

Mr. FOSTER. Neither the minister nor the promoter is here.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

ONTARIO AND MICHIGAN POWER COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 34) to incorporate the Ontario and Michigan Power Company.—Mr. Conmee.

Mr. PERLEY. In the absence of the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) this Bill ought not to be gone on with.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

CANADIAN NORTHERN QUEBEC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. DUBEAU moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 38) respecting the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company be read and agreed to.

Mr. SPROULE. What are the amendments made by the Senate ?

Mr. DUBEAU. The reason why this clause has been added by the Senate is that the branch line there referred to is a fraction of a mile more than six miles in length. It is to reach a large mill on the Montmorency river. Had it been less than six miles long, it could have been built under the general powers conferred by the Railway Act, but as it is over six miles long—nearly seven miles—the consent of parliament has to be gained.

Mr. SPROULE. Was notice given of this in the notice of the Bill?

Mr. DUBEAU. Certainly, notice has been given. As to the second clause, that relates to bonding powers. Owing to the increased cost of railway construction, rolling stock and right of way, it has been found that the present bonding powers of the company, $25,000 per mile, are insufficient, and so the company is asking an increase to $30,000 a mile. The Canadian Northern Railway Company is an amalgamation of different companies, including the Chateauguay and Northern. The authorized bonding powers of the Chateauguay and Northern are $30,000 per mile, but the road cost more than that. This company is simply asking for a bonding power of $5,000 per mile more than it now has.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. member (Mr. Dubeau) misunderstood me. I did not ask as to the provisions of the Bill, but as to the Senate's amendments to the Bill.

Mr. DUBEAU. I am trying to explain the reason for these changes. The reason of the first is that the Railway Act does not give power to construct a branch that is more than six miles in length——

Mr. SPROULE. Yes; and what I asked was whether notice had been given of this?

Mr. DUBEAU. I am sure that notice has been given, because the Railway Committee of the Senate has declared that it was satisfied with what was done. I suppose the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) would not ask for more than was asked for by the Railway Committee of the Senate.

Mr. PRICE. I object to this. Notice was given of a Bill containing only two clauses. It passed this House and was referred to the Senate, and a committee of the Senate added two more clauses. One provides that the company may construct a certain railway line and the other gives them further bonding privileges.

Mr. TALBOT. Do I understand the hon. gentleman for Quebec West to say that he objects to the Bill now because two clauses have been added to it by the Railway Committee of the Senate, and that insufficient notice has been given?

Mr. PRICE. Yes.

Mr. TALBOT. How can a notice of amendments be given, either by a committee of this House or by a committee of the Senate? We cannot forsee anything of that kind. Why should we ask it to be done?

Mr. PRICE. I submit that these amendments cannot be passed without first being referred to the Standing Orders Committee of this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. gentleman propose an amendment?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not know that he is proposing an amendment. I understand the hon. gentleman objects to the Bill in toto.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman raises the point that no amendments ought to be adopted by this House until the House is satisfied by reference to the committee that the notice as given does cover the amendment.

Mr. PRICE. I move that the order be now discharged, and that the said Bill be referred back to the Committee on Standing Orders.

Motion agreed to.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 139) respecting the Ottawa Fire Insurance Company, and to change its name to Ottawa Assurance Company.—Mr Perley.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed debate on motion of Mr. Fielding, that the House go into Committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising a Supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance did not spend much time with reference to the trade aspect of the country in the speech which he made this afternoon. Of course, it is apparent from the limited statistics that he quoted, that during the last year we have had to face falling imports to a very large extent, and a falling off in exports to a limited extent. I notice with reference to imports and exports for the last fiscal year of which we have complete returns, that there has been a large difference between them, leaving a balance of trade, on the whole of a little over $100,000,000 against the country in that year. When we take up some of the principal countries, we find that we imported from Great Britain $95,313,730, and exported to her $134,477,124, being an excess of exports of $39,000,000 in our trade with Great Britain, which follows the course of our trade with Great Britain for a number of years. When we come to the trade figures with the United States, we find a great difference, and a great increase on the difference of the preceding year, inasmuch as we imported from the United States $214,787,269, and exported to the United States $96,931,138, leaving a balance of imports from the United States as against our exports to that country, of $118,000,000. Last year I drew the attention of the Minister of Finance and of the House to the large balance against us in our trade with the United States. In 1906 that adverse balance was $85,000,000, the largest in the history of the country up to that time. Now, in 1908, it is $118,000,000, being an increase of $33,000,000 from 1906. All the older members of the House will remember how much was made against the tariff in Liberal-Conservative times because it failed to redress that balance of trade between the United States and ourselves. In those days the balance of trade was very small; under the present regime it has continually expanded until this balance of $118,000,000 in the last fiscal year is the largest in the history of the trade. We notice also with reference to France, that whilst we imported from France $10,250,000 we exported $1,800,000. leaving a balance against us of $8,400,000. With reference to Japan, we imported from her $2,196,284 and we exported $749,000, leaving a balance of trade against us of nearly $1,500,000. So that the favourable balance of trade existing with reference to Great Britain of $39,000,000, is far more than wiped out by the adverse balance with the United States; and when you add these other countries, they make the total balance of trade against us a little over $100,000,000. Well, my hon. friends opposite, though they objected a great deal to an adverse balance of trade in the case of the United States, have found that they were unable in any way to arrest it, and it has been continually expanding. It is more rapidly becoming a menace.

Our friends on the other side have not, during the past year, opened to us any new markets. It was always the cry of the older members of the party when in opposition, that what Canada needed was new markets. Well, they have been in power a long while, and they have not opened to us the market of a single foreign country on any plan of duties more favourable to us than we had in 1896 when these gentlemen brought in their policy which was to open new markets. In fact, a prospective new market which we had in connection with the French treaty seems to have been partly closed. I notice that the Finance Minister did not say anything with reference to that, although it was a very important matter. We remember that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries made a good deal of the opening they were going to make into the French market. After having succeeded in getting a treaty, and after an attempt which did not succeed in making the people believe they had adopted an entirely new method of negotiation, in which Great Britain was kept outside while these gentlemen did the work themselves, and after having gained a good deal of glory on their first arrival in the country after having negotiated that treaty, we find that in some way or other the treaty slipped a cog, for one year at least, and my hon. friend went over to see that the matter was set right and that our French treaty should be brought into force. Well, as a result of the negotiations which he has had, I cannot see that he has gained anything for us in the way of admission of Canadian products into France. He has had to acknowledge a very regrettable error, which does not auger very well for these new diplomats; he failed to let France know just how many most favoured nation countries there were that would come in under the concessions that were given to France. As he did not seem to have mentioned Switzerland, the French treaty was hung up for a year or more on that account.

Now my hon. friend has had to pay the penalty of his mistake. Instead of being able to say, as he did before, to the farmers of Canada that by the minimum tariff they had gained an entrance for their fat cattle into France, the hon. gentleman has come back minus his fat cattle. The maximum tariff is now in force against the fat cattle of the people of Canada and I do not imagine that he or anybody else thinks that many fat cattle will be taken into the French market under a duty of 2·7 cents, pretty nearly 3 cents per pound standing weight. As to stockers, I imagine that the duty of 1·7 cents per pound standing weight will prevent any large trade in stockers between the farmers of this country and the French market. Thus this matter has been placed in even a more unfavourable light than it was before. I have not heard yet that my hon. friend has moved to have the French treaty ratified in the House. The result of the negotiations in reference to the French treaty is that we have the number of articles limited, it seems to me, in a very important particular with reference to the item I have just read. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to what seems to be a more important fact which has developed in connection with this matter in the legislation which is now being considered in the United States and to which he did not advert in his address this afternoon. As my hon. friend knows, the tariff of the United States is being revised. The Payne Bill, in a slightly amended form, has already passed the House of Representatives and is now being debated in the Senate. One very important clause in that Bill which, if it becomes law, and general opinion seems to take it for granted that it will become a part of the tariff, imposes a maximum or increased range of duties against countries which do not give to the products of the United States the most favoured entrance into their markets. Just how the Bill will pass out from the Senate and the House we do not know, but it seems to be taken for granted that that article, in one form or another, will become a part of the tariff. If it does it raises a pretty serious question. Our trade with the United States is a very large trade. In the French treaty there was given a list of 97 articles in reference to all of which the French got the advantage of reduced duties over our general tariff in the Canadian market. When we were discussing that treaty it was said in the House that although this was a large range of articles a great many of them were items in reference to which we would not look for very much competition from France owing to the nature of the articles and to the manufacturing conditions in France. These 97 articles covered, however, a very wide range, and if the United States is to be allowed into our market on those minimum duties with reference to those articles, a very serious state of things will exist. Diminutions of duty ranging from 7 per cent to 50 per cent of the general rate are made in these articles and some of the articles are even below the preferential rate which is offered to Great Britain, so that on the 97 articles in the one schedule and the 12 in the other and the long list of unenumerated articles on which there is a reduction of 2½ per cent, if the United States comes into Canada with their trade they will have the advantage of a lessened duty with reference to that wide and important range of manufactured goods and products. I shall not take up time by reading that list. If I did my hon. friends opposite would see in a moment that many of the articles included in that list are articles in which the United States are very large manufacturers and are very heavy competitors with our own and British producers. Take the manufacture of metals, iron and steel and others; the French goods under those items come in under a lessened duty. Then this United States tariff, as I understand it, comes into force automatically. The rate of duty goes on and after a certain time the increase in duty, which I think runs to about 20 per cent, applies to the products of every country which does not give the most favoured nation treatment to the United States.

Mr. PATERSON. That is not the law.

Mr. FOSTER. I have said that is not the law. I have said that is the proposition.

Mr. PATERSON. There is another proposition that the duties that are mentioned are to be the maximum and that any nation giving favoured nation treatment will have a 20 per cent reduction.

Mr. FOSTER. And it means exactly the same thing, for the maximum duty is put on a range that will make no difference whether you take it the one way or the other.

Mr. PATERSON. I beg pardon.

Mr. FOSTER. It is proposed to have a maximum duty and a minimum duty. The country which does not give most favoured nation treatment does not get the minimum duty but is put upon the maximum list and in arranging their duties they arrange the minimum list so as to give themselves a complete protection and they practically prohibit any large trade in the goods of the country which is put upon the maximum list from entrance into the United States market. That, as I have said, raises a very large question. Owing to the operation of the Japanese treaty the Japanese, by virtue of the most favoured nation clause, get the benefit of the reductions granted under the French treaty without any compensation to this country. If the United States adopt the clause to which I have referred, and press for its acceptance by Canada, the alternative is the payment of the maximum rate on all Canadian goods entering the United States. And, if we feel that the trade is so large and the advantage to us so great that we could hardly refuse it, then the United States would claim the whole range of the most favoured nation privileges which are not only given to Japan but to France as well. Then, in two months the process would be completed and after the expiry of that time our trade with the United States would be met by the maximum duties.

Mr. PATERSON. Of course nothing has been decided yet, but as I understand it the proposition before the United States Senate is that it shall not go into operation for a year.

Mr. FOSTER. However that may be, the gravity of the situation will be easily appreciated. We would have to make up our mind whether we will give to the United States most favoured nation treatment on all these lines for which we get from them no concession, or whether we are to refuse the United States that most favoured nation treatment and in consequence have the $96,921,000 worth of goods which we exported in the last fiscal year, subject to the highest and as I believe a practically prohibitive duty. After the elections had taken place in the United States one would have thought that the Payne Bill would have been a scaling down of the average duties, but I have an analysis made by the clerk of one of the committees and I find to my astonishment that the average under the Payne Bill is higher than it was under the old tariff, and particularly so on agricultural products which to a large extent we export to the United States. We therefore have to consider very carefully whether the theory of most favoured nation treatment is the proper one upon which to base our trade arrangements with other countries. The United States do not hamper themselves with it; they sit down alongside of Japan or of France or of Spain or of any other country and they say: 'Here are our products and there are yours, can we make a trade arrangement between ourselves?' They have only to look to what is beneficial between Spain and the United States; they are not hampered with the knowledge that if they give to one country this or that they would have to give the same to another country, and another country, and another country. They are able to act in the straight business way that a man would bargain with another man, and to make an arrangement between individual countries without considering how it will affect others. I am decidedly of opinion that the old method of most favoured nation treaties is entangling and embarrassing, and that it is constantly leading us into difficulties. With our largely increasing trade in Canada, I believe we cannot go on any longer without very carefully considering and making up our minds on this matter. There is another reason why I would plead with the government to hold its hand for at least a time in making these arrangements with different foreign countries. I am one of the men who believes that if we can get a proper arrangement between ourselves and Great Britain and the British empire, that there is an opening field for the richest, the best, and the most secure trade in the world. I look over this great British empire and I find that there is no variety of climate which it does not possess, there is no possible thing that grows which is not grown in more or less abundance within the borders of the empire. It is in that respect absolutely self-contained with reference to powers of production and facilities for trade. Sometimes we hear of the long distances that intervene, but long distances are not to-day what they were in the past. A man speaks with his trade brother across the ocean in a few seconds, and with multiplied means of quick inter-communication distance is abridged between all parts of the world. Five or six years ago when the question of preferential trade within the empire was mooted, I do not blame a great many people for thinking we would grow old indeed before we would see Great Britain giving up the old free trade doctrine and practice. But I do not think there are many people nowadays who doubt that the time is measurably near when Great Britain is going to make a change in the basis of her fiscal policy. There is no instance in history of so rapid and startling a change of opinion in relation to fiscal and trade questions, hallowed by years of practice, as that which we have seen within the last five or six years in Great Britain. I have no doubt that when the next elections in Great Britain come, the government will either itself change measurably from the autocratic and dogmatic doctrine of free trade in all situations, or, if it should not survive, as the evidence of the by-elections would seem to point to, then the Unionist party, pledged as it is by Mr. Balfour and his adherents, will be in a position to place Great Britain where she can make an offer of mutual trade preferences between herself and the dominions beyond the seas. Now, every little bargain that we make with Spain, with Germany, with France, with Japan, or with any other country, is hampering our freedom when we come to that point, not very far distant, when we shall be invited to sit down together as members of the same great family and the same great empire, and make for ourselves an arrangement for mutually beneficial and preferential trade. So much with reference to the trade question.

Let me come now, and very briefly, to some points with reference to the financial management during the past few years.

The Finance Minister to-day spoke of the numerous surpluses which he has had, which surpluses were got absolutely and solely because of extraordinary taxing powers that the government availed themselves of. If the government had kept the volume and burden of taxation down to what it was, or to anything near what it was, in Liberal-Conservative times, they could not have amassed such immense sums of money, and they could not have had such large surpluses. If a government will tax sufficiently, it will have large revenues and may have large surpluses.

But with all these surpluses there are some considerations that are to be taken into account. One point let me mention, which has not, I think, been mentioned in this House for some time, if it ever has been. The Finance Minister says that from 1886 to 1896 we made an addition to the debt of $35,000,000. That is true; but if you look at the accounts of 1886, you will find an item of over $10,000,000 which was expended on capital account and added to the debt, but for which we got 7,500,000 acres of land in the Northwest. Now, that $10,000,000 went to swell the debt, but for that we purchased outright and kept as an asset for this country 7,500,000 acres of land. This land in the present year, if you put upon it only the small value which has been put upon the lands which have been sold in a restricted sense to the settlers there, of $3 an acre, is equivalent to $22,000,000. But nobody believes that $3 an acre is the fair value of land in the Northwest at the present time; so that if I call the value of that land $6 per acre, taken in the whole, there is an asset which is to-day worth about $45,000,000. That would more than wipe out the accession to the debt from 1886 to 1896. This shows the necessity of examining into the accounts instead of taking them simply upon the surface. What asset has been acquired by the additions to the debt made by my hon. friend opposite during his regime? He cannot point to a single one which to-day could be put upon the market and sold to realize upon. We added $10,000,000 to the debt more than we otherwise would have done in that period of years; but we added at least $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 to the available assets of the country, for the land at present values would realize that and more than that.

Then, with reference to the surpluses, one would think that if the Finance Minister had surpluses amounting to $115,000,000 from 1897 to 1908, he ought to have kept pretty well off the borrowing market; but he did not. Now, I suppose that I shall surprise members of this House who have not looked into it. If you take the list of regular loans, you will find that the Finance Minister put on a regular long-time loan in 1897, and after that he did not go into the money market for a long-time loan until 1904; and during all that time he was having surplus after surplus year by year, by the millions. But the hon. gentleman was borrowing all that time. From 1896 to 1909, the Finance Minister put through 34 temporary loans, by which he borrowed $94,226,333 and paid for interest and charges $1,831,259. It was a revelation to me when I got this return that during all those years of large surpluses the Finance Minister had to be in the banks in London and in this country almost every year. These loans were as follows:

In	1896,	1 loan amounting to.... ..	£ 400,000
	1897,	4 loans amounting to... ..	2,000,000
	1899,	2 "	1,300,000
	1901,	1 loan amounting to..... ..	500,000
	1902,	2 loans amounting to... ..	2,500,000
	1903,	2 "	1,750,000
	1904,	9 "	2,300,000
	1905,	3 "	2,000,000
	1906,	2 "	850,000
	1907,	1 loan amounting to..... ..	500,000
	1908,	2 loans amounting to... ..	2,000,000
	1908,	3 "	$ 5,873,000
	1909,	2 "	10,000,000

These loans were made at rates running up to 4 and 4½ per cent.

All the time the Finance Minister was vaunting his surpluses.

Mr. FIELDING. Has not my hon. friend omitted an important fact?

Mr. FOSTER. What is that?

Mr. FIELDING. That all these loans were paid—that they served a temporary purpose and were paid off.

Mr. FOSTER. No doubt they were paid off. Did the Finance Minister think I said these $94,000,000 still remained?

Mr. FIELDING. I remember his stating that they were a liability we incurred but he forgot to state they were paid off.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not think my hon. friend would ask me to state they were paid off. They were temporary loans renewed from year to year as I said, but the fact remains that he borrowed $94,000,000, and that Canada paid in charges on these loans $1,831,259.

Mr. FIELDING. And there were no similar loans in my hon. friend's time?

Mr. FOSTER. There were no loans under these conditions and to that extent.

Mr. FIELDING. There were loans of precisely the same character and for the same purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, let me come to the other loans, what we call the permanent or long loans. I have a table here which will show the comparison between the two governments. We have been led to believe that such has been the policy of the Finance Minister since 1897, that we have been great gainers financially in the money markets of the world. I suppose that people generally who have not looked into it, and who support my hon. friend, would think that our rate of interest had gone away down and that our charges were much less than before, due to the great prosperity of Canada under the policy pursued by my hon. friend. If there are any who think so, this table will dispel their illusions. In the first place, here is a table of the loans made under the Conservative government from 1879 to 1894. All of these loans but one were made under the arrangement which we had with Glynn, Mills and Currie, which in 1893 was changed to the arrangement we made then and have had since with the Bank of Montreal—an arrangement much more favourable indeed to the people of Canada because of the better conditions and lower brokerage charges. Bearing that in mind, let us now make the comparison. All of the loans in this first period were made under the most expensive system of agency, and in that time we made loans to the extent of £26,943,136. We paid for brokerage £55,718 and for commissions £214,916. Now, it is a coincidence that the loans made by the present Finance Minister from 1897 to 1909, commencing in 1897, aggregated £26,831,398, within £100,000 of the exact sum that we borrowed in the previous years. The brokerage paid by my hon. friend—and recollect that under his loans the reduced system of brokerage was in force from beginning to end, under the arrangement with the Bank of Montreal, whilst only one of the other loans was made under that system amounted to £60,988 and the commissions to £347,327, a difference between the two in brokerage of £5,270 and in commissions of £132,411, being a total excess of £137,681, or in round numbers $685,000.

Let me now read the rates on the loans by the late Conservative government under the old system. The commissions were 1 per cent on all the loans with the exception of two, where the commissions were ¼ per cent. They were brought down to ¼ per cent by the arrangement with the Bank of Montreal. The present Finance Minister entered the market in 1897 under that arrangement, and his first loan of £2,000,000, to which he alluded this afternoon, was subject to a commission of ¼ per cent. My hon. friend was good enough to say this afternoon that he struck the psychological moment in 1897 and got the loan at an effective rate of interest of 2·883 per cent. He struck that psychological moment because he trod exactly on the heels of the last administration, which had brought the credit of Canada to such a pitch that he was enabled to make a loan under those conditions. The loan which I myself put through a little before that was a shade over 3 per cent, with a commission of ¼ per cent and a brokerage of ¼ per cent. He got an effective rate of 2·883 with a commission of ¼ per cent and a brokerage of ¼ per cent. That was in 1897. He and his government then began to get in their work. He went to the loan market in 1904, after he had been at work for seven years, and then he floated a loan on which he paid 4½ per cent and a little more and a commission of 1 1-13 per cent. Then he went on making loans, the commissons being 1½, 1¾, 1½, 1⅛, 1½, and his last loan was at 1½ per cent. Never before were any commissions like those paid in the history of Canada. I have here a statement of all the loans since 1869. In 1869 a loan of £2,000,000 was negotiated at a commission of 1 per cent. In 1873 we negotiated a loan of £1,800,000 at a commission of ½ per cent, and so on down to 1892.

Well, with reference to costs and charges, the hon. gentleman had managed so well that, with all the improved conditions and prosperity of Canada, when he went into the London market he had to pay commissions raised from ¼ to 1½ per cent. But what did he succeed in accomplishing with regard to the rates of interest applied on the loan? I have here the rates of interest on the old loans commencing 1869. In 1869 the rate of interest was 4·125. In 1873 it was a shade less than 4 per cent. In 1874 it was 4½ per cent. In 1875 it was a shade over 4 per cent. In 1876—that was in the troublous times when my hon. friend opposite had power—the rate was 4·75. In 1879 it was 4 3-10, and in 1879, 4½ per cent. So that the highest rate of interest from confederation to 1879 was 4¾ per cent. Thereafter the rates were as follows:

Year.	Rate.
1879	4½
1884	4
1885	4½ and 4
1888	3·21
1892	3·41
1894	3·11

We come now to the regime of my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding). As I said, his first loan he got in at the psychological moment, and before his policy had been able to do much damage. But what were the percentages after that?

Year.	Rate.
1904	4½
1907	4·8
1907	4½
1908	4½
1908	3·8
1908	4·125

The following table shows the above in detail:

So that, both in the charges—particularly in commissions—and in the rate of interest the burden upon the people under these hon. gentlemen has been higher than at any time since confederation over the average of so many years. And all this in a time when money is cheap. Why, for the last eight or ten months in London and in the great cities of the United States, money has been extraordinarily cheap. I notice by the quotations that short time loans are running in London to-day at from 1 to 1⅜ per cent. In New York, loans running for six months have been lately negotiated at 1¾, 2 and 2½ per cent. So, there must be something underneath, rather than simply the circumstances of which my hon. friend spoke this afternoon which brings it to pass that Canada, after being for twelve years under the financial management of hon. gentlemen opposite, must pay these immense underwriting charges and these high rates of interest for financial accommodation.

But there is a worse feature than that about it. Three of these heavy loans—and they are very heavy loans—have been made for periods of four years only, but with underwriting charges and brokerage charges as heavy as if they had been made for fifty years. Here is a loan made in 1907 which expires in 1912, and yet 1¼ per cent commission has been paid upon it, amounting to £22,511. And in less than two years time, that loan will have to be re-made—there is no possibility of it being otherwise paid off—and then will come another brokerage and heavy commission. Another four years' loan expires in 1911. The commission on it was 1½ per cent, amounting to £22,882. In two years time that falls due, and when the Finance Minister goes to arrange it, he goes with the example already set of heavy underwriting charges which in our time we knew nothing of. We had an arrangement with the Bank of Montreal, made by myself, by which ¼ of 1 per cent is given for new loans and a smaller rate for renewals and extensions, with ½ of 1 per cent additional if we thought the Bank of Montreal was not able to put through the whole loan and had to associate other banks with it. But this commission of ½ of 1 per cent, paid when other banks had to be associated with the Bank of Montreal, has been run up to 1½ per cent. I do not know, but it seems to me that these are indications, as I stated this afternoon, of the somewhat strained credit of Canada in the old country to-day. The hon. minister (Mr. Fielding) made no provision when he could have made provision, that is when he had immense surpluses. He allowed everything to go on accumulating, then found himself in the market in 1908 and the late part of 1907 with maturing loans and new loans following one another in such dangerous proximity and in such large amounts that the market did just as any market will do—if you appear there too often it will make you pay for your visits. If my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) had taken the right course, the credit of Canada would have insured the loan, and he would not have needed to pay these immense underwriting charges. Why, in one of these loans, he pays the underwriters, then he pays a body of men for arranging the underwriters, then he pays the brokers and bankers for assisting the men who arranged the underwriters—a treble charge and amounting to 1¾ per cent on the whole transaction. It seems to me that this is a matter worth drawing attention to. It seems to me to show clearly that the Minister of Finance, by lack of foresight and of extravagant and reckless expenditure, has put this country into a position where it must pay altogether unnecessarily high for financial accommodation. And my hon. friend taxes some of us on this side with failure in prophecy—with having said that such and such would be the case only to find that it did not turn out in that way. Not many years ago the Finance Minister said, standing in this House and looking forward to the loans maturing in 1910 and 1913:

> We shall save a million dollars in the renewal of these loans from 1903 to 1910, and maybe more.

He has not only not saved a million dollars, but he has been out of pocket in renewing these loans and the interest at high rates will run on for the term of the loans.

Now, a word with reference to the matter of management of a country's financial business. Somehow or other, we are apt to get it into our heads that different principles and different methods are to be applied to the running of a country's business from those to be applied in running the business of an individual or corporation. I think that is a heresy which has much to answer for. In the first place, it induces action on the part of the government which no business man would for a minute undertake, and it lays the foundation for laxity of management of government funds and an extravagant scale of government expenditures, which, if the truth were kept close home both by the government and their followers, that the same principle ought to apply in the management of a government's as in the management of a man's or a corporation's business, we should be less liable to the multifold temptations into which we fall, and the multiplied expenses which these temptations cause us.

Now in the case of an individual, or a corporation, or a government, it is true that in each case the individual, the corporation, or the government are the trustees of the business that they carry on. The one who has less responsibility and can therefore dare more, is the individual, because, as he says, his money is his own. It is not entirely his own, his wife and family have claims upon it, and he acts and works for them; but he has less responsibility and more freedom. But when you come to a corporation and when you come to a government, it is an absolute trusteeship, and from that idea of trusteeship the corporation is never absent, and the government ought never to be absent. Now a business man, governed by business instincts, on what methods will he carry out his business? Well, he will, in the first place, ponder every outlay before he makes it. The government makes the outlay first and does the pondering afterwards. He will sit down and count the cost, and if he thinks he can afford it, he will undertake it. The government enters into it and counts the cost afterwards.

Take for instance, the Newmarket canal. Will my hon. friend the Minister of Customs say that he, as a member of the government, as a trustee of the people, sat down and counted the cost of that Aylesworth ditch before he and his government committed themselves to the expenditure? I do not think my hon. friend will say that, I doubt if any single member of the Cabinet can say that honestly. A private gentleman, or a corporation, would have sat down and counted the cost before they entered into the expenditure. They would have asked very naturally the question, first, if there was any water there to put into the canal after they built it. They would have asked the very pertinent question, is it necessary at that cost? They would have asked another pertinent question, is it advantageous in proportion to the cost? Did my hon. friend sit down and ask either of these questions? Did any member of the Cabinet? If so, they were lamentably dense a few weeks ago in this House when not a single one of them could tell us what traffic or what trade they ever expected to go over that Newmarket canal after it was built.

Now there is another difference between a government, the trustees of the people's money, and an individual or a corporation which is engaged in constructing works for which it has to pay. In times of prosperity when they decide that the work is to be gone on with, they are very careful to get the proper plan worked out, and to have the proper economy exercised, and to have proper supervision, to see that the work is effective. But that is not the way the government does; that is not the way the government did with reference to the Quebec bridge, that is not the way the government did with reference to the Grand Trunk Pacific, even. The Quebec bridge—fancy a business man undertaking the operation which they undertook, and in the way they undertook it! Fancy any corporation doing it unless it were a corporation which felt that it had sufficient influence to put the government behind its back and see it through if it failed, and pay it interest and a dividend for failing! They paid these gentlemen after they failed, paid them their money back, counted by their stock at par, paid them 10 per cent in advance on their stock as a bonus, paid them 5 per cent on their supposed outlay for the stock from the time that they got their stock and saw that they got good round salaries, several of them, during the whole time they were not doing the business, and after having paid them all that, they assumed the debt, took the assets, and the assets are most of them down in the bottom of the river. Now that illustrates the difference between a government, and an individual or a corporation. I need not elaborate the Grand Trunk Pacific, that is a lesson which is always before us, of a government going into a thing without practically a shred of expert knowledge upon which to base their whole scheme, going into it on estimates made by themselves, or by some others for them, which a few years have knocked into small pieces, and the estimates themselves are doubled and in some cases tripled when it comes near to the period of ascertaining the actual cost.

Well, Sir, these are some of the differences between the way this government operates and the way that an individual or a business corporation would operate. The business man has always to consider two things: What is it going to cost me to carry on my business, and can I pay the debt that I owe when that debt matures? A government seems to be oblivious of the idea of looking much at the probable cost, and as for the day of ultimate payment, it never crosses their mind. Their reply to that is that the country is good for it. I have heard hon. gentlemen opposite say that over and over again. The government—what has it done? And what has my hon. friend the Minister of Finance done? He has taxed to the limit, he has spent to the limit, he has added mortgages additional and additional to this country, and he has added to the interest burden as well. Taxes—in eleven and three quarter years he has taken $555,000,000 out of this country, $223,000,000 more than the Liberal-Conservatives took out in the last eleven and three quarter years of their regime. Taxes—they were $28,600,000 in 1896, they were $73,300,000 in 1908, an increase of around $45,000,000 in that time.

And to all this we get the flippant answer, 'Oh, the country is good for it.' Now let us analyse that for a moment. What does the Minister of Finance mean when he says the country is good for it, or what does any gentleman mean when he says, 'Never mind the debt, never mind the burden, the country is good for it?' Do the creditors of Canada foreclose on your public buildings, your docks and your wharfs in order to get their interest, or to get their principal paid back to them? Do they foreclose on your forests, on your fisheries, on your mines or on any of the assets of this country? Not at all. When you say the country is good for it, what you mean is that so long as you can tax enough or borrow enough you will get along, and you tax the individual and you borrow, and you lay the burden of the borrowing upon the individual. So when you say the country is good for it, what you really mean is that the individual taxpayer is good for it, and has got to shoulder the whole thing in the long run.

Then, Sir, every individual tax payer in this country has other business to do, other taxes to pay, and other burdens to shoulder. In the first place he has to keep himself and his family, to run his business, to borrow what is necessary for it, to pay interest and pay the principal as well. That is his first burden. Then he has to pay the municipal current taxes. That is his second burden. Then he has to pay the provincial current taxes. That is his third burden. Then he has to pay a tax to every corporation which makes the means of living and the facilities of life better for him, he gets a higher scale of living but he pays for it in one way or another. In addition to that he has to pay the loan burden of municipalities and provincial governments, and to a certain extent, of corporations. Then the Minister of Finance saying Canada is good for it, comes upon the poor tax payer who has all these burdens and loads him up from $5.46 per head to $11 per head in his short regime. Let us get rid of the idea that the country is good for it, an indefinite something which owns nothing, which pays nothing, but let us remember that every bit of this burden falls ultimately upon the individual taxpayer and the individual tax payer in this country to-day is drained and drained heavily, in many cases he is drained to the point of weakness. One thing has helped us and saved us to a large extent and will help and save us in the future, the development and product of our arable lands. The Finance Minister spoke this afternoon of 70,000 immigrants from the United States going up into our new lands. These men, with those who come from other countries, are the people who with dollar wheat—to my mind never to return to the old low rate—raising their productive harvest in the great west and putting it into and vivifying every artery of industry and of commerce in this country are its greatest hope—and these men are coming to Canada owing to the policy pursued by the Liberal-Conservative government long before this government came into power, blazing the path, opening the country, and affording means of transportation for our Northwest, that great last west of free or fairly cheap lands, that is the salvation of our country. As I said, the taxation of this country taking it all through, is for a new and a poor country tremendously heavy and this government ought not to press beyond a reasonable point and add to that already heavy burden. We seldom think of the amount of borrowing that is going on in Canada, of the enormous amount of money that is coming into the country. Sometimes we look at that side of the movement only and forget that every dollar that comes into this country, with its yearly accretion, has ultimately to go out of this country. The moment that a million pounds finds its way into Canada and is invested in any way, that moment begins the return stream, of interest first and finally of principal. I have urged on the Prime Minister such a re-organization of our statistical system as would enable us to obtain from the official publications, statistical information of a practical kind which would be of value to us in our discussions of subjects of this kind, yet to obtain the figures which I am about to give to the House I have had to avail myself of a very excellent little production published by Mr. E. R. Wood of the Dominion Securities Company in Toronto. I find from this that in the years, in Canada, 1904-5-6-7 and 8 the total of bonds issued by governments, municipalities and corporations was as follows:

Issued by.	Amount.
Governments..	$107,580,000
Municipalities..	93,500,000
Corporations..	301,700,000
Total..	$503,900,000

There were bonds issued for use in Canada. Of these bonds $196,400,000 were issued in 1908. This is a vast sum but it is but a small portion of the money which has been brought into this country. Of Dominion government bonds, provincial government bonds and railway bonds, there were running on December 31, 1908, about $802,000,000. All this goes to show the immense amount of money that is coming into this country, and it teaches us as well that beginning immediately and continuing there is to be an immense amount of money that must go out of this country. The issues of Dominion government bonds unfortunately are not for what we might call productive investments. They go to build public buildings, wharfs, Newmarket canals, St. Joseph wharfs, they go to build Quebec bridges which fall down into the water. Some expenditures are not productive but they are of use in the developement of the country. The main point which I wish to drive home is that we must not justify taxation on the ground that the country is good for it, we must remember that it is the country's burden. Our country has within it such resources and such powers that a livelihood for the public who inhabit it is made easy, and poverty cannot be imminent or widespread. But at the same time we must not overburden the individual.

Just one thing in closing—my right hon. friend is proud of his Minister of Finance; he said so in Halifax. He is also proud of his Minister of Public Works; he told us the other night he is now 'PP,' prouder of Pugsley than ever. I suppose that now after my exposition he will be still prouder of his Finance Minister. Far be it from me to pluck a single feather from the cap of the Minister of Finance, but at the same time there are considerations that we might indulge in in a quiet way in order to prevent the Minister of Finance from becoming too much elated by the pride that his Prime Minister has in his performances. Suppose that good naturedly I should go over a number of these as the ending of my remarks. In the first place the Prime Minister should be proud of the Minister of Finance because in all the history of Canada there has been no Finance Minister who has so completely swallowed all his principles and all his professions, fiscally, financially, and otherwise, as has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding). Is not that true? The oldest Finance Minister we have living stood true to his fiscal colours. In the dark times when the Liberals held the government of this country from 1873 to 1878, Sir Richard Cartwright stood to his colours; a free trader he was when he went in, a free trader he was when he came out, and if he was not inclined to be so at all times Alexander Mackenzie kept him so. Even staring defeat in the face they would not change their colours; they were consistent. Sir Leonard Tilley and Sir John Macdonald succeeded. They advocated a new policy when they were in opposition; they were told—my right hon. friend told them—it was only a plea for getting in and that they would not put it in force when they did get in. But they went in and Sir Leonard put his principles of the National Policy into force and the Liberal-Conservative Finance Ministers kept them in force from that day to the day they went out. Then, my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) came in. He was a doughty free trader in the days of opposition; he was a red-hot economist in the days of opposition; he was dead against the National Policy and the principle of protection when he was in opposition; he was death to surpluses; it was Liberal creed and Fielding doctrine in those days that there should be no surplus. But the hon. gentleman came into office and where are his free trade principles now; whither has his rigid economy taken flight; where is his hatred of bounties?—bounties on iron, bounties on steel, duties on coal and the necessaries of life, bounties on twine, bounties on oil, bounties on beet root sugar. He is without doubt the champion swallower of his principles and policy. My right hon. friend has a perfect right to be prouder than ever of his Finance Minister and no doubt, in this case, a fellow feeling makes him wondrous kind. Well, Sir, the Minister of Finance is champion in another respect; he is the champion taxer of Canada. Of all the Finance Ministers that have ever been, no one has gone so deep into the people's pockets, no one has piled up the altars so high with the hard earnings of the people. He found the tax $28,000,000 when he came in; in 1908 he had raised it to $73,000,000. In 11¾ years he has taken $223,000,000 more than his predecessors in an equal number of years. My right hon. friend must be proud of him in that respect. If I remember well, once on a time in the city of Ottawa in 1893 he held up the flag inviting all and sundry to march up to the citadel and to put out the men who believed in protection, who overtaxed the people and who were extravagant in their methods of government. Well, Sir, my friend the Minister of Finance also takes some rank as scalping the thrifty depositors of this country of a part of their interest upon their deposits in order to swell that vaunted suplus of his which he must have. If he cannot get it by changing 16 million dollars from current account to capital account he can take $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 by docking the depositors in the savings banks of one-half of one per cent, and paying them a return upon their money one to one and a half per cent less than he is paying to the foreign money lenders. No Minister of Finance in the history of Canada has ever so fattened and fed the foreign lender and the foreign broker, and no one has ever made it so pleasant for the middleman as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding). I have read the story of the commissions and the brokerage charges that have been paid in connection with these loans, and no other Finance Minister of Canada has ever paid as high rates for money in Great Britain as has the present Finance Minister. In that respect also has he a record. He is also—he will not think I am applying it to him in other than the technical sense—he is also the champion spendthrift of Canada. What I mean by that is that he has spent more than any other Canadian Finance Minister. Coming in on the declaration that $38,000,000 was appalling as our annual expenditure, he climbed up last year to an expenditure of $132,000,000, and no other Canadian Finance Minister has ever accomplished such a feat, expenditures commencing with $41,000,000 a year and ending in the year just past with $132,000,000. I am sure my right hon. friend is now proud of the Finance Minister as a spender. And the purposes of this spending—the Quebec bridge, the Newmarket canal, St. Joseph's wharf, not to come nearer home. Go anywhere through this country, and the list is so large, of absolutely useless and wasteful expenditures, gone into without thought—no cost counted until the whole bill was sent in, and then it was paid. And the quality of the expenditures—why, Sir, there is scarcely a thing upon which money can be spent which is not to-day brought within the category of Dominion expenditures, and upon which money is not spent. They have gone so far as to advertise for applications for expenditures. My right hon. friend remembers the doughty economist in the days of his opposition crusade—Sir Wm. Mulock of the present moment, who was in Ontario his right hand in the matter of strict and rigid economy. My right hon. friend will remember that he made him at one time Minister of Public Works, and he had not warmed the seat of that office temporarily for more than a few hours before he actually issued a circular inviting all members of parliament and unsuccessful candidates to just advise him if there were any expenditures in their constituencies which they would like to have carried out, as he would be glad to know what they were.

There is another eminence which the Minister of Finance has. He has promulgated more interesting and misleading fiction as a basis for public expenditures in this country than any Finance Minister I know of. Witness the Grand Trunk Pacific. How certain he was that that would not cost more than $13,000,000 all told to the people of this country. How certain he was that the outlay would not be more than $51,000,000 as an advance; and to-day his Minister of Railways puts the outlay at $114,000,000 on the eastern division, less terminals, less Quebec bridge, less a lot of other things, and before it is through with $180,000,000 will be nearer the figure. $51,-

000,000 was in the preface of that most interesting piece of fiction that the Finance Minister read to us in 1903, and to which he issued a supplement in 1904. To-day he faces and for the last year he has faced the monsters that he has conjured up—wastefulness, extravagance, maturing debt, fresh debt, and all the horrors of the money market, with temporary loans in almost every bank, with maturing liabilities of millions of pounds cropping up every few months, and with the conditions that surrounded general finance in the year 1908. He faces all these things. Will the monsters destroy him? Has his wand lost its efficacy? Can he send them back to the vast deep from which he summoned them? It remains to be seen. But he is face to face with them to-day. My hon. friend must go into the market right now, in the year 1909, to ask for a loan of $10,000,000 extra for the Grand Trunk Pacific, if the government carries its policy through. He has got to ask this year for at least $30,000,000 for the Grand Trunk Pacific and other capital expenditures. That makes $40,000,000 which he has to look for outside in the year 1909. But that does not end it. In 1910, he has $9,000,000 maturing, and he will have to ask another $30,000,000 for the Grand Trunk Pacific and for the Hudson Bay Railway. Why did the Finance Minister omit to speak of the Hudson Bay Railway to-day? The Prime Minister, the Minister of the Interior, the Minister of Railways, all are pledged to the building of the Hudson Bay Railway, and the building of it immediately. Why was no mention of that made to-day? I assume that they will implement their promise; I assume that the west will keep them to that promise. They made it in cold blood, when the worst of the financial proposition was before their eyes, and they knew what they were making. The Minister of the Interior will say we are providing for that out of our lands, selling enough at $3 an acre to pay for it. Let me ask the Minister of the Interior: 'You have sold your lands and got some money for them; where is that money to-day?' Spent, every dollar of it; and if you got in the whole of that money, the next year and the year after, every dollary of it would be spent on consolidated fund account; and when you come to build the Hudson Bay Railway for $20,000,000 or $25,000,000, you must get the money by making a loan on the British market. You have started the annuities crusade and you are taking money from the people of this country for that. Where is the money you are taking in? It is a debt of the country. You put it into the consolidated fund, and you spend it on the things I have been speaking about. Where are the savings of the people which have been entrusted to your care—their capital, on which you pay interest? Every dollar of it is spent. It is now and always has been a debt of the country. In 1910 there is $9,000,000 of debt maturing and $30,000,000 which will have to be borrowed for the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Hudson Bay Railway, making $39,000,000. In 1911 there is $8,600,000 of maturing debt and $30,000,000 more for the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Hudson Bay Railway, making $38,600,000. In 1912 there is $31,000,000 of maturing debt and $30,000,000 to be borrowed for the Grand Trunk Pacific, making $61,000,000 for that year; and you will go on to 1913, unless you finish the railway and make the borrowings before, and have in that year $3,700,000 of maturing debt and $25,000,000 to be borrowed for the Grand Trunk Pacific. Each year the minister has to go to London for forty millions, thirty-nine millions, thirty-eight millions, sixty millions, and twenty-eight millions or thirty millions, simply for the Grand Trunk Pacific, the Hudson Bay Railway and maturing loans, not taking into account the great expenditures which from year to year press themselves upon the people of this country. By a bit of legislation a day or two ago you pledged yourselves to $2,000,000 which you have to raise in the next ten years for a steamship line between Canada and France. The Minister of Railways has pledged himself to a large sum of money for level crossings. And so each year brings its own new burden. These are the things which will strain all the revenue you get, and which will use up the surplus, and more to be raised by borrowing.

Then there are your obligations. What do you suppose the Grand Trunk Pacific will cost in the mountain section? How much short of $100,000 a mile will it cost? Who will have to raise that $100,000 a mile? Now that you have opened the doors to the Grand Trunk Pacific by making that company a loan of $10,000,000, what will you have to reply to them when they come to you next year and say: 'We cannot place our securities on the British market and raise the money we require; help us or this thing will tumble and Canada's credit be ruined.' They will be able to come back with a double force. They have you on the down grade and will be able to push you as far as their necessities make it necessary for them to do so. And the expenditures of capital on your militia and great rivers and lakes—all these have to be raised, and there will be nothing left for you to do but add immense sums to the borrowings you have already incurred. All these things are to the credit of the Finance Minister. We have had a little philosophical talk in a good-natured way, and I wish to decorate him with all those feathers, which, I am sure, he will wear with all due gratitude to the donor.

Hon. R. F. SUTHERLAND (North Essex). The hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Foster) at the conclusion of his speech—which I must characterize as a comparatively moderate speech for him—paid certain compliments to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). Let me at the outset suggest to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) and the House, that, in my judgment, it has fallen to the lot of few men, in this or any other country, to have occupied the position of Finance Minister for thirteen years with such credit to himself and his country as the present Minister of Finance has done. And let me further say that I doubt if in any country any Minister of Finance ever had the pleasure of presenting to his people so many splendid financial annual statements as my hon. friend has had the satisfaction of doing during his thirteen year's term of office. And I submit that no one who has heard those financial statements from year to year, as I have done, couched in the clear, cheery and eloquent language and reasoning of which my hon. friend is a past master, could fail to see in them the best possible evidence of the progress and prosperity of this country during the term in which this government has held the reins of power, and at the same time the best possible proof of the sound fiscal policy of the present government. I can quite well understand how my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Foster) finds himself considerably handicapped in his attempt to criticise our present Minister of Finance. There is scarcely a fiscal irregularity of which my hon. friend has not been guilty, there is scarcely a fiscal difficulty which he has not gone through, and all I can say is that during his term of office, that term was marked by so many deficits, that he should be the last man to cavil at the fiscal administration of the present government. He remarked that he missed somewhat the tone of hilarity in the present budget speech which the Minister of Finance displayed on former similar occasions. Surely, while others might make a comment of that kind, it comes with ill-grace from the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) who, during the last years of his term, became quite an adept in producing deficits from year to year. He said that this paltry surplus of $1,500,000 in our financial statement for the closing year evoked a cheer from the government benches. Well, during the last three years during which my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) held office as Finance Minister of the late government, what was the condition of affairs which he presented to the country? In 1893-4 we had a deficit of $1,200,000; in 1894-5 our deficit was $4,100,000; and in 1895-6, the deficit was $350,000. So that during the last three years of his admirable management of the financial affairs of this country, the situation was such that we had deficits aggregating $5,700,000. Surely, under these circumstances much of the criticisms to which we have listened from the hon. gentleman to-night, while they might come with some grace from some others, come with rather bad grace from him.

My hon. friend spoke of the Quebec bridge. Can he have forgotten altogether the Curran bridge? And when he spoke of the Newmarket canal, to which he so characteristically referred as the Aylesworth canal, had we not good reasons to recollect another canal which, if I were disposed to follow the example set by the hon. gentleman, I would call the Haggart ditch.

He talked about our increasing public debt, but he failed to recollect that in the eighteen years of Conservative rule, our debt was increased $118,000,000. My hon. friend talked about this country as a poor country and deplored our piling up the public debt. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not accept that view of this country. While I am one of those who believe that the government should do as they are doing, while I believe that they should curtail our expenditures, so as to suit the existing circumstances and conditions, now happily passing, at the same time I look forward to the future in the most optimistic spirit. I look to a great improvement in our condition. With our magnificent heritage, our splendid resources and rapidly increasing population, I believe that the present financial difficulties will very soon be a thing of the past, and Canada will be again in as good a position financially as that which she occupied a year or two ago. But if we are spending money too rapidly, what are we to think of my hon. friend who made in Prince Edward Island this statement, which I find published in the 'Examiner,' a Conservative paper of that province:

For myself, I stand ready to implement our bargain with Prince Edward Island by the construction of a tunnel.

Why, Mr. Speaker, that would mean an expenditure of two or three million dollars a year, during some years. And what would our expenditure amount to if we began to give to Britain one or two Dreadnoughts, as my hon. friend, in his eloquent speech in this House a few days ago, suggested we should do?

He instituted a comparison between the request of the people for a local work such as the Newmarket canal and the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific. We all know that these local works are started by the petition of a few people in the locality; and in this particular connection, while he seemed to pay special attention to the people of the maritime provinces, he failed entirely to recollect that while in the one case the matter was a purely local one, so far as the eastern section of the Grand Trunk Pacific is concerned, that is a work deliberately entered on by this government, which in 1904 obtained the ratification of the entire people, and was re-endorsed by the election returns in October, 1908. Then my hon. friend—and in this I think he was particularly unfortunate—spoke of 'the land for the settler,' and referred in the most sarcastic way to 'the land for the settler' under this government. My hon. friend was very rash in many of his statements and suggestions, but in none more than in this. Let us look at the situation, let us make a comparison of the government of which he was a member and the present government on this point. I find, from a return brought down by the Minister of the Interior a few days ago, that under Conservative rule, the railway grants of land amounted to 31,000,000 acres; the total alienations of land other than to settlers, 46,000,000; and the lands for the settler to 7,900,000 acres. On the other hand, under Liberal rule, the railway grants were not thirty-one millions of acres—they were not one acre, and the alienations of lands to other than settlers amount to 7,921,000 acres. But let us come to the settler—and it was as to this that my hon. friend was particularly sarcastic in his reference to this government. We find that, while in the eighteen years of Conservative rule, only 7,900,000 acres of land went to the settler, the Liberal government has in twelve years handed over 23,590,000 acres to the settler. Could anything show more clearly the difference of policy between one government and the other in reference to this very matter which has been so important in the development of the west and of the country at large?

My hon. friend also stated that the credit of Canada was strained. In my judgment, nothing could have been better for the credit of Canada than the annual statements which have been put forward by this government. Year after year it was known and advertised to all the world that Canada was going ahead financially in an utterly unprecedented way. Year after year it was proclaimed abroad that there was a large surplus of ordinary receipts over the ordinary expenditure of the country. Nothing could more authoritatively stamp with approval the credit of the country. Another fact made known to the world was that, through the enlightened immigration policy of this government, millions of people were entering Canada, and particularly the Northwest. Another thing to establish the credit of the country was the fact that, year after year, until last year, the trade of Canada was expanding more rapidly than that of any other country in the world, or at least as rapidly as any. These are pertinent facts, it seems to me, to show that the credit of Canada has not been depreciated but has appreciated year after year under the management of this administration.

Then my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) undertook to deliver something of a lecture to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) on the mode of keeping our accounts, especially in relation to charging up to capital account capital and other extraordinary expenses. He seemed to suggest that the United States and Britain, and other countries also, had a different policy in this matter from ours. I have here an article published this very month in the 'North American Review,' written by Mr. Cortelyou, ex-Secretary of the Treasury, in which he discusses the very matters in controversy between the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). I think it wise to put upon 'Hansard' Mr. Cortelyou's views on this subject. He says:

> The demands upon the treasury are not likely to decline. For years the average increase has been hardly less than 15 per cent per annum, and in all probability this rate will grow greater in the immediate future, as the call is met for larger expenditures, in the extension of various government activities.

This is very pertinent language also with reference to a young and growing country like this.

> These disbursements, however, are not by any means wholly chargeable to the ordinary expense of carrying on the government. In this respect, the present form of daily Treasury statements is more or less misleading. It makes no separation between the expenditures for the ordinary service of the government and those for permanent public works, like river and harbour improvements, public buildings and the Panama canal.

How appropriate this when we refer to the Grand Trunk Pacific, a similar great national work?

> In this matter, our budget differs from that of many foreign countries, where expenditures for permanent improvements are provided for by specific issues of bonds, and the amounts are stated in a separate account from the report of the expenditures for the ordinary maintenance of government; while it has been the custom of this government to make most of its appropriations for permanent improvements from current revenues, thus allowing the entire burden to rest upon the present for improvements which will largely benefit the future. It is this which has brought about the present contingency——

The very fact that they are not dealing with these matters as we deal with them is given as the cause of what he proceeds to explain.

> —when the receipts are falling farther and farther below the expenditures, not for obviously transient causes, which the near future will naturally rectify, but because the growing demands which we meet, in providing for future needs, outstrip the results reasonably to be expected of our present sources of revenue.

And what greater demand have we in this country than our transportation needs which we are seeking to meet by the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific? Then he deals with the matter in this way:

For the purpose of illustration, stating our budget in the manner suggested, the account for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1908, would appear as follows:—

Net ordinary receipts..	$601,126,118 53
Disbursements..	570,477,838 81
Surplus..	30,648,279 72
Extraordinary disbursements—
Panama canal..	38,093,425 29
Public buildings under Treasury Department..	9,341,364 55
Reclamation service..	11,126,042 02
Rivers and harbours..	30,157,649 01
Reduction of public debt.. ..	34,356,750 00

Then he proceeds:

It may be a question whether all items which involve permanent capital improvement should be placed in this account. It may be proper, in some cases, to charge them to current revenue. But there can be no question that, when bonds are actually sold by the government to meet the cost of specific public works, like the Panama canal, such expenditures should be placed in a separate account, or the proceeds of the bonds sold should be accounted for as receipts.

It seems to me, in view of the reference that the hon. member made to the way of accounting in the United States, these remarks of the ex-Secretary of the Treasury are most appropriate and pertinent. But, in respect of this very question of extraordinary and capital expenditure, let us see what the hon. member's record is and that of the government to which he belonged, In 1884, the net debt of Canada stood at $181,000,000 in round figures. In 1896, it had been increased to $258,000,000, an increase of $77,000,000. What did the hon. member and those associated with him do during that time in connection with capital and extraordinary expenditure? Did they pay these in large part out of current receipts? During that period the Conservative government expended on capital and special account $94,000,000. The public debt was increased by $77,000,000. That is to say all that extraordinary expenditure of $94,000,000 except $17,000,000 was added to the public debt. That is to say, less than 20 per cent of the amount which they spent on extraordinary and capital account was paid out of revenue during that period, and 80 per cent went to increase the public debt. What is the record of the present government? We spent in twelve and three-quarter years, on capital and extraordinary expenditure, the sum of $212,000,000; we have increased the debt, up to the 31st of March, by $65,000,000; the difference is $146,000,000. We provided, not 20 per cent, but 69 per cent of that capital and extraordinary expenditure out of current receipts, and only added to the public debt about 31 per cent. Yet my hon. friend coolly says: 'Why does not this government lay aside money in order to meet this debt?' Why did not my hon. friend practise a little of the preaching with which he favours this House to-night?

