For Love of a Woman, New Romeo and Juliet. CHAPTER XXXVIII. RETRIBUTION. "I hold myself at your disposal, my lord, completely, entirely, without any reservation."

STRENGTH FOR YOUNG MOTHERS How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restores Health and Strength. Lansing, Mich.—"After the birth of my child I was not able to stand on my feet for several days. I was so weak I could not get up. I suffered such pains in my back I could not work or hardly take care of my baby. One of my neighbors recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sensitive Wash, and I got better right away and was soon a new woman and could work hard, and I can recommend these remedies to other young mothers who are weak and ailing as I was."

For Her Sake; The Murder in Furness Wood. CHAPTER II. Their neighbor, Sir Royal West, from the moment he had first seen Diana, a bright lively girl of fifteen, fearless and outspoken, had literally worshipped her. He was the happy possessor of an extensive estate called Westwater. His lands adjoined those of Mr. Cameron, and the two gentlemen were excellent friends. Sir Royal had never married; but somewhere far back in his life lay a buried romance. He was a handsome man, trusty and generous—"truest friend and noble foe."

LIFT OFF CORNS! Doesn't hurt at all and costs only a few cents. Magic! Just drop a little Freezone on to your feet of every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and calluses, without one particle of pain, soreness or irritation. Freezone is the discovery of a noted Cincinnati genius.

was quite content. He lived at Ferness; but his was no idle life. The estate was large, and Richard Marche did the work of steward or agent. He, too, worshipped Diana, and would have given his life for her. His was scarcely a lover's affection; but, of all the blessings that fell to the lot of Diana Cameron, none perhaps surpassed this young fellow's honest, unselfish devotion.

Punctuated at the hour mentioned the eminent man, with placidly serene face, and softly, tenderly melting eyes, stepped on to the platform amidst the cheering of the audience, the majority of whom were ladies, who waved their pocket-handkerchiefs, which they well knew they should presently require. Mr. Spenser Churchill began his address. It was eloquent, touching, impressive; the handkerchiefs grew quite moist long before it was concluded, and when at last his soft and tearfully sympathetic voice died away in his final words, many a soft-hearted woman—and dare I say, soft-hearted man?—felt perfectly convinced that Mr. Spenser Churchill was far, far too good for this wicked world!

I am surely convinced that the hour will come in which the world will see him without his mask, and be ready to stone the hypocritical villain whom they almost worshipped as a saint; but the hour has not yet come, and the great philanthropist still flourishes as the bay-tree. Great will be the fall thereof when the truth be so loose to talk about shall prevail, and the aye lars the accomplished hypocrite low. May we be there to see!

CHAPTER III. Peter Cameron had succeeded perfectly in all his ambitious projects, and for many months after his daughter reached home they lived without a cloud to darken the perpetual brightness of their daily life. Diana was undoubtedly the belle of the county; and she gave the most delightful balls and parties. Her archery fetes, her picnics, her garden parties were perfect, and, to her father's surprise, she could order a dinner that would satisfy the most fastidious connoisseur.

Then fell the first shadow. The Duke and Duchess of Stone, the great county magnates par excellence, gave a grand ball, to which Mr. Cameron and his daughter were not invited. He felt the slight severely. Sir Royal and Lady Colwyn both went, while he, the envied owner of three millions of money, was left out in the cold. On talking the matter over with Sir Royal, he realized that money was not everything. It had bought him feathers; it had surrounded him with every conceivable luxury; but it could not purchase his entire into the society he coveted; and from the hour in which he made that discovery Peter Cameron was a changed man. He had declined an offer of knighthood made to him after some grand civic ceremony; now he wondered if it would have availed him. He consulted his oracle, Sir Royal, from whom he learned that a new title was as useless as a newly made fortune.

"What will gain me admittance into this charmed circle?" he asked. And Sir Royal told him that aristocratic connections were all that he required. "How am I to get them?" said Mr. Cameron; and Sir Royal could not help smiling at the utter simplicity of the millionaire.

Diana's sake rather than his own. Diana, with her exquisite beauty, her splendid dowry, her brilliant charms, ought to have the entire everywhere, and that she was not invited to the Duchess's ball annoyed him beyond expression. When summer came round again, and the Duke and Duchess returned to Stonedale, they gave a series of summer fetes; but still no invitation was sent to the beautiful young heiress of Ferness. Again Mr. Cameron sought the friendly advice of his oracle.

"How is it, Sir Royal?" he asked. "It cannot be difference of position. I know that last week the Duchess called on Mrs. Herondale, and I know equally for a fact that she has not five hundred a year, or anything like it." "No," replied Sir Royal; "but she belongs to one of the oldest families in Devonshire. I am not quite sure, but I think I have heard that both the Duke and Duchess have said they must draw the line somewhere, and they draw it at people who have been in trade."

"Then I can never cross the line," said Peter Cameron; "and it will be hopeless to try." Peter Cameron was fairly miserable. He wished he had chosen a different county, or that he had made an effort to secure an introduction to the Duke. That his daughter, the heiress of Ferness, should not receive one of the invitations so widely distributed was intolerable. Sir Royal's idea had been a perfectly correct one; the Duke and Duchess "drew the line" at trade. Rumours of Mr. Cameron's wealth and of Diana's beauty had reached them, but without avail; the barrier of exclusiveness was not removed.

At first Mr. Cameron had merely felt annoyance; afterward the subject became an intolerable grievance; it was strange that so sensible a man should care for what was really but a trifle. He had plenty of friends—estimable friends—but he was not happy because the Duke of Stone did not bow to him and the Duchess of Stone did not invite his daughter to her fetes; and it was this grievance that caused the real tragedy of their lives. In the spring of the following year the Duke and Duchess had spent the Easter holidays at Stonedale, and had once more grand entertainments to the elite of the country, excluding Mr. Cameron and his daughter. Among the visitors at Stonedale were Lady Scarsdale and her two daughters, who, when the family left Stonedale, accepted an invitation from Lady Tresham Park to remain with her for a month. Whatever the Duke and Duchess of Stone might think, Sir Grantley and Lady Tresham had both been pleased and proud to make the Millionaire's acquaintance, and to rank him amongst their friends.

To-day's Messages.

ONE DOLLAR AN HOUR.
CHICAGO, Sept. 20. Chicago's building strike and leak out, which for more than two months has made more than a hundred thousand workers idle and halted construction contracts aggregating fifty millions, was announced as ended to-night when construction employers yielded to the demands of the Union carpenters for $1 an hour.

LEFT FOR WASHINGTON.

NOT A PROTECTORATE.
LONDON, Sept. 20. Great Britain's Treaty with Persia does not constitute a protectorate of the latter country in any way, the only object of the agreement being to ensure Persia an opportunity to work out her destiny as an independent country, said Earl Curzon, Government leader in the House of Lords and President of the Council, in speaking at a dinner given here yesterday in honor of the Foreign Minister of Persia.

WHITE STAR LINER ASHORE.
LONDON, Sept. 20. An Evening News despatch from Kirkwall to-day, reports a White Star Liner ashore north of Ronaldsmy, and states that two thousand troops from northern Russia are on board. The liner ran ashore during a gale, adds the despatch, which gives no further details.

IMPERIAL INDUSTRIES EXHIBITION.
LONDON, Sept. 21. (Reuter's Ottawa Agency.)—In 1918, initial steps were taken to organize an exhibition of industries, inventions, produce and raw material of the British Empire, to be held in 1921. A large and influential meeting, held recently in London, and attended by the Premiers, High Commissioners and three other representatives of the Overseas Dominions, and others interested in the scheme, passed a resolution that the exhibition, on the above lines, would be the best means of firmly binding together the peoples of the British Empire and restoring its commercial and financial supremacy. It has been decided that the exhibition shall be held under the auspices of the British Government and extensive preparations are being made, and to ensure complete representation, local committees have been formed in most of the large centers of industry. It is felt that the exhibition will offer an opportunity of demonstrating the magnitude of British resources, at a time when such a demonstration is most needed.

A Woman and a Throne.
Prince Charles of Roumania has renounced his right to the throne of that country. It was a case of giving up the woman of his choice or passing up the royal title, and he took the latter course. Cod Oil the Latest Fuel for Ships.

