Good Progress Toward Pekin

But Cannot Be Maintained at Present Rapid Rate.

Both Sides Suffering Severe Losses—News of the Capture of Yang Tsun Confirmed—Important Position Gained—Allied Army Will Be 50,000 Strong by Aug. 15.

London, Friday, Aug. 10, 4 a.m.—In the capture of Yang Tsung, the losses of the allies, according to a dispatch to the Daily Express from Che Foo, dated Aug. 8, purporting to give an account of that engagement, were 200, the majority of them being killed.

"The allies marched on Yang Tsung," says the report, "at dawn Monday. The position held by 1,500 Chinese was well entrenched to the east of the river. After four hours' heavy fighting the Chinese were driven from their defense works."

Another dispatch to the same paper, dated Tien Tsun, Aug. 6, reports a reconnaissance that morning beyond Heik, the result being that the army was developed in strong force, well fortified at Wei Ho. The Chinese were superior in numbers, and after facing the fire of seven guns, the Japanese retired to Heik with three killed and 27 wounded, but having captured 200 horses.

With the exception of these messages, Gen. Chaffee's report is the only account published by the London morning papers telling of the capture of Yang Tsung.

RAPID PROGRESS.
The editorials generally incline to view the progress toward Pekin as thus far splendid, but one which cannot be maintained at the present rapid rate, as the concentration of supplies and the establishment of bases all cause inevitable delays.

The Advance.
WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—The following dispatch has been received at the war department from Gen. Chaffee, sent via Che Foo:

"Yang Tsung, Aug. 6.—Yang Tsung occupied today. Wounded—Second Lieutenant Frank R. Long, 9th Infantry, moderate. Casualties, about 200 men, 9th United States Infantry, 14th United States Infantry and Battery F, 50th United States Artillery. Nearly all from 14th Infantry. Names later. Many men prostrated by heat and fatigue. (Signed) Chaffee."

[Yang Tsung is the town which Gen. Chaffee indicated in his dispatch received late yesterday as being the objective of the international forces on their then pending movement. It is at the junction of the Pei Ho and the railroad leading to Pekin. Its capture will insure to the international troops a second route of transportation to Pekin. It is 17.5 miles from Tien Tsun.]

Washington, Aug. 10.—The capture of Yang Tsun, the first objective point of the international forces, was the supreme news of importance received on the Chinese situation.

Lord of this capture, effected last Monday, came in the brief dispatch to the signal office at the war department from Col. Scriven, the signal officer at Che Foo. Half an hour after this came the cablegram from Gen. Chaffee, giving details of the capture, and showing that it had been at the cost of about 60 casualties among the American troops.

ALLIES 50,000 STRONG.
Hardly less important was the dispatch of Gen. Terauchi, second in command on the Japanese staff, sent to the war office of Japan, and transmitted to the legation here, stating that the international army would total 50,000 men on Aug. 15, at which time the real advance on Pekin would begin. The present movement of some 15,000 men doubtless is viewed in the light of a reconnaissance in force, or a main movement of 50,000 to follow on the 15th. This makes clear the meaning of Gen. Chaffee's dispatch that Yang Tsun was the objective point. The war department here has been considerably puzzled over this statement of an objective point far short of Pekin. It would appear, however, that Gen. Terauchi's dispatch that the first force of 15,000 men, having opened up communications to Yang Tsun, brought forward supplies and established this advance base, the way would then be clear for the advance of the larger force on the 15th. The capture of Yang Tsun is therefore an important strategic branch of the fast-maturing military plans. The place is

FROM BULLER.
Sir Redvers Buller reports the death from wounds of Capt. Welby, of the 18th Hussars, well known for his explorations in China and Tibet. Last year he explored parts of Abyssinia.

General Buller started Tuesday to co-operate against General Botha. He left the railway at Paardekop and marched 18 miles to Aamersfort, which he occupied after a running fight, in which he lost 25 wounded.

TOO MANY MULETEERS.
Washington, Aug. 10.—The department of state is in receipt of a dispatch from the consul-general of the United States at Cape Town, dated July 9, further relating to the shipment of American citizens as muleteers at New Orleans on British transports. In this instance Mr. Stowe remarks that he sends home free all who apply to him, but adds: "I no sooner clear one vessel than another comes into port with more Americans who have been so foolish as to ship with mules for this country. Over 500 have arrived, and further shipments of these muleteers ought to be prevented. The means used to obtain men at New Orleans as told me by the men are simply disgraceful."

The Canadians
MORE COMPLAINTS.
London, Aug. 10.—Various complaints are published in the morning papers from the Canadians invalided to England from South Africa, regarding the lack of arrangements for their comfort and the delay in sending them home. The Morning Leader says: "The Canadians invalided, who sailed from Liverpool for Montreal yesterday by the Allan liner Parisian, expressed their disappointment at the neglect of the military authorities in Liverpool. They said that having experienced the life of the British soldier under British officers, they had resolved to stay at home and to mind their own business in the future. Moreover, they promised to lay the facts before the Canadian ministers on board the Parisian."

The Times today publishes a letter written by a Canadian veteran, No. 7223, Y. Odlum, of the 22nd Oxford Rifles, Ontario, Canada, complaining bitterly for himself and his comrades, about the delay in sending convalescent Canadians home. He claims that they have waited long and patiently, but cannot get the authorities to act. Mr. Odlum says that they enlisted for active service, not for an idle, useless life in England.

This is perfectly true. Lord Strathcona has done all he possibly could for the Canadians, but by his strong, personal, persistent calling at the war office has been able to get any Canadians shipped. The great mistake of the war office is in granting any furloughs to Canadians. But really the real cause of the delay in the war office is most irritating. It was only by the efforts of Canadian officials that passage was secured for Canadians at Shorncliffe and Woolwich.

NOTES.
Two hundred and thirty-three prisoners of war from South Africa have arrived at Colombo, Ceylon. Their ultimate destination is New York. One hundred and twenty-three of them are Boers, 22 Irish-Americans, and 88 Germans and Hollanders.

Off the Track
This means disaster and death when applied to a fast express train. It is equally serious when it refers to people whose blood is disordered, and who subsequently have pimples and sores, bad stomachs, deranged kidneys, weak nerves and that tired feeling, Hood's Sarsaparilla puts the wheels back on the track by making pure, rich blood and curing these troubles.

Constipation is cured by Hood's Pills. 25 cents.