Then the hon. gentleman speaks of the rate of the debt per head and the rate of taxation. The Minister of Finance, in his admirable budget speech this afternoon, gave figures to show that when this government came into power the debt per head of the country amounted to $50, and that on the 31st of March, having regard to the estimate of population which he gave, the net debt amounted to $45 per head; that is to say, it was $5 per head less than was the debt at the time the government came into power. And I venture to predict, although that is a very unsafe thing to do in financial as well as other matters, that if the influx of population, that is already beginning to get back to the normal, keeps on as it is now coming in from the United States, in the time to come, when this government shall have been 18 years in power, the same period the former government was in power, the net debt of Canada, notwithstanding the enormous amount expended on capital and extraordinary expenditure, will be less than $50 per head of the population.

I now desire for a few moments to speak about the financial stringency. My hon. friend anticipated me a little in quoting from a speech made by Mr. E. R. Wood at the annual meeting of the Dominion Securities Corporation, on the 11th January, 1909. But while he quoted one part of that address, which I also intended to quote, he left unquoted other parts of it which I will mention, in order to show that we need not be apprehensive about the condition of this country, inasmuch as every indication shows that the country is rapidly regaining its financial position, perhaps more rapidly than any other country. Mr. Wood says:

Speaking generally, the year just closed has witnessed a wonderfully rapid advance in the value of securities, due largely to a quick return to easy money conditions.

I think perhaps I should read something more from the pamphlet in order to dispel an impression which might have been left on the House by the member for North Toronto. He made it appear that these large sales of bonds took place on account, apparently, of the extravagance of the government and that sort of thing. But Mr. Wood plainly points out with reference to many of these bonds that money was not available except at ruinous rates, and issues that would have been made had normal conditions prevailed, were held over for more favourable markets. That was the reason among others why there was such a large aggregation of bonds sold in 1908. But he also says this:

But even allowing for the result of the stagnation of 1907 and the issues that were held back for a more favourable market, the volume of transactions during the past year has been phenomenally large, greatly exceeding the record for 1905, the year of the Grand Trunk Pacific and other issues.

Then he gives the following classified list of the securities sold, with a comparative statement covering four previous years:

—	1908.	1907.	1906.	1905.	1904.
	$	$	$	$	$
Government bonds	77,598,500	9,274,000	9,206,000	346,087	11,146,000
Municipal bonds	47,433,911	14,430,540	9,087,008	9,031,160	13,759,247
Corporation bonds	71,325,000	58,931,200	35,694,000	125,497,284	9,344,000
Totals	196,357,411	82,635,740	53,987,531	134,874,531	34,249,247

These figures show the marvellous way in which the financial credit of the country is recuperating, and the financial needs of the country are being met. But he points out another fact which it is important for us to keep in mind. The banks and other institutions of that sort furnish us with much of the money that we require for our every day business; but the money which we require for other purposes, for national growth and development, must come from the outside for a good many years yet. He gives the following table, showing the amounts sold respectively in the Canadian, British and United States markets in 1908:

—	Canada.	Great Britain.	United States.
Government Bonds	$ 3,098,500	$ 74,500,000
Municipal Bonds	17,977,390	25,083,271	$4,372,250
Corporation Bonds	3,059,250	65,871,750	1,944,000
	$24,595,140	$165,455,081	$6,316,250
Percentages	(12½ p.c.)	(84¼ p.c.)	(3¼ p.c.)

Therefore, when we remember that for many years to come we must go outside to borrow money, particularly to Great Britain, the attitude taken by the government during the present year in making a reduction in our expenditure of well nigh $10,000,000, is a thing which, in my judgment, we should strongly endorse on both sides of the House. I think this is one of the things which will convince the British capitalist and investor that the government of Canada, in a time of stringency, is taking measures for retrenchment in order that they may keep up the credit of the country for the future when they may require to borrow in the money markets of the world.

In this connection I would like to call attention to an article in the 'Evening Journal' of this city which shows the marvellous way in which the country is recovering from the financial stringency. On the 17th of April instant the 'Journal' published an article on the activity of building operations all over Canada. The 'Journal' quotes extensively from the 'Financial Post,' which it characterizes as a publication that handles all such statistics in a very conservative manner, and goes on to say that here in Ottawa the aggregate of building permits for March was $144,000 as compared with $69,000 in the same month of 1908; in Montreal the permits were $283,000 as compared with $137,000 in 1908; in Toronto they were $1,700,000 as compared with $838,000 in 1908; in Winnipeg they were $851,000 as compared with $114,000. It gives a long list of other cities, in every one of which there is a remarkable increase of building operations in contemplation as compared with the previous year. These facts bear eloquent testimony to the passing away of the financial stringency. The Minister of Finance spoke of the manner in which the revenue is commencing to go up. I have here a statement showing the exports and imports of Canada for the last six months of 1908 and 1909. I shall not read it in full but shall quote the figures for the last two months of 1908 and 1909. These figures are as follows:

Month.	Grand Total of Imports.
February, 1908..	$21,004,733
February, 1909..	23,188,668
March, 1908..	30,952,232
March, 1909..	33,836,293

This shows how rapidly the imports of the country are commencing to increase.

Now coming to the exports I find that the exports for the last six months ending March 31, 1908, were $141,814,453, as compared with $142,805,261 in 1909. But when an examination is made of the exports of 1908 it is found that for the last 6 months there are something like $11,000,000 of exports of coin and bullion while in the last six months of 1909 there are only about $495,000 of coin and bullion, so that if those were deducted the difference would be very much greater than it appears. These are some indicia of the way in which the country is commencing to pick up and gather itself together after the financial stringency of the last one or two years.

Some reference has been made to immigration. The figures for the whole year up to March 31, 1909, are not yet available, but for the eleven months ending February, 1909, there entered this country 131,000 immigrants as compared with 247,000 in the corresponding eleven months of 1908. We know that the decrease is very largely in immigration from Great Britain and continental Europe and that it is owing mainly to the warnings which the Immigration Department, through its officials, were giving to the motherland and the continent of Europe that during this time of stringency only farm labourers and those prepared to settle immediately on the land should come to Canada. So far as the United States is concerned we have this situation. For the eleven months of 1907-8 the immigration from the United States was 52,000 and in 1908-9, 50,000, almost the same, and it is a curious and satisfactory thing in this connection to notice that the Japanese immigration for the same period was reduced from 7,452 to 486, a very tangible evidence of the way in which the treaty arrangements are being carried out by the Japanese.

I am informed and I think my information is absolutely reliable that the settlers' effects coming in from the four states of Michigan, Montana, Illinois and Massachusetts, cash and effects, amounted for the calendar year 1908 to $6,102,170, or on 5,296 immigrants from those states an average of $1,152 each. If this average is applied to the entire immigration from the United States for the calendar year, which was 57,000, the assets thus brought in would amount to something like $65,000,000. Could anything more promote the progress and prosperity of this country than an immigration policy which would be productive of an enormous influx of settlers so desirable that 57,000 of them in one year would bring in, in assets and cash, the enormous sum of $65,000,000. We have heard a great deal for a year or two past about the number of undesirable immigrants who were coming in. The government's policy on immigration has from the start been a progressive and a satisfactory policy. As might be expected, they dealt with this question of undesirable immigration in the same prudent and far-seeing manner as with other immigration matters. What is the fact? They have on the boundary inspectors at about 114 points of entry from the United States, and during the 11 months of the fiscal year, 4,446 people were stopped at the American border and at ocean ports. Of these one-ninth were stopped at the ocean ports and eight-ninths at border points. This comparison will well illustrate the difference between the immigration policy under the former government and under this administration. The number of 4,446 people stopped as undesirables at our ports during the past year is just about the number of people that under the administration of the former government entered Canada as immigrants in 1896.

May I call your attention for a moment to the homestead entries for the last ten months of the last two fiscal years. These entries were

1907-8..	27,000
1908-9..	35,000

That also indicates the way in which the government is dealing with the immigration question.

A great deal has been said to-night about the Grand Trunk Pacific. I sometimes feel that we do not realize, that we do not impress upon our own minds with sufficient seriousness, the remarkable work that this government has been doing in connection with transportation during the last 12 or 13 years. We all know that for 30 or 40 years, the project of a 14-foot canal from Lake Superior to tide water has been discussed. I know that as far back as 1865, when a great trade convention was held in Detroit, to which representatives came from all parts of Canada and the United States, the project of a 14-foot waterway from the upper lakes to the St. Lawrence was discussed. Was that ever accomplished? Never until this government came into power. They at once commenced to expend large sums of money for the purpose of making an accomplished fact what had been talked of since 1865, and in 1900 we had completed a 14-foot waterway from Lake Superior to tide water. Then the government abolished the canal tolls. They dredged rivers and harbours and built wharfs. Then they entered upon the great project of the construction of the National Transcontinental Railway. One would sometimes fancy, particularly when listening to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), that this is not a road in which the people of this country are interested. Twice we have had the ratification and endorsation of the people of this country of that great project. That road was conceived, as we know, for several purposes, first as a continental and imperial transportation road, second as a colonization and developement road for that new Northland, and third for the reduction and regulation of freight rates, and we have been learning on the most expert engineering testimony that what was predicted as one of its greatest features, the four-tenths per cent grade from the foot of the Yellowhead Pass to the sea-board, that is from a point beyond the wheat fields to tide water. will undoubtedly be secured when the road is completed and that we will have a road unequalled in any other country in the world. We have spent, as the Minister of Finance has intimated, a large sum in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific. We have spent $20,000,000 on canals, $30,000,000 on the Intercolonial Railway, $7,000,000 on the Montreal Harbour and River St. Lawrence Ship Channel, we have spent $2,000,000 on the harbours of Fort William and Port Arthur and Port Colborne, and large amounts on many other important works. These large expenditures are necessary in a young and growing country for the purpose of developing the transportation facilities without which it is useless for us to tempt people to come to Canada, because unless we provide the facilities for them to enter the country and to transport their products to market, the great influx of immigrants will quickly cease and this country will not progress as we hope to see it. Then, we are looking to the building of the Hudson Bay Railway, and the new Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) has also taught us to look to the possibility of the deepening of our canals from 14 feet to 18 feet. And, who is there who looks to what we are doing in transportation, and who looks also at the desperate efforts the Americans are making in various directions to compete with us, but must come to the absolute and irresistible conclusion that if we construct an 18 foot waterway canal, for all time to come we will have the people of the United States handicapped in the transportation of grain from the west to the sea-board.

The hon. member (Mr. Foster) did not spend much time speaking of the tariff policy of this government, and it has not been usual for hon. gentlemen opposite to dwell much upon that of late. It is only a year or two ago that we saw in this House a curious spectacle. A partial reduction having been made by the government on the duties on agricultural implements, in recognition of the fact that a tariff only for revenue is the policy for this government and that the wants and wishes of the great agricultural classes should be safeguarded, one of the Conservative members from the west moved an amendment and we had the extraordinary spectacle that the policy of the government in this matter was so satisfactory to the leader of the opposition, to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster to the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), to the chief whip of the Conservative party who has recently become so interested in ladies, and to five or six of the leading men on the opposition side, that they were found voting to sustain the government. When one looks at the fiscal record of the government one cannot but recognize the marvellous ability and capacity they have shown. The tariff of this country since 1896 has, we might say, been dealt with along three lines. There is first the imperial line. For the first time in the history of the British empire, a colonial government offered and gave to the mother country a preference in Canadian markets, and that preference later on was extended to other portions of the British empire. That was an imperial step followed by other imperial steps in the negotiations with the colonies which this government entered into in connection with tariff matters. In the second place, the Canadian government entered upon what might be characterized as an international fiscal policy. When we found that Germany was improperly, as we thought, penalizing Canada by the application of her maximum tariff we placed against her the surtax. Again, when we found certain manufacturing concerns in the United States so generous to the Canadian purchaser that they were prepared to sell goods to consumers in Canada at less than the current prices in the United States, the government put an end to that which they considered utterly unfair competition to the manufacturers of this country, by introducing the anti-dumping legislation into the Canadian tariff. I live upon the border, I live where, as in the town of Walkerville, there are large manufacturing concerns, and I know of the splendid effect which on the whole that anti-dumping clause has had. And again, this government introduced into our fiscal policy the intermediate tariff which the Finance Minister announced is to be utilized by this government for the purpose of negotiating with the governments of other countries with a view to establishing better trade relations between them and us. But, to my mind the chief feature of the tariff after all is that it is a tariff for revenue, and, on the admission of the hon. member for North Toronto we have been getting revenue through that tariff. Never did any previous tariff in Canada produce revenue as did the tariff known as the Fielding tariff. The Minister of Finance has given figures to indicate the marvellous progress of the country under the policy of the government, and at this late hour I shall not follow him in that regard, but I would like to mention another policy of the present government, upon which they have just started, and which I believe to be of vital and paramount importance to the welfare of the country. One of the things that leads me—and I say this conscientiously and honestly—to be as firm in my adherence to and support of the government as I was ever before, is that they are going forward step by step and making progress in every direction. A Liberal government could not stay in power and be other than progressive. There is one line of development in which the government can even go beyond what it already has done; I refer to the conservation of the natural resources of the country. It may well be said that while the right hon. the Prime Minister is entitled to the gratitude and praise of the people of Canada for many things, perhaps in time to come what will be looked upon as one of the chief benefits he has conferred on the country is, that at his invitation there was a great forestry convention held in Ottawa in February, 1906. In his speech at the opening of that convention the right hon. gentleman said a number of things which are well worthy of being remembered, and I may be pardoned if I now make a short extract from his speech on that occasion, so that it may be published in 'Hansard' and thus perhaps receive more attention than it otherwise would. The right hon. gentleman said :

In the name of the Canadian Forestry Association, which has conceived and planned this conference, and in the name of the Canadian parliament which has authorized and approved of it, it is my privilege and my pleasure to extend to you all a most hearty greeting. Welcome to one ; welcome to all. Especially should I welcome, even after the words of His Excellency the Governor General, the representatives of the American Republic who are present with us on this occasion, and who bring to us the benefit of their knowledge and experience. Welcome also to the representatives of the provincial governments, without whose aid and co-operation our efforts could never have the full fruition which we anticipate from them. Welcome also to the representatives of the great railway companies which are placed in a position to give, perhaps, more than any other class of the community, the benefit of their experience and knowledge to us. Welcome also to the representatives of the great lumbering class, who, perhaps, are more interested than any other class of the community in the maintenance, preservation and protection of the forests. Welcome to the university men whom we see before us, welcome to the traders, welcome to the sportsmen, welcome to all classes who are present, and who are ready to contribute of their time and of their money to the great object we have in view, and which is an object of primary national importance.

These are words which are very applicable to the subject to which I am just now referring. Then, I understand that very recently the government has, by refusing to give a license for the exportation of natural gas in the Welland district, entered upon a new departure in the way of conserving that natural product. I am sorry that action along this line was not taken some years ago, to save the same product for us in the west. In connection with the control of power at Niagara Falls, in connection with the Waterways Commission and its work, in connection with tree planting in the west, and in connection with the establishment of several thousand miles of forest reserves on elevated areas, the government are developing a strong policy of conservation of natural resources. These forest reserves are: in Manitoba—in the Riding mountains, the Duck mountains and the Porcupine mountains. In Saskatchewan—in the Beaver hills, the Moose mountains, the Turtle mountains and the Cypress hills; in Alberta—in the Cooking Lake range, Jasper park, Banff park, Kootenay Lake park; and in British Columbia—on the western slope of the Rocky mountains, Yoho park, Glacier park, and a number in the dry area. Again by accepting the invitation of the United States government and sending three very capable representatives of Canada to the Conservation convention at Washington, the government showed its interest in this great question. I understand that the Washington convention recommended that a permanent commission should be appointed for each country, and I hope the government of Canada will at as early a date as possible appoint a good strong commission to deal with that question from a national standpoint.

Before I close I wish to refer to the criticism of the hon. member for North Toronto in regard to the rapid increase of the public debt. It is quite plain that the hon. member practically admits that apart from the requirements of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, the increase of the public debt is very trifling. The hon. gentleman said, according to 'Hansard' of March 17, 1908, volume 3, page 5181:

In 1887 the public debt was $227,000,000; in 1896 it was $258,000,000; increase in nine years, $31,000,000.

In 1908 it was $275,000,000 ; increase in twelve years, $17,000,000.

Up to the present time, leaving out 1908, there has been under this government a comparatively small increase of the debt.

So that practically the hon. gentleman's criticism bears upon the large expenditure for the Grand Trunk Pacific. But if he recollects the record of the Conservative government for the years 1884, 1885 and 1886, he will know that that was a period when the Canadian Pacific Railway was under construction, just as the Grand Trunk Pacific is to-day; and during 1884 the public debt was increased $23,695,135; during 1885, $14,245,841, and during 1886, $26,751,414, or a total increase in those three years of $64,000,000. If this enormous increase in the debt of this country in those years, when the Canadian Pacific Railway was being constructed, was fair and right in the judgment of the hon. member for North Toronto, why is it not equally proper that the debt should be increased now when we are engaged in the construction of another great transcontinental railway?

In my judgment the government has given us a tariff for revenue which is up to date and adequate to our wants; it has adopted a live and progressive transportation policy, an active and satisfactory immigration policy, a policy that attracts capital and impels foreign concerns to come here and build factories, a policy looking to the conservation of our great resources, and a policy that promotes and increases the output of all our great and leading industries. So long as the government continues the advanced and progressive policy which it has given to this country for the past twelve or thirteen years, so long will the right hon. gentleman who leads the government and the members of the cabinet who surround him retain the confidence of the people, and each time they go to the polls they will receive the popular endorsation which was given to them in October, 1908.

Mr. PERLEY moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

(No. 148) to amend the Criminal Code. He said : This Bill proposes a considerable number of amendments to the Criminal Code. Some of these amendments deal with minor points in matters of procedure which will explain themselves. Foot notes are added to each of the amending sections so that members will be able to see at a glance what the proposed changes are. The most important of these matters of procedure, I think, is a provision making a corporation, a municipality or a company, clearly liable to be proceeded against by summary process before a justice of the peace. Difficulty has been experienced in some instances in the past in bringing such a body corporate before the court in the absence of any express provision making a municipality or a company liable to the summary jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.

Passing to matters of more consequence, I shall mention a few of the principal amendments which it is proposed to make by this Bill. First I refer to a provision which is intended to increase the punishment upon any one found guilty of carrying an offensive weapon, a dagger, a knife, a dirk, which could have no other purpose than being used for offensive purposes. It is proposed to make the punishment imprisonment, instead of, as at present, only a fine. The next section proposes to widen the present provision of the statute in regard to the manufacturing or circulating of indecent or immoral publications or pictures. A case of considerable gravity in that connection has recently arisen and it has been felt that the provisions of the statute in that regard as they stand at present are possibly not wide enough to cover some of those who would participate in those offences, and I am proposing, therefore, to extend the penalties of the statute not only to persons who offend against the law as it now stands but also to those who either assist in the distribution or circulation or have in their possession for the purpose of distribution, circulation or sale any obscene picture or printed matter such as is struck at in the section; also to extend the provisions of the section to the exhibition or circulation of plates for the manufacture of such immoral pictures or literature.

I propose in the next place to increase the penalty which the present law provides in the case of the offence of procuring women, increasing the punishment from two years imprisonment to five years' imprisonment.

I am proposing in the next place to extend the provisions of the present law which make it an indictable offence to keep any disorderly house, that is to say any common bawdy house, gaming house or betting house, to the keeping of what is known as an opium joint, following out the provisions of our statute of last session prohibiting the use of opium.

I am proposing also, passing over some minor details, to make it a punishable offence to steal silver-or gold-bearing quartz and to extend the provisions of the present law with the hope of making it less difficult to convict of that offence. This amendment is introduced, following the laws upon that subject which are in force in Australia and in South Africa, by reason of difficulties in punishing, under the present law, offences of that character which have been found to be very numerous in Cobalt and New Ontario, particularly, as well as in other portions of the Dominion.

A clause is also inserted making it a criminal offence to reproduce or sell musical compositions which are the subject of a copyright, but which have been pirated. There is now a similar provision with regard to other copyrighted work but it does not extend to musical compositions. There is also a provision which is proposed, at the instance, or on representations on the subject which have been received from various boards of trade and from other quarters, in regard to the length of time during which cattle may be confined in railway cars without removal in the course of transit. The present law limits the period to 28 hours and it is proposed to extend that period to 36 hours.

The only other provision of the Bill which perhaps is of sufficient importance to deserve special mention at this stage, is one which is introduced at the suggestion of the Department of the Attorney General at Toronto, to withdraw from the jurisdiction of the courts of quarter sessions all cases of homicide. That is at present a provision of the Ontario statute on the subject. It conflicts with the provisions of our Criminal Code which allow cases of manslaughter to be tried at the sessions. Communication has been had on the subject with all the attorneys-general of the provinces and while all do not agree, a great majority concur in the view that it would be better that all cases of homicide should be triable only by the superior courts. A number of the other amendments which are proposed in regard to matters of procedure are introduced at the suggestion and upon the recommendation of the departments of the attorney general in different provinces, or in some instances upon the suggestion of learned judges. With these explanations, and with the notes which are printed with the various sections, I think there will be no difficulty on the part of any member interested, in understanding the provisions of the Bill.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like the Minister of Justice to consider the advisability of making the term of imprisonment for kidnapping longer than the Criminal Code at present provides. There is hardly a greater crime than kidnapping, and it has become quite common of late on the other side. It was my intention to move for the amendment of the Criminal Code in this respect, but now that the Minister of Justice is introducing this Bill I trust he will act in the direction I have suggested and if he does his action will meet with the general approval of the people of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 149) to amend the Extradition Act.—Mr. Aylesworth.

QUESTIONS.

MILITIA EXPENDITURE.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO asked:

1. What are the details of the item numbered 75, page 50, of the estimates for fiscal year ending March 31, 1910, the quantity and kind of the various items mentioned therein, and the amounts asked for each, respectively?

2. What are the details which go to make up the item No. 79 of said estimates, page 51, and the amount asked for each subdivision of such item?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (for Minister of Militia):

1. This question refers to the vote on capital account of $1,300,000. While it is impossible in advance to give the exact details, the vote will be disposed of practically as follows:

Ross rifle, 10,000 at $25	$ 250,000
Bayonets, 17,000 at $5.25	90,000
Lands, including rifle ranges and construction of said ranges	125,000
Ordnance, reserve clothing and construction, &c.	250,000
Artillery, including limbers, wagons, &c.	550,000
Inspection charges, &c.	35,000
	$1,300,000

2.

Clothing and necessaries to be purchased	$325,790
Allowance for lieu of clothing, permanent force	18,550
Allowance for civilian clothing, permanent force	290
Allowance to regiments in lieu of clothing	5,000
Amount required to purchase tunics of 'Guards' pattern for the G.G. F.G.	3,345
Amount required to cover cost of cleaning clothing	2,000
Unforeseen, a sum to cover difference between estimate and actual cost, and for unforeseen, such as winter kit allowance, compensation, &c.	20,025
Total	$375,000

EMILE LACAS.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR asked:

1. For what period has Emile Lacas been absent from the Public Works Department during 1906, 1907 and 1908, respectively?
2. On what business, if any, of the department has he been engaged during these absences?
3. What pay has he received during each of those years?
4. In his absence who performs his work?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1 and 2. During the years 1906, 1907 and 1908 Mr. Lacas was absent on duty as follows: From 8th to 15th January, and from 21st June to 10th July, 1906, taking photographs of public buildings and harbours and river works.

In addition to the regular authorized 21 days' vacation, with pay, in each year, he was absent, without pay, from 1st January to 30th June, 1907, and from 2nd October to 30th November, 1908; with pay, from 4th November, 1907, to 31st January, 1908.

3. 1906, $1,500; 1907, at the rate of $1,550, actual payment, $775; 1908, at the rate of $1,600, actual payment, $1,337.78.

4. The staff also comprises Messrs A. T. Bell, A. E. Day, A. Belanger and R. Perron.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

DUTIES ON CHINAWARE, &c.

Mr. WALLACE asked:

1. What is the customs duty, if any, upon chinaware, cups, saucers, dishes, &c.?
2. To what extent is it manufactured in Canada, and at what points?
3. Is there any duty upon the ore?
4. Is any of said ore exported from Canada?
5. Is such chinaware manufactured from the crude ore in Canada? If so, at what points, and from the crude ore in the United States, and at what points principally?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs):

1. The duty on tableware of china is 15 per cent, preferential tariff; 27½ per cent intermediate tariff; 30 per cent general tariff.
2. I regret that I cannot answer question No. 2.
3. Clays, including china clay, fire clay and pipe clay not further manufactured than ground, may be imported free of duty.
4. The customs appear to have no record of any such ore having been exported from Canada.
5. Answered in No. 4.

LEVIS POSTMASTER.

Mr. MONK asked:

1. Has the government appointed a successor to Mr. Alfred Lafrançois, postmaster of Lévis, Quebec? If so, who has been appointed?
2. What was the salary of Mr. Lafrançois, and what is the salary of the person who occupies the position at present?
3. Is the new occupant a relative of the member for the county of Lévis?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. Yes, Robert Carrier.
2. Postmasters at offices of this class are not paid a regular salary, but receive a commission upon the legitimate revenue collected at their offices, in return for which they are obliged at their own expense to provide whatever assistance may be required in order to properly transact the postal business. The amount thus earned at Levis post office for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1909, including commissions and allowances, was $1,962.09.
3. Yes.

WEST PETERBOROUGH PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM asked:

How much public money has been expended during the past twenty years by the Dominion government on public works in the territory now constituting the constituency of West Peterborough?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). $245,537.59. Would my hon. friend permit me to say that this is one of a series of questions he has asked with reference to various constituencies, extending back twenty years. It takes a great part of the time of the clerks to prepare the information. He will find all the information in the public accounts, if he will take the trouble to examine them. If he continues to put these questions, I suppose I shall have to answer them.

WINGHAM PUBLIC BUILDING.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM asked:

Does the Dominion government intend to complete the Wingham public building in the constituency of East Huron, by placing a clock in the space which has been left for one in the tower of the said building?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). Nothing has been included for that purpose in this year's estimates.

INVERNESS HARBOUR, CAPE BRETON.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR asked:

1. Is the government engaged at present, or does it intend to engage in the improvement of a harbour at Inverness, Cape Breton?

2. Has the government purchased there a body of water and adjacent land, called McIsaac's Pond? If so, from whom, and at what price?

3. Is there a channel between said McIsaac's Pond and the Gulf of St. Lawrence? If so, of what width and depth?

4. Is there at present, or has there been during the last year, a foreman in charge of improvements? If so, what is his name, when was he appointed, at what rate of salary, and what has he been paid to date?

5. Has said foreman purchased timber for repairs to breakwater at said place? If so, to what value, and was it purchased by tender or otherwise?

6. Does the government intend to rebuild and extend a breakwater or wharf at said harbour this season so that small steamers from Canso, Pictou and Halifax can make Inverness a port of call?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. Materials required for reconstruction of inside protection work have already been purchased, and it is the intention of the department to use the revote of $4,700, granted by parliament during present session, in prosecuting said work.

2. Steps now being taken to expropriate land required in connection with said improvements, portion of McIsaac's Pond included. The presumable owners and the compensation tendered to each of them are as follow:

The Inverness Coal Company ..	$1,500
Angus McIsaac..	210
D. J. McDonald..	50

3. The entrance to McIsaac's Pond from the Gulf of St. Lawrence is at present entirely closed, the beach being three feet above high water spring tides.

4. (a) Yes. (b) D. R. McLean. (c) 23rd October, 1908. (d) $2.50 per day. (e) $70.

5. Foreman has purchased materials to the amount of $834.96, after ascertaining prices for which they could be delivered and submitting same for approval to Resident Engineer Millidge.

6. In the above mentioned appropriation no amount is included for special wharf accommodation.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING ON SUSSEX STREET.

Mr. WRIGHT asked:

1. With regard to the proposed new building on Sussex street, are the plans submitted in the competition the property of the government?

2. If so, are they open to the inspection of the members of this House, and where are they to be seen?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes.

2. The plans are on file in the chief architect's office and may be seen at any time.

WHARF AT EATONVILLE, NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. RHODES asked:

1. What sum was expended on the wharf at Eatonville, Cumberland county, Nova Scotia, during the year 1907?

2. Was the work done by contract or by day labour?

3. If by contract, to whom was it let, what was the amount, who were the tenderers, and what were the amounts of the several tenders?

4. If by day labour, what are the names of the several persons employed, the rate of pay, and the total sum paid to each?

5. What amounts were expended for hire of teams and materials, respectively, what are the names of the several persons who received such amounts, and the amount paid to each?

6. The same questions are asked with reference to the breakwater constructed at the same place, during the year 1908?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister or Public Works):

1. There was no expenditure on a wharf at Eatonville, Cumberland county, Nova Scotia, during the year 1907. A portion of the old breakwater, which had been damaged by a severe storm, was entirely rebuilt during that year, the expenditure being $2,998.06.

2 and 3. Day's labour.

MR. DANIEL McKENZIE.

Mr. ARTHURS asked:

1. Did Daniel McKenzie, postmaster at Three Brooks, Pictou county, Nova Scotia, resign the said office? If so, when did he resign?

2. In whose charge was the post office placed when said McKenzie resigned, or when it was moved from his premises, and when was the transfer made?

3. Was this person to whom the post office was transferred appointed to be postmaster? If not, why not?

4. How long did such person have the custody of the post office?

5. Has the post office been again transferred? If so, when and to what person?

6. Is this person, last referred to, appointed postmaster? If so, when was he appointed?

7. On whose request and on whose recommendation was the present postmaster appointed?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). In November last the Department was advised that Mr. Daniel McKenzie, Postmaster of Three Brooks, N.S., was with his family removing to Vancouver, and that he could therefore no longer take charge of the Three Brooks Post Office. Before leaving he handed the books and other material in connection with the office to Mrs. John Shea and left the office in charge of Mrs. John Shea on 1st April, 1909. Mr. James Irving was appointed postmaster to fill the vacancy. He was recommended by the member representing Pictou County in the Dominion parliament.

GLIMPSES OF NORTHEASTERN CANADA.

Mr. AMES asked:

1. Has there been recently issued under the auspices of the Department of the Interior a publication entitled 'Glimpses of Northeastern Canada'?

2. If so, how many copies of this publication have been or will be circulated by the government?

3. Who is the author of the publication?

4. What sums of money have been paid to authors or publishers, on what dates, and what balance is due?

5. Was it the intention of the government during the season of 1908 to send an exploration party by water to James bay and Labrador, including Dr. Robert Bell?

6. If so, was this project abandoned? If so, why?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Yes.
2. 3,000 copies.
3. W. Tees Curran, Esq.
4. Paid Printing Bureau $685.33, October 1908. Paid W. Tees Curran for editorial work and for photographs, $300, on the 12th of March, 1909.
5. and 6. Probably refers to Geological Survey. Should be answered by Minister of Inland Revenue. No knowledge of the subject in the Interior Department.

Mr. AMES. As parts 5 and 6 of the questions have not been answered, I would ask that they be allowed to stand in order that they may be answered by the proper department.

Mr. SPEAKER. Parts 5 and 6 of the question allowed to stand.

TRENT VALLEY CANAL LAND DAMAGES.

Mr. SEXSMITH asked:

What amount has been paid by the government up to the present, for damages to land caused by the overflow of water from Peterborough up to and including Pigeon lake, on the Trent Valley canal, and to whom have such damages, if any, been paid?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Railways and Canals). This is too voluminous to be given in a form of an answer to a question, but there is no objection to granting it as a return to the House.

Allowed to stand as a notice of motion.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES' ACT.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Before the orders of the day are called, might I ask the right hon. the Prime Minister if an opportunity will be afforded the House to consider item No. 51 in the Public Bills and Orders? It is a Bill introduced by me to amend the Industrial Disputes' Act. From present appearances, I can scarcely hope that the Bill will be reached this session. The matter is one of public importance to a very large number of people, and I would ask the government to put it on the government orders or to afford some other opportunity for considering it.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry I can make no promise. We have several important matters, each of which will have to take its turn.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask for three returns which have been ordered. One was ordered on March 22, with reference to Intercolonial Railway officials. Another has reference to the armoury.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That return was submitted yesterday.

Mr. FOSTER. Then there is one having reference to statistical publications by the different departments. The hon. the Secretary of State would have to look after that. I would like to have it down before the end of the session. It was ordered early in the session.

WAYS AND MEANS.—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Mr. GEO. H. PERLEY (Argenteuil). The last speaker before adjournment last evening was the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Sutherland). I was very glad to hear his voice again after the enforced silence of four years as Speaker of this House. At the same time, I must say that the hon. gentleman, though he laboured very hard to break the force of the arguments of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) did not seem to me to succeed at all. I suppose we may call that a task beyond even the powers of an ex-Speaker. The hon. member dragged in the old standby of his friends, the surpluses, which had already been referred to by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). Those surpluses, as we all know, are largely a matter of book-keeping. The hon. member for North Essex read an extract from an article in an American magazine, which he claimed to be correct, that public works like the Panama canal should be kept in a separate account. I have no fault to find with that argument, we do not object to any items of that kind being put into capital account. I am not here to oppose the system which has been in force since confederation, but to oppose the way in which it has been carried out. I agree that an item like the Transcontinental Railway, for instance, is properly chargeable to capital account—no man can object to that. But it seems to me that the government, in order to show its boasted surpluses, has gone far beyond all reason in this matter. For instance, the Minister of Finance referred yesterday to the matter of the bounties, and had himself to acknowledge that it was not a proper charge to capital account. Then, why did they do it? I see no reason for it. Take, for instance, the expenditures on militia. Some of us have heard a good deal about Ross rifles. There is a dispute as to the efficiency of the Ross rifles. Many people think that they are of very little service anyway. But, however that may be, why should they be charged to capital? They have only a short life, and will soon have to be replaced. Such things, it seems to me quite plain, ought to be paid out of revenue. In the same way, I claim, the new rolling stock and engines for the Intercolonial should not be charged to capital account with no provision made for renewing these when they are worn out. This system is carried to the smallest details. As an illustration, I would refer you to page V-28 of the Auditor General's Report. You will find there that moneys spent on Rideau Hall improvements are charged to capital. These are very necessary things to be done, I am sure, but such items as copper wire, lime, drain pipes and advertising in connection with the repairs to Rideau Hall should not be charged to capital. These surpluses would very largely disappear if the accounts were kept in a reasonable way.

The hon. member for North Essex further tried to show that these surpluses were a sign of good business management on the part of the government, and held up the Conservative government to scorn because during some years of its administration there were deficits. I regret that my hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland) is not present——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am here.

Mr. PERLEY. I am glad of it. I will ask my hon. friend, who, with his usual modesty, has taken a back seat, whether he knows where these surpluses come from? The hon gentleman may think they come from the brains of the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister. But I understand that the money comes from the pockets of the people. I further submit that, if this money had not been taken from the pockets of the people to provide these surpluses, it would still remain in their pockets. I would like to try to make the hon. member understand this matter as I do. Let us suppose that the hon. member for North Essex was the only taxpayer in this country—that he paid all the taxes levied by the Minister of Finance ; and let us suppose that at the end of the year there was a deficit of half a million dollars, which is the terrible thing that my hon. friend considers is so improper. My hon. friend from Essex, being the only voter in the country,certain agitators come to him asking him to vote against the government on the ground that there is a deficit. They say, ' look at this awful government; they have a deficit at the end of the year of half a million dollars.' My hon. friend would laugh and say, ' well, I have to pay all the taxes, and if there were no deficit I should have had to pay half a million more; as it is there may be a deficit of half a million, but I have that money in my own pocket, and I am keeping it where it will do me the most good.' That is the way I look at the question of surpluses. I do not think it is a matter of so much importance whether there is a surplus or a deficit, the question of importance is how has the money been spent—has it been spent in a wise, proper and economical way?

The hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Sutherland) has claimed that the credit of Canada has been increased by these same surpluses. I do not see that a surplus has anything to do with the credit of Canada. In that connection, I desire to speak a few words of criticism upon the method of financing followed by this government within the last few years. Previous to 1896, the Conservatives had been in power for many years, and during that time they had been developing the resources of this country and carrying on the government in an economical way, so that the credit of the country was at its very best. In 1879, the Conservative government made a loan —the first year they came into office— which cost them 4½ per cent per annum. And no loan was made costing the country as much as that until 1904. The Conservatives had to borrow a lot of money, but they gradually reduced the interest charge, until, in 1894, it amounted to only a shade over 3 per cent. In 1897, the first year of this government, they made a loan at a rate of only 2·86 per cent. This was the first loan negotiated by the present Minister of Finance, but I doubt if he will take to himself the credit for the rate of interest at which it was made, because this was simply the culmination of the Conservative system, the Liberals not having been in office long enough to affect it. For many years after that the revenue went up by leaps and bounds, so that even this extravagant government was unable to spend it all, and therefore they did not have to make further loans until 1904, at which time the loan of 1874 came due. At that time this government followed a careless and short-sighted policy regarding the finances of this country, which has cost us unnecessary expense. Let us see what the situation was at that time. In 1903 this parliament committed itself to a transcontinental railway, which was evidently going to cost a very large sum of money and force us to borrow heavily on the English market. Further, the old loans which had been made early in our history were beginning to fall due. There were £23,443,000 of loans coming due between the 1st of January, 1904, and the 1st of October, 1913, less whatever sinking fund we might have on hand for that purpose. Under these circumstances it was evident that we should need to go to the money market many times during the succeeding 10 years, and that it was the part of every day prudence to arrange for our financing on that basis. But instead of renewing the loan of 1874 for a long period, this government went into the market with a light heart and made a renewal for three years. Our three per cent stock was quoted on the London market at 96 for the first week in March, 1904, and there were falling due £4,300,000 on the 1st of April, 1904. I claim that at that time, knowing what was ahead of them in the way of loans falling due, and a vast expense on the Grand Trunk Pacific, this government ought to have provided for a long loan to cover those falling due. Did the government do so? No, they extended £2,500,000 for three years at four per cent. In consequence, this renewed loan fell due again in the year 1907, and thereupon the government again extended the bulk of it at four per cent, although our 3½ per cents were worth over par, and our three per cents 99 in March of that year. It sounds very reasonable to say that we should extend a loan when it was due at the same rate of interest the government had been paying before. But when we begin to look into the expense we begin to question the wisdom of it; for these two extensions of the same loan involved an expense of over £60,000. Making the first renewal cost the people of this country 4·55 per cent, and the second renewal 4·45 pen cent. Why should Canada, this great and growing country, be forced to borrow money at such a cost when it could have obtained it in normal times, such as there were in 1904 and 1907, on more favourable terms. It seems to me that making a short loan in the spring of 1907 shows a great lack of foresight on the part of my hon. friend the Finance Minister. Not only was our loan made at a high rate of 4½ per cent interest, but it has again to be renewed in 1911, when we shall have another large sum to pay for expenses.

In this connection, I would say a few words with reference to the temporary loans which were made by this government between March, 1907, and March, 1908. At a time when, as we know, there was a stringency in the money market, and when I claim the government should have had foresight to provide against it, they borrowed $9,000,000 at 4¼ and 4½ per cent interest, which of course is to be added to the amount of the loan of 1874, which they had renewed, to which I have already referred. Why should this government have pursued such a short-sighted policy? Were they the only people in this country who did not realize that we were going to have hard times? I am safe in saying that as early as the fall of 1906 it was evident that a financial pinch was coming, and every bank in this country was doing everything in its power to get into good shape to stand the storm. Instead of making a long loan in the spring of 1907, this government extended the old loan for a short time at a heavy expense, and left themselves short of money later on in the year, so that when they wanted to extend some help to move the crops in the Northwest they had to break through the legal reserve. How different would have been the position in the fall of 1907 and the winter of 1907-8 if this government had realized the situation in the spring of 1907 and had borrowed a large amount of money. They would have been in a position to help the finances of this country in the fall instead of having to resort to temporary loans at high rates of interest to tide over the emergency. This happened, although the government had plenty of warning. The gentleman who was deputy finance minister for many years, to his credit and to the benefit of the country, made his last report for the department on October 31, 1906, and in that report he delivered a grave warning to the government, for he said :

> The Dominion has now fairly entered upon the period when loans contracted in its early history are falling due year by year. In the last fiscal year £1,000,000 4 per cent loan of 1875 fell due on November 1, 1905. On November 1, 1906 £2,500,000 falls due. On May 1, 1907, the portion of the 1874 loan extended in 1904, amounting to £1,926,654 15s. 11d. matures, and in each year until 1910 large sums will have to be redeemed or refunded.

Now mark this final sentence:

> To carry on the large projects now under way, and at the same time meet maturing obligations, will require the greatest care in order that the credit of Canada, now so deservedly high, may suffer no impairment.

That is a statement made by Mr. J. M. Courtenay, than whom no one in this country is better fitted to give advice in a matter of that kind. I say this government were derelict in their duty when they did not provide beforehand for a long term loan for this storm which they must have known was coming. Now, with reference to the comparative cost of these long and short term loans, I have asked for the figures with regard to the £5,000,000 loan of 3¾ per cent of 1908, the short term loan, and with regard to the £5,000,000 of 3½ per cent, the long October loan. The short loans cost this government $403,560 in expenses and the loan for twenty-one and a half years only cost $585,152, so that the expense of the long loan is very much less in proportion. I have prepared a statement showing in detail the comparative expenses of the loans from 1888 to 1909. The statement is as follows:

—	Years.	Annual effective rate of interest per unit.	Percentage of expenses to net amount realized.	Percentage of expenses for each year of the loan on net amount realized.
Loan of 1888.....	50	·0327	1·78	·0356
" 1892.....	46	·0341	1·51	·0328
" 1894.....	43¾	·0316	1·13	·0258
" 1897.....	50	·0286	1·22	·0244
Extension of 1904.	3	·0455	1·33	·4433
" 1907.	4	·0445	1·46	·3650
Loan of 1907....	4½	0479	1·96	·4355
* " Feb. 1908.	22	·0370	2·49	·1132
" June 1908.	4	·0430	1·66	·4150
* " Oct. 1908.	21½	·0378	2·40	·1116
" 1909.	5–10	·0412	not given.	not given.

*Loans of 1930–50 calculated to 1930 only.

The point which I wish to make is that the percentage of expense for each year of loan varies materially and is an item of very great consequence. For instance, the loan of last June cost, for each year of the loan, ·4150 and the 1894 loan, negotiated in the time of the Conservative government, cost ·0258 for each year. In other words, the loan of last year cost 4½-100ths of one per cent for each year, whereas, the Conservative loan only cost 2½-100ths. These short time loans are very expensive and unless there is some material gain it seems to me that it is very bad policy to borrow money in this way. I challenge the wisdom of the making of short loans, particularly those short loans which were made in normal times for the renewal of old loans and just previous to the panic years which should have been foreseen by this government and provided for. I ask: Did this government really believe that $13,000,000 was going to build the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway? Is that the reason why they renewed these loans for a short time? Did they believe that the ordinary revenue would be sufficient to build the Grand Trunk Pacific? That was the statement made in 1903. When we speak of it in this House they challenge it and say that it is not what they really meant. But their actions in 1904 and 1907 in renewing these old loans for short dates and making no provision for them would indicate that they really believed that they were going to build the road for $13,000,000.

I will call attention shortly to the prices of our securities on the London Stock Exchange in 1897, 1904 and 1909. These prices were taken from the London 'Economist.' I may say that in all cases I have taken half way between the buying and selling price for my figures. The statement is as follows:

QUOTATION IN LONDON MARKET.

—	—	Apr. 10 1897.	Apr. 9, 1904.	Apr. 10, 1909.	Difference between 1897 & 1909.
Canada Insc. Stock.	3½%	108	101	100½	— 7½
" " 1938.	3%	104	95	93½	— 10½
" " 1947.	2½%	*91½	86	80	— 11½

* Price realized at time of issue.

In other words, the 3½ per cent stock has fallen 7½ per cent, the 3 per cent stock has fallen 10½ per cent and the 2½ per cent stock has fallen 11½ per cent since 1897. Of course we all know that securities of this class have fallen in value all the world over in recent years, but I cannot agree with the hon Finance Minister that the drop in the value of these stocks is entirely due to these causes. I have prepared a comparative statement of the prices of the various colonial 3 per cent stocks which seems to me to show conclusively the position of this matter. I have taken the date, March 5, 1904, which was immediately before this government made its first renewal loan; I have taken the date, October 19, 1907, which was at the height of the panic and I have taken the last number of the 'Economist,' April 10, 1909. I have here a statement of all the colonial 3 per cent stocks. It is as follows:

LONDON MARKET QUOTATIONS AS GIVEN BY LONDON 'ECONOMIST'.

—		March 5, 1904.	October 19, 1907.	April 10, 1909.	Difference between Oct. 19, '07 and Apr. 10, '09.
Canada Insc. stock, 1938	3 p.c.	96	97	93½	— 3½
New South Wales " 1935	3 "	84	85	87 13/16	+ 2 13/16
New Zealand " 1945	3 "	87	85	87	+ 2
Queensland stock, 1922-47	3 "	86	85½	86	+ ½
South Australia stock after 1916	3 "	86	85	85
Western Australia stock, 1927	3 "	87	86	89½	+ 3½

The only 3 per cent stock which has fallen since the panic is the Canadian 3 per cent. South Australian 3 per cent stock is the same and the others have increased in value from ½ to 3½ points. The Canadian 3 per cent stock is now 3½ points lower than it was in October, 1907. This I give in answer to the Finance Minister, who spoke about the bonds of the Metropolitan County Council in London, which, I understand, have fallen for very special reasons on account of their spending a lot of money in useless and extravagant ways, which expenditure has made no return to the people. But, I claim that this comparative statement of the 3 per cent colonial stocks is as fair as any man could make and shows conclusively that the values of our securities have fallen on the London market. Although I have considered it my duty to bring these figures to the attention of the House, I wish to say right here that this drop in the price of our stock is in no way due to any lack of security. No one has more implicit confidence in the future of this country than I have. The Conservative party has always been the optimistic party and always will be. I am proud to say that Canada will be able to pay every cent she may owe and even an incompetent government cannot spoil our great future. The holders of our securities are just as sure to be paid as ever and none of them need have a moment's anxiety on that account. I say this that for fear my statement about the reduced price of these securities may be taken as an expression of belief that they are worth less money. They are perfectly good and the poor prices are caused chiefly by putting on the London money market such a large mass of undigested securities in a short time. Inside of a year this government borrowed £19,000,000 in London and the probability is that we will have to go back there for as much more during the next two years to pay for our loans falling due and for the vast expense of this Grand Trunk Pacific system.

I wish to say a few words regarding the loan made last January. As the Minister of Finance explained yesterday, there was some slowness in taking up our 3½ per cent loans in October, 1908. Therefore he raised the rate to 3¾ per cent for this additional loan and issued the bonds at 99¼, and besides he provided for small bonds as low as £10 so as to attract the small investor. In addition to that, however, he inserted in this new issue a provision which to my mind has worked a lot of harm, not only to ourselves but to our good friends who bought our securities years ago. In this last issue in January the right was given to the holders of these 3¾ bonds at any time up to 1913 to take £110 of our 3 per cent debentures in exchange for every £100 of 3¾ per cent debentures. Why that was done I cannot imagine. The minister did not refer to it yesterday, did not give any explanation of it, and I have been unable to imagine any proper explanation. For years it has been our policy to allow the holders of 4 per cent bonds or debentures to exchange them for 3 per cent debentures on a certain basis which was a very good arrangement because it was practically an extension for a long time at three per cent. Previous to 1908 these holders of 4 per cent bonds had the right to exchange them for 3 per cents at the rate of £105 of 3 per cents for £100 of 4 per cents and in 1908 when the 3¾ per cent issue was made the right was given to the holders to exchange their bonds for 3 per cents at the rate of £106 of 3 per cents for every £100 of 3¾ per cents. This was a reasonable arrangement and tallied very well with the price of securities in the London money market. But in order to make sure that our loan would go in January, the minister, very improperly, I contend, changed that and allowed the holders of the new securities to take 3 per cents at the rate of £110 of 3 per cents for every £100 of 3¾ per cents. The result was easily foreseen, the prices of the old 3 per cents dropped just like a rock owing to the price at which this new issue was put on the market, and because the holders of these 3¾ per cents could buy the bonds at 99¼ and then could exchange them for 3 per cents at the rate of £110 of 3 per cents for every £100 of 3¾ per cent. The result was that our 3 per cent stock, which was selling on January 23, when the notice of the new loan was given at 93½, fell on January 30 to 90. To my mind it would have been far better for this government to have placed on the money market at that time a 3 per cent loan even at a discount, and at a price such as was going on the market at that time, than to have placed on the market this loan at 3¾ per cent which runs for only a comparatively short time anyway and which had the effect of damaging the price of our 3 per cent securities so severely. The present unpleasant situation of our finances is not a matter of surprise, as I have already said. The late deputy Minister of Finance, Mr. Courtney, warned this government of it and the Conservative members for several years have been telling the Finance Minister what he might expect. This government had a wonderful chance to go down to history as a wise and capable government. It came into power in 1896 after years of economical administration by the Conservative party which laid the foundations of our great prosperity. The revenues after that expanded by leaps and bounds, and I can say truthfully that without any trouble this government could have taken $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 a year to pay off part of our debt. Instead of that they seem to have been in a mad race to get rid of the money by reckless expenditure in every department. These unwise men seemed to think that nothing could happen to check our revenues, and the Minister of Finance himself was either unwilling or unable to stop the mal-administration and the wasteful extravagance which went on all over this country. I claim, Sir, that ordinary prudence would have provided in years of plenty, in years of expanding revenue, for the needs of the future. But instead of that, this country was allowed to drift into the unpleasant position of having to borrow large sums of money within a short period, when market conditions were very unfavourable.

This Dominion of Canada, as has been stated before, is really a monster joint stock company. Every four or five years we have an election at which the members of this House are elected. We thereby become the directors of this joint stock company and the members of the government are the executive committee of its board of directors. Every citizen is interested in the welfare and contributes to the revenue of this joint stock company in proportion to his means, and every person hopes to benefit in a greater or less degree by the wise expenditure of the revenues of this country. I say, Sir, the people care little whether we have surpluses or deficits, the people care whether our money is seriously and economically expended and expended for works that are in the public interest, and we should strive to have a good business administration. I must say that we do not seem to be getting such administration under the present government. For instance, can it be said that the method of financing which I have been criticising shows any great business capacity on the part of this government? Perhaps, however, it is all we have a right to expect from a government which plunged into the Transcontinental Railway scheme without proper information regarding the cost of the work or the country through which this road was to go. The Finance Minister in 1903 said that the eastern division from Winnipeg to Moncton was going to be built for $51,300,000 and now the Minister of Railways puts it at $114,000,000, besides the Quebec and Winnipeg terminals and the Quebec bridge. This total undertaking will require from Canada, in money and in guarantees, from $250,000,000 to $300,000,000, although we were told in the election campaign of 1904 in the campaign literature of the Liberal party that the whole work was to cost the country only $13,000,000.

The hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Sutherland) told us that the Transcontinental Railway scheme had been endorsed by the people in 1904, and re-endorsed by them in 1908. Does the hon. gentleman think that the people of Canada would have endorsed the scheme in 1904 if they had been informed by the government as to its real cost and the burdens it entailed by way of guarantees? Does he not think rather, that the people of Canada were deceived by this government into voting for the project because of the inaccurate statements made as to its true cost? It seems to me that this government has in many ways shown its incapacity to properly manage our affairs in a business way. One sample of this may be found in the fact as we had it brought out the other day that the government buys belting from Lymburner Limited and pays for it $831.68, when any wise business man in the country could have purchased the same belting for $293.41. It has also been proven beyond doubt that just before elections the government has suddenly increased the cost of various services and bearing on that point I have here a copy of a return brought down in the House of Commons giving the total number of men employed and the total expenditure of all kinds on the Carillon and Grenville canal during the months of September and October 1907 and 1908, which shows the following:

	1907.		1908.
	September.	October.	September.	October.
Number of men	63	85	97	122
	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
Wages	2,929.94	3,291.90	3,816.87	4,511.11
Accounts	1,226.97	1,327.43	1,958.66	5,438.83
	4,156.91	4,619.33	5,775.53	10,249.94

We have reason to believe that the same thing is characteristic of the management of other public works in the country and I merely mention this because the canal happens to be in my own county. There are many other evidences of the business incapacity of the government; wharfs have been built where there was no water and public works constructed where they were not needed except to influence voters. I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, as a fair minded man whether you consider that this sort of expenditure for election purposes is a sign of business capacity in the government. I need not refer to the Newmarket canal in connection with which the government has shown its business incapacity in more ways than one. In the first place, that canal will not be of any use, as everybody knows, when it is completed, and in the second place the original estimate given as to its cost was misleading and erroneous. This Newmarket ditch which was at first estimated by the government to cost $300,000 is now estimated by them to cost $1,000,000 and I was told yesterday by a person who knows a good deal about it that the ultimate cost will be nearer one and a quarter million dollars. The business incapacity of the government is shown in small things as in great. The other day we had it in the Public Accounts Committee that when the government needed two crosscut saws they rented them for 100 days at a cost of $20 when they could have gone to any shop and bought them for $6 or $7. This extravagance and wastefulness and lack of business capacity permeates the whole system of this government. I venture to say, Sir, that no private company would retain the services of a board of directors for one hour which permitted such gross carelessness and extravagance. I believe, Sir, that we cannot hope for Canada to become a strong country and to take her proper rank among the nations of the world until the people find some way to have public affairs conducted on business principles.