Newfoundland Steamer Had to Burn Oil Soaked Mattresses.
Boston, Sept. 18.—To complete the last 30 miles of her voyage from St. John's, Newfoundland, the steamer Neptune, under charter to the Nova Scotia Steamships, Ltd., was obliged to burn mattresses, fittings, etc., when her supply of coal became exhausted. The Neptune docked at Commercial wharf with a general freight. Eight casks of cod liver oil were used to saturate the material replacing the coal, and in this way steam was kept up so that the vessel could make port. On her last trip outward from here to Halifax and St. John's the Neptune broke down while off Cabot's Straits, and while repairs to her steering gear delayed the vessel 24 hours on her return trip.

These delays and the fact that the steamer was unable to maintain her regular rate of speed caused the coal supply to run out. The Neptune came through her trying experiences without damage.

Shoes From Fish Leather

A sample lot of leather made from the skins of fish, such as ray, shark, sturgeon, paddle-fish, and porpoise, has been received by the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries. It has also received articles made from such leathers, including men's, women's, and children's shoes, as well as a belt, wallet, portfolio, brief case, etc. The manufacturers have established stations on the South Atlantic and Gulf coasts where supplies of raw material are obtained, and are producing from such sources a very high grade of leather suitable for nearly every purpose for which leather is used.

THE TERRIBLE HABIT OF TENSENESS.

Have you the terrible habit of tenseness? I suppose a great many readers will sadly answer, "Yes," to that question. And I suppose just as many more will blithely answer "No" they ought to answer "Yes."

For it is possible to be tense that you are wearing yourself needlessly away and yet not have the slightest idea of it.

That "Let Down Feelings" Shows A Past Strain. Everyone gets tense and excited over some big things once in a while, and realizes it when the relaxation from strain comes and that "let down" feeling sets in.

But there are a great many people who let themselves get into the fool habit of being more or less tense all the time over all sorts of little things and often over nothing at all, and they don't realize their tenseness because they never relax from the strain they impose on themselves.

Some of these people stretch their nerves so tense that they finally reach the breaking point--in other words, nervous prostration. Others do not quite reach this point, but are always on edge, always below par in nervous strength, always wondering why they feel so mean, and can accomplish so much less than they want to.

The first thing such people need is to realize that they are tense. The second is to make up their minds to relax.

MANY THEMES.

I talk all day of divers things, of pellucids, a n d quines, of cats and pterodactyls' wings, of cabbage and prince. With women I discourse of gowns, with kids I talk of candy, with kings I argue much of crowns, w i t h soaks I speak of brandy. It is the tendency of age to have some mental hobby, and on that topic rant and rage until we call a bobble. The man with but a single theme calls forth no smiles or chuckles; he makes his hearers wish to scream, and bores his fellow mortals. One talks of dead, forgotten jays, whose records were unpleasant; he drools fo prehistoric days, and scorns the golden present. One talks forever of his hills, of sinews that are achin', and he has memorized the pills and powders he has taken. One analyzes politics, and shows just where we're headed, our statesmen all are tinhorn hicks who should be boiled and shredded. And all these gentlemen are bores, as are the them they're broaching, and men rush home and lock the doors, when they are seen approaching. I talk all day of dogs and cats, of succotash and sabres, of liver pads and stove-pipe hats, and I don't bore my neighbors.

SONG OF CONTENTMENT.

I envy no man's store of gold, And no man's wreath of fame; Let him who will, now boast his skill, I'll not resent his claim; Though rich men turn to mansions fine, Their homes no happier are than mine.

The roof above me shelters me When outside blows the storm; The fire I make for comfort's sake Glows red and keeps me warm; Though rich men's fires are flaming high, They cannot warmer be than I.

I sit me down to simple fare And find it flavo' sweet, And when I dine, this thought is mine-- I've all that I can eat; Like me the rich man also stops Who's had his fill of mutton chops.

Untroubled is my rest at night And all my dreams are fair; When night comes down I quit the town And drop my weight of care; And when upon my couch I lie No man more soundly sleeps than I.

And so I envy no man's fame And no man's wealth of gold, For while I live, life cannot give More joys than those I hold; Rich men, with all their power to buy, Can do but little more than I.

Quick Change Artists

The actors in the cheap political vaudeville now being staged by the Opposition, have everything and everybody beaten to a standstill by their ability to make lightning changes. It is understood, however, that these rapid metamorphoses are part of the comedy now being presented, with the public for audience. The most laughable part of it all is, that no matter in what character they disguise themselves, their make-up is at once recognized, much to the amusement of the on-lookers.

Take the Hon. Richard Anderson Squires, that life-long Liberal, for instance, who is the chief performer on the political comic opera stage as the manager of the troupe. He has changed political costumes so often that any part for which he is cast, or casts himself, becomes him better than the preceding one. He entered political life as a Tory of Tories. Today he is masquerading in the garments of a Liberal, and imagines that his thin disguise cannot be penetrated. He has misappropriated the title of Liberal and in his arrogant conceit dreams that the transparency of his pretensions are not apparent.

Then there is our friend of Port Union fame—the Wordy President—as his erstwhile adversary, Doctor Mosdell designated him. He is another quick change artist. After denouncing the Hon. R. A. Squires and all of his kindred, both in the House of Assembly and through the columns of his controlled organ—the Advocate—he is now industriously planning an unholy alliance with the man upon whom he has time and again poured out the vials of his wrath, and warned all his followers against, going so far as to tell them THAT THEY MUST NEVER TRUST SQUIRES. What a conglomeration of ideas and persons are gathered together, to be sure, in the ranks of the Liberal (?) Reform Party.

Our readers have been regaled with some of the opinions of Coaker on Squires, and the Star on Coaker. Now it is a pleasure to give them one little testimonial of character handed, as a bouquet, to Mr. Coaker by no less a person than the self-appointed leader of the office seekers. This recommendation was given the Wordy President, thank you Editor Mosdell, by the Hon. R. A. Squires, with whom the W.P. now wishes to ally himself, in the Legislative Council, and appears in the Journal of Proceedings of that body for 1918. Here it is:

"The curse, under which the 'Fishermen's Protective Union' is laboring, is that honest, honorable, God-fearing men, who are earning their living 'day by day by manly toil, in many cases at the hourly risk of their lives in the tempestuous sea, should have to acknowledge THAT THEY

"HAVE ELECTED AS PRESIDENT, A MAN WHO WOULD BE GUILTY OF THE INFAMOUS AND TREACHERY OF THIS LETTER FROM WHICH I HAVE READ EXTRACTS (speaking now of the infamous circular, marked Special, and dated April 26, 1918). 'I have not in the whole of my career made any attack upon Unionism, organized labor, nor in particular upon the Fishermen's Protective Union, but I do know that in many sections of the District of Trinity in the election of 1913, UNION MEN WERE CALLED UPON TO TAKE A SOLEMN OATH UPON THE WORD OF GOD THAT THEY WOULD CAST THEIR BALLOTS for the candidates nominated by W. F. Coaker AND FOR NO OTHER. I do know that the organization (F.P.U.) has been cursed and degraded by him, who by manipulation and intrigue has secured the votes of a large number of the members to keep him at the head of that organization.'"

"Baseness" and "Treachery" are other epithets which Mr. Squires applied to Mr. Coaker's action in connection with the promulgation of this circular, but for the present sufficient has been quoted to prove that the leader of the Reform Party holds no trustworthy opinion of the leader of the F.P.U., notwithstanding that he is in close and friendly association with him to-day, the Advocate and Star, Saturday, having formally announced that the President of the Fishermen's Protective Union has finally decided to throw in his lot with the man he has repeatedly vilified and accused of accepting $5,000 in Bank of Montreal Notes from the Reids, besides charging him with other heinous offenses against the commonwealth. The fishermen will know how to adjudge between these men and the sincerity of their present professions of amity. Coaker on Squires and Squires on Coaker constitute some of the finest expressions on the probity of the two men that could be desired, and the voters of Newfoundland will know how to accept and weigh their protestations as well as their promises for the benefit of the public weal. The unholy alliance has been consummated. The breaking of it is in the hands of all Newfoundlanders to whom such a coterie gives unforgivable offense.

Political Rumors.

The very latest one on the street is that Hon. R. A. Squires has withdrawn from the contest in St. John's West, and that he has refused to resign his seat in the Upper House, unless Mr. Coaker CAN PROMISE HIM A SAFE CONSTITUENCY. This, we are given to understand, has been assured him by the Wordy President, and consequently Mr. Squires goes to Willingdale District as the representative of the Fishermen's Protective Union.

