Canada's Jubilee

The fiftieth anniversary of the confederation of the several provinces into one Dominion was fittingly observed in the Watford churches on Sunday, with a seriousness and solemnity becoming a celebration of the kind during the progress of the war. The services were special in their character in regard to prayers, was wounded, shook him by the hand and said "You'll get a two weeks rest anyway and make Blighty," but the wound became serious and Pte. Foxcroft hymns and scripture reading and the ministers struck a high patriotic note in their sermons. In most made Canada for good. He spoke of the bravery of Percy and of the high esteem in which he was held by his comrades. Pte. Sharland also spoke. He was a comrade of Lloyd Howden, now fighting, cases the discourses presented to the congregations a brief synopsis the confederation movement of which resulted in a united and prosperous Canada, and ideals set for the future guidance of the people. In the Sunday schools a program was followed tending to enrich the patriotism of the young. Simple decorations of flags and flowers were used in all places of worship. The heavy rain storm in the morning prevented many from turning out, but the evening congregations were large.

Each member had invited two Monday was ideal weather for a holiday. Fine, moderately cool and bracing with a freshness in the air only enjoyed after a heavy rain. The day was observed just as any The thanks of Tecumseh Chapter is hereby tendered to all taking part in the ordinary public holiday. Pienics and auto parties, fishing and gardening, tidying up the premises and other usual holiday stunts occupied the time of most of the town people. There was a dearth of flags on the business section, but several dwelling houses were profusely decorated with flags and bunting.

Canadians certainly do not make a display of their patriotism and an onlooker would never learn from the enthusiasm we display or the noise we make that we are citizens of the very best country on earth.

BRAVE BRITISH AIRMEN

THE "EYES OF THE ARMY" ARE GALLANT YOUTHS.

Take Terrible Chances in Scouting, and Frequently Pay With Their Lives-Typical Stories Told of Young Lieutenant Illustrate the Risks That the Members of the Flying Corps Have to Take.

THE announcement that "Improved weather conditions permitted increased aerial

The Canadian Scottish Borderers are now connected with the Gordon Highlanders, one of the regiments which has made the name Scotland shine with glory on many of the battlefields of the world.

It is about time the English correspondents stopped talking about Canada as one of "England's depen-dencies." Just now the status is Just now the status is pretty well the other way round and Britain is depending upon Canada in more ways than one.

Ministers in several church governing bodies are asking that the clergy be not exempted under the terms of the proposed conscription bill. There are many ministers in the ranks of the army today as well as in officers' positions and we have yet to hear that they make any less efficient soldiers than the layman recruit.

Dr. Franklin H. Martin, of the General Medical Board, speaking of sending physicians to England and France said in both countries war has depleted the medical staffs and the need that America furnish more is imperative. In one retreat the British lost 267 doctors, all killed near the same spot within half an hour, he said, and as a result 5,000 men lay on the ground unattended for seventy-two hours.

As the war continues from month to month, it clearly demonstrates the foibles and frailties of human opinions. Various authorities have determined the time when peace will be restored. These prophecies

Trial is Inexpensive.—To those who suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism or any ailment arising from derangement of the digestive system, a trial of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is recommended, should the sufferer be un-acquainted with them. The will be in-expensive and the result will be another customer for this excellent medicine. So effective is their action that many cures can certainly be traced to their use where other pills have proved ineffective. m

The oldss were one-sided enough,' but the young Britisher decided to take a chance. He climbed swiftly and young Britisher decided to take a chance. He climbed swiftly and surely until he got far above and to the rear of the hostile craft. Evi-dently the Germans were intent upon some errand which they pro-posed to carry out in force, for they paid no heed to the khaki-clad air-man until he deliberately dived into them, firing as he came. This threw the twelve Germans into a panic, and their formation was entirely broken up. Meantime Lieutenant A got be-neath the nearest machine and fired an entire drum of cartridges into it at fitteen yards. The hostile machine collapsed and "crashed." That is a supreme word in the lexicon of the flying corps. A machine may fall, or dive, but until it is actually seen to "crash" it is not counted as an enemy "casualty." After seeing his particular enemy "tratsh," Lieutenant A drew off to think things over. He was some-what amazed to see still more hos-tile machines coming up in forma-tion. But he dashed at the leader of the new-comers and sent him in a spiral nose drive to a "crash." This led to still more complications, and the intrepid little pilot soon found himself engaged with three

