Mr. REID (Grenville). Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the other departments to show that the Minister of Public Works was not alone in allowing robbery and rascality to go on in his department, but that all the spending departments of this government are in the same boat.

Mr. SPEAKER. A reference may be made to other departments, but the main question before the Chair is contained in the amendment.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Mr. Speaker, I intend speaking to the amendment, but it is necessary to refer to the other departments to show how they compare with the Department of Public Works.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is also customary, when an amendment is moved in Ways and Means and in Supply for speakers to be confined to the amendment.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would ask you to rule whether or not what the hon. gentleman is doing can be regarded in any sense as an illustration of arguments in support of the amendment before the House. It is nothing but a waste of public time.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I am illustrating by showing how other departments compare with the Department of Public Works, and I claim that the Minister of Public Works is not doing his duty as a member of the Privy Council, not only with regard to his own department but with regard to the other departments for which he is also responsible, for the protection of the public treasury. To show that he is not doing his duty, but is allowing robbery to go on in this government, let me illustrate with another case. I take the case brought out the other day, in which the Trade and Commerce Department had men in British Columbia, who robbed this country of a million dollars, with the knowledge of the Prime Minister, or at least with the matter brought to his attention long before there was any prosecution attempted. The Prime Minister, the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Customs, the Minister of Inland Revenue and the Minister of the Interior all had knowledge of this thing, and it was brought up in council with the Minister of Public Works there. Was he doing his duty as a minister to allow such a robbery of the people of this country to take place without taking any steps to prosecute? Did he do his duty as a minister, so far as the Interior Department was concerned, when a man in the northwest who robbed the people of money, that was Wagner, was taken on again, and his salary increased from $50 to $100 a month? That is the way they were prosecuted. There is no possibility of the Minister of Public Works prosecuting any man in his department. We know how Merwin and John E. Moore robbed this country, and then got off scott free. No man can get a contract from his department unless he is a Liberal heeler and a follower of the minister. And he knows there is no possible chance of his being prosecuted. There has not been one case of prosecution. See how the tender was let in the Gaspereaux case. The minister says that it was let at public competition. He knows that in that case there was a dredging man who wanted to get some of that work. He came to the department for information on the subject and the department referred him to the engineer in charge. But the engineer in charge knew nothing about it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Who was that man?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Mr. Mayes. Here is the letter:

St. John, N.B., December 18, 1908.

Eugene D. Lafleur, Esq.,
Chief Engineer, Department of Public Works, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Your favour of 14th inst. received last evening. I called with my son on Mr. Scammell this morning, who you stated would give all information regarding the dredging of York Point and Ballast wharf, St. John. Mr. Scammell informed me that he had not one bit of information to give, that others had inquired and he had given the same answer. I asked him if he was aware that York Point work was being dredged by Mr. Moore's dredge 'Saugus,' for some weeks, and was being dredged this very day and that outside talk said that it was about finished; also that the same dredge had worked some few days on the Ballast wharf work, at the same time the newspapers contained advertisements asking for tenders which close to-day.

There was a man who wanted to put in a tender. If the minister wanted why did not the minister let Mr. Mayes have a form of tender? If he had, Mr. Moore would not have got 90 cents a yard.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman asks why the forms of tender were not sent to Mr. Mayes. I say, the evidence shows that these forms were sent to Mr. Mayes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes, but why did not the minister give him the information necessary to work out the tender? The minister, through his official may have sent the form but he absolutely refused to give information to Mr. Mayes which would enable him to judge what was a fair price to put in his tender.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He was not refused, but was given what information was in the department.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Here is what he says further in his letter:

Mr. Scammell said that he was quite aware of it but did not understand it. Of course it is perfectly useless for one to tender as it is quite evident that the work was and is intended for Messrs. Moore & Co. It would seem to the ordinary mind that the government might save the expense of advertising.

I regret that you and your officials could not give the information asked for.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) G. S. MAYES.

Mr. Mayes had dredges and wanted work for them, and was willing to take that work at a fair price. But, here at Ottawa, and on calling on the engineer in charge, he was refused the information on which to base a tender. Mr. Moore put in a tender. Now, the minister must admit that in regular course when a tender is put in a deposit accompanies it. But this is the way Mr. Moore tendered:

St. John, N.B., December 17, 1908.

Napoleon Tessier, Esq.,
Secretary, Department of Public Works, Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—We herewith inclose our tender for dredging at York Point Slip, St. John, N.B., duly executed by us. We are not inclosing any deposit cheque, as we have this work about completed, and we already have a number of deposits on all the other work which has been awarded to us.

We shall be glad to be advised promptly if our tender is accepted.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) Maritime Dredging and Construction Company.
John E. Moore, Manager.

That work was completed and nothing needed to be done but to draw their cheque for the work. Yet they write to know if their tender is to be accepted. Did any person ever know anything more ridiculous than that? That tender was given verbally by the Minister of Public Works to Mr. John E. Moore, the man who bought the St. John 'Telegraph' to work in his interest in that city. There is the story of York Point. But there are several other cases I might mention, all of a similar kind. The Minister of Public Works, for instance, gives a contract either for a sum of less than $5,000 or on the ground of its great urgency; and we find that in the end it means a contract which, given at the figure of the engineer's recommendation would mean a total of $168,000. And, at the prices that the minister gave these men when they started out, by which the country would have been bound if it had not been stopped by the exposure by the opposition in the Public Works Committee, it would have meant a payment of $756,000. This would have meant a loss to the country of $588,000, and that is the amount that the opposition saved by this exposure in one contract.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When did they expose it?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Last year, and the minister had to withdraw it and make that company go on with other work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the Public Accounts Committee were the means of stopping it by an exposure in 1910, how does the hon. gentleman account for the fact that they did not resume their work in 1909, the year before these alleged high prices were found?

Mr. REID (Grenville). They worked up to the fall of 1909.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman is wrong, they worked up to the fall of 1908, and declined to go on with the work in the summer of 1909.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The minister knows that they had the Gaspereau work, the St. John harbour, and other contracts, and they had not enough dredges to do all their work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not the point. The hon. gentleman said that I got frightened, because the matter was exposed in the Public Accounts Committee in the year 1910. But this company did no dredging there after the fall of 1908, and in 1909 declined to come back.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The minister can explain that when he is making his speech. The point I want to know is this: This department gave J. E. Moore work at Gaspereau, York Point, and other places without a tender. That is, the minister gave it himself, and instructed his department that they were to advertise for tenders and give the contract to the lowest bidder. I do not think the minister will dispute that. But when the tenders were asked for the York Point work had not only been begun but completed. In the Gaspereau case they had not done all they intended, but they were working at York Point and other places in order to hold the contracts. There was no rush at Gaspereau and other places, for they had waited for years. But the matter was disposed of in 1910, and you did not see them going back after this exposure. But when the colleagues of the Minister of Public Works saw that this was being exposed, and it was known that it meant a robbery of $588,000, they called a halt on the Minister of Public Works, and he had to tell these people to give some excuse that they could not accept it again, that it was too hard work and they refused the contract.

In my opinion that is the reason they did not go back again. I know the Minister of Public Works is anxious to try and get out of this in some way, but there is no explanation he can give that will satisfy the people of this country. Those contracts were let by him to men that were never in the dredging business, men who met in Montreal when John E. Moore purchased that dredge and went straight to Gaspereau, on the authority of the Minister of Public Works, and did that work. Then the minister asked for tenders when the work was all completed at one point, and when it was going on at another point. There is no one who will believe that it was an honest, straight and fair contract. People will believe there is something behind the whole deal. And who has benefited from that? It was brought out in the Public Account Committee that John E. Moore was benefited by that. Although he was no dredgeman, he made a lot of money out of it. He purchased the St. John 'Telegraph,' and the Minister of Public Works and his party has benefited by the fact that the St. John 'Telegraph' was changed from being a Conservative to a Liberal paper. I do not believe it was in the interest of the people of this country that that should be done, and I believe the Minister of Public Works is entitled not only to the censure of this House, but of this country for allowing such a rascally piece of business to go on in his department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend, the member for Grenville, (Mr. Reid) has such a peculiar mental make-up, if he will consider that parliamentary, that it is exceedingly difficult to understand what part of his remarks he wishes us to consider as statements based on facts, what part he means to be conclusions or deductions evolved by his own understanding and what part is pure imagination. The hon. gentleman certainly leaves one in grave doubt as to what part of his argument he desires us to understand is based on fact. He deals in strong language, certainly; he speaks of robbery, and he even says that John E. Moore has robbed the treasury of this country.

Mr. REID (Grenville). And so he has.

Mr. PUGSLEY In what respect?

Mr. REID (Grenville). I explained it, and if I did not make it plain to the Minister of Public Works I may try again.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Whatever has been said of myself as Minister of Public Works in awarding the contracts to the Maritime Dredging Company, I think nobody will say but that the company did what they had a perfect right to do.

Mr. REID (Grenville). To rob the country?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon gentleman says they were robbing the country. He knows that they simply tendered in the ordinary way for public works, pursuant to public advertisements, and that the contracts were awarded to them. But I think nobody who knows the hon. gentleman, and who has had opportunities of hearing him in this House on different occasions, will take much stock in these wholesale charges which he so glibly makes in a very serious manner. I am sure that after the hon. gentleman has called a man a robber and a thief, if he met him outside he would take his arm and let him understand that he was one of the most decent and honourable fellows in the world. That is the kind of man the hon. member for Grenville is. Now he stated that it was intended to give a contract to the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company for some 700,000 cubic yards of dredging at Gaspereau, and that the only reason why it was not given was that the matter was exposed before the Public Accounts Committee; that the minister became freightened, and therefore did not go on with the intended operation of giving this very large contract to the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company. Now, the hon. gentleman made that statement just as positively as he made the other statements to this House. When I pointed out to the hon. gentleman that the Public Accounts Committee did not deal with this matter until the session of 1910; that all the work this company did at Gaspereau was in the summer and fall of 1908, and that left a whole season when dredging operations might have been carried on before the matter came at all under the consideration of the Public Accounts Committee, the hon. gentleman did not deem it to be his duty to express any regret for the misstatement which he made. However, I suppose we must not hold him entirely responsible for all his statements, by reason of the conditions which I have mentioned a short time ago with regard to the hon. gentleman's make-up. My hon. friend must have seen that this statement was calculated to mislead the House. Now the facts are that in the summer of 1908 my hon. friend who represents the county of Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson), as he has stated, represented to me in the strongest possible manner the desirability, indeed the actual necessity, from the standpoint of the public interest, of doing this dredging in the Gaspereau river.

Mr. HUGHES. Was he then Minister of Railways?

Mr PUGSLEY. I was Minister of Public Works at the time.

Mr. HUGHES The member for Westmoreland was not Minister of Railways then?

Mr PUGSLEY. Not at that time; the hon. gentleman was in the same position which he occupies to-day as representative of the county of Westmoreland. Now, if hon. members will look at the map they will see that Port Elgin is not in what you might call the zone of dredging contractors. There are no dredge owners in that vicinity, nor within a long distance of that point. The mouth of the river is very much exposed, and apparently it was that very fact which prevented this dredging work from being done, and caused the delay which took place for a number of years, since 1900, when the member for Westmoreland first began to urge that this work should be done. In 1908 the matter was pressed strongly upon my attention, and I tried to make arrangements for one of the government dredges to go there. There was none available, they were all engaged in other important work. I determined, however, to advertise for tenders, and after tenders were called for, or about the time I called for tenders, I think it was afterwards, I learned that the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company had bought a dredge called the 'Iroquois,' on the St. Lawrence, and that they were bringing it down to the Bay of Fundy where they expected to carry on dredging operations. Now, in coming down to the Bay of Fundy they had to pass directly by Port Elgin; they had to go through Northumberland straits, and through the Straits of Canso, and round to the Atlantic, and so on around to the Bay of Fundy which was the ultimate destination of their dredge. I had grave fears that, although tenders were being called for, there would be none put in. Now, let me say to those gentlemen who make these attacks upon me, attacks I think without due consideration, that there are many places in different sections of this country where, although tenders for dredging work have been called for year after year for the last three years, no tenders whatever have been put in for those works.

They are considered undesirable or dangerous places, they are very much exposed and there is very great risk of loss to a dredging plant. I could mention two or three places in Nova Scotia. Some of my hon. friends in that province have complained very much that we have delayed going on with dredging works. The reason has been that tenders have been called, and we have not been able to get any tenders for these works. Learning that this dredge was going down to the Bay of Fundy, I saw Mr. Moore, who was the president of the Maritime Dredging Company. I told him that the time would be up in a few days, and I asked him if his company would be willing to put a dredge into the Gaspereau river, commence dredging on this work which was most urgently required and accept an amount no higher than the amount of the lowest tender, explaining that if some other company's tender should be lower than their's they would take their dredge away from there and continue on to the place to which it was destined; that the work would go to the lowest tenderer, and that in the meantime for the few days' work they would do they would accept the price at which the contract would be awarded. They agreed to that and there was some correspondence that took place consequent on my seeing the president of the company, which confirms that. I remember that the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) when this matter was before the committee on Public Accounts rather took the ground that the company would be entitled to go on and do the work even though there might be another lower tender, that is that they could take the price of the lowest tender and go on and finish the work. There was no such understanding.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman's statement is directly contrary to Mr. Moore's understanding at the time. The hon. gentleman is thinking more about it now, perhaps, than he did at that time.

John E. Moore of St. John says he has dredge ready to work on Gaspereau river, N.B., and expects to start Monday. Am I authorized to lay out the dredging for him.

GEOFFREY STEAD,
Resident Engineer.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, that is the dredging upon which he was working pending the receipt of tenders. But I affirmed then and I affirm now, and if Mr. Moore had been called before the committee on Public Accounts, he would have verified under oath what I say, that it was clearly understood that they should do the dredging during a few days until the time was up for the receipt of tenders, and that if any other company should tender lower than their tender, that company would be awarded the contract, and they would receive, for the work they did in the meantime, the price of the lowest tenderer. That is a practice which in cases where dredging is urgently required has been pursued by the Department of Public Works ever since the Department of Public Works has been awarding dredging contracts. It was done years ago, so I am informed by the proper officials of my department and done under a Conservative as well as a Liberal government.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). Was this arrangement purely verbal as between the government and Mr. Moore?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was confirmed by correspondence later and that correspondence is before the committee.

Mr. BARKER. Page 241.

Mr. PUGSLEY. These are the words; following up my conversation the chief engineer sends this letter to Mr. Stead, the resident engineer:

August 4, 1908.

Sir,—The work of dredging in the Gaspereau river has been given to the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company, of St. John, N.B., providing they are willing to accept, in payment, per cubic yard, scow measurement, the lowest price to be obtained by tenders which are now being called for. Kindly place the company's dredge at work immediately, if they accept the conditions. You will please, however, note that the lesser work only is to be engaged upon.

Yours obediently,
Chief Engineer.

Geoffrey Stead, Esq.,
Resident Engineer,
Chatham, N.B.

I refer to that for two reasons. In the first place, it was carrying out what was the arrangement between the Maritime Dredging Company and myself, that they should do the work simply temporarily. They said that they would tender upon the work, and if there should be other tenders for a lower figure than their's, the department would naturally award the contract to the lowest tenderers, and they, for the few days' work that they would do in the meantime, would accept the price of the lowest tenderer.

Mr. BLAIN. Will my hon. friend name a case similar to that acted upon by a Conservative administration?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot at this moment, because I would have to go back over fifteen years. All I can say is that when I became minister I was informed that this was the practice in cases of urgency, and had been the practice for years. I was so informed by the late Deputy Minister, Mr. Gobeil, who had been in the department for a great many years, and I understood it was the practice. Very often it is necessary to get a work done in order to meet public requirements.

Mr. SPROULE. What created the urgency just then? Was it the election?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all; it was the dredging season. The season was getting well along. My hon. friend from Westmoreland had urged as early as May or June that we should get a dredge at work. I had been unable to do so and I will say to the House frankly that I was afraid that if the Maritime Dredging Company brought their dredge to St. John we would get no tenders and probably not be able to get the work done that year at all.

This whole matter was fully ventilated before the Committee of Supply in this House in the month of February, 1910, and I desire to add my opinion to that of my hon. friend from the county of Westmoreland that if the hon. member for York, New Brunswick (Mr. Crocket) thought there was anything in this dredging at Gaspereau which was deserving of the censure of this House he should have early in the session, some time between November and the latter part of May, while this House was sitting, taken the necessary steps for the purpose of bringing it before the consideration of the committee. Hon. gentlemen will find that in the month of February, 1910, this matter was brought to the attention of the committee by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) and I then gave a very full statement which will be found on pages 3838, 3839, 3840 and following pages of 'Hansard.' The matter was gone into very fully at that time and now that we have before the House a question of vital importance to the people of this country it does seem to me that, upon reflection, hon. gentlemen will see that it is scarcely in the public interest that they should, by a motion like this, take up a good many hours of the valuable time of the House and so prevent a vote being taken upon the great question of reciprocity in which the people of this country are taking so deep an interest. I feel that I cannot properly take up the time of the House which would be necessary in order to answer the different statements which have been made by the two hon. gentlemen who have spoken upon this amendment because, as I have said, there is not only this important question of reciprocity waiting, but, when it is disposed of, if hon. gentlemen will allow it to go to the vote, and if they desire to get an expression of the opinion of this House, there are other matters such as the question of the branch railways and supply to provide for works of the very greatest importance to the country which should be considered.

If this motion carries, the question that will come before the committee is the important question, which has the right of way. I must say a few brief words, however, in answer to the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket). The hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson), has charged him with making unfounded attacks on me. Sir, I am accustomed to attacks of that character from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket), and from those who have been associated with him. I do not intend to reply to his insinuations. I have learned during a pretty long political career that there are a good many men in this country, as I suppose there are in every country, who seem to love making insinuations, who seem to listen to the tales of slander they hear on the street corners, and who delight wherever they can get an opportunity to tear down the character of men, who stand very much higher in the community than themselves, and who have been more successful in the world than they have been. It is evidence of a mean and contemptible spirit; it is evidence of a small and narrow mind.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, is such language within the rules of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The language itself is not necessarily out of order unless applied to a member of this House. If applied to a member of this House I would think the language unparliamentary.

Mr. LANCASTER. I thought he was speaking of the editor of the 'Globe.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is my view, Mr. Speaker. As I walk the streets I find it is not desirable to turn and pay attention to every cur which barks at one's heels. That rule I have adopted through life and, therefore, I shall go on to deal with the points raised in regard to this dredging matter. The hon. member for York saw fit to convey to this House the impression that this dredging was utterly a waste of public money, and he insinuated, I believe he charged, that this work had been given to the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company for the sole purpose of putting money into the hands of Mr. John Moore and Mr. George McAvity, because they were interested in the St. John 'Telegraph' which was supporting the Liberal party. The hon. member (Mr. Crocket), and the hon. member from Grenville (Mr. Reid), laid great stress on the fact that Mr. John Moore and Mr. George McAvity bought the St. John 'Telegraph' from the Conservative party and turned it into a Liberal newspaper. Well, the 'Telegraph' had for upwards of a quarter of a century been a Liberal newspaper and the Liberals of New Brunswick had for years confidence in it. On one occasion there appeared in New Brunswick one of these gentlemen who get rich quickly and he bought the 'Telegraph' by some means or other, and turned it over to the Conservative party. These two gentlemen being good Liberals thought it was right to get it back home again and make it a Liberal newspaper. That is all they did.

They are gentlemen of very considerable means, both of them carrying on a very large business. Every one knows the firm of T. McAvity & Sons , of which Mr. Geo. McAvity is now the head. From the Atlantic to the Pacific that firm is known and enjoys in a marked degree the confidence of the business men of Canada. Mr. John

E. Moore is a man who has, by his own exertions, risen from a comparatively humble position in the city of St. John, until to-day he is carrying on, and has for a number of years carried on, one of the largest lumber shipping businesses in the maritime provinces if not in the dominion. Mr. John E. Moore stands high in the estimation of the general public, and his reputation is of the very best. Those gentlemen are both Liberals, and that is no crime. They were desirous that this newspaper should be brought into the fold and placed where it properly belonged. Fortunately it happened that this man who had got rich quickly got poor almost as quickly. While he was very rich, and while he had been taken into the councils of the Conservative party, and while he thought at one time of going over to Scotland and running for the constituency of Dunfermline, he was not fortunate enough to receive a recommendation for knighthood at the hands of the leader of the Unionist party in Great Britain. In that respect he did not attain the height of his hopes and ambition, but he unfortunately for himself lost his money and he was willing to sell out these newspapers at a reasonable price and they were bought by these two gentlemen. There is not a particle of evidence that one single dollar of the moneys which the Maritime Dredging Company obtained for this contract or for any other contract was used for the purchase of these newspapers. If these gentlemen wanted to purchase the newspapers they have ample means of their own to do so. And yet, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) makes these insinuations without a particle of evidence.

Mr. MEIGHEN. May I ask what the insinuation is?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The insinuation is that they have been assisted by me as minister to get these contracts for the purpose of enabling them to make large profits in order that they might buy these newspapers.

Mr. MEIGHEN. That is a direct charge.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Call it a direct charge if you like.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is a natural inference.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A diseased imagination may draw such an inference. There is not a particle of evidence to sustain a charge of that character. The dredging plant which this company bought cost far and away more money than up to the time of the purchase of these papers, they had received from the government. A good dredging plant is not cheap to buy; we know that the dredge 'Fielding,' which is now at work in the harbour of St. John, was built at Sorel and cost about half a million dollars. These gentlemen are both experienced business men, and successful business men, and I take it for granted they purchased a good plant to enable them to do efficient work. The hon. gentleman from York made that foundationless statement, and had it not been for the reply of the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) he would have induced some members of this House to believe that that work was wholly unnecessary and that it was done simply to benefit the dredging company. Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) said there was further evidence that the work was unnecessary because the resident engineer said it would accomplish no good purpose.

What the resident engineer said was, and hon, gentlemen will find it in the report, that unless this dredging was continued on up into the inner channel, and so on towards the town, it would not be of value because it would not be an aid to navigation for the whole distance for which it was desirable that vessels should be able to navigate. That is the same everywhere. Take the harbour of St. John. To-day we are deepening the entrance to the harbour, but if we were to leave that work half finished, or even three-quarters finished, the work we have done would be no benefit to navigation. The strength of a chain is to be measured by the strength of its weakest link and so it is with dredging. If you have a harbour all dredged but 100 feet and that 100 feet has not the requisite depth of water, or is not easy or safe to navigate by vessels drawing the depth of water in the deepest part of the harbour, and it is the line of navigation, your deep harbour is of no value. You must have a channel for vessels to go right up to the point of destination or the dredging is of no value. So it was with Gaspereau, until the dredging is carried on to the place where the vessels are in the habit of going, the dredging would be of no value. But as a part of the dredging work it was of the greatest value.

The member for York (Mr. Crocket) says that the price was too high, because some people up there tell him it was simply silt and sand and could be done for 10 cents a cubic yard. The complete answer to that is that tenders were invited by public advertisement and the usual time was given.

Mr. BARKER. And you obstructed them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We never obstructed them. I stated before the Committee of Public Accounts and before the Committee of Supply of 1910 that I defied any hon. gentleman opposite to show that any dredging contractor had been debarred from tendering by reason of this company being temporarily put to work. They cannot do it. They will never be able to show that any contractor was debarred from tendering. The reason we received only one tender was that the work was in a comparatively remote, although a very important locality, that this particular work of dredging the bar was in an exposed and dangerous locality and it was not an inviting prospect for dredging contractors. There was only one tender for 90 cents a cubic yard. The hon. gentleman says we actually let the contract to this company at their tender price when we had a report of the engineer that it was only worth 20 cents per cubic yard. That is a mistake, all that we had in the department was a report of the engineer who had been formerly resident engineer for that district, Mr. Day, a report made in 1903, in which he speaks of the quantity of the material to be dredged and he says: Which at 20 cents a cubic yard would amount to a certain sum. When Mr. Stead made his report he did not give his own estimate because he was not called upon to do so, he referred to the report which Mr. Day had made some years before.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will the hon. gentleman give his authority for that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Stead did not give the 20 cents as his own estimate.

Mr. MEIGHEN. At the top of page 247 the very opposite is stated.

Mr. PUGSLEY. (reading):

Mr. Day considered that four feet at low water would be ample and for this depth 180,000 cubic yards of dredging was necessary, costing, at 20 cents, $37,000.

A six-foot channel, giving about 15 feet at extreme high water, is however desired, and appears to me to be necessary, as it would give about 13 feet at neap high tides which is required for the larger schooners. At your request I sent you on the 5th March, 1907, an estimate of this work which requires about 330,000 cubic yards, costing, at 20 cents, $66,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN. His estimate.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, Mr. Day's estimate.

Mr. LANCASTER. What was his estimate?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Stead is making no estimate. You will observe that in this report, he is taking the survey which Mr. Day had made. Mr. Day is the man who had made the borings and survey some four or five years before.

Mr. BARKER. Read the three following lines:

Mr. PUGSLEY. (reading):

Q. That refers to Mr. Stead's report of March, 1907?—A. His report of 5th of March, 1907.

Q. In which he also estimated the dredging as worth 20 cents?—A. 20 cents, yes.

This occurs in Mr. Lafleur's evidence, but it does not occur anywhere in the correspondence. Mr. Lafleur might argue as my hon. friends might that because Mr. Stead sent in that report he was adopting Mr. Day's estimate of the cost.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Mr. Stead was asked to make an estimate of the cost and that is his reply.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not been able to see that. He sent in Mr. Day's report and took Mr. Day's estimate of 20 cents. The best test of whether or not that estimate of 20 cents could be relied upon is to be found in what it cost the government dredge 'George Mackenzie,' to do easier work in 1909 at the same harbour. Bear in mind that this company were doing the most difficult and dangerous work, the outer bar where it was most exposed and where it would be necessarily more costly. Mr. Day had figured upon a four foot channel at low tide while we were proposing to give a six foot channel at low tide. You will observe that Mr. Stead says that if the old channel were used and dredged out while it would be very crooked yet there would only be dredging of silt and sand whereas, if you made a straight channel you would get into the stiff clay and, of course, that is much more expensive to dredge than ordinary silt that has flown in from the tide within a few years. In 1909, the 'George Mackenzie,' a government dredge, was employed and the actual cost of the operation of that dredge was 41.76 cents, very nearly 42 cents per cubic yard for easier work. I took care when this matter was before the Committee of this House in February, 1910, to get a statement from the proper officials of my department as to what would be the actual cost of the work done by the government dredge 'George Mackenzie' in the Gaspereau river, if there were to be added to this 42 cents per cube yard a reasonable alowance, such as a contractor would always make for wear and tear, interest upon cost of plant and a reasonable contractor's profit.

Hon. gentlemen will find this in my statement on page 3843 of 'Hansard'—and I am very sorry to go over it again. In reply to the statement of the hon. member for Hamilton that I should not have let the work within the ten days, but should have waited for the opening of the tenders I am reported to have said:

How has the country suffered by that? My hon. friend says that if I had not done that somebody else might have come in and tendered. But he cannot find the slightest evidence that any contractor was prepared or would have tendered for that work, whether the dredge was at work or not. Is not this the important thing, that I advertised for tenders and nobody evidently wanted to go there to go to work? And is it not an important fact that, the next year, these people, the Maritime Dredging Company, having the opportunity to go there to work, did not want to go? If it were the 'soft snap' my hon. friend would have the committee believe, would not they have been anxious to go there? But they had had enough of it; they had worked there under most disadvantageous circumstances. And, when we actually put the government dredge to work, we found that a fair and reasonable cost was $1 per cubic yard. Now, does the hon. member think the price is too great? Does he think that the late W. J. McCordock gave a fictitious valuation for that work? Will my hon. friend who represents the city of St. John (Mr. Daniel) rise in his place and say that he would not rely on the statement which the late superintendent of dredging made? I do not think he will, for he knew W. J. McCordock as well as I did, and he knows there was not a more careful and conscientious official in the employ of the Dominion than that gentleman. And will he say that Mr. Scammell, an engineer of ability and integrity, would go up there, and, having examined the work, make a false certificate? And would he say that Mr. Stead, who also saw the work, had to go on it day after day, made a false report when he said that it was worth 90 cents a yard?

In another part of my remarks I think I made the statemeent that this amount of $1 per yard, which was the cost to the government of the dredging of the 'George Mackenzie,' making a reasonable allowance for interest on the cost and depreciation of plant, was given to me by the deputy minister; at all events, I remember distinctly that I made the statement as to the official who had given the assurance that the items would amount to $1 per cubic yard. This, I think, completely disposes of the assertion, wholly unwarranted by any evidence, that this work could be done at 20 cents per cubic yard.

Now, to show whether or not we acted with prudence, what did we do after we found that this company was the only tenderer and after it had got the work? The hon. gentleman says, whatever you did do, you did not notify Mr. W. J. McCordock, and that was one of the grounds of his indictment against me. Sir, I pointed out to the hon. member for York, when he was addressing the House, that Mr. McCordock had nothing whatever to do with the operation of the contract dredges. The superintendents of dredging are confined in their duties absolutely to the work being done by the government dredges, and, therefore, Mr. McCordock would not have any notice of this work awarded to a private company. The man to be notified is the resident engineer. Mr. Stead was the man who laid out the work, and he was the man who was notified. He laid out the work for the contractors, and showed them where they were to begin their dredging. My hon. friend seems to make a great point of the fact that Mr. McCordock did not know where Gaspereau was. Well, as he had nothing to do with the dredging, he would not be likely to know. The hon. gentleman says that it was strange that I sent Mr. McCordock up there to inspect this dredging, and to consider as to the cost. Do you not think, Mr. Speaker, that that was the most proper thing in the world for me to do? Mr. McCordock was the man who had been in charge of the dredges in the maritime provinces for upwards of thirty years; he had been appointed either by the Conservative government or by the Mackenzie government; he had held office under both governments, and had given satisfaction to all. If there was one man connected with any department of the government who if he erred at all it was on the side of the public interest against the individual, it was the late W. J. McCordock. That was the reputation he had—as close as could be, always looking out for the interest of the government, always cutting down those who had furnished supplies to the government dredges to the finest possible point. That was the complaint made against him for years under both governments. He was felt to be a safe officer to see that only just bills were paid, and that government interest were protected.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will the minister explain what his duties were in connection with the government dredges?

Mr. PUGSLEY. His duties were to see that they carried out the different dredging operations laid out for them, to see that they did the most efficient work possible, to keep control of their operations from week to week, and to make a report as to whether they were working satisfactorily or not; also to visit the dredges from time to time, to purchase supplies for them, and to send in regular reports to the department. The superintendent of dredging is supposed to be constantly looking after the business of the government dredges. Mr. McCordock, with that large dredging experience, was a man who I felt could be absolutely trusted to give a fair judgment on the matter, and I asked the chief engineer to send him to Gaspereau for the purpose of looking into the dredging work being done, to consider all the circumstances, and to report whether or not 90 cents per cubic yard was a fair and reasonable price. The hon. gentleman would, I suppose, have it believed by this House that I had in some way influenced Mr. McCordock. Let me say that I had very little personal acquaintance with the late W. J. McCordock, and I had no communication with him on this subject beyond asking him if he could go and visit Gaspereau, and then the communication was with the chief engineer, who gave him his directions in writing.

Mr. LANCASTER. Did the minister try at any time to send this gentleman to do this work as government work, when it was so urgent?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not, and the reason is that two things are necessary in order to do government dredging: One is to have the superintendent, and the other is to have the dredge.

Mr. LANCASTER. Did you have them?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. The dredges were employed in other places.

Mr. LANCASTER. This was urgent work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. So were the others, and it was impossible to take the dredges from them.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then this was not so urgent as the others?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman has read from Mr. McCordock's report. Let me call your attention to what Mr. McCordock says. After stating what they were doing, he says:

I am of the opinion that from the exposed position of the dredging and the detention from shallow water and the difficulty in getting coal and water from the shore out two miles to the dredge, where it has to remain at anchor in all weather, that the amount of 90 cents named in the tender is a fair rate per cubic yard.

Surely these are considerations which ought fairly to enter into the judgment of a person certifying as to the value of the work. They are considerations which would enter into the judgment of every contractor tendering for the work. A contractor looks at many things when tendering.

He looks at the exposed position of the work or otherwise. He makes some soundings for himself usually and learns concerning soundings or borings that have been made. He considers the quality of the materials to be moved, whether clay, sand or slit, or whether there may be boulders. And a very important question with him is that of a fresh water supply for his dredge and tug, and also the question of the coal supply. He must consider also the question of the distance he has to tow his dredges and barges, both to reach the work and to get back into winter quarters after the season is finished. No doubt all these things were taken into consideration by the Maritime Dredging & Construction Company, when they tendered at 90 cents for this work. Before we agreed to pay this 90 cents Mr. Scammell, the resident engineer of St. John, a young man who had a good deal of experience under Mr. Shewan, being afterwards in charge of dredging operations for the department, was sent, at my request, up to the Gaspereau river for the purpose of looking into conditions and making a report. Let me call attention to what he says. I read, not from the printed copy but from the files which, I presume, is the same as my friend has.

Mr. BARKER. What date?

Mr. PUGSLEY. October 19th, 1908.

Mr. BARKER. That is after the work was finished.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, they were still working there. His letter is as follows:—

The Dept. of Public Works, Canada.
St. John, N.B., 19th October, 1908.

Sir,—In reply to your telegram of the 5th inst. I saw the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company of St. John, N.B, and visited Gaspereau river on October 7, where a personal inspection was made of the work being done at that place in connection with dredging a channel 60 feet wide to a depth of 8 feet at low water and making a face of from 5 to 7 feet in order to secure a passage into the village of Port Elgin, parish of Botsford, Westmoreland county, N.B.

You see there is a very considerable difference between dredging to a depth of eight feet at which getting below the surface soil, you strike either hard pan or solid clay, and simply dredging in the channel where there would be only the loose silt carried in by the tide. This estimate of 20 cents had been for dredging to a depth of four feet, and it was based upon the assumption that it would be done by a government dredge, whereas Mr. Scammell says that this Company would go to a depth of 8 feet.

I found the dredge 'Iroquois' at work at that place, with a tow boat 'the Calluna,' and two barges. The work there is progressing with extreme difficulty, which I have reason to believe will increase as the season advances, and much time will be lost on account of the high winds as the dredge is very much exposed to easterly and southeasterly gales, and there is no shelter afforded in the least.

Again, he says, at the close of his report:—

Neither the dredge nor the tug can get into the creek except on the spring tides and this necessitates the water supply being pumped by a gasoline engine and towed out to the dredge at great expense. This also applies to the coal used.

Under the circumstances it would be fair and reasonable to pay the present rate as called for under the contract with the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company.

It is all very well for the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket), to say that somebody told him that this dredging could be done more cheaply. And my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker), who is a lawyer and a very excellent lawyer, one I would like to have represent me if I had a case in court,—it is all very well for him to talk about what dredging is worth. Or it is all very well for me to talk about it. But whose judgment is best, the judgment of these gentlemen or the judgment of the engineers, experienced men, who went upon the ground and saw these dredges at work, saw the difficulties under which they were labouring, these unfavourable conditions as to coal and water supply and who knew what dangers this dredging plant was exposed to in case of a storm, being out in the estuary and outside the shelter that would have been afforded could they have got well into the river?

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. minister a question. Were not all these things present to the mind of the engineers of the department when they estimated that the dredging could be done at 22 cents a yard?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) must not make a mistake about that. This estimate of 20 cents was made before the work was undertaken at all and was made for work to be done by a government dredge.

Mr. LENNOX. What difference does that make?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why, it does not take into account the cost of the plant the interest upon investment, the depreciation or——

Mr. MEIGHEN. What is the hon. gentleman's authority for that statement?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My authority is my knowledge as Minister of Public Works. I know these things are never taken into account.

Mr. LENNOX. They ought to be.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are not. All that is taken into account is the ordinary repairs of the dredging season. Even the large repairs, which in the case of dredges are necessary almost every winter, are not included. The depreciation and wear and tear are not included. No interest on construction is allowed for. The dangers involved in having a dredge in a place like that are not taken into consideration. But all these things must be taken into consideration by a dredging contractor when he makes a tender for work. My hon. friend from Westmoreland has told us that these contractors lost a tug, wrecked in connection with these dredging operations, and this accident involved a loss of quite a number of thousands of dollars. I have in mind the case of Mr. Connolly who was taking a very valuable dredge from one part of the Atlantic coast to another and the dredge was wrecked in a storm. The other day at St. Andrews a dredge that was operating under the Dominion Dredging Company, under contract with my department sank through some unexplained reason, and it took a good many days before the dredge could be raised, and it will take a good many days more before its machinery can be put right and the dredge set in operation again. When any expense of that kind occurs, not only is there the loss involved by reason of the wreck itself, but there is also the expense of the crew and the loss on investment. Particularly when a contractor is working in an exposed position he runs the risk of losing his plant or of having it greatly injured. He necessarily takes into consideration also the cost and risk of taking the dredge to the point of operation and, after the season is over returning it to winter quarters. And there is another very important matter, and that is the availability of a machine shop for repairs while work is going on. The facilities in this respect at a place like Port Elgin—and particularly when the dredge was working two or three miles out in the roadstead or estuary, would be very different indeed from what they would be in the port of St. John.

Now, I want to repeat what I stated when this matter was before the House in February, 1910, that you cannot judge what the real, fair value of dredging work in one place is from what it costs in another; you cannot form any fair judgment upon the subject. The contractor would, as I have said, have to take all these conditions into consideration, and then after the work is begun, the engineer going upon the spot would be the man who would be able to form the best conclusion. We have the evidence of these two engineers, Mr. McCordock and Mr. Scammell, verified by Mr. Stead after this work is done, and this certificate of Mr. Scammell, and verified by the chief engineer of the department, who certified, before I presented the recommendation to council, that the price of 90 cents per cubic yard is fair and reasonable. There you have the certificate of Mr. McCordock, who has been thirty years superintendent at St. John; you have the certificate of Mr. Scammell, and you have the certificate of Mr. Stead, the resident engineer, after the work has been done, a certificate based on all these reports, that the price of ninety cents was fair and reasonable. Now, I ask this House if, upon these certificates, it was not my duty to pay to these contractors the amount at which they had tendered to do this work? How could I do otherwise in face of these certificates?

Mr. MEIGHEN. Where is Mr. Stead's report that the price was fair and reasonable?

Mr. PUGSLEY. You will find it in the accounts which he sent into the department.

Mr. MEIGHEN. That is not in evidence.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not my fault, it is the fault of the gentlemen who were seeking to produce a part of the evidence and not the whole. Now, you will find that this order in council was based upon the certificate by Mr. McCordock; we had that before us; we had the certificate of Mr. Scammell before us; we had also the certificate of Mr. Stead that these prices were fair and reasonable, and we have the certificate of the chief engineer of the department, who had all the certificates before him, that the price was a fair and reasonable one. The chief engineer of the department made the final certificate upon which I, as the minister, asked the government to base this order in council.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). When the government invite tenders for works, do they not usually have surveys, borings, diagrams, so that they can have an estimate of their own engineers? Was not that done in this instance, or is it the custom of the Public Works Department when they invite tenders for dredging?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have stated that four or five years before this dredging was done, in 1903, the late Mr. Day was asked to make borings and to make a report. He reported for a channel four feet deep at low tide, and his estimate was that it would be worth 20 cents per cubic yard. I say that frankly, there is no dispute about that. Then later on, in 1908, Mr. Stead appears to have adopted Mr. Day's estimate. What I say is that that is based, I have no doubt whatever, upon what he thought would be the fair cost of doing the work by a government dredge. Then after the work was done, we have Mr. Stead's certificate, and this would show the conditions under which the work was being done, the exposed situation on which this particular work across the bar was being done. He joined with the others, and forwarded these certificates to the department. You may ask me why Mr. Stead changed his mind. Perhaps he was influenced by Mr. McCordock and Mr. Scammell, because it is a matter of judgment. But it is enough for me that, having sent down these two independent officers of the department and the chief engineer, having got their reports that the prices were fair and reasonable, it seems to me I was quite justified in paying the amount of the tender price. But more than that, we have the further proof that in the following year, even upon the inside work, which was less exposed than this work across the bar, the actual cost of the operation of the government dredge was 41 cents per cubic yard.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). I understand the hon. gentleman to say that at the time he asked for tenders for that work, the department did not have sufficient information to give the contractors; the government was going it blind and the contractors were going it blind, and they estimated the work after it was done.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend must realize that we would have a report showing the rate at which the work would have to be done. It was estimated by Mr. Day for a four foot channel. Of course, any difference between the four feet and the six feet we would not know, the contractor would have to take his chances. But that is the engineer's report upon the actual experience of the quality of the material, and also having reference to the exposed condition, and the danger of operating the dredge.

Now, let me call attention to a matter in regard to which I would have supposed that my hon. friend would have made a motion before this House, and that is the dredging of the Miramichi river. When I first became minister and called for tenders for dredging upon the Miramichi river, the lowest tender was for 60 cents per cubic yard. The lowest tenderer was Mr. W. J. Poupore, a gentleman who has devoted a great deal of attention to dredging matters, and no criticism has been made of that contract being awarded to Mr. Poupore. Mr. Poupore is an experienced contractor, he was formerly the Conservative member for the county of Pontiac, a very worthy gentleman, and a very experienced contractor. But I have heard no criticism upon that contract. Now, there were two descriptions of work in the Miramichi river somewhat corresponding to those in the Gaspereau river. There was what was called the bar and horseshoe. Then inside that there was the Grand Dune flats, where the dredge operating would not be so much exposed to danger. Mr. Poupore had contracted for the Miramichi work, including the Grand Dune flats, and I was urged strongly to extend the contract. I looked into the matter very carefully with the chief engineer of my department. The chief engineer estimated that the work of dredging at the Grand Dune flats outside the bar would be about 45 cents per cubic yard, that was some 15 cents less than we had been paying the year before. I declined, however, to negotiate with the contractor, even at the reduced price. I called for tenders, and in such a way that we could consider the dredging tender for the horseshoe and bar, and for the Grand Dune flats.

Mr. LANCASTER. In that case did the minister allow the work to go on preceding the receipt of tenders?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. LANCASTER. What has that to do with this case?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I expected to get a bouquet from my hon. friend for this,

Mr. LANCASTER. I am afraid that I could not give it to my hon. friend under any circumstances.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not under any conditions?

Mr. LANCASTER. Not for anything that you have ever done.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That proves how very shortsighted my hon. friend is.

Mr. LANCASTER. No, it is because I have kept my eyes open.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We called for tenders and got separate tenders as well as joint tenders for the whole of this work. We are doing the work upon the Grand Dune flats at 11 cents per cubic yard as against 60 cents which would have been paid if the whole work had been let together. That is very much less than the estimate of the chief engineer. I do not find fault with the chief engineer. Engineers, as well as architects, are liable to make mistakes. The whole work consists of a million cubic yards and at the engineer's estimate of 45 cents per cubic yard is would have cost the department $450,000. As a matter of fact, we are getting that work done for $110,000 thus saving to this country $340,000. I would have supposed that my hon. friend, the member for York, would have called attention to this as well as to other matters which could not help appealing to any fair minded man, which could not help almost certainly commanding his approval.

Mr. CROCKET. Is the hon. gentleman referring to a contract which was let this year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, the Grand Dune work.

Mr. CROCKET. That is not before the Public Accounts Committee and will not be before next session.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman heard of it because it was brought to his notice during the session. But if the hon. gentleman were to speak of anything in connection with my department or in connection with myself in terms of approval, I am sure it would arouse astonishment amongst his constituents, and you might hear the remark made upon all sides that suddenly the hon. gentleman had grown to a better manhood and a bigger intellectual condition than that with which they had hitherto credited him, and it would be a very great surprise.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Before the dinner hour I had dealt with nearly all the points made by the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) and the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) but if I have omitted anything, if hon. gentleman would refer to Hansard for February 1910, they will see that I covered all the points brought up at that time which were I think the same as to-day. I thought it necessary even at the risk of taking up the time of the House, however briefly, to make some reply to-day, and I very much regret being compelled to do so because I feel that the presentation of this motion is clearly only a part of what I regret to observe has been the policy for a considerable time past of the members of the opposition, viz.: to prevent by continuous talking the taking of a vote in this House upon the great national question of reciprocity. There are just two matters remaining to which I shall briefly refer. One is the observation made by the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) with regard to my having taken the tender with me to the City of St. John. He seriously put that forward as a suspicious circumstance, but the explanation is very simple. The company had done considerable work and they asked for payment on account of it, and as there was only one tender the question arose as to whether the tender price was fair and reasonable, and whether we ought to endeavour to secure some reduction from it or whether we should enter into the contract. Before recommending the order in council which would fix the price, I thought it desirable to make full inquiry, and I did not know of any better source from which to get information, outside the chief engineer of my department, than Mr. McCordock and Mr. Scammell. I took the tender with me from the files of the department. The hon. gentleman Mr. Crocket said that up to the 16th October the records of the department did not show there was any tender upon file, and when I called his attention to that mistake, he stated that what he intended to say was that on the 16th October it was not on file. The chief engineer knew I had the tender with me, and he wired to know what were the conditions of the tender, with regard to the price of dredging.

Mr. BARKER. Will the hon. gentleman point to any evidence to show that the tender was ever on the file of the department at Ottawa?

Mr. PUGSLEY. When the investigation was held before the committee it would be taken for granted it was on file and the onus would be on those who made a charge to the contrary to prove their contention. However, here is the tender on file here, and addressed by mail to R. C. DeRochers, Assistant Secretary of the Department of Public Works, Ottawa, and stamped by him as received by him, and there you have the strongest possible evidence that the tender was on file. You find that the tender was sent through the post office to the secretary of the department, stamped as having been received by him, and subsequently opened in the ordinary way by the proper officials of the department. Then the hon. member for York attempted to show that either I or the department was so easy with these contractors and so desirous of putting money into their pockets, that although the resident engineer certified that in his opinion the quantity of material cast over was 6,000 cubic yards, the minister and the department had taken the estimates made by the contractor in preference, and paid him for 8,000 cubic yards of material cast over. The object of that was to show that we had disregarded the report of the engineer and chosen to accept instead the estimate of the contractor. Now, Sir, when I show you that the estimate of the contractor was not taken but that the certificate of the engineer was accepted, and that the payment was made on 6,000 yards and not 8,000 yards, you will ask whether the hon. member (Mr. Crocket) made that misstatement wilfully or ignorantly.

Mr. MEIGHEN. What was the statement?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That the resident engineer certified for 6,000 yards, that the contractor claimed 8,000 yards, and that the department was not guided by the engineer but accepted the estimate of the contractor.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The hon. member made no such statement.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I say he did make that statement and there are hon. members here who heard it.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The hon. member for York said that the chief engineer of the department, notwithstanding the estimate of Mr. Stead, directed that it be paid at 8,000 yards instead of 6,000 yards, and he did so direct.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Now, Sir, when I show you that so far from that being the case the chief engineer acted upon the report of the resident engineer and directed payment for 6,000 yards, you will agree with me that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) has made a mistake at least.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The telegram of the chief engineer will be found on page 259.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Here is the letter of the chief engineer to the Deputy Minister of Public Works.

Chief Engineer's Office,
Ottawa, Jan. 7, 1909.

Gaspereau River, N.B.

Sir,—With reference to the dredging performed by the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company during the past season in the Gaspereau river, N.B., certified weekly reports of operations are herewith inclosed showing that the company removed a total quantity of 33,744 yards of material.

In connection with this dredging, the company performed a certain amount of trenching, or casting over, and I have the honour to transmit herewith two reports from Mr. Geoffrey Stead, resident engineer, in which he comes to the conclusion that the quantity cast over is 6,000 yards, for which the contractors should be paid at the rate of 60 cents per cubic yard, the amount due them for casting over being therefore $3,600. A certified account for this amount is herewith inclosed, and I have the honour to recommend that it be paid.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) EUGENE D. LAFLEUR,
Chief Engineer.

J. B. Hunter, Esq.,
Deputy Minister,
Department of Public Works,
Ottawa.

Account for $3,600 will require certificate of chief engineer.

(Sgd.) A. G. K.

Does my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) say that that was changed afterwards?

Mr. MEIGHEN. No, but I say that on November 10th previously, he wired Mr. Stead directing him to report in favour of 8,000 cubic yards, and that is what Mr. Crocket said and it will be found on page 259.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know of what took place before, but the hon. member (Mr. Crocket) said that 60 cents a yard was paid for 8,000 yards.

Mr. MEIGHEN. He did not make that statement.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the very report of the Auditor General to which the hon. member (Mr. Crocket) refers in his motion it will be found that what was paid for was 6,000 yards of material cast over at 60 cents a yard. I leave it to you Mr. Speaker, and I leave it to the hon. members of this House, as to whether the hon. member (Mr. Crocket) did not convey the impression that the department had recognized the claim of the contractor in face of the certificate of the resident engineer and paid for 8,000 cubic yards of material cast over, instead of 6,000 cubic yards as certified by the engineer.

I regret to say that the hon. gentleman made that statement in the face of what he must have known from the papers which are on file such as the letter of the 7th January, 1909 addressed by the chief engineer of the department to the Deputy Minister of Public Works, and also the entry in the Auditor General's Report, showing clearly and distinctly that the amount of material cast over and paid for at the rate of 60 cents per yard was only the 6,000 yards. It is an old saying which I have found to be a very true one in the long experience which I have had in the practice of law in the courts, that when you find a witness reckless in his statements in one particular, you may judge from that of the value of all his evidence. When you find him in one particular careless as to the truth, you may judge from that of the value of his testimony. And when I find the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) starting out with a suggestion to this committee that this dredging was wholly useless, of no value whatever to the public, and telling this House deliberately as his solemn judgment that I had put that dredge to work there not in the public interest, not because the dredging was required to afford navigation, but solely in order to put several thousand dollars into the pockets of the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company,, and when you find again that he tries either recklessly or for some other reason to convey the impression that we were so anxious to put money into the pockets of Messrs. Moore and McAvity that we absolutely disregarded the certificate of the resident engineer and paid on the estimate of the contractor, in the face of the letter of January 7th from the resident engineer to the deputy minister, in the face of further evidence which he had upon the very page of the Auditor General's report to which he refers in this statement, which he has moved, you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members of this House will have to judge as to whether the hon. gentleman has been actuated by a desire simply if he could, by whatever means he may be able to command to make a point against a political opponent or whether he has desired to place the true facts before the House and before the country.

I wish to refer to remarks having no bearing on this matter, made by my hon. friend in an effort to prejudice me in the eyes of the members of this House, and the people of the country, referring to certain things which took place or are alleged to have taken place while I was a member of the provincial legislature. I noticed that while I was having a pleasant discusson, not an acrimonious discussion, but a courteous discussion with the member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) evidently influenced by angry passion caused by I know not what, rose, to his feet and at once made an insinuation in regard to my conduct as a member of the provincial legislature. Are we to infer from the attitude of these two gentlemen, now that everybody thinks we may be approaching a general election, that they have an intention to try and make this contest a contest of slander? Are we to infer that they intend indulging again, as in 1908, in a policy of raking up all kinds of scandal and throwing mud in every way they can? Let me say that in 1908 they tried that course upon me and upon some of my fellow Liberal candidates in New Brunswick. They signally failed. Let me call their attention to the fact that when they could not defeat me by scandal they tried to defeat me by having false affidavits read at a public meeting held in the city of St. John. They tried by every trick and by every device at their command, by any means, no matter how foul, no matter how unjustifiable, to attack my character, and prejudice me in the eyes of the people of the country. But, Sir, the people who knew me, the people who had watched my career for upwards of a quarter of a century, while I had been in public life, have rallied to my support and my own constituency of the city and county of St. John, returned me to this parliament by a magnificent majority and the people of New Brunswick sent me ten good and sturdy supporters of this government. Let me tell these hon. gentlemen that if they want to repeat that policy of slander, that policy of resorting to false affidavits, let them come on, we are prepared to meet them, and I am prepared again and I am sure my friends are prepared again to trust ourselves to the good judgment and sense of justice of the people of the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. BARKER (East Hamilton). Mr. Speaker, I shall read again the paragraphs in the Revised Statutes of Canada which ought to govern the conduct of the Minister of Public Works, in the matter with which we have been dealing this afternoon; and I beg most respectfully the attention of this House to the wording of this statute because it is the law defining the obligations of ministers in the conduct of such matters as we are dealing with. The clauses apply not merly to the Minister of Public Works, but to the ministers of all departments conducting works on behalf of the public in this Dominion.

Whenever any works are to be executed under the direction of any department of the government, the minister having charge of such department shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of such works except in cases,

(a) of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest.

I need hardly say that no such case is pretended to have been in existence or to have been made out. If it were necessary to go further into that at this moment I would be prepared to do so, but I shall not delay the House with it now.

(b) In which, from the nature of the work, it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department.

There is no pretence that any such case existed here.

(c) Where the estimated cost of the work is less than $5,000.

I need not read further because there is no pretence that that case existed.

Whenever, in case of any work, tenders are required to be or are invited, the minister having charge of the department concerned shall submit all tenders received therefor to the Governor in Council, and the contract for the work shall be awarded under the direction of the Governor in Council.

The hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) undertook to lecture gentlemen on this side of the House for their conduct in discussing this matter.

The discussion on this side is based upon the resolution before the House, which charges two things, and only two things: one is that this work has been performed by the Public Works Department illegally; the other is that in consequence of the illegal method adopted by the minister the cost of this work is more than it ought to have been. No question has been raised as to whether this work ought to have been done, or ought not to have been done, However necessary it might have been to do this work, there was a method prescribed by the statutes as to how the contract should be entered into. We charge that the minister did not follow that, but that he acted illegally, and deliberately and wilfully evaded the statute by every means in his power. Yet we have the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) coolly charging gentlemen on this side of the House with wasting the time of the House and obstructing reciprocity, and then himself occupying the time of this House for over an hour on a subject which is not referred to in the resolution—the desirability of this work in the interest of the county of Westmoreland. We are not discounty of Westmorland. We are not discussing whether it might have been desir- argues as if the fact that a member wanted the minister to do work in his constituency was an ample justification for an evasion of the law of the land. The hon. member spoke of the unwarranted animus displayed against the minister. Well, I hope I shall say what I have to say without displaying any unwarranted animus or any animus. I know nothing against the minister outside of his public position and his public reputation, and I propose to adhere strictly to this resolution. Then the hon. member for Westmorland waxed very warm on the subject of vilification and abuse, and immediately entered into vilification and abuse of the hon. gentleman who moved the resolution. He objected to conjecture and suspicion, but before he got through he got so deeply into conjectures and suspicion that he had nothing else to talk about. The hon. gentleman used all the time of his speech, occupying a large part of the afternoon, in discussing what the resolution before the House had nothing to do with.

For a few years past nothing has more engaged the attention of the people of this dominion than the evasion of the public statutes by officials, by men in prominent positions, who have neglected to do what the statutes of the country require them to do. So much has that agitated the country, so strongly has it taken hold of the people that the Minister of Finance has before this House a Bill to remedy some of the evils complained of, especially as regards the Banking Act. It has been said that certain men in very high and important positions in the banking community have evaded the duties imposed upon them by the law of the land. We all know that one unfortunate man who neglected his duty in complying with the statutes of the country served his time in the penitentiary. Another unfortunate man, the head of a great institution, is now serving time for having evaded his duties under Acts of Parliament. Are we to treat one class of cases differently from another? If these men go to the penitentiary for evading their statutory duties, why should a minister of the Crown be allowed to set at naught the statutes of the country at his sweet will? That is the point we are here to discuss; that is the object of the resolution. The hon. gentleman has carefully observed that, no doubt, and he has with equal care avoided referring to it.

Now, I propose not to go into outside discussions. It is my desire to confine my remarks strictly to the resolution, and in doing so I hope it will not be necessary for me to do much more than refer to the actual written testimony in the report of the Committee on Public Accounts. I may have to refer to a word or two of explanation here and there by the witnesses, but the whole story is really set forth in the documents of the department. There is no doubt in my mind that not one of those men who have been punished for evading their statutory duties has been more guilty than the minister is in this case.

The cases in which the minister can act without the order of the Governor in Council are very plainly put, the first is 'a pressing emergency, in which delay would be injurious to the public interest.' I suppose the hon. gentleman would argue that this is such a case. The hon. gentleman has shut himself out from any such pretense. It is absurd to suppose that the hon. gentleman even thought that he was acting under that clause. He acted arbitrarily; his high mightiness the minister did it all, and there was no pretense of an inquiry as to whether there was any emergency in which a few weeks or ten days' or thirty days' delay might cause serious injury to the public. Not at all. The hon. gentleman did this at his own sweet will; that is the only consideration that entered into his mind; and he has absolutely shut himself out from the pretense that he acted on any other grounds, because after the work was over, after the expenditure was incurred, at the last moment he goes to the Governor in Council and seeks to get from them what he ought to have obtained at first, and he seeks to obtain it by a deliberate misrepresentation of the facts. I propose to prove that. But I want to be as short as possible, and avoid anything in the shape of vilification which will hurt the feelings of the minister. The first important matter appears at page 239 of the report of the inquiry before the Committee on Public Accounts in a message of 3rd July, 1908.

And just here I would like to point out to this House the fact that our position to-day is very like the position when the minister undertook to let this contract. We are to-day on the eve of the dissolution of the parliament. The day this message was sent forward was the eve of a dissolution. We are likely to have a general election within three months; some people—many people—say, in October. They actually had the general elections within three months after this message was sent. So we can look sympathetically at this case, and make the application to the proceedings of the minister. Here the first message we have is not from the minister, but from his acting deputy 'J. B. H.'—I suppose, Mr. Hunter. And let me here say that in the remarks I make I do not intend in the least to reflect on the officers of the minister, either his deputy or the chief engineer, Mr. Lafleur. I know very well what a difficult position these men occupy, especially with a powerful minister with a will of his own, and backed with authority, and all else. Such men have to be very careful to obey orders and not inquire too much. Mr. Hunter, on the 3rd of July, sent a written memorandum to the chief engineer, Mr. Lafleur.

Ottawa, July 3, 1908.

Chief Engineer,—Kindly secure a report from resident engineer regarding dredging at Buctouche, Shediac and Gaspereau (Port Elgin), with a view to sending out a notice to dredge owners asking for tenders.

These three places should be commenced by July 20, and a portion, to be designated by the resident engineer, be finished this season.

(Sgd.) J.B.H.,
Acting Deputy Minister.

Mr. BARKER.

On the 15th of July there was another message from Mr. Hunter:

Chief Engineer,—Kindly let me know as soon as possible just what quantity of urgent dredging there is at Gaspereau river, N.B.

It is represented all that requires to be done at present is removal of bar at mouth. Please say how much that will be.

J. B. H.

Then, there is a message the following day from Ottawa to the resident engineer New Brunswick. Mr. Lafleur in his evidence said:

On the 16th July, 1908, I wired to Geoffrey Stead, resident engineer, St. John, Chatham, N.B.: 'Please wire me immediately what quantity of urgent dredging is required in the Gaspereau river, N.B. It is represented that all that requires to be done is removal of bar at mouth. How much would that be?'

He was asked how he knew that that was represented, or as to the necessity for any dredging, but he could not say. Here is the chief engineer of public works, the man who has charge of these things, and he says that 'it is represented,' but he does not know by whom. Here is a quotation from his examination:

Q.—You had no knowledge of that?—A. No official knowledge, because there is nothing in the correspondence before me to show that.

Q. Have you any knowledge, official or otherwise?—A. Not to my memory.

Q. As to, by whom that representation was made?—A. No, sir.

This message, sent on the 16th of July required the resident engineer's report upon the quantity of work that had to be done on the Gaspereau river, a work which we find soon afterwards involves an expenditure of about $34,000. Well, the gentleman at Chatham is able to answer that next morning by telegram. Mr. Stead's reply was written July 17, and is the following:

In reply to your telegram at Gaspereau river, a cut to give six feet at low water through bar necessitating removal 48,000 cubic yards, barge measurement, is most urgently required. Basin 350 feet long, 200 feet wide; at wharfs also very necessary, requiring 14,000 cubic yards, barge measurement, of dredging.

That was a pretty sharp return from the gentleman at Chatham, New Brunswick, as to the requirements of the Gaspereau. It was required from him by his chief in order that he might issue calls for advertisements. And Mr. Lafleur is asked:

Q. You have no knowledge, however, of his visiting the round?—A. I have no knowledge.

Then follows another letter addressed to the secretary of the department by the acting deputy minister, Mr. Hunter, as follows:

20th July, 1908.

Secretary,—Please have advertisements sent out calling for tenders for dredging at Gaspereau river, Buctouche Beach and Buctouche harbour and Point Du Chene, in the province of New Brunswick.

J. B. H.,
Acting Deputy Minister.

Now, as a fact, the advertisement was issued according to that instruction from the acting deputy minister. That advertisement was published in the St. John, New Brunswick newspapers on the 28th July, and it called for tenders by the 14th of August. On the 31st July we find this extraordinary message from the resident engineer at Chatham, N.B., to the chief engineer at Ottawa; you will observe that this is only three days after the advertisement appeared in the newspaper, and eleven days before the tenders were to be put in:

John E. Moore, St. John——

That is the secretary we have heard so much about, of the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company.

—says he has a dredge ready to work on Gaspereau river, N.B., and expects to start Monday. Am I authorized to lay out the dredging for him there?

Now this is going pretty rapidly. Three days after the advertisement is published and eleven days before tenders are due this Mr. Moore has it all arranged—not through the department, because they have no knowledge of it, but with somebody; surely it was not with the hon. member for Westmorland—it could only have been with the Minister of Public Works. Nobody else would have dared to make such an arrangement. The hon. minister wont say he did not make it. And Mr. John E. Moore goes himself to the resident engineer at Chatham, N B., and tells him: I have got the work, I have got my dredge ready, and I expect to start on Monday next. And this is arranged by the minister who was bound by this statute I have just read and ought to have laid the tenders before the Governor in Council. He meets this contractor, Mr. Moore, who he admits is a friend of his in St. John, where the minister himself resides; he meets this Mr. Moore, and tells him he is to have the contract. Now the minister to-day has made a rather clever variation of what actually took place, no question about it. He has added now on second thought words that were never in the original proposition. He says what he told Mr. Moore was that he could begin the work, and on the 14th when tenders came in, if any other person were to tender lower that Mr. Moore, Mr. Moore was to withdraw his dredge and the other man would get the work at the cheaper rate. That is what the minister says, but it is absolutely contrary to the fact. Here is the letter of the chief engineer on August 4. He could not have written this letter without the authority of his chief, and we have here the statement in businesslike form exactly what Mr. Moore has been told, not all what the minister states to-day:

Sir,—The work of dredging in the Gaspereau river has been given to the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company, of St. John, N.B., provided they are willing to accept in payment per cubic yard, scow measurement, the lowest price to be obtained by tenders which are now being called for. Kindly place the company's dredge at work immediately if they accept the conditions. You will please, however, note that the lesser work only is to be engaged upon.

Now where is there a word here that if there was a lower tender put in the lower tenderer was to get the work? It was the very opposite. If there was a lower tender they, the Maritime Company, were to take that price. That is what he says, and the fact is that on the 4th of August he actually gave them the work, the only condition being that they were to accept the price of the lowest tender. The hon. gentleman wishes us to believe he was so anxious to get on with this work between the 4th of August and the 14th, that he wanted to put a dredge at work there, and keep it going for ten days, and that it was to be removed and go away if somebody tendered for less. That is absolutely incorrect. There is the letter written at the time by the chief engineer, undoubtedly by dictation. The work was given at that moment to the Maritime Dredging Company, the only condition being that if there happened to be a lower tender they were to take that. Now I ask hon. gentlemen opposite, there are business men over there, and they understand what this means, they understand the effect of it —I ask if there is an hon. gentleman opposite who believes for a moment that, with Mr. Moore's dredge on the work, with the engineer on the spot placing him in charge of the work, and setting out the the work for him, any other rival dredge owner would go to the trouble and expense of tendering on the 14th of August? Is there an hon. gentleman opposite in business who, if he found a friend of the government, of the minister, a fellow townsman of the minister—I think he objected to the word 'crony' used by the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket)—but if he found a fellow townsman in charge of the work, if he found him on the 4th of August placed in possession of the work by the resident engineer, would any man of ordinary common sense go to the trouble of putting in a tender at all? It is absurd to pretend such a thing, it is absolutely childish to think that any man in the dredging business, finding a government work, of all work, and a friend of the government in charge—and all these dredge owners know each other, they know who is inside and who is not—to say that a man would go and make a tender under these circumstances is absolutely ridiculous, and the hon. gentleman knows it as well as any one. Now what was the result? It was worse, actually worse, than giving him the contract, and for this reason. Mr. John E. Moore knew that not only would he get the contract, but he knew that no other person was going to tender under those circumstances. Then what was the result? Why, if John E. Moore, instead of tendering at 90 cents, as he did, had actually had the impudence to tender at $1, he would have got it just the same, he knew that nobody else would get the work. All he had to do was to put in his own tender. Therefore, I submit, it is a reasonable inference that that 90 cents was understood and agreed upon when the arrangement was made for him to put in a tender. I think no one would hesitate to come to that conclusion. I think if the question was left to a common jury, and they were asked: Do you think it is a reasonable inference that when the minister told Moore he could go to work and afterwards tender, it was then agreed the tender should be 90 cents. The jury would answer in the affirmative. Otherwise it would be still worse for the minister, because the man might have put in as much as he liked.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is not a particle of evidence to sustain the hon. gentleman's suggestion, not a particle of evidence that I ever knew what the tender was before it was opened. As a matter of fact I did not.

Mr. BARKER. I did not say there was evidence, it is a reasonable inference from reading this letter.

I repeat, who would be so densely stupid as to think that there would be another tender? It is monstrous to think that the minister ever expected there would be another tender. He simply said, in effect, whatever your tender is, I will give you that price and if the minister did not agree with him that it would be 90 cents I think it would have been prudent for him to have done so because he might have had to pay more.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Prudent or not, he did not do it.

Mr. BARKER. The minister may be faulty in his recollection as to some trifling circumstances.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not a bit as to that.

Mr. BARKER. I think it would have been a business act to have taken care at all events that it should not be more than 90 cents. It might have been more and the hon. gentleman would have been bound, as there would have been no other tender. Now there is the letting of this contract. That is the way that this minister thought he was carrying out the statute governing all the departments of this government. He took care that ten days before the advertisements came in the man was in possession of the work, everything was perfectly understood and arranged, and there was no trouble to the end. The work went on and this trifling job that was entered into—I do not use the word 'job' in any improper sense—this contract, although there was no actual written contract, involved a sum of $33,969, and the government paid it. Is there any doubt as to that? There is no question at all about it. What is the fact?—that a verbal arrangement, confirmed by the letter of the chief engineer, was the only contract the minister ever entered into while the work was under performance. The whole of that $33,969 was earned and payable upon the word of the minister and no formal contract whatever was entered into. There is no question at all about that, and the minister cannot deny it. We have the telegram from Mr. Stead that he had been informed that the man was to have the work, and the letter from the chief engineer telling him that he was to have that work, and that with the tender which was put in on the 14th August was the only contract that was entered into; in fact, there was no contract whatever until the gentleman found for some good reason that he had to get an order in council, and then and only then, months after, was a contract prepared. That is clear. There is no question about it and it cannot be denied.

Then, the 14th of August was the day for the opening of tenders, and the next thing in order is the memorandum by the assistant secretary of the department for the minister at page 243:

> Dredging in New Brunswick.
> Buctouche beach, Buctouche harbour, Gaspereau river, Point du Chene.
> Tenders for above work due Friday, August 14, 1908. One tender received at this office herewith. Appropriation: dredging maritime provinces, $650,000.

We have not taken up the three other cases. We have confined ourselves to Gaspereau river as if he went into all together it would likely be confusing, and this one raises the whole question of this resolution. This witness is asked:

> What is the amount of the tender?

And the answer is 90 cents per cubic yard for each place included:

Hon. gentlemen can see that it is a much bigger question than appears from the discussion here. Here is the letter sent by the chief engineer on September 29. We have heard a good deal from the minister about the view of his chief engineer as to the reasonableness of the price for this work. I think this is a very significant letter that I will read:

Sept. 29, 1908.

Sir,—The only tender received for dredging in the Gaspereau river was the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company for 90 cents per cubic yard, scow measurement.

Here are the words of this chief engineer who, it is said, thought the price was reasonable:

At the time the tender was received I thought the price was considerably more than that for which the contract should be awarded.

Yet the hon. gentleman accepted everything because it was recommended by his chief engineer, the gentleman who actually thought the price was considerably more than ought to be given.

However, it has been represented to the department that the condition is such as to make this price fair and reasonable.

He was asked where that representation came from. He did not know; he could not recollect. There was nothing on the files of the department to show where it came from. Here is the question:

You say, however, it has been represented to the department that the condition is such as to make this price fair and reasonable. By whom was that representation made to the department?

The chief engineer says:

That I cannot remember at this date.

Q. Did anybody represent that to you?—A. Not to me personally.

Q. Who did represent it to you; from whom did you get that information?—A. I must have had it from some of the officers of the department.

Q. Did you get it from the minister?—A. I cannot say that.

Of course he could not. Who would have expected him to recollect that?

Q. Will you say that you did not get it from the minister?—A. I cannot say that I did not.

There is the evidence of the chief engineer who led the minister to accept the tender, the man who told him that he thought the price was considerably more than ought to be paid. But the engineer yields to it, unwillingly evidently, because it was represented to the department that there were circumstances that he was not told about, that he knew nothing about, which made it fair and reasonable. Well, there may have been circumstances to make it reasonable for somebody, but to say that it was fair and reasonable to the country is an absolute enormity, there was no justification for such a thing, and it is a ridiculous farce to pretend that there was. I leave for a moment the routine of the procedure. I will remind the House that this work was finished about October, 1908, just about the time of the election. I think the election was on the 24th October, and that is just about the time that this contractor finished the work and got paid.

Then, as to this work which was so urgent that it had to be done immediately, here is a report of the chief engineer dated 9th March, 1909.

Chatham, N. B., 9th March, 1909.

Sir,—I have received your letter No. 8510, of the 4th March, asking a report on what further dredging is required in the Gaspereau river, Westmoreland county, New Brunswick. In reply I have to say that last season dredging to the extent of 33,744 cubic yards at a cost of $33,969.60 was performed for the excavation of a channel 100 feet wide across the estuary of the Gaspereau river, but the shoalest point of the estuary had not been reached at the close of the season, and, therefore, practically no improvement in navigation has been effected.

Here was $34,000 expended for this so-called urgent work, and we have it set forth here that they actually did not get to the shallow part at all, and the work done was no good. That is what the hon. member (Mr. Crocket) said, and not the way the minister put it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket), said that the way it was left in the autumn of 1908 it was no good.

Mr. CROCKET. And the way it is to-day, it is no good.

Mr. BARKER. And it still remains no good, and it was done in defiance of the statute.

Mr. PUGSLEY. During the last year, work was continued by the government dredge, and while there is still some further work to be done to carry it to the railway bridge, I am told the channel is very good to-day, and that the work has become very beneficial.

Mr. BARKER. Here is work done on the minister's own personal order as urgent work, done in defiance of the statute, and the way it was left in 1908 it was absolutely useless. In another part of the evidence it is proven that a part of the shoal left untouched had nine and six-tenths inches of water, and lo, this was to be a navigable harbour. I am confining myself almost entirely to documentary evidence, so that there will be no question about it, and on the 3rd of October, the month in which the general election was held, the contractors were urgently requiring that they should get paid $34,339 for this work. At that particular time they had not quite finished the work, but they wanted to get the money, and we find the Hon. William Pugsley at St. John, New Brunswick, on the 3rd of October, 1908, telegraphing to the chief engineer at Ottawa:

Kindly wire instructions to Scammell to visit Gaspereau, as arranged.

Scammell was wanted down there to get the thing settled up so that the department could pay, and the chief engineer on the 5th of October telegraphed Scammell at St. John, New Brunswick:

Certain difficulties have arisen in connection with dredging Gaspereau river. Please see the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company at St. John, who have the contract, and report.

At that time there was no formal contract signed by anybody, and no pretense of a contract, and nothing but the letter of the chief engineer and the tender. On the 16th of October, just eight days before the election, there was a telegram sent to the Hon. William Pugsley at St. John, New Brunswick. No doubt the minister was down there looking after the elections, and here is a very extraordinary telegram sent to him from Ottawa by his chief engineer:

Deputy Minister informs me that you have Maritime Dredging and Construction Company's tender for dredging Gaspereau river. Would you kindly let me know price quoted for ordinary material and casting over so that progress estimate may be made out and paid.

Just fancy that. Fancy the president of a railway company or any other concern, contractors wanting urgently to be paid $33,000, and he a thousand miles away from his office with the tender in his pocket. It is an extraordinary thing.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And particularly if he is visiting the locality where the work is going on.

Mr. BARKER. I did not charge that the minister was personally superintending this work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is in the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. BARKER. And the minister was at St. John, New Brunswick, the headquarters of this dredging company. Now, this is where the extra came in. There was no price in the tender for the casting over, but they wanted to make an extra charge for it, and it brought that 90 cents a yard pretty close up to a dollar, and the chief engineer at Ottawa wanted to see what that tender was, and just fancy the condition of things in an office where there was not even an entry in a book as to the terms upon which the contract was let.

The chief engineer could not find out what the terms were, because the minister had taken the tender down to St. John. What for, may I ask? Is it anything suspicious for me to ask the minister what he was doing with the tender that belonged to the office at Ottawa, down in St. John?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I explained that.

Mr. BARKER. Will you explain it again.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have already done it quite fully.

Mr. BARKER. It is not explainable.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sorry if the hon. gentleman did not hear it.

Mr. BARKER. What right has a minister to take the public documents, the only evidence of the terms of the tender, away from the office? What right has the minister to go hawking around the country papers belonging to the office, to see the contractors? What does he do it for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no suggestion in the evidence that I took the tender to see the contractors.

Mr. BARKER. I am suggesting that. The chief engineer cannot check the account sent in, he has not the price, there is not an entry in the department showing what that tender was. There is no letter, there is no contract. If the hon. gentleman had entered into a proper contract he would have had the terms there and the chief engineer would have been able to check the account. But the whole thing rested on that tender and the minister had that in St. John.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sorry my hon. friend did not hear my explanation. I stated that there was a question with regard to whether the department would properly pay to the contractors their tender price of 90 cents. I stated, and it appears also by the evidence that the chief engineer had felt that the price was somewhat higher than it ought to be. I intended to arrange for Mr. Scammell to visit the work. I took the tender, not in my pocket, as the hon. member for York says, I took it in my official dispatch box, where many other papers coming to me as minister which I have to look over, are always kept. The minister has to take many papers with him, from time to time to examine. I took it for the purpose of conferring with Mr. Scammell with regard to it, and the moment I got word from the chief engineer that he wanted it the record shows it was sent back to the deputy minister.

Mr. BARKER. I did not need that admission from the hon. gentleman, because it is here. That is just what occurred, they were trying to get the thing settled, these people were claiming extras, claiming for casting over and the chief engineer could not certify or settle the account. There was no document, that tender was the only thing in the department. That scrap of paper was the only thing the government had and the minister took it off to St. John. That is what I said and I do not think the minister has altered it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman made the statement that I took it to St. John to the office of the contractors, to show to the contractors. I say that statement is not worthy of my hon. friend in view of there not being a particle of evidence to support it.

Mr. BARKER. I admit that I am drawing an inference there. I did not suppose that the minister went to St. John to the head office of the dredging company. If the hon. gentleman says he did not intend to see Moore about it. I will accept his statement but until he does so I do not believe he went there except for the purpose of seeing these men.

Mr. PUGSLEY. All I can say is I have not the slightest recollection of seeing them on the subject.

Mr. BARKER. There are many things in my life which I do not recollect. The evidence continues:—

Q. He was at St. John?—A. Yes.
Q. And you asked him to quote you (that is reply back) the price of the tender, (for ordinary materials and for casting over?)—A. Yes.

The casting over was the disputed question.

Q. Both for ordinary materials and for casting over?—A. Yes.
Q. So that the progress estimate might be made out and paid?—A. Yes.
Q. Have you the minister's reply?—A. Yes. (reads).
St. John, N.B., October 16, 1908. Price materials Gaspereau river, 90 cents. Have mailed tender to deputy.

You will observe that the chief engineer asked particularly about the cost of the casting over. That is where the extra came in. There is no answer upon that part of the question. I should say that a minister who got an inquiry of that kind pointing out clearly to him that they wanted to know the price for the dredging and the price for the extras so claimed for casting over, should not be so careless as to reply, 90 cents, saying nothing about the casting over. That is one comment I would make. It would seem wise, when parliament has passed an Act requiring observance of certain regulations in such matters, the business should not be dealt with by a minister taking down, even in a hand bag, the papers of the department. The evidence continues:

Q. And in the department you have no record of that, but the minister had the tender with him down at St. John—A. Evidently.
Q. Now, you have already pointed out that the tender did not quote any price for casting over—A. No, sir.
Q. And the minister replied that the price was 90 cents?—A. Yes.

Why the chief engineer could not be blamed very much for paying 90 cents for the casting over as well as for the rest upon that reply. I would not like to accuse the minister of having sent that answer back so that it might be taken either way but it is certainly a most reckless reply on his part.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. member has just read from the evidence that the tender said nothing about the price for casting over. Therefore what could I say about what the price was to be. All I could do was to send the tender back to the officers of the department and allow the officers to work it out for themselves.

Mr. BARKER. All the chief engineer wanted was to have the tender.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This was sent back to him.

Mr. BARKER. In addition to the 90 cents they were claiming for casting over, and he asked the question 'material and casting over.' The minister says nothing about the casting over, he says 90 cents.

Mr. EMMERSON. He sends the tender though.

Mr. BARKER. That was a most reckless reply for a business man to send by telegraph.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is it or is it not the case that the hon. gentleman has read from the evidence showing that the tender made no reference to and did not name any price for casting over? Is that not so?

Mr. BARKER. Certainly.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then if that is so how can my hon. friend say that it was a reckless reply on my part that I made no reference to casting over when the tender itself that I forwarded to the deputy minister said nothing about casting over.

Mr. BARKER. When the chief engineer asked for the price of materials and of casting over, to send him the simple answer '90 cents for materials' was very apt to mislead him; the matter should not have been left so that there was any question about it. It is a bit of careless work that no competent clerk would be guilty of.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Should I have fixed a price for casting over in my reply?

Mr. BARKER. You should have said there was nothing about casting over in it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I mailed the tender at once

Mr. BARKER. On October 16, eight days before the election I find a letter from the minister to his deputy.

I return you tender of the Marine Dredging and Construction Company for work at Gaspereau river, &c. I understand that Mr. McCordock has reported that the price asked for Gaspereau is reasonable.

So that the minister was not merely in possession of the tender, but was interviewing the officers down there, and I suppose he argued very strongly with Mr. McCordock against allowing that extra. I presume that he would consider that his duty. However, we do not see any evidence of it, and he takes care to inform the department he understands that Mr. McCordock is in favour of it. Then, here comes the point of this letter, written on the 16th of October, when the work was just about finished for the season:—

I shall be glad if you will confer with the chief engineer and have the necessary recommendation to council prepared.

There we begin to see a new feature. It was quite clear by this time that there was some trouble about extras and other things, and that the Auditor General was looming up before the eye of the minister. When he started on this work, there was no necessity for an order in council; but when there came to be a dispute about extras, and the 90 cents got up nearly to a dollar, naturally the minister thought, 'this will go before that awful man the Auditor General,' and visions of the Auditor General directed attention to the necessity of getting up an application to the Governor in Council to cover up this thing; and, here the great farce and humbug of the whole thing comes in. You must remember that the hon. member for Westmorland argued that this was an urgent thing that the minister had a right to do himself, and that there was no question of illegality about it. The whole question we raise is one of legality, and now the minister admits all that we contend, that that work ought never to have been given out until all the tenders and every paper relating to it had been laid before the Governor in Council. Here is what was now prepared for the Governor in Council:

Mr. BARKER.

Ottawa Nov. 14, 1908.