Another rumor has it that Dr. Campbell has had an attack of cold feet and is desirous of withdrawing from St. John's West, while it is said that Mr. Brownrigg would give ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS to get rid of the love birds. We give these for what they are worth, but straws show how the wind blows, and these show that Coaker has assumed a dominant position in the Opposition Party already.

An Incredible Story.

(From this morning's News.)
The Advocate publishes a story to the effect that a certain man in an outpost applied, in 1898-99, for work, saying that he had no food; that a policeman was sent to search his house, and finding a barrel of flour there, the man was sentenced to thirty days' hard labor. To tell such a wicked falsehood as this, is about the most offensive thing which any man can do. The man who wrote it writes his name down as a knave or a fool. There was not, and there is not, of course, any law under which a man could be punished for telling a lie, or for having a barrel of flour, or anything of the kind. One might well ask what this country is coming to when the avowed organ of the leader of a party can be so base as to coin such a falsehood, and so foolish as to circulate it. It is an insult to the intelligence of its readers to suppose that any of them are so devoid of common sense and knowledge as to be able to swallow such a falsehood. The Advocate says, "some man told us the story." We do not believe that any man ever told the story; but, if there was a man so base as to coin it, it is difficult to conceive how any member of the Advocate staff could be so soft as to swallow it, or so bad as to repeat it. We are afraid that the country has, indeed, entered upon bad days. There are signs that the Advocate has thrown aside all restraint, that, in the mad lust of its master for power, it is prepared to offend every sense of decency, display an utter disregard for the truth, and scatter its vile falsehoods broadcast.

Sore throat, tonsillitis, quinsy, and inflamed throat are very prevalent in town just now, and often give a great deal of trouble. A bottle of our Throat Gargle is a good thing to have in the house just now. If used at once the attack will often be cut short by its application; at any rate it will be rendered much less severe thereby. In such cases as in some others, true as of the very essence of the situation, and if the gargle be used at the very beginning of the attack, the best and quickest results may be expected. This is why we advise you to have a bottle on hand. In any case, sooner or later will come a use for our Throat Gargle, and it will keep good indefinitely. Price, 20c. a bottle.

Distinguished Visitor.

The Rev. Dr. Curran of the Arch Diocese of Halifax, N.S., who has been in St. John's for the past week, spending his vacation, celebrated 9 o'clock Mass in the Cathedral yesterday. The reverend gentleman is highly pleased with his visit, and the hearty welcome which has been extended to him by the people of St. John's. Dr. Curran took advantage of the occasion yesterday when delivering his eloquent and instructive sermon to pay a high tribute to the Catholics of this city for their regular attendance at the Church, as well as his great pleasure in witnessing the large number of people who received Holy Communion. He also praised the beautiful Cathedral, which is undoubtedly one of the most magnificent specimens of ecclesiastical architecture on this side of the Atlantic, and the site upon which it is placed, is certainly the best in the world. It is the first object that meets the eye of the mariner as he nears the port of St. John's, and its beautiful and massive outlines can be seen from almost any part of the city. Dr. Curran in the guest of Mr. E. J. Sinnott, Renneville's Mill Road, and, we understand, he will return to Halifax to-morrow, retaining the most pleasing recollections of his visit to St. John's, and having the practical experience of the proverbial hospitality of Newfoundlanders. Rev. Dr. Curran is a relative of our local historian Mr. H. F. Shortis, and we hope to see the Rev. gentleman make another visit to our shores in the near future.

Gower St. Church.

A large congregation was present at Gower St. Church last evening, in discussing the question: "What kind of a Church does St. John's most need?" The Pastor spoke from Rev. 21: 12-13, and pointed out the seven spheres of influence that the Church should occupy. The church is an assemblage of worshippers, an evangelizing agency, a school of religion, a humanitarian effort, a reforming body, a political power and a missionary organization. The kind of a church that St. John's most needs is a church with a strong evangelistic spirit; a church that cultivates a real and sympathetic Christian fellowship, a church that lays strong emphasis on Bible study, a church that above all things recognizes its debt to the community at large, and is more concerned in getting heaven into men than men into heaven, and a church that recognizes the transcendent value of young people within its borders, and is prepared to get out of grooves that will surely become graves if not left behind, and open up new lines of work in its attempt to make good citizens and good Christians of its growing boys and girls. He congratulated the congregation on the fine and flourishing Girls' Club in its midst, which now numbers 150 members, and announced a Rally social of the members and friends on Thursday evening of this week. He also thanked the people for their co-operation in the work of the Boy Scouts, and announced the first drill for the season in the C.L.B. Armory on Wednesday evening. The Golf Club will meet for organization in the basement of the church on Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Rally Day in the Sunday School will be held Oct. 19th, and on the first Sunday in October Harvest Home Services will be held, when the church will be suitably decorated with the products of field, farm, and garden.

Boot Store Robbed.

When Mr. Jack Cohen, of the American Boot and Shoe Stores, entered the East End Store yesterday morning, he found that the place had been entered by someone, and about a dozen pairs of boots and shoes stolen. He reported the matter to the police, who got busy on the case at once. Entrance was made by means of back window, which was pushed in, sash and all. Mr. Cohen is of the opinion that the thief was surprised in some manner, and retreated before he could take any more than he did.

Funny O

Whilst it is difficult for us not to be quite sure as to whether we are either better or worse than our forefathers, it is by no means difficult to be quite sure that we are different from them.
To my mind there is no way in which this difference is so evident as it is in connection with what are known as the funny things of life.
We frequently hear it said by those who can recall—either from personal knowledge, or from what has been told them by others—the sayings and doings of the men and women of the last generation who have been called to their rest, that all the really funny people have gone, and that we, of our best, are but poor imitators of genuine article.
With that sense of humour with which God has blessed me, and for which I am devoutly thankful, I have always loved to recall the past, and to perpetuate in conversation and story, those interesting characters and their funny sayings and doings.
With the highest respect for the persons and their memories, I give herewith, a selection of such incidents as come to my mind in support of my assertion, that the men of the past were in every respect (lightly, even though unconsciously) funny.

John — was the master cooper in Garland's employ some eight years ago, and Robert Curtis was working in the cooper shop with him. They were men, faithful to the master's interests and needed watching to incite them to duty.
The agent, however, was a mean suspicious person, and always believed that the workmen in the different departments were systematic loafers, and needed watching.
Because of this belief he acquired the habit of moving about quietly and appearing suddenly and unexpectedly, where men were at work.
He had done this on several occasions at the cooper shop, with doubtful success. One day as John was working near the window, he caught sight of the agent's hat passing under the window outside, and moving towards the door.
There was no sound to indicate his presence, but when John knew that he was within ear shot, he sneezed (loud enough for him to hear) "Robert, did you ever see a snake?" "No, John," said Robert. "Well, Robert," said John, "there are a good many kinds of snakes, and though they are very different from each other, yet they are all a bad lot. The most venomous of them all, however, is the rattle snake; but although it is so venomous, Robert, yet he is a gentleman. Yes, he's a gentleman, for he always rattles his tail. Robert, and gives you warning of his coming. Yes, Robert he's a gentleman."

Evidently the agent, who had been listening, took the hint, for he moved off as quietly as he had come—and he never came back.

Nanny Jefferies was a little old woman who lived—not in her shop but "around the Point," and was well known in Trinity some sixty years ago.
She was a widow, and as such was entitled to 12½ a quarter from the Government.
One summer the Governor of Newfoundland came to Trinity for an official visit. During his daily unattended walks abroad, he met Nanny one morning, and attracted by her quaint appearance he stopped and asked her name, and how she lived.
Nanny, with no idea as to who the stranger was, replied: "Me dear 'man, I don't live at all. I only except the Government."

Funny Old Trinity.

John — was the master cooper in Garland's employ some eighty years ago, and Robert Curtis was working in the cooper shop with him. They were men, faithful to their master's interests and needed no watching to incite them to duty.

The agent, however, was a mean, suspicious person, and always believed that the workmen in the different departments were systematic loafers, and needed watching.

Because of this belief he acquired the habit of moving about quietly, and appearing suddenly and unexpectedly, where men were at work.

He had done this on several occasions at the cooper shop, with a doubtful success. One day as John was working near the window, he caught sight of the agent's hat passing under the window outside, and moving towards the door.

