were many surmises as to the cause of death. From the appearance of the handkerchief and apron tied around her neck it was inferred by some that she had committed suicide while others gravely expressed doubts and hinted foul play. It was conceded by all present that the unfortunate woman had met her death through choking, but whether with her own hand or by the assistance of some flend in human form remained a mystery. When found the body was quite cold and life appeared to have been extinct for many hours. The right leg and the hands were contracted and the face was somewhat discolored. The tongue protruded but no marks of violence were anywhere visible. A few facts of her previous career tend to show that domestic difficulties of a serious nature existed, and that she was at variance with the household and some of her sons who are married and reside in the vicinity. The Two Immortals. During the Summer, bulls and bears, nillionaires and paupers, scholars and swells fade out of view, and one catches sight of the Man and the Woman, smil-CUSTOMS BROKER, ing, frowning, coquetting, meeting, turning away, but withal, gradually approaching each other. They have been approaching each other and playing their pretty pantomime since the days before the Flood until now; the same two immortal lovers under many names. What were History without their sweet story going on from age to age? Where would Achilles and Hector have found their chance of a career but for Helen's coquetries? Whence could have arisen the chaos out of which was born the later civilization of the middle ages but for the Crusader going about, lance in rest, to vindicate the shape of his lady's nose or the color of her hair? Science to those happy children of the old time was nothing but the same old story personified. When the harvest was plentiful it was Jove who had wooed the earth to a warm er smile. If the moonlight slept softly on a hidden, forest nook, behold the chaste, a hidden, forest month, below the chase, cold huntress Diana from the skies wake-ening Endymion with a kiss!

Nowadays, here are the two lovers still clad in redingote and suit of linen duck linstead of thunders and moonbeams, but still immortal, still young, still, in their own peculiar sense, divine. Summer is their holiday. They play their wonderful enchanted drama in a thousand shapes and under a thousand names. Which of us has not seen them, this week, to day, at Long Branch, washed overhead in salt water and jelly-fish, climbing the Kaatskills, floating in a mackerel-boat off the control of the control

Nantucket, jolting side by side in a city street-car? But dust, nor mackerels, nor jelly-fish can destroy the dreamy glamour about them, nor the signs by which they are known. All mankind and woman kind recognize them, hide as they will, and have for them a kindly, indulgent smile. Whether Celadon gives Celia a diamond ring in her ball-room bouquet, or hands her a leg of the lamb his folks have just killed, in at the kitchen window—who does not know the kitchen window -who does not know the sign of the hot, telicious fever that began in Eden, and has spread its sweet contagion from ancient Asia to the frozen North? All mankind love lovers, it is said, only because kind love lovers, it is said, only because they, too, have taken the part of the immortal pair. Which of has not played that world-old, unchanging drama to its conclusion, well or ill? Not you, only, blushing little shop girl, Jeannette with your honest, shabby feannott, but the grey-haired, hooknosed gambler, with his racing stables, and the widdw boarding-house keeper in her widdw boarding-house keeper in her frouzy "front" and black alpaca, and oddest of all, the fast New York belle on the look out for a good match, Which of us is not, while the fond fever lasted, risen to heights of unselfishness and genrosity unknown before? How wonder-risen to heights of unsensimess and generosity unknown before? How wonderful, as though newborn, was the word to us then? How every man was a brother, who had known our pain and tasted our joy; how dreadful a thing it was to be alive; how near was God behind that life! Now, perhaps, our thoughts are running into banking or housekeeping channels, and our "brother" is lost behind clerks or grocers, and God behind the unpaid debt on the new church. So now if Celadon and Celia coming into view in this bright August weather engross too much of its air and sun, let us forgive them their innocent selfishness in the remebrance of the days when we too acted their divine drama and so were better men and women than we are, and bid them godspeed upon their way, thridding the somber boscage of "this wood into the morning star."

A Lynching Case. Further particulars relating to the recent lynching of the old man Kessler in Fulton, Mo., on Friday make up a shockthat Kessler and his son were arrested some time since, and sent to jail in Jefferson City to await trial on the charge of stealing a lot of mules from a number of farmers in the vicinity. On Friday mornfarmers in the vicinity. On Friday morning they were taken from their cells by the sheriff, and while en route for Fulton young Kessler managed to slip his handcuffs, jump from the train and escape. When the train arrived at Fulton an immense throng of citizens had collected about the station, and their indignation was intense when they learned that one of the prigrapers had escaped. The aged of the prisoners had escaped. The aged prisoner was taken to the Court House, prisoner was taken to the Court House, where, having no counsel nor money, he pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to the penitentiary for six mouths. After passing sentence upon Kessler the judge made an appeal to the crowd assembled in the court-room to let the law take its course, but notwithstanding this threats of lynching were heard. Subsequently the sheriff, in company with the prosecuting attorney and two constables, came out and entered a carriage with the prisoner and started A large Stock of GROCERIFS & LIQUORS of easily enumerated, at lowest market rates, n BOND OR DUTY PAID. and two constables, came out and entered a carriage with the prisoner and started for the jail, under the escort of seven mounted officers. Just as the driver was about to mount, however, a man stepped up with a drawn revolver and bade him carried aside, and taking the reins and stand aside, and taking the reins and jumping on the seat, started up the street on a run. He turned and pointed his revolver at Kessler, but was prevented from firing by the sheriff. Just at this point about twenty-five men mounted their horses and went in pursuit of the carriage and conmenced firing into it. The sheriff was shot in the spine and can-not live, while one of the constables and the attorney were seriously wounded. The mob then got possession of the car-