To His Excellency the Governor in Council:

The undersigned has the honour to recommend that authority be given to accept the tender of the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company, of St. John, N.B., to perform dredging in the Gaspereau river, in the province of New Brunswick, at the price of 90 cents per yard, scow measurement, the above bid being the only one received in answer to public advertisement the tenderers have furnished an accepted bank cheque for $6,000 as a security for the fulfilment of their dredging contracts in the said province. The expenditure in connection with this dredging is properly chargeable to the appropriation of $650,000. For dredging in the maritime provinces granted by parliament at its last session.

The chief engineer of the Department of Public Works has reported that the price above quoted is fair and reasonable.

WILLIAM PUGSLEY,
Minister of Public Works.

On November 14, 1908, after the work is all done, he gravely asks His Excellency the Governor General to consent to the acceptance of the tender. Most marvellous thing, this—the tender was accepted and the work put into the hands of these men before the tenders were opened; and months afterwards, when they were trying to settle the accounts for payment, he gravely and solemnly makes this request. Two resident engineers, one in 1903 and the other in 1907, had examined the work to see what it would cost if the government proposed to go on with the work, and they both valued it at 20 cents; and here in 1908 the minister solemnly signs a document recommending the acceptance of a tender at 90 cents; and there is no one to tell His Excellency the astounding fact, that the minister had arranged to accept the tender of these people before the time for putting in tenders had elapsed. He says further:

The tenderers have furnished an accepted bank cheque for $6,000 as security for the due fulfilment of their dredging contracts in the said province.

Was that true? On the 14th of November, no contract having been made, he makes that statement.

The expenditure in connection with this dredging is properly chargeable to the appropriation of $650,000 for dredging in the maritime provinces granted by parliament at its last session. The chief engineer of the Department of Public Works has reported that the price above quoted is fair and reasonable.

I have already read what the chief engineer said. He said that when he saw that tender he thought that it was considerably higher than ought to be paid, but he approved of it because somebody had told him that there were circumstances not disclosed to make it favourable. Well, we have a little more. This recommendation of the hon. Minister of Public Works is laid before a committee of the Privy Council and is approved by His Excellency the Governor General on the 20th of November, 1908. This is the recommendation that His Excellency approved:

The Committee of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Public Works, advise that authority be given to accept the tender of the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company of St. John, New Brunswick, to perform dredging in the Gaspereau river, in the province of New Brunswick at the price of 90c. per cubic yard, scow measurement, the above bid being the only one received in answer to public advertisement. The tenderers have furnished an acceptsd bank cheque for $6,000 as security for the due fulfilment of their dredging contracts in the said province. The expenditure in connection with this dredging is properly chargeable to the appropriation of $650,000 for dredging for the maritime provinces granted by parliament at its last session. The chief engineer of the Department of Public Worke has reported that the price above quoted is fair and reasonable.

And here is the most precious bit in the whole lot:

Such contract to be for work done up to the close of the calendar year.

Clearly conveying to the Governor General that he was approving the acceptance of a tender for work that was yet to be done between October and the 31st of December. That was a deliberate taking-in of His Excellency, a deliberate and wilful deception. I wonder what he thinks of his ministers when he is made to approve a document of that kind. One can hardly believe it possible, and yet there is the document. After the work had been proceeded with from July to the middle of November, they go to His Excellency to get his approval of a contract to be entered into to perform the work between then and the end of the year, and he is induced to approve that.

What can His Excellency think of the Minister of Public Works? Can he place reliance in that minister? And it is not only the Minister of Public Works, but also his colleagues, for they must have known it; they could not avoid knowing that that work had already been done and without authority. If that is not the case, then, the Minister of Public Works must have deceived not only His Excellency, but his own colleagues. Surely, he would not betray his colleagues in that recommendation. They must have winked at the whole thing in order to get the money—that was the essential.

Mr. LOGGIE. I understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) to say that the work was commenced in July. Where is the evidence to be found of that?

Mr. BARKER. I am quite willing to be corrected; it was laid out on the 4th of August.

Mr. LOGGIE. Where is the evidence that it was commenced on the 4th of August?

Mr. BARKER. The evidence shows that the order to lay out the work was on the 4th of August. They must have started about that time, and the work proceeded in August, September and October.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. McCordock or Mr. Scammell said it commenced on the 16th of August.

Mr. LOGGIE. No, the 17th of August.

Mr. BARKER. There is no question about the main facts. On the 4th of August, Mr. Stead got authority to lay out the work for Mr. Moore, and dredging must have begun about that time. He said that he would begin on the Monday following, and it could not be many days after that when he did. I do not care whether it was on the 4th or the 14th. In October there were claims for $34,000. And on the 20th November, though no contract whatever had been signed for this work beyond taking the man's tender, they asked the Governor General to authorize the contract, and they informed the Governor General that the tenderer had put in a cheque for $6,000 to secure the performance of the work already done.

Now, I said that I proposed to confine my remarks practically to this testimony. And on that testimony I would say that the minister deliberately and wilfully evaded the statute governing this department. I repeat that, and I say that the conduct of which he has been convicted on this evidence is as bad as the conduct of those bankers who are now serving time in the penitentiary.

Mr. ALEX. HAGGART (Winnipeg). I listened with a good deal of interest to the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson), who held a brief for his colleague, the Minister of Public Works. And he followed the usual tactics—'No case; abuse the plaintiff's attorney.' There were the usual charges of exaggeration and insinuation. But it appeared to me, upon an attentive hearing of what has been said by both sides, that the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) was very clear, very distinct and very direct in his charges. He framed an indictment covering a direct charge of maladministration, and every count in that indictment was in unmistakeable Anglo-Saxon. The parties against whom these charges were directed are the Minister of Public Works and his political friends from the province of New Brunswick. The minister is charged with being at least an accessory before the fact in that he enabled these political friends of his—and social friends also; I believe they were called cronies—to make money from the public treasury in a way which the statutes forbid. It was not an evasion of the statute which required works of this kind to be let on tender, but it was a direct violation of that statute. The statute says that it must be by tender. The minister (Mr. Pugsley) himself tries to get away from that and to say that this case comes within the exceptance that exceptions are allowed. He says this was a case of urgency and so comes within the exceptions. If that were the case, why in Heaven's name did he advertise for tenders? No doubt after he had determined to give these men that work to do his attention was called to the fact that work of this nature must be given by tender. Was this a case of emergency? We are told by the counsel for the Minister of Public Works that this matter was brought before the late Hon. Mr. Tarte when he was Minister of Public Works and before some of his successors. Was it any more a case of urgency in 1908 than it had been when Mr. Tarte and his successors were in office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart, Winnipeg) allow me to correct him? I certainly did not intend that the case should be put under the subsection which provides in cases of emergency the work may be given without calling for tenders. What I claim is that, pending the calling for tenders, when work to be done in the meantime was comparatively small, when there was every reason to anticipate that it would not amount to $5,000—it would not amount to over $2,000 or $3,000—it would be perfectly competent for the minister to let the work temporarily if he thinks it in the public interest to do so, on condition that when the tenders come in the person who performs the work shall accept for it the price at which the contract may be awarded to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). The case of works involving small expenditure is another exception, and I believe now that the minister brings it under that head.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The minister may let a work under $5,000.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). But this was for more than $5,000, it was for an indefinite amount.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But in the meantime it could not possibly amount to $5,000.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). What, the whole?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, but between the time when the company should go to work and the due-date of the tender. It could not amount to anything like $5,000.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). I think I can show the minister that he did not know what it did amount to and that he placed himself in the peculiar position where he had no control over the amount.

What are the facts? The minister learned that one Mr. Moore had bought a dredge and followed him up and tried to get him, on the way down to the Bay of Fundy, ascertain if he could do that work.

Now it is arranged subsequently, I think it is by verbal understanding between the minister and Mr. Moore, although it was afterwards reduced to writing, whether by correspondence or by special document I do not know, but the arrangement was that the work done should be paid for on terms, or at the prices that should be mentioned in the lowest tender. Now let us see how many dredge owners we have in this country looking for jobs of that kind. We have the Loggie firm down east; we hear of the McAvity firm down east; we have heard occasionally of the firm up in the west of Lake Superior, in which the hon. member for Port Arthur is supposed to take an interest. But are there half a dozen firms, owners of dredges, in this country looking for work of that kind? Then if that is the case—and I believe all these firms are friends of the government, all of these dredge owners that are doing government contracts are active friends of the government—all that was necessary for Mr. Moore to do was to drop a note and convey an intimation to some of those firms saying: I am going to do this work, and giving the particulars. There would be no other tender but his own, and it ought to be known by the minister, and was known by Mr. Moore at the time, that such was the fact. Mr. Moore tendered alone, and he fixed his own price at the exorbitant figure of 90 cents per cubic yard. That I think is a correct statement of the case. Now the minister and his department were committed in other ways. When you want work done by tender you must offer some data to the proposed tenderer. Were there any plans, any specifications, any surveys made, any soundings, any measurements made? We are told that an engineer, some six years ago, had got some data together. That information was either correct or incorrect, it was either good or it was valueless. It is true that the minister had had nothing before that time. But he hurriedly makes that arrangement, this verbal arrangement, with this man Moore. He was to go on with the work, we will fix the price. Yes, but it is Mr. Moore who will fix the price. As to the engineers, there is nothing from them. Now Sir, if any work such as that was done by any city council, or town council, or municipal council, or even a village council, and if the proceedings were taken there that were taken here, and the work done there as it was done here, the manager or engineer of that council would not hold his job very long. I submit that this is an amendment which ought to commend itself to the good sense of this House, and I shall be glad to support it. Look at the counsel for the Minister of Public Works, the gentlemen sitting around him, who are to constitute the jury who is to try this case They remind me of another case which was tried in another court A man was indicted for larceny, the charge was stealing a load of hams. The jury was sworn, the prisoner had no counsel, and a lawyer was assigned to him by the judge. This lawyer, on consultation with the prisoner, advised him to plead guilty. He had not the ghost of a defence. The case was tried, and the evidence was conclusive. The lawyer had hardly a pin to hang the shred of an argument upon. The judge directed conviction. But very much to the astonishment of every one in court, the jury found the prisoner not guilty. Leaving the court with his new found client, the lawyer says to him: How do you account for that remarkable verdict? Why, says the man, it is the simplest thing in the world, every one of the jury had a ham.

Mr. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Portage la Prairie). I cannot affect even to be surprised that no one can be found to come to the rescue of the Minister of Public Works after the debate has proceeded to this hour. The hon. member for the county affected did rise in his place and endeavoured to justify the conduct of the minister. If it could be said that a loud voice, and a profusion of gestures, and a violent demeanor constitute the elements of argument, then the hon. member for Westmorland [Mr. Emmerson] certainly is a prince at debate. The Minister of Public Works himself emulated his example, but to my mind, he did not exercise even his usual skill in deflecting the argument from the actual issue at stake. One would listen to both these hon. gentlemen and be quite surprised to find that the motion before the Chair was a censure of the Minister of Public Works, and his department on the ground that the evidence before the Public Accounts Committee reveals a wasteful and illegal expenditure of public money in improvements on the Gaspereau river.

Now, what is the situation? First of all, let me give the House a few dates, and a review of the dates will make it appear that there is a case that can with difficulty be explained by any one, however ingenious. On the 3rd of July, 1908, it developed in the Department of Public Works that certain dredging in the Gaspereau river was urgently needed, and that there would be immediate public peril if it was not undertaken at once. A note was sent by the deputy of the department to the chief engineer accordingly, asking him to institute an investigation as to the cost and extent of the work required. Notwithstanding that that note was sent then, it took the department between the 3rd and 16th of the month to take the next step, notwithstanding the fact that this public work was so desperately urgent as it was claimed to be at the time. On the 16th another note was sent, asking that the engineer report, and a wire followed it to Gaspereau asking Mr. Geoffrey Stead to report on the 16th of July. Now nothing further is done until the report comes in on the 20th, and that report states that it is very urgent indeed that dredging to the extent of so many cubic yards be done in order to get through a sandbar at the mouth of the Gaspereau river. On the 28th the advertisement for tenders goes out, so that between the 3rd when the urgency developed and the date the advertisement went out, 25 days had elapsed. Advertisements for tenders go out on the 28th, and three days after a wire goes from Mr. Geoffrey Stead that the friends of the Minister of Public Works are right at the point with their dredge, and ready to go to work next day; and not only that they are ready to go to work, but the wire actually states that they expect to go to work.

The minister has not explained to the House what built that expectation in the mind of Mr. John E. Moore. He expected to get the contract the following day, and he could never have seen the advertisement for tenders published. Then, on the 4th of August, four days afterwards, the contract was actually let and this country bound to the contract. The minister has endeavoured to lead the House to understand that all they were authorized to do was to start until tenders were received. The actual fact of the case is set out in the report of his own engineer who says that the contract had been let to them. They had been authorized to do all the work that was intended to be done, namely, all the work required, dredging through the sandbar to the river. They were authorized, the price to be fixed in a certain way, the price to be fixed on the basis of the lowest tender to be received from amongst those already advertised for. This was a perfectly fixed contract to which the minister committed this country and the words of the resolution state that the minister so committed this country illegally to it. The minister tries to get out from under that by representing that the work was urgent. I stand to say, and the minister can not contradict me—he would not in a court of law—that, no matter how urgent that work, the contract that was let was absolutely illegal. The Public Works Act does state that in case of urgency work may be done without tender. That is quite true, but the same statute says that if tenders are called for then the contract shall be let in accordance with those tenders, and a recommendation to council shall follow the receipt of the tenders. The Act expressly forbids the letting of the contract prior to the receipt of the tender. The letting of this tender can not come under the provision of the Act relating to urgent public works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend take the ground, that, under the statute which authorizes the minister to let a contract, apart altogether from the question of urgency, to an amount not exceeding $5,000, the minister could not, pending the date of the receipt of tenders, if he thought it in the public interests to do so, let a man go to work temporarily on the condition, that, having worked for a few days temporarily for a period extending over a week or ten days he would accept in payment for it the price of the lowest tender? Does the hon. gentleman say that the minister could not do that under the statute?

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister's question is so prolix that I am not certain that I apprehend it. My exposition of the statute will be quite plain to the minister. He certainly could let a contract under $5,000 irrespective of the question of urgency. There is no question about that, but the minister can hardly contend that in letting this contract as it was so let, by the statement of his chief engineer to Mr. Geoffrey Stead on the 4th of August, he was letting a contract under $5,000. Mr. Geoffrey Stead had reported on the character and extent of the work that was urgent, and that was the amount of work that was let according to the letter of the 4th of August.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend is a good lawyer, an excellent lawyer, no doubt better than I am, but I would like to know whether, if I am right in my contention that the work was only given to the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company temporarily until the date of the receipt of tenders, and that would be under $5,000—as a matter of fact it could not have been over a couple of thousand dollars at the outside—the hon. gentleman says that the minister acted illegally under the statute in giving a contract to do that temporary work on these terms?

Mr. MEIGHEN. I say that the premises that the minister lays down are not true.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Suppose they are true.

Mr. MEIGHEN. There is absolutely nothing in the course of the contract to show that it was only temporary work. I will show the minister from the evidence that there was no temporary letting of a contract, that that word was imported into the discussion simply to deflect the argument. How could there be a temporary letting of the contract in view of this letter seen on page 241 of the evidence?

August 4, 1908.

The work of dredging in the Gaspereau river has been given to the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company, of St. John, N.B., providing——

And the only provision is that they accept for this work the lowest price that in future may be decided by tender.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is for work done in the meantime.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does that say part of the work, does that say work done until tenders are received?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If you are going to let a contract what is the point of calling for tenders? That would be simply a farce if you are doing the whole work.

Mr. LENNOX. So it was a farce.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was not a farce.

Mr. LOGGIE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Louder, louder.

Mr. LOGGIE. Suppose the lowest tender would have been 20 cents a yard, would the Maritime Dredging Company have been obliged to continue the work when they had received notice that the department would only pay 20 cents per cubic yard?

Mr. MEIGHEN. At law they certainly would have been obliged to, but in practice certainly the minister never would have made them. Mr. Stead was asked by telegram on the 15th July:

Kindly let me know as soon as possible just what quantity of urgent dredging there is at Gaspereau river, N.B. It is represented all that requires to be done at present is removal of bar at mouth. Please say how much that will be.

That is the telegram to Mr. Stead and Mr. Stead reports the amount as 48,000 cubic yards. Then follows a telegram to Mr. Stead stating that the work has been let. How can the ingenuity of mortals argue into that that only a small part of the work had been let until possibly they would be ousted by a lower tenderer on the 14th August? That is imported into the debate by the Minister of Public Works with a skill in which he is practised and for an object that he surely conceives to be utterly aside from the issue. So that, the contract is let. Then, you are to take the lowest tender and, under the circumstances pictured by the minister himself, he must have been aware that there could not be any other tender. The men are put on the work, they are right in the river and there is no other dredge in sight. Any person who might have a dredge would only have ten days to look it over.. If the minister figures up the dates he will find that is correct, and the minister has painted this as being an isolated spot out of the dredging zone. So, here are men, friends of the minister, reputed and known throughout the maritime provinces, to be close to him, politically, socially and in every other way, actually at work in that isolated place doing the job, ready to tell anybody that comes that they have the work, away out of the dredging zone and certainly without the danger zone. Under these circumstances does the minister expect that anybody else is going to tender? The minister tells us that he made that arrangement and there is no one else in the world who could have made it. He made the arrangement illegally with that company to go on and do the work, knowing that tenders should have been called for and were called for. So that, the first part of the amendment is established without the possibility of excuse that the contract was illegally awarded.

Now, what is the result of it all? Before I go on with that let me proceed with the dates that I was going to give. The contract is awarded and these men are put to work on the 4th of August. On the 14th tenders are to be received and, as everybody would expect, only one came in.

Whether that ever got to the department or not there is no evidence to be found on the record. The tender came in on the 14th of August and Mr. McCordock who is the officer in New Brunswick to oversee such work is only notified on the 29th of September, when the work has been in progress for six weeks. In the meantime they had notified the resident engineer of the province of Nova Scotia, but all they notified him to do was to tell the company that the contract was theirs. Then, Mr. McCordock, whose duty it is to supervise these works in New Brunswick, on being notified, sets to work to find where the Gaspereau river is. It is remarkable that in the case of this work of such tremendous urgency that unless it be proceeded with at once disaster would overtake the Dominion, the river where the work is to be done is not only utterly unknown to the supervisor of dredging of the province, but to the resident engineers of the government at St. John, both of whom inform Mr. McCordock that they do not know where the Gaspereau river is. The minister tells us that the work was so important that it had been urged on the department for 8 years by the member for the county, and yet no report had ever been asked for as to whether there was any traffic to warrant the expenditure that would be required. To this hour the department is absolutely without a report to show that there was any prospect of traffic over that river which would warrant the expenditure of this large sum of public money. True they have two reports to show what the cost would be, but these reports do not seem to be much good because according to the minister they are 500 per cent astray in the estimate. After Mr. McCordock found out where the river was he made a report on the 8th October, and in the meantime he had seen the Minister of Public Works, and Mr. Scammell had seen the Minister of Public Works, and the minister had arranged that Mr. Scammell should make a special report on the Gaspereau river. The fact that these gentlemen had seen the minister is clear from several statements in the letters, but if for no reason it is quite clear from the fact that in their letters after that they always used the words 'fair and reasonable' which constitute a favourite expression from the lips of the minister. The minister is at the city of St. John and from St. John he wires to his officer at Ottawa to wire back to St. John to tell Mr. Scammell to go and make the report as arranged. That is to say, after the price is finally fixed, this gentleman is asked to make a report as to certain difficulties. Now, this difficulty matter is peculiar. The minister has let the contract and has committed the country to the payment of 90 cents a yard for the work. On the 14th of August the lowest tender is in and the price is then fixed at 90 cents a yard once and for all, and the people of Canada have to pay for it. But the minister knew, as everbody down there knew, that the price was exorbitant, and that something would have to be done to explain it before the Auditor General and the Public Accounts Committee, and so he sets to work to bolster up this exorbitant price. How he did it is evident from the telegram of his chief engineer, sent to Mr. Scammell on the 5th of October, in which he says that certain difficulties had arisen. What these difficulties were nobody knows yet. The price had been determined on then, and the Maritime Dredging Company could have sued for it, and what these difficulties were or what they had to do with the contract we are at a loss to understand. We do know that the Minister of Public Works knew that the price was exorbitant and that he had to bring in something to bolster it up, and so he represents to his engineer that there are certain difficulties and that he should send someone out to report so that there would be evidence before the Public Accounts Committee as to what a terrible struggle these men had to carry on their contract. Mr. Scammell and Mr. McCordock go out on the work, and the minister is in St. John at the same time, and between the three of them they get two reports sent in that the price is fair and reasonable. And the minister thinks he is justified before parliament and the country for having entered into an illegal contract if he is able to produce a report of a couple of his subordinates, saying that the price is fair and reasonable. If that is so what is the good of the statute; what is the use of asking for tenders on any contract? We might just as well have the statute read that any payment whatever may be made by the Department of Public Works providing two subordinate officers are ready to certify that it is fair and reasonable. What the Department of Public Works should have done was to ascertain in the first place by reliable engineers what the work would cost, what would be a fair amount to charge for it, and govern itself in accepting the tender by the report of these reliable engineers. The Minister of Public Works tries to make the House believe they had only one report, but as a matter of fact they had two reports, namely the report of Mr. Day in 1903, and the report of Mr. Stead in 1907, and each fixing the cost at 20 cents. The Minister of Public Works says that the dredge was exposed in this work, that it was not covered by a mountain or hidden behind rocks or something of that sort, and that the difficulties were appalling and justified the price of 90 cents a yard. Well, was not every physical and geographical difficulty on the Gaspereau river just the same at the time the engineers reported that the price should be 20 cents a yard as when the work was given out at 90 cents a yard. Worse than that; the minister says the report only meant that it would cost the government 20 cents a yard if they did the work themselves, and while the resolution says that the evidence shows the money was illegally and fraudulently paid out, the minister endeavours to defend himself by reading into the engineer's report something not contained in it.

There is nothing whatever to show that the engineer reported that if the government were to do it, and take no account of interest on capital or operating expenses or wear and tear, it would only cost them 20 cents. In the first place there is nothing to show that, and in the next place if the engineer reported on that basis, the government was not justified in advertising for tenders at all, because he should have had a report on the basis on which tenders were to be called for. That is the only report that would be of value to him, and that is the report he was bound to have if he had done his duty in the department. But where does the minister stand in this regard? Does he say he had an engineer who reported 20 cents as the price if it had been done by a government dredge, and took no account of these changes? If he did not take account of that what did he take account of, what did the 20 cents include? I can conceive of nothing which the country would be out except interest on capital, operating expenses, and wear and tear. I state this to the minister that in the minister's estimates, in the reports of his engineers as to what it cost the country, they do include interest on capital, wear and tear and operating expenses. Does the minister deny that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Then we will take the minister's own statement. Last spring he gave an estimate to this House as to what it cost government dredges per day. He said it cost, including operating expenses, interest on capital and reasonable wear and tear——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is the hon. gentleman speaking of the arrangement with regard to the dredge 'International' with Messrs. Dussault at Quebec?

Mr. MEIGHEN. It makes no difference what the dredge is.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It does, my hon. friend ought to answer.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister stated that in estimating the cost the government took into account wear and tear, operating expenses and interest on capital.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was not speaking of the cost of the government dredges, but of a special arrangement which had been made between the department and Messrs. Dussault for the hiring of the dredge 'International,' and stated that we had fixed the rent at a sufficient amount per day to cover all these items, and keep the government absolutely clear in the matter, and if my hon. friend will reflect he will see that is what I was dealing with.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I do not know what dredge he was dealing with——

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is what it was, an entirely different proposition.

Mr. MEIGHEN—nor do I care. The minister stated that in estimating what it cost the government to operate a dredge, they included all these.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I entirely deny that. I do not know the record to which my hon. friend refers, but I shall be extremely surprised if it bears that construction.

Mr. MEIGHEN. At page 4780 of 'Hansard,' 1910, the minister gave an estimate of $91 a day, and stated that that estimate included wages, operating expenses, interest on capital, and wear and tear.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Quite so, for the dredge 'International.'

Mr. MEIGHEN. Certainly, and does he say that for one dredge the government estimates cost per day on one basis, and for another dredge on another basis?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In that particular case we were making a special arrangement to lease the dredge 'International' to Messrs. Dussault and Company, and we fixed the amount sufficiently large to cover all the items to which my hon. friend refers. But that is not at all the same as the operating expenses on a dredge which are set forth in the Auditor General's report. That was the special case of the dredge 'International.'

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister surely does not think he has convinced anyone that he has answered the question. The minister there states that his department in ascertaining what the running of a dredge cost per day included all these items. If they included that in one case, common sense would indicate that they included it in others. They should include everything in each case, and the fact is that they did because if they did not include those items what could they include? The $91 includes interest on capital, wear and tear, wages and operating expenses. That shows that Mr. Stead's estimate was about correct, that Mr. Day's estimate was about correct, because according to the report of Mr. McCordock, if the Maritime Dredging Company had got 20 cents per cubic yard instead of 90 cents, they would still have made a profit of about $18 per day. But on the basis of 90 cents per yard, they got an average per day of $536.40. They could have taken the $91 a day off and still have had a profit of $445.40 per day, so that the minister's statement in this House on March 4 last, clearly goes to show that the estimates made by these men were conservative and fair, and would have done justice between the Maritime Dredging and Construction Company and the government. They would have made a fair and reasonable profit even on the basis of the cost per day of the dredge 'International,' and yet in the face of that, because the dredge was out in the water, and was not sheltered by a mountain or rock the minister thinks they should be paid 70 cents more, or four and a half times the figures.

What further are the facts? On the 16th of October they found at Ottawa that these people were demanding money, and they did not know what to pay them. The Deputy Minister of Public Works informs Mr. Lafleur that the minister has the tender down in St. John so they wire the minister on October 16 to be good enough to let them know what the price is, and the minister advises back that the price is 90 cents per cubic yard. Then, on October 29 they quit working, and on October 26 Mr. Stead sends a letter to John E. Moore, telling him he has been reporting right along on the work, sending in the reports and notwithstanding that up to that hour, he did not know what the price was, in so far as the evidence goes and it appears to be complete.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It says sending in the reports of quantities, but not of cost.

Mr. MEIGHEN. He does not say what they are; he simply says he is sending in the reports. The minister himself said he certified to the price.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at that time.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister will find that at page 256 of the evidence. Here is the way it reads:

> In reply to your letter of the 23rd inst., I have been sending the reports of dredging at Port Elgin to Ottawa each week, but several have lately been returned to me through a misunderstanding of the reports. I wrote explaining the matter and received a telegram on Saturday asking for the returned reports, which I at once forwarded.

Now, does the minister feel that he was justified in interrupting me to read into that letter something that it certainly does not contain?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does not the hon. gentleman see that it must be reports of quantities and not of prices?

Mr. MEIGHEN. If the department were properly run, it might have been. But an engineer who will certify that 90 cents is fair and reasonable after reporting the value of the work at 20 cents would scarcely be above reporting that the price was right, though he did not know what the price was. Do not forget that this was a work of tremendous urgency, that unless it were done something terrible was going to happen to the hon. member for Westmorland, and he would be in a bad position in his county. In the light of this urgency, let us reflect for a moment on the position of the hon. member for Westmorland. He tells the House that he had made a promise to his constituents, and that unless this work was done that promise would be violated, and he says that he had to see that it was done because he wanted to go back to his constituency as a man who had kept his promise. Therefore, his promise to his constituents must have been that he would see that that money was spent on the Gaspereau river. Now, what a state of affairs it is in which an hon. member for a county can make an absolute pledge to his constituents, though he has no authority, no official status, no direct or legal power, that money will actually be spent. Does it mean that the hon. member for Westmorland was in possession of facts that he might reveal unless this were carried out? I venture to say that no member of the House of Commons who had not some bludgeon to hold over the head of the minister would make such a promise to his constituents as the hon. member for Westmorland made. But he says: 'The work was so urgent that I was justified in pledging the government and pledging myself.' Was it so urgent? On the 24th of October, two days before the election they stopped the work. They started the work in August; they could have started it in May; and they quit it two days before the election, and Mr. Stead in his report of the 9th of March following, said it was not worth a dollar. So that up to the election nothing was done that was of any value to the constituency of Westmorland except that the money was spent among some of the people there. Not only that, but in the next year, May passed by in which they might have done work. June, July, August and September went by, and they did not move a foot of earth until the month of October, 1909,. So that $33,969 was sunk and the country got absolutely nothing for it. Not one iota of value had been added to the traffic facilities of the Gaspereau river. They allowed the whole summer of 1909 to go by without doing anything to make the work of any value; but some time in October, we do not know the date, the government put a dredge on and kept it on for nearly two weeks, and took it away on the 28th of October; and from that time to this hour they have left the work just in the shape in which it was. 1,650 feet had been taken out, and 500 feet more were taken out in October, 1909, and the report says that they are not through the bar yet.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sure that the hon. member is wrong. I am sure that we had the government dredge working there practically all through the summer season of 1910.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does that appear anywhere?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It appears in the accounts of the Department of Public Works. The report for the year ending the 31st of March, 1911, has not yet been published; but we kept the government dredge, the 'George Mackenzie,' at work all through last season.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The hon. member for Westmorland made the statement that nothing had been done since October, 1909, but that something is being done now. Something had been done for two weeks in 1909, but he stated that they were not through the bar then.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I happen to know that in the year 1910 the dredge got away up the river pretty close to the railway bridge.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The Minister of Public Works, on the 4th of August, lets a contract for a work that involves an expenditure of $33,000, has the tenders come in on the 14th of August, has the work completed on the 24th of October, has the contract signed on the 7th of November, and after all that is done recommends to Council that the tender be accepted on the 17th of November, and the Governor in Council on the 20th of November authorizes the signing of a contract that had been signed two weeks before, for a work that had been ended a monther before. And he justifies that on the urgency of the work; and yet it was left in 1908 in a state in which it was no good, and was not resumed until October, 1909; and now he undertakes to say, in the face of the statement of the hon. member for Westmorland that they have been doing something this summer.

I do not doubt the statement of the hon. member for Westmorland, that they are geting busy now. The election is close at hand, and I have no doubt that the hon. member is still committed to his constituents and has told his constituents that he can make the Minister of Public Works do this; and if the minister does not do it something serious is going to happen. That is the position we are in today. The hon. member for Westmorland spoke for about an hour and a quarter. The charge against the government is that this contract is let in an illegal and highly improper way and that far too much money was spent on the work. And the member for Westmorland thinks he has created a defence when he tells us that there are quite a lot of lobsters to flow over it when it is done and that they raise so many steers in that county every year. He seems to have taken example by the Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth) who told us, in trying to defend that notorious and colossal fraud, the Newmarket canal, that a certain number of cattle were raised every year in the county of York, Ontario.

Now the minister has made certain statements with reference to the address of the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) I will not vie with the minister or with the hon. member for Westmorland in the use of vituperation or the hurling of epithets. I have never been taught to believe that an argument is met in that way. I can hardly conceive that the hon. member for Westmoreland feels proud of himself in that, after spending an hour and a quarter in hurling names at the hon. member for York, because, as he stated, that hon. gentleman had made use of low insinuations, yet, when repeatedly challenged he did not state one insinuation that that hon. gentleman had made. Nor could the Minister of Public Works, when challenged name an insinuation that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) had made. If there ever was a speech made in this House, if there ever was an attack made that was utterly void of insinuation, that was direct, plain and open in every sense, it was that of the hon. member for York to-day. The hon. member takes the sworn evidence and says that that evidence shows fraud and illegality, and he proves it. He says that Mr. John E. Moore and McAvity are two close political associates of the hon. Minister of Public Works. He does not insinuate that they are; he states that they are; and the minister knows it and does not deny it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) says that these men got a contract illegally, hurriedly, under most suspicious circumstances, at prices four and a half times what his engineers stated it should be let at. And he says that they took the money—whether the same bills or not does not matter—and in association with the Minister of Public Works bought the St. John 'Telegraph' and made it the Liberal organ, instead of a Conservative supporter and so helped him to win the province of New Brunswick. These statements are plain and they are proved and no one denies them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I deny them.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Which one does the minister deny?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I deny the three or four assertions that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Meighen) has just made.

Mr. CROCKET. I have never understood the minister to deny that he was associated with Mr. Moore or Mr. McAvity in a financial way in the purchase of the St. John 'Telegraph' and 'Times.' I ask him now if he denies that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am replying to the statement of the hon. member (Mr. Meighen) who has just been speaking. He makes three assertions. One was that the contract was let illegally. The second was that it was let at four times its value——

Mr. CROCKET. I ask the hon. min——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) has the floor.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And I am answering with the consent of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman does not consent, I will not speak.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I ask the minister to tell me the statement of facts I made that is not correct?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman made the statement that the contract had been illegally let that it had been let for four times its value and that the money was used for the purchase of the 'Telegraph' in association with the Minister of Public Works. I say there is no foundation for these statements. And the reason I rose is that the hon. gentleman said that nobody denied that these statements were correct: I deny them absolutely.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I made four statements, and I stand here until I show every one of them to have been correct. The first is not a statement of fact, but is a conclusion of law—that the contract was illegally let. And who will say that a contract is not illegally let which is let after tenders are called for and before the tenders are received? Does the minister say that that is authorized by the Public Works Act?

Mr. PUGSLEY. What was done in this case is authorized by the Public Works Act.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I say, if it is authorized by the Public Works Act, then we might as well burn that statute.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I complained that the hon. gentleman said that nobody denied it. I say I deny it.

Mr. MEIGHEN. If I stated that the Minister of Public Works would not deny it I did it without appreciation of his character. I made the statement that these men were awarded this contract in that hurried, illegal and suspicious way at prices four and a half times what two of his engineers estimated it should be let at. The evidence absolutely proves that, and there is no contradiction. It is true that the minister got two men afterwards to come and find the difficulties—to find that the wind was blowing, to find that they had to fetch water over I forget how many yards in order to have water to drink, and that they had to fetch coal over a similar distance. But that had nothing on earth to do with the cost or with the fixing of the price, for the price was fixed no matter how far they had to bring the coal, and everybody knows that a dredge, except in a sheltered harbour is exposed to the wind; we do not expect to carry on dredging by the fireside. It is true, the minister raised the spectre of these difficulties and was able, by the power he wields to bring two men who would testify on that subject. But these statements are not backed up, and they are made under circumstances that reflect no credit on the department. I say these men were given this work at four and a half times what it was estimated it should cost, and that they bought the St. John 'Telegraph' and bought it in association with the Minister of Public Works. I do not say that they took the same identical bills to make this purchase. I do not know that my case would be particularly stronger if I did. The fact that they got the money and bought the St. John 'Telegraph' contemporaneously is a fact practically undenied. And the minister was associated with them in the purchase and reaped the result. And still the minister ventures to say that all this is covered up, that the multitude of sins is wiped away simply, by the fact that by this corrupt purchase of newspapers in city and county of So. John. He knows New Brunswick he was able to carry the the appeal he made to the people of St. John city; that he would as soon be defeated himself as have his colleague Mr. Pender defeated, and that he would not take it as vindication unless Mr. Pender were elected. And he knows that St. John turned down his appeal and elected the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel). The patent undenied facts, the mere recital of the dates, makes the case that appeals to the people of the country.

I state here that the minister is in no better position, whether that contract was technically legal or illegal. I say without question that in my opinion it was illegal. I cannot see how anybody can conscientiously say it was not. But if it was not illegal, then we might just as well burn the Public Works Act, because it leaves the Minister of Public Works absolutely free to do just as he chooses under all circumstances. An urgent public work, he says, excuses the whole thing. Why is it urgent? Because, he says, this was the dredging season. The dredging season started two months before. If a public work is urgent because it is the dredging season, then every dredging work in this country is always urgent, because it can only be done in the dredging season. So I repeat, that unless the Minister of Public Works admits the illegality of this Act, he might just as well burn the Public Works Act out and out, because it puts no restraint upon him whatever.

Now, the Minister of Public Works devoted a part of his time to some other reflections. He has a very strange idea. We are here with the evidence before us, and with the resolution which says that the evidence bears out certain facts and conclusions. The hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) supports that resolution on the evidence. The Minister of Public Works offers something else. I ask him on what authority he offers it, and he says on his own. Then he goes on in reply, and not only does his reply consist of an attempt to read page after page and sentence after sentence into the evidence, but he also answers by reading his own speeches made some time last spring. Let the Minister of Public Works take the evidence here, let him take the dates, let him reflect on these dates, and he will conclude, in his own heart at least, that it will take a lot more than his own speech and that of the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) to square himself and his government with the country.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Crocket).

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Ways and Means.

WAYS AND MEANS—RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE (North Ontario). Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose last evening, I was discussing some of the economic disadvantages of the reciprocity pact from the view point of Canadian interests. When we consider that the United States people are large producers of the articles that we desire to export the folly of this agreement from the Canadian point of view is self-evident. The United States is really not a customer in the large sense, but a competitor of Canada. I desire to place upon 'Hansard' a list of some of the articles of which the United States is a large exporter to show that so far from being a consumer of Canadian products, the United States offers the least desirable market of all the markets that are open to Canadian shippers:

EXPORTS OF UNITED STATES, 1908.

The United States people are large exporters of these very articles that the Canadian producers and farmers desire to sell. The price of any article that Canada has to export and any surplus that the United States people have to export is fixed by the European market. The European market governs the price of the surplus of all exporting countries, including Canada. The United States with 100,000,000 people is an exporting country the same as Canada with her 8,000,000 or 10,000,000 people. Consequently it is folly to expect that much advantage will result to the Canadian producer by negotiating a trade treaty with a people who are exporters of the very same commodities as those which we export. Speaking about the market that fixes the price of the surplus products of exporting countries, the Hon. James Wilson, on page 76 of his open letter to the Grange, of February 9, 1911, says:

While Canada is exporting wheat or other grains and the United States is also exporting wheat, there is no particular reason why Canadian wheat should come here, unless it be that a mixture of Canadian and American wheats may be desirable on the part of our milling exporters, and our millers may find it profitable to handle the Canadian surplus. But the price to the Canadian for his surplus wheat will be substantially the same whether sold in Europe or the United States. However, if the hauling of Canadian wheat by the United States railroads, merchants and mills, has a tendency to reduce the price, it will be reduced to Canadians.

The balance of trade as between Canada and the United States in regard to the important products of butter, cheese and eggs has been against Canada to a very large extent, showing that the United States people ship more of these commodities into Canada by far than we ship into the United States. Taking the total dairy imports from the United States, we find that in the years 1906-10 they amounted to $745,545 worth, while the exports of Canadian products to the United States amounted to $513,951 worth, an excess of imports from the United States into Canada over exports from Canada to the United States of $231,594 worth. The total value of eggs imported from the United States from 1906 to 1910 was $869,568. The total value of eggs exported to the United States from Canada for the years 1906 to 1910 was $59,665, an excess of imports from the United States over exports to the United States of $809,903, showing that in the commodities important from the point of view of the Canadian farmer, the United States, notwithstanding our duty, has an immense advantage over the Canadian exporter.

Another economic disadvantage of this agreement arises from the fact that not only the United States and the British Empire are free to enter into our markets and compete with our home producers, but twelve other countries, known as the favoured nation countries, may also compete with our farmers. I would like to call the attention of the government to the fact that neither of the Canadian plenipotentiaries is in his seat listening to the discussion. I do not know whether the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) is leading the House or whether he is taking the place of the minister of the Crown.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). I think it is due to hon. gentlemen who are discussing this treaty that at least one of the ministers who negotiated this agreement should be in his place. I was saying, Mr. Chairman, that not only the United States farmer competes with our farmers in the home market, but Australia, New Zealand and the rest of the British Empire are allowed to compete under this arrangement in our markets, with our farmers, and that also twelve other countries with a population of between 300 and 400 million people are allowed to compete in our markets where the figures conclusively prove that our prices are higher than the prices prevailing in the United States market. They may enjoy our market free although we have not access to their markets because of their high duties. I might also say that the products of these countries are not admitted into the United States markets free, although we have to admit them free into Canada. These twelve favoured nations are the Argentine Republic, Austria-Hungary, Bolivia, Colombia, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Denmark, Switzerland, Venezuela, Japan, Norway.

These countries are large producers of farm products and live stock, and they will be formidable competitors to the Canadian farmers. They are favoured by climate, by cheap labour, and by easy access to ocean ports. I see the member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) has surrendered the reins of office to the Minister of Customs, who has resumed his accustomed place, and I suppose is now leading the House. Australia although situated a great distance from the Canadian market is a formidable competitor with us, and by this reciprocity pact Australia can ship her farm products into Canada free of duty. Australia exports annually from 40,000,000 or 50,000,000 lbs. beef, 90,000,000 to 100 million lbs. of frozen mutton and lamb. 50 million to 75 million lbs. of butter, and the wheat crop of Australia last year was as large as the crop of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan combined. Most of it was produced within 300 miles of ocean ports, and every one knows that ocean rates are so low that the Australian farmer can ship his products to the consuming markets cheaper than the Canadian farmer can transport his crop by rail to the same centres, New Zealand is also entitled to ship her products into Canada free of duty, and New Zealand is famed for her woollen, wheat and dairy products. In 1909 New Zealand exported 18,500,000 lbs. of frozen mutton and lamb, 13,500,000 lbs. of butter and cheese, and she sends 12 times as much butter as Canada sends to foreign markets. The Argentine Republic is growing tremendously in agricultural production. By reason of her favourable climatic conditions and cheap labour, the Postmaster General told us labourers can be employed there for 64 cents a day and board themselves—the Argentine is a dangerous competitor to our Canadian farmers. She exports 400,000,000 dollars worth of goods, 90 per cent of which is farm products and live stock. She ships to Great Britain 6 times as much beef as Australia and New Zealand together and 1½ times as much mutton and lamb as the two combined. In 1909 the Argentine produced wheat to the value of $320,000,000 and exported over 100,000,000 bushels. If there should be a glut in the English market at any time the Argentine could on account of cheap water transportation ship her wheat into the maritime provinces and compete with the wheat of western Canada transported there by rail. It is stated that the carriage of a bushel of wheat by water from the Argentine Republic to St. John, New Brunswick is about 5 cents, while it costs the Regina farmer about 16 cents to send a bushel of his wheat there. When you compare the cheap labour of the Argentine with the high-priced labour of western Canada and the cheap ocean rates from the Argentine with the high railway rates from Regina, you can see what a formidable competitor the Argentine would become with western Canada if this reciprocity agreement goes into effect. It is estimated that Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces consume 30 million bushels of wheat more than they grow and if this reciprocity agreement goes into effect, the time may come when the Argentine will be supplying a certain quantity of this wheat to Quebec, Ontario and the maritime provinces. On March 15th I asked for a return in connection with the yearly importations and the quantity and value for the past six years into Canada from these various countries and this return shows that notwithstanding the present duty a number of these countries are exporting a very large quantity of farm products to Canada in competition with the products of our Canadian farmers. In 1910 the United States shipped into Canada 11,507,971 bushels of wheat; in 1905 the United States shipped into Canada 11,519 horses; in 1906, 17,147 horses; in 1907, 16,219 horses; in 1908, 6,428 horses; in 1909, 3,604 horses; and in 1910, 6,601 horses. In 1905 the United States shipped into Canada 2,249,961 bushels of oats; in 1906 3,613,847 bushels; and in 1910 it had fallen to 26,571 bushels. Of cattle, the United States shipped into Canada in 1905, 19,620 head; in 1906, 14,297 head; in 1907, 4,554 head; in 1908, 3,000 head; in 1909, 2,795 head; in 1910, 1,000 head; and paid the duty. Let me ask the Minister of Customs what quantities the United States would send to Canada were they not restrained by our present duty which this pact proposes to remove. Of sheep, the United States sent to Canada in 1905, 84,817 head; in 1906, 69,900 head; in 1907 73,500 head; in 1908, 52,200 head; in 1909,43,000 head; in 1910, 35,844 head. We find that the United States shipped into Canada in 1909, 289,751 lbs. of mutton, and that Australia, which they say is situated too far away to become a competitor, in this same year shipped in 667,885 lbs. and paid the duty. What would they not have shipped into Canada if there was no duty to restrain them? In the year 1910 the United States shipped to Canada 781,031 lbs. of mutton, and Australia shipped into Canada 1,149,979 lbs. in competition with the products of our Canadian farmers, and paid the duty. What would they have shipped in were there no duty to restrain them. Of eggs, the United States shipped to Canada in 1910, 757,316 dozen; in 1909 1,102,254 dozen; and in 1908, 1,123,336 dozen. If the duty were removed, as this reciprocity pact proposes, and this importation of eggs largely increased, can the Minister of Customs tell us what effect that would have upon the price which the Canadian farmer receives for his eggs? Of butter, the United States in 1909 shipped in 688,915 pounds, Australia 422,744 pounds; New Zealand, 16,128 pounds; and in 1910 the United States shipped into Canada of butter 67,568 pounds, Australia 547,149 pounds; and New Zealand 21,840 pounds.

Of cheese, which is a very important product of the farm, the United States, Belgium, France and Holland, which come within the class of the 12 favoured nations, all shipped in important quantities in competition with our own farm produce. In 1910 the United States shipped into Canada of cheese, 231,752 pounds, Belguim 4,639 pounds; France 86,647 pounds; Holland 21,957 pounds and paid the duty in every case. What would be the quantities shipped into Canada in competition with our farmers were the duties removed as contemplated by this pact? We find the United States shipping into Canada poultry to the value of $57,390. Of vegetables the United States shipped $1,004,426; Australia shipped in over $7,000 worth; Belgium over, $9,000; and France $99,000, and New Zealand $3,653. It was the same way with green fruits: In 1910 the United States shipped in $1,261,343, in competition with our farmers and France shipped in about $14,000 worth.

From a perusal of these figures, it must be admitted that these favoured nation countries are dangerous competitors, even at the present time, and with the present duty against them, of our Canadian farmers. If they can so compete with our farmers what would be the result, were the duty removed as contemplated by this treaty? I said that these countries are dangerous competitors in regard to these commodities by reason of their cheap labour and climatic conditions, and their easy access to the ocean ports. I call in support of this position the Minister of Agriculture who, speaking on December 13, 1910, told the House that the Canadian farmer was not in a position to compete with the Australian farmer in raising sheep and cattle owing to the conditions in that country. He said:

My hon. friend is quite right in saying that the number of sheep have decreased in Canada, but when he compares that with the increase in Australia, Argentine, South Africa and other countries, he is drawing a comparison with countries in which the climate and other conditions are entirely different.

Australia, both as regards sheep and cattle, is a ranching country. The cattle there run wild over enormous areas and are not taken care of at all. Sheep are in the same position. They have illimitable expanses for pasturing, which we have not, and they have a climate more suitable for that kind of wild life than ours. Therefore, a comparison between Canada and Australia in this regard is not a fair one.

I venture to express the opinion that the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Finance when they journeyed to Washington to negotiate this treaty had not the slightest conception that the favoured nation treaty clause would be operative in connection with this agreement. The matter was finally investigated, and when the leader of the opposition extracted from the Minister of Finance the facts in regard to this feature, the sentiment of the whole country in regard to this reciprocity agreement changed. It is absolutely unfair and illogical of the ministers to negotiate a treaty of this kind which will open the home markets where the prices are high to these competing countries where the conditions are so different, and this illogical position has brought on the ministers the condemnation of the farmers all over the country. I cannot conceive that the ministers had in their minds that this favoured nation clause would be operative or they would have hesitated about putting into effect this illogical, unprofitable and unfair agreement.

Mr. PATERSON. Do you mean we did not know?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I am inclined to believe that it was not present to the minds of the ministers when they negotiated the treaty, basing that view as I do on the lack of information the ministers had in regard to these matters, and their reluctance to disclose this phase of the question. It showed that their consciences bothered them in connection with this matter, and that they were trying to conceal the import and effect of this agreement as they knew it would be a serious matter to the farmers of this country to subject them to the competition of the twelve favoured nations in addition to the farmers of the British Empire, and those of the United States.

As I have pointed out the object of this agreement, as announced by the government, was to secure a market where there were higher prices, but it is shown conclusively that the average prices for the majority of the staple products of the farm are higher in Canada than in the United States, and consequently the whole purpose and object of the agreement falls to the ground. This is the strongest economic objection to this agreement. This information was not present to the ministers because they had not taken the trouble to secure information, they had not sent experts around the country as the United States did. The United States took time by the forelock and sent out experts to prepare lists of comparative prices on the two sides of the line. The United States did not publish these lists until after they had got the two representatives of Canada to sign and attach their signatures to this agreement. If they had done so, these gentlemen would not have signed the agreement because the disadvantage of the agreement from the point of view of the Canadian farmer would be thus shown. We have been unable to extract information from the ministers. Either the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Finance had not the information when they went to Washington or if they had they were afraid to produce it to the House because it would conclusively prove that the prices of Canadian farm products are higher than the prices on the other side. What a parody on the quality of Canadian statesmanship, and the manner in which this treaty was negotiated by our representatives! Let me read an extract to show how carefully and diligently the plenipotentiaries on the American side, how President Taft zealously sought information before attempting to negotiate a treaty of this importance and magnitude.

On page 113 of the document No. 849 on reciprocity with Canada that was issued by the experts of the United States government, speaking on the importance of the sheep industry, they say:

Coming to sheep we approach a phase of agricultural production that has for several months past been the subject of a painstaking inquiry at the hands of the Tariff Board. Representatives of the board have visited some 700 typical farms in the leading sheep-breeding sections of Ohio, Southern Michigan, Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, New Hampshire and Vermont, obtaining facts and figures concerning cost and prices. The method pursued in obtaining first-hand information as to the cost of keeping sheep was through schedules filled out by expert agents who personally visited the farms studied.

Will the Minister of Customs give the House the names of the experts who were sent out by the Canadian government to ascertain the comparative prices of farm products in Canada and in the United States? The minister does not answer. They never sent out an expert or an official to ascertain whether the prices of sheep on the Canadian side were higher or lower than the prices on the American side. What a parody of statesmanship is exhibited by the gentlemen who negotiated this treaty on behalf of Canada as compared with the statesmanship and foresight of the President of the United States! The latter says that for several months past the raising of sheep has been the subject of a painstaking inquiry at the hands of the Tariff Board. Representatives of the board visited 700 representative farms to inquire into this industry. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs whether any of our representatives visited farms to ascertain the cost of raising sheep in order to compare it with the cost of raising sheep on the United States side?

Mr. PATERSON. Go on with your speech.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I am asking the hon. gentleman for certain information in regard to this treaty.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman says he has got the information.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I am asking the hon. gentleman if the government had any officials of the department or any experts visit any farms to ascertain the cost of raising sheep or other live stock in Canada?

Mr. PATERSON. I am not playing the obstruction game.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). If that is the best information the Minister of Customs can give the House, I will leave it to the House and the electors throughout the country to judge as to his course.

I desire now to deal with the separate commodities that come within the purview and operation of this treaty. We have heard a great deal on the subject of wheat. When discussing this subject we should remember that there is a difference between winter wheat and spring wheat. I represent an Ontario constituency, in which the farmers are more interested in the production of winter wheat. On page 94 of the book prepared by the experts of the United States government, I find the following comparison of the production and price per bushel of wheat in the United States and in Canada in 1910:

	Spring Wheat.		Winter Wheat.
	Production. Bushels.	Price per bushel.	Production. Bushels.	Price per bushel.
United States	231,399,000	$0.898	464,044,000	$0.891
Canada	133,379,600	.738	16,610,000	.87
Ontario	2,429,000	.894	15,376,000	.882

The difference in price between the fall wheat sold in the United States and the fall wheat sold in Ontario is so small that we are not vitally interested in obtaining the American market for our fall wheat. The prices in the two countries are practically the same. In regard to spring wheat, it has been said, and I think it cannot be contradicted, that the surplus price is fixed by the price in Europe, and if Canada has any surplus it should be ground into flour within our own borders and not shipped to the United States in order to elevate the grade of their wheat and employ their mills and labourers. Prices in the different States vary greatly, and hence the duty does not account for the difference in prices. For instance, in Washington state the average price is 78 cents; in Kansas, 84 cents; in Montana, 86 cents; in Wisconsin, 92 cents; in Vermont, $1.03, and in Maine, $1.02, a difference ranging up to 24 cents between the various States. The average price of fall wheat in Washington state is 78 cents, in New York, 96 cents, a difference of 18 cents. I might point out that the price of wheat to-day in Winnipeg is higher than the prevailing price in the United States, which, I believe, is accounted for largely by the dread of reciprocity coming into effect. The mere prospect of reciprocity coming into operation has had that result.

It is a matter of importance to ascertain why the people of the United States are so anxious for our wheat. I have in my hand an extract from the Northwest 'Miller,' the chief organ of the United States flour and milling trade, published in Minneapolis, and it is very illuminating on this subject. It says:

> The future of American milling with Canadian wheat is a grand one. With this enormous and steadily increasing crop flowing into the mills and elevators of the states, a splendid tide of activity and prosperity should follow in its wake. Assured of their future supply of raw material, the mills of America could go forward on their developing course, continuing the march of progress which has brought them to the front.

New mills would be built, and capacities enlarged. New markets abroad would be sought and conquered. The returns from this renewed and extended activity would be felt in increased commercial prosperity. American railroads carrying the flour from the mills would secure additional freights; American banks would obtain increased deposits and greatly enlarged exchange accounts; American mill operatives would be in demand, and pay-rolls would be increased; mill machinery, bags, barrels and other mill supplies would be required in larger quantities; more money would be in circulation; and the benefit would be felt in every artery of industrial life touched by milling. There would be an increase in grain firms, in elevators, and in every branch of the grain handling and flour making interests. This would be felt in the added value of (American) real estate and in the solid and substantial development of every undertaking and enterprise that makes a community prosperous.

If by securing our wheat these beneficial results accrue to the United States, why should not we keep it ourselves, and have our wheat ground into flour within our own borders in order to obtain these advantages for Canada?

Now, the question of barley is one that comes closer, perhaps, to the Ontario farmer, than any other, and we often hear it discussed on the ground that barley was at such high prices during the old reciprocity treaty. There are two answers to that argument. One, which is patent to every reasonable man is that barley during the old reciprocity treaty sold at an artificial value, a value that did not result merely from access to the American market, but from the conditions which prevailed owing largely to the Crimean war, and the war between the north and south in the United States. The price of barley also has fluctuated from time to time with the duties. Referring to page 101 of the document issued by the United States government it will be found that the duty on barley was 30 cents per bushel from 1890 to 1894, when the average price was 49 cents. When the duty lowered to 30 per cent ad valorem between 1894 and 1897 the price of barley was reduced to 34 cents. But when the duty was raised to 30 cents after 1897 the average price for three years was 40 cents, showing that the prices of barley fluctuated with the duty. Many think that the Ontario farmer went out of barley cultivation when the reciprocity agreement of 1854 was denounced by the United States. As a matter of fact the Ontario farmers grow many millions of bushels more than they did at that time. But, instead of looking for an export market, they consume it on their own farms thus receiving good returns for it and also enriching their own soil. It is found that it is more profitable to feed it than to export it. It is estimated by the Agricultural College at Guelph, that 3 to 3½ pounds of barley will produce 1 pound of pork; and if we take the Toronto 'Weekly Sun' as authority, we find that the average price received for the last five years for pork has been $7 per 100 pounds. At this price barley is worth to the farmer from 96 cents to $1.12 per bushel. And the land will not be impoverished but enriched by these operations. The United States Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wilson, says that 'barley is as a soil robber next to wheat in its exactions upon the soil.' Consequently it is to the interest and advantage of the Ontario farmer not to sell his barley for export unless he can get a price in excess of 96 cents to $1.12 per bushel. The United States exports of barley have been as follows:

Being exporters of barley the United States are our competitors rather than our customers in respect to this grain. It is to be noted also that the malting operations of the United States have shifted from Buffalo to Chicago and Milwaukee, and the farmers of the western states supply all the malting barley that the large brewers require. Consequently, even if this reciprocity agreement did go into operation, there would not be the same demand for our Ontario barley to-day as in the old reciprocity days.

Now, speaking on the question of oats, the document issued by the United States, already referred to, shows, at page 107, that the range of prices in the United States is from 27 cents to 35 cents a bushel and in Canada from 28 cents to 36 cents a bushel. I may say that the duty does not always account for the difference in the price. There are great differences in price as between Ontario and Quebec, and yet there is no interprovincial duty to account for that difference. The price in Quebec is 44 cents, and in Ontario 36 cents. This shows that the fact of the existence of a duty does not affect prices in the manner we would be given to understand by those who discuss this matter from the point of view of the government.

A staple industry in Ontario is hogs, one of the most important that is conducted by the Ontario farmer. In the United States there are 45,000,000 hogs, and there are something less than 3,000,000 in Canada. Of course, Chicago is the great centre for the hog industry of the United States. But if you compare the average prices in Chicago with the average in Montreal for a period of five years, you will find that the advantage is with Montreal. The table is as follows:

Year.	Chicago.	Montreal.
1906..	$6 20	$7 77
1907..	6 10	7 93
1908..	5 70	7 10
1909..	7 35	8 64
1910..	8 90	9 60
Total for 5 years.	$6 85	$8 10

For the five years 1906 to 1910 included, the average in Chicago was $6.85, and in Montreal $8.10. The advantage, so far as the price of hogs is concerned, is altogether with the Canadian market. It is also within the knowledge of the members of this House, that petitions have been received from the farmers of this country asking the government to raise the duty on the importation of hogs and their products. It has been stated that the farmers favour reciprocity and are in favour of free trade in their own products. But these petitions from the Ontario farmer asking that the duty be raised show that the farmers desire to be protected against the keen competition of the packers of Chicago.

Now, turning to the subject of live stock, we find at pages 109 and 110 of the United States government document entitled 'reciprocity with Canada,' in regard to horses that 'in all the Canadian provinces except Prince Edward Island, Manitoba, and Nova Scotia the prices are higher than any of our States.' With regard to dairy cows, this document says:

In eastern Canada prices of dairy cows range from $32 to $48 and in western Canada from $39 to $41. The highest Canadian price quoted is $48 in Ontario against $46.50 in Montana, the highest American price. Prices of other cattle vary in the United States from $14.30 a head in Minnesota to $27.40 in Montana, while in Canada the range of price is from $31 in Saskatchewan to $34 in Ontario.

Prices of sheep are much lower in the United States than in Canada. In the United States they range from $2.90 per head in Texas to $5.30 in Illinois and Iowa, while in Canada the range is from $4 in Nova Scotia to $7 and $8 in Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

With regard to swine, it says that the prices are a little higher in Canada than in the United States. In regard to sheep, I had a communication forwarded to me the other day from a friend in Toronto. It is dated July 7, 1911 and addressed to S. S. Sharpe, M. P., Uxbridge:

My dear Sir,—A day or so ago I was in conversation with one of the junior members of the firm of ——, dealers in hides, wool and skins, having their place of business for wool and skins on ——. The young man informs me that this year they have purchased on the Toronto market the sheepskin pelts of American sheep. All told some 15,000 American sheep had come into the cattle markets here. The average duty is about $2.50 per head. Nearly all have come from Chicago, although one shipment of 1,500 had come from Texas to New York and then had been sent here. He said that the average cost of freight would be $1 a head. These sheep are smaller than our own and of a dark colour. The pelts after the wool was taken off are sold to the manufacturers of gloves and heavy winter shoes for an inner lining. These brought them 40 cents. In other years the manufacturers had paid 70 cents. If we have reciprocity where will your farmer friends come in when it comes to raising sheep? Please do not mention the names of —— as other dealers no doubt bought them.

Yours truly,
CHARLES H. BELL.

That throws a flood of light upon the competition that our farmers are being subjected to under existing conditions. I ask, in the name of common sense, what severe competition will they be subjected to if the duty is entirely removed? Now I have in my hands some figures with regard to the butter and egg industry, very important industries, although the Agricultural Department has not encouraged them to any extent. It has neglected that important industry that pays off so many mortgages on farms, and buys so many farms in the province of Ontario. The extract is from the Buffalo and New York 'Commercial,' February 14, 1909. Speaking of the butter and egg industry, it says:

The total exports of butter from Canada to Great Britain in 1909 were 5,353,770 pounds, and to the United States 92,468 pounds. The latest available figures for the United States are contained in the census reports for 1900, when New York state alone produced upwards of 70,000,000 pounds, and the aggregate production of the entire United States was more than a billion pounds. In the year 1909 we imported from Canada less than 100,000 pounds of butter, Canada imported from this country 473,805 pounds. Now when Canada removes her 4 cents a pound duty upon this product who can measure the amount of butter that this wider market will create for our own farmers? It will be our butter that will be flooding the Canadian market instead of this country being overwhelmed with the Canadian articles.

The egg statistics are equally illuminating. In 1909 Canada's total exports of eggs amounted to about 52,201 dozen. In the same year her imports of eggs aggregated 1,136,120 dozen, so that it appears the country bought twice as much as she exported. The Canadian duty on eggs amounts to 3 cents a dozen, and with this duty removed the burden is on the political farmer to show why he would not be benefited by this greater market instead of being injured by competition. All the eggs that Canada exports in a year would, if sent into Erie county, give every inhabitant just about 12 eggs a year or one a month. The rest of the United States would depend as usual upon the domestic supply.

Now in regard to the egg industry I want to point out that the imports of eggs in the fiscal year 1911 for home consumption were as follows: From the United States, 2,201,727 dozen; from Great Britain, 12,040 dozen; Hong Kong, 62,012 dozen; other countries, 91,861 dozen. The total quantity of eggs imported was 2,378,640 dozen, with a value of $439,066. What would be the importations into this country if we had no duty at all on these articles? In connection with these various commodities I desire to place upon 'Hansard' a table that has been prepared by experts of the United States in regard to horses, dairy cows, other cattle, sheep and swine. I presume, as the hour is late, there will be no objection to the table going on 'Hansard' without being read. The table is as follows:

——	Horses.	Dairy cows.	Other cattle.	Sheep.	Swine.

Consequently you will see, Mr. Chairman, by the report issued by the United States government, based on information collected by the experts that were sent out for the special purpose of ascertaining prices in Canada as compared with prices in the United States, that all these commodities have a higher price in Canada invariably than they have in the United States. Therefore, I ask upon what ground do the representatives of Canada undertake to negotiate this agreement and designate it as an agreement in the interest of the Canadian farmer.

Now, I come to an all important commodity that is raised on the farm. I refer to horses. The county of North Ontario the north riding of which I have the honour to represent is distinguished for many things, generally, but there is one particular industry in which the county of Ontario stands foremost amongst all other counties in the Dominion of Canada, and not only is it foremost amongst all other counties but it stands ahead of every other section of the North American continent as breeding the best quality of farm horses. By way of proof I desire to quote from a paper read by Dr. Rutherford, Live Stock Commissioner, and head of the veterinary department of the Liberal government here at Ottawa. Speaking at the Fairs Association in Toronto in February, 1911, he said:

In the county of Ontario we find there were in 1906, 113 stallions, of which 106 were registered, two being passed as unsound, while only seven grade stallions, all passed as sound, were discovered by the inspectors. This shows that 92 per cent of the stallions in the county were registered and sound.

No county in the province shows so many stallions and good ones (to say nothing at present of other horses), as does the county of Ontario, which has long been deservedly regarded as the head centre of live stock breeding intelligence on the North American continent.

Thus the facts, statements and conclusions of Dr. Rutherford prove the high excellency of this industry in the county of Ontario, an industry which has been developed by the intelligence, ability and brains of residents of the county of Ontario and of such men as the following:

Hackney class:
Hodgkinson & Tisdale.. .. .. Beaverton.
Graham Bros.. .. .. Claremont.
Standard breed and carriage class:
Hodgkinson & Tisdale.. .. .. Beaverton.
W. J. Cowan.. .. .. Cannington.
Graham Bros.. .. .. Claremont

Clydesdale class:

Hodgkinson & Tisdale	Beaverton.
W. J. Cowan	Cannington.
Smith & Richardson	Columbus.
Graham Bros.	Claremont.
John Bright	Myrtle.

and a great many other breeders of standard bred horses. These and others used to grow barley in the old reciprocity days. When the McKinley Bill came in it practically killed that industry, but with that foresight and intelligence that characterize the Canadian breeders all over that county they saw that they had to change their methods. A great many years were spent in this readjustment, and the results have been shown in the splendid tribute that has been paid to the county of Ontario by Dr. Rutherford. Now, after developing this great horse industry and bringing it to its present state of efficiency, the United States come forward and ask us to reciprocate. When the average value of a horse in the United States is $108 and the average price of a horse in Canada is $133 the United States come over to us and say that they would like to reciprocate. The best horse that is raised in North America is raised in the county of Ontario, and the best market for the Canadian horse is the Canadian Northwest. New settlements always require large quantities of horses. Uncle Sam opened up a dozen wests in the past but did he ever reciprocate on those occasions? Did he ever throw open his market to the Canadian horse breeder in those days? Did he ever give us a chance with our horses when he opened up his great west? Not at all. But now that we have a demand for horses and the average price is higher in Canada than it is in the United States they come forward and propose that we shall have reciprocity. Look at the price of horses in the western states:

North Dakota	$114
South Dakota	105
Texas	73
Montana	80
Idaho	102
Washington	108
Oregon	103
Ontario	133

It is not much wonder, when you compare the average price of horses in the United States with the average price in Canada that these experts inserted in their report the following sentence:

As to horses, Canada has no surplus of importance outside of Ontario. The agricultural development of the north western provinces has put prices of work stock and heavy draft teams at a premium in the territory tributary to Winnipeg. During the spring of 1910 it is stated on good authority that not less than 20,000 horses were sold out of Ontario alone for shipment to the market just mentioned, and prospective loss of this trade is giving Ontario some concern at this time.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario).

The five provinces of Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta combined have but 1,863,744 head as compared with 1,600,000 head now in the state of Iowa alone.

Then we have a statement from Mr. C. A. Burns, one of the best known horse buyers in Ontario, who addressed a letter to the press in which he declares that reciprocity will ruin the horse business in Ontario. I will not trouble the House by reading the whole of the article but he says:

The only protection now of the Ontario farmer is the duty. On a $200 horse, the duty is $65, and on a $150 horse there is a $30 duty at the present time. Remove this duty and let American horses come in here, and make it easy for Canadian buyers to go to the United States markets, and the Ontario farmer will get fully $40 to $90 per head less than he does now for his horses.

Some people think that the western farmer wants reciprocity, but I am convinced that it is the American element alone that is crying for reciprocity, and there are a large number of American farmers in the Canadian west. We must preserve Canada for Canadians, and the Ontario farmer will make a big mistake to think that he is going to benefit by reciprocity.

I am convinced that reciprocity as proposed will strike the very heart out of the most conspicuous industry of our country, and one in which our farmers excel before all others on the continent of America. In the next ten years in our west there will be demand for an ever-increasing number of horses, the standard should be maintained, and I for one am not going to be a party to handing over our great Northwest markets to the scrub horses of the border states.

Now, Sir, in conclusion I will say, that the Liberals of Canada, in fiscal as in other matters, have proved false to the pledge made to the people. Theoretically and traditionally the Liberal party is supposed to be a free trade party in Canada. Before 1896 the Liberals denounced protection and the manufacturers; they declared protection to be legalized robbery and they pledged themselves to remove the last vestige of it from the statute-books. But on the eve of the elections in 1896 we find them sending a secret representative to the manufacturers telling them that if they were returned to power they need have no fear. One result of that pledge is seen in connection with the duty on binders. Prior to 1896 the duty on a binder which was valued at $80 was 20 per cent, and the amount of duty paid by the farmer was $16, but after 1896 the binder was valued at $100, and although the duty was supposed to be reduced to 17½ per cent the farmer had to pay $1.50 more duty than he paid previously. We find that the Liberals instead of removing the protection they denounced when in opposition, have really increased protection. Let me ask what has the Liberal party done for the farmers of Canada for whom they now profess so much solicitude? They raised the duty on farm implements, and not satisfied with making the president of the Massey-Harris Company a Senator they have recently had him knighted. Then, Mr. Frost, head of the Frost and Wood firm was also made a Senator. The Liberals in power maintained the protection to manufacturers which they condemned in opposition, and by this reciprocity agreement they are about to sweep away the protection that the farmers are enjoying, and are maintaining the protection for their friends the manufacturers. The leader of the government has announced that they do not intend to do anything more for the farmer, and that they have reduced the protection to the manufacturers as low as they intend to reduce it.

Sir, the issue between the parties at the approaching election is clear and definite and distinct, and I am glad it is so. The two political parties in this country are back to their old fighting ground. The Liberal party is offering to the people of Canada reciprocity with the United States with all its dangers and entanglements and difficulties, and with our home markets thrown open to the farmers of the United States, and the farmers of the twelve favoured nations. The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister asked us on this side. Why don't you give reciprocity a trial, but the answer to that is that you might as well ask a man to give suicide a trial. If Canada adopts reciprocity, we shall have taken an irrevocable step which we cannot retrace. If we, eight millions of people, merge our interests with the United States with ninety millions they will control the situation, and it will be impossible for us to withdraw. The Conservative party on the other hand offers the National Policy with moderate protection to all classes, to the farmers, as well as to the manufacturers and artisans, and with the goal before us of preferential trade within the empire. The Liberal party in this country is offering continentalism to the Canadian people, and the Conservative party is offering imperialism. You have the Liberal party directing the eyes of the Canadian people to Washington, and you have the hon. R. L. Borden, the honoured leader of the Conservative party asking Canadians to keep their eyes directed on London. If the policy of the Liberal party prevails, the Stars and Stripes will inevitably be floating over the northern part of this continent, but if the policy of the Conservative party prevails the Canadian people will still continue to float the old Union Jack. If I judge rightly the temper of the Canadian people, and if one considers the large accession of Liberals to our fighting strength, it seems to me clear that the Americanizing tendency of this reciprocity agreement will be swept away, and that never again will the Liberal party dare to champion the cause of the United States people within our Canadian borders. I am unalterably opposed to reciprocity on the terms proposed, and I shall use every legitimate effort to defeat this ill-advised, unprofitable, and unpatriotic agreement.

Mr. DONNELLY. As it is now after midnight I desire to move that the committee rise and report progress.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. FIELDING. We have to meet at eleven o'clock to-morrow morning.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 12.28 a.m., Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

THURSDAY, July 27, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

AMERICAN WAR VESSELS PASSING THROUGH CANADIAN CANALS.

Mr. MACDONNELL:

1. Has the government received a request from Washington to permit the 'Dubuque,' an American war vessel, to pass through the Canadian canals? If so when, and what is her armament?

2. Has the government permitted any United States war vessel to pass through the Canadian canals since the 'Dubuque'?

3. Has the Canadian government observed the provisions of the Rush-Bagot Convention, and is Canada, at the present time, adhering to such Convention?

4. In what respects, having regard to number, size, speed, armament and crews of vessels, is the United States government at the present time, not adhering to the said convention?

5. Has the United States, on all occasions, had the consent of the Canadian or British government in its departures from the said convention?

6. Has the government considered the desirability of negotiating with Washington for the purpose of securing a permanent treaty, because of the fact that the Rush-Bagot Convention is terminable on six months' notice by either country, and thereby avoid the risk of the abrogation of the agreement?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

1. The government received a request to allow the steamer 'Dubuque' to pass up through the canals. It was permitted, the steamer 'Nashville' being taken down out of the lakes.
2. No.
3. Yes.
4, 5, and 6. The matter is under consideration.

INQUIRY RE REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE, POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. EDWARDS:

1. What was the revenue and expenditure of the Post Office Department for each year from 1900 to 1911?
2. When and where was the free rural mail delivery route established in Canada?
3. In how many counties are there free rural mail delivery routes, and how many miles of such routes in each county?
4. What is the extra cost to the Post Office Department because of the establishment of said routes?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would ask my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) to move for a return in regard to this question.

SUB-TARGET GUNS.

Mr. BLAIN:

How many sub-target guns have been purchased by the government, from whom were they purchased, and what was the price paid?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would say to my hon. friend that this question was fully answered in the month of May, and the answer will be found at page 8752 of the unrevised Hansard. There have been no purchases of sub-target guns since then, and the situation to-day is exactly as it was at that date.

Mr. BLAIN:

POST OFFICE—STE. MARIE DIVISION.

Mr. MONK:

1. Has the site of the new post office in the Ste. Marie division of the city of Montreal been found defective, the soil being unsuitable on account of the alleged presence of springs, to support the intended building?
2. Have these defects been pointed out to the government? If so, by whom?
3. What measures will be taken under the circumstances?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think this refers to a post office in the division represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Martin). It was discovered after the examination of the site for the building was made and after borings had been made in the usual way, that owing to the nature of the subsoil we would be obliged to go to a greater depth than was originally expected, in order to make a proper foundation. This we decided to do. The question of driving concrete piles is now under consideration, and I have no doubt any difficulties which might exist in regard to the foundation will be overcome by the plan which has been decided upon.

DOCK AT OWEN SOUND.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO:

Is it the intention of the government to proceed wtih the building of the continuation of the dock or revetment on the west side of the harbour at Owen Sound? If so, when?

Mr. PUGSLEY. As to the first part of the question it is the intention of the government to proceed with the work. With regard to the second part of the question, the requisite appropriation for the work is contained in the estimates, but owing to my not being able to get a full vote—for reasons which my hon. friend understands—I have not felt myself able to proceed as rapidly as would otherwise have been the case; therefore, I cannot tell my hon. friend the exact date at which the work will begin.

DRY DOCK AT COLLINGWOOD.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO:

1. What is the capital cost of the first dry dock built at Collingwood, the amount of interest or bonus paid yearly by the government thereon, and the number of years such bonus or interest still has to run?
2. What is the capital cost of the second dry dock at Collingwood, the subsidy or interest or bonus to which it is entitled, and for what period will such be paid?
3. What are the dimensions and capacity of each dry dock and the name of the company to whom such subsidies, bonus or interest is paid?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would ask my hon. friend to have that question made a motion for a return.

THE SEAL FISHERIES.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I beg to lay on the table the information asked for as to the electoral lists which are not completed.

I beg to lay on the table of the House the text of the pelagic sealing treaty signed at Washington July 11, 1911. I noticed yesterday that my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) asked for the production of this treaty and the correspondence. Now, the correspondence is very voluminous, extending over a number of years. I think my hon. friend will find the treaty gives all the information he requires, but if this should not be the case, I will produce any correspondence he may desire, but I do not think it would be any advantage. My hon. friend can read the treaty, and if he thinks he wants any further information I will give it to him.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE PROCEEDINGS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I beg to lay upon the table the report of the minutes of the proceedings of the Imperial Conference of 1911. This matter came up for discussion the day before yesterday. I called upon His Excellency the Governor General, who had just returned from a holiday, and ascertained from him that the report of the conference had reached him that very evening. At the same time a despatch was sent to His Excellency which I have his permission to lay before the House. It is as follows:

Downing Street, 14 July, 1911.

My Lord,—I have the honour to transmit to Your Excellency, to be laid before your ministers, the accompanying copies of memorandum of conferences between the British Admiralty and representatives of the Dominions of Canada and Australia on the subject of the status of Dominion navies.

2. This matter was mentioned at the last meeting of the Imperial Conference on the twentieth of June and it was agreed that it should be published simultaneously in this country and in Canada and the Commonwealth.

3. I have asked the Governor General of the Commonwealth to inform me by telegraph when it is proposed to publish the memorandum there, and I shall at once telegraph to you so that arrangements may be made for a simultaneous issue of the report in Canada.

I have the honour to be, My Lord,
Your Lordship's most obedient, humble servant,
(Signed) L. HARCOURT.

Governor General,
His Excellency,
The Right Honourable,
Earl Grey, G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O.

A despatch anticipating this had been received a few days ago before by His Excellency to this effect:

FROM MR. HARCOURT TO LORD GREY

Immediate.

Please inform Brodeur that it is understood by the Admiralty that time of publication of arrangement with regard to Dominion naval force would be settled in concert as was done in 1909 and that in the mean time terms will not be made public. You will be informed later as to proposed time for publication. Copy goes to you by next mail.

(Signed) HARCOURT.

In due course this despatch was sent to the Office of External Affairs, and by them referred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Brodeur) sent me the following letter:

Office of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of Canada.
Ottawa, 18th July, 1911.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier.
Prime Minister of Canada, Ottawa.

Dear Sir Wilfrid,—I beg to send you herewith copy of the despatch of which I spoke to you to-day, on the subject of the publication of the memorandum on the agreement arrived at between representatives of Canada and Australia on one part and the Admiralty, on the other.

I fail to see why this document should not be published at the same time as the proceedings of the Imperial Conference though, indeed such may be the intention. At all events, I send you the above despatch to keep you in touch with the matter in case it should come up in the House.

Would you be of opinion that it would be well to cable the Secretary of State asking him to hasten the publication of this document?

Yours very sincerely,
(Signed) L. P. BRODEUR.

I called the attention of His Excellency to these despatches, and I stated to him that, in my opinion, I did not understand the resolution of the 20th of June, which is referred to in the despatch which I read a moment ago, as implying that the resolutions of the Defence Committee were not to be laid before the House at same time as the report of the conference. I call the attention of the House to these words of Mr. Harcourt of the 20th June, 1911:

Mr. Harcourt.—Then there is the report of the Committee of the Imperial Conference convened to discuss defence, military matters, at the War Office. That is before the Conference now in a paper. Assuming that that report is approved, it is proposed that the précis of to-day and the proceedings of the Conference when published should contain the following statement on the matter: 'The Conference received and approved the report of the Committee on Military Defence, which had held two sittings at the War Office, under the chairmanship of the Chief of the Imperial General Staff,' and the report will be included in the papers of the Conference.

(Mr. Pearce here referred to the question of the conferences which were taking place at the Admiralty with the representatives of the Dominion of Canada and of the Commonwealth of Australia with regard to the status of the Dominions' naval forces and their co-operation with the Royal Navy, and it was agreed, on the suggestion of Mr. Harcourt, that a memorandum embodying the conclusions reached should be incorporated among the papers published in connection with the Imperial Conference.)

These resolutions of the Defence Committee were not, however, included in the report which I now lay upon the table. Having called the attention of His Excellency to this, His Excellency was pleased at once to send the following cable to Mr. Harcourt:

Your despatch of July 25, 1911, No. 573, Prime Minister will be very grateful if permission could be given to lay enclosure before parliament immediately. He wishes if possible to lay it simultaneously with a full report of proceedings of Imperial Conference just received and is anxious not to have to wait till memorandum of conference on naval question is received in Australia.

Please telegraph reply as soon as possible.
(Signed) GREY.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No reply has yet been received to that?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand a reply has been received, but I have not yet got it. I will communicate it as soon as possible.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What does the Prime Minister propose to do in regard to the printing of this document or putting it in such a position that it may be available to members of the House—in both languages?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I should have stated that 50 copies are on the way, but 50 copies will be quite insufficient. I therefore move:

That the rules of the House be suspended and that the minutes of proceedings of the Imperial Conference, 1911, be ordered to be printed forthwith.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). In both languages.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Why, of course.

Motion agreed to.

POSTAL REGULATIONS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I wish to ask the Postmaster General a question. It has been the practice for certain newspapers previous to an election to accept short date subscriptions from candidates or their supporters, and these newspapers are very generally distributed throughout the country at ordinary newspaper rates. The postal regulations state that this practice is against the regulations of the Post Office Department. Clause 62 of the regulations reads:

62 On all newspapers and periodicals posted in Canada other than those provided for in the foregoing sections, when addressed to places in Canada, the United States, or Mexico, the rate is 1c. per 4 ozs. or fraction thereof to each separate address, which must be prepaid by postage stamp.

This resolution was in force previous to the last general election, but it was flagrantly violated by many of the Canadian newspapers. Clause 60 reads:

60. Copies of newspapers sent to advertisers in connection with the publication of their advertisements, and copies sent to addressss furnished by advertisers, or to persons whose subscription have been paid in whole or in part by interested parties, or marked copies, cannot be considered as addressed to subscribers or as specimen copies, but are liable as transient newspapers to postage at the rate of 1c. per 4 ozs. to each separate address.

I ask the Postmaster General whether it is his intention to enforce these regulations and whether he should not send out a copy of clause 60 to the newspapers of the country so that they may know if they violate that regulation they are liable to punishment.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Clause 60 shall be enforced. Any complaint that may be made to the department will be fully inquired into, and any infringement will be stopped. There is no reason why this clause should be violated by any of the newspapers. The clause shall remain as it is and it must be enforced.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If the post office authorities are notified that the regulation is being violated, will they at once take action?

