CANADA

HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

FIRST SESSION—TWENTY-NINTH PARLIAMENT

22 Elizabeth II

VOLUME VII, 1973

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE FIFTEENTH DAY OF OCTOBER, 1973, TO THE TWENTY-THIRD DAY OF NOVEMBER, 1973, INCLUSIVE

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

Published under the authority of the Speaker of the House of Commons by the Queen's Printer for Canada

Available from Information Canada, Ottawa, Canada

26635—1½

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, October 15, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WELCOME TO MEMBER FOR OXFORD ON RETURN

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before going ahead with routine proceedings as we resume this session, may I take one moment to say how pleased all hon. members are to see that the health of the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) has permitted him to return to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FINANCE

STATEMENT ON MEETINGS OF COMMONWEALTH MINISTERS AND INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT AND INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a short statement to inform members of developments at the meeting of the Commonwealth Finance Ministers in Dar-es-Salaam, Tanzania, on September 19 and 20, and at the annual meetings of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund in Nairobi, Kenya, September 24 to 28.

At both meetings I strongly urged the need for greater policy co-ordination between countries in controlling the spread of inflation internationally. I emphasized the importance of the international fall-out of domestic inflation, for example, when sudden commodity purchases by one country send waves of inflation into a number of countries or when high interest rates generated by one country create troublesome international capital flows and also produce inappropriate interest rates in other countries. I made it clear that we need to strengthen the fund so that it can provide leadership in creating badly needed co-ordination of policies among countries. We intend to pursue this matter further in the continuing discussions on monetary reform.

[Translation]

I was encouraged that the new Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund, Mr. Witteveen, as well as a number of other representatives at both Conferences, dealt with the problem of international inflation at considerable length. Commonwealth ministers noted, in particular, the problems arising from high food prices and called for urgent international study of inflation with a view to action to overcoming it and its adverse effects, especially for developing countries.

The meetings in Dar-es-Salaam provided a useful opportunity for an exchange of views between ministers from Commonwealth countries on the major issues involved in monetary reform and on the current world economic situation as it relates to both developed and developing countries. Ministers welcomed the agreement which had been reached in Tokyo the previous week to launch comprehensive trade negotiations, stressed the importance of a satisfactory outcome to these negotiations and urged that they lead to an improvement in the trading position of the developing countries.

Ministers devoted a large part of their time to questions related to improving the relative positions of the less developed countries of the Commonwealth. Discussion included items referred to them by the Ottawa Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting of last August.

Among the more important of these items was the Commonwealth Fund for Technical Co-Operation. I am pleased to report that as Canada's representative I expressed our support for strong, continuing Commonwealth arrangements and reaffirmed the pledge, given by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at the Heads of Government Meeting, of a significant increase in our contributions to this Fund.

[English]

There was much discussion among Commonwealth countries concerning the possibility of a link between the creation of special drawing rights and development assistance as an integral part of the reformed monetary system. We have examined the link proposal with great care, and this we have done not just because of our interest in monetary reform but also because of our firm conviction that development finance must increase and must be soundly based. We are concerned that such a link might hinder the acceptance of the SDR as the principal asset of the reformed system. We are also apprehensive that such a link might inhibit the establishing and maintaining of control over international liquidity which is essential to reform. Moreover, we are not convinced that such a link would increase the flow of development assistance.

As I have already said, this government regards such an increase as being very important. I urged in both Dar-es-Salaam and Nairobi that further work be undertaken to see if these difficulties might be surmounted. The Commonwealth finance ministers, I am happy to report, agreed that the next step should be to examine specific link mechanisms which would be consistent with a soundly based international monetary system. Furthermore, the Ministers of the Committee of Twenty have instructed their deputies to establish a special technical group to examine in a comprehensive and detailed manner the question of the transfer of real resources to the developing countries as it relates to monetary reform.

● (1410)

With the permission of the House, I should like to table a copy of the communiqué issued at Dar-es-Salaam following the meeting which reflects the wide range of topics discussed.

I am pleased to announce in this House that the Commonwealth Finance Ministers accepted Canada's invitation to meet next year in Ottawa.

The annual meetings of the IMF/IBRD in Nairobi were preceded by a meeting of the Committee of Twenty on Monetary Reform on Sunday, September 23. This provided an opportunity for the committee to review the work of their deputies. A good deal has been achieved since the committee was established last year, but many ministers, including myself, expressed a degree of impatience over the pace of progress to date.

I am concerned that, if results are not soon achieved, the momentum of the discussions may be lost. The issues that have to be dealt with include suitable techniques for redressing payments imbalances, rules relating to converting currencies into primary reserve assets, methods for dealing with the problem of excessive holdings of currency reserves, the role of gold in the system, and the problem of valuing the SDR in terms of currencies and deciding what rate of interest it should carry.

The committee, and the governors of the fund as a whole, are cognizant of the urgency which is attached to resolving these questions. In my interventions in the committee and in my statement at the annual meetings, I stressed the importance of proceeding to implement reform in a sequential way as changing economic conditions permit. Specifically, I pointed out that more effective consultation over matters such as adjustment problems and exchange market developments could begin now. This could be done through special meetings of the executive board of the fund attended by representatives from capitals. I also believe that SDR valuation problems might well be solved through the deliberation of the fund executive board, and that progress with respect to the role of gold and the reduction of excessive currency balances through bilateral funding also need not await full-fledged reform of the system.

I believe it unlikely that an ideal environment for the implementation of a fully revised monetary system will emerge in the next few months. In particular, it will not be possible to complete the reform until the United States balance of payments, which is now improving, has achieved a much stronger position. This should not, however, impede progress in particular areas which could even now contribute to improved stability and confidence in world monetary arrangements.

[Translation]

The Committee of Twenty Ministers have set for themselves a deadline of July 31, 1974, for the settlement of the outstanding issues needed to achieve an agreed outline of reform. In working to this objective, the committee will meet in January and again in the spring. At the same time, our deputies will pursue with a new sense of urgency the work program which we have set for them.

The House will be interested in the position we took on monetary reform. I made our position quite clear in my statement to the governors, elaborating on it at some length. I should like, with the permission of the House, to table this statement for the information of hon. members. For the convenience of members, I will also table a copy of the Report of the Chairman of the Committee of Twenty to the Fund Board of Governors, as well as the First Outline of Reform prepared by the deputies and the statements made by the managing director.

With respect to the World Bank group, the principal issue was the Fourth Replenishment of the resources of the International Development Association, the World Bank's concessional lending arm. In his statement to the annual meeting, which I am tabling today, Mr. McNamara stressed the urgency of reaching agreement on the replenishment so that the association could continue lending operations in the poorest developing countries after July 1, 1974.

[English]

I am glad to report that representatives of donor countries were able to agree at Nairobi to recommend to their legislatures a total replenishment of $4.5 billion U.S. for the period 1974 to 1976. On behalf of Canada I pledged a contribution, subject to the approval of parliament, of $274.5 million, or 6.1 per cent of the total. I also assured Mr. McNamara that the Canadian government would do all it could to ensure that Canada's contribution can be made on time.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to thank the minister who sent us a copy of his statement along with the related documentation in time to allow us to study it, at least partially. It is true that the minister had sufficient time to think about his statement and prepare a text with somewhat ambiguous passages to embroil matters a bit, because it should be noted that the minister was reporting on his participation in two conferences. First, he participated in the conference of the Finance Ministers of Commonwealth countries, which have particular problems and are bound by special ties. Then, he took part in a much more important conference in Kenya, where he discussed international problems, inflation and the reform of the monetary system with his colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, in the text which we have been given, the minister has confused these meetings; however, he was probably unable to indicate the problems which are still unsolved or suggest an acceptable solution.

[English]

It was interesting to hear the minister start out to speak on a subject in connection with which he needs nothing better than the situation in Canada as an inspiration for his concern. I refer to the lack of control over inflation in Canada which this government displays. The hon. gentleman could therefore attend both conferences as a great expert on the problems of inflation, though he did not tell us what might be the solutions. In this regard, at the foot of the first page of his statement he says:

I was encouraged that the new managing director of the International Monetary Fund, Mr. Witteveen, as well as a number of other representatives at both conferences, dealt with the problem of international inflation at considerable length.

Here, Mr. Speaker, is the beauty of combining the reports. The minister immediately moves in the next sentence to the Commonwealth ministers conference and says that the Commonwealth ministers noted, in particular, the problems arising from high prices, and so on. It would have been interesting had the minister continued and let us know what Mr. Witteveen had said in his report to the directors of the International Monetary Fund a while earlier. Mr. Witteveen said, as found in the IMF survey:

In order to use this opportunity for a real break-through in the struggle against inflation it may prove essential to supplement monetary and fiscal policies by some form of incomes policy to act directly on prices and wages which are not determined competitively. For recent experience has shown that elimination of excess demand, while necessary to bring down inflation, may by itself not be sufficient for this purpose. Effective incomes policies will be all the more necessary in an international climate from which the inflationary bias has been removed. Under such conditions a continuation of wage and price increases at present rates might easily have adverse repercussions on growth and employment, especially in those countries whose competitive position has suffered by the adjustment of exchange rates.

How true, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister now tell us this: did he in his comments at the conference of the International Monetary Fund express the views of the Canadian government with regard to the director-general's recommendation concerning an incomes policy? It would be very interesting to hear what the minister had to say in that regard.

I certainly support the hon. gentleman in his keen desire for international co-operation in dealing with inflation. But, right there, he fails to follow through. After all, if 12 out of the 19 OECD countries have partial or almost full controls at this time, why is it that Canada must distinguish itself by being one of the countries least able to deal with its inflation, doing the least about it and having only minimal controls?

● (1420)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Because they have not worked.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On a point of information, the minister says they will never work.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, I did not say that. I said because they have not worked.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But nothing seems to be working in Canada. Inflation is running rampant every month. It seems to me that, having gone to the African continent, the minister has continued to emulate the attitude of that famous large bird which is endemic to the area and buried his head in the sand.

On the question of monetary reform, there too I share the minister's apprehension that progress is being made very, very slowly. We have just gone through several months of the most agonizing international financial crises in 1973 and I do not think the world can stand another round of that sort of thing. I do not know whether we have a picture of countries frozen into immobility, unable to think and act in regard to reforming international monetary relationships. To this extent I agree with the minister that things must happen a lot more quickly.

The minister did not speak of this point because at the time of the conferences the Middle East crisis had not broken out, but I am wondering whether part of the crises of 1973 was not a carefully engineered preliminary within the framework of the International Monetary Fund, leading to the outbreak of hostilities today. It may be that the minister thinks this a little farfetched but I want him to think about it. In any event, it merely illustrates that it can happen.

We also want to know what proposals Canada has made regarding international monetary reform, whether the minister is talking about a broader band or about a creeping peg, and what should be the rights of developing countries to participate in a special category of drawing rights, which I think would unnecessarily complicate what is essentially an exchange program through a foreign aid program around the world.

My last point is this. I could quote extensively from Mr. Witteveen's final summary to the conference in regard to the nature of monetary reform progress which has been made, but it seems that there is to be a fixed exchange system which will be the cornerstone of the reform system. At this point I should like to ask the minister: Did Canada insist that there should be a right to float? If so, how does this square with the minister's reported statement that he expects that Canada will soon return to a pegged exchange rate, as it should be doing in order to conform with the present agreement?

The minister has furnished us with a great deal of material to examine in detail, but this is not the time to do so. I can see that Your Honour is becoming impatient. The minister has made a ten-minute statement. I hope that my reply covering the same ground has been equally short.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the minister saw fit to make a statement in the House today about the meetings he attended over the last few weeks on the world monetary situation. I cannot say that I am pleased, and I do not think many hon. members are, with the progress of those meetings. Indeed, the progress has been very discouraging. The lack of any solution regarding the world monetary system and problems relating to the United States dollar has been discouraging.

I think Canada could have played a more positive role in taking the initiative toward finding solutions to these problems. Perhaps the minister in his statement should have outlined more fully the opinion he expressed and the approaches he took at these conferences. About the only positive thing that resulted from these meetings is the fact that the group of 20 set a deadline of July 31, next year, to find a solution. Various technical committees have been established in an effort to hammer out the details of an acceptable solution.

I think the most important thing missing from the discussions held in Africa, as covered by the minister's statement, is the role of the multinational corporations, financial institutions and banks throughout the world and the influence and power they exert in respect of world financial and monetary conditions. I have in front of me a copy of the Canadian Business Survey for 1971. It contains statistics that reveal the tremendous powers of multinational corporations, with particular reference to their effect on world monetary policy. They indicate that at the end of 1971 the multinational corporations had short-term liquid funds amounting to $268 billion. That is more than double the entire amount of the official short-term funds of all the countries that are members of the International Monetary Fund. I repeat: the multinational corporations had more than double the short-term liquid funds of all the countries which belong to that association.

That is the position of the countries belonging to this association which are trying to get together to solve international financial problems. One can realize from these statistics the effect that the policies of these huge international corporate giants can have on balance of payments problems, on problems in respect of interest rates and on commodity prices. In spite of this, we do not find much in the minister's statement regarding what attitude the world community is going to take toward multinational corporations. We do not see anything in the minister's statement in respect of who is to police their activities, or who is going to say what they can and cannot do.

I cannot help but emphasize that the power of these corporations is largely responsible for much of the inflationary rate we are experiencing today. The expansion of American based multinational corporations outside of the United States has had a serious effect on the U.S. balance of payments. This also has an effect on the value of the Canadian and American dollars, driving them down, and the subsequent appreciation of the German mark, the French franc and the Japanese yen. This has resulted in increasing the prices of commodities imported into in Canada. I suggest that all of this is due to the corporate policies of these giants, most of which decide policy without respect for the ordinary citizen or governments around the globe. These corporations decide policies behind closed doors where most nations of the world cannot exert influence.

My second concern is in respect of the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and other banking institutions which are doing very little to develop the needy countries of the world. I know as a fact that many of these countries resent the policies of our international monetary institutions. What they want instead is some significant effort toward providing them with a fair share of the trade enjoyed by developed countries. I suggest that our banks are partially responsible for the international monetary situation. They have international arrangements. They have literally billions of dollars tied up in investments and assets in other countries round the world such as the Caribbean and Europe. These are problems we will have to solve. They are what we might call serious ideological problems which the world community must solve if we are to reform the monetary system.

● (1430)

Third, what is the reaction of the minister to the current move in the world toward special drawing rights and away from gold as a standard? He does comment extensively on this in his report, but I should like him to elaborate and provide the House with more information concerning Canada's position. It is very important when talking about developing the third world to remember that the poorer countries have very little influence on the financial policies of the world in general. It is very important that we learn more about the minister's attitude toward special drawing rights.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Finally, as I said, it is important that we solve the monetary problems of the world because a lot of the instability creates inflation in our country and precisely because of that we do not have control of our economy and do not determine many of the decisions we must determine if we are to control the economic situation in our own country. We in this country should not use the international situation and the importation of inflation as an excuse for not doing anything about controlling inflation in Canada. We can tackle some of the multinationals. In Canada we produce commodities like energy, lumber, copper, iron and steel and we could control to a large degree the prices of many of these commodities that we produce if we only had the guts to tackle some of the multinational corporations and international cartels.

These are things we should be doing if only the minister would get off his fanny and start acting in a decisive and positive manner instead of sitting back in an international financial conference and saying, "Oh my, it is a difficult problem and we cannot solve it". We can do many things. We can put exchange controls on our interest rates if we want to bring down interest rates in this country. We can make certain investment policies mandatory. These are things we can do in Canada and which we should be suggesting to the other countries in the international arena as well. I am not satisfied and I am sure the people of Canada are not satisfied. I urge the minister to press ahead and do all he can in a decisive and positive manner to reform the world monetary system so that the poorer countries of the world, Canada and the ordinary citizens will be beneficiaries of that reform and not the international monetary institutions.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has shown clearly enough the almost complete failure of the International Monetary Fund. He actually attended two meetings, one within the Commonwealth of nations, and the other which brought together representatives of various countries of the world in Africa and at both meetings, the minister found—like his colleagues at those meetings—that the system should be reformed.

There is much talk about the monetary reform of the international fund. They do not know which way to turn, they are lost in conjecture. Inflation is destroying one country after another and they talk of monetary reform without determining clearly the lines and structures of a necessary reform. Mr. Speaker, in 1944, when the Bretton Woods Agreements were signed, the Créditiste members of that time, along with Solon Low and John Blackmore, were against those agreements and they described then exactly what is happening today to the International Monetary Fund.

I say that the world bank is at the present time a complete failure, which undoubtedly shows this organization's inability to maintain a steady economic growth in its member countries or in the countries that are united under its aegis. Mr. Speaker, as I said a while ago, all countries are suffering from inflation. In Canada, we have inflation; some people advocate a price and salary freeze. This was tried in certain countries. In others, it was abandoned. But in any of the member countries of that organization, it will be noticed that inflation is more devastating there than in Canada. In France, for instance, a black and white television set, which costs here $175 or $180, costs over there $425. In other countries, it is still worse. It is the same in every field.

Mr. Speaker, the Créditistes have been claiming for a long time that a monetary reform should not be superficial only. To change four quarters for ten dimes may represent a reform but it only adds up to a dollar just the same.

Therefore, what we suggest is a basic reform: that all new credits be debt free. It is the debt-money system. Debts have lead the various nations to this situation, including Canada. The currency created should be free of debt and interest. Thus, if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) lends me $10, I will give him back $10.50, including 50 cents interest. This is quite normal, because he agrees to lend me money. But the financial system is lending us something that it does not own. It cashes in on our properties, our assets, our country and requires from us that we pay a tribute, an interest on our properties. This is the kind of reform that we must achieve as soon as possible, Mr. Speaker, in order to free not only other countries but also our own, Canada.

* * *

[English]

IMMIGRATION

REPORT ON ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe hon. members of the House would be interested in a report on the immigration adjustment program which was approved by Parliament earlier this year and created by the amendment to the Immigration Appeal Board Act. This has, since last June 18, enabled thousands of persons in this country, both legally and illegally, to come forward and obtain landed immigrant status without fear of being prosecuted for having violated the immigration laws so far as their method of entry or style of staying here is concerned. The opportunity given to them under the said program ends at midnight tonight under the legislation to which I have referred.

I am pleased to say that thousands of lives have taken on new meaning as a result of this opportunity. By the time our offices closed last night, the immigration offices—and they were open yesterday across Canada—once the dependents of the applicants are taken into account, 45,180 persons will have been registered for this opportunity. To this, of course, must be added the results of today's activities. To indicate that this response has been a national one, these are the numbers of registrations of persons involved by region: in the Atlantic region, 3,036; in Quebec, 7,355, in Ontario, 25,169, in the Prairies, 5,008, in the Pacific, 4,612, for a total of 45,180. I am sure that members will understand that it has not been possible to process all these cases as they are received.

● (1440)

Only the registration must take place by midnight and we have given that priority. Nevertheless, I am able to say that 16,940 cases involving 21,996 persons have already been favourably assessed and the persons concerned will be landed subject to completion of the normal medical and other immigrant requirements.

There has been some suggestion in the media and from other sources that these results may be disappointing to the government and that the number of persons eligible for the program is far higher than the number of those who have, in fact, registered. Uninformed guesses have been made regarding the number of people who may be in Canada illegally. These unfounded speculations relate to a range anywhere from 50,000 to 200,000 people. I hasten to make it clear that at no time to my knowledge has the government given any estimate of the size of the group that might benefit from the adjustment program.

An hon. Member: You do not know.

Mr. Andras: That is quite correct. We do not know, and we could only make such a suggestion if we had a system of registering at ports of entry every one of the 38 million non-Canadians who come into Canada each year and re-registering each one again on departure. Such a tight system of control, I suggest, would be abhorrent to the Canadian people and would do tremendous injury to our important tourist industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andras: Instead of indulging in speculation on the number of people who might qualify, the program might better be judged on whether or not the potential registrants were made aware of their opportunity. I am satisfied that the message did indeed get across and that there are very few who did not hear it. Our advertising campaign was one of the most extensive ever used by my department. We employed radio, television, the press, posters in traffic locations, halls, and transit systems. Advertisements appeared in all of the English and French dailies and in the ethnic press as well. Broadcasts were made in almost every language heard on Canadian streets.

However, the paid campaign was only part of the publicity campaign. Wide news coverage of the program and of individual cases was given on news reports, on radio broadcasts and television specials. My officials and I appeared on numerous programs and attended hundreds of meetings. Leaders of the ethnic and other community organizations gave the program the strongest support, and many members of this House from all parties also placed their support and influence behind the program, for which I must express my most sincere appreciation. In short, the adjustment program not only received national support but also active participation by thousands of persons who encouraged those eligible to come forward.

The effect of the advertising and the public support was indicated in a Gallup poll which we commissioned in the first week in September when the program had been under way for only three weeks. On a national basis, even at this early stage 69.7 per cent of those interrogated were aware of the program, and this high level of awareness was held by persons interviewed whose mother language was other than French or English. Of this number, 81.2 per cent knew that further information could be obtained from a Canada immigration centre or a Canada manpower centre.

As hon. members will recall, the adjustment of status program is only one of three measures referred to when I introduced Bill C-197 last June. Under the special administrative measures introduced in June, 1972 to review the backlog in the inquiry system, we have now dealt favourably with cases involving 13,500 persons. The Immigration Appeal Board has ruled favourably on 3,500 cases since June of this year, using the new authority to sit as single member panels. I am announcing later today the appointment of 13 temporary members under the new legislation, and among the cases they will hear, 17,800 appeals to the board have already been favourably reviewed by my officers against the relaxed criteria applicable under the adjustment of status program. Through these three special actions in the past 15 months there are, therefore, some 80,000 people who may now expect to gain the right to live in Canada and who were formerly in fear of deportation. By midnight tonight, that figure will be even greater.

Despite my conviction that the message has indeed been delivered, I have recently received some suggestions from thoughtful people that there may still be some potential registrants who have not heard of the program or that there may be some who are reluctant to come forward because of a fear, unfounded though it may be, but nevertheless a real fear of the bureaucracy. As I have said, I am satisfied that the program has reached its intended audience. I am also confident that we have done all we could to allay these fears. I recognize that it does take time to establish a climate of trust. That trust can only be really obtained when a person who is hanging back sees that his friends have been dealt with favourably. For the first part of the campaign, my officials were involved with the process of registering the thousands who came forward. An assessment of individual cases has to take place later. For some weeks we have been publicizing the success rate of applications and, as it has become known that the chances of success are very high indeed, there has been an indication that those who had been holding back have indeed been coming forward. From a daily average fluctuating between 550 and 870 registrants in the first seven weeks of the campaign, registrants are now coming forward at a much higher rate. There were new registrations on October 12, for example, involving 1,429 persons.

These figures lead me to believe that there is now great confidence in the program and that by midnight tonight when our offices close all those who wish to come forward will or should have done so.

In view of the concern expressed, not only by responsible organizations but also by responsible newspapers in Canada, that more time may be needed to allow the new climate of trust to take effect, we are assessing the situation closely as the time available to register draws to a close. I will also listen carefully to any of the comments made by hon. members. As hon. members are aware, any extension of the adjustment program would require new legislation to be passed by parliament.

In closing I would like to emphasize that whichever way we go, this involves a very serious decision, one which I do not think anybody here would suggest we take casually or too hastily. There are costs as well as benefits on either side of the suggestion. On the one hand, if extension is considered, the effect on attitudes of countless thousands of people abroad for whom Canada is so attractive that they will seek and test any loophole which would allow them to come here must be taken into account as well as any apparent lack of will to hold firm to our immigration laws as announced. Furthermore, we cannot ignore the effect of the commitment of resources to an ad hoc program of this type for a prolonged period of time. On the other hand, we must judge whether we have cleaned up the bulk of the problem with which we have been faced. Certainly, we do want to avoid mass deportations and we want to ensure that our program has been effective. In view of all the publicity which has been given to this program and all the effort put into it, we are entitled, before we make a decision, to get pretty substantial evidence that there may be or may not be great numbers of people who have not been reached by all our publicity before we act.

In closing, I should like to reiterate again that I will be very interested in the views of hon. members in the response to my statement.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the minister for the courtesy he extended to me in allowing me to have his statement not only so that I could read it but so that the members of our caucus might see it. When I received the statement I smiled because, if this statement points out anything, it points out the hesitancy and uncertainty of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Until yesterday the minister, without any equivocation whatsoever, was indicating to the whole country that there would not be an extension after October 15. I would like to read portions of his statement. On page 1 I find these words:

> The opportunity given to them to make "our country, your country," ends at midnight tonight.

That is a statement of fact. Yet, when we review the minister's statement we find that later he says:

> As I have said, I am satisfied that the program has reached its intended audience.

To demonstrate the equivocation of the minister and the frustration he is causing the people of Canada, particularly those who are interested in this most serious program, let me read certain other parts of the statement. He states:

> These figures lead me to believe that there is now complete confidence in the program and that by midnight tonight when our offices close, all those who wish to come forward will have done so.

● (1450)

Those are statements of fact, Mr. Speaker, and the minister and his department are the only ones who have any information whatsoever.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, with great respect to the hon. member I want to point out that I sent him a draft copy of the statement and if he will carefully examine my comments he will see that when I was on my feet I did, as I think is properly my right, make some corrections and changes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You change every ten minutes.

An hon. Member: We cannot even rely on the statement.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. The hon. minister, I am sure, would appreciate and agree with the Chair that this is hardly a point of order but a point of debate. I would hope that we might continue with the hon. member for Hamilton West. At the same time, I think I might remind the hon. member for Hamilton West of the terms of Standing Order 15 which gives him the right to make comments without provoking debate.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, far be it from me to provoke a debate with my remarks, though apparently they cut home as far as the minister is concerned. Without replying to what he has said, let me read the last paragraph of the statement which leads me to say that the government has not made up its mind what to do in this most serious situation at this time. The last paragraph reads:

> In view of the concern expressed not only by responsible organizations but also by responsible newspapers in Canada, that more time may be needed to allow the new climate of trust to take effect, we are assessing the situation closely as the time available to register draws to a close. I will also listen carefully to any comments from hon. members. As hon. members are aware, any extension of the adjustment program would require new legislation to be passed by parliament.

What the minister is attempting to do is acquire direction and leadership from editorial comment and the reaction of Canadians. I am very surprised by this statement because there are a number of matters which should have been dealt with to allay the fears of many of these illegal immigrants. Did the minister mention anything about his policy with respect to the alleged witch hunt? This is of great concern to many of these people, but the minister ignored it. Did the minister give selective assurances with respect to his attitude as to what moral turpitude means? What does the prohibited clause mean? How do we find proof of residency? What does the minister think about those people who have been working but not filing income tax returns? These matters are of great concern and the questions should have been answered. There should have been some indication of what the government and the minister think about them, but nothing was said because the minister does not know what to do and is seeking advice from members of parliament and the people of Canada.

This has been a magnificent program, Mr. Speaker; there is no doubt about that. It is unique. No other country has attempted to do what we have done and we on this side of the House wish the minister every success. I dislike being partisan but in view of what is happening I have to be. We can see from the statement that the minister has made up his mind that there will be an extension. Why does he not come to the House and say that he wants two more weeks? If we are given the facts we will approach the matter with an open mind, especially as the program came from this side of the House in the first instance. We remember when the minister cut off applications and we protested that it should not be done in that way but should be approached in a humanitarian manner. At first the minister disagreed but suddenly he flip-flopped and brought in this legislation which we endorse.

I repeat that this is a good program but we hope that the minister will consider the economics of the matter. I do not know how many people are involved but if the time is extended we may get another 10,000 or 5,000 people. This would save the country money compared with the mass deportation orders that would have to ensue eventually.

We are not going to tell the minister what to do. He knows what we think as we started this program in the first instance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Get out of the job.

Mr. Andras: What has he said?

Mr. Alexander: In all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, I must say that the advertisements have been good; there is no question about that. I still believe, however, as many other people do, that there are some who have not been reached and perhaps there are some who are not yet prepared to accept the government's sincerity. If this be true, I wish the minister would tell us; that is what we are waiting to hear. If this be a fact, perhaps there is need to extend the program. If the minister would bring the facts before us and let us know whether he wants an extension of time we would be prepared to approach this matter with an open mind for the benefit of Canada and Canadians.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) criticizes the government for the inadequacy of this program—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: —and then says it is for his party to express an opinion on whether the program should be extended. As to the success of the program, close to 50,000 people have come forward. This indicates, first of all, that we have a mess of considerable proportions in this country. People who were here—

An hon. Member: Whose fault was that?

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member asks whose fault that was. It was the fault of all members of the House and all parties who agreed to the amendment of the Immigration Act which permitted visitors to apply for citizenship while in Canada. That encouraged people to come here as visitors and then stay. All parties agreed to that so we are all somewhat responsible for the mess. The mess was also created by the fact that the Immigration Appeal Board did not have enough members to deal with the applications and so they backed up. We are all responsible for the mess, Mr. Speaker.

We can all agree that the government should have proceeded with this kind of program before. However, it finally did initiate the program which has brought forward 45,000 people whose applications are now being processed. In the last part of his statement the minister made it clear that in the latter part of the campaign the number of applications daily had increased from somewhere in the neighbourhood of 550 or 780 to over 1,400 on October 12. This seems to make it clear that a substantial number of those people who are in this country illegally had no doubt that they would be dealt with in a generous way despite the initial lack of information available to them. Because of the increasing rate of applications toward the end of the program it seems to me there is every reason to grant an extension.

I cannot fault the minister for having announced a week ago that he was not prepared to propose an extension of two weeks or a month. Had he done that, perhaps the applicants who came forward in the last week would not have felt it necessary to do so. I think that everything the minister has said and all the reports coming in indicate that the program has been successful and that the message did get across.

I want to say to the minister, without going into what might have been done or what was done in the past, that the program is working. If the minister were prepared to make a proposal to extend it for one month we in this party would approve. I think I can speak for my colleagues and say that if he were to bring forward the necessary amendment we would permit its passage without debate. I urge him to do that and to continue the campaign the department carried on through the media so that as many of the people who are here illegally as possible will come forward and legalize their position.

● (1500)

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) for his statement on the regularization of the status of some 45,000 immigrants who were illegally in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, this program reminds me a kind of temporary alternative meant to cope with some inadequate administration or the effects of a poor immigration policy. If this program has become necessary in Canada to enable more than 45,000 individuals who are officially non-residents to regularize their status, it shows that the Immigration Act should probably be entirely overhauled. How come Canada has 45,000 immigrants whose status is not regularized and why was it finally necessary to launch a publicity campaign to retreive those people and invite them to become full-fledged Canadian citizens.

Mr. Speaker, this shows that our policy immigration is unsatisfactory, that it no longer meets our needs nor reflects the whole image of Canada abroad.

Mr. Speaker, the standards of our Immigration Act should be reconsidered so that in the future, such conditions will be avoided.

Of course, the minister and the government must be congratulated for having allowed these citizens to straighten out their situation in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, even though we have been making this proposal year after year, the same problem will arise again. Why then should they not tackle the real problem of immigration and bring this legislation again before Parliament in order that immigration standards and this whole policy be reconsidered and that this ridiculous situation does not arise again.

This is a shameful situation both for the people who have come here secretly—I know some who were afraid to report to these famous offices—and for certain foreigners who have made an application but who are facing some officials who cannot accept them because of an obsolete law.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if this government wanted to be smart in this field, it would reconsider completely the Immigration Act rather than content itself with repairing damages.

* * *

[English]

BRIDGES

TABLING OF STATEMENT ON INTERNATIONAL BRIDGES WITH PARTICULAR REFERENCE TO AMBASSADOR BRIDGE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table in both official languages a statement on international bridges, with particular reference to the Ambassador Bridge. The text of the statement will be transmitted today to the parties interested in the Ambassador Bridge.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RECOGNITION OF NEW GOVERNMENT OF CHILE— REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek the unanimous consent of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney):

That this House expresses its regret that the government did not see fit to withhold diplomatic recognition of the military government of Chile installed as a result of a military coup in which the democratically elected President lost his life and in which the fundamental human rights of many of the people of Chile have been disregarded;

And further calls upon the government to do all in its power to undertake a humanitarian effort to save the lives of political refugees who had taken refuge in Chile.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

* * *

ENERGY

POSSIBLE SHORTAGE OF NATURAL GAS FOR NORTHERN BRITISH COLUMBIA INDUSTRIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Labour and industry in northern British Columbia are panicstricken as a result of announcements made by Westcoast Transmission and Inland Natural Gas which indicate a possible shortage of supply of natural gas to large industrial users in that area. Industrial plants have been notified by letter of this fact.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member at this moment. I think, as we resume the current session, that hon. members should try to keep in mind the strictures set down from time to time by the Chair on the basis of long established precedents in relation to Standing Order 43. I think it is basic and essential that hon. members should remember that Standing Order 43 is a very special Standing Order in that it allows a member to seek the unanimous consent of the House without debate. If hon. members take advantage of this Standing Order to make statements and speeches advancing arguments in support of the motion they wish to propose for the unanimous consent of the House, then it would be, I suggest, in order to allow other members who hold contrary views to make their own speeches. Standing Order 43, I suggest, can be used only in very special circumstances, and without argument or supporting statements.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for my lengthy preamble. In the absence of a policy that can deal with a crisis of this nature, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds):

That the Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources be instructed to immediately work out a solution to this problem and to particularly study the restriction or curtailment of the flow of natural gas to the United States.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Energy

Mr. Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimity. The hon. member's motion cannot be put at this time.

* * *

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

COMMISSIONING OF WORKS OF ART—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 43 I seek the unanimous consent of the House to put a motion.

The question of the commissioning of works of art for public buildings has come under fire, both as to the method of selection and quality of art. Since many Canadian artists feel they are not given equal opportunity and since, as chairman of the committee—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The comments I have just made in relation to the motion proposed by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River, which also apply, I might say in passing, to the comments made by the hon. member for Greenwood in support of his motion, apply to the motion proposed by the hon. member for Cochrane. I suggest that no argument should be advanced in support of a motion proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I will leave out the rest of the preamble. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa (Mr. Trudel):

That the whole question of the commissioning of works of art by government be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts with instructions for the committee to report back to this House with its findings and specific recommendations.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Cochrane. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put at this time.

● (1510)

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARAB-ISRAELI WAR

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 26, I ask leave to move a motion for the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the present conflict in the Middle East which increases the dangers to world peace, and the urgent need for the government and parliament to debate the seriousness of the situation and to seek ways and means of avoiding further escalation of the war and of promoting effective international action to bring peace to the area.

[English]

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if this matter is acceptable for debate, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), that this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 26, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe has given notice of his intention to move for the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing the matter to which he has referred.

Obviously, the Middle East conflict is an international problem which concerns and worries every member of this House. It is quite possible that there would be an advantage in discussing the matter in this House at a given moment following consultations between representatives of the parties. I believe that this procedure should be considered rather than holding today a debate under Standing Order 26.

After much reflection, I have therefore concluded that, for the present at least, and for procedural reasons, the motion of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe cannot be put under Standing Order 26.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

[Text]

CONTRACTS FOR HAULING ARCTIC CARGO

Question No. 1,969—Mr. Forrestall:

For the contracts issued in 1971 and 1972 for hauling Arctic cargo by water, did the government waive or otherwise mitigate the qualification requirements for Canadian registry in terms of safety standards or vessel condition in any instance and, if so (a) in what instances (b) by what specific authority?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The qualification requirements for Canadian registry which, it should be noted, do not include safety standards or vessel condition, were not waived or otherwise mitigated in the case of any of the contracts mentioned.

NAMES OF SHIPPING COMPANIES UNSUCCESSFUL IN BIDDING FOR CONTRACT TO HAUL ARCTIC CARGO

Question No. 1,980—Mr. Forrestall:

For (a) 1971 (b) 1972, for each of the shipping companies which failed to be successful in bidding for the contracts to haul Arctic cargo, what were (i) the names of the companies (ii) if subsidiaries, the names of the parent companies (iii) the nationality of the companies or parent companies as the case may be?

[Mr. Wagner.]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): (a) 1971: Hall Corporation Shipping (1969) Ltd., Federally Incorporated; Gillespie Munro (1969) Ltd., Federally Incorporated; (b) 1972: Transworld Shipping Limited, Federally Incorporated; Braemar Shipping Limited, Federally Incorporated; Hall Corporation Shipping (1969) Limited, Federally Incorporated.

CONTRACT FOR MARINE REQUIREMENTS IN ARCTIC, 1972

Question No. 1,982—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What was the name of the general contractor assigned to take care of marine requirements of a shipping nature to the Arctic in 1972?

2. What, if any, labour trouble did this contractor have in the recent sealift operation, and what was the nature of such trouble?

3. Was the contractor an established member of the Canadian shipping industry, operating a permanent Canadian flag fleet and, if so, what was the date of his incorporation?

4. Was any effort made by the government to find a long established member of the Canadian shipping industry operating a permanent Canadian flag fleet to fill this role and (a) if so, of what nature (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. The Ministry of Transport acts as co-ordinator of all shipping contracts into the Arctic, and is, therefore, involved in the calling of tenders and letting of contracts to different shipping companies for the transportation of goods. In 1972, these companies were, as recorded in answer to question No. 1965.

2. None to our knowledge.

3. Yes.

4. Not applicable.

CNR—DEFICIT FOR LINE BETWEEN MONTREAL AND QUEBEC CITY

Question No. 2,033—Mr. Boisvert:

What is the amount of the deficit for the CNR line between Montreal and Quebec City?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of the Canadian National Railways advises as follows: It is not company policy to reveal such data, the public knowledge of which would be detrimental to the company's operations as a commercial enterprise.

NUMBER OF PERSONNEL EMPLOYED ON OCEANOGRAPHIC RESEARCH IN NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 2,078—Mr. Haliburton:

What was the number of personnel employed by the Fisheries Service of the Department of the Environment or other departments for oceanographic research, having their operations based in the province of Nova Scotia on (a) a full-time basis (b) a part-time basis for the years 1940, 1950, 1970 and 1972?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council):

(a)	1940	1950	1970	1972
Energy, Mines and Resources	—	—	145	48
Environment	—	—	—	114
National Defence	—	*2	—	—
Transport	—	—	—	—
(b)
Energy, Mines and Resources	—	—	14	—
Environment	—	—	—	7
National Defence —	—	—	—	—
Transport	—	—	178	213

* In 1950, two full-time scientists were engaged in pure oceanography but of these, one devoted only about half his time to this type of work. These scientists were supported by technical staff and research ship services.

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—MOTOR VEHICLE PARKING

Question No. 2,095—Mr. Atkey:

1. What governmental authority or agency is responsible for setting the motor vehicle parking fees at the Toronto International Airport at Malton?

2. What criteria are adopted in setting the motor vehicle parking fees and, in particular, what margin of profit is allowed to the parking lot operator?

3. What were the gross and net receipts respectively for the open and indoor parking lots at Toronto International Airport at Malton for 1970, 1971 and 1972?

4. What is the present motor vehicle parking capacity at Toronto International Airport at Malton and how is this divided between open air and indoor parking spaces?

5. What percentage of the parking spaces are allocated to official cars, rental car agencies or other reserve purposes and what charge is made for these parking spaces in each instance?

6. Apart from the new parking capacity recently opened in conjunction with Terminal 2 at Toronto International Airport, what additional parking capacity is expected to be added in the near future?

7. Which company or agency operates the shuttle bus service between Terminal 1, Terminal 2 and the outdoor parking lots at Toronto International Airport and which government authority or agency determines the standard and level of service to be provided and the fare to be charged?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. The Ministry of Transport.

2. The parking fees take into account the cost of providing and maintaining the facilities and the rates charged for comparable parking facilities in the downtown area of Toronto. The public parking areas are operated for the ministry under a contract awarded after a public tender call. All parking fees collected by the contractor are deposited daily to the credit of the Receiver General of Canada. The contractor is paid his actual wage costs not exceeding the total annual amount tendered plus fixed management fee as tendered.

3. Fiscal year ending	Gross Revenue $	Net Revenue $
March 31, 1971	2,380,404	672,708*
March 31, 1972	2,972,283	1,178,928*
March 31, 1973	3,741,790	1,610,200*

*After deduction of depreciation, interest and overhead.

4. There are 9,646 parking spaces of which 2,290 are indoor and 7,356 are outdoor.

5. 32 per cent of the car parking spaces are allocated for non-public parking as follows: (i) 70 spaces indoors for tenants, $40 per month; (ii) 272 spaces outside for tenants, $25 per month; (iii) 2,037 spaces outside remote locations for tenants' employees, $5 per employee per month; (iv) 712 spaces for Crown employees, no charge.

6. Present plans call for approximately 900 additional employee parking spaces by March 31, 1975 and 3,000 additional public parking spaces by March 31, 1976.

7. The services are provided by Air Terminal Transport under an agreement with the Ministry of Transport. The ministry determines the standard and level of service and the fare to be charged.

FERRY SERVICES—ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Question No. 2,097—Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix):

1. At what level does the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport extend in relation to ferryboats operating on the St. Lawrence?

2. Since 1968, what amount has been invested by the government on ferry services at (a) Matane-Godbout-Baie-Comeau (b) Rimouski-Forestville (c) Rivière-du-Loup-Saint-Siméon (d) Trois-Pistoles-Escoumins?

3. If the government has jurisdiction of the service between Rivière-du-Loup and Saint-Siméon, does it anticipate doubling the service?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. The Ministry of Transport has at present no jurisdiction over the operational or financial aspects of the ferry services on the St. Lawrence, but does have, through acts and regulations responsibility for enforcement of procedures relating to matters such as navigation, ship safety, etc.

2. A grant of $6 million was provided to the province of Quebec in 1972 for the construction of a new ferry for the Matane-Godbout-Baie Comeau service, half from the Ministry of Transport and half from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. At that time the province took over responsibility for operating subsidies which had been provided by the CTC. The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: One of the services, namely the Rivière-du-Loup-Saint-Siméon, did receive a federal subsidy since 1968. The payments were as follows: 1968-69, $21,000; 1969-70, $21,000; 1970-71, $21,000; 1971-72, $21,000; total: $84,000. In so far as the Department of Public Works is concerned: (a) Matane-Godbout-Baie Comeau, $938,-734.64; (b) Rimouski-Forestville, Nil; (c) Rivière-du-Loup-Saint-Siméon, $266,332.45; (d) Trois-Pistoles-Escoumins, $104,564.65.

3. Not applicable (see answer to question 1).

CBC RADIO PROGRAM—"AS IT HAPPENS"

Question No. 2,154—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

In order, what were the 25 topics most frequently arranged for discussion on CBC radio program "As It Happens" in the period May 1, 1972 to April 30, 1973 and how many times in that period was the discussion arranged on each topic listed?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: In view of the workload involved, the CBC discussed this question with the hon. member who kindly agreed to an attempt by the Corporation to provide a satisfactory response based on a four-month period as opposed to the full year requested. As subsequently explained to the hon. member, however, efforts to meet the intent of the question have not been successful because the necessary information is not readily available and it would be time-consuming and costly to complete the research required on the part of program staff to establish a meaningful listing of topics.

EARNSCLIFFE

Question No. 2,159—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. What was (a) the date (b) the result of the last attempt by the government to secure from the Government of Great Britain the return to Canada of the Earnscliffe residence of Sir John A. Macdonald?

2. On what date is it intended to initiate another attempt to have this historic Canadian house returned to Canadian control?

3. If no such initiative is intended, for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. While discussions have been held with the British authorities from time to time concerning Earnscliffe, the Canadian government has not attempted to acquire control of the property.

2. At the present time, no plans exist to open discussions for the acquisition of this property.

3. This historic building is being conscientiously maintained by the British High Commissioner. None the less, the government may wish to enter into discussions to acquire this property for the nation at some future time should an appropriate opportunity arise.

AIR CANADA—ASSISTANCE TO AVIS CAR RENTAL AGENCIES

Question No. 2,189—Mr. Gleave:

Has any assistance or promotion been extended to Avis Car Rental agencies at Canadian airports by Air Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Air Canada management advises as follows: Each year more and more passengers come to Air Canada for all elements of what is termed the "total travel experience"—an airline seat combined with a place to stay, a sight-seeing trip, a rental car, etc. As part of the activities being developed to satisfy this demand, the company has initiated a program whereby a passenger can, at the same time as making his flight arrangements, also reserve a rental car. Each of the three major rent-a-car firms in Canada (Tilden, Avis and Hertz) was approached regarding participation in this program. Proposals were reviewed and a complete plan selected which best satisfied Air Canada's commercial and service interests. The plan involves certain arrangements with Avis. However, these are non-exclusive; if the customer asks for a Tilden car or one from any other particular agency, an attempt is made to satisfy his request. Promotion of car rental agencies is done independently of this program. Avis is mentioned in Air Canada advertising material promoting travel tour programs in which Avis is participating, such as "Air Canada's Happy Holidays in Europe", and Tilden in programs such as "Beautiful British Columbia Bargain" and "Skifari".

NATIONAL DEFENCE—MAINTENANCE AND TERM EMPLOYEES

Question No. 2,199—Mr. Forrestall:

1. How many Department of National Defence maintenance work and service work is carried on by term employees?

2. Will the government give consideration to absorb such term employees with more than one year service into its indeterminate work force, to provide for such employees the same level of protection afforded to other public servants and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, how soon?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. As of July 1973: General Labour and Trades, 2,649; General Services, 910; Ship Repair, 1,266; total 4,825.

2. There is no policy or procedure at the present time which will permit the department to appoint a term employee to indeterminate status automatically after 12 months' employment. When an indeterminate position is to be filled, normally all term employees in the group and level of the position being filled will be considered. The decision as to which term employee is to be appointed is based on the merit principle as required by the Public Service Employment Act and Regulations. All unsuccessful term employees in the area of competition are then given right of appeal against the decision. The department has in the past several months reviewed the status of all term positions, and as a result of the study approximately 1,100 new permanent positions were created. These positions will be filled from the term employees in the department's work force. The department will continue this review with the object of keeping the requirement for term employment to a minimum level.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—SUB-CONTRACTING

Question No. 2,203—Mr. Forrestall:

Is it the policy of the Department of National Defence to extend the practice of subcontracting beyond the present level of subcontracts?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The few service contracts National Defence places directly are for consultants, cleaning services, etc., and the department first examines whether its own personnel can do the work before arranging contracts. At this time, the department does not envisage any significant change in the amount of this type of work which will be carried out by its own employees and the amount contracted out to private industry.

EMPLOYMENT OF FOREIGN NATIONALS—COASTAL VESSEL "TRAVETAL"

Question No. 2,218—Mr. Olaussen:

1. Is it government policy to subsidize the employment of foreign nationals in Canada such as Germans, Austrians, Spaniards, Portuguese and Moroccans and, if so, does the policy prevent job opportunities for unemployed Canadians?

2. Do these nationalities comprise the total crew of the coastal vessel Travetal and was this vessel guaranteed a five year subsidy amounting to $350,000?

3. Before or after the decision was made to grant such a subsidy, did the government make any attempt to request the Canadian shipping industry to tender Canadian ships employing Canadian crews in the trade in which the Travetal is currently employed and, if so, what were (a) the names of the shipping companies which were contacted (b) the dates the shipping companies were contacted (c) the persons contacted (d) the subsidy made in each case?

4. Was the Travetal initially permitted to enter the coasting trade of Canada because no suitable Canadian ships were available and, if so, what is the definition of a suitable ship for this trade?

5. Will the government undertake to transfer the existing subsidy and other assistance allowance, if any, to the owner of any Canadian ship when such ship becomes available and, if not, for what reason?

6. Were the Canadian vessels OK Service and Federal Hudson and their crews replaced with the vessel Travetal and its crew and, if so, is it the intention of the government to assist the owners and employees of these Canadian vessels and, if no assistance is planned, are there any assistance programs for which the owners and employees of these vessels would qualify?

7. For what reasons are the Travetal and similar vessels permitted permanent entry into the coasting trade of Canada and do they contravene the provisions of the Alien Labour Act?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Manpower and Immigration, the Canadian Transport Commission, and the Department of National Revenue as follows: 1. It is not the policy of the Department of Manpower and Immigration to subsidize the employment of foreign nationals in Canada.

2. No.

3. A careful scrutiny of the List of Shipping failed to reveal the existence of a suitable vessel under Canadian flag.

4. Yes; there was not any roll-on/roll-off end-loader vessel available under Canadian flag.

5. This is a hypothetical question.

6. No.

7. Under Section 662 of the Canada Shipping Act the Minister of National Revenue has no option but to issue a Coasting License, upon application, to a foreign-built, British registered ship upon which the duty has been paid. The Travetal is registered in Singapore and is owned in the United Kingdom thus qualifying as a British registered ship. Full duty was paid in Halifax in the spring of 1972. Such vessels are subject to all generally applicable legislation. (The Alien Act does not come under the purview of the Department of National Revenue.)

VISIT BY GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS TO LOCKHEED SHIPBUILDING, SEATTLE, WASHINGTON

Question No. 2,224—Mr. Forrestall:

Is it the intention of the government to give priority to initiating consultations with the government of the United States as to what the probable use of the two icebreakers of 60,000 plus horsepower that the United States Coast Guard and Department of Transport have under construction in Seattle, Washington will be in terms of precise areas and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Not required at this time as it is not considered to be necessary.

CONSULTATIONS WITH UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT RELATING TO ICEBREAKERS

Question No. 2,225—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What are the names of the officials of the government who have visited Lockheed Shipbuilding of Seattle, Washington, with respect to the two polar icebreakers being built there, as indicated would be done in response to Question No. 1,901, Part 6?

2. What has been the result of such consultation in terms of probable area of use for such vessels, specifically, will these vessels be used in the Canadian Arctic Archipelago?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Captain I. Green and Mr. R. A. Lawrence of Canadian Coast Guard and Mr. R. Gilbert of the Department of Supply and Services.

2. It is our understanding that these vessels will be used in Antarctic and Alaskan waters.

EMPLOYMENT OF ICEBREAKERS IN THE CANADIAN ARCTIC ARCHIPELAGO

Question No. 2,226—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Has the government of the United States given assurances to the government that the two polar icebreakers under construction by Lockheed Shipbuilding Co. Ltd. of Seattle, Washington will not be employed in the Canadian Arctic Archipelago?

2. Have such assurances been sought by the government and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, on what dates?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. No.

2. Not considered necessary at this time.

CANADIAN POLAR ICEBREAKER

Question No. 2,227—Mr. Forrestall:

With respect to response to Question No. 1,901, Part 7 and in the light of the U.S. Polar icebreaker construction program to be completed in three years, for what reason are Canadian plans for Canadian polar icebreaker capability not being altered or accelerated?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Plans were accelerated but this was not related to the U.S. program. We became aware of possible ore and other Arctic developments moving ahead which might require the support services of a polar icebreaker and we directed our program towards being able to provide the necessary capability.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO LA LIGUE DES DROITS DE L'HOMME, MONTREAL

Question No. 2,257—Mr. Hellyer:

Has "La Ligue des droits de l'homme" of Montreal received any financial assistance from the government since January 1, 1972 under the Local Initiatives Program, the Opportunities for Youth or any other federal program and, if so, on what dates and in what amounts?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The Local Initiatives Program and the Opportunities for Youth did not make any grant to this project since January 1, 1972. However, the following amounts were given to "La Ligue des droits de l'homme": Secretary of State Department, September 11, 1972, $10,000; Secretary of State Department, February 13, 1973, $7,000; Canada Council, March 28, 1973, $23,000.

NOVA SCOTIA—OFY GRANTS

Question No. 2,269—Mr. Nowlan:

By federal constituency in the province of Nova Scotia for the 1973 period (a) how many applications for OFY grants were received (b) how many projects were approved (c) what was the total amount in dollars involved (d) how many man-weeks of employment were generated by the projects approved?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): (a) A list of all projects funded under the 1973 Opportunities for Youth Program has been compiled. Projects are classified by provinces and in alphabetical order of the towns and localities in which projects are being carried out, not by constituency. Information includes the project title and number, a short description of the project's activities, amount of the grant, number of participants and the name and address of the project representative. This listing has been circulated to members of parliament. The number of applications received from the Province of Nova Scotia for OFY grants in 1973 was 549; (b) 260; (c) and (d) $1,646,509, providing 18,455 man-weeks of employment.

LIST OF LAWYERS MAINTAINED FOR GOVERNMENT LEGAL WORK IN P.E.I.

Question No. 2,271—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names, addresses and electoral districts of all lawyers maintained by the Department of Justice for government legal work in the province of Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): The Department of Justice does not maintain names and addresses of lawyers who have acted as legal agents by reference to electoral boundaries; nor does it maintain a list of lawyers retained for future work since lawyers are not so retained. The names and addresses of all lawyers who appear in the records of the Department of Justice as having performed legal services on behalf of the Minister of Justice in the province of Prince Edward Island for the period April 1, 1972 to March 31, 1973 are set forth in the following list:

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Bell, Morley, Summerside; Ghiz, J. A., Charlottetown; Large, Frederick A., Charlottetown; MacDonald G. Bruce, Summerside; MacDonald, Kennedy R., Montague; MacCleod, Summerside; McMahon George R., Summerside; Mullaly, George J., Charlottetown; O'Donnell Lester, Charlottetown; Sigsworth, D.F., Charlottetown; Tweedy, G. G., Charlottetown.

LIST OF LAWYERS MAINTAINED FOR GOVERNMENT LEGAL WORK IN MANITOBA

Question No. 2,275—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names, addresses and electoral districts of all lawyers maintained by the Department of Justice for government legal work in the Province of Manitoba?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): The Department of Justice does not maintain names and addresses of lawyers who have acted as legal agents by reference to electoral boundaries; nor does it maintain a list of lawyers retained for future work since lawyers are not so retained. The names and addresses of all lawyers who appear in the records of the Department of Justice as having performed legal services on behalf of the Minister of Justice in the province of Manitoba for the period April 1, 1972 to March 31, 1973 are set forth in the following list: Bromley, Paul H., Winnipeg; Dewar, A. S., Winnipeg; Dilts, Gordon C., Winnipeg; Ferg, Patrick, Flin Flon; Margolis, David, Winnipeg.

LIST OF LAWYERS MAINTAINED FOR GOVERNMENT LEGAL WORK IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 2,277—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names, addresses and electoral districts of all lawyers maintained by the Department of Justice for government legal work in the province of Newfoundland?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): The Department of Justice does not maintain names and addresses of lawyers who have acted as legal agents by reference to electoral boundaries; nor does it maintain a list of lawyers retained for future work since lawyers are not so retained. The names and addresses of all lawyers who appear in the records of the Department of Justice as having performed legal services on behalf of the Minister of Justice in the province of Newfoundland for the period April 1, 1972 to March 31, 1973 are set forth in the following list: Adams, W. G., St. John's; Aylward, Fintan J., St. John's; Barry, Leo D., St. John's; Barlett & Co., St. John's; Barlett, Rupert W., St. John's; Carter, Alan William, St. John's; Clarke, George W., St. John's; Curtis, Dawe & Fagan, St. John's; Fowler, F. P., St. John's; Hawco, L. C., Corner Brook; Lewis, Aylward & Crosbie, St. John's; Lewis, P. D., St. John's; Martin, Easton, Woolridge, Corner Brook; Mattews, Claude, Grand falls; Sparkes David B., St. John's; Wells Clyde, Corner Brook.

LIST OF LAWYERS MAINTAINED FOR GOVERNMENT LEGAL WORK IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 2,278—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names, addresses and electoral districts of all lawyers maintained by the Department of Justice for government legal work in the province of New Brunswick?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): The Department of Justice does not maintain names and addresses of lawyers who have acted as legal agents by reference to electoral boundaries; nor does it maintain a list of lawyers retained for future work since lawyers are not so retained. The names and addresses of all lawyers who appear in the records of the Department of Justice as having performed legal services on behalf of the Minister of Justice in the Province of New Brunswick for the period April 1, 1972 to March 31, 1973 are set forth in the following list. Abbis, Chaiker, Edmunston; Appleby Olmstead & Quinn, Fredericton; Barry, John P., St. John; Bill, Edward, St. Andrews; Brison, Emery Charles, Moncton; Burchell, William, Newcastle; Casey, Gerald T., St. John; Chiasson, Paul-Émile, Bathurst; Cyr, L. H. Léonide, Moncton; Drummie, Thomas D., St. John; Godin, Gérard, Shippegan; Gorman, Patrick G., St. John: Harrigan, A.G., St. John; Messrs Hoyt & Dixon, Fredericton; Hoyt, W. L., Fredericton; Hughes, David G., Fredericton; Keating, Lloyd E., Moncton; Lahey, Edward J., St. John; Lampert, Irwin, Moncton; Leblanc, Bernard, Moncton; Lebouthillier, Alie A., Caraquet; Leger, Frankling O., St. John; Lordon, Paul, Newcastle; McGinley, Eugene, Fredericton; McNair, John C., Fredericton; Maddox, Paul B., Woodstock; Malone, Brian, Fredericton; Meldrum, W. W., Sackville; Michaud, Leblanc & Robichaud, Buctouche; Mitton, Irving G., Moncton; Mitton, Myron, Moncton; Purnell & Brien, St. John; Purnell, Lyman F. D., Sussex; Radford, R. E., Moncton; Clarence Roy, Moncton; Roy & Lasier, Moncton; Tingley, Richard J., Campbellton.

LIST OF LAWYERS MAINTAINED FOR GOVERNMENT LEGAL WORK IN NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 2,279—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names, addresses and electoral districts of all lawyers maintained by the Department of Justice for government legal work in the province of Nova Scotia?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): The Department of Justice does not maintain names and addresses of lawyers who have acted as legal agents by reference to electoral boundaries; nor does it maintain a list of lawyers retained for future work since lawyers are not so retained. The names and addresses of all lawyers who appear in the records of the Department of Justice as having performed legal services on behalf of the Minister of Justice in the Province of Nova Scotia for the period April 1, 1972 to March 31, 1973 are set forth in the following list: Akerman, John R., Truro; Allaby, V. B., Lunenburg; Brown, David E., Halifax; Burchell, C. D. Sydney; Clements, Lester L., Liverpool; Clements, S. Ford, Liverpool; Crowell, Kenneth L., Middleton; Eaton, K.E., Halifax; Fergeson, Robert F., Sydney; Flinn, Edward J., Halifax; Fowke, Fred, El., Bridgewater; Fraser, D. J., Yarmouth; Grant, C. Wilkie, Guysborough; Hackett, James G. North Sydney; Hall, Donald M., Berwick; Hicks, E. Claire, Amherst; Kennedy, J. P., Bridgewater; Kennedy, Kendall J., Bridgewater; Lawrence, William R., Windsor; Leblanc, Arthur, Fort Hawkesbury; McCunn, R. F. River Philip; McDonald Ian, Yarmouth; McDonnell, Hugh J., New Glasgow; MacGillivray, A. Boyd, Yarmouth; McInnis, A. D., Antigonish; MacIsaac, John, Halifax; MacClellan, J. Alexander, Kentville; Nichols, D. Arthur, Truro; Nichols, John R., Digby; Parker, T. Robert, New Glasgow; Pink, Irving C., Yarmouth; Richard, K. Peter, Antigonish; Rogers, R. M., Digby; Rosenblum, C. M., Sydney; Ryan, Murray J., North Sydney; Saumuers, E. R., Lunenburg; Tramble, T. Daniel, Antigonish; Winters, Robert, J., Truro.

