COMMUNICATIONS.
FOR THE STANDARD.

MR. EDITOR,
Mr. McLean triumphantly asks "what now becomes of Mr. Brown's self called statement of facts?" I answer, let him and his friends read the testimony of Messrs. Wier and Hayward, and they will perceive that this very "statement" which Mr. McLean has the boldness to call "recklessly audacious, and gratuitously false," is by those most respectable and disinterested gentlemen, declared to be just and true. I wonder whether he will dare to tell those gentlemen that their statement is false also. Let him attempt this, and I promise him, in due time, an additional item or two. I defy him, or any other person, to point out any charge or attack made by me, upon any one connected with the Secretary's Office. I therefore view the language of Mr. Fulton with astonishment.

However complete may be my inquiry, the character of the living is much more precious, for a living day is better than a dead fact. I touched the character of Mr. McLean, not further than it was connected with the proceedings of the Select Committee, and here Mr. McLean only makes a stepping stone of his dead, unbroken, and unchangeable character. I made no attack on the character of Mr. McLean in the House; he, on the contrary, made a violent attack on my character. I had but to say the word, and nothing but speedy escape could have saved him from incarceration in a goal; but I have no wish to "draw his fringes from their dread about," and stern necessity forces me to say what I have said, or may further say, respecting him.

What Mr. McLean says about Miss Rogers being hired contrary to law, is unmeaning nonsense. The law did not and does not empower the people to hire any teacher—their only power being that of electing the Trustees. I know of no under the Act of 1833, which was then in force, that a school-master who proved such a badly drunkard, that they had to discharge him. He engaged again in the same parish, and obtained his bounty through the same Trustees. Miss Rogers was then hired, and the Trustees refused to notice the School. She was re-engaged, but in this case the Trustees did not, and she was discharged. Mr. McLean knows all this, and yet he dares to accuse Mr. Moore with "leading the people of the district, to set the laws at defiance." The laws indeed were set at defiance, but not by Mr. Moore. Did not Mr. McLean take a solemn oath to do the duty of a Trustee according to law? Did not that law, in case of a teacher who was proved to be a drunkard, require him to report the cause of such dismissal to the Trustees for their consideration, and were the Trustees required to report the same case to the Governor? Will any man say that the law and logic of the case was not in this? Did not the law require that Mr. McLean should not only disregard the law which he was bound to observe, but he also reported to the Trustees, and the Trustees reported to the Governor? Will any man say that the law and logic of the case was not in this? Did not the law require that Mr. McLean should not only disregard the law which he was bound to observe, but he also reported to the Trustees, and the Trustees reported to the Governor? Will any man say that the law and logic of the case was not in this?

I never can forget this while I remember any thing. How then could I pass over, after repeated examination, a paragraph so conspicuous, in a paper with the arrangement of which I am often to this moment so fully acquainted? I and how came it to pass, that neither Mr. Clinch, nor Mr. Burns, nor Mr. Taylor, nor any other member who perused this paper in the Committee of Supply, could see any thing of the offensive passage? I have even now in my possession, the certificate of Mr. Clinch made at the time and on the spot, that the passage alluded to was in the first paper, and was not in the second.

Mr. McLean supposes I may now have recourse to special pleading or abuse. Special pleading I do not understand, and as for abuse, if I deem it necessary I have but to copy his dictation; but at present, I have no need of either. He has now, it seems, quit the field; I can only say, his retreat was an ill-timed and injudicious as was his attack.

I must now, as I promised, take some notice of his fourth, and am sorry that neither my time, nor your limits, will permit more than a passing glance. His chief aim, in this letter, is to destroy my character as a man of veracity. Let me ask him the following questions.—Did he not deny that Mr. McLean appeared as the accuser and manager of the cause against Miss Rogers? Did he not represent the Trustees of St. James as expressing their objections against her in writing, before she was hired? Did he not, in quoting his "entire sentence," omit the name of Dr. Thompson and Mr. Mitchell, the two principal witnesses? Did he not, in his appeal to Johnston's Dictionary, omit the principal and most obvious definition of the word which he pretended to explain? Did he not add the names of three persons to a list of five whom he named twice over, in order to connect with them a reputed Deist, and a reputed Scipio? Did he not make a false quotation from the petition of the people of the school district? Was not the viva voice, and documentary evidence of Jacob Young, James Millikin, John Cottrell, Daniel Robinson, Alex. Clindinning, and John Cummins, publicly given before I was called upon? And did not the above evidence, according to his own showing, prove every thing that was proved against Miss Rogers? And does he not represent Mr. Burns as a Trustee, and me as speaking of Webster's Spelling Book? I these questions admit of no other but affirmative answers, will these become of Mr. McLean's own veracity?