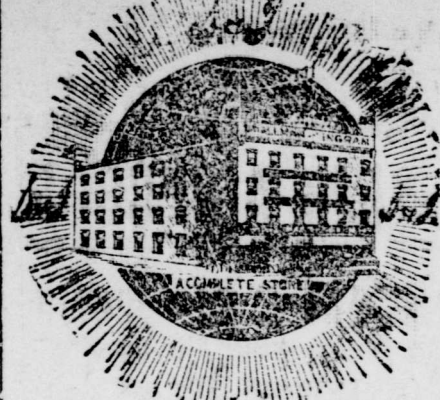

Take trolley rides to Springfield for that tired feeling. Doctors prescribe one dose daily. Pleasant to take. Even the children like it, and cry for it. *32c

A CAREFULLY PREPARED PILL.—Much time and attention were expended in the experimenting with the ingredients that enter into the composition of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills.

No smoke, no dust, no cinders, going to Springfield on the electric cars. *32c

THE WEATHER TODAY—Fine and very warm; thunder storms.

EARLY CLOSING—Customers will kindly bear in mind that this store closes at 7 o'clock every Saturday evening to permit employees to enjoy a well earned rest.

WAS TO BE KEPT A SECRET

Mary McFarlane Tells of Her Proposed Marriage to Joseph Sifton.

Was Going to Throw Martin Morden Overboard Without Warning.

Witness Believes That the Elder Sifton's Death Was Purely Accidental.

Edgar Morden Credited With Saying That Gerald Would Poison Witness—Nothing Startling Brought Out in the Cross-Examination.

At the opening of this morning's session of the Sifton preliminary examination, Mary McFarlane was recalled for cross-examination.

Mr. Meredith first took the witness. To him she gave her age as 22 in September next. Witness became acquainted with Martin Morden when she went to Gerald Sifton's two years ago. Martin was working there at the time. Witness was engaged to be married to Martin, and the engagement continued up to the present time. No date was fixed for the marriage, but a year hence was discussed. Witness commenced to keep company with Joseph Sifton about two months before the latter's death. During this time she did not tell Martin she was going to marry Sifton. She went to garden parties and picnics with Martin during the two months, and went to Port Stanley with him on May 24. Witness agreed to go to Toronto on an excursion with Martin some time this summer. Witness did not driving alone. The agreement to marry Joseph Sifton was made out driving one Sunday afternoon. The marriage was to be kept a secret, but witness might tell her mother if she saw fit.

Witness told Joseph Sifton that she was in trouble the Thursday night before his death. She supposed he knew who was the cause of her trouble. On Saturday night witness told Edgar Morden that she was not in trouble, as she thought he had no business to know.

On Friday night, witness told Gerald there was something wrong, and that she was going to marry Joseph Sifton. Gerald said he hoped she would be happy. Witness meant to throw Martin over, and not give him any notice of her marriage to Joseph Sifton. Witness was engaged to another person for a year about five years ago. Witness was not marrying Joseph Sifton for his money. On Friday night, June 29, witness went with Joseph Sifton and told her mother of the intended marriage, and her mother objected.

Witness then repeated the evidence as to Morden's coming to Gerald's house on Friday night and finding Joseph Sifton and witness there. Joseph Sifton and witness were in the buggy; to their going to Morden's house for the night, and to their going to Joseph Sifton's house early on Saturday morning, and Gerald's coming to the house. When Walter came running to meet the crowd, witness said to Joseph Sifton, "Oh, Mary, the governor has fallen from the barn," and he said something about striking himself with the axe. Witness became excited when she heard the news. While driving the crowd, witness said to Joseph Sifton, "The governor has fallen from the barn and finding Sifton lying there, witness was overcome with emotion and wept freely. Witness had left Joseph's house and gone to Gerald's house because there were so many strangers at Joseph's house. She did not know anything about the fall of Joseph Sifton, and witness there. Joseph came to Gerald's that night and saw witness. He said: "This is a fearful shock to you." Edgar added that he had just heard of the occurrence, and could hardly believe it. Joseph, he said, had taken the evening given him, and had run right into it after being warned. Edgar asked if there was any fear of anyone coming home and finding him there. Edgar told witness he wished to see her and tell her something important. Witness said to him she did not know when he would be leaving there, but when she did she would go to her mother's or her sister's. Edgar said he did not see how witness could stay there under the circumstances, but witness said she could not take anything from the people. Edgar said they might be nice to her face, but he didn't know what they would do behind her back. Witness answered she was not afraid. Edgar told witness to keep quiet about his being there. Witness wondered if Walter Herbert would tell that Edgar had been there, and Edgar said he did not think so. Edgar said everything would come out all right, and he would see that it did.

On the following Saturday Edgar Morden came to Gerald's for tea, and on this occasion he advised witness not to say anything, no matter what came out. Witness next saw Edgar at Sunday school on the Sunday before Gerald's arrest. Edgar told witness about the new will, by which she would be independent of Gerald, and that Gerald wished the will destroyed. Edgar wanted witness to leave Gerald's house at once, as she was in danger, and he would then tell her further about the will. Witness did not believe she was in any danger. She had always believed Joseph Sifton's death due to accident, and still believes so. Witness never made any statement to Detective Murray, but made one to Crown Attorney Magee on the night of Gerald Sifton's arrest. Witness is not yet making any claim for her rights under the will. Witness had told that Edgar had been there, and Edgar said he did not think so. Edgar said everything would come out all right, and he would see that it did.

Witness had known Herbert since last spring, and considered him an offensive, industrious, hard-working boy. He always told her the same story of the death of Joseph Sifton, and witness believed him. Witness thought he would be easily led. He had no bad habits, as far as witness knew. Witness had seen Dr. McNeill at Gerald's on different occasions.

Mr. Hellmuth then proceeded with his cross-examination. To him witness said that prior to Joseph Sifton's death she had always been treated as one of Gerald's family, and had been no change in their relations since the death. Witness had told Gerald that she didn't want to be bothered with Edgar Morden, because she didn't trust him.

Joseph Sifton had not trusted him, nor anyone else, as far as witness knew. There had been no attempt to keep witness away from anyone, except Gerald said she wasn't to go out alone or see Ed Morden, and this was only after he expressed desire that she be not bothered with Edgar. Witness did not hear from Edgar or Mrs. Morden, or Joseph Sifton anything about the will on the night of June 29 or the morning of the 30th. Witness did not hear of the will for nearly two weeks after Joseph Sifton's death. Witness did not hear it from Edgar till the Sunday before Gerald's arrest. On this Sunday, Edgar said Gerald would poison her, but witness said she was not afraid, as she had lived in Gerald's house two years and trusted him.