LIST OF LAWYERS MAINTAINED FOR GOVERNMENT LEGAL WORK IN METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Question No. 2,281—Mr. Cossitt:

What lawyers who practice in Metropolitan Toronto were selected by the Minister of Justice for government legal work during the past fiscal year and how much money was paid in the way of fees to each such person during the past fiscal year?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): The lawyers practising in Metropolitan Toronto whose names appear listed below were engaged as legal agents to act on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada from time to time during the period April 1, 1972 to March 31, 1973. The aggregate amount for the year, paid to each, is set opposite their respective names. Bowman, D. G. H., $20,112,11; Charlton, W. G., $450.00; Curran, Lyle F., $230.00; Decory, Peter, $7,192.50; Fashen & Calvin, $3,759.47; Hansberger, John D., $4,055.88; Laidlaw, Douglas K., $14,699.77; MacLean, Ken & Lyons, $5,576.88; Sedgwick, Joseph, $3,000.00; Sexton, J. E., $6,050.71; Talsky Marvin, $13.43; Williston, Walter B., $40,494.81.

LIST OF LAWYERS MAINTAINED FOR GOVERNMENT LEGAL WORK IN OTTAWA

Question No. 2,282—Mr. Cossitt:

What lawyers who practice in city of Ottawa were selected by the Minister of Justice for government legal work during the past fiscal year and how much money was paid in the way of fees to each such person during the past fiscal year?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): The lawyers practising in the City of Ottawa whose names appear listed below were engaged as legal agents to act on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada from time to time during the period April 1, 1972 to March 31, 1973. The aggregate amount for the year, paid to each, is set opposite their respective names. Gowling, E. G., $540.00; Gowling, MacTavish & Co., $19,021.67; Green, W. T., $10,651.50; MacDonald, T. D., $8,500.00; Poulin, H. $8,755.90; Scott, Cuthbert, $7,784.80; Smart & Biggar, $8,894.15.

STANDARDIZATION OF DESIGN OF EXTERNAL ADAPTORS TO SUBMERSIBLE VESSELS

Question No. 2,322—Mr. Forrestall:

Will the government give urgent consideration to initiating international discussions to provide for a standardization of design and construction of external adaptors to submersible vessels to ensure universal ability to service any such vessel in terms of life extension and preservation pending delayed rescue, in the event that such vessels would become endangered outside the area of possible operational rescue ability of the nation to which such vessels would be registered, or in whose waters they would normally be operating?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The Ministry of Transport has representation on an international committee which was created to deal with technical matters concerning submersibles, under the auspices of the American Bureau of Shipping. This committee feels that it would be premature to attempt to lay down specific rules for the design and construction of submersibles at this time. However, a guide for the classification of manned submersibles has been prepared for use during the interim period preceding accumulation of actual operating experience in order to make information available and to discuss the basic considerations for safety and reliability without tending to hamper future developments. The question of standardization of external adaptors will be raised in committee. In so far as military submersible vessels are concerned, the Department of National Defence conforms to the international standards contained in a Standard NATO Agreement entitled "Adaptors for supply of high pressure air to sunken NATO Submarines".

SUBMERSIBLE VESSELS—INTERNAL EMERGENCY BACK-UP METHOD OF LIFE PRESERVATION

Question No. 2,323—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Will the government ensure that no submersible vessel of any type is ever employed within waters inside the jurisdictional purview of the government that does not have at least one internal emergency back-up method of life preservation and extension, other than just escape capability, to permit delayed rescue in the event of underwater entrapment?

2. Will the government give the highest priority to such absolutely mandatory requirements, in the light of recent demonstration of technological fallibility in the United States?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. The Ministry of Transport is aware that there may well be a need for some form of internal emergency back-up system of life preservation to form part of the safety equipment for any submersible required by the Canada Shipping Act to be inspected and certificated. The technical feasibility of such a system, particularly with smaller submersibles where limited space is one of the critical factors, requires further study.

2. The priority given to this subject must depend on the need for regulations and requirements in other aspects of safety of life at sea and pollution prevention.

SUBMERSIBLE VESSELS—EXTERNAL FITTINGS DESIGNED TO PERMIT PRESERVATION OF LIFE

Question No. 2,324—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Will the government ensure that no submersible vessel of any type is ever employed within waters under the jurisdictional purview of the government that does not have multiple external fittings designed to permit the preservation and extension of life, in terms of air adaptors, voice communications and food passages, in the event of underwater entrapment?

[Mr. Forrestall.]

2. Will the government give the highest priority to such absolutely mandatory requirements, in the light of recent demonstration of technological fallibility in the United States?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. The technical feasibility of whether such adaptors should be fitted on all submersibles required by the Canada Shipping Act to be inspected and certificated will be thoroughly investigated.

2. The priority given to this subject must depend on the need for regulations and requirements in other aspects of safety of life at sea and pollution prevention.

SUBMERSIBLE VESSELS—ESSENTIAL LIFE PRESERVING ESCAPE CAPABILITY

Question No. 2,326—Mr. Forrestall:

Does every Canadian-owned or leased submersible vessel, including mini-subs, conventional submarines and diving bells have more than one essential life preserving and/or escape capability and, if not, which ones are so lacking and for what reason?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The Ministry of Transport does not have details of all Canadian-owned or leased submersibles as not all are required to be inspected under the Canada Shipping Act due to their small gross tonnage. Those on which we do have information have more than one life preserving and/or escape capability. In so far as the Department of National Defence is concerned, escape from the conventional military submarines of the Canadian Forces can be achieved by successive use by the crew of the two single-man escape towers fitted, or by use of a McCann Bell carried by USN submarine rescue ships. The "O" class submarines are also being modified to be capable of receiving the USN Deep Submergence Rescue Vehicle. SDL-1 has three separate sources of air that will support six men for an approximate total of 90 hours. It may also achieve positive buoyancy in four different ways and escape can be achieved through the lock-out compartment as long as the depth is not excessive.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—RESCUE PROCEDURE FOR SUBMERSIBLES, MARITIME COMMAND

Question No. 2,329—Mr. Forrestall:

What is the present government capability to provide emergency rescue facilities and capability in the event of entrapment or malfunction of submersible vessels operating within the purview of Canadian jurisdiction?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The government capability to provide emergency rescue facilities, in the event of a submersible vessel mishap, is provided on the east coast by the Department of National Defence submersible SDL-1 and on the west coast by the Department of the Environment submersible Pisces IV. If required either submersible can be air-lifted from either one coast to the other to facilitate or augment rescue activities.

PROPOSAL FROM FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY FOR ORE CARRIERS

Question No. 2,330—Mr. Forrestall:

Does the government anticipate receiving from the Federal Republic of Germany, of from firms based therein, in (a) 1973 (b) 1974 (c) 1975 a detailed proposal for ore carriers with Arctic ice capability and, if so, from what firm or firms is this expected?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. (a) No; (b) no; (c) no.

GOVERNMENT INTEREST IN ORE CARRIERS WITH POLAR CAPABILITY

Question No. 2,331—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Has the government indicated to Canadian industry its interest in proposals for ore carriers with polar capability?

2. Has the government sought from Canadian interests such proposals and (a) if so (i) on what date (ii) from what specific firms (iii) in what manner was the invitation extended (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. The Ministry of Transport has indicated to Canadian industries its interest in learning the types and numbers of vessels that could prove most suitable for potential Arctic ore trades.

2. No; (b) the Ministry of Transport has not sought proposals from Canadian industries on ore carriers with polar capability because it does not contemplate entering the ore trade. Its officials have, however, discussed in conceptual terms various ideas on ore carriers on various occasions with representatives of naval architectural firms, Canadian and foreign operating companies and other interested marine groups.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—MARITIME COMMAND, OPERATION ABOVE 60 DEGREES OF UNDERWATER VESSELS

Question No. 2,333—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What are the specific plans for developing an underwater capability for Maritime Command, north of 60 degrees parallel?

2. On what date can these plans be expected to be in operational phase, or when will the first of any new series of underwater vessels be put into service?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1 and 2. Maritime Command submarines now operate in some waters north of 60 degrees north latitude during certain times of the year. Whether or not this underwater capability will be enhanced or expanded is dependent upon staff studies now in progress.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—SURFACE AND AIR CAPABILITY NORTH OF 60 DEGREE LATITUDE

Question No. 2,334—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What are the specific plans for developing a surface capability for Maritime Command, exclusive of aerial reconnaissance, north of 60 degrees parallel?

2. On what date can these plans be expected to be put into operational phase, or when will the first surface vessels be in service?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1 and 2. Maritime Command surface ships now operate in some waters north of 60 degrees north latitude during certain times of the year. Whether or not this surface capability will be enhanced or expanded is dependent upon staff studies now in progress.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—MARITIME CAPABILITY NORTH OF 60 DEGREES PARALLEL

Question No. 2,336—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is consideration being given to Maritime Command capability north of 60 degrees parallel and, if so, in what substantive form?

2. If there is present capacity, what is it, exclusive of Canadian Coast Guard capability as listed in response to Question No. 1,900?

3. If there is no existing capability for operations north of 60 degrees parallel, for what reason?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. As a result of the guidelines set forth in "Defence in the 70s", Canada's military maritime force requirements are under review to ensure that the Maritime Command has the capability to meet its assigned roles.

2. Ships of Maritime Command are capable of operating north of 60 degrees north latitude during certain times of the year; aircraft at all times.

3. Not applicable.

ASSIGNMENT OF COAST GUARD VESSELS

Question No. 2,339—Mr. Forrestall:

Are all Department of Transport vessels assigned to Canadian Coast Guard service and, if not, which ones are not so assigned, and for what reason?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): All vessels owned by the Ministry of Transport are operated by the Canadian Coast Guard with the exception of ferries and coasting vessels owned by the ministry and operated by Canadian National Railways. It should be noted that Schedule C and D Corporations reporting to the Minister of Transport operate their own craft.

USE OF RECYCLED PAPER

Question No. 2,353—Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain):

1. What actions that specifically promote the use of recycled paper have been undertaken by the government in the past five years?

2. Have any new initiatives been undertaken in 1973 and, if so, what are they?

3. Does the government have a policy that specifies a certain percentage of all paper ordered is recycled paper and (a) if so, on what date was such a policy effected (b) if not, is it the intention of the government to undertake such a policy?

4. Has the government held any meetings with the publishing industry with regard to the use of recycled paper and, if not, are any meetings planned in this regard?

5. Has the government considered making incentives of any type available for those firms and organizations that use recycled paper?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): 1. Prior to undertaking specific action to promote use of recycled paper, the government feels it necessary to consider what disadvantages there may be which would offset any assumed benefits, particularly the implications for primary manufacturers, the effects on employment distribution, any possible additional pollution or environmental hazards, and the acceptability and costs of products made from recycled materials.

2. During 1973, as part of the prior investigation, a study has been completed by the Economics Institute of the Canadian Forestry Service of the Department of the Environment relating to Consumption of Paper Stock in Canada. This report will be released for publication later in the year. It is the first of a series intended to gather essential information and statistics prerequisite to formulation of any recycling policy. This work also parallels major studies being undertaken by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce relating to the Forest Products Industry. Investigation of the economics and technical capabilities for paper recycling in Canada is also being undertaken internally within the Environmental Protection Service (Solid Waste Management Division) of the Department of the Environment conjointly with these other groups.

3. The government does not specify any percentage of recycled paper in its orders for products. Products containing recycled material are accepted provided they meet the other specified requirements. (a) not applicable; (b) it is intended to formulate a policy when sufficient is known regarding the matters raised in answer to the first question.

4. No.

5. No.

CN CHARTERED VESSEL "PRINCESS OF TASMANIA"

Question No. 2,378—Mr. McGrath:

1. What is the port of registry of CN chartered vessel Princess of Tasmania?

2. What is the name of the company who owns this vessel?

3. Who are the registered owners or shareholders of this company?

4. What was the cost to the government of the renovations to this vessel?

5. What is the actual cost of the charter in Canadian funds?

6. What is the purchase price of the vessel?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. The port of registry of the Princess of Tasmania is London, England.

2. She is owned by the Bahamarine Limited.

3. Bahamarine Limited of Nassau, Bahamas, are the registered owners, and while we do not have a full listing of the shareholders, the controlling interest in the company is held by Mr. W. Vandersteel and Mr. R. H. Imlah, President and Vice President respectively, of Ampower Corporation of New Jersey, U.S.A.

4. The cost to the government of the renovations to this vessel amounted to $520,000.

5. The charter costs $1,397 per day.

6. At the time the vessel became available, the firm sale price was stated as $1,750,000.

[Mr. Davis.]

UPGRADING OF CCGS "LABRADOR"

Question No. 2,397—Mr. Forrestall:

1. With respect to answer to Question No, 1,900 and the indication therein that it was intended to upgrade the capability of said vessel in 1973-74, what is the present status of such upgrading of the CCGS Labrador in terms of amount budgeted for upgrading and percentage of such work completed as of June 30, 1973?

2. On what date will such work be completed on the CCGS Labrador?

3. Since commencement of upgrading of CCGS Labrador, how many work stoppages have occurred, for what reasons and for what durations?

4. Does the government intend to complete such upgrading as indicated would be done to CCGS Labrador in response to Question No, 1,900 and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. The upgrading program for CCGS Labrador involves two phases. Phase 1, the repowering, has been budgeted at $300,000. As of June 30, 1973, 95 per cent of this work had been completed and 85 per cent of the funds expended. Phase II is upgrading and mordernizing the ship's accomodation. This project is budgeted at $1,300,000.

2. Phase I has been completed. It is anticipated that a contract will be let for phase II by the end of January 1974.

3. No work stoppages have occurred since the commencement of the upgrading program.

4. Yes, the government intends to complete the upgrading as it indicated would be done in its response to Question No. 1,900.

AIR CARRIERS—HANDLING OF HAZARDOUS MATERIAL

Question No. 2,410—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to requiring air carriers and air carrier suppliers to establish training programs ensuring the safe carriage and handling of hazardous materials?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No. To date, the handling of radioactive materials for shipment by aircraft has not been a problem. However this ministry is aware of the developments in this matter in the U.S.A. and is reviewing existing controls in the handling of all hazardous materials, including those which have radioactive properties.

EXPROPRIATION FOR VALCARTIER BASE, MIRABEL AIRPORT AND PICKERING AIRPORT

Question No. 2,416—Mr. Godin:

What were the average amounts paid to the residents of the expropriated areas of (a) Shannon, Quebec, for the expansion of the Valcartier Base (b) Ste. Scholastique for the Mirabel Airport (c) Toronto for the Pickering Airport?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): (a) $13,757. This figure represents the average amount paid to all owners. All but one were residents and all but one have accepted final settlement. (b) $30,615. This figure represents the average amount paid up to July 1, 1973, to all owners, lessees and other interests. Amounts paid only to residents cannot readily be supplied from existing records. Final settlement is not yet completed in 360 cases. (c) $72,615. This figure represents the average amount paid up to July 13, 1973, to all owners and lessees, but excluding mortgagees. Under the new Expropriation Act, mortgagees are paid separately from owners. Amounts paid only to residents cannot readily be supplied from existing records. No final settlements have yet been made.

VICTORIA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—BUS LINE SERVICE

Question No. 2,428—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. (a) On what date was the contract let to a bus line to carry passengers to and from Victoria to Victoria International Airport (b) what bus line was awarded the contract?

2. For what duration was the contract?

3. How many companies tendered for the contract?

4. On what date will requests for tenders be invited for renewal of the contract?

5. If the contract was negotiated in perpetuity, what provisions did it contain for adjustments to take account of (a) increased traffic (b) increases in operating costs?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. The C&C Transportation Company Limited provided ground transportation between Victoria International Airport and the city of Victoria from 1951 to August 14, 1968, at which time it assigned its interests to Vancouver Island Transportation Company Limited. This Company has provided the service since that date.

2. The licence is on a year to year basis, cancellable on thirty days' notice.

3. The contract was not tendered as no other party registered an interest in providing the service.

4. Vancouver Island Transportation Company Limited is providing a satisfactory service, and as no interest has been registered by any other party, the ministry has no plans at this time for calling tenders.

5. The contract was not negotiated in perpetuity. The company pays the ministry a percentage of gross revenue. Increase in passenger traffic therefore results in increased revenue to the ministry. Operating costs are reflected in passenger fares which are approved by the provincial licensing authorities.

LAC MÉGANTIC AIRPORT

Question No. 2,473—Mr. Latulippe:

Does the Department of Transport have plans for the Lac Mégantic Airport and, if so, what ones and at what cost?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The airport is operated by the town of Lac Mégantic. Provision has been made in the department's 1973-74 Airport Financial Assistance Policy program for the department to contribute 90 per cent of the cost, up to a maximum of $110,000, of constructing a 3,000′ × 75′ gravel runway.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY—TWINNING INSIDE BANFF NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 2,481—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. Is it the intention of the government to twin the Trans-Canada Highway inside the gates of Banff National Park?

2. (a) Has there been an announcement in the past two years of an intention to twin that portion of the highway and, if so (i) by whom (ii) on what date (b) for what reason is the decision being reconsidered (c) on what date did reconsideration begin?

3. On what date does the government anticipate making a firm announcement concerning the possibility of twinning that part of the highway?

4. What alternatives to twinning that portion of the highway are being considered?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): 1. A final decision to twin the highway has not yet been taken.

2. (a) An item for twinning the Trans-Canada Highway in Banff appeared in the Department of Public Works' estimates for the years ending March 31, 1973 and 1974. On February 10, 1972, Mr. Allan Sulatycky, then Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, did touch on the subject at a Calgary news conference; (i) See 2 (a); (ii) See 2 (a). (b) The final decision is dependent on a number of influencing factors including environmental impact considerations. (c) After consideration of the consultants pilot report on the environmental impact for the first eight miles in 1972, it was decided to have the consultants conduct a detailed study and prepare a report covering the full section under consideration from the Banff East Gate to the junction of the Icefields Parkway. This report has not yet been received by the federal government.

3. When all studies have been completed and assessed, a decision will be made and an appropriate announcement will be forthcoming, probably early next year.

4. Alternates include the development of other corridors (both existing and new) and possible increased utilization of other modes of transport within a corridor. The evaluation of these alternatives is being undertaken by a group of several federal departments (MOT, DINA and DPW) and the provincial governments of British Columbia and Alberta who provide the facilities that complement the one in question.

E.B. EDDY COMPANY—RENTAL

Question No. 2,490—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Since November 27, 1972, the date the government paid the E.B. Eddy Company 24 million dollars for its plant in Hull, has the Company paid any rent to carry on its operations and, if so, how much does the Company pay per month?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the National Capital Commission is concerned: Since November 27, 1972, the E.B. Eddy Company has paid no rent on the 44 acres of Hull property acquired from the company by the NCC. In addition to continued operations on its remaining property, the company also continues to operate the Groundwood Mill on approximately 2½ acres of property acquired by NCC. As allowed by the terms of the Agreement of Purchase and Sale NCC has granted an extension to October 1, 1974 for demolition of this mill and rental charges are not applicable. To enable the continued operations of the company, the agreement provides that for a period of up to 10 years after the closing date of the agreement, employees of the company will have access to and use of a parking area on land acquired by the NCC.

This land is available without cost for the first two years. Thereafter rental charge will be applicable. In so far as the Department of Public Works is concerned, the department receives the following rentals from E.B. Eddy Company: 1. Steam line under Chaudière Bridge, $1 per annum; 2. Right of Way reserve, Chaudière Island, $96 per annum; 3. Rental of parcel of land, Union Bridge (Chaudière), $40.20 per annum; 4. Rental of Hydraulic lots B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, and J., Chaudière Island, $900 per annum.

RAPESEED

Question No. 2,506—Mr. Nesdoly:

1. Was the rapeseed market manipulated in June, 1973 and, if so, by whom?

2. Who is making the profit on recent price increases in rapeseed?

3. Who is paying the elevator companies 4½ cents storage per bushel per month on rapeseed held in storage?

4. Are bushels of rapeseed being deliberately held off the market for the sole purpose of collecting storage and, if so, how many?

5. (a) Who owns the rapeseed that the elevator companies buy from the producers (b) who puts up the money for these purchases?

6. (a) What was the export price of rapeseed on June 21, 1973 (b) what price was paid to farmers on that date?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): 1. There is no evidence of any manipulation of the rapeseed market in June, 1973. Rapeseed is bought and sold on the open market on the basis of prices determined through the operation of the cash and futures markets of the Winnipeg Commodity Exchange.

2. The price increases for rapeseed in June were caused by a world shortage of oilseeds and products, lack of fishmeal production in Peru and the placing of export controls on oilseeds and products by the United States and Canada. Producers, exporters and elevator companies had equal opportunities to increase their profits.

3. The major role of the country elevator is to buy rapeseed from the producer, assemble it for shipment to ports of exit and load it into rail cars. The price paid by the elevators is known as the street price. Street prices are established by two committees, one in Calgary and one in Winnipeg, reflecting the fact that rapeseed may be shipped through either Thunder Bay or Vancouver. The street price committees establish the daily street price (the price the producer receives at the country elevator) by assessing various factors influencing the delivery of clean rapeseed from the country to export position: rail car availability, cleaning capacity, estimated delivery date. The time allowed is normally 60 days for Thunder Bay and 90 days for Vancouver. A corresponding futures month is then selected for price determination. An operating margin is calculated, allowing for carrying costs and all the costs involved in moving grain from the country elevator to export position, which is deducted from the futures price to arrive at the street price (price paid to producer). The price for any specific country point is determined by deducting freight using established rates. Therefore, costs are borne indirectly by the producer.

4. The producer could hold back his rapeseed from the market hoping to receive a higher price. Rapeseed is not held by the elevator to collect extra handling and storage charges.

5. (a) When the producer sells to the elevator, the rapeseed becomes the property of the elevator; (b) normal business financing by grain companies purchasing the rapeseed from the producer.

6. (a) The export price on June 21 at Thunder Bay was $6 per bushel. Price paid to the producer in Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan on June 21 was $5.49½ per bushel. The export price on June 21 in Vancouver was $6.20 per bushel. The price paid to the producer in west Saskatchewan and Alberta was $5.68 to $5.70 per bushel.

DEPLETION OF BLUE WALLEYE FISH

Question No. 2,508—Mr. Jarvis:

1. Is the Blue Walleye fish extinct and, if not, what would be the estimate of the Department of the Environment of the number of such fish alive in Canadian inland water?

2. Subsequent to the Federal-Provincial Ministerial Conference, January 20 to 24, 1964, what action, policies and programs have been implemented by the government to combat the depletion in numbers of Blue Walleye fish?

3. How does the government determine whether a specific species of fish is increasing or decreasing in numbers, and what action is taken when it is determined that a species is decreasing substantially in numbers thereby creating the possibility of extinction of the species?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): 1 and 2. The Blue Walleye is not extinct but is indeed extremely rare in what was always a very limited area; namely, Lake Erie and the adjacent part of Lake Ontario near the Niagara River. Some of these fish, which are a colour variety of the more common and widespread yellow walleye, are in captivity in hatcheries, in an attempt to preserve them from extinction. The success of this program must, of course, await the test of time. The federal Government is co-operating with the U.S., through the Great Lakes Fishery Commission, and hence also with the province of Ontario and the Great Lakes states, in a program aimed at rehabilitation of walleye in general in Lake Erie.

3. The usual evidence of increasing or decreasing abundance of fish is through increasing or decreasing catches by either sport or commercial fishermen. The action taken in the case of a large and serious decrease depends upon the cause of the decrease, if this can be found. If the decrease is due to excessive fishery exploitation, the attempted remedy takes the form of fishery regulations as seem most appropriate to the situation. Examples would be, catch quotas, size limits, closed seasons and hatchery procedures. If the cause seems to be environmental, as may be at least partly the case in Lake Erie, the road back could be very long or in some cases impossible.

*ISSUANCE OF LICENCES UNDER MIGRATORY BIRDS PROTECTION ACT

Question No. 2,511—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Is the Minister of the Environment going to issue licences under the provisions of the Migratory Birds Protection Act for the shooting of robins and other migratory birds in New Brunswick?

2. Has the Minister received representations against the issue of such licences?

3. What alternative means has the Department considered which might protect blueberry crops and yet avoid the necessity of killing birds?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows. 1. No permits were issued in 1973 under Section 26 of the Migratory Birds Regulations for the shooting of robins in New Brunswick.

2. Yes.

3. This is a complex matter and no single alternative will likely be successful. Among the alternatives being considered and tested are the use of lure crops, acetylene exploders to simulate the sound of shotgun shells, special exploding shells that sound like a shotgun but are not lethal, and close supervision and inspection of harvestable fields by enforcement personnel of the CWS and provincial game branch.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—EXPANSION OF ROYAL ROADS MILITARY COLLEGE

Question No. 2,513—Mr. McKinnon:

Did the Minister of National Defence state that Royal Roads Military College would be expanded and improved, at a cost of several million dollars and, if so (a) what year is the work expected to start (b) what year is the work expected to be completed (c) is any money set aside in the 1973-74 Estimates for this work and (i) if so, how much (ii) if not, on what date is it likely to appear in the Estimates?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): As announced in Vancouver on July 13, 1973, there will be substantially increased capital expenditures for Royal Roads Military College, near Victoria, to place this western military college on an even footing with the Royal Military College at Kingston and Collège Militaire Royal at St. Jean, Quebec.

A new library, costing approximately $1 million, is included in the program. The exact figure for the total program has not yet been determined but it will amount to several million dollars. (a) Work will begin on the library in 1973 and (b) the library is expected to be completed by 1977. During preparation of 1973-74 estimates (c) (i) no expenditure was planned in 1973-74 for Royal Roads; (ii) major expenditures will begin in 1974-75 and will be included in estimates for that year.

FISHING VESSEL INSPECTION

Question No. 2,523—Mr. Marshall:

Under the Fishing Vessel Inspection scheme, will foreign fishing protection officers from vessels fishing in Canadian waters be allowed to board Canadian vessels to inspect in Canadian waters?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): No. Canadian fishing vessels will not be required to submit to inspection by foreign inspectors inside Canadian territorial waters.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—EMPLOYMENT OF MR. GERALD HARTLEY

Question No. 2,525—Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond):

Order Paper Questions

1. Was Mr. Gerald Hartley under contract to the Cape Breton Development Corporation and, if so (a) for what period (b) at what salary?

2. What were the conditions of his separation from the Corporation?

3. Did Mr. Hartley receive any separation pay?

4. Was Mr. Hartley given any paper(s) of recommendation at the time of his separation and, if so (a) who authorized same (b) who signed it?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. No.

2. A result of organization change.

3. Yes.

4. No, though such would have been given if requested.

ICEBREAKING BY AIR CUSHION VEHICLES

Question No. 2,527—Mr. Forrestall:

Has the government considered published data by Sunoco E and P Limited of Calgary with respect to tests carried out in the winter of 1971-1972 at Great Slave Lake in the Northwest Territories on hovercraft, which indicated a clear ability of such air cushion vehicles to cause ice failure or to break ice successfully up to a depth of 27 inches and, if so, will the government consider and undertake to commission an independent outside study on the possibilities of this craft with respect to (a) general capability of the craft as a light icebreaker (b) areas of possible use, such as in the Great Lakes/St. Lawrence system, Gulf and East Coast ports up to north of 60 degrees (c) cost-benefit study including performance and cost comparisons with conventional ice breakers employed in similar areas (d) capability of the craft as a utility vehicle (e) advisability of purchasing suitable air cushion vehicles for proper testing and/or designing prototypes for primary use as ice breakers and service craft (f) other related matters?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Published data with respect to tests carried out by Sunoco E and P Limited in which an air cushion vehicle broke ice up to a depth of 27 inches has been actively considered by the government, and has formed the basis for subsequent tests. The Ministry of Transport and the Departments of Indian and Northern Affairs, Environment and Public Works conducted further tests with this vehicle in the winter of 1972-73 at Tuktoyaktuk, N.W.T. in which the available thickness of ice of 22 inches was broken at about four miles per hour. Further limited tests using a smaller air cushion vehicle were also conducted at Montreal, and corroborated the previous results. Both these vehicles are of the non-self-propelled type and for the purposes of the tests were moved by winches. An interdepartmental working group with representation from the Ministry of Transport, National Research Council, Departments of Environment and Industry, Trade and Commerce has been studying the further application of air cushion technology to icebreaking. Independent studies have been carried out to investigate making non-self-propelled air cushion vehicles self-propelled, and also the design parameters of an air cushion vehicle specifically for icebreaking. There are technical problems to be overcome in providing effective means of self-propulsion, and these are being actively investigated. The mechanism by which ice is broken with air cushion technology is not fully understood and consideration is being given for study to be commissioned in order to identify the significant factors involved, to optimize any future designs. This study will consist of theoretical analysis followed by model work. In parallel with this, further government trials are planned for the winter of 1973-74, involving the use of five different vehicles, including self-propelled air cushion vehicles to broaden the spectrum of practical knowledge. With the knowledge gained from the 1973-74 series of trials and the theoretical study, the government should be in a position in the spring of 1974 to consider the full implications, which are believed to be very significant, of this new form of icebreaking. Also at that time consideration will be given to the further action which may be necessary to realize, as soon as possible, the full potential of this unexpected application of air cushion technology. This action may include commissioning an independent design study for an air cushion icebreaker, the manufacture of a prototype of such a vehicle and the identification of geographical areas where the technology could be applied.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—STUDY OF AIR CUSHION VESSELS, MARITIME COMMAND

Question No. 2,528—Mr. Forrestall:

Has the government considered the United States defence and transport studies on the utilizations of air cushion vehicles as replacements for fleet units up to the level of light cruiser and, if so, will the government undertake to commission an independent, outside study of the potential of this type of vehicle with particular reference to (a) seagoing abilities in all types of seas, together with strengths and weaknesses and possible solutions to deficiencies (b) the ability to effectively handle various weapon and detection systems (c) the ability to effectively contain attack (d) a cost benefit analysis study in relation to present and anticipated operations (e) the ability to function in various geographic areas such as the Polar areas and the Tropics (f) the feasibility of constructing a prototype in Canada designed specifically to meet Canadian defence requirements and as a possible item for export sale?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, it is DND policy to continuously monitor studies conducted by other nations regarding all forms of equipment and vehicles that may have a military application. Canada is represented on several NATO and other Information Exchange Groups through which such information is passed. NDHQ staff officers are presently studying the numbers and types of vessels best suited to meet the requirements of Maritime Command within that Command's sphere of responsibility. With regard to the commissioning of an independent, outside study, it is considered that qualified expertise exists within the department to conduct such a study.

INCO'S SUPER STACK AT COPPER CLIFF, ONTARIO

Question No. 2,539—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. (a) Is the government, through the Department of the Environment, participating in testing the effects of INCO's "super stack" at Copper Cliff, Ontario and if so, with whom is the Department participating in such testing (b) what role is INCO playing in this testing vis à vis facilities, manpower, etc.?

2. (a) If the Department is participating with any other agency or agencies in such testing, how was the competency of the participating agency or agencies established (b) will the Department agree to submit its findings for corroboration by analysis of the third sample (c) will the Department permit interim reports on its findings to the public?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): 1. (a) Yes, with the Ontario Air Management Branch; (b) nil, except providing parking facilities for mobile equipment.

2. (a) The competency of the Ontario Air Management Branch is generally recognized as being the highest of such provincial agencies in Canada; (b) yes; (c) yes, subject to agreement between the federal and provincial control agencies.

COST OF ICEBREAKING OPERATIONS

Question No. 2,544—Mr. McCain:

What were the costs of ice-breaking operations for each fiscal year 1970-71, 1971-72 and 1972-73, in each of the following regions (a) the Maritimes (b) the St. Lawrence River system (c) the Arctic (d) the Pacific coast (e) the Great Lakes?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport):

	1970-71	1971-72	1972-73
			$
(a) Maritimes	not available	not available	6,725,609
(b) St. Lawrence River System			2,757,111
(c) The Arctic (Icebreaking and Escorting)			3,887,000
(d) The Pacific			0
(e) The Great Lakes			550,002

Costs for 1970-71, 1971-72 are not available at this time. It would be necessary to review all ships' logs for this period in order to arrive at the necessary split and this could take several months.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—INTEREST CHARGES

Question No. 2,545—Mr. McCain:

1. What are the estimated fixed charge costs for defrayment of interest charges and amortization of capital costs for the St. Lawrence Seaway for each fiscal year since 1970-17 inclusive?

2. Have these payments been made in accordance with the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act and (a) if so, in what manner (b) if not, how does the Seaway Authority intend to meet these obligations and requirements?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority advises as follows: 1. Under the Financial Administration Act the fiscal year of The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority is stated to be the Calender year. The payment of the following sums would have defrayed interest charges and amortization of capital costs for the Montreal-Lake Ontario section of the Seaway. 1970, $22,400,000; 1971, $23,700,000; 1972, $24,600,000. It is not possible to give comparable figures for the Welland section since the terms and conditions for repayment of indebtedness have not yet been determined.

2. No. (a) The following partial payments were made in respect of the Montreal-Lake Ontario section; 1970, $11,-665,000; 1971, $12,280,000; 1972, $8,749,000. (b) the reorganization of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority's finances has been under study by an interdepartmental committee for some months and a report to the government is expected to be submitted by about October 1.

CNR AND CPR—PROFITS AND LOSSES

Question No. 2,549—Mr. McCain:

What were the profits or losses of Canadian Pacific Railway and Canadian National Railways for each fiscal year 1970-71, 1971-72 and 1972-73 in each of the following regions (a) British Columbia (b) the Prairie Provinces (c) Central Canada (Ontario and Quebec) (d) the Maritimes?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: Neither railway compiles profit or loss statements on a regional basis.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—REJECTION AS A RESULT OF MENTAL ILLNESS

Question No. 2,551—Mr. Rowland:

1. Is a person with a past history of mental illness permanently disqualified from enrolment in the Canadian Armed Forces?

2. In disqualifying persons for enrollment in the Armed Forces on the grounds of a past history of mental illness, are distinctions made on grounds of length of illness, type of illness, severity of the disorder, etc. and, if so, what are the criteria applied?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes, the present regulation contained in CFP 154, Article 719, reads as follows: Psychoses, Psychoneuroses, Character Disorders. The causes for rejection for enrolment are: (a) Psychoses: A history of a definite psychotic episode shall preclude enrolment, except in cases of psychosis of brief duration associated with a toxic or infectious process. (b) Psychoneurosis: A history of a psychoneurotic reaction which has required hospitalization, or prolonged care by a physician, or loss of time from normal pursuits (i.e., impaired school or work efficiency). (c) Character Disorders: (1) A history of antisocial behaviour, encounters with the law, inadequacy, or marked immaturity. (2) Sexual deviation, chronic alcoholism, and drug addiction.

2. As a rule, the above criteria are strictly adhered to, but in some instances of minor character disorders the rules may be relaxed. An episode of proven psychotic reaction, and in cases of psychoneuroses, where hospitalization, relatively prolonged care by a physician, loss of time at work or school have occurred, rejection is habitual. Cases are considered individually, the medical history is analysed and the Medical Board renders a decision. When the illness or disorder is considered to have been of a minor nature, a candidate may be accepted.

*DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE—PAYMENT OF FEES TO MR. DIETRICH BRAND

Question No. 2,560—Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands):

Is it the intention of the Minister of Justice to recognize any government obligation north of 60 degrees, by paying fees and disbursements to Mr. Dietrich Brand, appointed by Mr. Justice William Morrow to act for the Department in current land hearings and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the Department of Justice is concerned, Mr. Dietrich Brand was appointed by Mr. Justice Morrow as amicus curiae to assist him in the recent caveat hearings. Mr. Brand was not appointed by nor did he represent the Department of Justice or the government of Canada. His fees in connection with this matter are therefore properly chargeable to the administration of justice in the Northwest Territories and their payment by the government of the Northwest Territories has been arranged with Mr. Brand.

SHIPMENT OF HORSES ABROAD

Question No. 2,577—Mr. Rowland:

1. For what purposes does Canada permit the shipment of horses abroad?

2. Is it permissible to ship horses for the purposes of slaughter?

3. Is there any follow-up to ensure that animals are employed for the purposes declared at the time of their shipment and, if so, what are the precedures followed?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Horses for export to Europe are certified to a standard of health which will permit their use for breeding or work purposes.

2. It is not a requirement to have the exporter indicate the purpose of export.

3. In as much as it is not a requirement to have the exporter indicate the purpose of export, there are no follow-up procedures. However, all horses being shipped are examined prior to export by a veterinary officer and must be classed as healthy, fit for travel, and in a condition for work or breeding.

Order Paper Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE—LAYOFFS AT DOCKYARDS

Question No. 2,583—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. How many casual employees in ship repair at HMC Dockyard (a) were laid off (b) left their employment voluntarily between March 26 and July 2, 1973 in (i) Esquimalt (ii) Halifax?

2. Have any of these employees benefitted or will they benefit from the retroactive pay rates set forth in the new collective agreement covering ship repair employees signed on July 18 in Ottawa with the Treasury Board and (a) if so, how many (b) if not, what explanation is offered for refusing to pay these employees at the new rates?

3. How many persons referred to in Part 1(a) and (b) were re-hired during the period March 26 and July 2 in (i) Esquimalt (ii) Halifax and were they paid eventually at the retroactive rates once the collective agreement already mentioned was concluded?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence):

	Esquimalt	Halifax
1. (a)	7	NIL
(b)	10	NIL
2. (a)	5	NA

(b) seven of the total of twelve casual employees not in receipt of retroactive pay benefits are not eligible under the Retroactive Remuneration Regulations because they left the service voluntarily. The remaining five, who had less than six months employment, were laid off during the retroactive period. Their status, in terms of eligibility for the appropriate portion of the retroactive period, is currently under review.

3. Esquimalt, nil; Halifax, NA.

VISITS TO CANADA—FRENCH MILITARY PERSONNEL AND AIRCRAFT

Question No. 2,589—Mr. Rowland:

1. On or about Tuesday, July 24, 1973, were there present in Canada a significant number of French military personnel and two French military transport aircraft and, if so, for what purpose were they in Canada?

2. Did their presence in Canada have anything to do with French nuclear tests taking place in the South Pacific?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. Sixteen Officers and 73 Officer Cadets from École de l'Air de France and the aircrew of two French DC 6 aircraft visited Canada on an educational tour from 18 July to 1 August, 1973. The itinerary included the following cities: 18-20 July, Ottawa and Toronto; 21 July, Niagara Falls (U.S.A.); 21-24 July, Calgary; 24-25 July, Vancouver; 25-26 July, Yellowknife; 26-28 July, Quebec City; 28-31 July, Montreal & Collège Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean; 31 July, Bagotville; 1 August, Departed Montreal for Azores.

2. No.

[Mr. Whelan.]

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF BILINGUAL DISTRICTS ABROAD

Question No. 2,590—Mr. Scott:

1. Has the government given any money to help establish bilingual districts in other nations, such as the State of Louisiana and, if so (a) how much (b) who authorized the giving of this money (c) was approval of the Government of the United States received before the grants were given?

2. Does the government plan to continue this program and, if so, to which countries will the government probably be making donations?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of the Secretary of State and the Department of External Affairs as follows: 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

PROPOSED OLYMPIC VILLAGE, MONTREAL

Question No. 2,604—Mr. Stackhouse:

1. (a) How much money has been expended for funding the proposed Olympic Village at Montreal (b) how much has been budgeted for future expenditures for this project?

2. How much has been paid toward the salary of the Olympic Commissioner?

3. How many government employees have been or will be seconded to COJO?

4. (a) How much has been paid toward the salaries of government employees, if any, seconded to COJO (b) how much has been budgeted for anticipated future service by federal employees so seconded?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of Treasury Board): 1. (a) None. (b) If the City of Montreal wishes to avail itself of the provisions of the National Housing Act, it is hoped that it may be accommodated within the scope of the existing NHA program and CHMC budgetary capacity for the period for which the request is received.

2. $35,880 have been paid for the period from July, 1972 when the Commissioner-General joined COJO, to August 24, 1973.

3. No employee of the federal government other than Mr. C.O.R. Rousseau has yet been seconded to COJO. Approximately 25 man-years may be seconded for the period 1973 to 1976.

4. (a) Nothing other than the Commissioner-General's salary as noted in 2 above. (b) Seconded personnel will be provided under normal program funding. Total expenditure has been estimated to range up to $750,000.

PURCHASE OF LAND—RIDEAU CANAL AND SMITHS FALLS AREA

Question No. 2,606—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Since 1957, has the government purchased any land adjacent to the Rideau Canal in the area of Smiths Falls, Ontario and, if so (a) what is the location of this land (b) on what date was the purchase made (c) from whom was the purchase made (d) what was the purchase price?

2. Did the government at any time plan to construct a building in the area of Smiths Falls, Ontario as a headquarters for the Rideau Canal system and, if so (a) was such information made public (b) on what date was this done?

3. Did the government subsequently decide not to build the headquarters of the Rideau Canal system in Smiths Falls, Ontario and, if so (a) on what date was this decision made (b) by whom was this decision made (c) was such a decision made public and on what date?

4. Is the government now reconsidering the matter of building the headquarters of the Rideau Canal system in Smiths Falls because of its declared decentralization policy?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The following parcels of land adjacent to the Rideau Canal in Smiths Falls were purchased since 1957 by the federal government:

Location	Date purchased	Purchased from	Purchase price
Part of Lot 131 as shown on Registered Plan 2857 and Part of Reserve Lot between Bay and Fly Streets.	June 1967	DOT Holding Company	$33,000
Part of Lot 2, Concession 4, Township of South Elmsley.	August 1967	Ustel Motor Sales Limited	$1
Lot 130 and Water Lot in front of Lot 130 as shown on Registered Plan 2857	June 1968	DOT Holding Company	$35,000
Part of Lot 1 Concession 4, Township of North Elmsley.	August 1969	Town of Smiths Falls	$1
Part of Fly Street now Gile Street and water lot opposite Gile Street in Town of Smiths Falls.	March 1971	Town of Smiths Falls	$1

2. The government announced in April 1965 that it proposed to construct a headquarters for the Rideau Canal System at Smiths Falls.

3. The government still proposes to construct the headquarters.

4. No.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PERSONNEL, KINGSTON, ONTARIO

Question No. 2,607—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has there been a reduction in staff of the Unemployment Insurance Commission Office at Kingston, Ontario and, if so (a) what are the names of those employees laid off (b) on what dates were they laid off?

2. What was the reason for such action being taken?

3. Has there been a reduction in the number of persons employed by the Unemployment Insurance Commission at Kingston, Ontario assigned to handle complaints made to members of parliament by their constituents and, if so (a) what was the former number of persons involved in such work (b) to what level has this been reduced?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Yes, six casual employees have been laid off. (a) M. F. Walters, G. P. McCallum, R. McNeil, D. Douglas, J. R. Edwards, J. R. Stewart. (b) August 10, 1973.

2. Work shortage.

3. Yes, (a) Three (one regular employee and two casuals); (b) two (one casual).

NATIONAL DEFENCE—NUMBER OF RETIRED PERSONNEL WITH 25 YEARS SERVICE

Question No. 2,608—Mr. Forrestall:

1. In the past three fiscal years, how many men or officers, by rank, have left the Canadian Armed Forces with an excess of 25 years service?

2. In the next three fiscal years, by year, how many men or officers of the Canadian Armed Forces with an excess of 25 years service are anticipated by the department to be retiring?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. The number of men and officers who have attained in excess of 25 years service with the Canadian Forces who have retired during the past three years is as follows: General, 2; Lieutenant-General, 6; Major-General, 10; Brigadier-General, 27; Colonel, 69; Lieutenant-Colonel, 223; Major, 399; Captain, 362; Lieutenant, 4; Cadet, 2; Sub-Total, 1,104. Chief Warrant Officer, 317; Master Warrant Officer, 499; Warrant Officer, 665; Sergeant, 613; Corporal, 216; Private, 28; Sub-Total, 2,338; Total, 3,442.

2. Retirements of service personnel who will have achieved 25 years or more of service during the next three fiscal years is currently projected as follows:

	FY73/74	FY74/75	FY75/76
Lieutenant-General	2	2	4
Major-General	2	2	8
Brigadier-General	6	14	6
Colonel	14	23	24
Lieutenant-Colonel	40	81	69
Major	66	122	108
Captain	71	96	125
	201	340	344
Chief Warrant Officer	57	73	101
Master Warrant Officer	102	112	127
Warrant Officer	119	144	122
Sergeant	116	152	155
Corporal	59	64	68
Private	1	2	—
	454	547	573
Totals	655	887	917

POST OFFICE—ROYAL MAIL/POSTE ROYALE DESIGNATION

Question No. 2,618—Mr. Forrestall:

Is the government giving consideration to placing the words "Royal Mail/Poste royale" on the new series of mail vehicles that are being placed into service in Canada and, if not, for what reason?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): The words "Royal Mail/Poste Royale" have been placed on the newly designed Canada Post mail trucks.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—BREAKDOWN BY PROVINCE OF EXPENDITURES

Question No. 2,619—Mr. Forrestall:

What was the breakdown, by province, for dollar expenditure by the Department of National Defence, in each fiscal year 1965 to the present, inclusive?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Prior to 1967 the Department of National Defence did not maintain its budgetary records in such a way as to readily identify the breakdown of departmental expenditures by province.

Province	(a) 1967-68[1] ($000)	(b) 1968-69[1] ($000)	(c) 1969-70[1] ($000)	(d) 1970-71[1] ($000)	(e) 1971-72[2] ($000)
Newfoundland	4,880	5,682	6,627	6,004	12,867
Prince Edward Island	12,297	11,381	13,072	13,946	16,583
Nova Scotia	157,378	174,173	201,081	199,301	236,180
New Brunswick	63,038	78,388	69,930	69,960	82,314
Quebec	290,018	290,656	269,606	271,236	376,733
Ontario	542,935	524,498	512,803	506,229	613,702
Manitoba	78,168	74,496	81,775	81,937	90,588
Saskatchewan	18,529	19,844	22,196	23,250	27,891
Alberta	89,570	90,603	103,759	109,826	135,961
British Columbia	110,490	119,047	135,195	146,512	160,697
Yukon	1,454	109	234	318	14
Northwest Territories	2,544	1,594	2,928	2,950	3,785
Outside Canada	196,482	170,673	170,582	140,200	175,315
Total Expenditure Distributed	1,567,783	1,561,144	1,589,788	1,571,669	1,932,630

NOTES: (1) In the distribution by province shown in columns (a) to (d) the amounts included for military pay are exclusive of payroll deductions for Federal Income Tax, superannuation, death benefit and Canada Pension Plan. Also excluded in the distribution are the government contributions to the superannuation account, death benefit and CPP. However, pension payments from non-budgetary funds to pensioners resident in the various provinces is included in this distribution.

(2) The distribution by province shown in column (e) is taken from the statement of expenditures by province for 1971-72 provided to the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee on 13 April, 1973. The amounts shown in this column are based on a distribution of all DND budgetary expenditures without the adjustments for military payroll deductions, government pension contributions and pension payments from non-budgetary accounts that are incorporated in the distribution given in columns (a) to (d) inclusive.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE—EXPENDITURES OUTSIDE CANADA

Question No. 2,620—Mr. Forrestall:

What dollar proportion of the total budget of the Department of National Defence was expended outside of Canada since 1968?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The following percentages, by year, since 1968, represent the dollar proportion of the total Department of National Defence Budget spent outside Canada: 1967-68, 12.5 per cent; 1968-69, 10.9 per cent; 1969-70, 10.7 per cent; 1970-71, 8.9 per cent; 1971-72, 9.1 per cent.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—PUBLICATION OF CFAO IN BOTH LANGUAGES

Question No. 2,621—Mr. Forrestall:

1. On what date does the government and the Department of National Defence intend to complete the translation and publication of bilingual reprints of the Canadian Forces Administrative Orders?

2. At what level has funding for this program been provided for the 1973-74 fiscal year?

3. What percentage of such orders has been completed to date?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. All new CFAO's are published in both official languages. When a current CFAO requires amendment it is republished in both official languages. It is estimated that all such Orders will be in both official languages within two years.

2. $87,000.

3. 60 per cent.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—RELEASES FROM CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Question No. 2,622—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Since January 1, 1973, how many men or officers have been released from Maritime Command?

2. For each calendar year between 1964 and 1972, inclusive, how many men or officers were released, by command, from the Canadian Armed Forces?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. The number of personnel who have left Maritime Command for one reason or another since January 1, 1973, is as follows: (a) Officers, 121; (b) Other Ranks, 910; Total 1,031.

2. Records of termination of service for all reasons prior to 1968 are incomplete. From 1968 to 1972 terminations of service from each Command and personnel accounting unit are as follows:

Order Paper Questions

Command	Off/ Men	1968	1969	1970	1971	1972
CFHQ	Off	450	757	728	627	422
	Men	519	627	537	375	410
		969	1384	1265	1002	832
Mobile Command	Off	146	186	133	140	151
	Men	1964	2102	1876	2098	2330
		2110	2288	2009	2238	2481
4 Cdn Inf. Bgde Gp	Off
	Men	7	9	8
		7	9	8
Maritime Command	Off	203	247	202	208	186
	Men	1214	2187	1949	1616	1495
		1417	2434	2151	1824	1681
Air Def Command	Off	73	105	109	64	62
	Men	730	906	846	653	661
		803	1011	935	717	723
Air Trans Command	Off	89	160	174	170	134
	Men	499	748	703	659	669
		588	908	877	829	803
Training Command	Off	285	439	249	222	226
	Men	1701	2441	2064	1917	1808
		1986	2880	2313	2139	2034
Material Command	Off
	Men	3	1
		3	1
CF Comm Command	Off	2	12	14	15	18
	Men	150	223	215	164	189
		152	235	229	179	207
Reserve-Survival	Off	32	67	59	21	1
	Men	63	150	134	34	2
		95	217	193	55	3
Tec Serv Unit	Off	23	67	50	40	27
	Men	169	314	285	263	173
		192	381	335	303	200
Cdn Def. Educ. Est	Off				24	125
	Men				1	14
					25	139
CF Trg Estab	Off					101
	Men				1	71
					1	172
Cdn Forces Europe	Off	34	53	40	34	14
	Men	330	270	332	196	154
		364	323	372	230	168
Other	Off	327	88	26	10	5
	Men	1566	437	257	175	202
		1893	525	283	185	207

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—AMENDMENT TO BILL 13-47

Question No. 2,627—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Is the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development aware of the amendment by the Council of the Northwest Territories to Bill 13-47 "An ordinance Respecting the Preservation of Game" enacted on June 30, 1972?

2. Has the Minister received a request from the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada requesting him to disallow that amendment because no opportunity was given to the native organizations to submit their recommendations or to make clear the difficulties this amendment will cause to native people?

3. Has the Minister made a decision regarding this request, and, if so (a) what was it (b) for what reasons?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes.

2. Yes. The Minister received a letter from the President of Inuit Tapirisat, Mr. Tagak E. C. Curley dated June 5, 1973.

3. The Minister carefully studied both the amendments to the Bill and the arguments presented in the brief and concluded that the amended Ordinance will not result in the dilution of native hunting rights. Commissioner Hodgson is currently in the process of conducting a comprehensive review of all aspects of the Game Ordinance and Inuit Tapirisat (through the Federation of Natives North of 60°) as well as the other native organizations have been invited to assist Territorial officials in this review.

BOWDEN CORRECTIONAL CENTRE, ALBERTA

Question No. 2,628—Mr. Gleave:

1. On what date was the Bowden Correctional Centre in the province of Alberta purchased by the government?

2. What price was paid for this property?

3. What understanding was given as to continued employment of personnel at the institution?

4. How many inmates will the institution accommodate?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1. Negotiations for purchase of the Bowden Correctional Centre are not yet completed.

2. No money paid to date.

3. Negotiations now in progress aim at the hiring of all the present staff of Bowden with the possible exception of a very small number whose categories of employment are not normally required in the operational system of the Canadian Penitentiary Service. However, the operation of Bowden as a medium security institution of the Canadian Penitentiary Service will require a larger staff than presently employed there.

4. Approximately 200.

Order Paper Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE—TAKE HOME PAY

Question No. 2,632—Mr. Forrestall:

By rank, for officers and men, what percentage of gross pay to Canadian Armed Forces personnel was actually taken home by CAF personnel in 1963, 1968 and 1972?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): To provide the information as requested, by rank, would entail the expenditure of man hours and dollars which are not available for this purpose. However, the following information may provide the required comparison.

	Officers	Men
	%	%
1963	84	88
1968	77	83
1972	74	79

NOTE: The above statistics represent gross pay less deductions for Income Tax, Pension, Supplementary Death Benefits and Unemployment Insurance.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—MARRIED QUARTERS

Question No. 2,633—Mr. Forrestall:

With respect to deductions for provision of married quarters for Canadian Armed Forces personnel, are there any instances in which the provisions of Queens Regulations and Order 208.51 are not being met and, if so, what are the circumstances?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): There are no known instances where charges for married quarters, in accordance with Article 208.51 of Q.R. & O. are not being applied to quarters occupied by families. On several bases, where the supply of married quarters exceeds the demand for family accommodations single personnel are offered these quarters with the following stipulations: (a) that the quarters will be vacated on 30 days' notice if required for family accommodation; and (b) that the monthly charge will be the full established rate, i.e., the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation appraised shelter charge plus, where applicable, the national average charge of $21 for utilities.

CBC—ACQUISITION OF RADIO STATIONS

Question No. 2,640—Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw):

What was the price paid by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to acquire the assets of (a) CFRG/CFGR Gravelbourg, Saskatchewan from Radio Gravelbourgh Limitée (b) CFNS Saskatoon, Saskatchewan from Radio-Prairies-Nord Limitée?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: (a) $40,000; (b) $55,000.

[Mr. Allmand.]

AVERAGE "PER DIEM" COST PER ANIMAL AT QUARANTINE STATIONS

Question No. 2,641—Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw):

1. In each of the years 1970, 1971 and 1972, what was the average per diem cost per animal for feed and care at each of the quarantine stations (a) Saint Pierre (b) Grosse Île (c) Lévis (d) Edmonton?

2. In each of the years 1970, 1971 and 1972, what was the average cost per ton of hay, grain and/or prepared feed consumed at each of the quarantine stations (a) Saint Pierre (b) Grosse Île, (c) Lévis (d) Edmonton?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. (a) St. Pierre, 1970, $5.32; 1971, $5.66; 1972, $5.73. (b) Grosse Île, 1970, $3.54; 1971, $3.69; 1972, $4.69. (c) Lévis, 1970, $9.44; 1971, $8.26; 1972, $7.01. (d) Edmonton, 1970, Not in operation; 1971, Not in operation; 1972, $9.03.

2. (a) St. Pierre Hay, 1970, $59.95 per ton; 1971, $52.30 per ton; 1972, $52.80 per ton; Prepared Feed 1970, $81.15 per ton; 1971, $86.43 per ton; 1972, $86.75 per ton. (b) Grosse Île Hay, 1970, $50.00 per ton; 1971, $50.00 per ton; 1972, $65.00 per ton; Prepared Feed 1970, $68.35 per ton; 1971, $75.85 per ton; 1972, $82.73 per ton; (c) Lévis Hay, 1970, $44.00 per ton; 1971, $44.00 per ton; 1972, $48.00 per ton; Prepared Feed 1970, $110.00 per ton; 1971, $114.00 per ton; 1972, $110.00 per ton. (d) Edmonton; 1970—1971 Not in operation. Hay, 1972,—$32.00 per ton; Prepared Feed 1972, $57.60 per ton.

CIDA—LIAISON DIVISION

Question No. 2,643—Mr. Stevens:

1. On what date was the Evaluation and Liaison Division of CIDA created?

2. How many staff are employed within the Evaluation and Liaison Division of CIDA?

3. (a) To whom does the Director of the Division report (b) to whom is the Director responsible?

4. How many capital projects undertaken by CIDA has the Evaluation and Liaison Division examined since the Division was created (a) what were the projects (b) for what reasons was each project selected for examination (c) for each of the projects examined by the Division (i) what information was judged to be relevant to the examination (ii) what was the information examined (iii) under what criteria was each project evaluated (d) for each project evaluated, what was the result, conclusion or recommendation of each evaluation (e) for each project evaluation which produced a recommendation, in which cases the CIDA acted upon the recommendation of the evaluation (f) for each of the projects evaluated, did the evaluation procedure take place within Canada, or on or near the site of the project?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows. 1. The Evaluation Division of the Policy Branch of CIDA became effectively operational in January of 1973. 2. Staff numbers as of September 1, 1973 were: Director, 1; Evaluation Officers, 3; Stenographers, 2, for a total of 6. In addition, a full-time consultant to the agency on educationl programs is attached to the division. 3. (a) The director of the division reports to the acting vice-president, policy branch; (b) The director is responsible to the acting vice-president, policy branch. 4. To date, the division has not examined any capital projects, but has been actively concerned with other areas of CIDA's programing, particularly in the fields of training and technical assistance.

ANTI-POVERTY PROGRAM—ABSCONDING OF FUNDS

Question No. 2,653—Mr. Reynolds:

Did Mr. Donald Anderson abscond with $3,000 from the Anti-Poverty Program under the direction of the Secretary of State and, if so, what action was taken (a) against him (b) to recover the said amount?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): In October 1972, a Citizenship grant for $3,000 was awarded by the Secretary of State Department to the Abbotsford Low-Income Group, an organization not under the direction of the Secretary of State Department. With respect to Mr. Donald Anderson, his case is now before the court.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—CADET SUMMER TRAINING PROGRAM

Question No. 2,656—Mr. Rowland:

1. How many young Canadians (a) male (b) female are enrolled in the Cadet Program?

2. How many (a) male cadets (b) female cadets attended cadet summer camps in the summer of 1973?

3. By what percentage of the total enrollment in the Cadet Program (a) male (b) female did those attending summer camp represent?

4. What was the total amount of governmental expenditures on the Cadet Summer Training Program?

5. What was the total amount of governmental expenditures on the Cadet Training Program for (a) male cadets (b) female cadets in the summer of 1973?

6. In percentage terms, what was the portion of the budget of the Cadet Summer Training Program expended on training for summer training for (a) male cadets (b) female cadets in the summer of 1973?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) As of January 31, 1973, there were 64,692 young male Canadians enrolled in the Cadet Program. (b) At present, Section 43 of the National Defence Act precludes the enrolment of young female cadets.