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). We all know that the law was broken immediately before the last election and that tons of mail matter were sent out by several of the daily newspapers. Of course, they knew they would receive the protection of the government, and after the election there would not be much said about it anyway. It would even up matters if the same freedom to send out this material was given to all newspapers alike immediately before the election. There might be an amended regulation, by which, for thirty days or sixty days prior to an election, this matter would be sent out at the same rate of postage as is charged on an ordinary newspaper. At all events, the regulation so long as it exists should be enforced against all newspapers equally.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The regulations will be enforced and I will see to it.

Mr. BLAIN. The answer of the Postmaster General will hardly be sufficient.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAIN. The right hon. gentleman says 'hear, hear,' but I would remind him that the regulation was flagrantly violated by his government before the last election and the right hon. gentleman sat quietly by and said nothing about it. I was going to suggest that such a violation of this regulation at the last general election should be sufficient to warrant the Postmaster General to issue special instructions to every postmaster in this country, directing his attention to the violation which took place at the last general election, and warning him that if such a thing took place again, there would be prosecutions and dismissals.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have no objection to issuing special instructions to postmasters that that be done forthwith. I may say to my hon. friend that no discrimination was made at the last general election, nor will be made if an election should take place this year. The only complain that was made to the department, if I remember well, in the last general election was against a Grit newspaper.

Mr. BLAIN. What one was that?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think it was published in the county of the Deputy Speaker, or in the county of my hon. friend for Grey, a local newspaper. There was a certain number of papers addressed to political friends, or to the public at large, and the complaint was made by the postmasters themselves. The postmasters are interested in seeing that a large number of papers does not come in at night and keep them at their office later than they should be. I may say to my hon. friend that, much to my personal regret, I had to enforce the regulation against that paper. There is no discrimination, there is the same law for the Grits and for the Tories.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask the Postmaster General a question on another point. It is a common practice—I will not charge it against one party more than another—but I happen to know of a case where that thing was done against me, and I have no doubt possibly it may have been done in favour of the Conservative candidate in some other places. Post offices are in the habit of taking mail bags from the newspaper offices without opening them. For instance, a mail bag is sent out from Ottawa addressed to Almonte. The postal department here see the label Almonte, and takes it for granted that the newspaper office is acting honestly, and is not sending out anything but legitimate newspaper matter to regular subscribers. Unfortunately, advantage has been taken of this in many instances to put in, not merely extra newspapers addressed, or unaddressed, to persons wishing to get them in an election, but also campaign literature. I know this positively, and this literature is sent, as a rule, only to postmasters who, it is known beforehand, will accept it. I took the matter up on one occasion, the only time I ever made a personal charge. I personally conducted the investigation against the postmaster, and had him dismissed. His defence was that he did not hand it through the post office, that he received it in the post office mail bag and took it out and distributed it over the counter. Then I drew his attention to the fact that if he had placed it in the hands of the persons addressed through the wicket of the post office, he would have to put a half cent stamp on each one. But he thought that because he handed it over the counter he was not obliged to put a half cent stamp on it. He had to vacate the office. I think the Postmaster General, in view of the fact that we are going into a contest, should do his part to see that each party is treated alike.

Mr. EMMERSON. I concur in the suggestion made by the hon. member for Simcoe. I see no reason why, in the interest of the education of the people of this country, there should not be some special regulation on the occasion of a general election. We know that at the cost of the country there is literature going out to-day franked by the Hon. Clifford Sifton, documents that are published by a league known as the Canadian League. Now, I am not complaining of any efforts to educate the people.

Mr. BLAIN. Is he violating any law?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, he is not violating any law. I think perhaps he may be considered as abusing a privilege, but he is not violating any law, and I have no complaint to make with respect to it. But if there is an election there will be one great issue, the issue will be reciprocity; and I would like to have every man, woman and child in this country who is capable at all of exercising a judgment, to have all the literature possible on both sides of the question, and then the responsibility will be upon the individual having the information. I believe it to be in the interest of the country that newspapers containing information on this subject should be circulated, and I think that the Post Office Department should make some regulation whereby newspapers can, upon the same, or proportionate terms, that they are paying the department to-day for their general circulation, be permitted to send out special issues in view of the urgency of the case, as it may exist. I heartily concur in the suggestion of the hon. member for Simcoe.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If I may be allowed another word in reply to the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Emmerson). My reason for bringing this matter up was that I know certain constituencies where wealthy candidates are running, with plenty of money, and they are able to send out, for instance, the whole of the voters' lists in their riding, and they did it at the last election to a great extent; while the candidate on the other side was not able to do anything of the kind. It was a most unfair advantage. That is one kind of literature. If hon. gentlemen could send out independent literature that was perfectly free from bias, it would be a different story.

Mr. EMMERSON. I was referring to literature that could be considered as unbiased.

Mr. HUGHES.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. gentleman may have a different opinion to my own as to what is unbiased literature. However, that is the position I have taken. And I sincerely hope the Postmaster General will see that some instructions are issued to postmasters not to allow anything of that kind to occur.

EMBARGO ON BRITISH CATTLE.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) if there is an embargo against the importation of cattle from Great Britain; if so, when was it put in force and for what reason?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). There is an embargo. When it was put in force I do not remember exactly, but I think it was two or three weeks ago. It was put in force because of the outbreak in that country of the foot and mouth disease, and we had to protect ourselves.

Mr. SPROULE. Would that apply to any country except Great Britain and Ireland?

Mr. FISHER. The order does not apply to any other country but the United Kingdom. But my hon. friend is aware that for a long time cattle have not been allowed to be imported from the continent of Europe.

Mr. SPROULE. I was desirous of ascertaining also whether cattle could be brought in from the United Kingdom through any other country; for instance, through the United States?

Mr. FISHER. No.

USE OF MILITIA IN STRIKES.

Mr. KING. A week ago to-day my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) took exception to an inference which I had drawn from some words he had used in a correspondence, and I stated I would bring to the House the communication which I had in mind.

I had the letter here on the day following and I was watching to see if my hon. friend were in the House, but except for a few hours yesterday I have not seen him in the House since. This is, therefore, the first opportunity I have had of placing before the House in his presence the communication that I had in mind. The letter is addressed to the Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, Minister of Labour, Ottawa. My hon. colleague the Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Lemieux) was at the time no longer Minister of Labour, I had been taken into the government on June 1st, and this communication was transferred to me and was replied to by me. The communication is written on the paper of the Hillcrest Coal and Coke Company, Limited.

of which my hon. friend from Leeds was president, I think, at the time of writing. The letter is as follows:—

The Hillcrest Coal and Coke Company, Limited.
Hill Crest Mines, June 7th, 1909.
Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux,
Minister of Labour,
Ottawa.

My Dear Lemieux,—On the strength of your letter of May 26th, and also of conversations with you previous to that date with reference to the strike out here I left home on June 1st and came to Hillcrest fully expecting that the mines in this district would be in operation by the time I arrived, but regret to say that things are in the same unsettled condition. I think it is outrageous that this state of affairs should be allowed to continue without the department interfering. It is true that a Board has been appointed but no agreement has been reached and it is doubtful that any will be from all that I can learn here. The mines have been idle now for over nine weeks and surely if the Department of Labour had applied itself they could have forced matters to a conclusion before this time. I think Mr. King should appear on the ground at once and if a settlement is not reached the mine owners should be allowed to import men whom the government should protect with soldiers. If the Labour Act is to be enforced some stringent legislation must be enacted to prevent occurrences of this kind.

I am,
Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) GEO. TAYLOR.

There is a concluding paragraph and then the signature, yours faithfully, George Taylor.'

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I would ask the hon. gentleman to read the continuation of that letter and the further correspondence where I made a suggestion in response to the reply of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. KING. The concluding paragraph is as follows:

Had this been in winter half the people might have perished. I am also surprised that the man who was entirely responsible for the present condition of affairs (viz., Mr. Sherman) should now be sitting as one of the judges on the case, and but for whom a settlement might have been reached.

That is the conclusion of that letter.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Read the correspondence.

Mr. KING. My hon. friend is at liberty to read any correspondence he may have had in mind when he was speaking. I have read the correspondence I had in mind when I was speaking.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Then there is nothing in the correspondence that would lead the minister to make the statement he did. The minister certainly misrepresented the fact. He had the correspondence in his possession and he rose and made the statement and authorized the leading papers from one end of the country to the other to publish a photograph of myself——

Mr. HUGHES. That is right.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds).——and 'Soldiers driving miners into the pit at the point of the bayonet'—that is what the Grit papers are doing throughout the country to-day. There is nothing in the letter that the minister has read that I am ashamed of, and if he will read, as he should read, the balance of the correspondence, he will find the statement I made suggesting what the government should do. I challenge him to read the balance of it.

Mr. KING. If the House permits me I shall only be too pleased.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). You will find no bayonets in any of it.

Mr. KING. I might say that I have here another letter dated June 28, 1909. It is a suggestion for compulsory arbitration.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Read the letter.

Mr. KING. This is probably what my hon. friend has in mind:

The Ontario Wheel Company, Limited,
Gananoque, Ont.
June 28, 1909.
Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
Minister of Labour,
Ottawa, Ont.

My Dear King,—Your letter of June 15th addressed to me at Hillcrest Mines has been returned to me here. I wrote from there to the Hon. Mr. Lemieux and he acknowledged receipt of my letter and told me he had transferred the matter to you.

I have not heard from our manager since I left there, but I did learn through the press that a report, had been made by the board signed by the chairman and Mr. Sherman, the miners' representative and that the mine owners' representative, Mr. McLeod, had signed the minority report. Therefore, I presume no agreement was reached, nor have I seen anything to indicate that the men have gone to work. With Mr. Sherman on the Board I did not anticipate any good results. From all I could learn out in that country both from the men and the mine owners the whole trouble was caused by Mr. Sherman. I certainly think you will have to amend the Labour Act or introduce legislation to prevent strikes, making it illegal for men to make strikes——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). That is right.

Mr. KING (reading)

—or to interfere with men who take the places of men who quit work. These miners have all been idle since last March and should that have happened last fall the people of the district would certainly have suffered. There should be a regular commission appointed to whom all matters between capital and labour should be referred for adjustment and in the meantime the men should costinue work, or if they should leave their employers other men could take their places. I certainly think now after three months the time has arrived when you should undertake to settle this dispute. The men are all anxious to go to work so far as I could learn, but are afraid to do so owing to the union miners preventing them. I think you should visit the ground personally and ascertain both from miners and men the true state of affairs and prepare such legislation as will for all time in future prevent the recurrence of a strike like this.

I am, yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) GEORGE TAYLOR.

I think that possibly is the other communication. I have two or three here, but they are all, as I understand it, suggestions for the introduction of a measure in the nature of compulsory arbitration to compel the men to remain at work whether they desire to better their conditions by seeking other employment or not.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). No, nothing of the kind. Do not misrepresent me. Read the letter.

Mr. KING. I must allow the House to put its own construction on the words 'making it illegal for men to make strikes.' They can only have one meaning in the minds of all men who consider this question. In regard to what my hon. friend has said about the expression I used, if there is any different meaning to be attached to the words than that which they would be generally understood to bear, I am prepared that he should have the benefit of any different meaning which may be drawn out of them, but I repeat now that the method that is common in Pennsylvania and has been common on the part of some of the mine owners there in fighting labour has been to import men and use the state militia as a means of keeping them at work, and I say it is precisely that kind of action which the following words seem to imply:

The mine owners should be allowed to import men whom the government should protect with soldiers.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Has the government not done this down at the mines in Nova Scotia?

Mr. KING. No, the government has not.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Have the soldiers not been called out there to protect the men? Will the minister get up and deny the statement that the soldiers have been called out?

Mr. KING. My hon. friend asked me the question: Had the government not done this? The government has had nothing whatever to do with the calling out of any soldiers.

Mr, TAYLOR (Leeds). The soldiers were there and protected the men when they went to work.

Mr. KING. The soldiers were there at the instance of the mine owners, not at the instance of the government, exactly the kind of thing that the hon. gentleman suggests here.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). But the minister got up and voluntarily made the statement that he did make here the other day. I will quote his words; I will not misrepresent them:

My recollection is that the hon. member from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) suggested the government should drive the men back at the point of the bayonet.

When the minister got up and made that statement and when he had the documents in his possession, he did so with one purpose only—to try to injure me and the party behind me with the labour men of this country. The papers published that broadcast throughout the country. I say that there is notning in the correspondence nor can the minister show that there is, to verify the statement that he has ascribed to me here. I say it was a malicious——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I am perfectly in order. I say it was done maliciously by the Minister of Labour to try and injure me politically.

Mr. HUGHES. He could not do that.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). He could not do it in this country because I have a reputation a good deal better than his, politically and otherwise. If the Minister of Labour will keep his seat till I get through, I will give him an opportunity to meet me here or on any other platform. I will discuss the matter with him in his own constituency, or in any town he likes before the labouring men of this country. I will go out to Hillcrest among the miners and I will face him there if he dares. How dare he charge me with suggesting to drive the men back at the point of the bayonet, when my suggestion was that there should be a labour commission, and that its rulings should be obeyed by the employers just as well as by the men, and that if a man wanted to leave his employment he could, but he had no right to prevent another man taking his place. There is the Minister of Labour drawing his salary for doing nothing and the people of the west likely to freeze to death this winter. It is a disgrace to the minister and a disgrace to the government to allow that strike to go on, for they have the power to settle it. A deputation is coming down here to ask for free coal, and if the government grant that request the strike will be settled at once.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has made a personal explanation, and there is nothing now before the Chair. There has got to be an end to this discussion.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I am surprised at the Prime Minister calling me to order when I am chastising one of his ministers for having made such a malicious statement, a statement which the Prime Minister must know was not in accordance with the facts. The Prime Minister should call his Minister of Labour to order and say to him: Until you apologize to the House for making that false statement you cannot sit at the council board over which I preside. But in place of that he wants to surround himself with a lot of gentlemen who will do his bidding. Compare the government of to-day with his cabinet when he came into power. The men he could not control he elevated to the bench, like Mowat, Mills and half a dozen others, and he has called around him a lot like the Minister of Labour. He will back up the Minister of Labour or any other minister in making statements that he himself knows are not in accordance with the facts. Let the minister accept my challenge and we will go into some mining district, either in Nova Scotia or out in British Columbia.

Mr. EMMERSON. Marquis of Queensbury rules?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I will leave it to the verdict of the labour men there whether I am right in making this statement.

Mr. KING. I just want to say——

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot allow the debate to go on further; there is nothing before the Chair.

Mr. HUGHES. Is not every dollar of the expense of the militia at Sydney and elsewhere coming out of the pockets of the people of Canada?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, the municipalities pay.

Mr. HUGHES. Did not the government pay at Montreal and Sault Ste. Marie?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. the municipalities did.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). The Minister of Labour has made a very grave statement against the Militia Department and it is up to the Minister of Militia to explain. The Minister of Labour said that in cases of strikes the militia were called out at the instance of the mine owners. The Militia Act permits nothing of the kind. The militia can only be called out by the order of the civil authorities. The Minister of Labour has let the cat out of the bag as to the policy of the government in case of strikes.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I presume the Minister of Labour meant that——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have been asked to explain, and I wish to do so. As I understand it, in case of a strike any person can go to the proper municipal authorities, and if such authorities are satisfied that there has been a serious breach of the peace, then application is made under the Act in a proper way for the calling out of the militia. That is what happened in this case.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The government passed the Act and they are responsible.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Act is on the statute book for 50 years.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). It comes back to the government all the same.

Mr. BOYCE. What is the position of the claim made by the government against the town of Sault Ste. Marie for assistance rendered at the time of the trouble in 1903? Action was taken against the town at the instance of the Crown to recover the cost of the militia. Has that judgment been enforced?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will get the information by to-morrow.

ARGENTINE CANNED MEATS.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether there is an embargo against Argentine cattle coming into Canada, and what steps are taken by the government to ascertain whether the canned meats from the Argentine, which are being brought into Canada in large quantities, are packed under sanitary conditions. These meats are advertised all over Canada in the daily papers, and I have here a sample tin. In view of the passing of this reciprocity treaty is the government taking any steps to protect the people of this country against unsanitary canned meats, and the herds of this country against the importation of Argentine cattle. I will place this can on the table of the House for the benefit of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. FISHER. The cattle of the Argentine are not permitted to land in Canada, and so far as the canned meats are concerned the department is preparing an Act to deal with that question.

WAYS AND MEANS—CORONATION CELEBRATION IN OTTAWA.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BEATTIE (London). In connection with the coronation celebration in Ottawa and the absence of the ministers therefrom I call attention to the following which appears in the Ottawa 'Journal':

Mayor's Office, June 16, 1911.—Yourself and ladies are cordially invited to enclosure on Parliament Hill on the morning of June 22, beginning at 11.15 sharp. Your presence and help upon that occasion will be very much appreciated in connection with the Coronation Day celebration.

This is the letter which the mayor dictated to his secretary in connection with the Coronation Day celebration, and which the secretary states he sent out to all the cabinet ministers who were in the city, as well as the four local members.

He ascertained the ministers who were in the city, he states, by calling up their offices. Those who were in England were not sent invitations. The others, he says, were sent invitations.

This is the mayor's answer to the statement made by the Hon. Wm. Pugsley in the House of Commons day before yesterday, that the reason the three cabinet ministers who were in town on Coronation Day did not attend the Coronation celebration on Parliament Hill was that it was a civic affair, and they had received no invitations.

At the coronation celebration on parliament hill there were 10,000 people assembled in the presence of Lord Grey and Lady Grey, and the newspaper account of the ceremony says:

Led by Earl Grey, Governor General of Canada, ten thousand people on Parliament Hill this morning sent forth a cheer for King George V., the echo of which resounded throughout the city, and the spirit of it throughout the empire. It was Coronation Day, and in spite of the rain Ottawa citizens showed their appreciation of the fact.

The only real lack was the absence of prominent citizens and—cabinet ministers. Earl and Lady Grey occupied a place on the flag draped platform, with a party from Government House. Mayor Hopewell was there, and Sir Richard Scott. There was not a cabinet minister to be seen, however.

There is Mr. Speaker a growing feeling of uneasiness in Canada at the anti-British attitude of this government, and that feeling has not been allayed by the Premier's boast in Quebec of having preserved Canada's autonomy at the Imperial Conference, and his coolness towards pro-British proposals generally. It is a lamentable fact that at the coronation ceremony in the capital of the country not a single cabinet minister thought it worth while to attend His Excellency, or to step on to the lawn in front of their offices where the celebration was being held. Indeed, it was said that some of them were looking out the windows at the ceremony in their shirt-sleeves. We spent a good deal of money to send a delegation to London to participate in the ceremony there, and the people of this country will want to know why there was not a cabinet minister to attend His Excellency at the Ottawa celebration. As to the statement that the ministers did not receive an invitation, whatever question there be as to that, I think they might very well have gone without an invitation.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. As I am one of the three ministers who enjoyed the privilege of remaining here during the two months' recess of parliament, and as this is a repetition of some newspaper attempted attacks made on some one or other, perhaps I should say a word about it. I do not know in what manner the alleged invitation to attend this function was sent to the three ministers in question, but I certainly would be a little interested to know. I have no doubt that my hon. friend the Postmaster General who was one of the three ministers who were here during the day of coronation would be equally glad to know whether or not the post office was utilized for the sending of the invitations. So far as I am concerned I have nothing to add to what was stated by the Minister of Public Works when this matter was mentioned in the House the other day. I do not pretend that I did not know, that there was going to be some sort of parade upon the lawn. I was at my office during each of the previous days, and I saw the building of the platform, and I should have been a very strange man if I had not supposed that it was in connection with the coronation, and that it was intended there should be some sort of celebration upon that occasion. But while that is so, and while for that reason I attach no consequence to the fact that no invitation came to me in any way in connection with the matter, I was equally of opinion from what I saw in the newspapers that the matter was of a purely municipal or civil character. I understood an invitation had been extended to His Excellency and that His Excellency intended to be present, and that there was to be some sort of review or inspection of the Boy Scouts, and some parade of school children, and something of that sort. But that it was in any sense a government affair, or in any sense a national affair, or in any sense one that it was my duty as a minister of the Crown to attend, never occurred to me. I am not much given to that sort of thing; I do not commonly attend such things, whether they are of a public character or something to which I would go merely as a spectator. In this instance the day being a holiday in the departments I was not in my office at as early an hour as usual, but I reached there just about when the small gathering of perhaps 150 or 200 boys and young people were separating on the lawn. If I had had the good fortune to reach the buildings a few minutes earlier, I think I should have gone to witness what was going on, but in the circumstances until somebody tried to make a great grievance of the absence of the ministers, and a slight even to His Gracious Majesty himself, it never occurred to me that there was the slightest importance attached to the matter one way or another. It should also be borne in mind that the fact of there being so few people present was because of a heavy rain shower in the morning, and the notifications that were put up about the city that the whole function was at an end, and that there would be no ceremony at all. I mention that, not as accounting for my own absence, because I did not know of the notices of cancellation until afterwards, but the circumstances are these I have described, and I can only say that if anybody thinks to make any political capital out of it, or to cast upon any of His Majesty's ministers in Canada aspersions as to their loyalty, it seems to me that it is about parallel to the waving of a pocket edition of the Union Jack.

Mr. BEATTIE. Perhaps you did not go there because the platform was draped with the Union Jack.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As I stated the other day I was informed by the Secretary of State, and by the Minister of Justice that they had not received an invitation, and the Postmaster General told me that the day after the coronation, when the whole affair was over, he did receive an invitation.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I cancelled an engagement I had in Montreal district to address a public meeting in order that I should be here to attend any coronation ceremonies that might take place in the capital. I received an invitation to attend the coronation dinner at Rideau Hall, and as befitting a minister of the Crown I was present with His Excellency there. Had there been an invitation received by me from the city authorities I would only have been too pleased to attend. I saw the ceremony which took place from the window of my office where I was working that day, but I may say that on my way to the office, I saw a notification posted that everything had been cancelled on account of the heavy rain. I am surprised to see the statement of Mayor Hopewell in the newspapers that the ministers were specially notified. That is not a fact. The day after the ceremony, I did receive at my private residence an unsigned typewritten notice stating that I would be received on the platform, if I should attend the ceremony.

Mr. PERLEY. Is not the hon. gentleman a citizen of Ottawa?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly.

Mr. PERLEY. Then, was it sensible or right that he should stand upon his dignity on an occasion of this kind?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Might I ask my hon. friend if, as a citizen of Ottawa and a member of the House of Commons, he was present himself?

Mr. PERLEY. It so happened that I was many miles away from here. However, I did attend two celebrations of that kind on that day.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I also was many miles away the day before, but I came here expressly to attend.

Mr. OWEN. When the House adjourned on May 20 a supply was arranged for up to September first. I must say that since the House resumed, about two weeks ago, the business of this country has not gone along very rapidly. In the riding I have the honour to represent there are about 2,000 men employed on government public works, and I would like to know if it is the intention of the right hon. the leader of the government and the hon. leader of the opposition to make arrangements for supply before prorogation takes place. If we are to believe what we read in the daily press prorogation may take place in the very near future, and we may have a general election at no very distant date. If anything should happen which would result in these 2,000 men being turned idle, during the early winter, I think it would be a great hardship. Therefore, I would like to know if it is the intention to arrange for Supply before prorogation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The House is engaged at the present time in passing the reciprocity agreement. We have had it before us for some months, and it seems to me that for all the information drawn from the debate we could pass upon it to-day. At any rate we could have a vote upon it and know whether we are in favour of it or not. As soon as we have voted upon this question we shall have to take up to the matter of Supply.

THE POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. BLAIN. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct the attention of the hon. Postmaster General to a very important matter. Some weeks ago I put a question on the Order Paper asking how many post offices in the county of Peel were receiving less than a daily mail. My hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) was good enough to give an answer to the House. I am one of those who support, and will continue to support, a rural free mail delivery.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend the Postmaster General says hear, hear. I can show to my hon. friend that I supported a resolution in favour of a rural free mail delivery when my hon. friend voted against it in this House, but afterwards acted on the suggestion of the opposition. However, I did not rise for the purpose of discussing that. My hon. friend must remember that his department has the support of, and is contributed to, by almost every elector in Canada. The Post Office Department shows a very considerable surplus, but, in my humble opinion, that surplus is at the expense of the poorly paid postmasters in rural districts—notwithstanding the fact that since my hon. friend has been Postmaster General some increases have been made in the salaries of these rural postmasters, for which I compliment my hon. friend.

To-day we have telephones in many parts of the country, and I think my hon. friend should see to it that a telephone is installed in every rural post office in this country where there are rural telephone systems and where the Bell Telephone Company's system reaches.

I think in addition to an examination into the twice-a-week mail service and three-times-a-week mail service, which we have in some of the older sections, my hon. friend should see to it that we have a daily mail service to these points, and that where we have a rural telephone system there should be a telephone in each of the post offices, at the expense of the government. I think the hon. Postmaster General would receive the co-operation of the hon. members of this House, and that he would be endorsed by the people of this country if he were to introduce some system of that kind.

Mr. EMMERSON. Is it my hon. friend's suggestion that the government should pay the rental for the telephones?

Mr. BLAIN. I should say yes. I do not think it could be expected that a postmaster receiving a salary of only $35 a year should be asked to contribute $10 or $15 a year for the rental of a telephone, which would be used for the general service of the community. In my opinion the rental of the telephone should be paid out of the revenue of the Dominion, in connection with the Post Office Department.

Mr. EDWARDS. I wish heartily to concur in the remarks made by the hon. member for Peel. Since I have had the honour of a seat in this House I have frequently called attention to the lack of proper postal facilities in my part of the country. I endorse the hon. gentleman's statement that in these older provinces, throughout the country districts wherever there are post offices, there should be a daily service, and in many places where there are no post offices they should be established. There are many reasons why the country districts in Ontario should receive more consideration than they have received in the matter of postal facilities. In many of the outlying districts the people live anywhere from five to fifteen miles from a post office, and in many districts they get a mail only twice a week, which is practically no service at all. I think the facilities should be extended, and a daily service should be given to all those country places. I will go further, and say that I think this government should take up the whole matter, and lay out a regular system of rural routes for post offices, and even to assist those country districts in maintaining good roads connecting many of those points. In some parts of my own constituency, the postal facilities have been so poor that the people have been obliged to put in little telephone systems of their own as their only means of communication. I have taken the trouble to compare the number of post offices in the province of Ontario in 1895 and the number in 1909, and I find that during that period the number has increased by 17 per cent. In the province of Quebec during the same period the number of post offices has increased forty-one per cent; in Nova Scotia, twenty-two per cent; in New Brunswick, twenty per cent; in Prince Edward Island, twenty per cent; in British Columbia, one hundred and twenty-two per cent; and in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, one hundred and ninety-eight per cent. Of course, we can readily understand that in the newer sections of the country where population is rapidly increasing there would be many demands on the Postmaster General for new offices. But we find that while the province of Onatrio has contributed more than any other province to the revenue of the Post Office Department, the increase in the number of post offices in that province has been considerably less than in the other provinces. That strikes me as unfair. Not only is that the fact in regard to the province as a whole, but I think that very little consideration has been given to the country districts throughout that province. I am certain that so far as the county of Frontenac is concerned, they have received very little consideration. Now the Postmaster General has boasted of a surplus in the Post Office Department. I want to say that if there is one department in this country which is not entitled to a dollar of surplus it is the Post Office Department. Every dollar of the revenue of that department comes out of the pockets of the people, and I maintain that every dollar of that revenue should go back to the people in the form of increased postal facilities. I go further, and say that if there is any department of government which would be justified in making an expenditure in excess of the revenue, that department is the Post Office Department. Therefore the boast of the Postmaster General that his department shows a surplus is a boast that, in my estimation, reflects no credit on the management of the department. I wish to raise my voice against any policy of laying up a surplus by withholding postal facilities where they are required. Now the county of Frontenac contributes considerably towards that surplus. The post offices in that county contribute nearly $4,000 a year in revenue, over and above the amount paid by the government in salaries and allowances to postmasters. I could refer the Postmaster General to some thirteen offices in the county of Frontenac where the surplus revenue over and above salaries and allowances amounts altogther to over $1,173, and the average salary paid to the postmasters in those thirteen offices is only $108 a year. None of those offices are allowed to issue postal notes or money orders, and that is a matter that I wish to draw to the attention of the Postmaster General. I think he is not treating the people of the rural districts fairly. I think the revenue from these post offices I refer to is large enough to warrant the Postmaster General in granting them the right to issue postal notes and money orders. I have had experience heretofore with the Post Office Department in regard to obtaining better postal facilities in my county, an experience which has not been encouraging. For instance, I asked him to establish a post office on the border of the city of Kingston at the junction of the city with the township of Kingston. I pointed out to him that within a hundred yards of the proposed location of this office there was a school, and that the daily stage went right past it. I pointed out that the cost would only be a matter of the postmaster's salary, which might be taken out of what revenue there would be from that office.

As things are now the people in the adjoining country have to travel down into the city three-quarters of a mile to get their mail, whereas, if this office was established at, you might say, no cost at all to the government, at the point I have indicated, the convenience to the people would be very great, indeed. For a time the Postmaster General agreed to establish that office at that particular point. Apparently he was convinced that the people were entitled to that convenience. Then the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Harty) intervened and raised an objection to the post office being established just inside the city limits. He objected to the people of the adjoining country coming inside the city a matter of a few feet in order to get their mail. The point selected was the only available place for a post office. The people kept a little store and were very popular in that section. The people of Kingston in the neighbourhood of the locality signed a petition, a copy of which I have here, which was sent to the Postmaster General asking him to establish an office at that point. The people of that section of the city have their mail delivered to them two or three times a day by letter carriers. They are not asking the Postmaster General to do away with any office. The convenience to the people in the city would be very slight. It would be some convenience, I dare say, but it would be slight, whereas, the convenience to the people of the surrounding country would be very great, indeed, and the cost to the department would be practically nothing. The Postmaster General gave his consent to that, but the hon. member for Kingston objected to a post office being established within the city limits, and apparently the hon. member for Kingston was able to overcome the convictions of the Postmaster General that a post office should, in justice to the people, be established, for up to the present time, that post office has not been established.

I want to call the attention of this House to another matter. I was asked by some people living in the north of my county to bring this matter to the attention of the Postmaster General and this will serve to illustrate the lack of postal facilities in rural districts. I endeavoured to have a post office established between Maberly and Sharbot Lake at a place called Fall River. I asked the people to get up a petition, and I would present it. They did so, the petition was presented, and I have in my hand here now the acknowledgment from the Postmaster General of the receipt of that petition requesting the establishment of an office at that place. The letter acknowledging the petition was dated April 3, 1909. On January 18, 1910 the hon. Postmaster General sent me this letter with regard to the request for that office. I wish to place this letter upon 'Hansard' in order that members of this House will realize the difficulties in getting proper postal facilities in country districts:

Ottawa, Jan. 18, 1910.

Dear Mr. Edwards,—I have your letter of the 13th inst., relating in part to a proposed post office at 'Fall River,' on lot 12, concession 7, township of Oso, county of Frontenac, at a distance of 4½ miles south from Maberly, and beg to say that it is found, on inquiry, that not more than 18 or 20 families would benefit, that it would cost $70 a year for a semi-weekly exchange of mails with Maberly, and that the office would collect a revenue of probably not more than $10. It is understood that for three or four miles the road is not open in winter between Crow lake and Fall River, and that it would, therefore, be impossible for the mail courier between Crow lake and Sharbot Lake to travel by way of the proposed office site.

In view of the cost involved, namely, $70, for the service, and $35 as the postmaster's salary, as against an anticipated revenue of only $10, the department has been unable to see its way to open an office.

Yours sincerely,

(Sgd.) RODOLPHE LEMIEUX.

Here is a letter signed by the Postmaster General and giving as a reason for the non-establishment of this office that the department could not afford to spend possibly $90 a year in giving these people a semi-weekly service, that there are only eighteen or twenty families involved and that these eighteen or twenty families, we must infer, must remain without postal facilities, because, forsooth, the cost to the government would be $90 per year. I think I am justified in making the severest kind of criticism of the Post Office Department when they speak of the surplus of that department with such conditions prevailing in my county. I think I am justified in making the severest kind of criticism of sawdust wharf transactions, Aylesworth ditches and expenditures of money along that line when one of the members of the government will sign a letter stating that in his opinion the government would not be warranted in expending a matter of $90 a year to give this convenience to some eighteen or twenty families. I want to read in connection with that a few words which passed between the Postmaster General and myself in this House in regard to the establishment of post offices. The hon. Postmaster General, speaking this session, as reported at pages 2143 and 2144 of 'Hansard,' said:

As regards postal facilities in a whole township, I do not know that there is any reason why the people should not be provided with these postal facilities where the distance is about five miles from a post office. It is certainly the policy of the Post Office Department to grant any request which is made with such a distance in view. Whenever my hon. friend on behalf of his own township in Frontenac or any other hon. gentleman makes a request to provide postal facilities, where there is a distance of about five miles, the Post Office Department cannot but accede to that request, and I appeal to him and to members of the House on both sides whether, whenever a request of that kind is made to the Post Office Department, it is not granted.

These are the words of the Postmaster General. In answer to his appeal I recited the case which I have recited here to-day and at the same time I expressed my pleasure at his making use of those words because I saw, or thought I saw, in those words of the Postmaster General, some hope for certain sections of my county where they have absolutely no postal facilities whatever. We had in those words the distinct promise of a minister of the Crown to relieve the situation, to grant postal facilities in places where these facilities do not at present exist.

In spite of the plain words of the Postmaster General he turns a deaf ear regardless of his own statement. I would not be doing my duty to my constituents if I did not under the circumtances state the facts in this House. I do not think that the people in the country districts have received proper and just treatment from the Post Office Department. I want to be most emphatic in being understood that I do not think the Post Office Department is entitled to boast of any surplus. The money comes from the people, and the money should go back to the people in increased postal facilities. I want to impress also on the Postmaster General and the members of the House the further fact, that the relative increase in the population of the various provinces does not in my estimation warrant the great difference which prevails in the increase of the number of post offices granted to the various provinces. If we consider the increase of the population of Ontario and of the other provinces, between 1895 and 1909, and if we take into consideration, as we have a right to, the post office revenue obtained from these various provinces, then, I say it is worthy at least of a little thought on our part, that the increase in the number of the post offices in the province of Ontario—which contributes most towards the revenue of the post office, which has the largest population and the greatest wealth—is relatively much less than the increase in the number of post offices in any of the other provinces. Taking the years 1905 to 1909, there has been an increase of 17 per cent in the number of post offices in the province of Ontario, an increase of 41 per cent in the province of Quebec, an increase of 22 per cent in Nova Scotia, an increase of 20 per cent in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, an increase of 122 per cent in British Columbia, and an increase of 198 per cent in Manitoba and the prairie provinces. I appeal again to the Postmaster General to give the country districts more consideration in the matter of increased postal facilities, than he has given in the past. I would rather not have to adversely criticise, but I do not think I would be doing my duty, if I allowed this opportunity to pass without saying a word on behalf of the people of my county. I am perfectly sincere, in making this statement that whatever has been done in the way of improvement—and a good deal has been done in various parts of the country—I do not think that more consideration has been given to the cities and towns than has been given to the country districts. This or any other government would be well advised in establishing well defined postal routes in the country districts, and I think a considerable sum of money might well be expended by this government in helping to maintain the roads on these well established postal routes. A post office means a great deal to the people of a rural district. I have no objection whatever to the free rural mail delivery routes, and I think it is a step in the right direction, but I do say that before free rural mail delivery is given to these centres which now have a daily service, or even more than a daily service, consideration should be given to these sections of the country where the people get their mail only twice or three times a week. I believe in giving to the various districts a daily mail and then extending your free rural mail delivery limits just as rapidly as your finances will permit. If the Postmaster General or any member of this House, tells me that greater postal facilities cannot be given to any section of my county, because so much money has to be expended on free rural mail delivery routes, that they cannot afford to give proper facilities to the outlying districts, then I think it is my duty to state here my objection to such a policy. I hope the Postmaster General will give this matter the consideration it deserves.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think the hon. gentleman for Peel (Mr. Blain) for the compliments he has paid the Post Office Department, and I trust he will convince my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) that in the administration of the post office, I am generally fair in my dealings with members on both sides of the House. When I took office the rural postmasters were receiving only a maximum salary of $10 a year, and I have increased that on two different occasions until it is now $35 per annum. My intention is to continue that until it is raised to $50. I am heartily in favour of the extension of the rural telephone system, because I know the advantages which would accrue from it. In the county of Nicolet, which I once represented in this House, I found in nearly every parish a good system of rural phones, and it was a great facility to the people. In many European countries, and even in Japan, the Postmaster General is called the Minister of Communications, and has under his control not only the mail system, but the cables, telegraphs and telephones. In these countries the system works well and it pays well although the rates are far from being high. The day may not be far distant when in Canada a similar system will prevail. Speaking for myself only, I am personally in favour of a government controlled rural telephone system. I think it would be quite an addition to the advantages now enjoyed by the farmers. I think public opinion in the country, especially in the western provinces and in Ontario, is shaping itself in that direction. For my part I have no hesitation in stating that I would view with favour the establishment of a rural telephone system, under the control of the Post Office Department. Of course this is only my personal opinion, and I do not wish to commit any one but myself to it.

As regards the service in the older sections of the province, I would like to answer the mild arraignment of my hon. friend. I think I am right in saying that whenever it has been shown to me that an extension of the service should be made, I have never hesitated in granting the request. As a matter of fact I can state that for the last year at least, it has been an exceptional case when I refused such a request. I consider that a semi-weekly or tri-weekly service in the older sections of the country at the present time is an out of date system, and should be replaced by a more modern one. My hon. friend (Mr. Edwards), spoke a moment ago in reference to the average number of post offices opened in the new provinces as compared with the older provinces. I must say there is some truth in the statement of the hon. gentleman, but, the explanation is not very clear. The postal system has been in vogue in the older sections of the community—in the eastern part of Canada as we call it—for over a century; since the time of Benjamin Franklin, who was the first Postmaster General. In the new provinces those people who come from the old country ask to have the postal facilities as they had them in England. This is not a matter to be trifled with. We must meet their legitimate demands. We bring them to the western provinces by advertising our country, and having brought them there the least we can give them is proper postal facilities. I may tell the House that up to the present time I have not refused one per cent of the requests which have been made for new offices in the western districts. I might say that same thing for New Ontario and New Quebec.

My hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards), compared the number of post offices in Ontario and Quebec. I hope my hon. friend does not think I am in any way sectional in connection with this matter.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the hon. Postmaster General permit me to say a word? I did not confine my statement to Ontario and Quebec. I gave the increase in the number of post offices for all the provinces; so the hon. gentleman is not justified in saying that I confined my comparison to Ontario and Quebec; neither should the hon. minister think I expressed any idea that he was sectional.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Last year I gave, of my own accord, a statement showing the average number of offices opened in the various provinces, in which the hon. gentleman will find the figures he quoted. My hon. friend must know that the province of Ontario has been for many years the best equipped province in the whole Dominion, so far as postal facilities are concerned. Now, there were obvious reasons for that. In Ontario the people go to the post office nearly every day, whereas in the province of Quebec it has been for many years the custom of the habitants to go to church on Sundays, and get their mail at the church door. That custom is passing away now, and as the new colonization movement goes on we have to provide the people in the far away districts with better postal facilities. As I say, there has been no favour shown to the people of my province in the establishment of post offices; I have simply given them what they were entitled to get in all justice.

As regards rural mail delivery, I am glad my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain), and my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards), support me in the new policy which has been put into force for the last two or three years. I might lay on the table of the House a statement which will show what progress has been made in connection with rural mail delivery routes in the Dominion of Canada up to the 31st of January, 1911:

During the course of next week, I will give the House a statement showing the operation of the rural mail delivery up to date. I may say there has been a very large increase in the number of routes during the last few months—in fact during the last few weeks. We were short of boxes until late in February this year, which will account for this. As I stated the other day, we gave an order for 100,000 boxes, and they are being manufactured at the present time, so that all the requests which have been granted for the opening of these routes will be covered, and there will be no delay in putting on the rural mail service.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). This hurry up order is on account of the coming elections. I suppose.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Not at all. I do not believe in the elections, and I do not think my hon. friend believes in them.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). You said in Quebec that they were coming.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is not exactly what I said. There must have been a rider to it. At all events I do not believe a rural mail box will influence the electors in the section where it goes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. My hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) tells us that he will probably make some statement early next week. Might I ask him whether he will make that statement Monday or Tuesday?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Let us say Tuesday.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That will be a general statement with reference to the progress made in the rural mail routes?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. In reference to the statement which has been laid on the table by my hon. friend, might I ask him whether that $125,000 is all attributed to the increased cost in reference to rural free mail delivery?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes. Whenever there is a rural mail route established, new tenders are asked for from the couriers. They are entitled to so much per box, and as they have to serve every box they ask more for the service.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Might I ask whether the hon. minister has deducted the original cost, or the former cost of carrying on the service on these routes?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No. It is included.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then, this increase cannot be attributed to rural free mail delivery?

Mr. LEMIEUX. In my judgment the cost of serving a rural mail route as contrasted with the cost of serving an ordinary mail route is 25 to 30 per cent more; that is the general opinion in the department, taking it all in all. To my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain), I must say that if he has in mind any post offices which suffer from the fact that they have only a semi-weekly service, and if he will make a list of them and send it to me I will deal with the matter at once. Now the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) spoke of the Kingston and Frontenac imbroglio. Well, my hon. friend represents Frontenac, and another hon. gentleman (Mr. Harty) represents Kingston and my hon. friend was encroaching on the Kingston territory. He wanted to make a charge which would affect an existing post office near the border of the county. That is the information I have from the hon. member for Kingston. But I will tell the hon. gentleman now that if he will find within the borders of his own county a suitable place for a post office, I am quite willing to open one there. I think the objection was that there was a hotel at that point, and it was not a suitable place for a post office. At all events, if my hon. friend will find a suitable spot for a new post office, the order is ready, and I am waiting the hon. gentleman's choice of a site. As regards the surplus, I quite agree with the remarks that have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite. I think we can spend freely, spend liberally, and be generous towards the public, and yet do more than make both ends meet. I would be unworthy to hold the position of Postmaster General if I did not follow the traditions of my predecessors, and I think I would receive the criticism of hon. gentlemen opposite if, after taking charge of the department, I now came forward with a deficit instead of a surplus. The service has expanded, we have nearly doubled the expenses of 1896. I have certainly spent liberally for the service, both in the rural and in the urban sections; and with all that, and notwithstanding the decrease of the postal rates, if I am able to show a surplus, I should not be blamed for it. As long as I remain Postmaster General, I will spend liberally and fairly, in order to meet the wants of the public, but I am not going to give away the surplus. I maintain that it is better to meet the expenses and at the same time have a surplus, than to spend too largely and have a deficit at the end of the year.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

THE ALIEN LABOUR LAW.

Mr. G. H. BARNARD (Victoria, B.C.). Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Labour and the Minister of the Interior to a question of some importance which is troubling the minds of some of the people of my constituency. There is at present a large amount of railway construction going on in the neighbourhood of the city of Victoria, and also upon the mainland of British Columbia. The statement is made, and I believe it is founded upon fact, that a large number of labourers are being brought into the province under contracts which are contrary to the Alien Labour Law from the State of Washington and the adjoining states. I have here a sample of one of these contracts, which is as follows:

Deliver this ticket to the employer, Lilyman & Renard, employment agents, 108 West Main street, No. 187.

Seattle, Wash., June 12, 1911.

Name, Gust Anderson; hired as labourer; for Knowles & Thompson, care Grant Smith & Company; at Victoria; wages, $2.50 per day; board, $5.25 per week; signature, Gust Anderson; report at office 8 a.m.; Lilyman & Renard; by, C.S.; 6-13-11

That is a sample of several contracts which have been shown to me. While I understand that the Minister of Labour is of the opinion that this is a matter which can be adjusted under the Alien Labour Act, I am informed that the labour people in Victoria, who have been taking this matter up with the view of entering prosecutions under that Act, have been advised by counsel that owing to the form of construction of the Act it is impossible for him to proceed. I have received a letter dated the 18th of July from Mr. J. Aikman, a counsel of standing, well-known in the city of Victoria, who writes to me as follows:

Dear Sir,—On behalf of the Victoria Building Trades Council I beg to call your attention to the provisions of an Act of the Dominion of Canada, known as the Alien Labour Act, being chapter 97 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, and to point out to you that in section 3 thereof it is provided that every violation of section 2, leaves any person, &c., who violates the same liable to 'Forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding $1,000 and not less than $50,' and by section 4 of the said Act it is provided 'That the sum so forfeited may with the written consent of any judge of the court in which the action is intended to be brought, be sued for and recovered as a debt, &c.' But there is no provision in the Act authorizing any court to declare what the forfeiture shall be, and I can find no provisions covering the matter in any statute, and it seems to me that the offence being a statutory one, there must be jurisdiction conferred upon a court or courts authorizing a declaration of what the forfeiture shall be. Having this in mind I call the matter to your attention so that you will be enabled to lay the matter before the proper authorities at Ottawa and have the Act amended so that two justices of the peace or any magistrate having the power of two justices of the peace may declare a forfeiture, and I would also suggest that it would be advisable for you to urge upon the authorities the necessity of having a more simple method of collecting such forfeiture than the present one provided for in the Act.

What is the necessity of having the collection of a forfeiture left in the way it is in the Act, by recovering the same as if it were a debt when nearly every other penalty provided for in the Acts of parliament are collected by means of jurisdiction being conferred upon the court that declares the forfeiture by distress and in default of distress imprisonment. It does seem to me that the Act is simply a piece of legislation designed for the purpose of satisfying claims that have been advanced by the labour unions throughout Canada, but made unworkable for some ulterior purpose.

There are at present hundreds, and I might say with safety, thousands of labourers landing in the different ports in British Columbia from the American side penniless, and whose fares have been paid by agencies on the American side, who are acting for contractors in this province, and I inclose herewith a form from a firm in Seattle to a firm in Victoria which is self-explanatory, and shows that the intent of the above Act is being broken daily.

This you must be aware is most unfair to our own labouring men and is a thing that must be remedied, otherwise we will have troubles somewhat in the nature of those that occurred in the state of Nevada and other states in the neighbouring Republic during the last few years.

I may say that I have now in my possession nine other tickets similar to the one inclosed herewith and there are several more that can be obtained from men that have been sent over here, and when they get here find that there is no work for them

Trusting that I have made myself clear and that you will be enabled to have the Act amended so as that it will be possible to enforce the provisions of the same in a summary manner.

I am, yours truly,
J. A. AIKMAN,
Solicitor for the Victoria Building Trades Council.

I would like to point out to the Minister in the first place the difficulty, delay and expense which are necessarily incurred in working out the provisions of that Act. Even if the legal gentleman who wrote that letter has an erroneous opinion, which I am very much disposed to doubt, and if the Act is workable, then the only way in which the penalties provided in the Act can be enforced is by an action at law. That is a matter of great expense and great delay, and it does seem to me that the proper and efficacious way of enforcing the Act would be by a summary conviction. The matter could then be decided in a very short time and without expense to the labouring men, who, as a rule, are not in a position to incur the expense of protracted litigation. Further, I am informed that evidence can be adduced to show that these labouring men, when coming into those parts of British Columbia, are not put through the course of questions to which immigrants from other countries are subjected. As I understand, all immigrants—and these men are clearly immigrants within the meaning of the Act—are compelled under the regulations to have a certain sum of money. I do not wish to make any charge against any particular official in the minister's department, but I am informed that these regulations are being ignored as regards these men, and I would ask the minister to institute an investigation into this matter.

Hon. MACKENZIE KING (Minister of Labour). Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I am not a little surprised at the communication that has been read to the House by the hon. member. It seems to me that it was written without a full knowledge of the Act. That is the only explanation that seems possible, in justice to any professional man who would give advice such as that contained in this communication. In reading over the letter carefully, I find that it has reference only to one part of the Act. And that the suggestion which is made in this letter as one which it would be advisable to have embodied in an amendment to the Act is, as a matter of fact, a part of the Act already. The letter states:

> There is no provision in the act authorizing any court to declare what the forfeiture shall be, and I can find no provision covering the matter in any statute, and it seems to me that the offence being a statutory one, there must be jurisdiction conferred upon a court or courts authorizing a declaration of what the forfeiture shall be. Having this in mind I call the matter to your attention so that you will be enabled to lay the matter before the proper authorities at Ottawa and have the Act amended so that two justices of the peace or any magistrate having the power of two justices of the peace may declare a forfeiture.

That is exactly what is in the Act at present. The Act contains two methods whereby it may be enforced. The first is:

> The sum forfeited may, with the written consent of any judge of the court in which the action is intended to be brought, be sued for and recovered as a debt by any person who first brings his action therefor in any court of competent jurisdiction in which debts of like amount are now recovered.

That is one clause in the Act to which attention has been called by this solicitor, and he says he does not see why that should be the only method of enforcing the penalty, and suggests an alternative. The very next section has in it exactly what he is suggesting. The first method is the recovery of the penalty as a debt, the second is the recovery on summary conviction.

> Such, sum may also, with the written consent, to be obtained ex parte, of the Attorney General of the province in which the prosecution is had, or of a judge of a superior or county court, be recovered upon summary conviction before any judge of a county court, being a justice of the peace or any judge of the sessions of the peace, recorder, police magistrate, or stipendiary magistrate, or any functionary, tribunal or person invested by the proper legislative authority with power to do alone such acts as are usually required to be done by two or more justices of the peace, and when recovered, shall be paid to the Minister of Finance.

Exactly the suggestion made in this communication.

Mr. BARNARD. If the minister will look at sec. 3, he will see that for an offence a sum not exceeding $1,000 or less than $50 is to be forfeited. Section 4 says that the sum so forfeited may be, with the written consent of a judge, recovered. Section 5 says such sum, which obviously refers to the same sum as mentioned in section 4, the sum so forfeited, and the point of the letter that the minister has before him is that until a court of competent jurisdiction has declared the sum forfeited nothing can be recovered. His point is that in the first place you cannot go straight into court and sue for any amount until there has been a forfeiture. You have first to take the proceedings to declare the amount forfeited, but he says that no court has been authorized to make that forfeiture, and his contention is that section 5 is in precisely the same position, that you have got to take the two proceedings.

Mr. KING. I do not profess to have had the legal experience either of my hon. friend who has given this advice or of the hon. gentleman who has stated his opinion of the Act. All I can say is, that what both he and this writer have said is absolutely absurd in the light of convictions which have been obtained under the Act in accordance with the procedure here set forth. As I understand, the complaint is that it is impossible to obtain convictions under this Act by summary proceedings. I would like to read to my hon. friend, and perhaps he will pass on to his adviser who has given this advice, the following list of convictions obtained under the Act not by having a penalty sued for as a debt, but by summary procedure, precisely what is desired by my hon. friend's informant.

STATEMENT OF CONVICTIONS UNDER THE ALIEN LABOUR ACT.

Albert Geiser was convicted before the police magistrate at Rossland, B.C., in August, 1901, of two infringements of the Act, being fined $500 in one case and $50 in the other case. The information was laid by W. L. MacDonald, a member of the Miners' Union of Rossland, and 50 per cent of the penalties recovered was paid to Mr. MacDonald on the recommendation of the then Minister of Labour.

The secretary-treasurer of the Toronto Carpet Company, Toronto, was convicted before the police magistrate of Toronto in August, 1902, of an infringement of the Act, and was fined $50 and costs. The information in this case was laid by the Carpet Weavers' Union, Toronto.

The Frayseng Cork Company, Limited, Toronto, was convicted before the police magistrate of Toronto in February, 1904, of two separate infringements of the Act, being fined $50 and costs in each case, half the penalty recovered being, on application, paid through the Department of Labour to the informants.

J. Amberg, tailor, Dundas, Ontario, was convicted before the police magistrate of Hamilton, on August 21, 1904, of an infringement of the Act. The costs of prosecution were paid by the defendant and the penalty withheld.

The Cape Breton Electric Railway Company, Limited, was convicted in July, 1905, of two separate infringements of the Act, a penalty of $200 with costs being imposed in each case. The information was laid by one George Low, to whom, on the recommendation of the then Minister of Labour, half the amount of the penalty recovered in each case was subsequently paid. An appeal was entered in the case of one of these convictions, but did not succeed.

The Menzie Wall Paper Company of Toronto was convicted before police magistrate Ellis of Toronto on August 15, 1905, of five separate infringements of the Act. A fine of $50 was imposed in each case.

Robert Menzie, president of the Menzie Wall Paper Company, mentioned above, was convicted before police magistrate Denison of Toronto, on February 19, 1906, of a further infringement of the Act, and a penalty of $50 and costs was imposed. Half the penalty was paid over to the informant.

H. Holman Evans, manager of the Union Life Assurance Company, Toronto, was convicted before the police magistrate of Toronto in February, 1906, of an infringement of the Act, and was fined $50 and costs. Half the penalty was paid over to the informant.

An employer named Elliott was convicted before police magistrate Denison of Toronto on March 15, 1906, of an infringement of the Act and was fined $50 and costs.

The Corby Distillery Company of Belleville, Ontario, was convicted of an infringement of the Act before police magistrate Flint at Belleville, on December 22, 1906, and a fine of $50 imposed. The conviction was appealed to the Court of Appeal and sustained in a judgment given March 30, 1907.

The Spanish Mills Company of Blind River, Ontario, was convicted on June 26, of an infringement of the Act and a penalty of $50 with costs was imposed. Mr. B. H. Wiley, Echo Bay, Ontario, laid the information in this case and 50 per cent of the penalty obtained was paid to Mr. Wiley, on the recommendation of the Minister of Labour.

On September 24, 1909, the Charlton Sawmill Company at Collingwood, Ontario, was convicted before Mr. W. A. Hogg, police magistrate of Collingwood, of an infringement of the Act and a fine of $50 and costs was imposed.

On January 4, 1911, The Johnson Carey Co., Limited, was convicted before His Honour Judge C. R. Fitch, at Fort Frances, Ontario, of an infringement of the Act, and a fine of $500 imposed.

Those are only some of the convictions that have taken place under this Act before a magistrate, who has the very power that this legal adviser thinks should be given in order that this Act might be made more workable. If I may be permitted to put my own construction on this communication, I would say that some significance may be attached to this sentence:

It does seem to me that the Act is simply a piece of legislation designed for the purpose of satisfying claims that have been advanced by the Labour Unions throughout Canada, but made unworkable for some ulterior purpose.

I think that if this legal adviser, who is presumably being paid by labour men for advice, would give them advice in accordance with the law instead of volunteering opinions evidently designed to have a political bearing and purpose, he would be acting more in accord with professional duty than he is doing on this occasion, and my hon. friend could do no better service than to inform his correspondent that if he will take the trouble to look over to-day's 'Hansard' he will see there a list of convictions obtained under the Alien Labour Act; and if he will proceed in accordance with the methods laid down by the Act, and the facts are as stated by my hon. friend from his seat in the House, I have no doubt he will be successful in getting convictions of any company who violates the Act in the manner he has described.

Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, all I have to say in reply is that the hon. gentleman seems to be somewhat nettled over the matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has already spoken, and can only speak again by the courtesy of the House.

Mr. BARNARD. The only observation I would make is that probably the minister has a guilty conscience, considering his action on the Eight Hour Bill last session.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). Mr. Speaker, I am very much interested in this question. As the hon. minister knows, I brought to the attention of this House on two or three occasions instances in which there had been wholesale infractions of the law. I have also pointed out the manifest injustice and futility of an Act the administration and enforcement of which is left to private individuals, who in the majority of cases do not care to take the trouble or the financial risk involved in working up a case against a large corporation, not to speak of the risk of an adverse verdict. As far back as July, 1908, a former Minister of Labour, the present Postmaster General, realizing the cogency of the position I then took, promised that the situation would be reviewed by the department, and that legislation would be introduced as speedily as possible to remedy the defects in the law which I then pointed out. Nothing further has been done, and the same conditions continue to obtain throughout the length and breadth of Canada. We had an instance of that only a few months ago which I brought to the attention of my hon. friend, and I think he promised an investigation into it. It was a case in which men were brought by the score almost from across the boundary at Sault Ste. Marie to displace Canadian workmen who had been there for many years, and against whose work alone no objection could be found. Those men were aliens, brought to Canada in defiance of the law, but no one cared to take the risk involved in fighting the gigantic corporation which had brought them in, and, therefore, the matter was not brought to the attention of the department. These importations could be easily prevented. Just as the Department of Immigration places officers on the frontier to watch for undesirable immigrants, why could not the Department of Labour place inspectors at different points along the frontier to make reports on these matters, and, thereby minimize if not entirely prevent the infractions of this law? If the Alien Labour Law is a serious law and the Minister of Labour is serious in his attempts to enforce it, why does he not enforce it? If he finds that private individuals do not take enough interest in the law to enforce it—and I do not blame them—why does he not himself take power, if he considers he has not sufficient already, to attend to the enforcement of his own law? The members of this government are usually not lacking in vigilance in matters of this kind except where provincial authority is concerned. We have a very cogent instance of that in the administration of the Election Law. When my hon. friend from South York (Mr. Maclean) commented on the government's inability to enforce laws which it placed on the statute-book, the answer was: The laws are there, and they should be enforced by the provinces; that is what the judicial machinery of the provinces is for. How does that apply to the enforcement of the Dominion Elections Act? The Minister of Justice told us in this House that he was perfectly justified two or three years ago in sending at the expense of this government on election day policemen on a special train in order, as he said, to prevent any violation of the Election Law at the polls. If it is competent for this government to do that in one case, why can it not do it in another case which is of manifest interest to the whole of Canada? I sincerely hope that this serious matter will be dealt with in the manner in which it should be. The minister's contention is that the remedy is entirely in the hands of the workingmen. Take the one instance of the man who had the hardihood to prosecute a large lumber corporation at Blind River for the infraction of the Act. He had to go to the expense of going to Blind River, subpoenaing witnesses and employing counsel, and when he was able to get a conviction, and the corporation was fined $50 of which $25 went to the prosecutor, all of this $25 was exhausted in the expense of prosecuting. What encouragement is that to a man getting $2 or $2.50 a day to take upon himself the whole burden of the enforcement of that law? What the department says is: Go ahead, take all the risks, employ counsel, go on with the evidence, and if you succeed we will give you one-half of the penalty that may be imposed, entirely losing sight of the fact that these men are labouring men who are absolutely unable to lose the time, and the money involved in a prosecution; and if there be not a conviction, who is to pay the man the expenses involved? This is a view of the matter upon which I have not yet heard the Minister of Labour comment—the risk imposed upon a class of men who are least able to bear it; and if the minister is sincere and honest in his desire to relieve the workingmen, to prevent injustice being done, and to secure the enforcement of a workable Act, which will be for the benefit of Canada generally, and the working classes in particular, he will adopt some method, as was promised three years ago, by which this Act will become more workable and more enforceable.

Mr. J. W. MADDIN (Cape Breton, South). Mr. Speaker, in connection with this matter, I would like to draw the attention of the minister to two prosecutions which were instituted by private parties in 1905 against the Cape Breton Electric Company. The hon. minister will doubtless appreciate the difficulty that must exist where individuals are called upon to enforce their rights under an Act as cumbersome as that now under discussion. Leave must be obtained from a county court judge before proceedings can be begun either before a magistrate or before the judge himself. That means an application to the judge in any event, and before that can be made, counsel must be employed, the order must be served on the company, and then the procedure must go on from that to the trial. This involves loss of time, and a great deal of expense, varying from $75 to $200 or $300, depending on the number of witnesses and the distances they have to travel. That is not all. The individual who brings an action against his employer need never again seek employment from that employer or even from any other in the locality. He becomes black-listed. It is only in districts where complete organizations exist for the defence of labour that prosecutions can be brought under the Act at all. It is unfair to keep on the statute-book any longer an Act so expensive to the individual that in view of the fact that it has been in operation so many years, the minister, going back ten years, can only cite the number of cases he cited this afternoon as having been carried to a successful conclusion.

Mr. KING. Some of them. I was only citing some of them that come to my attention.

Mr. MADDIN. Well, the fact of the matter is that, as this is an Act for the protection of the labourer, the protection of those who belong to the country, and who belong to the flag, it should be the duty of some person to enforce it. Collectors of customs guard the ports of entry, and we have a fishery protection service. It is not left to the fisherman to lay a charge against those who encroach on the country's fisheries. There seems to be some one appointed to administer every one of the country's laws except this Alien Labour Law. In the United States when a person lands from a boat or a train, he is almost always interrogated, especially if he has the appearance of being an artisan or labourer and he is asked as to his object in entering the country; and again and again many of them have been turned back. In this country no such safeguards are organized to protect the labourer, and the individual labourer in a country village or small manufacturing town where there are no organizations, is left the burden. It is left to him as an individual to prosecute parties, perhaps, a powerful corporation, who will take appeal after appeal, and he is a wise labourer who will look at the Act, and forget its existence, and bear the burden. It would be folly for the ordinary workingman to assume the responsibility of prosecution under such an Act as that, and hope to come out successfully. I do not urge this matter in a party spirit, but I think I am making a wholesale criticism of the administration. I hope the minister will take it seriously to heart, and if he ever gets another opportunity before this parliament, which is very doubtful, he will see to it that the Act is amended and improved.

DEFERRED ELECTIONS.

Mr. MARTIN BURRELL (Yale-Cariboo). Before you leave the Chair, I would like to refer to another matter, as it is possible there will be an early appeal to the country, of which there are very significant signs, as well as some utterances of responsible ministers. In 1909 I had the honour of bringing a resolution before this House dealing with the question of deferred elections, the effect of the motion being that it was desirable in Canada, with special reference to British Columbia, that we should have no more deferred elections, but that all should be held on the same day. That motion was defeated largely because my hon. friend the Minister of Finance preferred to treat it as a want of confidence motion. I think I may fairly claim that it was mainly defeated on that ground, and not because of the demerit of the contentions that were brought forward by me on that occasion. I do not think it is necessary to repeat the various arguments and proofs that I adduced at that time in support of the feasibility of holding the elections in Canada all on the same day. They were set forth fully at that time, and I may fairly claim that they were not answered. I pointed out then, as I will point out now, that one of the strong reasons, the irresistible reason for members of the government, notably the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman), was that furnished by the action of the government on the occasion of the by-election in Comox-Atlin, when my hon. friend secured the seat which he is occupying at the present time. The writ for Comox-Atlin by-election was issued on January 22, 1909, and the election was fixed to be held on February 20, an interval of 29 days. For the general election, the writ was issued on September 18, the election was fixed for October 26, an interval of 38 days. Now I am sure my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue will agree that Comox-Atlin, of all the constituencies in British Columbia, is the most difficult, geographically, for holding the election on the same day as a general election. I think he has said that in so many words. I am not prepared to say that it is possible to hold the election fairly in Comox-Atlin within 29 days after the writ is issued. In fact, my hon. friend stated in his place in the debate that it was impossible. Whether it is possible to hold it in the other period, that is 38 days, which is given to all the other seats in the country, is a matter open to question; it may be and it may not. Although it is true that the returning officers fix the date of the election, it is no less true that the member of the government representing the district affected is responsible. At all events, I claim that it is absolutely feasible and clearly possible to hold the elections on the same day in Yale-Cariboo and Kootenay. I would not like to weary the House by repeating the manifest evils of deferred elections. I am sure the Minister of Finance will agree that if it is possible to hold all the elections on the same day, there are grave evils attaching to deferred elections. It is an injustice to prevent the citizens of a constituency from exercising their franchise on the same date as the other citizens of Canada, when that is possible. When an election is held subsequent to the general election, the electors lose interest in it, because they feel that the affairs of the country are already settled, and it is not worth while for them to take the trouble of exercising their franchise. Now it is possible there will be an election soon. At the time that debate took place the Minister of Finance used this language:

> I do not for the moment say there is no room for change; I do not say that the experience of the last few years may not have shown that some of these exceptions in the Elections Act might be removed without inconvenience.

I would like also to call attention to the remarks of the Minister of Finance in connection with Yale-Cariboo:

> There are three constituencies in British Columbia in which the elections were deferred, namely, Kootenay, Yale-Cariboo and Comox-Atlin. I am bound to admit that, as regards the constituency of Kootenay, I do not see any reason why there should be a deferred election there. . . With regard to Yale-Cariboo, the representative of that constituency would be better able to advise the House as to what ought to be done.

Well, I am willing to accept the responsibility conferred on me by the Minister of Finance, and I certainly feel conscientiously able to advise the House, and the government that it is possible, and feasible to hold an election in Yale-Cariboo under present conditions on the same day as the general elections, provided there is a fair amount of time between the issue of the writ and the date of polling. Let me point out that the Act as it stands is permissive, it gives the returning officer power to defer the elections when he deems it necessary. But the closing words of section 90 which deals with this question, are:

> And the day for holding the polls shall be at as early a date thereafter as possible, but not less than seven days after nomination, and at a general election it shall, if possible, be the same day as that fixed by the Governor General for the other electoral districts, but not sooner.

So in this particular case it is clear that the law was intended to encourage the holding of all elections on the same day. I am not speaking of this matter in a controversial spirit at all. It turned out that in my constituency the fact of the election being deferred did not work to disadvantage; in fact, the feeling of the electors seemed to be that they resented the deferred election. I am not assuming for a moment that it is the intention to defer these elections. I have no reason to assume it, and I do not wish to assume it.

I would like to express the hope that the government, when these elections come on sooner or later, will see their way to intimating that it is the desire of the government that the elections in such sections shall be held on the same day. The right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) this morning, I think it was, made a sort of announcement as to the question of the elections. He stated that the question of reciprocity was before the House, and that when we were finished with that we should take up the question of Supply, and presumably the election would follow. Of course, it is not necessary to point out to the House what every man knows perfectly well and what the right hon. leader of the government knows absolutely, that reciprocity will not be passed by this House. He has practically admitted it and I think we all accept it. We may fairly understand that the government is simply waiting the psychological moment to dissolve the House, and appeal to the country whether that psychological moment comes, in the opinion of the government, in a day, or in a week, or in two weeks, or in a month. But I would like to have pointed out to the Prime Minister if he had been in his seat, that if no better arguments are used in the House in support of the reciprocity pact than were used by members of his cabinet in the country it would, of course, be impossible to get the House to pass it. I am going to refer to this because it is almost a question of privilege, and because I see sitting opposite to me the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) who has been stumping British Columbia on behalf of the government, as a member of the government and on behalf of his party. He has made some very extraordinary statements. I might repeat that if arguments and statements such as were made by this cabinet minister are to form the appeal to the electors of this country it is easy to understand how absolutely hopeless the appeal is. In Victoria, the Minister of Inland Revenue held a meeting on July 3rd, and he made this statement:

One result of the agreement already has been the enhancement of the value of fruit lands in the Okanagan.

Mr. Martin Burrell, a member of the House and a fruit grower, owned a 160-acre farm, with a partially-bearing orchard, and offered it for sale about a year ago for $20,000. About two months after the agreement was announced Mr. Burrell's ranch was sold for $30,000, or $10,000 more than he offered it for before the reciprocal agreement was concluded.

I am quoting now from the Victoria 'Times,' the organ, I believe, of the hon. friend. He added:

Another instance which I am able to vouch for also, is that of the Matt Miller ranch, sold for $200 an acre on May 5 last, although a man had been given the refusal of it at $100 an acre several months before, showing that some people are not afraid of any evil effects to the fruit industry because the duty is to be taken off fruit. (Applause.)

I will just deal with the last paragraph first. The minister says: that he is able to vouch for this statement. This ranch is in Kettle River valley where I live. I know the circumstances absolutely and I am, in my place in this House, prepared to say, and to make affidavit, if necessary, that his statement that the ranch was sold for $200 an acre after reciprocity was announced and that it had been offered for $100 before, is absolutely untrue, and that the second price was simply the first price, namely, $100 an acre. I may further add that the man who made the second proposition after reciprocity was announced fell down in his deal. These are the absolute facts that the minister can find out for himself. Yet he goes on to say that he can vouch for a statement of that kind. Let me deal with the statement he made about my own affairs and I do it for the reason, that I find that up and down the country in the Liberal press, this statement of the minister has been reported without the denial which was given to it by myself. It was given prominence in paper after paper after he had held this meeting. I think it a most disgraceful thing that a minister should make an unsupported statement on false pretenses dragging in my private affairs, and then that no correction shall be given to it in the Liberal press published in Winnipeg and elsewhere. The minister made a statement along similar lines in the city of Nelson, and the paper there telegraphed me there for a statement. This is the statement I made at the time:

To the editor of the 'Daily News,' Nelson, B.C.
Sir,—The 'News' reports Hon. Wm. Templeman as saying that he has good authority for stating that since the announcement of the reciprocity pact I had sold my ranch for $10,000 more than I had offered it for before. Further, that American capital has gone into the purchase and that the deal was made as a result of the reciprocity pact. All three statements are false and absolutely misleading. Negotiations had been entered into with the parties concerned before reciprocity was announced in the House, the first figures being higher than those finally agreed upon. It is painful and amazing that a minister of the Crown can perpetrate this sort of thing. Apart from the question of taste in making statements about my private business, what must be said of the ethics of the case? If Mr. Templeman is reported correctly his gross inaccuracies in regard to my affairs will justify the public in assuming that no weight can be attached to his other utterances.

In answer to that, after I left Grand Forks, the minister saw fit not to apologize, not to correct his statement, but to write a long letter to the Nelson 'News' in the course of which he made these remarks:

Further information received by me at the time from residents of Grand Forks was to the effect that the sale was made at a price $10,000 in advance of what the property had been offered for before the reciprocity agreement had been negotiated.

I had already given this a frank denial. From my seat in the House I give it now a most unqualified denial. He goes on to say:

It was a complete answer to his jeremiads, because if wide-awake men would buy his fruit farm and other fruit farms adjacent to it, in the face of the 'smashing blow' that he said had been dealt the fruit industry, it surely was an argument in favour of my contention, and to my mind an unanswerable one.

It was unanswerable if it were true, but what becomes of the argument if the thing is entirely false? I am amazed that the minister could follow up one serious break by making another so bad as this particular letter. Then he says:

While Mr. Burrell denies the accuracy of my statements, he does not correct them.

I do not know what the minister wants in the way of correction. Does he want me to tell him the names of the parties, their birthplaces, ages, what their prospects are, and everything about them? The thing is absolutely absurd and I have to tell him that he seems to be entirely astray on this thing. For the minister's particluar benefit, let me tell him what he does not appear to know, that long before these negotiations for a part of the holdings that I have in the Kettle valley were commenced, about 80 acres were added to the property, a new water system has been supplied and a large value has been added, and that so far from his being anywhere near the truth he is absolutely wide of the mark, I repeat that I never was offered $10,000 less, but that the price before reciprocity was entered into was higher than that which the parties subsequently agreed upon. I might add, Mr. Chairman, that the deal has not been finally concluded yet. I do not want to say anything more about my private affairs and I apologize for having brought them to the attention of the House. But, I think that it is a perfect disgrace that a member of the cabinet should go on public platforms and make statements of this kind as the basis for an argument for reciprocity when these statements are absolutely without any foundation.

With regard to the other matter I would be only too glad to get some expression of opinion from the hon. Minister of Finance, who dealt with the question in a very fair way at the time the debate occurred. I hope, in view of the subsequent facts and the present knowledge of the government there will be some reasonable chance of the elections in Kootenay and Yale-Cariboo taking place on the same day as the general election.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Chairman, with regard to the observations of my hon. friend concerning the date of holding elections, it is not a matter to which I have given particular attention. I quite join with him in the general view that what we call simultaneous polling is a good feature of our constitution.

It is certainly desirable that wherever it is reasonably possible that principle should be applied throughout the whole dominion. Whether there are exceptional circumstances or not would, I think, depend upon the information to be received. I will see that the observations of my hon. friend are brought to the notice of my colleagues, whose duty it is to give more particular attention to that branch of the public business.

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). I had no intention to interfere with the private affairs of my hon. friend (Mr. Burrell) when I used as an argument the statement that he had sold his fruit ranch at an enhanced price, nor do I think that any one could construe my using this alleged fact into an interference with his private business. The report that Mr. Burrell had sold his fruit ranch at Grand Forks at a very good price to a company that were going to engage in the fruit business appeared in the British Columbia newspapers, and I wrote to ascertain the facts from a responsible gentleman in Grand Forks, and the statement I made at Nelson and Fernie that Mr. Burrell had held his ranch at a certain figure previous to the announcement of the reciprocity pact, and that he had sold it several months after the announcement of reciprocity at an advance of $10,000, was given to the public on the authority of a letter which I have still in my possession from a very prominent resident of Grand Forks who inquired into the facts. I will accept the word of the hon. member that he has not sold his fruit ranch at an enhanced price. It is none of the business of the public at what price he sold his ranch, but if it is a fact that he did sell it at an enhanced price after the announcement of reciprocity, as the general opinion is in the neighbourhood of Grand Forks, it would be fair and legitimate to mention it as an argument in favour of the benefit of reciprocity to the fruit business. The hon. gentleman had an excellent ranch and the statement is that he sold it at a very good price, and that those who bought it are going into the growing of fruit on a still larger scale than he. It is a fact that the other ranch to which I referred was negotiated for at an enhanced price, and that in the neighbourhood of Nelson a small ranch has been sold at $750 an acre, although that may be accounted for in part by the fact that it is beautifully situated on the lake and very desirable for a residence. The fact remains that the removal of duty on fruit, has not tended to depreciate the value of fruit lands in British Columbia, but on the contrary has caused the prices to go higher. The price of fruit lands immediately south of the boundary line is I believe from 50 per cent to 100 per cent higher than the price of fruit lands in relatively as good a position north of the boundary line. I used these statements on the public platform. I admit the information is second-hand, but the hon. gentleman himself knows better than I do about it, and I would suggest that he might take the public into his confidence, and tell the people the circumstances, not contenting himself with making a general denial. I do not think there is any divulging of private business about it. There is not a land transaction in British Columbia that the price is not published in the newspapers. Probably the hon. gentleman (Mr. Burrell) regrets that he has sold his fruit lands so soon. The price of fruit land, in the Boundary Creek country and the Okanagan Valley, is higher to-day than it was 5 months ago, and I am quite positive that there has been no depreciation in the price of these lands in consequence of the reciprocity agreement. I have no desire to interfere with my hon. friend's private affairs nor did I think I did so when I made use of the argument. Now, in reference to the other matter, the hon. gentleman has said that the Yale-Cariboo election might be held on the same day as the other elections throughout the Dominion, and I am inclined to agree with him. The difficulty in Comox-Atlin is that the ballots cannot be sent around that district in the week intervening between nomination day and polling day. It certainly could not be done at my by-election which was held in the winter. I question if it could be done in an interval of two weeks. There are places up the Skeena River where the people have to travel by dog train in winter and it takes two or three weeks for them to get their mail, but of course in summer it is more easily accomplished, and, if it can be done, and if nomination and polling can be fixed on the same day as the other elections, I am absolutely in favour of it, because I do not think there is anything to be gained by deferring an election. It must be remembered that Comox-Atlin is 1,000 miles long by the route travelled from Alberni on the Southwest corner to Atlin on the Northeast, and it comprises 150,000 square miles in which there are 100 polling places, and in the case of Queen Charlotte Island a steamer has to go around delivering the ballots. If it is at all possible, I am of opinion that the election should be held on the same day as the other elections.

Mr. BURRELL. I am astonished that the Minister of Inland Revenue did not frankly tender an apology. He has not even given us the name of the responsible gentleman in Grand Forks who has given him the alleged facts that are not facts.

He has to accept my word that these statements were absolutely correct. Now, as to asking me what was the exact price I sold the land for, how would he like me to ask him the amount of the mortgage he has on the Times Building, Victoria? I do not think it concerns the House, but, at the same time, I have no worry about the matter. I may, however tell the hon. gentleman that the figures were higher before reciprocity was introduced than they were afterwards. I have told him that there was no foundation in fact for the statements he made, and he has to accept my word.

CHINESE INVESTIGATION COMMISSION.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I would like to invite the attention of the House to a condition of actual free trade concerning us on the Pacific—a condition established by the concurrent action of Canadian and Oriental Reformers—not limited in term, but continuing for a very long time, and seemingly difficult to annul.

The House is familiar with my subject, and the country is even more familiar with it, because I see notices in the press of the exposure of these Chinese immigration scandals, which have attracted more attention in the country than has been given to the matter by the hon. members responsible for this condition of affairs. I wish to deal, with the report of the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into this matter. This commission was appointed on the 12th November last, and held its first session on the 19th December. The hon. Mr. Justice Murphy was appointed commissioner. Mr. George E. McCrossan of Vancouver appeared on behalf of the Dominion government, Mr. S. S. Taylor on behalf of Yip On, one of the accused, and Mr. Gordon Grant represented the Trades and Labour Council of Vancouver. The scope of the commission was indicated by Mr. Justice Murphy at the opening session, when he said that the commission had been appointed to further investigate and report upon the frauds recently shown to have existed in connection with the unlawful landing of Chinese immigrants in Canada at British Columbia ports, and any other evasions in violation of Chapter 95 Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, 'An Act Respecting and Restricting Chinese Immigration' and 7-8 Edward VII, Chap. 14, 'An Act to Amend the Chinese Immigration Act,' and orders in council based thereon, and to investigate and report upon the results of the operation of the Opium Act, viz: 7-8 Edward VII, Chapter 50, 'An Act to Prohibit the Importation, Manufacture and Sale of Opium for other than Medical Purposes,' with special reference to any opium seizures that have taken place under said Act and disposition thereof.

Before I proceed to read the findings of the court—which I think ought to go upon record as a preliminary to any discussion upon them—I would like to exonerate the commissioner from the imputation cast upon him by statement of the right hon. gentleman, who said a few days ago that the commissioner had suggested in his report that it should be withheld from parliament. The statement surprised me at the time, but it was made quite solemnly by the right hon. the Prime Minister. The right hon. the Prime Minister had looked at the matter so casually that he had altogether failed to grasp the recommendation made by the commissioner, and his statement to the House is altogether at variance with the facts. Page 120 of the report of the commissioner contains the following:—

Recommendations re Prosecution.

First.—That the digest of facts forwarded herewith be submitted to the Department of Justice for advice as to whether they justify a criminal prosecution of Yip On and his partner Yip Sue Poey

Second.—In the event of such advice being of an affirmative nature, that this report be not made public until such prosecutions have been launched, and at least the preliminary hearings held.

The reason is that the direct evidence of Yip Dit Chor, Yong Jem Sun, and Fung Chang Ming will doubtless be necessary. If it becomes known that criminal proceedings are in contemplation, these men will probably disappear, and to locate them, as the experience of the commission in searching for passport men shows, will be a most difficult if not impossible task.

This recommendation to lodge prosecutions was delivered by Mr. Justice Murphy to the Department of Trade and Commerce last May. The date is not stated upon the return, but it is marked 'Department of Trade and Commerce, May 1911.' I take it that the report was received at the time of the long adjournment of this House, or subsequent thereto. Mr. Justice Murphy as a well informed man knew of the intended adjournment of the House, and he was well aware that his suggestion of brief delay would not for a moment prevent the government from delivering this report to the House, as they were in duty bound to do—and indeed, as they had promised to do. Moreover, I take it that the commissioner had in his mind that the government would show diligence in this matter, that they would take warning by his suggestion to the effect that if these criminals had time to reflect, their witnesses and themselves would be spirited out of the country; and the commissioner had no reason to suppose that the government would allow this report to lie pigeonholed in one of the departments at Ottawa for two months before it received even the most cursory consideration from any minister of the crown.

Having absolved the commissioner from the imputation under which he might lie, from the right hon. the Prime Minister's statement, I would like to read the findings of the commission. At page 117 we find the following summary of conclusions:—

First.—The charges both of personal and official misconduct against the Hon. Mr. Templeman are found to be entirely without foundation.

Second.—The charges against certain members of the Liberal executive of Vancouver were shown to be untrue.

Third.—The existence was demonstrated of an intrigue on the part of Mr. T. R. E. McInnes, with whom was associated Mr. David Lew and Gordon Grant, to establish some sort of connection with the administration of the Chinese Restrictions Act at the port of Vancouver by obtaining control of the position of Chinese interpreter, and possibly in other ways. Its object was to serve some personal end.