On the Saturday following Joseph Sifton's death, Edgar, James and Martin Morden were all at Gerald's. They came to see Gerald. It was shortly after this that witness told Edgar and his wife that she didn't wish to be annoyed by Edgar.

Going back to Friday, June 29, witness said Edgar did not speak of having any conversation with Gerald. What he spoke of was overhearing conversations which showed that Joseph Sifton was in danger. Joseph Sifton told witness that Edgar had said he heard the sum of $5,000 mentioned in the conversation. During the time witness was in Edgar's house, Martin Morden was the only name mentioned in connection with the danger to Joseph Sifton. Edgar Morden was evidently anxious for the marriage of Joseph Sifton and the witness to take place, and he did not endeavor to dissuade her from breaking faith with Martin.

Mr. Hellmuth asked witness if Gerald told her that Rev. W. H. Cooper had said to him that (he Cooper) wished Gerald to treat Mary well. Mr. Magee objected vigorously and the magistrate, as usual, ruled with the crown. At this point, an adjournment till 2:15 was made.

American Policy as to China.

The immense size which the Chinese problem has assumed, and the gravity of the situation which now confronts the European powers, causes the subject to be studied in its various aspects, and in a little while the more intelligent of the reading public will have a more all-round, if necessarily a somewhat superficial, view of this great question. The United States is often represented as the Simon Pure among the world powers. All others may be suspected of land-grabbing, but the American power is assumed to stand simply on the side of larger commercial freedom and a higher civilization. Hence some American writers suggest that America is the natural leader in the present difficulty. Mr. J. Barrett, formerly United States Minister to Spain, says: "I do not mean that the United States shall go out of its way to assume responsibilities, to arrogate to itself leadership, to take ostentatiously the burdens of the world on its shoulders. Rather shall it simply perform its plain duty, as an officer in a battle standing in a central commanding strategic position holds the fate of its regiment in his hands, and determines victory by combining discretion with heroism." We are afraid that in this passage, as well as in some other parts of this article (North American Review, August), literal accuracy is sacrificed to the exigencies of rhetoric, and we do not think that the European powers would admit without challenge the claim thus advanced. It is well known that Britain does not wish territorial aggrandizement in China, and is anxious to avoid the partition of that empire, and to secure the Open Door. Russia is on the frontier of China now, has taken risks, and suffered losses, and will have something to say in the settlement.

In the same issue of the North American Review, there is an article on America's treatment of the Chinese, written by an American, Charles F. Holder. He, of course, has no bias against his own country; but in giving a brief sketch of the history of the relations between the two countries, he allows facts to speak for themselves. This account of the dealing of America with Chinese laborers shows that America has not always acted in a fair and friendly fashion. Of that, however, we may speak again.

Reading the history thus given by an American, certainly leaves the impression that America, by posing as the friend of China, has got concessions for which other nations had to fight, and which America could not have got if other nations had not fought and paid for. That was no doubt clever diplomacy, but we do not think that it should be set up as philanthropy. This is the way in which these transactions read: "Mr. Cushing had large discretionary powers, and after assuring the emperor that America was not in sympathy with the attitude of Great Britain in seizing Hong Kong, he negotiated the treaty of Wang Hiyd, which constitutes the first act of official intercourse this country has had with China. The treaty, which has always been of great benefit to us, gave Americans the right of residence at the treaty ports."

Again we read: "The concession of Hong Kong to Great Britain was but a sop thrown to delay the inevitable, and seventeen years after the opening of the doors of China we find England and France allied for the purpose of prying the Chinese open still wider." "The attitude of America at this juncture is a matter of history, and it was commendable from a diplomatic and humanitarian point of view. We were invited by the powers interested to make common cause with them against China, but we declined, and sent a special envoy to inform the emperor that we were not in sympathy with the action of the powers. Our position was criticised by England, whose wits expressed the opinion that America declined to join the war as a matter of economy, but sent a fleet up the Pei Ho in the wake of the ships of France and England, and secured all the commercial benefits without corresponding expense." "This was certainly a cruel thing for the 'wits' to say about the guileless Yankee, but our historian continues in serious mood: "This was to a certain extent true; as, after this war, we obtained our second treaty with China, while England and France paid the expense, their combined fleets forcing open six new ports, and our envoy, Mr. Reed, obtaining with them the right of trade and residence."

Again, we must admit that the diplomacy was smart, but we think that the humanitarianism is a doubtful quantity, unless it can be shown that France and England needlessly fought and paid for what they could have obtained by gentle persuasion. This, however, is not maintained. The position seems to be that it was a wrong, cruel thing for Britain and France to force open the door, but it was a humanitarian thing for Americans to follow close on their heels and sit down in the house. Now, it is almost certain that those who are going to wield large influence in the settlement must take a fair share of responsibility.

Laurier, a united Canada, and a united Empire.

Praised After Death.

Let it not be forgotten when you read speeches by Opposition stump orators, bitterly traducing the Ministers, that even worse things were said of Hon. Alexander Mackenzie by his political antagonists, while he was in active harness. When he was no longer in the fray, the men who belied his reputation confessed that he was an honest, conscientious statesman. In Mr. Mackenzie's time, his dead predecessors were lauded to the skies by the Opposition political partisans, in order that they might the more effectively besmirch him. Now that he is gone, he is belauded by his former assailants, in order that they may set up a comparison to the statesmen in power today. These rib-stabbers do not seem to change their tactics to any great extent. There can be no doubt that if either Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hon. David Mills, Sir Richard Cartwright, Hon. Mr. Tarte, Hon. Mr. Sifton, Hon. Mr. Fielding, Hon. Mr. Blair, were to pass out of public life today, in an incredible short space of time—as in bygone days—the Opposition vilifiers of living Liberal statesmen would discover in any or all of them every virtue that they now profess to find lacking; and in their successors in office, they being in the way of the hungry Oppositionist, all the faults that they now daily aver are to be found in the Government now in power at Ottawa. In the estimation of these assistants every living Liberal statesman is a bad man; every Liberal statesman who is removed from the arena by death or otherwise, at once comes from under their ban. The animus of such criticism must be apparent. We are aware, however, that the persistent resort to such tactics injured Hon. Alex. Mackenzie, some worthy people giving heed to the persistent output of the slander-mill. In those days the public were not so well acquainted with the methods of the Opposition campaigners. Today they have no such excuse. Even the least informed in the community must have long since seen through the expedients of these traducers of their betters.