Mr. LLOYD HARRIS (Brantford). Mr. Speaker, at the very outset of the few remarks which I shall address to the House, let me congratulate the right hon. the Prime Minister and through him the people of Canada on the splendid showing which, the distinguished Minister of Finance has been able to present to parliament in his annual financial statement. We Canadians have much to be thankful for. During the past eighteen or twenty months our country, in common with other countries throughout the world, has passed through a period of very great financial stringency, which, so to speak, came on us entirely unawares and severely tested our capacity to withstand the shock. We have to congratulate ourselves that Canada, far better than any other nation, has passed through the ordeal with her resources unimpaired and her progress unchecked. From personal experience I have found that the conditions prevalent in the United States are not at all so favourable as those in Canada. I have visited Europe, and my experience there has been that trade is more stagnant, and that the period of industrial and financial depression has left a more lasting mark on the older nations than on our own young and vigourous Dominion. Notwithstanding the sudden check in our trade and the decreased demand for our products, I believe we can look back over the past eighteen months with a feeling of pride in that Canada has so creditably weathered the storm. It became necessary of course that there should be a period of retrenchment, and our people and our government had the courage to meet the critical conditions which faced them. I believe, Sir, that a check such as we have met with will in the end innure to the improvement of our national life and character. For years prosperity attended on us, our country was going ahead by leaps and bounds, there was unprecedented development, population was pouring into our land with its consequent increase in national wealth, and I fear we began to think only of how to make money and how to get rich. During the period we have passed through, we have had the opportunity of pausing for a time and looking the situation in the face, and looking back upon what we have passed through and determining what we have lost. We have been in the position of taking stock as it were, and the result of our experience, I think, will be for our good. As with individuals, so it is with governments. When a period of financial stringency occurs, it is necessary that governments should realize the conditions and meet them; and I am glad to say that the present government has met the conditions as they arose. They determined it was necessary to make retrenchments and have made them. An attempt has been made to criticise the statement presented by the hon. the Finance Minister, but taking the debate all through, hon. gentlemen opposite appear to have been fairly well satisfied with the budget as presented. I was very much interested in reading the account of the debates yesterday in that very fair newspaper, the Ottawa 'Citizen,' which can hardly be accused of being a supporter at all of the present administration, and I was greatly interested in reading the editorial in that journal. In that editorial I read these words:

> To be sure, considering the period of stringency through which the world has passed, Canada has come out of it very well.

In another part of the article I find these words:

> But considering the bad debt represented by $6,424,000 on the Quebec bridge and the heavy expenditure on the National Transcontinental Railway, the showing is very fair.

I am glad indeed when I find a newspaper offering an independent and fair criticism upon the acts of this or any other government; and when I see remarks of that kind, I am always pleased to express my appreciation of them.

I was very much surprised yesterday, when the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was replying to the Minister of Finance, to hear him make the first candid admission I ever heard him give utterance to in this House. Shortly after rising to his feet, he made the candid statement that the speech of the Finance Minister had had a soporific effect upon him. As I understand the word 'soporific' it means something soothing or putting to sleep, and just for one minute, if I may descend to the language of the ring, I might draw the conclusion that the effect of the budget speech on the hon. gentleman was to put him out of business. This perhaps, Mr. Speaker, was the cause of his laboured efforts in getting properly started and of the great relief to himself and of all the other hon. members of this House when he suggested that the debate should be adjourned 15 minutes earlier than usual before recess. After dinner however, the hon. gentleman appeared to have secured the necessary stimulant.

Mr. FOSTER. Be careful of rule 19.

Mr. LLOYD HARRIS. Then, Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I will change that expression and make it 'stimulus.' In getting started at eight o'clock, the hon. gentleman was evidently going stronger. Something evidently had occurred in the meantime. But in listening attentively to his speech, I was seized by the strange suspicion that the remarks he was making were very familiar to my ear. I therefore made it a point this morning to look up the records of 'Hansard,' and in doing so I came across one of the speeches which the hon. gentleman delivered in this House shortly before the end of last session, and which was used, without very telling effect, by his party in the campaign which followed. I was a little surprised to find that the hon. gentleman yesterday had given us a rehash of his old speech; but I presume it was rather difficult for him to get his bearings in the debate, and I wondered what he actually expected when the Minister of Finance brought down his budget. No doubt he expected a break in the long series of surpluses which the hon. minister has been able to present to this House for the last 12 years, and felt that the opportunity, for which he had waited so long and at times so impatiently, had come at last, and he would be in a position of criticising a budget which showed an actual deficit. I can therefore imagine his disappointment when he found that instead of an actual deficit we were presented with the same old budget and the same old actual surplus. For the moment he had my sincere sympathy, but for the moment only, because when he began to criticise, the spirit he exhibited caused my sympathy to vanish.

I do not intend to refer at much length to the speech made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) as it has already been so ably and effectively dealt with by my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Sutherland), but I would like to touch just upon a few points. In comparing the government methods of doing business, with that followed by individuals, the hon. member for North Toronto said:

> Now, a business man, restrained by business instincts, on what methods will he carry on his business? Well, he would in the first place ponder very deeply before he makes any heavy expenditure, but the government makes the outlay first and ponders on it afterwards. A business man will sit down and count the cost to see whether he can afford it before he undertakes the expenditure, but the government makes the expenditure first and counts the cost afterwards.

Is this a fair statement of the actual facts? I have had but a very short experience in this House, but that experience leads me to believe that the reverse is the case. I do not think that there is any important business undertaken by the government which is not carefully considered, not only for days and weeks, but for months, and sometimes for years. When a large government undertaking is under consideration it is not decided upon in the course of a day or two. Sometimes it may be under consideration three or four years. I think that the individual or the corporation acts more quickly in large undertakings. It seems to me that, in making that statement, the hon. gentleman was not referring to this government. You will notice that the hon. gentleman says 'the government' makes the outlay first and does the pondering afterwards. I think he must have had in mind a government in which he would have the controlling interest, and I wondered whether this was his idea of doing government business. I find it reported during the last campaign that, on a certain occasion when the hon. gentleman was addressing a meeting of electors of Prince Edward Island, he made the statement that, in the event of his party being placed in power, he would be willing to use his best influence towards the construction of a tunnel from the mainland to the island. This seems to have been a notable case of making a promise without giving much consideration beforehand. The present government has given full consideration to every large and important work it has undertaken before going into it.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) criticises the Finance Minister on his method of placing loans on the English market, especially he finds fault with the use of underwriters in placing our loans. Of course, it must be said for the hon. gentleman that he is living, to some extent, in the past. It is many years since he had an opportunity to negotiate loans in the name of Canada, and conditions in London and the large financial centres of the world have changed very materially since 1896. I may say that I have had some little experience myself in arranging finances in London, and I know that in recent years the only method which is followed in large flotations of any kind is the underwriting method. Is this a better way than to offer our loans directly to the people, or is it not? I consider that it is better. Suppose that you have a loan of £5,000,000 to place in the English market. If you offer the loan through your agents or through the banks to the people of England, perhaps only 40 or 50 per cent of it may be taken up, and you are left with the rest of it on your hands. In most cases, before you try to place a loan of that size you are badly in need of money. With only half of it subscribed, the loan is looked upon as a failure. But with the underwriting system a group of men band themselves together who agree to take the entire amount of the flotation in question, and for the service they render they charge a small commission which is agreed upon beforehand. In this way the party seeking the money is assured of the success of the loan. I think that is a proper and businesslike method of arranging these matters. While conditions have changed in the last twelve or thirteen years, and while the hon. gentleman does not seem to know of these changes, I think that other hon. gentlemen in the House will agree that the placing of the loans of this government on the London market has been handled in a businesslike and masterly manner.

The hon. gentleman makes this statement as to the Minister of Finance:

> The minister also takes some rank as scalping the thrifty depositor of this country of part of their interest on their deposits.

I wonder what the hon. gentleman meant by that? What impression did he seek to leave on the minds of members of this House and of the people of Canada generally? I think that 'scalping the thrifty depositors of this country' is hardly a term that should be applied to any hon. member of this House charged with the management of the country's financial affairs. So far as the depositors are concerned, I may mention that, in reading 'Hansard' of March 27, 1894, I find this report of a speech made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), who was then Minister of Finance of the late government:

> On the 30th June, 1889, we had a balance of deposits in the government savings banks, including the post office, of $42,956,357. About that time, as hon. gentlemen will remember, the rate of interest was lowered from 4 per cent to 3½ per cent. For that and other reasons, the deposits ran down until on 30th June, 1891, they had touched $39,400,026.

It strikes me that if there has ever been any 'scalping' done by any Minister of Finance of the depositors in the savings banks the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) himself is the only one guilty of that action, for he it was who was a party in reducing the rate of interest to the depositors from 4 to 3½ per cent.

The hon. gentleman paints a lurid picture of the poor Canadian overburdened with taxation. When I heard the remarks of the hon. gentleman I conjured up in my mind the conditions that must exist in our Canadian cities, towns and villages, and throughout the country generally. I could see the poor Canadian staggering along, looking after his work day by day, bearing upon his back this immense load of taxation which was pictured by the hon. member. But in the same breath the hon. gentleman goes on to say:

> The Finance Minister spoke this afternoon of 70,000 immigrants from the United States going up into our new lands. These men, with those who come from other countries, are the people who with dollar wheat—to my mind never to return to the old rate—raising their productive harvest in the great west and putting it into and vivifying every artery of industry and of commerce in this country are its greatest hope.

What has made it possible for these immigrants to come into this country and produce dollar wheat?

Mr. HENDERSON. The Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. HARRIS. I quite admit that the answer given by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) gives one of the reasons why we see this result — but only one. The Canadian Pacific Railway has been one of the greatest instruments for the development of this country. But we have found it necessary to provide other facilities for transportation. We have a country which is capable of sustaining a population of 25 or 30 millions, perhaps even 50 millions, but without transportation facilities it would be impossible for us to take care of any such population. People are now coming into the country because the government has wisely, in my opinion, expended vast sums on transportation facilities, with the result that the people are attracted here, and they can produce wheat and get a dollar a bushel for it, whereas twelve or thirteen years ago they could only get 60 cents a bushel.

The question of taxation has been very fully dealt with by the hon. the Minister of Finance, and also by my hon. friend from North Essex (Mr. Sutherland), and I have only a few words to say in addition. Is it better to have 7,000,000 people in this country with a net debt per head of $45, or 5,000,000, with a net debt per head of $50? I say, let the government go on with their policy of reducing the debt by $5 per head for every 2,000,000 increase in population. This is good business policy, and I think the people of Canada will consider it so.

The hon. gentleman groans in agony over the enormous borrowings we have had to make. He quotes, and unhappily for him, I think, from Mr. E. R. Wood's pamphlet published a short time ago, showing the amount of borrowings Canada has been able to make in the old country; but in referring to those figures the hon. gentleman has attempted, I think, to leave the impression that these borrowings on the part of Canada were something to be deplored. Now, I know Mr. Wood intimately, and I look upon him as one of the most brilliant financiers in this country. I have read the article referred to with a great deal of interest, and I happen to know that Mr. Wood's object in publishing that pamphlet was not to create the impression that it was an evil policy for us as a country to make these enormous borrowings, but his object was to inform the people of Canada that the conditions at the present time are very different from what they were 12 or 15 years ago, and that it is possible, in view of our improved credit and increased resources and wealth, to make such borrowings in the old country on favourable terms. I may say that the money we have borrowed is all used in the further development of the country, and I cannot see how the hon. gentleman can get much satisfaction from that source. Now what was this money used for which is borrowed by the Dominion and provincial governments? This money we must have in connection with the operation of our government, this money we must get at the cheapest possible rate, and if we must have it, we should try and get it in the best markets of the world where we can get money the cheapest. What do municipalities want this money for? Let me say that there has been a tremendous change in the condition of the municipalities throughout Canada in recent years. At one time, people living in the smaller towns and villages were content to live under primitive conditions; in fact they had no choice, because they had not the necessary wealth to improve their conditions. But times have changed, and at present people living in the municipalities are able to pay for public utilities, they are able to provide waterworks, electric lighting, paving, and other improvements which are enjoyed by the people living in large cities. The reason they demand these luxuries is that they are in a position to pay for them. Many hon. gentlemen can remember the time when in a great many towns and villages in the province of Ontario, with which I am better acquainted than the other provinces, did not want the pavement on their streets and were quite satisfied to do without them; indeed in some of their streets the grass was growing in those days. Now the people of towns and cities are in a different position entirely. They have a larger population, they have increased industries, they have a more extensive commerce, they have greater wealth, and consequently they demand more public utilities and luxuries in conformity with their advancement. Yet the hon. gentleman from North Toronto deplores the fact that these municipalities should enter the money market and borrow money to provide for themselves these utilities and luxuries, although they are able to borrow the money at a low rate of interest, which they can well afford to pay. Take our corporations. They have borrowed $301,700,000 in the past five years. Yet the hon. gentleman deplores the fact that this vast sum of money has come into the country and that we have to pay interest on it, which interest goes out of the country. What is that money doing while we have it? We are borrowing money in the old country at 4, 4½ or 5 per cent, rates which any corporation or municipality has to pay. If they are not in a position to make 7½, 8, 10 or in some cases 15 per cent, yet they are able to make enough to pay them for their outlay. The more money we can borrow at a reasonable rate, a rate which we can afford to pay, the more rapid will be our development, and we ought all to have but one aim, and that is to develop the natural resources of our country.

Now the hon. member for North Toronto called the Finance Minister a great many names; in fact I do not think I ever heard a speech containing so many epithets hurled at another gentleman as the speech of the hon. member for North Toronto. He says that the Minister of Finance is the champion of nearly everything. I think he ought to specify particularly the one title which he should bestow upon the Finance Minister. The one title which he did not specify is the one that I believe he should have specified. I think the hon. gentleman should have been broad enough in his criticism to have added to the many titles which he conferred upon the Minister of Finance that of champion producer of surpluses. I believe the Minister of Finance has a perfect right to this title. Perhaps we could arrange a saw-off and allow the hon. member for North Toronto to take any title that we can agree upon. Probably he would like the title of champion producer of deficits. Or, he might like the title of the champion prophet because, at the end of his remarks, he prophesied exactly what my hon. friend the Minister of Finance will have before him for the next four or five years. I do not think anybody will take seriously the prophecies which he has given to us, but I think it is just as well that these prophecies should be on record, as, no doubt, they will be, for the reason that at some future time they may be very useful to us on the floor of this House.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks which were made by the hon. member for North Toronto, although I cannot say I got a very great deal of information which was of use to me. One remarkable fact about his speech was that after speaking for three solid hours he had no suggestions and no policy to offer on behalf of the Conservative party or on behalf of hon. gentlemen on the other side of this House. Surely, if things in this country are as bad as hon. gentlemen opposite are trying to make them appear, it is only reasonable to expect that we should have some suggestions from them whereby things might be improved and by reason of which we could take into our serious consideration the stoppage at the present time of this mad rush to disaster which is predicted. But, in all the speeches which have been made in connection with the budget, there have been no suggestions of any kind. I do not believe that the Conservative party have any policy. They did not have any policy to offer the people of the country on the occasion of the last elections, and I have not heard that they have had any policy to offer from the other side of the House.

I want to deal very briefly with the remarks which were made to-day by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley). I must confess I found the hon. gentleman very difficult to follow, but, after the first part of his speech was finished, I was very glad that the summing up was entirely satisfactory. The hon. gentleman went on to state that our loans and our finances generally were in a very bad condition, that they were badly handled, and he wound up by saying that he admitted that it is not important whether we have deficits or surpluses, but it is important to know that our expenditures are wisely made. I quite agree with the summing up of the hon. gentlemen in this respect. I do not think it is very important whether this government have large surpluses or large deficits. As long as the money is properly and wisely used in the development of our country and its resources we should go on spending, having entire confidence in the country.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. What about 5-inch belting at $2.12 a foot?

Mr. HARRIS. I think that before answering that question it is in order for the hon. gentleman to make some explanation of the statement he made in the House recently about ladies' blouses.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. They are all right too.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) said they were all wrong.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. No, I did not.

Mr. HARRIS. I think it would only be proper to hear from the hon. gentleman on that point. The hon. member for Argenteuil has criticised the rate of interest paid on some of our loans. Of course, he is a business man and he has had extensive experience in conducting large business operations. He knows that at certain times it is much easier to arrange large loans than it is at other times, and I dare say that in his own experience there have been times when, on looking back, he has found that he could have made very much better arrangements than he did make. I do not think my hon. friend the Minister of Finance claims to be infallible. I believe that that hon. gentleman claims to have the same weaknesses as other men have. But, it is so easy for hon. gentlemen opposite to take certain loans, criticise the way in which they were handled and endeavour to leave the impression that if they had had the handling of them perhaps they might have been able to have secured one-eighth, or one-sixteenth, or one-quarter of one per cent more than has been secured. I do not think that a criticism of that kind is very important and, certainly, I, personally, do not look upon it very seriously. I must admit that I envied the hon. member for Argenteuil the great enthusiasm which prevailed while he was speaking. I think that the enthusiasm on the other side while he was speaking was quite as great as it has been on this side since I have been speaking.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. HENDERSON. Cheer up.

Mr. HARRIS. I am afraid that things are inclined to be a little dull and I think we want to get more humour into the situation. I was very pleased to hear the hon. member for Argenteuil say that the Conservative party is an optimistic party. I have had the opposite opinion, and I think I have very good reason to have the opposite opinion because I think a great many of the members of that party who should be optimistic and who should have the fullest possible confidence in the future development of this country have not been of the optimistic variety, but have been what I would term calamity howlers. I do not think there is any place in Canada for pessimism. This must be an optimistic country and I am perfectly willing to join with hon. gentlemen opposite in forming, inside the walls of this House, an association of optimists. We have to be optimists on both sides of the House and we have to have the fullest possible confidence in Canada. The hon. member for Argenteuil closed his remarks by comparing the government of this country to that of the requirements of a large business concern. This rather startled me for a moment, for the reason that I practically used the same illustration in one of my election speeches last fall. I am not going to charge the hon. gentleman with having copied my speech, because I do not believe he ever saw it. I agree with him in the statement that he made in this connection. We as members of this House are simply the trustees or directors for the people of Canada and our duty is to see that the government of this country is properly carried on, that the taxation and revenues are raised properly and without imposing too great a burden upon any class. We must also see that the expenditures are made wisely, honestly and properly. Of course the results of any business undertaking can only be known by the financial statements which are brought down by the directors at the end of each year. I suppose that that is the only method that we can adopt in getting the results of the operations of our management of this country. Taking that as a basis for arriving at the results, I believe that every hon. member, especially those on this side of the House, will agree with me that the results of our management have been magnificent, that they have been satisfactory not only to the hon. members of this House, but to the people of Canada generally.

I shall not longer detain the House. I am glad indeed to have had an opportunity to make a few remarks on this question. I do not know whether I have added anything of value to the debate but I do hope that I have not said anything not becoming in one who is in every way anxious to uphold the dignity of the House,

Mr. H. B. AMES (St. Antoine, Montreal) Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat unusual for the members of this parliament to have the opportunity of considering in one budget debate the accounts of two complete periods of twelve months and I take it that we are expected for the most part to confine our remarks to an examination and consideration of those figures for the two years which the minister has presented to us. I admit, that for purposes of comparison, we may go back even to confederation if necessary and examine the financial transactions of those who have preceded us, but I take it that our main duty is to deal with the public accounts of the last two years. Those for the year 1907-8 are closed and final. We have the official figures before us in the public accounts. Those for the year 1908-9 are as yet before us only through the estimates of the Finance Minister, but we are quite prepared, I am sure, to accept those figures as he has given them and to base our criticism upon them. While I heartily agree with the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Harris) in his desire to uphold the dignity and traditions of the House, and while I congratulate the hon. member on the most excellent spirit in which he presented his ideas for our consideration, yet I do not share his opinion that what the Finance Minister presented yesterday was a 'splendid showing.' Those figures, to my mind, disclosed a condition which should call not for rejoicing but for very serious and careful consideration. I do not wish to approach this discussion in any spirit of pessimism. I share the feelings of the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Harris) that we should not be pessimists; how, in fact, could we be pessimists in this Canada of ours. But I do deny that I am necessarily guilty of pessimism if as a member of the opposition I bring to bear on the statement which the Minister of Finance has presented, a careful scrutiny and if as the result of that examination I find grounds for criticism and for protest. I feel that only when the duty of the opposition is rightly performed can we expect the best results under our system of government.

Our credit, as is admitted by all, is the basis of our hope for future prosperity. We should all be extremely jealous of the financial credit of the Dominion of Canada. If that be in any way injured, or even if its reputation be tarnished, we must expect to suffer seriously in future and it is for that reason that we are justified in looking for such indications, in bringing them to the attention of the government and in asking the ministers to do all they can to keep the credit of Canada at the highest possible level.

When we come to examine these public accounts, the first striking feature, and it cannot escape the most casual observer, is the rapid increase in expenditure which has occurred under this present administration. Go back to the year 1897 and you will find that we were then expending the sum of $43,000,000 per annum. By 1906 this expenditure had doubled, in that year it amounted to $83,250,000. For the last year, 1908-9, which closed a few weeks ago, the total expenditure amounted up to $132,000,000, if I correctly understood the Minister of Finance. That is an expenditure treble what was considered to be sufficient twelve years ago; treble what was denounced as extravagant by the Liberals when they were in opposition prior to 1896. It would seem as though it were absolutely impossible for the Finance Minister and the government to now apply the brakes. Certainly they have found it impossible to apply them during the last few years.

I shall not discuss this much debated question of surpluses. I do not think it necessary to consider all the budget speeches which have been delivered in the last 25 years; all we need are the figures in the public accounts, and there we have no difficulty in finding just the amount of the over-expenditure for every year since confederation. By over-expenditure I mean simply the total amount expended in excess of the total receipts and if we compare our system of accounting with that of Great Britain, the United States, Australia or any other country, that would be the only fair method of reckoning. If we look over the statement of the net difference between receipts and expenditures we find that for 1907-8 we ran behind $14,300,000, and for the year 1908-9, according to the minister's confession of yesterday, we ran behind something over $46,000,000, making for the two years now under consideration a total over-expenditure exceeding $60,000,000. You may take the records of all the years since confederation, you may examine these figures, line upon line, even in the periods of the largest expenditure, and you will never find any two consecutive years that will even approximate the present figures. They are unparalleled, unapproached in the history of Canada. You may add all the over-expenditures of the last 20 years together and they will not equal the over-expenditures of the two years which are now under consideration.

Was this done at a time when the revenues showed indications of increase? quite the reverse. In the years 1907-8 we had a revenue of $96,000,000 and in the year 1908-9 we had a revenue of $84,500,000, and yet the expenditure of the latter year exceeded the expenditure of the former year, large though it was, by twenty million dollars. And the Minister of Finance knew when he came to this House last year to put through that enormous budget under which an expenditure of $132,000,000 has been incurred in the last twelve months, he knew that the revenues were diminishing compared with the previous year. He had the returns before him month after month, and the fact was announced throughout the press that we were certainly destined to have a smaller revenue than we had the year before, and yet he was prepared to ask the House to vote estimates under which $20,000,000 were to be spent in excess of the largest amount ever expended in any single year in the history of Canada. I am reminded of a passage that I read in an interesting book which recently came under my notice, entitled 'Bygone Days', by Mr. Leveson Gower. In that book there is an episode which tells of a society woman of London who was so actively engaged in performing her social duties that she stood in great danger of breaking down, and a friend went to her and said: 'Mrs. X., be careful, you are burning the candle at both ends.' And Mrs. X. instantly replied: 'Oh, and is not that the way to make both ends meet?' I commend that to the Minister of Finance as typical of the manner in which the finances of the country are being managed by him.

A further striking feature that appears to the observer in connection with these accounts, as a necessary consequence of over-expenditure, is the vast increase in the public debt which the figures show. The figures of the gross debt, as near as we can ascertain, have within the past two years increased by $85,000,000; the figures of the net debt which more especially concern us in matters of debate, have increased during these two years by over $60,000,000. That too is an absolutely unprecedented increase in the history of Canadian finance. You can look over the financial history of Canada since confederation, and you will never find two years succeeding one another that approximate that amount of increase. You will find that more has been added to the debt in the last two years than was added during the whole period of twenty years from 1887 to 1907. Think of it, that in two years the debt should be increased by this government to as great an extent as it had been increased in a score of years under both the Liberal and Conservative administrations. And, the Minister of Finance himself admits that we are only entering on this period of vast expenditures. He knows we are only a part way across the river; he knows that the National Transcontinental Railway is as yet not one-third completed and yet $52,000,000 have gone into it; he knows that the prairie section is about to receive a $10,000,000 advance; he knows that the mountain section has hardly been commenced and yet that we must guarantee an amount approximating $50,000,000. The Minister of Finance expects, on his own figures, to add $25,000,000 to the debt in this coming year; he will be very fortunate if he gets off with so small an amount. And, if that be continued for the two succeeding years, as we have every reason to believe it will, then you will find that in the period of five years from 1908 to 1913, (that is to say during the life of this parliament and the year immediately preceding), there will have been added to the debt of this country $135,000,000, a five years' record exceeding that of the entire last quarter of a century. In 1882 the net debt of the country stood at a little over $153,600,000; in 1907 the net debt of the country stood at $263,600,000. There had been an increase during that twenty-five year period of $110,000,000 or $4,400,000 per year. Compare that with the five year period from 1907 to 1912, and you will find that the debt which stood at $263,600,000 in 1907 will without doubt reach $400,000,000 in 1912. In other words, we shall add in that period of five years $136,000,000, or over $27,000,000 per annum to the debt. No wonder such a record causes all persons who have at heart the interest of Canada, who realize how much unimpaired credit means, and who look forward hopefully to the future; no wonder such a prospect causes them to closely question whether under this government our finances are being properly handled. And, as to our net debt, there is at present at work a committee going over the assets of the Dominion. It is well known that the net debt is arrived at by deducting from the gross debt the recognized assets, and that as these assets shrink the net debt increases by so much. As the committee which I have referred to has not yet reported, I cannot definitely refer to its findings, but I think I am safe in saying that several million dollars will need to be added to the figures of net debt if the report of that committee be what I think it will be.

Then, too, we have not taken into consideration the indirect liabilities which have been incurred by this government, and by indirect liabilities I mean endorsements given by this government. To find the financial standing of a business man you must know not only what his actual debts are but you must also ascertain how many notes there are out across the back of which is his name and which may some day have to be paid by him. And this government in using their endorsing power have created indirect liabilities or contingent liabilities which may at any time be converted into genuine drains upon the public purse. We find that there are railway subsidies in force which aggregate very nearly $6,000,000; we find that the Canadian Northern guarantees amount to $17,250,000; we find that the Grand Trunk Pacific guarantees already issued are for $15,500,000. There we have alone guarantee obligations where the name of the Canadian government is behind the name of a private company to the extent of $38,750,000, and before the Grand Trunk Pacific is completed will not that sum be more than doubled? Therefore, when we speak of the net debt in the figures which we quote today, we must remember that this net debt, by bookkeeping re-arrangements is likely to be increased, and that large indirect obligations need also to be taken account of.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to dwell for a few moments on one of these matters, with respect to which I consider the government is most deserving of criticism, and that is its unpreparedness in connection with the late large drain upon the public exchequer. Glancing over the record of the last few years, do we find that the government have exhibited foresight and wisdom and prudent preparation in getting ready for the strain that was to come? They came into power in 1896. Almost immediately after their advent the revenues of the country began to increase. We find that the total receipts in 1897 were somewhat under $40,000,000, but that by 1903-4 these total receipts had reached $70,000,000 or nearly double, and that by 1907-8 they had reached $96,000,000, or a good deal more than double what they were twelve years before. Now, during that period of rapid expansion in revenue, when money was pouring freely into the treasury of Canada, do we find that the government made any preparation for what was to come? The early administrations, prior to 1896, were hard pressed for money. Year after year, the increases of revenue were very slight and the demands were always increasing. These governments had no such opportunity as this has had during the last ten years. This government has had a rare opportunity, such as comes to nations but once in their national history—an opportunity of putting the finances of the country on the soundest basis, when the expansion of revenue, incident to the development and growth of a new country, came to their relief. Did this administration then make any provision for the future? Just look at the figures. Our net debt in 1896 was $258,500,000. Turn the record over for eight years, and you come to 1904; and looking at the figures for that year, you find that our net debt was practically the same, $260,867,000. During that period our revenues had nearly doubled, yet our net debt remained practically the same. No attempt whatever was made to pay it off or even to reduce it. All the increases in our revenue had been spent as fast as they came in. It was specially unwise for the government to have followed that spendthrift policy at that particular period in Canadian history. There were then certain very large loans about to mature. Those loans had been made from time to time in the earlier days of our history; but it so happened that between 1903 and 1910 a very large portion of our funded debt fell due and needed to be renewed or converted or paid off. The opportunity was at hand for a wise government to take those loans one by one, to convert them, if the money was available at a lower rate, or if not to pay them off and in this way establish the credit of Canada on a lasting basis of the highest and strongest character. The Minister of Finance was perfectly aware of the fact that these loans were falling due. In his budget speech of 1898 he forecasted that contingency. He then said: the payments of these liabilities, I estimate that we shall have accumulated sinking funds to the value of about $67,000,000, so that we shall have to renew or convert the balance of these maturing loans to the amount of over $100,000,000.

> By referring to the public accounts, it will be found that between 1903 and 1910 we shall have loans maturing to the amount of £34,443,136 or $167,622,262. To assist in meeting

When the Minister of Finance knew that between 1903 and 1910, he had to provide for the re-borrowing, the paying, or the converting of $100,000,000 of maturing loans, should he not have been careful to see that, at least during that period, he would be in the position to say to the lenders: 'Unless you can deal with us on most excellent terms, we will repay your loans.' In this way he would have most effectively established the credit of Canada on the highest basis possible. But he did nothing of the kind.

In 1903-4 this government launched the National Transcontinental proposal. This is not the time to again show how absolutely inadequate was the provision which the government then contemplated making, and how completely astray they were in all the representations they made before this parliament. Suffice it to say that they knew there was an enormous expenditure awaiting them, and that this was to be made in a period concurrent with that in which the $100,000,000 of loans were maturing and had to be met. They persistently underestimated the cost of the road, but still one would have expected them to make some adequate preparation. One would have expected that in 1903,—in the period before the heavy financial operations had begun—they would have begun to accumulate a little and lay aside something in order to have some cash ahead. Look at the bank balances to the credit of the Canadian Pacific Railway. These balances run from fifteen to twenty million dollars every year, so that that company may be in a position independent of the money market should they desire to make extensions at any time. Our Finance Minister, however, did not make any provision whatever, because we find that in 1904-5, after this transcontinental proposition was launched, there was also again an over expenditure of $5,356,448, and in the following year, 1905-6, there was again an over-expenditure of $818,811. So that in 1906, the government found themselves face to face with this transcontinental proposition without having put aside one penny of their abundant revenues in preparation for it. It is hardly necessary that I should repeat the words of my hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) regarding the last message of our former Deputy Minister of Finance, Mr. J. M. Courtney—a man who served his country well and whose financial opinion was always of great value to Canada. But let me just read, even if it be a repetition, the last lines of Mr. Courtney's valedictory :

> To carry on the large projects now under way and at the same time meet maturing obligations, will require the greatest care in order that the credit of Canada, now so deservedly high, may suffer no impairment.

That was written in October, 1906. Mr. Courtney, foreseeing the strain which was approaching, strongly advised that the greatest care should be exercised in order that the credit of Canada might suffer no impairment. And yet there was no retrenchment on the part of the government nor were there any loans floated at a favourable time in advance of the demand, nor were any banking arrangements made or any guarantee obtained that money would be available when required. But apparently without the slightest provision, our Finance Minister went on with his lavish expenditure and without making any preparation to meet what was coming, until the time came when he had to raise the money urgently required. We find that in 1907 the country became plunged somewhat suddenly into a period of financial stringency. My hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) has told us, as a banker, that there were plenty of premonitory symptoms, and that the Finance Minister himself could not have been otherwise than cognizant of the fact that such a financial stringency was approaching. There came a time when long loans were difficult to obtain. What did the government do? They fell helplessly back on their bankers and said to them: 'You have got to carry us.' They got temporary accommodations from their bankers and had to pay for it as people have to pay for things when they are hard up and can only turn to one person for assistance. The government ordinarily carries in cash and on deposit in the banks a sum of from eight to ten million dollars, partly in the banks in England and partly in various banks in Canada. That is not a very large sum, not one-half what is carried by the Canadian Pacific Railway,—that great corporation of which we are so proud. And as the demands on account of the Transcontinental Railway increased from month to month, that balance of ours began to shrink and the credit balance of the government began to fall. I have here a return, sessional paper No. 109a, which gives us the amount of money this government had at its credit as cash available in London and Canada on the last day of each month during the last two years. What does it show ?

We find that, at the end of April, this cash balance was $6,648,744. At the end of May, there was an overdraft in London, and, if you combine that overdraft and the cash balance in Canada, you will find that the government had only $3,745,138 available cash to its credit. Coming to the end of June, this statement shows that the amount had further fallen to $2,786,273.

And, when you come down to the 31st of July, you find that the government of Canada, in England and in the banks of this country, taking all the accounts together had only $995,604 to its credit in available cash. Do you believe, Mr. Speaker, that there has been any time in the history of Canada since confederation when our bank balance was so low? Do you suppose that any of the provinces, unless, possibly, Prince Edward Island, carries a bank balance much less than that? Yet here we find ourselves, this great Dominion of Canada, with only $995,604 for which we can write cheques and draw the money. And even that sum if I am rightly informed, was not all available, because our contracts with some of these banks provide that we must leave minimum balances which cannot be touched ; and therefore it is probable that the government had drawn out practically every available dollar it had to its credit by July 31, 1907. Then, what did they do? They started in to raise money on temporary loans. The history of the temporary loans also shows how hard-up this government must have been during that period. Look back over the history of Canada, and you will find a great many occasions when the Finance Minister could come to this House at the end of the fiscal year and say to the members of parliament : 'Gentlemen, we have not one dollar of temporary loans Of all the years between 1871 and 1884 that was true—not a dollar of temporary loans at the end of the year. Also from 1900 and 1903—four years—the Minister of Finance could meet parliament and say that there were no temporary loans. But what is the record of these last two years which are uow under consideration ? In May June and July, there was no liability. In August a loan of $2,433,000 was made. By January, 1908, temporary borrowings had gone up to $7,300,000. From February to May, 1908, the amount stood at $9,300,000; in June at $18,000,000, where it remained during June and July, going back to $15,600,000 in August, September, October, November and December. I believe that, since the first of the year on one occasion, we had an indebtedness of $20,000,000 on temporary loans—the government owed that amount to its bankers.

Mr. FIELDING. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) endeavouring to show that there were not temporary loans in former times? If not, what is the effect of his statement?

Mr. AMES. The hon. minister has only to read my remarks in 'Hansard' to see exactly what I mean.

Mr. FIELDING. I am willing to have it read in the light of my question. I say that there were more temporary loans in a corresponding period in the time of my predecessor than there have been in my day.

Mr. AMES. In reply to that, I would only say to the minister that if he will turn to the Public Accounts, page 23, he will find the amount of temporary loans which successive Finance Ministers have given at the end of the fiscal years for which the budget was presented.

Mr. FIELDING. What difference does it make as to the particular time of the year at which the loan stands?

Mr. AMES. For purposes of comparison, the minister will see. At the present time we have $13,600,000 of temporary loans, and that there are many years in Canadian history when there were no temporary loans.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) will permit me, I can tell him that during the twelve and three-quarter years of my office as Minister of Finance, the temporary loans have amounted to $101,000,000, and, for a corresponding period of my predecessor, they amounted to $136,500,000.

Mr. AMES. It is certainly evident that most of the hon. minister's predecessors were able to right themselves before the end of each fiscal year, which is more than can be said in his case. Now, what do these figures show? These figures show that, during a time of financial stringency, a time for which the Canadian government should have provided large sums on deposit with its bankers so that it could have given a steadying influence to the banking transactions of Canada, of all those who were clamouring for assistance, there was no corporation in the Dominion so insistent as the Canadian government. The figures show that, after a period of unrivalled prosperity, during which this government could have accumulated large sums of money, the government had reached such a stage that its cash balances with all its bankers amounted to less than a million dollars. They show that the government had gone to the Bank of Montreal and other institutions and had succeeded in obtaining sums running up to $20,000,000 as temporary accommodation. And what is the result? Every business man will tell you that in the fall of 1907 and the year 1908, the banks throughout Canada curtailed their credits. Every business man will tell you that, not getting the advances he wanted, he was compelled to diminish the volume of his business. That was the universal experience. Many of the weaker houses were crowded out altogether, and even the largest and strongest houses could not get their accustomed line of credit, and had to be contented with half of it. And what was the result? The volume of production in the country was lessened. The number of persons on the pay-rolls of industry was reduced, and there was idleness to a great extent throughout the country. And the Minister of Finance knows perfectly well that the drains he made on the Bank of Montreal made it necessary for that institution to say to other customers, 'We cannot deal by you as generously as we would; we have got to see the Dominion of Canada through this——'

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) says that the Bank of Montreal made that statement. I say it never did.

Mr. AMES. It is hardly to be expected that the Bank of Montreal would officially make that statement. But I do not think the hon. minister (Mr. Fielding) will have much difficulty, if he inquires among the men accustomed to borrow from the Bank of Montreal in Montreal, in satisfying himself that many of them had to take half a loaf because the government insisted on having a full supply.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman says that these borrowers had to be satisfied with half a loaf because of the influence of the government. I say he has no warrant for that statement. They may have received only half a loaf, but it was for other reasons.

Mr. AMES. I do not think it requires, before business men, much more than the statement of the proposition that a large customer who ordinarily requires no accommodation required accommodation to the extent of $20,000,000 from the banks—that these banks had to stand behind this heavy customer, the Dominion of Canada—in order to show that the banks were compelled to say 'No,' to less favoured borrowers.

But, ultimately, even the limit of temporary borrowing was reached, the minister was forced into the market to make some long-term loans. It is not altogether well that the Dominion of Canada should be in that position. We ought to be able to choose our time of entering the market. There are periods, I admit, when the market is unfavourable. The Canadian government ought to make enough provision in advance to be able to stay out of the market for a few months if it is unfavourable.

But when the Canadian government reached the point that they had no cash, when they had to borrow more than they had ever borrowed before by temporary loans, then they had to go into the market, whether it was good, bad or indifferent, and float their loans.

The situation has not bettered very much. The minister tried yesterday to make us believe that it had, or would. But look what is ahead of the Finance Minister, and how can he expect much improvement? The Finance Minister has to renew this year, if I rightly read the figures, (beyond the sinking funds that are provided), about $16,000,000 of loans. He has to provide $10,000,000 for the Grand Trunk Pacific and he has to provide about $24,000,000, for the National Transcontinental. There alone you have $60,000,000. Are we to understand that the economies of the minister, which he expects will be rigorously enforced, are going to reduce that to $30,000,000 or $25,000,000? I hardly think so. I hardly believe, in view of the probable revenue of this year that the minister will be in a position to reduce that $60,000,000 to $25,000,000. So taking our previous estimate, which I think is a very moderate one, we would conclude that the minister, during this five year period, will have to add to the debt about $135,000,000, and of that, fully $75,0000 must be borrowed within the next three years. So I cannot see haw we can expect much improvement in the way of more favourable terms when we stand in a penniless condition forced into the market against our will, and compelled to borrow enormous sums every three or four months. Now, this government has already added to the debt $65,500,000. In three years more they will probably add another $75,000,000, or altogether $140,000,000, which they would for purposes of debate like to spread over the whole sixteen years in order to strike an average. So this government which prior to 1896, made protestations of economy, will find themselves at the end of the life of this parliament compelled to confess to the country that they have added fifty per cent to the net debt of Canada. The net debt in 1896 was $258,000,000; in 1909 it is $325,000,000. It will probably be $400,000,000 before we again have a general elections, if this present government continues to the end of its term. Can we expect, in view of all these renewals, of this immense amount of money we require, can we expect that we are going to secure favourable terms? Is this not a sufficient explanation of that significant table which my hon. friend from Argenteuil presented, showing that while all the securities of other British possessions were advancing, those of Canada had declined 3½ per cent?

Now I know that I shall be accused of endeavouring to injure the credit of the Dominion of Canada. The statements which I am endeavouring to make, are, I believe, absolutely true, and if any hon. member on the other side of the House can show that my figures are incorrect, he will do me a favour. But I cannot but believe that the action of this government is injuring our credit, and so believing, can I sit silent in this House and vote for every proposition which this administration brings forward? I do not believe any Finance Minister, or any government, can take such liberties with our credit as he has taken during the last three years, and expect our financial reputation to remain as high as it has been. Now I propose to show to the minister facts that doubtless he knows full well, though he does not present that side of the shield to the House. I propose to show to the hon. the Finance Minister what to my mind are some of the indications that the reputation of Canada's securities is not what it has been in past years. Take the stock quotations, with which my hon. friend from Argenteuil has dealt to some extent. You can find the full list given each week in the 'Economist,' and I have had it made up for the last ten years. I will omit loans about to mature—of course they are nearly at par—and I will omit loans that have just been made, because they have not been made long enough to allow us to see whether they are rising or falling. Take two typical loans that have been in force for a considerable time. Take first the 3 per cent loan of 1938. Our 3 per cent loan was quoted in 1906 at 98; in 1907 at 96; in 1908 at 95; on the 25th of February 1909, at 90½ and 91½; on the 10th of April, at 92 and 93. So that our 3 per cent securities of 1938 have fallen 6 points since 1906 Now take our 2½ per cent securities due in 1947. In 1906 they stood at 85; in 1907 at 80; and they touched as low as 78 in 1908. They stood between 80 and 82 on the 25th of February, 1909, they stood at 79 to 81 on March 27, 1909. They now stand, on the 10th of April, at 79 to 81, 5 points of a decline since 1906. Now I do not profess to be able to give an opinion that would be regarded in banking circles as of much value, regarding our Canadian securities. But I would like again to read for another purpose the extract which I took from 'The Money Market Review' of the 6th March, 1909, describing the annual meting of the Bank of British North America, and giving the words of the chairman, Mr. C. W. Tompkinson, when speaking of the past year's business in Canada. Mr. Tompkinson said:

> Turning now to the credit side, cash and specie show a diminution of £91,242, while cash at call and short notice are also down £187,145. Investments, so far as our British government securities are concerned, show no change,——

The hon. the Finance Minister likes to quote consols to us as falling.

Mr. FIELDING. Does my hon. friend say that consols have not been falling, that they have not fallen as low as 80 at one time?

Mr. AMES. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well the fluctuation of consols, but I notice here that a bank manager does not consider it necessary to write down consols.

> —but we have increased our holding of Dominion of Canada bonds by £38,000, and, as stated in our report of June 30 last, we have written down our total holding from 97 to 95.

Consols they do not write down, Canadian securities they write down from 97 to 95.

> These bonds are, as you are well aware, necessary for the securing of our note issue when it exceeds a certain limit, and, in view of this fact, it seemed advisable to increase our holdings to a moderate extent. Since December 31 a further fall, we regret to say, has occurred in Canadian government securities, due principally to the issue of the late big loans, which gave investors more favourable terms than were afforded by the older issues, and it is likely that, should not recovery occur, we shall have to devote still further sums to writing off their depreciation in value.

A pleasant prospect is it not, to feel that a bank manager has found it necessary to write down Canadian securities by 2 points as a result of the year's business, and looks forward to having to write them down still further?

Mr. FIELDING. That depends entirely on the money market.

Mr. AMES. Now that Canada's credit has suffered as shown by the——

Mr. FIELDING. I dispute that with my hon. friend. I say that Canada's credit has improved.

Mr. AMES. I am willing to admit that the Finance Minister cannot agree with me upon this important matter nor I with him. But to my mind there are indications which tend to prove that the credit of Canada, under his management, has suffered and is suffering. Take, for example, the advanced price that we have to pay for money. As is well known our loans are of three kinds—temporary loans, short term loans and long term loans. Take, for example, the temporary loans and see what we have been paying for money during the last two years. During the calendar year 1907 we never paid less than 4½ per cent. During the first six months of 1908 the usual rate was 4½ per cent and never went below 4. In June, 1908, the minister managed to make two small loans, one for 20,000,000 francs at 3¾ per cent for one year, another for £1,000,000 at 3½ per cent for one year, but the remainder of the hugh temporary indebtedness was upon the books at from 4 to 4½ per cent. Yet we find that the Bank of England rate during 1908 was down to 3 per cent and is now down to 2½ per cent, below which it never goes. Examine too the loans for which we issued securities only two of which were for more than ten years. We have made seven loan flotations in the last two years, 1907-1909, and of these seven loan flotations two are for long terms, or to 1930-1950, four are for short terms and one for an intermediate term of ten years. Short term loans were mostly renewals and they were extremely costly. The loan of 1874 which fell due in 1904 and which was extended to 1907 cost us 4½ per cent. When that renewal expired in 1907 it was extended in part for ten years and cost us a shade under 4½ per cent. That is the annual effective rate of interest per unit including all costs connected with and spread over the life of the loan. The loan of December 11, 1907, for four years, cost us 4⅝ per cent. The loan of June 24, 1908, a renewal for four years, cost 4 3-10 per cent and with regard to the loan of February last of £6,000,000, although the cost is to be distributed over the whole term of ten years you will find that the annual effective rate of interest per unit will be 4⅛ per cent. These are pretty expensive prices to pay for money when we have to float securities in order to obtain it. It appears to me that this cannot be taken otherwise than as an evidence of distress, when we borrow for temporary relief in many cases, and the borrowing, as we find here, is extremely expensive.

Now, as to the long term loans a comparison of the rate paid on these borrowings when compared with former years indicates impaired credit, as is shown by the following statement:

	Rate of Interest.	Years.
Loan of 1888..	·0327	50
" 1892..	·0341	46
" 1894..	·0316	44
" 1897..	·0286	50

Annual effective rate of interest per unit.

Loan of Feb. 19, 1908.. ..	·037	1930—50
" Oct. 1, 1908... ..	·0378	1930—50

£6,000,000—10 yr. of Feb., 1909, 4½ per cent.

The minister, in his budget speech yesterday, asked us to compare long term loans with long term loans and that is what I have done.

Mr. FIELDING. And the market conditions at the time.

Mr. AMES. The market conditions are largely the effect of what you make them.

Mr. FIELDING. No, I dissent from that.

Mr. AMES. Compare the loan of the 19th February, 1908, with the loans of previous years. We find that the loan of 19th February, 1908, cost ·037, and that the loan of October, 1908, cost ·0378, while the rate on the ten-year loan of February last, for £6,000,000, was 4⅛ per cent. In other words, if we compare the loans of 1908 with the loan of 1897 we find that we paid 32 per cent higher, and if we compare them with the long term loan of 1894 we find that we are paying 20 per cent higher than was paid before the Conservatives went out of office in 1896. I very much doubt whether the minister, under the present circumstances, will be able to raise the money that he now most urgently needs and for which he will have to take berth for Europe as soon as the session ends, at a less effective rate of interest than 4 per cent. Let me commend to the Minister of Finance a loan that has been recently floated by the government of Ontario, a loan for £820,000, issued at 4 per cent, at 102, and subscribed for several times over so that the entries had to be closed before the time was up. Let the minister read the prospectus of that loan. He will find no special inducements there, no plums by way of interest unearned, no privileges to convert on very extravagant terms, and he will find that it applies certain conditions which might help to account for it. The things that are in the prospectus no doubt will commend themselves to the minister as being an ideal form for use in the future.

Mr. FIELDING. Another fact that my hon. friend omits to state is that in the interim the bank rate has gone down.

Mr. AMES. We will see the next loan that is made.

Mr. FIELDING. We will. Wait till you see us next year.

Mr. AMES. There is another indication that it has been difficult for the minister to get money, and that therefore our credit has not been enjoying such a reputation as would have made it very easy for him to have obtained it. He has not referred to it in his budget speech, but a perusal of the prospectuses of the seven loans of the last two years shows that the minister has had to offer very considerable and unusual inducements to make the loans go off at par. As is well known there are certain elements which have to be considered in connection with a loan. There is the price of issue, the rate of interest, the length of time, and then, what we might call, the details by way of inducements. The minister stated yesterday that we might consider a standard loan to be one issued at par, at 3½ per cent for forty or fifty years. The minister knows that if he cannot get his standard loan he must advance some of these elements and make them slightly better or introduce some other element to improve the security. The minister knows that it is just like, to use an example, a rubber cushion; if you depress it at one point the cushion is distended at another. So that, what you give, by way of interest or by grading your price of issue, you have to take at some other point. The minister has not told us of all the experiences which he has had in calling—perhaps not always a welcome visitor—upon the various money lenders of London and Paris, and asking them not to be too hard on him when loaning him money for Canadian expenditure. But a little trail of the difficulty runs through these prospectuses. It shows that sometimes when the minister came to the banker the banker would say: 'What, Mr. Fielding, back here again so soon? I thought we had satisfied you, you have hardly had time to go to Canada and return. Oh, this time we cannot do quite so well for you, you will have to give us a little more and a little more and a little more.' We can imagine the banker with his scales and the Minister of Finance finding it necessary to add an ounce or two more each time that he has to ask for money. That shows very plainly, if one reads through the prospectuses, which state the case more accurately and in detail than the minister did yesterday. For example, all the money had to be paid in by April 30, 1909, and then six months' interest is payable on the first of November, 1909. The Ontario government get every stiver before they commence to pay interest on their loan. But the Canadian government adopt a different course The Canadian government in the £1,500,000 4 per cent loan for five years, of December, 1907, made the money payable by the subscribers on several dates. Averaging up these dates you find that the government had the use of the full amount for just 84 days before the 1st of April, 1908, but that on that date the government paid six months' interest to the lenders. That seems a small matter, but figure it out. That was equivalent to giving back to the persons who purchased our securities, cash to the extent of $75,520, and if you deduct that $75,520 from the total amount which the minister received from the sale of his securities you find that the securities really were sold at 98⅞ per cent. That interest was not earned. That was a plum thrown in. That was because Mr. Banker or Mr. Underwriter said: 'Mr. Fielding, you must throw in a little more this time if you want to make that loan go at par.' Again take the loan of October, 1908, a £5,000,000 loan at 3½ per cent to run until 1930 and 1950. There again six months' interest is paid on the 1st of January, 1909, and a bonus by way of unearned interest given back to the subscribers of $298,433. That was equivalent to returning 1¼ per cent of the issue price. Thus the minister in that case really sold his loan at 98¾ per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that discount taken into consideration in fixing the effective rate that rules?

Mr. FIELDING. I think so, I think it is the effective net rate. I have always understood that the calculation is made in that way.

Mr. AMES. The hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) has also referred to the privilege of converting which has been given with some of these loans. That is a plum too, a special inducement. We can imagine the underwriters saying: 'Mr. Fielding, throw that in or we will not take your loan at par.' If you examine the four loans in which that privilege occurs, you will find that the loan of April, 1907, carries with it the option to exchange $100 worth of 4 per cents for $105 of 3 per cents that option being good to the 30th of April, 1910. The same thing is true of the loan of December, 1907. The loan of June, 1908, carries with it the option of exchanging $100 of the 3¾ per cents for $106 of the 3 per cents and that is good to the 30th of September, 1910. The loan of February last, the £6,000,000 loan at 3¾ per cent, carries with it the option of exchanging $100 of the 3¾ per cents for $110 of the 3 per cents, the option to be good until November 30, 1913. Has the minister told the House what those options are costing the country? Supposing the people taking that £6,000,000 loan should exchange the whole amount for 3 per cents does the minister not see that this would add $3,000,000 to the net amount of the debt, of the capital amount that has to be repaid? Again, supposing they do, what is the result on the holders of other bonds? They find the security in which they have invested artificially reduced in value by £2 or £3. These new securities naturally drop the former threes down to 90 or so, because there is the opportunity to buy 3¾ per cents at 99¼ and to convert them into 3 per cents practically at 90. So we find that our holders of securities are displeased; we find that the Bank of British North America is disappointed and that those who already, in good faith, had purchased Canadian securities, are dissatisfied in consequence of this action of the minister. Is it a good thing to have the British investor feel that the Canadian government, by depreciating the value of securities already existing, is liable to render the securities they hold less valuable if they wish to part with them? Further than that it renders 3 per cent money an absolute impossibility for the minister before the year 1913. He therefore has fixed his own rate until that time and we cannot expect to do any more borrowing at the old rate until this option has been completely exhausted. I hope that when the minister again goes over to Great Britain he will not find it necessary to throw in so many plums in order to make his loans go. It might be better to meet the situation fairly, to put out a 4 per cent loan at par and let us see right on the surface what we are paying for the money instead of by a round-about way giving back a considerable portion of the amount we are supposed to receive. An eminent financial authority, Mr. E. R. Wood, has been quoted several times to-day. I also wish to read a sentence from his much appreciated utterances. Mr. Wood said, not long ago.

In this crucial stage of our development I venture to say that the reputation of our securities is of greater moment than the reputation of our material products, important as that always must be.

And I believe that this House will admit that in that respect Mr. Wood is not far from the truth. There is nothing to-day of greater importance to Canada than the reputation of her securities and we cannot afford, by loose financiering, to degrade their standing in the markets of the world. So it appears to me that our stocks are being quoted at a lower rate, that we are paying an advanced price for money and finding it necessary to give special inducements such as we have not given in the past and such as other governments do not give. All these things tend to show that we are not to-day in quite as good odour on the markets of Great Britain as we have been in the past and if we continue our present course, if the honourable Minister of Finance presents his smiling countenance three or four times a year before the underwriters, I fear that the situation will not much improve.