2. (a) Approximately 24,000 male cadets attended cadet summer camps in 1973. (b) Not applicable. See 1(b) above.

3. (a) Approximately 37 per cent of the total male cadet enrolment attended summer camp in 1973. (b) Not applicable. See 1(b) above.

4. Approximately $6.9 million was allotted for the 1973 cadet summer training program. (Note: Actual expenditure is not yet known as all accounts for 1973 have not yet been cleared.)

5. (a) As for 4 above. (b) Not applicable. See 1(b) above.

6. (a) Approximately 62 per cent. (b) Not applicable. See 1(b) above.

PAYMENT OF PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL SALES TAX ON TELEPHONE AND ELECTRICITY BILLS

Question No. 2,660—Mr. Godin:

Do Indians have to pay provincial and municipal sales tax on telephone and electricity bills?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Unless there has been exemption granted by the appropriate provincial authorities, Indians say the same provincial and municipal sales taxes as anyone else.

*VANCOUVER—INCLUSION OF ICE SKATING RINK IN GOVERNMENT BUILDING

Question No. 2,669—Mr. Reynolds:

Will the government building in Vancouver include an ice skating rink and, if so (a) is the rink to be used by the public (b) will there be any charge for its use?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows. (a) The preliminary conceptual plans for the Vancouver building by Arthur Erickson had shown an area on the outside plaza at ground level designated as a fountain or skating rink. If the concept remains unchanged, it is intended that during the summer months a large fountain would be installed and that during the winter months such facilities could be converted to a small skating rink for the use of and enjoyment of the public. (b) It is anticipated at this time that there shall be no charge for the use of this skating rink.

CBC—REMUNERATION PAID TO LISE PAYETTE AND JEANNETTE BERTRAND-JEAN LAJEUNESSE COUPLE

Question No. 2,674—Mr. Matte:

What is the salary or remuneration paid by CBC to hostess Lise Payette and the Jeannette Bertrand-Jean Lajeunesse couple?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: It has not been customary to require the CBC to disclose salaries or remuneration paid to individuals.

DESTRUCTION OF FORM E-67 AT CUSTOMS OFFICE, PORT OF LANSDOWNE, ONTARIO

Question No. 2,675—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Were instructions issued recently by anyone whatsoever for the destruction of all pink referral slips on hand at Canada Customs at the Port of Lansdowne, Ontario and known as Form E-67 and, if so, whom were such instructions given?

2. Was the reason for such instructions because this form, used strictly for internal port use, was printed entirely in the English language?

3. Was there any communication, written or verbal, between the Department of National Revenue and the Commissioner of Official Languages on this subject?

4. Were such forms ordered to be destroyed or discarded in any other localities in Canada and, if so, in what provinces and in how many localities in each province?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): In so far as National Revenue is concerned: 1. Yes. The Regional Collector, Port of Ottawa, ordered the destruction of all unilingual Forms E-67 at the Port of Lansdowne and their replacement with bilingual forms.

2. Yes. The form is now available in bilingual format.

3. No. There was no communication with the Commissioner of Official Languages concerning the use of unilingual Forms E-67 at the Port of Lansdowne. However, there has been communication about the use, since discontinued, of such forms in unilingual format at the Port of Prescott.

4. Yes. Instructions have been issued to all field offices authorizing destruction of all unilingual forms provided replacements in bilingual format are available. Form E-67 was revised to bilingual format in March, 1972.

CIDA STUDY SESSION—AUGUST 22 TO 24, 1973

Question No. 2,682—Mr. Schumacher:

1. How many (a) teachers (b) advisers (c) other personnel (d) spouses were returned to Canada to attend the study session with officers of the Canadian International Development Agency August 22 to 24, 1973 from Francophone Africa?

2. In each case, what was (a) the country of employment (b) the cost of travel to and from Canada (c) the cost of accommodation (d) the cost of meals and other per diem expenses?

3. In each case, who bore the costs involved?

4. Where were the study sessions held?

5. What were (a) the nature of the sessions (b) the conclusions reached (c) the recommendations made (d) the action proposed by CIDA to reinforce its efforts in the field of social improvement as a result of this study session?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): (1) No personnel were returned to Canada specifically to attend this de-briefing session. Forty eight francophone teachers who had already terminated their assignments and were already in Canada, attended the Conference at Ottawa University. Twenty four were accompanied by their wives.

(2) (a) See following list of number of teachers and spouses by country. R.C.A., 5-4; Cameroun, 10-6; Tunisie, 7-1; Côte d'Ivoire, 5-3; Zaire, 2-2; Maroc, 1-1; Burundi, 1-1; Madagascar, 2-0; Gabon, 3-0; Algérie, 5-1; Tchad, 1-1; Sénégal, 4-3; Togo, 2-1. (b) Nil. Personnel already in Canada, having completed assignments. (c) $1,348. (d) $3,716.03 plus $1,030 for facilitators and secretariat (per diem) and mileage.

(3) CIDA.

(4) Ottawa University.

(5) Discussion Sessions in work groups and plenary to collect views of returnees on CIDA program and its administration. (b) Results of study session now being compiled. (c) Same as for 5 (b) above. (d) When recommendations and observations of CIDA returnees have been compiled, they will be considered by management in relation to existing policy and procedures.

SPORTS CANADA PERSONNEL

Question No. 2,686—Mr. Jelinek:

1.What is the total number of employees in Sports Canada?

2. (a) How many employees earn over (i) $16,000 a year (ii) $20,000 a year (b) what is the annual total payroll of Sports Canada (c) what percentage of the budget is made up of salaries and wages?

3. What were the (a) entertainment expenses (b) travelling expenses of Sports Canada executives and other personnel in the past fiscal year?

4. How many employees (a) are graduates in physical education (b) are professional athletes (c) held previous government positions other than clerical or junior administrative?

[Mr. Stanbury.]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. 51

2. (a) (i) 13; (ii) 3. (b) 1972-73, $336,000; (c) 1972-73, 21.7 per cent.

3. (a) $ 7,542; (b) $84,546.

4. (a) 9; (b) 2; (c) 9.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—INTEREST RATE

Question No. 2,691—Mr. Stevens:

In July and August, what was the average rate of interest charged on new long term financing commitments by the Export Development Corporation?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Export Development Corporation states: It is not in the public interest to publish information on EDC lending rates. These rates vary according to such factors as the need to match international competition and the credit risks involved. To publish an average rate would be to disclose to certain borrowers that the EDC rate to them is above the average and this would militate against the possibility of repeat business for Canadian exporters.

BANDARANAIKE AIRPORT, COLUMBO, SRI LANKA

Question No. 2,693—Mr. Stevens:

1. What has been the total cost to date of the design and construction of the Bandaranaike (Katunayake) Airport at Columbo, Sri Lanka and, of this (a) what amount of the total cost to date was financed by Canadian aid (b) did this aid take the form of a loan or of a grant?

2. When was the Bandaranaike Airport completed, or, if the project is still underway, what is the projected date of completion?

3. At the conclusion of pre-construction studies, what was the total estimated cost of the Bandaranaike Airport?

4. What were the dates of (a) the start of the feasibility study on the Bandaranaike project (b) the start of the construction of the Airport?

5. What was the cost of the professional services provided on the design and construction of the Bandaranaike project, including (a) consultant's costs (b) architect's fees (c) engineer's fees (d) project manager's fees (e) lawyer's fees (f) other professional fees and, in each case, what were the names and addresses of each concern retained to perform the work together with the total amount paid or payable to such concern?

6. How many scheduled flights were recorded at the Airport during 1972 and in each quarter to date in 1973?

7. Based upon the feasibility study report on the construction of the Bandaranaike Airport, what is the nature of the anticipated impact that the Airport is expected to have on the economy of Sri Lanka?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Total cost of design and construction of the Bandaranaike Airport at Colombo was approximately $7.8 million and of this $6,568,718.25 was financed by the Canadian International Development Agency as follows: $5,068,718.25 from Grant Funds; and $1,500,000.00 from Loan Funds; $6,568,718.25 Total.

2. The Bandaranaike airport was completed in June 1968.

3. The preconstruction estimated cost was approximately $6 million. However, changes were effected later in the design of the terminal to include a third floor and a control tower and it was later decided to provide furnishings.

4. The feasibility study started in 1963. Construction started on the runway extension in September 1964 and on the airport terminal in February 1966.

5. The Foundation of Canada Engineering Corp. Ltd. of 2200 Yonge Street, Toronto, provided engineering consultancy services at the cost of $377,950.55 and was the only outside professional consulting firm engaged on the project. All other professional services were provided by the in house professionals of the Canadian Department of Transport.

6. Over seven thousand commercial air movements were recorded in 1972 at the airport. Statistics are not available within CIDA for 1973.

7. Prior to the construction of the Bandaranaike airport Sri Lanka did not have an airport which could handle the jet aircraft being used and planned to be used by international carriers. Sri Lanka, being strategically located on major intercontinental trade routes (both sea and air), expected to act as a major port of call on these routes. One other major advantage to the Sri Lankan economy was the anticipated increase in the volume of tourists which would result from the improvement of the airport facilities. Statistics of traffic at Bandaranaike Airport reflect a steady growth of both aircraft movement and passenger traffic. The current volume of traffic, and its annual rate of increase is, in fact, far greater than estimated at the outset of the project.

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

Question No. 2,697—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Can a Public Servant become president of a federal or provincial political organization without violating the Public Service Employment Act or Regulations?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: No. Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act states, in part, that no deputy head and no employee "shall engage in work for, on behalf of or against a political party".

LIP—ADVERTISING COSTS

Question No. 2,699—Mr. Towers:

1. What is the total cost of advertising for the 1973-74 Local Initiatives Program?

2. Is the cost itemized under total for newspapers, television and radio advertising and, if so, what are the amounts?

3. Is the expenditure for advertising of LIP included in the announced amount of $83 million or is it an additional cost and, if so, to what branch of the Department is the advertising charged?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. $510,000.

2. Yes; newspapers, $217,141.63; television, nil; radio, $165,824.

3. Included in the announced amount of $83 million.

PERCENTAGE OF POPULATION SPEAKING ENGLISH, FRENCH AND BOTH LANGUAGES

Question No. 2,701—Mr. Mather:

In the latest year on record, what percentage of the population of Canada speak (a) English only (b) French only (c) both languages?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that: The following percentages are derived from the 1971 Census of Canada (the latest year for which these date are available) and show the percentages of the Canadian population speaking: (a) English only, 67.1 per cent; (b) French only, 18.0 per cent; (c) Both languages, 13.4 per cent.

(Note: 1.5 per cent speak neither language)

TOTAL EXPENDITURES ON A NATIONAL ACCOUNTS BASIS FOR ALL GOVERNMENTS IN CANADA

Question No. 2,708—Mr. Stevens:

What was the total expenditure on a national accounts basis in each of the calendar years 1968 to 1973 for all governments in Canada and what was the total expenditure in each of the years at the federal, provincial and municipal levels?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that: The total expenditure on a national accounts basis in each of the calendar years 1968 to 1973 for all governments in Canada and the total expenditure in each of the years at the federal, provincial and municipal levels is as follows:

	1968	1969	1970	1971	1972	Jan.-June[1] 1973
Total Government Expenditure[2]	24,472	27,226	31,112	35,229	39,813	21,611
Total Federal Expenditure[3]	12,254	13,524	15,337	17,496	20,250	11,287
Total Provincial Expenditure[4]	10,354	11,674	14,159	16,534	18,169	9,685
Total Municipal Expenditure[5]	8,288	9,295	10,460	11,562	12,754	6,749

[3]First six months only.

[2]Excludes transfers to other levels of government.

[3]Includes transfers to other levels of government and expenditures by the CPP.

[4]Includes transfers to other levels of government and expenditures by the QPP.

[5]Includes transfers to other levels of government and hospital expenditures.

Order Paper Questions

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION—NUMBER OF APPLICATIONS RECEIVED UNDER SMALL FARM DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Question No. 2,709—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. How many applications, by province, have been received by the Farm Credit Corporation under the Small Farm Development Program?

2. How many applications have been approved?

3. How much money has been disbursed?

4. What is the disbursement by province?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The Farm Credit Corporation advises as follows:

1. Applications Received

Province	Vendor Grants	Special Credit Assistance
British Columbia	3	—
Alberta	901	181
Saskatchewan	35	—
Manitoba	70	9
Ontario	135	18
New Brunswick	36	6
Nova Scotia	13	4
Prince Edward Island	23	5

2. Applications Approved

British Columbia	1	—
Alberta	745	144
Saskatchewan	4	—
Manitoba	41	5
Ontario	114	16
New Brunswick	31	5
Nova Scotia	11	4
Prince Edward Island	18	5

3. Total Disbursed*	$1,802,196	$2,941,850

4. Disbursement by Province*

Province	Vendor Grants	Special Credit Assistance
	$	$
British Columbia	3,500	0
Alberta	1,532,166	2,415,550
Saskatchewan	0	0
Manitoba	18,600	88,700
Ontario	154,395	266,800
New Brunswick	38,475	63,000
Nova Scotia	19,360	60,600
Prince Edward Island	35,700	47,200

* All of the approvals have not yet been disbursed.

[Mr. Breau.]

NUCLEAR POWER AS ALTERNATIVE SOURCE OF ENERGY

Question No. 2,719—Mr. Forrestall:

Is nuclear power competitive with fossil fuels when the latter exceed $4 per barrel and, if so (a) are the Pulp and Paper industries as well as the Marine industries paying upwards of that amount (b) what specific steps is the government now taking to explore the advantages of nuclear power as an alternative source of energy?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: Nuclear energy is competitive as a source of electrical power with crude oil exceeding $4 per barrel. This economic advantage occurs only for large units and therefore nuclear energy is not competitive as a source of power for industrial or marine uses. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources carry out continual surveys to monitor the changing economic situation.

SURVEY WITH OLD AGE PENSIONERS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 2,728—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Can the Minister of National Health and Welfare advise whether it is the federal, municipal or provincial government that is conducting a survey with Old Age Pensioners in British Columbia?

2. (a) Did the persons conducting this survey leave a copy with the Old Age Pensioners and, if not, for what reason (b) was the signature of the Old Age Pensioners required on the survey and, if so, for what reason?

3. For what purpose is this survey being conducted?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. It is the government of British Columbia that is conducting a survey with old age pensioners in that province.

2. (a) and (b) Such information may be obtained from the government of British Columbia.

3. Such information may be obtained from the government of British Columbia.

PICKING OF CLAMS AND ABALONES ON WEST COAST

Question No. 2,742—Mr. Reynolds:

Is the government considering putting a limit on the number of (a) clams (b) abalones picked daily on the West Coast and, if so, on what date will these regulations come into effect?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Regulations restricting the taking of clams and abalones on the west Coast of Canada are currently being promulgated.

VISIT OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT TO SASKATCHEWAN PENITENTIARY

Question No. 2,744—Mr. Howard:

Since January 1, 1958 has any person, who was at the time of the visit a Member of Parliament, visited the federal penitentiary at Prince Albert, Saskatchewan and, if so, what is the name of each such person and the date of each such visit?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General):

Member	Date of Visit
The Hon. Davie Fulton Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada	12 April, 1959
The Hon. L. T. Pennell Solicitor General of Canada	26-27 March, 1966
The Hon. G. J. McIlraith Solicitor General of Canada	8 March, 1969
Mr. Frank Howard, M.P.	3-4 April, 1970
Mr. R. Thomson, M.P.	3-4 April, 1970
Mr. J. Skoberg, M.P.	3-4 April, 1970
The Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer Solicitor General of Canada	5 August, 1971
The Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, M.P.	21 October, 1972
The Hon. Warren Allmand Solicitor General of Canada	9 March, 1973
Mrs. Albanie Morin, M.P. Mr. Stuard Leggatt, M.P. Mr. Reg Stackhouse, M. P. Miss Flora MacDonald, M.P. Mr. Norval Horner, M.P.	24 September, 1973 Members of a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

SIMULTANEOUS INTERPRETATION—GRANT TO CANADIAN BUILDING OFFICIALS ASSOCIATION

Question No. 2,753—Mr. Hellyer:

1. Was the grant of $2,215 to the Canadian Building Officials Association to enable the Association to make a simultaneous interpretation service available to those attending its annual meeting, in April, made retroactively after the meeting had been held?

2. On what date was the cheque forwarded?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. and 2. The meeting of the Canadian Building Officials Association was held from April 2 to April 6, 1973. A cheque for the sum of $2,215 for simultaneous interpretation services was sent on April 5, 1973.

STUDENT LOANS—COLLECTIONS BY FINANCIAL COLLECTIONS AGENCY LTD.

Question No. 2,754—Mr. Knight:

1. As of September 1, 1973, what was the total amount of student loans in arrears allocated to the Financial Collections Agency Ltd. for collection?

2. How much has been collected?

3. How much revenue accrued to the agency in these collections?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1. $20,041,666.

2. $3,532,082.

3. $730,727.

DREE—DESIGNATED AREAS, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 2,767—Mr. Corbin:

1. Since 1970, has the Government of New Brunswick requested the federal government to designate other special areas than are mentioned in the Act concerning the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and, if so, on what date?

2. Was such a request made before 1970 and, if so, on what date?

3. What new area(s) would be so designated?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. and 2. There is no record of such a request having been made before or after 1970.

3. N/A

* * *

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE—RESEARCH EXPENDITURES

Question No. 128—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What was the total amount of money spent in each of the fiscal years 1968-69, 1969-70, 1970-71, 1971-72 by the Department of Justice on contracts to outside persons and organizations for research, development and other consulting services?

2. What are the names and addresses of these outside persons and organizations and what amounts of money were involved in each contract?

3. What was the purpose of each contract and title of each report submitted?

4. What are the names and addresses of outside persons and organizations who were awarded contracts for research, development and other consulting services in the current fiscal year, what are the amounts of money involved in each case and what is the purpose of each contract?

Return tabled.

DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT RESEARCH EXPENDITURES

Question No. 131—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What was the total amount of money spent in each of the fiscal years 1968-69, 1969-70, 1970-71, 1971-72 by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on contracts to outside persons and organizations for research, development and other consulting services?

2. What are the names and addresses of these outside persons and organizations and what amounts of money were involved in each contract?

3. What was the purpose of each contract and title of each report submitted?

4. What are the names and addresses of outside persons and organizations who were awarded contracts for research, development and other consulting services in the current fiscal year, what are the amounts of money involved in each case and what is the purpose of each contract?

Return tabled.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO COMPANIES

Question No. 152—Mr. Broadbent:

1. Were grants and loans made to the following companies: Atlantic Sugar Refineries; Abitibi Paper Co. Ltd.; Alcan Aluminum Ltd.; Alberta Gas Trunk Line Ltd.; Algoma Steel Corporation Ltd.; Bethlehem Copper Co. Ltd.; BP Oil and Gas Ltd.; Bell Canada; British Newfoundland Corp. Ltd.; Bank of Montreal; Bank of Nova Scotia; Canadian Pacific Railway Co.; Canadian Ingersoll-Rand Co. Ltd.; Consolidated Bathurst Ltd.; Canadian Johns-Manville Co.; Chemcell Ltd.; Chrysler Corp.; Consumer's Gas Co. Ltd.; Canadian International Paper; Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce; Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation; Canadian Javelin; Canadian Breweries Ltd.; Campeau Corp. Ltd.; Crown Life Insurance Co.; Canada Packers Ltd.; Davie Shipbuilding Ltd.; Dominion Textile Ltd.; Dominion Foundries and Steel Ltd.; Dome Mines Ltd.; Distillers Corp - Seagrams Ltd.; DuPont of Canada Ltd.; Domtar Ltd.; Ecstall Mining Ltd.; Eddy Match Co. Ltd.; Eddy Paper Co. Ltd.; Ford Motor Co.; Falconbridge Nickel Mines Ltd.; Foster Advertising; General Motors Corp.; Glaverbel Verrerie Ltée.; Gaspé Copper Mines Ltd.; General Electric Co.; Great Canadian Oil Sands Co.; Gordon Hill Advertising; Great West Life; Hudson's Bay Co.; Hiram Walker - Gooderham and Worts Ltd.; Husky Oil Ltd.; Iron Ore Co. Canada Ltd.; Imperial Oil Ltd.; IBM Canada Ltd.; International Nickel Co. (Canada) Ltd.; John Labatt Ltd.; Kates, Peat, Marwick Co.; Loblaw Companies Ltd.; London Life Insurance Co.; Laurentide Financial Corp; Mercantile Bank of Canada; Metropolitan Trust Co.; McFarland Construction; Micro-Max Products Ltd.; Melchers Distilleries Ltd.; McCain Foods Ltd.; MacMillan Bloedel Ltd.; Mutual Life Assurance Co. of Canada Ltd.; Molson Industries Ltd.; Massey-Ferguson Ltd.; McLaren Advertising; Noranda Mines Ltd.; National Sea Products Ltd.; Peat, Marwick, Mitchell Co.; Power Corp. of Canada Ltd.; Prudential Assurance Co. Ltd.; Procter and Gamble Co. of Canada Ltd.; Petrofina Canada Ltd.; Royal Canadian Bank; Rayonier Quebec Inc.; State Farm Insurance Co.; Steel Co. of Canada Ltd.; Shell Canada Ltd.; Steep Rock Iron Mines Ltd.; Saint John Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co. Ltd.; Simpson's Ltd.; Sun Life Assurance Co.; Sperry Rand Canada Ltd.; Swift Canadian Co. Ltd.; Toronto-Dominion Bank; The Commercial Life Assurance Co. of Canada Ltd.; Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Lines Co. Ltd.; Trans Canada Pipe Lines Ltd.; Texaco Co. Ltd.; Union Carbide of Canada Ltd.; Union Gas Ltd.; Westinghouse Canada Ltd., by the Departments of (a) Regional Economic Expansion (b) Industry, Trade and Commerce (c) National Defence (d) Energy, Mines and Resources (e) Manpower and Immigration in each fiscal years beginning 1968-69 and, if so, in what amounts each year?

2. Were remissions under Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act made to the same companies in the same period and, if so, in what amounts in each fiscal year?

Return tabled.

GRANTS UNDER RDIA

Question No. 155—Mr. Broadbent:

1. What are the names of corporations which accepted offers of cash grants under the Regional Development Incentives Act (RDIA) in each of the fiscal years 1969-70, 1970-71, 1971-72, 1972-73 to date, distributed by province where the capital expenditure was to be made?

2. In each case (a) what were the amounts of money committed and what cash payments were made to date (b) how many new jobs were undertaken to be created (c) how many of the projected new jobs are in existence at present (d) what is the projected date of the commencement of commercial operation of the facility in question?

3. What are the names of the recipients of RDIA grants who (a) are at present overdue with the projected date of commencement of commercial production (b) notified the department that the planned facility will not proceed with commercial production (c) started commercial production in the planned facility and have since discontinued operations in the facility (d) are still expected to start commercial production in the facility in the future?

4. What were the amounts of grants recovered by the department in cases reported under Part 3(c)?

5. What are the objectives of the above program?

6. Has the department conducted any evaluative study of the program and, if so, what was the date of the latest report?

Return tabled.

INTERNATIONAL EXCHANGE VISITS

Question No. 1,502—Mr. Alexander:

1. What was the total amount spent in each fiscal year since 1969 on grants to groups by the Secretary of State for the purpose of international exchange visits?

2. For each fiscal year since 1969, which groups were given such grants and in what amounts to each group?

3. What were the stated purposes of the visits made by each group during the above period and which countries were visited by each group?

Return tabled.

GRANTS UNDER DEPARTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE CITIZENSHIP PROGRAM

Question No. 1,504—Mr. Stackhouse:

How much money was expended for grants, payable under the Department of the Secretary of State Citizenship Program, during 1972, to citizens groups and voluntary organizations in (a) each of the provinces and territories (b) Metropolitan Toronto (c) Scarborough, Ontario?

Return tabled.

GRANTS OF PUBLIC FUNDS TO CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Question No. 1,819—Mr. Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay):

How many charitable organizations received grants of public funds during each year 1970 to 1972 inclusive and (a) how much did each receive (b) for what reason was the grant made in each case?

Return tabled.

LIST BY ELECTORAL DISTRICTS OF LAWYERS APPROVED TO ACT ON BEHALF OF GOVERNMENT

Question No. 1,835—Mr. Cossitt:

Does the Department of Justice maintain a list by electoral districts of lawyers approved to act on behalf of the government and, if so (a) what are the names on the list for each electoral district in the province of Ontario (b) are such persons listed as members of a political party and, if so, which one?

Return tabled.

EXPENDITURES BY GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS ON PROFESSIONAL AND SPECIAL SERVICES

Question No. 2,092—Mr. Mather:

By department, what was the amount spent on professional and special services in 1967 and 1972?

Return tabled.

RENTAL OF SPACE BY GOVERNMENT IN NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

Question No. 2,131—Mr. Stevens:

1. (a) What are the names of those persons/companies, holding corporations, or other entities from which the government presently rents space in the National Capital Region (b) in the case of corporate entities, who are the principal officers and who are the directors and shareholders of each?

2. (a) Were public bids for rental space invited and, if not, what procedure for the selection of space was followed (b) are re-rental leases negotiated on an annual basis?

Return tabled.

*FAILURE OF CORPORATIONS AND UNIONS TO FILE RETURN UNDER CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

Question No. 2,190—Mr. Peters:

1. How many corporations failed, in each of the past three years, to file a return with Statistics Canada under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act?

2. What were their names and addresses?

3. How many corporations, in each of the past three years, were fined under Section 7(1) of the Act and what was the total amount of fines imposed and collected?

4. How many officers, directors or agents of those corporations were fined in each of the past three years and how many were imprisoned under the provisions of Section 7(2) of the act?

5. How many registered letters were sent by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, in each of the past three years, to the delinquent corporations, as provided for by Section 8 of the act and how many fines and imprisonments ensued?

6. How many labour unions failed, in each of the past three years, to file a return with Statistics Canada under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act?

7. What were their names and addresses?

8. How many labour unions, in each of the past three years, were fined under Section 12(1) of the act and what was the total amount of fines imposed and collected?

9. How many officers, members of the executive board or agents of unions were fined in each of the past three years and how many were imprisoned under Section 12(3) of the act?

10. How many registered letters were sent by the Minister, in each of the past three years, to the delinquent labour unions, as provided by Section 13 of the act and how many fines and imprisonments ensued?

Return tabled.

LIST OF LAWYERS MAINTAINED FOR GOVERNMENT LEGAL WORK IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 2,272—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names, addresses and electoral districts of all lawyers maintained by the Department of Justice for government legal work in the province of British Columbia?

Return tabled.

LIST OF LAWYERS MAINTAINED FOR GOVERNMENT LEGAL WORK IN ALBERTA

Question No. 2,273—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names, addresses and electoral districts of all lawyers maintained by the Department of Justice for government legal work in the province of Alberta?

Return tabled.

LIST OF LAWYERS MAINTAINED FOR GOVERNMENT LEGAL WORK IN SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 2,274—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names, addresses and electoral districts of all lawyers maintained by the Department of Justice for government legal work in the province of Saskatchewan?

Return tabled.

LIST OF LAWYERS MAINTAINED FOR GOVERNMENT LEGAL WORK IN QUEBEC

Question No. 2,276—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names, addresses and electoral districts of all lawyers maintained by the Department of Justice for government legal work in the province of Quebec?

Return tabled.

LIST OF LAWYERS MAINTAINED FOR GOVERNMENT LEGAL WORK IN ONTARIO

Question No. 2,280—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names, addresses and electoral districts of all lawyers maintained by the Department of Justice for government legal work in the province of Ontario?

Return tabled.

DREE—ESTABLISHMENT OF RAPESEED CRUSHING PLANT IN WESTERN CANADA

Question No. 2,295—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. Since 1969, how many applications were (a) received (b) accepted by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to establish some Rapeseed Crushing Plants in the provinces of (i) Alberta (ii) Manitoba (iii) Saskatchewan (iv) others?

2. For each year, 1969 to 1972 inclusive, what was the total amount of money spent by the government (a) to assist the provinces of (i) Alberta (ii) Manitoba (iii) Saskatchewan (iv) others in establishing and maintaining some Rapeseed Crushing Plants (b) to improve and expand port facilities for the handling of rapeseed and rapeseed processed products?

3. Is consideration being given by the government to include processed grain products under the Crowsnest freight rates and (a) if not, for what reasons (b) if so, on what date?

4. For each year, 1969 to 1972 inclusive, which countries have imported from Canada (a) rapeseed (b) rapeseed oil (c) rapeseed meal (d) rapeseed margarine (e) rapeseed shortening?

5. How many countries have been contacted by personnel of (a) the Canadian Wheat Board (b) the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in order to promote the export sales of (i) rapeseed (ii) rapeseed products?

6. Is it the intention of the Canadian Wheat Board to remove delivery quotas on rapeseed and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reasons?

Return tabled.

* MULTICULTURALISM PROGRAM

Question No. 2,346—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. What are the names, positions and departments of the public servants involved in any aspect of the multiculturalism program?

2. How many consultants to, or other contract or occasional employees of, the government are involved in any aspect of the multiculturalism program and what is the name and responsibility of each?

3. Of those persons enumerated in response to Parts 1 and 2, how many fall under the authority of (a) the Minister of State responsible for Multiculturalism (b) the Secretary of State (c) some other minister (d) more than one minister?

4. Of the persons who fall under the authority of more than one minister, in each case (a) who are the ministers involved (b) what is the description of the division of authority?

5. Of the persons under the authority of the Minister of State responsible for Multiculturalism, how many are not on the personal staff of that minister?

Return tabled.

COAST GUARD PROGRAM

Question No. 2,370—Mr. McKinnon:

1. What are the Coast Guard vessels by (a) type (b) purpose (c) number of crew (d) base for each coast?

2. What are the administrative and operational costs for the Coast Guard on each coast?

3. Is there any central administrative cost of the Coast Guard not included in Part 2 and, if so, what is it?

Return tabled.

OFY PROGRAM

Question No. 2,414—Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo):

1. For each year 1971, 1972 and 1973, what was (a) the total number of OFY applications received (b) the total amount of OFY funds disbursed (c) the total amount of OFY funds requested (d) the total number of OFY grants awarded (i) nationally (ii) by each province and territory (iii) by each constituency represented by a cabinet minister (iv) by each constituency represented by a parliamentary secretary?

2. For each year 1971, 1972 and 1973 (a) how many applicants were employed in the previous year by OFY projects (b) how many such applicants received OFY grants, in each case (i) nationally (ii) by each province and territory (iii) by each constituency represented by a cabinet minister (iv) by each constituency represented by a parliamentary secretary?

3. For the same years, in how many instances were references or contact people, who were involved with the making of OFY applications, also members of the Local Advisory Board and, in each case (a) what were the names of the contact people (b) what were the names of the references (c) what were the titles of the projects involved (d) what was the name of the constituency (e) what was the amount of the award?

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

4. For the same years, how many applications were refused where either the contact person or the reference were members of the Local advisory Board and, in each case (a) what were the titles of the projects involved (b) what was the name of the constituency?

Return tabled.

COST OF SUMMER HOSTELS

Question No. 2,501—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. How many summer hostels are being (a) subsidized (b) otherwise supported (c) managed outright by the government in 1973?

2. What is the cost to the government of each summer hostel operation?

3. Was an approach to (a) the Canadian Youth Hostel Association (b) any other group outside government made to operate or manage these summer hostels and, if not, for what reason?

4. Was any approach made to (a) the Canadian Youth Hostel Association (b) any other group to provide alternate hostel accommodation and, if not, for what reason?

5. If approaches were made to operate summer hostels or provide alternative hosteling arrangements to any group other than the Canadian Youth Hostel Association, what was the name of each such group?

6. What is the location of each summer hostel which will be maintained on a year-round basis?

Return tabled.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—CAPITAL COST ADDITIONS

Question No. 2,546—Mr. McCain:

1. For each fiscal year since the commencement of operations, what have been the capital-cost additions to the St. Lawrence Seaway?

2. (a) What was the total capital cost of each such addition (b) what was (i) Canada's share (ii) the U.S. share of each addition's cost?

Return tabled.

COST OF FREIGHT SUBSIDIZATIONS

Question No. 2,548—Mr. McCain:

What was the cost to the Canadian taxpayer for freight subsidization for each fiscal year 1970-71, 1971-72 and 1972-73 in each of the following regions (a) the Maritimes (b) Central Canada (Ontario and Quebec) (c) the Prairie provinces (d) British Columbia?

Return tabled.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order under the heading of questions. On Wednesday, March 21, 1973, as recorded in Hansard at page 2447, question No. 19 in my name was passed as an order for return and a return was tabled that day. However, it was grossly incomplete. The question had to do with directorships of cabinet ministers. Only a few ministers responded. Since the House passed the question as an order for return, I think it would be in order to ask that that return be completed.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I remember that question very well. I had inquiries made. Unfortunately, the cabinet ministers of this government do not have a surfeit of directorships in outside companies.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a further point of order. That does not excuse cabinet ministers from responding to an order of the House that a full return be tabled.

• (1520)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARAB-ISRAELI WAR—REQUEST FOR REPORT—POSITION OF CANADA—POSSIBLE PARTICIPATION IN PEACEKEEPING

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the hon. gentleman report any progress with respect to coming closer to the end of the terrible war that is taking place in the Middle East, and will he tell us precisely what is the attitude of the Canadian government toward this tragic conflict?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): During the parliamentary recess, when this bloody war began, I did make some public statements and it would be my intention, either tomorrow or the next day, to make a statement on motions setting out the facts as we know them and the attitude of the Canadian government.

Mr. Stanfield: Will the minister tell the House whether the statement he made to the effect that Canada would agree to participate in a new peacekeeping force is formal government policy, and whether the government has committed itself or is prepared to send forces immediately upon a request by the United Nations?

Mr. Sharp: As the Leader of the Opposition knows, we do have some Canadian forces in the area today serving with the United Nations Truce Supervisory Organization. They are continuing to serve in that capacity although, as the hon. gentleman knows, the truce is no longer being observed. I said in the House, and I repeated it in New York, that Canada would be prepared to participate in peacekeeping operations under the auspices of the United Nations. That caveat about United Nations sponsorship does, of course, apply to any request that might be made to us to serve in this area again.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he has taken any initiative on behalf of Canada to bring hostilities in the area to an end?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I would not wish, of course, to exaggerate the importance of what Canada might say or do in these circumstances. This is not a war which is going to be ended by simple requests from a country like Canada to stop the fighting. We have, however, done everything we can to make known Canada's view that this kind of warfare is not likely to settle anything and that there must be negotiations. We have expressed this point of view to all those participating in the war at the present time. We have instructed our ambassadors to present this view to the governments of all countries concerned and there has been some response—so far, not very hopeful.

ARAB-ISRAELI WAR—POSSIBILITY OF DEBATE—RIGHT OF ISRAEL TO EXIST AND HAVE SECURE BOUNDARIES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): On the same subject, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he would be prepared to agree to a debate on this issue in the House, not necessarily a lengthy one but comprising more than the usual statement by him followed by responses on the part of the spokesmen for the other parties?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Subject, of course, to the agreement of the House leaders on the business of the House, I, personally—and I know the government shares this view—would have no objection to a debate of that kind if it could be arranged at a time when it did not interfere with vital business going on in the House.

Mr. Lewis: Basic to the entire problem in the Middle East, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs knows, is the question of the right of Israel to continue its existence as a sovereign country in that area. May I ask the minister whether, in any statement he may make, he will continue to emphasize Canada's support of the right of Israel to exist and to have secure and recognized boundaries?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can entirely agree with what the leader of the New Democratic Party has said. Canada's policy begins from the premise that the State of Israel, which we helped to bring into existence and whose membership in the United Nations we supported, has the right to exist just like any other state in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: We also believe it is entitled to live behind secure and recognized boundaries.

ARAB-ISRAELI WAR—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON WHETHER OR NOT ARABS GUILTY OF AGGRESSION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is more direct than those which have been asked so far.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, no, those questions were very proper.

An hon. Member: But inept?

Mr. Diefenbaker: However, the people of Canada would like to know whether the minister, who has apparently been in communication with the Arab states according to the public statements he has made, has informed them that the attack made on Israel by the Arab states was an act of naked aggression and one that cannot be justified under international law? Is that the opinion of the government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have expressed a view which is widely shared throughout the world and which is based upon the observations of the United Nations Truce Supervisory Organization, that the attack on this occasion came from Egypt and Syria.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the attitude of the Canadian government? Instead of a mealy-mouthed generalization, will the minister say whether the government made known its feeling that what has happened over there on the part of the Arab states cannot be justified under international law? That was the question.

Mr. Sharp: I am not going to compete with the right hon. gentleman in matters of international law. All I can say to him, and I am sure he would agree with this, is that this way of settling this international dispute is not likely to lead to useful results. He will agree with me that the fighting ought to stop and that we ought to get down to negotiations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is just a generalization.

CHILE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RECOGNITION OF MILITARY GOVERNMENT—ASSISTANCE TO POLITICAL REFUGEES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question, also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, has to do with another subject. Will the hon. gentleman make a statement in the House explaining why the government of Canada decided so quickly to recognize the new military government of Chile in light of the disregard by that government of the fundamental rights of many of the people of Chile? And did the government approve or will it repudiate a report of the Canadian ambassador to Chile justifying the military coup?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I do not think it is necessary to make a statement in the House as to the reasons for recognizing the government of Chile. We were following a practice which we have followed, generally speaking, in the past. Indeed, far from giving early recognition to the government of Chile we were very late in the process; we followed the Vatican, Denmark, Sweden and other close friends who have just as strong a respect and liking for democratic institutions as we have.

Mr. Brewin: If the minister does not propose to inform the House as to the reasons for Canadian recognition of the new regime, will he at least outline to us the steps to be taken to assist political refugees from Chile by offering them asylum, safe conduct and assistance?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Sharp: As the hon. gentleman knows, we have accepted in Canada a number of Chileans who entered the Canadian embassy in Chile seeking, I think the best word is, shelter. Under international law they are not refugees in the ordinary sense but they did come to the Canadian embassy seeking shelter, and they were given shelter in accordance with the standing instructions provided to all our ambassadors. They are now in Canada. We have sent an immigration officer from Buenos Aires to Santiago, and we have sent one of the leading figures in the Department of External Affairs to examine the situation on the spot. I think the hon. gentleman can be sure we shall act with humanity in these matters as we always do.

* * *

● (1530)

[Translation]

POST OFFICE

REQUEST THAT PAY OF RURAL MAIL DELIVERY CONTRACTORS BE INCREASED

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the increase in the price of cars and fuel as well as in the cost of living in general can the minister say whether he is considering a revision of the position of rural mail contractors as well as all categories of employees with the Post Office who move the mail at rates set several years ago? If so, when will the minister make known his plans concerning the required adjustment so those employees will be in receipt of salaries comparable with those of other categories?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that will be done within two or three weeks.

* * *

[English]

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF NEW BUDGET—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the continuing high level of inflation and some evidence that the economy is slowing down and unemployment is rising, but more particularly in view of the fact that since that last budget we have had a great number of policies brought in affecting the expenditure pattern of the Canadian government, would the Minister of Finance tell the House today when we may expect to have a new budget?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did reply to the hon. gentleman's leader that it was not my intention to bring in a budget at the moment.

Mr. Stanfield: That was three weeks ago.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That was three weeks ago and the position has not changed.

Mr. Gillies: Is it the position of the minister, therefore, that he can do nothing to control inflation through fiscal policy, just as he can do nothing—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a supplementary question. It is argumentative and a question asked in those terms is not in order.

[Later:]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance which is based on the original question asked by the hon. member for Don Valley. On October 11 the Governor of the Bank of Canada stated that economic growth is largely responsible for inflation. Is the minister in agreement with this statement? If so, are his present policies and practices being based on it?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question can be asked directly without asking the minister whether he is in agreement with a statement made in other circumstances. A question asked in such terms is irregular.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM—POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF OCTOBER 15 DEADLINE—GOVERNMENT'S INTENTION TOWARD THOSE WHO FAIL TO REGISTER

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I address a couple of questions to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can the minister advise the House and the country as to how long he intends to assess the situation respecting the regularization of status legislation, and when does he intend to advise the country whether the October 15 deadline is final?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is only common sense and practical to wait at least until all the figures on the program are in before making a judgment whether we do have some firm evidence that there are many people whom the program has not reached. I would be interested in the hon. member's reaction when he assesses the program as well.

Mr. Alexander: I suggest that the members of the Conservative Party have been very co-operative in this serious matter. I should like to ask the minister what he intends to do with those illegal immigrants who do not register by midnight, October 15? How does he intend to ferret them out and what are his intentions in terms of dealing with them, keeping in mind there has been some suggestion that perhaps there is a witch hunt in the making?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the use of the expression "witch hunt" came from sources that I cannot identify and I repudiate it totally. We said, and I think all hon. members agreed, when we dealt with Bill C-197 that once the program is over the law as it stands will apply. We do not intend to beef up our enforcement provisions and go on a witch hunt, but we do intend, when the presence of illegal immigrants in this country is brought to our attention, to apply the law as it now stands.

* * *

TRANSPORT

NEWFOUNDLAND AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND FERRY SERVICES—POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF CROWN CORPORATION TO OPERATE—EFFORTS TO CLEAR BACKLOG OF FREIGHT AT NORTH SYDNEY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the statement made by the minister on Friday last regarding the Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island ferry services, is it the intention of the government to establish a Crown corporation to discharge the government's constitutional responsibility to provide continuous ferry services to these two provinces? May I also ask what efforts the government is making to clear up the backlog on the North Sydney to Newfoundland ferry route as a consequence of the rail strike?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I have already announced we have restructured the administration of ferry services in the Atlantic provinces. I made this announcement a few days ago. There will be a separate administration presided over by Mr. Tingley of Newfoundland, with sub-units in P.E.I., Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. We hope that under this new formula there will be a more efficient service. This administration will be able to plan for the future, will make recommendations, and will not be all mixed up in the administration of the CNR.

With regard to the second part of the question, we are making an all-out effort to get rid of the backlog. There are about 20 vessels travelling from Nova Scotia to Newfoundland. At the peak on September 24, 937 cars were backlogged. The number is now down to 702 cars. Progress is being made very rapidly and we hope within a few weeks to get rid of the remaining backlog.

NEWFOUNDLAND AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND FERRY SERVICES—POSSIBLE FREEDOM FROM TIE-UPS AS RESULT OF LABOUR DISPUTES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question may I ask the minister whether the new administration announced in the minister's release concerning ferry services within the CNR means that these services will no longer be subject to labour disputes within the railway and that the minister can now guarantee that the services will never again be disrupted?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, it does not mean that. I think if we are to remove the right to strike on the part of workers the question will have to be discussed in the House, when I presume many members will have something to say about it.

Oral Questions

SUGGESTED USE OF ARMED FORCES AIRCRAFT AND VESSELS TO CLEAR BACKLOG OF FREIGHT AT NORTH SYDNEY

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, may I address my question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact it appears that his department is giving support to the removal of the backlog of freight, I wonder whether the minister has received a request for increased support, not only through airlifts but on the part of vessels owned by the department? What action is the minister taking in this regard?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the armed forces have been helping to remove the backlog of freight. We have moved two and a half million pounds by Hercules aircraft on some 74 flights, and we will be able to carry this program forward for as long as it may be useful.

Mr. Speaker: There are a number of supplementary questions on this subject. The Chair might recognize the hon. member for Assiniboia and then the hon. member for Bellechasse before returning to the several members who have questions to raise on this point.

* * *

GRAIN

WHEAT—SUGGESTED CHANGE IN CROP YEAR TO EQUALIZE PAYMENTS TO FARMERS WHO MADE EARLY DELIVERIES

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice who is in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact that many smaller producers delivered their grain during the old crop year in June and July in order to meet financial obligations and debts and therefore lost out on the announcement regarding new prices on July 31 or August 1 for the new crop year, would the minister inform the House whether the government is considering making an equalization payment from the new pool account so as to assist those farmers who took a beating as a result of the new prices?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker. The ordinary year end of the pool is July 31, and farmers are fairly well aware of that fact. The fact is that some farmers realized that there was a possibility of a higher price and held their grain for a period or put it in storage for a period to sell to the new pool. I see no easy way of attempting to change the year end for pooling purposes in order to amalgamate part or all of two pools.

Mr. Knight: In view of the fact the government threw the quotas wide open and requested the farmers to deliver grain in the dying days of the old crop year and smaller farmers had to take payments to meet their debts, thus taking a beating as a result of the situation, would the minister inform the House whether the government has instructed the Wheat Board to examine the possibility of backdating the new crop year to July 15 or July 1?

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I should say, first of all, to the hon. member for Assiniboia that the opening of quotas is a function of the Canadian Wheat Board, not of the government. I think the hon. member would find it very difficult to draw one particular line and then not begin to draw a second one for those people who delivered their grain in the previous two week period. That is why I suggest that the alternative of somehow amalgamating the two would have the effect of creating what might be considered to be far more difficulties than it was set up to cure.

* * *

• (1540)

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

APPLICATION OF NEW FEED GRAIN POLICY—EFFECT ON EASTERN PRODUCERS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Can he tell the House whether the new feed grains policy announced on September 14, 1973 has been applied so far, and what are the results in connection with the claims of eastern producers?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the feed grain policy has been implemented in stages as the mechanics became available. The hon. member is, no doubt, referring to the question of the actual pricing of feed grains, particularly barley, for the purpose of marketing in the east. I am informed that a price announcement by the Canadian Wheat Board is expected momentarily.

* * *

TRANSPORT

NEWFOUNDLAND FERRY SERVICE—SUGGESTED REDUCTION IN FARES AND FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to a question directed to the Minister of Transport by my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East. In view of the fact that the 90 miles separating Newfoundland from the mainland of Canada are to us what the trans-Canada highway is to people in other parts of Canada, is the minister prepared to instruct this new organization to revise the fares and freight rates structure for moving people and goods across that 90 miles to make them consistent with the cost of travelling 90 miles on any portion of the trans-Canada highway?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this problem of rates is being studied with the premiers of the Atlantic provinces. I met with them a few weeks ago. I intend to continue to study all these problems in an effort to find, hopefully, an acceptable solution.

BACKLOG OF FREIGHT AT NORTH SYDNEY—REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY—POSSIBLE USE OF ADDITIONAL ARMED FORCES AIRCRAFT

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that on September 19 the minister indicated that, according to information from Canadian National Railways, the backlog of freight destined for Newfoundland would be cleaned up in about two weeks, and at that time there were 650 cars backlogged, and in view of his own statement today that there are 702 cars backlogged in the same system, would he cause an independent government or departmental inquiry, independent of the stuff he is being fed by Canadian National, into the circumstances so that he himself will recognize the dilemma facing the people on the east coast of this country?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think in order to be fair to all those working very hard to get rid of this backlog of freight destined to Newfoundland, particularly those in the Department of Transport and the ferry workers, I should point out that there is a normal backlog of about 200 cars between Moncton and the east, so you have to deduct that number from the 702 cars. It is for this reason we are making an all-out effort. We chartered 13 ships in order to get rid of the backlog. We have also had a strike in St. John's, and a bridge collapsed. In addition, there has been a tremendous increase in the amount of freight and passenger traffic.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You don't want to listen.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a last supplementary question, following which I suggest we should move to the next subject.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, perhaps on motions tomorrow the minister might make a statement to help clear up this matter. I should like to direct this question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that three Hercules aircraft airlifting freight for approximately seven days managed to clean up about half of what is normally shipped by sea in one day, and in view of the fact that some of this freight was cement which we export from Corner Brook to the mainland and it was flown back again to Newfoundland, would the minister be willing to authorize a serious effort to put on eight or ten Hercules for two or three weeks in order that Newfoundland children can expect Santa Claus to arrive at least before the middle of February? I ask this as a serious question and not as a political show.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister did not indicate an intention to reply to the question by the hon. member. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe.

An hon. Member: It was another minister.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe. I must admit that I was looking at the wrong minister. Perhaps the Minister of National Defence might be allowed to answer the question put by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say to the hon. member that the Department of National Defence has made a very serious effort. I suggest that 74 flights represents a lot of flying. We are operating under the guidance and direction of the Department of Transport in respect to this airlift. As I said in my reply a moment ago, we are willing to put on more planes if they can help in these circumstances.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARAB-ISRAELI WAR—POSSIBLE SUPPLYING OF ARMS BY CHINESE—SUGGESTED DISCUSSION BY PRIME MINISTER WITH CHINESE GOVERNMENT

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of reports to the effect that Chinese arms are being used by certain guerilla groups in the mid-east, can the Acting Prime Minister inform the House whether the Prime Minister, while in Peking, will discuss these reports?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the reports I have had of the discussions between the Prime Minister and the leaders of the Chinese government—I think the House will agree that these discussions have gone very well and that the non-partisan, warm reception given the Prime Minister indicates the high regard of the people of China for Canada and Canadians—are to the effect that the Prime Minister discussed the Middle East situation with both Mao Tse-tung and Chou En-lai. When the Prime Minister returns I am sure he will be happy to answer this question.

* * *

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—CONDITION OF HIGHWAY BETWEEN ENTERPRISE AND HAY RIVER

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that eight to ten people have lost their lives in car accidents on a very bad section of the Northwest Territories highway between Enterprise and Hay River, will the minister advise the House if and when this dangerous situation will be corrected?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that and I have asked the officials of the department to see what could be done to improve the situation. However, it must also be understood that this is a very difficult road—the roads are not paved—and that sometimes accidents could have been caused by wrong manœuvres by absent-minded drivers.

* * *

[English]

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF TRANSPORT COMMISSION ON RAILWAY ACCIDENTS AND SAFETY PRECAUTIONS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have directed this question on another occasion to the Minister of Transport, but in view of the fact that as of yesterday afternoon there were a number of freight cars spread across the real estate in my home town I wonder whether the minister can now tell us when we may expect the report he has promised for some time regarding derailments in Canada and safety precautions to be taken in this regard?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am awaiting this report from the Canadian Transport Commission. As soon as I get it I will communicate it to the hon. member.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARAB—ISRAELI WAR—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DUTIES AND SAFETY OF CANADIAN MEMBERS OF UNITED NATIONS TRUCE OBSERVERS FORCE

Mr. Donald Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would he assure the House and the country of the safety of Canadian truce observers performing their duties under United Nations orders in the area of the Middle East, and will he indicate their names, the duties they were called upon to perform at the time of the outbreak of hostilities, the areas of their operations and their present whereabouts?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not carry that kind of information in my head. I can assure the hon. member that all my reports indicate that Canadians serving in that area are alive and well. I would be very happy to supply the hon. member with the names, duties and other information in order to satisfy his curiosity.

* * *

FINANCE

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN—SUGGESTED REVIEW BY CONSUMER AFFAIRS MINISTER

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I wonder if the minister has reviewed the advertising campaign conducted by the government of Canada in an effort to sell the current issue of Canada savings bonds?

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I have not as yet, Mr. Speaker, but I will be happy to look into the matter.

Mr. Blenkarn: When the minister reviews that campaign, will he do so with the intention of indicating to the Canadian public that the 8 per cent interest rate barely represents enough to break even—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1550)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARAB ISRAELI WAR—POSITION OF CANADIAN MEMBERS OF UNITED NATIONS TRUCE SUPERVISORY COMMISSION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is related to a previous question directed to the Acting Prime Minister. I wonder whether we are interpreting him correctly in understanding the Acting Prime Minister to have said that in fact no members of the Canadian Armed Forces serving with the United Nations Truce Supervisory Commission in the Middle East are in fact in the protective custody, if you will, of one of the warring nations and are free and as nearly as able fulfilling their duties?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what I said in my answer is that they are alive and well. I am not absolutely sure just where they all are at the moment because some of them have been asked to move out of areas of warfare for their own safety. I will have to inquire concerning just exactly where they are and who is helping to protect them at the moment.

* * *

ENERGY

OIL EXPORT TAX—SHARING WITH ALBERTA—SUGGESTION THAT MINISTER OF FINANCE TAKE OVER NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. Has the government now reached an agreement with the government of the province of Alberta in respect of what portion of the surtax will be returned to the province of Alberta at this time?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that question is still under negotiation.

Mr. Woolliams: Then may I ask the Minister of Finance this question. In light of the fact the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has caused a lot of difficulty between the two levels of government because of his inflammatory statements, would the Minister of Finance be prepared to take over negotiations in respect of the problem concerning the surtax between the federal government and the provincial government?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances I think I had better interpret that as being argumentative.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CHILE—ALLEGED RECOMMENDATION FROM CANADIAN AMBASSADOR THAT CANADA SUPPORT MILITARY JUNTA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that Mr. Andrew Ross, the Canadian ambassador to Chile, has been reported to have recommended to the government of Canada shortly after the coup that we support this anti-democratic coup, would the minister inform the House whether or not the government received such a recommendation and, if so, whether he has taken steps to remove this man from office?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman seems to be referring to an alleged leak and it is government policy not to comment on these matters because it only encourages their repetition.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

ALLEGED FLOODING OF CANADIAN MARKET WITH FAT CATTLE FROM UNITED STATES—SUGGESTED EMBARGO

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the squeeze that cattle feedlot operators are in, has the minister received any communication from the feedlot operators either west or east about the flooding of the Canadian market with overly fat cattle?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member is talking about cattle from the United States. We have received representations from the feedlot operators, east and west, from the Beef Improvement Association, the Canadian Livestock Association and the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. In essence, what most of them are saying is: Keep your hands off and we will work this out ourselves.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Has the minister seriously considered a temporary embargo until fat cattle from the United States are off the market?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we have considered this. We are still discussing it with the Canadian Cattlemen's Association and other such associations. I intend to discuss it further with my colleagues. In any decisions for which I have been responsible I have, as Minister of Agriculture, believed in full discussion with the parties concerned. When I can get some kind of a definite opinion from them it will be something different from what I have been getting as to just what they want us to do.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

COLLINS BAY—ESCAPE OF FOUR INMATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Will the minister tell the House what actions are being taken by his department in connection with the escape of four inmates from the Collins Bay institution over the weekend?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the inmates escaped from Collins Bay over the weekend by gaining access to the plumbing and heating ducts in the institution and thereby gaining access to the heating unit which is outside the walls of the Collins Bay institution. The police authorities were alerted immediately and a search is presently underway.

* * *

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—POSSIBLE TRANSFER TO DEPARTMENT OF MANPOWER

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Can the Secretary of State tell the House whether the government has decided to end the Opportunities for Youth Program as it now exists and transfer its so-called youth employment function to the Department of Manpower? Also, will the minister undertake to table all reports evaluating OFY so that parliament may judge the effectiveness of this $43 million program and any successor programs that the government may propose?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, no such decision has been taken.

* * *

VETERAN'S AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE PHASING OUT OF VETERANS LAND ACT OFFICE IN LONDON, ONTARIO—PROVISION FOR HANDLING ACCOUNTS

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is it a fact that the Veterans Land Act offices in London are to be phased out by late 1974, and if such is the case what provisions have been made to assist in the relocation of the several employees and avoid the obvious inconvenience to some 10,000 veterans whose accounts are now handled through this office?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to answer the hon. member's question, this is under consideration. It is not definitely phased out. So far as the accounts of veterans are concerned, there will be some provision made to see that the services are provided.

Mr. Speaker: On second thought, I think that question might well have been placed on the order paper, but the question has been asked and the hon. member has received a reply.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ALLEGED REPAIRING OF CANADIAN LOCOMOTIVES IN UNITED STATES—POSSIBLE LOSS OF JOBS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Labour. Will the Minister of Labour investigate immediately the situation in the city of St. Thomas where Canadian locomotives usually repaired in Canadian shops have been sent to the United States for repairs? If this situation continues it will result in the loss of a large number of Canadian jobs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister might reply briefly to the question.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate having more details from the hon. member. On the face of it, it would appear to be a question which should be more appropriately directed to the Minister of Manpower or the Minister of Transport.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

ALLEGED INCREASE BY BELL CANADA IN RATES CHARGED RURAL SUBSCRIBERS—REQUEST FOR FREEZE AND INVESTIGATION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister who is speaking for the Minister of Communications today. In view of the current practice of Bell Canada to increase, without corroboration, basic monthly rates for rural telephone subscribers living outside the company's core boundaries in the Sudbury area, and in view of the hardship these increases are causing many rural residents, will the minister consider instigating a thorough investigation of these rate increases by Bell Canada and the placing of a freeze on increases until such time as the investigation is completed?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister who is away on government business I am pleased to take this question as notice and I am sure the minister will answer it when he returns.

[Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan).]

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

PRICE OF FEED GRAIN TO EASTERN CANADA UNDER NEW POLICY

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the minister responsible for the Canadian Livestock Feed Board a question which is supplementary to that of the hon. member for Bellechasse. In view of the fact that when he announced his new policy, the minister stated that the price of feed grain in eastern Canada would be considerably lower, that this announcement was made three months ago, and that the price of feed grain has in fact remained unchanged, could he advise the House when he expects the price of feed grain to go down in eastern Canada?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the new feed grain policy is not to create either lower or higher prices for feed grains but rather to ensure availability at the same basic price plus costs all across the country. The implementation of this policy has been in progress. The price base under this new policy, in other words, based on the average price in western Canada, will be announced very soon.

* * *

DRUGS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF LEDAIN COMMISSION

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could the minister advise the House when the LeDain report will be out, what is the reason for the delay and why is it not out already?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to know the answer to that.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Athabasca.

Mr. Reynolds: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Athabasca, but the hon. member is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, the minister promised this report months ago. It has cost the people of this country millions of dollars. The last time the minister was asked the same question he said it was delayed because of translation. I cannot understand his explanation and I think it is contemptuous of the minister not to present the report to the House.

● (1600)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN CULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES AND ETHNIC ORGANIZATIONS ON SELECTION OF DELEGATES TO MULTICULTURAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Can he inform the House whether the various ethnic organizations and the provinces of Canada were asked to select delegates for the multicultural conference now in progress?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will have to consult my colleague, the Minister of State responsible for multiculturalism, on the exact format. I have a general idea but I would like to be absolutely precise.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for Athabasca on a supplementary, then the hon. member for Vancouver South and, before calling orders of the day, the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Yewchuk: Perhaps from his general knowledge of this information the minister could inform us whether these organizations were at least asked for advice regarding who the delegates should be.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, I believe so, in most cases. I am not sure if this would be true of all organizations.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF VISAS TO RUSSIANS INVITED BY FISHERMEN'S UNION TO VISIT CANADA—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. A. John Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of Canada's policy to maintain friendship with Russia and, more recently, with mainland China, as evidenced by the Prime Minister's visit, can the minister tell the House why visas were refused last week to Russians invited to Canada by the United Fishermen's and Allied Workers' Union in British Columbia?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this situation was brought to my attention over the weekend, and I have asked for a full report on it. I will advise the hon. member as soon as I get the details.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

MONITORING OF SALES TAX AND TARIFF CUTS TO ENSURE BENEFITS REACH CONSUMERS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs from whom I have been trying to obtain a report on the monitoring of the consequences of tax reductions contained in the budget of the Minister of Finance last February, which the minister has frequently indicated would be forthcoming. Now, following three weeks of leisure, can the minister tell the House when we may expect this report, if we are ever going to get it at all?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I intend to table it in the House this week.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURES TO PROVIDE FOR PAYMENT OF FAMILY AND SPECIAL ALLOWANCES

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-211, to provide for the payment of family allowances in respect of children to supplement the income of Canadian families and for the payment of special allowances to provide for the care and maintenance of other children, and to amend the Income Tax Act in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

[English]

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride today that I move second reading of Bill C-211, a measure to supplement the incomes of Canadian families and improve their capacity to meet the costs of raising children. Bill C-211 will permit 3½ million Canadian families, the great majority of which have low or middle incomes, to realize a net additional amount of $840 million in 1974 alone. In addition, it will advance the development of a more equitable regional redistribution of income across Canada. For these reasons, Bill C-211 represents a major step in the over-all reform of the social security system to which this government is firmly committed. As a matter of fact, it constitutes I believe the largest single federal expenditure ever voted by Parliament for any new program.