Fruit in Manitoba.

Manitoba, according to a Dauphin correspondent, is turning out a veritable land of milk and honey. This year, as generally, in the region adjoining the Northern Railway, which follows for many miles the route selected by the Mackenzie Government for the transcontinental line, every bluff and bushy clump is red with raspberries. The Doukhobor women have made big money picking them for shipment to the Winnipeg market, and in the Swan River district thousands of boxes were shipped. A dollar a pail has been paid, and though the demand has been great, so plentiful is the crop that thousands of bushels have rotted on the ground. Yet some declaimers against this new province have said that it is no place to grow fruit! The country that grows luscious raspberries, if it grew no other fruit, and it does, is doing very well in that line.

The Chinese Old Man.

The Chinese statesman, Li Hung Chang, who some time ago passed through Canada, asking people, "How old are you?" is not by any means a youth himself. He may be called the Grand Old Man of China, though thought by many to be a grand old humbug. We are told on good authority that he is shifty, greedy and cruel. The fact that we are concerned with now is that he is an old man who hangs on to life and power with wonderful tenacity. In this he is typical. It is not a matter of the climate or of his constitution. It is deeper than that. China is pre-eminently the country of the old man. They do not there recognize any "dead line" of fifty or sixty. The Dowager Empress, or whatever else may be called the fierce, bigoted woman who has recently been ruling China, is also pretty elderly, and that strengthens rather than weakens her position.

China is a really ancient empire. Age and tradition are deified there. Ancestor worship is a part of their religion, and reverence for age a supreme virtue. That may have its good side, but it has also its dangers. There may be in this new land too much craving for young men in important positions, but the other extreme is not desirable. Many think that in England an infusion of younger blood into Government and Administration would be useful just now. But at any rate one can see that in China government by the old is a strong support of tradition and prejudice, or, in other words, the stiffest Conservatism. A nation thus becomes fossilized and unable to meet new conditions. In China, as elsewhere, the problem is to blend the new and old—the life of youth and age. We are afraid that Li Hung Chang has already played his part, such as it is, and is too stiff to help in the solution of the great problem before the world.

Canada is well satisfied with Laurier.

The Useful Union Jack.

[Brookville Times.]

It is a noticeable fact that when the natives of European or American countries get into trouble in foreign climes they make a rapid transit rush for the British consulate in preference to their own. The British may have many faults, but when people get into a scrape they do love to get under the Union Jack. And their confidence is justified.

A Few Figures.

[Montreal Herald.]

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, the duty collected on goods to the value of $153,209,273 was $26,896,968, or 17.57 per cent. The percentage for the year ending June, 1894, was 18.23. Had the average rate of duty collected in the Conservative period from 1870 to 1894 been collected in 1900, the taxation of the people would have been $6,125,985 greater than it was. The amount saved to the people in 1899 was $3,589,625; in 1898, $1,905,331, and in 1897, $1,368,020, or a total of $12,863,976 in four years.

Some Strange Disappearances.

[London Tit-Bits.]

The list of men and women who have gone out into the world and disappeared, in several cases forever, is a long one, and includes the names of some who have gained notoriety in many walks of life.

Only during the past few months have we had an instance brought forcibly before our minds. Just a little over three years ago a well known baronet in this country left England with a party of friends for the Klondike. When nearing Dawson City he strayed from the camp and never returned, nor were the search parties sent out to find him successful in solving the mystery. Quite recently a skeleton was found in a cave many miles from where he was last seen, and presumed to be his, but whether he is still in the land of the living or not is unknown, though it seems unlikely that he will ever be heard of again.

Mr. Powell, M.P., far-famed for his abilities as a speaker, died in 1845, of a balloon expedition about twenty years ago, and disappeared. Doubtless, he met with an accident, probably over the sea, but neither his remains nor those of his balloon were ever brought to light. The chance is only paralleled by that of Andrea, who went up in a balloon to attempt to reach the North Pole some four or five years ago but from that day to this nothing has been heard or seen of him and his companions, and whether he perished far away from any human habitation is a question without a satisfactory answer yet.

But love of exploration can claim many more victims. Sir John Franklin, who set sail in 1845, was swallowed up by the frozen north with his gallant band. We have evidence that he must have met with his death from the relics that were subsequently discovered, but for all that his fate is shrouded in mystery.

Yet another great man, Hendrick Hudson, the navigator, vanished from the world's ken and was never heard of again. All we know is that his boat, with crew and cargo, was found one or two of the officers who adhered to him in an open boat, cast them adrift. Whether he eventually touched land and lived in some unknown country, or whether he perished at sea, we shall never know.

The famous Tichborne case calls to mind a problem which yet remains to be solved. Many years ago a young man, Sir Roger Tichborne by name, left England in a ship called the Bella, bound for Brazil. He landed there, and the vessel returned home, but he became of him subsequently nobody knows. Of course he may still be living in the wilds of South America, but in all probability he long since is dead. Even royalty has sometimes vanished mysteriously. During the war between America and Spain an officer was wounded belonging to the American army, and afterwards proved to be a British nobleman, who had disappeared from home some time before. He was connected with one of the smaller German states, and had it not been for his wound he would, in all probability have preserved his incognito until his death.

Half a century ago one of the emperors of China mysteriously disappeared and has not been heard of since. He went out one morning for a walk before breakfast in the gardens of the palace. He was presumed to be set upon by his enemies lying in wait for him and carried off to his death. This supposition was upheld by evidence of a struggle having taken place about the emperor's body, but the guilty ones were never captured, nor, indeed, ever traced, chiefly to be accounted for by the lassitude of the Chinese police.

One of the Turkish sultans was once spirited away in a similar manner from Constantinople, and apparently murdered. He was found of disguising himself and walking in the streets, a fact which cost him his life. But heinous as the crime was, no trace could be discovered of him or his captors, though it is certain that the unfortunate sovereign never left the city alive.

What the First Knot Tied.

Long, long ago, a boy—I suppose it was a boy, it's so like one—sat out in the sun "fooling" with long strands of grass and learned to tie a knot. He could not have known, then, how great, how far-reaching in its influence upon the civilization of the human race was that discovery. Could we, if we had been in his place? But if several are twisted together the cord is stronger. Some people have not yet learned more than to roll the fibres together on a flat surface, but our ancestors fastened them to a round thing, which they twirled, and so spun thread. The round weight became a spindle and a spinning wheel—a wheel, in short. Think of what the wheel means to civilization, and remember that it is the child of the string, which would never have been but for the knot.