Reference has been made by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Harris) to the comparison regarding savings bank deposit rates. I do not wish to deal with that beyond pointing out that under the Conservative administration the depositors were getting one half per cent above our borrowing rate, while under this government it is proposed to give them one per cent below the rate at which we are called upon to borrow.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one other matter which I think may be regarded as of a non-contentious character and to which I would like to invite the attention of the Finance Minister. I was very pleased indeed to hear him foreshadow that we may return to the former method of providing annually some sinking fund towards the reduction of our loans. I consider that to be of the utmost importance if we would sustain the credit of the Dominion. One hundred years ago one of the leading financiers of the United States, the Hon. Alexander Hamilton, who is credited with the establishment of the financial system of the American government in 1875, gave utterance to these words:

The creation of debt should always be accompanied by the means of extinguishing it. This is the true secret of rendering public credit immortal.

Evidently, we have deviated from that line of action. For a number of years we have had in Canada an automatic sinking fund. Each year, by the obligation that we entered into with the lenders, we were forced to make certain savings. If you take the debt as it stood at confederation, namely, $75,000,000, and compare it with the total of the amounts that have been year by year put in the sinking fund, which now aggregates nearly $67,000,000, you will see that the people of Canada during the last forty years have practically paid off, by means of this sinking fund, the debt as it stood at confederation. That was the method adopted by our forefathers; they considered it wise as they made these debts to make arrangements for the payment thereof. I am willing to admit that an automatic sinking fund has certain disadvantages. The United States found that out when they tried to redeem the loans they had issued in 1870 which they had to purchase, many of them, at a premium of 25 points. Probably that is why in the year 1885 the Canadian Finance Minister decided no longer to provide sinking funds in the loans, and we find that no loan issued since 1885 has carried with it any sinking fund. So long as our debt was not greatly increased, and so long as the loans carried with them a sinking fund, and we were making a reasonable contribution each year towards the extinguishment of the capital amount there was no very great reason for criticism. But the old sinking funds are expiring; very soon they will all have been closed out; very soon the obligation towards the lender to make enforced savings from year to year will have come to an end. No new loan that this government has made (and some that were made prior to the time of this government) carries with it no sinking fund obligation, so that we find ourselves in the position that, while we are taking the benefit of the moneys that have been placed in the sinking fund by our predecessors, we are putting off the payment of every dollar we borrow to-day to a period forty or fifty years hence. That, I claim, is not a fair, not a just, not a right position for us to take. Consider for a moment the amplification of that idea. According to a statement given us in the Public Accounts Committee there were but four loans on the 31st of March last that carried with them sinking funds. The loan of 1878-9 matured on the 1st of November, 1908, and was paid so that that sinking fund is extinguished. The Canadian reduced four per cent loan which matures on the 1st of January, 1910, has already to its credit by way of accumulated sinking fund $23,736,- 187, and that I presume will also disappear on the 1st January, 1910, when that loan falls due and is repaid by the help of new borrowings. The guaranteed loan of 1875, which matures on the 1st of October, 1910, and that of £1,700,000 which matures on the 1st of October, 1913, have to their credit an accumulated sinking fund of about $8,750,000, and that will disappear on the 1st of October, 1913. After that date there will be but one loan left carrying a sinking fund, namely, the loan of 1884, on which we are paying one-half of one per cent or about $121,000 annually. The sinking fund accumulated is earning $145,000 annually, so that our total contribution towards the extinguishment of debt after the 1st of October, 1913, will be the paltry sum of $266,000 unless other arrangements are made. I am very glad the Finance Minister tells us that he is a convert to the idea that there must be some provision made at this time for the extinguishment of the principal of the debt. I was afraid that he also was a believer in the heresy that posterity should be left to pay the principal and that all we need do is to provide for the interest. I confess that this heresy is altogether too widespread throughout Canada, and I fear it has its exponents even in this House of Commons. There are too many of us who take an irresponsible view of these immense borrowings. We say: 'Let prosperity take care of the principle, we will pay the interest and enjoy the money, and fifty years hence what matter is it who stands under the principal of the debt.

I wish to give a few reasons why in my opinion that course should no longer be continued, and probably these reasons are such as have already induced the Minister of Finance to indicate that he intends to bring the present system to an end. I do not consider that such a proceeding is fair and just towards the Canadians of the past and towards the Canadians of the future. I do not feel that we are keeping faith with those who have gone before us, who have by their savings paid off in principal every dollar of the original debt of confederation. We should not claim all the benefits of the savings of the past, and at the same time all the advantages of the borrowings which fifty years from now shall be laid on the shoulders of our descendants. You can see that if such a policy were indefinitely continued it would lead to financial disaster. Some day the debt burden will overtake the carrying power of the nation, and we ought not in our day and generation to establish the precedent that those who come a couple of generations after us will have to shoulder the payment of the money we now spend and enjoy. Those who come after us will have their own burdens just as large proportionately as ours are to-day. We are not going to exhaust in our day and generation all the opportunities for the development of the Dominion. The propositions that seem large to us to-day will seem small to Canadians fifty years hence. They will have their burdens to meet, their canals to build, their transcontinental lines, their fortifications, maybe their naval and land defence to provide for in a way we never dreamt of. And so, we should leave them to some extent free when their time comes to decide how the money shall be spent that they are called upon to pay. We should not pass down to them a debt legacy of several hundreds of millions of dollars. And many of the works which we are to-day constructing will have crumbled into dust long before the notes come due for payment. What would we think of the men who built the Rideau canal if they had placed the indebtedness for it on our shoulders without one dollar of sinking fund. The day of the Rideau canal is past; it is merely useful for an occasional market boat; it is no longer regarded as part of the transportation system of Canada and probably never will again be, and yet it cost a large sum of money. When it was built, it was supposed to be a grand work for the Dominion; and if that generation had said: 'Let the people fifty years hence pay for it,' we would have been called on to pay for a work comparatively useless to us at present. Take that $67,000,000 paid by way of sinking fund since 1867, and you will find it sufficient to pay for our canal system or the Intercolonial Railway or for all the works we inherited at confederation. Therefore it does seem to me that each series of Canadians in their own day and generation, should bear their fair share of the burden of capital expenditure. It is not as though we were unable to pay it, as though we were going through a period when such forced economy was necessary that we could put nothing aside for the future. We shall soon have a revenue of $100,000,000 per year—perhaps not the coming year but soon, and we ought to set aside voluntarily a certain amount every year to avail in the extinguishment of the capital amount of our debt.

I am making a suggestion to my hon. friend the Finance Minister—which I know he will, as he always does, receive in good part—prompted perhaps by the recent remarks of the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Harris) who does not always give the opposition credit for any constructive suggestion. At present the amount of our net debt is about $300,000,000. According to the figures given yesterday it is $324,000,000. Let the Finance Minister compute what sum of money put aside every year for the next forty years will extinguish that net debt, and then let us agree to put the sum aside each year by way of a voluntary sinking fund. That is practically what they do in England. At present they have in England the two sinking funds, as the minister knows, and they are voluntarily putting aside as New Sinking Fund £28,000,000 a year. This is an obligation which the British parliament has placed upon itself and not an obligation towards the lenders. They put aside £28,000,000 a year towards the extinguishment of the national debt. Make an actuarial calculation and the minister will find that if we put aside $4,000,000 this year and every year following, at the end of forty years the amount accumulated will extinguish our net debt of to-day. It would put those who come after us in exactly the same position as the founders of confederation put us in, and we owe it to them to deal with the future as the past has dealt with us. Or if my hon. friend will compute our funded debt at $250,000,000, and will put aside annually $3,350,000, that would wipe it out in forty years. That suggestion I offer the Minister of Finance for his consideration. It will at least not be subject to the difficulties which an automatic sinking fund sometimes bears, as the experience of the United States between 1870 and 1907 well showed. I admit that we must at times borrow for large works. I am not one of those who believe that Canada should keep absolutely within her revenue and that no work should be undertaken unless we can pay for it out of the current income of the year. Not at all. There are large public works which can be only made by borrowing and distributing the burden over a period of years; and as the shoulders grow stronger, they become better able to bear its weight. But if I may submit a method which should be adopted in deciding how the year's revenue should be apportioned, it would be this: Let my hon. friend set aside, first, what is required for consolidated fund expenditure; then what is required for capital expenditure, other than for large important public works; then his railway subsidies, bounties and so forth—it makes no difference whether he calls them capital or revenue, they should come out of the money received by way of revenue; and finally, let him provide for this new sinking fund, a permanent annual charge for the present of about $4,000,000 or possibly three and a half million dollars. These four items should not exceed the revenues of the year. Then if beyond that he finds it necessary to borrow 10, 15 or 20 million dollars for a great national work like the Transcontinental, no one on this side will seriously criticise him. But when we do borrow, let us borrow with the expectation of paying. Let us, when incurring an obligation, do so with the determination to repay the principal. The minister knows well that, if a system of that kind were adopted, it would have a very beneficial effect on the credit of the country, and I am sure he will admit our credit might be better, and anything which would make it better is well worth doing. If he had three or four million dollars a year specifically set aside towards the extinguishment of the debt, he could go to London and buy in our own securities from year to year at advantageous terms. Whenever our securities fall, buy them. Then he would find that the constant demand for our Canadian securities would be taken as an evidence of our confidence in our own obligations which would tend to lift the prices of those securities on the money market. And the hgher these go the cheaper shall we be able to borrow money and the better satisfied will be those who lend it. I believe that no better investment could be made than the investment of three or four million dollars annually with the view of buoying up Canadian securities and strengthening our own credit in the markets of the world. Perhaps we shall not be able to do this just at present, but the Finance Minister, just as soon as he can see his way through to the end of the big project he has now on hand, should arrange for a complete conversion of our debt, and the only way will be to do all he can, before the time arrives, to create a favourable impression in the market regarding our intentions to repay our debts.

Needless to describe what good effect such an example would have on our provincial legislature, our municipal councils and the public generally because, after all, the people of Canada are a debt-meeting and a debt-paying people. They do not want the use of any man's money without paying for it. Every dollar the honest people of Canada borrow they expect to pay back, and our government should do the same, and make their decision known to the world.

In closing I wish to say that I am not a pessimist regarding the future of this Dominion. I believe that even the present trying circumstances will be weathered and that we will continue to expand and develop as we have done. I desire to see the credit of Canada at the highest possible point. That can only be accomplished along some such lines as I have indicated; and that is why to-day, speaking from this side, as a recognized critic of the government, I have taken on myself to speak so long and to make the points I have already submitted to this Chamber. To resume in a few words, my remarks have been intended to convey this impression. In my opinion the government deserve condemnation for the lack of foresight they have shown and their evident lack of preparation in approaching this great work, the National Transcontinental. They should not have allowed the credit of Canada to have become strained through lack of preparation to meet the large expenditures which they knew perfectly well were shortly to come upon them. I blame the government further because during the year 1908-9 they did not apply the brakes. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance knew perfectly well that the revenues were falling down that year, that they would not exceed $85,000,000, and yet he insisted upon an authorization from this House of a budget under which $132,0000,000 were spent. Those economies which he now promises should have commenced a year ago. It is all very well to begin them now, but they should have begun a year ago. And I also would say that, to my mind, the longer the government puts off adopting some new method to provide for the extinguishment of the capital amount of our indebtedness, the worse it will be for the credit of Canada. Therefore, I hope that the time is soon coming when something along the line I have indicated will be adopted. The time has come for economy in connection with the controllable expenditure; Canada, further, should declare that she is a debt-paying nation, and should make that declaration with statutory authority.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer). Mr. Speaker, I indorse very heartily the suggestion made to the Minister of Finance and to the House in the closing part of the remarks of the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames). I think that the method of gradual and automatic extinction of debt by a sinking fund is one well known to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to have been in use for many years in Britain, and I am perfectly sure that the hon. minister will give very earnest consideration to what has fallen from the lips of the hon. member for St. Antoine on that subject.

In the major portion of an address of considerable length, the hon. member (Mr. Ames) was engaged in an endeavour to impress the country with his view of the seriousness of two propositions. The first is the record of what he described, I think, as the enormous increase of the annual expenditure of Canada. Well, when I consider the fact that we are a young and growing nation, enjoying prosperity and advancing with a rapidity which no man can measure, I do not take the serious view of that increase of expenditure that my hon. friend does. I remember that there was a time when Mr. Bright used to grow very serious over Britain's expenditure going up to £70,000,000. That expenditure has long been beyond £100,000,000, yet the 'weary Titan' is not yet down on the street as some of the hon. members of this House would sometimes lead us to suppose. There was no great fear of Canada's expenditure increasing by great amounts before 1896, for the very simple reason that governments, like others, must restrict their expenditures within the means produced by their own policy, and I do not think the most strenuous friends of the Conservative party of this country will say that their policy when in power was such as to provide them with excessive means for purposes of expenditure. As a matter of fact, we only spend what we get. We get our income from what? From the increase of our trade; and we are able to spend large sums in Canada to-day because of the enormous and fast-growing trade of the country. For this reason, I have viewed from another standpoint the increase of Canada's expenditure as a token of immense prosperity on the part of the country and the corresponding success, up to a point at least, of the administration and legislation of those in power.

With regard to what fell from the lips of my hon. friend from St. Antoine about the credit of Canada, I have been in the habit of watching, week by week, the standing of Canada's securities in London as compared with those of other portions of the British empire bearing similar rates of interest, and the comparison always shows the credit of Canada to be in a healthy and sound condition. But, after all, the credit of Canada—and this is a point that I should like to put to my hon. friend—is to be judged by our answer to this question: What is our faith in Canada? The hon. gentleman has said that Canadians are a debt-paying people. He might have said also that Canada is a debt-paying country. There are liabilities, it is true, but there are ample assets, wisely handled, to meet these liabilities with. To set forth this fact would be my reply to the hon. gentleman on that point.

Now, speaking as a member from the west, I am bound to say that, having regard to the fact that we have had, in recent months, a tendency to shrinkage in the revenue, and having regard to some perfectly self-evident causes of that shrinkage, I think the budget is a very satisfactory budget. I say there have been some self-evident causes of the shrinkage of revenue. I take it that that will appeal to the mind of every man who has been observant of what has happened in Canada within the last two years. It is known to Conservatives and Liberals alike that there was an almost entire failure of crop over large portions of western Canada. The man who wants to export a crop which Providence has denied the weather to raise is a very unreasonable person. And, outside the mind of the hon. member for North Toronto, (Mr. Foster) I do not think that the idea would arise that this state of affairs was due to the weakness and mismanagement of the Laurier government or of its Finance Minister.

We are told in the west that there is no difference between the two parties in matters of tariff. I will say this,—that if that were established as a fact in the minds of the people of western Canada it would have a very serious bearing on the fortunes of administration in this country, because in western Canada the tariff issue is one which bulks large in the minds of electors, and has an important bearing, according to their view, upon the prosperity of the country. But I do not think that the statement I have referred to, that there is no difference in the parties on this subject, will bear careful examination. I came to this House and watched carefully for evidences of any disposition towards lower tariffs on the part of the Conservative members of this House. I listened to a debate upon the tariff the other day,—or to part of it; unfortunately I did not arrive from my holidays until a few hours after the debate had commenced,— and I am bound to say that I did not observe in that debate any evidence of low tariff tendencies on the part of the Conservative members of this House. Another claim that is frequently made by Conservatives on western platforms is that in what is known as the Foster tariff as large a percentage of reduction was made so far as the general tariff is concerned, as has been made by the present government. For that statement, I am bound to say, there is a very considerable measure of evidence, so far as the general tariff is concerned; but in so far as the great and undeniable prosperity of Canada within the last twelve years has been due to that reduction, I think that a measure of credit is coming to the Conservative as well as to the Liberal party in this country.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Hear, hear.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK. My hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) says, 'Hear, hear.' I do not know whether he sees that, in approving my statement, he supports the principle that lower tariff does make for the greater prosperity of the country. If he does, I am very glad that there are among hon. members on the Conservative benches at least some minds into which the true light of tariff principles is penetrating. I believe that the tariff policy which gives the Liberal party of this country a different position altogether from that occupied by its opponents is that which is known as the British preference—the British preferential tariff. I regard that as the feature in the policy of this government so far which will probably be approved by posterity as the one deserving the greatest credit in the history of this government. I believe that feature of their policy not only gave an impulse to what I call sane imperialism, being one in the best interests of the union of the British empire, but it was a far-sighted policy as regards the development of Canada by providing us an access into the best market of the world for our agricultual products, for a country which has and is bound to have an ever increasing excess of those agricultural products. I want to say this in regard to the hon. Minister of Finance, that he deserves credit not only for what he has done upon the Tariff Commission, but for what he has not allowed others to do. I want to pay him this tribute. I watched with the utmost care the proceedings of the Tariff Commission two or three years ago, I watched the evidence that was given before that commission, I observed the determined assaults that were made from day to day, from every part of Canada, upon the Minister of Finance, and I found him as well posted upon the details of the various trades and manufactures as the manufacturers were themselves, and in many cases better. I honour him and I thank him, as a representative of the western farmers, for the steady resistance which he gave to the demand for an increase in the tariff, for the steady way in which he kept the faces of the Liberal party looking in the direction in which they should look always if they claim to be a Liberal party, that is, in the direction of greater freedom in commerce, a policy which they have consistently followed during their whole history. I am sorry my hon. friend from North Toronto has left his place in the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Call it six o'clock.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

House adjourned at 5.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 22, 1909.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PROTECTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. J. CONMEE (Thunder Bay) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 150) to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act, chapter 115. He said: When the Bill for the incorporation of the Ontario and Michigan Power Company was before the House for its second reading a short time ago, the leader of the House expressed the view that it would not be within the jurisdiction of a provincial legislature to incorporate a company with the powers that company was asking for. The hon. leader of the opposition expressed the view that a provincial legislature might incorporate such a company, but might not be able to confer upon it the power to carry out the objects proposed, but it might obtain that power by making application under chapter 115. I am not going to pretend to decide which of these opinions is correct; that is not necessary to the purpose I have in view. But so far as my information goes, so far as I can interpret the statute, and so far as I can learn from legal gentlemen with whom I have discussed the question, it is at least doubtful if a company incorporated otherwise than by the Parliament of Canada could obtain under chapter 115 power to construct works of any kind in navigable waters. Sub-section 'a' of section 2 of that Act defines the works that may be so ratified. (2) In this part, unless the contract otherwise requires:

'Work' includes any bridge, boom, dam, aboiteau, wharf, dock, pier or other structure, and the approaches or other works necessary or appurtenant thereto.

In section 3 of this Act, we find these words:—

Except so much of this part as relates to rebuilding or repairing any lawful work, nothing hereinafter in this part contained shall apply to any work or structure under the authority of any Act of the parliament of Canada or of the legislature of the late province of Canada or of the legislature of any province of Canada, passed before such province became a part thereof.

That language, it would appear, excludes from the operation of part 1, chaper 114 (a) 'any works authorized by the parliament of Canada.' I assume that that is not to be construed to mean that the parliament of Canada could not pass a special Act to authorize that work, but that is the language of the section as it stands whatever interpretation may be put upon it; (b) 'any work authorized by the legislature of the late province of Canada or any work authorized by the legislature of any province now forming part of Canada, passed before such province became a part thereof.' I would submit that this does not exclude the rebuilding or repairing of any existing works. I assume that such works could be rebuilt or repaired under chapter 115. That section is well known to hon. gentlemen, and therefore I shall not take up time reading it. But section 7 of the first part, which is the question under review here, provides:—

The local authority, company or person proposing to construct any work in navigable waters, for which no sufficient sanction otherwise existed, may deposit plans thereof and a description of the proposed site with the Minister of Public Works, and a duplicate of each in the office of the registrar of the district, county or province in which such work is proposed to be constructed, and may apply to the Governor in Council for approval thereof.

The subsection provides for advertisement so that there may be public notice given. I submit that this provision goes no further than the works specifically mentioned in subsection (a) of section 2, chapter 115, under the provisions of that Act the works I have mentioned, namely, any bridge, dam, wharf, dock, pier or other construction or approaches thereto. Beyond those specific works mentioned, there is no power in the Act giving the Minister of Public Works or the Governor in Council power to authorize other works such as a diversion of navigable waters. I may say that a question in point has arisen in connection with the works proposed to be built on the Rainy river at Fort Frances. The company there had obtained from the province of Ontario a charter under letters patent to carry out certain works of development upon the river, under an agreement which they had entered into with the government of the province. They came here to get their plans approved, but the department would not approve of them because they had not the requisite legal authority. Section 1 of the Act provides with regard to the rebuilding authority, that the work shall be a lawful one, and what constitutes a lawful work is defined by the Act, chapter 115:—

Lawful work means any work not contrary to the law in force at the place of the construction thereof at the time of such construction.

It was held that they had no lawful authority to go on with the work, and therefore could not get their plans approved. That was one reason, I presume, which caused them to ask for the Bill from this parliament, which they obtained in 1895. The provisions of the Act provide that the company shall, before commencing their work, submit plans and apply for the approval of the Governor in Council.

Pending the passage of the Act, a dispute arose between the municipality of Fort Frances and this company, and the municipality filed a petition. It appears there was a dispute about an agreement—that is, there were, it appears there were, two agreements entered into. The first one was dated 17th March, 1904, but it appears another agreement was made, as alleged by the municipality without their knowledge, and dated the 19th of October, 1905. The municipality took exception to the ratification of the plans, but an Act was obtained from this parliament, giving authority to the company to get its plans ratified. It got them ratified by an order in council, and I want to point out that an amendment to the statute is necessary, first, to determine what class of works are to be covered by such orders in council that may be passed under the Act, chapter 115.

I am not very much in favour of legislation by order in council. I do not think it is the best form of legislation, and I believe that the question involved in this measure is sufficiently important to require some governing statute which would better protect the public interest

I need not take up the time of the House explaining the position but there is a very grave injustice to Fort Frances. The agreement between the company and themselves is dated 17th February, 1904. The other agreement was sought to be legalized by the Act which the company asked for from this parliament and which was refused. The Act, as it is in our statutes, makes no reference to the alleged agreement of 19th February, 1905, at all. It was refused owing to a compromise. The solicitors on behalf of the town and the company agreed that an Act should be passed, without giving validity to the agreement in dispute, because the town was advised that they could set it aside by action in the courts. Strange to say that agreement has found its way into the order in council ratifying the plans. It is recited in full, and is made one of the bases for granting the request for the ratification of those plans.

I do not pretend to say what legal effect that will have, but the Act in question—I had occasion to refer to it a few days ago—had been set aside, so far as it is in the power of the provincial legislature to do so. They passed another Act declaring that the company was not bound by the restrictions contained in the Dominion Act. When the Department of Justice came to deal with this provincial Act in the report as to whether it was an Act that should or should not be vetoed—I will not take the time of the House in reading the report because it is quite lengthy—the view of the minister was that the Act was very questionable, that it was beyond the authority of the provincial legislature to pass, but—unfortunately, in my opinion he did not recommend the disallowance of the Act and stated that the matter might be determined by the courts. Here was a community that, to my certain knowledge, has spent several thousands of dollars trying to defend what was a natural water-power, a great water-power in their town, for five years, first in the legislature, and then here, and, in the end, after employing the best counsel this country could afford and taking every step they could take as a small community to protect their interests, they are now relegated to the courts to find out what their rights are. I submit that there should be something better than that to determine these interests. There are several instances where the present method is not as workable as it should be. The department gave, as another reason, in this instance, why they could not ratify the plans of the company that they were asking for power outside the enumerated powers in the Dominion Act, formerly Chapter 92, now 115, they were asking for the diversion of a navigable stream. The Department of Justice, I believe, was consulted upon that point at that time—I am speaking of the application previous to the passing of the Act by this House in 1905—and the Department of Justice, according to my recollection, pointed out that that particular character of work was not covered by the Act, that there was no power to ratify the plans to that extent, unless they were empowered to do so by Act of parliament. So, we have this condition, that, under the Act as it stands to-day, if we take the view that has been expressed here, no provincial legislature could legislate in regard to the construction of any work of that character in or upon navigable waters, and it is equally true, if the practice to which I have referred be correct, that this government, under the existing law, cannot, or, at least, should not, in view of the express provisions of the statute, ratify plans in regard to works of the character of diversions to which I have referred. I am not going to say that plans of that character have not heretofore been ratified. I happen to know that works have been established at the town of Sault Ste. Marie without the ratification of plans, on the assumption that the provincial legislature had jurisdiction and that ratification was not necessary. Somewhat later, in dealing with its securities, the company found that to give stability to them, they must have legal power to maintain their works, and they came to this government to get that power. But, if I am not mistaken, they have not got it, because the power did not exist under the statute to enable the department to ratify works already constructed. The language of the statute is 'works proposed to be constructed'—not works constructed. If I am correctly informed, I assume that the company, in order to get itself out of the dilemma, will have to obtain an Act of parliament, if they have not already obtained it. The same condition exists in regard to the Kaministiquia river, near the cities of Port Arthur and Fort William. The works have gone on there without submitting plans to the Dominion authority. Dams have been built and a navigable stream diverted, and there is no authority whatever. I could enlarge on that question and show that both life and property are at stake in these transactions. There is the case of the Current river near Port Arthur. A water-power was developed there and storage dams built holding back large bodies of water. Unfortunately one of these dams gave way and the torrent of water carried away structure after structure in its course, including the tracks and bridges of the Canadian Pacific railway in the city. And we know that the result of that was that there was great loss of property and the loss of several lives.

And these works are in their infancy in our country. The same great danger hangs over the community in the riding I have the honour to represent owing to the works at the city of Fort Frances. There should be proper inspection during construction of such works. Therefore, I submit this Bill with a view to meeting the difficulty. The Bill is in tentative form, and I hope that the government will realize the importance of the question and will bring in legislation to protect the public interest better than it is protected under the Act as it stands at this time. I might say, in that connection, that I notice there is a Bill on the Order Paper, introduced by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur). I do not know its scope, but I hope it is in the same direction as this. I am not sure that this Bill will reach a second reading, and that is why I have taken so much time in making my remarks upon it now. I may say, in closing, that it is not my intention to press this Bill—which is in tentative form, and can, no doubt, be made to cover the points of danger to which I have referred.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

EXCHEQUER COURT ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 151) to amend the Exchequer Court Act. He said: This Bill consists of one section, to provide that the Crown, at its option, in any action which has been tried in the Exchequer Court, may appeal not to the Supreme Court necessarily, but, if it prefers, to the highest Appellate Court of the province. There are sometimes cases in which, though a comparatively small amount of money may be involved, very important questions of law arise on which the Crown would wish to appeal from the decision of the judge of the Exchequer Court, but the expense of such an appeal to the successful suppliant, if the appeal is to be carried to the Supreme Court, is so heavy that one feels great reluctance in advising the Crown to exercise its right. It is thought that a measure of this character would prevent that difficulty at all events, and give a useful alternative right of appeal to the Crown, if the Crown should be advised. to exercise it. There is upon the Order Paper another Bill which stands for a second reading, to amend the same statute in regard to the position of the registrar of the court, and the two Bills might usefully be considered together.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman say that the right of appeal is limited to the Crown side of the case, or does the suppliant have the same right?

Mr. CONMEE.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It is extending it to the Crown only.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

MARINE DEPARTMENT—CAPTAINS IN THE SERVICE.

Mr. LACHANCE—by Mr. Proulx—asked:

1. On what date and in what capacity did Captain Theophile Roy, called Desjardins, enter the service of the Marine Department on board the 'Aberdeen'?

2. When did he leave the service, for what reason, and on whose report or on whose order?

3. Was he employed on the ice-breaker 'Montcalm'? If so, when, how long, and in what capacity?

4. For what reason and on whose order did he leave his employment on the 'Montcalm'?

5. Has he been called to the post of third officer or boatswain on the 'Seguin'? If so, by whom and on whose report or recommendation was he called, and when?

6. Has he been employed on the 'Seguin'? If so, how long?

7. Was a man named Hoffman employed on the 'Seguin' in 1905? If so, how long, by whom was he appointed, and on whose request or report was he appointed?

8. Was Captain Desjardins called to the post of first officer, second officer, or third officer, or to any other post on the steamers 'Champlain' and 'Canadienne' in 1907 and 1908? If so, on what date, by whom, on whose request or report was he so called, and has he taken charge of these duties? If not, why not?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Entered the service as 3rd officer on board the 'Aberdeen,' June, 1901.

2. Services dispensed with by the department in October, 1905, on the official report of the agent of the department at Quebec that his habits and services were not satisfactory—Desjardins was at the time under suspension.

3. Had been employed as 3rd officer on the 'Montcalm' prior to 1905, for a short time.

4. 'Montcalm' laid up for repairs.

5 and 6. No record in the department of his having performed any services on the 'Seguin'?

7. No record in the department of any services of Hoffman on the 'Seguin.'

8. No. record in the department of T. Desjardins having had any connection with these vessels during these dates.

EXPLORATION PARTY TO JAMES BAY.

Mr. AMES asked:

1. Was it the intention of the government during the season of 1908 to send an exploration party by water to James bay and Labrador, including Dr. Robert Bell?

2. If so, was this project abandoned? If so, why?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). The answer to both questions is no.

FISHERY OFFICERS IN NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. JAMESON asked :

1. Has the government taken into consideration the appointment of fishery officers to enforce the fishery laws at Port Joli, Nova Scotia, and vicinity?
2. Who is the nearest fishery officer to Port Joli having jurisdiction to enforce the fisheries laws?
3. Is there a fishery officer at Lower West Sable river, at Little harbour, and at East Ragged island, in Shelburne county?
4. How far is each of these three places from the other two places, respectively?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Yes.
2. A. C. Robertson, inspector of fisheries, Barrington Passage, and J. L. Bain, fishery overseer at Liverpool.
3. Yes, there is a fishery guardian at each place.
4. Department not aware of exact distances, owing to indentations of the coast.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—GEORGE CARSON.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR asked :

1. Is Mr. George Carson in the employ of the Post Office Department?
2. If so, for what period was he absent from the department during 1906, 1907, 1908 and 1909, respectively?
3. On what business, if any, of the department has he been engaged during these absences?
4. What amount was he paid during each of these years?
5. In his absence who performs his work?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. No.
2. From 25th August, 1906, to 31st December, 1908, upon which date his resignation took effect.
3. Not engaged upon departmental business.
4. In 1906.. .. .. $590 44
   1907.. .. .. Nil.
   1908.. .. .. 712 44
5. Mr. T. A. Godfrey performed his duties during such absence.

I.C.R.—CONCILIATION BOARDS.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR asked :

1. What was the finding or award made by the Conciliation Board in September, 1908, in relation to the dispute between the Intercolonial Clerks and the management of the Intercolonial Railway?
2. Did Mr. M. J. Butler, Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, write to Mr. F. A. Ackland, Acting Deputy Minister of Labour, on 10th October, 1908, in the following terms:

'I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated 6th instant, and have to inform you that the department is ready and willing to accept the findings of the Committee of Conciliation, Mediation and Investigation.'

3. Has the government or the Department of Railways and Canals carried out the said finding or award up to the present time?
4. If the said findings or award have not been carried out, what is the cause of the delay?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. The finding which was placed on the table of the House some time ago is too voluminous to answer as a question; but a copy of the same is attached herewith.
2. Yes.
3. The report implied the reorganization and classification of the clerks and the dismissal of about 20 per cent. Action has been taken towards securing information that will enable the details of the finding to be carried out, with regard to the best interests of the service, with as little friction as possible. It necessarily takes time to prepare a satisfactory plan.
4. Answered by number three.

Department of Labour, Canada.
Ottawa, October 6, 1908.

Sir,—In the matter of the Conciliation and Labour Act, R.S.C., 1906, cap. 96, and in the matter of certain differences between the Intercolonial Railway of Canada and the Station Freight Clerks' Union, Branches Nos. 1 and 2 of Halifax and St. John.

* * * * * * *

I have the honour to forward herewith for the information of the employing party concerned an approved copy of the findings of the Committee of Conciliation, Mediation and Investigation established in this matter, and I am directed to request that you will kindly state on behalf of the employing party concerned whether the findings in question will be acceptable to such party, and will be taken as a basis for settlement of the differences referred to the committee.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) F. A. ACKLAND,
Acting Deputy Minister of Labour.

M. J. Butler, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON CONCILIATION.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux,
Minister of Labour,
Ottawa, Ont.

In the matter of the Conciliation and Labour Act, R.S.C., 1906, cap. 96, and in the matter of certain differences between the Intercolonial Railway of Canada and the Station Freight Clerks' Union, Branches 1 and 2 of Halifax and St. John.

Sir,—The committee provided for under the Act was formed and completed on September 8 and agreed to meet at Halifax on September 16, and the three members of the committee arrived at Halifax on the evening of the 15th.

On September 16 the members of the committee inspected the Intercolonial freight offices at Halifax and familiarized themselves generally with the duties of the clerks.

At 2 p.m. on the same day the committee met in the Province Building and there were present Messrs. G. P. Monaghan and Alex. Gibb and several others representing the clerks, and Mr. David Pottinger and members of his staff representing the Intercolonial Railway.

The demands of the clerks were presented in writing and were as follows:—

HALIFAX SCHEDULE.

Deep Water Freight Office.

No.	Title.	Salary asked for.
1	chief clerk	$100 00
1	cashier	95 00
1	clerk of piers	95 00

	" " (3rd year)	70 00
1	third-class clerk (1st year)	40 00
	" " (2nd year)	45 00
	" " (3rd year)	50 00

Schedule to apply from April 1, 1907.

Seniority and efficiency to count in grading.

2. When a clerk is ordered back to work after hours or on Sundays or holidays by the officials, they are to be paid double time for all such extra time, and all clerical work in the office must be performed by clerks.

3. When a clerk is relieving a clerk of a senior position or class for one week or more he will receive the rate of pay of the clerk he is relieving.

4. That all clerks be allowed two weeks' vacation with pay, as at present, after one full year's service, and all statutory holidays be observed.

5. That eight hours constitute a working day, as formerly.

6. That all new clerks appointed to the office must enter as third-class clerks and receive the minimum of pay of third-class clerks for first year.

7. That all vacancies go to the next senior clerk, who is to hold the office for six months on probation, and if at the end of that time he has satisfied his superior officers of his ability to perform the work required of him he is to be confirmed in his position.

8. That no employee from any other department be appointed to temporary or permanent vacancies over the heads of the regular clerks in the office.

9. Clerks will not be discriminated against for being members of the Railway Clerks International Union, nor for serving on boards of adjustment representing clerks, and will be given leave-of-absence and furnished with free transportation for such purposes. They will also receive the same privileges for the purpose of attending their meetings on any part of the line, when it is possible to do so without inconvenience to the railway.

10. No clerk will be suspended or dismissed without just cause, and any clerk charged with, suspended or discharged for an alleged fault, the same shall be fully specified in writing, giving full particulars two days prior to any investigation, and he will have a full and impartial hearing, and decision will be rendered within thirty days after filing his written request therefor with the proper official. If found blameless, as charged, he will be re-instated and will be paid for time lost at his stated rate of salary.

As this was the first intimation that the Intercolonial Railway officers had received as to what the demands were, nothing more than a preliminary discussion could follow, and it was decided to allow Mr. Pottinger proper time to consider these demands, and to formulate a reply to them. Accordingly the committee adjourned, and met again on the following day, when Mr. Pottinger presented his reply.

It became evident at this stage that the case divided itself into two distinct parts.

1. Relating to general questions of the relations between the railway and its clerks and of appointments and organization.

2. As to wages or salaries of clerks.

In Mr. Pottinger's argument he stated definitely that the Intercolonial Railway could not increase the pay of the clerks, nor adopt a schedule of salaries, but upon other points the Intercolonial were disposed to be conciliatory.

The reasons for the railway declining to agree to the increase of wages were fully set out by Mr. Pottinger, and were such that the committee felt that it would be desirable to take up the other matters in dispute, leaving the question of wages to be discussed with the deputy minister at a later date, and all parties assented to this procedure.

Accordingly, and after a full discussion, the following matters were agreed upon by all parties in the form as under:—

'Your committee are of the opinion that it would make for greater harmony, and better efficiency, if a system of class of classification of clerks were introduced. Not only would the above results accrue, but there would then be an available scheme for promotion, which at the present time seems to be lacking, and which omission breeds discontent owing to the uncertainty of upward progress for efficient clerks who have by length of service and attention to the duties of their office earned the right to consideration in this regard. Just what system of classification should be introduced must necessarily be evolved by the officials of the railway who are more intimately familiar with the details of the business of the Intercolonial than your committee can possibly be. The men involved must necessarily accept the classification determined upon, subject, of course, to the right which they possess of bringing to the attention of their superiors in office any improvement in such classification, which to them may seem desirable in the best interests of the service.

Overtime.

Clerks duly called upon to work beyond the regular hours of their daily service should receive a pro rata allowance for such overtime. The same rule should apply to Sundays.

Holidays.

The two weeks vacation with pay should continue as at present.

Relieving.

When a clerk is relieving a clerk of a senior position or class, the relieving clerk should, after two weeks, receive the rate of pay of the clerk whom he relieves.

Length of Day.

Your committee do not feel disposed at present to make any recommendation with respect to the number of hours that should constitute a day's work: the present day is practically one of eight and one-half hours.

Promotion.

Your committee are further strongly of the opinion that, outside of the rare cases that arise where an exceptionally able outsider is brought into the service to fill some particular position requiring special knowledge and training, the principle of promotion of those already in the service should obtain, having due regard, of course, to efficiency and the requirements of the service.

Discrimination.

The men ask for the following clause:

'Clerks will not be discriminated against for being members of the Railway Clerks' International Union, nor for serving on boards of adjustment representing clerks, and will be given leave of absence and be furnished with free transportation for such purposes. They will also receive the same privileges for the purpose of attending their meetings on any part of the line, when it is possible to do so without inconvenience to the railway.'

Mr. Pottinger stated that that was now the practice on the Intercolonial Railway and that there was no objection to an employee belonging to a trade union. This being the case, your committee need deal no further with this particular point.

10. No clerk is to be suspended, or dismissed, without just cause. Any clerk charged with, suspended or discharged for an alleged fault, the same shall be fully specified in writing, giving full particulars two days prior to any investigation, and he will have a full and impartial hearing, and decision will be rendered by the railway's proper official within a reasonable time after the written request has been filed. If found blameless, as charged, he will be reinstated and will be paid for time lost at his stated rate of salary.

After reaching this conclusion the committee adjourned to meet at Ottawa.

On September 28 the committee met in the Railway Committee room of the House of Commons and there were present Messrs. Monaghan, Gibb and Mr. M. J. Butler, Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. Butler laid his views before the committee on the question of increase of salaries and these coincided with those expressed by Mr. Pottinger at Halifax, and further explained the inability of the railway to increase their expenses, owing to the fact that working expenses of the railway were very largely in excess of revenue, and no funds were available for any increase of expenses.

The committee further considered the questions involved and now submit the following additional recommendations:—

The committee after its investigation, is of opinion that, in the matter of wages, the system that obtains of appointing from time to time new men at higher pay over the heads of men long in the service and probably more capable of doing the work, is injurious to the service and unjust to the men. The remedy for this lies in re-organization, and the abolition of the existing system of appointment influenced by political patronage, which from the point of efficient working we find ample evidence to condemn as applied to the Intercolonial Railway.

The present staff is greater than is necessary, and this is another element which discourages individual increases. If the aggregate amount paid now in salaries were divided among a staff equal simply to the requirements of the service, the men remaining could be better paid than they are now.

The re-arrangement of salaries could then be made on the basis of the value of the position and the work done, having regard of course to what is paid for similar work elsewhere, and the local cost of living as compared with such comparative centres.

At the present time the wages paid to those now presenting claims before us are not, owing to above reasons, what a fair consideration would justify. Under the re-organization hereby strongly recommended, it is more than probable that the adoption of increase of from 15 to 20 per cent would not mean an appreciable addition to the operating expenses of the Intercolonial Railway, and would produce a more equitable schedule of compensation for the staff retained.

We summarize our further recommendations as follows:—

1. Re-organization in order to adjust the number of employees to the actual requirements of the service.

2. An increase as above suggested to the re-organized staff.

MARINE DEPARTMENT—GOVERNMENT YARDS AT SOREL.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR asked:

1. Has the government any information that boats owned by employees of the Department of Marine and Fisheries have been built or repaired in the government yards at Sorel?

2. Has the government made any inquiry or investigation into this matter? If so, what is the result of such inquiry or investigation?

3. How many steam yachts are owned by foremen, engineers, or other employees of the government at Sorel, and where were such boats built?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. No.

2. An informal investigation was held seven years ago into a charge of this kind. The charge was disproved.

3. The department has no information on this point.

ICE JAM AT NIAGARA.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, in the absence of the Prime Minister, if the government are taking any action in regard to the trouble at the mouth of the Niagara river where the ice jam is going to cause, if it has not already caused, a loss of life as well as of property. Is any action being taken by any of the departments?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). The matter has been brought to the attention of my department, and I have given instructions to Colonel Anderson to go up and co-operate with the American government in order to remove the ice jam.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding that Mr Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer). Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned yesterday I had been attempting, in a few hurried sentences, to express the opinion that this country had been fortunate in having had for the last 12 years in charge of its finances a minister who, in spite of strong attacks upon him from interested sources, had engaged in strenuous endeavours, and in a large measure successfully, to keep the tariff of this country on a revenue basis. I notice that some hon. members on the opposition benches do not agree with me as to his success in that matter, but I think the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Sutherland) demonstrated very successfully the other day that the tariff had really produced the revenue.

Mr. LALOR. Has it stood the test?

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK. The best test of the effectiveness of a tariff for producing revenue is that it produces the revenue. I will try to show this by a reference to other countries. You have a protective tariff undoubtedly in Germany, and you have a protective tariff in the United States with the result that in both those countries last year there were enormous deficits in the annual exchequer, and the United States are looking forward to a much larger deficit this present year; whereas, under what I still claim is a revenue tariff, you have had a series of surpluses under the able administration of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. OWEN. Germany and the United States have been building Dreadnoughts.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK. I do not know exactly what Dreadnoughts have got to do with what I was saying at the present moment, but I can assure my hon. friend that if he builds plenty of Dreadnoughts he will not hear much of surpluses in his lifetime, nor in that of his children or of his childrens' children. I think the greater credit is due to the Finance Minister because of what I willingly concede to be the peculiar geographical position of Canada, being in close proximity, as she is, to the great protectionist country to the south of us. But, I do not think that a careful study, upon full information, of the condition of the United States as a high protectionist country, would encourage the government, or any government of this country, to depart from a tariff for revenue purposes. It may not be out of place for me to say a few words about how high protection has worked in the United States. I find, in talking with my friends in eastern Canada especially, that there is what I may call, without offence, perhaps, a disposition to be dazzled by the apparent success of protection in the United States. If it be the main object of a country to build up trusts and millionaires, I admit that success. There is no doubt whatever that the United States has been successful in building up trusts and millionaires, and that through the policy of protection, but, I do not think, on reflection, that is a matter which should recommend itself to the thoughtful men of this or any other country, because the building up of millionaires means inevitably the aggravation of that problem of the terrible disparity between great wealth on the one hand and great poverty on the other, which has harassed the minds of human-hearted men since the dawn of history. But, if we depart from the consideration of millionaires, I do not think there is much evidence forthcoming that protection has been a successful policy in the United States. What, after all, has the United States done? I wonder if hon. members of this House have ever thought what the population of the United States is per square mile, for example, as compared with that of Great Britain. The United States is keeping 21 people upon the square mile. Great Britain puts 21 people upon every square mile and then makes provision for 537 more. Great Britain has 558 people to the square mile to the United States' 21 and I contend, Sir, that the economic miracle of the nineteenth century is not to be found in the resources of a continent being able to keep 21 people to the square mile under protection, but that it is to be found in two little pin points, comparatively speaking, sticking out of the ocean, the United Kingdom, keeping 558 people to the square mile in, what Mr. Asquith recently claimed, a degree of comfort to be found nowhere else in the civilized world. I have not had the privilege that my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Harris) has had recently of travelling over the various countries to which he referred, but all the evidence I can gather confirms me in the belief that he is correct when he says that Canada has come through the recent period of trade depression better than any country in the world and certainly better than the United States. What is the condition of the United States at the present moment with regard to the depression and unemployment? I wonder if hon. members are aware that with these 21 people to the square mile, during the first eight months of last year more people left the United States than came into it. It is true that the balance was redressed a little in the last four months and that at the end of the twelve months there was a paltry immigration into the United States of 6,000 people. Does that mean that protection is working out to be a great success in that country? For years a million people have been added by immigration to the population of the United States every year, but last year, with its 21 people to the square mile only compared with Britain's 558, the gate swung backward to such an extent that as many people left the shores of the United States as came to them. The chairman of Lloyd's Bank, speaking to the annnal meeting of the shareholders, at the beginning of this year—and he knows something about trade and financial questions—claimed before that meeting of shareholders that the conditions of unemployment in Great Britain have been largely aggravated by workmen returning from the United States where they could not get a living to the overcrowded centres of those little islands. I give the House that fact for what it is worth. I think the authority behind it is, at any rate, worthy of the serious consideration of this House if it is wishful to bring a serious mind to the consideration of this question.

Now, I should like to give the House another fact that may help to enlighten us as to how far it may be wise for the Canadian Finance Minister to allow himself to be influenced by the supposed success of high protection in the United States. In 1860 the United States had two and a-half million tons of shipping and in that same year the United Kingdom had four and a-quarter million tons. At that time the United States bid fair to be the great competitor of Great Britain upon the seas. This is a very important question for any nation that wishes to achieve commercial supremacy, because, Sir, if we pass our minds down through history, I think it can be claimed that no nation ever achieved real commercial supremacy which did not have the enormous command of the seas. Take, for instance, the Genoese, the Romans, the Phoenicians, the Spaniards, the French in the eighteenth century, and then, the wonderful shipping of Great Britain, which is a proof that this is a sound position. In 1860 an important experiment was adopted by the two greatest trade nations in the world for the consideration of the world upon tariff questions. The United States betook itself to the system of protection and Great Britain went the opposite way. At that time the shipping of the United States was two and a-half million tons and that of Great Britain four and a quarter million tons. To-day, after sixty years of that experiment, the shipping of the United States has shrunk to one and three-quarter millions of tons, whilst Great Britain's four and a-quarter millions of tons have gone up to eleven and a quarter millions of tons, far surpassing a shipping record of any country. I do not want to labour this question too far, but if this House were to permit me I should like to offer it a piece of evidence of how protection has acted in the United States of America and from an authority that would not be impugned in the United States itself. I suppose that most of us will admit that Mr. Bayard was one of the most brilliant men that the court of Washington ever sent to the court of London as an ambassador. Mr. Bayard, while fulfilling his duties in that high position, was asked to address the Philosophical Institution at Edinburgh, an honour that is only conferred upon men of the very highest distinction. In addressing the Philosophical Institution of Edinburgh, he referred to the United States in connection with the kind of argument that I am trying to bring before the House to-day, and said:

> In my own country I have witnessed the insatiable growth of that form of state socialism styled 'protection,' which, I believe, has done more to foster class legislation and create inequality of fortune, to corrupt public life, to banish men of independent mind and character from the public councils, to lower the tone of national representation, blunt public conscience, create false standards in the public mind, to familiarize it with reliance on state-aid and guardianship in private affairs, divorce ethics from politics, and place politics upon the low level of a mercenary scramble than any other single cause.

I offer these words for the consideration of every member of this House as furnishing a strong argument why Canada should not follow in her fiscal policy too closely in the wake of the United States. I claim for the government which I have the honour to support very great credit for their having introduced the principle of a voluntary preference to British goods coming into Canadian market. I would like to make clear what at any rate my attitude is upon this question. Personally I would deal with any part of the world where I could exchange upon fair and profitable lines the surplus products of my own country for the surplus products of that other country. Great credit is due to the government of Canada for introducing this preference policy because in it they realized the present needs of Canada. I ventured to fight my election upon the platform that the two great present needs of the west are: greater transportation facilities and better markets, and, Sir, the great needs of the west are the great needs of all Canada. We are going through a period of development. The policy of the government is a policy of developing the west, and the development of the west means the development of our whole Dominion. And, if as I contend, markets are the great need of the west then the government deserves enormous credit for having given this voluntary preference to British goods which has tended to enlarge and expand our opportunities for trade. I have been surprised to read that when the preference policy was first introduced it was met from the Conservative side of this House by the statement that we were giving the old country something for nothing. That was a surprising argument to come from a Conservative party in this or any other colony of the empire, because I recall the fact that throughout the whole history of the empire the Conservative parties of the various colonies have always claimed a monopoly of patriotism and imperialism, and they have generally—in the early days of the colonies especially—managed to get a monopoly of the patronage as well. But, that argument of the Conservative party with regard to the preference had of course the graver demerit of not being a sound one. I should not have thought that a party that occasionally has what I would call ebullitions of imperialistic sentiment, would cavil at giving the old country something for nothing, and would have denounced it as a thing which brought discredit upon the government of the day. But, did we give the old country something for nothing? Why, to my mind that preference policy was not only a splendid piece of sane imperialism but it was at the same time a splendid piece of business. It was based upon a sound understanding of the conditions, and the only conditions upon which trade between nations should be conducted. In what does international trade consist; what are the principles which underlay the giving of the British preference? As I understand them they are extremely simple and can be stated in a very few words. International trade is an interchange of commodities; it is that and nothing more. Money has nothing whatever to do with it. If I were to offer you in a single figure proof of that statement I should remind you that in the year 1906 the total trade of Canada with the other nations of the world consisted of $550,000,000 worth of exchanges, and that out of that $550,000,000 worth of exchanges only $16,000,000 was composed of gold and bullion, $7,000,000 of which went one way and $9,000,000 the other. If that be the extent of our international trade, and if it be desirable to build up that trade, then it follows that, as the Minister of Finance epigramatically said the other day: Sound trade is a benefit to the buyer and to the seller both; and, the only way you can do an international trade is by an interchange of surpluses, and the only way you can get rid of your own surplus produce is by taking the surplus produce of other people. These were the principles which lay at the root of the British preference. It was an independent policy on the part of Canada and it was a proper policy as I consider. I am bound to say that in reference to another kind of preference which is being discussed upon the other side of the Atlantic, the attitude of leading statesmen in this country—of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition as well as the leading statesmen of the government benches—has been absolutely unassailable, in that just as we claim in Canada the right to manage our own affairs in fiscal matters, so, an absolute right of the same kind must be left to the mother country.

Now, did the policy of the British preference justify the faith of those who introduced it? Of course, the moment we gave a preference for British goods in our markets, the imports came in, and that is what created fear in the minds of those who talked of giving something for nothing. But the moment the imports came in, the exports went out to pay for these imports, and that had a beneficial effect upon the country because not only did every import take an export but every import brought an immigrant. And largely as a result of that freer trade we have had the enormous expansion which has been witnessed in the fortunes of Canada during the last few years. I take it that a very brief view of the entire policy of this government will show that the development of one tariff policy along these lines is absolutely vital to the development of not only western Canada but of the whole country. Our policy is a policy of development and it would be so whichever party were in power. One party builds the Canadian Pacific Railway and another party builds the Grand Trunk Pacific, and Canada marches on the road of progress.

But in that policy of develoment as carried out by this government we have included an immigration policy which has brought settlers to till our boundless lands, and coincident with that we have a transportation policy destined to convey the surplus products of our country to the markets of the world where there is a demand for them. But the only way in which they can be sold to other nations is by taking the only payment that can be got for them, that is, the surplus produce of other nations. These are the principles which lie at the root of all international trade, and the sooner we in Canada realize this the better.

I think I am justified in saying that there is a very clear distinction between the two parties on the question of tariffs. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), in his speech the other day, may be taken, I think, to have fairly well voiced, in two hours and forty minutes, the sentiments of the opposition side; and, although he did not give a very extended protectionist argument, as did my hon. friend from St. Antoine division, Montreal, (Mr. Ames), nevertheless he did refer in terms of pride to what has been called the national policy.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK. I understand, from the 'hear, hear,' of my hon. friend, that that policy is one that is looked back upon with pride by the Conservative party. Well, Sir, if it could be proved to have been a national policy, such is my opinion of the patriotism of Canadians, and such is my knowledge of my own patriotism, that I believe they and I would become unanimous in its support. But I must say, after a careful examination of the claims of a policy of protection to be called national, I fail to find that it established any claim whatsoever to that title.

Mr. LALOR. May I ask the hon. gentleman if he can tell us what reduction of tariff has taken place under the present government?

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK. I think I made an admission on that side which should satisfy my hon. friend that I am not making a party speech—that on the general tariff there was as much reduction under the Foster tariff as there has been under the Fielding tariff. But if I wanted to deal with my hon. friend in a party spirit, I could easily say that if he and the hon. member for North Toronto were so proud of the national policy, why did they run away from it? I think that is a fair retort to the interruption.

Mr. LANCASTER. What item of the present tariff would the hon. gentleman reduce?

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I should be quite willing to discuss any point that I am acquainted with; but I have always understood that there is a great latitude in a budget discussion, and I am sure that my hon. friend will agree that a new member of this House should have that latitude extended to him, at least as fairly and as freely as any other member.

Mr. LANCASTER. I wish to understand my hon. friend's argument, and therefore I simply ask him what item of the present tariff he would reduce if he had his way?