This bill is the second major social policy measure that the Government has brought before the House in the past six months. The first, of course, was legislation this past spring to increase the universal old age pension to $100 per month, thereby raising the guaranteed minimum income for pensioners to $170.14 monthly for single pensioners and $324.60 monthly for married couples when both the husband and wife are pensioners. Recently, Parliament approved a further amendment to the Old Age Security Act to provide that both the Old Age Security Pension and the Guaranteed Income Supplement be escalated in accordance with increases in the cost of living on a quarterly basis, instead of once a year, as was previously the case. This means that as of October, the guaranteed minimum income is $179.16 for single pensioners and $341.80 for a married pensioner couple. These increased pensions for the aged, together with the changes in income tax law which substantially reduced or eliminated the tax burden on pensioners have, we believe, gone a long way towards improving the lot of our citizens aged 65 and over.

Bill C-211, now before the House, is directed at the other end of the age spectrum—at our citizens who are under 18 years of age. To mitigate the effects of rising prices, Parliament recently approved an amendment to the Family and Youth Allowances Acts to increase the monthly allowances paid in respect of dependent children under age 18 from an average of $7.21 to a flat $12 per month effective in October. The bill now before the House proposes to almost triple the pre-October average allowance payment from $7.21 monthly to an average of $20 monthly, with effect from January 1, 1974. This increase will mean greater benefits for over 7½ million children in over 3½ million Canadian families.

Family allowances were first introduced in Canada in 1945. In that year the allowances were set at $5 for children up to 6 years of age, $6 for children aged 6 to 9, $7 for children aged 10 to 12 and $8 for children aged 13 to 15. The Family Allowance Program in 1945 was additional to the system of income tax credits for dependent children of taxpayers that had been in operation since 1918. The two measures were, however, closely co-ordinated. That is, the Income Tax Act required the return of certain amounts up to 100 per cent of the family allowance payments received, according to a graduated formula taking into account family income and size. In 1947, this approach was modified to repeal the tax on family allowances and to provide different exemptions depending on whether children were qualified or not qualified for family allowances. The original exemptions were $100 for a child qualified for family allowances and $300 for a child not so qualified. In the intervening years these exemptions have been increased and revised to $300 for children under 16 years and $550 for a dependent child of 16 years or over.

In 1957 the allowance rates were changed to $6 for children up to 10 years of age and $8 for children aged 10 to 15. The 1956 Family Assistance Program was revised in 1962 to provide the same level of benefits for the children of immigrants during their first year in Canada. Youth allowances of $10 for dependent children aged 16 and 17 who are in attendance at school were introduced in 1964. Finally, family and youth allowances were raised to a uniform benefit of $12 monthly effective October 1, 1973.

The original Family Allowance Program was introduced for the purpose of giving a maximum measure of income support to families to help ease the financial burden of bringing up children and to provide a measure of equal opportunity for children regardless of a family's economic situation. The objective of the new family allowance program is to provide a supplement to the income of Canadian families in such a way that those with the greatest need will receive the greatest benefit.

● (1610)

The increased allowances were proposed in the working paper on Social Security in Canada which I tabled in this House on April 18 last. In the working paper a family allowance increase was put forward as part of what we have called an "income supplementation" strategy. This strategy is one of five strategies advanced by the government of Canada as the basis upon which a general federal-provincial review of social security policy might be undertaken.

At the April 20 Federal-Provincial conference of welfare ministers it was generally agreed that the propositions put forward in the working paper would provide an appropriate basis for a social security review. There was also unanimous agreement among the ministers at the conference that first priority in reforming the Canadian social security system should be given to increases in family allowances.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this bill is important for several reasons. First, it represents a major step in the reform of Canada's system of social security. It is the initial phase of a program of income supplementation for those Canadian families whose earnings from employment are insufficient to support the family unit, for those families whose breadwinner simply cannot find employment, and for those families whose breadwinner cannot or is not expected to work, such as disabled persons and single-parent families.

It is estimated that there are 327,000 families with children under 18 who can be classed among the "working poor"—families whose earnings are not considered sufficient to support the family unit. There can be several reasons for this.

As hon. members know, income from employment does not ordinarily take account of family size. The family's breadwinner may be working part time at or near the minimum wage but even if he or she works full time at this wage, the earnings are not sufficient to support more than one or two dependents. Second, the breadwinner may be able to obtain work only on a seasonal or intermittent basis and is not able to earn enough to meet the mimimum income needs of the family. For these families, it is a constant struggle to try to keep off the welfare rolls. These families continue to work because of their pride in their ability to make their own way and because they do not want to lose their respect for themselves.

The tripling of family allowances will go some considerable way in providing more income to assist low-income families in meeting the costs of caring for and educating their dependent children.

Another significant feature of this measure is that it will permit a province to vary the family allowances paid within that province in relation to the age of children or the size of family or both, but not in relation to family income, provided there is an act of the provincial legislature which establishes what the variation should be. This approach would thus involve two parallel sets of legislation—one passed by the Parliament of Canada and one passed by a provincial legislature—both of which would regulate the family allowances to be paid in that province. Before differential rates can be paid in a province, however, the Minister of National Health and Welfare would have to satisfy himself on two counts: first, that the family allowances to be paid in the province would average $20 per child over a three-year period and, second, that an allowance of not less than $12 per month would be paid in respect of any individual child.

At this point I would like to emphasize again what I have stated several times in this House. Although the amount of the cheques may vary from province to province, depending on provincial legislation, family allowances will continue to be sent by the federal government directly to families. Of course, a province may pay its own allowances as it sees fit. I should also like to draw attention to the fact that if a province chooses to have a $12 allowance paid in respect of children in a certain age group or in respect of a certain size of family, it will be necessary to pay more than $20 in respect of other children in order that a $20 average can be achieved. The provision to permit the provinces to vary the rates of family allowances flows from the fourth principle enunciated in the Speech from the Throne, namely:

It must be recognized that Provinces may wish to have the structures of social security vary in accordance with the social needs, income standards and the cost of living in different communities.

Mr. Speaker, this is consistent with recommendation No. 84 of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada. I should add that the approach of having two parallel sets of laws governing social security transfer payments represents a significant innovation in constitutional arrangements as well as a new and, hopefully, continuing phase of federal-provincial cooperation.

Two provinces to date—Alberta and Quebec—have indicated their intention to take advantage of this "flexibility formula", and all provincial ministers of welfare have welcomed the federal government's initiative to give this increased flexibility.

The government has proposed in this bill that the minimum allowance that can be paid in respect of any child must be 60 per cent of the national norm. We have selected this percentage figure taking account of the recommendation of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution that, where a province wishes to vary the benefits paid to individuals under federal programs involving demographic grants or guaranteed income payments, such benefits should not be less than a certain percentage—the committee suggested perhaps one-half or two-thirds—of the amounts that would be paid under the scheme proposed by the federal government.

I should also mention, Mr. Speaker, that the bill contains a provision to pay a special allowance of $20 per month for the care and maintenance of children who are maintained by provincial governments or agencies of provincial governments in institutions or in foster homes or who are maintained by private institutions.

The principle underlying the new family allowance program is that the allowance represents a supplement to family income. Logically-speaking, therefore, we should not be paying an allowance in respect of children maintained by provincial governments in foster homes or institutions or maintained in private voluntary institutions. There are other provisions to cover the costs for such care, such as the Canada Assistance Plan. However, I have received strong representations to the effect that we would be discriminating against already disadvantaged children in institutional care if we were to eliminate the allowances now paid. Consequently, the government has decided to ask Parliament to approve payment of a special allowance of $20 to be paid for the care and maintenance of these 58,000 children.

Moreover, we propose to include children in the care of those private voluntary institutions that have been approved by a provincial government. This will mean that allowances now will be paid in respect of an estimated 9,000 children maintained in private voluntary institutions and for whom payments are not made under existing legislation.

In order to avoid discriminating against children residing with foster parents, we propose that the special allowance cheque be sent directly to the foster parent in the same way that a family allowance cheque is sent to a regular parent.

● (1620)

[English]

Turning to the matter of costs, the proposed new family allowance program will result in an annual total cost of $1,830 million. This may be compared with the $640 million which was being expended annually on family and youth allowances prior to the October increase. However, we are also proposing that the family allowance should be treated as taxable income in the hands of the parent who claims an exemption for the child for income tax purposes. The estimated tax recovery will be $350 million to the federal treasury and a further $115 million to provincial treasuries, as a result of the tax-sharing agreements. Consequently, the net additional cost to the federal treasury of the new allowances will be $840 million, for a total net cost for the whole program of about $1,365 million.

I should stress that the proposal to tax the family allowance will mean that if a province does not vary the rates and an allowance of $20 is paid, only a very limited number of taxpayers with very high taxable incomes, for example, those with taxable incomes of over $40,000 whose children are 16 and 17 years of age, will suffer some loss compared with their existing family and youth allowance payments. Obviously, the situation may be somewhat different in those provinces which decide to modify the configuration of family allowances. The taxation of family allowances will bring them into line with the tax treatment accorded to other income security payments, such as Old Age Security, Canada Pension Plan benefits and Unemployment Insurance.

It will also be recalled that the Economic Council emphasized the need to concentrate family allowance benefits on the poor. The Family Income Security Program, or FISP, which my predecessor brought before this House last year, was designed to provide greater benefits, the lower the family's income. In the Speech from the Throne, and in my January 11th speech, the government's intention of bringing forward a new family allowance program which would concentrate the greatest benefits on those families with the lowest incomes was clearly stated. By taxing family allowances we will bring about a substantial degree of selectivity in the amount of the benefit, because a large part of the allowance will remain in the hands of those who need it most—the lower income families who do not earn sufficient income to pay taxes or who earn just enough to be taxed at the lowest marginal tax rate. On the other hand, families in the higher income tax brackets will receive a benefit that progressively reduces as income rises.

It may be useful to illustrate the effect of taxing the family allowance. Assuming that the national norm of $20 per child is paid; a non-taxpayer would receive a net benefit of $20; the average Canadian taxpayer would receive a net benefit of $15; the taxpayer in the highest tax bracket would receive a net benefit of $8.

Even after taxes are paid on family allowances, most Canadian families—and more particularly all the low as well as the middle income families—will be well ahead in comparison with allowances under the previous program. For example, the federal government used to pay a family with four eligible children an average of $346.08 per year. Based on the new average of $20 a month per child, the same family earning $4,000 per year will now receive—after allowing for taxes, I repeat, after allowing for taxes—$934.08, which represents a net increase of $588 per year for that family. The same family earning $6,000 per year will receive a net increase of $364.07. With earnings of $8,000, it will receive a net increase over and above what it was receiving before the latest amendments to the Family Allowances Act and the Youth Allowances Act, and after paying taxes, of $345.29. Furthermore, the same family with earnings of $10,000 will receive a net increase of $319.71.

[Translation]

We propose that the new allowances become payable as of January 1, 1974. There are several reasons for choosing this date. First, it coincides with the start of a new tax year and will simplify reporting of income when taxpayers file their tax returns for 1974. Second, provincial governments require time to develop and submit their plans for variations in rates of allowances. Finally, it will take time to gear up the administrative machinery to provide for differential payments.

Parents now in receipt of family allowances will not have to reapply for the new allowances payments. However, parents will be asked to provide some additional information to facilitate taxing the allowances.

● (1630)

There are several other features of the bill that I would like to highlight on second reading. The family allowance will continue to be paid to the mother where there is one. However, it will be up to each family to decide which parent will claim the child as an exemption for income tax purposes.

Family allowances will be paid to parents who are temporarily residing abroad providing they are still paying Canadian income taxes. This will mean family allowances will now be paid in respect of children of armed forces and diplomatic personnel posted abroad. The allowance to be paid in these situations will be the national norm of $20.

The allowance will be paid in respect of a child residing in Canada who has at least one parent who is a Canadian citizen or a landed immigrant or, in certain circumstances who is a nonimmigrant but whose income is subject to Canadian income tax. To be eligible for the allowance a parent must wholly or substantially maintain the child.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

Allowances will be available for children of immigrants as soon as they are legally landed. This means that the family assistance program, under which allowances equal to family allowances are paid during the first year in Canada, can be discontinued.

The school attendance requirement will no longer apply. Unemployed children under 18 who do not attend school are just as dependent on their parents as children who do. This means that allowances will be paid for all dependent 16 and 17 year olds throughout the year, instead of the present practice under youth allowances where youths must be in attendance at school to qualify for the allowances or be disabled and incapable of attending school.

The bill also provides that the average family allowance can be increased from time to time to take account of changes in the cost of living. Such increases would be brought about by order-in-council subject to approval through a resolution of the House.

Mr. Speaker, the proposal to increase family allowances, which was originally outlined in the Working Paper on Social Security in Canada was applauded by the vast majority of Canadians. To be sure, there were some fears that the magnitude of the increased expenditures would mean an increase in taxes. This will not be the case. The government has decided that priority in the allocation of government revenues will be given to the financing of increases in family allowances. We intend to fund these higher allowances without having to increase taxes to do so.

Apart from increasing the income of Canada's "working poor", the increased allowances should to some extent ease the pressure on provincial social assistance expenditures. The increase in the allowance should in many instances be enough to keep families off the welfare rolls.

Moreover, a tax recovery of $115 million will be realized by the provinces through tax-sharing arrangements. We would hope that these tax recoveries would be used by the provinces to ease the burden of their social welfare costs.

[English]

I have seen some criticism of the proposal to increase family allowances on the ground that higher family allowances will encourage people to have more children, thus aggravating the so-called "population problem". All available evidence suggests that this claim is unfounded. There are a number of factors which can affect fertility. These include, for example, the level of family income, the economic outlook, trends toward urbanization, higher living standards, increased employment of women outside the home, spread of knowledge of family planning and development of effective contraceptive devices as well as changing social and cultural attitudes toward family size.

There appears also to be a high correlation between higher incomes and lower fertility. Taking account of long term trends, young married couples today are relatively better off than their counterparts of a generation ago and are limiting the number of children they have to maintain the standard of living they have achieved. Moreover, it is estimated that it costs between $500 and $700 annually to maintain a child. Consequently, a family allowance of $240 can hardly be said to provide an incentive to procreate.

If one examines the statistics on population trends both in Canada and in other countries, there appears to be no evidence that family allowance programs have stimulated the birth rate. This holds true even for those countries that have deliberately set about to use family allowances or other forms of income support to stimulate the birth rate. For example, population growth was the specific objective sought by the family allowance system in France. However, from 1960 to 1971, the fertility rate, that is the number of live births per 1,000 women of child-bearing age, has declined from 70.1 to 60.4 per 1,000. Czechoslovakia is another country which in the post-war period tried to stimulate population growth through family allowances and other forms of income support, but the fertility rate fell from 62.4 per 1,000 in 1960 to 51.4 per 1,000 in 1970.

It is also interesting to note the population trends between Canada and the United States over the past few years. Canada has paid family allowances since 1945; the United States has no program of family allowances. In 1960, the fertility rate in Canada was 94.6 per 1,000 and in the United States it was 86.1 per 1,000. In 1971, the fertility rate in Canada was 56.5, in the United States it was 59.3, remarkably close.

In a study conducted by the United Nations in 1965, it was found that there was a high correlation between high levels of economic growth and economic development and low birth rates. This study showed that the level of fertility divided the less developed countries from the more developed countries more consistently and more completely than any other single indicator. In the less developed countries the crude birth rate, that is, the number of live births per 1,000 of population, is still well above 30 births per 1,000, but in the developed countries it is below 30. In many it is around 15 per 1,000.

The 1965 World Population Conference reported that an advanced economy with a high per capita product requires and imposes a demographic pattern on the country under which the birth rates cannot be as high as those found in less developed countries. On the evidence I have seen, I am convinced that in an economically advanced country such as Canada, family allowances at the levels proposed would not affect the underlying factors that are encouraging and stimulating the trend toward still lower birth rates.

I think we should look at another interesting fact. Hon. members may recall that it was in 1945 that family allowances were introduced in Canada. In 1945, the average number of children under 16 years per family in Canada was 2.37. Today it has fallen to 2.17. Looking at the average number of children per family, the following comparisons are enlightening.

In 1945, Ontario had 2.06 children per family: In 1973 the figure was up to 2.15. In British Columbia in 1945, it was 1.93 children; in 1973 it was 2.09. In the province of Quebec in 1945, there were 2.86 children per family. By 1965 that figure had decreased to 2.61. In 1967, the government of Quebec introduced its own family allowance scheme in addition to the federal family allowances, yet the number of children per family continued to decrease to 2.11 today.

Hon. members will be interested to know that in 1973, British Columbia has the fewest children under age 16 per family, an average of 2.09. Contrary to popular mythology, the province of Quebec has the next lowest rate of 2.11, followed by Ontario at 2.15, Nova Scotia at 2.21, Saskatchewan at 2.22 and Manitoba at 2.24.

While Quebec is the second lowest province in terms of number of children per family, it is by far the lowest province with respect to the fertility rate. In 1971, there were 47.6 live births per 1,000 women of child-bearing age. The next lowest province was British Columbia with a rate of 55.4 per 1,000.

Mr. McGrath: Will the minister accept a question?

Mr. Lalonde: I will gladly answer a question after I have concluded my remarks. In global terms, families in Ontario will receive $650 million from the federal government through this program; in Quebec $497.5 million; in British Columbia $183.1 million and in Alberta $149.1 million.

I have pointed out these details because I am deeply concerned by several letters I have received recently from Canadians who believe that this program is designed primarily to benefit Quebec families. The foregoing facts simply do not support this argument, Mr. Speaker. I would therefore request the active support of all members of the House, regardless of their political affiliations, in dispelling this erroneous impression, which undermines the unity of our country.

● (1640)

Some critics have suggested that we should eliminate family allowances completely or, alternatively, limit allowances to one or two children per family. Mr. Speaker, I reject this proposition out of hand. In all humanity, one cannot argue that because parents ought, perhaps, not to have had children, we should allow the children to suffer from poverty and malnutrition. Other measures should be and are being adopted to encourage family planning. For example, my department has set up a program of public information and education on family planning. Moreover, we are promoting the training of professionals and non-professionals engaged in providing family planning services and are supporting research on family planning.

It is through improved programs of public information and education that we are trying to come to grips with the issue of family planning. It is through the family allowances program that we are hoping to improve the living standards of the present generation of Canadian children who, through no fault of their own, find themselves living in conditions of poverty.

When one adds to this $840 million the $300 million in additional expenditures incurred earlier this year with the increase of the old age security pension to $100 a month, the estimated additional $94 million to the end of the year 1973-74 resulting from quarterly escalation of OAS/GIS, the further estimated additional annual costs of $158 million for OAS/GIS escalation in 1974-75, it will be seen that this government has added almost $1.4 billion to social security in the last six months. These measures have all been taken in the interests of improving the standard of living of our aged and our families.

Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada together with the governments of the provinces is well into the joint review of social security which was proposed in the working paper tabled last April. This joint review with the provinces is progressing extremely well in our view. As one of the first results of this review, I hope to bring before the House this fall legislation to amend the Canada Pension Plan. As hon. members know, I have met with my provincial counterparts for a second time in early October. The aim of this meeting has been to first of all reach agreement on changes in the CPP and to review progress of the various studies being undertaken by working parties of federal and provincial officials.

I am happy to report that my provincial colleagues and I have reached agreement on four basic points: on the escalation of pensions according to increases in the cost of living; on the level of the yearly maximum pensionable earnings; on the amount of earnings which will be exempt from contributions, and on the removal of the earnings test in respect of retirement pensions for those aged 65 to 69. I would propose very shortly to introduce in the House legislative amendments concerning the escalation provision and the raising of the yearly maximum pensionable earnings for 1974, followed by the remaining amendments as soon as possible thereafter.

Federal-provincial working parties were set up last April to begin study of the propositions on the income supplementation strategy, the social insurance strategy and the employment strategy, as outlined in the April working paper. Another federal-provincial working party on the social services strategy was established at the recent meeting of federal and provincial deputy ministers of welfare. Mr. Speaker, I am personally encouraged by the spirit of co-operation which has been shown by the governments of the provinces toward the review of Canada's social security system. I am confident that given the good will that has prevailed to date, we shall be able, within the next few years, to set in place a social security system which will ensure a better standard of life for all Canadians.

Mr. McGrath: Would the minister entertain a question? I ask him whether, in order to help us in the course of this debate, he would provide statistics for all the provinces. The hon. gentleman selectively used statistics to support his arguments, but I believe it would be very useful if we were given statistics relating to all the provinces. For example, it would be interesting to know which province has the highest ratio of children under 16.

Mr. Lalonde: Some of those statistics are available as appendices to the working document on social security which was released in April. If there are other figures which the hon. member would like to have I would be pleased to make them available, either in the course of this debate on second reading or at its conclusion, or when the bill is being considered by the committee. I would be pleased to let hon. members have all the statistics which are at my disposal in this respect.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a further question to the minister before he resumes his seat? The hon. gentleman said a few moments ago that one of the results of the conference held with his provincial counterparts earlier this month would be the introduction of two bills to amend the Canada Pension Plan. May I ask whether, as another result of that conference, he will be introducing a bill to amend the Canada Assistance Plan?

Mr. Lalonde: There was, indeed, an agreement in principle with regard to cost-sharing between the federal government and the provinces in cases where universal programs in areas previously covered by the Canada Assistance Plan are introduced by the provinces. Any cost-sharing by the federal government would necessitate amendments to the Canada Assistance Act. However, a precise formula still remains to be worked out between officials of the federal and provincial governments. The process should take a few weeks but I hope agreement can be reached reasonably soon. Nevertheless, I would not expect that amendment to the act could be introduced before the end of this year. At any rate, if it cannot be introduced by the end of this year I hope it will be introduced early in the next session.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You can try.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I say at the outset that I plan to support this measure although I am very doubtful, after hearing the minister for the last ten minutes, whether one of the former leaders of his party would support him were he here. Sir Wilfrid Laurier used to talk about Canada having 50 million people. If prosperity is an inducement to a diminution of family size, and if this measure is an important measure contributing to prosperity, we are, in fact, contributing here to a diminution of the population growth rate and Sir Wilfrid Laurier would therefore be most disturbed.

I think I know what my hon. friend from St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) was really asking the minister. He wanted to know which province had the highest birth rate, and you can imagine, Mr. Speaker, since he was asking for this information, that it is the Province of Newfoundland, exceeded only by the Northwest Territories where the birth rate is 48.6 as against Newfoundland, where it is 34.1 followed by Prince Edward Island with 27.1. If I followed the Minister's logic I would say that these were the three least prosperous areas in Canada. I should like to say that if I am supporting this measure, as I am, it is not because I regard it as a deterrent to population growth in this country.

● (1650)

I should like to say that this is another of the measures that causes us some difficulty in exercising our deliberative function in the House of Commons. We must, of course, in our federal structure have constant, frank and cordial communications, with the provinces but I am often troubled in these realms of dominion-provincial relations when we in this chamber, the people's representatives gathered together in Canada'a national assembly, are presented with a fait accompli.

How much better would it have been for our side of the co-operative federalism exercise had the minister proceeded to open up the measure for debate, though perhaps only limited debate, last July so that those of us who represent the people federally in this legislature might have been given the chance to present our ideas. This strikes me as a very sound proposal and a very prudent one when we have a minority government. Indeed, I think it would be a good thing under any circumstance; it is the sort of thing that would be very valuable.

I do not have very much time before the hour of five o'clock comes upon us.

Mr. Baker: Take it all.

Mr. Macquarrie: I have been urged by my colleague to go all out and use the whole five minutes, so I think I will do that. I always like to hear the minister, even when he is partisan, though he was not today. However, I am a little unhappy—indeed, I am profoundly disturbed—that at a time when the country faces an economic crisis of pressing gravity the response of the government time after time is to throw out another welfare measure. In the emergency session in August and September it was the minister who came through with measures. There was a little change to old age security, an alteration here, another there, adopting policies that the opposition had suggested long ago. In face of this grave and terrible situation of galloping inflation, this modicum of relief is not sufficient to meet the mountain of need of the Canadian people.

We have a government that is clearly, obviously and tragically without an economic strategy. Without such strategy it relies on tactics. In face of inflation, a chronic case of unemployment and a continuum of economic stagnation, the government has but one response: Send in the welfare minister, who must gallop to the relief of the whole group. Where are the mighty economic ministers of this government? Cannot they take up arms in the fight against inflation? All that the Canadian people have to do today to reach a judgment on the fighting capacity of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in economic matters is to read the answer that he gave the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) just a few hours ago. Where is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie)? He has not been in Russia the whole time; where are his moves in this important area? And what is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) doing? At this point I am running out of giants in the field of economics!

Mr. McGrath: Not difficult to do with the government over there.

Mr. Macquarrie: Why are these ministers so silent, so supine, so superlatively recumbent in face of the cost of living volcano that is shaking Canada's economic structure to its very roots? Is nothing forthcoming to strengthen the economy of this country and to halt the advance of grievous inflation? Certainly the minister, despite his best intentions—and he is not always at his best—cannot cope with this problem. We cannot welfare ourselves into a sound economic society. We cannot capsulize palliatives enough to overcome the economic agony of the Dominion of Canada.

While we support this bill—because it does provide some measure of relief—we ask for, indeed we cry out for meaningful action on a forward front of economic strategy. As far as I and my colleagues are concerned, we do not think this measure requires a long debate in this chamber. But it does require very serious study in committee because this bill, unlike the one which was passed in September, has a good deal of complexity which needs examination, scrutiny and further elucidation by the minister.

There are provisions that please me. Those relating to school attendance are certainly an improvement. There is no reason for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to become the giant truant officer for the whole of Canada. So the proposal is a great improvement. I am also glad that Canadian citizens who serve abroad will derive benefit from this bill.

May I call it five o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Veterans Affairs—Disability pensions, action to eliminate backlog of applications; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Provision of educational films to school boards—government position; the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker)—Public Service—Appeal against decision condemning red circling—Request for review of practice and appropriate legislation.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED ACTION TO PREVENT DAMAGE TO SHORELINE BY PASSAGE OF SHIPS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of taking action, wherever necessary in the inland navigable waters of Canada, to prevent damage to shorelines, dykes, homes, lands and other public and private property caused by the passage and manœuvering of ships and boats and other vessels.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the motion before the House is to encourage the government to take a look at the provisions of the law as they now stand which govern damage done to shorelines by boats in our inland navigable waters. When the present law was first brought before parliament and passed, the situation was far different from what it is today. The law as enacted at that time made provision that the federal government was responsible in the main for damage caused by the wake from freight-laden ships to the banks of inland waters and rivers. Later this provision was amended to include any damage that might be caused by a change in the motion of the waters due to the building of any government dock, wharf of marina where it could be amply proved that the existence of such a structure changed the current to such a degree or changed the normal flow of the water to such a degree that it caused monetary hardship to the owners of adjacent property.

● (1700)

Mr. Speaker, the course of events in this country has changed the situation which these laws were designed to cover. When they were adopted most of our navigable waters and the banks adjacent thereto were owned by the Crown. Along the shores of these waters there were many homesteads, and the homesteaders based their livelihood on lumbering and hunting. There was some agricultural activity, but not of an intensive nature. In those days these lands did not have the value they have today. This shoreline is today very valuable. We find many private dwellings and estates in these areas. We also find rich farmland and a great deal of industrial development, and I have in mind marinas, motels, hotels and other like accommodation for tourists from this and other nations.

The damage caused by the wakes of boats plying these waters is considerable in some areas, and the cost of keeping the water back from low-lying areas is high. The people who own this property should not be responsible for the constant repair of dykes and shorelines being eroded in this manner. It is my contention that the federal government should be responsible for the repair and maintenance of the shorelines on our navigable waters.

Many tourists are being encouraged to come to this country these days, and many of them here by boat. This traffic is especially concentrated in certain areas in Ontario adjacent to our great bodies of water. Many tourists from the United States have easy access to our resort areas. In my own area large flotillas of pleasure craft traverse the waters visiting various towns and cities. This represents a tremendous source of income to the merchants and those who provide these tourist services.

While there is a problem in relation to the erosion of our shorelines, certainly the solution is not to discourage tourism. These people plying our rivers and lakes bring in thousands of dollars, but the damage to our shorelines is tremendous. You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that some two years ago a number of citizens tried to stop the tourists travelling in the waters in my area. Many signs were put up asking these tourists not to use the river, and there were verbal exchanges between tourists and those on the shore. I understand that there were fruits and vegetables thrown at passing tourists. This is something that should be discouraged as the tourism industry represents a tremendous asset to this nation as a whole. Financially, this industry is one of our most profitable and we want to encourage it in every possible way.

The purpose of the motion before the House is to request the government to give consideration to a revision of our prevailing archaic laws under which these boats are plying our navigable waters. These laws relate to domestic and foreign traffic. The traffic during our tourist season represents many times the traffic that normally travelled these waters when these laws were put into effect. It seems to me that we should take the same approach at the federal level as we take at the provincial level, treating our waterways as we treat our highways. We should no longer think of our navigable streams in terms of the horse and buggy days.

Years ago when these laws were brought into effect our highways in this country were only small trails which gave access to horses and wagons. With the advent of the automobile the governments in this nation found it necessary to upgrade our highway systems, and this has been carried out successfully. It seems to me that we should take the same approach in respect of our navigable waters.

When damage is done along our highways, the departments of various governments are quick to act. This is particularly true in respect of our Trans-Canada Highway. Surely, this is the approach that we must take, as our waterways will be used more and more in future rather than less, particularly as the tourist industry increases. We must do something now because those who live on the shores of these waterways cannot afford the tremendous financial cost of repairing and maintaining the shoreline.

An attempt has been made to limit the speed of tourist boats plying the waterways in order to lessen the damage caused by the wakes of these boats. There is a speed limit in effect on most of our rivers, and that limit is enforced admirably, but it has become apparent that speed limits by themselves do not provide a solution. We have observed recently that speed alone does not cause the damage. Many of these vessels travel at reasonable speeds, but because of the size of the vessels the wake or the wash is exceptional. It seems that we must revise our laws in order to bring some semblance of order out of what is quickly becoming a chaotic situation. Many of those who own the shore property are boat owners. Some of them operate marinas, and it is a joy to behold how carefully these people preserve and maintain the rights of other owners of shoreline property.

The purpose of this bill is to alleviate the burden on the shoulders of those who own shoreline property. I hope it finds favour in the House, and I hope that something can be done to rectify what is now becoming a very grievous situation, not only in that area I have the honour to represent, but in all areas where there are navigable waters used by our own boat owners and many tourists.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this motion because, as the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) has pointed out, the problems which exist in his area also exist in my area in Ontario. The problems created by the rapid speed of boats and ships of one kind or another is considerable. Shoreline erosion is a very definite problem. Right in my neighbourhood a number of small pleasure craft, yachts and even larger boats, move up and down the river creating erosion problems.

This difficulty has been increased by the creation of a provincial park further up the river. The erosion problems are considerable, but I must point out that the federal government is working on the problem. I think hon. members should know a little bit about what the federal government is doing. While the government is making an effort, there are other things that could be done.

On April 11 of this year, the St. Clair and Detroit River Vessel Speed Regulations were gazetted. The Ministry of Transport established these regulations for the purpose of navigational safety, the preservation of navigational channels and the protection of riparian interests. The speed limits apply to all vessels, other than pleasure yachts, having an over-all length of 65 feet or more. They were established after months of lengthy discussions with interested parties. They are based on extensive technical studies and field observations conducted jointly by the engineering staffs of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and the U.S. Corps of Engineers.

● (1710)

The schedule to the regulations specifies the maximum upbound and downbound speed, expressed in miles per hour over the bottom, in the St. Clair and Detroit Rivers from Fort Gratiot Light to the Detroit River Light, excluding Lake St. Clair. These regulations will be complemented by similar regulations established by the American authorities for those parts of the river under their jurisdiction. Enforcement of the regulations is being carried out in the Detroit River by ministry officials and the RCMP with the aid of a shore installation which enables measurements to be made over a known distance to determine the speed of passing ships. From May 25 to September 13 inclusive, 707 commercial vessels of 65 feet in length or over were monitored passing the Amherstburg area.

I keep bringing up the point of vessels 65 feet and over because I think one area where improvement can be made is in the reduction of the length of boats to which these regulations apply because, although this would not apply to Lake St. Clair, such boats cause damage in the smaller lakes and rivers. Of this total to which I have referred, approximately 5.5 per cent exceeded the speed limit sufficient to warrant legal action being taken. A chronic offender appeared in court on September 20 and pleaded guilty. He was fined $50. I consider this fine to be rather small considering the damage done to shorelines. Warning notices have been sent to the remaining offenders. The intention is that all vessels exceeding the speed limit will be prosecuted. I think operators of vessels should be aware of this warning, and I think we should be sure that we follow it up. I hope that fines in excess of $50 would be more the rule than the exception.

In drafting speed regulations of this type, it is necessary to take into consideration the interests of the marine community as a whole. This requires the establishment of speeds that will be realistic and meet, as far as possible, the conflicting interests in the area. Speed limits that are set too low will impose unfair economic burdens on commercial vessels; these added costs will eventually be passed on to the general public when purchasing consumer products. Conversely, speed limits that are too high may cause extensive damage to shore property and, in addition, high speeds may encourage unsafe navigational practices to the detriment of all concerned.

Damage to Shoreline by Passing Ships

An amendment to the St. Clair and Detroit River speed regulations was given Privy Council approval on the 31st of August, 1973, and published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, on September 26, 1973. This amendment will give these regulations more flexibility by allowing for a temporary reduction of speed limits, as circumstances require, in any part of the river to which the limits apply. This requirement for more flexibility has become necessary due to exceptionally high water levels in the St. Clair and Detroit Rivers which has brought strong protests from riparian interests who have been exposed to extensive property damage.

I can understand the need for flexibility depending on water levels, winds and so on. In addition, it has been proposed that the regional director for the central region, marine services, Ministry of Transport, be granted the power to temporarily lower the speed limit for the safety of navigation or for the protection of persons or property at or near the shore. A speed limit established by the regional director will come into force upon its publication in a notice to shipping or a notice to mariners and will remain in force until its modification or cessation is published in a subsequent notice to shipping or notice to mariners. Speed limits are in force in many of Canada's public harbours and are administered by the various harbour authorities. This is certainly the case in the harbour that is in my constituency, the Thunder Bay Harbour.

In particular, the Ministry of Transport has encouraged the Windsor Harbour Commission to enforce speed limits for vessels of less than 65 feet in length within harbour commission boundaries. Between Montreal and Lake Ontario, the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority is responsible for the establishment of maximum speed limits. Seaway Notice No. 4 of 1972 sets the limits in specified sections of the waterway for vessels in excess of 40 feet in length. These limits are as a result of extensive studies that have taken place over many years. The objective in the St. Lawrence is similar to that in the St. Clair and Detroit Rivers; to establish realistic speeds that will meet the requirements of the marine community as a whole.

A further seaway notice No. 5 of 1972 introduced, as a result of wave investigations, speed limits of 13 miles an hour over the bottom in the Canadian waters of the St. Lawrence River in the area from Grenadier Island to Howe Island. On May 11, 1972, the St. Lawrence Seaway reaffirmed the speed limits in other areas of the system and brought to the attention of mariners the fact that complaints were still being received from the public regarding excessive vessel speeds causing shoreline property damage and creating the risk of possible serious injury or loss of life. This notice also warned the mariner that surveillance crews were using radar to enforce the speed limits on a round-the-clock basis. A reduction of the maximum speed by the St. Lawrence Seaway for the Beauharnois Canal was promulgated in seaway notice No. 9 of 1972.

On March 21, 1973 the St. Lawrence Seaway re-established speed limits in the river between Montreal and Lake Ontario. The notice of March 21 was followed by notice No. 7 of 1973, dated March 27, 1973 which included a plan showing the designated speed limit areas in the Montreal-Lake Ontario section of the seaway. This notice advised mariners of the necessity of imposing temporary speed limits due to the present high water levels. It also included a warning that surveillance crews would be enforcing the speed regulations on a round-the-clock basis using radar equipment. This is extremely important. If we have regulations they must be enforced on an around-the-clock basis because the shoreline does not go to sleep at night and can be damaged at one time as well as at another. Mariners were requested to exercise vigilance in adhering to the prescribed limits; failing to do so might cause shoreline property damage and create the risk of possible serious injury or loss of life. The following are the temporary speed limits. In Parts of Lake St. Louis 12 knots to 13 knots, depending on the width. Between Ogden Island and Blind Bay, 14 knots, and between Bartlett Point and Tibbetts Point 13 knots.

The rising water levels in Lake Ontario and the Upper St. Lawrence River were in April, 1973, reaching the point where shoreline and property damage could result from normal vessel speeds. All predictions based on close monitoring indicated that this point would be reached within the following few days. Due to these facts, the Canadian and American Seaway authorities jointly announced that they had reached agreement on further temporary speed reductions. In general, vessels would be limited to a maximum of 12 miles an hour between Tibbetts Point on Lake Ontario and Lancaster, Ontario on Lake St. Francis. In making this announcement, Dr. Camu and Mr. Oberlin said:

> These further speed reductions are being made in recognition of the serious threat which the forecast high water poses to the citizens on both sides of the waterway. We have called upon the shipping industry to join us in recognizing the emergency conditions by strict adherence to the prescribed limits even though the efficiency of the waterway will be significantly reduced as a result of these restrictions.

When vessel speed limits are established they are based on the results of continuing field studies which take into account a number of factors including vessel speed, wave height, shape of hull, width and depth of channel, current velocity and other related criteria. While all these points are carefully considered in arriving at a speed limit, the effects of high water levels are also given substantial consideration with respect to the areas under study, the use to which the waters are to be put and the extent, development, condition and proximity of the shoreline.

● (1720)

On April 10, 1973, notice No. 8 was issued by the Seaway, superseding notice No. 7 of 1973. This notice further reduced the speed limits in force and, in addition, included three areas previously not affected.

Notice No. 9 of May 8, 1973, imposed a temporary speed limit of 11 miles an hour over the bottom in the area of the Canadian middle channel for all vessels in excess of 40 feet in length.

During the latter part of this summer, the water levels on Lake Ontario and the upper St. Lawrence River were receding to more normal conditions. This is not the case in the upper lakes, and certainly not the case on Lake Superior, so we have a year or two before we can expect that situation to occur. As a matter of fact, with the closing of a couple of the locks at Sault Ste. Marie we can expect the levels of Lake Superior to be high for two or three years, possibly even higher than they were this year. If there is any significant run-off this spring, we may have considerable shoreline flooding and damage next summer when the high water usually occurs, that is about the first of August. As a result of the water levels on Lake Ontario and the upper St. Lawrence River receding, some of the temporary speed limits were removed. However, notice No. 15 of August 15, 1973, while expressing appreciation for the co-operation of pilots and masters during the high water periods, continued to stress that their co-operation in adhering to the speed limit was essential.

In the period from April 19 to July 20, 455 commercial vessels were checked. Of this total, 55 were found to be exceeding the speed limit, 30 offenders received letters of warning because they only exceeded the speed limit by a small amount, and six had recorded violations and were fined between $100 and $300, very small fines considering the damage that was done. The charges against the remaining 19 violators are still being processed.

On May 4, 1973, the Ministry of Transport published notice No. 417 to mariners warning mariners of the damage caused by the excessive speed of ships and boats. This notice would also be published in the annual edition of "Canadian Notices to Mariners":

> During recent years, there has been a marked increase in the damage caused by draw-off and wave disturbance generated by the passage of ships and boats.
>
> In addition to damage caused to wharves, boat houses, small boats, moored ships, and erosion of the shoreline, there is also the attendant risk of causing serious bodily harm to persons in, on, or near the shore, particularly children.
>
> The amount of draw-off and the size and intensity of the waves at any given speed varies with the hull form and draft of each vessel. Other factors include the proximity to the shore and objects concerned and the configuration of the channel.
>
> Existing water levels must be taken into account since high water levels tend to increase and extend the damaging effects of a vessel's passage beyond what would otherwise be expected.
>
> Masters, pilots and owners of vessels may be subject to court action for damages sustained by injured parties as a result of damage or injury caused by the passage of their vessels.
>
> Regulations designed to control this type of damage would require speed limits sufficiently low to prevent damage by any type of vessel. This might impose on some vessels unrealistic speed limits and cause undue economic and recreational restraints.
>
> Control of vessels' speed limits by regulation can be avoided if persons in charge of the navigation of vessels, who best know the individual characteristics of their vessel, exercise restraint and reduce speed as necessary, taking into account all factors that may contribute to or aggravate the damaging effects of draw-off and wave disturbance—

Whereas many speed restrictions are of a specific nature, tailored to the needs of a particular area, this notice is general in nature and is intended to apply in all Canadian waters. The notice is reprinted yearly in the "Canadian Notices to Mariners". This publication is one that must be carried on board all ships in waters under Canadian jurisdiction under the charts and publications regulations.

The problem of vessel speed can also be approached in another way. The boating restriction regulations provide a means of control where the operation of boats creates specific problems such as noise nuisance, danger to other craft or to swimmers, or erosion of the shoreline by wave action.

The purpose of the regulations is to restrict or prohibit some or all types of boating activity in specified areas or bodies of water. Provision is made in the regulations for: first, the imposition of speed limits; second, the limitation of the height of wash from vessels; third, the prohibition of water skiing, and fourth, the prohibition of boating in general. These various restrictions are listed in the restrictive schedules appended to the regulations.

In order to have a restriction or a prohibition imposed on a given body of water, a local authority such as a municipality makes application to the appropriate provincial authority which may, after assessing provincial interest in the matter, make formal application to the federal government to consider including the body of water in one of the restrictive schedules. The federal government may then, after ascertaining that there is no overriding federal interest in the matter, impose the desired restrictions.

The regulations provide for police officers or persons designated by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) as peace officers to enforce the regulations. Provisions are made for fines of up to $500 for infractions. I believe that the limit of $500 is unreal because the damage done can be far in excess of that amount of money. In fact, often what is damaged cannot be replaced. When a portion of shoreline consisting of three or four acres falls into the waters, as happened in our area not so long ago, how does one assess that kind of damage? I think that to be realistic, fines in excess of this amount, fines that relate somewhat to the damage, should be enforced.

The provinces of Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta have already designated departments to which application for boat operation restrictions can be forwarded. A preliminary study has been carried out regarding a vessel traffic management program for Canada. It is anticipated that a firm policy will be established and a national program developed as a result of this study.

Various forms of vessel traffic management have been in use in Canadian waters since the early 1960's. These systems were developed to fulfil particular local requirements. Since the mid-1960's, major changes and developments have occurred in the marine transportation field which require vessel traffic management systems to be established on a national scale. These changes include the introduction of the Very Large Crude Carrier and the concept of transshipment of crude oil and oil products. Of course, we all aware of the size of some of these supertankers. They include the introduction of containerization and other similar shipping practices, the increasing movement of all types of cargo by marine methods, major oil exploration activity in the Arctic and on the east and west coasts, a proposed west coast tanker route, and the development of supertanker terminals on the Atlantic coast.

In conclusion may I say that I support the intent of the motion. I think we have a very serious shoreline problem, particularly in view of the high water level of the Great Lakes and the systems leading to and from the Great Lakes. I believe that the regulations should be more strictly enforced, that smaller vessels should be included, vessels of ten or 12 feet, and finally, that some of the fines should be increased so that they are in relation to the damage that is done.

● (1730)

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the official spokesman for the government has laid his hand upon this motion and given it his blessing and, presumably, the blessing of the government. Certainly the sponsor of the motion, the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) is in agreement with it, as are we. I did not see any members of the Social Credit party rising to speak, but they can express their own views. Therefore, in light of the importance of this matter I wonder if an attempt could be made through you, Mr. Speaker, to assess whether the House would be disposed to make an order that the proceedings be interrupted at five minutes to six o'clock to vote upon this motion. Would Your Honour test the House to see whether this suggestion meets with the approval of hon. members?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: If that approval were given, I would shorten my remarks to simply declaring my support for the motion and let other hon. members have their say between now and five minutes to six. I wonder if I could ask for the consent of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will recognize that his suggestion is quite improper. There is no procedure in the House for testing opinion in this way. If the hon. member wants to make his remarks, then when the time comes it will be up to Mr. Speaker, if no further speakers rise, to ask consent of the House.

Mr. Howard: I do not need to lecture you, Mr. Speaker; you know the rules far better than the hon. member. The House can make the order by unanimous consent. I am asking that that be done, and if it is we will continue with the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member is aware that there is a difficulty here. If we make an order at this time, the hon. member will lose the right to complete his remarks. It is the view of the Chair that there is not the kind of consent that the hon. member seeks; therefore I would ask the hon. member to complete his remarks.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I would willingly forgo my right if for once in this House we could get hon. members, especially those in the Liberal Party, to quit lobbying matters to death and talking them out.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I want to bring to the attention of the hon. member and of Your Honour that on two separate occasions in this House I have accepted bills from his party which we did not talk-out during the five o'clock proceedings. If he does not know that, it is time he did and took notice of it.

Damage to Shoreline by Passing Ships

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the honourable and mouthy parliamentary secretary obviously missed what I was saying. It is not a question of relying upon his generosity; it is a question of permitting the House to make a decision. We should not have to rely upon the graciousness of the hon. member for Winnipeg South, or wherever he is from—

An hon. Member: St. Boniface.

Mr. Howard: —from St. Boniface (Mr. Guay), the parliamentary secretary, or anybody else on the government side to tell us how generous, friendly and willing they are to accept specific ideas put forward by members of the opposition. I am saying that there should be a right inherent in the rules to permit an hon. member to move a motion, to introduce a bill and to have it accepted or rejected on its merits, and not on whether the hon. member for St. Boniface wants to pick and choose. That is the point I was trying to make.

The motion put before us by the hon. member for Kent-Essex has an element of deficiency about; certainly not from his point of view or from the point of view of the people living alongside inland water areas who are confronted with problems, but it has a deficiency. This matter was touched upon by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) at the conclusion of his remarks when he spoke about coastal waters and the effect shipping can have upon communities and lands and buildings there as well as inland.

I should like to make a few remarks with respect to the impact of shipping upon coastal communities. When I say the motion is deficient in this regard, it is only from the point of view of expressing the needs and feelings of people in these communities; it is not meant to refer in a derogatory way to the substance of the motion itself. I am sure the hon. member for Kent-Essex and others appreciate the need to think about this question in expanded terms.

In recent times we have oil damage caused to some of our coastal communities by oil tanker groundings and collisions. We think of the Arrow on the east coast, the Irish Star earlier this year on the west coast, the leak from the ruptured oil pipeline of Richfield oil refinery in the state of Washington which spewed oil all over the beaches in that area and the lower coastal part of British Columbia. More recently, we think of the two ships which collided in Vancouver harbour and spewed their oil all over the area. At the time, or just prior to the rupture of the oil line at the Richfield refinery in Washington there was a discussion in this House about oil tanker routes, a discussion about the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act as well as the alterations that were made to the Fisheries Act to deal with deleterious substances in waters frequented by fish and the like.

During the course of debates in the House, the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) on numerous occasions assured us that in the absence of legislation and proposed changes to the Canada Shipping Act—because the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act did not apply to the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, but only to the Arctic area—the government had a contingency plan to deal with any accidental oil spills that might take place on our coasts. Upon the heels of this declaration we experienced the effects of the broken line at the refinery to which I referred earlier and the inundation of oil in the Crescent Beach area, the White Rock area, the Boundary Bay area and the lower coastal part of British Columbia. We then discovered that the government's contingency plan consisted of voluntary help from school kids. The contingency plan was just froth and air; it did not exist. The cleaning of the beaches had to be done by citizens and students.

This appears to have been the case since that time. There is no contingency plan that I have been able to discover, there is no over-all plan, no concept of what should be done, especially in light of the decision of the United States government to build the Alyeska pipeline. It is proposed to bring oil by supertanker down the west coast via Alaska to Washington and California. These tankers will be routed alongside the coastal communities of British Columbia. The government does not seem to know what to do about the situation except wait and see how extensive the damage is and then deal with it. That is not good enough, Mr. Speaker. For the people of British Columbia and of the Atlantic provinces who are concerned about coastal routes, this approach is too careless.

● (1740)

The Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, as we have said before, is one of the finest pieces of legislation in the field of preventing oil pollution to be found anywhere in the world. Its requirements are most stringent. It includes extensive requirements governing the construction of ships; it requires the installation of safety features such as certain types of valves and double hulls for ships that might be carrying oil in Arctic waters. This legislation was a commendable move by the government. The Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act established a 100 nautical sea miles limit which extended off certain Arctic islands and the archipelago in that area: it extended Canada's authority 100 nautical miles seaward of the Arctic islands. The act applies to oil-carrying tankers.

The sad part is that this piece of legislation, the finest of its kind anywhere applying to oil tankers, governs an area in which there are no oil tankers operating. It applies to the Arctic, and nobody is hauling oil in or around the arctic. The oil that is to come from the North Slope of Alaska, from Prudhoe Bay, is to come across land. It will be taken across Alaska and down the west coast where the legislative requirements are not nearly as stringent as those contained in the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act.

We have said that in the absence of any other declaration on this matter—and no declaration has been made so far—Parliament should amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act so that it applies also to the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. In that way we could extend our authority in those areas 100 nautical miles farther than it extends now. We should consider such legislation because the hazards off the Atlantic and Pacific coasts are even greater than the hazards in the Arctic. We ought to extend our authority 100 nautical milles seaward so that we could limit and control the construction of oil tankers plying those waters. We could then say to tankers coming under the jurisdiction of a foreign country, "If your tankers come inside our 100 nautical mile zone, they must have double hulls, they must have installed the latest and best safety devices and they must submit to inspection by Canadians."

These ships should meet our requirements because we are trying to preserve our land. As well, we ought to say, "If you do not intend to meet these requirements, we shall require you to carry your oil more than 100 miles offshore; and please do not bother coming inside our particular zone because our land is more precious to us than any oil which any tanker may be carrying from one part of a foreign jurisdiction to another."

If this motion were to come to a vote, which I doubt, I would think of moving an amendment the concept of which would be to extend the provisions of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act to our coastal waters east and west. I have written out an amendment such a that but will not move it at this time. If the matter is to come to a vote, the amendment can be moved by a colleague or somebody else. My amendment would apply to inland waters, coastal waters, territorial seas and to those areas around our territorial seas. It would include a measure that would take into account contemplated damage from oil spills as well as from the simple passage and manoeuvring of ships in our waters.

Apart from that, the motion before the House has my full endorsement. Even though the parliamentary secretary suggested that my original request was improper, I think it would be fine if for the next few minutes before six o'clock the Liberal Party ceased and desisted from attempts to talk this motion out and allowed it to come to a vote so that Parliament could express itself on a matter as important as this.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

Mr. Joseph-Phillipe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) had not spoken so long, perhaps his wish would have been fulfilled. We can look at the clock and note the length of time for which he spoke. I think it could be said that the hon. member personally took the most time in debating this particular matter. I also take note of a comment he made about vessels operating more than 100 miles offshore if they do not meet certain requirements. That approach will not solve the problem. I find his attitude rather surprising. As I say, sending ships farther out to sea will not solve the problem. No matter whether ships are operating 50 miles or 100 miles from shore, oil that is spilled in one area can show up in another area.

Speaking on the motion, the problem of shore erosion is of concern not only to those areas of the country about which we are now concerned but to many other parts of Canada. This is a matter for harbour commissions, which have been discussing it for many years. Some of them no doubt are finding solutions, as are governments. They will continue to do so. The Department of Public Works, for example, discharges the federal government's responsibility for the construction of protection works along shores where ship-generated waves cause erosion.

The federal government has constructed shore protection works since confederation, although the major activity in this area began in the high unemployment period of the 1930s. The construction of this type of project became a substantial item in terms of both cost and workload throughout the years, particularly since the end of World War II. During the period 1947-1967 the department spent about $25 million on shore protection works. The bulk of this work was carried out by the department along the St. Lawrence River.

In 1960, in an effort to establish a rational approach to determining the department's responsibilities and location of works, the department established the Shore Erosion and Protection Committee. The purpose of the committee was to investigate the following: (a) areas where erosion is taking place; (b) factors which may be contributing to this erosion; (c) design of protection works; (d) economic analysis of government activity in this field; and (e) upon completion of the initial investigation the committee would investigate and review specific proposals for the construction of protection works. In 1964 the structure of the committee changed somewhat and as a consequence it was renamed the Treasury Board Shore Erosion Protection Committee.

In 1966 cabinet approved a new policy governing federal participation in the construction of shore protection works. The cabinet directive provides as follows:

(a) The Department of Public Works be authorized to construct remedial works and pay 100 per cent of the cost of such works only where the erosion can be attributable, by more than 50 per cent, to navigation or a federal government structure, and the value of the land to be protected exceeds the cost of such remedial works by 100 per cent.

(b) Where erosion is caused for the most part by natural causes but where navigation or the presence of a federal government structure is a contributing factor the Department of Public Works may contribute to the cost of such structure in proportion to the effect these causes have on the erosion, provided that in no case this contribution exceeds 50 per cent of the works, which in the opinion of the department would provide adequate protection.

● (1750)

Technical studies have been undertaken by the Department of Public Works to establish criteria for assessing federal responsibility in cases where erosion is due at least in part to ship-generated waves. These criteria have been in effect since 1968. They are used to determine the degree of federal government responsibility for shore erosion resulting from wave action on the St. Lawrence River, the Richelieu River, the Detroit River and the St. Clair River. Once the degree of federal government responsibility is known, the 1966 cabinet directive dictates the federal government contribution in the construction of remedial works.

An hon. Member: You are living in the past.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): This may be from the past, but it is still in order. The trouble is that some opposition members do not look back to find out what remedial action is available. Instead of shooting off their mouths when they do not know what is going on, they should at least listen to what is being said because it may benefit the areas which they represent.

It is interesting to note that in the summer of 1969, because of a number of urgent and extensive problems along the St. Clair River the Department of Public Works undertook additional studies to attempt to determine as closely as possible the effects of ship waves along the shores of the St. Clair River and the Detroit River. The report of this study provides relatively precise figures and procedures covering the wave energy transmitted to the shore from ships and waves. A report on the St. Clair, Detroit and St. Lawrence Rivers was prepared in March, 1970, by Marine Engineering and the Department of Public Works. The information contained in this report would be an asset in connection with the references being made at the present time.

I stated there had been some expenditures. In addition to actual expenditures for protection works in the province of Quebec, in Ontario—specifically on the Detroit and St. Clair Rivers—the expenditures have been as follows: 1966-67, $110,000; 1967-68, $700. I imagine that is all that was requested that year. In 1968-69 the figure was $110,000, and in 1969-70 it was $100,000. This makes a total of $320,700 over the four-year period.

With regard to the Fraser River in British Columbia, the funding for bank protection works is provided by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. This is principally because the major benefit is in the protection of dykes and in reducing the threat of flooding.

There should be a concern by all governments and the public in their commitment to environmental protection. The relationship of shore erosion to environment can be viewed as a loss of value to property, sedimentary pollution of rivers, harbours and lakes, real property loss, possible depletion of tax bases of local governments, loss of recreational benefits, decline of general area values, increasing importance of recreation manifesting itself in increased pleasure craft population and indicating a proportional increase in shore damage attributable to waves generated therefrom, legal aspects of ownership as related to the responsibility to maintain and repair the protection works when built, consideration of eventual expropriation or purchase of privately-owned shoreline by the Crown for public use and the relationship to provincial and national parks and playgrounds.

There is no doubt that all levels of government face many problems in this regard. Initial schemes are being developed in coastal waters. As an example, the Chedabucto Bay vessel traffic management system incorporates regulation, traffic separation, aids to navigation, communications, shore surveillance and pilotage which, obviously, are directed toward vessel safety which have as an ancillary benefit features which serve to reduce shore erosion. The same can be said for systems being developed at Chebucto head at the entrance to Halifax harbour and for the Strait of Juan de Fuca off Vancouver Island. Obviously, such schemes will be developed in restricted or congested waters. Consequently, when we move to the inland waters of Canada, shore erosion as a result of vessel movement will in all likelihood be reduced.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

[Mr. Guay (St. Boniface).]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURES TO PROVIDE FOR PAYMENT OF FAMILY AND SPECIAL ALLOWANCES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-211, to provide for the payment of family allowances in respect of children to supplement the income of Canadian families and for the payment of special allowances to provide for the care and maintenance of other children. and to amend the Income Tax Act in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, in the four and a half minutes vouchsafed to me before five o'clock I was endeavouring, with my usual sweet reasonableness and modulated tones, to discuss the bill which the minister was good enough to bring before us earlier in the afternoon. I was referring with great concern to the inadequacy of the government's response to the present overwhelming crisis. I referred also to the importance of a measure such as this coping effectively with the broad spectrum and the heavy burden of our nation's economic ills.

The lack of a concerted attack on poverty and the failure of the present government to alleviate the hardship suffered by too many Canadians has gone on for far too long. The elimination of poverty must be one of Canada's most important goals. Support for children is only one part of any anti-poverty strategy; a comprehensive approach to social problems brought about by poverty requires that income protection be given to adults both with and without children. Family allowances are an immediate and short-term response to the solution of large-family problems.

In terms of aiding those in poverty, family allowances must be considered against the background of the rise in the cost of living. The increase from an average of $7.21 to $20 barely compensates for the rise in the cost of living since 1945 when the late Mackenzie King introduced family allowances to members of parliament of that day and to the people of this country. Had family allowances been tied to the cost of living from the outset, the figure today would be $19.35 per month. So $20 a month is not an overwhelming advance. I am not here to criticize that 65 cents; I am going to fight for it. But let no one try to throw over his shoulders the cloak of munificence and generosity on account of those 65 cents. We are in favour of it; but let us not, for God's sake, try to turn it into a gold mine for the Canadian people.