A few days later, it is related, he took a running dive into a formation of twenty hostile machines with all the self assurance an eagle might have in the midst of a flock of spar-rows. Before he was through he had sent three adversaries "crashing." "This time," says the record, "he returned to one of our aerodromes for more ammunition and returned to the scene of battle where he en-gaged and dispersed such enemy ma-

ANTWERP JEWS IN LONDON. More Than Thirty-five Hundred Cared for-

More than 3,500 Jewish refugees from Antwerp, who fied Belgium when the war broke out, are living in three unique communities estab-lished for them by the British Government in London. In these places they enjoy ample comfort, maintain their family ties, and are shabled to get work, waiting for the fime when the war will end and they may re-turn here. turn home. The Government, at the instance

The Government, at the instance of the Jewish community of Lon-don, of which the wealthy Leopold de Rothschild is the head, provided the three immense homes for them, where they have been taught English.

The communities are divided among what is now called the Po-land Street Refuge, near Oxford Cirand street henge, hear Oxford Ch-cus; Lindrick House, in North Lon-don, and a number of flat bonses in Whitechapel. In the Poland Street Refuge Ernst Schiff, a nephew of Jacob Schiff, the New York banker, is the head. The Poland Street Befuge shelters gees were diamond cutters, and to find jobs for that character of artiimpossible. The diamond-cutting industry does not flourish so much in London now as before the war. To-day they are engaged in making boots, clothes, and in other kinds of work.

The average cost to house, feed, and clothe each one of the 3,500 refugees per week is $2.50. Those who work pay for their board, and, who work pay for their board, and, if they are able, for their clothes. Whatever deficiency there is the British Government defrays. In all three communities the chil-dren are given schooling facilities. Their progress in learning English is remarkable. Milk depots for the youngsters, with sterilizing appar-atus, have been installed at each re-fuge. A maternity centre has been fuge. A maternity centre has been established at Lindrick House. A YOUTHFUL HERO.

Anecdote of South African Soldiers Now in France.

South African troops-men from the mines and farms of the gold country—are now serving their first winter in the field in France and are distinguishing themselves with many deeds of daring and valor. Some of them fought against Britain in the Boer War, and among them there are several Americans who had made their homes in the African mining fields.

One of the most thrilling exploits of the South Africans was the recent act of a young subaltern. During a night operation he became separated from his company and found himself inside the German lines. After a time he picked up six more men of his company who had become similarly detached. When dawn came the little group found itself practically sur-

More Agriculture. Because of the war Switzerland has increased its acreage under cul-tivation in grains by more than 20 per cent, over the 1914 figures.

New York is to have a new hotel to cost $15,000,000. THE STATELY ELK.

It is the Most Beautiful of Our Remaining Wild Animals.

Now that the buffalo survives only in a few preserves the elk is the most interesting as it is the most beautiful of our remaining wild animals. this day of Americanism it would be a fine thing if this typical American animal should come to be known by his Indian name of wapiti. The wapiti is the largest of the red deer family and closely resembles his smaller brother, the European stag. The wapiti is not properly an elk, as the European elk is more closely allied to the American moose.

The wapiti is now numerous only in the states of Wyoming, Idaho and Montana, though nearly 4,000 head are thought to remain in Colorado, and considerable numbers are scattered through western Canada. The Campfire Club of America and other organizations and individuals are working for its preservation. The favorite home of the elk is the Yellowstone National park, where he has no rifle to fear and where cougars, coyotes and timber wolves are kept under control. In the park and its vicinity are probably 50,000 head, distributed in two main herds. During the summer months the elk live high up in the mountains, generally at an elevation of 8,000 to 11,000 feet. The grassy plateaus offer an ideal summer range. Even on the wooded sides of the highest ravines there are parklike glades where the elk in the afternoons come out to late feed. It is difficult to imagine a more beautiful sight than is then afforded by these stately and graceful animals Although their number in the park may sometimes reach as high as 60,-000 head, it is rare for visitors to see a single specimen. Visitors are taken in stages around a regular route arranged for viewing the natural phenomena of that great outdoor museum.