Fire had made it possible to burn out a hollow log for a canoe, and the net had made it worth while to go upon the waters, but paddling was weary work. By weaving of fibres together like baskets, not only was cloth made, but something that primitive man could put up for a sail, and rig with plaited cordage. Shipping was born then, and how great has been the civilizing influence of traffic and travel! But more quickening was the impulse then felt to harness the forces of nature, or, as Emerson says, to hitch our wagon to a star. Perhaps man had already learned to get power from other muscles than his own. If he had he sure he could not have tamed the first wild horse or the first wild ox without the knot.

That basketry came before pottery is proved by the fact that its ornamentation is copied in primitive pots. Next time you see Pueblo Indian pottery in the museums mark how its patterns suggest woven splints. From pottery came not only porcelain and glassware, but iron hollow-ware. The iron teakettle, with its lid dinging on the pressing steam, set another boy to thinking, and his name was Watt. You know the rest of his story. But least the boy that tied the knots got too far away from our thoughts, remember the lad whose tedious task it was to turn on and off the cocks that let steam into the cylinder of the first old mine pump when he longed to be off bird's-nesting. He rigged up an arman sat and stared, and suddenly it flashed across his mind: "If that were a fish I could catch many fish at once, instead of only one at a time, with my spear or bone hook." Primitive woman sat and stared, and suddenly it flashed across her mind: "If that were made of reeds it would stand up of itself, and I would have a place to put things." Woman has made us all tidy and orderly. It was a great day for the human race when the first basket was made, for a basket is something to put into it, something stored away for the future, accumulated wealth, capital.

The knot meant the utilization of fibre. One strand is easily broken, but if several are twisted together the cord is stronger. Some people have not yet learned more than to roll the fibres together on a flat surface, but our ancestors fastened them to a round thing, which they twirled, and so spun thread. The round weight became a spindle and a spinning wheel—a wheel, in short. He rigged up an arrange with a piece of cord by which the engine itself did his work, and thus the principle of the automatic cutoff was born. It was the child of the thought that came to the savage when he harnessed the wind to his canoe. He could only use the wind when it was going his way; but with his thought that gave us the ocean greyhounds that go against wind and tide. Nevertheless, still further back we must go, for all that makes the engine move, except the fire, came from the knot the boy learned how to tie, sitting out there in the sun long ago, "fooling" with long strands of grass.—Eugene Field, in Success.

HOPE FOR THE SEEDY AUTHOR.

When you can find an author whose writings are witty and cynical and worldly you can generally be sure that he is spending a great deal of time in private life, taking trouble in other people's affairs and helping them out of difficulties.

People who read "The Dolly Dialogues" and also the reports of the "House Society," in London, would find something of this contrast in Anthony Hope Hawkins. He is a hard-working member of the society, and while he goes through piles of documents to see how the society can help some writer to gain his rights in a lawsuit or copyright case.

Mr. Hawkins believes very much in men of letters standing by each other, and he has worked tremendously hard to help on the fund which the society is trying to accumulate, from which pensions are to be paid to authors whose literary merit has not brought them a corresponding income, and who view increasing years with fear.

It is to be feared that Mr. Hawkins' views on this subject send a good many shabby men to his rooms in Buckingham street, by the Embankment gardens, with tales of literary failure told in the hope of getting a few shillings. And although the novelist is too shrewd a judge of men not to recognize an occasional fraud, he is also kind-hearted. There is a story of a man who exclaimed, on leaving Mr. Hawkins with something in his pocket: "Oh, sir, I feel that Providence must have sent me to you!" And the reply came with a twinkle in his benefactor's eye: "Let us hope, however, that Providence will not acquire the habit of doing so."—Saturday Evening Post.

AND CANDY

The girl who had been more than eighteen years of age when the picture was taken, and it was certainly a picture of a girl who had ever looked up at him with a look of love in her eyes. "Who in heaven's name was she?" he muttered, looking at the picture. "Can it be that Uncle Albert's wife or daughter?" he asked himself.

"No, I do not believe it," he added, "or he would have referred to it in some way, and yet I could almost take my oath that I have seen this same face before."

His own face was very pale, his brow settled into an ugly frown, and he gnawed his light mustache nervously.

In the other half of the case there was a velvet pad, with a loop of satin attached to it. "This is evidently intended to come out," he said, and lifting it as he spoke disclosed underneath two or three folded papers yellow and creased with age.

His ruthless fingers clutched them eagerly.

The first one contained only a smooth satin ring of nut-brown hair, tied with a narrow blue ribbon.

The next a scrap of pale, silvery silk, like a piece cut from a web of goods. The third was a folded paper that had something of the look of a legal document.

Arthur shivered slightly as he began to unfold this, although he could not have told why he did so.

He hesitated in the act, and glanced with some trepidation about him, as if he almost expected to find someone—perhaps the spirit of this lovely woman upon whom he had just been gazing—coming forth from the shadows that lurked in the corners of the room, to denounce him for his meanness and treachery.

Then, with an impatient shrug of his shoulders, he resolutely unfolded the document and began to read it.

As he did so, every atom of color fled out of his face—even out of his lips. His eyes grew wild and large with fear and fierce with hate; his lips were set in a firm line of anger, and a violent trembling ran over his whole frame.

For a long time he sat thus, staring at that paper, as if his mental powers failed to grasp the meaning of its contents.

"Curse him!" at length he cried, and the words came from his white lips with startling vehemence.

Then he hastily refolded the paper, though his hands shook in the act till it rattled in his grasp.

He carefully replaced it where he had found it, laid back the scrap of silk and the nut-brown hair, smoothed the velvet pad over all, and pressed it firmly down in its place.

He tried not to see that sweet face looking up at him from the opposite side of the case, but the lovely brown eyes seemed to follow his every movement as if they were instinct with life, and it was with a feeling of relief that he at last closed the case and returned it to the tray where he had found it.

He then replaced the jewels exactly as he had found them, shut the cover of the till, relocking it; then, after sharply regarding the contents of the chest to see that everything was in its proper place, he closed the lid, looking that also, and then showed his bunch of skeleton keys into the depths of one of his pockets, while a look of relief swept over his face, as if he was glad that his dirty piece of work was done.