Increases in family allowances are but another example of the government's ad hoc approach to inflation. I don't want to quote Larry Zolf, because the press does not quote me, but he once spoke of the present government as the "ad hockery night in Canada." The buying power of increased allowances has already been used up by the increase in the cost of living which has taken place during the past year. No one, surely, has to document this painfully obvious fact. Food prices are rising at an unacceptable rate, resulting in a serious effect on the nutrition of Canadians. A study carried out in Montreal shows that fully 20 per cent of the population lives in poverty and that 44 per cent of the city's slum families are undernourished.

Advice such as that given to consumers by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) to use "evasive action" when shopping, that is, to substitute for high-priced food items less expensive ones of equal nutritional value is, to put it bluntly, a lot of nonsense since, unfortunately, the prices of the latter are rising even faster than those of the higher priced items. Compare hamburgers with sirloin and you get the picture. Regrettably, unfortunately, but truly, the low income consumers today are the hardest hit by rising prices, especially the 25 per cent of Canadians—and what an appalling statistic that is—who are living below the poverty line. According to the Economic Council of Canada, one and a half million families, or 22 per cent of all family units in Canada today, are poverty stricken. Therefore, any ameliorative measures such as this are hardly conceived and executed in haste.

• (2010)

The Senate Committee on Poverty of 1971 stated that the over-all poverty rate was approximately 25 per cent, and that one Canadian in four was a member of a family unit whose income was below the poverty line. Canadians living on low and fixed incomes are further hit, as a recent ECC study shows, by the fact that "the general burden of taxation falls unfairly on lower income families when it is measured in terms of ability to pay".

Genuine government attempts to control the cost of living would be of more value to those living in poverty than an increase in family allowances which barely reflects the rise in the cost of living. Therefore, I call again for what I called for at 4.55 this afternoon—a meaningful, powerful and co-ordinated assault upon inflation, a concerted effort to buttress the economy of the country. This is what we must have and it is what we need.

I mentioned that this minister, and the whole area of welfare, is being used as the only apparent weapon to fight the terrible dragon of inflation. But even this minister's exertions must soon come to an end; he will run out of bills on the order paper, and what will we do then? Even Mrs. Plumptre has finished her cross-country safari, an assault made with almost as much noise and exactly as much success as the charge of the Light Brigade.

The minister referred to his satisfaction at increases in old age security. But what of the plight of the older Canadians whose pensions are already grabbed up by the greedy, insatiable maw of inflation? And if that is not enough, their nursing homes are taking up the slack, charging as much as they can as quickly as they can after the increase is put into effect; because these institutions, too, are gripped by a rate of inflation which is making this country a bad example among the developed countries of the world on the inflation spectrum. Among some of the most prestigious international economic bodies, we in Canada are being designated as the country least likely to succeed in its anti-inflation measures. What a prospect, what a reputation, what a profile before the world!

In so far as this measure offers relief to hard-pressed Canadians who have families, as I said earlier we of course welcome it and will support it. We will make no effort in any way likely to delay implementation of this measure. We want the cheques in the hands of the mothers of Canada in time. Indeed, I suggested some weeks ago that they should now be receiving $20 instead of the $12 provided in the interim measure, but my view was not accepted by the minister or the government.

However, with regard to the 100,000 Canadians with young families I must say again that, important though this group is, it is but one of a great body of hard-pressed Canadians. Let the rest not be forgotten as the minister takes as much credit as he can from his efforts.

The government has taken some time to get a meaningful family allowance measure into the legislative flow. We all remember the FISP bill of inglorious memory, and we remember the various plans which were put forward and later aborted during the last four years. This afternoon I expressed the need for a close and careful committee study of this bill. Some of the questions that spring to my mind are of a general nature and to a degree are questions of principle. Others are technical and administrative but none the less important.

In the first category, I should like to hear more about what the minister referred to as the bill's being a measure of regional distribution of income across the country. On the first page of his speech, which I now have available to me, the minister said:

> In addition, it will advance the development of a more equitable regional redistribution of income across Canada.

A desirable goal, but I should like to hear a bit more about it. Perhaps the minister meant that with greater flexibility the individual provinces could mount a more equitable assault on poverty within their own bounds. That may well be so, and I trust the ministers of welfare who are concerned and knowledgeable about the matter have expressed their views. But we must ask if there is a danger of variations between provinces growing rather than decreasing as the amounts very from province to province under a highly flexible system.

An inescapable fact of our federalism is that the provinces range widely in fiscal capacity. They may be juridically equal, they may be peers constitutionally, but when we get to the realm of fiscal capacity we come to an area of painful inequality and widespread variation. Might we not be faced with a situation where the people of the poorer provinces will fall behind their fellow Canadians in the wealthier provinces in confederation? On this I should like further explanation and assurance. Is the Dominion Government, the great equilibrating agency of confederation, able to guarantee, will it guarantee, a measure of equality or near equality to the people of all provinces? Was the bill founded on a clear awareness of this very serious question? I welcome assurances in this regard from the minister when we move into committee.

In committee, too, we can hear more about other aspects. For example, I should like to have a little clearer explanation of the income tax aspects, having noted over the years so many faulty prognostications by so many departments of this government. I wonder how the minister can predict with such precision, as he did this afternoon, what the practical aspects of the bill will mean, without knowing how the fathers and mothers of the realm will decide who shall pay, who will claim, who will be the payer of the income tax. I think there might at least be some room for a little further study and reflection on that question.

We will also want to have this measure, which is but one measure in this field, more closely and meaningfully related to the goals set forth in the orange paper. We shall want some elucidation of the various new elements in this kind of measure. This is why I said earlier today that this was the kind of bill that required careful study in committee.

● (2020)

I think the interim bill was very straightforward and very simply written. It was drafted in such a way as to bring about easy comprehension so that it could be disposed of quickly in the House in general debate. This bill requires a good deal more study. As I read it over with great care, I am prompted to ask further questions which are more suitable to the committee than to this chamber. I do not know, for instance, from the bill on what date the minister is to table his reports. I do not get any clear picture of the mechanism through which the federal government can recover any overpayments which may be made.

The interim bill, as we note en passant, has no terminal date, and I presume I should not be concerned about any administrative or other flaw which might prevent the operative enactment of this bill by the date set out by the minister, January 1. I presume the interim bill will carry on, and probably that is why no terminal date was put in. A very important and serious fault, indeed a grievous error, is the issue of the cost of living increase. The bill is inadequate in this regard and I am surprised that the inadequacy has not been corrected.

In the resumed session of August and September, measure after measure was brought forward in the House. The House was moved to bring in recommendations in respect of the cost of living. Measures were provided whereby these could be enacted. Now I find that this bill is deficient in this regard. There should be a clearcut provision to the effect that the recipients of family allowance will have given to them regularly and automatically a sum corresponding to the annual cost of living increase. Anything less than that is unjust, improper and shows a considerable unawareness of the issue when dealing with the public service, old age security pensioners and the rest.

I believe such an amendment should be moved. I hope the minister will recognize the need for it. If he does, he will have the support of this part of the House. We have always asked for that realism to be reflected in legislation. We always thought the 2 per cent was fantastic nonsense, and ask again for a realistic figure. We ask that the legislation be written clearly and simply so that there is no convoluted development of somebody reporting back to someone and someone else making a decision. Let this provision be written in so that the people of Canada, the would-be recipients of these measures, know exactly where they stand. For whatever time is left to this government they can be pretty sure there will be a lot of inflation, so they should have it written in. I think this is a very important and prudent suggestion.

I should like to speak longer on the bill, but I want to give ample time to the honourable and venerable member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I always enjoy hearing from him on these measures, and also the representative of the Social Credit party. I say again that I hope we will soon be in committee, where we can study this measure and hear further from the minister on this bill which has considerable complexity and, while it is not by any means an answer to the inflationary evils which stalk the land, is something which for what good it will do we can welcome. To advance that good we will expedite the bill, giving it our reasonable consideration.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we welcome Bill C-211. We welcome it because it will put additional dollars into the income of all the families of the country in which there are children. We welcome it also because the principle upon which this bill is based is essentially sound. Like the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), speaking as one venerable member to another, I like the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) much better when he is Dr. Jekyll than when he is Mr. Hyde. Today he was the doctor. Today he had a good case, and he did not spoil it by attempts to make partisan capital out of this piece of legislation.

I have referred to my friend the hon. member for Hillsborough in making this allusion to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I may say I shall probably come back to my friend from Hillsborough a little later, but at the moment I should like to draw attention to the fact that in the five minutes he had before five o'clock he certainly let the cat out of the Tory bag. To him this bill and the measure to increase old age security were welfare. That is all, just welfare. I do not mind his castigating the other ministers of the Liberal government for their failure to cope adequately with economic problems, but if that is all he understands about universal old age security, if that is all he understands about universal family allowances, namely, that these measures are welfare, I pity this country if my friend the hon. member for Hillsborough is ever minister of national health and welfare. As I say, I shall come back to that matter a little later.

First of all, there is another word or two I should like to say about my friend Dr. Jekyll, the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I really enjoyed his speech today, as I enjoyed his speech of January 11 and several other speeches he has made, unlike other speeches which I shall not mention at this time. As I listened to him today, making it clear that he has an appreciation of social policy, that he understands what he is doing when he brings in improved old age pensions and improved family allowances, and when he tells us about changes to be made in the Canada Pension Plan, I realized that he was having a pretty good time.

I think the minister was genuine in his joy in making the speech he made this afternoon. But I found myself wondering how much pleasure my friend the Minister of National Health and Welfare would have had if the election of last October 30 had produced a majority Liberal government in Canada. Does he suppose for one minute that in less than one year he would have brought in a couple of increases in respect of old age security, a couple of increases in respect of family allowances, and proposed increases to the Canada Pension Plan, as well as even a proposed change in the Canada Assistance Plan? Not on your life! We would have been lucky to get, in four years out of the minister or ten years out of the Tories, what this minister has been able to bring before the House of Commons in a period of less than 12 months. As I said on April 18 when the minister tabled his orange paper, what a difference October 30, 1972, made in the history of this country, particularly in the history of social legislation.

● (2030)

If some of my friends in various parts of the House think that I am being too generous in welcoming this legislation, it must be obvious that the reason we welcome it is that we know we are responsible for it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Come on, Stanley.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hear interesting phrases such as, "Oh, come on Stanley" and, "Oh, that isn't nice." Well, Mr. Speaker, it is the truth. My friend, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), is agreeing. He knows, also, that the reason he has been able to bring in some measures respecting veterans is also due to the fact that on October 30, 1972, the people of this country did not elect a majority government that would have done nothing, but elected a parliament of minorities and gave us sufficient strength to demand the measures for which we stand.

So I say that we welcome very warmly, this piece of legislation. Until last month, September, family allowances had not changed at all except for the fact that the original schedule of $5, $6, $7 and $8 a month was reduced to a schedule of just two amounts, $6 or $8 a month. But until last month $8 was the top figure paid by way of family allowances—and it is the amount for which some of us voted in the House of Commons in 1944, nearly 30 years ago.

An hon. Member: Holy smoke!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So we are proud of the fact that by virtue of a bill which we passed in September of this year, the average family with children in this country is getting an increase in its income, in this month of October, of about $10 a month. Now, by virtue of Bill C-211, in January, 1974, the average Canadian family with children will have a further increase of from $12 to $16 a month. In a sense I pull these figures out of a hat, but they are based on an average family having two children and on the fact that some of them will have to pay income tax and some will not. Those who have two children and who do not pay income tax will have an increase of $16 a month in January over what they are receiving this October, November and December. So because this is, be it ever so small, nevertheless a contribution to the families of this country in their effort to cope with the rising cost of living , I say that we welcome this piece of legislation.

We welcome it, also, because of its simplicity. In a moment I may complain that it is not as simple as I should like it to be. Certainly it is not as simple as the bill that we passed in 1944, which consisted of only five pages. This one consists of 20 pages. But compared with the bill known as FISP, Bill C-211 is the ultimate in simplicity. I heard my friend, the hon. member for Hillsborough, a few moments ago refer to FISP as a bill of ignominious memory. I forget what his precise adjective was, but it was not far off that one. Under my breath I was saying to my colleagues that even so the Tories had voted for it. I remind the minister that the government which he joined after the election, and the department over which he now presides, presented us last year with that complete and utter monstrosity which was aimed at achieving selectivity on the basis of a means or a needs test which was completely and utterly unworkable.

Mr. Alexander: And discriminatory.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Again I say that but for the results of the election on October 30 we might have had that bill brought back to us again. This bill is simple but for one main feature, and is much more like the bill of 1944 in that it has no means test, no needs test and no complications of the kind that would have made FISP completely unworkable. The main reason, as I see it, that this bill consists of 20 pages rather than five is the flexibility that has been written into it under which the provinces, if they wish, may vary the amount of the allowance from the $20 norm that is laid down in the bill.

I listened with interest to the minister this afternoon when he indicated that it looked as though only two provinces will take advantage of that flexibility, one being Quebec and the other Alberta. I want to say quite frankly that I wish this flexibility were not necessary; I wish the payment of family allowances could be the same with respect to all the children of Canada, the same $20 a month. But I have no hesitation in saying that this is not a very high price to pay for a feeling of co-operation among the provincial governments and the federal government; and if this provision produces harmony and co-operation in this field, if this makes provinces such as Quebec and Alberta feel that they can go along, I suggest that that is not a very high price to pay.

We shall watch with interest what variations those provinces make in the basic $20 and, like the hon. member for Hillsborough, I should like to be told when we get into committee how the government proposes to deal with the situation if the figures that are set by those two provinces result in more than $20 a month on the average being paid into each of them. However, that is a detail which we can work out.

I trust, in so far as I can tell from reading the bill, that any overpayment that results because those two provinces set up schedules that are too high will not be collected from the individual. I gather that if any overpayment has to be collected or if any adjustment has to be made, it will be the province that will have to take care of it and not the individual. Even with that complication which accounts for a good deal of the wordage of this bill, it is a small price to pay and we welcome its general simplicity, as well as the fact that we are back to the kind of legislation that we had in 1944 which simply says that for every child in this country up to a certain age there is to be a family allowance of $20 a month on the average.

● (2040)

Having said that, having made the point that the average is to be $20 a month, perhaps I may be pardoned if I spell out the obvious and say that the result apparently will not be the same in respect of every child. In eight of the provinces of Canada, and in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, the amount will be $20 per child, whereas in the province of Quebec and the province of Alberta there will be some variation, according to the wishes of those provinces, provided it adds up to the same amount in total, namely, an average of $20 for each child.

Not only is this bill simple in the sense that it provides for the payment so directly and really needs very little language to spell it out, apart from the flexibility pages, but it is very simple in its approach to the question of selectivity through the use of the income tax formula. I remember very well how, during the debate on FISP in the previous parliament, we pleaded for this formula to be accepted. We argued at all stages of the debate that a flat amount should be paid in respect of every child, on a universal basis, and that the way to make sure that the wealthy did not get more than they needed, the way to even things out if they needed to be evened out at all, was by means of the income tax system. We were even prepared to have a special income tax, if necessary, to make sure that this evenness was achieved.

The then minister of national health and welfare, now the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), stood in his place and said that this was so complicated, so ridiculous, and that the government should not be asked to put out huge sums of money with one hand, then turn around and with the other take some of it back in income tax. No, it could not be done in that previous parliament, that majority parliament, when the present Minister of National Health and Welfare was in the back room, instead of out front where he could do things. The present Minister of Labour said it could not be done. But this afternoon the new Minister of National Health and Welfare stood up and with great pride—part of that speech that he so enjoyed making—told us that the total amount to be paid out in a year under the new bill would be $1,830 million.

In the same section of his speech the minister told us, his voice still reflecting pride, that the estimated tax recovery would be $350 million to the federal treasury and a further $115 million to the provincial treasuries. Last year it could not be done, it was too complicated, it was crazy to pay money out with one hand and take it back with the other. In the previous parliament, when we tried to get the former minister to increase the basic amount of old age security we were told that was not the way to do it. But this minister, in this parliament of minorities, sees the light and realizes that it is sensible to make payments of this kind on a universal basis; any problem that is created because certain wealthy people get the payments can be taken care of through income tax.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare on being minister in a minority government. I enjoy the smile he is giving me right now. I suspect I have said things this evening that he has thought about himself. I suspect he realizes that if that party had won a majority on October 30, he would not be having the good time he is having in this parliament.

The minister does not mind being castigated by the hon. member for Hillsborough for bringing in too much welfare. The minister is enough of a social scientist to know that it is not welfare, but redistribution of income. Despite all the complaining that comes from the Tory benches, he is able to do this, not because he has a different Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), not because the cabinet has changed its view, but because this is a minority parliament, and a government that wants to stay in power has to decide whether it will go the Tory way or the progressive way in social welfare. The government seems to have decided, at least for a while, which way it had better go.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have been giving some of the reasons why we have been welcoming this legislation. I might say we are proud of it. After all, we have had a good deal to do with forcing the hand of the government in this matter. May I go on and say that the basic philosophical reason for our support of this legislation is that far from its being the welfare that the hon. member for Hillsborough calls it, it is, be it ever so little, a measure for the redistribution of income.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): True, when you pay out welfare benefits on a means or needs test, it is welfare; but when you pay old age security to every person in Canada who is 65 years of age or over, when you pay family allowances to every family in this country that has children, that is not welfare; it is an attempt to effect some redistribution of income in this country which, to begin with, is so unevenly distributed.

My friends in the Progressive Conservative Party should think a bit about this and not see every payment that is made, especially those payments made on a universal basis, as just welfare. I get the impression that they really do not like it. I wonder just where we would be going if they were sitting on treasury benches instead of sitting on this side.

An hon. Member: Ahead.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Some of my friends who have not taken part in this debate say that we would be going ahead, but the spokesman for their party has made the position of that party on this issue very clear. This kind of thing is just welfare to them. They want higher minimum wages and such measures. They want tax concessions to corporations, but they do not call that welfare. When we vote universal concessions to the wealthy through corporation taxes, they do not call that welfare; that is getting the economy rolling.

An hon. Member: Job creating.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Job creating, my eye! They have all the clichés. When it comes to a measure that to a very small extent does actually redistribute income, they do not appreciate it. They are going to vote for it—grudgingly. We are not voting for it grudgingly; we are voting for it with both hands because we like the idea of seeking to redistribute the incomes of the people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My friend and colleague, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), when he spoke on September 11 on Bill C-223—which was the bill to provide a family allowance payment of $12 a month for October, November and December—went into this question rather fully. I do not intend to repeat all the statistics that he gave, but I am going to give some of them. I think one set of statistics that my colleague used on that day is very telling. The latest figures show that the income the people of Canada have for disposable purposes breaks down this way: the bottom 20 per cent of the population has 7 per cent of the income, the next 20 per cent has 13 per cent of the income, the next 20 per cent has 18 per cent of the income, and the fourth 20 per cent has 23 per cent of the income. However, the top 20 per cent has 39 per cent of the income.

● (2050)

I agree with my hon. friend for Hillsborough that it is a scandal that there are 4½ million people in Canada living under conditions of poverty, according to all estimates which have been made about poverty in this country. That is a particularly serious scandal when one realizes that those 4½ million people include 1.7 million children. That is one of the reasons legislation of this kind is so good. It tries to do something for children.

Those statistics, which encompass millions of people, I think are highlighted by the percentages I have repeated, which were given to us on September 11 by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. These percentages highlight the fact that, whereas 20 per cent of the people at the top get 39 per cent of the national income, the 20 per cent at the bottom get only 7 per cent. Actually, the 60 per cent at the bottom end of the scale get only 38 per cent of our total income, whereas the 20 per cent at the top get more than the bottom 60 per cent; they get 39 per cent of the income of this country. Do not tell me that there is no need to effect the redistribution of income in this country. Do not tell me that it is good enough if we keep chasing some of the other ministers who are responsible for other economic matters. We must take further steps along the lines we are taking today, and that we have taken in the course of this session, to achieve greater equality of income among the people of this country.

I know that some of my friends to my right who like to attack us as being a social security party and as being concerned about these things usually like to throw in the question, "Where is the money to come from?" The basic problem is the problem of how we are to distribute the wealth we are able to produce. No doubt my friend from Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), if he turns up tonight to make a speech, will probably indulge in his usual bit of humour about our wanting to make the poor richer and the rich poorer, and that we will all end up the poorer.

The fact of the matter is that as conditions develop in the world, and as shortages and problems arise from the fact that the resources of this planet are not limitless, we will need to take a more comprehensive approach toward establishing equality. This bill does not do it—good heavens, no! The minor redistribution that it will effect really will not touch the problem. But it goes in the right direction, and I commend the minister for being the member of a minority government so that he has been able to bring it in. I am sorry that the hon. member for Hillsborough only sees this measure as so much welfare.

We are dealing, as I say, with one of the most important economic problems that faces us, that of the redistribution of income. I am glad that in less than 12 months since the election of October 30, 1972, we have achieved a fair amount in terms of the old age pension, family allowances, veterans pensions and allowances, the pensions of retired public servants, retired members of the armed forces, retired members of the RCMP, and of various other groups. There is no doubt in my mind that had the election gone the other way, returning a majority of the government party, we would not have achieved these things. We welcome them. We commend the minister. We say to him, "Do not be so impressed by the statement of the hon. member for Hillsborough that you run out of things to do." There is still a great deal to do in this whole area as, indeed, he spelled out in the orange paper which he tabled in the House on April 18.

That orange paper of April 18 laid down a number of high-sounding principles with which I agree, although I felt there was a lot of sound in some of those statements. In particular, the paper made reference to the guaranteed income. I call on the Minister of National Health and Welfare to get over the notion that that is something which will take four or five years to bring into effect. I agree with him that that measure, together with the various other things he is bringing forward, is part of a total package. But I urge him to put some fire under his cabinet colleagues and to work day and night on this matter. I say that because we really will not have achieved the kind of thing toward which he is working in old age security and family allowances until we have a guaranteed annual income for all our people.

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that I have spent more time than I usually do when speaking on government measures, in pointing out those things that are good. However, you would not expect me not to find something wrong with this piece of legislation. The first point I want to make—and in speaking on this area that needs correction I agree with the hon. member for Hillsborough—has to do with the provision for increases in family allowances in relation to increases in the cost of living.

It is not many years ago that we did not have the escalation of any pensions. We finally got started in this area with the Canada Pension Plan. We began with a 2 per cent escalation for that plan and we finally amended the provisions of various other plans. Now we have established, with respect to many plans, that the escalation of pensions must match the actual percentage increase in the cost of living. However, we still have not done this for the retired employees of Canadian National Railways, and we will deal with that in another debate. We still have not done it for retired employees of CBC, the Bank of Canada, and of a number of other government emanations.

However, with respect to government pension plans that are of general application, the principle has now been accepted that there must be an automatic increase, as spelled out in the statute, to equal percentage increase in the cost of living. In most cases that increase takes place annually, but with respect to the old age security pension and the guaranteed income supplement that increase now takes place on a quarterly basis.

You would think that that battle having been won, that principle having been accepted, the minister would write the same principle into this bill. But no, he has not done that. He has come forward with this bill which, under the provisions of clause 13, gives to the governor in council the right to propose increases related to the cost of living and then to submit any such proposal to the House for its approval. However, unless the governor in council takes action, nothing will happen.

I know—at least I suspect—why the government does not want to make provision for automatic cost of living increases in this legislation. It is afraid there might be occasions, especially if it were done on a quarterly basis, when it would have to pay a 2 per cent increase. Two per cent of $20 is 40 cents. Remembering a certain 42 cent increase, the government, I can imagine, does not wish to have legislation on the books that will increase family allowances by a few dimes at a time.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this can be avoided by a clause in the legislation which would provide for increases in terms of a full dollar. In other words, I will accept that the first increase should be $1 and the next increase another $1. I will go a step further and say that it would hardly be fair to require a family allowances recipient to wait every time for the full dollar because there could be a wait of many months during which time the recipient would be behind in benefits. I suggest, therefore, and I will certainly propose this as strongly as I can in committee, that when the cost of living has risen to the point where there should be an increase of 50 cents, the increase should be $1. Then, to carry this on, when the point has been reached at which the increase should be $1.50, the allowance should be increased by the full $2.

In other words, I am suggesting that the increase should be not less than $1, and to make up for the time lag the increase should be granted in advance, more or less halfway through the period, so that as the cost of living rises people who are drawing these benefits would receive some of their increase in advance, to make up for what they have missed in the weeks or months which have gone by.

The hon. member for Hillsborough came all out in favour of an automatic provision in the act. I support him in that. Perhaps we could do this with some other kind of formula. I have spelled ours out to make it clear that we are not talking without having thought the matter through. However, I very strongly support the idea that the country should know from the legislation what is going to happen. It should not be left to the governor in council.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

• (2100)

Another comment I wish to make is that it seems fairly clear that this minister has a winsome way, not only in the House, when he is Dr. Jekyll, but he has done fairly well at getting co-operation from his counterparts in the provinces. The reports we get on the conferences he has held with the provincial health and welfare ministers sound very good. Because he has that effective working relationship with his counterparts in the provinces, I urge him to prevail upon them to make sure these increases in family allowances are not going to take the place of welfare and are not going to be subtracted from welfare payments being made in the provinces. I say in all of the provinces, and I say that advisedly.

I also urge the minister to work a little faster than I thought he was prepared to do when I asked him a question this afternoon with regard to bringing in a bill with respect to the Canada Assistance Plan. I agree we are dealing with a total package. The provinces, especially those that have universalized some of their services like payments to nursing homes, and so on, are going to suffer serious losses if there is an undue delay in amending the Canada Assistance Plan so that the federal government can pay 50 per cent, even where such programs are not needs tested. I realize a formula has to be worked out, but I submit this is terribly important to the provinces. In view of the good relationship this minister has established with them, I urge him to get the bill to amend the Canada Assistance Plan into this House so that we can pass it before we rise in December, whatever date that may be.

The other comment I wish to make is that I welcome the remarks the minister made this afternoon about the changes he is now in a position to make to the Canada Pension Plan. I welcome very warmly the removal of the 2 per cent ceiling on annual escalation so that all benefits under the Canada Pension Plan each January will go up by the full percentage increase in the cost of living.

Although the minister did not say it today, he has said outside the House there will be a catch-up factor. Those who have been receiving these benefits since 1967 will get an increase that will make up for the fact they only received 2 per cent for certain years, with the result some will get 10 or 11 per cent and some will get as much as 20 per cent. That is good. Let us get that bill in soon so we can deal with it.

I also welcome the announcement that the YMPE—yearly maximum pension earnings—level is to be raised. Contributors will be permitted to pay in a slight bit more per year. The pension that Canadians will draw at the end can grow to the point where by 1980 it can be in the order of $3,000 a year, instead of $1,200 or $1,300 as it is at the present time.

I also welcome the removal of the work or earnings from employment test between the ages of 65 and 70. I am sorry to hear the minister will have to bring in two bills. I was hoping all these things would be brought in before January. I also hope one or the other of those bills will do something about removing discrimination as between men and women to the extent it still exists in the Canada Pension Plan. I know that is apart from this bill, but it was part of the minister's speech. Like him and the hon. member for Hillsborough, I agree that our social policy is one total unit and we have to look at all of these things together. I again commend the minister, as a member of a minority government, in being in a position to bring in legislation which at least moves in the direction of redistributing income. As he knows, we shall warmly and strongly support this bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, we are truly happy to be able to speak tonight about family allowances and particularly about the distribution of our wealth. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said a while ago, it is very important that the wealth of Canadians be distributed logically and justly. At the present time, Mr. Speaker, there are many flaws in the distribution of our resources.

We were very pleased with the speech made this afternoon by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), who has made some important concessions. We admire this, but I wish to say immediately that these concessions do not go far enough because the cost of living has increased in a much greater proportion than the family allowances.

• (2110)

With this approach the excess wealth of Canadians will still not be distributed more evenly. The hon. minister's offer is better than nothing. We will support this bill but we want more because Canadians are producing more and more and can give more and more.

One of the reasons why I suggest that family allowances are not logically adjusted to the cost of living is that they have been hardly increased since their establishment in 1944-1945. And yet, in the other areas of the economy everything has multiplied by five, six or ten. It is in the name of simple justice and of the most elementary economic balance that we want family allowances to be increased.

To adjust them to the correct economic reality, family allowances should at least amount to $1 a day per child. Since there are about eight million children under 18 in Canada, monthly family allowances amounting to $30 would cost only about $300 million a month or nearly $30 billion a year. However, $210 million as compared with $30 billion are not more than a drop of water in the ocean. When we produce yearly $114 billion but consume only $60 billion we can say that the balance is $54 billion which certainly could be used to guarantee a logical revenue corresponding to the cost of living and the facts of life and give Canadian citizens the right to live.

This is what we are asking on behalf of all Canadian citizens and on behalf of all the 264 members of Parliament who have undertaken to administer the country in the best interest of all citizens.

In every family, we know it by experience, the youngest children always get the most attention. Everyone does his share. We must do likewise in Parliament: We must begin by taking care of the youngest Canadian citizens and guarantee them at least their individual vital right, knowing that if the young have everything they need, the adults will get by more easily in our society, a just society in a Canada united, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says, by the right to live. All citizens will be more strongly united at every other level of the community.

Let us establish once for all a basic standard of living for each Canadian citizen, for every child of 18, regardless of the salary or income of his father or mother, because it is his personal vital right. The child is entitled to it even before he is entitled to employment, capital or even education. The right to live is the first and the most sacred of all rights.

Let us assume now, Mr. Speaker, that we admit that we must increase family allowances, this must be done without any increase in taxes or in the cost of living. This must be done without lowering the purchasing power of other Canadians. This is the most important thing, Mr. Speaker. And we will introduce motions designed to make such a claim in the future. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, in order to increase the purchasing power of one segment of the population, we must decrease the purchasing power of the other. We must not take some income from a few citizens to transfer it onto other ones.

We know that in 1972, as I said earlier, national production amounted to $114 billion and that capitalization was $48 billion; we must determine whether we do not capitalize too much. I am sure that we capitalize too much and that we could use part of this capital to pay a guaranteed income to Canadian citizens because they need it, and this, Mr. Speaker, would be done without increasing taxes or the cost of living.

It is therefore possible to increase the purchasing power of children, without decreasing or reducing the purchasing power or other Canadians. Under this formula, Mr. Speaker, allowances will be increased, but they will be taxable. He who will be unhappy enough to earn between $6,000 and $10,000 a year will not get any family allowances; he will give more than he gets because his earnings will be a little higher than others. In our economic world where salaries vary between $7,000 and $25,000, everybody needs money and adjusts the expenditures of his family to his income. Therefore, if someone earns $25,000, he spends almost $25,000. Some people do save money but not many, Mr. Speaker, and they do not save that much. They must earn still more than that to be able to save. So, Mr. Speaker, this bill ought to provide also that tax exemptions be at least $5,000 for couples and $3,000 for single persons. If we give allowances such as the minister is proposing now and if we leave incomes subject to taxation as they are now, many citizens will not benefit much from family allowances. They will have to incur payments and that will not put the required purchasing power in the hands of taxpayers.

Purchasing power is best placed economically in the hands of the families, those who consume. Aged people are small consumers, but it is the families that consume most. They require reasonable tax exemptions in a system where the cost of living keeps increasing, where it is so high that tax exemptions are illogical. If we do not set tax exemptions at reasonable rates, family allowances that are being proposed will not bear fruit.

Mr. Speaker, what must be explained in a more detailed way is the way of governing and above all of taxing used by our governments, especially since the end of World War II.

• (2120)

A new tax system then came into effect to promote increased capital profits for large corporations. Those methods at first certainly promoted production but on the long run, mainly because of increased capital profit commodities, that method became harmful, and the whole economy of this country is suffering from that and contributes to throw out of balance consumption and capitalization on a progressive production. That method contributes to destroy the national economic balance between the purchasing power of the people and the power to capitalize of large corporations, which is detrimental to all small individual and family businesses, to all economic activities of decentralized areas, of small or rural towns.

I already quoted figures in that connection; it would be needless to repeat them today. But now, Mr. Speaker, I want to look into the problem fully and seriously with the ministers concerned and their officials. The important thing is that there be no further postponement of the passage of this urgent piece of legislation providing for increased family allowances for all Canadian children under 18. I want rather to use the time at my disposal to move officially later on a motion to increase family allowances to $30 a month and setting out the way to pay them without causing tax increases, increases in prices or in the cost of living for any citizen of this country and the way to thus restore the national economic balance between individuals, families and corporations, between incomes, expenditures and profits, between taxes and reserves, between needs, costs and prices, between employers, employees and dependents, between production, consumption and capitalization at the national level and in the standard mechanisms of our regular monetary, economic and political systems.

We can, Mr. Speaker, make great changes. We can give much greater satisfaction to the people of this country. We can give them welfare within the framework of the present system because this system is sound. Mr. Speaker, it is only a matter of amending a few acts and regulations in order to allow the distribution to each citizen of a guaranteed income in a country which can produce aplenty. We have capitalized $48 billion in 1973 with 50 per cent of our work force, while the unemployed remained inactive. If the taxpayers were given enough purchasing power, we would witness all sorts of new developments and the disappearance of unemployment. We would see production increase, not only by $114 billion, but maybe between $175 and $180 billion, or even $200 billion, if we put everybody to work.

Because of credit restrictions and because too little is given too late, Mr. Speaker, our people are at their wit's end. They are always deprived of everything, they cannot undertake anything for lack of financial backing; on the other hand, when money is available, interest rates are prohibitive at 8, 10, 12 per cent, or even more. Under such conditions, how can our economy develop? In the system, we now use to develop our economy, it is necessary to increase tremendously the private and public debts. This cannot go on that way and taxpayers are more and more aware that when they receive $1 from the government, they give $6.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

There must be an economic rebalancing and the best means for achieving this is to give Canadian children an adequate purchasing power based on the present facts and realities of our economy; this way, Mr. Speaker, we will be able to tell the people that we have done something. We will be able to tell the Canadian people, as well as the old political parties: We increased family allowances. But the old parties will not tell the Canadian people that by complicity, they let the cost of living increase and that they took billions of dollars out of the tapayers' pockets because of this increase in the cost of living. They will say, just as Mr. Bourassa does in the province of Quebec: We have not increased taxes for three years.

However, the cost of living has nearly tripled, which brings the government billions of dollars. I would say that governments are partly responsible for the increase in the cost of living because it equals an indirect tax which annoys taxpayers.

But the taxpayers will be more and more aware of this situation. Moreover we have to know where the money will come from and the Minister of National Health and Welfare clearly said that he had not found a magic wand and that money did not grow on trees.

Considering the overall statistics of our national economy, in 1973, it is easy to see that that would simply mean to collect the necessary billions of dollars to boost the purchasing power of all dependent citizens, out of current taxation and undue profits realized by large millionnaire and billionnaire corporations capitalized in the form of excessive profits, depreciations or reserves either provided or hidden, that are not taxed by our governments at the present time, in accordance with privileges or exemptions detrimental to our national economy as a whole aand especially to those individuals who must pay more income tax in relation to their income, so as to offset the cost of such privileges granted to corporations.

To show the importance of such income tax disparities between individuals and large corporations I will give the following explanation which is quite close to reality. Nowadays, for every $5 tax collected from individuals, the government collects only one dollar from corporation in relation to their income. So as to balance things out nationaly between individuals and corporations, between labour and capital, a flat amount of $3 would need to be collected from each individual. Hence the government would still collect $6 but the individual would see his tax reduced by 20 to 40 per cent. Corporations would not pay at a higher rate than individuals and everything would be in order and evened out to the satisfaction of all taxpayers throughout Canada.

This would be a way of finding the necessary capital in order to place in the hands of the taxpayers the economic component the nation needs to keep its balance.

• (2130)

Another even more effective means would be to cash part of the excess yield or overproduction, which would allow a balanced distribution of the purchasing power among the taxpayers, especially those who need it most.

I know very well that it is very difficult for all of you to accept immediately this program which, even much simplified, requires long explanations. Everything should be demonstrated with tables, and this is what I intend to do in the future.

Once again, this will have to be done sometime or other, and the sooner the better, because the more we go ahead with our present methods of managing and planning our national economy, the more we remain in poverty, unemployment and inflation. And it is not by keeping the same administrative methods that we will correct this imbalance. It is absolutely necessary to change something and it would be best to change nothing in the structures, but only to improve and rectify the ratio between income and taxation, individuals and corporations and later on we could go further.

As a matter of fact, the problem is complex, but it doesn't mean that it is insoluble and that it must be neglected. On the contrary we should face it. People, especially the administrators of the country are equal to the challenge. There are almost 23 million citizens of various languages, races, colours, and religions. They don't have all the same level of education nor the same social status as in the rest of the world. There are 3.6 billion citizens in the world who are all equals irrespective of their racial, religious, language, colour, nationality, social status, age and sex difference. We have all been created with the same needs. We all need a decent home and the present system doesn't allow the citizens and the families to have a decent home. We need three square meals a day, and this is not possible under the present system. Mr. Speaker, it is our duty to restore the economic balance in order that this could be possible, since the country produces enough goods. If we had let western farmers produce goods and paid them to do so, if we had given them a compensated discount on the prices and built new warehouses, if we had filled up these warehouses, we could now help the hungry populations in Europe which need bread.

Canada has no more wheat to sell because we have prevented farmers from producing. We are doing the same thing in eastern Canada by setting quotas; almost 70 per cent of the farms in my riding have been abandoned. We are now short of some products, we have to import some and we let prices grow; we import butter, milk, all kinds of products, and prices go up. Whose fault is it, Mr. Speaker? We cannot blame the children, who do not have the money to buy what they need at prohibitive prices. Many families, Mr. Speaker, can no longer get the necessary meat because of excessive prices. If we had let farmers produce, meat would perhaps be cheaper. All this is the fault of the government and of those who have supported it. Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, the sun is shining for everyone, and air is not dispensed by the Canadian government, because the 264 ministers and members elected by the ten million Canadian electors for the maintenance of national stability among the 23 million Canadian citizens making up the population would be deprived of it.

Mr. Speaker, I would have many things to say, but I will merely point out, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian people must establish some balance among families and companies among inflation, unemployment and poverty. This is how we must create that balance in the present structure of our economic, political, capitalist, conventional Canadian mechanisms, taking into consideration the huge national production of 1973 and 1974. We do forget that fact, Mr. Speaker; allowances are granted on the basis of the revenue and on the basis of the production which could be distributed.

Such should be the basis of our financial distribution in order to balance our deficit ridden system. It must be based on the goods which can possibly and necessarily be produced. We could make a fair distribution and thus provide more happiness in our society. There would thus prevail more order and harmony in our society. There might be fewer political parties because new ones would emerge from the inefficiency of the old parties which would not have adapted to the realities of the time and would not have given the population what it is entitled to. Mr. Speaker, this is why we see so much dissatisfaction. This is why so many people are dissatisfied because of what is done. When we see what is produced, all that it is possible to have and impossible for the greater number to obtain, then Mr. Speaker, revolution is at hand.

In the province of Quebec a revolution is coming. During provincial elections, we have never seen people go so far and shake the "columns" of national and provincial institutions. We are overthrowing everything and if we do not take the possible logical means to bring about an equitable distribution of the riches we will soon witness a terrible revolution because it is already boiling in Quebec. I do not know if it is the same elsewhere but it is frightful in Quebec. Go to Quebec and see for yourself. In the next few days it will be frightful in the province of Quebec.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I urge the minister to review the bill once again and try to make it even more generous so that Canadians can enjoy the result of the work of earlier generations and do not have enormous debts to pay. And the more we progress in our country, the more we become indebted and the worse off the citizens are. There are techniques to stop indebtment. There are also means to allow the distribution of wealth and to make available to all Canadians all the services and technical means available to us. If science is so advanced, its purpose is to serve humanity, not to punish it. At the present time, the more science advances, the more humanity feels crushed by the burden of finance which takes control of the developments as they occur.

[English]

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to participate in this debate. These are very important measures which will benefit a very large segment of the population. I believe the minister presented these measures in a very eloquent and sensible manner. The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) gave us his usual, very appropriate comments. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) gave his very well considered opinions about social security in general and this bill in particular. I am always glad to hear from him.

This bill contains another point, that is, there are some innovations in it. It provides for flexibility from province to province. This, in reality, is a rather new interpretation of our constitutional regulations. During the past few months we have seen unfold most of the social security programs of this country. We have had the pleasure in this House of increasing old age pensions, increasing veterans' pensions and escalating them to the consumer price index. There are a great many forms of social assistance in addition to those. We look after the widows, the unemployed, the disabled and the injured. We have the Canada Pension Plan and the Canada Assistance Plan. We have an enlightened National Housing Act and projected changes in the structure and operation of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Finally we come to one of the most important aspects of social assistance, namely, this bill which attacks the problem of assistance to poorer families in which there are children. Most working people can afford one or two children; any more than that requires almost a middle-class income. It is estimated that in 1972 the cost of raising a child was $700 or $800 annually at least. There are many variations in income in Canada. The minimum wage varies from province to province; it can start at $1.15 an hour and go up to $2 an hour. In one year's time, this means over $2,000 to somewhat less than $5,000. This is a big swing, but even this amount can only be earned by a man who works the whole year, particularly if he is on the minimum wage. In spite of this, in certain areas of Canada there is a huge variation in the amount of work available. Some people who have an annual income are well below the national norm. For instance, British Columbia is probably the only province where the minimum wage is somewhere near the lowest level of the poverty line.

● (2140)

As has a certain small minority in the House, I began to work many years ago during the depression in a farming community. People there could not afford new clothes, they could not afford new farm machinery, they could not pay doctors' bills and they could not give anything to the church; but they lived very well, at least so far as food on the table was concerned. So far as I was concerned, I could not afford to buy a practice in a bigger town, so I owed the bank for my car, for my house and for my practice. However, my kitchen and my cellar were full of meat and vegetables which I was glad to take in payment of my bills.

In 1933 when I moved into town, the effects of the depression were still very strong. Many fine young people were roaming from town to town, riding the rods. They could not get work in plants and had to live on a pitiful welfare allowance and depend on their neighbours' charity. I well remember a person in Port Colborne who tried to do his best to pay the town's welfare expenses. He had a heart like a washtub and always added a few dollars for large families. The situation at that time was deplorable and demoralizing.

Old age pensions were brought in many years ago. It was the first attempt at social security apart from the Workmen's Compensation Board. Most of our social services started to blossom after the Second World War. The family allowances program which was started in 1945 was adjusted in 1949 and again amended upward in 1957. To look after children aged 16 and 17, however, we had to add youth allowances. These were brought in in 1964, and of course families did not receive them unless the children attended school.

[Mr. Railton.]

A few years ago you will remember that the Senate Committee on Poverty brought home many new things to most of us. It seems almost unacceptable in this fair Canada of ours when we hear it said that one-quarter of our population lives in poverty. The old truism still exists, that the rich grow richer and the poor grow poorer. It is just as true in Canada as it is anywhere in the world. Alongside this poverty group there is a large, middle-income group of average working people and professionals whose wages and salaries range from $6,000 up to $50,000 or $100,000 a year. Then there is a small group of very wealthy people. This group seems to be growing in number every day. It seems to be the thing to do in the modern world, to amass wealth. I suppose this is nothing new. The average workingman can afford many material goods. The list of expenses of the workingman include the house, the car, sometimes two to a family, coloured television, a snowmobile, a cottage, leisure activities, travel, pension at 60, and money in the bank.

I regret to say that many working people are not too sympathetic toward the unfortunate 25 per cent of the working poor and the group that is unable to work. However, in spite of all these things Canada's economy is buoyant. The gross national product has risen and so have wages. In spite of inflation, the high unemployment rate and increasing food prices, the middle-income group gets along moderately well. On the other hand, the poor find it increasingly difficult to raise their families with any semblance of decency and dignity.

There are other factors which must be acknowledged. Canada has a great many areas where regional disparities exist. These include the Maritimes, the north and the Prairies which lack industry and have seasonal work difficulties. Wealth has gravitated to Montreal, Toronto and the surrounding countryside. Industries are concentrated in Ontario and Quebec. Only recently have Alberta and British Columbia become wealthier provinces in company with the two I have mentioned. Sometimes unknown factors have caused all this. I believe it is a natural evolution. But, thank goodness, the picture is constantly changing. However, it is the duty of the federal government to work out schemes to try to equalize incomes and erase, so far as possible, economic inequalities.

There have been rumours of unemployment insurance abuses. However, these have been shown to be very small in number. Most people in the "have" bracket worry about increasing taxes. However, the government collects its revenue partly from personal income taxes. This makes up 40 per cent of the total revenue. The next largest source of revenue seems to come from corporate taxes. The remainder comes from sales, excise tax and Customs duties, and of course they bring in smaller amounts. In the working paper on social security, the minister promised a new approach which would take place over a period of time and would be within the existing levels of taxation.

The continued economic growth of Canada has greatly increased the revenue from personal income taxes, corporate and other taxes. The reduction of personal income tax would not do much to help the poverty group. It would put more money into the pockets of the wealthy. The poor pay practically no taxes. This is the big argument in favour of making family allowance payments taxable even though the payments are increased.

Obviously, family allowance benefits will be reduced as family incomes increase. Following the April working paper on social security, federal-provincial conferences have been held. The most recent one was held in the first two weeks of this month. It is interesting to note that all the provinces agree on the broad principle that the minister presented. This means that many different governments agree, not only Liberal but NDP and Conservative as well. It was particularly acceptable to one or two provinces because the federal government has allowed for the differences in provinces and for planned flexibility. Ottawa has insisted mainly on the minimum allowance for every child being $12 and on the average payment for every child being $20. It is interesting to note that Ontario would pay the greatest amount to the fund, and Quebec would be next in line because of their large population. It is estimated that in 1972 the cost was over $600 million. The cost will be tripled in 1974, but because of increasing taxes there will be a reduction of $400,000 in the cost.

● (2150)

One should comment on the situation in Quebec. Many provinces criticized the family allowance program as a means of subsidizing Quebec's large families. This is completely untrue. The birthrate in all provinces has declined from 26.1 to 16.8 per 1,000, and Quebec's rate is now 14.8 per thousand; it has the second lowest birthrate in Canada. This, in turn, is due to increased government and private interest in family counselling and the growing determination of parents to limit families so that their children may enjoy a decent standard of living.

One might mention the fact that there is no correlation between the payment of family allowances and the birthrate. In the United States they pay no family allowances and their birthrate has declined, the same as that of Canada and the other 14 industrial nations who do pay family allowances. It is interesting to note that 40 to 50 countries, including those behind the iron curtain, pay some form of family allowance. Sometimes they are what we have in Canada, that is, universal payments, but in some countries they are oriented to an employment plan.

To summarize, all the provinces of Canada have social security programs which are correlated with the federal program. The recent federal-provincial conference has shown unanimous approval for the proposal of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). The new family allowance plan will improve the lot of over 350,000 families or, in other words, it will materially assist seven million young Canadians. It will serve to spread prosperity downwards to the poverty segment and will even up the differences in economically depressed areas of Canada. I find it quite evident that this new legislation is non-partisan, is enlightened and should continue to keep Canada's social security program near the forefront of the nations of the world.

In closing, I should like to say that the minister has shown that we can afford the plan. In addition, he emphasizes that we cannot refuse ordinary humane treatment to those families which cannot achieve a decent standard of living. The universality feature will help to remove any trace of stigma to a poor but proud family. Thank God we have many poor and proud families who are very worthwhile people in Canada. In my opinion, the minister should be congratulated on his vision, and I would ask all members of this House to support the legislation which he has so ably presented in Bill C-211.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have been given the opportunity to speak on Bill C-211 which finally, after three years of deliberation, has come about. Hopefully, by January 1, 1974, Canadians in our great nation will finally get the advantage of the social security program which they certainly deserve.

I want to relate my few words to the problem of poverty in our country, Mr. Speaker. If I can be forgiven for becoming a little insular in referring to the province of Newfoundland, I think it is high time the five million or so poverty-stricken Canadians who exist in this great nation—a good proportion of those unfortunately reside in my province—were given the advantage of the increases in family allowances on January 1 to an average of $20 a month.

The Chairman of our caucus committee on family allowances and social security, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), indicated in his adequate and most inimitable manner the feelings of our party regarding Bill C-211. While I did not have the pleasure of listening to all of his speech, I did hear him say it was the duty and the wish of our party and our leader to support this bill, and that without further delay it should be referred to committee so that we can deal in detail with many of the inequities which still exist and the bill can come back for further passage and we can assure the mothers of our country who are living in poverty-stricken conditions that they will be granted the increases they certainly deserve.

I wonder if I can prevail upon you to call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, before we get into the adjournment matters which are now coming forward, I see the government House leader coming in and I wonder if he could tell us whether it is the intention of the government to proceed tomorrow with the matter that is presently before the House.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will continue with this item tomorrow.

Mr. Baker: In the event that this item is finished some time during tomorrow for the purpose of second reading, could the government House leader inform us what item of business will be called next?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I was hoping that I would meet with the other House leaders tomorrow and review what item it might be appropriate to call in any interim period before we begin the capital punishment debate.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—DISABILITY PENSIONS—ACTION TO ELIMINATE BACKLOG OF APPLICATIONS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, after five years, to get up twice in a row in this House is something to make all hon. members and the House leaders wonder. However, in the seven minutes which I am allotted I want to refer to a question that I directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) on June 29 last. I might say that I think the "late show" needs some form of revision.

Mr. Speaker, on June 29 I asked the minister for an indication of the progress with regard to the backlog of applications to the pension commission for disability pensions. This is an item which is of grave concern to many veterans who were given some hope in the fact that as a result of the Woods committee report they were able to reapply, even though they were turned down previously. This was of particular concern to those veterans of World War I who are now at an average age of over 80 years. The minister replied at that time, as is usual for him and his colleagues, that progress is being made. He indicated that production for the six months prior to my question had increased by some 75 per cent over the same period of the previous year, and that the average number of decisions written was 316 for each month in 1971, 464 for each month in 1972, and 762 in 1973. I am sure that will be part of his answer. This, to me, is an excellent record and I can say, as a result of subsequent answers from the chairman of the Pension Commission to my requests on follow-up, that I am convinced the Pension Commission and the commissioners are working beyond the call of duty to clean up the backlog.

● (2200)

May I refer to a progress report that I received at the end of September from the chairman of the Pension Commission. He said that in 1971, from the time of the amendments to the pension act, the commission received an average of 1,006 pension applications a month. In 1972 they received an average of 738 a month, and in 1973 they were receiving an average of 718 a month. Then there was a decline. Further, and more important as to the number of decisions, in 1971 the commission adjudicated an average of 316 claims a month. In 1972 production was increased on adjudication to 464 a month, and in 1973 it was increased to 827 a month, an average increase of 83 per cent. Further, Mr. Speaker, since the act was amended in March, 1971, some 25,000 applications have been received and some 16,000 adjudicated upon.

The backlog naturally grew after March 30, 1971, and at the end of December, 1972, it reached a peak of 9,591 cases. Although every effort was made, the backlog remains at 8,708 cases still to be dealt with. So here we are, Mr. Speaker, over two years later, and in spite of the dedication of the pension commissioners and even the additional part-time commissioners authorized by the previous minister, the backlog remains at a point that is beyond human endurance.

Further, even allowing for the fact that all members of the Pension Commission are working diligently and with dedication, at the end of this year the backlog will still remain at some 8,000 cases. I repeat, there will be 8,000 cases. About one-third of these claims are about one year old. Despite the fact that priority is given to World War I veterans, as well as their widows, and that the same priority basis is given to urgent medical or social needs, there will still be a backlog of 8,000 cases. Many of those veterans are in the over 80 age group.

What bothers me, Mr. Speaker, is that in spite of the pledge of our governments over the years, the Department of Veterans Affairs has shown a complacency and apathy in giving other than lip service to the problem at hand. Surely, with all the resources of the present government, we can overcome this backlog so that we can fulfil our obligation to veterans who feel they should be entitled to disability pensions.

All members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs were of the opinion, after the report of the Woods commission, that applicants reapplying would be given more meaningful consideration as a result of the benefit of the doubt clause, because any consideration has to be in the mind of the adjudicators. The Woods recommendation was, of course, that a man was entitled to the presumption that the disability existed at enlistment unless it showed up at the time or within three months thereafter. The only argument permitted was where it was indicated that, on the advice of a physician not connected with CPC or DVA, the condition was of pre-enlistment origin.

To debate this issue properly would take more time than has been allocated to me. However, I ask the minister to make sure that some human consideration is given to this matter as a first priority, and that every means be explored to overcome the backlog of applications. The only way that this can be done, I suggest, is by decentralizing the activities of the Pension Commission, with more authority being given to district officials, so that many older veterans will not die in vain, with applications left unattended.

I realize that the minister is dedicated to this cause. Nevertheless, we face the problem in Canada that there is a backlog of some 8,000 cases. We must use all the resources at our command to alleviate the situation and get rid of that backlog so that we will fulfil our obligation. I ask the minister to make a reply which is other than the one I suggested he probably would make.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it will be recalled that on June 29 I informed the members of this House that the Canadian Pension Commission has been increasing production steadily in the last while, and that in the period from January, 1973, to that date it increased production by 75 per cent over the same period a year before. Members will recall that I said the average number of decisions written was 316 each month in 1971, 464 each month in 1972, and in 1973 up to the end of June it was 762.

I am very pleased to report that the commission has been making excellent progress. In the three months of July, August and September the commission adjudicated upon an additional 2,871 claims. The preparation, training and planning within the commission is now bearing fruit and I am informed that in September almost 1,200 decisions were produced. When members realize that in September, 1972, the comparable number was 483, and in 1971 it was 252, I am sure they will agree that the commission is to be congratulated on its efforts.

The commission is still faced with the problem that applications continue to be received in large numbers, and in the last few months there actually has been a slight increase. Members will recall that the backlog reached a high of about 9,600 cases in December of last year. By the end of September this year it had dropped to 8,700, and there was a decrease in every month this year but one. A continuing decrease is expected.

The problem of dealing with old cases still exists and the greater part of the commission's effort is directed toward reducing this number. In addition, the commission maintains its policy of granting priority to older veterans, that is, veterans of World War I. They realize that the average age of these veterans is close to 80 and they do their utmost to provide decisions on these claims as quickly as possible. Priority is also given to widows and certain individuals whose medical condition requires it. The commission is aware of the magnitude of the problem and in my opinion is doing an excellent job in meeting it.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—PROVISION OF EDUCATIONAL FILMS TO SCHOOL BOARDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is disappointing that the minister is not here to answer questions on such an important subject. The subject of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation providing educational films to school boards and universities throughout Canada is of major importance and one on which I hope the government can throw some light tonight.

There are certain problems with the present Copyright Act. First, it affects the availability of teaching and learning materials, both print and nonprint. Second, it affects the interests of teachers as participants in the production of educational material. Teachers are prohibited by the present act from fully realizing the potential of the technology available to them and to their students. Third, an example of the copyright problem is that the CBC may hire an outside company to produce an educational film; however, the company may restrict showing rights to the CBC alone and retain the copyright to sell to other institutions. In such a case the CBC is unable to authorize any province or school board to reproduce it.

Another example would be the CBC producing an educational film itself and inserting still photographs belonging to another organization. Again, the permission is limited to use by the CBC. Further difficulties arise when the CBC uses a Hollywood produced film. In a case such as this, the screen actors guild and other organizations may have a claim for unauthorized use.

The following are suggestions for amendments to the present act: (1) copying and duplicating should be allowed for, subject to suitable safeguards to protect the legitimate interests of the creator and publisher; (2) in the case of broadcast programs of an educational nature there should be recognition of the need to record them for playback within a limited period. In this situation the tape recording may be used to meet timetabling requirements without royalty payment; (3) transmission of copyright material through closed-circuit television systems should be subject to reasonable royalties and fees in terms of the specific target audience.

• (2210)

School boards and teachers have experienced distress in recent months because of current inadequacy in legislation and failure to reach agreement at the federal level. The Canadian Teachers' Federation has presented a number of briefs in this regard and I believe note should be made of some of the comments which have been made public. One is as follows:

> Since there appears to be widespread expectation that the Copyright Act will be substantially revised in the near future, CTF believes that such a revision should not be long delayed and that it is of the utmost importance that all interested parties should have the opportunity to participate in the revision . . . The brief complains that CBC program materials are being handed over to an American-dominated private company for distribution on a profit-making basis.

Here is a quotation from a statement by Mr. Wendell Sparkes, the CTF president:

> I am pleased to have a strong mandate to secure the full and free use in Canadian schools of educational programs developed with the support of public moneys . . . We will present our views regarding the difficulties being experienced with video taping of school telecasts for viewing at a more convenient time because of the present copyright laws as well as certain contractual arrangements at the CBC.

At this point I believe I should bring to light the objections raised by educationalists that though the CBC can obtain complete distribution rights for schools, its commercial outlet, Visual Education Centre, Inc., charges the full commercial rates. An example of this is the handling of the film on smoking entitled "One Way to Quit," a film which I maintain should be made available to students both in high school and in university. This is only one of many possible examples.

It seems unreasonable that productions financed entirely at the expense of the Canadian public should be sold to schools at full commercial rates. The CBC argues, in support of its position, that school boards do not receive free electricity, free telephone service or free mail service from the federal government. I do not believe this is a valid objection when it comes to providing films for use in our schools.

I am in receipt of a letter from the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) informing me that the majority of CBC programs are not accessible to school boards because non-television educational rights in most programs broadcast by the corporation either cannot be acquired or do not exist. The minister stated:

> This leaves, of course, a number of other programs produced by or for the CBC which may have some value for further use in the classroom. Included among these are the school broadcasts produced in co-operation with the Council of Ministers of Education and with provincial departments of education. CBC has been giving this program serious study over the past several months. This includes a detailed review of the cost and implications of releasing programs, where possible, for school and other uses, the suitability and adaptability of collective agreements with the talent unions, the possible impact on CBC administration and on the private non-theatrical film production and distribution industries.

The minister further stated:

The CBC is conscious of the desirability of making an early statement on the matter of providing some programs for use in schools.

In closing, let me say this. I feel many newscasts could be made more readily available. At present they can only be shown once. Series about certain countries cannot be reshown. Surely no royalties have to be paid to CBC announcers, or animals appearing in films.

The government and the CBC have had more than a reasonable amount of time in which to provide solutions to these problems. Answers are long overdue. School boards, school trustees, teachers, university administrators and members of parliament in all parties have patiently waited for some action to be taken by the minister. It is the hope of thousands of citizens across this nation that the hon. gentleman will provide a positive and firm commitment tonight with respect to providing educational and other films to our educational institutions.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wish to tell my hon. friend that I understand and share his concern for this important matter, but I would also like to say that our delay in giving an answer is not directly attributable to the Secretary of State Department. As stated in a letter sent to him by the Secretary of State Department which is responsible for the policy of the CTC, it is impossible to grant this request because of the copyrights involved.