There was no sound to indicate his presence, but when John knew that he was within ear shot, he said (loud enough for him to hear) "Robert, did you ever see a snake?" "No, John," said Robert. "Well, Robert," said John, "there are a good many kinds of snakes, and though they are very different from each other, yet they are all a bad lot. The most venomous of them all, however, is the rattlesnake; but although he is so venomous, Robert, yet he is a gentleman. Yes, he's a gentleman, for he always rattles his tail. Robert, and gives you warning of his coming. Yes, Robert he's a gentleman."

Evidently the agent, who had been a listener, took the hint, for he moved off as quietly as he had come—and he never came back.

Nanny Jefferies was a little old woman who lived—not in her shoe, but "around the Point," and was well known in Trinity some sixty years ago.

She was a widow, and as such she was entitled to 12½ a quarter from the Government.

One summer the Governor of Newfoundland came to Trinity for an official visit. During his daily unattended walks abroad, he met Nanny one morning, and attracted by her quaint appearance he stopped and asked her name, and how she lived.

Nanny, with no idea as to who the stranger was, replied: "Me dear 'man, I don't live at all. I only exists. I'm a widow woman all alone in the world, and the miserable Government we have, gives me 12½ a quarter. O, 'tis a miserable Government, Sir, for sure."

The Governor showed his sympathetic interest in her by handing her 2½, and the curtsy that Nanny gave him in return was well worth the money.

The next day some one told Nanny that it was the Governor she had been talking to, and in great distress of mind and body she went down to George Lockyer, and, wringing her hands she said: "O, Mr. Lockyer! Mr. Lockyer! I met a man yesterday, and I abused the Government, I did, and now I find 'twas the Government I was talking to all the time. O, Mr. Lockyer, I shall lose me 12½ altogether now."

To Nanny's surprise and delight, however, when she received her next quarterly note, it was for 20—instead of 12½.

The man she had been talking to was the Government sure enough.

Thomas C — was the leading man in a little settlement adjoining Trinity. The clergyman in charge of the parish decided to build a church there, and Thomas was asked to arrange for a haul of timber for the frame.

Thomas called a meeting of the men, at which it was decided that all hands should go to Trinity Pond the next day for a sill. A suitable stick was found, and after a good deal of hard work it was got out to the top of the hill leading down to the settlement. The path was slippery, and in an unguarded moment the stick gathered such speed that several of the men let go just at the time when they should have held on.

Away went the stick down the path. Suddenly it swerved to the left and bowled over one of the men like a nine-pin.

As the man picked himself up, he relived his pent-up feelings by referring to the stick as, "that d—stick."

Thomas heard the remark, and then Thomas was heard to say, "That settles it! That settles it! No d—stick will ever go in that church. Put it on the side, men, and to-morrow we shall go to Trinity Pond for another."

To Trinity Pond they went, before daylight, and as they brought the second stick home, they were more careful about their language, as Thomas was listening to them, and they had no desire to go again to the woods for another stick.

Thomas not only objected to bad words being used in his presence, but he also maintained that he should use scripture words when talking to the parson.

One busy day Thomas was culling fish at Brookings. Rev. Benjamin Smith strolled down to the wharf to see the men at work. When he came to Thomas he said, "Well, Thomas, I see you are very busy, at what looks to be important work." "Yes, Sir," said Thomas, "I am separating the wicked from among the ungodly."

A carpenter's crank is, as probably you know, an iron frame with a screw at one end, and it is used to bind the frames of windows, and doors together, till the parts are secured in position by nails or glue. There were two carpenters in Trinity—Mr. G.—and Mr. N.—some fifty years ago. They were the joint owners of a crank, which they borrowed one from another as they needed it.

Mr. G.— had an interesting little handy-man, by the name of Joey, to do odd jobs around the place. One day Mr. G.— was making windows and needed the crank. So he said to Joey—"Joey, go over to Mr. N.— and ask him for the crank." "Yes, Sir," said Joey, and started for the door.

Mr. G.—, however, was not quite sure that Joey knew just what he was going for. So he called Joey back and said: "Joey, do you know what you are going for?"

"Yes, Sir," said Joey, "I'm going for the crank." "Are you sure that you know what a crank is, Joey?" asked Mr. G.—. "Indeed I do, Sir," said Joey, "for many a time I've had it in my stomach."

The Blowing Up of the "Amphion."

Plymouth was in 1796 visited by a calamity that was long remembered by its inhabitants. On September 22, about 4.30 p.m., the 32-gun frigate, "Amphion," while lashed to the sheer hull on one side, and almost touching the "Yarmouth" receiving ship on the other, both of which laid close to the dockyard jetty, unfortunately blew up.

Two parties were on board at dinner, one in the cabin, the other in the gunroom; and, owing to its being known that the "Amphion" would put to sea on the following day, nearly 100 men, women, and children, over and above the ships complement, were on board, taking leave of their kindred and townfolk. Captain Fellow, his first lieutenant, and a visitor—Capt. William Swaffield, of the "Overysel"—were sitting at the table, when the first shock threw them all from their seats against the carlings of the main deck. The first two, although much bruised, retained their self-possession, and, running to the cabin windows, threw themselves out, and were saved. Capt. Swaffield, stunned, probably, by the blow against the deck, shared the fate of the ship, and of 300 out of her 310 or 312 unfortunate inmates. The mangled bodies, limbless trunks, and dismembered arms, legs and heads that everywhere presented themselves made humanity shudder. The "Amphion" having been chiefly manned from the town, these black and scorched pieces of flesh had to be scrutinized by the sorrowful inhabitants, in order that they might ascertain, if they could, which had belonged to a father, a son, a brother, a husband, or friend.

Of all the poison taken into the blood, the germs and pus contributed by diseased gums (Pyorrhoea) are the most destructive to the human system. If every red blood cell is forced to fight against numbers of germs to the cell, the blood cannot attend to the building up of the body, and if allowed to continue the system is bound to break down and eventually you are an invalid. Kidney, stomach, heart trouble, rheumatism and many other diseases are brought on by diseased gums and teeth.

How You Get Your Electricity.

(By J. R. SMALLWOOD, of the Telegram Reportorial Staff.)

Forty five square miles of territory is drained to supply sufficient water wherewith to drive the machinery that creates the electricity that St. John's burns.

The most distant pond directly drained, Cochrane Pond, is seven miles away from the Power Plant.

A flume of three thousand, three hundred feet in length, and eight feet square in size, leads from the nearest dam to the actual feed-pipe. This flume, which is of wood, at one place runs through a tunnel, cut through the solid rock, for a distance of three hundred and fifty feet.

The feed-pipe, circular and of steel, is six feet six inches in diameter, and the water tears through it into the plant at the rate of from six to eight feet a second.

Company has three thousand, seven hundred customers to whom it supplies electricity, and of those, power to the quantity of three thousand horsepower is supplied to motors in the city.

These are just a few of the many interesting facts concerning the Electrical Power Plant at Petty Harbor, some eight or nine miles outside St. John's, as the wires go.

I have had the pleasure of being shown throughout the plant and having the system explained to me by the one most conversant with its running and management. To say that I was satisfied with what I saw were unnecessary. I want to tell what I did see, and let the reader judge for himself whether or not I am over enthusiastic.

For a long time I had had a rather hazy notion of the Power Plant at Petty Harbor, and time and time again decided to pay the place a visit. It was not until a day or so ago that my intention was carried out. I confess that my idea of how electricity was created was that two giant wheels revolved in opposite directions and continuously rubbed against each other, thus making the electricity. I venture to state that there are many who thought the same. Of course I was disillusioned. I found that my somewhat indefinite conception of the wonder of electricity was all wrong. However, as I do not yet thoroughly understand how the marvellous is performed, I am not going to attempt to explain it. My business just now is concerned with the plant.

The building is a long, oblong stone one, running one hundred and sixty feet in length and twenty seven in width. It is 1 story high, and has no encumbrances inside that would interfere with the business of making electricity. In the interior are machines and motors that hum and purr harmoniously, and the visitor first experiences a peculiar feeling of elation and suppressed excitement as he enters. Here, one sees, is Power personified, and there is just a slight feeling of awe as one watches, for a few minutes, the indescribably wonderful machines as they purr musically.