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK. I think there will be no difficulty, unless in the hearer, about understanding my argument before I am done. I think a truly national policy should be national in its outlook, and I want to put it fairly to my hon. friend and to the opposition. When hon. members of this House or their friends outside speak in favour of a policy of high protection and increased duties, is their outlook a national one? I have heard the pleas of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) and others for an increase in the duties on woollens. Would it be argued that anybody who was pleading for an increase in the duties on woollens was doing so out of the warmth of his consideration and affection for those who wear woollens. There are 5,000 people all told employed in the woollen trade of Canada, and there are seven million of people using woollens. I should say that people who have a national outlook in their policy would look to the seven millions rather than to the 5,000. When the hon. member for Brantford in the last parliament (Mr. Cockshutt) advocated in this House holding the duties on agricultural implements as high or higher than they were when the present government reduced them by 2½ per cent, does anybody believe that the hon. gentleman and his friends were actuated by a sincere desire to get cheap agricultural implements for the hundreds of thousands of farmers who are coming into our western country? I do not want to be uncharitable, but I think the outlook of those gentlemen was sectional. And if I dare say a word about the province of Nova Scotia, I should even direct a question into that quarter. My hon. friend from North Toronto was very severe on the Finance Minister in connection with certain proceedings in Nova Scotia. I am not sure that there is not some little symptom of protection down in that part of the world; but I should be very lenient in my judgment of it, because I have stated very sincerely the grounds on which I think this country ought to be grateful that it has had such a Finance Minister as the member for Queens and Shelburne. And I should be lenient to him in regard to what happened in Nova Scotia, on another ground because I should always wish to recollect that that country is inhabited by a race of men who are reputed to keep the Sabbath and everything else they can lay their hands on. And I think the lines of the great Scottish poet apply in such a case :

Then at the balance let's be mute,
We never can adjust it;
What's done we partly may compute,
But know not what's resisted.

But even in the case of any protectionists that there are in Nova Scotia, I fear it will be found to be true, if we examine it carefully, that their outlook is narrow, sectional and provincial rather than national. I fail to see how protection ever works in any other way, and I fail to see that its outlook ever entitles it to the high-sounding name of national policy. Show me where it is a national policy in its operation as between the various classes of a country. It is constantly happening in the high protectionist countries of the world, that goods are sold in enormous quantities more cheaply abroad than they are in the country in which they are produced. A well informed American, intimately acquainted with the iron trade, told me the other day that in Pittsburg, in the month of January, 1908, steel rails were sold to the American people in pursuance of a national policy at $28 a ton, and on the same date were sold in Middlesborough on the north-east coast of England for $19.50 a ton. Now, if it be a national policy to rob your own people in order to sell cheaply to foreigners, with the incidental advantage of building up a few millionaires in your country, then a policy of high protection is a national policy, but otherwise it is not. Not only in its outlook but in its operation and its effects the National Policy in Canada proved to be no national policy because it failed to build a nation. When I was pursuing my campaign last year, I invested a modest sum in the purchase of the Canadian Almanac, and I found the trade figures of this country, which were there given, most instructive. It gave the figures beginning in 1883 and concluding in 1906, and these figures showed that the total trade of Canada, in the year 1883, after the National Policy had got fairly under way, was $230,000,000. I passed my eye down the column until I came to 1895, and I found that in that year, after 12 years' experience of nation building under the National policy, our total trade had actually fallen to $224,000,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. What about the home market?

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK. I was not living in Canada at that time, but I have a friend in western Canada, who is now doing splendidly in the little town where I live, and who was a Conservative until he voted for me, and he told me that in those days he carried a letter six weeks because he could not buy a stamp to put on it. I was pursuing the same line of argument in the town of Red Deer during my contest and I was met with the same interruption about the home market. I replied that the home market in those days was pretty well illustrated by the fact that if a farmer went out with his gun and was lucky enough to shoot a rabbit he got his dinner, but otherwise he had to go fasting. He retorted there are no rabbits just now. I said: That's sure evidence that the Laurier government is going back to power because otherwise Divine Providence would have to provide the rabbits.

My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) passed on to another portion of his protectionist argument, on which he touched very gingerly, and that was the balance of trade. On that point he contended himself with quoting the figures and showing that the balance was against Canada. I cannot say that I was surprised at that line of argument, because I have read other budget speeches by the same hon. gentleman and have heard him use a similar argument at much greater length. But I am bound to say that this theory of the balance of trade is an extraordinary theory to one who has studied economics in the school founded by Adam Smith. The balance of trade is against Canada, argued the hon. gentleman, because our imports exceed our exports. Just let the House consider for a moment. How is that balance of imports over exports brought about? We are spending enormous sums on an immigration policy to produce it. If the theory of Adam Smith be the correct one, there is no such thing in the actual operation of trade as a balance. An import always takes an export in the actual interchange of trade. When there is an excess of imports over exports or the reverse, there is also a method of accounting for it, apart from the actual exchange of trade. In the case of Great Britain, her enormous excess of imports over exports is accounted for by goods coming to pay the interest on her enormous capital invested abroad and the cost of the shipping she does for nearly every nation in the world. But it is a common question to ask: What about the enormous excess of exports by the United States over the imports? But does it not occur to any one who reflects that Great Britain has an enormous amount of capital invested in the United States which must be paid for by American exports, and the payment of the interest on that capital debt accounts for the excess of exports from the United States to Great Britain.

An hon. MEMBER. Tell us about the unemployed in Great Britain.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK. I thought I had already enlightened my hon. friend when I told him, on the authority of the president of Lloyds Bank, that the unemployed were going in large numbers from the United States, where they had failed to make a living under protection.

Looking up the budget speech of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) last year, I found that he used this argument regarding the balance of trade, and in it he referred, in somewhat contemptuous terms to the explanation I have briefly given of what I understand to be the true theory of the balance of trade. He was replying to another hon. member, and he referred to it as a theory which the old theorists of free trade England had written volumes about. When I read that, I could not help thinking that the hon. gentleman had surely failed to inform himself how old is his incorrect theory of the balance of trade. Adam Smith published his book in 1776, the year of the American independence. In that work he said that every nation in modern Europe had its failure prophesied by some of these pretended doctors because of this difference in the balance of trade. And I could not help thinking, when I re-read that passage, that some of these pretended doctors still exist and are to be found residing in the neighbourhood of North Toronto. It was the false theory of the middle ages which Adam Smith was exposing. I was amused on reading further, in my hon. friend's budget speech of last year to find that my hon. friend went on to give a theory of his own about how the excess of imports is paid for. He said: 'We have to pay our balances and they can only be paid for in goods or in gold.' But it is not evident that if we paid for our imported goods in exports, clearly the one would equal the other and there would be no balance. As regards their being paid in gold, the thing absolutely does not happen. Gold is a commodity just like wheat or any other article of international commerce, and is dealt with as such. To show that the imports are not paid in gold, let me quote one fact with regard to the trade of Great Britain. We know that she has an enormous excess of imports over exports. Now if gold went out to pay for her imports, we would expect to find an enormous amount of bullion going out. But in the last five years there has been, in addition to the excess of imported goods, an addition of a few million in the value of bullion imported into Great Britain I think that that fairly covers the ground taken up by my hon. friend in his role of protectionist.

There was a meeting in London a few weeks ago with regard to the old theories of free trade England. Mr. Asquith addressed free-traders of every section of British politics and the chair was taken by Lord Avebury. Lord Avebury is a very distinguished man. He is a D. C. L. and an LL.D.—honorary—of universities on the other side of the water; he has been president of the Society of Antiquaries, Foreign Secretary of the Royal Academy, and he has received the very greatest international distinction that is now conferred, the order of Merit of the French Legion of Honour,—I think I am right in claiming that this is the greatest distinction conferred internationally in the world. Lord Avebury has this further distinction—he is chairman of the Bankers' Clearing House in Lombard street, London, and with him on the free trade platform, he had Sir Felix Shuster, who is vice-chairman of that Bankers' Clearing House. That is a point I wish to impress upon this House, and I am sure hon. members will see its bearing upon the description of those who hold these views as free trade theorists, worn-out theorists of old England. Through that Bankers' Clearing House went £12,000,000,000 last year—nearly $65,000,000,000. If I wanted to find a theorist, if I wanted to find a pallid bookworm who had spent his time in studies and had not touched the practical affairs of the world, I should not go to this man mixed up with international exchanges and the money markets of the world in London, but to his critic, my hon. friend from North Toronto.

Now, the hon. member appeared in this House not only as a protectionist but as a prophet. I apologize for mentioning British politics, but, as my hon. friend has introduced the theme, it is but fair that I should have an opportunity to reply to him. According to the hon. member the Unionist party is to be returned at the next election. I could not but recall the fact that the hon. member was in Britain just before the last general election there, and delivered some addresses on behalf of the Conservative party. And I remember that in an interview in this country on his return, he said, I believe, that he was charmed with the admirable feeling in the old country. I do not know whether that was an electioneering feeling or personal to himself, but if it were an electioneering feeling, I can only say that it exhibited itself in such a way that the friends whom he went to support were almost swept out of existence. Personally, I have great regard for two old sayings. One is, 'Never prophesy unless you know,' and the other, 'The only thing you can do with a prophet is to disbelieve him.'

He appeared not only as a protectionist and as a prophet, but as an economist also. Now, with any policy of real economy I have the fullest possible sympathy. I recall well a passage in which Mr. Gladstone said, 'No Chancellor of the Exchequer is worth his salt who shrinks from economy in detail.' I have seen nothing but what is admirable, nothing but what the younger members of this House may admire in the way my hon. friend leads the opposition in moderate criticism of expenditures in detail and fair examination of the estimates in this House. I endorse his attitude and action in that matter. But I remember very well also Mr. Gladstone saying another thing, and that was that your expenditures depend upon your policy. In regard to that matter, our policy being a policy of development, I take it that it is impossible to avoid great expenditures and great growths in expenditure in this country. But always it should be provided, I think, that these growths in expenditure are wise growths. And certainly Mr. Gladstone set his face, not only to economy in detail but to economy in wise policy, and especialy in regard to the very dangerous expenditures upon armaments. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), as he has been reminded in this debate, went down to Prince Edward Island last year, and made a proposition which, I think, was not a very necessary proposition for the development of this country. And I would submit to him that, after all, he cannot pose as an economist with a proposition to build a twenty-five-million-dollar tunnel in one hand and a proposition to build a fleet in the other.

An hon. MEMBER. How about the Newmarket canal?

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK. The Newmarket canal, or any ditch, might be of use, if we have a sudden invasion of Germans, for building defences behind. I should like to say a serious word to this House and to the government upon military expenditure in general. But I do not think that a single word of my own is needed if the House will allow me to read a quotation from some memorable words of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) spoken outside of this House:

> Surely, while our obligations toward the empire are very great and binding——

And to that I fully subscribe.

> ——yet our first and paramount duty is to the people of the Dominion whose servants we are.

And now, I think, when I have referred to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) as a pessimist, I shall have finished anything I wish to say about him at this time. I have tried to deal with him as a protectionist, a prophet and economist. He also posed in his usual role as a pessimist in this country. Now, it is always safe, whatever subject the hon. gentleman may be dealing with, to assume that, if there be a gloomy side of it, he will find it. I was surprised, early in the session to find him consumed with dread lest Canada should run out of fish. I think that was the most extraordinary fear that ever oppressed a human mind. A little later in the session, his fears had been removed from fish and concentrated upon the Germans. And now, he has a dread of Canadian credit sinking in the money markets of the world. I must say that I do not share with my hon. friend his spirit of pessimism in regard to the budget statements of the Minister of Finance in regard to the future of Canada. My hon. friend made what I cannot think a very successful attempt at alliteration in describing the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) with two P's. If I might endeavour to better it, I would describe the hon. member (Mr. Foster) as a Pessimistic Promulgator of Panics. I cannot help thinking that I can give an explanation of how he takes so kindly to that role. Early in the session he did me the honour to reply to a few remarks which I had taken the liberty of addressing to the House. And in this reply he compared himself to an ox. Well, it is a perfectly possible thing for an hon. member of this House to have exaggerated ideas of his own proportions. But if that be the description that he cares to go under, I do not know, Sir, that I have any right to quarrel with it. He reminds me of that very useful and domestic animal, the bull, that can be thrown into a state of purposeless and groundless panic by the simple exhibition of a red rag. My hon. friend goes about with a red rag stretched in front of him. If what he said about the falling credit of Canada had come from any other member than the member for North Toronto, I am sure it would have received from the people of Canada more attention than it will now receive, and more attention than I feel inclined to give it. The credit of Canada, to my mind, is as sound as her prairies are boundless, and the spirit of her people is indomitable. Talk to me about the credit of Canada! I came out as a professional man, with some school boys, seven years ago, and I am tilling to-day a thousand acres of land, and am able to make at that occupation far more than is necessary for my family and myself. There is a picture of the heritage that we are working out, and it is a picture which begets, in my mind at any rate, and in the minds of the great majority of Canadians I am sure, not a spirit of pessimism but a spirit of optimism. I was glad to notice the other day that my right hon. friend and leader had joined the society of optimists; I wish he would endeavour to enroll, if he has any influence with that society, the hon. member for North Toronto. In conclusion I would say: Keep your immigration policy on the sound lines upon which it has been worked hitherto; keep your farmers going on the lands; sell them the materials they need for developing their heritage at reasonable rates; and give them a chance in the markets of the world by keeping your tariff down to a revenue basis, and then you will have all the surpluses you require for building up the grandest civilization and one of the greatest countries the world has ever seen.

Mr. CLARENCE JAMESON (Digby). I must congratulate the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) on the eloquence with which he has addressed himself to the subject before this House; but having congratulated him upon his eloquent speech, I am sorry that I cannot proceed any farther along that line. I congratulate him for instance, upon the relation which he bears to the government which he claims to support. He says that protection is enervating and hurtful. He has advocated a free trade doctrine. If my memory serves me right, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs, when the present tariff was being framed in 1907, defended certain items of protection upon the ground of their necessity to encourage certain industries in this country. Then he refers to protection in Nova Scotia, and I would direct his attention to the matter of bounties which the government is paying to a certain industry there. I would further direct his attention to the fact that the government in paying these bounties, is increasing the public debt of this country by the amount of the bounties. I contend when I have mentioned these facts that I have answered all his arguments with respect to the tariff and with respect to bounties.

Now the hon. gentleman went on to review at some length the subject of markets and the interchange of commodities, but when we simmer down his remarks, his idea of home markets was seemingly confined to two items, first, the item of postage stamps which the government makes, and secondly, the item of jack rabbits, which no leading manufacturer makes. He made another remark to which I wish to make a passing allusion. Speaking of Nova Scotians he said, if I remember his words correctly, that they had a reputation of keeping Sunday and everything else they could lay their hands upon. Now, Sir, I must leave it to the Minister of Finance to correct the hon. member——

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK. If my hon. friend will pardon me—I said they were descended from a race of men who had that reputation.

Mr. JAMESON. I accept the correction of my hon. friend, but I cannot see that it places him in any better light. If there is anything the people of Nova Scotia are proud of it is the stock from which they are descended, and if there is anything which they would resent it is the slightest reflection upon that stock, which I contend is second to none in the whole Dominion of Canada, or in any part of the British empire. Let me say for the information of my hon. friend, that there is an impression in Nova Scotia that some of the party followers of the Minister of Finance and of the leader of this government are included with those who keep everything they can lay their hands upon. The. hon gentleman also referred to the policy of Adam Smith. But I think that policy, like its author, is dead, and is of no immediate concern to this country at least. With regard to his references to my hon. friend from North Toronto, I shall make no comment further than to say that the hon. member for North Toronto is too well known in this House as a man of great ability, and too well recognized throughout Canada as an able parliamentarian to need any defence on my part or to suffer aught at the hands of the hon. member for Red Deer.

Now, Sir, to return to the subject under discussion, I may say that a review of the public accounts of Canada during the past 13 years will disclose three outstanding features, three features upon which the members of the government and their supporters have said a great deal, both within this House and out of it, three features upon which the members of the government and their supporters and the government press have frequently congratulated themselves and the Canadian people. These three features are: First, the increased amount which year after year the government has drawn in taxes from the pockets of the people; secondly, the lavish expenditure of those sums; and thirdly, the so-called surplus. The first and second of these features have already been dealt with at some length by hon. members on this side of the House; I will detain the House but a short time in referring to the third outstanding feature, that of the so-called surplus; in other words, the surplus upon consolidated revenue account, or to be strictly accurate, a balance upon a part only of the financial transactions of the year. I think it will be admitted by hon. members on both sides of the House that the two principal objects sought to be attained in keeping the public accounts of Canada are first, to present to the taxpayers a clear and true statement of the management of their finances by the government, and to show honestly the result of the year's transactions; and secondly, to keep a permanent record of those transactions.

This being so, the question arises: Do the budget and the accounts, as at present presented to the country, fully accomplish the first object? Do they convey to the outsider, to the man in the street, to the great mass of the Canadian people, a clear understanding of the financial operations of the year and the added obligations of the country? The country has heard a great deal from time to time regarding the government surpluses, but little is said regarding the fact—certainly no emphasis is laid upon it—that the entire year's business, in two cases out of three, there has been a shortage. Yet, sir, such has been the case in eight out of thirteen years under Liberal rule. Now, the Canadian tax-payer is a confiding individual. He does not, as a rule, stop to consider what the surpluses upon consolidated revenue account actually mean. To him, during the recent election, for example, the $113,000,000 surplus, said to have been rolled up under Liberal rule, conveyed the impression of money in reserve and available when required. This was a conviction of which I believe a portion at least of the Canadian tax-payers was firmly seized. Yet, it was a false idea, a mischievous idea for it led all such to believe that the government possessed the means with which to carry out every reasonable and unreasonable promise made by ministers of the Crown and government candidates throughout the country. Largely upon the faith of these promises and upon the supposed existence of the means with which to carry them out, the government was returned to power. But how about the pledges and promises, and, still further, how about the many of the sums which parliament voted last year for public works? They are not provided for in the estimates this year, because, according to the statement of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) and of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), the government lacks the funds with which to proceed with them and has actually stricken out of the estimates about $9,000,000 that was formerly voted for public works.

Mr. LANCASTER. But that was before the election.

Mr. JAMESON. As an hon. gentleman suggests these amounts were placed in the estimates before the election; they were stricken out afterwards. I think that fact should speak for itself. Now, I do not mean to say or to imply that an adept cannot take the public accounts and, by examination of them, learn just how the finances of the country stand, and how much the government has put the country in debt from year to year, but I maintain that the system of severing the accounts of the year's financial transactions into consolidated revenue account and capital account, a system which has been in vogue in Canada under all governments since confederation, lends itself to manipulation, misrepresentation and to an obscuring of the results. That, in connection with this severing of the accounts, the feature of the gigantic balance as shown by a part only of the financial transactions of the year or, on consolidated revenue account, is made much of, and accentuated by the government and the government press, while the added debt of the country upon the total business of the year is slurred over and is not accentuated. Because of this a clear understanding of the actual financial condition of the country is not I believe, readily obtainable by the people of Canada at large, and is not held by them. Now, Sir, in illustration of the idea which I have been endeavouring to convey to the House, that these surpluses upon a portion of the year's transactions are paraded while the added indebtedness of the country is slurred over or lost sight of, permit me to quote from an editorial published by the Toronto 'Globe,' of date April 15, 1909, under the caption 'Why Canada is Prosperous.' The 'Globe,' in speaking of the influx of Americans from the Western States of the Union, says:

> One effect of their coming to Canada soon shows itself; they begin to consume dutiable imported goods, and in this way they contribute to the Dominion revenue.

It is to this next following paragraph that I wish to draw particular attention.

> As a simple matter of fact, their doing so has been during the past dozen years the chief reason why there has been a yearly surplus of income over expenditure in the public accounts.

Not, it will be observed, in the consolidated revenue account but in the public accounts. Then it goes on to say:

> The Liberals adopted a vigorous immigration policy and they have had their reward, &c.

Here we find, Sir, a great and influential journal, well and ably edited, making a statement upon the subject of Canada's finances and absolutely ignoring or overlooking the fact that there is a capital account, and absolutely overlooking the other fact that instead of a yearly surplus during twelve years past there has been, in the total public accounts of Canada, a shortage in eight years out of the last thirteen years; that taking the result of the thirteen years total transactions there has been an immense shortage which is represented by the increased public debt of Canada. If the severing of the accounts lends itself to this mystification on the part of the press how must it affect the person who receives his impression from the observations of the press and who does not or cannot investigate these matters for himself. We take up the public accounts of Canada for the past thirteen years, beginning with the period at which the present government assumed power, and we find the total expenditures and receipts to have been as follows:

Total expenditure, 1896 to 1908.

On consolidated revenue fund account	$625,735,490
On capital account	119,386,830
Railway subsidies and bounties, &c.	43,838,705
	$788,961,025
For the year ended March 31. 1909, per budget—
On consolidated revenue fund account	84,500,000
On capital account and for railway subsidies and bounties	46,000,000
	$919,461,025
During that same period (1896-1909) receipts were	826,611,000
Which being deducted leaves a debit balance of	$ 92,850,025
Even after deducting the sinking fund for 13 years	29,060,744
The appears a shortage, or an expenditure over and above receipts of	$ 63,789,281 since 1896.

This shows that instead of any imaginary surplus there has been, on the total financial transactions of the government of Canada, during thirteen years past, and there now is an existing shortage of almost $64,000,000. Let us follow this a little further and we have this seeming paradox that every year in which the government, presided over by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), has added to and increased the debt of Canada, his first lieutenant, the Finance Minister, has risen in his place in this House, and, amidst the applause of his supporters, declared a surplus. These, however, have only been those elusive surpluses upon consolidated revenue account and not upon the total transactions of the year; in each year a shortage was actually registered, although one of those vanishing surpluses was declared. We take a glance at the so-called surpluses and also the increases of debt since the present government came into power and we find the following result:

SURPLUS AND INCREASE OF DEBT.

Year.	So Called Surplus.	Actual Increase of Debt.
1898	$ 1,722,712 33	$ 2,417,822 45
1899	4,837,749 00	2,317,047 69

1906	18,898,719 12	818,811 15
1908	19,413,054 22	14,288,999 88

*Estimated by the Finance Minister.

Why, Sir, a continuation of such surpluses would strain the credit of the country, notwithstanding the fallacious financial reasoning of my hon. friend from Red Deer. Now, there is a system followed by the present administration of charging to capital account items of expenditure which properly should be charged to consolidated revenue account. One instance of this is to be found in the bounties which formerly the Conservative government charged to consolidated revenue account but which the present Finance Minister charges to capital. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has admitted that had he last year charged the total bounties of $2,250,000 in round numbers as he said, to consolidated revenue account (as the Conservative government had done) instead of to capital account, his estimated surplus of one and a half million dollars for the year just closed would not only have disappeared but he would have had to acknowledge a shortage on consolidated revenue account alone of $750,000—the shortage on the full year's business be it remembered was over $46,000,000 to the 31st of March, 1909. Let me point out very briefly wherein the evil of this system lies. It tends to show fictitious surpluses upon consolidated revenue accounts where in reality deficits exist or may exist, upon that account if all these items are charged against it as properly they should be. The government of the day, any government, can have but two objects in view in the practice of such a course; first, to create fictitious surpluses upon consolidated revenue account with which to dazzle the eyes of the taxpayers and, second, to prevent by such means the true and actual condition of the treasury being appreciated by the country at large. Any such surplus is only a bookkeeping expedient; the real surplus, the surplus the country wants to know about and is entitled to know about is the surplus available to be applied in liquidation of the public debt. It is contended by some that the severing of accounts and the showing of surpluses on a part of the year's transactions, namely consolidated revenue account, makes no real difference, because the outcome in the end is the same. But, Sir, the showing of a surplus on one account and a shortage or a deficit on another is quite as objectionable as that of presenting two budgets one showing a surplus and the other a deficit. C. F. Bastable in his work on public finance says:

Recently the system of special budgets for particular kinds of expenditure, has been somewhat widely employed, though it is an expedient evidently calculated to confuse the public accounts, and to prevent the true situation of the finances being understood. The general rule of meeting expenditure out of income should be openly trangressed only by the use of a loan. A surplus on the ordinary budget, with a deficit on one or more extraordinary ones, is a direct infraction of the principle that the finance accounts should be submitted fully, simply, and in unity.

And, in support of this view he quotes 'Stourm', an eminent authority on public finance. I submit that the result to the country of the practice of the present government in this respect, is inconsistent with the country's best interest. There are two evils attendant upon the figuring out of these immense balances—for they are not really surpluses—on a part of the year's transactions. In the first place they are an invitation to extravagance; an invitation which the government has been unable to resist. In the second place they tend to lessen watchfulness of the administration by the Canadian tax-payer. The prevailing system of declaring these so-called surpluses has furthermore reached a stage where it is not unattended with considerable danger to the country. In the first place it misleads a too confiding public and diverts attention from the fact that the public debt is rapidly increasing; and in the second place it encourages the government to pursue a course of extravagance and to assume on behalf of the country unwarrantable financial obligations. Still further, the result of these glowing and growing surpluses dangled before the eyes of the man who cannot or does not examine the public accounts for himself, is, that his senses are dulled to the fact that the country is getting year after year deeper and deeper into debt. So it is, that when any proposed expenditure is advocated, that portion of the public which is misled is prone to say: 'Well, we had a surplus of two millions, or five millions, or nineteen millions of dollars last year and we can very well afford it;' whereas, if their attention were directed rather to the increasing debt than to the vanishing surpluses they would be more inclined to say: 'We increased our public debt by two millions of dollars, or five millions of dollars, or forty-eight millions of dollars (as it was last years) and we must proceed carefully.' Let me say here, Sir, lest I should be misunderstood in that regard, that I fully recognize the fact that in a country such as Canada where we are laying the foundations for the future prosperity of our people (foundations which must be broad, and deep, and enduring), the government is from time to time justified in making expenditures beyond revenue, and against the credit of the country. But granting this, would it not have been better for the government to have been perfectly frank and straightforward with the country by charging to consolidated revenue account everything which should be charged against it, and by directing attention to real shortages upon the entire business of the year rather than to incorrectly computed surpluses upon a part only of the year's transactions? For I say without fear of successful contradiction, that notwithstanding any explanation or excuse which may be made to the country on the part of the government, this grave fact remains to confront the people of this country, that not only have these immense surpluses, aggregating, as the Finance Minister has told this House, $114,500,000 absolutely disappeared, but a vast shortage has developed. To meet this shortage, the government presided over by the right hon the Prime Minister, has mortgaged every home and every acre of the Canadian tax-payers in the amazing sum of $65,500,000, and that without a proper knowledge thereof being held by the country at large. Now, this brings us to the point where we may reasonably ask, would it or would it not be well for the government of the right hon. the Prime Minister, as well as the government which is to succeed it, and all future governments of Canada, to be perfectly frank, perfectly honest and perfectly straightforward with the country in regard to matters of finance.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have said, during the course of this debate, that we on this side of the House criticise, but do not offer suggestions. I propose, with the consent of the House, to make a suggestion in regard to the statement of the public accounts. There might, it seems to me, be profitably added to the public accounts a statement showing: first, interest-bearing assets of Canada; secondly, non-interest-bearing assets of Canada. I am aware that a committee is now engaged in revising these Dominion assets after a long term of years; but I think it would be advisable to revise them once every four or five years in order that the dead wood might be cut out. That would tend also to keep a closer watch on arrearages and prevent them from becoming seriously stale, and perhaps entailing a loss on the country. There might also be stated, all new obligations of the Dominion incurred during the year, including guarantees whereby the country is made secondarily liable. The present system of dissevered public accounts, which has been in vogue in Canada since confederation, has the greatest claims on our respect, because it was adopted by the fathers of confederation as in their opinion best suited to the needs of the new Dominion. Forty years ago confederation was an experiment. Many people were sceptical of the result; many were openly hostile to the new order of things. The revenues of the country were less than one-fifth what they are to-day. The business of the country was comparatively insignificant; the population was small; the railway mileage was light; the country was unopened, comparatively unknown, and little thought of. The credit of the new Dominion, which would be requiring to borrow large sums of money abroad for its development, was naturally a matter of the utmost concern. It is not strange, then, that the system of severing the public accounts, dividing them into capital account and consolidated revenue account, was adopted in order that the revenue of the new confederation might be placed alongside of the ordinary expenditure, to show that the country justified its new dignity. But, Sir, forty years have passed, and confederation is no longer an experiment. It has proved itself and justified the faith of its founders. The country has developed, its population and industries have increased; it is well and favourably known abroad, and its credit, until recently at least, has been excellent. But the early form of the public accounts does not seem to have shared in the general progress. They lack a clear and direct statement of account, showing in brief the result of the year's transactions, what may be termed the 'cash turnover.' The statement of receipts and disbursements on pages 12 to 17 of the public accounts is very much involved. A great deal of it is made up of cross entries, so that the total of $426,000,000 is no indication of the amount actually disbursed on account of services of the Dominion. In this statement are included savings bank and trust funds, which are not receipts and disbursements on acount of the securities of Canada. Here is an item of over $26,000,000, Bank of Montreal, London, on the side of receipts, and the corresponding item is $34,000,000 on the side of disbursements. Here is an item of $164,000,000 "cash credits" on the side of receipts, and the corresponding item is over $160.000,000 on the side of disbursements. These are cross entries, which largely affect the totals. They are necessary in an account kept as this is, but they confuse rather than tend to simplify the account, which is unintelligible to the man in the street. This account fails to show in plain figures the amount of cash in the treasury at the beginning of the year and the amount in the treasury at the close of the year. It is necessary to turn to the balance sheet at page 4 of the Public Accounts involving totals of over $481,000,000, to find this. Now, I repeat what I have before stated, that I do not mean to say that the adept cannot take the public accounts and by examination of them find how the finances of the country stand; but to the average citizen of Canada they do not convey any adequate idea of the actual condition of the country's finances from year to year. There should be, I believe, a complete statement which would do this, and which could reach the people throughout the country, through the medium of the press. Neither the present involved statement nor the budget speech of the Minister of Finance accomplishes this. Would it not be well therefore that the public accounts should contain an additional statement showing the cash turnover, a statement showing the total receipts on the one hand and the total disbursements on the other, and indicating the balance for the year, whether it be in favour of or against the country? The report of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States contains a statement somewhat along this line, indicating the result of the year's transactions, and yet of such moderate length that every journal in the country can well spare the space to publish it in full for the information of the public at large. Again, the financial accounts of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for the fiscal year begin with a direct statement of the amount of cash on hand at the beginning of the fiscal year—so much in the Bank of England and so much in the Bank of Ireland—stating the receipts under different heads on the one hand, and the expenditures on the other, and ending 'balance in the Bank of England,' 'balance in the Bank of Ireland.' I am aware that the system of public accounting in Canada is not the same as that employed in the United States or in Great Britain; but I contend that their systems are much more simple than ours, and ours should be made as plain as figures can be made to read. Such a statement, it seems to me, could not be open to any objection, and would be productive of good results. It might fittingly be placed at the very outset of the public accounts, to show the actual receipts and expenditures, with the totals of each—in other words, the cash turnover. Such an account, when it showed a surplus, would show a surplus which would be available for liquidation of the public debt, and, when it showed a deficit or shortage, would clearly indicate the added debt of the country. It may be said that by shelving a large deficit or shortage in the public accounts of Canada in years when there were large expenditures on capital account, as has been the case during the year just closed, when the total expenditures showed a shortage of $46,000,000, the credit of the country might be prejudiced.

But let me say that whilst the severed accounts may mislead the man in the street, they do not deceive the men who lend the money. The money-lenders have a due and proper appreciation of the real state of affairs. Furthermore, to say that a frank and open statement would injure the credit of this country is obviously to imply that our credit now rests on deception, and that is a view I cannot entertain and hardly think any hon. member would entertain for a moment. But the Canadian tax-payer is after all the man who should know the best and the worst. The public accounting is largely for his information. It is his business that the government is conducting and it is to him the government must account. He is entitled, to use a western expression, to a fair show-down once a year, and the duty of the government is to give him a fair, honest and frank statement. Then when the public debt was increased, the government must show justification for that increase by the exigencies of the occasion or by public works of a permanent or reproductive character and the Canadian tax-payer would be in a position to pass judgment on its wisdom.

Now Sir, I do not propose to address the House at greater length upon this subject. I will only add that as the Canadian tax-payer is yearly entitled to a clear, straightforward statement of the finances of the country, no government which fails to give it does all its duty to the people, who in the end must be called upon to pay the bills.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Nanaimo). My hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Jameson), who has just given to the House a very clear and concise criticism of the methods of bookkeeping in this country, took some umbrage, at the beginning of his address, at a passing, jocular reference by my good friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) to our good friends from Nova Scotia, and of course took up this pleasantry in a very serious vein. And I noticed that when he did so, our good friends opposite applauded him. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have one way of defining the different classes of people in different countries. I have no disposition to favour the Scotchmen or the Englishmen or the Welshmen or the foreigner or, the French Canadian. If I were to take umbrage at everything I hear about Englishmen, I would have a great many complaints to make, for I hear derogatory remarks concerning them every day. What I have to say about national descrimination of that description is this, that you have good and bad Scotchmen and Englishmen, and people of every kind. Wherever you go, you will find some good and some bad, and my good friend, the member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) was simply making a jocular reference to our good friends in Nova Scotia, which my serious friend from Digby took in so serious a manner.

My hon. friend made some complaints about the increasing expenditure of this country and its consequent increasing taxation. I agree with him that there are two principles which every government ought to respect. One is to keep down as low as possible, consistent with the reasonable expansion of the country, the taxation of the great mass of the people; and the second and the most important necessity is to keep down the cost of the commodities which have to be consumed by the great masses of the people. But I submit that by no system can the expenditure in a new and growing country be prevented from increasing. Nations are like individuals. The young man, who has no one but himself to keep, and who has a salary of $1,000 a year, will live within his income if he is prudent. But if he gets married and has a family and increases his salary to $2,000 a year, imperceptibly he spends that $2,000 a year. This is a great country in process of development; and I submit that while there is every reason and need for economy, it is impossible for this new and growing country to develop, as it ought to develop, without increasing its expenditure. Look over the list and you will find our expenditures increasing right along; and although there is a temporary arrangement to curtail them this year, we may depend upon it that the channels of trade and the development of our country will always necessitate an increasing outlay. There are false notions and ideas about economy. Economy is not parsimony. It does not consist in refusing to pay what is legitimate. True substantial economy is well spent money, and I have some slight criticisms to make as to the method which my good friends the government themselves may adopt with regard to this system of retrenchment.

My hon. friend from North Toronto made a slight reference to what he called the enormous increase in taxation. My hon. friend from St. Antoine Division (Mr. Ames) made a protest against what he called the system of mortgaging the interests of future generations. With regard to increasing taxation, he calculated the amount at $11.50 per individual. I want to say this: In looking over the United States revenue, taking the sum total of their custom and excise revenues and dividing that by the population, I discovered that their tax per head was equal to $6.50.

My hon. friend from North Toronto takes the revenues created by the customs and excise in Canada for the year 1908. divides that by what I think a reasonable estimate of population, 6,500,000, and finds a per capita tax, or individual tax, of $11.50. In that connection, I wish to consider the principle contended for by my hon. friend from St. Antoine, that we ought to pay our debts as we go along, that we have no right to transfer anything to the future. On the contrary, I contend that under no economic principle operated by any government is it possible to entail upon future generations financial disadvantages that at all compare with the mighty advantages that the present taxpayers are providing for future generations. The fundamental basis of my hon. friend's complaint was a fallacy; the difficulty is exactly the opposite of what he states, the difficulty is how to develop a young, large and growing country without imposing extraordinary taxation upon a small present population. The principle is seen in the very figures I have given,—with a population of 88,000,000 and an income of $500,000,000, you find a per capita tax in the United States of $6.50; but, take the tax revenues of this country and divide them by a population of 6,500,000, and you have a per capita tax of $11.50. The principle demonstrates itself. Will anybody say that there is nothing in these mighty productive national expenditures for future generations? Are we building transcontinental railways for to-morrow? Are we deepening the canals of this country for use next week? Are we broadening and deepening the channels of trade in this country for a few weeks or months to come? Are we determining the fiscal and commercial policy of this country to meet the wants of only 6,000,000 people? No, the expenditures which make this taxation necessary are largely to provide machinery for the development of this country thirty years from this time. The obligations that we are placing upon future generations are far more than counterbalanced by the assets we are creating for the future. And these assets develop and increase in importance, and any liabilities that may be placed upon the people of this country thirty years from now will be far more than paid by the increasing values of the assets that are being created by the expenditures of to-day.

You cannot prevent the future taking the responsibilities and meeting the obligations created by the present unless you establish the economic principle that we should do things just for to-day. The sound national policy is to look ahead for a hundred years, and, when we are bearing the burden of a financial obligation created by the construction of a great transcontinental railway in the year 1909, we may calculate that the real benefit of that expenditure will be felt the more effectively a hundred years from now. If, then, the benefits are for the future, why should not the generation that is coming pay for these things? In this connection I have a protest to make against what I regard as an unwise stipulation of this government with regard to certain public expenditures. I have laid down the principle that we must have expenditures in this country, that we must have increasing expenditures. I have stated what I think about the principle of economy—that economy is not always in withholding. And on that point I would refer my hon. friend to what is said in the good old Book itself, 'There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty.' I take this opportunity to protest against withholding necessary expenditures when that withholding will decrease the returning revenues. So far as the country I represent is concerned, I believe that necessary expenditures are being withheld, the withholding of which will decrease the revenues to the Dominion exchequer from that part of the country. If I can prove that position then I say the policy is a very unsound one.

On the west coast of Vancouver Island we have spent some thousands of dollars in building a road for the protection of human life in marine operations. That road is partially built. We say to the minister: 'You ought to proceed with that work; it is of tremendous importance; it adds to the credit of the marine on the Pacific coast; it increases our imports; it gives a feeling of greater security to the travelling public, all of which means revenue.' But the minister replies: 'We have no money.' Again, on the Pacific coast, our good friends the Americans are stealing Canadian fish, depleting the fishing banks of the Pacific, which, let me say with all due credit to my hon. friends from Nova Scotia, in halibut alone, are more valuable than all the fishing resources of the Atlantic coast. This depleting of the halibut banks of the Pacific by our friends the Americans is going on, and the government is not taking the necessary precautions to stop it. I am glad to see, by the morning paper, that the fishing cruiser now operating in British Columbia has taken charge of an American fishing boat on the Pacific waters. This system of robbery by our neighbours to the south has been going on year after year. Two years ago this parliament provided an appropriation of $200,000 for protection, but up to date our friends of the government have not utilized that provision. This should have been done in the interests of British Columbia and in the interests of the Dominion. For I will not advocate here anything in the interests of British Columbia that I think is not for the general good; the sound principle for this parliament is for every man to advocate for his own province only that which is good for Canada as a whole. In this principle of fisheries protection of the Pacific coast, I have brought to the attention of the minister a matter of this kind, and I must say that the minister has expressed great anxiety to do everything that is reasonable in the situation and his determination to do all that he possibly can. But that does not interfere with the nature of my complaint. I say it is important at the present time that Canadian fish should be protected against poachers from the United States. What the government ought to do is to make the people on the other side realize that we are going to protect our own interests. Now, the provision that is made in the estimates this session, I am afraid, is not likely to accomplish that object. These are what I call revenue producing principles, these are what I call productive expenditures, and every productive expenditure ought to be provided for. I recognize that the government should make some retrenchment. I do not say that they should be economical, for that would imply that they had been wasteful. But I do say that, owing to conditions that have arisen, largely from the conditions in the United States, it is necessary for the government at the present time to exercise retrenchment and care.

I think after all that the government is to be complimented upon even the present financial condition in this country. Sir, two weeks ago I had the privilege, with one of the influential business men of Pittsburg, to go down into the coal mines in the vicinity of that city. I spent over a week looking into industrial conditions of the United States, going down into the mines and studying everything belonging to the industrial conditions of that country, and it is after a man has gone through an experience of that kind that he is prepared to regard even the worst conditions in Canada as favourable in comparison. I want to say that the coal miners of England 50 years ago were in a better condition than the coal miners in the surroundings of Pittsburg are to-day. Factories are closed, or only producing 50 per cent of their usual output. To show how thankful we ought to be that we have not been more affected by the commercial conditions in the United States, let me point out that wherever you have in Canada productions depending upon the American market, there you have depression. For instance, in the city of Nanaimo and its surroundings, about 50 per cent of the coal production has to find a market in the United States, and that industry is depressed for the reason that in California and other western states many factories have been closed, and there exists a general stagnation in manufacturing enterprises which affects the market in British Columbia. I repeat that after my experience in one of the chief industrial centres of the United States, our industrial classes in this country have reason to be thankful that they are so well off in comparison. Nowhere in Canada, that I am aware of, is there anything to parallel the condition of the workers in the steel rolling mills of Pittsburg, and in the coal mines of that district. Why, in hours of labour, in wages, in the price of the commodities that they require to use—and that is the true test of the condition of workingmen—our industrial classes in Canada are very much better off than those in that old settled community of Pittsburg. Why, Sir, it costs more to live there than it does in the city of Ottawa, a community hundreds of years younger. The purchasing power of the wages earned by the Pittsburg workingmen is a good deal less than the purchasing power of the wages earned by our Canadian workingmen. Everything depends on that principle. It is not the money that the wage-earners gets and puts into his pockets at the end of the month that tells the tale, it is what that money can purchase of the commodities that he has to buy. It is in the amount of the necessaries or comforts of life that the wage earner can purchase for his wages that you can calculate his true relative condition. I do not hesitate to say that the purchasing power of the wages of thousands of men in the United States, where so many factories are closed down, where so many others are working at half time, where there are so many thousands of idle men—the purchasing power, I say, of the wages of workingmen in the district I visited, is in no way to be compared to the purchasing power of the wages of men in this country. Therefore I say that we have reason to congratulate ourselves that we are so favourably situated, although we are in an exceptional bad state in the coal mining regions of the Pacific coast.

Now I wish to ask whether the government are making a proper selection of the objects upon which to expend the taxes of our people. I will be frank with my hon. friends in the government in saying what I am about to say. I admit that retrenchment is necessary, but I am going to say that you cannot make the people believe that retrenchment on productive works is necessary in face of the fact that you spend $7,000,000 on the militia of this country. I do believe that if there was a band of men, I might say a political party, that went through this country from one end to the other, preaching the policy of a reasonable curtailment of military expenditure, they would obtain the votes of the majority of Canadians. I say that when you cut down expenditures on productive public works and devote them to militia purposes, you are saving at the tap and wasting at the bunghole. When you expend $7,000,000 in the present financial stringency and interfere to that extent with the productive works of this country, you are making a great mistake. I say there is no justification for spending $7,000,000 on the frills and fripperies of militarism. I am speaking frankly to the House. I will tell you what I would do with the $7,000,000 that is now expended on the militia. I do not know what it is for. I can quite understand the necessity of defence if you know that there is an existing enemy, but I am not aware of any. Where is the possible approaching enemy of Canada? Where does he live? Do you say in the United States? There never was a time in the history of this country when the feeling between this country and the United States was as friendly as it is at the present time. Where is the enemy to come from? What are you spending the money for? Is it fashionable to have a militia? I know it is proper to have a reasonable measure of protection and have it better distributed in Esquimalt as well as Halifax and other points. My hon. friend from the city of Vancouver (Mr. Cowan), very seriously, in a speech that he made the other day in Vancouver, urged the government of this country to make adequate provision for assisting in the protection of the empire, but I want to tell him that if the citizens of Vancouver had the right to make a selection between the deepening of the harbour of Vancouver and supporting the militia they would support the former principle. If my hon. friend has to report to the people of Vancouver that he cannot secure an expenditure for the productive works of that city, which are necessary for the development of its trade, they will ask him why it was that he supported the principle of such an enormous expenditure on military matters when he did not get the money necessary for the productive operations of that community. I am not a military man, but I am not a man of prejudice. I have my own personal ideas but I always try to look on both sides of every question. This is something that the people of Canada do not want to this extent at present. They are an innocent, self-reliant, enterprising people, attending to their own business every day, cultivating their farms, developing their mines, enlarging their factories, looking after their domestic interests and improving this great country not only by developing its natural resources and increasing its wealth but by developing the finest manhood to be found in any country in the world. That, Sir, is the greatest contribution we can make to the empire. By establishing in this country an ever increasing population, true to the British institutions that we possess, by developing the great resources that we have and by surrounding the people by moral influences and inculcating amongst them high principles we make the best possible contribution to the empire. If you are going to provide for further contributions to the British navy take three and a half or four million dollars of the present provision for militarism in this country; take half of what you provide for militarism if you are going to make the necessary contribution to the British navy, but, there can be no support of and there can be no agreement to the curtailment of the necessary expenditures upon works such as I have mentioned that are revenue-producing, that are creating and developing this country and that are building up its trade. To my mind by so doing you are losing at the tap and saving at the spigot. The people of Canada, under the present conditions, at a time when you have to restrict your expenditures, are not likely to support a principle of that kind. With no enemy in view they are not prepared to support a principle of that kind if the productive interests of this country have to suffer in consequence.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Mr. Speaker, before six o'clock I was dealing with the necessity of the government maintaining as far as possible its ordinary expenditure on productive public works, and I said that while there was considerable evidence that certain important public works in this country were not provided for in this year's estimates, we nevertheless have provided for an expenditure of $7,000,000 on the militia. Now, Sir, I do not repudiate the position that it is necessary to have a reasonable provision for a military force in Canada; I believe that our coasts should be protected by fishery cruisers and that there should be efficient police supervision and protection along the boundary line. But what I did say and what I repeat is, that a time when you have to restrict the ordinary expenditures of this country in its present state of progress and development, is not the time to expend $7,000,000 of the people's money for military purposes and that whatever is spent ought to be better distributed to the advantage of the Pacific coast.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House a question that has not been considered by us so far, but it is nevertheless a question which deserves the serious consideration of the government and of the members of this parliament. I refer to the question of free importation of bituminous coal into Canada by agreement of reciprocity with the United States, which has become a live issue of late on account of the action taken in regard to it by the Congress of the United States. Hon. gentleman will have observed that the United States Congress at its special session, has provided in the schedule of tariffs for the possibility of reciprocity in coal; and let me ask the Minister of Customs and the Finance Minister especially to give their attention to this. The question as I have said has not been presented before in this parliament, possibly because there was no opportunity such as that which the policy of the United States Congress has recently afforded. I shall endeavour to show that there is no one policy that could be adopted by Canada that will contribute so much to our development, especially to the development of the western country, as reciprocity in coal between the United States and ourselves. I know that our friends in the far east, as coal producers, may take reasonable objection to the facts as I shall put them, and I have every respect for their opinion in that regard. I have every consideration for the large and permanent and successful investment in coal operations in Nova Scotia, but it must be remembered that we have coal mines in British Columbia and in Alberta as well, and I want to point out that the geographical situation of this country makes the offer of free coal from the United States one of the greatest boons that has been placed at our disposal for many years. When provision was made in the tariff of the United States for a possible reciprocity in coal, a strong public feeling arose in British Columbia on the question. I probably represent more of the coal mining interests of that province than any other member from British Columbia, and I have been appealed to not only by the consumers of coal, but by the British Columbia coal operators themselves to bring this matter to the attention of the government. I shall present evidence of this feeling in British Columbia, and if the United States Congress should continue to make the necessary provision for reciprocity in coal, then I shall make the modest request of the Canadian government that they give careful consideration to this important matter and take advantage of any offer that they may make. I shall submit to the House certain communications which I have received from British Columbia so that they may, with the permission of hon. gentlemen, be printed in 'Hansard.' I have received the following letters from the manager of one of the largest coal mining operations in British Columbia:

WESTERN FUEL COMPANY.

Nanaimo, British Columbia,
January 26, 1909.

Ralph Smith, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Smith,—You are doubtless aware that under pressure of a growing sentiment in the United States the majority party in Washington is considering some changes in the tariff schedules, and the hearings before the committee have developed some curious and interesting phases of the question connected with free trade with Canada.

Take the matter of Coal.

The bituminous mine owners in Central Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia, who operate near the Atlantic sea-board, are opposing it because it will give the Nova Scotia coal a free entrance into the New England seaports. I think it will be found that the Nova Scotia mines ship only the fine coal, which is admitted under the 15 cent rate of duty, and this is used for steam and gas making purposes.

The opinion changes among the anthracite producers and those bituminous coal operators who are so situated in respect of the Great Lakes that they can reach the Canadian coal consuming territory between Winnipeg and Montreal and which is said to import about 7,000,000 tons per annum. They want free trade, because it will give them unrestricted access to those markets.

Going farther west the opposition recurs from the mine owners in Wyoming and Montana, who fear the incoming of coal from the Crow's Nest region into the territory immediately south of the Canadian boundary line; and the Great Northern railroad is said to favour free reciprocity because it is heavily interested at Crow's Nest and naturally desires to get a cheaper fuel.

Coming farther west, the opposition is again with the Washington mine owners, whose development of their coal resources has not kept pace with the growing local demand. They cannot supply the present call of their own market; and during the recent cold spell they actually needed coal from British Columbia to supply their own deficiency.

Again their output of coal suited for domestic purposes is so limited and the prices maintained by the operators, who serve the public directly, have been so high, that notwithstanding their nearness by rail to centres of consumption of Puget Sound, their local dealers have sent vessels to Vancouver island, paid water freightage and 67 cents duty and sold coal at the Seattle price schedule with satisfactory profit. Of course, at the same prices Vancouver Island coal would command the trade on the score of better quality. So that for the first time our coal is obtaining a firm foothold in Seattle and neighbouring markets.

This is all preliminary to the question.

If the Washington Congress should show a disposition to provide for reciprocity in coal, is it your personal opinion that the Laurier government would meet them on these terms?

It could be only beneficial to Canada, because it would give free entrance to Canadian coals, and cheapen the cost of imported fuel in that intermediate Canadian region which is not self-supplying.

Free reciprocity in coal between Canada and the United States would have this distinct advantage over free coal from everywhere into the United States, in that the product from Vancouver island mines entering American Pacific coast ports, Alaska and Hawaiian islands, would not be taxed, and that would not be the case in respect of coal from Australia and Japan.

Yours sincerely,
JOHN HOWARD,
President.

Western Fuel Company,
March 18, 1909.

Ralph Smith, Esq., M.P.,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir,—We are to-day advised that the new Tariff Bill, just introduced at Washington, provides for the free entry into the United States of coal from countries that will admit American coal free of duty.

It is an economic question for Canada to consider, whether the loss of revenue from customs duty on American coal would be offset by the advantage given to her coal producing interests through a wider market in the United States.

You have as coal producing centres Nova Scotia, the Crow's Nest country and Vancouver island. The latter is very largely dependent upon the United States for a market.

Canada imports from the United States into that region between Winnipeg and say Montreal.

Free American coal into Canada would mean the cheapening of fuel to consumers of 7,000,000 tons. This figure I obtained from the testimony recently taken before the United States Congressional Committee.

Free coal from Canada means an extension of her markets, greater development of resources, and more wage earners.

To illustrate, the Puget Sound conditions enabled our company to enter that field for the first time in September last, since when that market has taken from us a tonnage equal to a full month's output of our mines. With a remission of the 67 cents duty we will greatly enlarge this.

Australia is our present competitor in California. By no possibility could American coal be sent to that country. Therefore, without any loss of revenue to that government, and without any risk of competition to its coal mines in their home market, Australia could pass a law admitting free the coal imports from the United States, and thereby be entitled to have her coal admitted free of duty into California.

I have given you these two concrete cases to show the value to the industries and the wage earners in your constituencies of free coal from the United States into Canada.

If Canada can afford to relinquish the revenue it now obtains from the customs duty on American coal, the cost of fuel to the Ontarians should be reduced, and the other benefits will accrue to the coal mining population of the Dominion.

Yours very truly,

JOHN L. HOWARD.

As indicating the public sentiment on this subject, let me quote the following article from the daily press of the Pacific coast:

Anything that affects an industry in a community is of interest to the residents in that community and it naturally follows that the interest taken corresponds to the importance of the subject under discussion. Just at this time the United States congress, both the Senate and House of Representatives convened in special session, are in the midst of a tariff discussion. The tariff being of vast importance to all classes, it is not strange that the Bill introduced by Congressman Payne, as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and bearing his name, comes in for so much discussion, both for and against, and which discussions are of world wide interest.

It is, however, generally believed that the Bill will be passed and become law substantially as reported by the Ways and Means Committee. To Canadians the question naturally arises, how will the Dominion be affected by the provisions of the Payne Tariff Bill. Among others the Bill calls for reciprocity timber and coal under certain conditions. Many other articles in which Canada is interested are also affected, but the ones of paramount interest to the whole of Canada are lumber and coal. Eliminating for the present the lumber question from the discussion, for while lumber is of great importance to British Columbia and to Vancouver island, coal holds a most prominent position in any discussion bearing on Vancouver island resources. In the Payne Bill it is proposed to put bituminous coal on the free list with any country granting similar conditions. Under the Dingley, or present tariff, sixty-seven cents per ton duty is paid on every ton of coal shipped from Nanaimo, Ladysmith or Union to San Francisco, Puget Sound ports and Alaska. There is no foreign coal shipped into British Columbia. Quite a lot of American coal, however, finds its way into the prairie country through the lake ports; Port Arthur on the upper end of Lake Superior being the principal point of distribution to the prairie country. Nova Scotia ships quite a little coal into the New England States of America, and under reciprocity a larger market for Nova Scotia coals will be found in that territory. Again, by reciprocity Canadians who reside in the prairie country and long distances from Canadian coal mines would be supplied at reduced rates from across the line; and similarly the coal mines of Canada could and would reach farther into the States for trade.