I do not want to repeat what my hon. friend said by quoting from the letter which was addressed to him. I would simply like to read the following:

[English]

As you may be aware, the CBC, like most other broadcasters, actually owns outright very few of its productions. In nearly every case some other company or individual owns or controls elements in these programs produced by the CBC or acquired by them for broadcast purposes. The copyright to such programs is generally retained by the production company or creative artist—writer or film maker, for example.

However, this leaves a number of other programs produced by or for the CBC that may have some value for further use in the classroom. Included among these are the school broadcasts produced in co-operation with the Council of Ministers of Education and with provincial departments of education. The CBC has been giving this problem serious study over the past several months. This includes a detailed review of the cost and implications of releasing programs, where possible, for school and other use, the suitability and adaptability of collective agreements with talent unions, the possible impact on CBC administration and on the private nontheatrical film production and distribution industries.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would merely like to say to my hon. friend that I undertake to draw the minister's attention to the representations he made this evening and I hope we will get an answer which is not long in coming. I agree with him that an answer should be given without delay and I shall convey the message to the minister asking him to take quick and effective action.

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE—APPEAL AGAINST DECISION CONDEMNING RED CIRCLING—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF PRACTICE AND APPROPRIATE LEGISLATION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on September 18 of this year, as reported at page 6672 of Hansard, I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) whether the government was considering appealing the decision of Professor Abbott in which he condemned the practice of red circling in the well known Morency case. It was asked in the hope that the Government of Canada would see just what hardship this practice has brought about and that the government would at the same time put an end to it once and for all. My hopes were in vain, but in view of this government's record I ought not to have been surprised that it would do nothing in this particular case. In fact, a few days ago an announcement was made that the appeal was being launched. I regret the decision and that action and the attitude toward the public service which is evidenced by it.

I asked the question and I asked for this debate because I know of no practice in the public service that is more contrary to the principle of the merit system. There is no doubt that Professor Abbott's decision is a benchmark on the road to real justice for public servants, and as such it ought to have been allowed to stand. I will make no comment on whether or not the appeal launched by the government has any status in law because of delay, for that may well be a matter of law to be argued before the next tribunal and possibly before the courts. But that consideration ought not to detract from the importance of the decision in the working life of public servants.

● (2220)

Aside from the moral issue involved—and in my submission the balance in respect of the moral issue is on the side of the public servant—it is my contention that the process of red circling is unlawful, and this view is strengthened by the judgment of Professor Abbott. The Public Service Alliance of Canada has argued consistently, with great force, that an employee can be demoted only if it is shown that he is very incompetent or incapable. There is no authority in law for demotion on any other basis.

In this case the employer took the view that it had the unqualified right to classify and reclassify jobs or add or detract from duties, and when reclassification is to a lower level the employer also had the right to place the employee concerned in a holding scale of rates. The employer also took the position that when the salary of a CR-4 reached Mr. Morency's CR-5 salary, the employer had the right to demote Mr. Morency from CR-5 to CR-4 for no reason other than the fact that his position had been reclassified downward as a result of departmental reorganization.

There is no argument that the government or the employer has the right to reclassify. I do not think there is any argument that the government has the right to change the duties assigned to any person if it chooses to do so, at least as the law stands now. However, I want to quote from the brief filed by the PSAC in respect of the position taken by the government as follows:

> What we do not agree with is that an employee can be deprived of any further salary increases because the employer has exercised its right to downgrade the level of the position which he encumbers. If the employer was right, if it can forestall any salary increase simply by reducing the level of positions in the public service, then collective bargaining would be a nullity. If we obtained through arbitration a salary increase for the CR group which was higher than that which the employer wished to pay, all the employer would have to do is reclassify all CR positions downward by one grade and then, rather than gaining any increases in salary, all employees in the group would be red circled and eventually demoted. Just to state that proposition is sufficient. It is obviously ridiculous.

To that I should like to add that it is patently unjust. Then the brief went on to deal with another matter, and it said this:

> Under section 10 of the Employment Act, the law requires that all "appointments to or from within the public service shall be based on selection according to merit, as determined by the commission . . ."

Mr. Speaker, the actions of the government from the beginning of the Morency case flew in the face of the merit principle. The Abbott judgment states that the principle of justice cannot be ignored. The government ought to reconsider its position, admit it has been wrong and avoid further delay through this costly appeal procedure in the face of a good judgment, the cost of the delay and the many public servants affected by the judgment.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with some interest to the hon. member's rhetoric. I almost said "oratory," but "rhetoric" is a much better term. The hon. gentleman said that red circling is the equivalent of demotion, and that the Public Service Act contemplates a formal procedure for demotion which can be carried out only on the grounds of incompetence or other specific reasons. I would point out that his understanding of the process known as red circling must be imperfect if he attributes any method of demotion to red circling. In fact he has said—and I quote from the brief of his informant—that the government has and must continue to have the right to reassign duties and reclassify jobs, not people, in the public service. This it does.

In the process of reorganization, or reclassification and of the reassignment of duties there will be occasions in which the nature of the duties of a man or woman has changed, perhaps in the sense of becoming less onerous and less responsible, in which case that particular job will carry a lower classification on review than it did previously when the duties were different. When this happens, rather than impose a financial penalty on the public servant, provision is made that he will continue at his existing salary for his old classification or his or her old grade and will continue to get the normal annual increases provided for that salary range. However, he or she will not get the negotiated changes for the old classification which is no longer appropriate, but there will be no loss or diminution of salary, and in this sense no demotion. The job has been changed and perhaps it has been downgraded.

The hon. gentleman acknowledged the right of the government to redistribute duties. The civil servant has not been demoted; he continues to enjoy the same salary, and I am glad to say that the concern of the department and of the Public Service Commission has been to endeavour assiduously to find elsewhere appropriate work carrying the man's original classification. It is only in cases where it is not possible to effect a transfer to the original classification, or in some cases where the individual does not wish to move, that the red circling process comes into operation.

Given the right of the government in the execution of its duties to the taxpayers to reorganize departments, to reclassify positions, I consider this, rather than being unjust to be a very fair and very just system to ensure that those who are overtaken by changes in operational functions do not suffer financial penalty.

I should point out in closing that the converse of red circling is green circling. No one complains that when the nature of a job has been changed and its classification is discovered to be too low, there is no hesitancy or unwillingness on the part of either the government or the employee to raise the remuneration for that position.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to be adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.31 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 16, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON CANADIAN POSITION AT INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON CONTROL OF POLLUTION FROM SHIPS

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as most hon. members know, an international conference aimed at the elimination of pollution from ships is now under way in London, England. I would like, briefly, to outline the stand that Canada is taking at this United Nations sponsored conference and to describe some of the principles we would like to see incorporated in a convention which will be binding on flag states and coastal states alike.

Modern society depends, to an increasing extent, on ocean transport of oil and other cargoes. Mobility is important, but so is the preservation of our marine environment. We must, therefore, see to it that vessels carrying substances which are harmful to marine life or which can reduce the value of ocean-front property must be built and operated in a safe and sensible way.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that the world's ocean shipping can meet these requirements without incurring exceptional costs. New ships can be built and operated with a greater margin of safety without adding more than a few percentage points to the over-all cost involved in moving goods from one port to another.

An international convention which will not only preserve mobility on the world's oceans but also protect our marine environment has four major attributes: it must be universal in its application; it must include strict standards for the construction and operation of ships; it must be enforceable; and it must be capable of amendment so as to take into account the latest advances in maritime technology.

Construction standards are very important. Canada supports the resolution, for example, that all tankers built after January 1, 1975, should include provision for segregated ballast and double hulls wherever possible. Hon. members should bear in mind that most of the large oil tankers needed during the rest of this century will be built between now and 1985. Hence our concern about the implementation of new construction standards at the earliest possible date.

We believe that the existing convention dealing with pollution from ships should be expanded to cover all suffocating and toxic substances. It should include light oils as well as heavy oils, "white" oils as well as "black" oils. Our research indicates that the more highly processed petroleum products are often more poisonous than crude oil. This is why we want to see them included in the new rules dealing with pollution from ships.

Our experience with the 1954 convention shows us that exclusive reliance on enforcement by ship owning or flag states simply does not work. If the new convention is to have teeth, it must prevent pollution everywhere. It must prevent violations of the convention wherever they occur. It must enable us to apprehend the offending vessel as soon as it enters the port of any nation which is a signatory to the convention.

This idea is now being referred to as the "port state" concept. Canada is its author. The United States now supports us. We are hopeful that most other countries attending the IMCO Conference in London will endorse its inclusion in the convention as well.

Evidence of a wilful discharge or spill has been hard to collect. We are, therefore, urging that the old "parts per million" stipulation in the 1954 convention be abandoned. In our opinion, it should be replaced by an evidentiary rule whereby the word of a responsible officer will be regarded as sufficient to secure a conviction. Sighting of a sheen of oil on water will be enough. Sworn evidence to this effect will constitute proof of a violation unless probative evidence is presented to the contrary.

A prosecution, following our reasoning, would then take place as soon as the offending vessel entered the port of any signatory country and at any time within three years of the violation having been apprehended anywhere in the world.

We also believe that compulsory arbitration is necessary in order to ensure that all states fulfil their obligations under the new convention, thereby guarding against arbitrary or unjust enforcement actions.

I referred earlier, Mr. Speaker, to the universal application of the convention. It will set a basic standard for all shipping everywhere in the world. This is not to say, however, that two nations or a group of neighbouring nations could not set even higher standards in waters washing their shores. We could set higher standards in the Strait of Juan de Fuca on Canada's west coast, for example. We could do the same in the Bay of Fundy as the result of another joint agreement with the United States.

Incidentally, this provision will also help us to gain international recognition for our Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to report that, in respect of most of these matters, we are in general agreement with the United States. Where we differ is in respect of warships, which the United States wishes to have exempted from the convention, and in respect of the distance seaward in which unilateral or one-nation enforcement of the convention would be operative. The United States, unlike Canada, wants to limit this provision in the convention to the territorial sea, which, in its case, is three miles. We would like to see unilateral provisions extended seaward to include all the waters which fall under the jurisdiction of the coastal state. This would, of course, include our more extensive fisheries zones.

● (1410)

Mr. John Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in rising to answer the Minister of the Environment I wish to say that as far as the objectives set out by the minister are concerned the government has the unqualified support of the party to which I belong and we wish every success to our delegation at the conference.

We are especially cognizant of the fact that some international control must be exercised over ships plying the high seas as well as coastal waters. For far too long certain states have taken the position that it is somehow an infringement of their right to the high seas to be regulated in any way. I can assure the minister he has the support of this party in pressing as vigorously as possible the Canadian position that warships should not be exempt in any way from the terms of the convention and also that the areas of control contiguous to the coastal states should be allowed to extend beyond the traditional three miles.

There is, however, one aspect which I think it proper that hon. members should consider and which is notable by its absence from the minister's statement. We who come from the west coast have seen recently in Vancouver harbour the results of a relatively minor oil spill and the difficulty, even when supplies and equipment were close at hand, of effectively combatting the consequences of that spill by containment and clean-up. There is nothing in the minister's statement to indicate he is pressing for certain other measures which are also of importance. The first concerns international navigation standards. I ask the minister to consider seriously whether or not we should also be pressing for improvement in this direction. After all, if a ship collides with another it is probable there will be oil spillage no matter how much pains are taken in the construction of the ship.

There is another omission from the minister's statement. He says nothing about pressing for international co-operation in efforts to contain and clean up oil spills. It is one thing to talk about compensation, but compensation brings little comfort if containment and clean up do not take place immediately. In this regard, at least in some situations, international co-operation is necessary.

The minister spoke of wilful discharge. Although it does not seem to be absolutely clear, I hope that wilful discharge on the high seas will be covered by the convention because danger lies as much in that area as in coastal waters.

I repeat that the government delegation has the complete support of this party. I trust account will be taken by its members of the several items I have mentioned as being worthy of consideration.

Lastly, I wish to say that if Canada is to have any moral force in pressing such terms on the conference we must ensure that we are consistent within our own boundaries and in our own coastal waters with respect to the way in which we view and treat the transport of oil by sea. I refer to criticism implying that our position with respect to tankers on the west coast is inconsistent with our lack of position with regard to the passage of tankers on the east coast.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, before the minister left Canada to attend the IMCO conference in London the newspapers were devoid of any reference by him to the position Canada intended to take at that conference. This prompted me, about a week and a half ago, to express the opinion that Canada would take a neutral position at that conference, in other words, that it would have no definite stand to present. That prompted the minister to reply to me in the press in his usual fashion and thus completely confuse the issue. But at least it did result in the minister saying something, and we are pleased that he has today finally got to the stage of taking the Canadian public into his confidence and telling the House what position Canada is trying for at the IMCO conference in London. In respect of those matters that he outlined in his statement today, we wish him and the Canadian delegation well and hope for an international convention of a sufficiently high standard that it will assist Canada in preserving its coasts from oil spills.

There are two ways in which a nation can deal with this problem. One is unilaterally; the other is by way of an agreement or convention, in other words, multilaterally by agreement with several nations. We must never lose sight of the fact that so far as Canada is concerned the protection of our land is the most important and the prime consideration that should always underline the position the Canadian government takes at any conference of this nature.

Oil spills can cause and have caused immeasurable damage to our land and our marine resources as well as to life itself in this land. That is why we must first protect our own interests. If we cannot reach a multilateral agreement, or if the convention that comes out of the conference is not of a sufficiently high standard to preserve and protect Canada's interests, then Canada must be prepared to act unilaterally without regard for what is developed by the conference.

There is ample precedent for taking unilateral action. A few years ago this parliament passed the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act. Incidentally, the minister did not use the correct name for the act in his announcement, but that is par for the course for this minister. This unilateral action has been classified, and we agree, as the finest, most stringent piece of oil pollution prevention legislation anywhere in the world. The act applies to the Arctic and to waters extending 100 nautical miles beyond the Arctic archipelago. I wish it applied to the east and west coasts as well because this would go a great way toward preserving and protecting our land from the difficulties that could arise from further oil spills, whether on the high seas or close to land.

The minister should not wonder about the requirement for unilateral action to extend whatever legislation Canada wants to pass respecting oil pollution control in so far as our territorial seas and fishing zones are concerned. I say to the minister sincerely and directly that the opportunity rests in our hands as the Parliament of Canada to declare that we will preserve our territorial seas and fishing zones and protect them from pollution.

Any convention arrived at by the IMCO conference will not be of the high standard we would like it to be because it will be the subject of negotiations between some 90 countries that are attending the conference. Each will have a little different view and each country will seek to give a little in order to get a convention that embraces everybody's point of view. As a consequence the standard undoubtedly will not be as high as we in this nation would like to see. There is no question about our jurisdiction to extend to the edge of our fishing zones and territorial seas legislation dealing with oil pollution control. We should be preparing to do that in any event regardless of the conference.

● (1420)

If a convention does come out of this conference it will have no value whatever in regard to the Cherry Point situation in the state of Washington, just 15 miles or so beyond the border of British Columbia. It is in the United States, on its land, and no convention that I can conceive of this conference developing will have any effect whatever with respect to the kind of situation that arose at Cherry Point a couple of years ago. At that time a tanker was at the dock and oil was being pumped from the ship. A coupling broke, resulting in the flooding of beaches in British Columbia with oil. That is something not conceived of in this statement and I do not think it can be dealt with by a convention at the IMCO conference.

I hope a convention is developed and that it is of a sufficiently high standard. However, I think Canada must be prepared to act unilaterally if the standards arrived at in the convention are not high enough for Canada to accept.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on the statement of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis).

Our party welcomes his statement; we congratulate him for it. This statement shows the intention of the government to act in a more effective and more appropriate way in the field of tanker construction, in the field of highly commercial maritime transportation and in that of preservation of our environment. We want to congratulate the minister for that.

Mr. Speaker, having said this, I would like to draw his attention on the need for taking a logical and constant attitude; inasmuch as he—and I know he is sincere—defends and will defend the policy that he has announced today, by the same token the government ought to be aware of the importance of preserving the environment on the St. Lawrence. My riding, like those of several of my colleagues, stretches out along the St. Lawrence south shore where maritime transportation is carried out in a very well organized fashion. But properties along the shores are greatly damaged.

A very old government policy concerning retaining walls and riparian land is now applied and it is completelv outmoded, therefore the Quebecker who invested along the St. Lawrence is discouraged. The St. Lawrence constitutes extraordinary resources, although it is polluted at this time and fishing has become impossible. Mr. Speaker, the Public Works Department policy is nevertheless totally inadequate and does not meet the needs as regards construction of retaining walls along shores.

Moreover, the standards on shipping on the St. Lawrence river are also inadequate. Mr. Speaker, government experts feel that when a ship is sailing further than a given distance from the shore, she causes no damage. The government is not assuming the responsibility for damages caused by the tide.

Now, Mr. Speaker, riparian owners are penalized since they cannot use the river for commercial purposes. They are left with nothing to do but watch boats go by and, still worse, they see their properties damaged.

Therefore, I strongly urge the Minister of Environment (Mr. Davis) who seems to be aware of the pollution problems and of the environment protection to make the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Dubé) mindful of it in order to bring standards up to date, to revise the protection policy applying to the two shores along the St. Lawrence and to really develop an unparalleled wealth in Canada, namely the St. Lawrence, and finally to prevent Canadians from being penalized by sea transport and to allow them to benefit from it.

Mr. Lawrence: There is also Lake Ontario.

* * *

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROVISION FOR DEBATE ON ARAB-ISRAELI WAR

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as we all recall, yesterday there was a desire expressed to have a debate on the Middle East situation. In the meantime, consultations have been held among the parties. If it is agreed generally by the House, we would recommend that a special order be made to debate the Middle East situation beginning at eight o'clock tonight under a motion to adjourn the House. The arrangement suggested is that the lead-off speaker for each party be allowed 20 minutes and that subsequent speakers be allowed 15 minutes, with the terminal time for the debate being 10.30 p.m. That is the agreement that has been reached as I understood the discussions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, we are satisfied that the initiative of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) yesterday has brought about this special debate tonight and we agree to the terms of debate as suggested.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the terms suggested are terms with which we agree.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, we subscribed to the unanimous agreement to a special debate on the problems of the Middle East, and our party is ready to participate actively in it.

The Senate

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion made by the President of the Privy Council. Is it agreed and so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

BROADCASTING

ADVERTISING ON CHILDREN'S PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move a motion under Standing Order 43. I do so because of the failure of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission to implement the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, as concurred in by the House of Commons on July 24, 1973, in connection with the examination of the subject matter of Bill C-22, an act to amend the Broadcasting Act, advertising on children's programs, and in view of the commission's position as outlined in a public statement dated October 16, 1973. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), the chairman of the broadcasting committee:

That the public announcement by the CRTC dated October 16, 1973, be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East. This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

* * *

THE SENATE

PROPOSED ABOLITION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek unanimous consent of the House to move the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That this House favours abolition of the Senate in place of its recent continued use as a depository for Liberal Party faithfuls.

Mr. Speaker: This is not the first time the hon. member has proposed a motion about which the Chair has had serious doubts. I would hope the House would not feel that this motion should be put at this time under the terms of Standing Order 43.

[Mr. Fortin.]

[Translation]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

QUEBEC—DESIGNATION OF EASTERN TOWNSHIPS AS SPECIAL AREA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to seek unanimous consent of the House to discuss a very urgent matter.

In view of the extreme slowness in the economic development of the Eastern Townships, in Quebec, in view of the fact that in some parts of the Eastern Townships there is a decline in the economy instead of progress, and in view of the fact that some cities like Drummondville, Sherbrooke, Victoriaville and Granby among others do not receive the necessary encouragement from the federal government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin):

That this House consider the economic situation in the Eastern Townships area in order to design it as a special area.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. This motion, put forward under the terms of Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity; therefore the motion cannot be put.

● (1430)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE INCREASE—REQUEST FOR NEW BUDGET

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Now that it is clear that we have the worst employment rate, seasonally adjusted—

Mr. Lewis: You mean unemployment rate.

Mr. Stanfield: —the worst rate of unemployment ever associated with a year to year jump of 8½ per cent in the cost of living, is the Minister of Finance now prepared to reconsider the answer he gave yesterday and present a budget to the House?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. While the actual unemployment rate in September of 4.6 per cent was virtually unchanged since last month, I say frankly to the House that the seasonally adjusted figures are startling, disconcerting and very difficult to reconcile with the very strong expansion of the economy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Is the Minister of Finance now prepared to concede that there has been in recent months, and particularly during the past month, an upward trend in the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment, and despite the confusion he has expressed this afternoon what does he propose to do about this?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): All the evidence indicates—and I think members of parliament from all sides of the House returning from their constituencies will bear this out—that the economy is currently operating at nearly full or full capacity. The factors limiting growth are the now widespread shortages of materials and many types of equipment in many parts of the country, and shortages of skilled and unskilled workers in many industries and many regions. I think the House is entitled to look at the fact that over the first nine months of this year there has been an increase in new jobs involving the employment of 417,000 men and women, which is the strongest increase in employment in the history of this country.

Mr. Stanfield: I thought the minister would go through that old song and dance about the strong rate of growth in the early part of the year.

Mr. Hees: And the land is strong—don't forget that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Would the minister concede now that there is an upward trend in the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment in Canada today and in recent months, and do his economic indicators forecast to him that this is going to change, that the trend will be downward to, say, about 5 per cent by the end of the year? Is this what the minister is telling us or, on the other hand, is he simply indicating to us that he does not know what to do in the present circumstances?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The indicators still are that the real growth in this country will be 7 per cent, as I indicated to the House on February 19, that this will produce a very strong growth in jobs, that the figures published today indicate that unemployment is highly concentrated among young people.

Mr. Hees: You don't care much about that.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In seasonally adjusted terms, the movement of young people out of the labour force back into schools is something that we have to look into very seriously. In raw, unadjusted terms, the unemployment for men in this country over 25 is 2.9 per cent and for women 3.4 per cent.

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE INCREASE—REQUEST THAT FUNDS FOR WINTER CAPITAL PROJECTS BE INCREASED

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, whatever other indicators the Minister of Finance may console himself with—

Mr. Diefenbaker: You will still be voting for him.

Mr. Lewis: —the fact is that the unemployment rate has gone up. Since the rate has been going up and in view of the danger that unemployment may reach an even higher level during the winter months, will the minister act to increase the funds for winter capital projects so that there may actually be more work created through making available to provinces and municipalities the necessary amounts of money to carry out these works?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have said to the House that the underlying strength of the economy, as we see it, is there, that there is already in play $100 million in LIP projects and there is still available under the three year winter capital works projects program an amount still unexhausted of $275 million. I said to the hon. gentleman that the strength of the economy is there and that it is absorbing new workers into the labour force at a record rate. I want to say also to him that I take no consolation from the seasonally adjusted figures published this morning. I said they were startling and disconcerting, and I know what they mean in human terms.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Arising out of the minister's answer, may I try to put the question this way. In view of the fact the information he has given us clearly underlines that private industrial expansion is not producing the jobs necessary to absorb the unemployed, probably because of modern automation and computerization, and in view of the fact that jobs can only be created through investment by governments at the federal, provincial and municipal levels, may I ask him whether he will, in a budget or in some other way, increase the amounts spent by governments in creating jobs, the only way in which jobs can be created?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Of course, direct governmental intervention is always under review. I have said to the House and to the hon. gentleman that the evidence seems to be apparent right across the country that there is a widespread shortage of labour in many regions and in many industries, both skilled and unskilled. But, as I say, we are always reviewing direct government intervention in the economy.

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE INCREASE—EFFICACY OF MANPOWER CENTRES IN PLACING PEOPLE IN JOBS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister's answer to my second question brings me directly to a supplementary which I want to address, with your permission, Sir, to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the results of a survey made by the Ontario Department of Labour and other information showing that only about 11.5 per cent of those who find jobs find them through the manpower centres, and in view also of the information that a very small proportion of available jobs is registered with the manpower centres, which may explain the inability to match available jobs with unemployed people, may I ask the minister what steps he is going to take to make his department effective so that the Canadian unemployed may get some benefit from the hundreds of millions of dollars spent on the Canadian Manpower Centres?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would dispute the figure of 11 per cent noted by the hon. member. Off the top of my head, Mr. Speaker, I believe about 30 per cent go through Canada Manpower. That is not to say that, as the minister responsible, I am satisfied with the performance. In fact, we are now moving into what I consider a breakthrough by establishing, based on the pilot project in Ottawa-Hull and the pilot project in Hamilton, the results of which are very encouraging, job information centres across the country which I think will give the country a far more effective program. I share the hon. member's view that there is still much to be done.

● (1440)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Richmond wish to ask a supplementary?

Mr. Beaudoin: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I shall recognize the hon. member in a moment after having heard a few other supplementaries on this subject.

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE INCREASE—GOVERNMENT INTENTION RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF PRODUCTION INCENTIVES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. As neither inflation nor unemployment will be improved until national production is materially increased, is it the intention of the government to introduce in the near future production incentives aimed at inducing the additional production that is necessary and, if so, when may we expect to have these production incentives introduced?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I read with great interest the hon. gentleman's speech that he made on the west coast.

Mr. Nielsen: You might learn something.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I always learn something from the hon. member. I would like to remind him that as a result of the corporate tax measures passed by the House investment intentions by business in equipment, materials and plant has risen 19 per cent over last year, which indicates a tremendous increase in productive capacity.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as the minister obviously did not make any attempt to answer my question I might ask him this: is it the intention of the government to require the country to put up with the same policies the government has introduced in the past, which have landed the country in the horrible economic mess it is in today?

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. A question asked in those terms is irregular. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Richmond and then return to the hon. member for St. John's East and others who have supplementaries on this subject.

* * *

[Translation]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

QUEBEC—NEGOTIATION OF NEW PLAN TO REPLACE DESIGNATED AREAS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, but in his absence I should like to get an answer, if possible, from the Minister of Finance.

I have already asked the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion if he thought that the Sherbrooke area should be considered a designated area. He replied that there would no longer be designated areas in the future and that, with his counterpart or the Minister of Finance in Quebec, he was thinking of developing a new format. I would like to know if this format has been developed and when it will be announced to replace the special zones.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I understand that there is a certain excitement concerning the designation of Sherbrooke as a special area. Under the circumstances, it seems that everybody is talking about it in the Sherbrooke area. I merely wish to say to the hon. member that the definition of special areas will be an issue greatly discussed in the future between the federal government and the various provincial governments. If an answer was to be given in the near future, it would come from the provincial government following some consultation with the federal government.

* * *

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

EMPLOYMENT—POSITION OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND COMPARED WITH 1972

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. If the employment situation in Canada has improved to the extent that the Minister of Finance claims, may I ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration if he can explain to the House why the unemployment insurance fund is worse off now than it was in 1972?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be making a statement on this in more detail at a later time, but I would point out to the hon. member that there are many forces at work which are involved in that situation, not the least of which is the maturation of the maternity benefits and the special benefits, the fact that the act itself calls for an increase in the eligible income, and the fact that the average weekly benefit has gone up by virtue of that from $62 to $68 a week—

Mr. Hees: Don't forget the weather.

Mr. Andras: We can use the weather if you want.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. Hon. members will note that there are a number of members seeking to ask supplementaries on this subject. I am not sure if this is what hon. members want because, if it were so, we could spend most of the question period on this important matter. The hon. member for St. John's East has a further supplementary and he will be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask the minister what immediate steps he is taking to protect the unemployment insurance fund and to beef up the fund?

Mr. Andras: As I say, Mr. Speaker, I will be making a more detailed presentation to the House at some reasonably close date, but the fact of the matter is that I have already indicated publicly and in the House that a major re-organization of the Unemployment Insurance Commission operation is under way. Those details are available to hon. members.

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE INCREASE—DEPARTMENTAL ESTIMATE FOR BALANCE OF YEAR

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Given the fact that the labour force has declined in size and we have had a seasonal increase in unemployment, given the fact that the growth in the economy recorded so far this year was in the first quarter, and given the fact that obviously in making economic policy we have to look to the future, can the minister tell us what prediction or estimate of unemployment the Department of Finance is operating on for the balance of this year?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are operating on a prediction of a real growth of 7 per cent and of 300,000 new jobs, as I said in my budget speech, and that will probably be well exceeded.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, the point of the question is that all the growth in the Canadian economy that the Minister of Finance is talking about now took place in the first quarter of the year. The second quarter figures showed no growth at all. Surely if we are going to have a decline in unemployment we should have action—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member would now like to ask a question so that we may proceed.

Mr. Gillies: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is simply this: given the forecast that the Minister of Finance has made of inflation for next year with his indexing figure, what forecast of unemployment is the Department of Finance operating on in making decisions with respect to fiscal and monetary policies for the balance of this year?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have never made a prediction, in this House or elsewhere, of unemployment figures. I have not done so either inside or outside the House because of the variables in the strength of the economy, the movement of the labour force, the participation rate, those entering and leaving the labour force.

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE INCREASE—SUGGESTED ABOLITION OF CORPORATE TAX CUTS AND TRANSFER OF REDUCTIONS TO INDIVIDUALS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the corporate tax cut incentives obviously have not lowered the unemployment rate, can the minister say whether or not he is considering terminating them and using that half a billion dollars for tax cuts for ordinary citizens, thus stimulating their purchasing power, or providing the money to Crown corporations to invest in labour-intensive industries?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman ought to recall that the purpose of the corporate tax cuts was to strengthen and expand the productive capacity of the economy and to increase, in the medium and long-term factors, the ability of the Canadian economy to compete abroad. He also ought to recall the figure I gave the House earlier, that the strength of the economy is measured in 417,000 new jobs for men and women brought into the labour force this year.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that in the House today the minister referred to the great industrial corporations and the expansion of their production and so on but did not refer to how many jobs the corporate tax cuts have created, can he say definitely how many jobs those tax cuts have created?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would hope, by the time I bring in an interim report to the House on the effect of the corporate tax reductions at the end of March, that there will be far better information available than we have now.

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE INCREASE—REQUEST FOR NEW BUDGET

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of Finance is startled and disconcerted by today's unemployment rate but not startled and disconcerted enough to take the House into his confidence and tell us on what figures the government's expansion plans are based, leaving aside the unemployment figures, could he tell us, in respect of the inflationary rate from which we are all suffering, how he juggles the figure of 6.6 per cent as contained in the tax credit index today—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not sure that a question asked in these terms is in order. Perhaps the hon. member might like to rephrase his question.

Mr. Lawrence: My question is simply this, and it goes back to the first question asked today: will the minister please reconsider his adamant stand not to introduce a budget, in view of the soaring inflation and unemployment rate in Canada today? It is as simple as that.

● (1450)

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE INCREASE—UTILIZATION OF SPECIAL INVESTMENT PROGRAM BY QUEBEC MUNICIPALITIES—PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATION

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance who announced several months ago a special investment program for municipalities to assist in development and creation of new jobs.

Can he say whether he received many applications from the province of Quebec in view of the fact that it is one of the hardest hit provinces in Canada as far as unemployment is concerned? If so, did that province co-operate with the federal government in the allotment of those investment funds?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of co-operation and co-ordination between the province of Quebec and the federal government.

As far as specific figures go, Mr. Speaker, I would like to get them and send them to the hon. member.

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE INCREASE—ACCEPTANCE OF CERTAIN LEVEL BY GOVERNMENT IN LIGHT OF ECONOMIC EXPANSION

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

I would like to know if he will continue to go along with the Governor of the Bank of Canada that economic expansion is largely responsible for unemployment, inflation, and that a certain level of unemployment is acceptable to the government. I want to know if a rate of 6 per cent at the national level and 8 per cent in the province of Quebec is acceptable to the government at this moment.

[English]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, neither the rate of price increases nor the rate of unemployment is satisfactory to the government.

Mr. Lawrence: Then what are you doing about it?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Central Nova.

[Translation]

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we might allow the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi to ask a supplementary question, after which I will recognize the hon. member for Central Nova and then the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[Translation]

CONSULTATION WITH QUEBEC ON WINTER WORKS PROJECTS TO RELIEVE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the hon. Minister of Finance.

In view of the seriousness of the present situation, will the hon. Minister of Finance contact without delay the government of the province of Quebec to prepare definite projects to improve the situation in that province during the winter months, because of the 8 per cent unemployment rate existing in Quebec at the present time?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am in contact fairly regularly with my provincial counterpart and other ministers of the provincial government. Should any acute problems arise, there would doubtless be immediate contacts.

* * *

[English]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POLICY OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING TAILORING OF FINANCE AND TRANSPORTATION POLICIES TO ASSIST DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister in the absence of the minister responsible for DREE. In view of the steady rise of what one might call the discomfort index in the poorer regions of Canada, will the Acting Prime Minister indicate whether it is government policy now at last to tailor policies on finance and transportation, for example, to assist rather than to act in a counter-productive fashion in regional development?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not been aware of any inconsistency in the policies of the government on this score. They are all directed to improving conditions in all parts of the country, particularly, of course, where growth has not been as rapid as it has been in the centre of the country.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of his earlier answer which indicated that in his opinion unemployment is concentrated mainly among the unemployed, is he now prepared to indicate that he will voluntarily make some adaptations in his policy to complement the policies of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will want to read that question very carefully in Hansard. I want to tell the hon. member, however, of the very close co-operation and co-ordination between myself and my colleague.

GRAIN

FEED GRAIN—ESTABLISHMENT OF PRICES BASED ON OFF-BOARD SURVEY

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board arising out of his statement in the House on September 14. The minister stated at that time that monitoring of off-board prices for feed grain on the Prairies would be carried out by Agriculture Canada under the authority of the Agricultural Products Board and the results would then be supplied to the Wheat Board and to the Canadian Livestock Feed Board for their use in determining sale prices to purchasers. Will the minister inform the House whether the survey has been completed and if, as a result, grain prices have been established by the Canadian Wheat Board?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, a second such survey has taken place. The first survey was used to test the techniques which were being applied. The Wheat Board is in the final stages of determining the price basis upon which sales of grain will be made to users of grain throughout Canada.

Mr. Gleave: Can the minister inform the House if the present prices at which feed wheat and feed barley are being sold to feeders and feed mills in eastern and western Canada are based on the monitored prices as described in the statement of September 14, and will he tell us what those prices are for utility wheat and feed barley?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the prices in effect at the moment continue to be the so-called corn competitive prices established by the Canadian Wheat Board in line with its past practices. As I indicated in my previous answer, the first price based on off-board prices is in the final stages of being determined and will be put into effect as soon as the mechanics for that placing into effect are available.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar for a last supplementary, then the hon. member for Lisgar who has a supplementary, and then the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a further supplementary question. I must assume that off-board prices are not the base, as he said. Is grain being sold within Wheat Board designated areas at non-board grain prices in western Canada as well as in eastern Canada and British Columbia?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the Wheat Board is continuing its practice of using its Thunder Bay price base for the sale of grain into eastern Canada and western Canada. That practice, which is long established, is continuing.

WHEAT AND BARLEY—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN INITIAL PRICES

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Since the Wheat Board has stated that it expects the final payment for wheat will be $4.92 and it is now paying an initial price of $2.25, may I ask the minister whether the government is going to increase the initial price for all grades of wheat and barley delivered to the Wheat Board and, if so, when does it intend to do so?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, consideration is not being given to a further change in the initial prices, which were changed, I should remind hon. members, on July 31, having been originally set for the year in March. However, there is provision in the Wheat Board Act for the Canadian Wheat Board at some point to recommend that an interim payment be made. There is significant pressure from farmers on the board to withhold such recommendation until January 1 so that any such payment may fall into the new tax year rather than the present tax year.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE INCREASE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance who has conceded that he is startled by the upward movement in the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate, particularly this month and in recent months as well. He has refused to present a budget. Will he give the House the assurance that he proposes to do something about this? Can he assure the House that at the beginning of next week he will present the House with a statement incorporating some positive measures that he intends to take to offset this upward trend in unemployment inasmuch as he had all along expected unemployment to fall off during the year as a result of his budget measures?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in absolute terms unemployment is down over a point since this time last year. In terms of new jobs this reveals an economy expanding at close to capacity. I want to say to the hon. gentleman that if the indicators were to change in such a way as to justify further expansionary measures, of course I would consider them. At the moment the economy is expanding at a close to capacity rate.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, since the minister will give me no assurance regarding the statement for which I have asked, will he give us a statement showing how he has managed to accomplish achieving a rate of inflation of 8½ per cent associated with a seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment of 6 per cent?

Oral Questions

MANPOWER

ALLEGED AWARDING OF CONTRACTS TO TWO TORONTO PRIVATE PLACEMENT COMPANIES TO HIRE EMPLOYEES FOR FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the high unemployment rate and in view of the fact that the federal Department of Supply and Services recently awarded two contracts to two private placement companies in Toronto to hire employees for the federal government, may I ask the minister why it was necessary to spend taxpayers' dollars on such a venture and, second, why these people were not sought through the manpower offices which come under his direction?

● (1500)

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will take note of the hon. member's representations and look into them. I would be surprised to find that the facts are exactly as stated, but I will dig into them.

* * *

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

QUEBEC—POSSIBILITY OF CONFERENCE WITH PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT ON PROSPECTS

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the recent unemployment figures, particularly affecting the maritime provinces and Quebec, is the government prepared, following the Quebec election, to hold a Quebec-Ottawa conference on Quebec economic outlook and more precisely on the future of young people on the labour market?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I will take into consideration the hon. member's representation. I must say that I am in almost constant communication with my Quebec counterpart and that we have projected a federal-provincial meeting for early next year.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary. At the time of the federal-provincial conference after October 29, would the government be prepared to have the opposition parties, both federal and provincial and the intermediate bodies directly involved, participating in this conference?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, one of the difficulties is that we have never been able to obtain the provincial governments' consent.

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE CHANGE IN POLICY ON FOREIGN AID—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the minister indicated he had pledged on behalf of Canada some $274.5 million to the World Bank Development Fund. In view of the fact the total of Canada's cash foreign aid was some $475 million last year, will the minister or his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, indicate if there is a shift in the policy of Canada with regard to foreign aid and the concentration will now be more on a general fund rather than Canada deciding for itself which individual countries it will assist?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this amount of $274.5 million for the replenishment of the International Development Association under the World Bank is payable over three years. Our proportion is 6.1 per cent of the total replenishment of $4.5 billion. Our contribution over the past three years was 6.26 per cent, so there is virtually no change in our contribution.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Is there a change of policy so that a greater proportion of Canada's foreign aid will be concentrated toward a general agency such as the World Bank Development Fund rather than Canada dealing with countries individually on a one-to-one basis?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, possibly I might be given an opportunity to comment on this question. For a number of years Canada has had a policy of increasing the proportion of its aid to international organizations with a target in mind of about 25 per cent. The decision that was made in Nairobi on the contribution to the IDA was in line with that target.

* * *

TRANSPORT

THUNDER BAY—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT OF SLOW MOVEMENT OF GRAIN CARS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. It has to do with the fact that the Thunder Bay area reports a low movement of grain to elevators there. There are 5,000 cars arriving weekly whereas the elevators could easily handle 9,000 cars. As a result of the reduction in the number that could be handled there have been layoffs. In view of the fact the season for shipment out of Thunder Bay continues only through November and part of December, will the minister at once get in touch with the railway companies and impress on them the necessity of supplying the necessary cars so there will be full employment at Thunder Bay and at the same time western wheat will be moving to market?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will immediately inquire into this situation and see whether something can be done at this time. I recognize it is late in the season and that we should do our utmost to have full employment and ship the grain.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In order that we will have full information, will the minister get in touch with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who received full information from the Thunder Bay and District Labour Council last week? If there is a little communication, it may help.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I wish to assure the right hon. member that that communique has been conveyed to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it was impossible to hear what the Minister of Manpower and Immigration was saying.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No one would want to miss such words of wisdom.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SHORTAGE OF BOXCARS FOR SHIPMENT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA LUMBER

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport with regard to the allocation of boxcars. Is the minister aware of the situation in north central British Columbia where there is a shortage of approximately 2,000 boxcars for lumber shipment, the result of which is increasing unemployment in sawmills and the logging section of the industry, all because CNR is unable to supply the required number of boxcars to move the lumber out of that area.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the situation is the same for the British Columbia Railway which is owned by the British Columbia government. Because of the strike there are shortages everywhere. Attempts are being made to supply as many boxcars as possible. There is a shortage at the present time. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I bring to the attention of hon. members that there are just three or four minutes before the end of the question period. The hon. member for Skeena might ask one supplementary, after which I will recognize the hon. member for Rimouski and try to have two or three other questions before the end of the question period.

Mr. Howard: Is the minister aware the British Columbia Railway took action earlier this spring to acquire a number of boxcars and CN has been sitting on its ass doing nothing?

[Translation]

HOUSING

AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC ON USE OF NATIONAL HOUSING ACT PROGRAMS

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for housing.

Following the adoption of Bill C-133 and in view of the fact that winter time is closing in and that the municipalities have projects to be implemented, can the minister tell the House whether the negotiations with the Quebec government are completed? If so, is the minister prepared to make a statement in the House to indicate the contents of this agreement?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is an agreement between the government of Canada, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the province of Quebec for the use of National Housing Act programs within the province of Quebec. That agreement is in operation and is working.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF BENEFITS ON INCENTIVE TO WORK

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. in view of the fact the average weekly benefits paid by the Unemployment Insurance Commission have risen by 13 per cent from July, 1972, to July, 1973, and for the same period the consumer price index rose 7.7 per cent, will the minister admit that the UIC scheme is providing a disincentive to work that may affect the figures recently received?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DEER LODGE HOSPITAL, WINNIPEG—EFFECT OF DELAY IN REACHING WAGE SETTLEMENT WITH NURSES ON CONDITIONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Due to the government's ten month delay in settling wage negotiations with the nursing group of the Professional Institute of the Public Service, which is causing serious economic problems for the nursing staff at Deer Lodge Veterans Hospital in Winnipeg, plus low morale, staff shortages and, the most serious aspect of the problem, decreasing nursing attention to our veterans in that hospital, will the minister order an investigation and take corrective action on the deplorable conditions which exist at Deer Lodge?

• (1510)

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): First and foremost, the question is not entirely relevant. As far as negotiations with the nurses are concerned, this matter is being looked into.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CHILE—POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF CREDIT TO MILITARY GOVERNMENT—ALLEGED DENIAL TO ALLENDE GOVERNMENT

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. The government of Canada, through the Export Development Corporation, cut off credit to Chile in October, 1972. Is it now the intention of the government to favour the present military government of Chile by renewing credit in concert with United States policy at this time?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The information upon which the hon. gentleman bases his question is quite inaccurate. During the period of the Allende government the Export Credit Corporation and other Canadian agencies extended very large credits.

[Later:]

Mr. Harney: Bearing in mind that in a committee of the House last year there was discussion about the fact that these credits had been cut off, would the minister care to table at a fairly early date the history of these credits and their allocation to Chile as well as the reconsideration which was supposed to take place in April of this year?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, maybe I could briefly give the House two or three facts which would help to dispel the sort of misinformation now being spread. For example, in April, 1973, a loan of $5 million was approved for the purchase by Chile of Canadian aircraft and telecommunication equipment.

* * *

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR APPLICATIONS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It is based on the fact that two days have now passed since the deadline for the receipt of applications under the LIP program, and the fact that fewer applications have reached the department than was the case last year, the reason being that necessary information was late in going out to citizens in isolated northern communities. Would the minister now consider extending the deadline beyond October 15 in order that more people may be able to submit applications and thus provide employment in those areas to which the program is directed?

[Mr. McKenzie.]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The basis upon which the hon. member has posed his question is really quite incorrect. The number of applications was incorrectly reported publicly. We have received 6,700 applications although the number was reported as being 4,500. We have now received requests to an estimated value of more than $200 million. We are extremely pleased by the calibre of the projects submitted. Having said that, if I found a constituency which, for some reason, had not been able to get under the wire I would consider what might be done, but there will be no general extension beyond the deadline date.

* * *

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

ALLEGED DISCREPANCY IN EVIDENCE PLACED BEFORE COURT AND PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. It is one he undertook to answer before the recess when I raised it earlier. Has the hon. gentleman had an opportunity to study the discrepancy between the evidence placed before the court by the Cape Breton Development Corporation and the evidence placed before a parliamentary committee in order to ascertain whether Tom Kent was in contempt of parliament or in contempt of court?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I have had a report on the matter which leads me to believe that there is no such element present.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the evidence before the court shows that the Cape Breton Development Corporation made one claim before the court and has since put in writing the exact opposite point of view and has given that same evidence before a committee. How can the minister say there is no discrepancy when he himself has the opportunity to read the written and oral evidence given by the Cape Breton Development Corporation?

Mr. Lang: On that question or point of order, the answer is that the legal opinion I am receiving and the legal opinion I accept is different from the legal advice I am getting from the hon. member opposite.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On a further point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That was hardly a point of order. Perhaps the hon. member might be recognized for the purpose of asking a supplementary question, after which I will call orders of the day.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to say to the Minister of Justice that I have not been asking for a legal opinion. I have been asking him to examine evidence placed before the court and placed before a parliamentary committee so that he himself could see the discrepancy in that evidence and give a ruling whether Tom Kent is in contempt of court or in contempt of parliament. It has got to be one or the other. There is no denying it. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that nobody knows this better than the Chair itself.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FAMILY ALLOWANCES, ACT, 1973

MEASURES TO PROVIDE FOR PAYMENT OF FAMILY AND SPECIAL ALLOWANCES

The House resumed, from Monday, October 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-211, to provide for the payment of family allowances in respect of children to supplement the income of Canadian families and for the payment of special allowances to provide for the care and maintenance of other children, and to amend the Income Tax Act in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, last night at ten o'clock I made a start on my comments concerning Bill C-211 to raise family allowances. It is not my intention to take up much time today since it is the wish of my party that second reading should be expedited, thus enabling us to get the bill into committee.

It is obvious that a great majority of members of the House are in favour of this measure. One might say that anyone who is not in favour is not aware of the extent of poverty in our country or of the need to direct financial assistance to growing children in all segments of our society. It is obvious, too—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I apologize to the hon. member but I should like to bring it to the attention of all hon. members that it is difficult for the speaker who has the floor to make himself heard above the conversations which are taking place. I suggest that if members must conduct conversations they should do so behind the curtain or in the lobbies.

Mr. Marshall: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is obvious, too, that all ten provinces support the bill. I hope that with the co-operation of all parties at the committee stage, including the minister, we can make the few changes which appear necessary and pass the bill in its final stages so that its benefits can become available in January of next year, as is the objective of the legislation.

The official spokesman for our party, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) indicated yesterday that this was the position of our party and I am sure members of all parties share this attitude. I, therefore, hope that after almost four years of intermittent debate on this subject, and after the introduction of three other bills dealing with this issue, we have finally resolved our differences and can direct the results of the legislation to those to whom its benefits are aimed.

Hundreds of thousands of mothers in our country are waiting anxiously for this bill to be passed. It is unfortunate that as a result of four years of debate on this topic, as well as two poor bills, Bills C-170 and C-274, which left doubts in my mind, at least, as to the capability of the Department of National Health and Welfare, there should be skepticism in the minds of many of our citizens concerning the government's sincerity. I am sure many thousands of poor Canadian families will not credit the government with sincere intentions in connection with Bill C-223, increasing the allowance to $12, until the cheques are actually in their hands on October 20. The same applies, I believe, to the increases afforded under Bill C-211, with which we are dealing today. I trust that by taking a conscientious attitude to the bill before us we can regain some respect in the eyes of that segment of our society which desperately needs financial assistance in order to cope with inflation, and inflation which we cannot seem to control.

It is fine for the economic experts to keep saying that this is not the direction governments should be taking in fighting inflation. They have all the answers by expounding words of wisdom with their mouths, but they do not know or feel what it is like to have a hungry stomach, and they are evidently not aware of some of the suffering that exists amongst our five million poverty stricken citizens. They evidently do not know that at this very moment many thousands of our children are restricted in their ability to learn because they go to school hungry. They evidently do not know or do not care that thousands of our children are undernourished, and will grow up underdeveloped and therefore unhealthy.

● (1520)

Almost every day we hear about increases in the cost of health care and the inability of provinces to cope with medical care costs. But surely someone has to realize that the reason that more and more people are in need of medical attention in their adult years is that more concentration of our efforts was not directed towards the development of our youth with proper nourishment, so that in future years they would grow up to be healthy and physically fit citizens. Because governments have failed to do this over the years, since we have not been able to provide employment to all our citizens, since we have not been able to provide programs for those who are restricted in their ability to provide for themselves, and since we have not been able to provide that quality of life for all our citizens which everyone proclaims, how can we blame the poverty stricken or their children for the condition in which they find themselves in our supposedly wealthy and healthy nation?

Again today in the House during the question period much mention was made of the government's inability either to control inflation or to deal with unemployment. This disease has been going on for years because of this government's inability to cope with these problems. But while we still look for the answers to these problems, do we continue to allow the poor children of our country to wait and grow up undernourished, uneducated and not able to cope with society? No, Mr. Speaker. Until we who represent some 22 million Canadians can overcome these problems, it is our duty to provide social measures and give financial assistance where necessary. There is no doubt in my mind, then, Mr. Speaker, that the family allowances program and the benefits derived by all children of our country on a universal basis will be of the utmost benefit to Canada as a nation. We have the wealth, and it is our duty to distribute this wealth to those who need assistance.

We are directing reasonable benefits to our senior citizens, and we are directing reasonable benefits to other disadvantaged citizens of our country, such as our worthy veterans, through disability pensions and war veterans allowances. We are now slowly getting to the stage where we can provide a sensible means of making annual increases to these pensions to cope with rising costs as they occur.

Probably I shall be taken to task by some who may quarrel with my use of the word "reasonable", but I am sure that this is no time to be political or to bandy around figures for the sake of political advantage. I also hope that, through consultation with the provinces when discussing the orange paper on social security, we will come up with a program for a guaranteed income for those Canadians whom we must help, and one that provides proper, built-in work incentives for those who are willing to work and who have the initiative to provide for themselves and their children.

I hope that the minister, as he indicated to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) yesterday was the case, is making progress with the provinces in regard to the Canada Assistance Plan and the need for the provinces to increase social assistance which is also directed to disadvantaged children and poverty stricken families.

In regard to cost of living increases, since these pertain to the bill before us and were mentioned in detail by some hon. members yesterday, I may say I am a bit concerned over the fact that under the provisions of clause 13 the Governor in Council is given the right to propose these increases. I feel this right should be included in the bill, as it exists in pension legislation. I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and also with the hon. member for Hillsborough, that the percentage increase in the annual cost of living adjustment should not be less than $1. Surely, an automatic provision in this regard can be included in the bill.

I have no quarrel either with the provision of the bill giving the provinces the right to vary the benefits according to size of family and the age of children. With ten provinces probably coming up with ten different schemes I hope not too many administrative difficulties will be caused, to the disadvantage of those to whom the benefits are directed. However, this question can be dealt with at the committee stage.

I am concerned, too, that the minister has discussed with the provinces, along with proposed improvements under the Canada Assistance Plan, the proposition that no province reduce social assistance benefits as a result of increases in the family allowances afforded under this bill. I say that such action would considerably reduce the effectiveness of the bill, particularly in light of uncontrollable cost of living increases, and I ask the minister to give details of these discussions at the next opportunity.

[Mr. Marshall.]

I did indicate, Mr. Speaker, that it was not my intention to belabour the bill in view of the interest of our party in getting the bill to committee. May I simply repeat what I said when we were debating Bill C-223, that we agree with the bill and think it is a good one. I hope we will get on with the job and finally give to those Canadians who derive benefits from the bill that quality of life that will help them in the future.

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we heard two very fine orations. Perhaps I should say three, because I should like to include in that catalogue the speech of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). But certainly we had one very detailed and sober presentation from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), and a very unusual, but nevertheless intriguing, address by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I say unusual in that it was so complimentary. He praised the minister to a certain point, justifiably so, for the excellence of the program and for the way in which the bill had been presented to the House by the minister.

I should like to advise the minister that the words spoken by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre ought perhaps to be taken with a little grain of salt. We all know that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has a background in divinity, and I could not help but recall while he was speaking the words of Paul, which I believe were—"Kill your enemy with kindness and so heap coals of fire upon his head". So there is a warning. I do not intend to heap any coals of fire on anyone's head. In fact, I shall continue the compliments given to the minister. I think that he did this House and the country a service in the way that he presented the bill, particularly the way he went around blowing up some old canards.

[Translation]

As the French song more or less goes: ... de sorte que le beau chasseur qui s'en allait chassant, visa le noir et tua le noir.

[English]

One particular canard that I was glad to see blown up was the ancient one that higher family allowances would simply entail an increase in the birth rate. I do not know why anybody would not be aware in 1973 of the facts that the minister outlined so capably yesterday. It has been proven for a considerable number of years that about the only significant factor which tends to reduce the birth rates of various nations is the increase in the per capita gross national product of those nations. It appears that human beings behave very humanly Mr. Speaker and that when they are assured of security they can plan for their future; they can plan for their families and the maintenance of those families. Indeed, it is in those countries which have a very low per capita GNP, where people are underprivileged in the extreme, where they cannot look to their old age with security that they tend to see children as an economic value and breed accordingly. This has not been the case in Canada for a good number of years. I was glad to see this canard blown up but I was very saddened this morning to see how the news of the minister's address appeared in the newspapers. The only headline which I saw in the morning paper was this: "Higher family allowances not primarily to help Quebec, Lalonde says".

● (1530)

It is very sad that at this time in our history a minister should feel it necessary to attack this particular old tale. He did demolish the myth and he did it very capably by saying that the birth rate in the province of Quebec was indeed the second lowest of all the provinces in the country, but I think it is sad that he should feel it necessary to do this. It is very sad because should it be the case that one area of our country, because of economic, social and cultural conditions and traditions should have a higher birth rate, we in this House should not be niggardly to the point of enunciating that welfare benefits or social insurance programs are designed to satisfy particularly the needs of that region or that province.

While the minister was out hunting and choosing his canards, Mr. Speaker, I wish that he had attacked another one as well. As a matter of fact he fed the canard rather than shot at it. It was this one: That in the new proposed program, even though there was a considerable amount of flexibility, even though the provinces and the federal government did come to see eye to eye on the way that these programs could be made more flexible, even though they had been a long time coming to this point and how glad we all were that they had, even in spite of all this we, the members of this House, were handed back a little bauble. It was that the federal government would be present still in the cheques issued for family allowances. What does it matter Mr. Speaker? Surely, we do not think that Canadians are going to be influenced in their loyalty to the country by the fact that the cheques say "Government of Canada" rather than Gouvernement du Québec, Government of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island or whatever. Let us get rid of this canard. He has disposed of one already and there are others in the bill waiting to be hunted.

As a final compliment, Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the minister and the government on his and their return to the policies of the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson and the late Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harney: For a while last year it looked very much as though the principle of universality in social insurance programs and redistribution programs was to be thrown overboard. The FISP program was a denial of this principle of universality, a denial of the principle to underscore the belief held by many people in this country that programs such as family allowance programs were not welfare but a very necessary aspect of social justice in this country. I am very glad, as are all members of my party, to see this return by the present government to the beliefs and principles of the Pearson government and also the return even further back and, as significant, to the principles and policies of the King government of 1945.

We are now beginning to approach the level of payments under the family allowance plan that existed in 1945. The minister gave us the figures. In 1945 the basic payment was $5 per month per child and now, after a leap to $12, we are going to a level of $20. That sounds pretty impressive but I should like to put it in perspective.

In 1945, $5 was worth much more than $20 is now—considerably more. I will give a couple of concrete examples to underline this point, Mr. Speaker. One is a personal recollection. I remember as a teenager being at the dinner table in a friend's house and his mother said to his father, "Well dear, we have just received the family allowance cheque for our four children". He said, "Oh well, what is that worth?" After opening the envelope and seeing the sum of $20 he said "Well, at the very least it will pay the rent." That was true because their rent then was some $23 per month. On a street in Quebec City you could rent a three bedroom house for $23 per month in 1945. I should like to know what size of family you would need to pay the rent today Mr. Speaker. Even at $20 a month each you would have to be pretty prolific to be able to cover the monthly rent.

Let us put it in real terms. I am sure if you look at the dollar value in 1945 and the dollar value now that the increase from $5 to $20 is, nevertheless, considerable. This increase takes account to a certain degree of the devaluation in our dollar; the fact that it buys less today than it did then. But it overlooks one extremely important factor—that what the people are facing today is not simply a rising pattern in the cost of living but an excruciating increase in the cost of the necessities of life, food and shelter particularly. If you compare the cost of food today, the cost of shelter, the cost of clothing and the cost of basic transportation, these costs that the ordinary people of our country find so very difficult to meet, with the cost of those items in 1945, you will find that the proportion is much more than four to one. So, let us not praise ourselves too much. We will not have done very much when we pass this bill to bring the payments to an average of $20 a month. Before we cover ourselves with too much glory, let us consider the plight of the ordinary family in the face of the economy of today and how things have materially changed for them between 1945 and now. It is a slight return to the days of Mackenzie King but not a return that goes far enough.

Mr. Speaker, there was one element in the proposal which alarmed me somewhat, an element which is not so much contained in the bill as in the agreement which may or may not exist between the federal government and the provincial governments. I do not know for sure, and I believe such is the case for most members of this House, how the provincial governments will handle this increase in family allowances in relation to the social benefits that they pay to welfare recipients. Judging from the reaction of the relevant minister in the Ontario legislature yesterday when he announced that Ontario would apply an average of $20 per month across the board, and not try to pro rate it in any way among other recipients, it would appear that the provincial government there is going to take account of the increase in the family allowance in order to adjust, likely reduce, benefits paid now to various welfare claimants.

● (1540)

I am sorry at this stage to have to correct my hon. friend and mentor, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Yesterday, in castigation of the hon.

member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), he said that this program is not a welfare program. Well, it now appears that when it comes to welfare recipients the family allowance program is considered as a welfare program, at least in Ontario, and this may be the case in several other provinces in this country. In dealing with Ontario, at least we are dealing with one very significant proportion of the population of this country. So, it would appear there is the very real possibility that the people who need the help the most under this program will get the least. Why should this be?

Well, it appears there is a concern among those people who are considered the experts in respect of social benefits and social welfare to the effect that the working poor should receive at least as much or more income as the people on social welfare. At first this might appear to be a very legitimate concern, but let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that is not a concern that goes far enough. Of course, we will all agree that people who work, no matter how low their income may be, should either equal or surpass in income the people on social benefits. But that is not the only concern we should have. I, for one, do not want to be drawn into an argument as to whether the working poor are more deserving than the people on social welfare. The kind of argument I want to become involved in is whether the working poor and the people on social welfare both receive their due share of the national income. If we let ourselves become involved in this kind of niggly little debate—not niggly but niggardly debate—in which we wonder whether the persons on social benefits are receiving more than the working poor, then I suggest we will lose sight of the main or stated intention behind this bill.