The pretty, picturesque little Power Town is set snugly between high, towering, encircling hills, with a narrow opening that lets in the salt water and the breezes tinged with the brine of the waters of the Atlantic outside. Viewed from the top of the surrounding hills, the village presents a most artistic scene, with its multicolored houses and the winding streets between. The road entering into the town leads through the hills, down an alarmingly precipitous slant and, circling and twisting, into the heart of the place, nearby the Power House. At night the houses are electrically lighted, while the streets are also illuminated by electric globes on high poles. The Plant is about two hundred yards back from the salt water, and is built at the base of the Northern side of the hills, and leading up the side of this hill is the red-painted, circular steel pipe, running up a distance of about a hundred and seventy feet. At the top, running along the top of the steep cliff, is the big wooden flume, which extends along, perfectly level, for a distance, as I have already said, of three thousand, three hundred feet, to the first dam, called the "fore-bay." Here the water is dammed to a depth of about fourteen feet, the flume being set to it so that the water will flow into it without difficulty. The mouth of the flume is covered with straight, iron bars, about an inch apart, to strain any debris that may be in the water. This fore-bay is connected with the various ponds further back by rivers, all of which eventually flow into it. In this way the water of all the country within forty five square miles is drained and empties into the steel feed-pipe that feeds the water to the giant machinery within the Plant.

As I have already promised not to attempt the description of the way the electricity is created, I will content myself with a short description of the humming, purring machines that accomplish this wonder. Standing at either end of the building, (inside, I mean) and, looking up its entire length you will see four great, round machines, each pair with a big, seven-ton fly wheel that serves to give a uniform rotation to the turbines, by which name the round machines are known, and to give a steady voltage. Each turbine drives two generators of nine hundred horsepower each, the turbines being each of twenty one hundred and fifty horsepower. Each generator generates five hundred volts of electricity. The water from the feed-pipe revolves inside the turbines, and then empties underneath the building, coming out in the river that leads down to the salt water. There is a pipe leading from under the turbine, down underneath the Plant, and ends some feet beneath the surface of the river. The water thus escapes, having been utilized in the generating of the electricity.

The wires lead from the Plant to the city, taking the straightest possible course, to the Sub-Station at the Dock, by the Railway Station, where the power is diffused over all the city. Here the distributing of all the electricity is arranged.

The average maximum load, (as the electricity used is called) is three thousand horsepower a day. Of course it varies very greatly. From six o'clock in the afternoon until six the next morning the load is at its minimum. At that hour different motors around town are turned on, and the load begins to ascend. At eight o'clock the load goes up considerably more, and so on all the morning. At twelve o'clock, and at one o'clock there is a lessening, according as different motors are turned off. The only time in the week that the whole Plant is stopped is between the hours of twelve on Saturday night and noon on Sunday. This, of course, is because there is no power required for motors.

There is a very ingenious machine, called the governor. This regulates the supply of water to suit the amount of load, or electricity used. Needless to say, this is a more than valuable machine.

Situated high up on the wall is a lightning protection apparatus which arrests attacks of lightning.

There is a staff of six men, under a foreman, Mr. T. H. Halley, who may be called the grandfather of electricity in this country, young as he is. There are three shifts of eight hours each, and two men are always on duty. Mr. Halley was with the old St. John's Lighting Co., which had its premises where the Imperial Tobacco Co's factory is now. He left that company, however, to become attached to the Petty Hr. Plant, which was started in 1900 and has been going strong ever since.

The Petty Harbor Electric Plant supplies electricity at a price that will compare with any plant this side of Montreal. The price, indeed, will decrease with the increase of custom and number of users. This will be clearly seen when it is known that double as much load can be produced with but little more expense than the Plant is being run under now. In this way, therefore, the more electricity there is used, the cheaper it will be.

At present, as I have before stated, there are thirty seven hundred customers, and motors that consume—if that is the correct word—three thousand horsepower a day. Five hundred volts go to run the street cars, there being a direct current for them.

However, as I have covered my subject in a sort of a way, I will not attempt to hold the reader's attention any longer. My concluding word will be one of advice: Visit the Petty Harbor Electric Power Plant before you die, or your life will have been lived in vain.

Church Lads' Brigade.

Avalon Battalion, C.L.B., paraded at 10 a.m. yesterday (Sunday) to attend Divine Service at St. Thomas's Church. The officers present were Lt. Col. R. F. Goodridge, Officer Commanding; Capt. Raley, M.C., Adjutant; Capt. R. E. Wood of C. Co., Avalon Goodridge and Lieuts. (Rev.) Fletcher, Phil Rendell, W. Reeves, House, L. Colley, A. S. Lewis, Frank Miles, R. G. Ash, Paymaster, whilst ex-Capt. Clayton of the Royal Newfoundland Regiment, Chaplain, officiated in the Church. The Band in charge of Lieut. Morris and the Brigades Bugle Band was also present in full strength—unfortunately the bass drummer was too vigorous and smashed his drum head—the only accident for the day. The 11 a.m. services was a Communion Service with Sermons, The Rev. Clayton preached a very practical and appealing sermon on "Courage." During the address the preacher referred to the experiences he had as a Chaplain with the forces in France which gave him an intimate acquaintance with men. He found all the troops wonderfully courageous in their military duties, but often found them Cowards in the matter of standing up for Righteousness amongst their fellow soldiers at times. He admonished all his congregation to be faithful to the Brigade spirit—the motto being "Fight the good fight" and to keep always before them the idea of being strong and manly adhering to the principles of God—our King and his commandments—remembering when we once deviate from our principles in small things it leads us to make greater breaks away from righteousness and principles laid down for our guidance in God's Holy Bible.

As an illustration he referred to an incident which occurred many years ago in a little town in Lancashire—where the people had built a large reservoir to contain the water for the citizens use—and a small leak in the big basin not attended to promptly—was allowed to go on until the structure was undermined—and the reservoir broke and as a consequence many people were drowned that were living in the valley below.

He also referred to the Church parades held at the Army Base—where the Regiments all paraded in their best uniforms with cleaned brasses, etc.—where the troops seemed to attend without the keen interest that he found in other services, particularly that of Holy Communion—that solemn and holy service instituted by Christ Himself and known as the "Last Supper." Men in the trenches were eager to partake in the service of the "Holy mysteries"—it showed him that this was the real service that appealed to their hearts and souls, and the many enquiries he had as to when he was holding the next Communion Service were sufficient to prove that this was the Service of Services that brought Peace and contentment which passed all understanding to their souls. One soldier told him after the fateful battle of July 1st, 1919—that he was worrying before the battle as to whether he would have courage to go over the top that morning and face death and he looked in his Bible for help—on opening the Book he found that the first words he saw gave him what he needed as he read "The Lord is my strength," and so the lads of the Brigade must always look to Him in all times of difficulties—and danger and God will show them the way.

The total strength of yesterday's parade was 223—of which the "Old Comrades" reported for 34 under Sergt. Major Peckham. The Officers have made an arrangement to assist the Boy Scouts' movement in every way they possibly can and decided to rent their magnificent thirty thousand dollar Armoury for a nominal sum to aid the great movement to educate and improve boy life in Nfld, and particularly in St. John's. The "Boy Scouts" being organized to enlist boys naturally is more or less a rival institution to the C. L. B. but nevertheless the Colonel and Officers are anxious to see every institution flourish which aims at the training and betterment of the youth of St. John's, and believes that as all organizations of the stamp of the C.L.B., Boy Scouts, etc., have the same end in view that it is the Brigade's duty to encourage in every way all public movements to educate "Boy life" to better fit them for their walks in life and a nobler citizenship for Newfoundland in the future.—Q.

Address to Capt. A. Kean

Captain A. Kean, S.S. Prospero, Sept. 17, 1919.

We the undersigned and the people of Nippers Harbor generally, hear with great regret that you are resigning the command of the S.S. Prospero, which work you have so nobly and successfully carried out both to the satisfaction of the public and passengers for the last 15 years, they always having the greatest confidence in your navigation and judgment. We consider you always had the interest of the public at heart without any prejudice whatever against anyone. We wish and trust that your new undertaking will be successful and we will watch your career with the greatest interest, and we believe whatever capacity you are in you still will have the best interest of the country at heart and will without selfish motives do your best for the general good.

We therefore tender this as an appreciation of our esteem for you and as a token of good wishes for your future welfare.

REPLY.