Meantime what does Canada gain or lose with reciprocity in the exporting and importing of coal? With the exception of Nova Scotia mines, which theoretically might lose a little Canadian territory, the rest of Canada would be greatly benefitted, and we of British Columbia and Vancouver island would gain immensely in the territory that could be covered by Eastern British Columbia mines and also the Island mines. It is reported that during the past year the Western Fuel Company shipped some 70,000 tons of coal to Seattle, Tacoma, Bellingham and other Sound cities, to say nothing of the San Francisco and San Diego markets. They have shipped coal even as far as Spokane in the State of Washington; and if given reciprocity can very largely increase the territory to be supplied, sufficiently so to keep the Island mines all running at full blast for years to come.

Vancouver Island mines, however have one rival for the coast markets, and that is Australia. The Australian continent can, and does, produce cheap coal; and although it is not in the same class with the Vancouver Island product, it can be mined and sold cheaper. We of Nanaimo have a vivid remembrance of the effect on our prosperity when the San Francisco coal yards were filled with Australian coal. Officials of the Western Fuel Company state that they have not the slightest fear of Australian coal in competition outside of San Francisco, and not to any extent there, unless some advantage be given that coal.

Another indication of the public feeling is contained in a resolution of the Associated Boards of Trade of Eastern British Columbia, which has been sent to me in the following letter:

Rossland, British Columbia,
February 1, 1909.

Ralph Smith, Esq., M.P.,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Sir,—I beg to advise you that at the eleventh annual convention of the Associated Boards of Trade of Eastern British Columbia a resolution was unanimously adopted as follows:—

Abolition of duty on coal and coke between Canada and the United States.

Resolved, That this association recommends that the government of the Dominion enter into negotiations with the government of the United States for the mutual abolition of customs duties on coal and coke.

Such a reciprocal arrangement would have the following effects:—

1. To make lower prices for fuel in a good many parts of Canada, particularly along the Great Lakes, and in Manitoba.

2. While possibly unfavourably affecting the business of the large Nova Scotia coal companies in Quebec and along the Great Lakes, yet this will probably be more than offset by their increased market on the Atlantic sea-board.

3. It will increase the market for British Columbia and Alberta coals in the states to the south.

4. It will probably have a tendency, through the increased volume of business made possible, to reduce the cost of coal and coke production in British Columbia, which should insure at least present prices, with the possibility of reductions to the consumer.

I have been instructed by our executive to commend this matter to your earnest consideration with a view to bringing about results that appear to be in the interests of the Canadian public.

Yours faithfully,
A. B. MACKENZIE, Secretary.

In interviews published a few days ago with two important men interested in coal operations, one in British Columbia and the other in Nova Scotia—I mean Mr. Lindsay, president and superintendent of the Crow's Nest Coal Company for many years, and Mr. D. D. Mann, an owner of coal mining interests in Nova Scotia—I read the following references to this question in view of the changes made in the tariff of the United States. Mr. Lindsay stated:

In bituminous coal and coke, if Canada reciprocates, there is an enlarged and increased American market for British Columbia. As Canada imposes no duty on coke, the American duty will be removed. Canada does levy 53 cents on bituminous coal, so reciprocity is a condition here.

Mr. Mann made this statement:

Mr. Mann stated that there should be no duty on coal.

The geographical positions of the two countries show that, he said. 'Here in Eastern Canada, in Ontario and Quebec, we have no coal, while to the south of us is an unlimited supply. In the western states there is no coal, while to the north, in Canada, is another unlimited supply. Why should not there be free trade in coal? If there were it would do away with the long haulage over the railways from coast to coast in Canada, and from coast to coast in the States.

Now, Sir, I want to bring to the attention of parliament the investments in coal mining in British Columbia and Alberta. The operations in coal in Nova Scotia have depended almost entirely, until recent years, on a foreign market in the United States. My hon. friend from Cape Breton, who spoke the other day in support of a resolution in favour of higher duties on coal made the statement that it was important that a protective duty should be placed on coal in this country to preserve the Canadian market for coal products. The difficulty in British Columbia is to get markets for our coal products, and the very natural conditions of the country determine that for all time to come, a large part of the coal products of British Columbia will be dependent on foreign markets. I want to say, in passing, for the policy of the government, that ten years ago, previous to the disaster in San Francisco, 90 per cent of the coal produced in British Columbia went into the American market. There never would have been coal mines in British Columbia but for the American market. The Hudson Bay company, in operating the coal mines of British Columbia 50 years ago, found their whole market in the United States. I am happy to say that at the present time 60 per cent of the product of these coal mines is consumed in Canada and 40 per cent in the United States. I mention this to show that there has been more real development of a home market for the coal mining industry in British Columbia in the last 10 years than there was before that since confederation. This fact is very important, that whereas 10 years ago only 10 per cent of the coal produced in Vancouver island was consumed in Canada, to-day 60 per cent is consumed in Canada. But since the financial panic in the United States the mines have been working only two-thirds of the time, owing to the contraction of the United States market, from the closing of their factories and the shrinkage in business resulting from their financial condition. Let me give to the House the present condition of coal operations of British Columbia and Alberta. We have in British Columbia the Wellington Colliery company, the Western Fuel company, the Crow's Nest Pass Coal and Coke company, the South Wellington mines, the Vancouver-Nanaimo Coal Mining company, the Nicola Valley Coal and Coke company, since McGowan & Co. of Vancouver, and since 1907 the Canadian Pacific Railway company has begun its mines at Hosmer. We have in British Columbia a total capital invested in coal mining operations of $20,000,000, employing 7,000 miners directly and maintaining a population of 30,000 people. The yearly product—1907 is the latest year I have been able to get—is nearly 2,000,000 tons, and its approximate value is $7,637,713. The total known coal areas in British Columbia, which I have collected from the Geological Reports of Canada, are 1,123 square miles, containing 38,642,000,000 tons of bituminous, 20,000,000 tons of anthracite, and 314,000,000 tons of lignite. These are known areas. Of course, there are large coal areas in British Columbia of which very little is known. The total export of coal from British Columbia to the United States in 1907 was 733,224 tons, amounting, as I have said, to 40 per cent of the total production; so that if we had reciprocity in coal, British Columbia would practically monopolize the markets in the western states of America.

In this connection I want to mention that I have made some inquiries with reference to the coal production of Alberta, and the same is largely true there. There are about eighty companies producing coal in Alberta. This is principally bituminous and lignite, with a little anthracite. These companies are capitalized at $40,000,000, and have a total capital invested of about $15,000,000. I was surprised to find the large amount of wages paid and the large amount of the output of these mines.

The money paid in wages in the province of Alberta in that production is equal to $3,500,000 per year and the number of hands employed averages 37,800. The total yearly production in 1907, including coke and briquettes, is equal to 1,958,112 tons. The total coal area, according to the geological reports, is as follows: 19,589 square miles, containing 44,530,000 tons of bituminous, 400,000,000 of anthracite and 60,000,000 of lignite. So that the House will see that, in the development of these enormous coal areas in our great west, a free market in the United States would be a great advantage. The development of these coal areas depends very materially upon the United States markets, so that, if there be no disadvantage unduly to the rest of Canada and if it be in the interest of Canada generally, this government should take advantage of any offers, if any be made by the United States, to giv our coal a freer entry into their markets. Let me draw attention to another fact. The central provinces of Canada are non-coal producers. Take for instance Manitoba. There may be some coal of an inferior quality in that province, but I do not suppose that for many years to come it will be able to produce sufficient coal to supply its own needs. At present it depends on imports from the United States for about 98 per cent of its coal consumption. In Ontario there is no coal, and the probability is there never will be any. Ontario is a great manufacturing, largely populated province, depending absolutely at present—as it will, in my opinion, have to depend for all time to come—on the imported article. I do not think it is possible by any improvement of transportation facilities, and taking into account reasonable competition, to have a sufficient investment of capital into the Nova Scotia mines as will enable them to supply the market in Ontario. I have in my hand a very important statement which I have compiled from 1899 to 1908 showing the quantity of foreign coal imported into Canada during that period, and what I ask the House to remark is the constantly increasing imports of that commodity. What does this statement show? It shows that in the great manufacturing centres of Canada which must have coal, and can only get it from a foreign country, are developing their enterprises to such an extent that their importation of coal on which they have to pay a duty of 53 cents a ton, has increased by leaps and bounds.

* 9 Months.

In 1899 we imported into Canada 2,171,358 tons of bituminous coal, value, $3,691,915; on which the duty collected amounted to $1,146,448. Of bituminous coal dust we imported 276,547 tons, value, $44,717; on which the duty was $7,981. That was in 1899. In 1908 we imported 6,485,400 tons of bituminous coal, value, $13,596,606; on which the duty was $3,436,992. I fancy that the duty is what touches in that connection the heart of my good friend the Minister of Customs; and no doubt by this time he is asking the question: 'If you are going to tear down this wall of protection, how are' you going to provide the revenue? Well, I would make this answer: I believe that in a few years the enormous development of trade in British Columbia, the great west, and Ontario, as the result of the admission of coal free into our manufacturing centres, would far more than counterbalance the loss of the duty which the government collected in 1908. That is my answer to my hon. friend the minister. These figures indicate that in our great manufacturing and producing centres, where you cannot find the necessary fuel and where consequently you have to import your fuel, and on which you have at present to pay a duty of 53 cents per ton, it would be good policy, if we were offered free entry of coal from the United States, to take advantage of that offer.

I have made another calculation, showing the consumption of coal by our railway companies during 1908. I have just taken one year, but that shows an enormous consumption. Railway transportation is one of the prime operations of business in this country, and in that operation coal is an essential factor. It is as necessary to the industrial life of the nation as bread and butter is to the life of the human being. Here is the consumption of coal by locomotives on the Canadian Pacific Railway during the year ending 30th June, 1908.

Canadian Pacific Railway.

Locomotives.	Number of Tons.
Passenger	624,588
Freight	1,373,985
Switching	241,308
Construction	178,529
Mixed	84,719
Special	1,096
Total	2,504,225

Average cost at distributing point, $3.12; total cost, $7,813,182.

Thus I find that the locomotives employed by the Canadian Pacific Railway consumed in that year 2,504,225 tons of coal, the cost of which at the distributing point was equal to $3.12 per ton and the total cost of which to the Canadian Pacific Railway was $7,813,182. But some of my hon. friends may say that that is simply a tax upon the railway company. Well, so far as I am concerned, I am not at all deluded by any reasoning of that kind. It may be said that when we have a law to regulate the passenger rates on railways and their transportation charges on freight, when we have the power to make these railway companies cut down their rates to a minimum, surely this duty is a proper tax to impose upon them. Let me reply that the amount of duty collected on the coal used by these companies must be taken from the travelling public. When the railway companies of this country submit their charges for operation into the hands of the Railway Commission, that commission is bound to consider among the other charges the duty imposed upon an article which is absolutely necessary to these companies in the operation of their business.

Take the Grand Trunk Railway. Here is a statement of what their locomotives consumed.

Grand Trunk Railway.

Locomotives.	Number of Tons.
Passenger	410,975
Freight	905,676
Switching	165,577
Construction	36,790
Total	1,519,018

Average cost at distributing point, $2.76; total cost, $4,192,489.68.

Thus you see that their total consumption in the year 1908 was 1,519,018 tons, that this cost them at the distribution point $2.76 per ton, and that the total cost to that company was $4,192,489.

Then take the Intercolonial Railway. Here are the figures showing the quantity of coal that railway consumed in the same year.

Intercolonial Railway.

Locomotives.	Number of Tons.
Passenger	133,602
Freight	351,273
Switching	55,552
Work	30,623
Total	571,050

Average cost at distributing point, $3.04; total cost, $1,735,992.

Let me now divert for a moment to ask this question: How is it that coal, in the coal mining regions on the Atlantic coast, costs the Intercolonial Railway over 30 cents a ton more than the other railway companies paid for their coal? Why is it? For the reason that it is the competitive distance. Receiving its supplies as a government work entirely from the Nova Scotia mines, confining itself absolutely to the home product, that, in my opinion, is the difference in the price to the Intercolonial a tax upon the people, an increase to the Intercolonial as against the other railways. Take the Canadian Northern Railway: Here are the figures of its coal consumption:

Canadian Northern Railway.

Locomotives.	Number of Tons.
Passenger..	61,218
Freight..	190,489
Switching..	23,009
Construction..	13,600
Total..	288,316

Average cost at distributing point, $3.85; total cost, $1,110,016.60.

Recapitulation.

	Tons.	Cost.
C. P. R. consumption.. ..	2,504,225	$ 7,813,182
I. C. R. "	571,050	1,735,992
I. C. R. "	571,050	1,735,992
C. N. R. "	288,316	1,110,016
Total..	4,882,609	$14,851,677

In my opinion, the deduction of 53 cents on every one of those tons would represent a very material reduction in the cost of railway transportation to the people of this country. This, it seems to me, calls for consideration by my hon. friends the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Finance.

Mr. McKENZIE. When anthracite coal was put on the free list, was it made cheaper for the Canadian people?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. The consumption of anthracite coal is very small—

Mr. McKENZIE. That is not my question.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. The consumption of anthracite coal in Ontario is a very small proportion of the whole, there being a large consumption of bituminous coal necessary in manufacture.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Well, I made what I thought was a logical deduction. If my hon. friend thinks that the taking off of the duty would not lower the present price, then this duty does not afford any protection to the coal industry.

Mr. McKENZIE. But you would lose the revenue.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I did not think my hon. friend was looking at it from that standpoint. What I say is that the extraordinary development of this country by the utilization of free bituminous coal would, in my opinion, in a few years so increase our trade that the revenue from coal would be far more than made up. However, I appreciate the position of my hon. friend (Mr. McKenzie). This is a great and important question in the west. It is an important question in Ontario and Quebec. I leave the consideration of it to my hon. friends with my sympathy, and with every appreciation that there may be something in their contention.

A few days ago the Minister of Finance received a document from the representatives of the gas industry in Canada. I do not know its value, for I have not looked into this question. But I received, as other members have, a copy of this document, and I want to read a few paragraphs:

3. Canadian gas companies imported 170,000 tons of bituminous coal from the United States for gas-making purposes. This amount this year will total 350,000 tons.

4. That we are compelled to import bituminous coal from the United States for two reasons:—

(1) Because Nova Scotia coal is unsuitable for economical gas production.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. That is not correct.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I am not swearing by this book. I received the document, and I am giving it to the House for what it is worth. I hope my hon. friends from Nova Scotia will be able to show that this statement is not correct. But I am in duty bound to present it:

—Gas companies within recent years have been compelled to stop using, notably Montreal and Quebec, who formerly used Nova Scotia coal. (2) Because transportation charges from Canadian coal fields were prohibitive.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the hon. gentleman say who was the authority for those statements?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. As I told my hon. friends, this was a document sent to the Finance Minister a few days ago from the gas industry.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman will permit me: Is he aware that the great grievance of these people is that this government permits coke to be brought into this country free of duty, and that what they want is a duty on coke?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I think that, further on in the document, they do ask that. But I think that the statements in the two paragraphs I have read call for explanation on the part of those who oppose this principle. Now, I wish to say a word further with regard to the Nova Scotia position, for which I have great consideration. I have here a document, I do not know the man who wrote it—Mr. W. C. Milner—

Mr. McKENZIE. Oh, oh.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I do not know who he is.

Mr. McKENZIE. We do.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Perhaps he is a Tory.

Mr. McKENZIE. Certainly,—a good one.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Mr. Milner read a paper before the Mining Society of Nova Scotia, in which he presents facts and figures to show that Nova Scotia coal could find a market in New England if there were no duty, and that at the same time the home markets would be safe. I cannot read the whole article, but I wish to read a few paragraphs. As I have said, it is a public document, read before an important institution in Nova Scotia, by a citizen of that province, and it speaks for itself. How much it is worth I cannot say. I read it to the House, and it will be to my hon. friends from Nova Scotia to disprove the statements this gentleman makes:

The importance of United States trade, not only to the maritime provinces but to all Canada, was such that in 1849 all the governments of Canada united in a joint effort to extend it. . . In coal, the United States became early our chief market.

I want to point this out in passing. What I am contending for in the great west is that, logically and naturally, the permanency and extent of the coal mining operations must depend upon the foreign markets, which, according to this document was absolutely true of Nova Scotia fifty year ago—they depended upon the New England markets for the development of their mines.

In coal, the United States became early our chief market. It was not until after 1820, that the production of the Nova Scotia mines exceeded 10,000 tons per annum; in 1826 it exceeded 100,000 tons, and in 1850, 200,000 tons, and of this output the United States purchased considerable more than one-half. In 1853, when the duty was 24 per cent ad valorem, the shipments were 120,000 tons out of 217,000 tons of an optput. The shipments rose from 120,000 tons to 404,000 tons in 1866, the year reciprocity was abrogated. Of the entire output of our mines—558,000 tons—United States purchased over 400,000 tons, or about four-fifths.

There are other items in this document that I have marked, but I do not consider it necessary to read them. But I felt it my duty, as a member from the Pacific coast province, to bring this matter to the attention of the House. The last thing I have to say on the question is this: That, with regard to certain products, coal included, it seems to have been the policy of the federal government of Canada, since the first days of confederation, to hold out an opportunity to the United States to provide for reciprocity in certain articles. As this document says, in 1879 the great national policy itself provided for reciprocity between the two countries on certain natural products, especially on coal and coke. In referring to the tariff schedule of 1906, I found provision was made for holding out an opportunity to the United States to meet Canada in certain reciprocal changes; power was given the Governor in Council to take advantage of any tariff reductions in the United States. But in this new tariff of 1907 the government did not continue that long standing offer to the United States. Now I want to make an appeal to the Minister of Finance to consider this question. I notice that provision for reciprocity has not been inserted in the new proposed tariff sent up to the Senate of the United States. When I was in the United States two weeks ago I made special inquiries with regard to this matter, and I was told that there would almost certainly be a reduction in this particular coal down to 40 cents a ton. If the same provision were in the tariff schedule of Canada that existed in 1906, then he would have the power to take advantage of that reduction in the duty which we have not to-day. I want to present that consideration to the government, so that if the United States provides for reciprocity in coal, we may be able to meet them. Speaking with all consideration for Nova Scotia, I do not see why she ought not to be able to compete in the Canadian markets as well as in the markets of New England. There is nothing I know of which can conduce so much to the development of the great west as the possibility of getting better markets in the United States for the bituminous coal of Canada.

Now I want to make an appeal to my hon. friends from British Columbia. I have no doubt the Minister of Inland Revenue will use all his influence with the government in reference to this matter. I think my hon. friends from British Columbia are interested in the development of that province as much as I am, and here is an opportunity of doing something that will help to develop the great resources of that province. Anything that will lessen the pressure of protection in this country I will be glad to support, and anything that will extend protection I will be loath to support. I know that most of my good friends from that province are supporting a party that stands for adequate protection, which means a general advance in the tariff of at least 20 to 25 per cent, and I can understand how difficult it is for them to support me in this principle. But I hope, because of their loyalty to the province, that they will lend me their influence to accomplish this object. I am sorry to say however, that I am not so sure of the support of my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Cowan). Of course he has expressed his great zeal for the development of British Columbia. As a matter of fact, I have been using my good influences to keep his feet in the straight and narrow path ever since he came down to this House, and I perceive that he still needs that influence. I was sorry to read a speech he made the other day in Vancouver. While I think I may appeal with some confidence to my hon. friend from Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve), and to my hon. friends from the other constituencies, I have not the same confidence that my hon. friend from Vancouver can use his influence in favour of my proposition. I say that because of the wild and extravagant statements he is reported to have made some days ago to his constituents in Vancouver. It seems to be the misfortune of my hysterical friend from Vancouver that whenever he finds his feet he looses his head. I feel a great sympathy for him in my heart, but I think I have discovered that he is afflicted with political spasms. Now political spasms, like physical spasms, are always an evidence of weakness. I want to read my hon. friend a report of the speech he made at Vancouver in order to give him an opportunity of taking back some of his statements if he can do so. If he cannot take back those statements, then in my opinion I think he has lost his public influence in this country in so far as it can tend to the advancement of the interests of British Columbia. I say with every feeling of kindness to my hon. friend, that when a public man stands up in the great commercial city of Vancouver, as he did, and utters the slander that he did against the leader of the Liberal government of this country, he is bound to loose his influence for good. The strongest weapon that any representative in this House is entitled to use is the weapon of argument, the weapon of reason, but when he makes the statement he is reported to have made in reference to ministers of this government, charged with great responsibilities, I think he has seriously injured the public influence that he ought to seek to retain. He discussed that question of better terms with British Columbia, also the old chestnut of Oriental immigration. I thought my hon. friends would never dare to open their mouths again about Oriental immigration. I notice that my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell), speaking in Toronto, told the people how important it was that the yellow race should be kept out of Canada, but he did not tell them that he himself employs men of the yellow race. The rest of my hon. friends from British Columbia are in the same position. In discussing the question of better terms my hon. friend from Vancouver spoke in this manner of the attitude of the Prime Minister on that question:

> Then Sir Wilfrid had turned to the question of better terms and in rather sneering tones had cited the Conservative proposal to refer that question to an independent and impartial tribunal. . . . They had no difficulty in showing Sir Wilfrid and the House of Commons that the Asiatic problem had been projected into the public life of Canada by the blundering treaty making of the government.

Mr. COWAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I hope my hon. friend will just keep up that response for the next sentence.

> It did not trouble him to show that every province in Canada was entitled to a fair and impartial hearing of its claims.

Now here is the sentence to which I wish to call his special attention:

> It was a white livered coward who would deny British Columbia an independent, fair and impartial tribunal for the settlement of her claims .

I say, with the greatest regard, that, if my hon. friend said so, and he will have an opportunity of disproving it, any public man in this great country who stands up on any platform and places himself on record by making such wild and prejudiced statements, disqualifies himself from occupying any important place or exercising any influence in the public affairs of the country. He went on further to say:

> He had had an opportunity of saying to Sir Wilfrid that it was left for him to be just and be a man. . . But he would say now that he had not the courage of manhood to treat honestly and fairly with British Columbia and submit to an impartial tribunal a claim, the justice of which was admitted by the highest courts in the land. From this time forth it would be his bounden duty to tell the public that in his judgment, whatever it was worth, that man was a false alarm in the public life of Canada.

I consider it fair to my hon. friend, cherishing as I do, nothing but the kindliest considerations towards him and, as a political missionary, being out for the Vancouver sinner—as long as the light holds out to burn the vilest sinner may return—to give him an opportunity of explaining these statements. If my hon. friend is prepared to take the responsibility of these statements, I say that he has done the greatest possible injury to himself. If, on the other hand, he is prepared to take the responsibility of saying that he did not make these statements, that he had been falsely reported, it is due to himself to let the people of this country know it.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. G. H. COWAN (Vancouver City). Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) has the floor. The hon. member for Vancouver must resume his seat. If the hon. member for Frontenac gives way to the hon. member for Vancouver, he may speak.

Mr. EDWARDS. I understand that the hon. member for Vancouver wishes simply to reply to a question with reference to himself.

Mr. COWAN. Yes, Mr. Speaker, as has been said, I wish merely to reply to the references which have been made to myself. In doing so I am prepared to credit the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) with the best motives, at least the best motives that could actuate that hon. gentleman. I take it that he has given me this opportunity of explaining the report of the speech I made at Vancouver. I have not read that report. I would be glad if he would let me see it. I assume that the hon. gentleman realizes, as we all do, that when reporters seek to condense the remarks of a speaker, they very often omit the arguments and use such catch phrases as will make good reading. I want to thank the hon. gentleman for giving me this opportunity of explaining the remarks I made at that meeting in Vanvouver, but I want to remark, before proceeding to that personal explanation, that the position which the hon. member for Nanaimo finds himself in in this House seems to me somewhat bizarre. From his place amongst the faithful on the other side of the House he has charged the government with dereliction in the matter of the fisheries of British Columbia, he has charged the government with militarism——

Mr. TALBOT. Answer the question.

Mr. COWAN —and he has charged the government with a neglect of its duty in the matter of coal. The position of that hon. member is rather a peculiar and anomalous one. I will not say that it is apropos of that position although I want to remind the House that on the American side of the line in their political terminology they have one expressive word—mugwump. A mugwump, they define to be something on the fence with his mug on one side and his wump on the other. I want to say in justice to the government, with reference to some of these criticisms and in loyalty to the truth, that it has been dealing recently with the protection of the halibut fisheries on the Pacific coast, and I will say here, as I said on the public platform in Vancouver, that I believe the government is honest and sincere in its intentions. As I understand the intentions of the government, they are that it will improve the fishery protection service on the Pacific coast. The government knows, I believe, quite as well as the hon. member for Nanaimo knows, that in the last year there were 49,000,000 pounds of halibut poached by foreign vessels from Canadian waters.

Mr. TALBOT. White livered halibut?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER.

Mr. COWAN. I do not qnite understand mv hon. friend's desire to claim relationship with that kind of 'talibut,' but the government knows too that in the year before last there were some 38,000,000 pounds of halibut taken from Canadian waters by poachers, and it knows that this is due to the insufficient and inefficient fishery protection service, resulting in a failure to enforce the laws. The government knows that halibut banks in British Columbia are the best and almost the only halibut banks capable of profitable exploitation in the world to-day, and they realize, I believe, the necessity of protecting these banks. They have told us, and I believe that when they did so they acted sincerely, that they will improve that protection service. I have every reason to believe that the 'Joliffe,' a fast steamer, will be chartered pending the construction of a cruiser for the purpose of protecting our fisheries. In justice to the government I believe that they are grappling with the subject, and my hon. friend from Nanaimo notwithstanding, I am prepared to believe that their pledges about the protection of the fisheries and with regard to the productive development of the harbour of Vancouver, will be carried out by them. If my hon. friend (Mr. Smith) wants to keep himself posted on the pledges his government have made I can tell him that they are pledged to put a dredge in the harbour of Vancouver and I believe they will carry out that pledge, within the time stated, to the deputation that waited upon them recently. I am not one who would readily believe that the government has made these pledges for sinister and improper motives and that it does not intend to carry them out.

Now, it is true that on the public platform in Vancouver quite recently I did make reference to the idol before which my hon. friend from Nanaimo bows down. It was not an unholy reference; I spoke of the Colossus under whose huge legs my hon. friend from Nanaimo has been seeking and has at last apparently found a dishonourable political grave. I did make reference to that Colossus and I am sure that had my hon. friend (Mr. Smith) been present at that meeting he would admit that I had not transgressed the rules of political ethics or of decency, and I intend here and now to say exactly what I said on that platform. My hon. friend from Nanaimo will pardon me I am sure if I be not so imbued with reverence for his leader as to lose my sense of truth and of equity. At the Vancouver meeting I became reminiscent, and I examined the record of the Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier on the question of the solidarity of the British empire and of Canada's desire to contribute to uphold that solidarity. I recalled the fact that on the 3rd of October, 1899 he declared in an interview with a correspondent of the 'Globe,' his policy that not a man, not a gun could go from Canada to South Africa. I remembered that from the Atlantic to the Pacific there was one great surging wave of enthusiasm in the hearts of the people and a desire that the Canadian boys should be allowed to go to South Africa. I remember that two days later, on the 5th of October, 1899, Sir Charles Tupper, on behalf of the Conservative party of Canada, wired Sir Wilfrid Laurier expressing the hope that a Canadian contingent would be allowed to go to Africa and assuring him of the loyal support of the Conservative party. I remembered that on the 7th of October, 1899, the 'Globe' in an editorial declared for the policy of not a man and not a gun for South Africa until parliament had been summoned and had authorized it. I want my hon. friend from Nanaimo to remember the ground-swell of indignation that came up from the people of Canada on that occasion, and how, notwithstanding the technical and constitutional difficulties that bothered the Prime Minister, the Canadian boys did rush to the front on the way to death as to a festival. And, Sir, I say that when the sons of Canada did that they did more to bring about the birth of Canadian nationhood than all the blatant politicians that ever came from Nanaimo or anywhere else. I want to say here that I know exactly what my hon. friend (Mr. Smith) is appealing to when he charges this government with militarism and with spending $7,000,000 in fostering a military spirit in Canada. I know the little vote he is appealing to, and I want to tell the House that we know the hon. gentleman as a 40-per cent man in our country, because he succeeded in getting just about 40 per cent of the vote polled in his constituency.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Will my hon. friend permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. COWAN. Why, yes.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Does he represent the majority of the vote in Vancouver?

Mr. COWAN. I represent the second largest constituency in this Dominion of Canada, and I represent a bigger turnover at the last election than any single man in this parliament; that is what I represent.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. As my hon. friend is making his attack personal to me——

An hon. MEMBER. You made a personal attack.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I did not; I read his statements from the newspapers, and I never accused my hon. friend of making them. But my hon. friend (Mr. Cowan) knows that he sits in this House with 1,500 of a majority of the votes of Vancouver against him.

Mr. COWAN. I sit in this House with a pluralty over every candidate against me of 1,582 and I had an adverse majority to meet of 858 against me so that I represent a turnover of 2,440 votes. If any hon. gentleman can boast of a larger turnover than that in his constituency I am perfectly willing to take my seat and let him tell about it. When this sentiment in Canada in favour of standing at the back of the empire and preserving its solidarity was on the rise, where did we find the right hon. leader of the government? We found him saying: 'Canada is not menaced; I will not be stampeded; I will not act in a panic; I will not take any false step because of any false alarm.' It occurred to me, in looking over the records, that that same sentiment by that same gentleman has been expressed more than once in this House and on the public platforms of Canada. I recall that in 1907, when the right hon. gentleman, by entering into a treaty with Japan, inaugurated his policy of planting in British Columbia and in western Canada colonies of aliens who would always remain aliens, the aliens, quick to take advantage of that policy of his, came in thousands upon thousands into British Columbia, until in less than six months after the ratification of the treaty in January, 1907, there were no less than 8,125 Japanese army reservists and naval reservists landed in British Columbia to take possession of our fishing banks and our canneries. I remember again, when the influx of this Oriental horde was at its height, that the public feeling of resentment, especially in British Columbia, rose to fever height; and I remember that the right hon. gentleman, speaking to a meeting of manufacturers, I think in Toronto, again said in his spectacular way: 'I will not act in a panic; I will ponder; I will not take any false step, because of any false alarm.' That is the import of his words on that occasion; and I recalled at that time, as I recall now, that those army reservists and naval reservists had completely taken possession of the fishing grounds of British Columbia, which are to be the nurture ground of the sailors and officers of our future navy; and on a more recent occasion the same right hon. gentleman, after the greatest statesmen in the empire, the premier of Great Britain, the leader of the opposition, Mr. Balfour, and Mr. McKenna, had spoken weighty words as to the danger that threatened the empire——

Mr. LEMIEUX. Right here would my hon. friend allow me a question? Speaking of the Japanese, does my hon. friend believe that it is better to be on terms of friendship and amity and good will with Japan just now than it would be to be at war with her?

Mr. COWAN. I believe that our first duty is to preserve our own self-respect, and I believe that the way we should have preserved that self-respect would have been to have done as the home government asked us to do.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Denounce the treaty?

Mr. COWAN. With dignity, reserve to ourselves the right to control immigration from Japan.

Mr. LEMIEUX. How many Japanese are coming into Canada now?

Mr. COWAN. I say I remember another occasion, when the solidarity of the empire was in question, and when the weighty men of the empire spoke weighty words. On the 16th of March last, Mr. Balfour said:

> I do not approach this problem, I can truly say to the House, in an alarmist spirit; but I have been forced most reluctantly, not only against my wish, but against all the traditions by which British politicians and statesmen have been animated for generations, and now for the very first time in modern history, to declare that we are face to face with a situation so new, so dangerous, that it is very difficult for us fairly to realize all that it imports.

And the Premier of Great Britain, agreeing with Mr. Balfour, added 'that a contingency had arisen that menaced not only the supremacy of the empire at sea, but the independence of the nation itself.' Notwithstanding these weighty words by these weighty statesmen, again we find the right hon. leader of the government rise in his place in the House and declare: 'I will not be stampeded; I will not act in a panic; I will not make a false step because of a false alarm.' And I said to that audience, as I say here, that in the matter of the solidarity of the empire and Canada's desire to take part in upholding that solidarity, the only false alarm in the public life of Canada was the right hon. gentleman himself.

I also said something to that audience in regard to better terms. Now, I wish you to understand that we in British Columbia are human, and, like most men, when our rights are denied, we believe in a strong statement against the man who dares deny us our rights. Moreover, we believe that we have a just claim on the Dominion of Canada. It is deeply imbedded in the British sense of justice and fair play that every man who has a claim against an individual or a state will have a hearing before an independent and impartial tribunal. That is what we in British Columbia ask for. We do not ask you to believe in advance that our claim is well founded. We ask you simply to give us, in the name of common justice, a hearing before an independent and impartial tribunal, and we are satisfied; and I said then, what I am prepared to repeat, that any man who denies me or denies a province the right to have a claim which I or it considers a just claim, heard before an independent and impartial tribunal, that man, if a public man, is unworthy of his position as a public man, and is unworthy to be called a man.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Will my hon. friend permit me a question? Did he say that Sir Wilfrid Laurier was a white-livered traitor?

Mr. COWAN. No, I will repeat exactly what I said, as nearly as I can remember.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is my duty to point out that to ask an hon. member to repeat an expression which is out of order is asking him to repeat the offence, and I cannot allow him to do so.

Mr. COWAN. I believe, Sir, that I can repeat exactly what I said, and that you will not be called on to rule the words out of order. What I said was that such white-livered treatment was unworthy of a public man or any man.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman is attributing to any member of this House a character of that description, he is using offensive words.

Mr. COWAN. I wish to state that my purpose was to draw the attention of this House to the simple and material fact that we are denied the hearing of a claim which we believe to be just. All we ask is to be heard before an independent and impartial tribunal. I believe myself that when the right hon. the leader of this government realizes that position, when he realizes that the government, by its attitude, is denying us that hearing, his own innate sense of justice and right will lead him to change that attitude and give us the opportunity of pleading our claim. If my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) considers that I do not represent the public sentiment of my constituency upon the subject of better terms or on the attitude of the right hon. the leader of the government regarding the solidarity of the empire, I should be very grieved indeed to think that I do not represent the majority view of my constituency, and it will be one of my pleasures to contest with him or, if he chooses, with his leader whom he idolizes to such an extent, public opinion in the city of Vancouver; or if either of these gentlemen does not choose to take up the gauge of battle, possibly they may find some one courageous or bold enough, either resident or non-resident in Vancouver, to take it up in their place and on their behalf. I am here only because I believe I represent the healthy view of the people of Vancouver; and if I have fallen short of my duty, should any gentleman wish to contest public opinion in Vancouver with me on that point, I want him to understand that the door is wide open for him to do so as soon as he wishes.

Mr. A. VERVILLE (Maisonneuve). I thought that I had a fair majority in the last election, but it seems that my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Cowan) must have had a larger one. I wish to say a few words on the question before the House, which question also was under debate last week when we were discussing the woollen industry. In that discussion I heard some hon. members claiming to be farmers, others claiming to be labourers, and others claiming to have worked at certain industries during thirty or forty years, and all of them coming to the conclusion that more protection should be given our manufacturing industries. Much was said regarding the protection we should give the manufacturing element in this country, much was said regarding the protection we ought to give to the buildings themselves, the machinery in those buildings, the owners of those buildings, and also the stockholders in those companies. Much was said on behalf of their protection, but very little indeed on the labour side of the question. These hon. gentlemen seem to have forgotten that that is an element entitled to be seriously considered. For my part, I fail to see that our manufacturers are any poorer than they were ten or twelve years ago. I also know that time and again, especially in this very year, whenever the discussion of the budget is on, the Manufacturers' Association are particularly busy endeavouring to impress on the government the advisability of raising a large stone wall around the country—a wall so high that you cannot reach the top. But at the same time they want holes in it to let in their raw material and a wide door to allow labour to come in free. I only hope that our manufacturers, who are asking for higher protection, will seriously consider that whenever they are given protection of any kind, they should be at least willing to give a certain share of the profits allowed them by the tariff to the people who are producing their wealth.

Much has been said concerning the condition of the woollen industry. We had one hon. member telling us that he had been thirty years in that industry and imploring pathetically for more protection. But I believe that hon. gentleman is worth nearly a quarter of a million dollars. That industry must therefore pay very well or he would not have so much money. Again, take the cotton industry, and I have before me the report of the last royal commission held by Mr. King in the province of Quebec last year. It is proven by this report that, while that industry was asking for higher protection, it was impossible for it to produce enough cotton to meet the wants of the Canadian people—there had to be importations in order to supply those wants. Even though two large establishments were built right at the doors of our city, they still could not make enough to supply the market. But I am sorry to say that, whenever the financial people get together, the only thing they seem to be looking for is to find means to cause this government to propose legislation to double their capital not in two years but in one year if possible. The manufacturers of this country are not satisfied to make ten, fifteen, or twenty per cent; they want more. And if, because of financial depression, such as we have had for the last eighteen months, they cannot make as much as they have been accustomed to make, the first thing they do is to cut down the wages of their employees. This is true not only of the cotton industry, but, so far as I can see, of all others throughout the country. If we are to have protection should we not have it for everything that will produce wealth for the people? I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) speak on the subject of the militia. Every member of the House knows, I presume, that I am not very strongly in favour of militia. When the hon. member for Nanaimo asked that $3,500,000 of the budget of $7,000,000 for militia should be spent for the benefit of the farmers of the West and of the country generally, I believe he was right. As said by the hon. member for Nanaimo, we should protect a certain element in this country by trying, as far as possible, to keep our money in the channels of productive industry. I claim that the soldiers we have in this country and the $7,000,000 a year that we are spending, would not enable us to defend even the old city of Quebec. It is not feather-bed soldiers that we want, but men who can fight.. I claim that there is no danger to be feared from outside; the worst enemy of this country that I can see is accumulated capital, the possession of which by a few reduces the rest of us virtually to the position of their subjects. This is our most dangerous enemy; this is the foe against which we should arm ourselves. Labour is not supposed to be at the mercy of capital. If we look at what is going on in England to-day we find the question discussed there whether capital is to be hired by labour or labour to be hired by capital. If we are not blind altogether, we can see that we are coming to the same position in this country. So long as we have men who try to breed a certain element and a strong element among our people, and are willing to come before this government and ask tariff or legislative favours, there exists an awful danger. Therefore, I hope that the government instead of raising the tariff as asked by hon. members on the other side, will lower it and abolish the duties altogether in many instances.

We have been talking about expenses. I claim that it matters not so much what your expenses are, if the money is being spent for the good of the people. I would ask any hon. member of this House who has charge of the spending of money whether, in carrying on the industry in which he is engaged, he considers how much should be spent, or whether he considers only getting the good return for that which is spent?

As to this question of tariff, when protection is asked for, it is always for the benefit of the poor labour people. The labour people are told: we are asking for high duties in order to protect you. But I say right here, let any member of this House prove to me that the labour people ever were protected. The benefits have come to the labour people when they were highly organized and able to protect themselves.

Mr. LALOR. Hear, hear.

Mr. VERVILLE. I am happy to hear the hon. member (Mr. Lalor) say 'Hear, hear.' I infer that he wants high protection for himself and not protection for labour.

Mr. LALOR. I can tell the hon. gentleman that protection means high wages for the labouring people and artisans of this country. That is what it means in my factory and every other.

Mr. VERVILLE. The manufacturers have less protection to-day than they had ten or twelve years ago. How is it, then, that they are paying their working people a little higher wages than they were then? They pay the labour people higher wages when they are forced to do so and at no other time. The generosity of the manufacturers has no word to represent it in any language that I know; it is not explained in any grammar that I have ever seen or defined in any dictionary I have ever consulted. I have not learned anything about it in the twenty odd years that I have been in this movement. It is good enough to talk about in this House, but as we go from city to city observing the actual conditions, we do not find that generosity very much in evidence in any place that I know of. Any increase of wages has always been gained as the result of a struggle. Therefore, so far as the tariff is concerned I am not asking the government for a higher tariff, I am asking them to lower the tariff as much as possible, for we do not want high protection to the manufacturers and free trade in labour as has been the case in the past. If these manufacturers are so anxious to provide work for our people, how is it that year after year the Manufacturers' Association are advertising throughout the whole world, you may say, that labourers of all kinds are in urgent demand in Canada? How is it that every year the Manufacturers' Association advertise, I might say throughout the world, that labour of all kinds is in urgent demand in Canada? If they are so anxious to give work to the unemployed, why do they try to make it appear that labour is scarce? Again, we find the Manufacturers' Association stating that workingmen are responsible for the present financial depression in the country. Will any hon. member say that the labouring men of Canada have not been as faithful in their work, that they have not worked just as hard the last two or three years as they ever did? Then how can they be responsible for the financial depression? But notwithstanding the financial depression, the stockholders must get their dividends, even on watered stock, and their dividends must be wrung out of the human flesh of the workingmen. Therefore I would urge upon this government, instead of raising the tariff, to lower it as much as possible, and I claim that by so doing they will benefit all the interests of Canada.

Mr. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac). I consider that every man who has the honour of a seat in this House has a double obligation to perform; he has an obligation to his constituents who sent him here to represent what he believes to be their opinions on public questions, and he has an obligation to his fellow members in this House to do that as briefly as possible. I have listened with a great deal of interest to many of the speeches which have been delivered during this debate, and I was especially interested in observing the different positions taken by supporters of the government. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Verville) said among other things that he favoured tariff reduction as much as possible. Now, it is a little remarkable to me that an hon. gentleman who, I believe, sat in this House during the last parliament should so express himself. Last session the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) moved a resolution to reduce the duty on agricultural implements from 17½ to 10 per cent, and the hon. member who has just taken his seat, and the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith), who were both in this House, and every member on the Liberal side of the House, joined to vote that resolution down. It has been interesting to me to follow the arguments advanced by hon. gentlemen opposite; it is interesting to observe them labour to defend an expenditure which has risen to some $125,000,000. The position taken by hon. gentlemen supporting the government to-day is vastly different from that taken by the Liberal party previous to 1896, when, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, on every platform in Canada, they denounced in unmeasured terms an expenditure of $38,000,000, while to-day we find them labouring to defend an expenditure of $125,000,000.

I agree with much that has been said this evening by my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Smith), and I think that many on this side of the House will agree with much that he has said. I think that the Conservative party in this House, as well as the Liberal party, favour a proper expenditure of money, an expenditure that will increase our transportation facilities and benefit the country. But where the Conservative party differs from hon. gentlemen opposite, is that they condemn expenditure which, in their judgment, are improper, while hon. gentlemen opposite are ready to back up any expenditure proposed by the government no matter how indefensible it may be. For instance, the hon. member for Nanaimo is today finding fault with the government for spending money on militia and defence; he says that an expenditure of $7,000,000 for that purpose is unjustifiable, that the money should not be used in that way. But what has been the course of that hon. gentleman for the last four or five years that he has been in this House? Every session, when six or seven million dollars has been voted by parliament for militia purposes, the hon. gentleman has supported that vote. This session he did not raise his voice against an expenditure of $7,000,000 for militia purposes after all the money was appropriated, and now he comes forward and raises a howl about it. I think we might characterize his course on this question as one of those political spasms to which he referred. It is interesting to note that while the hon. member advocates free coal, the hon. member for Cape Breton North (Mr. McKenzie) advocates a higher duty on coal; that while some Liberal members advocate a reduction of the duty on different articles, other Liberal members advocate an increased duty on various articles. The policy of the Conservative party since 1879 has been known as the National Policy, the N. P. The Liberal policy, if we may judge by the diverse opinions expressed by Liberal members, might be properly termed the M. P., that is the Mixed Policy, a policy which is applicable to the condition of every constituency which they represent. We find the present government going down to Nova Scotia and telling the people that they will not touch the duty on coal, or if they do, that they will increase it; and going up to British Columbia and assuring the people that the proper thing to do is to reduce the duty on coal. We find that every Liberal member who gets up in this House to speak, whether it is the hon. member for Nanaimo who advocates free coal, he gets applause from the government benches; whether it is the hon. member for Cape Breton who advocates an increased duty on coal, he also gets applause from the government benches; or whether it is the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark), who is prepared to advocate anything that comes into his head, he is also applauded. I was particularly struck with some of the arguments, if I might dignify them with the name of arguments, advanced by my philosophical friend from Red Deer. The hon. member for Red Deer said among other things that the credit of Canada was to be judged by our answer to the question, 'What is our faith in Canada? It strikes me that the credit of Canada is to be judged rather by the faith of the other fellow, who is the creditor of Canada. Another argument advanced by the hon. member for Red Deer was that we spend what we get, and he says that we get our money from the increase of our trade. I might ask him, 'How do we get an increased income from increased trade if it is not by means of duties imposed by this government on trade? The hon. member for Red Deer has advanced the peculiar doctrine in this House to-day, that we in Canada must regard, and should regard, any increase in Canada's expenditure as a token of Canada's prosperity, and as a token as well of the administrative abilitv of the present administration. I submit that of all the peculiar arguments that have been advanced in this House of parliament by any member, let alone the member who claims and professes to be somewhat of a philosopher, this is, to my mind, the most peculiar. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) has a great admiration for the Minister of Finance. He admires the steady persistence shown by the Minister of Finance to the requests of the manufacturers, but he has forgotten that in this present budget the only change made was one in the interest of manufacturers and asked for by manufacturers. Has he likewise forgotten that the Minister of Finance could not resist the appeals of the manufacturers of iron and steel in this country, but that he gave way to their appeals and that this government has granted, since 1896, in bounties to manufacturers of iron, steel and various other commodities over $16,000,000 of the public money? The hon. member for Red Deer supports that sort of thing. That is a style of protection which he applauds although he is in theory an ardent free trader. That is the great trouble with that hon. gentleman and with a great many hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House; in theory they are free traders while in practice they are protectionists. There is one more reference that I desire to make to one of the statements made by the hon. member for Red Deer and that is the expression which fell from his lips that he had the fullest sympathy with any aspirations for true economy. It was a beautiful sentence, beautifully expressed—that he had the fullest sympathy with any aspirations for true economy. Yet, the hon. member for Red Deer stood up in this House and gave his support to the throwing away of $1,000,000 of the public money for the Aylesworth ditch.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK. Will the hon. gentleman tell me the date when I stood up in this House and voted for that ditch?

Mr. EDWARDS. If I have mis-stated anything in reference to the hon. member for Red Deer I will be very sorry. I will ask him if he was in the House at the time.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK. My hon. friend made a definite statement purporting to be a fact about myself. I asked him the authority upon which he stated as a fact what was not a fact.

Mr. EDWARDS. I also promulgated a question to the hon. member for Red Deer and it was: If he was not in the House when that vote was on, why was he not? If the hon. member for Red Deer did not believe that that was a proper expenditure he had ample opportunity, when he was making his speech on the budget, to condemn it. Was the hon. member for Red Deer in his place in the House when the resolution was put forward asking for an inquiry in the McAvity steal of $35,933 of the public money.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. EDWARDS. Hon. gentlemen say: 'Oh, oh.' I venture to say that before the next elections are over they will say something more than 'oh, oh,' in reference to that.

An hon. MEMBER. They will say: 'Ha, ha.'

Mr. EDWARDS. We have a good many policies advocated by the Liberal party in the Dominion of Canada. We have had tariff for revenue only, we have had free trade as it is in England, we have had unrestricted reciprocity or commercial union, a policy which one of the ablest men that the Liberal party ever produced in this country could not back up and on account of which he left the Liberal party. He believed that the leaders of the Liberal party at that time, in advocating that policy, and in allying themselves with men like Wyman, Farrer and other annexationists, were making the first move towards giving this country away to the people across the line. We have had various policies advanced and advocated by the Liberal party, and to-day we have a policy which we might properly call a mixed policy, because it seems to me to apply to any constituency and to any member of this House if he is on the Liberal benches whether he be in favour of free trade or in favour of protection. It is an accommodating policy and to that extent it deserves to be styled a mixed policy. In 1893 there was a convention held in the city of Ottawa to which Liberals were called from all parts of Canada. That convention was representative of the Liberal party of Canada. At that convention the platform laid down was that on which the Liberal party appealed to the country in the elections following in 1896. In one of the planks of that platform they stated that the Liberal party viewed with alarm the increase in the national debt. They seem to view with the utmost complacency an increase of $60,317,999 to the public debt in the last two years. In 1896 the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) expressed himself in these words:

> The expenditure has grown until the people are unable to bear it. I promise you that if you put our party in power we will reduce that annual expenditure by two or three millions of dollars.

We hold as individuals, one with another, that a man should be as good as his word. That is the test that we have in sizing up a man. If his word is good he is good for anything but if his word is no good the man himself is considered no good. The same test should be applied to governments. If the Liberal party made these solemn promises in 1896 to the people of Canada they should have kept them. If these men made these promises knowing at the time that it would be impossible in a growing country like Canada to decrease the annual expenditure then they made them for the purpose of wilfully deceiving the people. If they made these promises believing they could carry them out, then I maintain it is up to them to explain why they have not carried them out. The promise made by the Prime Minister in 1896 was supplemented by a promise made by Sir Richard Cartwright. He said that an expenditure of $38,000,000 or $40,000,000 was monstrous, and that when the United States mustered a population of 20,000,000 their expenditure was barely $22,000,000. If that argument of Sir Richard Cartwright were well founded, then according to that basis of calculation the present expenditure of the Dominion government is sufficient for a population of 110,000,000 people in this country. The people of Canada took the Liberal party at their word and placed them in power, and the right hon. the Prime Minister who pledged his word to reduce the then expenditure by two millions or three millions a year, now views with complacency an annual expenditure of $125,000,000, and he even expresses his pride in a Minister of Finance who can spend that amount of money and in a minister of Public Works who can throw away $1,000,000 into the Aylesworth ditch, and who can permit the looting of the public treasury by his bosom friend to the extent of nearly $36,000 of the people's money.

Now, Sir, I wish to refer very briefly to the tariff plank in the Liberal platform of 1893. The Liberals stated at that time that the tariff should be reduced to the needs of honest, economical, and efficient government. No one in this House will claim that the tariff has been reduced to any such extent, and the natural conclusion is that the needs of this government require three or four times as much as was required by the Conservative government, or else, that this government is neither honest, nor economical, nor efficient. You can have your choice of whichever it is. I will not take up the time of the House by referring in detail——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. EDWARDS. I can, however, tell these hon. gentlemen opposite that I am going to take up just as much time of the House as I think necessary to make out my argument. I shall not now refer in detail to the various expressions used by Liberal politicians from 1893 to 1896 in reference to the tariff. The right hon. the Prime Minister said that if the Liberals were successful they would cut the head off protection and trample on its body. Well, protection is a pretty lively corpse at the present day in Canada. Sir Richard Cartwright declared that the policy of the Liberal party was death to protection; Sir Louis Davies said that protection was a system accursed by God and man, and the Hon. Wm. Paterson nailed his banner to the mast and joined in the procession with the motto: We declare for freedom of trade. But, after the Liberal party came to power he tacks on to that motto the words: Except in biscuits. Well, Sir, notwithstanding all these pledges made by Liberal statesmen of that day we still have the same line of custom houses and an increased staff of customs officials collecting pretty much the same duties as were collected previous to 1896. In reference to tariff and taxation I want to reiterate the statement made by the hon. member for North Toronto—and it is a statement which has not been denied by any Liberal member—that the taxation of the people in 1896 was $5.46 per head of the population and in 1908 it was $11 per head of the population. Let me say further that if the Conservative government from 1887 to 1896 had exacted a similar amount of taxation to that levied by the Liberals from 1897 to 1908 the Conservative government would not only not have increased the debt of this country but they would have reduced it by some $120,000,000. Or if you like you can put it the other way: If the Liberals had not increased the taxation to meet the ever growing expenditure they would have added over $150,000,000 to the debt of this country. Hon. gentlemen opposite are very fond of referring to the conditions previous to 1896 and they tell us that the present time is one of financial stress and trade depression. But, Sir, in the period from 1890 to 1894 commercial depression was world wide and Canada came through it better than any other country in the world. In support of my statement that trade depression was world wide between 1890 and 1894 I would point out that the falling off in exports from Great Britain amounted to $235,000,000 and the falling off in her imports to $60,000,000; in the United States there was a falling off in exports amounting to $140,000,000 and a falling off in imports amounting to $170,000,000; in Australia there was a falling off in exports amounting to $95,000,000 and a like decrease in the value of imports; in France there was a falling off in exports to the amount of $95,000,000 and in imports to the extent of $65,000,000; in Germany there was a falling off in exports of $40,000,000 and in imports of $50,000,000. The depression felt in Canada at that time was shared in by all the great commercial countries in the world, but in Canada, while her import trade remained stationary her export trade increased by $17,000,000; her earnings increased by $46,000,000; her railways increased by 2,700 miles; her coasting trade by 2,700,000 tons; her imports of raw material doubled, her exports of manufactured articles increased by 35 per cent and her exports of agricultural products by 65 per cent. And I want to say that the Conservative government at that time, realizing that it was a time of stress, adopted the wise course of reducing the annual expenditure and besides that they reduced taxation. Let me point out that in 1890 the Conservative government took taxes off the necessaries of life amounting to over half a million dollars, that in 1891 they took the duty off raw sugar and reduced the duty on refined sugar, thus saving to the people from 1891 to 1895 nearly $20,000,000 in that way alone. In 1894 they followed up their wise policy and they made a general reduction in taxes amounting to upwards of one and a half million dollars. This reduction of taxes, this lifting of the burden from the people at that time was the policy of the Conservative party. I hold Sir, that in comparing the tariff of to-day with the Conservative tariff of 1896 we must take into consideration the general increase in the cost of goods which amounts to from 30 per cent to 50 per cent. It is true there have been reductions made by the Liberal government on some things; they claim for instance that the duty on various articles of iron have been lowered. But I submit that it is fair, in considering that statement, to consider also the fact that while they reduced the duties on certain manufactured articles, they gave in bounties to manufacturers of iron, steel and other things, over $16,300,000. That is just as much a form of protection as the placing of a specific or ad valorem duty on an article imported.