The stated intention should be fairly obvious. It is that this is a program designed to help redistribute income in this country. It is very obvious to the minister and many other observers of the Canadian economic scene that there are people who receive much more than their fair share of the national income and others who receive much less. It is very obvious to practically everyone in this House that we cannot let the private enterprise system run by itself. We need something called welfare or social insurance programs to get rid of the worst deprivations of the private enterprise system. The figures are startling to anyone. Yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre quoted figures cited by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) which indicate how staggering the difference is in the incomes received by the various sectors of our population.

For example, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre stated that the first quintile, the bottom 20 per cent, of income workers in this country in 1971 in terms of family income received 3.6 per cent of the national income and that the fifth quintile, the top 20 per cent, received 43 per cent of the national income. These are staggering figures indeed. They become even more depressing if we look at the figures for income distribution through the years. Rather than see the situation improve we see it deteriorate. It is 3.6 per cent now for the bottom fifth of the population in income terms. It was 4.4 per cent in 1965, 4.2 per cent in 1967 and is now 3.6 per cent. On the other hand, the top fifth which now receives 43.3 per cent has progressed from a figure of 41.5 per cent in 1965 to 42 per cent in 1967, to 42.6 per cent in 1969 and 43.3 per cent now.

[Mr. Harney.]

So, in spite of all the mythology to the effect that too much money is being spent by government on social programs, social insurance programs, old age pensions, what is called generically welfare by some of the members to my right, in spite of all this, the fact still remains that the distribution of income in Canada is not moving toward equality but is moving toward greater and greater inequality. That is why I must ask myself if the present program proposed by the minister will change this trend. Sure, there will be a distribution, but will it be in the right direction? I say that if the provinces are to be allowed to adjust downwards social welfare benefits, whether they do that by taking into account the fact that families will be receiving $20 per child and will therefore reduce the benefit themselves or whether they calculate this new $20 per month per child as a form of income for a family, then we will not alter this trend toward greater and greater inequality in distribution of income in this country.

I know the minister would probably say the figures are accurate because they are from Statistics Canada. We all have reason to believe in Statistics Canada. He could also add that these figures do not take into account the programs which have been initiated in the past number of years or the fact that now there is considerably more public housing in certain sectors of the country, that this is a way of alleviating the condition in which some people find themselves and that there are medicare programs across the country as well as hospitalization programs. I see the minister nodding. He has made suggestions to this effect before. The people who comprise what might be called the professional welfare community in the country would agree with him.

Let us get back to the real world and consider some other points. In many provinces although there is medicare and hospitalization people must pay for this. In the province of Ontario, where I live, the combined medicare and hospitalization premium is staggering. Many a worker who thinks this premium is paid for by his company does not realize that this is simply part of his pay. It is part of his pay that is negotiated in the contract he gets from his employer. Another factor ought to be considered in this real world we are looking at. Many of the programs that have been instituted and implemented in the past 20 years are in a sense stop-gap programs. They have been implemented and improved because the costs felt by our citizens in those areas were becoming unbearable.

● (1550)

Let me cite, for example, hospitalization. The costs of hospitalization have gone up enormously, and so has the need for hospitalization because the way of life of Canadian citizens now is totally different from the way they lived a generation or two ago. So what in effect is happening is that in spite of the fact that these programs have been initiated and improved, the real situation of the deprived, of the poor in this country, in relation to their fellow citizens has not changed.

The reason there are so many people in my riding living in Ontario housing is that there is no more housing being produced for them by the private housing industry. While 40, 50 or 60 years ago the housing industry in the city of Toronto was able to produce good, solid, durable, decent, clean housing for the working people of that city, it is no longer able to do so. So where private enterprise chooses not to go, the state, under its welfare approach, has to go. So we built housing for these people, inadequate as it may be. We have to build housing for them. So their real condition in relation to their fellow citizens has not changed for the better; indeed, it has probably changed for the worse. They are in the same market place except that in the market place those who used to be able to muscle them out before can muscle them out to an even greater degree now because they simply have more money to spend.

A few days ago there was the beginning of a debate in the press of this country when it was revealed that wage earners had not only failed to advance their position over the past year but had been able to do less than hold their own against rising prices. Immediately after that, information was produced to negate the statement. We were told that the total disposable income in this country, after taxes have been taken into consideration, and after the rate of inflation has been deducted, has gone up by 6.2 per cent. Was that not good news, we were asked. Of course, it was good news but the logic of the situation must stare us in the face. If the wage earners as a class have not moved ahead but have slipped backward, and if we as a total group of Canadians have moved ahead by 6.2 per cent in real disposable income, then it means that certain groups in this country have gone ahead by much more than 6.2 per cent.

So, here we go again. We are not moving toward a state of better and more fair distribution of income but quite the opposite. This is why I urge the minister not to buy the kind of policy which entails an argument as to whether the working poor are getting as much as people on social benefits. Let us forget that argument; it is not an important one. Let us ask ourselves whether both of these groups are getting their fair share of the national pie and, at the very least, let us not get involved in a program which will allow the provinces to effectively dispose of the increase in family allowances in such a way that people who are both in the working poor group and welfare recipient group are not to benefit in any significant way.

The distribution of income in our country, as I have been stating, is obviously not good. It is alarmingly bad. But some of us are probably inclined to take comfort from the fact that we are not as badly off here in Canada as others are in other areas of the world. For example, there is an editorial in the Globe and Mail of Thursday, September 27, which is signalled by the usual archness of Globe and Mail editorials, which deals with upgrading foreign aid. It reads in part:

> The past 10 years of economic development have in fact left 800 million people relatively worse off than they were before. The upper 40 per cent of the population of developing countries typically gets 75 per cent of the national income, while the lowest 20 per cent gets 5 per cent.

I am sure that many of us reading this editorial would have shaken our heads in dismay. What a sad state of affairs! In the developing countries, 40 per cent of the population gets 75 per cent of the national income, leaving 25 per cent to be distributed with generosity and largesse to the remaining 60 per cent. I am sure that on looking at these figures we took some comfort from the fact that such was not the situation in Canada. I am sorry to have to report to you, Mr. Speaker, that these are the facts in Canada; indeed, they are exactly so in Canada. If you consider the income received by individuals who are earning the income of the top 40 per cent, you will find that they get, according to the 1971 figures, 75.2 per cent of the national income. So here we are lecturing the developing countries about their unequal distribution of income, whereas the situation in our country is exactly the same as the one which we condemn in developing countries. In terms of the distribution of income, we are a developing country. We have an extremely long way to go. I know I have quoted figures that only go back over the past few years. I could go as far back as 1951 and demonstrate that the situation then was pretty much the same, except for one year or two when the situation really became disastrous, and that was in 1960 and 1961. Those were the infamous years when there was no real gain, as a matter of fact, a loss in total income for Canadians, years in which there was inflation as well. So I do not think it is a matter of singling out which party did what when. The record has not been good.

Again, I must refer to the province of Ontario to try to discover why our record has been so bad. From the beginning of this confederation and before, we have always had an extremely niggardly outlook regarding the poor. In the old days they used to be called, not the poor or the unemployable welfare recipients, but the sturdy beggars; this was the term used. We used to ask ourselves: what shall we do with the sturdy beggars in our society, people who beg but are strong enough to work? We have always been so concerned with the little dollars and cents that may go to the wrong person who may not be totally deserving, these people who, according to certain people in our society, actually populate vast areas of our cities. These people are always to be seen on a Saturday afternoon on the back stoop with a case of beer, doing nothing else but watching television. We have always been so concerned with this that we have failed to tackle the main problem which is that we have an extremely unjust society and there is nothing that has happened in the past three or four years to indicate that it will become just.

I am suggesting this afternoon that unless measures are taken to provide for the adequate distribution of family allowances there will be no change of any significance in terms of the distribution of income in our society. This program is one which I will support in principle. I certainly hope to correct it in detail, but I will support it in principle because it can be a step towards greater social and economic equality in this country. But I would like to remind the minister that this is a step, and only a very small step.

● (1600)

If the governments of this country, the federal government and the provincial governments, were really concerned with the working poor they would do something about the minimum wage. Why should it be that a man who works needs to have some kind of supplement from the state for his income? I know such proposals are entailed in the discussions that are going on at the federal-provincial level, and that somehow a way will be found to supplement the incomes of the working poor. There are great numbers of working poor in this country. In my city of Toronto, the working poor vastly outnumber the people on welfare. It is a matter of choice for them. They would rather receive less than go on welfare. They would rather work and earn their own way. It is a natural, human desire. So there are now proposals in the wind which will have the effect of supplementing the incomes of the working poor.

We will figure out how much they get from their employers. We will find out how much they need in order to survive, and then we will supplement their incomes. But call it what we will, it will be another form of welfare. It will not be welfare for the employee; it will be welfare for the employer. Rather than having to carry the burden, what the employer is going to do is hand the can over to the government and, while he is at it, complain about high taxes.

We should never get involved in such programs. This is the worst kind of thinking which has come out of the administration of President Nixon in the United States. I remember seeing the U.S. President proposing his new welfare package two or three years ago. I remember a lot of people nodding and saying, "Yes, we should do more to help people who are working because they deserve it, whereas people who don't work and receive social benefits should be viewed rather sternly. We should build incentives into the system so that we can give the chap who is working an extra number of dollars a month."

But Mr. Speaker, what we will be doing with that is subsidizing the cheap rate employer. The governments of this country will have to tax more in order to do that, and as they tax more the attack on government activity, on government participation in the welfare and well-being of our population, will be given more and more support. I do not buy that idea at all.

If we want to help the man who is working, let us do something about the minimum wage. It is disgraceful in most sectors of this country. At the very least, Mr. Speaker, the minimum wage should be sufficient to bring a man and his family above the poverty threshold. And while we are at it, I do not want to hear the old canard that if we raise the minimum wage some industries will have to close down. I say that if they are going to live on the backs of their workers, then let them close down. We do not need the goods and services that they produce. However, if we do need them, let us to be ready to pay more directly through the market place for these goods and services.

There are other ways of seeing to it that income is more fairly distributed in this country. I am sure the minister has the figures. I am sure if he goes back to the 1920's, the 30's, 40's and 50's and watches the progress in the distribution of income he will find that the only time in which there was a significant shift in the distribution of income in Canada was the period between 1935 and 1944. Why was that? Yes, there was an increase in transfer payments. I will grant you that. There was a considerable increase in them around that time. But more important than that, this was the period when there was a vast and significant increase in the amount of union organization in Canada. When the CIO moved into Ontario in particular, there was a very real shift in the way that the goods and services that we produced were distributed among our people. We owe that not to government activity but to the activity of the people themselves, who organized to take what was their due.

In this society and under this type of government, I do not think the poor or the working poor can ever hope to be granted their just due. Their only hope is to organize themselves to take it. Power is never granted; it is only taken. Many people in this society are beginning to realize that. One of my colleagues points out that this is what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) says. In fact, he said it the other day. I am quite sure he understands it. He may not pay much attention to it now, but he certainly understands it.

If the government were really interested in doing something about the distribution of income, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) would cosy up to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) one day and say, "Look, my honourable colleague, this is a real problem here in Canada. Lots of people are not getting enough, and the reason they are not getting enough is that they are working for lousy pay. One of the reasons they are working for lousy pay is not because they are working for the railroads and we ordered them back to work for lousy pay, but because they are working in all kinds of industries which are not only not organized, not unionized, but cannot be organized and unionized for two reasons. One reason is our laws. We make it almost impossible for these people to get organized. The second reason is that the costs of organization are so enormous the union movement cannot carry them."

Let us not forget, Mr. Speaker, that the union movement, which is supposed to be rolling in money, has to carry out all further organization of workers out of the dues it receives from those it has already organized, and in many cases these are people who do not earn all that much. "So couldn't you," he could suggest to his colleague, the Minister of Labour, "think of redesigning your department so that rather than having a Department of Labour which really only polices the industrial situation in our society,—it just sees to it that there are no outbreaks, riots or great crises—have a positively oriented Department of Labour like the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, which goes out to help businessmen, or at least tries to help them? That department takes businessmen over to Europe to look for new contracts and new business. It holds seminars for businessmen. It goes further than that. We have many programs in this country to aid small businesses. They may not be terribly effective but at least they try. And we have lots of programs to aid big business—"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: He may continue if there is unanimous consent of the House. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Colleagues to my right who wish to speak today suggest that I take another two minutes. The parallel, the analogy was not finished. In the same way the Department of Agriculture tries to help the farmers. Provincial departments send out Ag. Reps. I know because I used to train Ag. Reps. They try to help the farmers grow better crops and find better markets. Couldn't we have a Department of Labour that actually goes out to try to help working people, that tells them what their rights are under Canadian law, that tells them what unions are available for them, and yes, even helps in the process of organizing? I am not suggesting that it help in bargaining. We can leave that up to the unions for they are capable there. This proposal could bring about a very significant shift in the distribution of income in this country. That would be something real.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, because the minister has given us an indication that he is moving, that he is willing to take this one small step, I will go along with him. Members of my party will go along with him. We will help him not to falter as he takes this step, but we will expect him to keep in stride.

● (1610)

[Translation]

Mr. Roméo LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, there might be a good number of reasons to support Bill C-211. It could be of course to gain a political advantage but I think we should support it mainly because we established its beneficial effects for lower income families, that is to say the majority of my constituents and a good number of citizens in my province of New Brunswick.

You only have to visit the small fishing plants along the Northumberland Strait to understand why the housewives who work there are waiting for the increase proposed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). They often get only the provincial minimum wages, or $1.50 an hour and often their husband does not do any better. However, the real needs are not lower in these regions. Those housewives describe what it costs to dress the teenagers who are going to school, particularly to regional schools. To those of us who lived through days when clothes had to be mended and when patches stood in testimony of mothers' skill and family poverty, no need to recall that things like television have on the youth a levelling effect and that there are no more really remote or isolated regions. Country and small town teenagers want to live like the people they see on television and want to follow the fashion and for that, they make a strong pressure on their family.

But if they wish to be like others, country and small town teenagers have few opportunities to get casual income. There are not many opportunities for newspaper boys, work in the corners store or babysitting. In other words, all the burden is on parents who desperately want to give their children the education they did not get themselves.

If I insist on the needs of teenagers it it because this group is often tempted to quit school prematurely to make a few dollars and it is at that age that one is most affected by the feeling of not keeping up with the rest. Instead of the standard $20 a month per child formula chosen by the province of New Brunswick, I would have preferred a formula that would put greater emphasis on teenagers and their parents.

Family Allowances

Mr. Speaker, the increase in family allowances contained in this bill was quite rightly biased in favor of low income families. They will thus receive substantial increases, roughly $114 net after taxes annually for every child in the province of New Brunswick, over $27 million a year for that province alone. Even if it is taxable, the greater majority of citizens in that province will keep nearly all the increase contained in this bill. I for one fully endorse the principle of giving more to those who need it most and I am glad to see that principle set out under the Income Tax Act. The Minister of National Health and Welfare stated in his speech yesterday that such a way of distributing family allowances represents a step in the direction of more equitable regional distribution of income. It seems to me that within an area that distribution will benefit those who live away from large centers, who do not want to move in those centers and who are prepared to make certain sacrifices to continue and live in their towns. If it is true that large amounts were spent on regional development it is also true that those monies were spent mainly in growth centers better equipped to draw the maximum out of them.

Some people see family allowances as a sort of supplement to a minimum vital income. Mr. Speaker, it must be hoped that in a great number of cases families will use those monies as a supplement that will also allow to improve the quality of life whether it is by improving the quality of food by going to the dentist, by paying for musical lessons and even by allowing the boys to attend hockey schools. All these things are considered as normal in more wealthy regions but they are often a luxury in disadvantaged areas.

[English]

One can hope, Mr. Speaker, that provincial authorities which provide only a strict minimum of services in schools and community life will not use this increase in family allowances to reduce or to slow down the progress in the improvement of services. The fall-out in taxation terms from this increase which, for example, in New Brunswick should result in an increase of 4.4 million dollars, would be well invested if it were reserved for improvement in dental care for children, in education for better nutrition, in kindergartens and in greater allowances for teenagers. Some provinces, including, I believe, Alberta, Quebec and Prince Edward Island, have already indicated clearly that they would favour increasing allowances for teenagers to beyond $20.

I also wish to say that I support the minister's statement that family allowances will continue to be sent by the federal government directly to families. If we are to have unity in this country it is important that citizens understand where their tax dollar is spent, and by whom. In fact, when I was in my riding last Friday I read with interest in the New Brunswick newspapers that "the provincial government has decided to distribute $20 a month—a child—under the federally financed family allowances program." The Saint John Telegraph Journal carried the headline, "New Brunswick plans to pay $20 a child allowance". One might say that the author of the headline had not read the story, or had not realized that three paragraphs below, the newspaper honestly reports that the federal government pays the whole amount of the family allowance. However, my experience with newspapers leads me to believe that the headline is important, and not the third paragraph. Nevertheless, one might say that the implication is left that it is the provincial government, which did not tax, which is spending.

Speaking as one who represents an area where income is low, where opportunities for employment are still limited and where school and health services are still modest, I rejoice that Bill C-211 is before this House and I congratulate the minister for bringing it forward.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, in intervening in this debate on second reading, I look around me and notice that benches are empty; I can conclude, with the help of experience, that the quality of the bill seems to be inversely proportional to the number of hon. members present to hear its merits praised or its shortcomings criticized.

I think that the government leader was perhaps right when he suggested at the last conference of Commonwealth parliamentarians that it would be a good thing for democracy to have television cameras installed in the House of Commons to inform the Canadian people of the behaviour of hon. members.

Mr. Speaker, we have an excellent bill before us, about which we already talked intelligently and wisely. My colleague from Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), we know it, with a deep and very accurate understanding of the problems of Canadian society, could express in an exquisite language the attitude of the official opposition towards this bill.

I shall only have to recall some words of the hon. member for Hillsborough, and notably those which are recorded on page 6871 of Hansard where he really puts again in its context the bill we are to pass and where he indicates why, if in some respects this bill appears relevant, it is insufficient and it should be completed by other bills within the scope of a much more general scheme.

The hon. member for Hillsborough said, for instance, and I quote:

> Why are these ministers so silent, so supine, so superlatively recumbent in face of the cost of living volcano that is shaking Canada's economic structure to its very roots? Is nothing forthcoming to strengthen the economy of this country and to halt the advance of grievous inflation? Certainly the minister, despite his best intentions—and he is not always at his best—cannot cope with this problem. We cannot welfare ourselves into a sound economic society. We cannot capsulize palliatives enough to overcome the economic agony of the Dominion of Canada.

On the other hand, I noticed with surprise and with some dismay, the words of the knowledgeable, respectable and venerable hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I noticed from what he said that the lust for power and the present coalition singularly transformed the unpretentious and humble man he was. He now shows, it seems to me, at least in his language, a certain conceitedness. It is with a smile that all members heard him taking credit for this measure. For the enlightenment of my colleagues, I will now quote the following sentence from the speech of the member for Winnipeg North Centre, that we find on page 6881 of Hansard:

[Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent).]

● (1620)

> If some of my friends in various parts of the House think that I am being too generous in welcoming this legislation, it must be obvious that the reason we welcome it is that we know we are responsible for it.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that by taking all the credit for this legislation, the distinguished member of the New Democratic Party will also be willing, a little later, to share the responsibility for some weaknesses that may appear in government policy, and as we approach another event in 1974, I hope that the member for Winnipeg North Centre will share the anxiety of the government with which he wants to share the credit today.

Mr. Speaker, we would also be tempted to take a little of the credit for this good measure and to say that if we can do justice at last to Canadian families, it is due to the official opposition. Should we refer to the last election campaign, should it be told once more, we would realize that during the various debates and the various television broadcasts, we too had said that the government should be much more comprehensive and much more generous towards Canadian families, and relying on the respect for this family value, conscious of the burden already born by family heads on account of the raising cost of living, we had undertaken to increase substantially family allowances in co-operation with the provinces and to provide for their escalation on the cost of living if necessary.

Of course, when we spoke about it in October 1972, we were told, in particular by the hon. member for Langelier who was then minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), that these were silly and unconsidered promises, a thing completely unbelievable. Today, we are pleased to see that the Liberal cabinet makes due apology, realizes that our claims were justified, and as a result of the Official Opposition's claims, and with the co-operation of the provinces, they introduce Bill C-211, a very positive and relevant bill.

Are we not right, Mr. Speaker—and I wish to make a short digression at this point—to ask ourselves questions and wonder why during the last election campaing our Liberal friends have let the people believe that a reform of the family allowances Plan as suggested by us would be but silly promises? Mr. Speaker, it is because of such a change in attitude by political parties and men that the people are growing restless with public life, and it is because of such slights against truth, logic, earnestness and consistency that young people especially are disgusted with politics. It is because of such refusals from outgoing governments, as the refusal during election campaigns to discuss seriously bills that others may suggest, that one of the most striking features of democracy—electoral campaigns—is losing more and more its real significance. Moreover, hon. members will remember the presentation of the budget on February 19. They will remember that at the time the government did not yet believe in the increased needs of the families. In Quebec as elsewhere the people better understand today how we were justified, in the official opposition, for denying our confidence to this government on the occasion of the Speech from the Throne and also of the budget debate.

This required the pressure from the provincial governments which by definition are certainly closer to the citizens and, on another standpoint, the sharp increase in the cost of living. This required the perseverance and aggressiveness of my party. It also required, from the Liberals who are whispering during my speech, the fear of losing power or, and this amounts to the same thing, the fear of breaking this almost anachronic "flirt" they are entertaining since October 30 last with the NDP. All this was required for the Liberals to change their mind and to introduce this bill. The long delays, the government's hesitations, the discussions—

Mr. Guay (Levis): The discussions—

Mr. Wagner: —the discussions, yes, as the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) just stated, the demagogic and never-ending discussions about amending the family allowances were so many factors which seemed to occupy much of the time of fathers and mothers. This has not been a waste of time since finally the House is studying a bill aimed at improving the present living conditions and which will better take into account the family needs.

Bill C-211, which does not originate with the Liberal party, will be a Canadian government's bill which will be passed by the Canadian Parliament—

An hon. Member: Thanks to the Liberals!

Mr. Wagner: —representing all Canadian parties. The credit will not solely be taken by the Liberal members, as now suggested by a member. This bill is incorporated in an integrated social policy eagerly sought by all and now seriously initiated.

The formulation of the bill now under consideration indicates for once—and it is the exception which proves the general rule—a flexibility of the central government regarding its provincial counterparts. Henceforth, may it be likewise in every field, whether the energy policy is concerned, whether it is some concerted action against that calamity called unemployment or again an effective fight—which is still awaited—against the most important current problem, that is inflation.

The federal-provincial agreement which has been concluded in that respect must not however lull us at the federal level concerning the deep yearnings of the provincial governments, especially the determination of several premiers to take part in the elaboration of socio-economic measures dealing directly with their priorities. We should not think for example, that Quebec, having accepted Bill C-211, has forgotten the spirit of its interventions in Victoria in June 1971.

● (1630)

To believe it would be to bury one's head in the sand and sooner or later be in danger of being bitterly disappointed. Besides, have we not heard lately the outgoing premier of Quebec decide to reopen the Victoria file, if he were given the opportunity, and I hope that the federal government will eagerly welcome his desire.

Mr. Speaker, on another level, being universal and taxable the allowances plainly seem to be intended to serve first the families that need it most. However, let us not believe that the bill amounts to a decisive stroke in the great challenge of the fight against poverty. We know, for example, that according to Statistics Canada, in 1969 already the average debts of the family in Canada was $4161; if necessary we shall read again the 1973 message of the bishops of Canada on our social inequities. We will remember it and will have to notice that the continued increase in the cost of living, unfortunately left without any serious solution from the present government, affects all social classes but more seriously those at the lower echelons in our society.

Basically, the increases provided by Bill C-211 do nothing more than correct the social injustice suffered by low and average income families as a result of inflation which, it seems, benefits the richest people in our consumer society. Besides, Canadians remain sceptical about the socio-economic initiatives of the present government. A Gallup poll published last June—my friends need not worry, I am not referring to the Gallup poll showing the rising popularity of the Progressive Conservative party and the lowering of the popularity of the Liberal party, but to the Gallup poll showing that most Canadians foresee that prices will rise quicker than family income. In fact, 85 per cent of the Canadians then interviewed foresaw that, in 1974, prices would rise much more quickly than family incomes. At that rate, Mr. Speaker, because of its inertia against inflation, this government seems willing to admit that they are absolutely right.

Therefore, Bill C-211, despite the value of its structure, despite also the new gross gains that it will bring to families, does not even deal with the problems of the struggle against poverty, the shocking increase in food, clothing and housing prices. Of course—I will admit it readily—the legislation could not solve everything at once, and at least it does constitute a concrete measure to remedy, partly at least, the inadequacy of the net income of needier families. So, Bill C-211 is a limited measure aiming at changing the situation imposed on the family. The area of family policy is much greater and more complex, especially at a time when an ever growing number of women are forced, for lack of money, to get back on the labour market. Let us note here that one third of all Quebec women at work have children under 10. Together with the provinces, if not through their initiative, since this is their responsibility under the constitution, we shall have to tackle the definition and development of a genuine family policy. Among other sources, Quebec family organizations and especially the Richelieu-Yamaska Family Council, whose headquarters are in Saint-Hyacinthe, have already introduced very appropriate recommendations for the establishment of a real family policy. Suffice it to mention here the need for more and fuller medical services in poor neighbourhoods and in outlying areas, the need for assistance services for married couples and families, the urgent need for a wider distribution of family planning information, easy access for all to family recreational activities, especially since the whole question of the urgency of a family housing policy is closely related to federal responsibility. On this last point, the failure of the present government to take action concerning the present interest rates is seriously affecting low or medium income families.

Mr. Speaker, those are some of the things that we should all keep in mind if we really want to solve the true problems of the Canadian family. As Mr. Philippe Garigue once said—and I should like to conclude with these words—the fact remains that the real purpose of a family policy, and therefore of an integrated family allowance policy, is not only the promotion of the family but, through the family, the development of a better human society more in keeping with the goals of man.

An hon. Member: The just society.

● (1640)

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, changing one's mind may be better than changing parties, but the question is this: The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe said that provincial governments were closer to the people; I wonder if he knows that federal policies benefit the people from the cradle until the last old age security pension cheque, that some are related to housing and others are designed to pay 50 per cent of the entire cost of welfare programs. Therefore, I should like to know if he was aware of the federal government's contributions, which is in closer contact with the people, even more than provincial governments.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I recognize that I was aware of this, but I should like to point out to the hon. member that municipal governments are normally closer to their people than provincial governments, which in turn are closer to the people than the federal government and that accordingly, the outgoing governments, both at the federal level and in the province of Quebec, are very far from the people under their jurisdiction.

[English]

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, rising as I do having heard the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), and having read in Hansard the speech given yesterday by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), it seems to me that these two speeches embody the thinking of each of their respective parties. It seems that both parties are attempting to take credit for this bill; in fact, both are claiming paternity of the new baby bonus. I think I can say to the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, that this indicates the most excellent quality of the bill and of its provisions for Canadians and Canadian families.

It is interesting to note that when the government prepared its Speech from the Throne it made provision for the increases that we now see in this bill. Let there be no doubt that this was a Liberal policy brought forth by this Liberal government, consistent with the original plan in the Speech from the Throne, and that it follows Liberal thought going back many years, from the inception of family allowances in 1944 to the increases that we see today.

The bill provides initially that there shall be paid out of a consolidated revenue fund for each month a family allowance of $20 or such greater amount as may be determined from time to time. Further, there is a provision in clause 13 to take into account changes in consumer price levels occurring after the commencement of this legislation. This is but another of the constructive, and I say positive, measures being taken by this government to ensure greater security for Canadians.

[Mr. Wagner.]

The central theme of this government's philosophy is both respect for the individual and for individual freedom. Recent government policy has largely been oriented towards providing the conditions, economic and social, for realizing this aspect, not in some theoretical framework, but in everyday life, for as many people as possible. This is not an easy task. The views of the young, the old, the rich, the poor, the labour unionist, the consumer, the retailer, or any of the multiplicity of groups which comprise Canadian society, all have the right to be heard. All have demands which frequently are conflicting. One of modern government's crucial roles is to determine to what extent the state can meet these various demands, given available resources and the existing values within society, without creating severe conflict.

I believe that Canadians expect to provide for their own needs through their own efforts and that they expect others to do the same. We believe that each of us should contribute, to the extent of our individual ability, to the support and well-being of our own families and to be of assistance to those who cannot help themselves.

We also believe that we have a responsibility to help our fellow Canadians. As the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) stated in his speech yesterday, the provisions incorporated in this bill will supplement the income of Canadian families and improve their capacity to meet the cost of raising children. The bill will provide three and a half million Canadian families, most of whom are on low or middle income, with a net additional disposable income of $840 million. The family unit is still, and I trust will remain, the cornerstone of Canadian society. It is the family unit which bears the greatest burden brought on by the high cost of living and the increased pressures of inflation. In addition to the long range effects of aiding the integrity of the family unit, the provisions of this bill increasing family allowances will immediately provide much needed assistance to families on low or middle incomes to meet the increased cost of food, clothing and shelter.

This is but another example of the measures continually being taken by this government, as outlined in the Speech from the Throne, to provide for the needs of Canadians. Basic old age pensions have been increased by 15 per cent. With guaranteed income supplements, single persons will receive a maximum of $170 and couples will receive $325. War veterans allowances have been increased by 13 to 15 per cent. Disabled war veterans allowances were increased by 25 per cent. The government has ensured that Canadians continue to maintain adequate incomes by providing for increases in these programs to reflect changes in the cost of living.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is being distracted perhaps by conversations in the chamber. I ask that the hon. member be accorded the usual courtesy.

Mr. Poulin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In addition, personal income tax rates will be adjusted commencing in 1974 to reflect the cost of living changes. Since January of this year the government has taken necessary and decisive action to protect families with regard to the most basic and essential items of life, that is, food, clothing and shelter. Many of these actions have been taken even though they involved tough decisions and brought about some criticism. This was expected and anticipated at the time the decisions were taken.

If we in this country are to have adequate shelter from the weather, we must be assured of an adequate supply of heating fuels at a reasonable price. For without fuel, in this climate we indeed have no adequate shelter. The actions taken by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) to effect the continued supply of heating oils to Canadians at a fair price was the right decision for Canada and for Canadians, and was taken notwithstanding the fact that it could be anticipated that it would be subject to much criticism from some areas within our country. These steps were taken to ensure that all Canadians could heat their homes and could afford to pay for such heat. We all know that rising prices are a world wide problem and that every Canadian, to some degree or another, has felt the adverse effects of this trend.

• (1650)

Similar to the steps taken to ensure adequate heating fuels, this government has taken measures to reduce the cost of basic foods and to help maintain the stability of supply and prices. These steps include the payment of a subsidy of $1.25 per bushel of wheat consumed by Canadians and to guarantee a payment of five cents per quart on milk to the provinces where marketing boards will agree to maintain or reduce the cost of milk for at least one year. On September 4, when speaking of measures to deal with costs of living, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated: "In present world conditions the most urgent task of the government is to ensure that those who are least able to defend themselves against the effects of inflation are protected. This has been a fundamental objective of the government."

The increases proposed by this bill, Mr. Speaker, which will effectively triple family allowances will be welcomed I am sure by most Canadians. They will, in the words of the Prime Minister, assist those who cannot so easily assist themselves. The provisions of this bill will enable parents to better provide the necessities of life for themselves and their children. By providing more economic stability for the family unit, we will strengthen that unit, the cornerstone of our society and help to keep families together. Since the inception of family allowances in 1945, mothers across Canada and in this community have awaited the arrival of the family allowance cheque and have used it wisely to benefit their children and their families.

The additional funds being provided by this bill will enable these same mothers to provide even more for the welfare, education and health of their children. This parliament, by the adoption of this bill, has a great opportunity to provide much needed economic assistance through increases in family allowances, to solidify and strengthen the family unit in Canada and help provide for the needs of the young.

I trust all members will support the immediate benefits and long-range objectives of this exemplary piece of legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Family Allowances

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, following the speech delivered by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), I am very happy to take part in this debate which is of vital importance for the well-being and the survival of Canadian families.

In referring to statistics published in March 1973, I say that the country had the following number of children: 3,863,678 under 10 years, 2,781,580 between 10 and 15 and 513,710 aged 16 and 17. The cost of family allowances in September 1973 was for the first group about $23,180,000; for the second group, $22,252,000, and for the third group, $5,147,000. The total cost reached $50,571,808.

With the increase, the allowance being $12 per child, the costs for October will be as follows: For the first group, $46 million, for the second, $33 million and for the third, $6 million, for a grand total of $85,907,616, which is an increase of $35,335,808.

This is undoubtedly a wonderful increase, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think it meets the needs now arising from the higher cost of living. Considering our bountiful production, I wish to point out quite frankly to the minister that he should have been and could be perhaps more generous towards our fine Canadian families.

If the government is really aware of the needs of Canadian families and of the will to supplement immigration by encouraging couples to carry on and by providing them with a purchasing power to that effect, we, the Social Credit, are advocating the payment of the following allowances: For the children of the first group mentioned earlier, $30 a month, for the second, $60 and for the third, $90. The estimated cost would be about $115,910,340 for the first group, $166,894,800 for the second and $46,233,900 for the third, a total of about $329 million.

It should be noted that the amounts of $30, $60 and $90 represent $1, $2 and $3 a day respectively. It must be considered that up to the age of 9 or 10 the child stays with his parents and goes to school close to home. But from that age on he often has to go relatively far from home and in doing that he must bring his noon meal with him. Then his meals, his leisure time and his sports cost more. Too often it is difficult for the mother to balance the budget with the present allowance even though they were increased to $12 as of October 1 last.

If a comparison is made with the amounts paid by the government to foster homes and orphanages for children of the same age the difference is enormous with what the mother gets for the same work she must do for her own children at home.

According to the statistics for the beginning of November there are presently in Canada 7,238,968 children between the ages of 0 and 17. Children represent nearly one third of the total population in Canada. Normally they depend on the father who, unfortunately, too often gets little more than a single man's salary with which he must feed his family.

If one bothers to do a little arithmetic one finds that it is not exaggerated to take roughly 3 per cent of our national production and give it to roughly 33 per cent of the population. Let us loosen up when it comes to giving to those whose mission will be to increase our vigorous population and let us give this nation the possibility to bloom and give this country many, true Canadians. At this rate, a calamity is threatening to put our genuine Canadians definitely in a state of minority mainly because of the low birthrate. It is really discouraging to realize that, from 1950 to 1972, that is to say over a 22 year period, the birthrate for Quebec has fallen from 30.3 per cent to 15.2 per cent per 1,000 habitants. Presently, the birthrate, mainly in Quebec—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member will not mind if I interrupt his speech at this point. It being five o'clock, pursuant to special order made earlier this day, it is my duty to interrupt proceedings now before the House. Debate on the motion for second reading of the bill will be resumed at the next sitting. I would also remind hon. members that there will be no late show tonight.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private member's business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills and notices of motions.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) on a point of order.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I think there would be agreement to take Order No. 6 standing in the name of the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the suggestion by the hon. parliamentary secretary agreed to that we proceed to discussion of Bill C-39?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

● (1700)

[English]

HARBOUR COMMISSIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR MUNICIPAL REPRESENTATION ON COMMISSIONS

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta) moved that Bill C-39, to amend the Harbour Commissions Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide for the election of capable and qualified people to positions on the Harbour Commissions by electors of the local municipalities involved. I wish to begin by saying this bill is in no way intended to be disparaging of the people who are already appointed as harbour commissioners in the area. In most cases they are doing a good job. They are doing the job the people want done in the area. I would also have nothing against this bill being amended in the committee to allow some appointments to the board if the government thought it necessary.

I believe the important point in respect of this bill is the input by the people of the community. I do not intend to take very long, Mr. Speaker. In fact I am just about finished. I know what the people of my area want. They want some elected officials on the Harbour Commission. Therefore, I intend to make a short speech. The last time I did so someone on the other side suggested that there must not have been very much I could have said. The people in my area decided to support this principle not only by electing me but by electing people on my left and around me who support this principle. I suggest to government members that instead of spending the 55 minutes remaining in talking out this bill they should send it to the committee to ensure that we arrive at a better method of selecting harbour commissions than we have now.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to support what the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds) has just said. I have an odd reservation about the bill but I think it is most important that this bill be referred to the committee. There has already been an attempt in this house by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) to accomplish a similar objective. In that instance this House saw fit to allow that bill to go to the committee. I think at that time members made a very wise decision because this enabled the issue to be raised again.

The issue is that under the present Harbour Commissions Act the people who live in the area of the harbours concerned are disgusted and disturbed about the way in which the organization of harbours is proceeding. The most active groups, such as the environmental groups, are not being consulted in respect of the way in which the harbours are being developed. A committee must have a look at the way in which harbours are being developed. The most important function of a harbour can be recreation for the citizens of the community. The reason I am pleased to support my hon. friend's bill is that this would give an opportunity to the people in the community to run for office.

I said that I had a reservation about the bill. The suggested new section 5(1) provides that all members of the commission be elected, although the hon. member did indicate in his remarks that he would be amenable to some amendment in this regard. I think we need a combination of elected and appointed members. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) has a private member's bill which has received first reading. This bill provides for the appointment of members to the Harbour Commissions.

One of the interested groups is the environmental group. Another is fisheries and a third represents the people involved in sport. More than the commercial aspect of a river and harbour is involved. Therefore, I am very pleased to support this bill. I am hopeful that the government will have second thoughts about talking it out. As my friend has said I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the people of this area do not want this bill talked out. They want it discussed during this session.

Another reason for supporting this bill is the chaotic way in which our harbour facilities have been developed on the Pacific coast. What we really have is a good old-fashioned free enterprise system. I shall not tell you how the free enterprise competitive system is failing in this area. Each community is competing with each other for harbour facilities. There is a completely irrational development of facilities. There has been no general study of the needs. The community which happens to have the most effective appointed commission receives the largest amount of investment and development in many cases. This situation arises for unnecessary reasons.

I suggest what we need first is a rationalization in respect of port studies on the Pacific coast. This is something we have not had until now. My hon. friend's bill will raise this issue again. Second, we must have input from the environmental groups and from groups interested in recreation on the river. So, I am very pleased to rise in support of the bill. I would urge my friends across the aisle not to talk out this bill because to do so would be a disservice to the people of my community and all communities which have harbours in the province of British Columbia.

Mr. Joseph-Phillippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say, first of all, that the remarks of the hon. member who presented the bill could have far-reaching effects. When we discussed the bill introduced by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), as I said in this House on April 13, 1973, I felt that if we were to start enacting legislation in respect of each harbour commission across this country possibly we would not be granting a particular favour to anyone. I suggested that we should have national legislation dealing with all harbour commissions rather than do it on a piece-meal basis.

At that time I mentioned that we were open for suggestions from members of this House. So far there has been very little reaction other than this bill. Canada's major multipurpose harbours are under the general supervision of the Ministry of Transport. I should like to name some of these harbours. They include Belleville, Fraser River, Hamilton, Lakehead, Nanaimo, North Fraser, Oshawa, Port Alberni, Toronto and Windsor. In addition, there is a historic commission, 1912, which exists at Winnipeg-St. Boniface for river control.

I believe we ought not to forget all those smaller areas I have mentioned. Traditionally each commission had its own individual act of incorporation—Toronto, Hamilton and North Fraser for example—dating from the 1911-1913 period. But in 1964 Parliament passed the Harbour Commissions Act. A great number of difficulties related to the individual acts. The 1964 act provides uniform controls. This is really what I referred to at the beginning of my comments. It provides uniform control over such matters as revenues, expenditures, borrowing and financial matters in general. It also encourages active participation and local initiative in port promotion and development planning. To date, five commissions have been re-incorporated under this standard act, these being Fraser River, Lakehead, Nanaimo, Oshawa and Windsor.

As a general statement, the commissioners are responsible for the development, administration, promotion operation and maintenance of the harbour, and for maintaining a close liaison with the Ministry of Transport and with regional and local interests which they serve. The commissioners are local residents, prominent businessmen interested in local harbour affairs and the development of the port. Are we then saying that those who are presently serving on the harbour commissions are not qualified as the hon. member who presented the bill is suggesting? Their appointment is considered to be more in the nature of a director of a corporation and as such may be paid an honorarium from the harbour revenues in an amount approved by the governor in council.

•(1710)

Opposition to this bill falls into several categories and degrees of importance, the most serious of which is the effect on the control over the harbour and its functions by the federal government, in particular the Ministry of Transport. The 1964 act authorizes commissions to purchase lands, to construct and operate wharves and other harbour works. The commissioners administer federal harbour lands, wharves and other facilities which have been transferred to them by order in council, together with any municipal or provincial harbour lands transferred to their control. The commissions also have various monetary powers, expropriation rights and other related powers with degrees of control exercised by the governor in council.

The federal government has a vested interest in the harbours administered by the 1964 act, and this interest has been entrusted to the commissioners. Because the federal government has a statutory responsibility for navigation and shipping and the harbours and ports designed to service the marine transportation industry, it is felt that the powers and authority to appoint federal representatives cannot be abdicated.

A harbour commission is formed if certain basic requirements are met, these being, first, local initiative to promote the harbour; second, local willingness to contribute harbour front property; third, significant interests for long term development, and fourth, sufficient harbour revenues to support a separate administration.

If these conditions are met, a change from direct Ministry of Transport administration under the government Harbours and Piers Act and the Canada Shipping Act to administration by a harbour commission may be considered. Commissions are established, therefore, to carry out a function which otherwise would be carried out directly by the Ministry of Transport, and thus there is a delegation of authority by the ministry. Accordingly, federal appointees on a harbour commission are considered to be necessary components of the administrative function of a harbour commission, and under no circumstances should this federal element be deleted. This is the point that should be stressed most strongly in rejecting Bill C-39.

An argument against Bill C-39 can also be formulated on the basis of the federal interest in transportation. The marine administration of the Ministry of Transport is obligated to provide safe and efficient facilities and services in support of water-borne commerce and marine operations. In view of this goal, the federal government has provided a wide variety of ports and harbours, main line channels and canals, navigation aids, ice-breaking services, and the like. These facilities and services are, of course, utilized by ships of all nations. The five harbours which are administered under the 1964 Harbour Commissions Act are no exception.

This line of argument leads into a discussion of the twofold interest or responsibility of a harbour commission. As previously stated, commissions are formed on the basis of a great deal of local initiative and interest to promote the port to the benefit of the local community and its environs. The commissioners have the mandate to develop the local port potential to the maximum economic and social benefit of their community. That is the reasoning behind the appointment as commissioners of prominent local citizens who have a sincere interest in the total well-being of the port as a whole. It is felt that the appointment method best serves the community in that a careful selection of candidates can be made in view of the importance of the position of the harbour commission in the local community.

I just noted what was mentioned by the hon. member who presented this bill, and I might say that if he had his way I think the effect would be just the opposite from what he wishes. I think that the appointment of the commissioners should be the responsibility of the department under the 1964 act.

This local interest, although very important, is only one aspect of the function of a harbour commission. The second major interest of the commission is related to the fact that the harbours which are administered by the 1964 act are component parts of the national and international transportation system. The ports provide a vital land-water interface in the transport and transshipment of goods, people and services.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the hon. member could tell us—and I am not quite sure I understood what he was saying—whether he feels that the people in the area could not elect better people as commissioners than his government or any government could appoint. Is that what he is saying?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I did not understand the point made by the hon. member. Is he asking me a question regarding my view of the matter? If so, I would like him to repeat his question.

Mr. Reynolds: My point of order does not relate to the hon. member's view but his statement. He referred to my remarks. I am wondering—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member should address himself to the Chair. The hon. member is asking the parliamentary secretary a question regarding certain remarks. The parliamentary secretary is entitled to reply if he wishes, or he may complete his speech.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): May I accept that suggestion immediately, and upon concluding my statement I will be glad to answer the hon. member's question.

Because the British North America Act of 1867 placed navigation and shipping under the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal authority, the federal interest is an inherent part of harbour administration in Canada. This historic direction is carried out by the appointed commissioners and it is felt that commissioners elected by the municipality may not evidence this philosophy in their administration of the port, and thus the election of commissioners may not be in the best interest of Canada as a whole.

The national interest in port development and administration goes beyond the constitutional jurisdiction of shipping and navigation. The federal government, through various assistance programs, is involved in the economic development of various agencies and industries which use the port facilities. In view of the dependence of many of these industries on the port facilities in Canada, it is felt that the appointed commissioners function as a guiding control in the development of the port as a service function for these industries. The development of the total port hinterland in terms of the national economy is viewed as being an important function of harbour commissions, and in light of this it is felt that commissioners appointed by the governor in council and the municipalities involved best serve this purpose.

Bill C-39 calls for the election of capable and qualified people as commissioners, and a third line of argument may be built around this proposal. It is on this matter that the hon. member was questioning me, I believe. It is felt that on the whole, the commissioners who have been appointed in the past, both by federal and municipal authorities, have been dedicated to their task and have conscientiously carried out their port development and promotion policies with the best interest of the total industry in mind. It is felt that the appointed commissioners have not allowed their personal biases to influence their decision making process. We feel and fear that under certain, albeit hypothetical, conditions the situation could arise whereby elected commissioners could be influenced greatly by local pressure groups, and their decisions regarding port administration might not be made with all due regard to the real function of the port.

● (1720)

It has been our experience that local groups, concerned for example about ecology and pollution, can raise a strong lobby in the media and create a very biased public opinion with regard to port operations and administration. This has been very graphically evident in Hamilton, for example, where land fill operations and land exchanges between the commission and the local steel companies have developed into major public issues because of the actions of extreme lobbyists.

If Bill C-39 were to be passed it is possible that a concerned but extreme group of citizens could put forward a slate of candidates who would only be concerned with one segment of the port, or one problem associated with the port, to the subjugation of the over-all local and national interest. It is entirely possible that the elected commissioners could be wholly composed of fishermen, or stevedores or environmentalists and, as a result, the work of the harbour commission might possibly reflect their very strong personal biases and not the over-all concept of port development. We feel that the views of the various concerned or action groups which exist today must be given their fair voice and hearing, but that these people are not the ones to administer harbour commissions. It is felt that the appointed commissioners appreciate their responsibility to the larger community served by the port and that the appointment method should be continued.

A practical problem can be exemplified by the situation of the Fraser River Harbour Commission. The physical boundaries of this commission encompass five federal electoral districts including Burnaby-Richmond-Delta, Surrey-White Rock, New Westminster, Fraser Valley East and Fraser Valley West; and nine municipalities including Richmond, Delta, Surrey, New Westminster, Coquitlam, Pitt Meadows, Maple Ridge, Langley and the city of Port Coquitlam. To campaign effectively through nine municipalities is no easy task and the question arises: could justice be done in the election campaign of potential harbour commissioners? At present the appointment of two commissioners by agreement of the nine municipalities is working quite satisfactorily in the local interest.

On the business side, the harbour commissioners conform by legislation and policy to the whole concept of paid operation on a businesslike, self-sufficient financial basis. It is most essential therefore that businessmen of proven successful experience be appointed to the positions thus ensuring, in so far as possible, conformity with the national transportation policy.

The proposed bill should also be considered in the light of the work currently being conducted by the National Ports Council. The council is composed of the members of the National Harbours Board, the chairmen of the ten local port authorities of the National Harbours Board ports, the chairmen of the ten harbour commissions, the senior officials of the Ministry of Transport responsible for harbours and ports, and representatives of each provincial government and of certain other federal government departments. The council was set up to advise the Minister of Transport on matters relating to the improvement of port and harbour economies and structures and related maritime matters.

The first meeting of the council was held in September, 1972, and a second meeting was held in March, 1973. At that time, one of the major items under discussion related to ways and means of creating an instrument which would permit Canada's ports and harbours to function harmoniously within one structure. It was felt that possibly this could be achieved by bringing together all of the larger ports under a new single national network, under a new act that would encompass the best features of the National Harbours Board Act and the Harbour Commissions Act without disturbing the operation or administration of the existing harbour commissions. It was recommended that a review of the organization of Canada's ports and harbours should be undertaken, and in response the minister announced such a review some time ago.

The third meeting of the National Ports Council was held on October 10 of this year. At that meeting position papers were submitted by the harbour commissions and by the National Harbours Board local port authorities setting forth their views on a format for a harbour administration structure for Canada at the local, regional and national levels. Provincial representatives have also been asked to submit their views, and it is our intention to seek a melding of the various views into the position which was announced last spring after the second meeting.

What I have been saying, Mr. Speaker, is intended as a basic statement in opposition to the bill. There is other material which could be made available and that might be useful to answer other questions which hon. members may have. The ports and harbours of Canada comprise 25 large multi-purpose ports, some 300 smaller ports, and several hundred wharves on the east coast, the Great Lakes, the west coast, in the Arctic, and on interior lakes and rivers.

The administration of Canadian ports is generally under the Ministry of Transport's marine transportation administration which I mentioned a while ago, and which was formed in 1970. Canada's harbours are subdivided into National Harbours Board ports, harbour commissions, public harbours, and government wharves. The governing legislation in this field comprises the following acts: the Canada Shipping Act, Part XII, the Government Harbours and Piers Act, the Harbour Commissions Act 1964, the individual harbour commissioners acts for the harbours of Toronto, Hamilton, Belleville, Winnipeg and St. Boniface, North Fraser and Port Alberni, the National Harbours Board Act 1936, the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act and the Navigable Waters Protection Act. To outline each of these would take some time, and it is not my intention to do so at present.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. He can continue only with the unanimous agreement of the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the harbour commission system of harbour administration has prevailed in Canada in various forms dating from the pre-Confederation period. Existing acts of incorporation go back to 1911, but several new commissions have been incorporated within the past ten years. Traditionally each commission had its own individual act of incorporation, but in 1964 parliament passed the standard Harbour Commissions Act under which commissions may be established by order in council. Five commissions have been re-incorporated under this standard act and it is anticipated that others will follow in due course, thus leading to greater uniformity in the governing legislation.

• (1730)

A harbour commission operates through a set of bylaws made by the commissioners under the authority of their act and approved by the governor in council. These bylaws replace the harbour and wharf regulations which formerly applied when harbours were administered directly by the department. The bylaws vary according to the particular needs of the harbour, but basically they are designed to control traffic, to establish a schedule of rates and charges and to provide generally for the management of the harbour.

A harbour commission constitutes a largely autonomous body subject only to general guidance through the ministry of transport. A commission is free to engage staff as required to carry out the purposes of its act, but the new act of 1964 gives the minister of transport the right to approve the salary of the chief executive officer. Generally, their acts authorize commissions to purchase lands and to construct and operate wharves and other harbour works. They administer federal harbour lands, wharves, etc., transferred by order in council, together with any municipal harbour lands transferred to their control and management. They also have borrowing and other financial authority, expropriation rights and other related powers, with degrees of control exercised by the governor in council.

A harbour commission does not receive financial grants from the federal government. It is expected to operate out of revenues, though assistance may be given by the government in the form of cost-sharing arrangements for harbour works. The commission's share of costs is provided from its available funds or, if necessary, by means of federal loans or authorized chartered bank loans on which the commission pays full interest and amortization. As a harbour commission develops, it is expected to assume progressively more responsibility for capital works. None of the commissions in Canada are yet completely financially independent.

Under the act of 1964, after providing for operating costs, interest and depreciation, a commission may maintain funded reserves as approved by the Minister of Transport, with any remaining surplus payable to the Receiver General. The still existing acts of the 1910-1914 period provide for the payment of surplus funds to the municipality. In actual practice such surplus funds do not materialize. Harbour commissions are required to give an annual report of their operations to the minister, or governor in council, and various other controls are specified in their respective statutes. The 1964 act includes uniform provisions for such important matters as financial reporting and auditing by the minister.

In all cases, the appointment of harbour commissioners is made by the federal government and by the local municipality, and in all but two existing cases involving historical considerations, Toronto and Winnipeg, the majority of the members is appointed by the federal authority. Under the standard act of 1964, harbour commissions may be established by proclamation of the governor in council. The proclamation defines the harbour limits, states the corporate name and fixes the number of commissioners, not less than three and not more than five, with a majority being appointed by the federal authority and the remaining member or members appointed by the local municipal council.

Commissioners are appointed for terms not exceeding three years and may be reappointed for further terms. They may not be elected officials of other levels of government, for example the provincial legislature or municipal councils, and are not paid a salary. The commissioners are local residents and are usually prominent businessmen interested in local harbour affairs and development of the port. They elect their own chairman and hold regular meetings as may be necessary to deal with policy and planning matters and other major items, leaving the day to day harbour operations to the chief executive officer and other commission staff.

There are now five commissions operating under the standard act of 1964, namely Fraser River, Nanaimo, Lakehead, Oshawa and Windsor. The following ports were incorporated and come under harbour commissions: Toronto, Ontario, incorporated in 1911; Hamilton, Ontario, incorporated in 1912; Fraser River, British Columbia, formerly New Westminster, incorporated in 1913; North Fraser, B.C., incorporated in 1913; Port Alberni, B.C., incorporated in 1947; Belleville, Ontario, incorporated in 1952; Windsor, Ontario, incorporated in 1957; Lakehead, Ontario, including Port Arthur and Fort William, incorporated in 1958; Nanaimo, B.C., incorporated in 1960; Oshawa, Ontario, incorporated in 1960; and Winnipeg-St. Boniface, Manitoba, incorporated in 1912.

At the present time Canadian harbours are administered pursuant to a variety of legislation and policies, and to ensure a comprehensive system designed to more fully meet modern requirements it is expected that some change in the law will be required as well as changes in administrative procedures. In recent years the administration of Canadian ports and harbours has been under close study. In May, 1971, the then minister of transport announced a new Canadian port policy providing for greater local participation in management at National Harbours Board ports through new, local port authorities. This was in keeping with the cabinet committee decision of March 24, 1971. The new policy also provided for the establishment of a ports and harbours planning committee to review all major harbour development proposals and for the establishment of a national ports council with membership on a nationwide basis acting as an over-all advisory body.

The new ports and harbours planning committee was established as part of the Canadian marine transportation administration of the ministry of transport. The committee was set up by cabinet to review all major development proposals in National Harbours Board and harbour commission ports as well as at public harbours and government wharves. This important committee has been functioning since 1972 and several federal departments are represented, including the ministry of transport, the National Harbours Board and the Department of Public Works. Recognizing the increasing importance of environmental and urban planning considerations in the planning and development of Canada's ports, representatives of the Department of the Environment and the ministry of state for urban affairs are also participating actively in the work of the planning committee.

The council is composed of members of the National Harbours Board, the chairman of the ten local port authorities of the National Harbours Board ports, harbour commissions, the senior officials of the ministry of transport responsible for harbours and ports, and representatives of each provincial government and other federal government departments. The council was set up to advise the Minister of Transport on matters relating to the improvement of port and harbour economies and structures and related maritime matters.

The first meeting of the newly-established ports council was held in September, 1972, and the second session, a two-day meeting in Ottawa, was held in March, 1973. At that time one of the major items under discussion related to ways and means of creating an instrument which would permit Canada's ports and harbours to function harmoniously within one structure. Possibly this could be achieved by bringing together all the larger ports in a new, single national network under a new act that would encompass the best features of the National Harbours Board Act and the Harbour Commissions Act, without disturbing the operation or administration of the existing harbour commissions. On the recommendation of the National Ports Council, a review of the organization of Canada's ports and harbours will be undertaken.

At its last meeting, the council also considered the question of competition between ports, particularly vis-à-vis Canadian and United States ports, and some time was also devoted to the problems arising out of the evaluation of tankers and bulk carrier vessels of increasing size which the majority of the traditional, multipurpose ports in the world are unable to handle. It was recognized that the challenges facing Canada to develop deep water port facilities at suitable sites are complex and will require farsighted planning to meet our country's future needs.

The third meeting of the National Ports Council was held on October 10. At that meeting, position papers were submitted by the harbour commissions and by the National Harbours Board local port authorities setting forth their views on a format for a harbours administration structure for Canada at the local, regional and national levels. Provincial representatives have been asked to submit their views also, and it is our intention to seek a melting of the various views into the position which was announced last spring after the second meeting.

● (1740)

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this discussion on harbours. I live in Port Colborne, a harbour of considerable importance, with many varied and difficult problems to settle. This has given me some insight into harbour problems in general. As a member of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications I have become even more interested in problems with regard to water transportation.

When this bill was introduced it was suggested that local people should be elected to harbour commissions. On superficial examination this seems to be an excellent idea. Who other than local people who are interested in the growth and smooth working of their port facilities would be better able to look after the interests of a port? However, as I said, this opinion is arrived at only after very superficial examination.

The hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner) presented a very good breakdown of the present method of administering ports and harbours. I think my remarks will be of help to the hon. member who introduced the bill. There are many large harbour commissions which have local interests at heart, such as those in coastal cities and cities such as Toronto and Hamilton on inland waters. They have done a great deal for their local areas. Harbours of that type have not really contravened any of the overall regulations, so there is no reason why they should not continue hand in hand with the federal administration.

The hon. member who introduced the bill expressed fears about pollution of the environment. Naturally, members from British Columbia are worried about oil pollution. Oil pollution is a great menace to water, beaches, fish, fowl and persons who live along the shores. There is also a human danger. The problem of oil pollution could not be settled by a local administrative body. It is international in scope. There must be worldwide conferences on how to handle the problem. Yesterday we had a discussion about territorial waters. This has a large bearing on the oil pollution problem. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) has spoken about this problem many times in the House. He hails from British Columbia and is familiar with this problem, as well as the problem of sea transportation from Alaska to seattle. I do not think local bodies would have any effect on the question of oil pollution.

There is no reason why we should not have local representation in this regard. As the hon. member for London East pointed out, these bodies have local appointees with no function except to look after the interest of their local area. They have a great deal of time and are not torn by political considerations. They are not political appointments. They are not even representatives of the municipalities or regions. For these reasons I think such appointments are good.

The member who introduced this bill expressed concern worried about small ports. As has already been mentioned, there are hundreds of these. Some are not much more than marinas which have been built by private interests. Private ports of that kind in Ontario involve a great deal of regulation. Just like someone buying land where there is a beautiful beach, in order to create a private, money-making marina type of operation, private ports sometimes become an environmental hazard to residents of the area. The same thing could happen with private marinas. For that reason, a local group would not be sufficient.

Larger harbours which involve fishing, protection from storms, coastal and pleasure craft, should be treated uniformly across Canada. For example, we have had a great deal of discussion in committee about the ports in Newfoundland and other areas in the east. Fishing ports require upkeep. This involves more than could be handled by a local municipality. They have to be under the supervision of the federal government. To pass enough money around to satisfy all local needs would be very difficult. No matter how much they scream, the available money has to be divided equally.