Dear Messrs. Blackler, Noble, Batstone and others of Nippers Harbor.—Your very kind address to me on the eve of my departure from the Prospero fills me with gratitude and I appreciate to the fullest extent the confidence you have reposed in me. I appreciate it all the more because it represents every class and creed in Nippers Harbor.

I may say that in anything I have done to help you the pleasure has been all mine. The work I have done in the Prospero during the last 15 years although attended with great anxiety, has been amply rewarded by the kindness and favors shown to me by the people I have served on the coast between here and Quipron. I trust you will extend to my successor in office that same good feeling that you have always shown to me, and that he will in time gain the same confidence and approval that you have shown to me, is my sincerest wish.

Yours respectfully,
A. KEAN.

Good News From Grady.

At Grady, Labrador, McRae's crews have been doing fairly good work since the last of August, and as they will continue operations until the last of this month, it is safe to say that this enterprising firm will secure a good voyage. We understand that they are also making arrangements to purchase a new fish carrier in England, a vessel about 200 tons, and we wish them every success.

4370 Miles Without Stopping the Engine or Shifting the Gears

This is a record-breaking non-stop performance recently given by a stock Model 90 Overland in a special test conducted in the United States—State of Oklahoma.

Scaled in high gear, this car was driven for seven days and seven nights, over roads both good and bad, through weather both good and bad, a daily average of 624 miles—without a single stop.

Model 90 owners (there are 175,000 of them) naturally take pride in this performance. But their pride is of an earlier origin than this—for they have had the opportunity to test this unusual car by personal experience under the varying conditions of every-day demand. You, too, will be proud to own an Overland Model 90.

At the Majestic.

At last Pauline Frederick is seen in a drama affording her opportunity to display her undoubted talent as a screen actress. Her role in "The Woman on the Index" is that of a woman with a past of ignominy, though not of dishonor, strong in her intuitive sense of honor, but a victim of circumstances and weak in her womanly concealment of her past from a husband in whom she could have fully confided. The character is entirely logical although placed in more than one strong dramatic situation. "The Woman on the Index" has some minor faults, one of which, the symbol of the pointing hands, could be cut out entirely to the advantage of the illusion of watching a segment of real life. The Goldwyn production gives her flawless support. Willard Mack, is a most accomplished and convincing villain. With such a combination, including Miss Frederick at her best under highly capable direction, a packed house at the Rialto sat enthralled. The play is forceful and a desirable addition to any program. See it at the Majestic.

Wedding Bells.

AT PORT BLANDFORD. On Thursday, Sept. 11th, a very pretty wedding was solemnized at Saint Aidan's Church, Port Blandford. The contracting parties been Miss Elsie M. Stone, eldest daughter of the late Josiah Stone, and Mr. Ronald Haynes, son of Mr. James Haynes of St. John's. To the strains of the Wedding March, played by Miss Elsie Garrett (organist) the bridal party entered the church at 8 p.m. The bride, who was given away by her brother Ambrose Stone, was neatly attired in a gown of Maize Silk with embroidered George and pearls with hat to match, carrying a beautiful bouquet of white carnations and roses. The bridesmaids were Miss Irene Stone, sister of the bride, maid of honor, and Miss Annie Adams, life-long friend of the bride, who wore dresses of pink silk, with hats to match, while ex-private Ernest Stead, of the Royal Nfld. Regiment, acted as bridesboy. After the ceremony the party proceeded to the home of the bride, where a reception was held and many friends attended. The bride was the recipient of quite a number of presents.

The above is the first wedding to take place in the new Anglican Church Port Blandford.

LONDON GOSSIP.

LONDON, Aug. 31.
KING RETRENCHES.
 King George has just called for a return to be submitted to him showing the names of everyone in his employ in no matter what capacity, the salaries or wages they are paid, and the duties they perform. This is following upon the Premier's call for economy in all Government departments. The King proposes to go through this carefully so soon as it is complete, and all who are then found to be unnecessary will either be found other positions or will be removed from the Royal service. The King hopes to make a very considerable saving on the charges of the Court, but will see that no one suffers hardship through these economies.

THE CRISIS IN CLUBLAND.
 London clubland, which used to be such a flourishing part of the social life of the first city in the Empire, is passing through the most critical period in its history. To outward appearances the clubs, which have made Pall Mall and Piccadilly famous throughout the world, are the same as ever. There is a daily coming and going among their membership which would betoken a return to something like pre-war conditions. But those who probe a little deeper, or who, worse still, are responsible for the management of a club at this juncture, are anything but easy in their minds. The finances of the average club would be strained in any case in these days of high prices of food, labor, and so on, but there is the opposition of members to pay increased subscriptions and the disinclination of new members to join which complicates the problem to a disturbing degree. There are also the necessary capital outlays for repairs and alterations, which are more insistent than usual after the enforced neglect due to the war, and in the past club financiers have not always been conspicuous for their foresight in laying by money for a rainy day.

THE WOMEN'S LEGION.
 The Women's Legion of motor drivers seems to be demobilizing more quickly than was generally supposed, and now the school at Teddington has been closed. The Legion, which was started by Lady Londonderry, its present head, in 1915 to provide drivers for motor ambulances and army service vans and cars, has done splendid work here and in France. The other branches of the Legion supplied trained cooks and waitresses for the army, and for a long time had its headquarters at the Duke of York's School in Chelsea. It was the successful work done by these drivers, cooks, and waitresses for the army that convinced the army authorities that it would be safe to employ women in still larger numbers and under the discipline to which they had proved amenable both at home and abroad. The Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, the Women's Royal Naval Service, Women's Army Service Corps, and the Women's Royal Air Force were direct developments of the Women's Legion.

OUR SUBMARINE SUPREMACY.
 Rear-Admiral Douglas L. Dent has just taken up his duties as chief of the Submarine Service. He succeeds Rear-Admiral S. S. Hall, who had been in charge of Britain's under-water flotillas since the beginning of 1915. During the four years of Admiral Hall's command the submarine service made extraordinary progress. When the war opened this country was by no means well supplied with effective submarines. She possessed a great many boats, but the majority were too small for ocean going duty, whereas all but two of the German boats were capable of longer voyages. Lord Fisher lost no time in making good the deficiency, and placed big contracts for submarines of various types, including the 24-knot steam-driven "K" boat. Altogether about 150 new submarines were built or ordered during the war. Their duties were of the most diverse character. In addition to maintaining a continuous patrol of the German coast they helped to convoy food ships and transports, and themselves sank 20 German U-boats besides dozens of enemy surface craft. Britain's total loss in submarines was 63 boats, more than half of which were obsolete, and of this total only 25 were destroyed by enemy action. Despite the cutting down of the shipbuilding programme the Admiralty is resolved to maintain the lead which Britain has now gained over all rivals in the numbers and quality of submarines.

PASSING OF THE EAGLE HUT.
 Since August, 1917, when the first batches of American soldiers began to arrive in London there has been no more familiar building in the Strand than the Eagle Hut. Now its useful career as the headquarters of the American Y.M.C.A. in London comes to an end, and the premises have been taken over by the Chief Commissioner of Police for the use of recruits who have been taken on to replace those who were dismissed in connection with the recent police strike. The hut has one of the most interesting histories of any war club in London, and many associations and memories will cling about it that will make it an object of pilgrimage for every American visitor to this country for years to come. It is estimated that since its opening over 3,000,000 meals have been served under its roof, and hardly one of its 410 beds has ever been unoccupied for a single night. The original cost of building and equipment was £20,000, ($100,000) half of which the American Y.M.C.A. are receiving as purchase money from the police authorities. The Eagle Hutters, as they came to be called, did useful service during the period of air raids, and the hut itself was hit on one occasion, but suffered only slight damage. The new comers are allowing the League of Nations to arrange tours and give information to American soldiers on leave to retain a room in the building, and Americans in uniform will be cared for in the Grafton Hotel.

RETURN OF THE CRIMINAL.
 Lord Buckmaster tells us that "hunger, bankruptcy, and revolution will soon be knocking at our doors." However that may be, the burglar is knocking at them already and is getting inside our houses with rather alarming success. All wars have been followed by an increase in crime, and the last war is proving no exception. House raiding in the holiday season is no new thing, but some districts here are suffering from it with unusual severity. Attacks on shopkeepers' cash tills are significantly frequent, and the latest development is the raiding of the booking offices' cash at railway stations. The other day a robbery was brought off successfully at a station in the West of London, and another is reported from an important station just beyond Croydon, in the south-west portion of the Metropolis. Amazing stories are told daily in the newspapers here of robberies by gangs of shop thieves riding about in motor cars, and of motor cars left unattended. There is abundant evidence that the criminal class of London, having done its bit with others in the war, and being now demobilised, has returned to its civil avocation with an energy and daring that will need to be sternly repressed. If, as Lord Buckmaster prophesies, we are facing a time of civil disorders, no police force is likely to be adequate for the protection of life and property in great cities. The householders will have to defend himself and his goods as best he can.