The elk dislike to be pursued by tourists with cameras and keep away from the stage routes. If visitors would leave the highways of the park and seek out its byways, either on foot or by pack and saddle trips, they would have a marvelous opportunity to study the greatest exhibit which survives of our mountain wild life-not only the elk, but mountain sheep, deer, beaver and many other animals.

Why We Have Two Eyes.

Because we have two eyes the things we see seem solid and not flat, with the result that we can judge their distance from us with fair correctness. Look through a window at a house across the street with one eye closed, and then with the other eye closed. The bars of the window frame will cut across the opposite house in different places. The two fields seen with the eyes separately, although in the main alike, differ. When you book at the house with both eyes open the two fields seen by the two eyes are com-bined, and the house across the street assumes depth and relief. Although we see a house with each eye, we see only one house with both eyes. This makes the stereoscope possible—an instrument so designed window at a house across the street possible-an instrument so designed possible—an instrument so designed that the two eyes are made to con-verge on a single point and yet to see two different pictures. If these two pictures represent a chair as it would appear to the right and left eyes respectively, they are perceived as one solid object.—Tit-Bits.

The Children of Belgium. There are 2,575,000 children in Belgium enduring the hardships which a heartless invader has forced upon them, and of these 1,500,000 are entirely dependent upon charity for food. Of the remainder many have to be partly fed by the Neu-

Terrible Knives Wielded by the Nam tives of Hindustan.

The weapon common to every part of Hindustan, so as to deserve the name of the national arm, is the "katar." This is a broad, two edged dagger, the hilt of which is formed something like an H, the hand grasping the crossbar, which is generally double, while the side bars extend on each side of the wrist.

Some katars are made with five blades which units into one, but by squeezing together the crossbars the blades diverge like the fingers of a hand when the thrust has been given. Other katars are made in sets of two or even three, of diminishing sizes, the blades of the larger being hollow and forming sheaths for the smaller.

Some of the southern Indian katars, known as "death givers," are immense weapons, nearly two feet long in the blade, and the hilts are a mass of fantastic scrollwork and mythological monsters, the cobra with expanded hood figuring largely.

There are also the "bich'hwa," or scorpion's sting, a doubly curved dag-ger; the "khanjar," a larger form of the same, and the "peshkabz," or hunting knife. But none of these elaborate weapons has about it the terri-bly "businesslike" look of the Khyber knife ("ch'hura"), with its ponderous single edged, tapering blade and plain ivory hilt.-Chambers' Journal.

Queer Eskimo Custom. A traveler among the Eskimos of northern Alaska tells of a custom that reveals an odd mixture of superstition and practical shrewdness. When a child is born its parents give it the name of the last person who died in that village, partly in the belief that the spirit of the dead person leaves the grave and enters the child and partly in the expectation that the relatives of the dead person will contribute to its support.

Clean to handle. Sold by all Drug-gists, Grocers and General Stores. When the Earl of Riversham died his entailed estate fell to his oldest son. Ralph. He left his second son, Martin, reach it. But he did not believe that a house with the ground on which it this would avail, since he could compel stood contiguous to the family manor them by law to produce what they house. Ralph married late in life a had burled. woman near his own age, and it was Nevertheless Martin was at a loss not supposed his wife would bear him just what to do in the premises. Even if Richard was dead the earl would be in possession of the estate and title so long as he lived. But if a boy were substituted for the legitimate heir Martin should get possession of the required proof of Richard's death when it was obtainable. The courts were not likely to serve him until a pretended heir laid claim to the inberitance, and by that time it might be too late.