Fourth.—Mr. Foster, government secret service officer, was utilized to advance this intrigue. To what extent he was a dupe, and to what extent a participant, is uncertain.

Fifth.—Ample opportunity has existed at the port of Vancouver for the illegal entry of Chinese into Canada in the various ways enumerated in the body of the report.

Sixth.—The administration of the Chinese Restriction Act at Victoria has been as careful, and as effective as defects in said Act would permit.

Seventh.—The port of Union Bay is practically a free port for the entrance of Chinese, and smuggling opium into Canada. The ships of two lines running direct from the Orient go there to coal before setting out on each return voyage.

Eighth.—This condition of things obtains to almost the same extent at the ports of Nanaimo, Ladysmith and Boat Harbour. No ships direct from the Orient call at these ports to coal, but tramp vessels carrying Chinese crews are numerous.

Ninth.—A system of direct fraud to secure illegal entry of Chinese into Canada as merchant exempts has flourished at the port of Vancouver, probably since 1907. It is impossible to determine how many Chinese have thus entered Canada, but it is probable that the majority admitted there under the Chinese passports secured fraudulent entry.

Tenth.—The interpreter Yip On was directly concerned, and a participant in these frauds. This is probably true also of his partner Yip Sue Poey.

Eleventh.—Numbers of Chinese have probably entered Canada as exempt sons of merchants who did not fulfil the law's requirements to entitle them to such free entry. This has been accomplished:

(a) By wholesale registration of Chinese as members of merchant firms who possibly have a small interest in such business, but who are not actively engaged in mercantile life, but are really laundrymen, labourers, clerks, &c.; and

(b) By such persons and genuine merchants as well bringing in individuals as sons who in fact were no blood relations to them.

Twelfth.—The method of identification in vogue at Vancouver until last autumn was defective, and as carried out practically valueless.

Thirteenth.—The watch kept on ships at the port of Vancouver up to the same date was farcical.

Fourteenth.—Mr. Bowell had no connection with any wrong-doing, but was negligent in the performance of his duties in so far as they appertained to the admission of Chinese into Canada. In fairness to him it must be stated that the dual position of collector of customs and of comptroller of Chinese immigration, in recent years at any rate, have made impossible demands upon his time

Fifteenth.—Some suspicions rest upon the new interpreter Poon Shun Lung in reference to the admission of his two alleged sons in January, 1910, and likewise in reference to his former connection, if his statement is to be believed, with a firm in Toronto regarded by the police of that city as principally engaged in illicit opium traffic.

Sixteenth.—Under the Act as at present framed the government is dependent in a large measure on the integrity of the interpreter, and in the matter of the admission of new merchants, wholly so.

Seventeenth.—The charge that customs officials sold opium after seizure, and appropriated the proceeds, is untrue.

Eighteenth.—The quantity of opium coming into Canada is regulated simply by the demand for the drug.

Nineteenth.—Whilst more efficient watching will prove a preventative, total exclusion of opium cannot be hoped for, and consumption must be discouraged by drastic amendments to the Act on the lines suggested by the police officers of Vancouver and Victoria, above set out.

So that the commissioner found that, with the exception of the individuals named, the charges of maladministration made against the several departments of the government were proved up to the hilt. This commissioner was in a most delicate position during the inquiry. He was familiar with the attitude recently taken by the Minister of Justice, who has declared in this House with pride: I am a political partisan, and has disavowed that his department has any higher ideal in the conduct of its affairs than, like other departments of the government, to advance the political interests of the party in power in Canada. This judge, therefore, must have felt and realized painfully that his was a purely political appointment by a political partisan, recommended to the Minister of Justice and his colleagues by another political partisan; that his appointment to the commission was recommended by a political partisan to his colleagues at Ottawa, and that that recommendation was inspired by the Local Patronage Committee which, no doubt, in turn had dealt with his own appointment to the bench, so that which ever way he turned this judge was surrounded by political embarrassments, and when he started upon his inquiry he felt impelled to break away from the commission extended to him which I read at the opening of my remarks, and instead of dealing with the more important matters of the frauds upon the revenue, and the administration at Vancouver, he chose to take up first the purely political side of the investigation which he intended to hold. He says, at page 11 of this report:

> At an early stage the main inquiry became complicated with a subsidiary issue which was so intimately connected therewith as to imperatively demand investigation. Briefly stated, this issue as first presented was a charge that prominent members of the Liberal party had done all in their power to prevent any probing into the alleged frauds, because they were participants therein. These statements were contained in a letter, dated November 14, 1910, sent to the Minister of Customs, which appeared on the official file relating to the subject-matter of the inquiry forwarded to the commission from Ottawa. Through an oversight this letter was not made an exhibit, but its contents so far as material were set out at pages 336, 337 and 338. The original, Mr. McCrossan states, has been returned to Mr. O'Hara, the chief comptroller of Chinese immigration at Ottawa. The matter was speedily cleared up it being shown beyond peradventure that the allegations could not be supported by evidence of any kind (see Judge Grant pages 335 to 363 inclusive, and McLean, pages 1579 to 1584).

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster).

So you see the first act of this commissioner was a complete absolution of all the guilty parties without the formality of a confession from any quarter. According to the evidence nothing whatever developed as to the division of the spoils. The commissioner and the counsel appointed to prepare that case for him accepted as inevitable, so far as the Chinese were concerned, "the good old rule, the simple plan, that he may take who has the power and he may keep who can.' They have given us no other information, but that the Chinese who got all this immense revenue out of these frauds, kept the whole swag, a supposition which I am free to say is entirely at variance with popular impression at Vancouver, and should have formed, if the commissioner desired to satisfy the public of Vancouver, the subject of most diligent inquiry, examination and cross-examination which appears to have been altogether absent. The commissioner seems to have given up the problem of how to attract to the treasury the gold so freely contributed by the Chinese. He was in the position of Father Abraham when, upon an occasion historically recorded, he was called upon to provide a burnt offering and having prepared his altar and his fuel, he realized that he had no lamb for the burnt offering. It seemed to him that he had divine direction that he must sacrifice his son upon that altar.

Just as, perhaps, it seemed to Commissioner Murphy that since all the parties concerned in these frauds were of his own political faith, and simply quarrelling amongst themselves as to a division or alleged division, he must sacrifice one of the beloved sons of his party as a show of atonement for the political crimes to be expiated. Now, we are told that Abraham in his dilemma cast his eyes upon a thicket and found a ram caught by the horns, and seized the ram and laid it on the altar. In the case of Commissioner Murphy, he had the happy device of seizing in his imagination upon Yip On and Yip Sue Poy as the kids for the occasion; but unlike Abraham, he did not seize the kids themselves when they were caught by the horns in the thicket of his investigation; nor did his collaborators at Ottawa seize the kids, though Commissioner Murphy sent down to them his report that they should be seized and offered up as a burnt offering on the political altar; but, by the gross neglect of all persons concerned, these kids have been allowed to escape from the confines of Canada, and we have no burnt offering at all in response to the demand that Commissioner Murphy must offer up some one as a sacrifice to the public discontent. I will read further from the political side of this inquiry. After the commissioner had decided that on the evidence of Judge Grant these allegations could not be supported, he continues:

The charges reappeared, however, in a somewhat modified form in the cross-examinations carried on by Mr. Gordon Grant, which were throughout very largely directed to establishing that the Honourable W. Templeman, Minister of Inland Revenue, and some members of the Liberal executive committee of Vancouver, especially Mr. Robert Kelly, had endeavoured to balk any investigation into the alleged frauds. In fact, it is clear, now that the commission is closed, from Mr. Grant's examination of the witnesses whom he requested to have subpœnaed when applying for a status as counsel, that with the single exception of Mr. Foster, the secret service officer sent out to make inquiry in the first instance, they were material only because he hoped to establish these accusations by their cross-examination. (See cross-exam. Senkler, 368 et seq; ditto Pound, 420 et seq: Kelly, 3118 et seq; Templeman, 3445 et seq.) Even in Mr. Foster's case Mr. Grant's cross-examination was largely directed to the same end. (See p. 1236 et seq.) The same purpose was indicated in his cross-examination of several witnesses called by Mr. McCrossan. (See cross-exam. Munro, 1037 et seq; McLean, 1581 et seq; Glover, 2480 et seq; Yip On, 2226 et seq.) Finally, Mr. Grant went into the box largely for the same purpose. (See his evidence, p. 1253-1276, 1315-1319, 1346-1352.) The reasons for pointing this out will be seen later.

Apparent weight attached to the charges, supported as they were by Mr. Grant's attitude, because telegrams from the accused parties to Ottawa were on the official file (Ex. 275, 393, 394, 395 and 417) not indeed requesting any hushing up of a proposed investigation, but asking the reinstatement of Yip On and of Mr. Bowell, the collector of customs and comptroller of Chinese immigration at Vancouver, after both had been suspended by the department When these telegrams were sent, as will be seen, Mr. Foster, the secret service officer, was in Vancouver, and though he had failed up to that time to get any evidence admissible in a court of law against Yip On, he had acquired a knowledge of facts and obtained possession of letters calculated to arouse grave suspicion. The parties who sent the wires knew of Mr. Foster's presence in Vancouver, and what his mission was. They did not know what evidence he had, and with the exception of the Hon. Mr. Templeman they made no effort to ascertain before forwarding the telegrams. (Kelly 3129, p. 34384-87, p. 3141, p. 34482-88.) Hon. Mr. Templeman did not see Mr. Foster, but it was charged his purpose was to stop further action on that officer's part because further activity would be injurious to the Liberal party.

These grave allegations introduced a political element into the inquiry which placed the commission in an awkward position.

So that you will see that the commissioner himself realized, and is frank enough to admit it, the embarrassment caused by his being chosen as a judge by the accused themselves As he goes on to say:

Either the widest latitude had to be given or else the commission might in turn be open to the accusation that it too was anxious to screen individuals, especially as its personnel was the nomination of the Hon. Mr. Templeman, as appeared from the official file.

The first horn of the dilemma was chosen in the belief that the traditional honour of the bar would prevent any abuse of the privileges accorded pursuant to this decision by the counsel to whom they were extended. The sequel will show that in the case of Mr. Grant this belief was ill-founded. This began to be apparent somewhat early, but the position taken was not receded from in the expectation that Mr. Grant would eventually justify his conduct by production of evidence. To place the question of opportunity beyond dispute, he was specifically asked at the last session of the commission if he had anything further to adduce (3451 at foot of page, and at page 3453, questions by commissioner).

Then the commissioner proceeds to discuss specifically the charges against the Hon. Wm. Templeman. It is not necessary for me to read all of that, because, as he has said already, these charges were found to be not sustained by the evidence. I will, however, read this portion that seems to be worth while to deal with:

Charges against the Honourable W. Templeman.

As will appear, these stand upon a different footing from those against the other parties. Accordingly they will be dealt with first.

To malign the private character of a minister of the Crown before a Royal Commission to gratify personal spleen engendered by balked intrigue is to merit the pillory of public scorn.

Then, skipping to the foot of page 15:

As to Mr. Grant, it seems clear from a perusal of the inner history leading up to his commission as hereinafter detailed, that impeaching Mr. Foster's credibility was not his object, even if that were within his province as counsel for the Trades and Labour Council, but it is believed his true motive was revenge for balked intrigue. Indeed this conclusion does not rest on deduction alone, for Mr. Grant in his evidence admits that he was piqued because he had not been appointed government counsel before the commission (see Grant, p. 1341, q. 10099-10107), the securing of which position was a minor feature of the intrigue referred to, and for this he knew Hon. Mr. Templeman was responsible (Senkler, p. 376, q. 2951 and 2952), just as it was obvious to Mr. Grant, fully conversant as he was with the inside facts, that the minister was responsible for the defeat of the whole plan. . .

And in passing it may be said that the commission, had it been seized at the outset of the facts now proven, would not have allowed Mr. Grant to act as counsel on the inquiry of issues raised by him in the investigation of which he perforce must have been a witness, as will fully appear, if absolute injustice was not to be done to several innocent people. Aware of this, and of his intention to raise such issues as he must have been, Mr.

Grant's action in accepting a retainer is regrettable and renders his abuse of the privileges accorded him as counsel the more flagrant.

That the second charge against him was made with knowledge of its falsity is shown by Mr. Grant's own evidence. His version is that Mr. Foster stated the minister came to him and opened an interview relating to Mr. Foster's work by saying 'Foster, I want this investigation stopped, it is going to hurt us too much.' (Grant, p. 1257 at top), but on learning the evidence in Mr. Foster's possession, the minister directed him to go on with his work and assured him of his support (Grant, p. 1257, q. 9775 and 1258, q. 9776). Accepting this as true, it is clear that the minister's opposition only lasted so long as he had a wrong impression of the facts, and that when apprised of them, instead of trying to impede Mr. Foster's operations, he promised him every assistance. Asked to justify his course at the investigation in the face of this, Mr. Grant's only excuse was that he feared Mr. Templeman would again fall under Mr. R. Kelly's influence (Grant p. 1315, q. 10014-10026). But he had, as shown by the same reference, no reason other than alleged vague rumour for believing the minister was influenced by Mr. Kelly, and he had not even the justification of vague rumour that Hon. Mr. Templeman had in any way changed his express determination to assist Mr. Foster in every way. Moreover, as will be shown later, he had every reason to know that if Mr. Kelly had any influence it would be used—as in fact it was used—not to balk a genuine investigation, but to defeat the intrigue in which he, Grant, and others were concerned, and hereinafter fully detailed, the success of which depended upon the suppression of facts intimately connected with Chinese affairs at the port of Vancouver.

Now, as complementary to that, I want to read from the evidence of the minister himself, and I premise my reading by saying that it seems to me that the commissioner was letting politics get a pretty strong hold upon him about this time, that the view he takes is likely to prove much more charitable than the view that would be taken by any judge under ordinary circumstances where politics did not come in to bias his judgment. There was at this time an investigation going on in Vancouver by Inspector Foster of the Dominion Police. Mr. Foster had gone to Vancouver with most specific instructions from his superior officer. He was to associate himself there with David Lew; he was to follow out a plan outlined by Mr. McInnes of Ottawa; he was not to make his presence and his mission more widely known than necessary. Mr. Foster appears to have carried out his instructions in every detail, as shown by the minute reports which he sent every few days to his chief at Ottawa, Commissioner Sherwood of the Dominion Police, by whom they were forwarded to the Minister of Trade and Commerce to be placed in possession of the government. In pursuit of his investigation, Inspector Foster had caused the removal of the intepreter Yip On, who had been time and time again reported to the government by its own officials as supposed to be guilty of frauds against the revenue in connection with the bringing in of Chinese. Inspector Foster had him superseded and another interpreter put on in his place. Yip On was suspended when Mr. Templeman appeared in Vancouver. The suspension took place on the 17th of September, 1910. It was speedily rumoured about Vancouver what the significance of the suspension was and what revelations must inevitably follow from the substitution of an honest interpreter for a dishonest one. Three days later Mr. Templeman appeared upon the scene. I take his movements as detailed in the evidence. It is not necessary for me to read that part of it, which is very long. Suffice it to say that he had a dinner at the Vancouver Club, and a subsequent conclave in a room with the chiefs of the local patronage committee in Vancouver, namely, Mr. Robert Kelly, Mr. George Macdonald, Mr. J. H. Senkler and others, these persons being amongst the persons indicated as accused in the letter of Judge Grant which I have read. These were the associates of the minister in British Columbia on this momentous occasion. After they had incubated in a private room at the club for a considerable time, there was produced a telegram, drafted by whom it is not stated, signed by whom it is not stated, but signed in fact with the name of W. Templeman, said to have been affixed to this telegram by Robert Kelly's typewriter.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Of course, that is all absurd. That does not appear in the evidence. I signed that telegram myself. There is no use of misrepresenting me.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I am glad to hear from the Minister of Inland Revenue. I hope I shall often hear from him. I have in my hand the telegram itself, and it is precisely what I say and precisely contrary to what the minister has said.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. As a matter of fact, I signed the telegram in lead pencil. Afterwards, after it was secured from the telegraph office, I obtained a copy of the telegram from the Trade and Commerce Department in typewriting, but I signed the original in lead pencil.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I have here the original telegram as sent with all of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's office marks upon it—the filing marks, the number of the telegram, the red ink marks, the typewritten marks, every mark that the telegraph office puts on a telegram. This is indisputably the original telegram which was filed in the office at Vancouver and transmitted to the Department of Trade and Commerce at Ottawa.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It cannot be the original, because I signed the original in lead pencil.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). There is an explanation. I said the original telegram sent. If a minister of a Crown goes into a private room in the Vancouver Club—

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. A dark room.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). A dark room if you like, with the leader of Tammany at Vancouver, and gives into that gentleman's possession a telegram to be taken away and copied and sent out at that gentleman's sweet will, he becomes responsible for the telegram delivered by his messenger to the telegraph office. On this occasion Robert Kelly appears to have been the chosen messenger of the Minister of Inland Revenue, and the telegram delivered at the telegraph office in pursuance of the authority given to him by the minister was this identical telegram which I have here.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is no disputing the telegram. I am responsible for it, whether it was sent by myself or by another person. I signed the telegram. What my hon. friend has may be a copy sent by the telegraph office to the commissioner. I myself have a copy which I got from the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I am glad the minister admits his responsibility for the telegram, although I do not see very well how he can evade it in view of the evidence. Just to make it perfectly plain, I will read the evidence of Mr. Robert Kelly.

I quote from page 3111 of the Evidence, question 3428:

Now there is a telegram on file, Mr. Kelly, purporting to be from Mr. Templeman to Sir Richard Cartwright, dated September 20, 1910, which I will read—do you know anything about that?

A. I guess I know something about them all, maybe. I think this telegram, the Hon. Wm. Templeman was asked to send it by Mr. Senkler, Mr. McDonald, myself and many others and was approved of by the meeting, and of course Mr. Templeman knew very little about the case although he went and inquired, and he was assured that this man was all right, and he had nothing against him from Mr. Foster.

Q. Was that sent from the meeting at the Vancouver Club, the dinner given by Mr. Glover?—A. We had dinner at the Vancouver Club with Mr. Glover and adjourned to a little room and discussed the matter.

Q. Who was at that discussion?—A. Myself, Mr. Senkler and Mr. McDonald, I think.

Q. And Mr. Sclater?—A. Yes, I believe so.

Q. Mr. Duff Stewart?—A. I think he was, but I would not say positively, as I did not pay much attention, but I remember some remarks Mr. Senkler had made in reference to David Lew, that he was anything but what was right, and he was very strongly in favour that this telegram should be sent in time.

Q. And Mr. Templeman sent that after that discussion with you others at the Vancouver Club?—A. He certainly did, I don't know if Mr. Templeman sent it, but he signed it I presume.

Mr. Justice Murphy.—I think in justice to Mr. Templeman you ought to tell us what that discussion was that led up to the sending of a telegram, why was he asked by those people to send it?—A. Mr. Templeman was aware as I understood it or had a pretty good idea that there was a certain element in Ottawa trying to get this man, David Lew, put in the position of interpreter, and in order to do so they had to get Yip On suspended or dismissed, and Mr. Templeman after he wrote that telegram and before it was sent, I think, he went and made inquiries from Mr. Munro and went over in the auto to see Mr. Foster at the boarding house where he was stopping and Mr. Foster was in bed and Mr. Templeman told me he made an appointment to meet Mr. Foster and Mr. Foster assured him there was nothing against Yip On, and it seems to me that the Minister's name should not have been dragged into this thing the way it has.

Question 34300:

It was stated by Mr. McLean, Mr. Kelly, when he was on the stand, although to some extent it was outside the inquiry, since it has come out it was only fair that you should have an opportunity to give your explanation of his statement that you control Mr. Templeman, what have you to say about that?—A. I have a good deal to say about it. It is quite in accordance with what I expect from Mr. McLean. I do not control Mr. Templeman nor do I think any other man in Canada does, and as far as Mr. McLean is concerned he is the only man I know of who ever had any desire to control.

We are getting some inside history of these gentlemen who are all part of the happy family of Liberals, and who are complimenting each other about the distribution of the spoils of office. The examination proceeds:

Last year, I was in Ottawa and Mr Norman was there so much he had worn out his chair at the Russell House attending sessions and he stayed at home and sent his brother Hugh. I was in Ottawa when Mr. McLean came down. He was staying at the Russell House, also, and he came to me and said that he wanted to get a settlement with the government for this license they cancelled on him up in Dawson, and I asked him what was the amount he thought he should receive and he said that the amount they were looking for was approximately $350,000 and he wanted me to speak to the Minister and I said, all right, I will speak to him and see what he has to say, and I met Mr. Templeman, and told him what Mr. McLean had said and I said if the government owed the McLeans any money why don't they pay them what they owe them and get rid of them; he said if the McLeans were only asking the government for $5 I would recommend the government not to pay it, as they had nothing against the government. If the McLeans think they have any claim against the government they can sue the government; and they did sue the government and the claim was thrown out.

Question 34301:

It was not thrown out, it was withdrawn. That is the case that was reported in the 'News-Advertiser' yesterday morning?—A. Yes, I presume that is the one.

Question 34302:

Who went with you to Mr. Foster's apartments after the Vancouver Club dinner and how did you come to go to his apartments?—A. We went over in the auto.

Q. Who were with you?—A. I was trying to think who it was that came with us. I think Dr. Munro went on ahead.

Then, in cross-examination by Mr. Gordon Grant, Exhibit 395, is shown. That, I take it, is the telegram that I referred to just now. The question is asked of Mr. Kelly:

Do you know who drafted that telegram for Hon. William Templeman?—A. I don't remember who drafted it, I know I did not.

Question 34330:

Do you know of any one being with the Hon. Mr. Templeman at the time it was drafted?—A. I could not tell you who drafted it, I don't remember.

Question 34331:

Do you know where that telegram 395 was typewritten?—A. This one here?

Yes?—A. No. I do not, I could not swear where it was typewritten, I do not know.

Q. Do you think from your office?—A. In all probability I should think that was where I would likely typewrite it.

That is the way Bob Kelly was likely to typewrite a telegram from the Minister of Inland Revenue to his colleagues, drafted in the Vancouver Club over night when Bob Kelly's office was closed so that there would be no usual and ordinary traffic from the club down to the office and back again to the telegraph office in the course of sending the message.

I notice that telegram was filed at 11 o'clock in the morning at the C.P.R. Telegraph office 11K; would that assist you in recollecting if you were down at your office or if you had been any other place that morning?—A. No, but I might have written it the day before.

So Mr. Kelly writes the minister's telegrams, according to Mr. Kelly's statement.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster).

Q. But you think in your own office?—A. I think in all probability it was in my own office, but I don't remember, but I signed the telegram anyway no matter where it was typewritten.

Q. Was that telegram written for you and submitted for you to send?—A. No, it was not, I wrote that myself or had it written.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. What telegram is that?

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). The same telegram.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. He did not send my telegram.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is what he says. I am reading from page 3121 of the evidence. I have read continuously since question 34,329:

Do you know who drafted that telegram for the Hon. Mr. Templeman?

Bob Kelly says:

I don't remember who drafted it. I know I did not.

Q. Do you know of any one being with the Hon. Mr. Templeman at the time it was drafted?—A. I could not tell you who drafted it. I don't remember.

Question 34339:

There are four telegrams here, one of which is signed by you, which is the one to the Hon. Charles Murphy, can you not recall anything more about that?—A. No, I don't remember.

Q. And you don't remember where it was typewritten? A. No.

Q. Do you remember what time of the day you signed it?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you remember if any person had anything to do with the framing of it?—A. I don't think they did, but I am not in a position to say as I don't remember.

Q. This telegram signed by Mr. Templeman which has not been marked as an Ex., yet: 'Most important that Yip On should be continued as Chinese interpreter, David Lew's claims should not be entertained.' Is that the telegram you identified as the one the Hon. Wm. Templeman sent from Vancouver Club? A. I think so.

Q. Is that it here?—A. Yes, that is it.

Q. That is the only telegram that has been produced by the Canadian Pacific Telegraph Company signed by Mr. Templeman, that is the only one you know of?—A. I think so.

Q. And you say that telegram was sent as the result of the discussion at the Club?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you explain to me, Mr. Kelly, as it is a fact, how that Templeman's telegram came to be typewritten by the same typewriter as your own?—A. As my own?

Q. Yes, it is a fact they are.—A. I don't know anything about where it was typewritten, but we discussed it and to the best of my knowledge it was written at the Vancouver Club in the strangers' room.

Q. Is it not a fact to your knowledge that the telegram bearing Mr. Templeman's signature was typewritten in your office before you left there to go to the Vancouver Club that night?—A. It was not.

Q. It was not?—A. No.

Q. Did Mr. Templeman or any one take a draft of the telegram from the Vancouver Club to your office that night and have it typewritten, using your typewriter, or a typewriter in your office?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did any one of those gentlemen leave the Vancouver Club long enough to do that?—A. I could not tell you how long they left because they scattered around. I did not follow them. I was not in that business.

Q. How long did that discussion take at the Vancouver Club?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. How long before the telegram was sent to your recollection?—A. I could not tell you as I don't recollect.

Q. One or two hours after dinner had concluded?—A. I don't know, I suppose between one and two hours after.

Q. I understand you had dinner, starting at a quarter past seven, is that correct?—A. I don't know.

Q. That is what Mr. Glover said?—A. If he said it, it is right, I presume.

Q. Did you see that telegram after it had been completed for dispatching to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company?—A. I don't remember if I did or not.

Q. You will observe, Mr. Kelly, that Mr. Templeman has not signed that telegram?—A. This one here?

Q. Yes, that is a typewritten signature, Wm. Templeman, from the same typewriter that typewrote yours?—A. I suppose Mr. Templeman will be able to explain that when he comes. I know I did not sign Mr. Templeman's name here.

Now, I think I have read enough to——

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The hon. member read evidence to the effect—I do not know who the witness was—that the telegram signed by me had been written by Mr. Kelly in his office, and he has now read evidence to the effect that the telegram was written in the Vancouver club. Of course I never read that evidence, but there seems to be a discrepancy which I cannot understand. I imagine there may have been two telegrams in question.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I think the minister's brain must be getting befogged.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Very possibly, but 'Hansard' will show I am right.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I don't think they ever had Bob Kelly's typewriter in a room at the Vancouver Club. The original telegram procured from the Canadian Pacific Railway office was written on Bob Kelly's typewriter and Kelly himself admits it. He gives conflicting stories in his evidence as to when, how and where it was written, but cornered he admits it was written on his typewriter. The point I want to make is this—I think the minister will admit it is a good one—that it is a most careless and reckless way of doing business for a minister of the Crown to permit a telegram to be sent on such an important matter of public interest as this was by a person held up to him by public rumour as likely to be a beneficiary of the frauds that were about to be exposed.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is a very deliberate insinuation, and a very improper insinuation.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I would like to know what is improper about it?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That public opinion held Mr. Kelly up as likely to be a beneficiary of fraud. That is not true.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I cannot say with certainty as to what is held up to the Minister of Inland Revenue as I have no knowledge of his inner conscience, and private acts, but I can say from my own knowledge that Mr. Kelly is held up, if not to the minister, to all the rest of the community as the chief beneficiary of what in vulgar parlance is called the graft upon the government at Vancouver. That is a matter of public knowledge, discussed by Robert Kelly himself in his evidence, and accepted by him as being common property. It seems incredible that when all the rest of the world knows it, and when Mr. Kelly admits it, that the minister from British Columbia after all his intimate relations with Mr. Kelly should never have heard it. Here we have an interpreter suspended to make possible the discovery of the frauds; suspended on evidence so substantial that the very thing predicted turned out, and on this ship from which he was excluded they discovered over twenty bogus merchants, each of them having a letter to Yip On, the suspended interpreter, and a bag of gold to be given to him. All these were exposed as frauds by the suspension of this interpreter, and yet the minister from British Columbia, who should have been the first to put a stop to these frauds, which according to public rumour had been going on then for three years, and perhaps longer, allowed Bob Kelly to send this telegram:

> Most important that Yip On shall be continued as Chinese interpreter.

Most important to whom? Not to the public, because the public were making $500 a head, out of these twenty men coming in at that moment, and which they would not have made had it not been for the suspension of Yip On.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My hon. friend is quoting in a very untruthful way; untruthful in respect to the impression created.

He says that certain evidence had been given incriminating Yip On, with respect to handling a certain amount of money, and I then recommended that he be reinstated. One event came after the other; my hon. friend is misconstruing it.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I am sorry to have to contradict the minister so often, but he is absolutely wrong.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am absolutely right.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Absolutely wrong. His own evidence gives as a reason—I was going to say an excuse, but I do not want to use hard language as the minister does—his own evidence gives as a reason for sending this telegram, that the Foster inquiry in connection with Yip On, had at this stage been completed.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Quite true.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Four days after that date, when he had time to reflect, he wrote to his colleague the right hon. Sir Richard Cartwright, Minister of Trade and Commerce as follows:

Victoria, B.C., Sept. 24, 1910.

The Right Hon. Sir R. Cartwright, G.C.M.G., Minister of Trade and Commerce,
Ottawa.

My dear Sir Richard:

I notice in the press to-day that you have suspended Bowell for reinstating Yip On without instructions. Bowell, having so acted, is deserving of suspension.

I wired you from Vancouver to the effect that Yip On should be reinstated and that the acting interpreter should not be retained. I did this after being given all the information obtainable. I subsequently had a conversation with Mr. Foster and the information he gave me sustained my view that it would be in the interest of the department in getting to the bottom of the alleged irregularities if Yip On were reinstated, the investigation to be continued both here and at Hong Kong.

I am advised that the Chinese acting interpreter, while Yip On is under suspension, is one of the crookedest in Vancouver.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) W. TEMPLEMAN.

As to the question of dates and the statement of the hon. minister just now that there was no information disclosed as to Yip On's complicity when he sent these telegrams and that the disclosure came subsequent to the telegrams, I propose to read one or two telegrams which will establish the facts. I have before me exhibit No. 404, a telegram dated Ottawa, Sept. 14, 1910—six days before the minister's telegram:

Sherwood to Foster.

Confidential.

Instruct Customs Officers Newbury and Bowell to relieve Mong Kow and Yip On from duty temporarily prior to arrival Empress of India pending special investigation and then proceed as suggested in your letter September seventh provided Lew will act in capacity indicated. Special care must be taken to prevent all communication with Chinese after arrival steamship at Victoria. Bowell and Newbury will be instructed by Chief Controller. Chinese to accept instructions from you.

Then on September 17th, I have a memo to the deputy minister of Trade and Commerce, reading as follows:

Following telegram was received by me at six o'clock last evening, "Yip On, Lew and I leaving to meet 'Empress'.

(Signed) A. P. Sherwood,
Commissioner of Police.

Exhibit No. 146 is a telegram dated Vancouver, September 20, 1910, which reads as follows:

To Sir Richard Cartwright, Ottawa—

Most important that Yip On should be continued as Chinese interpreter. David Lew's claim should not be entertained. Friends here strongly recommend Yip On.

W. TEMPLEMAN.

In regard to the dispute between the hon. minister and myself, I think I have proved the case absolutely. On the 20th of September we have an official report from Foster to Sherwood, his chief, that the discovery was made of Yip On's rascality at Victoria. That was no matter of secrecy. It was on the tongue of every employee in the customs service, and they were making a regular hubbub in Vancouver. Is it conceivable that these gentlemen, the heads of the patronage committee in Vancouver, should be closeted with the hon. minister on such serious business, on the night of the 20th September, and have no knowledge of a matter officially communicated from Vancouver that very day by Foster to his chief, Sherwood? I say the evidence is indisputable that these gentlemen knew all about the discovery of Yip On's complicity in this transaction before the date of this telegram. It is impossible that it should be otherwise. Of course, I cannot say that the hon. minister knew, but I go back to my former premises that it is an act of the most gross impropriety, in a matter so grave as this, for him to allow his name to be used, and telegrams to be sent in his name by any person whatever, least of all by persons bearing the character of these men with respect to these matters in Vancouver.

Apparently the patronage committee at Vancouver got very busy, as will appear from the following:

Sept. 23, 1910.

To Sir Richard Cartwright, Ottawa—

Collector Bowell should be reinstated. Our friends unanimous for Yip On. Think dept. acting unwisely.

J. H. SENKLER.
Pres. Lib. Assn.

It is only fair to Mr. Senkler to tell the House that he says he never signed that telegram.

On September 24th we have another telegram to the Hon. Charles Murphy, Ottawa, reading as follows:

Friends here very indignant way O'Hara ignoring our recommendations. Yip On should be reinstated. If not ask our association for recommendation. Association wired Sir Wilfrid.

ROBERT KELLY.

Here is another one dated September 24th, to the Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Ottawa:

Recommendation of our minister and Liberals for re-instatement of Yip On should be carried out. Hip On has support of Immigration and Customs officials. Complaints against Yip On not sustained. Our friends indignant at O'Hara's drastic action.

J. H. SENKLER.
For Liberal Association.

This telegram is said to be another forgery. That the telegram came from the Liberal executive at Vancouver is not disputed, but Mr. Senkler says that they had no right to sign his name to it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is any reason given as to why Yip On should be put back into the service?

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). No reason whatever is stated as to why he should be put back. There was a reason stated why Lew should not be continued as interpreter, and that was because all these gentlemen represent him to Ottawa as being a person of bad character. In the light of the revelations respecting Yip On, it seems to me their judgment is somewhat defective. In any event the fact remains that it was most important that Yip On should be reinstated in the public service, notwithstanding the fact that he had been caught red-handed in this rascality at Victoria. It is a peculiar thing that we have the hon. minister from British Columbia (Mr. Templeman) lending himself to the suggestion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). When was the first information that documents incriminating Yip On were in the possession of the government, before or after this?

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Before this. The explosion at Victoria took place on the 18th September, when the new interpreter and inspector went on the ship and discovered these incriminating documents. On his return to Vancouver two days after the discovery he made his official report. This is where our friend Bob Kelly comes in. He engaged in the attempt to paralyse the inspector by giving him as an associate the man primarily responsible for the frauds, and who, of course, would prevent him from making any further discovery.

We had an argument in this House the other day as to whether or not the minister sent a telegram asking for the discontinuance of the investigation. The argument was invited by himself, because when he arose, it seems to me with a guilty conscience, he put these words in my mouth, when as a matter of fact I had not said anything of the kind. What I had said was that the minister sent a deterrent telegram to the department at Ottawa. He immediately rose to say it was absolutely untrue that he had sent any telegram asking for the stopping of the investigation. I ask any reasonable man whether that is not playing upon words, whether it can be dignified by any better term than quibbling, when a minister and his associates sent telegrams which in effect would stop any effective investigation although in express terms they did not say so, to make the bald denial in the House that they ever sent any telegram advising the stopping of the investigation. This would have been the wrong term to use in any event because according to the minister himself, Inspector Foster had completed his investigation; having obtained sufficient evidence to justify the further inquiry, which, at Mr. Foster's request, was held by this Royal Commission. Yet we find the minister asking to have Yip On reinstated to continue for seven years more the irregularities which he and his associates had carried on for seven years unchecked. With further reference to whether or not this had the effect of stopping the investigation I would like to read to the minister the evidence of one of his friends.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The hon. member has denied that he had suggested that I had used any influence to stop the investigation. The hon. gentleman said:

This shows how carefully the ministers of the Crown, under this government, administer their departments, when a minister will deliberately advise his colleagues to stop investigation into a fraud of this kind.

That is what I denied.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I think the minister did advise, in effect, the stopping of the investigation. I will read from his friend, Harry Senkler, to show that he, too, thought he advised his colleagues to stop the investigation and I could read other evidence to show that that belief was wide spread.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Read it all.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). The evidence here would take 200 hours to read.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Then do not make insinuations.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I am not making insinuations; I am making direct statements. Mr. Senkler, at page 366 of the evidence, question 2895, said:

Q. Do you, of your own knowledge, or through your association with members of the Liberal party in this city, know or believe that there are any men profiting by graft through Chinese immigration frauds?—A. I do not believe there is any as far as the Liberal Association or its members are concerned. From what appears in the papers it may be there is money being made out of this Chinese business, but if so it has been done by people who had no connection with the Liberal Association, either personally or any other way.

Q. And it has been done in such a way that the Liberal Association has known nothing about it?—A. Then when this matter first came up the matter of the investigation there, when, I think you, Mr. Grant, and Mr. Farris acted as counsel, I was away and while I was away there was one telegram sent in my name by some individual members of the committee to Ottawa which was, I think, that this investigation should not go on.

There was the interpretation of a telegram identical in terms with that of the minister, translated by the man in whose name it was sent 'which was, I think, that this investigation should not go on.' Now, I ask the House whether I am justified in forming the impression formed by the very gentleman in whose name the deterrent telegram was sent.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What was the reason suggested why the investigation should not go on?

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). There was no reason suggested, simply an urgent request that Yip On should be reinstated as interpreter.

If there is one member of this House, and I am glad there is one, who comes out of this business creditably, so far as his personal actions are concerned, that member is the first minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). He turned a deaf ear to all the remonstrances of all his influential friends on the coast. I shall read some correspondence with him.

(Private.)

Prime Minister's Office, Ottawa,
October, 3, 1910.

My Dear Senkler,—I write you with reference to the Chinese frauds, as to which you have telegraphed me. On receipt of your telegram I communicated at once with the Department of Trade and Commerce and there found that there was a very strong prima facie case against the Chinese interpreter, and that he had been properly suspended. I cannot, therefore, understand why these frauds should not be exposed. The public are so keen about this Oriental business that we will put ourselves in very serious trouble if we were to create the impression that we are not doing our full duty to have the law faithfully carried out. If you have any reason to think otherwise, please write to me and give me your full views.

Let me avail myself of this opportunity to again offer you my sincere thanks for the great assistance which you gave me and my friends in our last visit to British Columbia.

Believe me, ever,
My dear Senkler,
Yours very sincerely,
WILFRID LAURIER.

J. H. Senkler, Esq., K. C.,
Vancouver, B.C.

While the minister from British Columbia, on the ground at Vancouver, had made most diligent inquiry as he said, and had found no reason why Yip On should not be reinstated, and took the trouble to authorize that telegram, the first minister, 3,000 miles away, had found that there was a very strong prima facie case against the Chinese interpreter, and that he had been properly suspended.

The following is from Mr. Senkler:

(Personal.)

October 8, 1910.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier,
Ottawa, Ontario.

My Dear Sir Wilfrid,—I have your telegram of the 26th of September, which reads as follows:

'Sorry cannot agree with you. Have looked into matter and prima facie case against Yip On so strong as to warrant suspension, matter will be looked into again but meantime suspension must be maintained.'

That was Sir Wilfrid's attitude from the beginning:

I presume that this was in answer to a telegram which was sent to you in my name by the executive of the association on the 23rd of the same month. It also seems that a further telegram was sent by the committee in my name on the 24th of September, but whether it was sent to yourself or to Sir Richard Cartwright, I have not been able to find out. As a matter of fact, I think the committee were wrong in sending a telegram of that kind in my name in my absence. If they thought so strongly on the matter as they apparently did, they should have sent it in the name of the secretary, or vice-president, or acting chairman. However that may be, I desire to write you in connection with my ideas thereon.

I personally do not know very much about the former interpreter for the government, Yip On. He has been a witness in one or two matters that I have been connected with, but otherwise I know nothing about him. Chinese interpreters, as well as most others of the same nationality are, in my opinion, proverbially dishonest and need a great deal of watching, and if it were at all possible to obtain a Chinese interpreter who is not a Chinaman, it would be infinitely preferable to one of the Chinese race.

I wish also to draw your attention to the fact that a message came to the press of this city from Ottawa, that the Liberal committee of this city Mr. Ralph Smith and Mr. Templeman were all endeavouring to stop the investigation which was started in connection with the immigration of Chinese. I, of course, cannot tell you how this dispatch ever came to be sent, but it is entirely wrong so far as our committee, at any rate, is concerned. When I returned home and found what had been done I called a further meeting of the committee, and every man of the committee agreed that a thorough investigation into this matter should be taken, and, when I was approached personally by the press in connection with it, I told them so, and had the dispatch from Ottawa flatly contradicted.

I am to-day writing you in answer to your letter of the 12th of September.

Yours very truly.

This is not signed, but it is evidently the duplicate copy of Mr. Senkler's letter. In passing I may mention that this is one of the gentlemen said to have been in the room in the Vancouver Club when the Templeman telegram was sent.

Now we will return to the commissioner. He gives a long inner history of the proceedings taken to ensure exposure of these frauds. On page 30 of his report he says:

Concurrently with these wires, however——

That is, the wires to Ottawa announcing the discoveries——

——events were happening at the coast which gave Messrs. McInnes and Lew considerable trouble and out of which grew the charges against the hon. Mr. Templeman, and the members of the Liberal executive hereinbefore outlined. Some inkling of Mr. McInnes' activities leaked out in Vancouver, and Mr. R. Kelly heard of them. His information was that Mr. McInnes was endeavouring to oust Yip On for the purpose of installing D. Lew in his place, and that the charge was desired not from any desire to improve the service, but for the personal benefit of those seeking to bring it about. (See Kelly, p. 3108, q. 34275-6, and p. 3133, q. 34427-32.) To test Mr. Kelly's candour on this matter, Mr. Grant was specifically requested by the commission to cross-examine in reference thereto. (See Kelly, p. 3144, q. 34504). The result is set out at pp. 3145, q. 34505), and shows that Mr. Kelly believed what he alleged.

It was well known in Vancouver that there was great rivalry between the Canadian Pacific railway steamship line and the Blue Funnel line to secure the Chinese passenger traffic. It was known also that Yip On's uncle was the Canadian Pacific railway agent for Chinese passenger traffic in Vancouver, and that Sam Kee, a friend of Mr. Lew, acted in a similar capacity for the Blue Funnel line. As will be seen later, the interpreter could do a great deal in the way of influencing the passenger traffic to one of the other line by making entrance of incoming Chinese difficult or easy at his pleasure. Mr. Kelly from the information he had of the activities of Mr. Lew, believed his object was to secure control of the post of interpreter for the benefit of the Blue Funnel line (see Kelly, 3134, q. 34429-31), and (p. 3145, q. 34,-507-9, and p. 3146, q. 34509-10) and from other information he had, he believed Mr. McInnes was the man behind the whole investigation from the start, and that Mr. McInnes had brought it about and was active in it, not for any improvement in the public service, but to further his personal interests (p. 3110, q. 34276, and p. 3145, q. 34508).

These two beliefs actuated Mr. Kelly in what he did. The motive he attributed to Mr. Lew was not proven before the commission, but sufficient was proven to indicate that Mr. Lew had his eye on the position of interpreter.

Good Mr. Kelly—Mr. Kelly, the saviour of his country, the leader of Tammany, so reformed that he would foil this great evil, would persuade the minister to send telegrams in his name, and would send wild expostulations in his own name, because he thought some person had some personal end to serve by his recommendations to the government! Is there anybody in Vancouver except this commissioner who would write in that way of Mr. Kelly? Can we attribute this to anything except the inherent good nature of one Irishman, Denny Murphy, dealing with another Irishman, Bob Kelly? I do not think this has been taken anywhere for anything but a joke. I think again the commissioner has been overwhelmed by the political asssociations connected with his appointment. Here is what he says of another hero:

Just at this juncture Mr. Templeman came to Vancouver, and at a dinner at the Vancouver Club, on the evening of either September 20th or September 21st, probably September 20th, 1910, met Messrs. Kelly, Senkler, McDonald and others. After dinner he went into a room with the three named. He was informed by them that Yip On had been suspended, and that Mr. Lew, who he was told was crooked, was acting in his place, and was wholly unfit for such a position of trust, because of his undesirable character. Further that the investigation was practically over, and that nothing in particular had been elicited against Yip On. (Templeman, p. 3436 and 3437). As to this last statement, whilst as will be seen, Mr. Foster had failed to get any legal evidence against Yip On, he did have in his hands moral proof, if credited, of his complicity in the frauds. The parties interviewing the minister had not approached Mr. Foster to ascertain what he had because of their belief, justified in the opinion of the commission, that he was being used to promote the McInnes' intrigue. (Kelly p. 3144, q. 34502-06). Instead they had interviewed Mr. Bowell, comptroller, and Colonel Worsnop, surveyor of the port of Vancouver, and Dr. Munro, medical inspector, who all assured them of their thorough belief in Yip On's honesty. (Kelly, p. 3130, q. 31394-7). The fact, however, that Mr. Foster had not been seen must have been told to the minister by his interviewers, for some of them as will be seen, went with him very shortly after the interview, when he set out to ascertain what Mr. Foster really had discovered. (Glover, p. 2479 at top, and Templeman, p. 3448, q. 36,-557,-60.

I would like to contrast that with the minister's statement a little while ago that I had misplaced the date—that at that time nothing had been discovered; that he had sent his telegram first and the discovery had come afterwards. I have proved conclusively by the evidence that the minister was wrong, and I have now the same statement by Commissioner Murphy himself, that Mr. Templeman, after hearing these revelations in the private room at the club, said he had set out to ascertain what really Mr. Foster had discovered—a wise precaution, but which had no effect from the fact that before he set out to see what had leaked out he sent the message to his colleagues instructing them what must be done, what was most important in the interest of some person not yet disclosed.

Whilst there is no direct evidence that Hon. Mr. Templeman was told of the suspicions entertained against Mr. McInnes, it would seem that he was, from Mr. Kelly's evidence (page 3113, q. 34287) and from the minister's statement that the fear expressed to him as a reason for asking prompt action on his part was that Mr. Lew's permanent appointment to the interpretership was then imminent at Ottawa (Mr. Templeman, page 3437, q. 36533). Because of this fear, Hon. Mr. Templeman sent a wire (ex. 417) to Sir Richard Cartwright recommending the reinstatement of Yip On (Mr. Templeman, page 3438 at top page).

I was going to refer to some of the criticism of Mr. Foster by the commissioner, but first must read a letter from the police inspector, found on page 34 of the evidence. Mr. Foster's letter throws so much light on the inner history of the investigation that, in so far as it refers to Chinese matters, it is here set out verbatim.

Ottawa, November 10, 1910.

Dear Friend Lew,—Your letter of November 2 received to-day. I showed it to Sherwood and he had a copy made and he took it to O'Hara. I was just speaking to O'Hara for a few minutes. He was greatly pleased with our work, he told me there was going to be a Royal Commission appointed sure. I had a talk with T. McI., he states you are not the only target that they are firing at from Vancouver, for he has had to stand some pretty hot shots; he says he had the necessary papers to prove them liars, they had him before the Premier twice. Sherwood said when I was talking to him the day I got home that O'Hara wanted to have a talk with me, and he would let me know when he would see me, but so far I have heard nothing about him meeting me. They seem to be leaving everything to the commission. I was talking to Tom again to-day, and he stated that he had a talk with O'H. yesterday, but Tom is afraid Templeman will stop the Royal Commission when he returns from the west, if he can, but I think Temp. say is pretty small or in other words he is a lightweight in this case and particularly with O'Hara now since he has the record of your successor, who is Templeman's appointment. I am returning card, Sherwood said it was not necessary to have a writing expert compare the writing for O'Hara, and he also was convinced what you stated was correct. Sherwood also stated Canadian Pacific railway were going to look fully into your case. You seem to have Sherwood and O'Hara on your side now, but you know you are still in the hands of the politicians.

I was summoned from Edmonton to Chicago the first of November as fingerprint expert to give evidence at a murder trial. I was able to swear positively to the prints, I was there for two days, but I left as soon as I got off the stand and have not heard if the accused was found guilty or not.

Yours respectfully,

E. Foster.

So not only was the opinion prevalent in Vancouver that there was an attempt to stop this investigation, but in the corridors of the departmental buildings at Ottawa the same story was prevalent. Now the judge proceeds to apologize for Mr. Templeman, page 35:

Pursuant to appointment, the minister saw Mr. Foster on the morning of the 21st and heard from him what progress he had made. Mr. Foster informed Hon. Mr. Templeman that he had to get any legal evidence incriminating Yip On, but had acquired knowledge of facts that looked very suspicious. Hon. Mr. Templeman told Mr. Foster of the wire he had sent, and it was agreed the investigation should go on, Mr. Foster suggesting the advisability of sending a secret service man to China. The minister pointed out that it would be well to re-instate Yip On, thus putting him off his guard if guilty, and in the meantime carry on the proposed secret investigation. To this Mr. Foster assented, and with this end in view, the minister's wire was allowed to stand. The interview closed by the minister promising to assist Mr. Foster in every way. (Templeman, page 3439, and 3440.)

This is the judge's report on Mr. Templeman. It shows nothing short of Machiaevellian cunning on the part of the Minister of Inland Revenue, in proposing to deceive the wilely Chinaman into thinking that he really was not suspected by the subtle device of reappointing him to the office he had abused. There has been nothing furnished by the minister in this House that would have led us to suspect the possession by the minister of this marvellous cunning or ability to outwit the Chinese sharper, that has been discovered in this matter by this admiring judge. I think we should take off our hats to Mr. Commissioner Murphy. Now, the evidence at this stage deals with the appointment of counsel to assist Mr. Foster, if perchance he should be able to start prosecution against Yip On. This is important as showing that, while Commissioner Murphy holds Gordon Grant up to public scorn as a person against whom he would, if he could, direct criminal proceedings because of his part in this investigation, as one who should not in decency accept a retainer in the matter yet we find this same young man—I have no knowledge of his qualification for the duties assigned to him, and have to take the estimate given of him by these gentlemen on one side and the other—this young man was at this very time appointed one of the government's counsel to assist Mr. Foster, a fact to which I direct the minister's attention, because if he has the character suggested by Commissioner Murphy, it is most improper that the government should so recklessly appoint him to a position of trust and responsibility in connection with the prosecution of frauds of this kind.

If he does not deserve Commissioner Murphy's condemnation, if his character is gratuitously taken away from him, what are we to think of the commissioner and of the injustice he has inflicted upon this gentleman in his desire to save the skins of other men? I would like the minister to consider that and to make some explanation to this House how he reconciles appointing Mr. Gordon Grant to a position of responsibility representing the government at Vancouver with the wholesale condemnation pronounced by this judge. I do not know whether this extraordinary occurrence is an outgrowth of the system at Vancouver, but I think we are entitled to some assurance that more attention will be paid to the recommendations of this patronage committee so that estimates so contradictory as this cannot be made within one month by the same government official. We get a sidelight on the lack of confidence that some of his colleagues had in the Minister of Inland Revenue. The report proceeds:

On September 30th, 1910, Col. Worsnop, who was to make the investigation of his own volition, he swears, (Worsnop, p. 400), and I see no reason to disbelieve him, wired asking that Mr. Senkler be appointed counsel. His reason was that he was about to preside over the official inquiry as to the status of the passport men, and had known Mr. Senkler many years, who had not only advised him in his official capacity, but was also his personal solicitor. Knowing the importance of the task he was about to undertake, he desired Mr. Senkler's assistance owing to his confidence in that gentleman as a legal adviser (Worsnop), p. 400). Mr. O'Hara replied that Mr. Senkler was on record as opposing the action of the department (Ex. 36).

Apparently, Mr. McInnes had some difficulty in having Col. Worsnop's application turned down, for on October 1, 1910, he wired Grant (Ex. 242) as follows in cipher, which I translate:

Ottawa, October 1, 1910.

Gordon Grant,
Barrister,
William Building,
Vancouver, B.C.

Private.

Worsnop asked O'Hara retain regular departmental counsel. O'Hara refused. Templeman and Murphy insisted but First Minister sustained O'Hara. Worsnop instructed prevent Chinese Consul privately interviewing Chinese. Tell 'Ceder' keep eye on this. Also continue tea trail. Hunter's authority over Worsnop confirmed this morning.

McINNES.

Here we have the minister from British Columbia endeavouring to have appointed as counsel a gentleman who had sat with him in that dark room at the club.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Whose letter is that?

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). That is a telegram from Mr. McInnes.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Of course, that statement is a deliberate untruth.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I take the minister's word for it, but I think I have something under my hand dealing with it.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I never tried to get anybody appointed.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). These two gentlemen are prominent members of the Liberal party; far be it from me to judge between them. Mr. McInnes there says that Templeman tried to have this gentleman, who wished to have the thing hushed up, appointed as counsel. Templeman says that McInnes' statement is untrue. I leave it to themselves to settle. He followed this by a detailed statement by letter of his doings (Ex. 276). The document will repay perusal:

Private.

October 1, 1910.

Gordon Grant, Esq.,
Barrister, Vancouver, B.C.

Re Chinese affair.

Dear Sir,—I practically staked my reputation with the powers that be in making good provided I was given a free hand, and my suggestions followed. They have not gone back on me.

I call the minister's attention to the fact that this gentleman whom he so lightly reviled in the House just now is the personal friend and confidant of the First Minister, the private adviser of the First Minister, and the right hon. gentleman's confidence in him is shown in the correspondence a number of times. This confidant of the First Minister writes to Gordon Grant of Vancouver:

—and am confident now will back me to a finish—but the position has been fierce. This very morning the Secretary of State sent word to O'Hara to cancel the appointment of yourself and Ferris and appoint Senkler in your places. O'Hara refused and appeal was made to the Premier. I wired you the result half an hour ago. This is a big chance for Ferris and yourself, Gordon—a keen interest is being taken over here in the matter especially in view of the stand taken by Templeman, Ralph Smith, Senkler and the Liberal executive on behalf of the accused and against the investigators.

That is a very definite statement.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is also untrue.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). The statement is made by the confidential friend and adviser of the First Minister himself. I would like if the First Minister had been present to hear his colleague denounce his private adviser in this way. The suggestion of a royal commission came on October 12, as far as I can find out, and not from those quarters in Vancouver that professes to be so anxious to have an investigation, but from Inspector Foster himself. There seems to have been no action taken until a letter of October 24, written by Judge Grant, another good Liberal, was delivered to the government. Here is another quotation from the judge's report, showing that he had an extraordinary view of some of the circumstances to which he referred. He says on page 48:

> The whole plan having thus come to naught, Messrs. Grant and Lew, associates of Mr. McInnes, determined to make things as interesting as possible before the commission for the minister, and such members of the Liberal executive as were known to be his strong supporters, and personal friends.

The judge indulges in the extraordinary course of supplying motives for his witnesses. He does not adduce any evidence in support of it, but he supplied the evidence gratuitously out of his own consciousness, and further proceeds:

> In justice to Mr. McInnes it must be said that there is nothing on the record to show that he was a party to this. He, indeed, was unwilling to appear at the hearings at all and wired the commissioner that he had no direct knowledge that would throw light on the subject of the inquiry (McInnes, page 1712, q 13631, and exhibit 235). The charges were accordingly made and the telegrams quoted as proof. In the light of all the foregoing the commission finds not only that the charges were entirely without foundation, but that the sending of the telegrams were very much in the public interest.

That is a recommendation which I think must stigmatize this report as hopelessly biased. I do not care who makes the report; any commissioner who will find that the sending of a telegram for the reinstatement of Yip On as interpreter after he has been shown to have been looting the treasury for seven years—and this recommendation on the very eve of Yip On becoming a fugitive from justice, and in face of the commissioner's own well brought out statement as to on what grounds Yip On should be prosecuted—the fact that he should report that the sending of these telegrams was in the public interest, passes my comprehension.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does he mean that Yip On ought to have been reinstated?

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I do not see how it could mean anything else but that Yip On should have been restored to the public service. He says that the commission find not only that the charges were without foundation, but that the sending of the telegrams was very much in the public interest. The telegrams were that Yip On should be reinstated, that the party friends wanted this, and that the Liberals were indignant at the drastic action of O'Hara.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was there not the most positive evidence in the possession of the government at that time that Yip On was guilty of these frauds?

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Why, yes, this very judge who says it was in the public interest to send the telegram that Yip On should be reinstated, makes this very report on Yip On. I think I am justified in reading this whole report in view of the very extraordinary finding.

> First.—Yip On and Yip Sue Poy are partners in a mercantile business at Vancouver.
> This fact was admitted by Yip On before the inquiry. The first question to be considered is whether evidence given by Yip On at the commission can be used against him at the trial. Immunity was offered him as to such evidence, but his counsel declined to accept it, stating that to do so would weaken his position. His counsel, however, intimated that such evidence could not be used against Yip On, even after such offer of immunity had been made was rejected.
> If it is concluded that such evidence cannot be used, then proof of the partnership can doubtless be obtained obiter.
> Second.—Yip On was the Chinese interpreter at Vancouver, from 1902 to 1910.
> This fact will be easily proven by the customs officials.
> Third.—During Yip On's term of service as interpreter, Chinese who were not merchants, were passed through the customs as merchants exempts. Their real status was known to Yip On, and he was acting as interpreter when they entered as such exempts.
> These facts can be proven by the evidence of Fung Chang Ning, p. 3027, et seq., and by the evidence of Yip Dit Chor, p. 2340, et seq., and of Yung Jem Sun, p. 2347, et seq. The evidence of the two last is unsatisfactory as there was a night's interval between their evidence in chief and their cross-examination and they, to a large extent, then denied what they had stated in chief. However, doubtless leave to cross-examine them as hostile could be obtained.

It is noted that all these men entered Canada in 1907, and therefore the limitation provisions would probably apply as to any prosecution under the Act itself. Mr. McCrossan suggests such prosecution might be laid under section 573 of the Criminal Code.

Fourth.—Great numbers of Chinese entered Canada at Vancouver as merchants exempts.

This can be proven from the records.

Fifth.—A private investigation into Chinese matters was started in August, 1907, at Vancouver. Can be proved by Mr. Foster.

Sixth.—On September 3rd, 1910, a warning cable (Ex. 60) was sent from Vancouver to Hong Kong.

This can be proved by the telegraph staff.

Seventh.—Yip On admitted in the box that Ex. 63 was in his hand-writing. He also wrote several specimens by direction of counsel for the government when in the box. Messrs. Sproat and Cunningham, handwriting experts, using Ex. 60, and the specimens written in court as a basis of comparison, expressed the opinion that the sender's address on the back of Ex. 60 (which is unsigned) was that of Yip On. This signature is Yip On's firm name and address.

Eighth.—On September 6th, 1910, three warning cables, Ex. 52, 53 and 13 a, all signed Hing Sam, were sent to various parties in Hong Kong.

Can be proven by telegraph staff.

Ninth.—Hing Sam is one of three names borne by Yip On.

Can be proven by his admission in the box, if admissible. If not, possibly evidence may be obtained in Chinatown, Vancouver.

Tenth.—Handwriting experts Sproat and Cunningham, using the same basis of comparison, declared this signature to be Yip On's handwriting. If admission of Ex 60 and specimen made by Yip On are not admissible, difficulty will probably be experienced in getting many specimens of Yip On's writing to use for purposes of comparison at a criminal trial. However, two copies of his firm signature written by himself as given to a bank, can be proven by the bank manager and may serve the experts as well.

Eleventh.—Letters addressed to Yip On as Hing Sam were intercepted on a vessel, 'Empress of India,' on October 7th, 1910, which letters quoted verbatim one cable sent on September 6th, 1910, and indicated fully the nature of the fraud being perpetrated. (Ex. 93 and 94.) Translations of all cables and letters can be had by reference to the commission report.

The rest of the character of this young gentleman, who the commissioner thinks should be reinstated in accordance with the terms of the telegram, I will give after the dinner hour.

At 6 o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). When the House rose at six o'clock, I was quoting 'Murphy on Murphy' that is Commissioner Murphy's summary of the evidence adduced against Yip On and his confederates, the two men whom he now reports it would have been in the public interest to have retained in the public service as recommended by the telegrams of the hon. minister from British Columbia (Mr. Templeman), and of Mr. Robert Kelly and his associates at Vancouver.

This report was made for the information of the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) and was intended to help the hon. minister in arriving at a decision as to whether or not he would prosecute the parties. I will continue reading the summary:

Twelfth.—

These letters bear the signature of Yip Get Woon and the stamp of Nam Mow. agents for Yip On in China. This fact can be proven by Yip Sue Poy and by Yip On's admissions is receivable.

None of the cables of September 6th, 1910, are addressed to Nam Mow, but one is addressed to Yip Get Woon, who is reputed to be Nam Mow's manager.

This can be proven as current report by Lee Mon Kow. No more definite proof is obtainable.

Thirteenth.—

Ex. 337, from Westminster to Hong Kong, addressed "Conclusion", informing him of the fact of Yip On's suspension, and Ex. 330, detailing all steps in connection with the investigation were sent by Yip Sue Poy, Yip On's partner. This can be proven by the operator who received them.

Fourteenth.—

Several other cables, as to which see report of the Commisssion, all dealing with passports, and the investigation can be proven as probably sent by Yip Sue Poy.

(See Wilson's evidence, p. 2192). Translations of all these cables will be found in the main report.

Fifteenth.—

On the first boat intercepted (The China, September 17th, 1910) a number of suspicious letters were taken. One in particular directly implicating Yip On. (See main report).

The defence likely to be set up is also dealt with in the main report. In the opinion of the Commission if Yip On is put upon his defence he will be convicted. He certainly will be if he goes into the box and the jury does its duty.

If these facts do not justify the prosecution of Yip Sue Poy, he might possibly be convicted of perjury, if that crime can be committed before such a forum as the Commission was.

He swore positively that he did not send Ex. 337 and 330. The only corroboration of the operator's evidence that he did send these cables would be the evidence of handwriting experts using specimens written by Yip Sue Poy, whilst in the box by direction of the Government Council that these messages are in Yip Sue Poy's handwriting.

If a prosecution is decided upon, Mr. McCrossan should be employed to conduct it as for any other counsel to familiarize himself with all the details necessary would be a herculean task.

(Signed) D. MURPHY, Commissioner.

You will recognize that 'D. Murphy, commissioner,' thinks that if the jury did its duty Yip On would be convicted at his trial, yet this commissioner finds that it was in the public interest that the hon. minister from British Columbia (Mr. Templeman) and the patronage committee at Vancouver should send telegrams to the government recommending that this criminal should be kept in the public service, holding the responsible position of interpreter. Mr. Speaker, I take the liberty of dissenting from the finding of the commissioner, and I feel quite satisfied that no unbiased man, and no man outside the ring immediately benefiting from the proceeds of these operations will agree with the commissioner that it was in the public interest to recommend the retention of this criminal in office. This emphasizes the evil of the method of appointing this commissioner and the counsel. It seems to me simply monstrous—it is excusable, perhaps, that the hon. ministers at Ottawa should notify their colleague even though there were certain charges against him—more or less grave or more or less trifling, as you like to view it. It seems a little odd, to say the least, that they should notify him to nominate the counsel and the commissioner to try the charges; but it is simply unspeakable that having confided the nomination to him he in turn should ask for recommendations from the patronage committee at Vancouver, and bring into the affair of the nominators of the judge and jury the men accused of complicity in these odious crimes.

I have now to turn to another phase of the rascalities carried on at Vancouver. This relates to stowaways. It was found through an investigation by the Dominion Police officer that there was simply a clear avenue for the escape of stowaways from ships arriving at the harbour of Vancouver. The customs watch was of no avail whatever, and the reason it was of no avail was because the watchmen were recommended by the patronage committee, and the collector—as he said himself—had no effective control over them, he added that if he had the choice of the officers to watch the ships, he would not have any of these men in his employ.

At page 53 of the commissioner's report, I find the following:

Up to last autumn, however, that is subsequent to the reports of Mr. Foster, the government watch at Vancouver was simply farcical, and the port so far as stowaways were concerned practically free, and this to the knowledge of Mr. Bowell, the comptroller, as will be seen

In the first place, but one man was detailed to watch a vessel for the whole night through, that is from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. (Bowell, p. 88, q. 731-2). The practice to the knowledge of the comptroller was for even this one man to leave the ship about midnight to go for lunch (see Bowell, p. 89, q. 738). The comptroller apparently believed this lunch was obtained uptown, but in reality it was taken aboard the vessel, which the one man was supposed to watch, during which time the vessel would be wholly unguarded. Moreover, the man was stationed on the wharf and was expected to watch the gang plank which apparently was in place during the whole night. The water side of the vessel was therefore wholly unguarded, and as admittedly it would be impossible for any one man, even if trustworthy to guard both this and the wharf, the watching staff of Vancouver was clearly not sufficiently numerous. The comptroller was likewise aware of this (see Bowell, p. 88, q. 737-8), and although he asked in a general way for more help he did so apparently more in connection with the general customs service than with the watching of ships. He, at any rate, never reported that ships were left wholly unguarded whilst watchmen went to lunch. (Bowell, 89, q. 740-56).

But even the sight of one watchman was useless, because the men employed were incapable and untrustworthy. Instead of being absent for lunch, they were accustomed to take supper, lunch and a third meal on board the vessels they were watching, so that at three periods between 6 p. m. and 6 a. m., the vessels so far as the government were concerned, were wholly unguarded. (See Busby's report, Sept. 28, 1910. Ex. 194.) At the date of that report, four men were employed as watchmen when their services were required, this being the whole force for day and night service. Mr. Busby reports on them as follows:

W. A. Kent, aged 48, given to drink and unreliable.

T. Physick, aged 63, physically unfit and service unsatisfactory.

H. H. Warburton; 50, cripple and unfit.

J. McPherson, given to drinking and unreliable.

That this report is correct is shown by the evidence of the secret service officer Quinn (p. 973 et seq). He worked as a Canadian Pacific railway watchman on the Vancouver wharf from August 29 to September 29. He states that the government watchmen and the ship's watchman would retire into the interior of the vessel, and frequently spend the greater part of the time there from midnight to 5 a. m. Drinking went on to a great extent. White men, Chinamen, and even on one occasion a white woman went on and off the vessel at will at all hours of the night. Members of the crew went to and fro to the city as they listed.

Here is another paragraph on frauds by entry as merchants, page 68 of the report:

Frauds by Entry as Merchants.

Exempt merchants have likewise shown a marked increase of late years, but this increase has been confined almost entirely to the port of Vancouver. From the time that the head-tax was raised to $500 in 1904 to December 31, 1910, there have been 54 Chinese entered at Victoria under this head (Ex. 412), and of these some 18 were members of a Chinese government official's suite (Newbury, p. 2812 q. 32716) and are classified as new merchants, although they had nothing to do with trade, and presumably they did not remain in Canada at all (Davey, p. 582, q. 30968-70). The true number passed as merchants exempts during these six years was 36, and of these 31 brought Chinese passports (Ex. 363, Davey, p. 2627, q. 31248-50) hereinafter discussed. These were not honoured in Victoria, but independent evidence was in every case required, as shown by the notes on the passports themselves and by the evidence (Davey, p. 2626, q. 31239). Five such passports were rejected in Victoria from the time they were first presented early in 1907 to the date of the commission sittings. Several other passports not in the Chinese language were also rejected there during the same period.

As will be seen in Vancouver, on the contrary, they were the open sesame to free entry. At that port there entered free during the same six years 389 under such passports, and seven were rejected (Ex. 13). Yet the total number of new arrivals of all classes at Victoria since the increase of the head-tax in 1904 was 5,334 (Ex. 412) in Vancouver 5,198 (Ex. 350). These figures are not strictly accurate for under the head of merchants are included merchants who had gone to China from British Columbia and overstayed their year's leave, and returning obtained exemption under the general merchant clause of the Act. There were 194 instances of this at the port of Vancouver during the six years. The commission was furnished with the number of similar cases in Victoria, but it is unlikely that it is greater than the Vancouver number, and in all probability not as great, as the latter city is the point of departure for the mainland, and the Chinese population of the mainland is probably fully as great if not greater than the Chinese population of Vancouver island, for which Victoria would be the more likely point of departure. It can, therefore, be safely concluded that the influx through the port of Victoria was at any rate as great as through the port of Vancouver. Certainly the poll tax number was much greater at Victoria, 4,340 as against 3,451 (see same exhibits). The greatly disproportionate number of exempts, both new merchants, 389 to 36, and merchant's sons, 924 to 579 (same exhibits) at Vancouver is, therefore, significant.

Before dealing with the causes of this, it is to be observed that under the Act as it stands Chinese could, without any fraud on the part of any one in the government employ, qualify and enter Canada as merchants without being at all merchants in the sense intended by parliament. All they would have to do would be to put, say $100 Mexican, or about $50 gold into some business in China, and enter the store or warehouse for a period sufficiently long—say six months—to familiarize themselves with the general method of conducting the business, and then enter Canada as merchants. No cross-examination as to knowledge of business methods would shake them, and the Act makes no provision for exclusion because of the limited amount of capital invested. It does not even require that such applicants must intend to engage in mercantile pursuits in Canada. When it is remembered that $500 in Canadian currency represents over $1,000 in Chinese currency in exchange, and very much more in purchasing power, the incentive to thus qualify is very great, and the Chinese astuteness of mind would doubtless have discovered this long ago had not an easier means by direct fraud been at hand. Vancouver was chosen as the vulnerable spot owing to the laxity of administration there.

There was another class of frauds respecting the importation of opium which is dealt with on page 112 of the report as follows:

As to opium, no evidence whatever was adduced to substantiate the charge that white officials in the service instead of destroying opium when seized, sold it and converted the proceeds to their own use. Mr. Foster investigated this, and reported on October 17, 1910, that it was without foundation (Ex. 171).

And again on page 113.

There is no doubt, however, that opium enters Canada as freely as it ever did, in fact more freely, as there is now no duty to pay (see Mulhern, police inspector, Vancouver, p. 2895, q. 35467; Langley, chief police, Victoria, p. 2895, q. 32960-63). All that has been stated in reference to opportunities for stowaways to come ashore applies, of course, with much greater force to the question of opium smuggling.

As a further commentary on the finding of Mr. Commissioner Murphy, that the minister from British Columbia and his colleagues did a virtuous act, in recommending the reinstatement of Yip On, I wish to read what the government counsel engaged to assist Inspector Foster in his examination, says:

Macdonell, Killam & Farris,
Baristers, Solicitors, &c.,
Notaries Public.
Offices: Rooms 5-9, Flack Block.
Vancouver, B.C., Oct. 15, 1910.

Mr. E. Foster,
Inspector, Vancouver, B.C.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your request for instructions as to instituting criminal proceedings against Yip On and noting that the department here advised you by wire that the decision rests with us as counsel for the department, we beg to advise as follows:

The evidence secured whilst of the strongest nature so far as it goes, would nevertheless in a court of law on a prosecution against Yip On be considered as hearsay evidence and so excluded. For this reason we think a prosecution would fail. At the same time we wish to put ourselves clearly on record as recognizing the importance of the evidence secured as demonstrating to a moral certainty that Yip On and others have been engaged in a well arranged conspiracy which has been in operation for some time for the illegal admission of Chinese into Canada, and we believe that the only effectual way of getting at the bottom of this conspiracy and of determining who is concerned therein is to continue the investigation by Royal Commission,—the inquiry then being directed not merely against the incoming Chinamen but also against the local officials and others who may or may not be implicated. Such a course should lead to the conviction of the guilty and clear the skirts of those who may now be unjustly suspected in the public mind.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) J. W. DEB. FARRIS,
GORDON GRANT,

You will notice that these gentlemen, counsel for the Dominion government, contemplated an exhaustive inquiry before a Royal Commission if one were instituted. Is it any wonder that the persons against whom the inquiry was directed, should reject the idea that these two men, with that in their minds, should be counsel before a Royal Commission and that the local committee, desirous as I have no doubt they were, to shield the guilty party should have used the minister who confided in them for that purpose, and should have prevailed on him to accept their recommendation of a gentleman to be named as commissioner and the gentleman to be named as counsel? It is natural that these persons should try to make their influence felt to throttle the inquiry from the beginning. But what have we to say of the minister who, knowing that from the beginning, sought advice from such quarters and transmitted that advice to his unsuspecting colleagues at Ottawa so that the commission when appointed might be of no good from the beginning.

I have said that this story is of long standing, that it has been reported to the government early enough, and often enough for the ministers to have thorough knowledge of it, and to realize that it was not simply hearsay, but something to be dealt with in the most serious manner. I will not burden the House or the records of the House with the particulars of the various reports received, which were set forth in the evidence, particularly the evidence of the customs inspectors, and the customs collector at Victoria, and in Mr. Justice Murphy's summary of the various reports by Mr. McInnes to various members of the cabinet at Ottawa. But I will take a letter which may well be regarded as the starting point of the official information on the subject, a letter fully borne out by the further communications to the government, and which, if paid attention to by the government, would have enabled the ministers to understand the accuracy of the reports received from time to time to the effect that a well-arranged conspiracy was in progress. This letter, marked 'private and confidential,' and written three years before this important investigation was started, is as follows:

Private and confidential.

Vancouver, B.C., July 11, 1907.

E. S. Busby,
Inspector of Customs.

Sir,—Knowing through public gossip, that there is considerable suspicion attached to the dealings with Chinese entering this port, I beg to report to you a peculiar proposition propounded to me by one Mr. Chin Chan.

Talking with this gentleman one evening, he inquisitively inquired my occupation. On replying I was a 'Tyee' customs, he became greatly interested, and asked me if I would like to make 'heap money,' in a hurry.

Of course I replied in the affirmative. He asked me if I knew Yip On, and on telling him I was very well acquainted with him, he requested me that I go to him, tell him who sent me, and enter on a deal to 'stand in' on the Chinese proposition. I questioned him closely and he informed me it was a very easy thing to work the game, that he 'savvied' all about it. After arranging with Yip On, we (Chin Chan and myself) were to go to China. I was to transact the financial end of it, while he would procure the Chinamen in Canton and Hong Kong. These Chinamen, he said, could be shipped to Vancouver in amounts of 20 to 30 each boat. Each was to pay us from 600 dollars to 700 dollars, Chinese money. A photo and description of each Chinaman was to be sent to Yip On, fictitious names to be given them, and they allowed landing as students, merchants sons, &c. I inquired how Yip On and those at this port would get their 'rake off.' To which he replied 'heap easy.' Put money in bank at Hong Kong, and send draft to Chinese firm in this city, as though it were merely some ordinary commercial transaction. In fact he had every difficulty which I suggested met in a business like way. I promised him I would see Yip On and discuss the matter with him, which of course I had no intention of doing, but he came to see me often, and insisted on my seeing him when I stood him off for several months by telling him that 'Tyees' in Ottawa were watching things closely.

After getting him to tell all he knew in making this deal, I informed him that I could not go as a partner unless I got proof that it could be worked, when he informed me he procured his knowledge from dozens of Chinamen who have arrived in Canada during the last three years. They informed him that they paid $700 or more in Chinese money to Yip Yen at Hong Kong, and not a cent to the government of Canada, when landing at Vancouver. Chin Chan tells me that as many as 25 have come over in one boat, and have told him the story of their trip as above related. He also informs me, that a Chinese firm cleaned $100,000 in one year shipping Chinamen to Canada. I was unable to make out the firm's name owing to his imperfect English.

I do not know whether this information will be of any service to you or the government, but being a government official, I consider it my duty to tender it to you, whether it be valueless or otherwise.

To me it emphazises beyond peradventure, the fact that there is a grand and lucrative scheme by which Mongolians are brought to this country, and by which the government is defrauded out of the capitation tax legally collectable on the same.

I have the honour to be,
Your obedient servant,
(Signed) W. A. BLAIR.

Then, relating to this letter by Mr. Blair, there is a covering letter from Inspector Busby, then stationed at Carcross in the Yukon Territory, transmitting the letter of Mr. Blair to his superior at Toronto. That letter is as follows:

Customs, Canada.
Carcross, Y. T., August 10, 1907.

Confidential.
S. W. McMichael, Esq., I.S.O.,
Chief Inspector of Customs,
Toronto, Ontario.

Sir,—I have the honour to herewith enclose for your consideration, a copy of a letter written me by Mr. W. A. Blair of the Customs, Vancouver, which has been forwarded to me here, respecting the alleged illegal importation of Chinese at the port of Vancouver.

The man named 'Yip On' mentioned in Mr. Blair's letter is the government interpreter at Vancouver.

The man named 'Yip Yen' is, I understand, a relative of 'Yip On's' and was formerly Chinese interpreter at Vancouver for the government, and is at present conducting a business at Hong Kong.

My reason for forwarding you the enclosed letter is, that I believe Mr. Blair to be a careful and trustworthy officer, also that you should be fully informed of any matter likely to affect the interests of the department.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Inspector.

(Enclosure.)

Though this copy is not signed, the address shows that the letter is from Mr. Busby, the inspector.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say that that is all the evidence that I wish to present to the House at this moment. I have shown from these official records: That in July, 1907, official information was given to the government of plans to defraud the revenue in connection with the arrival of Chinese at Vancouver. That from time to time, subsequent to that date, reports were made to the government of the existence of fraud on a large scale, in this connection.

That these reports were verified by investigation made by Inspector Foster of the Dominion police in August and September, 1910, consequent on which information was conveyed to the government that 'certain parasites of the Liberal government' (indicating the Vancouver patronage committee) were involved in the frauds.

That upon the suspension of Interpreter Yip On, on suspicion of complicity in the frauds, the Hon. Wm. Templeman, a minister of the Crown, joined with the Vancouver patronage committee in pressing for the reinstatement of Yip On, which reinstatement would have had the effect of preventing the exposure by Inspector Foster immediately following.

That upon request by Inspector Foster and others for a Royal Commission of inquiry into the frauds, said Hon. Wm. Templeman invited the patronage committee of Vancouver to nominate the commissioner and counsel to conduct the investigation, and procured the appointment by the government, of which he is a member, of the commissioner and counsel thereupon named by the accused patronage committee.

That, contrary to the evidence, the report of said commissioner exculpates said Hon. Wm. Templeman and the Vancouver patronage committee from blame in connection with their efforts on behalf of the guilty interpreter, and makes unjust and uncalled for reflection upon the motives and character of those who procured and gave the evidence of the frauds.

In view of these facts, I move, seconded by Mr. Currie of Simcoe:

That all the words after the word 'that' be struck out, and the following be inserted in lieu thereof.

During the period of three years preceding the commencement of the investigation into the frauds connected with Chinese immigration at Vancouver, the government had been repeatedly warned of the existence of such frauds, and during such period neglected to take any steps to check or prevent them;

That very large sums of money have been lost to the public revenues of Canada by this neglect and default of the government;

That none of the persons guilty of complicity in the said frauds have been prosecuted or punished;

That the course of the government in the matters aforesaid, deserves the censure of this House.

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). Mr. Speaker, I think it was last session, or probably the session before, that my hon. friend for New Westminster (Mr. Taylor) rode another hobby. On three or four occasions the hon. gentleman occupied the time of the House in making speeches, asking questions, reading newspaper reports, as to the whereabouts of the famous outlaw, Bill Miner. So much had the hon. gentleman Bill Miner upon the brain that he even went so far as to charge the Justice Department, or penitentiary authority, with conspiring, or conniving, at the escape of that famous outlaw. So much did my hon. friend prosecute the Bill Miner hobby that he became known in his own home city by the sobriquet of Bill Miner. And to-day, if the men of New Westminster ask where Bill Miner is, they are more apt to say that he is down in Ottawa than down in South Carolina. Now my hon. friend has got hold of another hobby. He has consumed the time of the House on two or three previous occasions. He has occupied, with those associated with him on this question, one day and a greater portion of another day in putting on 'Hansard' the evidence as reported in the Vancouver newspapers of the commission investigating Chinese immigration. He occupied a long time in putting upon the records a great deal of irrelevant matter taken before the commission. I am bound to say that probably one-third or one-half of the evidence taken before the Royal Commission in Vancouver was irrelevant; yet my hon. friend, for the purpose probably of occupying the time of the House, and thinking this was as good a question to kill time with as any other, has taken two or three days to put on the 'Hansard' column after column of evidence that has no particular bearing whatever with the real question of Chinese brought into the country under the Immigration Act. As a matter of fact, my hon. friend to-day has taken nearly three hours to place on 'Hansard' again evidence that he read to some extent from newspapers a day or two ago, but which he takes this time from the official report made by Mr. Commissioner Murphy. I regret very much that my hon. friend has given so much attention to the personal aspect of the evidence. I would have preferred if he had gone into the merits of the question, which, however, he has absolutely not done. I am not here to say that there has been no fraud committed under the Chinese Immigration Act. I believe that during the time we have had Chinese coming into the country, and as long particularly as there has been a $500 head tax, there have been Chinamen coming in, or attempting to come in, without paying that head tax. Smuggling in Chinamen without paying the head tax is a very profitable business indeed. I would not be surprised to learn that the practice was not uncommon, and not only common on the Pacific coast, but not uncommon on the Atlantic coast; relatively to the numbers coming into the country, just as common on the Atlantic coast as on the Pacific coast. My hon. friend has thought well to try and identify me personally in some way with an alleged conspiracy on the part of certain Liberals in Vancouver, a conspiracy between them and the Chinese interpreter to evade the head tax in some way or other, and he intimates that the Liberal party in the city of Vancouver have profited thereby. The other day, in speaking on this very question, when he was reading this voluminous evidence to the House, my hon. friend, in reply to a protest, I think, made by the hon. the Premier, said that hon. members on this side of the House were the beneficiaries of a fund of a million dollars corruptly obtained by smuggling Chinamen into this country. I think I am correctly repeating what my hon. friend said.