LONDON'S NEW AIR SERVICE.
 The new London-Paris Air Service had a good start on August 25th, the machines doing the journey out and home in scheduled time, and without mishap of any kind. Needless to say there is nothing new in the adventure. For many months past aeroplanes with passengers and mail matter have flown to Paris and back. It was Bonaparte's ordinary method of transit to and from the Peace Conference, and flights such as this were to airmen during the war things of no consequence. In normal weather conditions the job is an easy one for an experienced pilot. The difficulty will come when the foggy weather sets in and complicates the task of landing. At Hounslow (the London terminus) lies in the broad valley of the Thames it is not appreciably freer from fog than any other locality outside London, and unless some means can be found for dissipating fog a continuous service in practically all weathers cannot be made. Did not Sir Oliver Lodge some years ago give attention to this subject, and conduct experiments which indicated that success could be reached? It is true that English fogs are not what they were a generation ago. Not for several years have we had what used to be called a "London particular." Smoke prevention and the use of electricity have done wonders. But the mists which roll up the Thames from the Essex marshes in autumn and winter are as dense as they were when Tacitus wrote of the Britain which Caesar knew, and there is no cure for them. They are as unalterable as the latitude. This is the real handicap upon aviation for passenger mail services.

Our Book Column.
 "Macclleans" for September is an unusually good number. Among the contributors are—Baroness Orczy, Robert Service and C. H. Cahen, K.C., "On Leave" by Harry Bailey is a London society story.
 "Evil Spirits" by W. A. Fraser is a fine account of Buldog Carney a story of the North-West, full of action.
 "Evil Spirits" is a man's story.
 An interesting account of the training of the Polish Army in Canada by Major Young, Adjutant of the Polish Army Camp at Niagara is also included.
 Baroness Orczy's "His Majesty's Well Beloved" is a story up to her usual style and time.
 "Teddy Bear" by Robert W. Service, is a pathetic little poem entirely different from Service's usual style. It is in a different Service style, but quite as good as any other written by the author of songs of a Soudrough.
 "Rough Rhymes of a Padre" "Woodbine Willie" (G. A. Studdert Kennedy, M.C., G.F.) This little volume is the expression of a most curious and energetic character and it gives a most lurid picture of the intellect of the soldier trying hard to fathom the difficult problem of a world seemingly given over to hatred and fighting. Mr. Kennedy seems to have understood his men better than any other Chaplain who has ever published a book so far. Mr. Kennedy possesses a bold and daring style, resembling somewhat Rudyard Kipling except that whereas Mr. Kennedy verges on the almost sublime, Mr. Kipling is the very opposite.

"For to do more than you can is to be a British man. Not a rotten 'also ran.'" (The Sprites).
 "Rough Rhymes of a Padre" is published by the well known firm of Hodder and Stoughton in Toronto.
 "French Windows" (John Ayscough). In this book the author gives life pictures of the French and Belgian peasants and soldiers. Mr. Ayscough is remarkably intimate with both Nationalities. His book displays a great love of the French and of France itself. He does not seem so much at home in his Belgian sketches as in his French ones. His creed and calling gave him special opportunities for getting into touch with all sorts and conditions of men, but only a man with his sympathy and insight into character could turn his conversations with those men into such a good account. The sketches in which our own soldiers figure have a beauty and truth which most of us can all recognise and enjoy while to most English readers the presentation of the soul of the French soldier—peasant will be a revelation. To say that the book is published by Longman's is a sign that "French Windows" is a good book.

Canadian Pacific Station Agent was Compelled to Quit

"All The Boys At This End Of The Line Talking About My Recovery," He Says.
 "When the boys come by and see me back on the job looking like my old self they always holler at me to know what has brought about the wonderful change, and I always shout back, 'Tanlac,' said A. E. Rawley, the popular telegraph operator at Welsford Station on the Canadian Pacific Railroad, and living in Westfield Beach, New Brunswick, in relating his remarkable experience with the medicine, recently.
 "My recovery has not only surprised me," continued Mr. Rawley, "but all the boys on this end of the line are talking about it. Pulling through what I have suffered back into health and strength seems more like work of a miracle than of medicine, for I had disappeared of living much longer."
 "My health suddenly gave way four years ago following a severe attack of grippe, which settled in my stomach and caused me to vomit gas and such a pressure through my chest that I could scarcely breathe. Sharp pains would suddenly strike me in the chest and I would lie there for hours, and at night I would have to get up and walk the floor to keep from smothering. One day, about a year after my trouble started, I began vomiting and kept it up almost incessantly for four days, and I thought sure my life would end there. I had to be carried to a hospital for treatment after which I fell in fair condition for a few weeks and then another attack came on me with great pains in my stomach and intestines which would last for hours. "At first these spells came about once a month, then twice a month and then every week and got me down to where I just couldn't work at all. In fact, I lost fifty pounds in weight and had to give up my position as station agent and do nothing but try to find relief. Then I went to another hospital for treatment, then another, making three in all, and tried every medicine I knew of or that was suggested to me, but kept getting worse. I had no idea I could live much longer and of course had little hope of ever getting any better.
 "My case was like that of the drowning man, reaching out for a straw—desperate—and although I had no faith in Tanlac to help me, when I saw it advertised I grabbed at it as my last resort. I had tried three hospitals and everything in the way of medicines so I couldn't have much faith in Tanlac, but, it's a fact, before my first bottle was gone I noticed a difference in my feelings. It was not long then until the gas stopped forming on my stomach. I had a good appetite, and could eat most anything without it hurting me. Now, to put it all in as few words as possible, I have taken eight bottles of Tanlac and am not only feeling fine, but I have gotten back twenty pounds of my lost weight. I am now working regularly every day, and am still picking up both in weight and strength right along. I attribute my recovery to nothing but Tanlac. To me it is the most wonderful medicine in the world and I will praise it as long as I live."
 Tanlac is sold in St. John's by M. Connors, under the personal direction of a special Tanlac Representative.—adv.

Dramas and
 The Secret of
 BY THORNTON HALL.
 (In Three Acts.)
 It was an evil of fate that took away, high-spirited Sophie Dorotea of Celle to Hanover to be the wife of George Louis (Later George I. of England), the most loutish and absolute Prince in Europe; and it was an evil omen that, when she stood at the altar beside her suitor, the groom, the Royal Chapel was plunged into darkness as of midnight, and shrieking of the storm outside drowned the voices of priests and chorists.
 Wedded to a husband whom she despised and detested, who treated brutally and flaunted his love-affairs before her eyes, and hedged round rigid etiquette in an atmosphere of coldness and suspicion, life was daily misery to her.
 "I have no one to love me," a child (for such she was) piteously wrote in her diary. "Everywhere nothing but cold unempathetic things—I who have always been surrounded with so much affection and to which it is as necessary as the air I breathe."
 Sweethearts Since Childhood
 Thus for Sophie Dorotea six happy years passed, when suddenly the whole world was transfigured for her by the coming to the Hanover Court of Philip Konigsmark, Swedish Count, one of the handsomest and most gifted men in Europe who had won laurels as a warrior in a hundred battles.
 The Count had been the favorite playfellow and "big sweetheart" of her happy childhood at Celle. When he returned to her in the prime of his handsome manhood, a hero's name was on all tongues. Her heart was empty; here at last was one who could fill it. She was dying for love and sympathy; here was one who could surround her with affection and protection.
 Can one wonder that the love of their childhood was quick to spring to life; or that it rapidly grew to a passion on whose strong title wings swept off their feet?
 They were halcyon days that followed for Sophie and her lover. They were blissful and stolen meetings when they would forget the world in their arms. And when after a such golden months the Count went to Morea to fight against

St. John's Public Does Not Have To Pay Exorbitant Prices

Good News For All

The situation for British Goods is now serious. We knew this for many months. We saw the impending high prices. Our British Buyer left for market early in May and bought goods which we now offer in immense quantities at prices much below the possibilities of any other store. We urge the public in justice to themselves to buy their Fall and Winter requirements NOW.