There was evidently a very weak point for the earl and countess in the fact that two lackeys possessed their secret. Martin wondered why they had trusted any one but themselves. There were several explanations. First, these lackeys might be paid a good sum for holding their tongues; second, the countess might have seen at the last moment the impropriety of trusting them and concluded to bury the body where they would know nothing about it.

Martin waited till one morning he saw a little boy in the grounds of his brother in charge of a nurse. Then he was sure that a substitute for the legit imate heir had been found, who would eventually claim the estate. Then Martin laid his plans. His first move would be to learn whether the lackeys knew of the burial place. If they did his next would be to learn if they could be bribed to reveal it. But the earl had doubtless paid them well or had, more likely, promised them in stallments, to be paid over a term of years so long as they would keep the secret. If either of them were dishonest he might be successfully bribed, but the matter would be difficult However, Martin could see no other way to proceed, and he must do so on those lines.

He learned that the two lackeys in the secret were the only ones at the time of the burial in the manor house, the other servants being women. He found a means of communication with them in one Higgins, who kept a public house

One day James Healey, one of the lackeys, went to Lady Riversham and confided to her the fact that he had been offered £50 if he would reveal the burial place of the box he had carried out and brought back on the occasion described. He wished to be informed whether she would object to his earn ing the money. The countess was puzzled. She asked the man many questions, but could not learn from him who desired the information or why it would be worth £50. Healey told her that Higgins had offered him the bribe, but the countess did not believe that Higgins was acting for himself. She fold Healey to put off Higgins for awhile and she would think the matter over. She believed that her brother-in-law was up to some deviltry, but she could not imagine what it might be. The next day she told Healey that he might accept the bribe, provided he took whoever paid it to the grave himself and informed her when he was to do so. But she advised him to stand out for a larger sum. Healey was quite up to this work and told Higgins that he had been paid £100 to keep the secret. Nothing less than £200 would tempt him to divulge it. This being reported to Martin he went to London and put a mortgage on his house as security for the money.

The loan agent happened to inspect the property while Lady Riversham was about to enter her place in her carriage. The man asked her some questions about Martin's property and revealed the fact that it was to be mortgaged. Then she slipped a five pound note into the man's hand and asked him to send her the name and address of the mortgagee. Within a few days she had bought the mortgage, paying a bonus. Healey having been offered the amount he claimed for his secret, instructed by the countess, agreed to pilot the briber himself and no other to the burial place at midnight on a certain date. Before the grave was opened Healey was to be paid the £200. His terms were accepted, the going to the grave at night being especially agreeable to Martin, who desired to make his investigation unseen.

The appointed night proved to be very dark. A few minutes before midnight Healey and Martin met at an angle of the Riversham estate. Marthn had a dark lantern, which he hid under his coat, and a spade, which he held in his hand. Healey piloted him to a sort of bower a few hundred yards from the manor house, a vacant space shut in by trees on all sides. Martin knew the place well. It had been a favorite spot with him when a boy. In, its center the ground was heaped. indicating that a grave was beneath. Healey demanded his money, and Martin counted it out to him, Healey holding the lantern directed upon the bills. After counting the bills Healey took the spade and began to dig. The box had not been deposited far below the surface and was soon reached. Martin took from his pocket a screwdriver and as soon as the box had been lifted from the grave began to loosen the cover. Then he removed the lid and, taking up the lantern, brought it to bear on the contents. There lay the body of the dog Martin had seen driving with the o and her son.

With an oath Martin asked Healey why he had sold him out in that fash "I didn't sell you out, sir. You offered me the money to show you where the box was buried. There It is."

Martin demanded a return of the bills, and Healey refused. Martin setzed him, but a couple of Healey's friends started from behind the trees and beat him off.

The explanation of the story is that Richard's dog had been stricken with hydrophobia and been killed, Richard knowing nothing about his pet's death. After the starting of the burial party it had occurred to the countess that the boy must be told the truth, and it would be preferable that the dog should be buried in a spot in which the child played when out of doors. Richard is now Earl of Riversham, that something dreadful had happened. Martin took it all in till quiet came again; then, laying aside his glass, he said to himself:

"I believe the boy is dead." That night he noticed lights in the manor house later than usual. Thinking, under cover of the darkness, to learn something by a nearer view, he left his house and, entering his brother's grounds, stole near enough to the house to see anything that could be seen from the outside.