If Mr. McLean would take the whole of my evidence together, question and answer, he could neither show contradiction in my testimony, nor inconsistency in my conduct; but as all in order of questions were put, and the answers only taken down, generally unexplained and unconnected with time place or circumstances, they necessarily presented a confused and contradictory picture, and ultimately into downright perjury.

It is the memory of the dead is precious, the character of the living is much more precious, for a living day is better than a dead fact. I touched the character of Mr. McLean, not further than it was connected with the proceedings of the Select Committee, and here Mr. McLean only makes a stepping stone of his dead, unbroken, and unchangeable character. Mr. McLean has certainly acted a strange part, and the impropriety of his exceedingly boisterous and unwarrantable attack, is only equalled by his sudden and unlooked-for retreat. As I am just leaving the County, I was not able to give more attention to this matter at present; meantime I beg to remind you and your readers, that I have acted purely on the defensive, steadily urged on by self preservation and the strongest law.

In haste,
JAMES BROWN, JR.
Digby, 15th June, 1887.

FOR THE STANDARD.

I have paid some attention to the controversy pending between Mr. James Brown Jr. and the Rev. Mr. McLean. I believe there is now very little difference of opinion respecting the facts of the case. I was in St. Stephen's at the time of the investigation, and (though your readers would not gather this from Mr. Brown's letters) I heard her distinctly proved to be an infidel and a hypocrite—the testimony of Mr. John Cottrell regarding her made me shudder. The fact that he heard her, himself, call "Jesus Christ a bastard and his mother a—" This then, is the woman who was recommended to the Governor as fit to be entrusted with the delicate minds of our children. And who recommended her to the Government for a School Licence? Mr. James Brown, a Legislator, and Mr. Thompson Moore, a Magistrate, did so—knowing that to be an infidel, in common report, does any person believe that there was not a considerable amount of suspicion between these men and this woman—or that, if there was not, they would thus recommend her? Mr. McLean clearly proves, from the mouths of her own witnesses, that she was engaged in St. James contrary to law. And if Mr. Brown does not now leave off vague and unsupported assertions, and disprove, in the most particular manner, from the same source from which Mr. McLean argues, that is, the recorded evidence—what has been shown concerning his testimony, he will find that his credibility stands deeply compromised. Dr. Alley's Report (as quoted by the Select Committee) is founded upon the woman's supposed recitation. But of this there is no valid evidence whatever. She was proved an infidel and the utmost efforts of her adherents to disprove that fact uniformly failed in the cross-examination. I paid particular attention to this point. "I saw," she said, she was ready to express her belief in Christianity, but this was when Dr. Skelton Thompson told her she could not otherwise hope for the £10 a year.