Dramas of Court and Castle.

The Secret of the Castle Corridor

BY THORNTON HALL.
(In Tit Bits.)

It was an evil fate that took the lovely, high-spirited Sophie Dorothea of Celle to Hanover to be the wife of George Louis (Later George I, of England), the most loutish and dissolute Prince in Europe; and it was an even more evil fate that when she stood at the altar beside her gilded bridegroom, the Royal Chapel was plunged into darkness as of midnight, and the shrieking of the storm outside drowned the voices of priests and choristers.

Wedded to a husband whom she despised and detested, who treated her brutally and flouted his love-affairs before her eyes, and hedged round by rigid etiquette in an atmosphere of coldness and suspicion, life was a daily misery to her.

"I have no one to love me," the child (for such she was) pitifully wrote in her diary, "Everywhere I get nothing but cold un sympathetic looks—I who have always been surrounded with so much affection and to whom it is as necessary as the air I breathe! Sweethearts Since Childhood.

Thus for Sophie Dorothea six unhappy years passed, when suddenly the whole world was transfigured for her by the coming to the Hanoverian Court of Philip Konigsmarck, a Swedish Count, one of the handsomest and most gifted men in Europe, who had won laurels as a warrior in a hundred battles.

The Count had been the favorite playfellow and "big sweetheart" of her happy childhood at Celle. Now he returned to her in the prime of handsome manhood, a hero whose name was on all tongues. Her heart was empty; here at last was one who could fill it. She was dying for lack of love and sympathy; here was one who could surround her with love and protection.

Can one wonder that the love of their childhood was quick to spring to life; or that it rapidly grew to a passion on whose strong tide both were swept off their feet?

They were halcyon days, that followed for Sophie and her lover—days of blissful and stolen meetings when they would forget the world in each other's arms. And when after a few such golden months the Count was sent to Meora to fight against the Turks, he took his Princess's heart with him, and left his own with her. But though thus separated, heart sped to heart across the gulf on the wings of letters as passionate and tender as ever was penned. "Heaven knows," the Count wrote, "if I shall ever see you again, my life, my goddes! The thought that we might never meet more is death to me. I feel ready to plunge a dagger in my heart; but since I must live, I pray that it may always be for you."

Passionate Love Letters.
In a later letter he wrote: "You ask me to reassure you of my love. I will never forsake you; so long as a drop of blood remains in my veins, so long as I draw breath, my heart is wholly yours. You are my wealth, my treasure; I would sacrifice the world to kiss your divine mouth."

And Sophie's letters to her hero are no less ardent. "Nothing can make your absence bearable to me," she wrote. "I am faint with weeping. I hope to prove by my life that no woman has ever loved man as I love you." And again: "But what joy when I see you again! It will be impossible for me to moderate my transports. I fear everybody will see how much I love you."

And when at last his soldiering was over and he was returning to her arms, with what ecstasy he wrote: "I shall embrace to-night the loveliest of women. I shall kiss her charming mouth. I shall worship her eyes, those eyes that enslave me. My tears will chase down her incomparable cheeks!"

But it would have been far better if the Princess and her Count had never met again—that he had died on the field of battle. Tragedy was lying in ambush for him. A few more days of blissful meetings, of heaven in each other's arms; and the end came with tragic and mysterious swiftness.

Prince George's jealousy was a flame. The Count was full of scandalous whispering. The Countess La Platen, whose beauty and advances Konigsmarck had spurned, was thirsting for revenge. One evening the Count received a note from the princess arranging another—the last—of their stolen meetings. "I will look out for you from ten o'clock," she wrote. "You know the usual signal. I look forward with rapture of seeing you. If joy can kill it will kill me. You will find me as tender as ever—even more so. I shall give you so many kisses, and with such fondness that you will be sorry you ever doubted me."

faction on her face. Her hours of vengeance, she knew, had come at last.

About an hour after midnight Konigsmarck with a fond embrace bade the Princess farewell at the door of her apartments, and with a light heart walked down the corridor towards the door, which had been left unbarred for his exit. To his amazement, however, he found that the door was locked. He was about to retrace his steps when, from their hiding place, the four desperadoes sprang on him.

A Fight Against Odds.
He was caught like a rat in a trap. But, if he must die, he would die like a soldier, fighting to the last gasp. Quick as a flash he drew his sword. There was a clash and a clatter of steel, a confused whirl of men, thrusting, parrying, and panting in a grim life-and-death struggle. It was four against one; but that one was as brave as a lion and the finest swordsman in Europe.

One of his assailants he pierced through the heart; a few seconds later he struck down another with a blow that snapped his sword in two. Still he fought on madly, desperately, with his broken sword, until a cowardly blow from a battle-axe brought him to his knees. The next moment he was run through the body and fell dying, gasping out, "Spare the Princess! Spare the innocent Princess!"

In the shelter of a doorway La Platen had seen her victim fall, and she went to gloat over his last moments. But though he was dying fast, there was still life in him. He saw the malignant face of the woman, he had scorned, bending over him, a smile of triumph and mockery on her lips, and he cursed her bitterly, until, in her rage, she kicked him.

A few moments later Konigsmarck drew his last breath, murmuring the name of the Princess he had loved so well at the cost of his life. When the first rays of dawn filtered into the palace corridor they disclosed no trace of the foul deed which had done a gallant, if indiscreet, lover to death.

When, after many days, Sophie heard of the death that had befallen her lover, her grief and despair were pitiful to see. Fainting fits alternated with violent paroxysms of sobbing; and in her agony and despair she would have ended her shattered life had not watchful eyes and hands prevented her.

But she was not long to escape her own punishment. The proof of her relations with the dead Count was made abundantly clear by an examination of his papers. She was arrested by her husband's orders and immured in the Castle of Ahlden, where she was kept a prisoner for thirty-two terrible years, until at last death came mercifully to her release.

Sunkist Orange Marmalade.

Sunkist Orange Marmalade is a so-called sweet marmalade, but distinctively individual in its sweetness. It provides the flavor that most people who nourish a sweet-tooth probably will prefer. The citric acid of the orange tempers the sweetness and imparts the tang that distinguishes real marmalade from the usual preserves and other marmalades. Everyone who likes preserves of any kind will be delighted with this luscious marmalade.

Sunkist Grapefruit Marmalade.

For the lovers of "bitter" marmalade our Scotch connoisseur-cook makes a limited quantity of Sunkist Grapefruit Marmalade after a special recipe which she brought from Scotland. Sunkist Grapefruit Marmalade has that piquant tang that the connoisseur always seeks in marmalade.

Sunkist Orange Jelly.

Sunkist Orange Jelly is distinguished from ordinary jelly by a very delicate tang combined with the full flavor of fresh-picked oranges. It is a stiff, clear jelly of beautiful, natural color. It contains oranges, lemons, water and pure sugar! Nothing else is added. This jelly is also characterized by the real "home taste." You will want to serve it often.

From a recent Magazine we have copied the following. We only need to add, Papers to suit all requirements can be had at our Store.

1. Thou shalt heed the call of Plain quiet wall papers and white woodwork wherever such is possible.
2. Thou shalt lighten dark rooms by the use of light-hued, yellow-tinted wall paper, that suggests the blessed sunshine.
3. Thou shalt see that thy walls and thine own personality are not too forward, but modestly retiring.
4. Thou shalt use no large-patterned wall papers against which to hang thy pictures. The one will kill the other.
5. Thou shalt have no centerpiece or cornerpieces upon thy ceiling, but only a very nearly plain expanse of light color.
6. Thou shalt have thy fill of bright tints, and delicate designs for bedrooms and boudoirs, but for drawing-rooms, dining-rooms, libraries and halls, thou shalt be compelled to use less frivolous papers.
7. Thou shalt, when the ceiling is not too high, run the paper of the side wall up to the ceiling, putting the border just below the angle.
8. Thou shalt not panel the walls of a small room, except it be above a mantelpiece, a sideboard or a bookcase, where a bit of tapestry, a mirror or a picture may be held in place by strips of moulding.
9. Thou shalt use attention-compelling cut out borders, or conventionally designed strips for divisions between walls and ceiling.
10. Thou shalt remember at all times that thy wall paper is but a background against which to show thy pictures, thy furniture, and thy friends.