The clock on the mantel struck the half hour after six as he arose and went to a window, put back the draperies, raised the shade, and the morning light stream into the room where all night long he had been engaged in prying into the secrets of another.

A dark and troubled look rested on his face—a look that meant no good; it was fierce, cunning, resolute.

He stood there, lost in thought, for several minutes; then turning away from the calm beauty of the morning without, he went to his own chamber, where, throwing himself upon his bed, he soon fell into a profound slumber.

That same morning, as Louis Dunbar was on his way from his apartments to his office, he was suddenly startled by finding his pathway blocked by the figure of a man.

Looking up, he found himself face to face with Louis Murray—the man who, three or four years before, had claimed him as his son.

"You here in Paris?" the young man exclaimed, while his heart sank within him.

"Yes, I am here in Paris. You didn't mean that your fond father should know whether his son had departed, did you?" was the mocking response.

"I took no pains to conceal my actions from anyone," Louis answered.

"Ah, yes, I should have remembered that my son was always open and above-board in all his dealings," Mr. Murray retorted sarcastically, adding: "But you perceive that my affection for you was so strong that I was forced to follow you even across the ocean."

"Do I understand that was your object in coming to Paris—to follow me?" "Exactly."

"Well, what else?" "Ahem! I knew you had obtained a very lucrative position, being hard on myself, I naturally supposed you'd be willing to assist your poor father out of his difficulties."

"You are a strong, well man. Why do you not obtain employment and take care of yourself?" Louis demanded.

"Because work and I never did agree."

"Do you mean to imply that you followed me here with the expectation that I would support you in idleness?" "That is putting it in a very disagreeable way, Louis; but really I did expect that my only son would be willing to share his good luck with his father."

"I am obliged to tell you, then, that you will be sadly disappointed. I will find you something to do, if you like; but as for having you fasten yourself upon me and then lead the kind of life that you led in Boston, I tell you at the outset that I will not have it."

The man scowled darkly. "You're a very affectionate son, now, aren't you?"

"No, sir, I do not think I am," Louis frankly admitted. "I am free to confess that I entertain a very little of either affection or respect for you. Still, I am not heartless; if the same blood flows in our veins, I would not be unkindful of the fact, nor unkindful, if you were suffering and needed my aid. And I say now that I will get work for you if you will do it."

"I won't, curse you! I want money!" retorted the man, fiercely.

"Have'n't you any?" "Five francs."

Louis thought a moment. "I will pay your passage back to America and give you a hundred dollars. Will you go?" he proposed at last.

"No!" was the angry response, accompanied with a fearful oath.

"Very well; then you will please look after your own interests," Louis very coolly replied; and, stepping aside, passed on his way without looking to the right or left, while the baffled man behind him sent a torrent of abuse and invective after him, vowing he would make him eat humble-pie for his impudence before he was six months older.

CHAPTER XVII.

Mr. Forest's business detained him at Havre for several days, during which time Arthur occupied his time much as usual in seeking his own pleasure. But he did not appear to be as good as usual, and something seemed to worry and depress him, although he strove to conceal it from his friends, and at times assumed a gayety, which even to them, seemed forced and unnatural.

One day, shortly after the return of Mr. Forest, Mrs. Houghton arranged for a trip to Versailles. Mr. Forest and Arthur were invited to join the party, also Louis and some young friends. Mrs. Parker, and Ada, and the merry company started forth one bright morning, all eager to visit that wonderful palace, around which there clusters so much of thrilling romance and tragedy.

The day was perfect, and the ten-mile drive over the lovely roads was one never to be forgotten. They reached the royal palace about noon, having stopped on the way thither to view the ruins of St. Cloud, once the magnificent and favorite residence of Napoleon Third; and here they roamed at pleasure through its marble halls, its vast apartments, and galleries which contained such rare collections of paintings, statuary, and curiosities of every description.

Thence to Le Grand Trianon, where Napoleon resided with Josephine, and where he conceived the infamous plan of sacrificing that lovely woman to his insatiable ambition.

From there they went to La Petit Trianon, the charming residence of the ill-fated Queen Marie Antoinette, then to the royal stables, where, in empty and state, stand the elegant though ponderous vehicles once used for the pleasure of the imperial household.

Then came a stroll through the beautiful park, adorned with magnificent statuary, sparkling with fountains, its lawns and groves, and its paths of moss-grown rocks and along the margins of rippling streams, or the shores of quiet and beautiful lakes, and through groves of orange and myrtle and pine.

To young lovers, Louis and Margaret, this was a day of unalloyed delight; but to Margaret the beauties of the park were less interesting than the curiosities within the palace, and finally telling Mr. Houghton that they were going back to the picture gallery in Le Petit Trianon, they slipped away unobserved by the rest of the party, found a guide to whom they made known their desire, and were soon deep in the study of those rare and beautiful pictures that adorn the walls of that lovely villa.

During a tour of the main gallery they came upon a picture, evidently the portrait of a remarkably lovely woman, which they had not noticed before.

She was young, scarcely twenty, one would judge, and a vision that once seen could never be forgotten.

A beautifully shaped head was set somewhat proudly upon a pair of graceful shoulders; a wealth of rich brown hair was gathered back from a pure white forehead, save a few delicate rings which lay lightly upon it; the eyes were dark and deep, and seemed to hold one with an expression which was difficult to fathom. The nose was small, the nostrils peculiarly delicate; the smiling mouth was arch, yet wondrously sweet and tender.

Sarnia Observer: Pte. Graham, of the Royal Canadian Regiment of Infantry, invalided home from South Africa owing to fever, arrived here Saturday morning from St. Mary's, and was the guest of Dr. T. G. Johnston, M.P. The South African hero was entertained at lunch at the residence of Dr. Johnston, together with Mr. and Mrs. Sutherland Johnston, and Mr. and Mrs. H. Gorman. During the afternoon an informal reception was held at the residence of Dr. Johnston, and many citizens called there and were presented to Pte. Graham.

BOAT SONG.

When we boated, you and I,
Swaying willows, kissed the stream.
Was it? Yes, 'twas last July!

Little cloudlets flaked the sky,
Just to make it bluer beam,
When we boated, you and I.

Once again the lilies shyer,
Blow, Ah, they, they fair seem—
Was it? Yes, 'twas last July!

Far from you the days dragged by—
Wintry hours without a gleam—
Since we boated, you and I.

You were cruel then. Your eye
Gayly mocked my hope supreme.
Was it? Yes, 'twas last July!