But the controversy has now taken a singular turn—Mr. Brown having charged Mr. McLean with perjury—a Report of the case to be presented in Committee of Supply, and "diffusing essentially" from that fact—before the Select Committee. This charge Mr. McLean denied in the most solemn manner, and he has corroborated his denial by the certificates of all those persons whom Mr. B. is explicable charge might be supposed to implicate. This being the case, the Public expected Mr. B. either to confess himself in error, or to prove irrefragably the existence of the two Reports, and thus show Mr. McLean to be not a dishonest merely, but a perjured man. But, in his last communication he has done neither. He merely reiterates the charge, and produces certificates from Messrs. Wier and Hayward, which put one in mind of his own quotation in your paper of 13th April—"A tale told by an idiot, signifying nothing." In his letter dated 15th April, he says "My sentiments shall be such as shall stand the test before God, and my own conscience, and which I shall be able to prove by the clearest testimony." I take it for granted then, that these certificates constitute the existence of the two reports, especially as Mr. B. says, he "approaches them with some weight," and she a "that his character for veracity is not totally gone. Instead of this however, the sole circumstance which they prove as to the Report before the Committee of Supply is that "Mr. B. acknowledged that the objections presented was not in it." Now I must say that this is worse than trifling with the subject, your columns—and the public. Had Messrs. Wier and Hayward certified that the alleged second report was contained in the House—and that the so-called original one was instantly sent for from Mr. Ouellet's office, and to his side on Mr. Brown's table—then indeed something very extraordinary would have been proved. Mr. Brown has distinctly staked his entire reputation on his ability to prove this charge. But really, if he has nothing better to bring forward than these certificates, he is fallen indeed. No one disputes that Mr. Brown said the passage in question was not in the said Report. Why? This assertion constitutes his grand charge against Mr. McLean. But we have here a most notable logical—admirably qualified to assist in framing laws for the lineage of New Brunswick. He advances a charge which is distinctly denied and con-piously disproved. But all this disproof goes for nothing with "Sir Oracle." He proves his statement by bringing two people to certify that he made the charge, and then turning round and vociferating "Now, have I not proved it?" I knew Mr. Brown to be a pretty large egotist—but I was not prepared for the extravagant specimen of pre-emptive absurdity now before us—viz: that because James Brown Jr. thinks proper to charge a clergyman with infidelity, therefore, the charge is proved.—Mr. Wier has testified as to the correctness of Mr. Brown's statement of what took place in Committee of Supply. Be it so—but let the following facts also be noted. Some gentlemen asked Mr. Wier (immediately after his arrival from the House) what did take place, or what did Mr. Brown charge Mr. McLean with. I appeal to Mr. W. himself whether his answer was not to the effect that he was out of hearing, and therefore could give no intelligible account of what took place? Yet here we have his certificate, and for the public judge of its "weight." We all know what kind of substance the Proverb represents drowning men as catching at. Mr. Brown must surely be at the last grasp when he thus convulsively catches at a couple of straws.

These notable certificates having thus completely broke down under the slight pressure now made upon them—I conclude this paper by asking "What supposable motive could Mr. McLean have had for substituting a second Report? Was it fear of the withering effects of Mr. Brown's wrath? But had this been so, the obnoxious passage would never have been inserted. Has Mr. M. ever denied, nay—has he not always avowed, and defended the passage that so entirely tore off the mask—Was it fear of breach of privilege? But the thing is absurd—the Report was not addressed to the House or any of its members and it was transmitted in November, a full month before the Legislature met.

Supposing Mr. McLean to be bent on injuring himself thus gratuitously and without motive—still, how could he possibly effectuate his mad design? He must evidently have got some House member to connive with him in carrying on the alleged cheat. Who then was this member that thus disgraced himself and the House, if Mr. B. is charged in truth—and that must undoubtedly be expelled with shame, whenever the House meets in July?—Mr. B. says he saw the report in Mr. Burns' hands. Mr. Burns says "I received it from Mr. Taylor." Mr. Taylor says "I obtained the report from the office of the Provincial Secretary, which (report) remained in the House of Assembly until returned to the latter, then, for the present, has passed from Mr. McLean's grasp, and remains between Mr. Brown and Mr. Taylor. They must settle accounts before the charge of two Reports can be substantiated."

Mr. Brown may rest assured that increasing loudness of assertion, unfounded imputation, and vehement abuse, do not strengthen but, on the contrary, greatly weaken the impetuous position he has now assumed. He will find that all he can aver and reiterate short of the most conclusive proof of the existence of two Reports will be much worse than nothing—that his last communication is clearly of this deteriorating stamp—that a dozen similar ones will have not the smallest favourable effect upon any persons in the County whose good opinion he ought to value—and that, in fact, his downward path in this affair has been already so rapid—even in the estimation of hundreds of his supporters—hitherto—that he will now find it extremely difficult to prevent himself from (I use his own quotation) "falling like Lucifer, never to hope again."

I am, Sir,
Your Obedt. Servt.
CATO.

THE ROSE.—Our fair friends may not all of them be aware, that the beautiful flower which they have so long regarded as the emblem of beauty and love, is the habitation of myriads of gay and happy creatures, which sport upon its velvet leaves; nor that it is the soil on which other plants vegetate and grow. They need not however, be alarmed on learning that such is the fact, for the former are ever lost to vision by being enveloped in a flood of rays, which emanate from the brilliant eyes that beam upon them. By a little comparison of the size of the shrubs that germinate and flourish upon the leaves of the rose, it will be perceived that no great fear need be apprehended from them. They are so minute, that it would require more than a thousand of them to equal in bulk a single plant of moss; and if we compare a stem of moss, which is but one sixteenth of an inch in diameter, with some of the trees of South America, which are 20 feet, we shall find that of the other, 2,985,280,000,000 times as many of these trees would exceed the rose plant in size one-thousandth times that enormous sum! But little do we think, when we are fingering the soft petals of the rose, and sniffing its aroma, that we crush a forest of plants, and inhaled, perhaps, thousands of the tiny inhabitants of that beautiful world. —Nagant, N. H. Spectator.