It will be my painful duty, he said, to remind these hon. gentlemen every time that they are benificiaries of this million dollar fund now occupying the attention of the House.

On the same day the hon. member for Vancouver referred to the million dollars that had been obtained by somebody by smuggling Chinese into Vancouver. Now, Sir, as a matter of fact, there is not a scintilla of evidence in the entire report of Commissioner Murphy upon which that statement can be based; there is not one statement of any witness whatever implicating any man in the city of Vancouver, any white man, in any respect whatever. I say it is unfair, it is deliberately unfair, it is untrue to make a statement to the House that conveys the idea that any member of the Liberal party in the city of Vancouver, or that I myself in the remotest degree, was connected with any plot or plan that would lead to these results. I say it is a monstrous thing. But it is in line with the hon. gentleman's remarks in this House, the insinuations he has conveyed, the manner in which he read the testimony, and the arguments and conclusions he deduced therefrom—just as unfair and just as untruthful as some of the evidence given before the commissioner by Mr. Joseph Martin, and by Mr. Norman McLean. These men gave their opinion of the members of the Liberal party, of the Premier and others, but they had nothing to say, and knew nothing whatever, about the alleged irregularities with respect to Chinese immigration.

Now, had the hon. gentleman not wasted so much time with the proceedings in Vancouver, I would not have wasted five minutes upon it. I went to Vancouver and gave my evidence. It is on record, but my hon. friend has not done me the justice of reading it, because I answered most of his statements in my evidence. But I feel under an obligation, in justice to myself, in view of what the hon. gentleman has read concerning myself, in view of the letters he has read from Mr. McInnes, Lew and others, I feel bound to give to the House my version of my connection with this investigation. It is not material; but it may be that some hon. members may form a wrong conclusion from what they have heard, and I think in justice to myself I ought to give parliament and the country my sworn evidence before the Royal Commission, only a portion of it, and particularly that portion of it which will form, I think, a very effective reply to the allegations made by the hon. member for New Westminster. I will read the evidence sworn to before the commission which is on record. On this evidence the commissioner founded his conclusion in respect to my connection with the Chinese question or the alleged frauds, or the frauds, because I have not the slightest doubt that there have been frauds, to what extent nobody knows.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was any attempt made to ascertain to what extent?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This commission was for that purpose. The commission has gone into that very fully and nobody can give any better information than the commission does. I am not aware what steps the Trade and Commerce department have taken in that regard. I believe they have been acting upon the information they received from the evidence taken in this investigation and have been making certain changes in the immigration regulations as to interpreters and so forth, but to what extent they have gone I am not advised. Much has been said about a telegram that I sent to Ottawa. The telegram which was sent on the 20th September and was addressed to Sir Richard Cartwright, is as follows:

Most important that Yip On should be continued as Chinese interpreter. David Lew clearly should not be retained. Friends strongly recommend Yip On.

David Lew, I might explain, is a Chinaman who was at that time acting interpreter, as Yip On had been suspended during the investigation by Mr. Foster, a member of the Dominion police force and agent of the Justice department. I want this to be clearly understood by the House because the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Taylor) has been mixing up two investigations. There have been two investigations. In the first place, Mr. Foster was sent by the Department of Trade and Commerce several months before September 20 to carry on a private investigation to ascertain as a detective what he could with regard to irregularities. He had been there about two months when I arrived in Vancouver and that was the first intimation I had that an investigation was going on at all. I will read my evidence.

Q. How did you come to send that telegram?—A. I came to the city of Vancouver, after being in the province of British Columbia two or three months, and spent two or three days meeting friends here who had public business they wanted to talk about. I learned on my arrival here for the first time of the investigations going on regarding frauds in Chinese matters. I was informed then by various people that the agent of the Justice Department, a Dominion policeman, had been here for some months, I think, or some weeks, carrying on a secret investigation to find out what he could as to frauds in connection with the illegal passing of Chinamen. I was also informed that Yip On, the interpreter, had been suspended for the purpose of enabling Mr. Foster to carry on his investigation with a free hand; also that David Lew had been acting temporarily in his place. It was reported to me that the investigation was practically over, on that particular day, September 20 or 21, and that Mr. Foster was about returning to Ottawa; that nothing in particular had been elicited by him in his investigation, and that this man, David Lew, would be a very improper person to put on as permanent interpreter, and that Yip On should be reinstated, and I sent this telegram on that information.

These are the absolute facts. Mr. Foster, the agent of the department of Justice, had been carrying on an investigation which he himself informed me was at an end, he stating that he was preparing his report for Ottawa, that he expected to return in a day or two and that he had not found any evidence upon which he could base a charge against Yip On with any hope of success. He had intimated to me that he had his suspicions, that he did not think everything was all right and that the investigation should continue. I sent this telegram believing that the investigation was over, as it was over. There was no talk of a royal commission for a week afterwards. I sent that telegram to my colleague, Sir Richard Cartwright, believing that I was acting in the best interests of the department. I want it to be understood that I did not know either of these Chinamen, David Lew or Yip On, and I had never seen them. I was simply acting on information received. That information was that David Lew, who was trying to be the interpreter was a very dishonest Chinaman. I was informed by Mr. Senkler, a leading barrister in the city of Vancouver, that he had had a charge of fraud in the police court against David Lew and it would never do for the Dominion government to put him on instead of the old interpreter. So that, I was influenced by these facts.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). At what date was that conversation?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. September 20, the day that the telegram was sent. I was only in Vancouver two days altogether.

I may explain to you how it occurred. It has already been dealt with with a good deal of embellishment and a good many falsehoods, deliberate, in my honest opinion—that at a dinner party at the Vancouver Club I sent this telegram. This is true. Mr. Glover has already dealt with the facts,—some time about ten o'clock I with a number of friends discussed this matter in the visitors' room at the Vancouver Club.

I do not think it is necessary to go into the Vancouver Club incident. I think it is a shameful piece of business in the first place for prejudiced witnesses to give that evidence before this commission and in the next place for my hon. friend to have repeated some of it in this House. The facts simply are that a friend of mine, Mr. Glover, who was not a Liberal at all, a very prominent citizen of Vancouver, invited some friends to the Vancouver Club to dinner at eight o'clock, we were there till about ten o'clock and before leaving I signed this telegram and left it there to be sent. I did not send it to the telegraph office myself. Much has been made of that meeting at the club. Evidence has been given by Mr. McInnes, David Lew, the chinaman, and Mr. Gordon Grant that they had been informed by Mr. Foster that I had called on him at midnight, that I had insisted upon this investigation being stopped and there was the insinuation that I was in a certain condition, presumably under the influence of liquor

That evidence was given before this commission by these three witnesses, and it is sufficient to say that it is not in accordance with the facts. I asked to see Mr. Foster and I proceeded from the club to Mr. Foster's residence, but I did not see Mr. Foster at all until I met him at the Hotel Vancouver next day at ten o'clock. under an engagement made with him, and we had a conversation. The whole evidence given before the commission by the witnesses I have named, with a view of discrediting myself and giving a political tinge to this matter, was absolutely untrue, absolutely unfounded, and had no basis of truth. Mr. Foster who was supposed to have been the gentleman who stated to these three witnesses that I had called after twelve o'clock at night, and that I was in an irresponsible condition, went into the witness box, and absolutely denied that he had ever said anything of the kind. Mr. Foster's evidence is on record, if the hon. member Mr. Taylor cares to read it, denying absolutely that I ever suggested in any way that he should discontinue the inquiry.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I read Mr. Foster's evidence, and I have a very distinct recollection it wound up by saying that Mr. Templeman told him he was sorry he had sent the telgram.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is not quite right either. I had made the statement that Mr. David Lew was crooked, and that he should not be appointed, and here is the evidence.

Mr. TAYLOR (New Westminster). What is the hon. gentleman reading from?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am reading from a copy of the Victoria 'Times.'

An hon. MEMBER. The official evidence is here.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am reading the official evidence as taken by the official stenographer, and a copy of it was given to me personally, and was published in the Victoria 'Times' verbatim. I have not access to the official evidence just now, but I am sure that this is absolutely the same as the official evidence. I had said in my evidence that I objected to David Lew being appointed because he was crooked, and then followed this evidence:

Q. Who represented that to you?—A. Mr. Senkler particularly. He told me there was a charge against him in the police court of some kind of fraud, forgery or perjury, and statements were made that he was not a fit man to be appointed interpreter. I believed what I was told, and I warned my colleague not to put David Lew on as interpreter. The fear was he was going to be put on permanently. I sent that telegram for that reason. I was advised that the chief of police had the same opinion of David Lew, and I was told the collector of customs and the deputy collector, Col. Worsnop, were of the same opinion, and upon the information thus received I sent this telegram.

It is absolutely true that Mr. Bowell, the collector, and Colonel Worsnop, the deputy collector, were also of opinion that Yip On should be reinstated, and that David Lew should not be appointed, and I was informed of that at the time.

I thought it was due to my colleague and myself that I should ascertain from Mr. Foster all the information he could give me. I wanted to be certain that in sending the telegram I had acted properly, that it was consistent with the proper carrying on of any further investigation that was contemplated, and I suggested to the friends present that I would like to see him, and never have seen him since that occasion. I was told where he was living. Mr. Glover, I believe, had an auto waiting at the door and we started to go to see Mr. Foster. Dr. Munro was in the lobby of the Vancouver Club. I know him very well, and his standing, and I asked him what there was in this matter anyhow. He said he didn't think there was much in it. I said I wanted to see Mr. Foster and he told me where to call, and we started over to Glenwood chambers.

Dr. Munro is the medical inspector of the Immigration Department.

Dr. Munro had preceded us, and I met him at the door. He ran upstairs and returned and said Mr. Foster had retired. I asked him to see if Mr. Foster would make an appointment to meet me at 10 o'clock next morning at the Vancouver hotel. Mr. Foster met me at the Vancouver hotel the following day, the 21st or 22nd, as the case may be, and told me what he had been doing. He said he had been here a considerable time quietly investigating, and that his work was at an end, and he was now proceeding to make out his report to send to Ottawa. He further said he had failed in obtaining information that would incriminate Yip On. At the same time he told me about an incident at Victoria when he went down to get on board an incoming steamer that had Chinamen aboard, to intercept them; that Yip On's brother, or cousin, or friend, had reached the incoming steamer and got at the Chinamen ahead of him and put them on their guard. He also said that although he had failed in securing the information he expected to get, that he felt convinced that there was something wrong. I told him about the telegram I had signed. We discussed the question of continuing the investigation and I believe we agreed that it should be continued. Something was said about accomplices in China and the advisability of sending a secret service man to Hong Kong. I thought it would be a good thing to continue the investigation at both places. There was no talk at that time of a Royal Commission. I promised to assist him in any way I could.

The departmental agent, Mr. Foster, did intimate to me that he was suspicious there was something wrong, but he had not the evidence that would incriminate Yip On. Having told Mr. Foster that I had sent the particular telegram, I discussed the matter with him, and we agreed that the advice as given Sir Richard Cartwright was not improper advice, that there was nothing at the particular moment against Yip On, that it was good advice and it should stand. I discussed with others the fact that if the information I had received was not correct, and if there was anything incriminating Yip On I would countermand the telegram. I so stated to Mr. Foster, but meanwhile I said I would allow that recommendation to stand, and I did.

Q. Had you any particular reason in wiring for the reinstatement of Yip On?—A. No; I told Mr. Foster the purport of the telegram I had sent, and when he told me he had failed in getting anything incriminating against Yip On I felt the telegram was alright. I pointed out to him that it would be good policy to reinstate Yip On and send secret service men to Hong Kong and Vancouver and carry on a secret investigation, Yip On having been reinstated would be off his guard. I believe that yet. Mr. Foster said that would probably be a good plan. I signed the telegram before I saw Mr. Foster, and I had it in my mind that if he would give me any information that would convince me that it should not have been sent that I could countermand it and give Sir Richard Cartwright other information.

Events followed this very rapidly. I went over to the city of Victoria the day afterwards, and I saw in the newspapers that Mr. Bowell, the controller of Chinese immigration, had been suspended because he had of his own motion reinstated Yip On without instructions from the department. I then wrote to my colleague, Sir Richard Cartwright, the following letter:

Victoria, B. C.,
September 24th, 1910.

The Right Honorable Sir R. Cartwright,
G. C. M. G.
Ottawa.

My dear Sir Richard,—

I notice in the press to-day that you have suspended Bowell for reinstating Yip On without instructions. Bowell, having so acted, is deserving of suspension.

I wired you from Vancouver to the effect that Yip On should be reinstated and that the acting interpreter should not be retained. I did this after being given all the information obtainable. I subsequently had a conversation with Mr. Foster and the information he gave me sustained my view that it would be in the interest of the Department in getting to the bottom of the alleged irregularities, if Yip On were reinstated, the investigation to be continued both here and at Hong Kong.

I am advised that the Chinese acting as interpreter while Yip On is under suspension is one of the crookedest in Vancouver.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) W. TEMPLEMAN.

Continuing the citation from my evidence, I said:

In saying Lew is the crookedest man in Vancouver, I want to add that the statement is not made on any personal knowledge, but from information received from Mr. Senkler and the other gentleman I have named, and also because I was informed the chief of police in this city had no confidence in him.

Now, the difficulty in getting a Chinese interpreter at that particular moment was very great. It is not an easy thing to get a qualified Chinese interpreter, to discharge the duties, and there are very few in the country who are not Chinamen.

An hon. MEMBER. Are there no white men in the country who can speak Chinese?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There are a very few.

I received a telegram from the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce asking me to procure, if possible, an interpreter who would take the place of Yip On, who it was determined by the department would not be reinstated. The department had at the same time decided not to appoint David Lew. I sent a telegram which I think is important as showing my intention and my opinion on the question of interpreters. The telegram I refer to reads as follows:

Victoria, B. C., Sept. 30th.

Sir Richard Cartwright, Ottawa,—

Replying to O'Hara's telegram I nominate for temporary service pending the conclusion of investigation, H. Arthur, 513 Cotton Building, Vancouver. He is English. Lived all his life in Canton. Understands and speaks Canton dialects. His temporary employment will enable you to learn his qualifications. He is about 40 years of age, and impresses me favourably. I have no knowledge of him personally. You want a man who is not a Chinaman.

(Signed) W. TEMPLEMAN.

Then I continued my evidence as follows:

I recommended Mr. Arthur, who appeared to be an educated man, and I thought he would be a proper interpreter. I thought it would be improper to appoint a Chinese interpreter in Vancouver under existing circumstances. I have a copy of a telegram to Col. Worsnop from Mr. O'Hara instructing him to employ Mr. Hugh Arthur. I understand Mr. Arthur was not satisfied that he could interpret accurately all the dialects and didn't accept the position. The department then wanted another interpreter recommended, and I recommended, after being advised, Pung Chu Long. That is absolutely my whole connection in the matter. I returned to Ottawa sometime about the 1st or 2nd of October. At that time I suppose the investigation was concluded. I had no knowledge directly or indirectly of the selection of Mr. Farris and Mr. Grant to conduct deportation proceedings. I know nothing whatever about that or about the reasons given for the appointment of a Royal Commission until I arrived at Ottawa, and was consulted by Sir Richard Cartwright. That is the whole knowledge I have. It is a slanderous thing that any person, by inuendo or implication, would try to attach to me the charge that I, a minister of the Crown, would try to circumvent an investigation authorized by a colleague. It is an outrage. I have come here to go on record with regard to both charges. They are deliberate falsehoods.

I had no knowledge that a royal commission was going to be appointed. Certain evidence had been obtained in the preliminary investigation by Mr. Foster at Vancouver, and from certain deportation proceedings which had been taken, and when they concluded that they had obtained sufficient evidence to warrant the department in the appointment of a royal commission I approved of it, and after consultation with Sir Richard Cartwright, I suggested as commissioner Mr. Justice Murphy, a very prominent member of the judiciary, and a responsible, able and reliable judge of the Supreme Court.

An hon. MEMBER. He is all right politically.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. He is all right personally and every other way He is absolutely one of the best and purest minded men we have on the bench in British Columbia. Mr. McCrossan, who conducted the proceedings for the government, is also one of the leading young barristers of the city of Vancouver. There could not have been two better appointments made, as the results would show. If I had any criticism at all to make of the commission it would be that a lot of irrelevant matter was permitted to go on the record; however, that is erring on the right side. No evidence having any bearing on the question was ruled out.

I think this will dispose of the question so far as I had any personal connection with it. The attempt that has been made by my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Taylor) on this occasison and on former occasions, was with a view to connecting myself and the Liberals of the city of Vancouver with an attempt to burke the inquiry. I absolutely deny any attempt of that kind, either on my own part, or on the part of the Liberals of Vancouver. I think it is an outrageous thing, and I say to this House that there is no foundation in fact for it, nor has there been any evidence adduced which would substantiate any such charge. I do not desire to delay the proceedings, or to kill time, but there are a few points in reference to the question to which I would like to refer.

The enforcement of any law respecting the immigration of Chinamen is a very difficult proposition; it has always been so, it always will be so. There were very few difficulties, I am advised, up to the time the head tax was increased, some six years ago. Previous to that time there were certain exemptions. As the law stood, Chinamen were required to pay a tax of $100, and for a number of years before that $50, and there was very little temptation to the Chinamen to smuggle themselves into the country or enter it by false pretenses. Under the law as it exists now, there are certain exemptions. As the law stands, Chinamen are required to pay $500 head tax with exemptions of, among others, merchants, their wives and minor children, tourists and men of science. The great difficulty with the department for a number of years has been to define the term 'merchant' in such a way that ordinary Chinamen might not come in under that designation. Merchants among Chinamen are very numerous. Chinese firms are sometimes very large, there may be a dozen members of a firm; merchants may be almost anything; peddlers of green vegetables may be merchants. So the Chinaman could put the most liberal interpretation on the term 'merchant.' The frauds committed during recent years have been by the introduction of labouring men as merchants. They have received consular certificates in China, duly signed by Chinese viceroys or officials of some standing, as merchants when, as a matter of fact, they were not merchants. The certificates have been given, the department believes, by the Chinese authorities in good faith, but they have been trafficked in on the other side. That is one explanation of the case with which Chinamen have come in as merchants when they were probably simply labouring men and should have paid the $500 head tax. The law, therefore, as it exists at present is lax, it allows the Chinamen to interpret almost for themselves the word 'merchant,' and if they are permitted to come in under the passports issued by Chinese authorities it is very difficult for the officials on this side of the Pacific to keep them out. The department was fully cognizant for years of the difficulties of administering the Act, particularly of describing merchants, and the department prepared an Act session before last, but owing to the pressure of business it was not then presented to the House. This session a Bill is on the Order Paper amending this very clause and making it more difficult for Chinamen to enter the country as merchants. The onus of proof under the Bill now before parliament and which might before this have had its second reading but for the delays caused by the long speeches of our friends opposite, provides that the burden of proof in respect to the profession of the incoming Chinaman shall be with the Chinese, and also that the burden of proof of the right of any Chinamen in Canada to be in Canada shall be with the Chinaman.

Mr. BARNARD. Did not the report of the commissioner state that there was no illicit entry in Victoria?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The report of the commissioner, I believe, is that the Act is very faithfully administered at Victoria.

Mr. BARNARD. Is the law the same?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The same law, yes,

Mr. BARNARD. Then if the officers at Vancouver had exercised the same care and supervision, there is no reason why these frauds should have been perpetrated.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am not saying there is any reason why the frauds should have been perpetrated; the law, according to the report of Commissioner Murphy, has been very faithfully administered at Victoria, while a number of exempts have come in at Victoria, as at Vancouver——

Mr. BARNARD. There is not very much the matter with the law.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Only ten exempts in five years at Victoria.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There must have been more than that. The exempts from the entire province have been up in the hundreds for years, and probably of these one-third have come in at Victoria. The exempts last year numbered about 800. The Bill now before parliament is an attempt to deal with this question, and to make the law more rigid, so that the definition of a merchant should be clearly understood, and it would be impossible to evade the law. The department undertook in the year 1909 to define the term 'merchant' by order in council in order that the law might be more successfully administered, but the Justice Department took the ground that it could not be amended by order in council, and so the department was defeated in its effort to perfect the Act. There is no question that a large number of Chinamen, according to the statement of Commissioner Murphy, have come into the country illegally without the payment of head tax. In the report of the commission at page 110 it is stated that in ten months ending January 31, 1911, there came into Canada through Victoria, Vancouver, Nanaimo, Montreal and other ports, 4,760 Chinamen.

At Victoria 2,512 paid the head tax and 166 were exempt; at Vancouver 1,289 paid the head tax and 545 were exempt; at Nanaimo 9 paid the head tax and 29 were exempt; at Montreal 153 paid the head tax and 25 were exempt; at other Canadian ports 30 paid the tax and 2 were exempt.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Has the minister the figures of the number of merchants who were exempt? At Victoria, I understand, according to the evidence and according to the Victoria papers, there were only 10 of that class.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The exempts under the law are: members of the diplomatic corps and other representatives of the government of China, their suites and their servants; consuls general, consuls and consular agents, their suites and their servants; the wives and children of these persons; merchants, tourists, merchants' sons in certain cases; clergymen of the Christian religion; men of science, students and teachers; the wives and minor children of merchants, clergymen, tourists and men of science, subject to such regulations as may from time to time be made by the Governor in Council. These are all the classes who are exempt under the law. There is no distinction between them, so that it is impossible to tell how many of those 166 who came in at Victoria or of the 545 who came to Vancouver were merchants' sons, and were really labourers.

The commissioner says:

These figures include merchants, resident in Canada who have overstayed their year's leave, but a liberal allowance for this class would be 160. 4,600 Chinamen entered Canada therefore during this period of ten months, of whom 3993 paid the poll tax of $500. A perusal of this report will show that probably more than half of the remaining 607 entered fraudulently, either as merchants or merchants' sons, and were really laborers or artisans.

As I have said, the whole purport of this report is to show that the present Act is lax in its definition of a merchant, and that is the whole weakness of the measure. There is no attempt on the part of any body—there should not be, in view of that report, at all events, and in view of our knowledge of the Chinese character—to deny the fact that Chinamen have been smuggling themselves into Canada, or have been coming in surreptitiously by entering as merchants or as merchants' sons when they should be classed as labourers; and as long as there is a $500 head tax on Chinamen we shall be subject to that sort of thing. I believe that white men would try to smuggle themselves into the country just as much as Chinamen to evade a $500 head tax. I have a complete record of the number of Chinamen who have come into Canada since the head tax was put upon them some years ago. The numbers coming in are of course very large, and I think it will be seen that the ratio of exempts to the total number coming in is no larger now than it has been in past years. During the last three months, up to June 30, 2,124 Chinamen came into Canada and paid the $500 head tax, the largest revenue ever received from that source for that length of time. In three months over $1,000,000 has been paid into the treasury for Chinamen coming into this country. During that time the exempts were 100. How many of these are really exempts or how many are fraudulent, coming in as merchants, nobody knows. The Commissioner has said in his report that he believes that a considerable number have come in. It is all a matter of estimating.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Has the minister any figures of the number that have come in by Montreal or Halifax, and does the government know that this gopher hole at Vancouver has been stopped only to be opened at some eastern ports?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. All the figures I have given are official figures from the department, and are I believe correct. If there is one man more than another responsible for the lax administration of the Chinese Immigration Act, it is Mr. John Bowell, collector of customs of the city of Vancouver. Now, I do not want to attach any stigma to Mr. Bowell. He has been exonerated by the commissioner of any personal knowledge of wrong-doing, although he is spoken of as careless. But all this immigration of Chinamen at Vancouver is under Mr. Bowell.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN.

Mr. Bowell is controller of Chinese immigration in the city of Vancouver, or had been for years until he was suspended. He had the entire management of the Chinese Immigration Act. The Chinese interpreter Yip On was under his instructions. He had to put the guards on the steamers, the whole thing was in his entire charge. Now, Mr. Bowell, as his name indicates, is not a Liberal. Mr. John Bowell is a Conservative, and there is not a Liberal in the city of Vancouver who believes that Mr. John Bowell is guilty of any wrong-doing. But, if Mr. Bowell, who had full charge of the immigration of Chinese, who has had control of the interpreter all these years, is not responsible, how in the world can my hon. friend from New Westminster attach any stigma to men like Mr. Senkler, to Mr. Kelly, one of the most prominent merchants in the Dominion of Canada? It is unfair and unjust. I do not believe it is good politics, I believe this attempt of the hon. member for New Westminster to attach a stigma to these men, to try to make it appear that they were in collusion with the Chinese interpreter in smuggling Chinamen into this country with a view of getting a rake-off—I think such a charge as that will recoil on the head of the hon. gentleman who has made it, and will do no injury whatever to the Liberals in the city of Vancouver.

Now Sir, there is no question that the Department of Trade and Commerce is fully advised of the situation. They have taken what steps they could to remedy this evil. They have put on double guards to watch the steamers, they have changed the interpreter, they have, for the moment, at all events, suspended Mr. Bowell as controller. With a view of placing all immigration matters under one head, they have transferred the administration of the Chinese Immigration Act to the Department of the Interior; the transfer will take effect on the 1st of October next. To my mind, the administration of this Act should never have been given to the Department of Trade and Commerce. The Department of Trade and Commerce have no officials to carry it on, they have been depending altogether on the officials of the Customs Department, and all the officials who have administered this Act have been customs officials. That, it seems to me, is not a good method. The Interior Department have immigration officials in the city of Vancouver, they have medical men, they have experts on Chinese immigration, and to that department the administration of the Act, I think, should have gone years ago. Therefore, probably this investigation may do good, though it has caused considerable sensation, though it has given our political opponents an opportunity to throw a good deal of mud, and some of our own so-called political friends in the city of Vancouver have done the same thing; our political opponents have been especially anxious to take advantage of all the evidence relevant or irrelevant given before that commission and to use it politically. Still, they can use it, so far as I am concerned, as much as they please; they cannot injure me personally in the city of Vancouver or in the city of Victoria. Nobody in either city will believe that any Liberal whose name has been mentioned in this inquiry, read by the hon. member for New Westminster before the House, can suffer in any way whatever. They are too well known, they are too respectable, they are too prominent as citizens to be injured by slanders of that kind to which my hon. friend has lent the dignity of his name. Sir, I have nothing to add. I have any amount of evidence that can be read. My hon. friend read column after column of evidence that bore upon one side of the question only. I can read column after column of evidence to the contrary. I can read the evidence of Mr. Foster, of Mr. Glover, of Dr. Munro, but what is the use of doing so? We frankly admit that there has been fraud, and these frauds will be attempted as long as the head tax is imposed upon Chinese entering Canada. The only thing that can be done is to make the law more rigid and to put on more guards and reliable interpreters. I believe that it is possible the administration of the law in Vancouver can be improved. The customs collector at Victoria, Mr. Newbury, is a very efficient officer As I said a moment ago, if there was any discredit attaching to the controller of the immigration law in Vancouver, in conjunction with the officials, and the dishonesty of the interpreter whom he had under him for so many years, the responsibility might justly be placed on the right shoulders at once. The interpreter, Yip On, has been found guilty, but Mr. Bowell was his superior and should have seen that he discharged his duties. I have nothing further to add. This matter has been discussed in the British Columbia papers, the section of the country most interested, the section of country that alone knows all about it, has been fully advised as to the evidence given, and I do not think it is necessary for me to put on 'Hansard' any further statements about it. My attitude throughout the whole proceedings has been plain and straightforward, and I challenge the hon. member from New Westminster, the hon. member for Victoria, or any other person in the province, to attempt to injure me in any way whatever, by showing that I have done anything wrong, that I have known or encouraged anything wrong regarding the fraudulent immigration of Chinese into Canada.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (North Simcoe). I do not wish to delay the House at any length at this late hour, knowing that we are all anxious to get on to the debate on reciprocity. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Templeman), began his remarks by making, what I consider a very uncalled for, and unkind reference to the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Taylor). He said that the hon. member spent a good deal of time discussing Bill Miner, and that on the coast he was known as Bill Miner. Now, that, coming from a member of a cabinet that is so redolent of Bills as the cabinet to which the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue belongs, and also in view of the fact that the hon. member himself is known on the coast as Sleepy Bill, I think the least that he can do or say would be to consider honours even, and remain perfectly still on a personal matter of that kind. I am reminded that there is a Slippery Bill in the cabinet, you can't have two of them. I may say there is another Bill known as the Reciprocity Bill which they have on the brain, and they can't get rid of it. Then two Bills went down to Washington, and they brought back a counterfeit Bill, and it has not passed, and I am afraid it won't pass. Now, to refer to this great Tong war that has broke out in the west, and which my hon. friend has taken pains to point out, there was no onus on anybody.

He says that there was nobody to blame, but that the only thing to blame was the law. Any one who has followed the question, who has listened to the speeches in the House, who has read the newspapers, must come to the conclusion that it was not the legislation that was to blame on the coast, that it is not the present law so much as the officers who administer that law. It does not matter two pins how good a law is unless the officers of the government appointed to carry out the law do their duty honestly and fearlessly. The law, it is true, was changed for the purpose of making it easier for a Chinaman to evade it by calling himself a merchant. The result is that Chinamen have arrived in large numbers, a fact which the minister has acknowledged. Consequently, the charge made by my hon. friend from New Westminster has been fully sustained upon the admission of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. Now, the next question is, who were guilty of not carrying out this law, and did any stigma in that regard attach to the minister? The evidence clearly shows that even a watchman appointed to guard a gang plank at Vancouver had to receive the endorsation of that famous junta that rules the destinies of Canada on the coast—the so-called Liberal patronage committee. Mr. Bowell did not make a single appointment of this kind. The evidence showed that in many cases these men were from the riff-raff of the city, that they were bums of the worst description, and that all one had to do was to ask one of them to come on board and have a drink, or come around the bow of a vessel, at which time a whole army of Chinamen could come ashore. There is no doubt in the world that hundreds of Chinamen who did not have a passport came ashore in this way. They landed in broad daylight off the ships. Another favourite method of landing was to climb down the hawser of the ship at night when the watchman was taken away to have a drink around the corner of the custom house or some other place, land upon a pontoon or a dock, and then go off up the street. The evidence shows that there was a systematic conspiracy with the interpreters to land these Chinamen as merchants. When they arrived there, Yip On, no doubt appointed by the patronage committee on the coast, met them and saw they landed as merchants, when in reality they were nothing but common ordinary labourers. As soon as they landed in Vancouver, they took 500 or 600 shares in some Chinese business up the street, paid $5 on that and claimed that they could not be deported afterwards, because they were merchants and even had a partnership in a business in Canada. Two of the leading spirits of this great patronage committee on the coast were hogging, as they claimed, the funds. The minister says that there were was a great deal of irrelevant evidence taken. The government appointed Judge Murphy to find out what was taking place in connection with this Chinese question. Everybody knows that a commissioner is not in the same position as a judge in a court of law, that the rules of evidence do not hold in that respect and that consequently people are allowed to give evidence before a commissioner with regard to what others say to them and matters of that kind which, strictly under the rules of evidence as known in a law court, would not be admitted. As to what the feeling of this patronage committee was we have the testimony of a gentleman which I will read to the House. Page 1346:

You refer this morning, Mr. Grant, to a conversation you had with Harry Senkler.

Mr. Harry Senkler is president of the executive committee of the Liberal organization in Vancouver. He is an old St. Catharines boy, well known at Toronto University as a student and football player before he went to the coast.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe).

Q. Do you recall any more of the conversation than you told us this morning?—A. What about?

Q. The conversation that you referred to this morning as a conversation you previously believed that Mr. Senkler would not be safe counsel in connection with the investigation?—A. I had a somewhat longer conversation with Mr. Senkler and yourself the day that Mr. Senkler gave evidence here.

Q. How did that conversation occur, do you remember?—A. I remember this, that when we left the commission that Mr. Senkler and yourself and myself walked up the street to the corner of Seymour street, and I said to Mr. Senkler that surely he must know who sent that telegram in his name and he said he did not know, and he said I will show you everything I have got and he started to show us some correspondence; there was a great deal of correspondence and some telegrams, some of which he dropped on the sidewalk, and he showed me some memorandum of a meeting of the Liberal patronage committee regarding the appointment of the new interpreter, and regarding certain other things, in one of which a resolution, I think, was prepared by Robert Kelly and the others were signed by Robert Kelly, and I said to Mr. Senkler, that it seemed wherever we got to anything connected with Chinese immigration it was in Kelly's office, or Bob Kelly, and he said what is your theory about it, what do you say happened, and I said I do not say anything happened, but just as a line on the investigation, it seems to me that Mr. Kelly is very very active in the matter of the Chinese interpreter losing his job, and I said I thought it was very peculiar that Mr. Templeman had gone into it to stop the investigation, and I asked him if he had seen Mr. Templeman about it, and what he had done, and he said, no, that Mr. Templeman never saw him, he just came to Vancouver and saw Mr. Kelly.

Q. That is to say that Mr. Senkler, as president of the association was ignored as far as the minister was concerned?—A. Yes, and he said he had stated in the witness box that recommendations of the Liberal executive were not always followed and if I had asked him he would have stated on oath that they were followed except when Mr. Robert Kelly did not want them followed, and he went behind their backs and got Mr. Templeman to do just as he said. There was one thing in the conversation that seemed to impress me with the fact that Mr. Senkler's views on the subject of irregularities in Chinese immigration affairs was such that my advice to the government had not been apter than I thought.

Q. What did he say in reference to illegal entry of Chinese?—A. He said as far as he was concerned he did not care how many Chinese came in illegally, but what he did object to was that these fellows should hog it all.

Who are the fellows who hogged it all?

Q. Mr. McCrossan—Mr. Senkler said that.

Q. Mr. Justice Murphy.—What was that again?—A. He said that as far as he was concerned he did not care how many Chinese came in without paying the head tax, he did not care personally, but that what he did object to was that these fellows should hog it all and that if it had gone to the Liberal executive he would not care.

We have these facts in consecutive order. It was clearly shown in the evidence that Mr. Bowell, the collector of customs at Vancouver, had nothing whatever to do with the appointment of the officials under him whether they were good, bad or indifferent. They were all appointed on instructions from Ottawa, the Minister of Customs giving authority to appoint them, and after him came Mr. Robert Kelly, and in the background of Mr. Robert Kelly was a whole army of Chinamen who came to the country without paying the poll tax. The minister says he is free from stain in that respect, but he can take what change he likes out of that evidence, and I don't think there is much coming back to him. Let us see what the friends of the minister say. Mr. T. R. E. McInnes, an official of the government who was appointed to investigate this matter, has been turned down by the government and he is angry at what Judge Murphy said about him, because, for years, he had been a respected and confidential officer of the first minister. Mr. McInnes finds insinuations in this report of Mr. Justice Murphy, which he resents and he comes back very strongly against the Minister of Inland Revenue, and in a letter published in the Ottawa 'Citizen,' of July 25th, he states the facts pretty clearly and so that we may have some intelligent idea of what took place out there, I will put this letter on 'Hansard.' It reads:

Mr. T. R. E. McInnes, whose name figured prominently in the report of Mr. Justice Murphy who investigated the Chinese immigration and opium smuggling in British Columbia, made a statement to the 'Citizen' to-day, replying in detail to the commissioner's findings. Mr. McInnes does not mince matters. He says:

'On Saturday you published the findings of Mr. Justice Murphy of Vancouver, who sat as a commissioner to inquire into Chinese immigration and opium smuggling in British Columbia. My reputation is at stake in this matter, and I now ask you to give equal prominence to what I have to say in reply to this honourable judge. I make four charges.

'1. I say that the first four statements or findings made by this commissioner in summing up his report are irrelevant, truckling, malicious and cowardly, and in so far as Officer Foster, Gordon Grant, David Lew and myself are concerned, they are absolutely false and unwarranted by the evidence.

'2. I say that the Dominion government permitted the fraudulent entry of Chinese to continue without any attempt at prevention for at least two years after the attention had been formally drawn thereto.

'3. I say that the Dominion government deliberately delayed criminal proceedings against the guilty Chinese indicated by its own commissioner, Judge Murphy, for two months in order to allow them to escape from justice.

'4. I say that if Sir Wilfrid Laurier, when replying to Mr. Borden in the House on Friday meant me when he said: 'The only person not a Chinaman who was suspected was not appointed by this government'; then Sir Wilfred Laurier deliberately misstated the fact.

'I will deal with this last charge first, and the doing so involves the whole question of my connection with the government. In August, 1907, the Indians of the Garden river reservation in Algoma were being debauched by American whisky-sellers, operating on Sugar Island in the state of Michigan just across the river from the Canadian reservation. Members of parliament, priests, and missionaries were asking the government to do something in the matter, but as the whisky-sellers were on American territory, and the Canadian Indians crossed the river to them, the situation was difficult. Neither under United States federal or state laws was it unlawful to sell liquor to a Canadian Indian on American territory; and so the offenders felt secure. My services were asked by the Indian Department. As a result inside of a month the offenders were arrested, convicted of something, and jailed in Michigan. In the following month the Chinese riot occurred in Vancouver, and Hon. Frank Oliver mindful perhaps of my Michigan success, asked me to go to Vancouver to report on the situation, and advise as to what should be done. I returned in three weeks with a report which anticipated the later findings of Mackenzie King. My report was acted upon, and copies were sent to the imperial government and to the government of India. Two months later, owing to the activities of the Asiatic Exclusion League and the fear of renewed riots Sir Wilfrid Laurier wrote a note to Mr. Oliver, giving it to me to take to him asking that I be sent again to the coast. Nominally for the Immigration Department, in reality to attempt to check a dangerous situation, and to be on hand to advise if emergencies arose. I was there all winter. The riots threatened, and actually planned in Seattle, were averted. To Mr. Gordon Grant, president at the time of the Asiatic Exclusion League, the credit for this is largely due. His sense of loyalty was awakened when he was shown what was being planned by American agitators, and what the success of their plot would mean to Canadian and imperial interests. This is the Mr. Grant upon whom Mr. Commissioner Murphy throws a slur in the third paragraph of the summary of his report.

'The next summer I acted as adviser to all the Chinese of Vancouver, in preparing their damage claims for consideration by Mr. Mackenzie King, special commissioner to assess damages in connection with the September riots. On this occasion I talked with Mr. Owyang King, then Chinese consul at San Francisco, and Mr. Tung Ching Ling, attaché of the Chinese embassy at London, as to future relations between Canada and China, and the chance of developing a large trade between the two countries, the profits of which would tend to overcome race antagonisms. At that time there was no Canadian trade commissioner in China. I had many Chinese clients and a knowledge of local Chinese customs and business methods. I sent in a report either to the Trade and Commerce Department or the Interior Department, I forget which, but dealing with the whole question of developing Canada's trade with China, and urging the appointment of Canadian commissioners at Canton, Shanghai and Tien Tsin. I discussed the matter with Mackenzie King and he heartily approved, and promised his support if I wanted the position. Many strong recommendations were made on my behalf. The government adopted the suggestions in my report so far as to establish an office at Shanghai, but appointed the late Mr. MacLean instead of me. After Mr. MacLean's death, which occurred in the following December, Mr. O'Hara telephoned for me, and asked if I were still open for the position. I replied that I was, and would be willing to go in February, after I had finished my first draft of a new Immigration Act, which I had been retained by Mr. Oliver to prepare. A recommendation to council was prepared accordingly, and signed by Sir Richard Cartwright. The appointment, however was blocked by Mr. Templeman and that ended the matter, I never sought the position after that because Mr. Templeman had unwittingly done me a good turn; remaining in Canada proved vastly to my advantage. From time to time after that I had a retainer from the government for special services. Among them was the drawing of the new Immigration Act above referred to. This involved observation of the methods actually practised by American and Canadian officers at seaports and on the boundary.

'Now it happened that Hon. Frank Oliver in September, 1908, feared something in Alberta on the part of the Conservatives which he called 'skullduggery.' The general elections were on at the time, and he asked me to go to Calgary and vicinity on a still hunt for this 'skullduggery.'

This skullduggery must have been the gentleman who was going around the west dropping great big bunches of money into the people's bank accounts. He goes on to say:

Up to this time my services had been absolutely non-political, and Oliver knew that I had no more respect for one side than for the other. He did know, however, that I generally got results worth while in any matter which I undertook. I found to my surprise, however, that he did not propose to pay my fee from any party fund, but that I was to go on political service at government expense, to cover which I was to make a report on immigration matters.

Let me ask the House how many men to-day are in this same service of the government, in view of the election which is about to take place? We all know that in the customs service, presided over by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Paterson) there has been a tremendous increase in the amount of wages paid, although there has not been a very large increase in the real amount of efficiency of the department. There are what are known as special officers throughout the different towns in this country drawing fat salaries, and their work is of a political character, just as is shown in this letter. McInnes goes on to say:

This was not much to my stomach, but in connection with the act upon which I was working I wanted to observe the working of the official immigration machine between Winnipeg and Vancouver, particularly along the British Columbia border and at Seattle. I did, however, throw an eye over political methods at Calgary and vicinity for about ten days, became satisfied that honest voting was the style there, and that anything in the nature of 'skullduggery' was more to be apprehended from the Liberals than from the Conservatives. This I told to the Honourable Frank and left him to go about my proper business.

'On the 10th December, 1908, I sent in a report to Mr. Oliver, covering my observations on this trip, and making certain recommendations. It was during this visit to the coast that I first paid any particular attention to the smuggling of Chinese immigrants. In drafting my Immigration Act I wished it to apply equally to Chinese, considering that there should be but one Immigration Act, designed to apply to all classes of immigrants, and administered by one department. As far as I remember, however, I made no written report then as to this smuggling, wishing to make a fuller investigation later on. But a year before that time I am told that Officer Busby of the Customs Department had noticed and reported upon these frauds, but to put it mildly, was not encouraged to disclose anything further in that line.

'Well, a year later, 10th November, 1909, I made another report to Mr. Oliver, detailing the system of fraud practised by the Chinese both as regards evading head-tax and smuggling opium. That report is completely verified in every detail by the evidence given before Commissioner Murphy two years after, and the commissioner makes that two year old report of mine the basis of the only conclusions and recommendations that are relevant or worthy of consideration in his own report now laid on the table of the House. But when I made that report in November, 1909, Mr. Oliver was afraid to act upon it. I urged him strongly one day in February, 1910, saying that not only was the continuing fraud bad alike for the reputable Chinese and the whites, but that the government was losing hundreds of thousands of dollars of revenue. Mr. Oliver, in his own frank phraseology, replied: 'To hell with the government; I'm not going to mix up in the thing and get old Cartwright jumping on me in council.'

About March, however, a copy of this last report came into the hands of Mr. O'Hara, and he began inquiries on his own account; inquiries which he pushed to a successful conclusion. In July he instructed Secret Officer Foster—a man familiar with the coast, and who had done good service there during the Asiatic troubles—to go to Vancouver, and observe the working of the Chinese Immigration Act at that port. At the same time Sir Wilfrid, then acting Minister of the Interior, issued the following order: 'That Mr. T. R. E. McInnes should again visit the western provinces with a view to his reporting along the same lines as he did in his reports to the minister of the 10th December, 1908, and the 10th November, 1909, touching on immigration questions, and the administration of the Immigration Act in these provinces. Mr. McInnes will return in the month of September next, and his employment will be on the same terms as authorized before by the ministers.'

'Now Foster, although a very capable officer, would have been helpless at Vancouver in this matter without the assistance which I was able to give or procure for him, because he had no special knowledge of Chinese, and he had to encounter the strong opposition of the government officials concerned, Messrs. Bowell, Worsnop and Yip On, steamship company officials, and also political influences on both sides. The Liberal patronage committee for some reason wanted no interference with the status quo; the Conservatives as their member naively put it did not want to assist if it would hurt Jack on account of his father.' Very creditable no doubt; but the Chinese ring took advantage of the situation. Having got Foster under weigh, assisted by David Lew. I went to Calgary and gave Sir Wilfrid an interim verbal report. He approved and said to proceed, and I did so. When the time was ripe for the sudden suspension of Yip On I wired to Sir Wilfrid's secretary asking that it be done, and my suggestions were carried out to the letter. As a result the system of fraudulent entry was exposed, some of the guilty officials have been recommended for prosecution and given time to escape, and a complete change in the administration of the Chinese Act along the lines which I recommended in 1909 has taken place.

This brings me to the third charge which I make. If the government had acted immediately on the commissioner's report being received the guilty Chinese could have been arrested and tried, and at such trial much more evidence implicating others could have been brought out. I know that the recently smashed smuggling ring counted upon political protection; they thought they had secured the friendship of leading Liberal and Conservative politicians in Vancouver to such an extent as to make them immune from prosecution. Nevertheless the ring has been smashed and their revenues from smuggling of immigrants and opium have for the present been cut off. Some people are very sore over this whole affair, and these people are not all Chinese by any means, although they seem to have a very yellow streak in them. As I happen to be the main instrument of their undoing there is nothing at which they will stop to injure or vilify me. And Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Frank Oliver, instead of having sufficient manliness to at least make my position honourably clear to the public, say nothing or insinuate, as Sir Wilfrid did on Friday, that the government had nothing to do with me or my part in the affair.

Calls it a farce.

As to my first and second charges; the second was made clear in my explanation of the fourth. Now as to the first: The commissioner's mission was to inquire into the working of the Chinese Immigration Act, evasions of it, suggested improvements, and as a side issue, the question of opium smuggling. He was not commissioned to whitewash Templeman or the Liberal executive, or to vilify myself, or Gordon Grant, or David Lew, or Officer Foster, or other persons supposed to be distasteful to the ruling Liberal clique of Vancouver. He made a farce of the sessions of the commission by inviting all sorts of irrelevant evidence which might or might not effect the status of the Liberal party in Vancouver but which clearly had nothing to do with evasions of the Chinese Immigration Act. For instance, he brought in Joe Martin to say that Bob Kelly sold the political positions of Vancouver; then he brought in Bob Kelly to say Joe Martin was a liar; and so on ad nauseam. But as to the real object under investigation not one half of the time of the commission was devoted to it. Then in his findings he first whitewashes Templeman (who had not been accused) whitewashes the Liberal executive (which was not the subject of investigation) then finds me (under a special authority from the premier to investigate) guilty of an intrigue for so doing, saying that, to use his own puerile way of putting it, tried to establish some sort of connection with the administration of the Chinese Restriction Act at Vancouver by obtaining control of the Chinese interpreter and possibly in other ways. Its object was to serve some personal ends. He associates Gordon Grant and David Lew with me in this. And yet it was Gordon Grant, as counsel sanctioned by Sir Wilfrid before Templeman had him ousted in favour of one of his own pets, who secured the success of the preliminary investigation; and it was David Lew upon whom Commissioner Murphy himself had to depend to secure evidence, and reliable interpretation, to the very last session of the commission.

Then this brave commissioner attacks one the most faithful and tried police officers in the Dominion service by intimating that he was so weak or venal that I secured him and 'utilized him to advance this intrigue.' That is why I repeat that Murphy is irrelevant, truckling and cowardly. He descends to playing politics of the meanest variety; if his first findings had been drafted for him by the Liberal executive there would have been no variation in the language. His other findings are simply what I recommended or stated in my report to the government of November, 1909. I will publish that report and let the public compare it with Murphy's report, and it will then be evident where he gets whatever there is of value in it. His last finding as to opium, saying 'that its consumption must be discouraged by drastic amendments' shows that he does not even keep abreast of the Acts of parliament. I drew for Mackenzie King this session the new Opium Act, which is the most drastic and effective Act against the use of opium and cocaine to be found on the statute books of America.

I consider that statement of McInnes, if it does anything, proves conclusively that these officers who were especially instructed by the Prime Minister of this country and who were confidential officers of this government to carry on the prosecution of these Chinese and others interested in this fraud, have been discouraged and suspicions cast on their characters, their future careers have been virtually ruined because they dared tackle this infamous Chinese ring who were robbing the country of millions.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is not true that Mr. McInnes went to the coast on any mission whatever, officially charged to investigate these frauds.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Does the minister desire me to read the exhibit put in by Mr. McInnes, wherein Sir Wilfrid Laurier appoints him to this commission. The exhibit is here. Here is a dispatch from Laggan, dated September 12, 1910.

Please ask Premier take communication first part tenth inclosure my report Oliver sixth instant. Featherstone will have it. Twenty-one fraudulently admitted last week, more will probably arrive on ship next Sunday. If suspension made and Foster authorized act as suggested not later than Friday, confident of capture and conclusive evidence. I will arrive Ottawa Friday morning.

T. R. E. McINNES.

He was on his way to see the Prime Minister and the minister says that none of this occurred, that the Prime Minister and officials of the government were not acting to try and find this out without consulting him. For what reason was he not taken into the confidence of the government? Why, was Mr. Foster appointed without Mr. Templeman being made aware of these facts. On the very first boat on which they captured Chinese they saved to the government something like $17,000. He did not know that these Chinamen were seized or that Yip On was suspended. The government was acting apparently behind his back. The only thing he knew was that he sent a telegram to Sir Richard Cartwright, which he afterwards denied, asking that Yip On be reinstated.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I did not.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). That is the boldest I ever heard. The minister did not recommend that Yip On be reinstated?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Not at all.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). And Yip On was not reinstated although he desired to have him reinstated. It is the same thing. He spent all the night apologizing for having sent that dispatch to Ottawa and claiming that the next day he went to see Mr. Foster about 2 o'clock in the morning, and Mr. Foster would not see him, so he sent the telegram and went to see Mr. Foster later on to see if Mr. Foster would confirm what he had done. Mr. Foster probably told him all right, but being a good officer, working for the department, he would not have any outsiders interfere with him. The whole trouble with the minister is that he was dragged into this controversy very unfairly, because the great controversy that raged on the coast was whether Mr. Templeman was drunk that night or not, and he went across the continent to deny it, and there is apparently no one who can say whether he was drunk or sober, because being a good strong man, I suppose he carries his liquor well. He went home and denied it, and I have to take his word that he was not drunk.

What is the result of this investigation? What has the member for New Westminster done for this country? He has brought before the attention of this House, one of the most rascally scandals and most desperate conspiracies ever attempted on the part of the Chinese to rob the government of many millions of dollars. This matter was brought to the attention of the House on two previous occasions and information was denied. The first minister virtually refused to bring down this evidence in order to have it come after the elections so that the public in the east would not know what was going on in the west. The member for New Westminster (Mr. Taylor) and I placed a résumé of the evidence on 'Hansard,' with the result that the next day the premier brought down the report. He said he did not want to bring it down because the report recommended that several parties should be prosecuted, and it was not wise that it should be made public. Everyone in the west knows that these men were out of the country weeks ago, that during four or five months they have had time to get away and during the interval the Department of Justice has not moved one iota, has not issued any instructions and to this day I challenge the minister to say that any steps have been taken to bring them to justice or any warrants issued. Why? Because the moment anyone runs up against that Chinese ring in Vancouver, there is some scullduggery as the Minister of the Interior would say, going on there, justice is demoralized and even the justice that should be presided over by the Prime Minister, and the action he should take comes out about four months late. The minister said Mr. McInnes was not appointed by the government. Here is a letter, a memorandum by Mr. McInnes to Mr. O'Hara:

Re Chinese Smuggling Cases—Vancouver, B.C.

Memorandum for Mr. O'Hara.

Following my conversation at noon to-day I inclose copy of suggestion submitted to the Premier, and which I understand he is to discuss with Sir Richard.

As to appointment of counsel the Premier intimated that he had to-day written you a letter giving you a free hand.

Please submit to Sir Richard that owing to the unusual nature of the case, and the political and official influence used to render it abortive, a slight departure from the regular legal patronage list would be justified.

Mr. Senkler has already taken a stand on behalf of the accused; and has undertaken to criticise the action of the department without knowing the facts upon which the department's action was based. The case in his hands would be almost certainly doomed to failure.

The men suggested in place of Senkler and MacDonell are equally staunch Liberals; are specially trained in criminal law; and I will vouch for their not being led off the track by all the influence or threat the Chinese can bring to bear.

If you should wish me to to continue to act privately at the coast in completing evidence in this matter I am at your service.

T. R. E. McINNES.

September 28, 1910.

That is the letter of Mr. McInnes, and I think it dissipates the view of this matter taken by the hon. minister. Perhaps the hon. minister personally had nothing to do with this; but at the least he has been like clay in the hands of the potter as far as the operations of this ring are concerned. The evidence shows that if there was any end they wished to attain, all they had to do was to have Mr. Kelly or Mr. Macdonald outline the programme to the Minister of Inland Revenue, and he was only too glad to fall in with it, especially if a good dinner preceded it. I think this country owes a debt of gratitude to the hon. member for New Westminster for bringing such an important question before this House. I consider that he has done his duty by the country, and has promoted the ends of justice by disclosing the actions of this junta that consists of a section of the Liberal party in the west. The good Liberals of the coast do not want to have anything to do with these people; they do not want to have any 'skullduggery.' There are honest men in the party as well as unscrupulous men. The honest ones have rebelled, there is dissention in the ranks, and this question is a burning question there. The hon. minister says that no one in Vancouver thinks that anybody is guilty in this matter, but that everybody considers that the whole wrong is in the law. If the law was wrong, how is it that it was maintained at Victoria and broken flagrantly at Vancouver? The reason is that the Chinese and the officials of this government, as shown by the evidence, entered into a conspiracy whereby this government was defrauded of a large sum of money; and after the report of the commissioner, which showed that somebody had done wrong and should be punished, was in the hands of this government, no action was taken until it was possible for the guilty parties to flee the country. In this case I think full responsibility rests on the Minister of Inland Revenue. He is the man who recommended all these appointments—Yip On and all the landing waiters who let the Chinamen come into the country without passports. He is the man behind the gun in all cases. It is true, his hands were guided by the executive committee; but he cannot divest himself of the responsibilty as a member of the government and the minister from the Pacific coast.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, the first paragraph of the motion which has been placed in your hands by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Taylor) is in these words:—

During the period of three years preceding the commencement of the investigation into the frauds connected with the Chinese immigration at Vancouver, the government had been repeatedly warned of the existence of such frauds, and during such period neglected to take any effective steps to check or prevent them.

The second paragraph is as follows:—

That very large sums of money have been lost to the public revenues of Canada by this neglect and default of the government.

The third paragraph is in these words:

That none of the persons guilty of complicity in the said frauds have been prosecuted or punished.

And the conclusion based upon these alleged premises is as follows:

That the course of the government in the matters aforesaid deserves the censure of this House.

The hon. Minister of Inland Revenue has addressed himself to this question, but I did not hear one word from him denying any of the allegations made in this resolution, and he could not deny them. Let us take the first. It is a charge that the government knew all about these frauds, or at all events were warned of them repeatedly, during a period of three years before this investigation commenced. My hon. friend from New Westminster read the first of these warnings, which was not from any outside individual, but from an officer of the government, in July, 1907, who declared that these frauds were then going on according to the best of his belief, and stated the reasons on which he grounded that belief; and in his letter he named the very man, Yip On, as guilty of these frauds, who was eventually found guilty by this Commissioner. There was the first warning, more than three years before this investigation began, because it did not begin until August 1910. That warning was repeated over and over again, and during those three years this government remained absolutely supine so far as any active and effective steps to check these frauds and bring them to a conclusion were concerned. They went on during those years unchecked and unhindered, and the only minister of the Crown who has spoken on this question to-night has taken his seat without offering one word in explanation or extenuation of that remarkable conduct of the government. It seems to me that is a painful spectacle. I am astonished that the Minister of Inland Revenue saw fit to take his seat without even apologising for that conduct of the government or giving some explanation for this inaction, neglect and default on the part of the government. So I say that the first paragraph of the resolution proposed by my hon. friend from New Westminster has been made absolutely good. The second paragraph declares that large sums of money have been lost to the public revenues of Canada by this neglect and default of the government. That is not denied either; it cannot be denied. It is true that the moneys have been lost, how much we do not know. I would have expected that the Commissioner would have been instructed to make inquiry more definitely as to the amount that has been lost. It is enough to know that hundreds of thousands of dollars have been lost by this inaction, neglect and default of the government, who were bound by their oaths of office to protect the public revenues of this country.

The third paragraph which I have quoted sets forth that none of the persons guilty of complicity in the said frauds have been prosecuted or arrested. The Minister of Inland Revenue did not controvert that, for the very good reason that he could not controvert it. These men were shown to have been guilty of fraud by evidence given before the commissioner in the earlier part of the inquiry. There was no doubt, so far as I understand the case, as to the guilt of this man Yip On. I did not understand my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue in one respect, and I would like him to clear this matter up for my own information —not in respect to any of the matters to which I have been alluding, because he cannot do that, but in respect to one matter to which I can allude. I understood him to say that at the time of this conversation with Inspector Foster on the 20th September, 1910, there was no evidence in the possession of Mr. Foster against this interpreter Yip On. But I also understood my hon. friend from New Westminster to assert, and to support by evidence, that Mr. Foster had made a seizure of documents and money in possession of Yip On on the 18th of September, 1910. Am I mistaken in that?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Mr. Foster complained to me, I suppose about the 18th, that he did find some letters in the possession of incoming Chinamen about which he was suspicious. He said that some of Yip On's friends had obtained access to these documents, but Yip On had not been suspended at the time. He thought some of Yip On's friends had obtained access to incoming Chinamen and put them on their guard. But there was nothing, Mr. Foster assured me, in the way of evidence, there was suspicion that something wrong was going on.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where were these documents and these moneys seized?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. They were letters that the incoming Chinamen had, introducing them, I suppose, to Yip On. I don't think there was any money.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understood these documents and certain moneys connected with them had been seized under such circumstances as directly or necessarily to implicate Yip On in these frauds.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Not directly. It created suspicion in the mind of the detective.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, I am not sufficiently familiar with the evidence itself to enable me to judge, and I will accept the minister's statement. But I think this is apparent that the investigation had not proceeded very far before it became clear to the government that Yip On was guilty of complicity in these frauds, that could not have been carried on without his connivance. That became apparent early in the course of the investigation. Notwithstanding that, the government remains absolutely inactive, not only remains inactive during the whole course of that investigation up to the time the report was received by the Department of Trade and Commerce in May last, but it has remained absolutely inactive up to the present time. So that, although it is beyond question that hundreds of these Chinamen have been smuggled into Canada without paying the duty imposed by our laws upon their entry, and although that was done by a system of bribery in which this man, Yip On, and some other Chinamen have participated to their great profit, neither of these men has been arrested or prosecuted, and both of them have been allowed to leave the country with their ill-gotten gains. That is the situation. These are absolutely undisputed facts. Therefore I say that my hon. friend the member for New Westminster has proved up to the hilt every one of the three charges which he has made against the administration in the terms of this resolution. For the same reason, I say that the conclusion of his resolution is entirely justified, where he says:

The course of the government in the matters aforesaid deserves the censure of this House.

I do not pause to deal with some of the matters with which the Minister of Inland Revenue did allude in the course of his remarks. He did not touch the real point of the resolution, he did not make any defence of the administration censured by the resolution. The case which my hon. friend from New Westminster has made against the government is apparently undefended, it has gone by default. The Minister of Inland Revenue has made a personal explanation, has commented upon the evidence, has defended himself against certain suggestions which have been made with regard to his own course in the matter. But he has put forward nothing in defence of the government, the case, as I say, is absolutely undefended, and my hon. friend for New Westminster is entitled to judgment by default.

So far as the reinstatement of this man Yip On is concerned, that is not directly dealt with by the terms of the resolution, but I do not think the Minister of Inland Revenue made a very good case for himself in that respect. While he admits that he sent a telegram demanding or urging that this man Yip On should be reinstated under the conditions which the minister himself has described, and although the commissioner has said that the letter or recommendation of the minister was in the public interest, I am bound to say that I cannot see it in that light. This man undoubtedly was under suspicion at that time. There may have been no positive evidence against him, according to the statement of the Minister of Inland Revenue. But there was at least grave suspicion resting upon him, and the only reason suggested by the minister himself why that direct evidence had not been procured was that the friends of Yip On had gone to these Chinamen who were designing to enter Canada by means of bribes in which Yip On should participate, and had succeeded in bringing about such a condition of affairs that direct and positive evidence to sustain a prosecution could not be procured. But admitting all that, does the Minister of Inland Revenue say that he has made out a case that the reinstatement of this man Yip On at that time was in the public interest? He has made out no such case. Taking that in connection with what has been urged with force and cogency by the member for New Westminster in support of the resolution, I say that any hon. member of this House who has taken the trouble to read this resolution, and to listen to the speeches in support of it, and to the speech of the Minister of Inland Revenue who did not defend the government, would not be doing his duty unless he voted for this resolution to which absolutely no answer has been made by the Minister of Inland Revenue, the only minister of the Crown who has even attempted any defence.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Taylor, New Westminster).

PREPARATION OF VOTERS' LISTS.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the motion passes I would like to refer to an inquiry I made with regard to the preparation of the voters' lists on the 20th inst. The hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Murphy) informed me on that occasion that he would have a statement prepared and brought down. A certain statement was prepared and brought down, but it does not cover all I asked for. I asked for a statement of the ridings in respect to which the voters' lists have been printed and delivered. That has been brought down. I asked also for a further statement as to when it is expected the lists will be ready for the ridings that have not been served in that way up to the present time. If the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfred Laurier) would be good enough to remind the Secretary of State, who is not in his place, I would be very glad.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax)

WAYS AND MEANS—RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH THE U. S.

Mr. JAMES J. DONNELLY (South Bruce). Mr. Chairman, before dealing with the principal effects of the proposed tariff changes now before the House, I wish to make a short reference to the conditions which led up to the present situation. The Payne-Aldrich Bill, which came into effect in the United States in the year 1909, provided for a maximum and a minimum tariff. The minimum tariff, which was the regular tariff, was considerably higher than the Canadian tariff, but was still 25 per cent lower than the maximum tariff. The maximum tariff was to be applied against all countries which, in the judgment of the president, discriminated in tariff legislation against the United States. The President of the United States took the ground that the terms of the French treaty, which a short time previously had been arranged between Canada and France, discriminated against the United States, and that therefore unless certain tariff concessions were made they would impose their maximum tariffs on all imports from Canada. Our government became alarmed, they sent representatives to Albany and then to Washington, and finally agreed that if the president would refrain from using his big stick, thirteen classes of articles would be placed upon a list advantageous to the United States, and assured the president that they would later on consider a broader tariff agreement with the United States. The changes in connection with the thirteen classes of articles may have been unimportant. The objectionable feature of the whole transaction was that our government assented to the principle of being dictated to from Washington in the arrangement of tariff legislation. In the fall of 1910 negotiations were again resumed, and in January of this year the Hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) and the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) went to Washington and arranged the present pact. There is this difference, however, in the way that the measure was submitted in the two countries. In the United States the question was submitted to the House of Representatives and to the Senate not as a party measure in the same sense that it is submitted here. It was dealt with more upon its merits. The Democratic party or the Republican party did not depend upon the result. But the situation here is very different. An agreement of great national importance is entered into by two members of the cabinet without consulting the people, without consulting the members of the House who represent the people, and we have been told by one Liberal member of the House that it was only submitted to the members of the cabinet for their consideration for about one hour before it was brought down to this House as a government measure on the same day. Theoretically, the government supporters are free to support or oppose it, but they are aware that such opposition might lead to the defeat of the government that they were elected to support. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has stated that the government will stand or fall by this agreement. The Minister of Finance stated that parliament is bound in honour to accept the agreement entered into by these two cabinet ministers. The main principle of the proposal is, that we should open our market and let in a long list of articles mentioned in the agreement, mostly natural and farm products, and that the Americans should open their market to us on similar terms. With regard to the United States lowering their rates of duty upon Canadian products, I have no objection to make. I realize that the United States tariff is a subject for the United States government to settle. If they really want to secure our products, they will grant them free entry. The indications are that in the near future the Democrats will be in control and we will then receive many concessions proposed by this agreement without sacrificing our home market. It has been stated by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) that eighty per cent of all our agricultural products are required to supply our home market, and I am not aware that this statement has been successfully refuted; while the remaining 20 per cent find a ready market under present conditions. Why, then, should we open up our home market to the competition of half the civilized world in order that we may get into a market that already has a surplus of the principal products included in the pact? During 1908 the United States exported the following:

Wheat	151,000,000 bush.
Oats	2,333,000 "
Barley	8,262,000 "
Oil cake	$9,303,000
Flax seed	437,000 "

While there is a decrease in their exports of grain there is an increase in their exports of grain products. In 1905 they exported $42,000,000 worth of meal and flour while in 1908 they exported $66,000,000 worth of the same commodity, an increase of $24,000,000 worth, showing that they approve of the principle of sending out all their exports as far as possible in the shape of the finished product. The same condition exists in regard to live stock. While there has been a decrease in their exports of live stock there has been an increase in their exports of beef and pork. In 1905 they exported beef and pork to the value of $153,000,000. In 1908 they exported $172,000,000 worth, an increase of $19,000,000.

Now, dealing with some of the different items I propose first to take up the question of wheat. There may be local conditions at some points near the border which might occasion an apparent difference in the price of wheat in favour of the American producer; yet, I see no reason to think that this agreement would materially increase the price of wheat. In some of the Liberal papers a statement is made that the removing of the duty on wheat would increase the price of our Canadian wheat at least ten cents a bushel. In order to show the editors of these papers that their Liberal, political friends who have made a study of this question do not agree with them, I will quote the remarks of the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) as they appear in 'Hansard' at page 3730:

> I do say, this, however, that so far as I have been able to examine the matter—and I have looked into it with some care—I cannot see any reason why we should expect any very great increase in the price of wheat for transportation to the United States. There may be a reason, and there may be an increased price, but I am not able exactly to find out how it will come about.

We have heard a good deal about the benefits that would accrue to our farmers if they could get into the American market with their barley. While the price of malting barley is higher on the American side of the line than on this side, there are many factors that tend to prevent our Canadian farmers from ever going extensively into the raising of barley.

Among them is the scarcity of farm labour and the general use of the self-binder and the fact that such barley can only be produced on very fertile soil and handled only under very favourable weather conditions. Twenty-five or thirty years ago, when farm help was plentiful, the farmer could cut his barley with the self-rake reaper, leaving it lie a few days, and thus have a fair chance of harvesting it while the grain was still dry and bright. A field of barley that does not ripen evenly, if cut with a self-binder will not produce good malting barley. In fact the length of time required to dry any barley cut with a self-binder reduces the possibility of its being of a high grade. The progressive farmer who is anxious to conserve the fertility of the soil, would prefer to feed his barley at home and get his return from the sale of his live stock and dairy products. Even if our farmers desired to ship their feed barley to the United States, they could not profitably do so and compete with American corn. In support of this statement I may say that during last winter many of our stockmen in Ontario were feeding corn to their cattle, although feed barley could be purchased at that time for about one cent a pound. With regard to hay, when making a comparison of the price of hay in the United States and Canada, it is always well to remember that on the other side the quotations are on the long ton, 2,240 pounds, while in Canada a ton requires only 2,000 pounds. I may say that so far as the people of Bruce county are concerned, they have higher ambition than to spend their time raising hay for the Americans. They raise hay, it is true, and we expect they will continue to raise hay, but they prefer to feed it to their stock and to maintain the fertility of their farms by the by-products. The people of western Ontario and particularly the people of the county of Bruce, have for many years gone extensively into the raising of horses, which has proved a very profitable occupation. While fancy or select horses have found a ready market in the United States, the opening of the three prairie provinces has supplied the best market for the great bulk of our horses. Any person familiar with the horse industry knows that no matter how carefully the sires and dams may be selected, a very small proportion of the horses raised will be what might be called fancy horses, and it is easily seen how important it is to preserve the western Canadian market for good serviceable blocks of horses. Our Liberal friends tell us that the west will soon be in a position to raise their own horses. Well, we have heard that statement for the last 15 years, but the demand has kept on increasing and in all probability will increase for many years to come, as only a small portion of the arable land of that great country has yet been brought under cultivation. I have been assured by men familiar with conditions in the west that if this agreement goes into effect our horses will be displaced in the prairie provinces by the cheaper horses from the western states. I have here document No. 849, prepared by the American Tariff Board relative to the various commodities named in the proposed reciprocity measure, and at page 109 I find the following:

> Prices of horses range from $106 to $125 per head in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and New York. In Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and North Dakota the range is from $111 to $126, and in Montana, Idaho, and Washington from $80 to $108. In eastern Canada prices of horses range from $107 to $139 per head, while in western Canada the range is from $107 to $156. In the great agricultural states of Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, prices range from $120 to $124. In all the Canadian provinces, except Prince Edward Island, Manitoba and Nova Scotia, the prices are higher than in any of our states.

At page 110 I read that the average price of horses per head in Montana is given at $80 and in Saskatchewan the average price of horses is given at $156 per head. I wish also to call attention to the American view as put forward in the 'Saturday Evening Post' of March 25, by Senator Beveridge of the United States, who writes:

> Take horses and mules. We now ship to Canada every year thousands more of horses and mules than Canada ships to us. Canada has an under supply of horses and mules; comparatively we have an over supply. So the free interchange of horses and mules between this country and Canada means an enlarged market for horses and mules raised by our farmers. And our farmers want that enlarged market, do they not? Why, then, should we make it hard for them to enter that market with their horses and mules?

In reference to the position of the cattle and meat trade, should we enter into this proposed agreement, I find in the Toronto 'Globe' of July 24th 1911, a leading article extolling the benefits that will accrue to the United States from this pact, and there is something in that article that our farmers should reflect upon. The 'Globe' is giving a statement of the conditions in the United States, and it says:

> The meat trust has taken toll of the people without mercy, and the cost of living has been forced up so high that the town dwellers, and in some measure the farmers also, have revolted, and demanded the removal of the food taxes that were used to make great fortunes for the manipulators of the markets. On the one hand the trusts were able to depress the farmers' selling prices, and on the other to compel the consumer to pay enhanced prices for their food supplies. The secret of the meat trust's tremendous power lay in the fact that the farmer was selling cattle at prices prearranged by a little group of men who controlled practically all the packing houses in the United States, while the consumer was buying meat at retail stores similarly controlled by the trust.

That is a fair explanation of the conditions existing in the United States, and if it means anything, it means that the meat trusts had got practical control of both producers and consumers there, and the result of entering into this agreement would be simply to extend the scope of their operations. They have now their machinery in very good order to control the ninety millions of people in the United States, and it will be a very simple matter for them to extend their operations to the seven or eight million people in Canada. The last census showed that the State of Pennsylvania had a slightly larger population, and the State of New York a much larger population, than had the entire Dominion of Canada, so that for the meat trust to extend their operations to Canada would be nothing more to them than extending their operations into another state.

In regard to the hog industry, I wish to say that our farmers have made great progress during the past ten years. Canadian bacon has gained an enviable reputation in the British market. Now, if this pact goes into effect, the result will be an interchange of hogs—whether our hogs go the United States or the United States hogs come here, the result will be that the identity of Canadian bacon will be lost, for the Americans produce sixteen hogs to one produced in Canada. Even should the agreement be revoked—as our Liberal friends seem to think, would be such an easy thing to do—it would take years to establish Canadian bacon in the position it occupies to-day.

So far as I am aware the farmers of Western Ontario have not been asking for reciprocity in hogs or hog products. The very opposite is the case, for, as a matter of fact they have been asking for increased protection in hog products. I have a copy of a petition which was sent to me during the last session of parliament, and was presented to this House early in that session. This is not in any sense a partisan document, and it was prepared at a time when there was no talk of reciprocity, but when the farmers were simply looking at it from a business standpoint of view. I will read the petition to you so that you may see what their view is:

To the Premier and members of the Dominion Parliament of Canada, Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sirs,—In view of the enormous quantities of hog products being imported into Canada from the United States during the last few years, and in constantly increasing quantities which in most cases is being slaughtered on the Canadian market at a time when there is no local occasion for it, the only apparent reason being a glut in the United States market, thus enabling our Canadian packers and dealers to get supplies at a considerably reduced price, the effect of which they use to reduce the price to the producers here without, as experience shows, reducing the price to the consumer, and whereas Canada is capable of producing an abundance of pork products for the home market as well as for export and are anxious to be relieved of the great annoyance and loss of this periodical slump, therefore, we humbly petition and strongly urge your honourable body to increase the tariff on pork from two cents to four cents, and we hereby request our representative to both advocate and support such a measure at the approaching session of the House; believing that producer and consumer would be greatly benefited by a more uniformly even fair price.

And as in duty bound, your petitions will ever pray.

Electors of the South Riding of Bruce.

These electors of the south riding of Bruce are almost all farmers, and a large number of the signers of this petition are Liberals. The very first name I find on the petition, Mr. John McCharles, is a gentleman who for many years was a member of the county council of Bruce—a practical and intelligent farmer. He was a warden of the county, and is a prominent Liberal. His name was recently mentioned as a possible Liberal candidate in the county. Now, the answer the government gave to that petition is that instead of raising the tariff, they will admit American hogs into Canada free, and will greatly reduce the tariff on pork.

In order to show that the hog producers in Canada have nothing to gain by getting free entry into the United States, I would quote the live stock market reports, as they appear in the Toronto 'Globe,' of July 26. I have followed the live stock markets for some time, and I find that conditions during the last three or four months have been practically the same as set forth in this report, which I propose to give you. According to the 'Globe,' hogs in Toronto were quoted at $7.70 to $8.75. They are quoted lower f.o.b. but any one who is familiar with the live stock market will understand that this means free on board the cars at country points, and must not be taken as a fair quotation for the price of hogs in Toronto, because the freight must be added to these figures. Hogs in Buffalo, are quoted from $6.75 to $7.25. From this you will see that hogs at the present time are worth about .75 per 100 pounds more in Toronto than they are in Buffalo.

If this agreement went into force, and American hogs were allowed free entry into this country, no doubt the American surplus products would be sent here, and the price of live hogs would naturally be reduced.

In regard to lambs, I find that the highest price in Toronto is $8 per 100 pounds, whereas the highest price in Buffalo is $6.75 per 100 pounds—$1.25 in favour of the Canadian market.

In order to show you that the Americans are sending sheep and lambs in here even under present conditions, I would like to refer to 'Hansard' of July 24, where the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) replying to an inquiry made by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) stated that there were 12,226 sheep and lambs sent into Canada from the United States during the month of May of this year, and that the value of these lambs and sheep was $21,063. Instead of our lambs going into the United States, evidently the result would be that our home market would be swamped by American sheep and lambs. The defenders of reciprocity tell us that it will open up a market with 90,000,000 people. Take the population of Canada at about seven or eight million and the population of the United States at about ninety million, the proportion would be twelve to one.

So, for every Canadian farmer who is permitted to enter free into the United States market, twelve American farmers will be permitted to enter free into this country. By looking through the Canada Year-book for 1910, which was recently issued, I find that of what is listed as animals and animal products we imported from the United States, $11,836,464, and exported to the United States, $10,629,614, or the value of our imports from the United States for home consumption was $1,206,849 greater than the value of our exports to that country. I find that we imported in that year from the United States meats to the value of $2,216,343 and exported to the United States, $69,965. In other words, for every dollar's worth of meat that we sold to the United States we bought $30 worth from them. Of eggs, we imported from the United States during 1910, $177,577, and we exported to them in the same year, $11,551, or we bought $15 worth from them for every dollar's worth that we exported to them. Evidently if this ninety million market was such a great boon to the Canadian farmers as the advocates of reciprocity would leave us to believe, the Americans would find a market for products of this nature at home without sending them into Canada. It does not end there. For the privilege of getting into the United States market we permit 12 other nations to have free entry into our markets on the same terms which we give to the United States without getting any trade concessions from these other countries. I have here a list of the favoured countries with their areas and populations:

	Area in Square miles.	Population.
Argentine (1908)	1,117,049	6,484,023
Austria-Hungary	241,197	49,280,000
Colombia	504,773	4,142,000
Denmark (1909)	15,052	2,692,000
Japan (1908)	147,476	52,340,220
Norway	124,090	2,253,000
Russia (1909)	8,379,044	157,044,700
Spain (1909)	194,744	20,068,381
Sweden (1909)	172,875	5,476,441
Switzerland	15,417	3,555,000
Venezuela	599,358	3,647,000
Bolivia	650,000	say 2,000,000
	12,161,085	307,982,765
		say 308,000,000

So for the privilege which this pact will give us we are opening our market to over 300,000,000 people, very many of them living behind high tariff walls which will prevent us competing with them in their home markets. By the operation of the favoured nation clause the products of a protected territory three times the size of Canada, much of it highly developed, will be admitted into our home markets free. A foreign population exclusive of the United States, forty times as great as the population of Canada, will be furnished with free trade passes to the Canadian market. Including the United States, with the twelve favoured nations, it means competition between one acre in Canada and four acres outside of Canada, between one Canadian farmer and fifty foreign commercial foes. To illustrate these conditions, I wish to quote from the tariff rates of some of the different countries. Argentine will be able to send oats into Canada under this agreement free, whereas our farmers in sending oats into Argentine would pay 66 cents per 100 pounds duty. Butter would enter Canada free, while Canadian butter entering Argentine will pay 4½ cents per pound. Fresh meats would enter Canada under a duty of 1¼ cents a pound, while going from Canada into Argentine they would pay 25 per cent. Bacon would enter Canada from Argentine at a duty of 1¼ cents a pound, while Canadian bacon would pay 9 cents per pound. New Zealand mutton would enter Canada under a duty of 1¼ cents a pound, while New Zealand charges a duty of 20 per cent on our mutton. Similar conditions will apply to a great many other commodities included in this pact.

That the products of the favoured nations are similar to ours is shown by the fact that they are large producers of wheat. In 1908 the following countries, Switzerland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Japan, Spain, Argentine, Austria and Russia, produced a total of 1,154,000,000 bushels. The advocates of reciprocity tell us the favoured nations will not send in anything free under this agreement, that they are not likely to be competitors with the Canadian producers. The member for Lisgar (Mr. Sharpe) has placed a statement in 'Hansard' which shows that we imported goods from the favoured nations during six years to the value of $33,000,000. These people are able to send $33,000,000 worth of farm products into Canada and pay the duty under existing conditions, so what may we expect when our duty is taken off altogether? The advocates of reciprocity are not quite so confident as they were at first. Their proposition now is to give it a trial, and if it does not prove a good thing for Canada, revoke it. Do they honestly think that if they enter into this agreement and it proves a good thing for the United States that they can so easily revoke it? They have only to remember the position of President Taft a little over a year ago, the only difference would be that the size of the stick would be increased tenfold.