S' I love you. Do you sigh?
Sweetheart, make it true—my dream;
While we're boating, you and I,
Say you love me—this July!

the whole face a pure and perfect oval, the chief charm of which, however, lay in the fascinating eyes.

"Where have I seen such eyes before?" murmured Louis meditatively. "There is a glory and a beauty and a tenderness in them that thrill me strangely."

Margaret glanced up at him as he said this.

BOAT SONG.

When we boated, you and I,
Swaying willows, kissed the stream.
Was it? Yes, 'twas last July!

Little cloudlets flaked the sky,
Just to make it bluer beam,
When we boated, you and I.

Once again the lilies shyer,
Blow, Ah, they, they fair seem—
Was it? Yes, 'twas last July!

Far from you the days dragged by—
Wintry hours without a gleam—
Since we boated, you and I.

You were cruel then. Your eye
Gayly mocked my hope supreme.
Was it? Yes, 'twas last July!

S' I love you. Do you sigh?
Sweetheart, make it true—my dream;
While we're boating, you and I,
Say you love me—this July!

SAVED A YOUNG MAN FROM DROWNING.

Chris. Butterworth, the expert swimming instructor at the Y. M. C. A., yesterday saved an unknown young man from drowning in the river. The young man, with two friends, had gone bathing, just east of Vauxhall bridge, at the foot of Egerton street, and got beyond his depth. None of the party could swim, and the young man would almost certainly have been drowned had not Mr. Butterworth's attention been drawn to his dangerous situation. Mr. Butterworth jumped in, fully clothed as he was, and succeeded in bringing the young man to the shore. Employing the proper methods of resuscitation, he soon restored the young man to consciousness, and the latter was removed to his home by his friends. Mr. Butterworth had to walk home in his soaked clothing.

INTERESTING TESTIMONY

Given by the Late Joseph Sifton's Fiance.

Mary McFarlane Tells of Morden's Warning.

She Urged Joseph Not to Go With the Prisoners to the Barn on the Fatal Morning—The Wedding Presents From Her Intended Husband—A Missing Wad of Money—The New Will.

Thursday Afternoon.

On the resumption of the Sifton examination at 2:15 p.m. Mary McFarlane took the stand. Up to June 30 last she was employed at Gerald Sifton's. She was engaged to be married to the late Joseph Sifton at 5 p.m. on June 30, the date being fixed about two weeks before. Witness had not divulged to anyone the fact of her intended marriage. On Friday night, June 29, witness said Joseph Sifton about 10 o'clock. During the time Joseph Sifton was there, witness had a conversation with Gerald Sifton in the cellar. Witness told Gerald that she was to be married to his father at 5 o'clock the next day. Gerald first asked her if it was so. Gerald said it was all right, as he just wanted to know the truth. Gerald asked if there was anything wrong and witness told him yes. Witness had been asking in the cellar, and was coming out when Gerald met her. Witness went upstairs, got ready, and went to her mother's with Joseph Sifton. Before she left, her brother came, and she had a talk with him, also a talk with Mrs. Sifton. Witness remained at her mother's house till about 11 p.m. In company with Joseph Sifton witness went back to Gerald Sifton's, and stayed in the yard. Edgar Morden came to the side of the buggy, and after greeting each other, Morden spoke about some cattle he was seeking.

EDGAR MORDEN'S WARNING.

Morden stepped closer to the buggy and laid his hands on the knees of the occupants. Morden said: "I want to tell you something very important." He asked Joseph to come out of that place and he would tell it. He didn't want to tell it there, as he was afraid of being heard. He said that Morden was in danger, and he wanted to warn them. Witness wished to get out and go into the house, but Morden advised her to stay with Joseph, as if they were separated they might get lost. Witness said yes. Morden asked where they should go, and Edgar said to go to his place. Edgar said if they would get out of the county that night it would be better for them, as their lives were in danger. Morden said Sifton should not go to his own house, as someone might be there and catch him in a trap. Witness asked what was that, and Morden said that Sifton should not go to his own house, as someone might be there and catch him in a trap. Witness asked what was that, and Morden said that Sifton should not go to his own house, as someone might be there and catch him in a trap.

THE WEDDING GIFTS.

Joseph walked over to the table, got a roll of bills and handed it to witness. Witness gave it back, as she had no place to keep it, and asked him to keep it till she got to Gerald's. Joseph gave her a gold watch, and she put it in the side of her dress. He also handed her a little box, telling her to keep it, as he might lose it at the barn. He said to wrap up his affairs, as he could not put them on till he got some cuff-buttons at Gerald's. Witness never saw nor heard of the roll of money after handing it back to Joseph. Joseph went out to the barn, and witness stayed in the house about twenty minutes. She then went out to the woodshed door, meaning to go to the barn, and she then heard the sound of hammering in the house. Witness then returned to the house to wrap up the cuffs. Witness was in the house two or three minutes, and then went out and had just reached the barn gate when Walter Herbert came and said Mr. Sifton had fallen from the barn and killed himself. Witness put up her hands and said:

"WALYAYING SIFTON."

and he was hunting them to warn them. Joseph Sifton said he had to go to the house to get home to his watches, rings and the married license. Morden said not to mind them, as his life was more precious than anything at the house. Morden advised them to drive up to his house, and they did so. Edgar Morden went in with Edgar, being let in by Mrs. Morden.

MORDEN'S TALK WITH JOSEPH SIFTON.

Joseph Sifton remained in the buggy, and Edgar Morden went out with a lantern. Over half an hour elapsed before the two men returned. All had some supper, and then they sat around the stove for about half an hour. Witness then went and laid down to rest in the front room, in the opposite end of the house. Witness stayed in the house about twenty minutes. She then went out to the woodshed door, meaning to go to the barn, and she then heard the sound of hammering in the house. Witness then returned to the house to wrap up the cuffs. Witness was in the house two or three minutes, and then went out and had just reached the barn gate when Walter Herbert came and said Mr. Sifton had fallen from the barn and killed himself. Witness put up her hands and said:

TO BE MARRIED AT 9 A. M.:

then they would go to Gerald's house, where witness would get her clothes; they would be married and drive to Strathroy; Joseph seemed to think that Gerald was trying to stop the marriage. Sifton said witness should get her aunt to go with her to Gerald's to get her clothes. Witness and Joseph Sifton were about half an hour driving from Edgar Morden's to Joseph Sif-ton's. On the way Sifton wondered if his house had been broken into during the night, as Gerald knew where the key was. He also spoke of what Morden had told him, of the plans to waylay him on his way home, and kill him or to hang him up in the barn, so as to make it look like a case of suicide, or to get him up on a ladder, or something, in the barn, and let him drop. Sifton said he couldn't believe that Gerald could do such a thing himself, but he might get someone else to do it. When witness and Sifton arrived at the house, Sifton said he would get ready and they would get away before "they" got there. Witness was to STAY WITH SIFTON ALL THE TIME.

so that if there was any danger they would be safer. Witness accompanied him and fed the horse and other stock. Witness accompanied Sifton into the barn while he threw down hay, and then she went to the barnyard, where Sifton fed the pigs. Sifton saw Bathurst, Canon Richardson's hired man, and asked him to feed his (Sifton's) pigs while he was away. Witness and Sifton then went to the house, and they noticed the key was sticking in the door, and the door was unlocked. Sifton said he wondered if anyone had been in, and witness said no. Sifton left it that way. On entering the house Sifton looked and found everything all right. After they were in the house about half an hour Gerald came. Joseph Sifton was sitting on the stairs. Gerald opened the kitchen door and called "Hello!" His father asked him what he wanted, and Gerald said he had.

CAME TO PUT UP THE HAT-FORK.

Sifton said he wasn't feeling well, and he wouldn't go to work that day. Gerald answered that Walter Herbert was with him, and if Joseph would come and show them how he wanted it, they could manage. Gerald looked at him and his eyes were red. There was not a good look on his face, and it scared witness at first. Gerald saw witness and said: "Good morning, Mary." Joseph said, "I was not dressed, and witness would go out and show them, and Gerald then went out. Joseph came down without his coat and vest. Witness looked up at him and

SHOOK HER HEAD.

Mr. Magee asked why she shook her head. Mr. Hellmuth vigorously objected, characterizing it as the most monstrous thing he had ever heard of. He said that the question was a proper one. Witness said she shook her head because she was alarmed. Joseph told her not to be afraid, as he was not her father, but just got out and tell them what to do, and that he would get the horse and not be long. Witness asked him not to go where they were, and he said he would not put them out of the house. Joseph said that Morden didn't think anything would happen, and everything would be all right, anyway.

THE WEDDING GIFTS.

Joseph walked over to the table, got a roll of bills and handed it to witness. Witness gave it back, as she had no place to keep it, and asked him to keep it till she got to Gerald's. Joseph gave her a gold watch, and she put it in the side of her dress. He also handed her a little box, telling her to keep it, as he might lose it at the barn. He said to wrap up his affairs, as he could not put them on till he got some cuff-buttons at Gerald's. Witness never saw nor heard of the roll of money after handing it back to Joseph. Joseph went out to the barn, and witness stayed in the house about twenty minutes. She then went out to the woodshed door, meaning to go to the barn, and she then heard the sound of hammering in the house. Witness then returned to the house to wrap up the cuffs. Witness was in the house two or three minutes, and then went out and had just reached the barn gate when Walter Herbert came and said Mr. Sifton had fallen from the barn and killed himself. Witness put up her hands and said:

"OH, WALTER, YOU'VE DONE IT!"

Walter said: "Oh, Mary, don't say that!" Witness asked where Mr. Sifton was, and Walter pointed to the west end of the barn, and said Gerald was getting a horse ready to go for a doctor. Witness went in the direction pointed out by Herbert, and saw Mr. Sifton on the grass. Witness put her hands to his face, and then went back to the house and got some water. Witness started back to the barn, and Mr. Sinker passed her. They went to Mr. Sifton, and Mr. Sinker raised the injured man's head. Mr. Sifton was lying on his left side, with the blade of the axe under his face. His head was cut, and appeared to have been bleeding. There was blood on the collar of his shirt, and on the right lapel of the coat. When Joseph left the house he had on a black felt hat, and when witness saw him after the fall there was a hat on the grass some distance away that looked like his. Mr. Sifton was carried into the house and laid in the north room. The doctor came, and several ladies and a number of other people came in.

THE ONLY SIGN OF LIFE

witness saw in Joseph was his breath. When Walter Herbert drove witness to Gerald's house about 9 a.m., and she remained there all day. Witness saw Edgar Morden between 10:30 and 11 the same night. Edgar Morden was in Gerald's kitchen about twenty minutes. While the things were being moved from Joseph's house to Gerald's, witness had a conversation with Walter Herbert. She said she wished she was away from there, as the sight of the things brought it all back to her. Walter said he wished he was away, too, and he would rather be dead or a good many miles away than be where he was. Witness had seen Joseph's hat since his death. It was just the same as it had been when he went to the barn, only it had dust on it. Witness stayed at Gerald's on the day of Joseph's death till the Sunday after the arrest.

TALK ABOUT THE NEW WILL.

One day while driving into the city with Gerald, he asked witness if she had been in Edgar Morden's on the night before his father's death. Witness told him she had not. Gerald said Ed. Morden had spoken to him about a will that was not in Gerald's favor, and Edgar said it was some scheme of Edgar's to get money. Gerald said he had bought a new revolver, as his old one was no good, and he did not know what Ed. Morden would do; but if he (Edgar) stopped him on the road or said anything saucy to him, he (Gerald) would kill it on him. When Gerald said he had a new revolver, he put his hand to his pocket, and witness did not tell Gerald she was there Friday night, because it was Saturday morning when she was there, and he did not ask her about Saturday morning. It was a week after the funeral when this conversation took place. Gerald told witness that Ed. Morden had the right will, but would not let him (Gerald) see it. On the Monday before he was arrested, Gerald told witness that he had been up to Morden's and had seen the will and compared its signature with one of his father's and it was all right. Gerald said he was going to see his Cousin Jack. Gerald told witness that his Uncle Jack and Al. were in the will, witness herself and Gerald himself. Mrs. Gerald asked Gerald how he had got along, and he replied "All right; Ed. Morden isn't such a bad fellow after all." Gerald said Edgar wanted to have a talk with witness, to make everything all right with her.

CONSPIRACY HINTED AT.

Gerald afterwards went to St. Johns, and after he returned he said he heard there was going to be an inquest and he was going to be arrested. On Wednesday Gerald said he thought Dr. McNeill was having something to do with Ed. Morden, and he (Gerald) couldn't trust him, as Dr. McNeill was playing him false, and might be getting up some scheme with Ed. Morden.