DOCTRY.

From the New York Star.
TO PAGANINI.
So, thou art coming o'er the sea at last,
Great catgut scraper!
I wonder if, while ploughing the vast deep,
When winds are hushed, and waves in columns sleep,
Your "tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee"
Arouse the monsters of the "Deep, deep sea?"
And wake them eager.

Four notes, great Pag, a premium will command,
Which in these times are wonderful you know;
Tis paradoxical that notes of kind,
Should sell so high, when they are all so low.

When you arrive such a sensation
Throughout the nation,
You will doubtless cause,
That Brokers will forget their cent per cent—
Merchants upon the times no more intent,
Will think then of no other matter, but yours.

By all accounts, Old Orpheus, that fellow,
Who made stones dance, and rocks with transport bellow
Was not a touch to you, my Paganini!
For who has heard, he ever made a guinea—
Or with a single string, like you, could tie
Thousands of people up—in ecstasy?

They say, indeed, that you are no Adonis.
But what of that? your minstrelsy alone
Enough to win bright woman's adoration;
And we do know it once caused a sensation
That for a little singing bird from home,
To share your fate wherever you might roam.

We never knew you were at all inclined
To break the peace or tick up any rascal;
Yet is a fact which all the world may know,
Your scrapes do gather crowds around you so,
It will be well for our city's quiet
If our Mayor some means to reinvent find
To keep the people within proper bound,
As soon as place foot on Yankee ground.

Well, Heaven speed the ship across the ocean,
That's freighted with so wonderful a treasure;
Your coming will create no slight commotion;
And nothing, I am sure, exceeds the pleasure
With which—if all we hear of you be true—
The Dilettanti here will welcome you.

LOWER CANADA.—The inhabitants of this Province have been thrown into a dreadful state of excitement by the Resolutions which the Imperial Parliament are about adopting: Great County Meetings have been held, as which Resolutions have been passed, declaring their determination to resist coercion—that they will use no commodity which pays Crown duties—and that it shall be deemed no crime to smuggle and use such articles as they cannot want.

PRESBYTERY OF EDINBURGH.

The Presbytery held their ordinary meeting on Friday.

Dr. Muir called the attention of the Presbytery to the lamented death of the late Robert Wardlaw Ramsay, Esq. of Whitehill, returned by the Presbytery as one of their representatives to the Assembly, and one of the elders of St. Stephen's parish. Dr. Muir, passed a high eulogium on him as a Christian as an officer of the Church, and as a private gentleman.

CONTRAST OF THE MODERATORSHIP.

Explanations having taken place, it is now agreed, that the Presbytery do not consider it necessary to institute any judicial inquiry into this matter, but only to enjoin upon those who have engaged in this controversy the cultivation of a spirit of meekness, of forgiveness, of brotherly kindness, and of charity.

The general assembly of the Presbyterian at Philadelphia, have resolved to cite before them at the next session, all such interior judges as "by common fame are charged with the toleration of gross errors in doctrine and disorder in practice."

It will at once be seen that the advice by the St. Andrews are only corroborative of the opinions we have already expressed, and that the pressure will be confined to the American Bankers in London, and such as may be brot in collaterally through them, such as the manufacturers and others who have been accustomed to taking their paper, and will not have otherwise an important bearing on the Bank of England and the money interest of the country. They will experience no such revulsion as we are sweeping over and desolating this country, and we have no idea of a suspension of specie payments in England—a few weeks now will give us full information—and will we have no doubt fully sustain the positions we have taken. The principal cause of our disasters will be found in the derangement of our currency, and the general want of confidence among ourselves—and our currency is placed on a sound foundation, it is time to look for our former credit and prosperity.

Cotton, it will be seen, was again, dull, and the small improvement advised by the last packet, was as we supposed, illusory. When they receive our advices to 16th May, we hope that cotton has seen its minimum price, and any advance after that period, may in some degree be depended on.