Very much has been made of the fact that trade has very largely increased since 1896, which I am very pleased to admit; it was only to be expected that it would increase. But of the eighteen leading countries named in volume 1 of the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce, Argentina was the only country whose percentage of imports during the last decade was greater than that of Canada; but there is a very great difference in the way the trade of the two countries is balanced. I find that the percentage of increase of imports in Argentina in the last decade was 190·84 and the percentage of increase of exports was 192·78, thus showing not only a large increase in the total volume of trade, but a favourable balance of trade as well. Canada's percentage of increase of imports in the last decade was 178·59; but her percentage of increase of exports was only 75·5, showing a very large adverse balance of trade. Allow me also to call your attention to this fact, that of the eighteen principal countries mentioned six show a favourable condition of trade, so far as it is indicated by imports and exports; seven show practically the same percentage of increase of exports as of imports; and of the other five, the adverse balance of trade is far greater in the case of Canada than in the case of any of the others, For the year ending the 31st of March, 1908, Canada's imports for home consumption amounted to $351,879,955, and her exports of domestic merchandise amounted to $246,960,968; in other words, Canada bought nearly $105,000,000 worth more from other countries than she sold to other countries. This means that our imports amount to $52.87 and our exports $37.10 per head of the population. Now, I submit that if a business man or a farmer, year after year, continued to buy from others more than he sold to others, there could be only one result, namely, that he would be obliged to borrow in order to carry on his business; and what applies to the individual applies in a larger sense to the country as a whole. The balance of trade in 1908 was unfavourable to Canada to the extent of nearly $105,000,000. In 1896, while the total volume of our trade was very much less than it was in 1908, the balance of trade in Canada's favour was $7,600,000. Hon. gentlemen opposite, I know, profess to make light of this balance of trade; but I observe that when they are referring to our trade with Great Britain, they seem to take a great deal of pleasure in the fact that we are exporting to Great Britain more than we are importing from Great Britain. Now, I think that our trade relations with Great Britain, so far as the figures show, are very satisfactory. In 1896 Canada bought from Great Britain over $32,000,000 worth and sold her over $66,000,000 worth, showing a balance of trade in our favour of over $34,000,000. In 1898 Canada bought from Great Britain $64,000,000 worth and sold to Great Britain $104,000,000 worth, or a balance of trade in favour of Canada of $40,000,000. In my judgment that represents a very satisfactory state of trade as between this country and Great Britain. But if we regard that state of trade as satisfactory, so far as Canada is concerned, what must we think of the state of trade revealed by the figures of Canada's trade with the United States? In 1896 our trade with the United States showed an adverse balance of $17,000,000, and in 1908 we sold to the United States $96,900,000 worth, and bought from the United States $214,000,000 worth, showing an adverse balance of trade in the neighbourhood of $118,000,000.

Now, I wish to express the opinion, which I shall endeavour to back up with figures, that the unsatisfactory condition of our trade relations with the United States is largely due to the unwise, and, if I may be permitted to say so, the unfair policy maintained by this government. I am not going to claim to be a farmer. That is not my profession. I represent a farming constituency, and have lived all my life in the country amongst farmers; and I have had an opportunity to come into contact with them and to ascertain pretty fairly what their views are. In 1908 Canada imported from the United States of animals living, $2,000,000 worth, of which $1,611,000 worth were dutiable and $453,000 worth were free. Of grains of all kinds we imported from the United States over $14,000,000 worth, of which $8,250,000 worth were free. Of breadstuffs we imported from the United States over $15,000,000 worth, of which over $8,250,000 worth were free. Of fruits we imported nearly $6,000,000 worth; of butter, cheese, eggs, lard and meat we imported $3,612,334 worth; and of vegetables we imported $851,451 worth. Now, I wish to state to the House why I think the tariff between Canada and the United States is unfair to the Canadian market. We imported into Canada from the United States in 1908, 6,428 horses, the value of which, as represented in the blue-books, was $1,254,744, and we sent to the United States that same year 3,616 horses, the value of which was $901,350.

Permit me very briefly to compare the Canadian tariff on horses with that of the United States. The United States charge Canadians a duty of $30 on all horses valued under $150 each, and 25 per cent on horses exceeding that value. Our tariff charges on American horses brought into this country 25 per cent, if a horse is worth $150, and $12.50 on horses valued at $50 and under. You see how that works out. Suppose a Canadian farmer has four horses to spare and sends them to the American market. One of them he values at $100, the other at $75, and two colts at $50 and $30 respectively. What duty has he to pay? Before he can get them into the American market, he must pay a duty of $30 each, or a total duty of $120. But suppose an American farmer sends into the Canadian market four horses of exactly the same kind, what duty will he have to pay? On the $100 horse, he will have to pay $25; on the $75 horse, $18.75; and on each of the colts $12.50, so that he pays a duty of $68.75 on these animale while the Canadian farmer has to pay a duty of $120. I submit that that is manifestly unfair and unjust to Canadian farmers: and when we take into account the fact that the United States sent into Canada last year 6,428 horses, valued at $1,254,704, we must see that a portion of that was deliberately taken out of the pockets of Canadian farmers.

Let me carry the comparison further and give a statement with regard to hay and different other articles. We allow the Americans to ship hay into this country on paying a duty of $2 per ton, whereas Canadians must pay a duty of $4 per ton on hay which they send into the United States. Is there anything fair in that? I think not. The United States sent into this country last year 11,258 tons of hay, and I do not believe they would have sent us that much if our duty had been the same as theirs. Let me submit to the House the following statement of imports from the United States and the duties collected from these imports:

Let me draw particularly the attention of the House to a few of those items. Take butter, we allow American butter to come in at 4 cents a lb. while they charge us a duty on our butter of 6 cents a lb. On American cheese our duty is 3 cents per lb., and on Canadian cheese they charge 6 cents. On eggs from the other side we charge 3 cents a dozen, and they charge on Canadian eggs a duty of 5 cents a dozen; and last year they sent to Canada 1,123,336 dozen of eggs, valued at $216,278, and I submit that, to a certain extent at least, our Canadian farmers are, in consequence of that competition, deprived of the money which they otherwise would have received. Bacon and hams we allow to come from the United States at 2 cents per lb., and they charge us 5 cents per lb. On American potatoes we charge 20 cents per bushel, and they charge on Canadian potatoes 25 cents a bushel. On barley our tariff is 15 cents per bushel, and they charge us 24 cents, under the change they have made in their tariff. On oats we impose a duty of 10 cents a bushel and they charge us 15 cents. On pease our duty is 15 cents a bushel and theirs 40 cents. On beans we charge 25 cents and they charge 45 cents. On wheat we charge 12 cents per bushel and their duty is 25 cents. All along the list, on these articles I have enumerated, our tariff is against the Canadian farmer, and in the interest of the American farmer. The total value of the articles I have enumerated, which we sent the United States last year, amounted to but $1,853,352, and the imports of the same articles from the United States, which entered into competition with similar products of the Canadian farm, amounted to $8,180,264.

Hon. gentlemen opposite, however, profess a very high regard for the Canadian farmer. Earlier in the session we were told by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) that the drawback to agricultural productions in this country was the slipshod methods of our farmers, their lack of industry, and the lack of labour necessary in the carrying out of farming operations. That was the opinion expressed by the hon. minister of the farmers of this country, and that opinion I would respectfully commend to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark).

I would ask my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, also to compare that statement which he then gave us with the statement issued from his department regarding sheep husbandry in Canada. In that book, issued with his approval,—and I submit it, with all due deference, to the gentlemen interested in the woollen industry and wool production—I find that the reason given for the decrease in the number of sheep in Canada is that sheep are easily kept. To this fact he attributes the lack of interest by our farmers in that line of industry. He states that the obstinacy of the hog arouses in the mind of the Canadian farmer a determination to overcome that obstinacy, and consequently he prefers engaging in the swine raising industry to that of raising sheep. We are also told in that publication, issued with the hon. minister's imprimateur, that the never-ending labour incident to dairying has helped the cow because, forsooth, our Canadian farmers like labour. The trouble incident to dairying and the small profits incident to horse raising arouse, it appears in the Canadian farmer a desire to overcome these handicaps, so that they engage in these lines rather than in sheep raising which demands very little attention.

I commend that statement to the Minister of Agriculture, and ask him to place it alongside his other charges that the farmers of this country are lazy, slipshod and idle in regard to carrying on their work. The condition of agriculture in this country is not due to slipshod methods on the part of the farmer, or to indifference or laziness on his part, but I regret to say that it is due to the very manifest indifference on the part of this government to the interest of agriculture. Why, Sir, in answer to a question I submitted earlier in the session, I find that in the last ten years this government has expended on agriculture and agricultural interests in this great Dominion of Canada only $6,041,848. On Militia and Defence, they expend in one year more than they have expended in advancing the interest of agriculture of the whole of Canada in the last ten years. Yet they profess to have a very high regard for the interests of the farmers. Comparing the estimates of 1909-10 with those of 1908-9, I find that there is a decrease of $35,000 in the amount appropriated for the development of dairying and the fruit industry and the transportation of leading agricultural products. Does the minister maintain that our transportation facilities have reached such a degree of perfection as to warrant this? The dairy and cold storage commissioner's report for 1907, page 97, reports that Canadian cheese is roughly handled in the old country, and that Canadian butter is left on the docks at Liverpool for two or three days at a time. There is a decrease of $19,000 in the appropriation for the encouragement of the production of superior seeds; a reduction of $32,000 in the appropriations for experimental farms; a decrease of $13,000 in the appropriation for the development of the live stock industry, and of $50,000 in relation to the health of animals. Hon. gentlemen opposite refer to the revenues of recent years, and to what they have done and are doing for agriculture. How does this country compare with other countries in that regard? Here are the figures showing what is spent in the interests of agriculture in various countries:

Amount spent per annum in the interest of Agriculture in different Countries.

France	$ 9,200,000
Austria	9,270,000
Hungary	9,400,000
United States	10,000,000
Russia	25,280,000
Japan	3,750,000
Canada (average of last ten years)	604,188

Why, the average amount expended by this government in fostering and advancing the interest of agriculture is less than Merwin, a Yankee middleman, got in graft out of this government. Why must the estimate for agriculture for this year be reduced by $530,000? Why must $19,000 be deducted from the amount for the encouragement of the production of superior seeds? And $13,000 from the amount for the development of the live stock industry? Because the Minister of Public Works, in his wisdom or unwisdom, allowed $92,000 to be spent on sixteen servants' cottages down near Kingston which could have been built, and should have been built, for less than half that sum. Thirty or forty thousand dollars has been squandered there, and consequently the government must make such reductions as I have just referred to. Why must $35,000 be deducted from the amount for the development of the dairying and fruit industry in this country? Because McAvity, the bosom friend of the Minister of Public Works, required that and $933 more—and the dairying and fruit industries, of course, must wait. And this is the sort of thing that commends itself to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark). Why must $10,000 be deducted from the item for establishing additional branch stations of the experimental farms? Because the money has gone, as hon. gentlemen opposite very well know, to pay for silverware and cut glass for the 'Montcalm' and for champagne, choice liquors and cigars for the steamer 'Arctic.' You cannot have your cake and eat it too. The fact is staring these hon. gentlemen in the face that they have sown the wind and to-day are reaping the whirlwind. These hon. gentlemen are pleading for assistance in the building of necessary public works for the development of the country and are told that they will have to wait. And why? Because the money of the country has been shamelessly squandered in useless, and worse than useless, expenditures. I go to the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) and ask him for certain improvements in the postal facilities of my county, and I am ready to believe that the Postmaster General would be very glad to increase these postal facilities, for I am pleased to say that whenever I have had the honour of speaking to him on postal matters relating to my county he has received me with the utmost courtesy and has shown a disposition to meet my wishes wherever he could. But he is up against the fact that the money has been squandered and that he has to cut his coat in accordance with the cloth provided him. As a result, people in the rural districts of my own and other constituencies are compelled to put up with a mail service of twice or even once a week and to go, it may be, eight or nine miles for their mail. The $1,000,000 that has been thrown away in the Aylesworth ditch—and this expenditure has been supported, to their discredit be it said, by Liberal members of this House—would have gone far to improve the postal facilities of the rural districts.

In the matter of experimental farms and branch stations, how does this country compare with some others? Here are the figures:—

Experimental Farms and Branch Stations by Countries.

France	71
Germany	80
Austria	61
United States	60
Russia	102
Sweden	26
Norway	12
Italy	22
Belgium	15
Japan	15
Canada	6

If most of these countries could be removed to Canada, so far as their size is concerned, we would hardly know they were there. Yet even the smallest of them has double the number of experimental farms and stations that this country can boast. Now, let me show the effect of this policy upon the occupiers of land in Canada. I have taken the figures from the census returns from 1871, 1881, 1891 and 1901. These show that in each decade, from 1871 to 1891, there was a steady increase in the number of occupiers of lands and in the acreage occupied not only for all Canada but for each province of Canada. The same returns also show that the total number of occupiers of land has decreased from 1891 to 1901 by 75,798; and that reduction applies to every part of Canada excepting Manitoba and the Northwest territories. That is a condition of affairs which I submit, has not been brought about by the shipshod methods of the farmers themselves, nor by their alleged indifference or indolence. I submit that it is the result of a policy which discriminates against the Canadian farmer in favour of the American farmer. I would ask this House seriously to consider the fact that the occupiers of the soil, the occupiers of the farms, are leaving the farm year by year, as our census shows. I would earnestly request this House to consider the influence in producing that result of our tariff relations with the United States in regard to agricultural products. It is my opinion that it is unfair to the Canadian farmer that the scale of duties all along the line of agricultural products should be more favourable to American products coming in here than the Americans are disposed to give to our products going into their country. I trust that due consideration will be given to this matter, and that the tariff on agricultural products will be increased all along the line on those articles until it shall reach at least as high a point as is the American tariff in regard to the products of Canada.

Mr. J. E. GLADU. (Yamaska). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I read in the papers a couple of days ago that the government of the province of Ontario is about to issue and distribute previous to September 1,750,000 text books for use in the schools. If I may be permitted, I would suggest to the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards), the desirably of inserting as an addition to these books a copy of our tariff and a statement of our imports and exports. He would thereby be dispensed with the necessity of having printed and distributed the speech which he has prepared specially for his constituents, and the House would be at liberty to take up some serious work. It seems to me that our unfortunate budget, which has been on several occasions torn up and cut to pieces, should have been the object of greater sympathy. That unfortunate budget, I say, might have expected a warmer welcome, seeing that it is possibly the only one throughout the world to show a surplus. But that unfortunate budget, when showing such an exceptional feature, had no idea of the kind of opposition we have in this House to-day, and still less of the kind of leader who controls it as a matter of fact, if not as a matter of right.

In the first place allow me, Mr. Speaker, to take up a question of statistics. With the courtesy which distinguishes you, you will no doubt forgive me this inroad into a realm which is not familiar to me. I am the more disposed to crave your indulgence when discussing statistics, that what we have just heard, I must sincerely admit, is enough to disgust and even nauseate, if not to kill outright, even people with a most hearty stomach.

There is one point brought out by the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) which I desire to deal with. He is unable to conceive how it comes that the present administration having accumulated surpluses up to $94,000,000 and having spent that money, they should not be in a position to account to him for their use. I realize his great embarrassment in having to deal with surpluses, he, among all others, who has always had deficits on hand.

Let me show you briefly the actual difference in the political status of the two parties who have been contending for power. When the Conservatives came to power in 1878, the total assets of Canada amounted to $34,595,499.05. In 1896, these gentlemen were driven out of power by the verdict of the people. In the meantime, they had brought the assets of Canada up to $67,220,103.96; that is to say, they had increased them by $32,624,004.91 in the space of 18 years. However, they had brought the debt during that period up to $118,000,000. After deducting from the above amount the $32,500,000 of assets to their credit, there remains a net increase of the debt during those 18 years of $85,500,000, for which the Conservative party is responsible.

We came to power in 1896, when the assets of Canada, as I said a moment ago, aggregated $67,220,103.96. By 1909, we had increased that amount to $130,246,298, that is an increase, during those twelve of Liberal government, of $63,026,194.04. Now, according to the official report of the Finance Department, the debt under the Liberal government has increased by $65,463,427.07. But the assets represent $63,026,194.04. Therefore, the net increase of the debt for which we are responsible amounts only to $2,437,233.03.

The member for North Toronto inquired the other day how it was that having had surpluses amounting to $94,000,000, we should not be in a position to account for them. Let him consider the net increase of the debt, and he will find out that the difference in round figures, amounts to only $2,500,000.

Regarding the use that has been made of the surpluses, let my hon. friend refer to the official reports and he will see that the National Transcontinental has already cost to this country $52,574,131; that about $8,000,000 have been expended on our canals—I am speaking from memory—that the better terms granted to the provinces, account for $3,000,000; if we add to the above several other items aggregating to about $12,000,000, it will be seen that of the $94,000,000 of accumulated surpluses, $75,000,000 have thus been employed.

Mr. GLADU.

I will stop at that, and I will impose no more figures upon the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is in this House an extraordinary man, a man without the like of him; he is generally referred to as the best debater of this country. But he also excels in some other ways, he can accommodate himself with a marvellous versatility to the exigencies of the most heterogeneous situations. I am alluding to the hon. member for North Toronto. When the hon. gentleman sits to your right, Mr. Speaker, he is the most persistent accumulator of deficits. When he sits to your left, he wages war unceasingly on the surpluses of the government.

He is an extraordinary man in another direction yet. Twelve or thirteen years ago, he delivered a splendid speech—of which we hear a repetition every year. I refer to his criticism of the budget speech. Those who hear that speech for the first time are found to say: What an orator! Those who hear it for the second time, say: What a repeater. But those who hear it for the fourth or fifth time—and that is the case of those of us who have long enjoyed a seat in this House—are bound to say: That gentleman sings always the same tune; he is a grinding organ.

I would dislike to make these remarks in his absence, but as this same speech comes back to us regularly about Easter time, quite innocent people say that the ex-manager of the Union Trust, the friend of the Independent Foresters, is about to repent. On the other hand, those who do not know more about the ritual than about the dogma, say: He has a sermon in store for us, but it will not be on the last sufferings of the Saviour.

The hon. member for North Toronto has made a crime to the government for having borrowed money recently, at a different rate than the one they had obtained some time before. It is of no use to argue on this point, for everybody knows that when one goes to the money markets of the world to float a loan he must submit to the financial conditions of the market, for the time being.

The hon. member has taunted the hon. Finance Minister with having changed his views on the political questions concerning this country. He has recalled that Sir Richard Cartwright has always been true to his colours and so with Sir John A. Macdonald. The political convictions of Sir John A. Macdonald do not concern me, but I can say of Sir Richard Cartwright that if during the five years he has been Finance Minister in a Liberal administration, he has never changed his views on the political question of the day, the reason was that there was no necessity for him to do so, his task being confined to relieve the country of the evil effects of the preceding administration.

Moreover, it is an accepted truism that asses only never change their views, for the good reason that they have none. In my opinion, a statesman is bound to conform his views to the needs of the country, without considering if in doing so he has to modify his former views.

The country having been left in a depressed condition by the Conservative party in 1896, it was but natural that the succeeding government should gradually modify the existing fiscal policy, so as to bring about the prosperity that we presently enjoy.

The other night, the hon. member for North Toronto found fault with the hon. Finance Minister for having charged to capital account the expenses incurred in connection with the bounties on iron and steel. In our time, said the hon. gentleman, these bounties were charged to current accounts. I do not doubt it, because under the former administration these industries were almost at a standstill and the bounties amounted to a mere triffle.

Furthermore, the hon. member for North Toronto is not consistent in his statements. He complains about the heavily increasing expenditures, notwithstanding the fact that in Prince Edward Island he advocated an expenditure of $50,000,000 for the construction of a tunnel. Later on he made a strong plea in favour of the construction of Dreadnoughts. But his most stupendous contradiction is when he stands in this House and denounces the construction of the National Transcontinental Railway as a crime.

If he is in earnest, if his friends are in earnest, if they sincerely wish to do something for the defence of the Empire, they cannot suppress the fact that the contruction of this Transcontinental Railway exclusively on Canadian territory, is the most patriotic and imperialistic scheme that could be conceived.

Let us suppose that England should be called upon for the protection of her interests in the Far East, to transfer her forces, her whole army, together with contingents from Australia. New Zealand, South Africa, India and even France, nothing would equal the advantages to be derived from the transportation facilities afforded by that magnificent line of railway.

The hon. member for North Toronto favours the construction of the battleships It is not an easy thing to express a decided opinion on this question at the present moment, nevertheless let us take the figures by the hon. member himself, who stated that the construction of the National Transcontinental will cost the enormous sum of $180,000,000. Now it is an admitted fact, that the construction of a single Dreadnought costs $10,000,000. So by the construction of the Transcontinental Railroad we are contributing towards the defence of the Empire, the equivalent of eighteen Dreadnoughts. That proposition cannot be assailed. Those who are urging the defence of the empire, if they are in earnest, must withstand all criticism concerning the construction of that railway. There is no more effective way of contributing to the defence of the empire.

What is this Dreadnought policy aimed at? At putting Canada in the throes of the most pronounced form of imperialism. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I say it from the bottom of my heart and without boasting—I am an anti-imperialist. First of all, I am a son of Canada.

In what situation would we be in acceding to the construction of Dreadnoughts, which, after all would be the exclusive property of the English nation?

Mr. PAQUET (L'Islet). (Translation.) Will my hon. friend allow me a question?

Mr. GLADU. (Translation.) Certainly.

Mr. PAQUET. (Translation.) When has the hon. member for North Toronto advocated the construction of Dreadnoughts?

Mr. GLADU. (Translation.) I am sorry for my hon. friend, but it is quite evident that he did not bother himself much with the reading of that speech of the hon. member for North Toronto. It is in the last part of his speech that the hon. member advocated the construction of battleships. I was asking in what situation would we find ourselves in acceding to the construction of these Dreadnoughts, which would be, after all, the exclusive property of the Engilsh nation? We have been enticed to imperialism on every hustings, in England, in Canada and in this House. Have we not yet, on the Order Paper a resolution of the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) teeming with the most fervid imperialism of the hon. gentlemen on the other side? 'In cauda venenum.'

Would not that pronounced form of imperialism create a most anomalous condition of things for a considerable portion of our population? Let us suppose that one day the land and naval forces of England and Germany clash against each other. If we have allowed ourselves to be enticed into imperialism, we are in duty bound to fight for the empire. What right have we to ask the Germans, the Italians, that have become naturalized citizens of this country, to fight against Germany or Italy? If these citizens of Canada, being in such an awkward position, should refuse to draw the sword against their kinsmen, should they be declared rebels and traitors? If, on the other hand, they go to war, do we not ask them to become murderers and fratracides ? In the first case, they are to be shot as rebels ; in the second case, they are to be disgraced for fighting against their own blood.

I may be allowed to state in all frankness that I am neither English, nor French; I am nothing else than a Canadian; I would not give a token to return under French domination. But for nothing on earth would I see my fellow countrymen of the province of Quebec being called upon to take up arms against the French army. These are my sentiments on this question.

Moreover, we have no right to decide about the future. The future does not belong to us. A great poet has said "The future belongs to God." It is true; but the expectations of the future are ours; it is our duty to transmit them as an inheritance to those that will come after us. It would be a crime, an outrage, to deprive them of that inheritance. We have no right, be it in the form of a Dreadnought policy, or in the form of imperialism, to imperil the future of this country in entering into a scheme of the consequences of which we know nothing. We have a perfect right to have expectations and to hope that they will be realized in the future; but no matter what that future has in store for our country, we have no right to dispose of that future.

I do not think I can be accused of being disloyal for giving expression to these sentiments; as I have just said, I would not give a token to return under French domination. I believe that our country ought to be proud of the present status. I love the British Empire that has given Canada more liberty than this country had ever enjoyed before; I love that mighty Empire over which the sun never sets; I love the king of the United Kingdom, the worthy successor of the most admirable woman that for centuries has sat on a British throne. But there is another country that I cannot forget; a country to which God has given the dimensions of a continent, a country bounded on both sides by the Oceans, a country which has as neighbour on the one side the greatest republic in the world, and which on the other side is bordered by the mysteries of unknown seas. All our ancestors have proven it. That country is yours, Mr. Speaker, it is mine, it is the country of us all. It is the country of the English, who on that soil so gallantly and gloriously fought us; it is the country of the French Canadians who opened it to civilization and who, themselves also fought some immortal fights. That country, we all know, is Canada.

I fail to see what advantage we could be, for the defence of the empire, by building Dreadnoughts, or by throwing ourselves into exaggerated imperialism. England has got nothing to fear from us—I speak of Canadians of all races and of all creeds. Every time that her flag has been threatened on Canadian soil, every time an audacious hand has been stretched towards that same flag, the French and English Canadians stepped forth for her defence. Let us open history. In 1774-75, Canadians kept the British flag flying on the citadel of Quebec. In 1812, de Salaberry and his companions gain immortal fame in history at Chateauguay. In 1870, during the Fenian raid Canadians again stood by the flag. In 1885, that flag was threatened once more. On that occasion, we were face to face with our own kin; and yet, it was for the defence of that same flag, and as loyal subjects of the British empire, we did not hesitate to crush the rebellion. And even now, when I come to more recent times, the blood of our compatriots is still reeking on the battle fields of the African soil.

What benefit, what privileges would we find in a more intimate union with the empire? What would be the profit to England? Absolutely none. Let us then remain as we are, loyal British subjects. The money we have to spend, let us spend it for the general good of Canada; that our country may attain that prosperity and greatness to which it is entitled, and some day perhaps become one of the finest and greatest countries on the face of the globe. I do not believe, a Canadian, who really loves his country, and wishes to show his love for it, could possibly form any other dreams.

Mr. W. B. NANTEL (Terrebonne.) (Translation). Mr. Speaker, without making any such nice phrases as those we have just heard from the member for Yamaska, I will be satisfied to simply congratulate him. He has spoken to us in an ornate tongue, but I do not wish to dwell upon it any longer, and I come at once to the point which he particularly insisted upon, and that is imperialism.

Answering the remarks made by the hon. gentleman, I will read, not in full, but partly only, the resolution adopted by this House, and compare it with that submitted by the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster).

The member for North Toronto proposed as follows:

> That in view of her great and varied resources, or her geographical position and national environments, and of that spirit of self help and self respect which alone befits a strong and growing people, Canada should no longer delay in assuming her proper share of the responsibility and financial burden incident to the suitable protection of her exposed coast line and great seaports.

To that resolution an amendment was brought forward by the right hon. leader of the government. And what does this last resolution of the right hon. gentleman contain? I read a portion only of its conclusions:

The House will cordially approve of any necessary expenditure designed to promote the speedy organization of a Canadian naval service in co-operation with and in close relation to the imperial navy, along the lines suggested by the Admiralty at the last Imperial Conference, and in full sympathy with the view that the naval supremacy of Britain is essential to the security of commerce, the safety of the Empire and the peace of the world.

The House expresses its firm conviction that whenever the need arises the Canadian people will be found ready and willing to make any sacrifice that is required to give to the Imperial authorities the most loyal and hearty co-operation in every movement for the maintenance of the integrity and the honour of the Empire.

Really, on hearing the hon. member for Yamaska express so strongly to-night that frightful theory of imperialism, I am inclined to believe that he is no staunch supporter of the government. Does he wish to strike his chief in the face? I cannot bring myself to imagine he would have that courage. I will insist no longer on that question; I think the most appropriate answer is found in that part of 'Hansard' which I have just quoted. I have, also, no intention whatever of defending the hon. member for North Toronto. I know he is well able to defend himself, and will, therefore, leave the matter in his hands.

The hon. member for Yamaska has told us of the bounties paid by the Conservatives when in power. The bounties paid during that administration were far from considerable, because the Conservative party had quite different ideas as to national politics, and did not give the bounties any great attention. National industries were encouraged in quite another manner. This was perhaps a bad policy, but such was its policy, and it is not here the place nor is it the time to discuss it. Bounties then could not have had any great influence in equilibrating its budget.

My hon. friend has stated that the hon. member for North Toronto, during his term as Minister of Finance, could show nothing but yearly deficits. That assertion is completely in opposition with the facts, and one has only to open the blue-books, to find not only the refutation of the accusation, but also to get proof that the hon. member for North Toronto was able to show an occasional surplus.

On the other hand, what is the substance and material of the surplus of which the present ministers are so boastful? If one follows the easy methods of the Minister of Finance, it seems to me quite any easy matter to have a surplus. I do not know if the secret is one of his own invention, but according to his ideas, it is sufficient to capitalize the revenue. He does not spend public money, he capitalizes it. It is according to those ideas that he capitalized the $6,424,000 sunk with the Quebec bridge. Strange capital, I must say.

The hon. minister pays to certain industries bounties amounting to $2,787,354, and in his mind, this is also a capital, although the government have assumed these obligations by means of a law obliging them to pay the bounties; yet, at the end of the year, the minister does not hesitate to capitalize that also. The same system applies to the grants to the railways; again my hon. friend includes them in his capital. Following that plan right through, he will probably end by capitalizing the expenses of the public servants. Putting all that to the credit of capital, he, of course easily finds a surplus. Really, I think the Minister of Finance should have his invention patented.

But they tell us he simply borrowed the system from his predecessor, the hon. member for North Toronto, who was minister before him. If it be true, I say he was quite wrong in doing so. But I do not believe that he, a proud and dignified Liberal, could possibly make use of methods so decidedly Tory in their essence.

The Minister of Finance has been in power for the last thirteen years, and with all his progressive ideas, he has not been able so far to change that wrong method. He might have invited his colleague the Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur) and imported a book-keeper from New York, who could have taught him a new system of book-keeping. If it be true that the Conservative party was the first to imagine and apply the theory of capitalization of expenses, the Conservatives greatly deserved to be thrown over and become the opposition, and if the Liberals act in a similar manner, they are equally deserving of a similar treatment, and should pass into the opposition as quick as possible.

Simple minded and innocent, I had thought that a sum of money could be converted into capital when that sum of money represented a real and solid value, and I said to myself; now here is a farmer who, as a result of strict economy, has saved a sum of $1,000. He takes that money, builds a barn on his farm; he is not impoverished thereby, he simply puts his cash into a building and adds so much to the value of his property; he can in all justice charge that sum of $1,000 to his credit and capital account. But the Minister of Finance acts differently, he capitalizes all the money he spends. The principle is a false one, and the method quite wrong, when applied to financial dealings.

A government who builds a railway will capitalize its real value, because it is equivalent to cash or credit on hand. But certainly that cannot be said of the $6,400,000 of the Quebec bridge, which he buried in the bottom of the St. Lawrence. The old members of this House know and understand the meaning of these surpluses the Minister of Finance speaks of, but the new members do not know, neither do the public, and all this is likely to be misleading to the people, the creditors, and to the Minister of Finance himself.

There seems to be very little chance of an understanding in this matter of accounting, but there is a wonderful understanding as to the frightful proportions of the public debt. The public debt has in the last two years increased by $46,000,000. We are living on loans. We have long term and medium term loans; we have also temporary loans which, I might say, are on the weekly payment or instalment system. Here we find a condition of things that requires prompt attention. And yet, I believe we are extravagant in the administration of our affairs. And that is the point I had most particularly intended to develop. We are extravagant in the salaries we pay to the Government officials, we are quite exaggerating in the extent and largeness of certain salaries. We are also sometimes exaggerating in the smallness of some other salaries paid to the small and humble servants in the public service. This was brought to my mind the other day, when the hon. Postmaster-General Mr. Lemieux, brought forward his bill in connection with the salaries paid in his department. We insisted on this side of the House, that he should grant certain postmen, mail carriers and other humble post office officials, a sum sufficient to permit them to live.

The hon. minister protested, saying: 'Gentleman, what you are asking from me represents a large amount of money, and I desire and so do my colleagues, to practice strict economy.'

I felt inclined to rise and say to him: 'Gentlemen of the Government, if you wish to practice economy, I can only congratulate you; but for mercy's sake do not try and practice it on the backs of the starving, but rather on the heads of those who gluttonously feed on favouritism. There is more to reap on the salaries of five, six, nine and ten thousand dollars, than there is to pare and clip from the salaries of five and six hundred dollars.'

I did not even open my mouth, reserving my right to return to the subject when the opportunity offered itself; and I believe it offers itself now. I notice that the Minister of Finance does away entirely, in his estimates for 1909-10, with an amount of $22,581,458. I hope that this saving will not be too much at the expense of those earning small salaries, and that the Postmaster General who has obtained a surplus, an effective surplus, will see that these people do not suffer in consequence. It should not be inferred from my reference to the hon. Postmaster General that my criticism is aimed specially at him. In the first place, I have no ill feeling towards any of the hon. gentlemen occupying the treasury benches, and this is particularly the case as regards the Postmaster General. I have no intention of criticising his department; on the contrary, were I to follow my inclination, and were it not for fear of annoying so modest a man, I would say that if there is a minister who seems to manage his business properly, it is he, and if there is a well managed department, it is that of the Postmaster General, and the proof is to be found in the surplus which he obtains from year to year for the Minister of Finance, a surplus perceptible to the naked eye, and in regard to which he is worthy of congratulation. I also take this occasion of congratulating him on having remembered the small wage earners who never have many defenders, while the high officials always have many, besides being in a position to take care of themselves, which they do with courage and success.

There is a wide margin between a salary of $10,000 and another of $500. The distance which separates one from the other is great, I was tempted to say immorally so, in a democratic country such as ours. The man who earns $500 or $600 has a wife and children whom he cherishes just as does the man whose salary runs up to $10,000; his wife he must provide with clothing and nourishment ; his children he must clothe and feed and educate, exactly like the man who, one year with another, draws $8,000 or $10,000 of a salary. The former gets his $50 check per month, while the latter draws $700 or $800 per month ; the former will starve in the service of the people, while the other, if he leads an honest life, will not be able to spend his whole salary; one will be a pauper all his life, while the other will heap away money, grow rich, build up a fortune for himself at the expense of the public.

Mr. Speaker, the minister who will put an end to that state of things will go down to posterity as a benefactor of his country, and a grateful nation will dedicate a monument to his memory. The proper rule to follow in fixing the scale of salaries, is to grant to each man enough to live, bring up his family in accordance with the needs and requirements of the social environment in the midst of which he is called to live, and not the rule followed at present which ignores that elementary principle. Such a system is likely to cause large numbers to curse the fate which providence has assigned to them, and to build up on the free soil of America an aristocracy of the worst type, an aristocracy of wealth. Luxury side by side with misery in the service of the government and the people, is a thing which should not be tolerated. However, that state of thing exists, Mr. Speaker, and I have only to open the blue book to find numerous cases of men employed in the various departments, heads of families, who do not earn enough to ensure a comfortable living for themselves and family, while there are numbers of others who are unable to spend the whole of what they earn. I do not propose indulging in personal references in the course of the remarks which I have to make, nor attacking any one in particular. I shall refer to some high positions, but without in any way reflecting on those who were fortunate enough to secure such appointments. Moreover, my intention is not to hold the present administration wholly responsible for the evil, except in so far as they have made no attempt to cure it, but instead have allowed it to grow worse, after promising implicitly, if not expressly, that they would apply a remedy, and though, in truth, they were in duty bound to do so.

For the time being and to start with, I shall be content with mentioning a few of these positions with large salaries attached. I may point out, in the first place, a few positions created by the present government; for instance, the Board of Commissioners appointed to supervise the building of the National Transcontinental Railway. At the outset, three commissioners were appointed; later on, a fourth commissioner was named. The chairman's salary is $8,000 per annum; the three others receive $7,000 per annum each. These salaries are too high, and moreover, there are too many commissioners. Would not two commissioners have been able to cope with the work?

Then we have the Railway Commission, an institution which I admire, and whose work will soon extend over the whole Dominion. At first they were three in number; a chairman and two commissioners. To-day there are six of them, and their salaries are as follows: the president gets $10,000 per annum, the vice-president, $9,000, and the other commissioners $8,000 each.

The Civil Service Commission comprises two commissioners, each of whom draws a salary of $5,000 per annum.

The deputy ministers are to-day very numerous. They are growing in numbers day by day, and their salaries are increasing at the same rate. Once more, I am only stating the facts, and although I have worked the matter up carefully, I may have made some mistakes. If so, I shall be glad to be set right and corrected. In the Privy Council, in the Department of Militia, in that of Agriculture, in the Department of the Secretary of State, in the Library, in the Public Works Department, in short, in all the departments, numbering fourteen in all, there are to be found deputy ministers, or head officers designated at times under some different names, but drawing the salary of a deputy minister, and these gentlemen, if I am not mistaken, number in all thirty-three. There salaries run from $4,500 to $8,000 per annum. There are two with salaries of $4,000, twenty two or twenty-four drawing about $5,000; five drawing $6,000, one $7,000, and lastly one drawing $8,000.

The ministers, who number fourteen, draw salaries amounting to $9,500, including their sessional indemnity, while the Prime Minister draws altogether $14,500. By the way, let me state that I am not objecting to the salaries granted to he ministers of the Crown; in fact I consider that their remuneration is inadequate, as compared with that of their deputy ministers. They have to undergo elections, and it is well known that, in regard to the Liberal party as well as to the Conservative, elections are an expensive thing and cannot be carried on solely by means of prayers. There devolve on the ministers social duties much more onerous than those devolving on the deputy ministers.

The judges of the Supreme Court of Canada are six in number, the Chief Justice, and five puisne judges. The Chief Justice gets a salary of $10,000 per annum, the five others, $9,000 per annum. There is also a judge of the Exchequer court who is paid $8,000 per annum. Then there are judges for the provincial courts whose salaries run from $3,000 to $8,000 per annum. besides their travelling expenses, which make up quite a large amount, reaching in several cases $1,100 and as high as $1,300 per annum. Six have received over $1,000 for travelling expenses. The expenditure in connection with these salaries and travelling expenses, reaches in the aggregate $1,075,536.81, for the year 1907-08.

In the Yukon we have three judges drawing $10,000 each per annum, in all $30,000. The administration of justice in the Yukon entails an expenditure of $88,088.47, and I understand the population is on the decline. According to the last census, that of 1901, it numbered only 27,219. The population of the country as a whole barely reaches 7,000,000, but for the purpose of my argument, I shall take it at that figure.

I have pointed out the high salaries which the Dominion government pays to its officers. Now, let us see how these things are managed in the United States. Our neighbours to the south of us are older and richer than we are. They number 87,971,000 in the United States proper ; while, with the islands taken in, the population reaches 96,850,000. Taking the United States proper with all their denominations, we have a total population of 105,000,000.

Now, let us see what salaries they pay. The figures which I am about to quote, are taken from volume 34 of the Senate documents, 59th Congress, 1906-07, appropriation for the year closing June 30, 1908. The United States have nine state departments called secretaryships or departments of state. They are as follows: Agriculture, Treasury, War, Navigation, Postoffice, Interior, Commerce, Labour, and Justice, that is the department of the Attorney General. The various secretaries or ministers, heads of these departments, receive salaries of $12,000 each. Up to February 26, 1907, they were paid only $8,000. It was not until the year 1907-08, that they obtained that increase for the first time. The under-secretaries are paid on the average $4,500 per annum. There are several under-secretaries, whose salaries vary according to the importance of the various departments; but I repeat it, many of these under-secretaries get only $4,500 per annum. The chief clerks are paid only $2,500 or $3,000 at most.

In the Department of Agriculture, for instance, the under-secretary gets $5,000, but his department is somewhat more important than ours, since its appropriations for the year 1907-08 reach $9,444,290, equal to about one-eighth of our whole Supply Bill, and about eight times larger than the amount voted for our Department of Agriculture, which that same year amounted to $1,481,091.67, and for 1909, aggregates $1,112,500. Notwithstanding which our deputy minister of Agriculture draws a salary of $6,000 per annum.

The Postmaster General has a first assistant who draws $5,000 per annum. The secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labour has also an assistant and two under secretaries who draw $5,000 each. The assistant to the Attorney General draws $7,000, and the assistant to the Solicitor General, $7,500. One would be inclined to think that they have copied our scale of salaries or that we have copied theirs, seeing that we pay our deputy minister $7,000 and our solicitor $7,500.

While, as a rule, the salaries paid to their deputy ministers or under-secretaries are smaller than those we pay to our 33 deputy ministers in Ottawa, on the other hand, as regards subordinate officers, I find a smaller proportion of those starvation salaries to which I referred a moment ago, and on which no man can be expected to support a family.

Ambassadors and plenipotentiaries of the United States to England, Germany, Japan, Russia and other countries of the same standing, draw a yearly salary of $17,500. Extraordinary envoys and plenipotentiaries to Belgium, China, Spain and other countries of the same class, draw $12,000.

The same officers representing the United States in Chili, Columbia, Peru, Roumania, Servia, Persia, and Siam brought $10,000 per annum. The envoy to Liberia, who fulfils the duties of consul general draws $5,000; the consul general to Cairo draws $6,000.

We have not as yet representatives of Canada in foreign countries; but we have in this very city of Ottawa, as members of the Railway Committee and of the National Transcontinental Railway board of commissioners, officers who draw salaries reaching seven, eight, nine and ten thousand dollars per annum.

At the congressional library, at Washington, the total salaries amount to $18,140. At the Dominion library of Ottawa, the salaries reach $25,685.50; and if the further increases are taken into account, the total amount will almost be double that of the salaries paid out for the same purpose by our neighbours.

The Civil Service commissioners at Washington receive only $4,000 per annum. Our commissioners here draw a salary of $5,000 each. The Washington War Department comprises what is known as the Office of Public Buildings and Grounds, apparently under the management of an assistant engineer, who draws $2,400 per annum and of a chief clerk whose salary is also $2,400 per annum.

Let us now come to the courts. The United States Supreme Court consists of a chief justice and eight puisnes judges. The chief justice is paid $13,000 per annum and the puisne judges $12,500 each. There are 29 circuit court judges, whose salary is $7,000; 70 district court judges, with a salary of $6,000 per annum. There are also six additional judges, appointed to meet the needs of the new territories. They also draw $6,000 per annum. The unorganized territories have eight judges with salaries of $5,000. The district or territory of Hawaii has three judges. The court of appeal for the district of Columbia consists of three judges, one of whom gets $7,500, and the two others, $7,000 per annum. The Supreme Court of that same district consists of six judges at $6,000 each. For all these judges, except those in Alaska, Arizona and Hawaii, appointed under federal authority, the total of salaries is $969,000, while for our Dominion judges, the total expenditure is $1,075,536.81, that is to say an over-expenditure in our case of $106,536.81.

The administration of the territory of Alaska, apparently entails on the people of the United States an expenditure of $67,000 per annum. The population is 32,000; the governor draws a salary of $3,000, and there are three judges with salaries of $5,000 each. The territory of Arizona has a governor whose salary is $3,000; the territory of New Mexico a governor with a salary of $3,000. Our Yukon territory for judicial purposes only costs us $88,088.47 per annum. If we add to that figure the salaries of three other chief officers, we reach a total of over $104,000, that is $47,000 more than what the United States have to spend. The cost of management of the territory of Alaska as compared with that of the Yukon, shows how extravagant we are.

In the United States, barring the federal Supreme Court, I found no judges with a salary of $10,0000. The average runs from $5,000 to $6,000. On the other hand, in the territory of Arizona the judges get only $3,000. We have here many judges of superior jurisdiction who get only $3,000, while in the Yukon we have three judges drawing $10,0000 each, that is a total of $30,000, to administer the law to 27,219 people, provided their number has not gone down since the last census. These judges at $3,000 are not treated as well as subordinate officers at Ottawa, drawing the high salaries to which I have referred. Without some personal income these magistrates are unable to live up to the requirements of their position. They are starvelings, and I cannot conceive a worse situation than that of the man compelled to play the person of consequence on an empty purse.

I estimated the population of Canada as 7,000,000. That of the United States proper reaches 87,971,000. If all their dominions are included, that figure should be raised to 105,000,000. The cost of government here is $16.09 per head. In the United States, it amounts to $8.67, or $10.47 according that one or the other of the above figures is taken as representing the total population. Am I not justified in stating that our expenditure is extravagant?

I find another evidence of that extravagance in the pensions granted to some former officials. It is a matter which I have some hesitation in taking up, but I think it is my duty to do so. I am not attacking individuals, but merely a system. I refer to the judges. I consider that our system of pensions to superannuated judges rests on a false principle, on a principle of class legislation, which is always hateful and condemnable.

Mr. C. A. WILSON (Laval). (Translation.) Does my hon. friend comprise in the list of superannuated judges the member for St. Anne's (Mr. Doherty)?

Mr. NANTEL. (Translation.) I except nobody. I am not criticising the hon. member for St. Anne's. I can only say that the hon. member has availed himself of the law, and it would not have been the part of so intelligent a man to omit doing so. In volume I of the Auditor General's report, page G—17, I notice the name of an ex-judge who draws a pension of $10,000, and I am satisfied that he has no children to bring up and send to school.

Mr. WILSON. (Translation.) . Please give us his name.

Mr. NANTEL. (Translation.) I do not like to mention any name. The hon. member will find out for himself by referring to page G-17, of the Report of the Auditor General, from which I am quoting.

Mr. WILSON. (Translation.) Will the hon. member say whether it is not to the hon. Mr. Justice Routhier that he is referring?

Mr. NANTEL. (Translation.) No, it is to the Hon. Mr. Justice Taschereau, of the Supreme Court. You are putting me under the necessity of giving his name; you will be to blame for it. Another judge draws a pension of $8,000, and besides for the year 1907-8, he has drawn a further salary as judge of the Admiralty Court. Another pensioner draws $5,000. We pay altogether under this head $126,359.82. That also is extravagance.

That legislation providing for the superannuation of judges, as enacted, is to say the least, overdrawn. It goes too far when it states, as will be found by referring to volume 3, chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes: "If any judge who has continued in the office of judge for fifteen years or upwards, or ('and' should have been put in here instead of, 'or') who becomes afflicted with some permanent infirmity, disabling him from the due execution of his office, resigns his office, &c." he is entitled to two-thirds of his salary for the remainder of his life. And please observe, even if he be only 45 or 50 years old. Section 20 states: if he has reached the age of 75 and has been a judge for 20 years; if he has reached the age of 70, and has been 25 years a judge, or if he has been 30 years a judge, whatever be his age, he is entitled to his full salary in each case at the time of his resignation, and that as long as he lies. While in office, that judge is not called upon to contribute a dollar to a pension fund. And see how solicitous the legislator appears to be: the benefit of that provision has been extended to the president of the Railway Commission, while the vice-president has been left out, although he may be in precisely the same position as the president. How admirable, Mr. Speaker, is that great solicitude shown on behalf of the president of that commission. Section 23 of the Act just quoted, provides that if the office of judge, which that president may have relinquished to accept the chairmanship of the commission, should later on entitle its occupant to a higher rate of salary, say $12,000 or $15,000, that same president would be entitled, even after being superannuated as president of the Railway Commission, to get that increase.

These high officials do not contribute one dollar to the superannuation fund out of which they will later on be paid as pensioners of the State, while subordinate clerks who get only $500 or $600 of a salary are called upon to contribute each month to that fund at the rate of 1, 1½, 3, or 3½ per cent, according to their status and depending on the fact whether they draw $600 or more per annum, and whether they have joined the service previous or subsequently to a certain date. Then in order to be entitled to that pension, it is necessary that one should have been in the service of the State ten years or more, have reached the age of 60, and have become incapacitated through infirmity or otherwise. The pension is based on the average salary and it is a rather complicated affair to obtain it. It is granted by fractions of one-fiftieth per year of service. If the head of the department should make an unfavourable report, if the clerk should have been unfortunate enough to displease one of these gentlemen, his pension may be reduced. It is not even stated to what extent that reduction may be affected; that is left to the discretion of the deputy head or the minister. It is a rather difficult matter to get through the meshes of such an act. I believe it is Solon who said that laws are like a spider's web, which stops flies and other insects but through which birds easily pass. Solon lived 600 years before Christ but this truth still holds good to-day. Look into the act providing pensions for high officials, and you may be inclined to think that the legislator has purposely woven a web of such a fabric that high officials might easily get through, while others would be captured.

Why should there be two weights and two measures? I sincerely believe that we should change such a state of things, without, of course, interfering with vested rights. Therein lies a real evil, and the law should be amended so as to be more equitable and fair to all. Nowhere else is such a law to be found. I am not an iconoclast, but if we are intent on managing things economically, that law should be changed as soon as possible. Do not attempt economy at the expense of the small wage-earners while letting the higher officials go scot free.

It is geting late, Mr. Speaker, and while I might go on speaking of a good many other things,—since we are allowed in connection with the budget to refer to various matters,—I shall cut short my remarks for the time being.

Mr. NANTEL.

Mr. C. A. WILSON (Laval). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I crave the indulgence of the House for undertaking at this late hour of the night to answer briefly the remarks made by my hon. friend and neighbour the hon. member for Terrebonne.

I merely wish briefly to take exception to certain peculiar and eccentric statements uttered from his lips; for instance, his concluding remarks to the effect that any question whatsoever can be discussed on the budget. That is surely a new doctrine. I am at a loss to imagine where my hon. friend could have got acquainted with constitutional and executive law; but assuredly he cannot have followed the same curriculum that I have, for this is the first time I ever heard this theory expounded. I came to Ottawa with a strong settled purpose of talking little but listening much. I wished to learn something and I have just learned from my hon. friend, that anything can be spoken on the budget. It is evident that he and I are not agreed upon this subject.

My hon friend spoke of the pension law. As I did not wish to misquote him, I have endeavoured rather to get at the real meaning of his words and if I mistake not, I believe he is opposed to such a law as that. I do not entirely disagree with him on this point. But before attempting to improve or repeal a statute, it is well that one should look at what was done not very long since. I would understand the position taken by my hon. friend had he the courage of his convictions, and were he, before this session is over, to call for the repeal of that pension law which favours all those whom he termed the dregs of power. Such are the words he uttered.

Mr. NANTEL. (Translation.) I never used that word. I said budget-fed.

Mr. WILSON. (Translation.) Well, let it be so, and I will help him if he likes to define what is properly meant by the budget-fed friends of the party, accentuating the expression if he so desires. It will be recalled that the legislation which was abrogated had been placed in our statute books in order to favour your ex-ministers, the late Sir A. P. Caron, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, and, last but not the least, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). Are the gentlemen intended by my hon. friend for Terrebonne (Mr. Nantel) to be the satiated of power? Or was the word aimed at such of his friends whom he called intelligent for benefiting by a statute passed quite a few years ago granting a pension to judges after fifteen years service? At all events, I would like to know what he thinks of those men who, as in the case of Yamaska county, went out campaigning against the government candidates, while at the same time receiving a good big fat pension from the government, under pretense of physical disability, or of him who, not satisfied with getting such a substantial pension, got elected a member of this House to secure the $2,500 indemnity attached to the job. I hardly think the hon. member knew what he was talking about when expounding such a principle in the tone he assumed before the House a while ago. The hon. member also alluded to what took place when the Postmaster General asked the House to increase the salary of certain employees of his department. The government have already started increasing the salaries. They have appointed a Civil Service Commission, and increased the salaries of the inside service. If I mistake not it is their intention to pursue that wise policy. A little consistency does not hurt anyone, not even the hon. gentlemen opposite, who have been clamouring ever since the session started that the government are spending extravagantly. I will merely answer to them: 'Gentlemen, tune your fiddles.'

My hon. friend thinks that as a whole, this pension law is nothing but a perfect squandering of the public money, inasmuch as the beneficiaries of it never have contributed one dollar into the pension fund. He is mistaken. Let him look at the statute and he will see there that the government hold back upon their employees' salaries a certain sum which in their old age will be refunded to them. I hold the public servants in high respect, and I do not want to see them go a begging when old. As regards the increase of the smaller salaries, let him look at that particular branch of the service with which I am especially acquainted, I mean the employees of the penitentiary. Their salary under the old regime was $500 only, but I was successful in having it raised to $600. This is again a happy reform brought on by the present government, which shows their good will towards the humbler offices of the service. Of course the hon. member, who was elected a Tory, dared not, and I know the reason why, attack the policy of his friends when they were in power.

He finds fault with the expenditure connected with the library, which he thinks, is out of proportion with those in the Washington library. I believe he was in Washington in his mind only. Had he been there at all, he would know how things are carried on there. I do not doubt of the correctness of the figures he quoted, but he does not know perhaps that the library at Washington cost $8,000,000 ; that electrical appliances and contrivances are in use which do away with perhaps one hundred employees. I invite him to call personally. Ours did not cost that amount, and I am not surprised at the number of employees which is required to give us an adequate service. It is therefore practically impossible to cut down expenses in that direction.

Such were the few observations I had to offer on the question of the pension law. I will conclude by referring to my hon. friend's first declaration. He was shocked at the Finance Minister capitalizing what was now lying at the bottom of the river near the city of Quebec. Had the Minister of Finance done what the hon. member for Terrebonne says he did, there is no question he could be held up to ridicule. But is that what he really did ? My hon. friend is a very clever finance man in St. Jerome ; he is even wealthy and I congratulate him. Let us take this for example: If he loaned $6,000 and the borrower did not pay him, would he charge this transaction to his revenue account or to capital account at the end of the year ? He would beyond doubt, charge it up to capital account. That is precisely what the Finance Minister did in charging this operation to capital. It is thus also for all monies spent on the National Transcontinental. They all go to make up this country's assets. That is my way of understanding public finances. When I take out of my capital a certain sum of money, I cannot but help debit my capital with a like sum. The hon. Finance Minister seems to me to have figured out in the same manner.