Suddenly a rear door was opened, and by the light within Martin saw a servant, bearing an oblong box, issue from the house, followed by the earl and another servant, the latter carrying a spade and a lantern. The trio made their way to a little patch of ground a short distance from the manor house set apart for a family cemetery. Martin followed as near as he could without being detected and saw the lackey with the spade dig a grave, and he was about to place the box in it when suddenly Lady Riversham appeared on the scene.

There was some conversation be tween her and the earl, but before Martin could steal close enough to hear what was said the party returned to the house, taking the box with them. Martin returned to his home, congratulating himself that he had been in the nick of time for what he had seen. An explanation of this night scene was as plain to him as the sun in the heavens. Little Richard had died, and his father, in order to con-ceal his death, had taken his body to the family cemetery when no one was about to see the interment. A live child was to be substituted for the dead one.

But there was one unfortunate oc currence connected with the affair. If the body had been interred in the cemetery Martin could have had it exhumed, and it would have been very easy for him to expose this fraudulent attempt to deprive him of his inher-ltance. Lady Riversham's following the burial party and the change of plan were easily explained. It had occurred to her that the body should not be interred where Martin could ns, Like Their Land, Endow With Great Physical Charm.

Province by province Italy manifest varying charm and the people differ as widely as their surroundings. The hot blooded southerner observes a different standard of morals and hygiene, fires to anger or interest more quickly and is generally less dependable and industrious than his northern brother. Both are gifted with the black eyes and hair and the swarthy complexion as a race that is a general characteris tic of the Latin peoples. But the Italtan is, broadly speaking, like his country, endowed with a physical beauty and charm beyond that of most of his fellows.

In the north, however, there are exceptions-fair haired and reddish men and women, who seem strangely out of place among their dark neighbors. Cool, temperate exotics they are among the higher colored growths that somehow seem so tropical, with their sultry, smiles and fathomless, mysterious eyes, in which forever broods the shedow of the purple mountains that always and everywhere dominates all Italy, even to the delightful carabinieri, or rural guards, those Napoleonic looking officials who parade always solemnly in pairs, hangers at their sides, cockades in their black beavers, the majesty of the law in every line and footstep. BUSINESS SIGNBOARDS.

They Were Used at First Only by the inns and Taverns.

The first tradesmen to adopt the use of signs were the innkeepers, and from earliest times in England and on the continent the taverns of town and country were distinguished by sign-boards bearing the names of the hostelries. It was not until the sixteenth century that merchants dealing in other than liquid refreshments began to erect signs over their doors. Once started the custom spread rapidly, and the seventeenth century was a period of prosperity for the sign painters of England. Even in London the houses and shops were not numbered, so a tradesman's place of business could only be known by a sign. The ingenuity of the merchants was taxed in such a city as London to provide an original sign that would stick in the memories of passersby.

A man starting in business considered a striking sign his most important investment. These signs, often huge in size, were sometimes slung entirely across the street. As they grew old they occasionally fell and thus be-came a source of danger. Such signs were prohibited by parliament in the year 1762, and after that merchants had to be content with more modest signs placed flat against the fronts of their buildings.

Whistler Was a Dandy. If taking infinite pains with his appearance means dandyism, then Whistler was a dandy. The very word pleased him, and he used it often, in American fashion, to express perfec-tion or charm or beauty. Never was any man more particular about his per-

The hen cackles because she is glad. She is gled because she has just accomplished something which she was put on earth to do. If you study the life on earth carefully with this in mind, you will discover that all kinds of life give expression in some form of gladness, when they have performed the things they are on earth for, we are told by the Book of Wonders. It's the hen's way of expressing herself and letting the chicken world know. The dog wags his tail when he is pleased ; boys and girls jump up and down when they are pleased, whether they have been doing anything commendable or not. No doubt also the actual laying of the egg causes some discomfort to the hen and the corresponding feeling of gladness would come naturally after the discomfort disappeared.