The Liberal organs very often refer to this agreement as a measure of tariff relief. Well, if there is going to be any tariff relief about it, I fail to see where the farmers of this country are going to share in that relief. We have a large national debt on which we are bound to pay interest. The public works which it is necessary for us to build require a very large expense of money. We have also to meet the expenses of carrying on the government of this country. We are committed to a total expense in the neighbourhood of $100,000,000 per year. Now, the Dominion government does not send around a tax collector to get that money, but collects it by customs duties; and it appears to me that if this agreement goes into effect, the farmer will pay a larger portion of his taxes in the form of customs duties than he does at the present time. Under this agreement, if a farmer requires a buggy brought in from the United States, he will still pay duty on it; if he will require to bring in any other foreign machinery, he will continue to pay duty on it. He will continue to pay duty on his cotton, his sugar, and other necessaries of life, while the miner or the lumberman who wishes to bring in supplies for his camp, feed for his horses or food for his men, will be able to bring them in duty free. The lumberman will be able to bring in his oats from the United States without contributing anything to the revenue of this country. He will be able to bring in American cattle, American hogs and American butter to supply his camp, without paying any duty upon them. The farmer will be forced to sell everything he produces in a non-protected market, while practically everything he requires to buy is protected, and he will have to pay duty on it. Now, the National Policy, as inaugurated by the government of Sir John A. Macdonald, and continued by the present government, laid the foundation for and developed a splendid home market. The purchasing power of our people is continually increasing. The census returns show that the urban population of this country is increasing at a greater rate than the rural population. Not only is it increasing in number, but its purchasing power is increasing very rapidly owing to the increased wealth of the country. Many of the people who are included in the rural population might be classed as part of our consuming population. Practically all the northern parts of Ontario, where the people are devoted to lumbering and mining, supply a good market for the farm products of the older portions of Ontario. Even the farmers of our western provinces specialize largely in wheat, and are good customers for the majority of the farm products of the older portions of Canada.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I wish to refer to the statement so often made that both political parties have been in favour of reciprocity. Conditions to-day are very different from conditions twenty years ago. The refusal of the Americans at that time to open their door to us has resulted in developing a spirit of self reliance in the Canadian people. In the face of what looked like adversity we have found other markets for our surplus products. They refused to give us assistance while we were on the up-grade. Now that we are reaching the summit, we do not require it. Let us not be deceived: the Americans to-day as in the past are legislating for what they believe to be their own best interest. Having almost exhausted many of their resources, they are entering into this agreement for the purpose of getting control of our natural resources, and in the belief that has been so freely expressed by many of their prominent men that the arrangement will ultimately lead to the annexation of Canada. While I am free to admit that in some cases this pact might result in increased prices, the discussion so far has convinced me that it is not in the best interests of Canada. I prefer to support a policy which will preserve the Canadian market for farm products for the Canadian farmer, which will encourage the transforming of Canadian resources into finished products by Canadian workmen, and reserve the right of Canadians to regulate their own tariff.

On motion of Mr. Beattie, committee rose and reported progress.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, July 28, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

RACE TRACK GAMBLING.

Mr. MILLER moved that the evidence taken last session in connection with Bill No. 6 to 'An Act to amend the Criminal Code,' be printed as an appendix to the Journal of the House of Commons, and that rule 74 be suspended in reference thereto.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Will the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Miller) please explain the object of his motion?

Mr. MILLER. One of the officials of the House tells me that many requests have been made to the Printing Bureau for copies of the evidence taken in regard to Bill (No. 6), known as the 'Anti-Gambling Bill.' Now, the evidence can only be printed by the carrying of this motion. The clerk of the special committee inadvertently omitted to recommend that this evidence be printed and this is the only way in which it can be printed now.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is Bill (No. 6)?

Mr. MILLER. It is the Bill known as the Anti-Gambling Bill or the Race Track Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. This motion speaks of the evidence taken in connection with a Bill of last session?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The object of the motion is to have the evidence printed. This evidence should have been printed last year, but, as my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Miller) explains, through the inadvertence of the clerk this was not done.

Motion agreed to.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In laying upon the table of the House yesterday the report of the Imperial Conference, I stated that the rules or regulations adopted by the Committee of Defense, which were to be put in the volume, had not yet been printed, but had been received by His Excellency to be laid on the table of the House, and are upon the tables of the different parliaments interested. Yesterday we made a strong representation to the Home office that these papers should be brought down at once to the attention of the Canadian parliament and the Canadian people. His Excellency the Governor General received the following communication from the Colonial office:

'Mr. Harcourt to Lord Grey.

'London 27th July 1911.

'My telegram of to-day—on further consideration, in view of your telegram of 26th July 'Confidential,' and of 27th July 'Most urgent,'—I am prepared to acquiesce in immediate publication of both papers in Canada and I have informed Fisher that in deference to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's wishes I have felt it right to do so. Papers will be published here on Monday.

HARCOURT.

I therefore beg to lay upon the table of the House the memo. of the conference. The other paper is not copied, but it will be laid on the table during the course of the day.

I move that these papers be printed in connection with the other papers of the conference.

Motion agreed to.

RECIPROCITY PAPERS.

Mr. KING. I beg to lay on the table of the House a special report of the comparative prices in Canada and the United States from the year 1906 to 1911. This report includes prices of agriculture, fisheries, lumbering and mining products for the five years mentioned, and shows the actual market quotations.

THE CEMENT MERGER.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the orders of the day are taken up I would like to inquire what the government have done in regard to the very serious charges made by Sir Sanford Fleming concerning the Bill before the Private Bills Committee prior to the adjournment, and which was intended to be taken up after we resumed. I would like to know whether it is the intention of the government to appoint a committee of inquiry to ascertain whether the allegations made in connection with the formation of that cement company were or were not correct. The House will remember it was stated that there was over $13,000,000 of stock given in an improper way as bonus. Now, since we have resumed the committee has not been convened, and no evidence has been taken. It would seem to me in view of the very serious charges made that it would be incumbent upon the government to take some action to ascertain the correctness of the allegations. If they are correct, it reveals a very unfortunate condition of affairs. If they are not correct, they do a great injustice to certain individuals who are said to be connected with the matter.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We had hoped the House would deal with the matter after having taken up the Bill which is now before us, but the progress made upon the Reciprocity Bill has been so slow that we have not much hope of this other Bill being taken into consideration until a very late period. Under the circumstances we had not thought of appointing a committee, but the suggestion of my hon. friend may be a valuable one. If we can get the House to vote upon the reciprocity agreement, then we will see what we have to do.

SALARIES AND PROMOTIONS, POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HAGGART (Winnipeg). On the 16th March last this House ordered a return showing the promotions and increases of salary that had been given in the Post Office Department. Before adjournment I was informed that the matter would be taken up in a few days, but I suppose it has been overlooked. I simply mention it in order to bring it to the attention of the proper authorities.

Mr. EMMERSON. With respect to the return which was laid on the table of the House a few moments ago by the Minister of Labour, I would like to ask him if provision has been made or is being made for the printing of the return?

Mr. KING. The report is being issued as one of the reports of the Department of Labour, and will be paid for out of the appropriation for that purpose or by an order of the House.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Might I ask the Minister of Labour what means he used to gather that information or how long it has been gathering?

Mr. KING. In reply to my hon. friend I might say that this work has been in course of preparation for a considerable length of time. It is really a supplement to the volume which was brought down about a year ago, which dealt with wholesale prices, and which the hon. member for Brandon said he thought was the most valuable contribution to the economic literature of Canada.

This volume has been prepared by the same persons who had charge of the other volume and is a continuation of that work.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The Minister of Labour sent out experts similar to the men in Washington to gather information with reference to the prices on both sides of the line?

Mr. KING. Yes, there have been special experts and officers of the department gathering that information.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Do I understand the minister to inform the House that this is a continuation of the work that Mr. Coates produced a year ago?

Mr. KING. Mr. Coates has been continuing that work since, and when the discussion came up in the House on the various articles mentioned in the reciprocity agreement it became evident that members of the House wished to get further information in the way of prices. I instructed Mr. Coates to make his further report more detailed than it otherwise would be and to carry back his investigations five years and get actual market quotations for that period of time.

Mr. MEIGHEN. This is a separate and distinct work prepared since the debate took place?

Mr. KING. It has been completed since the debate commenced, but a good deal of the information has been gathered during the last few years.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would ask that a return moved for on March 20, relating to papers touching the claim of Macdonald & McLellan for the construction of a portion of the Intercolonial railway be expedited.

RULES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. EMMERSON. In view of the many references recently made to the expediting of the business of the House and the necessity of some change in the rules, I wish to ask the right hon. the leader of the House whether any steps are being taken or are proposed to be taken with regard to an amendment of the rules tending towards the expedition of public business. I wish to read an extract from a newspaper which may be of some service in consideration of the whole question:

How to Suppress Bores.

A Paris paper describes the method by which a South African tribe deals with bores.

This tribe considers long speeches injurious both to the speaker and his hearers; so, in order to protect both, there is a tribal law that every public orator must stand on one leg only while he is making a speech.

Mr. FIELDING. What if the speaker has not a leg to stand on?

Mr. EMMERSON. (Reading):

If the other leg is brought to the ground the oration must immediately end.

It is suggested that this institution would be of considerable value in other countries.—New York 'Times'.

This is an extract from the New York 'Times.' It might not meet the case now before the House as suggested by the Minister of Finance where the speakers have not a leg to stand on, but I am referring generally to the obstruction that has taken place in times past if it is not now in evidence in this House.

FARMERS' BANK.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would point out to the Minister of Finance in connection with the affairs of the Farmers' Bank of Canada that we are still without any information upon the table of the House, such as he suggested we might have. The hon. gentleman will no doubt remember that on March 15 a motion was made in this House by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) that a royal commission should be appointed for the purpose of investigating and reporting on certain matters in connection with the affairs of that bank. The Minister of Finance, answering for the government upon that motion, referred in the first place to an answer which he had given some time previously and in which he had said that:

> The proceedings now engaging the attention of the courts of justice in Toronto, will lead to a full investigation into and disclosure of all the affairs of the bank, and that, therefore, there is no need of the appointment of a royal commission.

The minister also added that if anything should arise later to indicate that the investigation was insufficient the question would be further considered. He also said that the machinery of the courts had been involved, and the case had been occupying a great deal of attention in the courts of Ontario, and that he saw no reason to doubt that the investigation would be thorough. He, therefore, concluded that there was no need of a royal commission to investigate matters which were already being fully investigated in the courts.

The difficulty of the situation is this: If we had a royal commission, if evidence had been taken and a report laid on the table of the House, the House would be seized of the evidence and of the report itself and would be enabled to form conclusions thereon. We have not that, and further, we have not anything of the kind at all because the government has not, up to the present, laid on the table of the House the result of any investigation by the curator or by the liquidator or copies of any evidence taken in the courts. I would therefore, suggest that inasmuch as a royal commission has been denied, upon the ground that there would be an investigation by the liquidator and in the courts, it would be a proper and reasonable thing for the government to procure certified copies of all evidence taken by the curator or liquidator, if any such evidence has been taken, and of all reports made by the curator and liquidator and copies of all proceedings in the courts, which, in the judgment of the Minister of Finance, would serve the purpose that would otherwise have been served so far as the information of this House is concerned, by the appointment of a royal commission and by the investigation and report of that commission.

I would, therefore, ask whether any steps have been taken to lay that information on the table of the House. If no such steps have been taken I would ask whether the government propose to assist the House in respect to this matter by procuring official copies of all such proceedings and evidence and having them laid on the table of the House. This seems to me a reasonable request.

Mr. FIELDING. If there are any public documents whatever in relation to the Farmers' Bank which have come to the government since the last discussion—I cannot for the moment say whether there are or not—I have no objection to their being brought down in response to a request of the House. Of the general investigation I can only take the ground I did before that these matters are being investigated by the courts. We have no reason to doubt that the investigation will be in every respect thorough, and I can see no reason why there should be any departure from the usual practice in this respect. If there are any public documents in the matter which have come to the government I have no objection to bringing them down.

Mr. OSLER. My attention was called, since I returned, to a debate in parliament on the 15th of March. Before I left this country on January, I was present when we were discussing the question of the Farmers' Bank.

I then made the statement that I had spoken to the Minister of Finance in reference to the issue of a certificate to this bank. The Minister of Finance said that if I was in the House he was sure I would not make that statement. After the deposit had been made with the Receiver General and before the certificate had been issued, I met the Minister of Finance and had a talk with him about the Farmers' Bank. I told him that it was a fraud, that the people connected with it were not worthy, and that the method taken for obtaining the necessary deposit was absolutely illegal. I knew that of my own personal knowledge, because I knew where application had been made to borrow the money on these endorsed notes; I did not know at the time from whom. I saw that the Finance Minister was under a good deal of anxiety about the condition of affairs. The matter ended there so far as I was concerned until some time afterwards, when I learned that a certificate had been issued, and I again spoke to the minister, and said I was exceedingly sorry that the government had issued the certificate. The Finance Minister said that so far as he saw, the law had been complied with, and that if the government had not issued the certificate they would have been open to the charge of protecting the larger banks. Of course there is a good deal of reason in that, but I think it was a case where the closest scrutiny ought to have been observed. It was notorious that the men at the head of the bank were not worthy. The information I think was given fairly, and without any prejudice against the establishment of new banks. Further than that, I may say that I had a conversation with my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson), and he told me he had made the same representation to the Finance Minister. I only make this statement because I do not want to put in the mouth of the leader of the opposition statements which I cannot confirm.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). If I had been aware that the hon. gentleman intended to bring this matter up to-day I should have read over the debate to see how far there was any conflict between the hon. gentleman's statement and my own. I am quite sure any statement the hon. gentleman makes, either at this time or at any other time, has been made in good faith. Busy men hesitate to speak with confidence concerning conversations that took place several years ago, and I feel that I should hestitate to speak definitely about a conversation on that matter of several years ago. But this I do know, that the attitude of my mind with relation to the Farmers' Bank was such that if my hon. friend or anybody else had given me any substantial reason against the issue of that certificate, I would have welcomed it, because it is notorious that I did not wish to issue the certificate to the Farmers' Bank. My hon. friend is right, I viewed it from the beginning with anxiety. I do remember I had a conversation with him about the matter, but I do not remember that he gave me any information bearing on the subject which would justify me in refusing to issue the certificate. I am sure, in a matter of such importance, my hon. friend if he had felt that he had material evidence to submit, would not have been content to trust the matter to memory, but he would have sent me a communication giving me definite information. It is, however, beyond question that anything that came to me on the subject from any quarter represented the anxiety which business men had concerning the flotation of this bank, an anxiety which I felt. But against that, I had the sworn testimony of the man who came into my office and swore that he had complied with all the provisions of the law. That sworn testimony should have outweighed probably any casual conversation I may have had from any quarter at all. I do not for a moment imagine that the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr Osler) did anything in this matter except with the best intentions, and I am quite sure that neither he nor I have any desire to misrepresent one another.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE NEWMARKET à CANAL.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. T. G. WALLACE (Centre York). Before you leave the Chair I wish to bring up a matter that has been discussed in this House several times already, a matter coming within the purview of the Department of Railways and Canals. I may say that my object in bringing this matter up is to place on 'Hansard' a report handed to me only on Tuesday last, which was asked for six months ago. I suppose this is the only opportunity I shall have of discussing this matter. I have always, both in this House and outside, condemned the expenditure upon the Newmarket canal as not being in the best interests of the people of this country. I believe it was an extravagant expenditure, and one that could not be justified by the Minister of Railways, or anybody else who knows the facts. The first estimate of the cost of this canal was $291,000, for a canal that was to run from Lake Simcoe to Holland Landing, and from Holland Landing to Newmarket. The next estimate was $967,000. The report shows why this expenditure had gone up from $297,000 to $967,000. This canal connects the town of Newmarket with Lake Simcoe, or is supposed to. Nevertheless, there has been no estimate made that this canal would be of any commercial value whatever, and what is more, no plan has been devised for furnishing water to this canal, and we all know that nothing is more necessary for a canal than water. There has been no report made showing where water can be got to float vessels in that canal. Therefore, I condemn this expenditure as extravagant and a wanton waste of public money. My attitude on this question may appear singular to some people, seeing that part of the expenditure is to be made in the county I represent, and no doubt many people would consider my course as bad politics. However, as I honestly believe that this expenditure is absolutely unjustified, I must, as an honest man, oppose it. Whatever benefit, temporary benefit, may come to the people of the county of York through this expenditure, will ultimately be lost to them through the failure to operate the canal. Now, I wish to place on 'Hansard' this report made by Mr. E. J. Walsh, who was the first engineer in charge of the canal. I would have preferred if the Minister of Railways and Canals was present on this occasion, but I am not responsible for his absence. I will read the report:

Ottawa, Canada,
January 20, 1911.

Sir,—I desire to place before you, and on record in the department, (so that the same may be available for parliamentary inquiry), some observations and explanations concerning the Holland River improvements, more generally spoken of as the "Newmarket Canal," as follows:—

The policy of carrying out this work has been subjected to much adverse criticism, both in parliament and throughout the country, chiefly on account of the excessive cost.

In the debates, in the House of Commons, the Government through silence, and the Minister of Railways and Canals, by subtle suggestion and implication, has allowed, and caused the whole blame, for this unpopular expenditure, to fall upon myself.

In the reports of debates, House of Commons "Hansard," March 23rd, 1909. Supply—"The Newmarket Canal"—Mr. J. A. Currie, (North Simcoe) stated: "I do not think the Minister of Railways and Canals will rise in his place and say to this House that any single figure that has been given by Mr. Walsh to him as the responsible minister in charge of that department in connection with this work, has been within 200 per cent of what the work actually cost, or of the estimate that was made by the responsible man, Mr. Grant. . . . .

. . . . Mr. Walsh also said the original work would cost something like $300,000. His first report was made to Mr. Collingwood Schreiber, in which he placed the amount as something over $300,000. He made a subsequent report on the 17th of March, 1905, which the Minister did not quote, and the amount was $291,249.86. . . . .

. . . . . Mr. Walsh made several attempts or bluffs at an estimate on the second section but Mr. Grant, who is without doubt a very experienced engineer, made an estimate of that work which was far short of the lowest tenderer. Mr. Grant's estimate on section No. 2 was $596,826, and the lowest tender received in answer to the call founded on that estimate was $652,009.50. . . .

'Then there are the land damages and the work at Wilcox lake. No one has made an estimate on that work except our good christian friend Walsh, who says $41,000. Mr. Walsh estimated at $290,000 work which has now reached $900,000, so if he says this work will cost $41,000, we are safe in saying that it will cost not less than $150,000.'

In another portion of his speech Mr. Currie is reported thus:—

'The first mention of this canal was immediately before the election of 1904. Some time in October 1904, Mr. Walsh, an engineer of the department, was hurriedly called from Orillia to that section of country to make a survey of this particular branch.

'Mr. Walsh goes down to that country, and in a few days every loose fish in Newmarket is driving stakes and eating his dinner at the country's expense.

'By the way, it was just two or three weeks before the election, and every voter that could possibly be put to work was put to work on the job, and within a very short time they blew in $25,000 of this country's money in making these surveys. Bear in mind immediately before the election.'

I desire, before proceeding further, to characterize the latter statement as being, absolutely, foundationless. There are only four (4) local men, and three (3) in staff from Ottawa (7 all told) employed at the time, and up to the date of the general election, which took place on November 3rd, 1904, the total amount expended, in connection with the Holland River survey, was $484.86, of which $68.79 was the actual sum paid, in wages, to the local men.

Details of this expenditure, annexed hereto, can be verified by reference to the Auditor General's report for that fiscal year. Mr. Currie's other statements, with reference to myself and my report, are quite as uncalled for, unfair and extravagant.

Doubtless, after Mr. Currie's parliamentary experience becomes more mature he may realize the propriety of asking for all papers on the particular subject, and satisfying himself that he is right in the premises, before making an attack in parliament on an official who is precluded from, being present and defending himself.

In the House of Commons debates, Hansard, March 23rd, 1909:

'Supply—The Newmarket Canal.

Hon. G. P. Graham (Minister of Railways and Canals). Mr. Speaker,.....' He gives his estimate, which, as my hon. friend (Mr. Currie) has pointed out, is too low, amounting to $354,536.

'Now let me go a little more into the history of the work as it has proceeded, giving also a digest of Mr. Grant's findings. Let us take section 2, Holland river division. On February 12, 1908, Mr. Grant, who is one of the most efficient engineers in the whole department, after giving the results of the analysis points out that the rainfall for 1907, which was a very dry year, was somewhat less than 30 inches. Mr Grant himself has gone over the figures very carefully, and, in his report of 1907, although he finds that the rainfall was less than 30 inches, and less, than Mr. Walsh found it. Mr. Walsh found by the records of the Meteorological Observatory, Toronto, that the average annual precipitation at Newmarket, for the ten years from 1896 to 1905, was 30-67 inches, and the minimum during that period was in 1896, when it amounted to only 27.67 inches, the latter is what he based his calculations (re water supply) on. Vide report, dated 29th September, 1906, E.J.W., 20, 1, 11. . . The country is committed to building the Newmarket canal. It has cost a great deal more money than was estimated. . . . I may state that the cost as estimated by Mr. Grant is, as my hon. friend has pointed out, nearly a million dollars. Mr. Butler has estimated that the reservoir will cost $80 000. . . . . The canal itself will cost in the vicinity of a million dollars.'

Mr. Samuel Sharpe (North Ontario).—As this Newmarket canal . . . . The Minister of Railways and Canals also stated that the original estimate was largely exceded, that the original estimate was something around $300,000, but that subsequent estimates which largely increased this amount were due to the increased cost of materials. I think he placed the increased cost of materials at from 40 to 50 per cent. But he failed to inform us that the original estimate had been increased some 300 per cent.'

Sir Wilfrid Laurier—Mr. Speaker, ... We did send an engineer and he reported that the work could be done for $300,000. Well, we thought that if we could have that useful work done for the town of Newmarket and the riding of North York for an expenditure of $300,000 we ought to do it. It turns out, however, that the work is costing more than we expected. This is not unusual in works of this character. My hon. friend says it is going to cost a million dollars. But even if it should, even if there be a mistake, that is very different from a corrupt act.'

Mr. Walsh Interviews Minister.

Having been, more or less under the impression that the minister's, most extraordinary presentation and defence of the Newmarket canal policy, during the 1909 parliamentary session, might have been due to personal misconception, or misrepresentation on the part of some of his departmental officials concerning the true facts about that work, the writer called upon the Minister of Railways and Canals (a few days after prorogation) on the 28th May, 1909, and pointed out to him that the adverse criticism in parliament, directed against the former, in connection with the Newmarket canal work, was founded on false premises; that my plans and proposals in re. section No. 2, of the east branch—Holland Landing to Newmarket—had been unwarrantedly changed and the cost, unnecessarily, enormously increased; that I had recommended a standard of construction commensurate with the amount of traffic likely to be available, and that, instead of adopting this, Messrs. Butler and Grant had copied the elaborate plans of the costly Soulanges canal; overlooking the fact that the St. Lawrence canals form the links of navigable communication between the Atlantic ocean and the Great Lakes, having tributary thereto the possible carrying trade of half a continent, the magnitude of which no living person could foresee; whereas the 'Newmarket canal' is much less ambitious in its pretensions as regards prospective traffic; and further, that when an attack was made upon myself in parliament, by certain members of the opposition, the minister, instead of coming to my defense and explaining the true situation of affairs, chose to leave parliament in ignorance and contented himself with fulsome laudations of Mr. Grant's (so called) engineering skill, thus endorsing said attack by implication.

After questioning the minister, he admitted that he knew nothing about civil engineering work, and that his explanations and utterances in parliament (re Newmarket canal, and the engineers connected therewith) had been inspired and instigated by his deputy, Mr. Butler.

The writer will deal with Mr. Butler's case presently. Having impressed upon the minister the facts relative to the Newmarket Canal, and the inaccuracy and injustice of his statements and insinuations, in parliament, it was but reasonable to expect that he would seize the earliest opportunity of making suitable explanations.

That he did not do so, the following excerpt from 'Hansard,' February 4th, 1910, (this was the succeeding session), will show: 'Trent Canal construction.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the hon. gentleman appropriating for the Newmarket canal?

Mr. GRAHAM. Last year we did not spend much on it. I sent for Mr. Grant, the engineer of the department, who is a first-class man, and we discussed the Newmarket canal very thoroughly. He assured me that I can state to the House on his reputation that there will be plenty of water in that canal. That is on the word of one of the best engineers we have in the service in regard to hydraulics, and a most reliable man.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have seen the work, but I did not visit it for the purpose of investigation, because any information I could give would be based absolutely on the advice of experts whom we pay for that purpose.

Trent Canal—improvements, $62,500.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. . . . . .

Mr. GRAHAM. The engineer is having his report completed on the Severn route and the Nottawasaga route. My hon. friend (Mr. J. A. Currie) can come to the department and see what he is proposing.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Was it the same engineer who made the estimate on these who made the original estimate on the Newmarket canal?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, Mr. Walsh.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not wish to challenge the standing of the engineer who made the report, but, as the minister was so misled with reference to the Newmarket canal, I think it would be advisable for him to have these figures checked up by some other member of the staff.

Mr. GRAHAM. Any estimate of these routes, before anything is done, will be reviewed by Mr. Grant, the engineer of the Trent, whom I will make responsible for all the figures.

The remarks of the Minister of Railways and Canals, as quoted above, are most discourteous to myself, the inference conveyed being a reflection on my standing as an engineer. I have no objection whatever, to the minister's somewhat frenzied, commendation of Mr. Grant as an engineer, but when my name has been in the 'limelight,' and detrimental reflections by innuendo and implication are, at the same time, directed against myself, I protest most vehemently. I have known Mr. Grant for some years, he was, formerly, a flagman on my staff, subsequently he had been on the staff of the late Mr. Thos. Munro, M.I.C.E., who was the engineer in charge of the Soulanges canal construction.

NEWMARKET CANAL—HISTORIC RETROSPECT.

On September 27, 1904.—Received official letter of instructions from Department Railways and Canals, to make surveys for the improvement of the east and west branches of the Holland river, &c.

October 17, 1904.—The instrumental survey of the east branch Holland river was not commenced until this date; there being a delay, on the part of the department, in appointing an assistant engineer for the work.

January 9, 1905.—Mr. L. K. Jones (Secretary) informed me, by telephone, that Sir W. Mulock, Postmaster General, desired to see me about the Holland river surveys, and requested me to go and see the latter.

I told Mr. Jones I would see Mr. Schreiber, first.

January 10,1905.—Mr. Schreiber told me that an estimate for the Holland river (east branch) improvements was required forthwith, and directed me to see Sir W. Mulock on the subject.

Informed Mr. Schreiber that the surveys were not far enough advanced and there was not sufficient data for a reliable estimate; he said nevertheless it had to be made. I afterwards saw Sir W. Mulock, and he asked me to prepare an estimate (which he required on the following day) for a canal from the mouth of Holland river to the town-line at Newmarket; that he desired it to be designed on the most economical principals of construction to keep down the cost; that, high level, wooden bridges, with graded approaches should be adopted for highway crossings, etc.; that land required would be inexpensive, as good land, in the vicinity of Newmarket and Holland Landing, could be obtained for $50 per acre, &c., and proffered other information about the route which he said he was familiar with.

I explained to him that the estimate would not be reliable, &c.

At conclusion of interview with the Postmaster General, returned to Department Railways and Canals to again protest to the chief engineer re forced estimate. Mr. Jones took my message to Mr. Schreiber, who was with the Minister, and returned in a few minutes and stated that, both Mr. Emmerson and Mr. Schreiber desired me to prepare the best estimate possible from the data at my disposal.

January 11, 1905.—Finished the hurried preliminary estimate for proposed river improvement, and canal, from Cook's bay to Newmarket, and handed it to Mr. Schreiber at 11.20 a.m. He looked it over, and instructed me to take it to the Privy Council chamber to Mr. Emmerson, which was done, and the latter called out Sir W. Mulock, gave him the estimate and. presently, left us alone together.

I reiterated to Sir William the very meagre information upon which the estimate was founded and, furthermore, that it did not provide for storage reservoirs, &c., for a water supply for the canal, &c., &c.

The amount of this estimate was $328,825.26.

March 10, 1905.—Got letter from Mr. Schreiber asking for report and estimate of proposed Holland river improvements to Newmarket.

March 14, 1905.—Hon. H. R. Emmerson phoned at 7.45 p.m. and asked me to see Sir Wm. Mulock next day re estimate for canal on east branch of Holland river.

March 15, 1905.—Interview with Sir W. Mulock, who stated that he wanted an amended estimate of cost of improving the east branch of Holland river to Newmarket, &c. I told him the surveys were not complete and that the preparation of the estimate should be postponed.

He replied: it was imperative he should have a report before the end of the week to submit to council; that I could prepare an estimate based on such information as the surveys, so far as carried, afforded to date, and that full allowance would be made by the government for any discrepancy that might arise, &c.

March 17, 1905.—Finished this estimate.

March 18, 1905.—(Saturday)—Sent the report and estimate to Mr. Schreiber.

Mr. WALLACE.

The amount of this (amended) estimate was $291,249.86.

This was not a second distinct estimate; it was merely a correction of the estimate of January 11, 1905, which had been based on a lockage of 60 feet, but as the surveys proceeded it was found the lockage would not exceed 45 feet, hence the reduction in quantity of concrete in locks, less cost for lock gates, oak in lock sills, iron, dams, &c., accounts for the difference in the two amounts.

May 4, 1905.—Per instructions from department: handed copies of preliminary estimate, &c., to Sir W. Mulock, at House of Commons, and took occasion to, again, remind him that the estimate was prepared on inadequate data.

May 19 1905.—Received letter from Sir W. Mulock re Newmarket canal. Copy attached.

June 3, 1905.—Letter (dated May 31, 1905) from Sir W. Mulock asking if I could not reduce the schedule price for dredging Holland river, &c., also telephone message from him on same subject, and replied by letter.

Copies of both letters attached.

June 30, 1905.—The surveys for the improvements of the east branch, Holland river, were completed on this date.

July 10, 1905.—Mr. M. J. Butler replaced Mr. Schreiber as Deputy Minister and Chief Engineer of the department, but the latter continued to act for some weeks later.

July 17, 1905.—By direction prepared a report, supplementary to report of March 17, 1905, giving some additional information required by the Minister and sent copies to Mr. Emmerson and Mr. Schreiber.

January, 9, 1906.—Mr. Butler instructed me to prepare plans and specifications for section No. 1 of the Holland river—Cook's bay to Holland Landing—so that tenders might be invited without delay, &c.

I mentioned to him that some of the promoters of the work had suggested that a draught of four (4) feet of water, from Cook's bay to Newmarket, would be ample for all requirements. Mr. Butler said to adopt same dimensions as on the main Trent canal, that is a depth of 6 feet, &c.

February 17, 1906.—Completed and sent to Mr. Butler, plan, profile, typical cross sections, specifications, bill of quantities, &c., for section No. 1, of Holland river, (Cook's bay to Holland Landing).

October 1, 1906.—Completed and sent to the Department of Railways and Canals, report and detailed estimate, general plan, profile and detailed working plans (42 in all) for section No. 2, from Holland Landing to Newmarket, and for a water supply ditch from Lake Wilcocks.

November 5, 1906.—Completed specification for construction of section No. 2, and sent it to Mr. Butler.

This estimate which was for section No. 2 (Holland Landing to Newmarket only) and based on reliable information secured by instrumental survey, &c., amounted to $314,220.34 for that section of canal; and for the water supply ditch, &c., from Lake Wilcocks, the amount was $40,315.87, thus making a grand total of $354,536.21 for section No. 2 and water supply ditch.

Estimate of cost of section No. 1. Cook's bay to Holland Landing, is not included in this.

Upon the completion of the location plan, profile, &c., for section No. 1, the corrected quantities of work, to be done on this section, were taken out and showed a total of 272,060 cubic yards of dredging (consisting of peat bog, sand, silt, mud, &c.), and 15 acres of clearing.

Taking the price of these items at 16 cents per cubic yard, and $25 per acre, respectively, and adding ten per cent for contingencies, brought the estimated cost of this section to $48,295.06.

The total estimated cost, therefore, for both sections, that is from Cook's bay (Lake Simcoe) to Holland Landing and Newmarket, with water supply ditch, was $402,831.27, a sum quite ample in my opinion, to have affected the improvements if conducted in a business-like manner, and in accordance with my proposals.

The schedule prices, generally, were taken from contract rates (as given in the Auditor General's report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1905), of Messrs. Brown & Aylmer's contract for the Simcoe and Balsam Lake Division, Trent canal.

Hansard again.

In 'Hansard,' March 23, 1909, pages 3137-38: Mr. J. A. Currie (North Simcoe) . . . This Lake Simcoe Dredging Company built a scow and placed a dredging apparatus on it. They took the contract for $46,497.10 '(Section No. 1),' and commenced work. As a result of their operations, in a very few months they discovered that their dredge would not work, and it is very amusing to read the comments of Mr. Grant on the apparatus they had there at work. . . The matter was taken hold of by Mr. Grant, and he made another estimate for a second tender. He estimated No. 1 section for the department at $131,-239. . . Tenders were called and a gentleman named Riley was one of the lowest tenderers. His figure for that work was exactly the same as the government estimate. . .

The first tender was some $41,000, and after that section had been revamped and looked over on the very same drawings, the lowest tender was $131,000.

The writer has no hesitation in stating that, if Mr. Currie's assertions are correct, there has been pitiable mismanagement, of this section No. 1 contract, on the part of the department as administered by Mr. Butler.

The sum of $131,239 as stated by Mr. Currie, to be Mr. Grant's estimate for dredging 270,062 cubic yards of peat bog, sand, silt and mud (the quantities calculated from very careful surveys and soundings, and the material classified from test borings, all of which was done under the immediate supervision of Mr. Stevens, engineer in charge of party) on section No. 1; represents a cost of about $0.48 per cubic yard.

This is an unprecedented price for dredging material of this description in a sheltered situation and to such a shallow depth below the surface of the water as six (6) feet, on Canadian public works.

The schedule price of 16 cents per cubic yard for dredging, adopted by the writer, was considered too high by Sir W. Mulock who wrote as follows:

Postmaster General,
Ottawa,
Toronto, May 31, 1905.

Dear Mr. Walsh:

With reference to your estimate for the Holland river improvements to Newmarket, it occurred to me that perhaps in view of the reduced prices for which parties are now tendering for dredging you might think it right to reduce your estimate. A short time ago Mr| Hyman informed me that he had advertised for a quantity of dredging and that the prices are very much below what have formerly been paid. If you were to see Mr. Gobeil he could doubtless let you know these modern figures, and if they cause you to revise your estimate for the Holland river improvements, I wish you would let me have your revised estimate not later than early Saturday morning of this week, as I wish on that morning to bring the matter before the government.

Yours faithfully,
W. MULOCK.

E. J. Walsh, Esq.,
Civil Engineer,
Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, Ont.

The following reply was sent:

'164 Sparks St.,
'Ottawa, June 3, 1905.

'Dear Sir William,—Your letter of the 31st ultimo having reference to the estimate for the Holland river improvements to Newmarket, was received upon my return to the city to-day, and I had just read it when you called me by telephone.

'I regret it does not seem possible to safely reduce the estimate, as all items are cut pretty close, and I ascertained, during my last visit to Newmarket, that one public road crossing had been overlooked in the preparation of the estimate—this will be met by the amount for contingencies.

'I am, yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) E. J. WALSH.

"The Honourable
'Sir William Mulock, K.C.M.G.,
'Postmaster General,
'Ottawa'.

With regard to the merriment caused by the alleged hysteria-producing, comments of Mr. Grant anent the dredge used by the 'Lake Simcoe Dredging Company' on section No. 1: it may be interesting to relate that, about the time this work was let, one of the contractors, who was in Ottawa, informed me that Mr. Butler had advised him to use a hydraulic or suction dredge, and asked my opinion.

I pointed out that such a dredge could be used effectively, only, in deepening the shoals, &c., on the main river, from Cook's Bay to the 'cut off' (which was only a small portion of the work); that it would be useless for dredging the peat-bog, as the fibrous material would clog the suction and discharge pipes, &c., that they would require supplementary dredging plant, such as a bucket, and clam-shell dredge; and expressed the opinion that it would be better and less expensive to provide a combination dredge of the dipper and clam type.

Evidently they acted on the advice of Mr. Butler, with, apparently, disastrous financial results.

Not an isolated instance.

The preliminary estimate, for improving the east branch of the Holland river, made before the surveys had been carried far enough to furnish reliable data, is not an isolated instance of this kind.

The estimated cost of the great 'National Transcontinental Railway' was prepared before the survey parties had, even been placed in the field, and on such estimates the huge undertaking was launched and carried through parliament, and in reply to criticism the Prime Minister said they had:

'Mountains of information'.

Regardless of this superfluity, the discrepancy, between the estimates for this work, and the cost thereof to date, is staggering.

No scapegoat in this case.

In 'Hansard', vol. XLII., April 6, 1909, re Grand Trunk Pacific Loan; there was general criticism, by opposition members, of Mr. Schreiber's original estimates of $18,000 per mile for the prairie section being increased to $35,000 per mile; and for the mountain section from $30,000 per mile to $80,000 per mile.

Did the government attempt to saddle the blame upon Mr. Schreiber and make a scapegoat of him? Not at all, on the contrary, hon. Mr. Fielding strongly defended him. Compared with the Newmarket canal, the latter sinks into insignificance.

Mr. Butler's extravagant changes.

On December 7, 1906, Mr. Butler handed me a letter, written by Mr. A. J. Grant (in reply to a letter of the former, dated November 20, 1906), proposing certain changes in the designs and mode of construction of section No. 2 of the Holland river, and remarked that the latter had taken his ideas from the Soulanges canal work, upon which he had been employer in a subordinate capacity. The writer looked carefully into the changes suggested by Mr. Grant and endorsed by Mr. Butler, and handed in his report thereon, to the latter, on January 11, 1907.

A copy of this report is enclosed herewith.

Mr. Walsh's responsibility ceases.

Subsequent to December 7, 1906, the date on which Mr. chief engineer Butler intimated that he approved of the changes suggested by Mr. Grant (though really inspired by himself), but particularly after my report of January 11, 1907, I disclaim all and every responsibility for the huge cost of the Holland river improvements, or of any criticism attached thereto, whether as regards preliminary estimates or otherwise.

The concluding paragraph of my report (January 11, 1907) read as follows:—

'I desire to observe, in conclusion, that the suggested alterations, in the design and mode of construction, will, if indulged by the department, require a recasting of the proposals, and largely increase the cost, both, of construction and maintenance, without yielding any adequate advantage.'

Greatly increased cost.

The greatly increased cost is due, chiefly, to the following changes, viz.:—

(1) The widening of the channel.

(2) Changing a flight of two locks of 10 feet lift, each, to one lock of 20 feet lift, thereby necessitating a very large additional expenditure in providing an artificial foundation of piles, &c.

(3) The changing of the profile and general design of the work; and excavating a large section of new channel, instead of utilizing as much of the existing stream channel as possible.

(4) The substituting of culverts, in the side walls of locks, for valves near the bottom of lock gates, for filling and emptying the lock chambers.

(5) By using metal casting for the hollow quoins in locks, instead of shaping the quoin directly in the concrete.

(6) A very large increase in the expenditure on account of building all the entrance piers to locks entirely of concrete.

(7) A very large increase in the cost of the work, by the proposed use of pile and artificial foundations for structures.

(8) A large increase in excavation by proposed deepening of raceways, or channels below dams.

(9) An increase in the cost of the work, by putting stop-log openings in each dam.

(10) A substantial increase in the expenditure by changes in the down stream, face of spillways of dams.

(11) An enormous increase in the cost of the work, by substituting concrete cores, for puddle cores, in the earthen dams and embankments.

(12) Increased expense for (unnecessary) temporary bridge across the river at Bradford road and Yonge street crossings.

(13) The cost largely increased by substituting concrete for stone-filled timber cribwork, in the construction of the rest piers of swing bridges.

(14) The cast largely increased by substituting concrete for cribwork, in the foundation of the dock at Newmarket.

(15) A large increase in cost for a proposed dock at Holland Landing, not originally contemplated.

(16) Cost of proposed water-supply ditch, from Lake Wilcocks, largely increased by changing two cedar culverts to concrete culverts, &c.

(17) A very largely increased cost owing to the change of profile, &c., necessitating a great amount of stone protection of slopes of canal prism.

(18) Cost largely increased by substituting sodding for seeding of slopes of bank.

Hon. Sir A. B. Aylesworth's contribution.

While Sir William Mulock was the parent of the Newmarket canal (which he desired to have constructed on the more economical principles known to engineering science), the Hon. Sir A. B. Aylesworth, M.P., contributed his 'mite' of expense to the lusty offspring.

This took the form of a bridge across the east branch of the Holland river on the line between lots 115 and 116, in the first concession, township of East Gwillimbury.

Neither a bridge nor public highway had ever previously existed at this place, and when Mr. Butler first discussed the subject with the writer he was informed of this, and the latter also, expressed the opinion that the sagacious township authorities had, apparently, suddenly conceived the idea that it was an opportune time to have this bridge built—through the aid of their powerful representative in parliament—at the government's expense.

On the 19th March, 1906, Mr. Butler wrote me as follows:—

The township of East Gwillimbury are desirous of building a bridge, immediately between lots 115 and 116, of the first concession, west of Yonge street, Mr. A. J. Hughes being the township clerk. As this comes across your work, I would like to go over it with you, so that we can arrange with the township authorities to have the bridge built suitable for the canal at that point. . .

A copy of this letter is attached hereto.

In the negotiations which ensued between myself (on the part of the government), and the township authorities, the latter agreed to hand over what remained of the appropriation of $3,000, part of which they were expending in grading road approaches across a marsh, and in building a wooden bridge, of 5 bents, 60 feet long, over a portion of 'Soldier's Bay,' and in driving piles on shores of the main stream. The bridge over the river, constructed by the department, is a steel swing span, 120 feet long in the clear, resting on concrete over artificial foundations, &c., its cost must have been from twenty to thirty thousand dollars. This, also, is included in the Butler-Grant revised estimate of cost of the minature Soulanges canal—yclept the Newmarket canal—but very carefully concealed from parliament. The revelations hereinbefore disclosed afford food for reflection.

Dividing the Dual Position.

Towards the end of 1904, the then Minister of Railways and Canals contemplated the abolition of the dual position of deputy minister and chief engineer, and (unsolicited) I was promised one of these positions.

The minister's plans miscarried, and a few months later Mr. M. J. Butler was appointed to both offices.

Mr. Butler's Sudden Evolution.

On the 10th July, 1905, public announcement was made in some of the newspapers of the appointment of Mr. M. J. Butler as deputy minister and chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals.

His appointment was heralded in the press as a national boom, he being described as a 'brilliant engineer' of eminence, 'greater than had been,' and he was duly installed in office amid the blare of trumpets and ministerial eclat.

That appointment—understood to have been arranged by certain contractors—was the subject of much comment in engineering circles, as the appointee was, generally, unknown, he having previous to his appointment on the staff of the National Transcontinental railway, in August, 1904, been employed as contractor's foreman on some railway and bridge works in Prince Edward Island, also on some locomotive works in Montreal; before that, in charge of a gang putting up water tanks, &c., for supplying water to locomotive engines on an American railway; and at a more remote period having been engaged in connection with some 'one-horse' railways over near Lake Ontario, &c.

As Chief Engineer.

His accomplishments as chief engineer of the department would scarcely gain him a niche in the 'temple of fame.' Those may be enumerated as follows:

1. His success in securing an award whereby his former employer, the contractor for the Hillsborough bridge, Prince Edward Island, was paid a large amount of money by the government for so-called 'extras,' &c., this work having already cost about three times the amount of the estimate.

2. His certificate re the substantialness, &c., of the bridge which was being constructed over the St. Lawrence river near Quebec city, upon which the government guaranteed the bonds of the Quebec Bridge Company to the extent of several millions of dollars.

The subsequent collapse of this bridge was a national disgrace, and the chief engineer of that day cannot evade his share of responsibility by putting the blame upon an invalid in New York, Mr. Cooper, whom he knew had been physically unable to visit the site of the ill-fated bridge.

3. The stupid, unbusiness-like methods pursued in connection with Intercolonial railway contracts at Moncton, New Brunswick, resulting in a verdict in the Exchequer Court for a large sum of money—over and above what the engineer considered the work was worth—for the contractor, and which the government has appealed to a higher court.

4. After the plans for the substructure of the swing bridge over the Holland river, between lots 115 and 116, east Gwillimbury township had been prepared, Mr. Butler, exercising his perogative as chief engineer, insisted on certain changes being made in those plans, regardless of the fact that it was pointed out to him that if built under his modifications the road embankments back of the abutments would, from sheer weight, shove the latter into the river. The contract was let for this bridge under the modified plans; the abutments were erected and the road approaches filled up behind those before the superstructure was put up, and it was found necessary to spend a large sum of money in driving piles through the newly made banks to prevent those from forcing out and throwing the abutments into the river.

'By their fruits (works) ye shall know them.'

So much for this engineering phenomenon. Mr. Walsh refused offer of superintending.

Engineership of Trent Canal.

In March, 1906, Mr. Butler pressed the writer on several occasions to accept the superintending-engineership of the Trent canal, but the latter declined to take the position for the salary of $3,600 a year, &c.

The refusal to accept the proffered position was followed by a species of active discourtesy which had previously been more or less thinly veiled.

Subsequently Mr. A. J. Grant was appointed, and on May 9, 1906, I was informed by official letter that Mr. Grant would take charge of the Holland river improvement work.

Had that work been left in my charge the government would have avoided much unpleasant criticism, and the country spared an absurd extra outlay of several hundred thousand dollars.

Copying Soulanges Canal Plans.

It has been already stated that Mr. Grant, with Mr. Butler's approval, copied from the Soulanges canal plans in the proposed canalizing of section No. 2 of the Holland river; and in doing so they demonstrated the fact that they were unable to differentiate between a great national water-highway route and a small local ditch.

Any engineer undertaking to carry out, almost, any class of work may find old plans or other works to copy from, but unless he discriminates between relative governing conditions he is liable to seriously blunder, just as in the case of the Newmarket canal; and in this respect it would be no more incongruous to take the statue of 'Venus of Milo' as a model for a Greek sphinx.

Hon. H. R. Emmerson Resigns Portfolio.

The Hon. H. R. Emmerson resigned the portfolio of Minister of Railways and Canals on April 2nd, 1907.

Up to this time Mr. Butler was somewhat restrained in his peculiar methods, but from thenceforth his erratic official actions indicated unbridled sway.

Exit Mr. Butler.

In the month of January, 1910, Mr. Butler severed his official connection with the Department of Railways and Canals. Judging from the newspaper reports of statements attributed to the minister, concerning the resignation of that plenipotent individual, of the irreparable loss sustained, &c., &c., the public might reasonably have inferred that he had 'shed tears of blood,' but certain parties 'in the know' only smiled. Among other remarks the minister was credited with saying that he was a: 'man of exceptionable ability and it would be very difficult to secure a successor capable of filling all these positions. I consequently have under advisement the division of the office as was the case some years ago.' Further: 'It is a case where the office should seek the man,' &c., &c.

This letter might be described as rodomontade.

It has been a favourite phrase in governmental circles of late years, and these are several, extraordinary, negative examples of its application with respect to some very important special appointments in the public service.

Seeing Red.

Like an individual, from whom the white dove of innocence had flown, protesting virtue, so the hon. minister just as frantically proclaimed and rehearsed the (mythical) stupendous and transcendental quality of the engineering exploits of Messrs. Butler and Grant, as those appeared to him. Was this an additional expedient to cover the blunderings of the department and by suggestive contrasts to attempt to discredit the writer?

A Clew.

Some important official appointments, in connection with the Department of Railways and Canals, were under consideration early in 1910, for one of which I was an applicant. Some influential (mutual) friends who had spoken to the minister on my behalf, afterwards, informed me that Mr. Graham was 'seeing red,' and had told them he believed I was a 'Conservative,' &c.

As to this: I wish to state in the most emphatic manner, that never at any time—during the period occupied by me as chief engineer of surveys of the Trent canal, main outlet routes and the various branches—did I of my own volition, either directly or indirectly, introduce politics into the question, or allow such to interfere in any way, with the work.

The only approach to politics was in connection with certain appointments to the survey parties; wherein I was, officially, instructed to apply to the persons controlling the 'patronage' for any local appointments; as for instance when the party was being organized for the survey of the Trent canal route from Rice Lake to Trenton in October, 1904, I was told to apply to Hon. Geo. P. Graham, of Brockville, (organizer of the Liberal party for eastern Ontario); and, having done so, was referred by him to Messrs B. O. Lott, of Anson, Ontario, and John Douglas, of Warkworth, Ontario, Liberal candidates for West Hastings and East Northumberland, respectively &c.

Pertinent Observations.

In view of the evidence adduced, it looks very much as if the minister had harkened to false counsel from self-seeking obsequious sycophants, and then proceeded to (figuratively) crucify the victim, without hearing what the latter had to say.

The writer would inform the minister that he, also, for several years, was at the head of a great spending department of government (both executive and administrative), in a neighbouring dependency of the empire; that he successfully conducted the work, connected therewith, on business principles, without reference to party politics; and being himself an engineer was enabled to, personally, analyse reports of engineers and other subordinate officials, and deal with the same on their merits.

The minister, however, is at a great disadvantage in this respect, having to direct public works of great magnitude, and being absolutely dependent on the honesty, or dishonesty, capability or incompetency, &c., of his immediate subordinates for any technical and concomitant advice.

My engineering record is unassailable; the works, successively carried out are an uncompromising refutation of any reflection thereon.

There are no grim spectres, of the victims of faulty structures, to haunt my conscience during the waking hours, or disturb my nightly slumbers.

It is a little over 25 years since I first joined the engineering staff of the Department of Railways and Canals and in the interim, between 1885 and the present time, I have been employed by the department for over 12 years, on very important works, and the blue-books attest the satisfactory manner in which the duties were acquitted. About the beginning of 1890, the Canadian government was requested by the government of the Leeward islands to select a Canadian engineer to take charge of important public works in the latter colony, and the position was offered to and accepted by myself, and I was occupied for a period of six years in carrying out those works.

The records there and at 'Downing Street,' London, flatteringly testify to the success of my administration. And so with railway companies, &c., &c., for which I have worked at different periods.

As an engineer, I consider myself in a superior class to those pigmies around whose heads (for, seemingly, peculiar political reasons, and to cover up blunders) the minister would encircle halos and entwine wreaths of laurel.

The actions of Mr. Butler, with respect to the Newmarket canal reports (as hereinbefore described), were not only discourteous and unbecoming the position which he held, but were, also, unprofessional. However, one could not expect much better from a parvenu whose previous authority was exercised, chiefly over navvies and shanty-men.

The minister, by dissimulation in parliament, promoted the attack on the writer, and cannot evade responsibility therefor. The whole business is reprehensible and savours very much of 'backwoods politics.'

This communication is somewhat prolonged, nevertheless it merely touches the fringe of the subject in review.

The writer has withheld, in reserve, some further interesting matter concerning the Newmarket canal.

In concluding, I recall from 'Dante's Inferno,' the portentous inscription over the portals of hell: 'All hope abandon, ye who enter in,' and consider it would be appropriate to have, suitably engraved, over the entrance to the Department of Railways and Canals (as that department is at present constituted) the significant words:

Abandon principle, and unman yourselves, all engineers who take employment here.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
&c., &c.,
(Sgd.) E J. WALSH, C.E.

I think the report of Mr. Walsh shows that the responsibility for the cost of the Newmarket canal is to be blamed on the present Minister of Railways and Canals. I do not wish to prolong the discussion and I conclude by moving the following resolution:

That all the words after the word 'that' in the proposed motion be struck out and the following be substituted in lieu thereof:

While the growth and development of Canada demand an expenditure of public money which shall at once be far-seeing, systematic and liberal, every such expenditure ought to be designed and carried out in the public interests and not for partisan purposes or for aggrandisement of party followers.

This House regrets that in many cases the government have departed from this wholesome rule and principles and have used and applied public moneys for purposes that were not in the public interest.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). Mr. Speaker, so far as the motion which the hon. gentleman has made is supported by reference to the circumstances of the canal at Newmarket, I ought to be very grateful to him for having again brought the matter to the attention of this House and indirectly to the attention of the country, at all events to the attention of the constituency of North York, at this particular juncture. I am sure the hon. gentleman, if he should happen to have the time would find it very interesting indeed if he would make a little excursion across the boundary between his own constituency and the constituency of North York and make, in that riding, some of the remarks that usually are made when this question of the canal at Newmarket is under discussion in this House. It has been a pleasure to some hon. gentlemen opposite and to the newspapers which support them through the country to connect this work at Newmarket with my name. I have enjoyed the ingenuity and the art of the cartoonists who have amused themselves and their customers by cartoons that have appeared on the subject and I have not in the least failed to appreciate the newspaper remarks that, from time to time, have been made in reference to myself with regard to this canal. But while that is the fact and while, as I have on previous occasions said in this House, I should be very glad if I had any right to take to myself any credit in connection with the construction of the public work in question, the fact remains that I have no such right, and that the hon. gentleman, if any effort was necessary in finding a convenient subject wherewith to waste public time, might quite as well have taken up any other subject which antedated some two or three general elections. This particular question certainly arose before not merely the general elections of 1908 but before the general elections of 1904. At that time I had no idea of entering public life, I had no thought of representing or being a candidate in North York. This public work was undertaken, so far as North York is concerned, in circumstances which have already been detailed, and with which I need not occupy time that is supposed to be of some value to somebody or other, by going over again. There was absolutely nothing political about it and there was, in every sense of the word, as much agitation for the construction of this work and for the government to undertake it, by the leading men among the Conservatives of North York as there was among the Liberals of that riding, and there has from first to last in this matter been no success in the attempt which has been made at different times to give some political aspect to this undertaking. I shall not discuss at all the question of whether or not it was a judicious and advisable thing in 1904 or whenever it was that the resolution of the government to undertake this work was reached. That was long before I came into the government or into this House or had any idea of doing so and that question, I think has been satisfactorily settled after ample debate by not merely the result of the general elections of 1904 but also by the result of those of 1908. If it pleases the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Wallace) to seek to thresh out again this venerable and ancient dust heap or to search for the traditional grain of wheat in this pile of chaff—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH—which gentlemen who cheer so enthusiastically have tried to construct about this matter, so far as I am concerned, he is entirely welcome to do so. He will be more than welcome within the boundaries of North York, he or any of his colleagues who think there is any political capital in this matter for them; I shall be only too glad to see him or any of my neighbours, if they wish to discuss that subject in North York, and I am only too grateful to the hon. gentleman for having joined that noble brigade of blockers who have impeded the business of this House. I am very glad to be able to tell these gentlemen that it will not be many days before we will bring them to the bar of public opinion for judgment.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (North Simcoe). This question is not an amusing one, it is a very serious one, and I think it ill becomes the Minister of Justice to call this canal, which is being built in his riding, a dust heap. There is no water, but the grass is growing over the work which has been done, and it would be very absurd to call it a dust heap. I have no doubt, however, that by judicial sprinkling this scheme will germinate and result perhaps in the return of the Minister of Justice again to this House. On three occasions this public work has been used to corrupt the voters of North York, and I say it is too great an expense for this country to bear to secure the return to this House of such men as the Minister of Justice. Just to-day he has stated that hon. members on this side of the House are afraid to go to North York and use the expressions we use in this House in regard to this work. I want to tell the Minister of Justice that on an occasion not very long ago, I happened to be in North York and spoke to an audience of 4,000 people, and I took occasion to characterize this canal in its proper terms, and I can assure you, sir, that the people of North York recognized this work as a great waste of public money and a scandalous shame. Now, the Minister of Justice, after holding his seat in this House by the barefaced use of public money, goes to North York and tells the people that he is not going to be a candidate again, and with a great flourish of trumpets a young lawyer is brought from Toronto, named Robinette, and he is paraded before the electorate, and a stupendous campaign is commenced. After they had been campaigning for two or three months, they discovered that the candidate was not able to carry that riding, and they held another conclave and decided that the Minister of Justice should stand again, if there is an election within the next year, and that Mr. Robinette should retire. I want to tell this House that there is a conscience in the people of North York and the people of Ontario. They are awakening to the knowledge that they have not been getting very much in the shape of public works, or they have been accustomed to see docks built where there is no water, and canals built on top of hills where there is no need. It was a great shock to them to see this canal being built through the town of Newmarket. Why, sir, there is no beginning or end to this canal. As a matter of fact, there is not sufficient water in the neighbourhood to make the canal a success. They have built locks with concrete works and steel bridges, costing $30,000 apiece, according to the report, and what is the use of them? But the people of Ontario are beginning to see through it. The good Scotch and Irish Presbyterian vote which has enabled the prime minister to remain in office here, men of the same race and religion as my-self, these men have always believed the right hon. gentleman, and taken it for granted that he and his party are working for the benefit of the country. The trouble is that they have not hitherto been able to see with their eyes how the public money has been expended; but now they can go and see this Newmarket canal with their own eyes. Throughout the summer people go there in pilgrimages to see this great public work of Ontario; it is something like the Colossus of Rhodes or like the Suez canal, and people go to see it out of curiosity, and they get an object lesson that opens their eyes to the way this government is wasting public money. They are beginning to realize that the government is no longer worthy of their confidence, and hon. gentlemen will find out when the election comes what the voters think of it. The right hon. gentleman may rest assured that so far as the members on this side of the House are concerned, we are very glad to go before the bar of public opinion, and we know very well that the Minister of Justice will be adjudged the culprit; it is his case that is going to be tried, and I am satisfied that the verdict will be one of guilty. The Minister of Justice will find that the constituency of North York cannot be bribed in such a flagrant fashion as he is endeavouring to bribe it.

Now, let us see what there is about this canal. I think the gravest charge that has ever been made against this government has been made by the engineer who made this report, or who has written this memorandum to the government. I have taken occasion to characterize the work of Mr. Walsh as faulty, I have called attention to the fact that Mr. Walsh did not appear to be doing his duty as a public officer. I could not understand, for instance, why a public work that was estimated to cost $290,000 should, a few months afterwards, be estimated by another engineer to cost over $900,000. I could not understand why, in view of all the traffic that could possibly pass over that canal, such a vast sum of money should be recommended by the engineers to construct it. I could not understand why the first engineer reported favourably, stating that the canal would cost about $300,000, when a few months afterwards it was discovered by another survey and by another engineer that it would cost nearly a million dollars, and when the contracts were let we found as a fact that they did amount to over a million dollars. Now, Mr Walsh has told us the story in this report, he has shown that he was virtually coerced into recommending this work, without any consideration as to whether it would be of any public utility. As far as he was concerned, all he had to do was to figure out the cost of the work. He did not take into consideration the amount of traffic that could be procured for the canal, or what use could ever be made of it. Therefore he reported that the canal would cost a little less than $300,000. But to make a canal that would ostensibly serve election purposes the cost was immediately raised by other officers in the department to nearly a million dollars by putting in the most expensive construction they could, regardless of any possible utility. Why, it is the most absurd thing in the world for any person to say that the Newmarket canal will be of any value to this country commensurate with its cost. There is only a small population, there is only a small area of six by ten miles altogether over which freight can be carried by this canal. East of it there is a heavy rise of nearly 200 feet, and no one is going to bring stuff over that height of 200 feet to get into the valley where this canal is built. On the westward there is another mountain rising 200 feet and no one would bring freight over that 200 feet in order to take it four or five miles to Lake Simcoe by canoe when there is a shorter cut down the valley which can be used. In order to serve a small valley in Ontario something like six miles wide by ten or twelve miles long, already served by two lines of railway with communication in every way and where a government road has been in existence since 1808, the government undertake an expenditure of public money to the amount of close upon $1,000,000. It ill becomes the Minister of Justice to rise in his seat and say a word about that canal. He of all people should hide his diminished head in that respect. Whenever he appears on the public platform he has not the manliness to say: Well, the thing was commenced and I have recommended its continuance in order that something may be accomplished with it. Instead of that he is always trying to crawl under the ermine of a high court judge of Ontario, trying to hide his head and get out of it by saying: I am not to blame. The expenditure which was authorized at the instance of Sir William Mulock was very small indeed, and the work could readily have been stopped if it were found not to be a public utility when Sir William Mulock left this House and remained in retirment owing to illness for some time until he went upon the bench. It is very unmanly for any one who has been befriended as the Minister of Justice has been by Sir William Mulock, the man who gave him his seat as a free gift, to turn around and endeavour to place blame upon him. Sir William Mulock has very many friends on both sides of politics in Ontario. We always considered him a kind and companionable man who was constantly thinking out good schemes for the benefit of the public at large. It is well known that his opinion on the question of public utilities drove him out of this House and out of the government, and for the man who was befriended by him, the man whom he placed in office, the man to whom he gave the riding of North York, virtually a pocket riding, to turn around in this House and cast aspersions upon him——

Mr. LANCASTER. After he had been rejected by Durham——

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). After he had been beaten in the constituency which he chose to think he could carry on his own personality——

Mr. HUGHES. He never gave them that clock either.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Then he made the people of Durham a promise that he would provide them with a public clock, but he has not carried out that promise, in that respect being unlike the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. King), who has seen to it that a clock was provided for the people of his constituency. But there is a clock going to strike in a short time, and that clock is going to ring out the old regime of which one of the most brilliant examples is the Minister of Justice. The question of the cost of this canal has been brought to our attention by the report that has been given to this House by Mr. Walsh. Mr. Walsh was very deeply touched by some remarks I made in this House on a previous occasion. I cast aspersions upon his work as an engineer and I think I was amply justified in doing so. But, I am willing to accept Mr. Walsh's explanation. Mr. Walsh has been an engineer of standing in various parts of the world, and no doubt he is a better engineer than any of those that were over him or who have superseded him. His own report shows that. I am willing to accept that explanation, but the red line that runs all through that memorandum of his is that it is not the independent opinion of the engineer who gives his services to the Department of Public Works or the Department of Railways and Canals that is wanted. That is a disgraceful condition. What safety is there for the people of this country? We can all understand how it was that the Quebec bridge fell. He has so stated it there. The engineering was not done in accordance with the views of the engineers. The work of the engineering staff is made subservient to political purposes. What can you expect? Can you not expect that docks will go off down the river, as the dock went floating down the river at Sorel, that bridges will fall, as the Quebec bridge fell, that towers will tumble the same as the Laurier tower tumbled? What else can you expect when the men whose professional services are required are not at liberty to express their views and when all they have to do is to draw pictures on paper and endeavour to plan works in such a way as to suit the political exigencies of the occasion and in order to save the political lives of the friends of this government? Now, let us see; I pointed out on a previous occasion that this work was not finished. Mr. Walsh has some opinions on this question, and they are good as far as they go, but he is not infallible. He points out here, for instance, that the dredging that was done in Holland river was done with a suction dredge. In that he was mistaken. The kind of dredge they endeavoured to employ for that work was exactly the same kind of a dredge that he had recommended, but they have been unable to do any dredging in the Holland river, and the only motor boat that has run up and down the Holland river is now pulled up on shore, and was not painted or launched this year. There has been nothing done on the Holland river, no attempt made to deepen or straighten the channel, or do any kind of work because there will have to be an expensive dredge built there, but nobody has taken on the work, and it looks as if the government were afraid to let the contract or continue the work. An hon. minister the other night said that a chain is just as weak as its weakest link. This canal will disclose its weakness if nothing else will disclose it by its weakest link.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe).

Mr. LANCASTER. Is it long enough to hide the Niobe?

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). I think that you could put all the water in that canal in the hold of one of the Dreadnoughts, and I do not think you would need to start the pumps. There will not be enough water in these ditches to enable the government to lock five motor boats through a day and still maintain the water supply. That is one of the reasons why the Minister of Justice feels so very sore about this work. Great enormous steel bridges have been built. There have been thousands of dollars' worth of work done where the grass is growing to-day, and as far as I can see the work is of no utility. I think that nearly all the farms in New York have been called upon to supply field stone for the work. I do not know how much the farmers get; I suppose they are pretty well paid for it, and they are now looking around to see if they can get some form of stone they can sow over spring or every time an election is coming on so that they can get a fresh crop of stone with which to supply that canal. There is no end to the expenditure of money and the expenditure of that money is entirely useless as far as I can see. The work so far is travelling towards the lake. It has now reached almost as far down as Holland Landing, but there are four or five miles more of work to be completed before they will get to the lake. I would be the last man in the world to say or do anything to interfere with any industry in the town of Newmarket.

No one would say there was any chance of that canal aiding or assisting any industry in Newmarket. Then again take the expenditures from year to year upon this canal by this government. I am satisfied that within the next two or three months 500 or 600 men will be placed at work on that canal in order to make the seat safe for the Minister of Justice. There is no necessity in the world for this expenditure of money, and there is no chance of the Minister of Justice being returned to this House, because the voters in North York have decided that they are not going to be held up to the scorn of the whole country for the sake of sending a Minister of Justice down here who encourages a work like that Newmarket canal.

Year before last something like $82,000 was expended on this work. There was not much done on it that year, and there is no doubt that the work will be continued as long as this government is in office; year after year and month after month, and especially in election years, great work will be done on that canal; it will be one of the most important works in this country.

Mr. LANCASTER. None after this year.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). No, because after there is a change of government the work will be finished; Laurier's work will be finished, and especially this canal. Last year $120,000 was expended by one department on this canal, but you can go along the canal for seven or eight miles and hardly see a man working on it. I do not know if men are on the pay-roll who are not working there, but I know there is a large expenditure of public moneys, and that every one in the province of Ontario treats this whole thing as a great big joke. It is believed that the government is doing work that is unnecessary, and that the efforts of every minister in this House are directed not to giving good service to the country, but to seeing that they are returned to office and they endeavour to spend as much money as they can in their own particular ridings. The minister had a dinner of some kind in North York. The member for South Essex went up there and told the assembled Grits that he had looked over that canal, and he did not like to express any opinion upon it, but he thought that any constituency that would send such an able man as the Minister of Justice to Ottawa should have a great deal of public money spent in it. That is a new code of political ethics, wider than ever; it is a case of wider open and spend all the money you can when you send a good man like the Minister of Justice to Ottawa. I should like to read the opinion expressed by the Liberal candidate in Centre York, Mr. Dewart, of the Minister of Justice, which is very amusing, but I have not the extract with me at present.

In Mr. Walsh's report, which has been placed before the House, reference is made to the close connection between the Minister of Railways and a certain gentleman named Lott.

Mr. LANCASTER. Who is Lott?

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Mr. Lott is a fugitive from justice.

An hon. MEMBER. A Grit?

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). A Grit, in fact he was a Grit candidate in one of the ridings in eastern Ontario. One Saturday night he went across the river to the United States, and some time during the night smuggled across that river into Canada a number of ballot boxes with secret bottoms. In that he was aided and abetted by an official of this government who served a term for doing this work and, according to the evidence of Mr. Lott, the man he seemed to draw his light and his leading from on that occasion as well as on this occasion, referred to in the report, was the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Graham). I am sorry that minister is not in the House, as I would like to pass up a few compliments to him and tell him what the people of Ontario think of him, how, as the chief of the Grit machine in our province, he is looked upon as one of the most dangerous men in political life in Canada, and that as the last of that old brigade they are going to see that he and his machine are crushed in this election as they were at the last local election in Ontario eight years ago, when the people showed that they had done with the Minister of Railways and his fellows, and were tired of this political scullduggery, as the Minister of the Interior would say. But they find on all hands the same thing going on as was going on previous to 1904; the same old story is told; the same old machine is at work. The expenditures of the country and the work of government are conducted more in the interest of a single party than of the public. The public are going to take their revenge, they are going to get even with the Minister of Railways for his political peccadilloes; they are going to see that the machine which he has been oiling up for the last two or three years—and his present absence from the House is probably to put some oil on the wheels—is smashed. The Minister of Justice and the Minister of Railways will find that the people of Ontario will no longer put up with anything of that kind. They have tired of these political heelers, it is about time that we should have in Canada a government like the one we now have in the province of Ontario, a government that is fair and square and honest and above board, that deals with all people who come before it in one way, irrespective of whether they are Conservatives or Liberals. Let us see what the resolution says, and we will find whether the House is justified in voting for it or not. The resolution reads:

> While the growth and development of Canada demand an expenditure of public money which shall at once be far-seeing, systematic and liberal, every such expenditure ought to be designed and carried out in the public interests and not for partisan purposes or for aggrandisement of party followers.

That is a great principle for which the Conservative party will have no hesitation in voting. This government do not ask themselves: Is this going to be in the interest of Canada? The only question asked by hon. gentlemen from what I have learned, is: Is this going to help the party? The second part of the resolution reads:

> This House regrets that in many cases the government have departed from this wholesome rule and principles and have used and applied public moneys for purposes that were not in the public interest.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). What had Byron O. Lott to do with the canal?

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). The hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Wallace) read that part along with the rest of this return of correspondence of E. J. Walsh and the minister of the Department of Railways and Canals in regard to the Newmarket canal. At page 24 and 25, it says:

The only approach to politics was in connection with a certain appointment to the survey parties, wherein I was officially instructed to apply to the person controlling the 'patronage' for any local appointment; when, for instance, the party was being organized for the survey of the Trent canal route from Rice lake to Trenton, in October, 1904, I was told to apply to Hon. G. P. Graham of Brockville ('organizer of the Liberal party for eastern Ontario'); and having done so was referred by him to Messrs. D. O. Lott, of Anson, Ont., and John Douglas, of Warkworth, Ont., Liberal candidate for West Hastings and East Northumberland, respectively, &c.

Here we have the grand sultan of the party, who dispenses the patronage, the Liberal organizer for eastern Ontario, the Hon. G. P. Graham. And here is his grand vizier, Byron O. Lott, who is now a fugitive from justice for bringing into this country bogus ballot boxes and endeavouring to steal the franchise of the people. When the people, and especially the people of Ontario, vote upon the record of this government, they will have in mind this famous Newmarket canal, and will deal out to the Minister of Justice the justice to which he is entitled. And I feel confident that the verdict will be 'guilty,' and there will be no recommendation to mercy.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). When the House rose, I was referring to the question of the influence and the work of the Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth), and was giving a brief biography of his political life. It would not be fitting did I not add a gem to the collection, which has been presented to the public in the form of a letter written by Mr. H. H. Dewart, entitled "The Political Situation—A Study in Cause and Effect." This letter appeared in the 'Toronto Globe' of Wednesday, April 27, 1910. Mr. Dewart is a colleague of the honourable Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth), and he is to be a candidate,—yes, and a victim, in Central York. He was one of the disgruntled members of the Liberal party, and on this occasion he broke loose, somewhat violently, in the columns of the 'Globe,' and in the course of his letter, he paid his compliments to the Minister of Justice. I do not think I can do better than place on record what Mr. Dewart has to say of the Minister of Justice. I will not read the beginning of the article, because it has no reference to the Minister, but I will take it up where he begins to speak of my hon. friend:

Yet the Liberal party in Ontario to-day, while strong in its constructive policy, is lamentably weak in the matter of organization. Take the district of which the city of Toronto is the centre. Of sporadic and spasmodic activity at election times we have plenty; of the systematic organization that results in local educational work we have next to nothing. Victories cannot be won by shouting and bustling about for four weeks before an election. We need the organized and constant application of directed energies. Now, with regard to the men who have done their best to galvanize the Liberal workers into an organization at election times and who have accepted office in the Toronto Reform association, often against their will and at considerable personal sacrifice, I protest against their being pilloried now. They have done their best. The fault does not lie with them. They have done wonders in a centre of active Conservative organization and society influence like Toronto.

Where then must the responsibility be laid? It must surely be laid at the door of those ministers of the Crown who have failed to provide the directing power. A commander in chief, even if he be as brilliant and skilful as Sir Wilfrid Laurier undoubtedly is, cannot be expected to achieve the success that he should without able tacticians between himself and the men in the ranks. Hon. Charles Murphy and Hon. Mackenzie King have not had a chance to earn their spurs as organizers, but they will be expected to do so It is a notorious fact that in the campaign of 1908 there was not a solitary minister of the Crown in the province of Ontario west of Brockville who was of the least value to the Liberal organization as an informing, energizing or directing force. In the Toronto district our only representative in the Commons is the Minister of Justice. None of our six senators can now be reckoned on in the matter of organization.

We find a different state of affairs in the provinces to the east. Their ministers of the Crown, and even senators, not only perform their administrative and parliamentary duties as well, but also take charge of their districts, feel the pulse of the people, bring informed minds to the consideration of political issues and see that the latent forces of Liberalism are brought into a political organization that means something. Analyse the returns in the province of Quebec and you will see that behind the personality of Sir Wilfrid there is the organized effort that spells out success in close ridings.

Constituencies in western Ontario can figure out this problem for themselves and make their own application. But I know that in the city of Toronto and surrounding ridings we have suffered and are suffering as a party because the minister who is supposed to represent this district is not a political force or even a factor in organization. A district or even a constituency may be lost if featherweight advisers are the main sources from which knowledge of political conditions is derived. The local minister should be at least the mouthpiece through which the political views or needs of the district are expressed. There are important views relating to the immigration policy, as it affects us locally, to be expressed. Large questions relating to the expenditure of moneys on public works have to be considered. Other departmental matters of importance require solution. The consideration locally that these matters have received and to which they are entitled is due in nearly every instance to the direct representations made by active Liberal workers to the minister in charge of the department interested. Surely the public at large are justified in expecting the directing force of the Minister of Justice in these matters of local policy, just as much as Liberals are in matters of political organization. If our policy is sound and our views are right, as we believe them to be, the party leader who sees to it that organized effort and wise direction are brought to bear to achieve success performs a public as well as a party service.

I am not now entering into the arena to discuss the rightness or wrongness of the attitude of the Minister of Justice regarding matters that more particularly concern his own department. No one questions his pre-eminence as leader at the bar of the province or his comprehensive knowledge of the difficult problems of law it has been his duty to consider. The Minister of Justice can maintain and justify his opinions on these matters, stubbornly if need be, and no man better than he. But in view of his recent declaration that he is a 'partisan,' by which I understand him to mean a man of party views in the best sense, every party man has the right to ask why the Minister of Justice does not give effective party service. I maintain that we have the right, both from the political and public point of view, on the ground that I have pointed out, to receive effective direction in public matters and organizing ability in party business from those who are chosen the responsible ministers of the Crown. I have hesitated for some time before expressing these views, but some one should speak out, even at the risk of incurring hostile criticism.

The history of Canada, even since confederation, is not without its political lessons. Sir John Macdonald retained weaklings in his cabinet that no party could successfullly carry after his decease. Even strong men in the province of Ontario made the fatal mistake of failing to introduce much-needed new blood in time to avert a fatal ending. Politics, after all, should be like any other business in life. It is imperative that the fittest should survive. The country is entitled to the best service of the best men, and political prescience as well as sound executive ability is needed.

That is the opinion of Mr. Dewart on the hon. Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth). I hope the hon. minister likes it.

I might say that recently the hon. minister decided to retire from public life altogether, but a change has come over the spirit of his dreams, and now he seeks to tempt the fates again, and to test the oracle in North York. I want to tell him that when he does so at the coming election, he will find the answer will be that they do not want to have any more to do with a man of his capacity, narrowness of mind and meanness of spirit.

If the Minister of Justice had had the fairness politically, and the honesty to stand up and take his share of blame for this Newmarket canal instead of seeking to pass the odium on to a man whose shoe laces he is not fit to fasten, like Sir William Mulock, I think even the best sports in North York would be willing to give him some support; but seeing that he is doing nothing but crawling on the question, and at the same time spending vast sums of money there to secure votes, the best minds in that riding are against him, and will record their verdict against him on election day. We all know that in ancient times public men sought public favour by the erection of enormous works of art and beauty with which their names would be forever associated. I would refer to the great monuments of Egypt, the public arches, and other works of art in the ancient city of Rome, and the great works in Constantinople. But I have also observed that the great men who have erected those notable public works with which their names have been associated went down into their own pockets and paid for them. Here we find a new rule on the part of the ministers of the Crown in Canada. They make the public pay for these monuments. The name of the Minister of Justice will go down to posterity associated with a great public work of no use whatever, except as a monument and which will for all time be known as the Great Aylesworth Ditch.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE (Ontario). I am sure we are all greatly interested in the remarks of the Minister of Justice, in whose constituency this famous canal has been constructed. It seems extraordinary that any gentleman who dares to discuss this extraordinary expenditure in the country or in the House is termed a member of the Blockers' Brigade. Blockers of what? Blockers of reciprocity? Well, while I have not much solicitude for the health of the present administration, I would suggest that if they do not shortly dissolve the House there will be less sentiment for reciprocity in the country than there is water in the Newmarket canal. The Minister of Justice stated that the opponents of the present administration were afraid to go to the constituency of North York and denounce this gigantic farce, the Newmarket canal. If he had been present at Herbert Lennox's picnic where 18,000 to 20,000 people were assembled he would have heard various speakers condemn this monumental folly of the present administration. Everybody knows that this canal is not a commercial enterprise. It was organized purely for political purposes. The people would never have heard of the canal had it not been that Herbert Lennox defeated Hon. E. J. Davis, a member of the provincial government when Mr. Davis' normal majority was 700 or 800. When Mr. Lennox succeeded in redeeming that old reform riding of North York in the Conservative cause, then they had to devise means for spending the people's money in order to preserve the constituency to the ranks of the Liberal party. The clouds were gathering and the Liberal party workers in North York had to exercise their brains to devise means of spending the people's money in order to keep the old reform constituency of North York in the party lines. Everybody knows it was not a commercial but a political public work, and we find that notwithstanding the money that was spent in that connectioi, public opinion had become aroused over the matter, that the reform party, instead of gaining strength, is going back in that constituency not alone on account of the strong sentiment against reciprocity, but on account of this illegal, extravagant and criminal expenditure on this public work. When the Minister of Justice announced his withdrawal from public life, and said he would not likely be a candidate in the next election, the executive of North York met and selected Mr. T. C. Robinette, a defeated candidate in Toronto and an ex-candidate in Centre York, but they found the sentiment in connection with this illegal expenditure and on reciprocity so strong that they had to drop Mr. Robinette, and they had to trot out the old war horse again, and keep the Minister of Justice in harness in the vain hope, and expectation of still holding that old time constituency of North York which has a normal Liberal majority of 700 or 800. Now, we find that Mr. Robinette has been side-tracked, he is not a strong enough candidate, and I venture the opinion that even such a prominent man as the Minister of Justice in harness in the vain hope position, with all the laurels he has won in public life, according to the story of his friends, and the expenditure of a great deal of money, weighted down by the opprobium of the Newmarket canal, and the unpopularity of reciprocity, has not the slightest hope of retaining that constituency which will be redeemed in the next election by a young Conservative candidate named Armstrong. The expenditure on the Newmarket canal is condemned not alone in this House, but on every public platform in York. Does anyone imagine for a moment that the hon. member for Centre York would dare to move a resolution condemning this expenditure in his own county if it was of any use to the people? The mere fact that he brought in a resolution condemning the government in connection with this expenditure proves conclusively that the expenditure is improper, and contrary to the public interest. We have no less a person than Mr. Archie Campbell, former member for Centre York, and now senator, at a Liberal convention in 1909 condemning this expenditure in no measured terms. What did Mr. Campbell say:

> Some of the money was probably not expended in the best interests, he said, speaking generally.
> The Conservatives point to the canal at Newmarket and call it the 'Aylesworth ditch' and say it is monstrous.
> I'm free to say that if this should take place now, and with the knowledge that we have now, we probably would not have gone into it.

What kind of administration is it that will launch the country on an expenditure of from one to two million dollars, burdening this country annually with a charge of $100,000 or $150,000 without first getting an estimate as to the expenditure on a public nuisance such as this? It has been suggested by an hon. member that the Newmarket canal will be a very appropriate grave in which to bury the Minister of Justice at the next general election. This report of the meeting at which Mr. Campbell condemned the moral illegality of this expenditure continues:

> And Mr. T. C. Robinette was there, and Dr. McLean, ex-M.P., was there, and Mr. F. G. Inwood, Liberal organizer was there, and fifty other Liberals were there, and not a man said him nay, and no sound of the waters rushing through the Newmarket canal was heard in the land.

One of the most serious aspects, and features in connection with this monstrosity is seen when you consider the damages which were paid, and the expenditures from year to year. The expenditures, unlike the water in the Newmarket canal, ebb and flow, not with the tide, but with the dates of the elections.

We find in April, 1908, in which year the election was held, that the money spent amounted to $400; in May, $10,000; in June, $2,000; in July, $10,000; in August, $10,000. Then when the election approached we have in September an expenditure of $26,000, and in October, the month in which the election was held, $43,000; in November it drops to $22,000, and in December still further to $20,000. This absolutely improper undertaking cannot be characterized by any other terms than as a great breach of trust on the part of the administration. They are supposed to be administering the affairs of this country in the interest of the people, not in the interest of their political followers. But we find in connection with the land damages that the greatest injustice is being done, not only to the people of this country by the excessive payments made for the land but by the political partisanship that characterized the assessment of these damages. We find the political supporters and workers of the government are receiving excessive amounts for their lands, whereas Conservatives are receiving infinitessimally small amounts. There is not the slightest doubt, in the light of the report of the engineer read by the hon. member for Centre York, that there ought to be a commission of investigation appointed to bring out the true inwardness of this whole rotten institution. I find, in speaking of the ebb and flow, not of the water in the canal but in the expenditures from year to year, that in June 12, 1908, the deputy minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. Butler, writes to A. J. Grant, superintending engineer, and wants to know if he has made any soundings to see if there is any water for the canal. Whoever heard tell of a government beginning a great public work by the construction of a canal, spending thousands and thousands and thousands of dollars before they ascertain whether there is going to be any water to supply the canal?