Mr. NANTEL. (Translation.) Should you lose all your capital, would you still figure it out as your capital ?

Mr. WILSON. (Translation.) If I lose all my capital, I charge the amount against my capital account, and the result is nil.

Mr. NANTEL. (Translation.) You will not come out of it as wealthy.

Mr. WILSON. (Translation.) Of course not. Supposing my farm is worth $10,000, and I borrow $10,000 on it. Practically I do not own a farm any more, but will that keep me from deriving the revenue from that farm for the time being ? It seems to me a skilful financier like my hon. friend, would be able to understand such a clear argument.

With these few remarks, Mr. Speaker, I will now resume my seat. I would have several observations to make yet, but I want my hon. friend from Terrebonne to sleep upon his speech, and I hope his slumber will not be too much disturbed.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE (Lisgar). Mr. Speaker, as the hour is getting pretty late I will promise not to keep you very much longer. Since the budget speech was delivered we have heard a great many different kinds of arguments, but it strikes me that what the farmer and the average business man want to know is what amount of taxes they are paying at the present time.

By looking at the record we will find that in 1896 each man, woman and child in Canada was paying $5.48 in taxation while at the present time we find that we are paying $11 per head. While we find that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) showed a surplus on the year's business we also find, by looking at the records, that we are $46,000,000 farther in debt. It struck me very forcibly how this would affect the province that I come from. By going into the figures I find that the province of Manitoba's share of this debt is something over $5,000,000. We have in that province about 2,000,000 acres of land under cultivation, and the debt of last year means a mortgage of $400 on every section of land under cultivation in the province of Manitoba. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance what the debt of this country will be at the end of four years. I had read a good deal about the Minister of Finance but I had never seen him until I came to this House. From what I had read and heard of the Minister of Finance I never knew of him as a joker until he delivered his budget speech. I am sure that the Minister of Finance must have been trying to get off a joke when he told the House that this government was a government that had held the land for the settler. I wonder if he forgets that almost the very first action of this government, after they came into power in 1896, was to try and give 375,000 acres of our western land to Mackenzie and Mann. Does he remember this government selling 250,000 acres of our homestead lands in the west for the paltry sum of $1 an acre? Every government that has ever held power in Canada, whether Reform or Conservative, has always held the homestead lands as a sacred trust of the people, but when this government came into power they sold even the homestead lands. They sold thousands and thousands of acres of our best coal lands to speculators and their friends. They gave leases of thousands and thousands of acres of our best grazing lands for a paltry sum and in some cases people could get these leases for almost a song. Does the Minister of Finance forget this government selling hundreds of miles of fishing rights in the western country for $10 per year, or, does he forget the timber limit deals that were put through by this government or that they even went so far as to traffic in the Indian lands? They were not satisfied with dealing in the white man's lands but we find that they took advantage of the Indians. The Indians are the same as orphans in this country; they are the wards of the people, we have charge of their resources and yet this government go to work and sell to their friends 39,000 acres of their land for $9,017. The purchasers, in a few weeks, in fact, before the deed is made out to them, turn it over to speculators for $101,813, thereby cleaning up, out of the Indian lands, over $90,000. Mr. Speaker, we have heard a good deal during this session about a man they call Bill Miner. Bill Miner took his life in his own hands, you may say, when he went into the Rocky Mountains, held up the Canadian Pacific Railway express and stole a sum of money from it. I consider that Bill Miner is a prince beside these men who hide themselves behind the law and rob the orphans of the country. I do not intend occupying the time of the House very long, but there is a matter I wish to bring before the government and the House and that is in connection with an interview that the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) gave his newspaper in Winnipeg on the 10th February last. It is as follows:

Bluff and Bluster—Mr. Sifton's Comment on Mr. Roblin's Defence of the Voters' Lists.

Hon. Clifford Sifton, who arrived in the city Monday from Ottawa, was interviewed yesterday in regard to Mr. Roblin's statement in the legislature regarding the provincial voters' lists. Mr. Roblin claimed that the lists were clean and satisfactory.

Mr. Sifton said that the statement of Mr. Roblin was untrue and that Mr. Roblin knew it to be untrue. The lists were flagrantly stuffed as every one knew perfectly well who had anything to do with the late election.

The assertion of the provincial premier, Mr. Sifton said, was a piece of impudent bluff and bluster.

When the last election was over the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) asked the hon. member for Brandon the reason why the elections had gone against him in the province of Manitoba, and the hon. member for Brandon made practically the same reply to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister repeated that same statement, or pretty nearly the same statement, on the 22nd January last in this House. I claim that if the statement made by the Prime Minister on the floor of this House on the 22nd January last is true, and if the the statement made by the hon. member for Brandon in this interview with the Winnipeg 'Free Press' is true, I, for one, have no right to a seat in this House. If those statements are false, as I claim they are absolutely false, then the hon. member for Brandon has no right to a seat in this House. I do not intend to discuss the merits and demerits of the Manitoba voters' lists at the present time, more than to say that the electoral lists for the province of Manitoba are the fairest lists that are compiled in Canada to-day. The judges have complete charge of the lists in that province and there cannot be one name added or one name stricken off without the sanction of the judges. I was elected in the constituency of Lisgar, Manitoba, by 105 majority, and if this government will appoint a royal commission to inquire into the lists in that constituency, and if they can find 106 Conservatives improperly put on that list, or if they can find 106 Reformers improperly left off that list, I will resign my seat, provided, the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) will agree to resign his seat if his statements are not true, as I claim they are not true. I hope, Mr. Speaker, I make myself clear on this question. As the hour is very late I will resume my seat.

On motion of Mr. Nesbitt, the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 12.30 a.m. Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 23, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 152) to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act. He said: The object is to give a better definition of the word 'vessel' in the Act. A wrecked vessel is there defined to include merely the keel, hull and machinery, but not the equipment, tackle, cargo, stores and ballast. When a vessel is wrecked, they generally remove at once all that is of value in it, and nothing is left except the hull and machinery, which is most of the time not of much value. Consequently when we call for tenders for the removal of a wreck, we have to deal with an article which is almost of no value and becomes a loss to the country; and the object is to declare that when a vessel is wrecked, the cargo should not be removed but form part of the claim which must exist on the vessel for the cost of removal of the wreckage. We ask also to be allowed to amend the law in order to declare that wrecks shall be removed immediately without the necessity of obtaining a formal order in council, but simply on the order of the minister. The reason for the change is this: When a wreck takes place, it sometimes is absolutely necessary to have it removed without delay, but when we have to go before the Governor in Council some time is lost. It may take a good deal of time before we can get an order in council, and in the meantime navigation may be seriously affected. We are asking also for power to regulate the cables which are put in rivers for ferry-boats. The request to do this has been made to the government by different provinces and especially by the province of Manitoba. In that province the complaint is made that cables are put in some of its navigable rivers and there is no provision in the law to regulate them. The object is to provide that they shall only be laid in such a way as not to interfere with navigation. We wish also to improve the regulations for the opening and closing of draw-bridges and their operation. This gives power to the government to make some regulations in that connection.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 153) respecting the National Transcontinental Railway. He said: This is a very trifling Bill. A bridge has to be constructed over the Red river between the cities of Winnipeg and St. Bonifice by the Transcontinental Commission. These cities are anxious to make some arrangement by which they can construct a bridge for vehicles as well in connection with this bridge. The legislature of Manitoba has given the city of Winnipeg the power to make such an arrangement if it can, and this will allow the Intercolonial Railway Commission to make arrangements, if they think it is advisable, for the construction of a traffic bridge in connection with the railway.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 154) to amend the Act respecting the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal. He said: The object is to extend the boundaries of the harbour of Montreal. To-day these boundaries extend from Verdun to Longue Point, and it is proposed to continue them from Longue Point to the extreme north eastern end of the island. We are also seeking power to declare that the port of Montreal shall be in the future under the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The port of Montreal is now that part of the River St. Lawrence which extends from Portneuf to Montreal. That part of the river was declared some years ago the port of Montreal for pilotage purposes. In 1903, a change was made by which the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal ceased to be the pilot-age authority, and that authority was then vested in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. No change, however, was made in the law itself, and as we are amending the law this year for the purposes that I have just mentioned, I thought it would be just as well to declare that the port of Montreal should, in that respect, cease to be under the control of the Harbour Commissioners. As a matter of fact, that has already been done. However, the right to make the rules of the road on that part of the river has hitherto been exercised by the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal. In all other ports of this country, the rules of the road are made by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and it was thought advisable, as the harbour commissioners had ceased to be the pilotage authority, that the rules of the road should be made by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, as is the case in all the other navigable waters. These are the only changes proposed, except a small change declaring beyond doubt that the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal have the right to operate railways within the limits of the harbour.

Mr. MONK. Are we to understand that the commission itself is to be abolished and the department to take over the entire management of the port?

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh no, the Bill simply provides that the commissioners will cease to exercise any authority with regard to the rules of the road and pilotage in the port of Montreal; as to the management of the harbour itself the authority of the existing Harbour Commission will continue.

Mr. MONK. Is it intended by this resolution to give effect to the report of the Transportation Commission that the port of Montreal be made a national and a free port?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not understand that the Transportation Commission ever asked that it be made a free port. I know it was suggested it should be made a national port, but it is not the intention by this Bill to make any change in that respect.

Mr. MONK. Did the commission not recommend that the port be made a free port?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember that.

Mr. GEOFFRION. Before the Bill is read the first time I wish to make a suggestion for the consideration of the minister. I would ask him to consider the advisability of extending the jurisdiction of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal to the south side of the St. Lawrence. Their jurisdiction now extends, I believe, only to the centre of the river. The business of the harbour of Montreal has increased so that the harbour is now somewhat congested and the change I suggest would undoubtedly be an advantage. They might be given jurisdiction over the south shore of that part of the river commencing at the Victoria bridge and including St. Lambert, Longueuil and Boucherville. With comparatively little dredging a channel could be provided affording navigation there, and wharfs and probably elevators could be built which would relieve the congestion now existing in the harbour of Montreal. I do not see why we have not navigation upon that side of the St. Lawrence. St. Lambert is a town which is increasing rapidly and so is Longueuil. The minister knows that there are several railways now in those towns. The Delaware and Hudson Railway is building a very important road from Montreal to Quebec. Then we have the Grand Trunk Railway and several American railways besides the Intercolonial Railway, all coming to St. Lambert and an electric railway will soon connect the town with Montreal. That part of the St. Lawrence is fast increasing in importance and I think it would be to the general advantage if jurisdiction over it were vested in the Montreal Harbour Commission. I hope the minister will take this matter into consideration and consult the Harbour Commissioners, who have promised to consider it. Of course I do not make this proposition solely for the advantage of that part of the country; the suggested change would also be of advantage to the port and city of Montreal because it would be very easy to build elevators there which cannot be built on the Montreal side.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me we are drifting into a general discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER. This is the first reading of the Bill.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is perfectly in order.

Mr. GEOFFRION. The minister has explained his Bill and before he proceeds with it I wish to make a suggestion and to explain to him as fully as possible the advantages to be derived from my suggestion. The minister knows that the valleys of the St. Lawrence and the Richelieu are probably the most fertile and prosperous parts of the province of Quebec and now he has an opportunity to come to our relief. We have been deprived of all these communications with the city of Montreal and it is thought that if jurisdiction over the south shore was vested in the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal there would very soon be a great change in that part of the country. I need not go further at present as the Bill will come up for discussion in the committee. I hope the minister will be able to favourably consider my suggestion before the Bill again comes before us.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. S. SHARPE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 155) to amend the Bank Act. He said: The provisions of this Bill are very simple. It merely provides that the balances that remain in the hands of chartered banks for over six years shall be transferred to the government as trustees and custodians of a fund on behalf of those entitled to them. The Bill is very simple.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

On the orders of the day being called.

Mr. LENNOX. I wish to ask the Minister of Railways about a return referring to tenders, &c., of the Transcontinental Railway which was ordered on March 3, more than a month and a half ago. We wish to have information as to the tenders put in, the estimates in connection with these tenders and generally information as to the estimated cost of the road at the time these tenders were accepted. The minister seems to have lost track of it. We have partial information by this return, which does not appear to be satisfactory, from mere glancing over it. But as to the order made on the 3rd of March, no attempt seems to have been made to comply with it, though it was very specific.

Mr. GRAHAM. This will be prepared by the Commission of the Transcontinental. They have been asked for it, and I will call their attention to the matter again.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the minister instruct us on Monday as to how the matter stands, or tell us when we may expect it?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will have the return if I possibly can. I will give whatever information I can get from the commission.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would ask the Postmaster General when I may expect an answer to the order which was passed on the 8th of February regarding contracts for carrying the mails which expire in the month of April, 1909, and have been renewed without calling for tenders.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will attend to that this afternoon.

Mr. FOSTER. I would call the attention of the minister to the return brought down from the Transcontinental Commissioners with reference to the employments and employees. There is one schedule they do not fill out, they say it will take two or three weeks to get the information. I would like the minister to inform them that the information is required, and that the return is not satisfactory without that.

Mr. GRAHAM. As to the residences?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, they can get that in about three weeks.

EXPROPRIATION OF LANDS BY RAILWAYS.

Mr. D. D. MACKENZIE (North Cape Breton). I desire to call to the notice of the Minister of Railways and Canals a matter under the Railway Act that seems to be ground for complaint in several parts of the country, that is, in respect to the powers of expropriation of lands for right of way by railway companies. There is provision in section 122 of the Railway Act which provides that the price of lands taken for right of way shall be the value of the land at the time that certain plans and specifications were filed in the registry of deeds for the district in which the lands lie. It is said that that provision, and that privilege, is being abused by certain railway companies, who put their plans on record and then allow the matter to stand for an indefinite period.

Mr. SPEAKER. No debate can take place at this point of our proceedings.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then I would ask the Minister if he thinks that any remedy could be applied, so that the company would be compelled to proceed with the expropriation, as seems to be the intention of the Act, and not be allowed to wait for an indefinite time.

Mr. GRAHAM. That matter has been engaging the attention of the department for some little time. In an amendment to the Railway Act I have introduced, I have a clause dealing with that, which I think will remedy the real evil complained of by my hon. friend.

MONTREAL A FREE PORT.

Mr. MONK. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. L. P. Brodeur) to page 23 of the Report of the Royal Commission on Transportation:

> Your commission recommend that Montreal be made by the government a free port along the lines hereinafter set forth in this report.

Perhaps my hon. friend will make some change in his Bill.

Mr. BRODEUR. I was speaking, of course, subject to correction.

BOARD OF MANAGEMENT FOR THE INTERCOLONIAL.

Mr. EMMERSON. I desire to ask the Minister of Railways if the Board of Management of the Intercolonial have been appointed, and if so, have they been appointed by order in council, and will he lay upon the table a copy of the order in council, with the instructions defining the powers of the Board of Management?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Board of Management of the Intercolonial have been appointed by order in council. I had intended to give the information to the House when my estimates came up in connection with the working expenses. However, I will lay on the table a copy of the order appointing them, and outlining their duties.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the minister not think it would be a proper proceeding to make an announcement of that kind in the House first instead of at a party banquet or function?

Mr. GRAHAM. I made the announcement in the House that such a board was to be appointed. I do not think there is anything out of place in making the announcement I did as to the personnel of the board, as, with one exception, that personnel had been announced in the newspapers for two or three weeks.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I entirely disagree with the view the hon. gentleman has expressed.

LICENSE FOR TAKING LOBSTERS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if he would be good enough to give information, and if necessary bring down the correspondence, if there be correspondence, with reference to the refusal to grant a license for packing lobsters to William Charles Henley, of Spry bay, in the county of Halifax. I ask this because it is alleged that the reason which was given in his case has not been applied to other persons in the county of Halifax. I am speaking only of that county.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember the incident. I will be glad to bring down the papers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the minister make an examination into the circumstances?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding, that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Mr. E. W. NESBITT (North Oxford). As a new member of the House I have listened very attentively to the various speeches that have been delivered on this motion. What has struck me most forcibly is the wonderful difference of opinion expressed by hon. members on both sides of the House. I cannot say I am surprised at that, because we know that it is very seldom indeed that many people agree entirely on any financial matter. That fact proves the absolute necessity of having at the head of the finances of this country a man that we have faith in. I can certainly say that of the hon. Minister of Finance who has had charge of the finances of this country for the last twelve years. Personally I am willing to acknowledge that it would be difficult to find any other gentleman in the whole country more capable than the present Minister of Finance to look after our finances, both as regards the revenue received and the expenditure. Hence we see the necessity of having a supreme head of the finances in whom we have confidence.

After listening to the criticisms of hon. members on the other side of the House, and leaving out of view the superfluity of words and the extra flow of language which characterized them, they practically amount to two charges, namely, that our expenditure has been too high, and that our loans have cost us too much to float, thereby impairing the credit of Canada. Even the speech of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), if you make deduction of the vivid imagery and dramatic eloquence with which his speech abounded, only added a warning to the Finance Minister that the American people will probably adopt a maximum and a minimum tariff. I would like to look at the cost of the loans for the last few years. I am not going into figures very much, because you know the old adage that figures cannot lie, as stated by some wise man in the past, and also the equally old adage that you can prove anything by figures. Therefore, I am going to look at it, as far as I can, from the simple, practical, every day business man's standpoint. The cost of loans since 1897, some hon. gentlemen say, has very much exceeded the cost of loans previous to that time. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has told us, and I think quite correctly, that the loan that was floated in 1897 was an exceptional loan, that it was an exceptional period and all of us who have kept track of the loan market for a number of years will fully agree with him that the period from 1896 really until 1902 inclusive was an exceptional period in the history of the world as far as the interest cost on loans was concerned.

The hon. member for North Toronto has stated that the cost of floating the loans of this government has exceeded the cost of floating the loans of the Conservative government previously in all instances except in that one case. I have, since that speech was made, looked carefully into the cost of floating the loans and I think that the cost is exactly the same as it was at that time, but that the system of making the loans has very materially changed. It would be idle for us to deny, if we have followed the loan market for any length of time, that the system of making loans has changed. No Minister of Finance can regulate that. The fact is that you have to adapt yourself to the system in vogue at the time and, of recent years, the system has been that you have to go to the underwriters. The reason for that is very simple. The loaning public have faith in some underwriter who has made a reputation for himself, and he passes on the loan practically speaking before it goes to the general public. I do not know that that is a wise precaution. I believe it is but, in any event, it is the system that is in vogue at the present time and it is a system that has to be followed not only by large corporations, such as railway and loan corporations, but by governments. It is the only system that you can take advantage of. The reason why interest has been so much dearer than it was in 1897, is because the loan market has run higher. Under this system of underwriting, loans that are put on the market are scrutinized by the underwriters and the public therefore take hold of them. There is more competition in the loan market and in making a loan on behalf of the country or on behalf of any institution you have to bid against the competition. You have to be governed by that competition. That is no reason to say that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has not done just as well with the loans that he has floated for this country as any person else could have done, and I believe he has done better than could have been done by almost any person else. However, he has done all that could be done and our loans have not suffered in comparison with similar loans that have been floated by other countries. We all know that Japan, Russia, Germany and the great countries of Europe have paid more for their loans than we have paid during the same period. What more could you say to the credit of the Finance Minister in floating these loans?

The hon. member for North Toronto says that the Minister of Finance says that in calculating the cost to the people of this country it is not fair to say that the indebtedness per capita is a proper criterion to take. He says that even if we do calculate on a less rate per dollar it costs $11 per head to live. I think that one of the most creditable things that can be said of the Liberal party in governing this country is that the people had means enough to pay the greater amount, had means enough to purchase sufficient goods which they did at a lower rate on the dollar. Even if the cost were $11 per head as against $6.50 per head it reflects all the more credit upon this party that the people were able to purchase that much more goods. The hon. member for North Toronto says that the wise business man, when he makes his calculations for the year, sits down and figures what goods he is going to require; that is his raw material, I suppose, if he be a manufacturer, and his stock in trade, if he be a merchant. He also figures or estimates the amount of business that he is going to do. The hon. member for North Toronto says that we do not do so. It is quite true that any reasonably decent business man does estimate what the cost of his goods is going to be, does estimate what quantity of goods he is going to require during the next year and what his sales are going to be. But, that is only an estimate after all. He does not absolutely know. There are few business men who know the year before the quantity of goods that they are going to put out next year. There are some business men and some manufacturers who have to estimate three and four years ahead what goods or what raw material they are going to require. Supposing that the hard times came would not they also have incurred expense that the hon. member for North Toronto might equally as well say should have been avoided? The Minister of Finance can only make estimates, but there are certain forced expenditures which not only this government, but every other government in the world finds it impossible to foresee. The mother country has been forced to tax more than she would like to tax. Every country in Europe is forced to tax until the people are almost broken down to meet military and naval expenditures. In our country, while we have no military or naval expenditures, look at the transportation that we have to provide for.

Look at the various other expenditures that are absolutely forced upon the government, whether they will or not It is unfair criticism to say that many of the public expenditures ought to have been cut off some years ago, because every intelligent business man knows that you cannot cut off a business in the middle of its operations. Every member of this House who knows anything about business, and I think most of us do, knows that in the year 1907 and the first part of 1908 the great industrial and transportation corporations of the country would like to have cut down their expenditure, but they found it impossible to do so. No matter how prescient they may have been they could not have foreseen the hard times of 1907 and 1908, and although many of them, as early as July and August, 1907, saw the depression coming, yet they had their output provided for and they had contracts for supplies let and they had to carry on their business as they had been doing in the past. How could the Minister of Finance have foreseen these times of stress any more than the great captains of industry in the commercial world. But, the hon. gentleman did as other prudent men and he now has wisely reduced the public expenditure. The government had made preparations for certain expenditures, just as business people had, and if they had stayed their hand and interrupted the progress of the country to that extent, I can imagine how hon. gentlemen opposite would have raised their voices to Heaven in denunciation of such a policy. The hon. member for North Toronto quoted some figures from a little book published by Mr. Woods of Toronto, and as I remember the figures quoted by the hon. gentleman they went to show that during the last four years $802,000,000 had been the extent of the borrowings all over this country. I have no doubt these figures are perfectly correct, and if the hon. member (Mr. Foster) or any other man had wanted to preach a sermon from the Epistle of Fielding to the Canadians he could not have taken a more appropriate text to prove the prosperity of this country. What enabled the people of this country to borrow that great sum in four years if it was not that the wise policy of the government had firmly established the credit of Canada and of Canadian concerns on the money markets of the world?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend misapprehended the statement and therefore his argument does not rest on a sound foundation. I did not take it upon myself to say, nor did Mr. Woods, that this country had in eight years borrowed $802,000,000. That would have been a most extraordinary thing.

Mr. NESBITT. That is what I understood the hon. gentleman to say.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is mistaken. What Mr. Woods said was that at a certain date, I think the 31st of December, 1908, that was the amount of bonds of three denominations that were now running, but many of them may have been borrowed sixteen or twenty years ago.

Mr. NESBITT. Well, Mr. Speaker, we have it stated by a reliable financial authority that Canada borrowed all told $650,000,000 last year, and therefore my argument is still sound, that the high standing of this country has been so established under the wise policy of the Liberal government that the credit of our railway corporations, our industrial corporations, our mining companies, and all other concerns, is so high that they were able to borrow this vast sum, and even to become competitors of the Dominion government in the borrowing market. It is not so many years ago since the only loans that could be floated in Canada at any reasonable interest were the loans made by the Dominion government. But now, any reasonable proposition coming from Canada is so highly regarded not only in England but in Germany and France that it can obtain money just as easily as can the Dominion government, or for that matter the British government itself. And why is that? It is because the policy of the Canadian government has been so wise and so progressive that Canadian concerns are no longer confined to the money markets of England, or of the United States, or of Canada, but can go to France or to Germany and raise money with the greatest facility. France is probably the greatest lending country in the world and to-day the stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway is sold in France as readily as in England. This again is a tribute to the policy of the government which has laid so solidly the credit of Canadian business enterprises. One hon. member on the other side told us that a week ago in New York money was loaned at 1½ per cent and 1⅞ per cent, but that money was raised on call loans and everybody knows that call loans in New York are sometimes down as low as even 1 per cent. But that is an entirely different proposition from business loans. At the very time when call loans are going at 1 per cent let any man try to float on the same market a time loan for 30 or 40 years, and he will see what he will have to pay for it. One hon. gentleman opposite cites the instance of a three months' loan which had been floated in New York the other day, but what has that to do with the question? A loan for three months is a very short date loan. Any reasonable ordinary man can say what the money market is going to be for three months; but how many men dare say what the money market is going to be for five years from now, let alone for forty years from now? How many people are going to risk their money in long-time loans when there are more demands for money all the time on things which are absolutely safe, so far as things can be safe in this world, and paying them five or six per cent interest? Do you expect our Minister of Finance to float loans against the demands of other countries or corporations, and float them cheaper than they do? If so, you expect something that no human being can do, and I suppose our Minister of Finance does not claim to be more than human.

The hon. Minister of Finance has been criticised for having floated short-date loans. I submit that that is purely and simply an opinion. I might express the opposite opinion. Any gentleman on either side of the House can express opinions or make assertions, but that does not make them true. During the last few years, while money has been high, I think, with all due deference, that the Finance Minister was wise in not trying to negotiate long-time loans when he did not know the moment the money market would be in a more satisfactory condition. It is all very well to point out that he paid 1½ per cent commission on those loans; but suppose he had paid 2 per cent. That is 2 per cent on only one year, on the face amount of the loan, which means that if he got a loan for 20 years or 30 years, the 2 per cent of cost would be wiped out at ½ per cent per year in four years, and for the balance of the period there would be a profit to us.

One hon. member, in the effort to show that our credit was impaired, said that the Bank of British North America had, on some day, written off a certain proportion on some bonds of Canada which it held, because they were depreciated in value, but had not written off British consols. Is that a fair criticism? British consols, if they do belong to old England, are on exactly the same basis as our bonds. If that bank chose to write off our securities, and did not choose to write off British consols, is that any reason why it could not have done so? That is only the opinion of the manager of one bank; and while I have a great deal of respect for experience and for the opinions of some bank managers, there are others for whose opinions I have not so much respect—and they only have their opinion, after all. So I do not think that is a fair criticism. If you go back over the last ten or twelve years, and follow Canadian government securities on the British market, you will find that they have not fluctuated as much as British consols; and I have at no time noticed that the securities of any country, of the same class, have been in better demand than the securities of the Dominion of Canada during that time. That is what speaks. It is not what we can borrow money for; it is what we can borrow money for in comparison with other people on an equal basis.

This brings me to a suggestion. I believe, with one of the hon. members on the other side of the House, and with my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. M. Clark), in sinking fund loans. I have always believed in them. It is quite true that we are getting value for our money in the promotion of the transportation of this country, and in various public works we are building, and that the future should pay for these, at any rate to a large extent. It is also true that the future commences to-morrow. Therefore we should, in my judgment, commence to pay for them, or prepare to pay for them, at least partially, to-morrow. When a loan is floated, we should at once begin to prepare for payment. I do not believe we should borrow money—and if you take the Finance Minister's report, you will find that we do not for building ordinary public works such as public buildings. I believe we should pay for these as we go along; but for great public works such as we are forced to build to maintain the progress of the country, there is no reason why posterity should not help to pay; and I believe that every man who has studied finance to any extent at all, will agree with that.

Some hon. members on the other side of the House say that we should not have cut down our expenditures on ordinary public works. There is a good deal in that argument, because during the last two years we could have built very much more cheaply than we did in the previous five or six years. But the hon. Finance Minister did not think it wise, nor did any of his supporters, that that should have been done, and we are perfectly willing to abide by his opinion.

One hon. member the other night said that the Bank of Montreal has refused loans to private corporations because this government had borrowed during 1907 or 1908, $20,000,000. The hon. Finance Minister challenged him at the time to say if he had ever been told that by an authority in the Bank of Montreal. The hon. gentleman did not answer that question. That was a very unfair criticism. I do not think, nor do I believe that he or any other man in this House thinks, that it was because of the borrowings of the Dominion government from the Bank of Montreal that loans were refused to private customers. Every member of this House knows that the reason why the banks refused to advance more money to private customers was that they thought that the manufacturers and merchants of this country were promoting their businesses too rapidly, and that the banks should check them a little—probably a very wise precaution under the circumstances. Everybody knows that it was the actual money itself which was scarce. Everybody knows that the banks were not afraid to make loans but were afraid that the money might be called for. The money however, was not actually taken out of the hands of the Bank of Montreal by the Dominion government. The banks did not think that the money would be taken out and put into the minister's pocket or hidden in some cellar. They were not afraid of that, so that I do not believe that the criticism was a fair one.

The hon. gentleman from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) sounded the warning, with reference to the tariff, that the United States will apply their maximum unless we give them the same preference as we give the French. Well, so far as I have seen in the papers, the question of a maximum and minimum tariff has not as yet been brought up in the American Senate, and is not at all settled. Was there any particular necessity for the warning? If you take the French treaty and see the articles on which France is given a preference over and above every other country except the mother country, and by the way the hon. gentleman said that they were even given a preference over the British, but if you will go through the schedule carefully, as I have done, you will only find two items of which that can be said, and those are two that we never have imported from Great Britain. You will see that should the United States apply their maximum tariff to us unless we give them the French preference tariff, there are very few items in the preference we give the French which we import from the United States. It is true that the minimum tariff, applied to a great many articles under the French treaty, would affect us to a large extent, if brought in from the United States, but I do not see that there will be any difficulty in arranging with the United States when the time comes for doing so.

Now, with reference to the Finance Minister himself, when we come to consider the pressure brought on him, both by members on the opposite side as on this, to change the tariff in the interest of some particular locality or corporation or individuals, we must give him great credit for the stability he has put into our tariff. And after all we must admit that stability in our tariff is the main thing in keeping faith with the rest of the world. We cannot go on changing our tariff daily, we cannot keep tinkering at it every year, without doing harm to some particular branch of merchandise, but to merchandise in general.

Again, when we come to consider the pressure brought upon the Finance Minister, not alone by members on this side but by members opposite, to incur large public expenditures—and just as much or practically as much does the pressure come from the other side as from this for extraordinary expenditures in various localities—do you not think that it requires a man of steel, let alone of iron, to withstand that pressure? And then when the Finance Minister does yield to pressure, and when expenditures are incurred, we find these hon. gentlemen opposite, who are urging him to spend the money, crying out to high heaven that he is ruining the country. I believe that our Finance Minister deserves a great deal of credit for firmness and decision and foresight in administering our finances, and that brings me to the fact that my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) told us that next year we would add $70,000,000 to our national debt and the year following $38,000,000, and he painted a very dark picture indeed of what was going to become of us. Well, I might reply in the old words, 'Oh, ye of little faith.' You cannot run a country's business or a private business, if you are going to sit down and figure out the expenditure for the next ten or five years without figuring out also the revenue. The world is not going to stop. Why are we building the National Transcontinental Railway? Why did we construct our various canals? The object was to add to our revenue by bringing in people to the country who will in turn contribute large receipts to the Dominion treasury. Does the hon. gentleman think we are going to stand still? Although not an optimist, I do not agree with those who draw those gloomy pictures of the future. There is no reason why, with a continuance of the reasonable common sense which this government has shown in the last twelve years, we will not be just as well off, and perhaps a great deal better off at the end of the next twelve years, than we are to-day. As the country keeps on growing, no doubt we will be able to provide for all the debts we may incur during the next ten years; and I trust that this government will not consider too seriously the dark side of the picture but will go on with the necessary expenditures for the improvement of our transportation facilities. And these facilities are, after all, owing to our peculiar geographical formation, the most important and urgent question we have to deal with.

One hon. member last evening pictured to us, in his advocacy of a higher tariff, the difference between the tariff on horses and cattle, &c., going into the United States and those coming in here. Well, I have heard a good deal of talk, since I have been here, about the farmers. A good many speakers on both sides have talked about this and the other thing being done for the farmer. Let me tell them that our farmers are not worrying a bit about the tariff. In my section they do not want a tariff equal to that of the United States on horses and cattle. They can fight the United States, if you will give them cheap transportation. That is all they want. They can compete with the United States or any other country if given a fair show.

This same hon. gentleman told us also that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) had spent only $7,000,000 during the last ten years on agriculture in this country. But he forgot that at least one half of the money we have spent on transportation should be charged to agriculture. There is not a man in this country who knows more about agriculture than does the minister of that department (Mr. Fisher.)

So far as I am concerned, and I know something about farming, I am not an imaginary, but an everyday farmer, and I know something about what the farmers think, and I have just as good a class of farmers in my good old county of North Oxford as are to be found in the world to-day.

Let me tell my hon. friend that the farmers are not worrying a bit. They realize the weight of the old saying or the dispensation that comes down to us from the Bible: 'Bear ye one another's burdens.' We must remember, no matter what our positions may be, no matter to what class we belong, that we have to a certain extent to bear one another's burdens. I have no doubt that if a vote were taken tomorrow the farmer would be willing to do away with all duties. The farmer does not want protection from the United States, he can fight the United States on even terms. The farmer is willing to pay a reasonable duty, he is willing to pay his share of the cost of carrying on the government, he is willing to do what we are all willing to do, to tax others and to be taxed himself in order to raise the necessary revenues of this country, but he is willing to pay a revenue tariff only.

I do not think that any hon. members need worry about the farmer as far as existing duties between Canada and the United States are concerned. We are getting along very well and I have no doubt will continue to do so. This continual harping on what is done for the farmer, what is spent for the farmer and what should be done for him is all a deception. What would hon. gentlemen opposite, if in power, do for the farmer in addition to what is now being done? It is true that we are asking the Minister of Agriculture to assist us further with cold storage facilities. Do we want him to plow for us, to raise our pigs and sheep? No, what we want him to do is to increase the cold storage and transportation facilities just as rapidly as they can be increased. We are willing to wait in a common sense manner for what has to be done, the present government are doing remarkably well for the farmer, cold storage facilities are being established as rapidly as possible. No man deserves more credit than the present Minister of Agriculture for the assistance he has granted to the farmer. An attempt at deception is made in connection with the expenditure made for the benefit of the farmer. The farmer, beyond all doubt, gets the benefit of at least half the moneys spent on the improvement of the transportation facilities of Canada. You may say that the benefit of the other half goes to the merchants and the manufacturers if you will. But the western railroads, which, after all, have entailed the greatest cost in connection with our system of transportation, are built largely for the benefit of the farmer, although of course they to a large extent benefit the manufacturer by enabling him to ship his goods to the west. I do not believe in urging the Minister of Agriculture to establish to a large extent what are called industrial farms. I do believe in experimental stations which are very different from industrial farms. There is nothing in our section of the country of which the farmers think less than the so-called industrial farm where there is a large staff and heavy expense. What they believe in is experimental stations where experiments can be tried out at the public expense which the farmer could not afford to try out for himself. These experimental stations afford valuable object lessons and the literature sent out on the various experiments is of great value. That is all our farmer is anxious for; he can take care of himself, he does not want anybody here to tell him how to grow pigs or milk cows—he knows these things from experience, the great teacher.

I do not believe there is any ground for attacking the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) on his budget this year. That is proved by the way in which our friends of the opposition have wandered into all kinds of subjects, they have talked about everything else—but they have not attacked the budget.

Mr. D. HENDERSON (Halton). Mr. Speaker, in this, the 13th week of the session, it is not my purpose to detain the House at any very great length. The Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) told us, in opening his budget speech, that this was his 13th budget. As we are all aware this is the 13th year of Liberal rule in this country. By the way, I have often heard it said that the number 13 is an unlucky number, and it seems to me that the government, more especially the Finance Minister, must realize that there is some truth in that old saying. The Finance Minister in this, the 13th year of his rule and of the regime of the Liberal party, finds that the national debt of Canada has been increasing by leaps and bounds. The expenditure has been increasing in the same degree, and I have no doubt that the Finance Minister, with his 13 colleagues around him, has had a great deal of worry as to how he was to provide for the hundred and thirteen millions of dollars that he spent in one year, and as to how he was going to satisfy the people of this country that the Grand Trunk Pacific would be completed at an expense of not more than thirteen millions.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the unlucky number too.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that this unlucky number has been following the hon. gentleman all the way through. Taxation also in this 13th year of Liberal rule is increasing. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) looks at me through his spectacles, but I draw his attention to the fact that in his famous table of average duties on goods dutiable and free, compiled every year and placed in the pages of the Trade and Navigation returns, the average rate of duty for the year 1908 was larger than it was in the previous year.

Mr. PATERSON. Not much.

Mr. HENDERSON. About 61, a very considerable increase indeed. Not only has this 13th year been an unlucky year in the increase of the debt, the increase of the expenditure and the increase of taxation, but it has been an unlucky year in the borrowings of the government, and in the high rate of interest which they have been compelled to pay. In the disclosures of royal commissions the government cannot deny that they have been unlucky. Matters have been brought out that did not redound to the credit of at least one or two departments of this government, and I have no doubt that in this respect they will regard this 13th year as the unlucky year of their term. In another way it has been an unlucky year, inasmuch as the revenue has declined $11,500,000 during the year, which is a very considerable decline in revenue when we take into consideration the enormous expenditures and the obligations that we are called upon to meet. In another sense it has been unlucky; the boasted surplus, which always formed an important part of the deliverance of the Minister of Finance, has practically almost disappeared, dwindled down to a miserable million and a half dollars, whereas in the previous year he was able to tell this House that he had a surplus of some $19,000,000.

By the way, there seems to be considerable difference of opinion amongst members of the government as to whether there should be a surplus at all. One member of the government, I recollect in former years, did not think there should be any surplus, and he ridiculed a Finance Minister who could not calculate the requirements of the country without having to take too much money out of the pockets of the people, because if a Finance Minister has a surplus it is only an evidence that he has failed to grasp exactly what the requirements of the country were. No Finance Minister ought to claim credit for taking out of the pockets of the people more money than is required for the business of the country. Permit me to read from an old 'Hansard' which I picked up in the library the other day, giving the opinion of the present Minister of Customs on this question. The Minister of Customs in 1883 was discussing the budget of Sir Leonard Tilley, who claimed at that time to have a surplus. By the way, I may say that Sir Leonard Tilley had a very happy way of dealing with surpluses. When he found he had too much revenue he simply reduced it by placing some necessary article on the free list, and in this way tea and coffee were placed upon the free list, instead of taking taxes out of the pockets of the people in order to show a surplus. The Minister of Customs in that year used these words as recorded in the 'Hansard':

> When the government find they have beyond doubt a surplus, when they can calculate to a certainty on having one, it is their bounden duty to reduce taxation. It is no part of the duty of a Finance Minister to extract more money out of the pockets of the people than is absolutely wanted to carry on public affairs.

I do not know whether the Minister of Customs stands by that opinion to-day. I read further:

> Let me point out to the hon. gentleman that if the Chancellor of the Exchequer of the United Kingdom was to have a surplus, in proportion to their revenue, equal to that which the hon. gentleman has boasted of to-night, he would have a surplus of $82,000,000. Fancy what would be said of a Chancellor of the Exchequer in England if he could not estimate the requirements of the public service nearer than $82,000,000. He would be ridiculed as unable to grasp the financial condition of the country.

Does the Minister of Customs hold to that opinion to-day? Is that the opinion he has of his colleague the Minister of Finance, that because he has a surplus from year to year he is unable to discharge the duties of his office, he is unable to grasp the business of the country? Possibly he may tell us when he speaks whether he has revised that opinion or whether he stands by it.

Mr. PATERSON. There is perhaps a context.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Sutherland) ridiculed the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) for having a deficit in the latter years of the reign of the Conservative party. By the way, I may remark here that I am going to make a slight difference in my address from nearly every member on the other side of the House, who has made the hon. member for North Toronto the chief figure or text of his speech. I think the hon. member for North Toronto is perfectly able to take care of himself, and I do not propose, during my remarks, to use him simply as a text. I may say however, that I think the hon. member for North Essex might have been a little more fair with the hon. member for North Toronto. He claimed that in the last three years of the Conservative regime there was a deficit of $5,700,000. I grant that was the case; but it only goes to show the wisdom of the Finance Minister of that day. A series of bad times, or a depression I might call it, was setting in about the year 1891. It was evident that the outlook was not very rosy for some years to come, and the Minister of Finance of that day, acting as a wise statesman, says: We will remove some of the taxes, and leave the money in the pockets of the people; and by a stroke of his pen he struck off the duties on raw sugar, and relieved the people of Canada, in the five years from 1891 to 1896, of a taxation equal to about $19,000,000. Had the Minister of Finance chosen at that time to continue that taxation, to continue the duties on raw sugar, instead of having a deficit of $5,700,000 in those three years, he would have had a very respectable surplus indeed.

Now I am going to repeat some figures that have been given by previous speakers and that are matters of record. I think it is well that these figures should be repeated time and again, that they should be fairly grounded into the minds of the people, in order that they may realize what the financial position of the country is. Away back in 1893 when the famous platform of the Liberal party was formed, they made the declaration that they viewed with alarm the continual increase of the national debt. In 1896 the debt of the country, when the Conservatives left power, was $258,500,000; in 1909, according to the estimate given us by the Finance Minister, our net debt has increased to $323,960,000, an increase during the regime of the Liberal party of $65,460,000. I wonder if they view that with alarm. Are they going to repeat the old expression, 'We view with alarm the continuous increase of the national debt of the country.' ? I have not heard from one of them that expression during these four days of debate.

Mr. PATERSON. We have something to show for it.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Minister of Customs says that they have something to show for it. Did not the Conservative party have something to show for their national debt? The Conservative party had completed a transcontinental railway, they had purchased a country, they had put through a railway to the Pacific Ocean, and it was in operation. They were not only taking people into that country, but they were bringing out their products. They had something to show for their expenditure, certainly. Now, let me point to this debt in another way, because, as I said, I think it ought to be ground into the minds of the people, and we cannot do it better than by way of illustration. The net debt in 1908 was $40.49 per head of the population of this country. In one year it has risen to $45.72, an increase of nearly $5 per head of the population. Then, as I hear, and as we will no doubt hear from some hon. members on the other side of the House: 'Wait till you see us next year.'

Now, one word about expenditure. In 1896, the last year of the rule of the Conservative party, the expenditure on capital and consolidated revenue accounts was $44,000,000. In 1898 it reached, within a few thousand dollars of the enormous sum of $113,000,000, an increase of $69,000,000. I doubt very much even if hon. gentlemen sitting on your right, Mr. Speaker, have realized that this ought to be viewed with alarm. Speaking of undue taxation, which they also viewed with alarm in 1893, the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) stated that 'we are a party of low taxation.' The taxation for customs and excise in 1896 was $27,758,285, or $5.46 per head of the population. In 1908, for customs and excise, we paid $73,023,046, or $11.70 per head of the population. I ask hon. gentlemen if this is not a very considerable increase. Is it not enough to cause them to pause and view with alarm the condition to which they are bringing the affairs of this country. But I think a more impressive way still to grind that into the minds of the people of this country, in order that they may realize whither we are drifting, is this: In 1896 the total taxation per family was $27.68, but in 1908 it had increased to $58.88. Let us look at the daily tax. In 1908 the taxation per week was $1,404,289, while it had only been $503,877 in 1896. The taxation per day, Sunday included, on account of customs and excise in 1908 amounted to $200,612, whereas, in 1896, it only amounted to $76,281. I think that the people of this country might well view that with alarm also. But, the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) had another way of telling this story in bygone years. Those of us who were in parliament prior to 1896 did not hear the Minister of Customs speaking of the average rate of taxation on goods coming into the country, dutiable and free, and making a comparison from year to year. He then preferred to make his comparison on the basis of so much per head of the population of the country. In 1896 the customs taxation alone amounted to $3.94 per head, in 1906 it had risen to $7.70, and in 1908 it had risen to $9.26. The Minister of Customs has abandoned that plan of showing the taxation of the country. He found it was telling hard against this government; so, he has fallen back upon another plan, that of taking the average rate of taxation on goods dutiable and free. My hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark)—I am sorry that I do not see him in his place——

An hon. MEMBER. He is over there.

Mr. HENDERSON. Delighted. My hon. friend had a good deal to say about customs taxation and he certainly pronounced himself beyond measure a free trader if there is such a man in this House or in this country. At any rate he gave us the idea that low tariff was his policy and that he could support no policy but that which was low. I wondered if the hon. gentleman had really looked over the tariff of this country. I wondered if he had ever read the tariff. I cannot attribute ignorance to the hon. gentleman because I regard him as an intelligent Scotchman——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. HENDERSON——who came to this country knowing that by coming he could better his condition.

An hon. MEMBER. He is not a Scotchman.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, if he is not a Scotchman, he is pretty near it, because I know he is a graduate of Edinburgh. He told us about a friend of his in the west whom he had induced to vote for him because he was a low tariff man. He said that this was the first time that this friend of his had voted anything but Conservative and, if I mistake not, when this friend comes to know just what is right, it may be the last time he will vote for him. He told us that this friend went out with a gun to shoot rabbits.

Mr. M. CLARK. That was another party.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was that not the same friend?

Mr. M. CLARK. No.

Mr. HENDERSON. At all events, there is very little difference. He took his gun and went to shoot rabbits. Did he tell his friend that the duty on guns in Conservative times was 20 per cent and that he was supporting a government that had raised it to 30 per cent? I wonder if he told him that they had even increased the duty on rabbits likewise 5 per cent? It would not make any difference because they were growing their own rabbits there and it was immaterial whether it was a 20 or a 25 per cent duty. But, he enlarged very much on these reduced duties that his friend was enjoying under the present government. Well, I fancy I see his friend coming home, foot-sore and weary from the chase, with a rabbit over his shoulder. He was going to have his dinner. If he had not caught a rabbit he would have had no dinner. I do not believe the country is so poor. I never knew it so poor as that. There were ranches and cattle in that country in abundance and there is no difficulty in getting beef and other meats if you require them. However, the hon. gentleman told us that his friend had no money, that he could not buy a postage stamp. I feel very sorry for the country. I believe that the hon. gentleman is libelling his country.

Mr. M. CLARK. That is all changed now.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, that is all changed and it was changed before the hon. gentleman came to this country. That was changed before the Conservative party went out of power. Why, the Conservative party bought that country and paid for it—no they charged it to capital account which I think was a very good thing. It is not paid for yet. It simply cost us the interest on the money. I believe that was a very good plan. Canada was not as rich in those days as it is now, but the government of that day not only bought the country but built the railway to take the hon. gentleman out there and bring his products into the markets for which he ought to be reasonably thankful. If it had not been that the Conservative party was in power before the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clark) came to this country I doubt very much if he would have his 1,000 acres of farm land that he boasts so much of. He ought to be proud that the Conservative party once ruled in this country. Now, I want to show the hon. gentleman that he is all wrong, and to do that I will tell him how his friend gets along. His friend comes home weary from work and his wife is preparing the rabbit for supper, and he sits down in a corner of the kitchen to have a smoke and he sees that the plug of tobacco instead of the large plug it was in the Conservative days is very much smaller and is in fact what the people of Nova Scotia call the 'Fielding fig.' The government that hon. gentleman from Red Deer supports last year increased the duty on tobacco by over $2,000,000, and is it any wonder that his friend grumbles in the kitchen corner about the small plug. Well, the rabbit is prepared and they sit down to supper and his wife tells him he must be careful about the table linen and napkins because this good government has increased the duty on linen. Then the good wife warns him that he must be satisfied with one spoonful of sugar instead of the two he might have if the Conservatives were in power, because the Liberals have enormously increased the duty on sugar. He finds around him that everything has been increased in duty but at last he says: 'Heaven be thankful that there is no duty on the light.' His good wife points out that he is mistaken and she says to him: 'Why, this government that you sent the member for Red Deer to support actually increased from 15 per cent to 25 per cent the duty on the putty that keeps the glass of the window in its place.' They rise in the morning and their frugal meal is prepared and the good man says: 'There is no duty on oatmeal,' but his wife tells him that the government he is supporting, two or three years ago increased the duty on the Scotchman's oatmeal from 20 per cent up to 60 cents per 100 pounds. This tariff is a tariff for revenue only; it may be but it is not a tariff for the settler. After breakfast the friend of the member for Red Deer goes out to the stable to hitch up his horse, and looking at the cement on the stable floor he finds that this government has increased the duty on cement five cents per barrel, for the benefit of the farmers I suppose. He sees that the duty on his cutter is increased from 25 to 35 per cent, but he can console himself with the thought that the Minister of Finance has advised him to buy his cutters in England when he will get the benefit of the preferential tariff. He remembers that in the west he is a long way from England, that the transportation charges would be pretty high on cutters, and that as the lesser of two evils he had better pay the full duty on them.

Mr. PATERSON. They buy their linen in England.

Mr. HENDERSON. Oh yes, that is where they buy their linen but the linen manufacturer in the old country makes us pay for it with an increased price on his linen. Did we not hear the Minister of Finance tell us how they played a trick with the sugar duties, and before I get through I will explain to the Minister of Customs that there is a corresponding actual increase in the cost of linen sent to this country, over what there would be were it not for the preferential tariff. Now, furs are necessary in the west for the farmer and his wife, and they find that for their fur coats and fur mitts and the fur sleigh robe to keep them warm they have to pay an increased duty of five per cent over what they paid in the Conservative days. Then the farmer says: 'what does all this mean?' and the wife tells him just as the member for Red Deer told us: 'It is a tariff for revenue only.'

Mr. PATERSON. And you want it made higher?

Mr. HENDERSON. When did I say so?

Mr. PATERSON. Always.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before I have finished my speech, I will tell the Minister of Customs what I would like, but in the meantime I prefer to make my own speech.

Mr. PATERSON. I beg your pardon.

Mr. HENDERSON. Why, great heavens, we cannot make the tariff higher on some things than you have got it now. If you import linen from Germany you pay 40 per cent, and if you import cotton from Germany you pay 40 per cent, and I can tell my hon. friend the Minister of Customs that many of the people in this country have but a small conception of what this tariff for revenue only really is.

Mr. PATERSON. Woollens from Germany are 45 per cent.

Mr. HENDERSON. They possibly are, but we do not bring many of them from Germany; your tariff is too high, we cannot get over it. My hon. friend from Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) told us that the farmers were not worrying. Well, I do not know why they should, because when the Conservative party was in power they gave them a tariff that suited them and that tariff practically remains intact to-day. It has not been greatly disturbed by the peculiar dealings of the present government, and with the exception of two articles, mutton and corn, the tariff just remains about where the Conservative party left it. Now, let me proceed with my illustration. The good farmer says to his wife: 'But has the government done nothing for the farmers?' and she answers, 'Oh yes, cultivators, seed drills, horse rakes, and wagons, have the same duty now as when the Conservatives were in power, but the Liberals have reduced he duty on sickles, and scythes, and snaths, and reaping hooks, and hand rakes, and they have put mushroom spawn and sausage skins and mustard seed on the free list just to please the hon. member for Red Deer who no doubt is duly thankful. 'When the hon. gentleman goes back to Red Deer he had better tell his friends that he will have to change his way of voting if he wants to have a low tariff.

Mr. M. CLARK. Will the hon. member permit me to ask him if he was correctly reported in ' Hansard ' as having said a few years ago in the budget debate that if he had fifty majority on that side of the House, he would soon repeal the British preference, which I claim to be something for the benefit of the farmer?

Mr. HENDERSON. My memory is too short—I have no recollection of having made the statement. If the hon. gentleman says I did make it, I will certainly agree to it. I will give him my views of the preferential tariff before I am through. I know that I have been challenged by the Minister of Finance to say whether I would repeal the British preference or not, and I might have made that statement.

The Minister of Customs clings to the idea that this is a low rate of taxation. He adheres to his plan of measuring the taxation of the country by the average rate of duty. In getting at this, the hon. minister simply takes the table of averages previous to the Conservatives going out of power and the table of averages after the Liberals came into power, but he neglects to arrange these tables on the same basis.

We know that the system of taxation in this country has been very materially changed, in many ways. Last year $2,000,000 was added on tobacco; but that has been collected as excise duty, so that if it does not appear as a customs duty; consequently the impression is given by the minister's statement that the taxation of this country is $2,000,000 less than it really is. That is hardly fair. I am not going to attribute anything to the hon. Minister of Customs. He is simply giving a calculation of the customs duties; but the increased excise duty on tobacco should in fairness be included in a comparison of taxation. Then, last year we paid bounties to the extent of $2,286,289. These bounties were given in lieu of duties. The duties on iron and steel, on coal oil and on binder twine were lowered or wiped out, some of them, and then the manufacturers of these articles were given bounties. Can you tell me where the difference is? I fail to see it. The one is just as much a matter of taxation as the other. I was challenged a year or two ago by the Finance Minister who said that these bounties were paid out of the money that was collected through customs; but the hon. gentleman was mistaken, because these bounties are not paid out of customs duties. They are charged up to the mortgage, they are added to the debt of the country; but they are taxation against the people of this country all the same. When we find that the total amount of bounties paid since 1896 amounts to $16,326,185, I think they view the condition with alarm.

Another item which I wish to draw attention to in order to bring these tables to a fair basis is the fact that the Minister of Customs takes all the corn coming into this country from the United States, and includes it in the imports for consumption, forgetting that a large amount of that corn simply passes through this country in transit, and ought never to be taken into consideration in calculating the average rate of duties on goods, dutiable and free.

Now, I am going to give my hon. friend the Minister of Customs a table based on the alterations that I have suggested. First I will take the table showing the average rate of duties on goods, dutiable and free, as given in the trade and navigation returns for the last five years of Conservative rule:

	Per cent.
In 1892, average rate..	17·56
" 1893 "	17·38
" 1894 "	17·13
" 1895 "	16·99
" 1896 "	18·28