Dear Mr. Grant,—What gaugings have you for the water supply for the Newmarket canal? If you have not already taken a number, I would like you to run a series of them over the whole of this season to make sure of the water supply that will be available on that canal.

This was months after the work had been inaugurated and expenses incurred on this farcical undertaking. Then we have Mr. Grant's report of June 17, 1908, which is a marvel of its kind. He says:

Water measurements taken during 1907, south of Newmarket, on the east branch of the Holland river: July, 369 cubic feet per minute; August, 315; September, 654; October, 477; November, 885.

Now when you consider that the average water wagon that is driven on the streets contains about 150 gallons of water, you can imagine the terrific force of this current. So much for these reports, so much for this business administration, and so much for the quality of statesmanship that we see exhibited, the same kind as we have seen exhibited in the negotiations for reciprocity with the United States. If this is a sample of the business acumen which characterizes the present administration, no wonder the people suspect the reciprocity pact. I would respectfully suggest to the Minister of Public Works, to the Minister of Railways and Canals, to the Minister of Finance, and even to the Prime Minister himself, that it would be a splendid diversion if they would organize a picnic up there, and take the whole House of Commons up to the Newmarket canal in order to exhibit this great public work. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the members would not require long rubber boots, nor life preservers, nor even bathing suits, because there is not sufficient water in that canal with which they may even moisten their lips. Such an excursion would relieve the weariness of our efforts here, and give us a day of needed recreation. And while the members of the House of Commons who participated in that excursion would not find any water, or any prospects of traffic, they would see stone heaps. They would see no stones on the farms adjoining this canal, because they have all been purchased within a radius of twenty-five miles, at so much per cord, and piled up along the canal, purchased during election time. It has been suggested that this bulwark of stones was placed along the canal in order to prevent it from floating away. I do not, however, attribute that motive to those who purchased the stone, but I do say that if the members of this House will take the trouble to go there they will see municipal steel bridges constructed in the different municipalities on the roads adjoining the Newmarket canal. Why the necessity for municipal bridges? Do these municipalities want public money spent to relieve them from building their own bridges? They were built in conjunction with the canal, although not necessary for the canal. These bridges were constructed for the benefit of the various municipalities, three or four beautiful bridges, beautiful in design, beautiful in structure, beautiful iron bridges, which cost upward of $30,000 each. That is the reason why this expenditure has been incurred, in order that the people residing in that constituency might be relieved of their proper and reasonable expenditure on their own public undertakings.

I said that I was going to say something about the land damages. I have a report in my hand made by a reporter of a Toronto newspaper who went up to Newmarket to investigate the conditions surrounding this canal. It is dated June 9, and he says:

When the happenings of the federal elections last October were being chronicled, North York was not given the attention that it warranted. Perhaps it was because there were over 200 others in Canada at the time that a most interesting side line of Hon. A. B. Aylesworth's campaign was overlooked. This was unfortunate, as it threw a strong light on the kindly, helpful impulses that determines the conduct of the Minister of Justice in those days of political stress.

Speaking of land damages and prices paid for holdings along the canal banks, he says:

Sometimes they were prompted to soothe the damaged feelings by recompensing the owner for his loss by allowing him as much for twenty acres as he had paid for eighty.

And I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the damages were assessed by two partisan political supporters of the Minister of Justice. They went from place to place, from farm to farm awarding damages, and one of them was the defeated candidate. The defeated candidate had the cheques with him, I presume with a view to influencing the owners of property before they received their cheques. One man who had thirty acres received more than double what he paid for it, clearing $1,500.

Feelings seemed to rule, and so it is not surprising that when some Conservatives were being dealt with, try as they would, generosity could not be called so suddenly into play. They had to struggle against life long convictions, many of them longer, for they were hereditary.

Accordingly it happened that when the farms of Mr. W. C. Howard, one of the most prominent of Liberal workers, and Mr. Henry Hulse, one of the most prominent Conservative workers, stood side by side, the damages must needs be different. For 18.97 acres Mr. Howard's damages were set at $1,725; for 20.07 acres, Mr. Hulse's, at $300. Mr. Howard accepted his award, Mr. Hulse did not.

The Liberal received about six times more for his holding than the Conservative was offered for about the same area.

Herein might the moralist find a text to discourse upon the painful strength that party affiliations exert upon the conduct of human beings.

And so on. There are other examples to which I would direct the attention of the House as they are most interesting. The Toronto 'News' sent its reporter out and he made several reports. He said that the valuators were either dishonest or the assessors wrong.

Startling Difference in Official Evidence of Value of Land.

Here are some of the comparisons.

Below are given some of the assessment figures with the price paid by the government valuators:

	No. acres.	Value.
Sarah Deene—
Assessment..	216	$7,900
Sold for right of way.	40.2	5,000
J. W. Bramner—
Assessment..	60	2,300
Sold for right of way.	6.26	812
Mrs. E. Bramner—
Assessment..	88	2,700
Sold for right of way.	5.92	600

The next is Mr. C. E. Lundy, and this is a most remarkable case. Mr. C. E. Lundy who was one of the assessors appointed to fix the values of land and the damages in respect to other people's property received an extraordinary price for his property and an extraordinary amount for his damages. They called in an engineer of the engineering department to fix the value of his land and estimate the damages in respect to his property. I direct your attention to the extraordinary figures:

C. E. Lundy—	No. acres.	Value.
Assessment..	34	$ 500
Sold for right of way.	26.1	3,100

Can you imagine such a state of affairs existing? Is in any wonder that this paper is characterizing the valuator's conduct as being dishonest or the municipality's assessor as being wrong in his assessment? Mr. Lundy, one of the party workers in North York and one of the assessors to assess the damages and fix the value of the land of other parties, has 34 acres upon which he is assessed $500, and he sold for the right-of-way 26 acres and received $3,100 for those 26 acres.

	No. acres.	Value.
Mary Williams and W. C. Howard—
Assessment..	166	200
Sold for right of way.	20.2	2,400
Frank Kelly—
Assessment..	95	3,000
Sold for right of way.	16.07	2,000
Henry Hulse—
Assessment..	166	6,000
Sold for right of way.	20.2	2,000
John Ritchie—
Assessment..	8	400
Sold for right of way.	6.9	1,200

This gentleman has eight acres assessed for $400 but he sells for right-of-way, and the cheques are delivered on the eve of election 6·9 acres for $1,200. Can language be found that is adequate to characterize such administration? The expenditure is monstrous and the work is a gigantic farce. I had occasion upon the date of Mr. Lennox's picnic in the constituency of North York to characterize it as a gigantic farce. It is nothing short of criminal. I could show instance after instance where you have the same kind of political partisanship characterizing the assessors in their assessment of land damages and land values. But, I think, Mr. Speaker, the last stage of public condemnation is reached when the newspaper men start to write limericks about any undertaking. Public opinion upon being aroused finds expression in various ways but the last ditch is reached—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario)—the last ditch is reached when the writers commence to pen limericks:

A dear little maiden named Sal
Strolled along the Newmarket canal.
She fell in with a thud,
And stuck fast in the mud,
That smothered the life out of Sal.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE (Lisgar). Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to say anything on this subject, but if the Minister of Public Works had been in his place I would like to have asked him a few questions in connection with some public works in Western Canada. In 1904 they started to build a wharf at St. Laurent in the province of Manitoba and I would like to know why this work was started. I would like to know how many people it will serve or who will be benefited by it in any way, shape or form. I do not wish to take up the time of the House in connection with this matter of the Aylesworth ditch as it has been gone into very fully, but there were a few remarks dropped by the hon. Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth) in connection with the impending elections. He grew very furious, made a very vicious threat across the floor of the House, and said that in a very few days we would be face to face with the people of Canada. I suppose he meant by that that we would be brought to an account before public opinion throughout Canada. I wish to say a few words in connection with Western Canada. I do believe that if the idea of the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had prevailed in the Cabinet, and that at the moment this reciprocity question was launched they had gone to the people they would have swept western Canada, but I want to tell the government to-day that after the people of western Canada have heard the other side of the question we from western Canada are ready for the fight at any time. I have no hesitation in predicting right now that in so far as western Canada, and in so far as the western members are concerned west of the lakes, we will come back with a bigger majority than we have at the present time.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Speaker, Canada is a big country, and when public works are being carried on in different parts of the country it is not possible that every member of parliament or every minister of the Crown can have a personal knowledge of them. So I must frankly say that I have no personal knowledge about the Newmarket canal. I do not rise for the purpose of attempting to contribute to the House any information based upon my own knowledge. I only rise for the purpose of placing on 'Hansard' one or two newspaper extracts. We have been allowing our hon. friends opposite, or they have been claiming, the privilege of occupying very many hours in delving into the newspapers in the library and perhaps, that being the case, they will not object if I should occupy about five minutes as the result of a similar study.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No objection.

Mr. FIELDING. I am obliged to my hon. friends. The complaint about the Newmarket canal is not merely that too much money has been spent, or that some one got too much money for his land, but that the canal never should have been constructed. And to use the words of one hon. gentleman opposite: it was simply a scheme of the Liberal workers of North York to keep the Liberals in power. Now, I hold in my hand an extract from the Toronto 'Globe.'

An hon. MEMBER. That's good.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, it's very good.

An hon. MEMBER. Hang on to it.

Mr. FIELDING. The 'Globe' will do some hanging for my hon. friend.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It tried to hang the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend will be patient, the 'Globe' will help him through in that. This extract is from the Toronto 'Globe,' February 23, 1905. The first head line is: 'For the Waterway.' The second heading is 'North York Deputation Interview the Government,' 'Advantages of the Scheme ably Presented,' 'The bcon of Competition in Rates.'

An hon. MEMBER. Where to?

Mr. FIELDING. I will give the hon. gentleman the information later, but just now I am only reading what the 'Globe' reporter says.

Mr. LANCASTER. Did the 'Globe' editor write that at Washington?

Mr. FIELDING. That was not when the editor of the 'Globe' was doing good work in Washington, but he does good work in many places.

Mr. LANCASTER. Most of it in Washington.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman will not interrupt me I will continue. If we must waste time, I suppose it might as well be done by interrupting. This dispatch to the 'Globe' from Ottawa is dated 22nd February, 1905, and it says:

> The claims of the townships and municipalities of the northern portion of the county of York and of the county of Simcoe adjacent to the Holland river to have the Trent Valley canal system extended, were presented to the government this morning. The interview took place in the Railway Committee room, and was filled by the thoroughly representative deputation representing the Trent Valley Canal Extension Association. The following gentlemen composed the deputation:—H. S. Cane, President of the Association, Newmarket; F. T. Daville, Vice-President, Mayor, Aurora.

I am sure that gentleman is not one of the Liberal workers of North York. Then there is the name of 'T. H. Brunton, secretary-treasurer, Newmarket.' The same may be said of Mr. Brunton, I am told. However, without going into the names of these gentlemen individually, I am assured that many whose names I am about to read are leading, prominent, and highly respectable Conservatives of the Constituency of North York.

Mr. LANCASTER. You've got into good company for once.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, and they will be in good company when they vote for reciprocity. Then come the names: 'W. H. Fleury, ex-mayor, Aurora; L. L. Hartman, ex-warden county of York.'

An hon. MEMBER. Another good Grit.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, there are a lot of good Grits amongst these. If any hon. friend thinks I am representing all these as Tories, he is mistaken. We do not imagine for a moment that the people of North York are all Liberals, but in view of the statement that this canal is a rascally work and never should have been undertaken and that it was only promoted by the Grits of North York for political purposes, I want to read the names of the representative body which waited on the government to urge the construction of the work.

Mr. WALLACE. Does the report say or do you state that that deputation came to Ottawa to ask for the canal as it is built to-day?

Mr. FIELDING. What I say is that this deputation was the foundation of the proposal for the construction of the Newmarket canal. This shows how the government were induced to take up the work of constructing a canal at Newmarket.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). That report is what may be called a 'phoney' report, because it contains the name of Conservatives who were not there at all and amongst them the name of Mr. Lennox, the member for South Simcoe. That was read in the House before and it was shown that it was not correct.

Mr. FIELDING. I made no mention of the name of the hon. member for South Simcoe.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). It is there.

Mr. FIELDING. I don't think it is there.

Mr. LENNOX. I don't think it is.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the last name I read was 'L. L. Hartman, ex-warden of the county of York.'

An hon. MEMBER. He is a Grit.

Mr. FIELDING. All honour to him for his good sense. The next name is the name of a gentleman who I believe is not a Grit. He is 'T. H. Lennox, M.P.P.,' and I am told he represents the county in the Ontario legislature.

Mr. HUGHES. Having defeated several Grits.

Mr. FIELDING. I presume Mr. T. H. Lennox is the gentleman who has been honourably mentioned in this debate to-day as the gentleman who correctly represents public opinion in the North York.

Mr. WALLACE. Does the report say he was an 'M.P.P.' then?

Mr. FIELDING. It says so, whether correctly or not. Mr. Lennox appeared with this deputation.

An hon. MEMBER. What did he ask?

Mr. FIELDING. We will come to that later on. Then I find these names: 'Councillors—L. A. Wilson, Charles Webster, John Knowles, W. J. Bassitt, W. C. Towns, Messrs. W. Baldwin, D. A. Radcliffe, Aurora; Hon. E. J. Davis.' I don't think Mr. Davis is a Conservative. Mr. Davis is a Liberal, but strange to say he has been frequently cited by hon. gentlemen on the other side in recent discussion, which goes to show that they consider the opinion of Mr. E. J. Davis of exceptional value. I presume they think that Mr. Davis was a gentleman well qualified to be present with this deputation.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). He is against the government now.

Mr. FIELDING. And being against the government now hon. gentlemen opposite have nothing but praise for him. There was a time when he was associated with the Liberal government of Ontario, and these gentlemen were not throwing any praise at him then.

Mr. LANCASTER. He saw the error of his ways.

Mr. FIELDING. Then follow the names of. 'Mayor Roadhouse, Councillors B. W. Hunter, T. Somerville, Newmarket, C. E. Lundy, Newmarket.'

Mr. HUGHES. They are all voting Tory now.

Mr. FIELDING. Then come the names of 'J. W. Wildman;' is he a Grit?

Mr. LANCASTER. He must be with that name.

Mr. HUGHES. A number of these gentlemen were Liberals at the time, but I am happy to say they are all voting Conservative now.

Mr. FIELDING. That only shows the generosity of the Liberal government in responding to the wishes of these gentlemen irrespective of their political leanings. Let me continue the names:

—A. W. Evans, R. H. Brimson, L. Cane, J. R. Y. Broughton, E. S. Cane, T. C. Watson, Dr. A. Webb, Robt. Schmidt, G. S. Richardson, Wm. Keith, A. E. Widdifield, W. W. Bruce, C. G. Ross, bankers; Lieut.-Col. Lloyd, Wm. Hill, T. H. Lloyd, barrister; J. E. Hughes, N. L. Rogers, Newmarket; T. H. Legge, reeve, and councillors R. W. Phillips, S. Armitage, A. McMurchy, John Wells, King township; A. McCallum, Jos. Rogers, county councillors, King township; R. Soules, reeve, Whitchurch; S. Foote, W. Leathers, Mr. Ressenell, W. Thompson, councillors, Whitchurch; L. Baker, ex-reeve, Whitchurch; councillors John Smith, F. Osley, J. Farr, W. H. Eves, East Gwillimbury; councillors M. McCardell, Sutton; reeves G. B. Thompson, Holland Landing; S. Oldham, Bradford; W. Woods, West Gwillimbury; councillor H. Stoddard, West Gwillimbury.

The Petitioners' Plans.

The deputation was introduced by Sir Wm. Mulock. The Premier was accompanied by Hon. R. W. Scott, Hon. Wm. Paterson, Hon. H. R. Emmerson, Minister of Railways and Canals, and Hon. C. S. Hyman, Minister of Public Works. Secretary T. S. Brunton presented the petitions of the municipalities of Bradford, townships of West Gwillimbury and East Gwillimbury, the town of Aurora, township of King and Whitchurch, village of Holland Landing, town of Newmarket, village of Sutton and the townships of North Gwillimbury and Georgiana. The petitions asked that the Holland river and its branches be widened and deepened so as to make commercial highways to give the towns of Aurora and Newmarket and the village of Holland Landing and Sutton the advantages of communication with the Trent valley canal system.

Many Advantages.

The various speakers impressed upon the government the advantages the improvement would bring to the large and populous district which would be given the boon of competition in rates by water carriage. The Holland river, it was pointed out, is already navigable a large portion of the distance. It was stated that manufacturers would save a large percentage of the cost of fuel, and that the saving to the farmers of the district in freight rates upon their grain alone would be $12,000 annually. As a result of the encouragement given to the cultivation of fruit by Sir William Mulock, there had been a great increase in the production of apples and the extension of the canal would furnish an outlet for the crop to the Northwest. The importance and extent of the manufacturing industries affected were also impressed upon the government.

Sir Wilfrid Impressed.

When Mr. T. H. Lennox came in such excellent company even Sir Wilfrid Laurier was impressed.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier complimented the delegation upon the able manner in which their arguments had been placed, and congratulated them that, instead of asking for a post office or cut-stone building, the first request ever made by the county of York for the expenditure of public money was for the more substantial purpose of enhancing the facilities of transportation of the people for the development of commerce. The project was one which must engage the attention of the government.

Sir Wilfrid expressed pleasure that surveys were in progress, the results of which would, he was sure, be brought before the government at the earliest possible moment, and without which the government would be unable to arrive at a determination. He assured the delegation of prompt consideration and reminded them that they had a friend at court in Sir Wm. Mulock, whose persistence in a good cause was notable.

This meeting appears to have taken place in Ottawa on the 22nd of February, 1905, and the account of it is published in the 'Globe' of February 23, 1905.

Mr. WALLACE. Does the hon. minister mean to tell us that the surveys for the Newmarket canal or deepening of the Holland river had not been made before the deputation got here?

Mr. FIELDING. I have told the House that I merely desired to read this document. I am not trying to tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) anything. I do not pretend to have the personal knowledge of this question that he has. Now, when I read this from the 'Globe,' some unkind member said: 'oh, that is the 'Globe,' and laughed. I anticipated that, and as I always like to be obliging, and to accommodate people, I propose to read an account of this meeting from another newspaper.

Mr. STAPLES. Is that the first deputation that came to Ottawa, regarding this Newmarket canal?

Mr. FIELDING. I am not able to say with certainty. Possibly, there was a previous deputation. I should judge there may have been, but I have no personal knowledge of the matter. The 'Globe' not being accepted as reliable by some hon. gentlemen opposite, let me turn to the report in the 'Mail.' It is not so long as that of the 'Globe,' but it contains one very interesting feature. I hope that nobody is going to assail the 'Mail.' I do not mind hearing things said in criticism of the 'Globe,' because I know they are not deserved. But I should not like to find anybody expressing doubt of the absolute impartiality and fairness of the 'Mail.' Everybody knows, at any rate, that if it has a weakness it is not in the direction of misrepresenting any gentleman on the other side, for it usually gives them credit for something even better than they have been saying or doing. I am simply standing up to defend the 'Mail,' if anybody is daring enough to attack it. Head lines and all should go in so I quote them:

ASK DEEPENING OF HOLLAND RIVER.
York County Deputation Supports Canal System.
Cheaper Freight Rates.
Sir Wilfrid Laurier Promises Surveys will be Made for the Government's Information.

Ottawa, Feb. 22.—A deputation from York county, on behalf of the Trent Valley Canal Extension Association, waited on the government to-day, asking for the widening and deepening of the Holland river.

Sir William Mulock introduced the deputation to the Premier.

In the presentation of their case, the secretary of the association read resolutions by the local municipalities in favour of the project.

Not resolutions, it will be observed, of the workers of the Grit party, but resolutions of the local municipalities:

Mr. Cane, of Newmarket, explained that they wanted the east branch of the Holland river deepened to Newmarket, and a cut made of eight miles to Aurora. The west branch of the Holland river they wanted cleaned out to Schomberg, and two miles of the Black river improved to Sutton.

Other speakers emphasized the advantage this work would be to manufacturers and to farmers in the reduction of freight rates. Mr. Henry, of Aurora, claimed that North York was entitled to some special consideration on account of its having returned to parliament for many years a gentleman in the person of Sir William Mulock, who had saved many millions of dollars upon the administrative cost of the country.

Now, the next paragraph is interesting. I have no knowledge of it personally, except it is here.

Haughton Lennox, Conservative M.P. for South Simcoe, gave his cordial endorsation to the deputation's request, and said that although opposed politically to Sir William Mulock, he was proud of him as the member for North York, and one of the Premier's ablest colleagues.

Hon. E. J. Davis, who was present with the deputation, also argued strongly in behalf of the plea they submitted.

Sir Wilfrid, in his reply, said it was unique to receive a deputation from York County. Surveys would be made, he promised, and when completed the government would look into them. The deputation knew, he added, that they had a strong friend at court, for when Sir William Mulock made up his mind on a subject he was very persistent.

As I stated, I have no comment to make. I simply wanted to read this interesting report, for what it is worth.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). As my name is mentioned in this matter I would like to say a few words, although I have spoken on the subject on a previous occasion. There is no fact in the statement that Haughton Lennox, member for South Simcoe, was present and spoke either for or against the hon. Sir William Mulock. I spoke in the House about a week before the deputation referred to, and I spoke in opposition to this project. Sir William Mulock on this occasion told me that it would be well for me to reserve my opinion because a deputation was coming down, and that if I would listen to the arguments of that deputation I might change my mind. He also told me that there would be a deputation here from my own riding. I answered Sir William Mulock that I would in all probability be present when the deputation was waiting on the government. I knew the situation at that time, and on the occasion I refer to, I spoke very definitely against the scheme. I never at any time hesitated, or changed my mind, and I never had any uncertain views upon this question.

I saw some of the gentlemen who came with the deputation, and they told me that my cousin, Mr. T. Herbert Lennox was there. He is quite a politician, and a fairly good jollier, so much so that at times I have wished I could follow him in some of his ways of treating public questions, and public men. However, I wanted to speak to him, and I went down to where I presumed the deputation was to assemble, in the Langevin block. In arriving there I found a group of men talking a good deal, but not doing anything. I understood from them that Sir William Mulock was making preparations to entertain the boys right royally in the evening. It was quite a jolly party. Now, as I well knew, the whole scheme had been arranged at Newmarket long before this, at the instance of Sir William Mulock, and some Liberals, who assembled as a Liberal organization, and there was a report of it in the Newmarket 'Era.'

I spoke for a moment or two with some of the members of the deputation, but said nothing in reference to the deputation except to Mr. T. Herbert Lennox. I said to him: 'How does it come, Herb, that you are down on this thing?' He laughed and said: 'Well, Haughton, it is quite a good scheme.' I said: 'It is nothing but a scheme.' And he answered: 'Oh, it is a fine scheme.' What he meant by that, I do not know. But my opinion is that as he was a politician, and these men wanted him to come along, he decided he would come. Now, we did not discuss the matter at all, and I came away immediately after this conversation with him. I did not speak at the deputation, and was not present when it met. I do not know who introduced the deputation, nor do I even know where they met. There were no ministers present, and no deputation proceeding while I was there.

Now, this is the second time I have been called upon to speak on this matter, and this is the second denial I have made. So far as the 'Mail and Empire' is concerned, I have no doubt the report was made in perfect good faith, but the mistake was the substituting me for Mr. T. Herbert Lennox. I presume the hon. minister knew this perfectly well, because he has gone over this programme before. We had it rehearsed here at all events, and pretty nearly every member of the House knew that there was not one syllable of justification for connecting my name with this except that on all occasions I have condemned, as I do unsparingly condemn now, this nefarious project to exploit the public money in the building of this canal.

Mr. OSLER. This matter has been so often threshed out in this House that I should not consider it my duty to speak, nor would I have spoken had not the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) quoted these extracts. The hon. minister told us that he did not know anything at all about the matter. Well, it seems to me only natural that when public money is being expended he should make some inquiry.

Of all the fool reports I have ever heard read, the report just quoted by the hon. minister from the 'Globe' is the biggest fake that was ever presented to this House. I think I can speak with some authority on this subject, because I was born up there, and as a boy I used to bathe in the Holland river at Newmarket. I can tell the hon. members of this House that very often in the month of August there is not enough water in the Holland river for the boys to bathe, unless they make a mud dam to retain it. Many times as a boy I have helped to make a mud dam so that we might get enough water to bathe in this beautiful stream. I have lived on Lake Simcoe during the summer for the last twenty-six years, and week after week I have passed that magnificent river by train, and in an automobile, and many times have I seen people take a trip up to this grand river to look at the gorgeous fake. The thing is such a circus that people talk about it, and go out to see it.

The government are trustees for the people's funds, and I say that in spending money for the Newmarket canal they are committing a breach of trust just as serious as the breach of trust committed by the directors of the Ontario and Farmers' banks. They know it is of no use. There is not enough water in the place to float a boat if there was freight for a boat to carry.

There is not one single tug boat on Lake Simcoe, there is not one single ton of freight on Lake Simcoe to be moved through that canal. When I first summered there, there were tugs going up and down Lake Simcoe hauling logs to a very extensive sawmill at Bradford and Belle Ewart. There is not a stick of timber towed on the lakes now, and there is not a mill on the lake shore. There is no business to go to Newmarket, because the cost of freight from Newmarket to Toronto by trolley would be infinitely cheaper than anything that could be charged by the canal. There was a heavy wind storm at that point four or five weeks ago, and unfortunately it blew down 40 to 60 very fine pine trees which were the beauty of the property owned by the late Sir James Edgar. I was told that these trees were sold to one of these Newmarket mill owners. They were loaded on the trolley which passes the property, and in half an hour they were in Newmarket, in a shorter time than it would have taken to ship them to the wharf and tow them over to the mouth of the canal. There is one pleasure steamboat on that lake, as old as I am I fancy, which makes excursions once or twice a week around the lake.

The government about the time they commenced to build the Newmarket canal, started to spend money on wharfs on the lake. They spent $4,000 or $5,000 building a wharf at Roches Point, where it was not wanted. A few planks had been thrown out in previous years when the season opened at a cost of $20, so the building of that wharf was just so much money wasted and thrown away. It was never used, it was an absolutely worthless expense. In the first place there is no water to supply that canal if the canal was wanted unless the water could be pumped up from the lake. We have an instance of how foolish people may be in the case of the old Sir Lister Kay farms in the northwest. It will be remembered that this gentleman established many farms for growing wheat in a district that afterwards turned out to be unsuitable for growing wheat. His foreman thought he would overcome the difficulty, and send up an enormous number of watering carts to these farms. He started to send out the water carts which he filled from a little stream there, over the 5,000 or 6,000 acres of wheat. They may fill the Newmarket canal with a watering cart, and get enough water to have a stream running down which would carry a rowboat. This work has been discussed so often, and so strongly, and there is so much money spent on it that it is the duty of the government to send some independent outside man to make a full report on it with a view to stopping this expenditure of money. I say it is a breach of the trust of public funds, and no man of common sense, engineer, merchant or farmer, can go there and see the work, see the conditions, and not say that every dollar of that money is being wasted. Probably for some years it will entail on the country a large annual expenditure to keep it up before it is finally abandoned as an absolutely useless work.

Mr. W. D. STAPLES (Macdonald). The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Sharpe), referred to a public work undertaken in the constituency I have the honour to represent, the wharf at St. Laurent, and I believe it is my duty to once more explain the shameful wastefulness and extravagance of this expenditure. The Minister of Justice has referred to the Newmarket canal as a sand pile. I might refer to this as a rot heap. This government, for political purposes in 1904, in order that they might corral the whole vote in that part of my constituency, undertook to build a wharf. They got a dredge and began work with great activity. Orders went out that no person need apply who would not support the Laurier candidate, and they gathered up some 60 or 70 men. They held these men there until the day before the election, and then they went off on a jollification, winding up at the polls. Since that time not one dollar has been spent there, and there has been no effort to make any public use of the wharf. That $25,000 of public money was wasted, and stands there in a rot heap to-day. The Minister of Justice has told the House that he challenges any speaker on this side of the House to go into the constituency in which the Newmarket canal is situated, and make the speeches they have made here. I am told that they have all been there and have made much stronger speeches than they have made here. I challenge the Minister of Justice to go up into St. Laurent and undertake for a moment to justify the expenditure of some $20,000 on that wharf. I asked for a return which showed that they had expended $15,870, but that does not cover it all. They built a dredge there, and when they abandoned the work they left the dredge, and it stands there a monument of ruin beside the wharf. The Minister of Finance has tried to justify this expenditure. He is the man who has control of the public chest and who should see that the public money is expended in the interest of the people, and not wasted on such works as these. He has been in Winnipeg, and so has the Minister of Public Works. The Minister of Public Works almost promised me that he would come up and look at the wharf at St. Laurent, but I suppose when he got to Winnipeg, and some of his own political supporters told him of the shameless waste up there he was ashamed to go further. I invite the Minister of Finance to go up there as the member for West Toronto has invited him, and look at the way in which the public treasury has been robbed. When they undertook to construct this work, if they had spent $25,000 or $30,000 more, possibly it would have been of some public use to the people up there, but the government refused to expend any more, and while I was up there during the recess, I visited the wharf in company with the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Campbell), who will verify everything I say. There would be sufficient water to float a boat if it were dredged deep enough, but no boat has ever landed there, there has never been any traffic over this wharf which has cost some $20,000, and there it lies rotting. The hon. member for Dauphin stood there and kicked the boards into the river. I have no hesitation in believing everything that has been said regarding the Newmarket canal, and other public expenditures that have been made throughout this country by this government, when I know, and have seen right there in my constituency the condition of affairs. There is no road to the wharf, you cannot get to it without going down the beach a distance of over a mile, with sand up to the axles. I say that if the people of Canada could go up and look at this one foolish waste of money they would immediately say: We have no further use for this government, they are not responsible, they have no consideration for the interest of the public; all the consideration they have is simply to loot the public treasury.

While we have had, during the recess, members from this House going up and down the western country appealing to the people to forget all about wasteful expenditures, to forget the Newmarket canal, to forget the St. Laurent wharf, to forget the sawdust wharf, and others that it would take me an hour to mention, and to stick by the reciprocity agreement, let me tell the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) that the people of the west are just as much interested against extravagant expenditures as they are in reciprocity, and they will be much more interested in hearing the facts than some of the clap trap that the hon. member put up at his meetings when he did more damage to his cause than he could to help it. The attention of the people where he held his meetings was directed to these public expenditures, and also to misrepresentations which the hon. gentleman made, both on the public platform and in this House, and I will refer him to one of them. He stated in this House that a man who had been down to his house, I think his name was Moffett, claimed that he had paid $500 in cold cash to put two carloads of flax into the Duluth market. I ask if that is the case?

Mr. TURRIFF. No, Sir, it is not the case.

Mr. STAPLES. 'Hansard ' says so, and I will read it to him.

Mr. TURRIFF. I will explain it.

Mr. STAPLES. I want no explanation, we will take the hon. gentleman's words in 'Hansard.' The hon. member for Assiniboia stated throughout the country, and on the floor of this House, that it cost Mr. Moffett $500 in cold cash to put two carloads of flax on the Duluth market. What are the facts? Take the trade and navigation returns, take the questions that were asked by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr Rutan). He put a question on the Order Paper asking how much flax had been exported during the last three years to the United States from the respective provinces, and we found that not one bushel had gone to the United States from Saskatchewan. I give you that instance, Mr. Speaker, as a fair sample of the clap trap that the hon. member for Assiniboia indulged in. Referring again to this famous St. Laurent wharf, that I suppose the Minister of Finance will not even get up to defend, that the Minister of Public Works has endeavoured to defend, I say that if the government had any regard for decency or honesty they would get up in this House and acknowledge the wastefulness and folly of such an expenditure. Now, I do not wish to be accused of obstructing, the obstruction is due to the action of this government in going into such schemes as this Newmarket canal. I believe it was a deputation originally that came down here and asked for something else, but they did not ask for what has been undertaken, they did not ask for a canal through a sand bank where there is no water. But there is water up in St. Laurent, and if that work had been conducted on business principles, if it had been completed, it would have been of some benefit to the people in that district. But it stands there adsolutely of no use, the $20,000 has been wasted, the whole thing is rotten and is tumbling down into the creek. Sir, I have no hesitation in supporting the resolution of the hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace).

Mr. TURRIFF. Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Did I understand him aright to say that Trade and Navigation Returns showed that in the year 1910, there was not flax exported from Saskatchewan into the United States?

Mr. STAPLES. No.

Mr. TURRIFF. Well the statement I made——

Mr. STAPLES. The hon. member is asking me a question. I do not require to go to the Trade and Navigation Returns to justify my statement, I simply take the words of the hon. member that he spoke on the floor of the House, and the answer that was given on the floor of the House by the Minister of Customs to the hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. TURRIFF. As I understand the matter—the Finance Minister will set me right if I am wrong—there have been no returns brought in so far of what was exported from Canada to the United States in the fall of 1910, seven or eight months ago. The statement I made when I spoke on the question of reciprocity on the 1st day of May, was that Mr. Frank Moffett, of Weyburn, last fall shipped two carloads of flax to Duluth and that if he could have loaded those two carloads of flax on the south side of the line, and if he had not to pay the duty on that flax, he would have got $500 more for his two carloads than he did get. I stand by every word and every letter of what I said, and I stand by every word and every statement that I made at twenty-one meetings a month ago, six in Manitoba and fifteen in my own constituency. I stand prepared to back up every statement I made at those meetings. I want to tell my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) that not in one of those six meetings in the province of Manitoba, and my hon. friend from Lisgar attended one of my meetings, at not one of those meetings of the six in Manitoba or the fifteen in my own constituency, did any one, Liberal or Conservative, ask me a question or make a reference in any shape, form or manner to any one of those questions that the hon. gentlemen have brought up here to-day.

Mr. STAPLES. This is a personal explanation, and I want to reply.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has introduced some matter not strictly relevant to the amendment. I do not know that I can allow any continued reference to this matter. The question before the House is the motion to go into Committee of Ways and Means, and an amendment with regard to certain expenditures. The discussion now must properly be limited to the terms of the amendment. In a matter of personal explanation the rule is relaxed, and if the hon. gentleman feels that he has not been fairly dealt with, I will hear a word from him, but not a continuation of the discussion.

Mr. STAPLES. I consider that I have not been fairly dealt with. Now, the hon.

member for Prince Albert (Mr. Rutan), on the 10th day of April, put the following question on the Order Paper:

What have been the exports by provinces from Canada to the United States for the years 1908, 1909, 1910, respectively, of wheat, barley, flax, oats, pease, eggs, butter, sheep, swine, potatoes, hay and fruit?

In the year 1910. Did the hon. member for Assiniboia hear that?

Mr. TURRIFF. I heard it.

Mr. STAPLES. If he will look over it he will find that there was not one bushel of ax seed shipped to the United States from Saskatchewan in 1910.

Mr. LANCASTER. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say one word.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think it well to point out to the House that only one hon. member is entitled to speak at once, and that when an hon. member has risen to address the House it is very improper that there should be a debate in the form of a conversation across the floor from one hon. member to another. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) has the floor.

Mr. LANCASTER. Mr. Speaker, if I had heard nothing said here to-day with regard to this amendment which is in your hands than the—I cannot say speech—statement of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) I would be obliged, in the interest of my duty, to vote for the amendment on the statement, and the statement alone of the Minister of Finance. We have here the chairman of the Treasury Board, the censor of all the estimates, the hon. gentleman who moves the House into Committee of Supply year after year to pass those estimates, having the assurance to stand up in this House and say that he has no knowledge whatever of the Newmarket canal, that he does not attempt to make any statement of it of his own, but that because the 'Globe' newspaper made certain statements he asks his followers to vote down this amendment. Anybody on either side of this House who is anxious to honestly vote according to his conscience in regard to an amendment of this kind with no other statement than that of the Minister of Finance, it seems to me, is obliged to vote for this amendment. I have dispelled from my mind everything I have heard in this House in support of the amendment from hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, and I am going to vote for this amendment because of the very want of knowledge of the Minister of Finance in regard to the matter and because he has put these estimates before the House, has asked the House to carry them and has sanctioned the payment of these moneys year after year upon this work which he says he has absolutely no knowledge of. That is my reason for voting for this amendment, and I do not require to hear any speeches from any other hon. gentlemen to cause me to do it.

Mr. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Portage la Prairie). I was on my feet a moment ago in response to a challenge from the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). I had the privilege of following the hon. member for Assiniboia through a part of his own constituency, and I regret I cannot bring him any very good tidings as to the prospect of his own success there——

Mr. TURRIFF. Do not worry, my friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Among the statements which I found credited to the hon. gentleman, which, no doubt he will confirm now, were two. One was that the United States is importing 190,000,000 bushels per year.

Mr. TURRIFF. I never stated that.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The other was, and if he disputes this——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The point has been raised that the matter that the hon. gentleman is introducing is not relevant to the amendment. I fear I must rule, in so far as I can judge of it, that it does not appear to be relevant to the amendment that is in my hands.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I quite agree with your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and I congratulate the hon. member for Assiniboia. I happen to live within 25 or 30 miles of this famous St. Laurent wharf, and I have been more than once on the ground there, or I should say as near the ground as one can safely get with a due appreciation of the value of his life. Under the terms of the resolution, which is more or less general, as to the system or lack of system employed by the administration, this wharf properly comes into contemplation. I stand to say this, that if members of the government who had to do with the planting of $20,000 of public money there, and with the leaving of it there to rot until it now is worthless, had a due appreciation of what they owe to the people of the country they would return that money to the public treasury out of their own pockets. That wharf stands in shallow water. It cannot be reached by water because it is too shallow, and it cannot be reached by land because the land is too moist and soft. It stands out in solitary and dismal isolation, a monument to the criminal wastefulness of the Laurier administration. Why was it built there? There is a long stretch of lake which protrudes southward into the municipality of Macdonald. There is a lagoon near that protruding lake. The government with its dredge dug a ditch between the lagoon and the lake. The lake lies on the sand, and the sand is close to the surface everywhere near the southern shore of Lake Manitoba; in fact, one can walk out sometimes half a mile into the water. The dredging was done between the lagoon and the lake to a fair depth, but it was never dredged beyond, and the consequence is that never could any vessel get to it at any time during the existence of the wharf. The wharf is built along the line of the ditch where the dredging was done, and the only way it can be reached is for one to hire a horse and plough through sand a foot to a foot and a half deep for a mile and a half, and it will take an hour and a half to do it. The wharf is used by nothing to-day except the mud hens and gulls that frequent the southern shores of the lake. It is a mockery to any administration that acknowledges it as its work. I would like to test hon. gentlemen opposite; I would like a resolution put to this House deprecating the expenditure on the St. Laurent wharf, and I wonder if the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Molloy) would not respond to the party whip, and vote for that wise and provident expenditure.

Mr. MOLLOY. He will look after himself.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Well, if I have anything to do with it, and we are not cut too short by the administration he will have a good opportunity. As to the other expenditure on the Newmarket canal; that is still more notorious, not any more notorious in character or kind, but simply more notorious in expenditure. We have had the spectacle this afternoon of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) attempting to justify that expenditure, just as his leader did two years ago, and just as the hon. Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth) did at the same time, on the score that at a certain period in the history of Canada certain men, embracing in part Conservatives, affirmed something along this line. In the first place, because I do not want to include them in the category of the many people in this country who are prepared to advocate anything if the money is spent where they live, there is nothing clearer, even from the report read by the Minister of Finance, than that these gentlemen did not advocate what the government has done, that not one man, Liberal or Conservative, on that delegation, is committed to the wholesale fraud that the government has perpetrated. If these men actually signed a requisition asking that there be prosecuted the work that they were down here as a delegation to ask for, they would not be committed to this Newmarket canal. The widening and deepening of the Holland river, east and west, is quite a different thing from the digging of a canal down a little stream which is not the Holland river, which is miles from the Holland river, digging it uphill, digging it at many times the expenditure these men asked for, or anticipated would be entailed, and furthermore, digging it for an ostensible purpose that these men did not have in mind. But, whatever the government may have been asked for the Minister of Finance knows that if the expenditure is justified on that ground he could justify anything throughout the length and breadth of Canada.

You can find men in any locality of this country, and possibly in both parties, who will ask that large expenditures be made in their locality, because the share they will have to contribute proportionately is far more than returned to them in the direct gain accruing from spending the money around them. The Minister of Finance has acknowledged the principle upon which the government makes its expenditures. No effort is made by the government to ascertain whether an expenditure is in the public interest or not, so long as they believe it to be in the party interest. You can search these files in vain and you cannot find a statement by any person, responsible or irresponsible, to say that there would be any traffic on this Newmarket canal to render a return for an expenditure of even $290,000, as at first recommended. Up to this point, perhaps, the error in the estimate might be traceable to Mr. Walsh, but after this time the guilt is on the head of the government, because the report clearly shows that for political purposes in 1904, Mr. Walsh, was required, against his repeated protests, to put in some kind of a figure whether he had data to back it up or not. He told the government that soundings were not complete, and that any estimate he made could only be a trap, but the elections were coming on, and they pressed him, and against his many protests they forced him to put in this estimate. The consequences of that error so disastrous to Canada are from that day on the head of the government. Having had the estimate of $290,000 for a work for which there was no justification, another election was coming and they got another man to estimate the work at $900,000, and they built the canal to serve a district of six miles by nine something on the style of the Soulanges canal, whose purpose is to carry continental traffic. That is the style of a government we have.

They hope if possible to satisfy the Liberal workers in the constituency, and reward them for sending a Liberal to parliament, and possibly to conciliate a certain proportion of the Conservatives, and for this purpose they commit the country to an expenditure of $1,000,000. The defence of the Minister of Finance this afternoon is equally applicable to the numerous and heavy expenditures all over his own province of Nova Scotia. He knows that by playing the game in Nova Scotia as it was played at Newmarket, he has been enabled to gather around him a cohort of supporters from his own province. He has seen the long record of supplementary estimates which, year after year, and especially in a year preceding an election, are brought down for Nova Scotia. No wonder that the first thought that springs to his mind when justifying an expenditure, is to endeavour to show that it will meet the avaricious intentions of certain residents of the locality. Never did we hear the Minister of Finance, and never did we hear the Minister of Public Works attempt to defend an expenditure because the people of Canada got commensurate benefits from it. If the Minister of Finance had risen to defend the notorious steal on the Gaspereau river he would have used the same argument as he did this afternoon. If he attempted to defend the sawdust wharf purchase, he would have done the same thing, and no doubt that if next week mayhap he should defend the Bathurst wharf he will look in vain for any other footing on which to place himself than the voracious appetite of certain supporters. Let my last word be as to what has occurred close to my home. I ask the Minister of Finance to come to western Canada. I do not know that he has ever been there except on a rambling tariff commission, but I do know that he has never entertained friendly feelings for our great western country. I know that only twenty years ago, he stated in the legislature of Nova Scotia that the western provinces were of no use to confederation, and criticised the policy of endeavouring to add to the grandeur of confederation the provinces of the west. He has always had a jealous eye on the expenditures in that country, and western Canada has never had reason to look to him as a friend. I ask him to come to the west and to see the present condition of the St. Andrew's rapids with a landing place standing 30 feet from the ground that no one can use. Let him come a few miles further west and see the St. Laurent wharf, a resting place for gulls and mud-hens, standing out a mile and a half from human access; let him see rotting to waste the expenditure of $25,000 of the money of the people on that wharf. There may have been traffic there to justify a reasonable expenditure on that wharf, but there is nothing in the ingenuity of an honest mind to defend the spending of $20,000 of $25,000 of the people's money there and leaving it to rot in the water for seven years, until now, even suppose they continue the work, no value can be received from the expenditure already made. Will the Minister of Finance dare to say that that is not to be marked against his government with a black mark, if you could see black marks on it now? There is not a member of the Liberal party in this House —watch and see if what I say is not correct—there is not a member of the party in the House now, and they cannot gather one in from room 16 and the corridors, who will attempt to say that the people of Canada have got one dollar's worth of benefit from the $20,000 expended on the St. Laurent wharf.

That is a great state of affairs. Is that a credit to the Laurier administration? Was it the fault of the engineers? We do not need an engineer to find out that if the sand comes within a foot and a half of the surface of the water you have to dig through that sand before you can sail a schooner there. You do not need an engineer to tell you that if there is a lagoon or a marsh, you must put a road across it before you can reach the other side by walking. These abuses cannot be laid to the charge of any officials; they rest on the shoulders of the Prime Minister and the government, and they cannot get out of it simply by changing cabinet ministers.

Mr. GLEN CAMPBELL (Dauphin). I notice that on this occasion, as on most others, the ministers who should be here because of their interest in the special subject under discussion are not here. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) should be here and so should the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham). But they are absent—just as when reciprocity is under discussion, the gentlemen who should be here representing the government are usually away sleeping. I should like to have asked some pertinent questions of the Minister of Public Works, but, as he is absent, I suppose I shall have to leave them to some future occasion.

Now, the subject of the Newmarket canal is one which has been discussed in this House from time to time during the whole life of this parliament. The facts have been represented fairly and honestly by the members on this side, but have been misrepresented on all occasions by the speakers on the other side except to-day when this work was alluded to by the Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth) as a dust heap. The Prime Minister has stated that the inception of this work was due to the fact that many residents of that part of the country had come here and asked the government to make an expenditure of this kind, these people including Tories as well as Liberals. And, while that may be true in a secondary way, it is not absolutely in line with the truth as the truth should be told in this House. The facts are that a certain gentleman, Sir Wm. Mulock, who for reasons of state or political exigency was relegated by the Prime Minister to some other place than the floor of this House, had promised his constituents in North York that were he returned to power he would do what he could to make a canal from Lake Simcoe to Holland Landing. Before he was elected, engineers were over every part of that riding, practically on every farm within decent touch of Holland Landing. After he was elected, he arranged that the deputation should come up here to interview the government with regard to this canal, or rather with regard to the widening of the Holland river. He arranged that these men should come up here either at the people's expense or at his own—at least, free of expense to themselves. The sum that was in their minds when they came to ask for the deepening of the Holland river was $74,000; that was the amount they asked to be expended upon this work which is jocularly known by the people as the 'Newmarket Canal.' The estimate made afterwards by the engineer sent down by the government was $300,000. Sir Wm. Mulock, to his credit be it said, tried on all occasions to hold the expenditure down below $300,000, thinking that was all that was requisite to do the work in a way to meet the demands of the people. And to-day we find nearly a million dollars being expended for what the minister said to-day was a dust heap and what every man, regardless of political affiliation, who speaks privately on the matter, declares to be a monument of folly or worse.

Let me refer for a moment to the remark of the Minister of Justice when speaking of this matter. He was referring to what had been said in this House with regard to the Newmarket canal and the wasteful expenditure of public money by this government. And he said that the various members who made statements on the floor of the House from which they could not get away, though many of them would like to get away from their statements on public questions, would not dare to go down to North York and make the same statements there. He spoke of calling members before the bar. Why, Sir, is there not opportunity for the exercise of the power of his so-called Department of Justice? He must realize that practice makes perfection in all things, and if he desires perfection in haling criminals, perjurers, liars, thieves, or robbers before the bar there is plenty of opportunity for him to practise. Why does not he practise in many of the matters that have been brought to his attention? Why does not he take action against those guilty of robbery of the Canadian public in the matter of the immigration of the Chinese? Why not practise in the case of the thefts and steals perpetrated in connection with the Printing Bureau? Why not practise with regard to the Grand Trunk Pacific frauds, with regard to the dredging frauds —which would hurt the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) so much—and so with all the rest? I do not want to be accused of being an obstructionist, but I could stand here for two hours and tell you of the things he might practise in haling people to the bar.

Now, the Newmarket canal has been pretty fully discussed and I want to say a word concerning some of the other thefts and robberies of the public by the various departments of this government that are supposed to serve and care for the public of Canada.

I will just say one word with reference to the matter so ably brought before the House by my hon. friends from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) and Portage Laprairie (Mr. Meighen)—the matter of the so-called wharf at St. Laurent. I had an opportunity of going there a few weeks ago, and looking over the works myself. And if I ever saw a monument of either senile folly or political gross carelessness it was on that occasion. This wharf was built for no purpose in the world except that mentioned by my hon. friend from Portage Laprairie (Mr. Meighen) that the wild fowl might lay their eggs and the gulls roost on it. A boat has never come in there. This wharf was built at an expense of $20,000 or $25,000 of public money, previous to the election of 1904. But the day after the election, when Mr. Riddell was defeated by my hon. friend who now represents Macdonald (Mr. Staples), the work closed down, and the wharf is now in a state of rottenness. So much so that I kicked the top logs off with the heel of my boot. That wharf is of no earthly use for anything. It is standing there in a swamp on the edge of a lake with from six to eighteen inches of water around it. If the work had been properly done, perhaps there might have been something to say in defence of it—that perhaps at some future date it could be made useful, but the work was done, as is done in the Public Works Department on every occasion, in a manner to steal the hard earned money from the people of Canada. Three or four feet from the top of the piles, scantlings were laid back to the piers, and on top of these scantlings brush was piled in. Hon. gentlemen will remember that the contractors were paid by yardage, and their yardage counted from the bottom up to the top. A space was left, and some eight feet of brush piled in, then the sand was put on top of that. To-day if you go down there with a team of horses you will bury the team in the holes where the brush has rotted out. It was the money of the people of Canada that went to pay for that wharf, and it is the Department of Public Works which is responsible for it. I say the Department of Public Works, but, perhaps the primary responsibility must rest on the rotten administration of the Liberal government. Mr. Speaker, the day is not far away, and we will welcome it, when the people of Canada will have a chance to say that they will not stand for that sort of thing.

I had intended to speak for perhaps a couple of hours, but I understand my Liberal friends are anxious to get home to the bosoms of their wives and families, therefore, I will cut my remarks short; but at the same time let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I could stand here for hours, and detail the crookedness, malfeasance and incapacity of this administration in dealing with the money of the Canadian people. Let us take the case of Richibucto wharf, passed upon by Mr. Stead, the resident engineer of the Department of Public Works, as being worth $700, and inside of two or three weeks passed upon by him, when the people of Canada had to pay for it—as being worth $5,000. When he said it was worth $700 who was going to buy it? A great party heeler of the lowest description. When he valued it at $5,000, who was going to pay for it, inside of two months? The people of Canada—the suckers.

Let us look at the case of the Bathurst dredging. The contract was illegally awarded to the friends of the government—in fact one of the partnership was a person allied very closely in relationship to a member of this House. $30,000 of the people's money went into it, and that is what brings him here—his part of that $30,000.

The Guysborough Marine and Constructing Company—$34,000 of the people's money illegally given by way of a contract again. Mr. Speaker, do you think the people of Canada are going to stand for this wholesale robbery? Then, there is a little lake called Lake Maquoit. The dredging there cost about $48,000. Did it benefit the people of Canada? Not for one second. Their money was expended in digging a hole in the ground. Again $36,000 of the people's money was handed over to George McAvity as a rake-off in consideration of his political influence with his side partner the hon. Minister of Public Works. Thousands of dollars were expended to dredge for the Dalhousie Lumber Company, and no one has ever denied that the hon. Minister of Public Works, is at least, a sleeping partner in that company.

Mr. CAMPBELL.

I would like to refer to one other point, and that is the fact that a certain gentleman who three or four years ago was adjudged by the courts as unfitted to occupy a seat in this House has had more public money spent in his little constituency than we have had expended for public works altogether in the province of Manitoba during the course of the last year. If the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) were here, where he ought to be, I would have referred to another matter. However, seeing that I am on my feet I will speak of it in any event. It is a matter pertaining to the people of my constituency. I refer to the dredging of the Mossy river. For years before I had the honour of representing that constituency we had what we called the 'political dredge' at the mouth of the Mossy river. On various occasions I pointed out to the hon. Minister of Public Works that this was, in fact, a political dredge, and was of no use in the world. On every occasion I got a distinct pledge from him that he would reconsider his ways, and be wise in the expenditure of the people's money, and that he would spend the money in a proper manner. To this day there has been no money expended there. But, at the last election he found that this political dredge was no good, and for the first time in the history of the place, the Conservative candidate got a majority; therefore, he discarded the dredge and dismissed his men, as being of no use to the people of Canada, and more particularly to the Liberal party.

I wanted to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) some questions about this matter.

Unfortunately, he is not here. He should be here. Why is he not here? I wanted to ask some questions about Swan Creek dredging. The dredge worked there up to the day of the election, and no man could work on that dredge five minutes unless he promised to vote for Theodore A. Burrows. The day after the election, what happened? The dredge was put out of commission, everything was thrown aside, the people's wants were overlooked. The only object, so far as it applies to Manitoba and the Northwest as far as I have seen it, of the Public Works Department is to use that whole department and its employees as a political partisan department, and the machine for the furtherance of the crookedness of the Liberal party.

Mr. W. R. SMYTH (East Algoma). I am not at all astonished to hear members on this side of the House criticize this Government for their actions in regard to the Newmarket canal. It is only the old old story told over and over again, and it is the only old story that we have, especially in the newer parts of this Dominion. I have the honour to represent a great deal of waterfront along the Georgian bay, the Sault Ste. Marie river and Lake Huron, and during the last election they employed dredges at different points to dredge out rivers and streams. Immediately after the elections the dredges were withdrawn.

I wish to speak in regard to a matter nearer my own home. In the town of Thessalon during the last election this government were very busy constructing a breakwater that is much needed at that point and which was very much needed at that particular time for the Liberal party. The people of Thessalon who needed that breakwater very much believed the government to be to a certain extent sincere. They went so far as to buy the timber and stone from their farms near the town, and the stone and timber are still piled near the wharf, with a man watching to see that the stones are not stolen and the timber does not rot any more than is possible during the time between the last election and now. Thus the Newmarket canal is only one of many instances. The people of the town of Thessalon are, no doubt, going to be told again that they are going to have this breakwater. I notice that they are very busy already and very anxious that the people of Thessalon shall get this breakwater. All along the shores of Lake Huron and Georgian bay you will find wharfs that are very much needed, which are getting no repairs and no attention from this government. You will find wharfs sitting out miles in the lake, that are not needed at all, but have cost the people of this country a great deal of money. Not one boat has ever reached them or ever will, they are simply monuments to the Laurier government, to the Laurier humbug, to the Laurier fraud, that is being perpetrated on the people of this Dominion.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Wallace).

Mr. LAPOINTE. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) has not voted.

Mr. TALBOT. I am paired with the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Owen). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment. While I am on my feet I would like to draw your attention to the fact that there is not a single representative from the province of Quebec present on the opposite side of the House. I trust the Montreal 'Gazette' will take notice of it.

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Ways and Means.

WAYS AND MEANS—RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. THOMAS BEATTIE (London). Mr. Speaker, the reciprocity proposal before the House to-day, I consider, is a most dangerous one for this country, and if carried out will prove disastrous to Canada. I believe it has been concocted by shrewd United States politicians, thinking and believing in the end it might lead to the annexation of this country to the United States. For the past three months I have observed the remarks of almost all the senators, as well as the papers of the United States, and I think without exception all desire closer political relation with Canada.

With respect to the commercial aspect of the question, let me here quote an item that was sent from Toronto yesterday to the Montreal 'Star':

> Nearly every day live stock from the United States is brought into Toronto, the Canadian duty paid thereon, and then sold against Canadian animals.

Yesterday 289 sheep from the States were sold on the Toronto market at 5½ cents a pound. They weighed 640 lbs. and brought $3.52 each. The duty was 88 cents. Canadian sheep brought 16 cents less.

American sheep can be brought into Toronto, pay freight, the 25 per cent duty, and compete with home animals.

With the duty off, and Reciprocity will take the duty off, the Toronto live stock market would be flooded with American sheep, and prices would drop about a dollar a head. What is true of sheep is true of hogs and cattle. It is up to the Ontario farmer to bear this in mind.

When this question of reciprocity was introduced into this House, I at once pronounced it the old policy of commercial union revived under the new name of reciprocity. At that time I stated my opinion of it to the press of the city of London. I condemned it then as severely as I could, as being injurious to Canada. And, from that time until the present day I have heard nothing from my friends but commendation of the views I then expressed. About the year 1866 the late reciprocity treaty which had been in existence for some fifteen years was repealed. In the same year there was a large convention in the city of Detroit, Michigan. The principal speaker was Senator Chandler, and what did he say? He said: 'We will starve those Canadians until they will be obliged to knock at the door for admission into our union.' That was largely applauded by all present. I believe that was the general feeling throughout the United States; and, the same feeling exists to-day.

We have been told that the President of the United States offered our Canadian delegates absolute free trade in manufactures. That, I did not consider very clever on President Taft's part. To me, Sir, it looks like the offer of a full grown man to wrestle with a Canadian lad of fourteen in short pants, because he knows he can down him. I consider the offer of free trade in manufactures to Canada, if the word is parliamentary, a very cowardly offer, knowing we could not accept, and it would seriously injure our Canadian manufactures, which are yet in their infancy. Canada is not knocking to get into the American union to-day. The United States is knocking to get into Canada. I hope they will not succeed, on their terms. If they want to get into our markets, let them take down their tariff bars, come into Canada and buy all they wish.

After forty-five years, the United States has discovered that they made a great mistake in repealing the late treaty, and are now most anxious to renew it on much broader lines. In fact they offer much more than we dare accept unless we wish to injure many of our infant industries. Let us be very careful; it is their own welfare they are considering, not Canada's. Ever since the repeal of the late reciprocity treaty, the United States Congress has raised their tariff bars so high that very little of Canada's natural products could enter the United States, and only at great disadvantage. Canada, to-day, is quite independent of the United States or any other country, except the mother country, Great Britain, and no persons know that better than President Taft and his people. I say to the government, is it not better to leave well enough alone?

The United States' politicians are very clever and are now trying to repair the injury they did themselves by getting us back in their net again. But, to me their net is too transparent, it is like the spider's web, 'nice to look at,' but, like the fly discovered, very dangerous to be caught in.

About the time the late treaty was repealed Canada was tied up to a large extent with the United States. Much of our exports were being shipped through Boston and New York ports; not so to-day, our own ports are doing the business. But, now Mr. Speaker, we have our own splendid ships, none better sailing, from any ports. And, last Sir, but not least, the great Cunard steamship Company, having discovered the importance of the Canadian business, has decided to enter the St. Lawrence river, and that company coming after Canada's business speaks volumes for our trade. The people of the United States have not got their eyes shut, but have them wide open, and are watching Canada's great development, and I know are somewhat jealous at our success; I remember the day when they sneered at the name of Canada; now the name of Canada in the United States is respected.

Mr. Speaker, after the repeal of the old treaty Canada was in low water for some time, when Sir John A. Macdonald boldly adopted a remedy, and obtained from the people of this country a mandate to create a National Policy for Canada, which he did. Ever since that time Canada has prospered as she never did before, and will continue to prosper if that policy is let alone, and I trust it will be. I have been told some of the present cabinet, after Sir John A. Macdonald had the mandate from the people for the National Policy, said he dare not carry it into effect; he did carry it into effect, and from that date until the present time Canada had been prosperous, and if let alone will continue to prosper. There is one thing I must give the present government credit for, that is having the good judgment to let the National Policy of the late Sir John A. Macdonald remain pretty well the same as he left it. That is what they may thank for the prosperous times since they have been in office. Will any member in this House state one single act of the present party in power that has contributed to the prosperity Canada has enjoyed during the past fifteen years?

To my mind there are just two reasons why Canada has been prosperous, and has advanced in the past few years, and without those two things she would have remained where she was forty years ago. First of all, I think the National Policy commenced Canada's prosperity; I do not think any man in this House will deny that statement. The second was the building of the Canadian Pacific railway. We, Canadians, should ever feel grateful to that company of wealthy Canadian gentlemen who got together and took their commercial and financial lives in their hands and carried that great work to a satisfactory completion, after being told it would never earn money enough to oil the wheels. I consider it made the west; it largely assisted to make this country prosperous. It advertised the Dominion far and wide; it is a credit to Canada; it is a credit to the empire; every British subject should be proud of it.

I wish the Hon. E. Blake was, to-day, able to express his opinion on this question. This was the self same question that drove him from political life in Canada. The Hon. Mr. Sifton, Mr. German, Mr. Harris, are only following the lead of Hon. E. Blake, and I am told there are many others in the Liberal ranks, but have not the nerve to speak out their minds as those gentlemen have done. In 1903, I find the right hon. gentleman who leads this government expressed these sentiments during the Grand Trunk Pacific discussion:

> I have found in the short experience during which it has been my privilege and my fortune to be placed at the head of affairs, by the will of the Canadian people, that the best and most effective way to maintain friendship with our American neighbours is to be absolutely independent of them.

Evidently the hon. gentleman has changed his mind. Now, Mr. Speaker, why should the Canadian wheat crop be sent to the United States for manufacture into flour? Why should it not be ground in this country? This would be one of the prices for Canada to pay under the proposed agreement. What further price must be paid? The admission to our markets of the farmers of Argentine, Austria-Hungary, Bolivia, Colombia, Denmark, Japan, Norway, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, and Venezuela. Many of these countries are large exporters of animal and agricultural products which are produced in this country. Under the proposed treaty these twelve countries are entitled to receive, and will receive the same right of entry to our market which is conceded to the farmers of the United States. But these twelve countries concede nothing to us in return. Sometime ago I saw an estimate of the enormous sum of money that has been lost to Britain by the grinding of their wheat in foreign lands. The loss in feed and grinding was estimated at £300,000,000. It was said that had there been a small tax on flour, and the grain admitted free that enormous sum would have gone into the pockets of the British workman miller instead of the foreigner, and the British people would have had their flour just as cheap; I must say it looks reasonable. Let us see what Mr. King, the great Minneapolis miller, says:

H. H. King of the Sheffield-King Milling company, Minneapolis, has written to Senators Knute Nelson and Moses E. Clapp pointing out that if, under the proposed reciprocity treaty with Canada, 30,000,000 bushels of wheat should move to Minneapolis from western Canada, it would mean a great advantage to the dairying interests of Minnesota because of the greater supply of feed that would be created, and would also mean $1,000,000 for twin city labor, exclusive of railroad labor.

Last year, Mr. King's letter points out, the Minneapolis flour mills ground 70,000,000 bushels of wheat, but they have sufficient capacity and might have ground 100,000,000 bushels had it been available.

Mr. King lays stress upon the advantages that would result in the greater feed supply that would be available. He directs attention to the fact that the German government, and also the government of France, have taken measures to favour the production of feed, and the milling of wheat in such manner that the dairy interests may not find feed prices prohibitive. Mr. King contends that the decline in wheat prices that followed the talk of Canadian reciprocity was only a sentimental decline and in no sense a true indication of what the effect would be upon values if reciprocity were a fact.

The 'Northwestern Miller' contains editorial boosting for Canadian trade treaty as follows:

'If those wise gentlemen who are so firmly set against ratifying the Canadian reciprocity treaty would look just a little further ahead than the instant and immediate effect upon the price of wheat, and squarely face the actual alternative that the defeat of the treaty would present, they might find excellent reason for changing their view.' This is the sentiment expressed in the 'Northwestern Miller' this week.

'As a choice of evils, if nothing better, reciprocity with Canada has its merits. It will do more to annihilate the colonial preference program in Great Britain than any other move that could be devised. This policy has strong support in England and the reciprocity treaty will cut out the ground from under it. If it is not applicable to Canada it will not be applicable to the other colonies, for Canada is the very keystone of the preferential idea, a scheme which, if carried into effect, practically would ruin the export trade of the United States with Great Britain.'

The editorial explains that reciprocity not only will preserve the future of the export trade of Great Britain in wheat as well as flour for both the producing countries, but it will give the millers of Canada and the United States a common ground of operation whereby they will be ale to meet the competition of British mills which now have a monopoly of the flour trade in Great Britain.

H. M. Kinney, general manager of the Winona Wagon Company, Winona, Minn., recently read a paper before the Winona Merchants' and Business Men's Association, stating his position on the question of Canadian reciprocity. After the close of Mr. Kinney's remarks, the association adopted resolutions favouring the ratification of the proposed agreement. Mr. Kinney read his paper following a banquet which was attended by more than a hundred members of the association, many of whom took part in a general discussion of the question following Mr. Kinney's statement of the proposition. His address was in part as follows:

'Let me say right here that if I thought the consummation of this agreement would be disastrous, or even at all injurious to the farmers of this country, I would not favour it for a moment. I believe, on the contrary, that it will not only do no harm to our farmers, but will eventually be of great benefit to them.

'The facts are that the Minnesota millers need some No. 1 hard Canadian wheat in order to use the softer variety grown in Minnesota. If they cannot get the Canadian, they cannot use our wheat; therefore, why not bring in the Canadian wheat free of duty to enable the millers to use more of our own?

'Another argument in favour of admitting Canadian wheat is that it will enable the large mills in Minnesota to make a flour suitable for export and thus largely increase the output of their mills. The additional offal, with such farm products as it should be mixed, will make a perfect dairy preparation for over 6,000,000 head of cattle or stock. Germany and France offer inducements to the millers for securing this offal for their dairy farms.

'The Canadian provinces are not adapted to the growing of live stock, but are distinctly a wheat country. Their packing houses now in operation at Winnipeg, Calgary and other places will be obliged to buy our live stock, thus affording the farmers a new and excellent market for it. We find by examining the proposed treaty that the duties cancelled by both countries cover 116 products, but that there is a much larger number of duties reduced.

'I met a Canadian on the train a short time ago and had quite a discussion with him about this reciprocity question. He was decidedly opposed to the treaty, saying in reply to my statement that the farmers of Canada were anxious to market their wheat in this country. "You will have to buy our wheat in a few years, anyway, and pay the duty and also our price. Your consumption is overtaking the production and it won't be so very long in getting there; then what are you going to do?" The gentleman was right, and maybe we had better be making this bread and butter trade while we can. Let this fact be borne in mind—and I want to make it most emphatic—should that treaty prove unsatisfactory it can be terminated at any time.'

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BEATTIE. Mr. Chairman, since the visit of the farmers' delegation this great question has been brought to the attention of the Canadian parliament and people. I refer to the reciprocity compact with the United States. Certain gentlemen in this country who are strongly opposed to protection and who apprehend danger from trusts and combines urge with great force and apparent sincerity that we can obtain relief by entering into commercial union with the United States, the most highly protected country in the world.

Common sense naturally impels one to inquire how it is possible that relief from the evils of protection can be achieved by interlocking our fiscal system with that of a country which maintains the highest tariff wall in the world.

We are said to be suffering from oppressive prices imposed under a protective tariff and we are urged to fly for relief to a country which maintains a tariff nearly twice as high. To avoid the danger of trusts and combines in Canada we are pressed to merge our fiscal system in that of a country wherein trusts and combines wield a power and influence which fortunately are unknown in Canada up to the present.

I may say that we have given the impression in the United States that we are anxious for union with that country. I received a letter to-day from the state of Virginia in which a man has the impertinence to tell me that Annexation has already set in and nothing can stop it.

Fancy that coming from a gentleman who is the principal of a school for young men. It shows the impression that has gone abroad. I have another letter here which I received last night and with your permission, Mr. Chairman, I shall read it:

July 26, 1911.

Major Beattie,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Hon. Sir,—I beg to advise you that while I have a very high opinion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, I am absolutely in opposition to reciprocity with the United States.

I am a farmer's son, and for some time I have been making considerable effort to unload my city holdings for a good sized farm in southwest Ontario in exchange, so that I am certainly interested.

I have a number of relatives who are actively engaged in farming; my late brother's boys are the owners of farm lands to the extent of about 1,500 acres, and I do not know of a single Grit or Tory relative engaged in farming who is in favour of this proposed measure. Of course, a Grit political follower is not so outspoken as I usually am, being an out and out independent, I am free; but I know the silent opinion of my relatives. They say that they cannot entertain for a moment any chance for the unloading of American horses and other farm products against their home productions, particularly in that territory which has cost the good people of Ontario so much to put into being, that is our great Northwest.

Of all markets, the most cherished and best is always the home market.

Now, when we had no Northwest, so to speak, and it was then a desirable proposition to have a trade arrangement with our neighbours, how were we treated?

I have not forgotten it, even if Mr. Fielding or Sir Wilfrid never knew from actual experience what it meant to us who have helped do the building and the ploughing. We were turned down hard, and why? Simply with the hope that some day we could be coerced into American bidding. Now that we have shown Uncle Samuel what a great people we could be under trial, and now that our broad acres look tempting for the purpose of feeding his hungry workmen, he would like to get access to our resources in order that he might the better compete in his manufactured products. In other words, we have our dear old uncle beaten to a finish; and in so far as I can do it there will be no chance for his proposed measure being adopted by Canada.

Mr. Taft, a business man representing a business people, now sees the great mistake they made in the past.

Let us as true Canadians hold fast to what we have so hard earned. We have no time to divide this great wealth with a people who have never done anything for us. Taft and taffee may suit the politician; but for a Canadian business man, I would if I could place an injunction on the whole plot.

That is from a very good man whom I know very well, and I thought it was worth reading.

Mr. PATERSON. A Canadian or American?

Mr. BEATTIE. A Canadian. I will let my hon. friend see the letter if he wishes; it is no secret.

Mr. PATERSON. No, no.

Mr. BEATTIE. I know the man very well. A great many people have the idea that a high tariff makes high prices. I believe that a high tariff makes low prices when it gets fairly started. No man will invest his money in any business if he is not sure that he is going to succeed. Unless you give that man some chance of making a success of his business he would be very foolish to put his money into it. A young industry is much the same as a child; the child must be taken care of by the mother, and father until it becomes a man or woman. I would not put my own money into any business if I did not have a chance of making a successful business of it. I remember some thirty years ago meeting a gentleman in the Imperial hotel, London, England, who was engaged in the paper trade. He was almost crying as he told me this story. He said: I have to compete with the German manufacturers who sell their paper at a bare margin of five per cent. I have to pay my taxes, pay my workmen, make interest on my money and live myself. No man can compete especially in a new country and any one would be very much afraid to start an industry under those conditions. I want to show you what protection will do if it is properly looked after.

The June number of 'Industrial Canada' gives some illustrations that are worth noting. In the eighties Gresson and other French kid manufacturers were sending to the United States $5,000,000 worth of shoe leather, charging for it 60 cents per foot. A protective duty of 20 per cent was put on. Gresson leather did not go to 72 cents. It dropped to 45 cents and then to 40 cents, 35 cents and 30 cents. Thousands of men from France and elsewhere were put to work in the United States. Was protection worth while? J. G. Cleghorn, of England, manufactured linings for coats and employed in his factory 3,000 men and women. The United States put on a protective tariff, and the Cleghorn factories were shut up. Three thousand were given employment in the United States' shops, making coat linings. Mr. Cleghorn's comment of an inquirer of the United States was: 'You have the wise statesmen to keep your men employed.' Then there is the case of men's gloves. The largest English manufacturer lost 80 per cent of his business with the United States when a duty was put on this item. What was the result? Before the tariff was enacted these gloves sold for $1.25 a pair. After the tariff was put on the price was $1 for the same gloves. Pearl buttons were imported into the United States in immense quantities. A protective duty was put on, and the banks of the Mississippi hummed with the industry of many pearl button factories. The whole industry was transported to the United States, and the shells which lay for generations valueless were turned into articles of commerce. And the price dropped below what it was before the tariff was put on.'

The reduction of prices is not the only advantage gained. The chief gain is in the development of home markets. When the people employed in making kid leather, coat linings, and men's gloves for the United States were in France or England American farmers could sell them only a small proportion of the food they consumed. When the manufacturing was done in the United States the working people got nearly all their food supplies from American farmers.

C. C. James, M.A., Deputy Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, delivered a very interesting address about eight years ago before the Natural Science Association of Ontario. He showed that in a period of six years Ontario had increased its production of beef from $12,000,000 to $23,000,000; bacon and pork from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000; cheese from $9,000,000 to $15,000,000; value of farm lands from $554,000,000 to $605,000,000; value of farm buildings from $206,000,000 to $237,000,000; value of farm implements from $51,000,000 to $62,000,000; value of live stock from $94,000,000 to $141,000,000. His language is very significant when he touches the question of reciprocity. Bear in mind that his words were uttered seven or eight years before his present proposals were put forward by our government.

Denmark, some thirty years ago, began to encourage and teach her farmers to turn out the finished products of the farm. By so doing she has so stimulated the productiveness of her soil that the average crop has increased from fifty to seventy-five per cent. The superiority of Danish finished products and the reputation which they enjoy have commanded the markets of Great Britain, nearly one-third of the bacon and nearly one-quarter of the eggs, comes from this little country.

The United States can produce a food supply sufficient for at least four hundred millions, and probably sufficient for eight hundred millions of people. Mr. L. R. Waterbury, of Michigan, produced before the Legislative Committee on Agriculture a document prepared by the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States. This document showed the total per capita production for a long series of years of the following crops: Wheat, corn, oats, barley, rye, buckwheat, potatoes, hay, tobacco, and cotton. During the past forty years the production of these ten agricultural staples in the United States has increased more rapidly than the population. The increase has been steady and consistent. The per capita production is thirty per cent greater than it was forty years ago.

I am absolutely opposed to the reciprocity compact now pending before parliament. What reasons can be urged in its favour, and what advantages can be expected from its provisions? We are told that Canada wanted it forty years ago. But we are dealing with the conditions in 1911 and not with the conditions in 1866. The denunciation of the reciprocity agreement of 1854 was most fortunate for this country. It helped to bring about the federation of this Dominion, which has broadened so as to include the west. It instilled into the hearts of Canadians a courage and a faith in their country which were before unknown. It brought forth all their qualities of energy, capacity and resourcefulness. It compelled Canada to find new markets, and in the success of that endeavour, Canada found also strength and confidence.

Why is it that the free traders and advocates of reciprocity in discussing the tariff question take no account of British Columbia? They assume that the prairie provinces are naturally fitted for manufacturing industries and that consequently the sentiment of the west is certain to be in favour of free trade. They entirely ignore British Columbia. We have already shown that the free traders underrate the natural advantages of the prairie provinces. We have already pointed out that Winnipeg has factories employing about fifteen thousand hands, and that other important towns of the prairie provinces make a creditable showing in manufacturing enterprise. It is certain that Alberta, with great supplies of coal and raw materials close at hand, is certainly destined to become a great manufacturing province. But, of all the provinces of our vast Dominion, the one that seems likely to have the greatest industrial future is British Columbia.

British Columbia is not only the biggest province of the west, but it has the greatest natural advantages. It has extensive areas suitable for growing fruits, vegetables and grains; its fisheries are very valuable; its forests are unequalled; it has gold, silver, copper, lead, iron and coal in abundance, as well as numerous waterfalls, which when developed will furnish cheap electrical power; and its magnificent harbours are open throughout the year. There is also no branch of industry that could not be successfully prosecuted in that great province. British Columbia will be the most populous province of the Canadian west, perhaps of the whole Dominion, and its vote will be cast for Canadianism rather than for continentalism. There may be doubt about the sentiment of the prairie provinces on the question of reciprocity, but British Columbia is unquestionably opposed to the compact made at Washington. Strong as is the protectionist sentiment in British Columbia to-day, it will be still stronger when manufacturing industries develop throughout the country.

In the year 1887, Mr. A. Williamson challenged the Cobden Club to issue a short circular to the leading British exporters asking them whether in exporting goods to the United States the taxation was paid by the British manufacturer or the consumer in the United States. The Cobden Club did not accept the challenge, but Mr. Williamson sent a circular to a large number of representative exporters of the chief manufacturing centres, embracing cotton, woollen, carpet, iron and steel, brass, gold, silver, electro plate, hardware, guns, eyelets, engineering, glass, india rubber, leather, beer and other industries. Out of 531 replies every one but one admitted that to a greater or less extent the United States tariff taxation fell upon them instead of upon the consumers in the United States, because they had to reduce their prices to meet the prices of the protected American manufactures. The manager of the Barrow Steel Company stated in evidence before the British Royal Commission on trade depression that in one year, 1884, his company had paid £160,000 or about three-quarters of a million dollars in duties to the United States government. This is not a new condition of things. The same law of prices prevailed when the United States was a young and struggling nation. For example, two months after the adoption of the protective tariff of 1842, a large hardware importing house in New York representing British manufactures sent out a circular and price list giving in parallel columns the prices they charged for goods laid down in New York, duty paid, before and after the protective tariff was increased. Twenty staple articles, which cost £143 16s. under the old revenue tariff, were offered for £131 10s. under the new protective tariff, so that the cost in the United States after paying the duties was considerably less than before the tariff was increased. Anyone who has studied the price lists in the United States under the different tariffs since the year 1824 and compared them with the British prices for the same years will admit that in the great majority of cases the protective duty is not added to the price of the article. A few instances will suffice to show the fallacy of the free trade theory of prices. Before 1842 there was a low duty on starch, but it was not sufficiently high to cause production in the United States except on a small scale. A large factory had been started in New York, but was obliged to shut down for want of sufficient protection. As soon as the high tariff was imposed this factory was re-opened and at once placed starch on the market half a cent per pound cheaper than it could be bought for before the tariff was raised. Other factories were soon established and prices were kept down, while employment was given to a considerable number of American workmen.

The tariff of 1842 made the minimum duties on cotton fabrics six cents per square yard on plain, and nine cents per square yard on printed or coloured cottons. These duties were about equal to one hundred per cent on the importer's valuation of their goods. A few months after the adoption of that tariff, Mr. Horace Greely, editor of the New York 'Tribune,' made an inquiry as to the prices on cotton fabrics in Lowell, Mass., the principal cotton manufacturing centre of the United States at that time, and published in his paper the average prices for the three months after the new tariff was imposed. The prices were as follows:

	In May, June and July, 1842. Cents.	In Sept., Oct. and Nov., 1842. Cents.
Drillings	7¾	7
Shirtings, common...	5¼	5
Shirtings heavy.. ..	6¼	5¾
Sheetings, common ..	6⅞	6
Sheetings, wide.. ..	8½	7⅞
Flannels (cotton) ..	10	8½

Thus, though, according to free trade theory, the prices should have been doubled as a result of the high duty, they were actually reduced. Later on still further reductions were made as new factories were built in the United States, and home competiton increased. We might fill pages with similar illustrations of the fact that a protective duty is not usually added to the price except temporarily, but it will not do to weary the House with too many figures.

Those who believe that all Great Britain's progress has been due to the adoption of free trade should read the speech made by Henry Clay before the United States House of Representatives when the protective Bill of 1824 was being discussed. Mr. Clay, who has been called the father of protection in the United States, made a statistical comparison between Great Britain and other countries of Europe, showing how greatly the British people has prospered under protection.

Britain at that time had a higher protective tariff than any other country, and Mr. Clay's comparison shows that it was the most prosperous country in the world, that the earnings of the people were greater in proportion to the cost of living, and that the wealth of the country was increasing in a most extraordinary way.

In conclusion Mr. Clay said:

> The committee will observe that the measure of wealth of a nation is measured by its protection of its industry, and that the measure of the poverty of a nation is marked by that of the degree in which it neglects and abandons the care of its own industry, leaving it exposed to the action of foreign powers. Great Britain protects most her industry and the wealth of Great Britain is consequently the greatest. France is next in the degree of protection, and France is next in the order of wealth. Spain most neglects the protecting the industry of her subjects, and Spain is one of the poorest of European nations. The views of British prosperity which I have endeavoured to represent, show that her protecting policy is adapted alike to a state of war and peace. Self-poised, resting upon her own internal resources, possessing a home market, carefully cherished and guarded, she is ever prepared for any emergency. We have seen her coming out of a war of incalculable exertion, and of great duration, with her power unshaken, her means undiminished. We have seen that almost every revolving year of peace has brought along with it an increase in her manufactures, of her commerce, and consequently of her navigation. We have seen that constructing her prosperity upon the solid foundation of her own protecting policy, it is unaffected by the vicissitudes of other states. What is our own condition? Depending upon the state of foreign powers—confiding exclusively in a foreign to the culpable neglect of a domestic policy—our interests are affected by their movements. Their wars, their misfortunes are the only source of our prosperity. In their peace, and our peace we hold our condition the reverse of that of Great Britain, and all our interest stationary or declining. Peace brings to us none of the blessings of peace. Our system is anomalous; alike unfitted to tranquillity and to a state of war or peace on the part of our own country, it can succeed only in the rare occurrence of a general state of war throughout Europe.

One great mistake was made in the past by public men and newspapers of both political parties. The United States tariff was described as an 'unfriendly tariff.' Because it was very much higher than the Canadian tariff it was regarded as hostile to Canada. Now, on the other hand, when the politicians of the United States are disposed to lower their tariff on Canadian products and are even agreeable to unrestricted reciprocity their attitude is described as 'friendly,' and we are urged by the advocates of reciprocity not to reject these friendly advances.

As a matter of fact the high tariff of the United States was not adopted on account of any hostility toward Canada or any other country. It was simply designed for the purpose of protecting home industries, and it had the effect it was intended to have. The Americans are a patriotic people, and we had no right to find fault with them for protecting their own interests. Nor is their present attitude the result of any increase of friendly sentiment toward Canada. It is prompted entirely by self-interest.

The greatest compliment we can pay the Americans is to imitate their policy of adopting measures to develop their own country regardless of the policies of other nations. When the British people decided upon a free trade policy the Americans did not consider it necessary to follow suit. They had sufficient courage and confidence to maintain their own policy. Nor is there any likelihood that they will be offended if we imitate them in this regard. The United States is a great and prosperous country. It does not need our money or our men, but Canada in this stage in its history needs every man and every dollar that can be kept in the country to aid in its development.

If, instead of adopting reciprocity, the Dominion parliament would increase the Canadian tariff against the United States and other foreign countries, American capitalists would regard it as an invitation to invest capital in Canada. They secured British capital to develop their resources by means of high protection, and they will help us in the same way that British capitalists helped them if we give equal tariff security. Within a week after the raising of the Canadian tariff a number of large American concerns would have representatives in Canada looking for sites for branch factories. A bold, independent tariff policy would excite the admiration of the American people.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, again I say had we not better leave well enough alone. Why risk a certainty for an uncertainty? Because, Mr. Speaker, I find nearly all of the United States senators in their remarks are not so much in favour of reciprocity as they are for the political union of this country with the United States, which they will never obtain.

Senator Nelson, of Minnesota, declared that his only hope of benefit from the Canadian reciprocity was it might lead to annexation of Canada; but, 'if we can accomplish the annexation of Canada we will have accomplished a great deal.'

I consider those remarks coming from Senator Nelson, to say the least, are insulting to all Canadians as well as they are to all the British Empire.

What did Senator Lodge of Massachusetts say?—'I intend to vote for reciprocity measure because I think in the long run it will draw the United States and Canada closer together.'

Before concluding, let me say a word about the British preference. I am told by our people in London that there are many agents coming in from England and selling manufactured goods the same as they make, right at their doors. That should not be. While I am in favour of the British preference, I think it should not be raised so high that it will hurt people in our own country. There is no better imperialist in this House than I am; at the same time I am for Canada first, I believe we should protect our own people first, and that we should not allow people of other countries to come in here and take away that which belongs to the workingmen in our own factories. This Dominion was created under the Union Jack. I was born under the Union Jack, and I hope to die under it; and I hope this Dominion of Canada will exist forever under the Union Jack. Mr. Speaker I wish to say right here that closer relations with the United States will never come so long as I live, with my consent.

Mr. J. W. MADDIN (South Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, I should be derelict in my duty as a member of this House, I would not be discharging my duty to my constituents, or to the people of the province from which I come, nor in a broader sense would I be discharging my duty as a Canadian, if I were to allow this debate to come to a division without contributing my views to this very important question. Let me at first take a brief glance at the history of this country. In 1775 when the 13 British colonies that now constitute the greater part of the United States kindled the torch, and drew the sword, and cast the tea chests into Boston harbour, they probably had some justification for doing it at that time. But there were a large number of British subjects among them who thought differently, and they shook the dust of those colonies from off their feet, and came northward into the province of Ontario, and into the province of Quebec; they made their way down to the maritime provinces, and perhaps the greatest Canadian we have ever had up to the present time, the Hon. Joseph Howe, from the loins of one of those United Empire Loyalists. Now, Sir, the result of that revolution was that the people of the United States made a declaration of independence, and began to map out their own career. The other British colonies which now constitute the Dominion of Canada remained outside that union, preferring to live under the Union Jack. Our neighbours to the south, who are so friendly to-day, and who come up to the line with an olive branch in their hands seeking to make an inroad on our natural resources, in 1812 invaded this territory, and our forefathers met them at the frontier, met them on their ships, gave them battle, and fought to maintain this territory as a part of the British Empire. In 1837 when the Mackenzie-Papineau rebellion took place, it is a well known and well recognized fact that it was financed in the United States, and that a great deal of the arms and ammunition that were put into the hands of the insurrectionists came from across the 50th parallel. Now that was in 1837. The United States were not so friendly towards us then. In 1866 again the Fenian raid took place. Let me point out also that the United States had some troubles of their own between 1861 and 1865. The people of Canada had entered into a reciprocity agreement with them in 1854, it was to continue for ten years at least, with two years notice of abrogation. That notice was given, and the treaty was abrogated in 1866. During the American civil war the British government was so indiscreet, according to the views of some of the people in the northern states, as to recognize the southern confederacy. On the other hand a large number of Canadians had gone over and fought with the northerners against the confederacy to help emancipate the slaves. A few Canadians expressed sympathy with the southern states, and some of the refugees from that country sought an asylum in Canada. This incensed the people of the northern states against the Dominion of Canada, and the people of the south were incensed against Canada as part of the British Empire, because Britain would not recognize the southern confederacy. The result was that when the war closed in 1865, the treaty was abrogated in 1866. Then the United States, that is so friendly to-day, set about, by the raising of a high tariff wall, to cut off communication between the two countries with the ultimate object of forcing Canada into annexation. That was a time calling for strong men and stern men; the occasion brought forth the men, and history repeated itself as it always does. At that time we had in Canada the late Sir John A. Macdonald, we had the late George Brown, we had the late Sir Leonard Tilley, we had Sir Charles Tupper, we had the late Sir George Cartier, we had the fathers of confederation. These men, gathered from the various provinces, set about to meet the situation which was now fraught with danger, and threatened to wipe the British colonies out of existence. What did they proceed to do? They brought these scattered provinces into a confederacy, they brought them into what is now known as the Dominion of Canada under the British North America Act, which is the constitution under which this parliament is sitting. After that was accomplished Canada raised a tariff wall against the United States. She struggled on as best she could, mapping out her own career, trying policy after policy, under the Conservatives first, under the Liberals afterwards, and in 1878 the Liberal-Conservative party adopted the National Policy. Instead of buying our manufactured goods from the United States, we made a tariff sufficiently high to protect our own manufacturers in articles that we could produce in Canada, thereby giving employment to people within our own borders, and by building railways and canals, extending interprovincial trade, and building up this country without any assistance from the United States.

This was continued down until 1896. In 1896, the present administration came into power. A great many people expected that they would at once wipe out the National Policy. As the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) said during the course of this debate, he understood that the fiscal policy of this country had been fixed ever since the Fielding tariff of 1897, so that every man from Vancouver to Sydney, from the Great Lakes to the Arctic Ocean, knew what it was. There was no difference of opinion among statesmen or politicians in this country, with regard to the best policy for the people of this country. During all these years, from 1867, some 44 years, we mapped out our own career, we blazed the trail through the forest, we built railways and canals that have cost this country over $500,000,000. We built them east and west, we bridged a chasm of 1,200 miles of Canadian Pacific railway that does not originate one dollar's worth of freight or passenger traffic. We built these lines of canals east and west, and because geographically that was the proper route to build them by, but because we had a neighbour to the south so hostile that we were obliged to build them east and west whether we liked it or not. We have built those lines of trade and we have developed an interprovincial trade which hon. members who have preceded me have described. On the 1st day of January last every one in Canada was happy, contented and prosperous. We had developed our trade interprovincially, we had built our railways and canals as I have pointed out, and whilst we did it we lived under the Union Jack. We did not share in England's difficulties. The people of the old country had extended the British Empire until we boasted that the sun never set on it, but Great Britain never asked us for one single dollar. We went on developing our resources until it is said now that the fruit is ripe to fall from the tree. Whilst we were building our railways and canals, whilst we were extending our manufactures in the Dominion of Canada, there is not a member of this House who picked up a British or a colonial newspaper and read the head lines of threatened war between Germany and Britain, between France and Britain, who gave it a second thought. We crawled under the sheets and went to bed when we felt like it, we got up when we felt like it, and amongst the worries of the day we did not carry any national responsibility. Why? Because Britain's North Atlantic squadron patrolled our Atlantic seaboard; because 110-ton disappearing guns were mounted at York Redoubt on the shores of Halifax harbour; because masked batteries at Port Pleasant, at the eastern passage, fortified Halifax harbour and because 3,500 redcoats and 500 sappers and engineers with guns and ammunition guarded the city while we slept. At Quebec the same conditions obtained. The fortifications were there, equally fit, prepared to meet the invader and there again there were 4,000 redcoats of Great Britain manning the forts, patrolling the city whilst the people of Canada were developing its resources, extending its trade, meeting the competition of our hostile neighbours to the south. On the Pacific coast, at Esquimalt, similar fortifications, every days' pay at the port hundred redcoats were there and the South Pacific squadron of Great Britain patrolled the Pacific ocean. Every ship, every man aboard those ships, every dollar's worth of fortifications, every days' pay at the port of Halifax, Quebec and Esquimalt, was paid by the burdened taxpayers of Great Britain, who were holding the flag secure above our heads, and all that we did was, on May 24 or Dominion Day, to give ourselves a holiday, sing 'God Save the Queen,' 'Rule Britannia, Britannia Rules the Waves'—that was our contribution. On Friday, the 19th of last December, a delegation came from the west. They filled the chamber, they filled the galleries of this House, they packed the corridors around this House. They numbered some 1,600, and they came from the west which had grown up and developed after the building of the Canadian Pacific railway. They filled this House and they had the right hon. the First Minister and a few of his cabinet sitting where you, Mr. Chairman, and the Clerk of this House sit to-night. Their representatives stood up and read resolutions asking for what? Asking for this trade pact?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MADDIN. Resolutions asking for free natural products.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MADDIN. They asked for free farming implements, they asked for free leather goods, they asked for free shelf hardware. That is what the people of the west asked for, and they were told in a ten-minute speech by the Prime Minister that no material change would be made in the tariff until a commission had gone over the matter, and they would see what could be done to alleviate the circumstances that existed in the west according to the representations made by that delegation. Who doubted the First Minister when he made that announcement the day we left to spend our Christmas holidays at home? Who supposed that on the 26th day of January, at four o'clock in the afternoon, like a bolt from the blue, an announcement was to be made of a trade pact such as we have to discuss to-night? What had happened in the meantime, what had come over the political situation? I will tell you. President Taft, a Republican President, found himself surrounded by a Democratic majority. He knew the attitude of the Democratic party, he knew it was towards the lowering of the tariff of the United States. There were good reasons for that. The people of the United States, living behind their 46 per cent tariff wall, had grown in population from 11,000,000 in 1775 to 90,000,000 in 1911. They had depleted their forests, they had no wood for telephone poles, railway ties, pulp or anything else. They had depleted their fisheries and exhausted their resources to a large extent. The barbed wire fence west and north had inclosed the grazing lands and they required more meat. Prices soared so high that they were pressing very hard on the wage-earner, and the Democratic party adopted a policy that the tariff wall should be lowered. President Taft knew they would lower that tariff. They were pledged to lower the tariff, and President Taft thought he would go one better, he thought he would secure a couple of easy marks from Canada and get them down to negotiate with him in Washington, and so secure a quid pro quo, get something in exchange for what the Democrats would have given free. So an invitation was sent to Canada to send over a couple of plenipotentiaries to negotiate a treaty or pact. It is strange that this is called a pact. One might very well do as the Minister of Justice is fond of doing and propound a pun by asking: When is a treaty not a treaty, the answer being: When Fielding knocks it.

Mr. Taft sent for two representatives to go over to the United States to negotiate with him. The Democrats were sorely in need of a lower tariff. They had to get the raw material, and natural resources of some country, and Canada is only divided by an imaginary line which it would take an experienced surveyor days and days to find. Intersected by railway lines, and being adjacent, Canada was the only place that they saw to secure their raw material from. They had used theirs up—by exporting it raw, as we are invited to do, by sending it in an unmanufactured state out of the country, as we are urged to do now. No, Mr. Chairman, they took their steers, they drove them up the gang planks into the slaughter houses at Chicago, they slashed their throats, and in a few minutes cars carried away four quarters of dressed beef, the intestines were worked up into bologna sausage, the offal into fertilizer, the horns and hoofs into buttons and ladies' hat and hair pins, the hides were shorn of the hair, and this was manufactured. The hides were tanned, but they did not sell the hides; they sent the hides to Lynn, Salem, Worcester, Woonsocket, Haverhill, and numerous other towns in the New England States, they were there manufactured into shoes and shoe strings, and they would be very glad to dispose of them in a market that would admit them free of duty. By manufacturing their resources to the very highest state they have become a wealthy nation, and now they want more raw material. They have invited us to give them that steer in order that they may work it up into its different products. Then they will send it back to us labelled 'Armour's beef,' at 25 or 30 cents a pound. We are told that it is a splendid thing to send cattle south at 6 or 7 cents a pound on the hoof, and buy the product back in tins at 25 or 30 cents a pound. If the people of the United States want our beef, give us a chilled meat industry to meet the situation, and we will manufacture it here in all its different grades and sell it to them as they sold it to us.

When the call came from Mr. Taft to send down delegates from Washington, whom did the Prime Minister or his cabinet select?—the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), and the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), two hon. gentlemen for whom I entertain the highest and profoundest regard. But, it will not be lacking in respect to say that the Minister of Customs, being out of active business, and out of active touch with the development and growth of this country, having served his country for so many years in the past, had outlived his day of usefulness for international negotiations. The Minister of Finance, it will not be disrespectful to say, was not much better fitted to carry on these negotiations. Whom were they invited to discuss this business with? We have been told on the hustings, in the Liberal press, on the floor of this House, that the day was passed when we would go begging to Washington with our hats in our hands, that Washington was coming to Canada. But, when this nefarious treaty was to be drawn up delegates went from Ottawa to Washington. Whom did they go down to meet? They went down to meet the trained tariff experts of the United States, young, strong, virile men, graduates in the class of economics and political economy of the leading universities of the United States, trained amongst the tariff experts of the country that has the highest tariff on the face of the earth, dozens of them at the beck and call of President Taft and Secretary Knox. Our two unsophisticated Canadian ministers, these guileless old gentlemen, made their way down to Washington to negotiate with an aggregation of that kind. Why, Mr. Chairman, we might as well have sent a pair of English sparrows to a convention of eagles. Canada never had a look-in from the commencement of these negotiations. Some day or two subsequent to the arrival of these gentlemen in Washington. they sent back for the commissioner of Customs, and Mr. Russell. Had not these two gentlemen gone down to fortify the ambassadors of Canada I have no doubt that such a pact would have come back signed, sealed and delivered as would have exchanged the Union Jack for the Stars and Stripes on the flag pole over this chamber before this late day.

In regard to the past political record of the hon. Minister of Customs I must confess that I am not very familiar with it, but I have pointed out what I consider to be the epoch making marks in Canada's history—confederation, the building of the Canadian Pacific railway, the National Policy, and on every one of these occasions the hon. Minister of Finance has been found on the opposite side fighting them tooth and nail, opposed to them at all times. In 1867, he was opposed to confederation, and from that on until 1878, actively, through the most powerful, at the time, Liberal organ in eastern Canada, the 'Morning Chronicle,' argued strongly against the adoption of the National Policy. In 1881, when the Canadian Pacific railway was being built, the Minister of Finance, through the columns of the 'Morning Chronicle,' fought it tooth and nail. He poured out with all the ardour and venom in his power his opposition to that enterprise, all that he could say he said and reiterated, and all he could add to that he expressed against the building of the Canadian Pacific railway. In 1882 he became a member of the Nova Scotia legislature. Within two years he was premier and provincial secretary of Nova Scotia, and on his first appeal to the people of that province after his appointment as provinical secretary and premier he appealed to the electorate asking for a repeal of the union. He addressed a memorial to the people of Nova Scotia which appeared in the 'Morning Chronicle' of May 26, 1886. In the last paragraph of this manifesto he says:

> If the people of Nova Scotia are satisfied with the fruits of Confederation, they will have the opportunity of recording the fact by depositing their ballots on the 15th June. But if, as we believe, they are deeply dissatisfied with their position in the union and determined to bring about a better state of affairs, they will doubtless feel that they can best advance the true interests of this province by sustaining the repeal policy which the local government submit for their approval.

> Halifax, May 25, 1886.

On June 11, in support of his appeal to the people to favour repeal, he published the following in the editorial columns of the 'Morning Chronicle':

Electors of Nova Scotia.

Remember you are under Canadian corn laws, which compel you to pay 50 cents more for every barrel of flour you use than you would have to pay if the tariff permitted you to get it from the States, and besides this duty you have to pay 50 to 60 cents per barrel to bring it by railway, when you could get it from the States for ten cents freight from Boston, and fifteen cents from New York.

That was on the 11th of June, 1886, and the leading editorial on the 15th of June, the morning of the election, commenced as follows:

The first day of July, 1867, was the darkest day in this history of Nova Scotia.

On July 11th, 1886, he wrote as follows:

Farmers of Nova Scotia remember repeal means reciprocity——

He had the reciprocity bee in his bonnet as early as that:

--and reciprocity means 15 cents more for every bushel of potatoes you raise. Quebec and Ontario take no potatoes. Our market is in the States and we can get that market opened to us by repeal.

On June 8th, 1886, under the caption 'Farmers, Attention,' the editor of the 'Morning Chronicle' says:

The haying season is coming on and the paternal government at Ottawa thought it a good time to take something more from you in the way of taxes, so they have just passed an amendment to the tariff under which the duty on scythes is made $2.50 per dozen. There is a Tory manufactory of a second-class article in Ontario, and of course it must be kept up at your expense, and an inferior article forced on you by a corrupt government for the benefit of their Tory friends.

There, Mr. Chairman, was a statement to the farmers of Nova Scotia that the Tory government had raised the duty on scythes, $2.50 per doz., and the same doctrine was preached by the Liberals in the campaign of 1896, but when they came to office the first two Senators they appointed were Mr. Melvin Jones and Mr. Frost. The farmers of Canada from Vancouver to Halifax were told during the campaign of 1896 that they were being sweated by Massey-Harris and Frost & Wood, and that the Grits were going to wipe out every vestige of protection when they came to power, and the Minister of Finance, then Premier of Nova Scotia, urged upon the farmers that they were being robbed by the paternal government at Ottawa for the benefit of its Tory friends. In 1896, up to polling day, the farmers were told that they were being robbed by Frost & Wood and Massey-Harris, the two large farming implement concerns, and Mr. Jones is practically the head of the Massey-Harris concern, and Mr. Frost, the head of Frost & Wood, and these were two of the first men selected by the Liberals for seats in the Senate. And, Mr. Chairman, have not these two firms prospered well since these two senators took their seats. Is it, perhaps, because these two gigantic farming implement concerns have fortified themselves in the Red Chamber that this government, instead of giving free farming implements to the farmers of the west in answer to their prayer of Friday the 19th day of December last, preferred to take a trip to Washington to bring back something the farmers had not asked for. A great many people were surprised when in 1896 the hon. Mr. Fielding had been called to Ottawa to discharge the dignified and onerous duties of Minister of Finance. His career in his province had been watched. Just about the time the First Minister was making his speeches before the Boston Club and talking annexation, the Minister of Finance evidently took a cue from Sir Wilfrid Laurier, because when in January, 1896, the Hon. Chas. E. Tanner introduced a Bill into the legislature of Nova Scotia to make Dominion Day a public school holiday in the province, the Minister of Finance took certain action with respect to it. I quote from 'Hansard' of the legislature:

Hon. Mr. Fielding suggested to the hon. member (Mr. Tanner), that a day be named when he would move in relation to the Bill respecting Dominion Day.

Mr. Turner said he was not in a position to name a day at present.

Hon. Mr. Fielding said any day would do equally well; he merely desired that it should not be brought up without notice.

At a later date during the same session:

Mr. Tanner said he had intimated that he would to-day probably move the second reading of the Bill to declare Dominion Day a holiday in the public schools of the province. He was not prepared to move the second reading of the Bill at present but would prefer to have the matter stand over.

Hon. Mr. Fielding said he was content the motion should stand over on the understanding that a day's notice should be given.

The Bill was finally introduced on February 13th, 1896, and the late Hon. T. F. Black, then representing Cumberland county, moved in amendment:

That in view of the circumstances under which the province of Nova Scotia became a member of the union and the strong feeling manifested on the subject by a large part of the people, the unity and harmony which are so desirable to the advancement of the interests of the country would be better promoted by leaving the celebration of Dominion Day in this province to the voluntary action of the people, than by the passing of an Act to compel the observance of the day, therefore, the further consideration of this Bill be deferred until this day three months.'

On a division being taken the amendment moved by the hon. member for Cumberland was put and carried, there being 21 votes for and 11 against. Names being called for there appeared before the convention, hon. Provincial Secretary:

That is our Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), to-day. I need not read the names of the other twenty. Now, if at that time he could vote for an amendment to a Bill making Dominion day a holiday in the schools of the province of Nova Scotia simply because a number of people felt a little sore towards the union, could he not ask himself in his secret soul who had sown the seed of sedition there? Had not he been preaching it not merely for ten years since 1886, but from 1867? He advocated it so strongly that he went back from the country with a strong majority in favour of repeal. But he knew that the government of Ottawa would veto any such legislation on his part, and that the Imperial authorities would not countenance the disintegration of a confederation which had cost the people of this country so much.

Now, we have had delegation after delegation come to this parliament; in fact this has been a government of delegation; delegations have come about farming implements, about railways, about bridges, and dear knows what all. We have had petitions and representations from people all over the country. When there was a probability, or possibility, of change being made in the tariff relating to coal, Premier Murray of Nova Scotia invited the coal operators of the province to assemble, and, to a man, they gathered in the city of Halifax. Nine-tenths of the whole revenue of the province of Nova Scotia, outside of the federal subsidy, is derived from coal, and anything that would interfere with the coal trade was a matter that would affect the province of Nova Scotia. So, Premier Murray discharged his duty in calling the operators to convene and express their opinions and reasons with regard to the duty on coal. When these gentlemen had deliberated they prepared some reports which, when compiled formed a brochure which they submitted to this government, and to Mr. Fielding, personally. There were at that gathering the Dominion Coal Company, Limited; The Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, Limited; the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company, Limited; the Acadia Coal Company, Limited; the Intercolonial Coal Mining Company, Limited; the Inverness Railway and Coal Company, Limited; the Port Hood Richmond Railway Coal Company, Limited; MacKay Mining Company, Limited and the Colonial Coal Company, Limited. And they reported as follows:

The companies engaged in coal mining in the province of Nova Scotia understand that reciprocity in coal may form one of the subjects for consideration at the proposed conference between the government of Canada and that of the United States of America in reference to reciprocal trade relations between the two countries. The operators have made a careful study of the effect of any reciprocal arrangement in coal and the result of their investigations and the knowledge gained by experience in the business convinces them that reciprocity would be disastrous to the coal industry of the province.

The reasons given for this opinion and the statistics in support thereof are printed as appendices hereto and the coal operators are convinced that a study of these papers will lead to the conclusion that their opinion is right.

There is now invested in the coal mining industry of this province over $50,000,000 and more than 17,000 men and boys are directly engaged in mining alone. One-fifth of the population of Nova Scotia is dependent on this industry for a livelihood and more than one third of the total revenue of the province is from royalties on coal. The production has increased from 800,000 tons in 1879 to 6,300,000 tons in 1908. At least $10,000,000 is paid out for wages and supplies every year and about $8,500,000 of this amount is for wages. To realize the importance of the industry to Canada there must also be taken into consideration the men employed by the railways and in the fleet of ships necessary for transportation of the coal, and about its storage and handling in Montreal and other cities. The amount paid by the coal companies to the harbour commissioners of the ports of Montreal and Quebec alone amounts to over $100,000. Next to steel, coal is the best revenue producer of the Intercolonial railway.

The manufacture of steel can only be carried on successfully near an abundance of cheap coal. If production is curtailed less slack (cheap) coal will be made and the steel industry is made impossible. More than 6,000 men are employed in the steel industries of Nova Scotia and one-eighth of the total revenue of the Intercolonial railway is derived from the transportation of steel products.

It is abundantly clear from the debates in parliament and the speeches of public men both before and after the National Policy tariff of 1879 that the duty was placed on coal to offset the duty on flour; that compact was made between the public men of Canada that the maritime provinces would submit to a duty on flour to benefit the province of Ontario, and as a compensation therefor Ontario would support a duty on coal. This agreement was one of the 'give and take' arrangements so often entered into between provinces with conflicting interests and has become part of our national life and it is submitted that Nova Scotia has the right to have the compact maintained.

I pass now to some of the reasons these coal operators gave why the duty on coal should not be interfered with:

It must be remembered that most manufacturers use slack coal, upon which there is a duty of only 15 cents, or anthracite dust, which is free, and that the duty round bituminous coal does not enter into the cost of the principal lines of manufactured goods. Reference is had on this point at page 15. The maintenance of strong companies in Nova Scotia is essential to cheap coal for Ontario and Quebec, as the United States producers will maintain the price on the lakes at a point that will prevent the marketing of Nova Scotia coal. Oust Nova Scotia coal from the St. Lawrence market and the price can then be fixed as the foreign producer may dictate. . . . The operators submit that the effect of reciprocity would be to develop lines of trade north and south and render all the efforts of Canadian money and enterprise to establish these lines east and west. This would have a ruinous effect on the trade of the Intercolonial railway and the business of the ports of Montreal, Quebec, St. John and Halifax. The Transcontinental railway from Winnipeg to Moncton would be made valueless to Canada.

The operators are of the opinion that under any reciprocal arrangements as to coal:

(a) That little or no Nova Scotia coal can be profitably marketed in New England.

(b) That a large part of the St. Lawrence trade would be lost to Nova Scotia.

(c) That the effect will be most disastrous to the coal industry and will seriously imperil the growing steel industry.

(d) That it will disorganize interprovincial trade and cause serious loss of revenue to the Intercolonial railway.

(e) That it will prejudicially affect the provincial revenue.

(f) That it will impair the revenue of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal and Quebec.

(g) That it will throw out of employment large numbers of men and take away the home market from our farmers and merchants.

(h) That coal will not be any cheaper in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario.

(i) That all the advantages would accrue to the United States operators and railway companies.

(j) That under the present tariff the coal industry has expanded enormously, enabling large steel industries to be established, and the operators say it is against the best interest of the state to alter an institution that has proven economically sound.

And this is signed by all the companies whose names I have just read. Now, in this brochure, which was submitted to the Minister of Finance, and this government, they point out that a reduction of duty would seriously imperil that industry, and also the steel industry, these two being the backbone of the province of Nova Scotia.

These coal operators were sent for. They were taken to Halifax. They were closeted together, and discussed this matter in its different phases. They drew their deductions, which were presented to this government, and especially to the honourable the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding).

When the duty of coal was reduced from 60 cents to 53 cents, 22½ per cent of the coal supplied to the market in the St. Lawrence, at Sorel, Three Rivers, Quebec and Montreal, was supplied by the United States, whereas only 2¼ per cent was supplied when the duty was 60 cents. I have the authority of the sales agent of the Dominion Coal Company, who stated to me in 1908 that when that 7 cents was taken off coal, 12 or 15 American coal agents went to the customers of the Dominion Coal Company at the different points I have mentioned, and simply cut the price of the year before by 7 cents. The result was that the Dominion Coal Company was obliged to crawl down to that level or lose the contracts. Now, if under this pact, 7 cents more is taken off coal the result will be that American competitors will be able to come in here and tender at exactly 7 cents less, and the Dominion Coal Company and the other coal operators of the province of Nova Scotia who ship into the St. Lawrence market will be obliged to accept 7 cents per ton less for their coal.

I would like to point out something very significant in connection with this. On the files of the Labour Department will be found returns of several boards of conciliation in regard to disputes under the Industrial Act, where the employees of the Dominion Coal Company sought to have an advance of 2 cents per ton for mining coal. After a properly constituted board had heard the sworn testimony of the miners on the one hand, and of the coal operators on the other, they unanimously agreed that the company could not grant an increase of wages. I remember sitting on a board of which Dr. Shortt was chairman, and Dr. Allison of Mount Allison University represented the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company. I represented the miners. After carefully considering the whole matter we unanimously agreed that the miners were not earning a living wage. Under the provisions of the Act, we were given access to the company's private books of account, we were shown the cost of production and the price of coal. We knew the men were not receiving adequate compensation or a living wage, but at the same time we came to the conclusion that the company was not in a financial position to advance the pay of the men one cent per day. In the face of the evidence of the coal operators summoned to give their judgment in the matter, the Minister of Finance comes back from Washington with a trade pact which takes 7 cents per ton off the coal. How are the operators to compensate this? Will they go on earning less dividends by 3 cents per ton, and then make the underpaid miner assume the balance? I submit that if the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) had consulted the Minister of Labour (Mr. King), or the reports of the Labour Department, particularly the reports of the conciliation boards, he would have found that the duty on coal could not be tampered with at all. But a deaf ear was turned to this petition on behalf of the coal operators, and, seemingly, the hon. Minister of Finance paid no attention to it. During the three years I have had the honour of occupying a seat in this parliament, there have been applications and petitions made, but there never was a petition or an application presented to this House asking to have the duty on coal tampered with. Why, then, was 7 cents taken off the duty on coal as between Canada and the United States, when the miners of Nova Scotia are not earning a living wage at some of the collieries, and when the coal operators cannot receive sufficient money for their coal, with the duty at 53 cents to enable them to give a higher wage?

But, that is not all, Mr. Speaker, the steel industry which has been growing up in the City of Sydney started a department known as the rod mill, in which they successfully undertook the manufacture of wire rods. When they started this mill the government gave them a bounty of $6 per ton on wire rods. This bounty expired on the 30th June last. These wire rods were manufactured from steel which at the commencement of the manufacture of the rods was also receiving a bounty of $3 per ton. In other words, when the wire rod industry was established in the city of Sydney the company was receiving $9 per ton in the way of bounties. The bounty on the steel which entered into the rods having expired two or three years ago, and now this bounty on the rods themselves having expired, wire rods are left on the free list. The provincial government of the province of Nova Scotia still remits back 6 cents per ton of royalty on every ton of coal consumed in the manufacture of steel, and in this way has been paying to the Dominion Steel and Coal Company from $60,000 to $70,000 per annum, yet the hon. Minister of Finance comes back from Washington, and says "Not only do the steel wire rods bounties discontinue, but we are prepared to leave wire rods on the free list." Was there ever such folly? Imagine creating an industry, then withdrawing the bounties, and leaving it to compete with the United States. If that is not creating an industry to-day, and knocking it to pieces to-morrow, then I admit I may be talking the folly rather than that the hon. minister should be acting the folly.

The hon. Minister for Finance made some observations on the floor of this House on Monday the 24th inst., to which I would invite the particular attention of hon. members. He said:

> We have achieved a reciprocity in natural products, without having to make any important concessions in the matter of manufactures.
> This reciprocity is a good thing for the manufacturer, and I venture respectfully to repeat a word of advice which I offered them not long ago. I say unhesitatingly that from the point of view of the manufacturers of Canada this reciprocity agreement is a good arrangement, and, if it goes through, we may reasonably say to the western farmer: 'Well, you cannot have all you want in this wicked world, but this goes a long way towards meeting your demands, and we can fairly ask you to give and take, and let the eastern manufacturer have a fair show,' and we believe they will do it.

I would also like to draw the special attention of the House to the following sentence of this paragraph:

> But, if perchance the manufacturers in their great power should unite in opposing and possibly condemning, or even defeating this measure, then there will rise up in that western country a storm cloud bigger than a man's hand, and the end will be a change in the fiscal policy of the country, which the manufacturers will find much greater than anything they conceived of.

Mr. Chairman was there ever a more cowardly threat levelled at the heads of the manufacturers of Canada? And when we realize that it comes from a minister of the Crown in a British colony it seems to have all the more degrading ring about it. Could there be anything more dastardly than to practically threaten the extinction of any maunfacturer who dares to raise his voice or mark his ballot against this iniquitous pact because two old gentlemen brought it back from Washington? If the Finance Minister goes on making these threats, we will, by a process of elimination, soon discover who the contributors to the $120,000 purse were. We can fairly draw the deduction that there were not many manufacturers contributing to that purse, and if he were to denounce a few other sources, then, by a process of elimination, we could readily conclude who the contributors were. I submit that no minister of the Crown in any British colony would have the audacity, the barefacedness to express on the floors of any colonial parliament——

Mr. TALBOT. I draw your attention to this expression of my hon. friend in attributing cowardice to a minister of the Crown.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is not, of course, in order to attribute cowardice to any member of this House. The hon. gentleman did not conclude his sentence, and I am not sure that he intended to attribute cowardice to any hon. member, but I would draw his attention to the fact that it is not in order to attribute cowardice to any member of the House.

Mr. TALBOT. Will he withdraw the expression.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have not ruled that the hon member was out of order, as he has not concluded his sentence, but I call his attention to the fact that to attribute cowardice to a member would be out of order. I do not think he intended to do so although his sentence contained the words.

Mr. MADDIN. Positively not. I think the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) must have a pain.

Mr. TALBOT. I wish to know if the hon. member will withdraw this expression. I may have a pain and I may tell my hon. friend what my pain is.

Mr. MADDIN. I submit that the act of threatening the manufacturers of this country or any manufacturer is a cowardly act.

Mr. TALBOT. Will the hon. gentleman be allowed to go on with his speech without withdrawing?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have not ruled any expression of the hon. gentleman out of order, so there is not any withdrawal required.

Mr. MADDIN. If the hon. the Finance Minister were to single out a few other sources from which such a contribution could come, we must draw a reasonable inference as to the source of that fund.

On the same day, July 24, the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson), speaking in this House, made the following statement to which I wish to take exception:

> My hon. friend has said that because this member or that member has not spoken there is some doubt as to his convictions. I would be very sorry to be judged from that standpoint. My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) did not speak, it is true, in this House on the question of reciprocity. I did not speak, but I would not wish my views to be judged from that fact. I do know that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) during the month of June spent practically all his time campaigning, not only in Pictou, but in every county of the province of Nova Scotia. Doing what? Advocating reciprocity.

I know positively that he did not speak in any one of the counties of Cape Breton, Colchester, Digby, Cumberland or Halifax. He did speak in his native county of Pictou, which he represents. He did speak in the town of Westville, where in 1904, the member for Pictou was some 400 votes behind Mr. Charles E. Tanner, whom he defeated on that occasion and in this election Mr. Robertson, a Liberal-Conservative candidate led the poll with over 600 majority. But, Mr. Chairman, we have been told over and over again that reciprocity was not an issue in the provincial elections in Nova Scotia. So far as I can make it an issue in participating in that campaign I made it an issue. It may have been an issue down in Yarmouth county, and that may be one of the counties that the hon. member for Pictou campaigned in, but in the county of Yarmouth, which for many years had sent Liberals to support the government of Nova Scotia, one of the provincial ministers of the Crown was defeated by a Liberal-Conservative candidate. He may have spoken in some of the counties of Nova Scotia, but methinks that he was not overly anxious to discuss reciprocity in that province. Reciprocity was not an issue there. I have before me a copy of the Sydney 'Record' of June 13, and it outlines what, in the opinion of the Liberal party there, was the issue in the province of Nova Scotia at that time. They say:

> The opposition have forced federal issues into the present contest. They are asking the electors to vote on reciprocity, coal tariff, and steel bounties, questions over which the local legislature has no control. The result, then, in Cape Breton will be regarded in the nature of a verdict on federal policy. The navy is the big federal issue in Sydney. It cannot now be shirked. A vote against Premier Murray will be equivalent to a vote of want of confidence in Fielding and Laurier. It will be regarded at Ottawa as a pronouncement not only against reciprocity but against the navy. Therefore, vote for Kendall and Carroll if you are in favour of the navy and shipbuilding at Sydney. An adverse vote will encourage the opposition at Ottawa to block the navy contracts.

That was the issue held out to the electors in Cape Breton. But they knew what the issue was, they knew that the steel bounties and the duty on coal were being struck at by this pact, and that the Nova Scotia government had put the brand of approval on it before they went to the country. There were good reasons why the member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) would not care to discuss reciprocity at any great length in Nova Scotia, because he had gone out with the Prime Minister on his tour through the west. He had left behind him the cool and turbulent waters of the Atlantic, and he went out over the prairies on a railway that would never have been built had the two very gentlemen who were going out there had their own way about it.

They crossed the prairies from Lake Superior to the Rocky Mountains, they penetrated the passes of the Rocky Mountains, and made their way to the limpid waters of the gentle Pacific, having followed their sinuous course across the continent. The hon. member for Pictou had been living for weeks in the hallowed presence, he had followed the white plume across the continent, and had learned words of wisdom there. He was in the confidence of the Premier of Canada. He came home with a message to the people of Nova Scotia, and he received a welcome at New Glasgow in proportion to the welcome that the Premier himself received in the city of Montreal. So important was the return of this gifted son of Pictou to his native heath, that the Liberal population of that county urged that the merchants in the town of New Glasgow should leave their electric lights burning in the windows in order to illuminate the streets down to the park where the address was to be made to the returning hero who was coming back from the feet of the man he worships as a political god. After the address had been presented, the hon. member for Pictou spoke in reply. I read this from a report of his speech sent in a dispatch of September 12, 1910, to the 'Morning Chronicle,' a paper of Halifax, and published on September 13, 1910.

An hon. MEMBER. Is it a Liberal paper?

Mr. MADDIN. There is a strong suspicion in Nova Scotia that it is a Liberal paper, and I think the suspicion is well founded.

Above all else he prized the confidence of the Pictou county Liberals greater than anything else, and he always wanted to be known as Ned Macdonald, son of the plain people.

Mr. Macdonald enunciated the policy of the Liberal party as affecting the tariff question. They had the same policy in the west as in the east The people of the west did not want free trade any more than those in the east, and they ascertained that the only shouting for free trade in the west came from the Tory camp. He believed that the future of Nova Scotia was wrapped up in its manufactures, and there would be no tariff changes to disturb them.

The motto of our neighbours to the south had been to look out for number one, and previous to fourteen years ago it had been almost the annual custom of the Conservatives to send delegates on tariff missions to Washington. Now the order was changed and the missions were from Washington to Ottawa, and Canada through Sir Wilfrid intended to look out for number one. Some rough spots on the tariff would be smoothed out, but no change will be made that would interfere with British preference or with the vested interests of men who had put their money in the east. The policy he declared, was that the tariff will be maintained as it is, only remedying where it unduly presses.

Mr. MADDIN.

Now, here was the appeal of a gentleman who had spent some considerable time in the company of the Prime Minister, and was no doubt with the Prime Minister when he was making just such a speech in the city of Montreal. It sounds very much like that which the Prime Minister delivered in reply to the farmers of the west last December in this chamber. I am not surprised that he did not care to discuss reciprocity to any extent in the county of Pictou, or in any other part of the province of Nova Scotia. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have pointed out that the Minister of Finance received that brochure from the coal operators of Nova Scotia; he absolutely disregarded it, and I cannot understand how, since he has disregarded it, that in the last local election in Nova Scotia, so many of the coal operators' bosses should be active partisans, and been busy brow beating and intimidating the workingmen of the Dominion Coal Company in order to get them to the polls to vote for the Murray candidates. The Finance Minister absolutely disregarded that petition. The same seems to have been true of every other petition that has come from the county of Cape Breton. I can remember when there was a Liberal sitting for the county of Cape Breton. It is only a few years ago when a delegation left the city of Sydney headed by the warden, Mr. Levatte, and some two or three of the municipal councillors, with Mayor Richardson, of Sydney, Mayor Macdonald, of Sydney Mines, and two or three councillors from Glace Bay and Dominion, people who had been appointed at a public meeting in the courthouse in the summer of 1908, to come up here and strengthen the hands of Mr. Johnston, who then occupied a seat on the floor of this House supporting this government, in an endeavour to obtain a railway from St. Peter's canal down the shores of Bras d'Or lake into the city of Sydney. That is government by delegation. But that railway has not been built, although such a strong Liberal aggregation came up here to assist a Liberal member occupying the seat which I occupy to-day. It was only a year or two before that when D. K. McIntyre, of Sydney, at the expense of the parishioners of East Bay, came up to Ottawa to strengthen the hands of Mr. Johnston to get a subsidy towards that railway. Why, Sir, when the people of the town of Glace Bay wanted four drop letter boxes in their town, they did not get them until Peter E. Ogilvie, one of the town councillors of Glace Bay, came as a delegate to Ottawa to strengthen Mr. Johnston's hands. Always Mr. Johnston had to be fortified, always Mr. Johnston's petitions and delegations were turned down. In 1910 the coal operators of the province had their petitions and their requests turned down. I submit it is time that the people of the county of Cape Breton, above all other counties should cease sending delegations to this government in the hope of obtaining fair and equitable treatment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is another matter I would like to point out. I have endeavoured, from a historical point of view, to trace the growth and development of this country, the difficulties which have been overcome. We are merely passers by. We are inheritors by the law of descent of one of the finest countries under the sun. Commencing at the Atlantic seaboard, the province of Nova Scotia, for its square mileage, cannot be surpassed in its mineral resources, its fisheries and its forests. There is no better farming, lumbering and fishing province than the province of New Brunswick. The province of Quebec has its manifold advantages in farming and mineral resources, and its great commercial enterprises. The province of Ontario has long been described, and properly so, as the banner province of the Dominion of Canada. When we pass by Lake Superior to the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, we have a country of rolling prairies, of fields of wheat, capable of producing sufficient to feed the whole of the British Empire, and almost the whole of the English speaking people. Then, after crossing the Rocky Mountains to the province of British Columbia, we reach perhaps the richest of them all in natural resources. These provinces, under a confederation such as we have, are not ours to dangle in the market, they are not ours to dispose of by a deed in fee simple. They are ours merely for the purpose of a life estate, we are merely the trustees for our descendants who are to come after us. We have committed to our charge a great responsibility in looking after the interests of this great country, for which we shall be held responsible by our children and our children's children.

We cannot deal quietly with a situation of this kind. We have a certain amount of trade with Great Britain. She carries our grain back to the old country when she brings some of her manufactures out to this. Divert our trade north and south and what will be the result? If our wheat is to find its way to Minneapolis, to the Atlantic seaboard, through the United States, or through the rolling mills of the United States, there to be rolled and shipped to England in its manufactured form, England must suffer to some extent, and we must suffer even to a greater extent. In 1886 the Minister of Finance was persuading the people of Nova Scotia to look for cheaper flour—always in the United States. At the very moment almost when the Canadian Pacific railway was opened up, in 1886, he was telling the people of Nova Scotia: Secede, secede from confederation, let us have free trade with the United States, let us have reciprocity—his very words. The reciprocity bee has been in his bonnet now for more than a generation. He never conceived the idea that the wheat for the Nova Scotian's flour could be raised in the Dominion of Canada, but a great statesman had conceived the idea. Sir Charles Tupper had said that when the road was built traffic would be carried eastward and westward, and they would open up a country capable of raising 200,000,000 bushels of wheat. Hon. gentlemen at that time in the House, talking about it in the corridors, said he was crazy. On the floors of the House they were more respectful, but they were none the less severe. They said that the railway would not pay for its axle grease, that there were nothing but buffaloes and Indians in the west and that it was folly to have built the road. Sir Charles Tupper is living to-day to see his prognostications verified and the Minister of Finance and his friends who had fought for reciprocity and who had tried to turn the hearts and minds of the people of Nova Scotia towards Boston for their flour and other supplies hoped that some day they would occupy the treasury benches where they would reap that which Sir Charles Tupper had sown.

I do not intend to occupy the attention of the House much longer. I can only say that while we have been developing our country to the extent of 8,000,000 people while we have built up our manufactures to aggregate over a million dollars a year, while we have money stacked in the bank to the extent of $990,000,000 while we have prospered to the extent we have, while we have been doing that, as I pointed out to-day, we did it without having to assume any national obligations. But, we went through the fire of test which tried our manhood, which tried the stuff that was in us. We have developed this country, and it is our duty to maintain it and discharge our obligation towards the mother country. Those people who manned those vessels, who manned those fortifications, who built those fortifications, who built those warships, who made British traffic on the high seas safe, who made the British household safe, have been borne down by taxes until to-day Great Britain is face to face with the two greatest problems which confront the white race. One is the question of the unemployed. Travel across this continent from Vancouver to Sydney and you would not find a door at which you could knock and ask for a meal and be turned away. We have no poor or impoverished people in this country. It may be that in Montreal or Toronto an occasional family are in want, but it is a matter of pride more than anything else. They could easily be relieved. Some of our people are poor, some of them have not much money, some of them have no ships, or lands or automobiles, but they all make an honest living, they can all find plenty to eat and plenty to wear. This is not true of the other side.

They have the great burden of taxation which was borne upon the shoulders of the mother country. In guarding us while we were in our swaddling clothes there has grown up a condition the result of which is that there are hundreds of thousands of people born in empty doorways, or dry-goods boxes, under wharfs, in cellars, in out of the way corners; there are hundreds of thousands of these to be found in London, Liverpool, Birmingham, Nottingham, Manchester, Dublin and Glasgow, who never had a roof over their heads but the sky, hundreds of thousands who never use a knife or fork or eat off a table. Great Britain is face to face with the task of coping with the unemployed, aged and impoverished. There are hundreds of thousands of them in Great Britain, and Uncle Sam comes up to his tariff wall with the olive branch and beckons to us and asks us to tear down the wall to let them obtain access to our natural resources. We give them 160 acres of the best land on the face of the earth, give them admission to this country, we let them come in and compete on even terms with our farmers, we let the farmers from Dakota, Montana and Minnesota cross the parallel, come into our western country, take up Canadian farms, become, perhaps, Canadian citizens in name at least, raise identically the same crops that they were raising in those same states and then send them back and trade with the same old customers that they traded with before they came to this country. That is what the United States asks us to do. Shall we do it? Have we come to the parting of the ways? We have developed the resources of our country under the conditions which I have outlined here to-night. Surely there is sufficient of manhood in us that we shall meet our obligations in a manly way instead of lowing our tariff wall, instead of negotiating with this people, who fought us, let us maintain the advantage which we now have. The first printing press that was ever set up in Ontario was set up for the purpose of publishing sedition and treason in order to influence the Canadian mind, set up by Americans and paid for with American money. Shall we lower our tariff wall and allow free access to the people of the United States to take up our square mileage, raise the same crops and send them back to the same customers? Shall we permit them to take our raw materials, manufacture them and sell them to Britain or sell them to us? Or shall we assist Great Britain in such a way as to relieve the pressure that now bears heavily upon the shoulders of the mother country? Had we not better open up the developed country of the west, enable her to solve the unemployed problem and so contribute some little at least to the discharge of this great national obligation which we can never fully repay.

Mr. EDWARD KIDD (Carleton, Ont.). Mr. Chairman, since I have been a member of this House I have not taken up very much time, but this reciprocity agreement is such a very important measure that I feel it my duty to say a few words in opposition to it. I think that the people of Canada regard this as one of the most drastic measures that was ever brought into this House or placed before the country. From what we have heard from the other side of the House we never thought for a moment that this measure or anything leading up to it would be brought before the House, or that we would be called upon to sanction it. We have a very good reason for that belief in the following expression by the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in 1901:

I remember, and you remember also, that since the abolition of the reciprocity treaty in 1866, we have sent delegation after delegation to Washington to obtain reciprocity. We are not sending any more delegations. But I rather expect, and I would not be surprised, if the thing were to take place in a few years —I say—I rather expect that there will be delegations coming from Washington to Ottawa for reciprocity. Having learned from our friends in the south how to receive such a delegation, we shall receive them in the proper manner—with every possible politeness.

In 1903, in proposing the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway legislation, the Prime Minister was uncompromising:

I have found in the short experience during which it has been my privilege and fortune to be placed at the head of affairs, by the will of the Canadian people, that the best and most effective way to maintain friendship with our American neighbours is to be absolutely independent of them.

Then at the Imperial Conference in 1907, he said:

If we were to follow the laws of nature and geography between Canada and the United States, the whole trade would flow from south to north, and from north to south. We have done everything possible by building canals and subsidizing railways to bring the trade from west to east and east to west so as to bring trade into Brtiish channels. All this we have done, recognizing the principle of the great advantage of forcing trade within the British empire. . . There is no boundary line except a purely conventional one over the whole territory of North America. Their habits are the same as ours, and, therefore, we are induced to trade and cannot help it by the force of nature. But so far as legislation can influence trade, we have done everything possible to push our trade towards the British people as against the American people. . . .

There was a time when we wanted reciprocity with the United States, but our efforts and our offers were put aside. We have said good bye to that trade, and we now put all our hopes upon the British trade.

Everybody can see from this language that the Prime Minister never thought then of submitting a reciprocity proposition to parliament. At the last three general elections there was nothing about reciprocity, and the Liberal rally was 'let Laurier finish his work.' I wonder what work he had to finish; whether it was the Quebec bridge that fell down or the Laurier tower that tumbled over in a like manner. We need not wonder at our American friends being very much in favour of this pact. It is worth while to note what was said by Mr. Champ Clarke, the leader of the Democratic party which now controls the House of Representatives. He said:

Therefore, I am in favour of the reciprocity treaty, because I hope to see the day when the American flag will float over every square foot of the British North American possessions clear to the north pole. They are people of our blood. They speak our language. Their institutions are much like ours. They are trained in the difficult art of self-government. My judgment is that if the treaty of 1854 had never been abrogated the chances of a consolidation of these two countries would have been much greater than they are now. I do not doubt whatever that the day is not far distant when Great Britain will joyfully see all of her North American possessions become part of this republic. That is the way things are tending now. I do not confine my support of reciprocity Bills to this one. I am in favour of reciprocity treaties with the Central and South American republics, including Mexico. The quicker we get them the better off we will be. Of course, as between the two, if we had to have reciprocity with Canada and not with these countries to the south, or with the countries to the south and not with Canada, I would take reciprocity with Canada.

We know that the reciprocity treaty which was in force between 1854 and 1866, was very favourable to the Americans, because in these years, during which they had their own civil war, they wanted our products, and so they lowered the tariff on them. At the present time, to show a comparison of prices for agricultural products between Ogdensburg in the United States, and Prescott, on the other side of the St. Lawrence, I take the following from the report of the tariff board appointed by the United States:

Hogs	A.	7 75	5 40	8 50	6 00
	C.	9 30	6 50	10 00	7 15

You will notice from this comparison of prices, that there was nothing in favour of the American side, but it all goes to show that the Canadian markets are better for the Canadian farmers. It is I believe a fact that although the consumer is paying more for his stuff on the American side, that is due to the manner in which the trusts control the situation in the United States, and the actual fact is that the producer gets a lower price in the United States than in Canada.

I quote the following with reference to dairy cattle:

Prices of dairy cows range from $33 to $39 a head in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and New York. In Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and North Dakota the range is practically the same. In the western border states of Montana, Idaho and Washington the range is from $41.80 to $46.50. In eastern Canada, prices of dairy cows range from $32 to $48, and in western Canada, from $39 to $41. The highest Canadian price quoted is $48 in Ontario as against $46.50 in Montana, the highest American price.

Now, I have some facts here which show that we have a market in which we can command sales at good prices. We need not go begging to any American city or to the United States government for the prices I am going to give you.

Dispersion sales of pure-bred cattle held in Canada during 1910 brought some record prices, and the following figures prove conclusively that our Canadian breeders are under no obligation to the Americans in order to get a remunerative market for their surplus stock. The first sale I wish to refer to was held by James Benning of Williamstown, Ontario, on April 20, 1910. His 81 head of cattle brought $11,916, an average of $147, each. Forty-two aged cows brought $207. Other prices were as follows:

Herd bull sold for $400.
13 bulls averaged $108.
10 1909 heifers averaged $114.
16 1910 calves averaged $42.25.
The highest prices paid for cow $590.
Highest price paid for two year old heifer $425.
Highest price paid for 1909 calf $200.
Highest price paid for 1910 calf $95.
Highest price paid for 1909 bull $125.

Mr. John Campbell's sale held near Dalmeny on April 19, realized some good figures. Eight Holsteins brought $1,475, an average of $184 each; one cow brought $290; twenty-one aged Ayrshire cows brought $1,676.

William Higginson's sale of registered Holstein cattle held at Inkerman, Ontario, Tuesday, November 1, brought the following figures:

Ninety head realized $12,457, herd bull sold for $850, highest price paid for cow $300, twenty-one males brought $2,220, average price of males $105.35, 69 females brought $10,235, average price of females $148.

48 head brought $11,355, an average price of $236.50.

13 females brought $2,185, an average price of $252.

[illegible]es brought $2,185, an average price of $168.

15 1910 calves brought $1,575, an average of $105.

9 two year old heifers brought $2,645, an average price of $294.

9 three year old heifers brought $2,230, an average price of $239.

33 head, calved previous to 1910, brought $8,700, an average price of $280.60.

Highest price realized for female $1,000.

Highest price realized for male $800.

Highest price realized for yearling, $220.

Highest price realized for two year old heifer, $700, and another one sold for $620.

Highest price realized for three year old heifer $460, and two others sold for $450 and $385 each.

Highest price realized for 1910 calf $240, and another sold for $200.

Highest price realized for 1910 heifer calf $135.

Distributed, the cattle went as follows: Leeds county 34, Dundas 5, Carleton 2, Prescott 1, Grenville 1, Western Ontario 2, United States 3. At Benning's more than 75 per cent of the animals were sold to Ontario breeders. Higginson's cattle were distributed as follows: Western Ontario 3, New Brunswick 3, Dundas 27, Leeds and Grenville 27, Carleton 7, Glengarry 5, Russell 2, Stormont 2, New York state 8, New Hampshire state 6.

Now, I desire to give an account of another sale, this one being held in Maxville. The total sum realized was $40,715 for 119 animals. The highest priced animal went for $2,600. An account of the sale was given in the press, and that account reads, in part, as follows:

According to the statement of the secretary of the Canadian Ayrshire Breeders' Association the sale of animals of that breed held at the farm of Robert Hunter and Sons at Maxville on Wednesday, was the greatest on record on this continent. About six hundred buyers or intending buyers were present from as far east as New York city and as far west as Ballard, Washington. One hundred and nineteen animals were auctioned off under the direction of Mr. Andrew Philips, who conducted the sale. The highest price realized for any one animal was $2,600. This price was paid for the stock bull Bargenock Victor Hugo, by Mr. D. Ryan, of Brewster, N.Y. The highest price paid for a female was by Mrs. Earhart, West Berlin, New Hampshire. The total sum realized was $40,715, and the average price per head was $342.15.

Now, let me give a few figures showing the character of our sheep trade. The following figures show our exports of sheep to the United States:

1907,	63,034	head, value	$195,655
1908,	53,583	head, value	206,089
1909,	43,803	head, value	158,660

And our total imports of sheep to Canada from the United States have been as follows:

1907,	135,344	head, value.. ..	$750,242
1908,	101,589	head, value	589,285
1909,	67,656	head, value	365,155

Now why should we look to a country that has more sheep than we have, as a market for sheep? The United States export far more sheep than we do, and yet we are supposed to look to the United States for a market.

There has been a great deal of comment and discussion made by the members of the government in regard to this pact, concerning hay. I am sure no farmer should think of looking for a market for his hay —at least only for a very small quantity of it. For any farmer who will raise hay to sell year after year will soon have very little to sell. The same thing applies to potatoes. We do not pretend to raise many potatoes to ship, and none of our farmers should build on the potatoe market. Potatoes are a perishable article, and we should not take any credit for creating a market for them. If the Americans want any of our products they know what to do in order to get them. I know in former years when they wanted anything from this country they simply let down the bars. In 1902 or 1903 when they wanted our young cattle they reduced the tariff on cattle, and after they had brought in what they wanted, they put the tariff up again.

The following statement will show the exports of cheese from the United States to Canada for the years mentioned and the total exports of cheese from the United States:

	Lbs.	Value.
1907..	1,540,552	$ 166,510
1908..	452,361	56,704
1909..	120,844	14,952

Total Exports from United States:

	Lbs.	Value.
1907..	17,285,230	$2,012,626
1908..	8,439,051	1,092,053
1909..	6,822,842	857,091

The Total Exports of Milk from the United States were as follows:

	Value.
1907..	$2,191,111
1908..	2,455,186
1909..	1,375,104

The Total Exports of Cheese from Canada were:

1909..	$22,106,108
1910..	180,859,866 = 21,607,692

There has been a great deal of stress put on the fact that we will have a market for our cheese. That is not the case. Cheese was high in the United States last fall, but we all know how that came about.

They sold themselves short in the early part of the season, and later on a few men cornered the cheese market and raised the price to about 14 cents. If those who are endeavouring to secure reciprocity are looking for a market for $21,000,000 worth of cheese, when the Americans themselves are exporting cheese to the extent of over $2,000,000 in 1907, and over $857,000 in 1909, how can they expect a market from these people? We make a very superior cheese in Canada to-day. The Ontario government is spending on an average over $65,000 a year for instruction in what we call the outside service—that is outside of the agricultural centres. They are spending this large amount of money educating the farmers of the whole country to make a fine cheese, which they are doing. Everybody knows that the United States is making a very inferior article, and that they would be only too glad to mix their cheese with Canadian cheese and so lower our price or raise theirs. I am sure if this reciprocity pact passes it will be a great injury to our cheese trade. We have taken a great deal of pains and been to large expenses to make a good article, and put it on the market in good shape. I know from the conditions existing across the line that reciprocity would be a great injury to our cheese trade.

In 1910, we exported 4,615,380 pounds of butter valued at $1,010,274. We must admit that our butter exports are decreasing. At the same time we take a great deal of care to put what we have to sell on the market in proper shape, and we would derive no advantage from shipping our butter to the United States. In 1907, we shipped 12,544,777 pounds valued at $2,429,489. In 1908, we shipped 6,463,061 pounds valued at $1,407,962. In 1909, we shipped 5,981,265 pounds valued at $1,268,210.

Dairying has expanded in other countries just as it has in ours, as will appear from the following paragraph:

DAIRYING EXPANDS.

South Australia shows Strong Forward Movement.

Adelaide, South Australia, July 20.—South Australian produce always finds a ready market in the United Kingdom, and since the establishment of the government produce department and the appointment of a trades commissioner, an appreciable increase in the output of perishable produce has taken place. Producers now know that should the local market fail they can profitably export through the department; consequently they have not hesitated to extend their operations.

The dairying industry especially has expanded, and the exportation of butter this season shows a marked improvement compared with previous years. In 1908-09 a total of 456 tons was shipped from Port Adelaide, in 1909-10, 822 tons, while the aggregate shipments to date for the 1910-11 season total 1,747 tons. The quantity of butter now made in the state exceeds eight and a half million pounds annually.

Most of the separating is done by farmers on their own farms, and the cream is then forwarded to the various butter factories, which give employment to a large number of people. The opening up of new lands, the extended practice of irrigation in the Murray valley and at other places under government supervision, has given a great impetus to the industry, and these totals will probably be exceeded in the near future.

This shows that if this pact goes through our markets will be flooded with produce of all kinds from these favoured nation countries. Denmark for instance has been shipping very large quantities of dairy produce to Great Britain where it competes with our produce. What would the result be if Canada were to enter into an arrangement for free entry of butter from Denmark under this pact? What would the results be if Canada should enter into free trade in butter under the proposed reciprocity agreement?

Our farmers would be confronted with the competition on our own markets of such producing countries as Denmark, Russia, Australia, New Zealand, Argentine Republic, Sweden and Norway, as well as the United States.

Would this competition amount to anything?

At present the import demand from Great Britain is the controlling factor in the Canadian butter market, and it is interesting to note that the average prices realized in Great Britain during the year 1909 for butter imported from Russia, Australia, New Zealand, United States and Argentine Republic were lower than those obtained for Canadian butter. In the matter of prices, then, these countries would be prepared to undersell Canada on her own market, as they do now on the British market.

Denmark, which is the largest exporter of butter to Britain, gets much more for her products than does Canada. This is because of the quality of the Danish butter, which is said to be superior to any other make in the world. The fine flavour of Denmark's dairy product would thus ensure a successful competition on the Canadian market even in the face of lower prices. Just as the English consumer is willing to pay more for Danish butter, so would the Canadian consumer do the same.

Great Britain in 1909 imported 455,034,944 pounds of butter worth $109,134,815, from the following countries:

Denmark	$51,671,648
Russia	14,325,256
France	11,292,185
Australia	9,770,695
Sweden	7,170,746
New Zealand	7,164,799
Netherlands	3,879,999

Argentine Republic..	1,907,801
Norway..	797,481
Canada..	585,913
Other countries..	568,292

So you see that if the produce of these other favoured nation countries were admitted to enter Canada and compete with our produce this country would be very greatly affected.

The following comparison of tariffs on butter, if reciprocity becomes law, shows that Canada gives free entrance to all her competitors, but must pay duty to all of them, except the United States, if she wishes to send butter back to them:

Canada—Free from Favoured Nations and British Possessions, including Denmark, Russia, Australia, Sweden, New Zealand, Argentine Republic, Norway and United States; otherwise 4 cents per lb.
Australia—6 cents per lb.
New Zealand—General Tariff, 30% ad valorem British Preferential Tariff, 20% ad valorem (Canada is entitled to the B.P. Tariff.)
Denmark—In hermetically sealed vessels, 4½c. per lb.; otherwise free.
Argentine Republic—4 2-5c. per lb.
United States—From Canada, free; otherwise 6c. per b.
Sweden—2 2-5c. per lb.
Norway—Minimum Tariff, 1 4-5 c. per lb. Maximum Tariff, 3c. per lb.
Russia—1 7-100c. per lb.

Canada's export trade in butter is not so great at the present time that her farmers can afford to imperil their dairy industry by a tariff scheme that would, in all probability, make the country's imports in this article greater than her exports. In the year ending 1910 Canada shipped only 4,615,380 pounds of butter, worth $1,010,274. Canada's imports of butter on the other hand amounted to 687,454 pounds, worth $104,301.

I wish to place on record a comparative statement of the exports of eggs from the United States and Canada. These figures are as follows:

Export of Eggs from United States.

	Dozens.	Value.
1907..	6,968,985	$1,542,789
1908..	7,590,977	1,540,014
1909..	5,207,151	1,199,522

Exports of Eggs from Canada to United States.

	Dozens.	Value.
1908..	32,991	$9,846 00
1909..	59,483	14,952 00
1910..	39,917	13,896 00

When the United States export these large quantities of eggs why should we expect to have any market for eggs there? It is a well known fact that last year eggs were higher in Canada than in the United States, and at the present time I understand a very large firm in Toronto has a contract for eggs with a firm at Buffalo at 15 cents, and where our farmers are getting a much higher price than that right at home.

Serious difficulty may be experienced in Canada owing to the importation of oleomargarine, an imitation of butter, into our market. The manufacture or sale of oleomargarine is absolutely prohibited in Canada. The United States are to-day exporting large quantities of this imitation butter, the figures being as follows:

Exports of Oleomargarine from United States to Other Countries.

	Pounds.	Value.
1907..	5,397,609	$520,406
1908..	2,988,175	299,746
1909..	2,899,058	293,635

The export of horses into Canada from the United States and vice versa have been as follows:

Year.	United States into Canada.		Canada into United States.
	Number.	Value.	Number.	Value.
1907	26,361	3,536,353	33,882	4,359,957
1908	15,324	1,962,438	19,000	2,612,587
1909	17,376	2,221,562	21,616	3,486,617

The prices of horses range from $106 to $125 in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and New York; in Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and North Dakota the average is from $111 to $126, and in Montana, Idaho and Washington from $80 to $108. In eastern Canada prices range from $107 to $139. You will see that our prices range far higher than those in the United States. In western Canada the prices range from $107 to $156. In Indiana, Illinois and Iowa the prices range from $120 to $124.

In all the Canadian provinces the prices are higher than in the United States. If this pact goes through, which I hope it will not, our market will be injured very much for Canadian horses. I remember, when I was a very small kid, that our horses were always supposed to be very much better than American horses. We had many of our southern neighbours up here buying our horses a few years ago for street car purposes and it was claimed that three of our horses would outlast four or five American horses owing, no doubt, to our horses being raised in a colder climate and therefore being hardier and more valuable horses than the American horses. There is no doubt that our farmers will be greatly injured if this pact goes through because it will be taking from them their western market which is the best market in the world to-day for eastern horses.

Now, let me call your attention to the bacon and ham trade. The following is a statement of the exports of bacon and ham from Canada to Great Britain.

Year.
1906	$12,119,804
1907	9,196,305
1908	11,153,749
1909	8,625,005
1910	6,836,392

You will see that in the last couple of years there is a decrease in our exports. Where does the rest go? The answer is that we are using the rest. We are using far more bacon and hams than we did some years ago.

EXPORTS OF CANNED MEATS FROM THE UNITED STATES.

Year.	Quantity. Lbs.	Value.
1907	2,710,369	$287,460
1908	4,957,022	532,442
1909	5,759,930	620,193

EXPORTS OF BACON FROM THE UNITED STATES.

Year.	Quantity. Lbs.	Value.
1907	250,418,699	$26,470,972
1908	241,189,929	25,481,246
1909	244,578,674	25,920,490

Year.	Quantity. Lbs.	Value.
1907	209,481,496	$23,698,207
1908	221,769,634	25,167,059
1909	212,170,224	23,526,397

I will give a short comparison between Chicago market prices and our Ingersoll market prices for the years 1901 to 1910:

EXPORTS OF BACON FROM THE UNITED STATES.

Year.	Price at Chicago.	Price at Ingersoll.
1901	$5 71	$6 70
1903	5 88	6 07
1904	5 04	5 32
1905	5 18	6 41
1906	6 23	7 17
1907	6 09½	6 85
1908	5 36½	6 87
1909	7 53½	8 04
1910	8 59¾	9 11

The Ingersoll prices averaged 58 cents per hundred weight higher than the Chicago market prices.

Now I will read a paragraph from the report of the committee appointed by the Senate committee to make inquiry into the comparative prices in Canada and the United States:

Why is it that an American board of investigators thus finds itself confronted with these superior conditions in Canada? Simply because of the better product cultivated by the Canadian farmer. With regard to this point of quality in our hogs——

This is taken from Senate Document 849. This is where some of the figures I have quoted are taken from and they are figures that this tariff board spent a great deal of time in Canada and the United States in procuring in order to make a comparison of prices.

The lack of corn, the existence of a well-established dairy production and the advisability of suitable forage, has led to the introduction of another agricultural speciality in which Ontario excels, to wit, the breeding and rearing of bacon pigs, as contrasted with the heavy corn fed lard hog of our middle west.

We all know that just as soon as this pact goes through we will be confronted with the American fat hog, which will reduce the value of our pork to a large extent. There is no doubt that we raise a far superior quality of hog to that of the Americans. For 15 or 20 years we have been breeding a superior quality of hog, we kill him at the right time, and put him on the market at the proper time. Our consumers consume far more bacon and pork than they did a few years ago. For years we made our hogs very heavy for the shanty trade, and the Americans followed in the same direction. But we have ceased sending large fat hogs to market now. This market will all be upset if this pact goes through. Now, Sir, I wish to draw your attention to the amount of spring wheat that is grown in the United States compared with what we have in Canada, and the average grown per acre. The United States, in 1910, raised 231,390,000 bushels of spring wheat, average per acre 11·7, value per bushel 98·8 cents; of winter wheat they raised 464,044,000, average per acre, 16·8 bushels, value per bushel, 89·1. In the United States the total amount grown of winter wheat was 695,443,000 bushels; in Canada, of spring wheat there were grown 133,379,600 bushels; average per acre, 15·53 bushels; value per bushel, 73·8 cents.

Of winter wheat there was grown 16,610,000 bushels; average per acre 23·49 bushels; value per bushel, 87 cents. The total wheat grown in Canada in 1910, 249,989,600 bushels. Now we can easily see that the Americans raised a very large amount of wheat, and still our people are anxious to get their market.

Now let us look at the exports of Canadian wheat for the last five years to Great Britain and to the United States:

	Exports to Great Britain.	Exports to United States.
1906..	$30,622,824	$298,160
1907..	20,710,973	630,349
1908..	42,911,610	102,849
1909..	51,350,211	602,661
1910..	58,538,772	1,883,637

Wheat imported into Canada from the United States:

	Bush.
1906..	578,622
1907..	1,167,402
1908..	5,138,455
1909..	9,431,346
1910..	12,070,811

Now with this large amount of wheat, I do not see why we should be looking to the United States for a market. Here is a table showing wheat exports from the United States:

	Bushels.	Value.
1907..	76,569,423	$60,214,388
1908..	100,371,057	99,736,767
1909..	66,923,244	68,094,447

Now why should we be looking for a market from which is exported so large a quantity of wheat? I do not see any advantage that we could have. I can see quite well the advantage the Americans would have in this trade. It is a well-known fact that our wheat is a great deal better, of a superior quality to that of the Americans. We often hear it said that unless their wheat is mixed with some of our Canadian wheat it will make nothing but dough. They want our wheat to mix with their own, and that is one reason why they are so anxious to have this reciprocity treaty concluded. Let me here read you a short paragraph from a speech of President Taft at Indianapolis, in favour of reciprocity, made on the 4th of July last:

> President Taft put the parting touch on his part in the celebration of the city's 'safe and sane' Fourth in a speech on Canadian reciprocity at the Marion Club banquet to-night. The President made his answer to the argument of other Republicans that reciprocity, as he has proposed it, is not good Republican doctrine, but Democratic doctrine.
> Replying to the contention that reciprocity would be made wholly at the expense of the farmer and in the interest of the wage-earner of the large cities, Mr. Taft said that in his judgment 'the reciprocity agreement will not greatly reduce the cost of living, if at all.'
> 'It will,' the President continued, 'steady prices by enlarging the reserves of supplies for those things that are raised in both countries, and it will make more remote the possibility of cornering commodities and extorting excessive prices for them from the public.'
> The complaint that the farmers would suffer by the agreement, the President said, when analysed would be found to be an argument that the admission of Canadian wheat free of duty would lower the price of wheat raised in the United States ten cents a bushel.
> 'The answer to this argument,' he said, 'is that this cannot be, for the reason that the price of wheat in the United States and Canada both is ultimately fixed by the price of wheat in the world, and that the world's prices are adjusted and made at Liverpool by the relation of the supply of the exported wheat to the demand for it by countries which do not raise enough to supply their people.

Is not that a strong admission of President Taft that reciprocity will not raise the price of wheat. I read this from the Toronto 'Globe,' July 24, 1911:

> In the United States we have seen the same sequence of events in our own time. A people formerly agricultural have become city dwellers. Their exports, which were mainly natural products a generation ago—wheat, corn, cattle, cotton and similar articles—are now in ever-increasing degree manufactured goods. Under the protective system in its application to foodstuffs the duties on wheat, barley, oats, beans, cattle, fish and meats have been prohibitive since the passage of the McKinley tariff twenty years ago. The inevitable result has been the frequent cornering of the wheat market, and the increase of the price of wheat and flour far above that prevailing in the world's open marts. The meat trust has taken toll of the people without mercy, and the cost of living has been forced up so high that the town dwellers, and in some measure the farmers also, have revolted, and demanded the removal of the food taxes that were used to make great fortunes for the manipulators of the markets. On the one hand, the trusts were able to depress the farmers' selling prices, and on the other to compel the consumers to pay enhanced prices for their food supplies. The secret of the meat trust's tremendous power lay in the fact that the farmer was selling cattle at prices pre-arranged by a little group of men who controlled practically all the packing houses in the United States, while the consumer was buying meat at retail stores similarly controlled by the trust.

You can see, Mr. Chairman, from this that the trusts control nearly all the articles consumed in the United States, and there is no doubt that under reciprocity they will extend their influence to Canada without the least trouble in the world. It is a well known fact that the local butchers right aross the line cannot buy cattle direct from the farmers as the Canadian butchers do, because the trusts crowd them out of the market. A farmer that lives three or four hundred miles from Chicago will have to sell his meat to the trust, and the consumer has to pay the railway frieght on the live stock cargo, and the freight on the dead meat from Chicago to New York, thus paying a double rate. They pay on the live cattle going into Chicago and on the dead meat going out, and in the meantime there are two or three middlemen to make money. There is no better managed market the world over than in the Dominion of Canada; nearly everything the producer raises goes direct to the consumer, and the producer gets more for what he produces than does the American producer, while the American consumer has to pay more for his food, the reason being that the trusts intervene between the producer and the consumer in the United States. This proves that we should continue to do business in the future, as we have done in the past. President Taft at New York plainly indicated the intention of the United States to prevent by this agreement the possibiilty of a commercial union of Canada with the empire. He said, speaking to his own people:

I have said that this was a critical time in the solution of the question of reciprocity. It is critical because unless it is now decided favourably to reciprocity it is exceedingly probable that no such opportunity will ever again come to the United States. The forces which are at work in England and in Canada to separate her by a Chinese wall from the United States, and to make her part of an imperial commercial band reaching from England around the world to England again by a system of preferential tariffs, will derive an impetus from the rejection of this treaty, and if we would have reciprocity, with all the advantages that I have described, and that I earnestly and sincerely believe will follow its adoption, we must take it now or give it up forever.

In the same speech Mr. Taft disclaimed any desire on the part of the United States for the annexation of Canada. He cannot speak for the United States on this subject—but assuming that he is right with regard to annexation, he certainly is right with regard to Canada's future with the empire if reciprocity takes effect, and again we ask: 'Why take the risk?'

It is not much wonder they should talk this way, because they know right away that if they talked commercial union or annexation it would kill the Bill in Canada, and so, they ask for reciprocity in order to help Canada. Did you ever know of the Americans doing anything before to help Canada? Never. I quote the following remarks of Senator Works:

Washington, July 19.—Senator Works, of California, insurgent Republican, urged the passage of the Canadian reciprocity Bill in a vigorous speech in the Senate to-day. He expressed the belief that reciprocity would not injure the farming interests of the nation, except to cause some temporary disturbances in border states, which would soon adjust themselves.

Senator Works said he did not believe President Taft had used undue influence to secure the passage of the reciprocity Bill through congress, and that Mr. Taft was 'too good a lawyer to overstep well recognized bounds.'

Attempts to amend the Bill were obvious attempts to defeat reciprocity as a whole, said Mr. Works, who defended the Bill as fair and just and of lasting benefit to the country.'

No wonder, Mr. Chairman, that all these politicians of the United States are in favour of reciprocity with the United States.

The New York 'Journal' is very confident about the future:

Intelligent Americans will favour this treaty; intelligent Congressmen will vote for it. Eventually, beyond question the whole North American continent will be one nation.

The Oriental 'Review' of New York regards the trick as already done:

This great republic has morally added to its union one more state without fighting for it, and without any future need of 'knocking it' into proper shape.

When the International boundary between Lake Superior and the Pacific was being delimited, the United States desired it to be at latitude 54.40, instead of at parallel 49, where it now is. Ardent spirits wished to settle the question by the sword. The difference between 49 and 54.40 is that 54.40 is north of the Saskatchewan, and that if the boundary had been fixed there no part of the Canadian west that is growing wheat for export would have belonged to Canada. The St. Paul 'Dispatch' is reminiscent:

The arrangement is just as good for the United States, so far as it goes, as the policy of '54-40 or fight' would have been had it succeeded.

The unique position and possibilities of Canada in world politics are keenly realized by many business men and publicists in the United States. They see that Canada's political strength within the British empire will be increased as her trade with the empire increases.

Control of trade and trade routes is the most powerful incentive to political aggrandizement. They openly profess that the agreement is a blow to Great Britain and to the empire. Whatever is a blow to Great Britain and the empire is a blow to Canada.

Mr. Knox, the United States Secretary of State—chief member of President Taft's cabinet—speaking at a reciprocity dinner in Chicago, which, to quote the official report of the Chicago Association of Commerce, was representative of 'cities as far north as Duluth, and as far south as Nashville; as far east as Cleveland, and as far west as Omaha,' said:

In providing for free wheat we also take into account the facilities which the United States possesses for handling a part of the surplus Canadian crop, and thus preventing the demoralization of prices which results through the dumping of large quantities upon the European markets, where the world's price is fixed. The free admission of grain from Canada thus meets the present situation and provides against contingencies when the Canadian surplus becomes greater by placing the control in the hands of our own grain-growers.

It has been the object of Canadian statesmanship to build up Canadian ports, because control of maritime trade is of the essence of building and preserving a nation with seacoasts. Governor Foss, of Massachusetts, is wholeheartedly for the reciprocity agreement because it will draw all kinds of trade away from Canadian ports.

And Mr. James J. Hill, chairman of the board of directors of the Great Northern railway, said:

It is not what we have gained by the reciprocity treaty that is most important, but what we have prevented. In the comment on the treaty when it was pending nearly every argument for it spoke of the good it would bring and it will bring good. My views in favour of reciprocity are so well known that I need not repeat them, now that the Senate has acted favourably. But the good that it will bring is only the smaller consideration of the question. What would have happened if we had not passed the treaty? That is the big question. There would have been a revival of a move for imperial federation, and if we had refused to trade with our good neighbour, our second best customer, and, for our manufacturers the best customer we have, we should have been sorry for it in years to come, for the opportunity was before us to make a favourable agreement with Canada and it would not have been before us again for many years if we had refused it this time.

That is why I say that while the treaty will mean much good for both the United States and Canada—and I believe that it will stimulate trade on both sides and that it will not be long before everyone will see its benefit and see that the wise thing to do was to act favourably upon it—yet, after all, that is the secondary part. There is not the slightest doubt that the situation was such that had the vote in the senate been against it, the report would have gone over the world and would have stimulated activities elsewhere for obtaining trade that we are in the best geographical position to handle, and in England it would have meant the beginning of action for such imperial trade federation as would have shut us out.

Will it hurt Canada? Not a bit of it. It will be of great benefit to Canada. It ought to help Minneapolis and St. Paul, and Winnipeg, and all our country and Western Canada. There never was any more reason why there should be a line of custom houses along the northern Minnesota-Montana border or the border of eastern Canada, than there should be between Minneapolis and Wisconsin or New York or Pennsylvania. What has made the commerce of the United States so great? That provision in our constitution that said that trade shall lie free and untrammelled between the states. Although there were those who doubted the wisdom of free commerce between all the states when our country was in the formative period, it has been the greatest thing in our history. It will be the same between the United States and Canada.

You see, Mr. Chairman, all these prominent men in the United States are in favour of this pact. But even so lately as a year ago had they any favours to offer Canada? No; they wanted the highest tax they could put on—25 cents a bushel on wheat, 6 cents a pound on butter, and so all along the line. They never were anxious to give Canada any favours but sought to do everything they could to hurt her trade. Mr. Chairman, it is growing late, and I will now move the adjournment of the debate.

Progress reported.

RECIPROCITY DOCUMENTS.

Mr. KING moved that the report of comparative prices in Canada and the United States, 1906-1911, be printed, and that rule 74 of the House be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FISHER. I beg to lay on the table complete information in reply to a question asked by Mr. Sharpe (Ontario), dated March 16th.

I would also lay on the table for the information of the House some comparative figures which have been prepared by the department in regard to agricultural products affected by the pact with the United States.

At the request of the right hon. the Prime Minister, I lay on the table the report of the committee of the Imperial Conference convened to discuss defence at the War Office, June 14-17, 1911.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Does the hon. minister (Mr. Fisher) propose to have this report printed forthwith.

Mr. FISHER. That is the intention.

Mr. BRODEUR. I beg leave to lay on the table the interim report of the Fishery Commission of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Might I ask what business will be proceeded with on Monday?

Mr. FISHER. Reciprocity will be interesting, I think.

On motion of Mr. Fisher, House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

Parliament was dissolved on Saturday, July 29, 1911, by proclamation of His Excellency the Governor General.