This is the case in Port Colborne, and even in Welland. We have a nine-mile bypass which has been a great boon to shipping. The curving of the narrow channel in the city of Welland was eliminated. If we in Port Colborne and Welland had everything we have asked for, we would be another Montreal or Toronto. Although it would be very desirable from a local standpoint, it is impossible to squeeze that much money out of the government. I say that even though I am a member of this government. I have spent a great time trying to persuade the Department of Transport and the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority to find the money to do what we think should be done to improve our environment and beautify the old canal.

The National Harbours Board is a very worth-while institution. It functions in the area of grain transportation both by rail to port terminals and by transhipment. This must be a federal matter mainly, again, because of the financial aspects involved. However, I invite hon. members to look at the broader aspects of water transportation in this country, forgetting for a moment about the small ports and I do not mean that unkindly.

● (1750)

There are many hundreds of these small ports, and they need help; it is a practical problem. We should realize that Canada has a terrific water transportation system, including the ocean ports in the east and in the west. Improvements are constantly being sought. Efforts are being made to enlarge the port of Churchill which is at present open only for two or three months of the year. The day may come when more ports will be constructed in this region of Hudson Bay and James Bay, perhaps even in the Arctic itself. Those responsible for the planning of our deepwater ports must think nowadays of providing for ships which draw 80 feet or more, compared with 30 feet which we used to consider exceptional. These large vessels are already discharging cargoes of oil and general merchandise in Vancouver and Halifax and shortly, it is thought, it will be possible to bring them right up to Montreal.

Developments are under consideration concerning harbours at Rivière du Loup and Gros Cacouna both by the province of Quebec and by private developers. Anyone familiar with the Welland canal and the canal system in general from Montreal to Thunder Bay and Chicago knows that the seaway is used by ships as large as some of the biggest which ply a purely ocean trade. To facilitate the passage of such ships, the seaway will have to be enlarged—another $500 million or more will have to be spent on it. Increasing importance is being attached to water transportation because it is cheaper. But the attention of the federal government is needed if these tasks are to be done well.

The mover and the seconder of this bill are probably looking for help for the smaller ports. I should like to see every assistance possible given to these small ports in their rehabilitation both for pleasure and for commercial uses. However, the institution of action of this kind would, I think, call for a change in the Canadian Constitution which has made certain provisions respecting the care of both ocean and inland ports. I believe that one of my hon. friends who is to follow me in this debate will make this point in more detail from a legal standpoint.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks I should like to commend the idea which generated the bill now before us. However, I feel that as a private member I have an obligation to address myself to one particular difficulty which, as I see it, this measure presents. As I read the bill, it became evident that it gives rise to a substantial constitutional problem and in my view it is defective on that basis.

Section 91 of the British North America Act provides:

> It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada in relation to all matters not coming within the classes of subjects by this act assigned exclusively to the legislatures of the provinces; and for greater certainty, but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing terms in this section, it is hereby declared that notwithstanding anything in this act the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada extends to all matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated—

A number of subsections are then enumerated. I shall quote three of them:

9. Beacons, buoys, lighthouses and Sable Island.

10. Navigation and shipping.

12. Sea coast and inland fisheries.

It is an understanding of the whole system of government which seems to me lacking among the sponsors of this bill, because evidently the constitution provides that authority over ports and coastal matters is given to the federal government. As everyone knows, the federal government comes to power as the result of an election. There are in the constitution certain provisions with regard to elections at the provincial level as well. At the municipal level there are provisions for elections under statutes created by the provinces. I am sure no one here would wish to restrict or to limit our rights and prerogatives as members of the House, but I suggest that the effect of the bill before would do just that. Its sponsors are saying. in effect. "If we do not have the power to deal with harbours, we must let the public decide on a municipal basis, under electoral provisions set out in provincial legislation, the way in which these harbour commissions are to be appointed."

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

Mr. Blais: It appears to me that those who support the bill are ignoring the provisions of the constitution. I would even suggest that the bill should not even have been introduced because it is out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hour for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARAB-ISRAELI WAR

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the special order made earlier this day, Mr. Sharp, seconded by Mr. MacEachen, moves:

That this House do now adjourn.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, ten days ago Egyptian and Syrian troops launched heavily armoured attacks across the ceasefire lines of the Suez Canal and on the Golan Heights into territories occupied by Israel since 1967 and large-scale warfare replaced an uneasy truce in the Middle-East. I speak for the government and I think I speak for all members in this House when I deplore this development. Canadian sympathies go out to the people caught up in this dreadful tragedy. Canadian efforts must be directed to what can be done to stop the fighting and start the process of achieving by peaceful means a just and lasting settlement.

After these ten days of heavy fighting, with great losses in lives, the military outcome is still unclear and indeed the situation on the ground does not seem to have varied greatly from what it was at the resumption of hostilities. Egyptian forces are established in strength on the east bank of the Suez Canal but their further advance into Sinai is hotly contested by Israeli forces.

On the Golan Heights, Israel has apparently recovered ground yielded initially to Syrian forces but has met strong resistance in its penetration of Syrian territory. What is clear is that the continuing fighting in the air and at sea, as well as on the ground, the steadily mounting casualties on both sides, the resupply of destroyed arms, and finally the growing involvement of civilian populations altogether give a distressing picture unrelieved by clear hopes of a cessation of hostilities.

At a time like this we look to the United Nations. The Secretary General stated in his appeal last week:

I am profoundly concerned with the role of the UN in such circumstances. The primary purpose of our organization is the maintenance of international peace and security. If we fail in that role, the central point of the organization's existence is jeopardized.

With the United Nations Security Council apparently unable to agree on the terms of an appeal for a ceasefire, there is increasing concern that the conflict in the Middle-East may have wider implications for the world at large, and may indeed endanger the whole process of détente which eastern and western governments had laboriously been working at over the past few years and with which Canada has been very much concerned.

I do not intend to dwell on why the fighting resumed at this particular time. The facts are that the truce has been violently broken, a truce which never evolved as was intended toward a settlement in the intervening years since 1967. Immediately at the end of that conflict a long and difficult negotiation, in which Canada actively participated, took place in the Security Council of the United Nations, with the result that resolution 242 was adopted unanimously. Every word of that resolution was negotiated and its delicate balance results from a protracted effort at setting out in the clearest possible terms, acceptable to the greatest possible number of states, the main points which have to be dealt with in order that there may be the beginning of a settlement to the Middle-Eastern conflict which has been with us for 25 years.

I had thought, Mr. Speaker, that I might read into the record the terms of resolution 242, but in order to save time I wonder whether it might be agreed that the text be included in Hansard at this point in my speech.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The resolution referred to above is as follows:]

RESOLUTION 242 (1967)
Adopted by the Security Council at its 1382nd meeting, on 22 November, 1967

The Security Council,

Expressing its continuing concern with the grave situation in the Middle-East,

Emphasizing the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war and the need to work for a just and lasting peace in which every state in the area can live in security,

Emphasizing further that all member states in their acceptance of the Charter of the United Nations have undertaken a commitment to act in accordance with article 2 of the charter,

1. Affirms that the fulfilment of charter principles requires the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle-East which should include the application of both the following principles:

(i) Withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from territories occupied in the recent conflict;

(ii) Termination of all claims or states of belligerency and respect for and acknowledgement of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every state in the area and their right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries free from threats or acts of force;

2. Affirms further the necessity

(a) For guaranteeing freedom of navigation through international waterways in the area;

(b) For achieving a just settlement of the refugee problem;

(c) For guaranteeing the territorial inviolability and political independence of every state in the area, through measures including the establishment of demilitarized zones;

3. Requests the Secretary General to designate a special representative to proceed to the Middle-East to establish and maintain contacts with the states concerned in order to promote agreement and assist efforts to achieve a peaceful and accepted settlement in accordance with the provisions and principles in this resolution;

4. Requests the Secretary General to report to the Security Council on the progress of the efforts of the special representative as soon as possible.

Mr. Sharp: Canada has supported resolution 242 since its adoption in 1967. Our adherence has been total but strictly limited to the terms of the resolution itself, and we have always refused to add anything to it or subtract anything from it or even to interpret it or draw implications from it that were not immediately apparent from the very wording. Since it is the only text in the whole 25 years of recent Middle-Eastern history that has met with wide acceptance, we still believe that it constitutes the only suitable and available framework for peace.

● (2010)

This peace must come from a settlement negotiated by all the parties involved in the conflict. There is no other way to devise a just and lasting settlement. One implication that can be drawn from the recent resumption of hostilities is that even the greatest powers cannot impose a settlement but, on the contrary, may be drawn into the conflict on opposing sides and thereby endanger their own attempts at opening a dialogue and developing a better climate for the peaceful resolution of other world problems.

When I say that a negotiated settlement on the basis of resolution 242 is the only way finally to resolve the conflict, I am fully aware that since 1967 the two sides have never come together on the means of getting down to negotiations or the discussion of a settlement. While the numerous efforts of intermediaries such as Ambassador Jarring on behalf of the United Nations went on, the positions of the two sides never came quite close enough to open the avenue to negotiations and to the implementation of resolution 242. Therefore, the ceasefire which was to open these avenues finally broke down.

A ceasefire, while undoubtedly necessary at the earliest possible moment, as I said in my statements of October 6 and October 8, will not be enough. A ceasefire should provide the opportunity for the belligerents to discuss such questions as the drawing of border lines or the resettlement of civilian populations displaced by warfare, or indeed any of the other points mentioned in the resolution. Unfortunately, the past 25 years of conflict in the Middle-East prove that without the will to make peace on both sides, a ceasefire is only a temporary expedient between bouts of war and a period in which the two sides rearm and prepare for the next round of fighting.

Canadian policy, as I repeated in the House yesterday, begins from the premise that the State of Israel has a right to exist, just like any other state in the world, and the right to exist behind secure and recognized boundaries. Some of us, Mr. Speaker, have had the privilege of visiting Israel. We had the experience of flying from south to north in a few minutes, seeing the whole of Israel spread out below us. I think we understand the concern for recognized and secure boundaries.

The first states to recognize its boundaries must be its neighbours, those states that share these boundaries with it. It follows that the frontiers of Israel must be negotiated between these neighbour states and Israel in order that they will be accepted by all. A ceasefire which does not open the way for negotiation in that direction will not deal with the basic problems of the area. We understand the grave difficulties but we plead that a start be made on the road to a negotiated settlement.

I have noted with approval the statement of the nine member countries of the European Community, which says:

> This ceasefire, which would make it possible to spare the peoples affected by the war further tragic ordeals, should at the same time pave the way for true negotiation in an appropriate forum, permitting a settlement of the conflict in accordance with all the provisions of resolution 242.

As I have said on previous occasions, Canada remains prepared to play its part in a UN context if there is a useful role for us. We could envisage a contribution to peacekeeping if desired and required by the parties as well as the continuation of peace observation operations. These would, of course, be under the authority of the United Nations for we consider, as I said at New York on September 25, that only under such an authority do these operations stand the best chance of success. Canada has participated in the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization since 1954. While as a result of the current hostilities some of the UNTSO posts in the Suez Canal area have had to be evacuated, I should like to emphasize that UNTSO continues to exist even though it is unable to pursue fully at the present all of its commitments. It is important that it remain intact for future duty.

If the parties to the conflict are prepared to have a peacekeeping force constituted under the authority of the United Nations, we would be prepared to make our contribution. However, I would emphasize that parties to the conflict would first have to agree on the basis of a settlement and terms of reference for such a force for Canada to accept participation in peacekeeping. That is a lesson that our experience, particularly in Indo-China, has taught us. Unless there is a basic agreement by the parties involved, the peacekeeping functions cannot be discharged satisfactorily. We must admit that it is one of the distressing aspects of the situation that parties do not appear likely to agree at this time and it is very discouraging that the Security Council has so far been unable itself to agree on a call for a ceasefire or on any other action.

While the war is going on, others have growing responsibilities and can either prolong hostilities or exert great influence in the direction of peace. The major suppliers of arms to both sides obviously can exert a moderating or stimulating influence. The United States Secretary of State, Dr. Kissinger, in his press conference on Friday, October 12, issued a call for moderation on the part of the Soviet Union, especially in the matter of supplying arms. It is unfortunate that the Soviet Union should have continued supplying arms since this appeal was made, and of course we now have the situation in which the U.S. in its turn has also felt compelled to do so.

Earlier there were encouraging signs that both these powers were concerned that the conflict should not be widened or prolonged although signs now point in another direction. I hope that the great powers are still concerned to use their restraining influence to help bring about a ceasefire followed by negotiations. Otherwise one cannot envisage anything but a continuing conflict with increasing casualties on both sides and with the supplier states finding themselves arraigned in opposite camps as in the worst days of the cold war. It is a bleak prospect indeed that, with replenished supplies at their disposal, both sides should continue the artillery duels, the tank battles, the strafing and bombing by aircraft while casualties mount among the civilian population and the theatre of war tends increasingly to engulf cities away from the main field of battle.

There can be no victory in this atmosphere, but only losers on all sides. In the long term, since a just and lasting settlement is not possible without the agreement of both sides, it is obvious that the way to a settlement is not through a war of attrition which seems to be developing at this time. The longer this is allowed to continue, the more heavy will be the human losses and the material devastation.

Until now, the war has been fought largely in the territories of the Suez Canal and the Golan Heights and the fighting has not seriously affected the major population centres either in Syria, in Egypt or in Israel. But who can forsee what a prolongation of the war will bring? Already there are reports that the bombing of military targets has brought losses to the civilian populations. It would be an even more grievous conflict if ground warfare should bring the contending forces within gunfire of the large cities, as is likely to happen unless an end is put to the fight.

At the beginning of hostilities there were relatively few Canadians in the area and I am happy to report that until now there have been no casualties among the Canadian residents or tourists present. Canadian diplomatic missions in the war area are actively concerned about the safety of Canadian residents and visitors in their areas of responsibility. The embassies maintain records of Canadian residents and endeavour to keep track of visitors to assist in maintaining contact with them in time of trouble.

Contact is normally made by telephone, though telephone facilities sometimes become overloaded.

All international airports in the area, with the exception of Damascus and Cairo, remain open for scheduled flights. As a consequence, no build-up of stranded tourists wishing to return home has developed except in Cairo where on October 10, 1973, approximately 100 Canadian visitors were waiting for transportation from the area. This number is gradually being reduced, as tourists, with embassy assistance, obtain bookings on ships sailing from Alexandria and on buses to Benghazi. Arrangements are now being completed to enable any Canadian tourists who remain from this number, or residents who wish to do so, to leave on a ship which the Americans have chartered. Our embassies in Cairo and Tel Aviv have reported that they are not aware of any injuries to Canadians in their area and that all whom they have been able to contact are safe and well. All Canadians who wished to do so have already left Syria.

● (2020)

The present situation in the Security Council does not encourage us to envisage a Canadian initiative at the UN at this time. This does not mean that we remain inactive. The views of the Canadian government about the road to peace in the Middle-East as I have outlined them here and in previous statements have been conveyed to all the governments concerned. I personally made them known to the ambassadors of Arab countries represented in Ottawa and the Ambassador of Israel, as well as the Ambassador of the Soviet Union.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took the opportunity to speak to Chinese leaders and urge them to use their influence for peace. Our ambassadors abroad have been very active conferring with representatives of foreign governments, and special instructions have been issued to our ambassadors in the Middle-East to present these views to the governments of Israel, Egypt and Syria in particular. We will continue the vigorous activity. At the same time, we are maintaining our long-standing embargo on Canadian arms to parties in the Middle-East conflict.

I return to what I said at the beginning about Canadian sympathies for our fellow human beings who are caught up in this tragic situation. We want to see the citizens of Israel and of all the Arab countries live out their lives in peace and security without constant fear of another war. We want the refugees to have a settled home instead of living out their existence in frustration and plotting. We therefore urge with all the emphasis we can that there be a ceasefire as soon as possible, followed by immediate steps along the path toward a settlement negotiated by the parties to the conflict which is fair and just to all concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, during the first hours of the present parliament, we were deep into the Viet Nam problem; in the first hours of our return in this House, we are deeply involved in the Middle East conflict. We can no more remain indifferent to the conflict opposing Israel and the Arab states than to the tragedy in Viet Nam.

Arab-Israeli War

[English]

Mr. Speaker, the situation in the Middle East is one that concerns not only Canadians but all peoples who truly understand the potential that any regionalized international conflict has for spreading its effects across the world. The concern that Canadians share, regardless of where their private sympathies may lie with reference to the principals locked in conflict, makes it essential that this parliament provide the nation with a forum for a discussion and airing of the issues. That is why we called for this debate to take place.

I want to assure the minister that, as my leader indicated in his statement of this afternoon, our party is prepared to support any reasonable efforts on the part of the government to bring about a ceasefire, hopefully related to a continuing round of serious negotiations with reference to the material disputes in the Middle East.

Our purpose in requesting this debate is to ensure that the government has a full reading of the sentiment and concerns of this minority parliament as it prepares what initiatives it can take to deal with this tragic situation. I believe it is fair to say that most Canadians would prefer that our government reflected in a balanced sense our general concern about restoring a lasting peace to the Middle East. Yet I feel compelled to indicate that as a result of the UN observer-reported violations on the party of Egypt and Syria of the 1967 ceasefire lines, and the responsibility this violation must bear for the present crisis, it may be neither appropriate nor possible for Canada to maintain a perfect sense of balance in the present difficulties. Canada was a party to the UN vote that created the State of Israel and must therefore share the commitment expressed by the United Nations that Israel had a right to exist.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: That right must remain the cornerstone of our pursuit of peace and conciliation in the area. I do not believe that there can be any equivocation on this matter. Nevertheless, those who care about Israel's right to exist should understand that that right is strengthened by peace and weakened by war. That is why many friends of Israel have counselled a more conciliatory attitude on her part at times, and that is why many still believe that the ultimate securing of peace and an existence without war will depend on Israel's ability to sue for peace and continue that pursuit regardless of the odds. Perhaps, as friends of Israel, Canadians expect more of her and feel that she can and should take the first and perhaps the longest step if peace is to become a reality.

Yet it becomes clear that there are powers that do not want peace in the Middle-East and are determined to stand in its way at high cost to the region and to the world. If a true peace in the Middle-East results only from a lasting settlement, surely the basis for peace must be the desire not to make war. That is often a product of a carefully maintained military balance. Those interested in peace must of necessity be concerned about that balance and its maintenance.

The decision reached by Egypt and Syria must relate to some sensing on their part that somehow the balance was tipped in their favour. Be that the actual case or not, that sense could have come only from and at the encouragement of the Soviet Union. That, Sir, is the tragedy within the tragedy of the Middle-East. That the Soviet Union would pursue a policy of upsetting the existing balance of power there, while suing for peace, détente and understanding elsewhere, is incomprehensible and, frankly, puzzling. My party has joined with others in this House in welcoming the growth of détente and east-west understanding. What reasonable man would not? Yet there is a loophole in the détente of the Soviets, a loophole that seems to be wide enough for Arab and Israeli blood to flow quite freely. There are those who would talk about an arms embargo now. Yet to discuss that embargo after the weighing down by the Soviets of the scales on one side has brought about this outbreak seems a little naïve and not all that relevant.

● (2030)

My party takes the view that where previous initiatives have failed—and I refer to the Jarring mission of the U.N. in particular—new efforts should be undertaken. It may be possible that some new aegis for negotiation moderated by middle powers slightly more disinterested than the great powers would have some greater success than previous efforts. In any event, we would hope that it could be offered and that Canada might make that offer with others.

The extent of the present difficulty is really not known. To what extent will the Soviets continue their build-up? Will they supplement their technical advisers and other assistance with more damning participation? How far will our neighbour to the south be forced to go in order to maintain the balance? These are haunting questions that are being answered bit by bit as more and more die on both sides in the Middle-East.

There is one question that we as parliamentarians and human beings must answer, and answer quickly. Do we believe that Arab and Israeli blood is cheaper than our own? Are we prepared to say that Arabs and Israelis can continue to fight their battles without interference? Is this to be the approach that we can condone? I suggest that no one in this chamber wants any part of that type of thinking. I suggest that both the Arabs and the Israelis cannot afford many more little wars at regular intervals. I suggest that we will indeed be lucky if the present conflict remains within the category of a little war.

The international community must exert its influence on the belligerents so that the seeds of war are replaced by the seeds of peace. For example, on the question of the refugees, where something less than compromise has characterized the attitude of both sides, friends of both sides should encourage the creation of an international commission of inquiry, with representatives of both east and west, for the purpose of mapping out options and alternatives that the Middle-Eastern community might be encouraged to consider. It is clear that as long as Israel rejects responsibility for these individuals, and the Arab states propose only a solution that would threaten Israel's right to exist as a sovereign state, the principals to the dispute will not be able to reach a reasonable solution.

On the general question of negotiation, while not in any way questioning the good will or potential of the United Nations, I believe that the continuing conflict indicates that negotiations at the UN cannot take the place of negotiations between the principals themselves. If, as the Arabs claim, Israel occupies Arab territory, then the Arab states must seek to negotiate the return of that territory from Israel. If, as Israel claims, she desires but a lasting and secure peace, then she must negotiate that peace with the Arab states based on Arab concerns for the return of territory. While international agencies are not to be ruled out, their role might be more usefully that of bringing the two parties together to negotiate with one another.

[Mr. Wagner.]

Canadians of both Arab and Jewish origin are deeply concerned about the conflict, and for reasons that other Canadians understand full well. Our government can best respond to these groups' concerns by reflecting the bipartisan will of this House in seeking those initiatives that will truly open new avenues and channels of peace for both sides. This may involve some frank exchanges between our government and the Soviet Union. I feel sure the minister understands that he will have the support of my colleagues in any initiative he might take in this regard.

The Middle-East is not any more an issue at which Canadians can look in terms of one side being all right and another being all wrong. The sense of injustice and bitterness on both sides makes such an analysis most simplistic. Yet the present crisis, the present difficulty, cannot be laid at Israel's door. A massive Soviet-built force was set against Israel on her southern and northern flank. Notwithstanding the rationales both historically and otherwise that exist on both sides of the Middle-East dispute, the unilateral violation of the 1967 ceasefire lines cannot be construed as an act of peace or good will.

The tragedy of the Middle-East is told in the story of a horse trying to cross a small body of water in the Middle-East and finding a scorpion on its back poised to strike. The horse tried in vain to convince the scorpion that, should it strike, both would plummet to an untimely death on the river bed. As the scorpion struck and both sank to the depths, the horse turned in puzzlement to the scorpion and asked, "Why?" The scorpion laughed and answered, "Because this is the Middle-East." The scorpion rides not only the back of the Middle-East; it is riding the back of the entire world. If we cannot eradicate its venom, we must at least be united with others in searching for an antidote.

● (2040)

I happen to believe that it is an inestimable tragedy for Arab and Israeli to do battle rather than to live side by side. It is tragic that two great civilizations should be faced with no other alternative. And as soon as a war breaks out, the alternatives are always limited and the options are always restricted. The option of peace in the Middle-East will not be furthered by ceasefire violations. It can only be enhanced by a desire to turn a transient ceasefire into a permanent arrangement.

It is possible, Mr. Speaker, that the survival of peace in the Middle-East will be coupled with the issue of the survival of secure borders. There are still those who indicate that the only peace will be that following the destruction of Israel and the end of her survival. That, Mr.

Speaker, is something that no Canadian and no Canadian government could ever tolerate.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we join with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) in deeply regretting the breaking out of a new and bloody chapter in the tragic history of the Middle-East conflict and we express our most sincere sympathy for the people who are suffering on both sides of the line.

The renewal of war by the forces of Egypt and Syria on October 6, the Day of Atonement, marks the refusal to use the only means possible to bring about a just and durable peace. I refer to the process of negotiation on the basis of the formula set out in Security Council resolution 242, to which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has already referred. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that that is the only formula for peace that has found universal acceptance and that it is the only formula on which peace in the future in the Middle-East can be based.

The essence of that resolution was that it emphasized two aspects necessary to the peace. In the recital it spoke firstly of the inadmissibility of the acquisiton of territory by war, and secondly it spoke of the necessity to work for a just and lasting peace in which every state in the area can live in security. Section 1, the main operative section of the resolution, provided also for two things, the withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from territories occupied in the recent conflict, the termination of all claims or states of belligerency, and respect for and acknowledgement of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every state in the area and their right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries free from threats or acts of force. Mr. Speaker, you will note that I stressed the words "within secure and recognized boundaries" because they are essential to an understanding of this matter.

It will be noted that both the preamble and the resolution are balanced. They do not speak of the withdrawal of armed forces alone, but they balance that against the right of every state in the area to its independence and territorial integrity and sovereignty with the right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries. The one is made conditional upon the other. The tendency has been for the Arab states and those who favour them to put all their emphasis on the first part, on the withdrawal of the Israeli armed forces, and they refuse to give adequate attention to the second part, namely, the right of all states in the area to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries.

The problem, unfortunately, is and was that the resolution was ambiguous and incomplete. It did, as I have said, refer to secure and recognized boundaries, but it really constituted a series of guidelines and not an agreement. It lacked a definition of what the secure and recognized boundaries should be, and they remain in dispute. That dispute can only be properly resolved by bona fide negotiations. There is no other way to determine what those boundaries should be. But the Arab nations have refused negotiations, insisting on prior withdrawal by the Israeli forces. They have now taken steps to secure withdrawal by force.

That the present phase of the conflict was initiated by Egypt and Syria, later joined by other Arab states in various degrees, is abundantly clear. Let there be no pretence to the contrary. We recognize, as most people must, that the Arab states, particularly those bordering on Israel, may have legitimate cause for grievance. But what we cannot accept is that they should have resorted to force before efforts to negotiate had been tried and failed. This failure and unwillingness to negotiate, and the present resort to force, cannot, therefore, be condoned.

The modern State of Israel was the creation of immense determination and commendable industry and ingenuity on the part of the people of Israel. These efforts were contributed to by Israelis from many parts of the world who had ancient and traditional, and indeed continuing ties with Palestine, as indeed had the Arabs who resided in that area under the Ottoman empire. The creation of the modern State of Israel was also the creation of the world community acting through the United Nations. It followed the agony of the holocaust which gave an impelling motive to establish an independent state. The United Nations, by resolution 242 on November 22, 1967, clearly recognized the right of Israel to independence and security as well as the rights of neighbouring states in the Middle-East.

That resolution was adopted unanimously by the Security Council and accepted by all those concerned. As I have said, it failed to provide the adequate machinery for bringing about a just and durable peace, but it did at least clearly recognize the right to political independence and sovereignty of the State of Israel. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, the survival of Israel is a moral and political necessity and a priority for those who believe in democracy and international order. Until it is accepted, and accepted both formally and sincerely by all the nations concerned, no lasting peace can be secured.

We do not want to pretend that mistakes have not been made by the Israelis and that statements made by some of the leaders in that country have not been harsh and intransigent, however much justification they may have had, but we do say that the independence and security of Israel is an international concern. It cannot be abandoned without shame to the world which accepted it, and indeed created it.

It may be that the present attack by Egypt and Syria and their associated states was indeed, as they proclaimed, for limited objectives. But I for one cannot blame the Israelis for being sceptical about these limited objectives. After all, history is replete with the words of Arab leaders speaking to their own people in particular of the liquidation of the State of Israel and of driving the Israelis into the sea. Indeed, even today when the Egyptian president, Colonel Sadat, spoke of ending the war he set out two conditions, one being the total, immediate and unconditional Israeli withdrawal from all the Arab territories lost in 1967, and then he added this phrase, "as well as the return of the rights of the Palestinian people." What does this vague phrase imply? Israelis, naturally enough, interpret it as just another formula for the liquidation of Israel as a sovereign Jewish state.

● (2050)

As recently as February, 1971, Al Ahram, the prestigious government-controlled newspaper of Egypt, printed the following words:

—there are only two specific Arab goals at present, elimination of the consequences of the 1967 aggression through Israel's withdrawal from all the lands so occupied and—

Mark this, Mr. Speaker.

—elimination of the consequences of the 1948 aggression through the eradication of Israel.

The latter part, just a couple of years ago, was set out as the second goal of the Egyptians. Therefore I say, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot blame Israel for being somewhat sceptical about the professing of limited objectives. In any event, it is very difficult to limit objectives when war has been unleashed, as history has shown.

I suggest it is clear that there can be no lasting peace in the area without the acceptance of negotiations and the conclusion of an agreed peace. These negotiations must concern, among other things, the plight of the Palestinian refugees. Resolution 242 of the United Nations Security Council to which I have referred affirms the necessity for achieving a just settlement of the refugee problem. No one will suggest that this is an easy objective. It will demand constructive action on the part of the Arab states and of Israel, and indeed a contribution by the world community. Canada, as part of the world community, will have her share to contribute.

I think it is clear, too, that the problem of the refugees cannot be solved without the creation of peace in the area. As long as there is no acceptance of peace and no genuine negotiation, the refugees will very likely become a pawn in the bitter game of hatred and mistrust. I do not mean, by speaking of the problem of the refugees and of the necessity of its solution, to blame the existence of the problem on the State of Israel. Propaganda has often asserted that the refugees were thrust out or thrown out of their homes and farms. After the United Nations, in 1947, called for partition and the creation of two states in Palestine, the Arab states refused to accept the decision and attacked the State of Israel almost as it was born. They encouraged the flight of Arabs from their homes and farms, and no doubt encouraged the expectation that they would return with the victorious Arab forces.

Many Arabs who refused to flee and remained in Israel have lived in peace and prosperity in that country. Indeed, the Arabs have done little to alleviate the fate of the refugees and have appeared to maintain the status quo as a festering sore and a propaganda device in the struggle against Israel. However that may be, the rights and welfare of the homeless Palestinians is a major and essential item for the negotiation which must follow.

The government of Israel has from time to time asserted its willingness to contribute to the settlement of the refugee problem and, indeed, it is clearly in the interests of Israel that this problem be solved. Indeed, it is clearly to the interests of Israel, a nation infinitely smaller in numbers and ultimate resources than the Arab countries that surround it, that there be a lasting peace. It is hard to believe, therefore, that in negotiations the government of Israel, be they designated as hawks or doves, would not be willing to make substantial concessions so long as its ultimate security is not jeopardized and its existence and survival guaranteed.

[Mr. Brewin.]

Far above and beyond the present conflict there looms the threat of escalation. The two super powers have armed and supported the different protagonists for some time. Indeed, since the outbreak of the present conflict the U.S.S.R. seems to be fanning the flames. In so doing they are destroying the proposals of détente which they have claimed to support. Both the super powers have replenished or promised to replenish the arsenals of their clients which have been depleted through combat losses. In this way lies world disaster. The weapons handed out are modern, destructive, sophisticated and murderous in their power.

When the Security Council discussed resolution 242 there was consideration of a provision originally contained in the United States draft. That was a provision to halt the arms race in the Middle-East. The reason for its elimination is not clear. One's initial impression might be that it was cut out because Soviet large-scale support of supplies and military equipment to the Arab countries was insisted upon by the U.S.S.R. However, it is a fact of history that the Soviet draft resolution, presented at the final stage of the Security Council debate on resolution 242, included a similar call to halt the arms race, couched in almost identical terms to those used in the United States text.

If both the super powers at that time saw the necessity of containing their dangerous race to arm their friends in this explosive area, surely the time has now come when this resolution should again be considered. The Security Council should revive the proposal for an arms ban and, what is more, act upon it promptly. If they fail to do so, the continuance of the conflict threatens the peace of the whole world.

Canadians, Mr. Speaker, and every man of good will throughout the world, will earnestly hope for an early end to hostilities, and this time not just a ceasefire but a long and lasting peace. Canadians will also, as good members of the world community, be ready to assist in the reconstruction of the societies damaged by the conflict.

I can think of no better way to end my remarks, in which I have not tried to match the depth of my feelings with the length of my speech, than to quote Rabbi W. Gunther Plaut of Holy Blossom Temple, as quoted in an article in the Globe and Mail of Tuesday, October 9, in the following words:

Perchance we dare to hope, when the fire ceases, the fourth war will at last lead to negotiation and then to peace so that refugees may find a home and Arab and Jew, cousins by descent, may join in building the world of tomorrow.

Perhaps the rabbi was, in his reference to cousins, thinking of the African concept of the extended family. May the peoples of the Middle East find a way to build the world of tomorrow in the spirit of the extended family.

● (2100)

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, for the second time since I have been elected to this House, the war in the Middle East is the subject of an emergency debate. In fact, on June 8, 1967, we had a similar debate during the so called six-day war. At the beginning of the current conflict I heard people say that we did not have to worry and that this war would not last long.

We see that the conflict is to last since both parties involved are much better armed and the soldiers much better trained. During the debate of June 8, 1967, I said—and I would like to repeat it tonight—that in my humble opinion the reasons for this war which had been lasting for so long still existed and that the fire which broke out so suddenly these last few days had been smouldering for twenty years. The fact that the belligerents have laid down their arms does not mean that the fire is completely extinguished but rather that it is under control and that if the United Nations which are representing the world community do not take the necessary steps, this fire is liable to break out any day. Unfortunately this happened, the fire broke out again because the diplomacy mentioned tonight was not efficient. They have tried to convince the Jews on one side and the Arabs on the other that it was no good for them to fight and kill each other and I am almost convinced they agreed but had to answer: We can stop fighting but what are we going to do with the weapons you compel us to buy? This is the answer, this is the reason. If diplomacy is to be efficient we should rather convince those who are benefiting from this situation, the arms manufacturers and traders who are making money through the destruction of others. At the beginning of his remarks, if I did not misunderstand him, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) stated that Canada should take measures to ensure peace in the Middle East. But what measures can we take? Should we take up arms and kill them so that they will stop fighting. It is ridiculous! There is another means, persuasion. But should we try to convince those who fan that fire? Not very long ago, that is at the end of last spring, more specifically on May 30, was held in Ottawa the second annual conference of the Canada-Israel committee and I have in hand a policy statement which I would like to quote. It reads as follows:

> Canada has always distinguished itself at the international level thanks to its diplomacy, especially in the Middle East with its firm support for the establishment of the Israel State as well as with its contribution to the creation of a mechanism required for the application of a truce ordered by the United Nations. On the other hand, our country has always co-operated in the organization of special forces of the UN during the period covering the years 1949 to 1967. In addition, Canada enjoys at the present time a unique position which enables it to maintain friendly and neighbourly relations for our economic development with the United States as well as with the Soviet Union.
>
> Thanks to those relations as well as successful diplomatic efforts associated with the international assistance plan, the Canadian people are in a position to voice their opinion on all problems connected with the Middle East in the international forum as well as before the United Nations.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this policy statement of the Canada-Israel committee recognizes the value of the Canadian diplomacy and it is at that level, I think, that Canada can more effectively intervene. But it must make representations to great industrial nations that take advantage of those wars, not only in the Middle East but also in Viet Nam, Korea, the Congo as well as all other conflicts that have taken place since the World War II. And these four great international powers take advantage of these conflicts. On November 24, 1971, Le Droit of Ottawa, commenting on a report published by Stockholm's International Peace Research Institute, said that 90 per cent of the Third World's armaments were provided by four countries: The United States, the U.S.S.R., Great-Britain and France. And for 25 years, according to the report, all wars have been carried out in poor countries, and the weaponry used was provided in large part by industrialized nations of the northern hemisphere. It is obvious that these countries are not in a position to produce the armaments they use to kill one another. In return, they are practically obliged to give away especially oil and mostly, the objective of these wars is oil control. France provided Mirage aircraft to Libya. The U.S.S.R. provides 99 per cent of military equipment to Egypt, 100 per cent to Syria and 75 per cent to Irak. Great Britain sent 50 Phantom tanks and two war vessels to Libya, 40 per cent of the military hardware to Lebanon and 225 Centurion tanks to Israel. Both countries are provided with arms so they can fight together. If at least we gave armament to one side only. But we sell arms to both so they can kill each other. According to Perspectives dated June 13, 1970, the United States delivered about 12 helicopters and Phantom tanks to Syria as well as 10 F-104 jets to Jordan and 36 M-24 light tanks to Iraq. In La Presse of June 10, 1970, one can read the following:

> Military forces of Syria amount to 75,000 men, including 60,000 for land forces with 450 tanks and 500 armoured vehicles, all Russian made. Air forces have 55 Mig-21 and 75 Mig 15 and 17 as well as a number of transport training aircraft.

● (2110)

The Navy has about twenty ships, six of which are patrol vessels armed with missiles. The whole equipment, as we can see, is from the U.S.S.R. and has been delivered in the last few years. I recall, Mr. Speaker, the utterances from a former mayor of Montreal, Mr. Camilien Houde, who said that weapons are not made to decorate Christmas trees. It is quite obvious. Weapons are made to destroy and care has been taken to train the Israelis as well as the Arabs in order that they can use these modern weapons.

As I observe the way in which events develop, I have the impression that strangely enough, it looks like a chess competition where the champions use Jewish and Arab pawns, three million Jews on one side against 100 million Arabs on the other, and they are provided with the necessary weapons to balance forces. When weapons are in short supply, arrangements are made to have more delivered in sufficient quantity for the forces to always keep the balance.

According to the most recent statement by United States President Nixon concerning what he calls a massive shipment of Russian armament to the Arab states, he feels that he himself has to establish an airlift between the United States and Israel in order to balance forces and according to the very words of a spokesman for the American State Department, Robert McCloskey, the American decision was also dictated by the level of Israeli losses in equipment. Not men, equipment!

That is the concern of armament producing nations. Well, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State should on behalf of the Canadian government, intervene with these nations, use all his influence to convince industrialized nations which supply arms to these countries, not only in the Middle East but in all countries of the Third World, to put an end to that hypocrisy, to that destructive trade and insist that instead of supplying destructive weapons, they would rather supply means of production. That will be much more useful.

We often hear economists or demographers expressing fear that after the year two thousand earth will have difficulty feeding its inhabitants. In reading reports from the technicians and engineers who have worked there, especially in the Mount Sinai region, we see that they were unable to find enough sand to build concrete wells and had to use eastern sand which was brought by Greek boats.

This proves therefore that there is no sand in that desert, only argillaceous silt. With a little water such soil could grow green and produce. Mr. Speaker, instead of teaching these countries how to destroy one another, let us teach them how to produce and feed their people. By increasing food production in these areas, we shall not run the risk of coming up against other food producers since we are being told that inflation happens to be the result of a lack in production. Therefore, let us produce more.

Mr. Speaker, what we hope for tonight is to cease providing these countries with tools of destruction and provide them with the possibilities to live. I am convinced that they will learn quickly how to live in peace. They are seeking peace and are entitled to it. Therefore, let us stop fanning the fire so that peace may exist in the Middle East as it must everywhere else.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, an ancient philosopher once said: I am human and nothing human fails to move me. Today, we must all endorse this statement, not for reasons of universal culture and humanism, but simply for the purpose of survival, both individual and collective.

Tonight, I should like to take part in this discussion not in my capacity of member of the government or even of member of parliament, because in the face of a conflict such as the one which recently occurred in the Middle East, we must admit that our power and authority is very limited. It is therefore more as a Canadian and as a man that I should like to take part in this discussion and share the feelings of other Canadians and members of parliament.

First of all, I should like to express the feeling of anxiety of all Canadians whatever their origin as concerns the resumption of hostilities in the Middle East. Within 25 years, we have seen four major conflicts in that area, as well as a permanent situation of latent conflict, whether it be terrorism within the boundaries of the countries involved or outside these countries. I think there is no continent which has been spared the effects of this terrorism during the past 25 years.

We are now faced with a new conflict which does not seem about to end. This conflict will perhaps claim more lives than any other of the previous ones, and if it goes on for a long time, we shall certainly witness the disruption, if not the total destruction, of weak economies in most cases, in which the procurement of arms absorbs a considerable share of the budget which could be used for so many other purposes in the development of those countries.

Our concern grows over the implication of large powers in the present conflict and their inability to agree with one another within the Security Council of the United Nations. We take alarm at the evolution of a situation where, once again, small and middle powers might be used as simple pawns in a game whose rules are dictated by other countries. We take alarm at the possibility of a larger conflict because of the participation of third powers.

That feeling of concern is coupled with a deep sadness at seeing the failure of so many efforts over 25 years. It was with great enthusiasm that 25 years ago, the world welcomed the creation of the Israel State by the United Nations, and Canada participated through its vote in the United Nations. The creation of that new state raised many issues and left a number of unsolved problems in that region of the world, the most well known and difficult being the case of Palestinian refugees, and that problem has never been solved in spite of concerted efforts by the United Nations as well as small and large powers during all that period. Finally, we again failed in spite of all efforts made by the world during that period.

So it is with a feeling of relative helplessness and failure that we are here tonight when another war is raging in the Middle East. There is some danger that this feeling of helplessness causes us not only to become discouraged in the face of this situation, but even worse, to become indifferent.

And yet, even if only for brotherly solidarity with all men who suffer in this dispute, the civilian population, the soldiers who die or are injured, the families who suffer, even if only for brotherly solidarity towards all these people, we cannot remain indifferent. And to refuse to be discouraged does not mean either to indulge in flights of oratory and bombastic statements. It means very simply to humbly accept a role suited to us as a country and to take a position in keeping with the ideals of our foreign policy and worthy of respect at home as well as abroad.

Such has been the position taken by Canada for many years now, and I was happy to hear tonight the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) state clearly and appropriately the position of our country in such a tragic situation. For more than two decades, Canada has supplied military personnel to the United Nations peacekeeping brigade in that area of the Middle East. Moreover, Canada comes third among all the countries of the world who contribute to the United Nations agency for the relief of Palestine refugees, and following the 1967 war, Canada took part in the drafting of Resolution 242 of the Security Council that was passed in November 1967.

Today we reaffirm unreservedly our support of the right of Israel to exist as a sovereign state within secure boundaries recognized by the international community and especially by the neighbours of Israel. This also means that the sovereignty, the territorial integrity and the political independence of every state in the area must be respected and acknowledged and also that their right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries, free from threats or acts of force, must be respected as stated in Resolution 242 of the Security Council.

In addition to our support for the right of existence of Israel, we underline the necessity of a just and fair solution to the problem of Palestinian refugees.

Third, we appeal to all countries concerned so that they settle their conflicts through negotiation. Experience should prove to everyone that war will only generate a new war. More particularly, we appeal once more to all countries concerned so that they can conform to resolution 242 of the Security Council.

Fourth, we use all the good offices we have in the other countries as well as in the United Nations to bring the belligerent parties to a negotiated solution.

Finally, we state we are ready to give our contribution to a United Nations brigade which would have a guarantee of efficiency.

Mr. Speaker, on November 19, 1969, in this House, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), after a tour he had just made in the Middle East, made a statement which, in many respects, was prophetic. I should like to read parts of it. The Secretary of State for External Affairs declared and I quote:

> The situation in the Middle East today is tragic. There is so much to be done in that part of the world and the will and technology are there. The tragedy is that in so many of the countries the resources needed for development are tied up in an arid confrontation which threatens to burst into violent conflict.
>
> I left the Middle East with a profound sense of disquiet. Effective negotiation is not an immediate prospect. Escalation of the conflict is an immediate danger. In these circumstances, perhaps the best role for Canada to play in the foreseeable future is that of an understanding, compassionate, and objective observer, ready to assist if and when there is a specific task for us to undertake at the instance of both sides.

Unfortunately, the tragedy foreseen or felt by the Secretary of State for External Affairs has happened now. The part Canada may have to play is likely to be very humble but however it is encouraging to notice the unanimity of the political parties represented in this House in giving their support to everything the Canadian government can do to bring a negotiated solution to this tragic situation.

[English]

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I join with many members who have spoken in extending to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) my earnest good wishes and my commitment to assist him in any way he may find to work for good in this situation. I was somewhat appalled yesterday to hear him say that he would welcome a debate on this issue if it could be arranged at a time when it did not interfere with vital business going on in this House.

The Middle-East is aflame. Death and destruction are the order of the day, every day. Animosities deep and dangerous have been given warlike expression. Possible major involvement of the super powers is fearsomely threatening. In short, Sir, I cannot think of any matter, any issue, any human situation much more vital than the matter which, through the leadership of my colleague from Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), we are discussing tonight.

We would be less than human if we did not regard the Middle-East conflict with feelings of great dread and deep anxiety. The minister who preceded me, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), quoted a philosopher. To my mind come the words of the great poet, John Keats, who in his Hyperien referred to "one to whom the miseries of the world are misery". I think tonight of the many young people on both sides in the Middle East, many of the young military men whom I have met and by whom I was well treated in my visits to those parts of the world, and I wonder how many of them are casualties in the warfare that is gripping their lands.

We would be naïve, of course, to believe that the solution is easy or that Canada alone can pluck the flower safety from out the nettle danger. The ingredients comprising the present ominous situation are multitudinous and varied. History, religion, geography, natural resources, competition, great power intrusions—all of these, alas, are eternally present.

The Middle East, the cradle of mankind, has all through the ages, it seems, also been its battlefield. The bodies of those who fought for empires long since gone have mouldered to make the dust over which the modern, sophisticated machines of war move today. Indeed, sometimes I wonder whether the accuracy of the dreary final prophecy of Armageddon, which was in the Middle East, might not be tempted today as the world plays with fire in the most explosive part of our planet. The horrendous possibilities of today's tragedy cry out for the very best thought of the most thoughtful of men, and the wisest actions of the most activist of world citizens. We must cast aside easy prejudice or automatic passion. Canada, its government, its people, can and should be ready to nurture and nourish any glimmer of hope for a solution. We should be prepared to place real sacrifices upon the altar of peace. We begin this, I believe, by making an earnest effort toward objectivity founded on a concern for the aspirations, needs, values and anxieties of both contending groups.

● (2130)

The interpretations of yesterday's statement or, rather, replies to questions by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, were not helpful. In such a long chapter of conflict and assault, how can one say with much value who started a war? Indeed, a careful look at the situation would lead one to ask when the war had ever ceased. Certainly in the Hobbesian sense it had never ceased. We hear of violations, we hear of wholesale intrusions and raids. Was there ever a long period since 1948 when we did not hear of these? I wonder if there is a potent vitality to the allocating of blame as to who started the war this time and who started it last time.

A comparison of the terrorist activities of one group, and the shooting down from the skies of an innocent passenger plane by the other, are equally horrendous, equally reprehensible. None of us would want the war to go on a single minute. Such a potentially explosive situation in fact cannot long endure without grave risk to mankind's future in a world of thermonuclear realities.

One sentence in the minister's speech commends itself to all of us. He said that there are only losers on all sides. If the roar of artillery ceases—and it must—I would like to see Canada play a part in helping to bring a better era to this troubled part of the world. Canada's capacity for meaningful leadership or assistance will not be furthered by some of the interpretations placed upon the minister's responses of yesterday. This perhaps shows the difficulty and the danger of dealing with complicated matters through the interstices of the question period.

The United Nations Security Council resolution 242 called for secure and recognized boundaries for every state in the region, not for Israel alone. Israel was born in travail, bloodshed and terrorism and as a result of now well known double-dealing by the great powers of a generation ago. If we go back only to 1948 to try to get some of the roots of the present trouble and the dangers, we are not going back nearly far enough. The activity in the first great war by the then great powers is a shameful chapter: promises made to Jews, promises made to Arabs for favours to be received—promises which were mutually and internally contradictory. And yet we recognize today that Israel is a creation of the international community.

A few years ago when addressing a conference on the Middle-East situation in the ancient city of Cairo I said, making it clear at the time I believed that in that at least I was expressing the views of my fellow citizens, that Israel had the right to exist and that this is the Canadian point of view. I said further—this I said later in Tel Aviv—that I did not conceive that Israel has the right to exist on borders of its own choosing. This is an entirely different matter. The acquisition by force of lands of Arab countries is a constant disruptive irritant in the whole Middle-East. If secure boundaries for Israel mean diminished territory for her neighbours, can the world be astonished if those neighbours refuse to tolerate the continuance of such diminution of their sovereign territory?

Would it be likely that that situation could form the bedrock of lasting peace or the foundation of working agreements? We know in our hearts what the answer must be, so the question of space, the question of borders and the question of territory must be solved before peace can descend upon this long troubled region.

More vital than land, because people are always more vital than land, more significant, more precious, morally more compelling is the question of the Palestinian refugees. A million and a half people uprooted from their homes, fleeing in panic, fear and tragedy now residing in squalor, with glum resignation, in refugee camps. Mr. Speaker, I visited many of these concentrations of human deprivation. Having seen them, I shall never be the same again. To have this monumental human tragedy continue for a quarter of a century is a dark blot on the escutcheon and conscience of mankind, not only of the peoples in the area, not only of the combatants but of all of us.

I do not think it is enough, whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare does or not, for us to make grants to UNRWA. We do that; I am glad and proud that we do it, but it is not enough. No solution to the Middle-East crisis is possible without meaningful application and concern by others to the fate of these dispossessed people, thousands upon thousands of whom have never known a home but only a shack, a camp.

No matter what may be done in the peace force—and the signs at the moment are not encouraging, although I am impressed by the British foreign secretary's suggestion of this afternoon—I would hope that whatever Canada did, we would try to galvanize other countries to determine that this particular irritant, this particular outrage, this particular stimulant to hatred and war must be dealt with with energy, dispatch and compassion.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

I am reading the second volume of the autobiography of a great Canadian, Mr. Pearson. I read of the role he performed in 1956. Although the conditions are different today, I would like to see Canada move forward for peace. I would like to see Canada use every ounce of its moral leadership, and it has a good deal, to call upon all of these people. I agree with the spokesman for the Social Credit party that there are people beyond the region who are fishing in troubled waters and the world is suffering from their meddling.

I would hope that Canada would use its moral leadership to have the United Nations act through the Security Council—and there are provisions for bringing the matter before the General Assembly—so that world opinion may be mobilized to put to all these combatants the urgent necessity that they stop the war and begin, at long last, the peace.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, it is no doubt evident to hon. members that, because of my background, I am perhaps more emotionally involved in the tragic events in the Middle-East than some others in this House. But I hope that I can, none the less, try to view the situation objectively and fairly.

International debate has developed a language of its own, a language replete with insincerity, hypocrisy and double-talk. The result is deliberate confusion and obscurantist statements that do not say what they mean, nor mean what they say. This is the kind of thing we hear at the United Nations now from many quarters, but more particularly from the Soviet Union.

● (2140)

I often get the impression that I am witnessing a lynch mob ready to tear Israel apart. This is the central issue. What is at stake is the survival of Israel and perhaps the survival of the 2½ million to 3 million men, women and children of Jewish origin in that country. The Hitler holocaust is too clear in the memories of all decent human beings and is particularly too clear in the minds and hearts of Israelis for them not to defend themselves and their country with the passion and determination they have shown in four wars in one generation.

It is important, Sir, to recall that the State of Israel was established by the world community by a solemn resolution of the United Nations adopted unanimously. That resolution followed a report by a special commission on Palestine on which you may remember the distinguished Canadian, the late Mr. Justice Rand, served. It is also relevant to recall—and this is where the tragedy begins—that from the first day the Arab states refused to accept the decision of the United Nations and the first war, the war of 1948, ensued.

Modern Israel was born in conflict and in blood through no intention of the Israelis or the Jews who went there for safety and security. Ever since that day the issue has remained the same. Israel's Arab neighbours have never been willing to recognize or accept the existence of Israel as an independent sovereign state in the Middle-East.

There is no evidence, I am unhappy to say, that they are willing to do so even today. Here lies the essential tragedy of the situation.

The other tragedy, of course, is represented by the life of the Palestinian refugees, a condition that exercises the conscience of every civilized person. The war of 1948 produced refugees, whatever may have been the cause, and the 1967 war aggravated that situation. Throughout the period, I suggest to hon. members and I suggest to the people of the world, there have been only two possible solutions to this festering problem of the Palestinian refugees. The one solution was to settle the refugees in the areas available in Egypt and Jordan. This could have been done before now and can still be done.

To such a solution of that problem Israel would have had, and has, a moral duty to contribute immensely in funds and in technical help which its people are eminently qualified to provide. From personal conversations with the Prime Minister of Israel and members of her cabinet, I am convinced that the country was, and is, prepared to undertake its full share of this responsibility as part, and only as part, of a peace settlement in the area.

But this solution has been rejected not only by the Palestinians but by the Arab states and by all Palestinian organizations. Instead, they insist on regaining the lands which they left. I cannot fail to appreciate their desire, the cause of it and their frustrations at being away from what used to be their home. I do appreciate that. But what does their demand mean in simple, true, honest terms? Again, it means a determination to eliminate Israel. That is the only thing. The demand of the Palestinian organizations, no matter how sincere they may be, means the elimination of Israel and a plan to eliminate Israel as a Jewish society. I know they do not use that language. They have learned the language of international debate; they talk instead of ridding Palestine of Zionists. Surely this cannot and does not fool anybody.

Strictly speaking, there are Zionists outside Israel. Inside Israel there are only Israelis. Or, if anyone insists on using the term Zionist, then every one of the 2½ million to 3 million Jews within Israel is a Zionist, and when you talk about ridding Israel of Zionists you talk about ridding it of its entire Jewish population. This is the clear meaning of these terms used by some people who attempt to confuse and by others who innocently accept those terms. This, of course, is not acceptable to anybody who believes Israel has a right to exist.

So we come back full circle to the central issue, the right of Israel to exist as a Jewish state, as a Jewish society. It is in this context that the war must be seen and that the attitude of nations to that war must be judged. It is said by some that what the Arab states want now is to regain the territory captured by Israel in the 1967 war, that this justified their breach of the ceasefire agreement of June, 1967, and of the Security Council resolution 242 of November that year.

I hope that the Arab spokesmen are honest in their statements about limited objectives, but I cannot blame the Israelis for doubting them. I, myself doubt the reliability of these statements, first because limited war objectives are invariably abandoned by those who are victorious in them, and second because war was not necessary for these limited objectives. Peace negotiations could have achieved them without the agony and destruction of war. Security Council resolution 242 called for such negotiations. It did not call for unilateral withdrawal by Israel from the occupied territories. It called for withdrawal as part of peace negotiations and a peace treaty which gave Israel secure and recognized boundaries, as it gave to the states around Israel equal security and recognized boundaries. Thus, we have the tragedy of 1973 because such negotiations have not taken place. It will continue to be a tragedy there unless both Israel and the Arab states are ready to negotiate a lasting peace.

Some hon. members and some of my colleagues have asked, why is Israel not ready to negotiate without direct negotiation with the Arab states? I say, without using the double-talk of international debate, that you cannot have negotiations unless one of the parties is recognized, unless one of the party's right to exist is recognized. Therefore, a precondition for any negotiations whether direct or indirect, through Mr. Jarring or anyone else, through the United Nations or in any other way, is the acceptance by the Arab states of the existence of Israel and its right to exist in peace and security. Without that recognition, Sir, negotiations are not possible.

I believe that the present tragedy would not be with us, that we would by now have peace in the Middle-East if the big powers were not playing a despicable power game with the hopes and lives of the peoples in that area. At least the United States, Britain and France have made, and are making, efforts to bring peace, to effect peace, to "cool it" in the present situation. But the Soviet Union is doing precisely the opposite. It is not only recklessly rearming the Arab belligerents, forcing Israel to seek armaments from the United States, but it has been directly engaged in encouraging, indeed in bullying, additional Arab states to enter the war, so that Israel is now fighting not merely Egypt and Syria but the armies of six or eight states.

● (2150)

I would not suggest that Israel has been entirely without fault or that the Israeli government may not have made mistakes. The Israelis are human; they are as capable of error and misdeed as are all other human beings. But of one thing I am convinced: the Israelis desperately need peace, and because they desperately need it, they desperately want it. They are a small population of some three million with little expectation of a substantial increase in their population because the sources of migration of Jews to Israel are now almost completely exhausted. They face enemy neighbours and armed forces many times larger than their entire population. Therefore, Israel wants peace because it needs it desperately.

Like others, I have visited Israel. I have admired the progress which the Israelis have made, the way they have made deserts fertile and have built settlements and communities based on principles of co-operation and social justice. I do not enter into old arguments. The fact is that Israel was established by international action, that it has fought wars to defend its existence and has fully earned, I say to you, Mr. Speaker, universal support for its right to live in peace behind secure and recognized boundaries. On this basic issue there surely cannot be any such thing as a neutral attitude.

National pride and national conflict are always destructive of human values. It is doubly so in the Middle-East. When I saw the accomplishment of the Israelis inside their country, I could envisage the immense contribution they could make to the economic and social development of the entire area. What a tragedy for Arabs and Israelis alike that they do not concentrate their energies on advancing the standard of life of people now living in poverty and insecurity.

The war is tragic, the consequences are dangerous, but human history has known tragedies which have produced positive results. I can only hope that this may be the result of the present war. I am as desolate about the loss of Arab blood as I am about the loss of Jewish blood, but I say, Sir, Israel must not be abandoned by the civilized world, particularly in view of the ruthless attitude of the Soviet Union.

My final word is to say to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) that his statement tonight was dignified and realistic. He can rely on the support of all members of the House in anything Canada can do to resolve the war. I speak not only as a Jew but as a Canadian who believes in international justice and, above all, in a sense of justice and decency in my fellow Canadians.

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I believe that Canada can best serve the cause of peace in the Middle East by adopting a completely neutral, objective and unbiased attitude. This is the posture that should be adopted by our country in all of the international situations in which Canada is not directly involved. But I insist that it is singularly important for us to try to understand both sides in this unfortunate conflict in the Middle East, because it is my contention that up to now we have not been as objective as we should be and this kind of attitude will tend to reduce our credibility in world affairs rather than enhance the privileged position we have around the world.

It is difficult to be unbiased at the best of times, but it appears to be particularly difficult to be anything but pro-Israel in Canada because of the various pressures that have been brought to bear. First of all, most Canadians know little or nothing about the Arab point of view, and of course this is not surprising. For years the media in general have taken a pro-Israel stand, and only those Canadians who have been interested enough to find out the facts for themselves have been able to hear more than one side of the story.

Every question, every argument and every conflict in the world has at least two sides. It is up to us to realize this in Canada, and we should be doing everything we can not to be seduced by the one-sided reporting of the press. We cannot all have the privilege of visiting both sides in the Middle East, but it seems to me that at least our government should be objective enough to give the opportunity to members of parliament to be exposed to the whole story rather than to one point of view.

Since my entry into parliament I have made a particular effort not to take sides in any matter. I deplore taking sides in domestic matters for purely partisan reasons, and it is even more distasteful to me to be forced into a biased position in international matters. For this reason I made it my business to study both sides of the Nigerian-Biafran conflict and I have made it a point to visit Israel and some Arab countries in order to be appraised of the complete picture.

Similarly, although I find discrimination distasteful, unlike many of my confreres I refuse to make an out-of-hand condemnation of apartheid without knowing all of the facts and the points of view that exist in South Africa. I make a point of mentioning these things because I feel very strongly that the only way Canada can maintain its position of prestige in the world is by being open-minded and ready to accept all points of view.

It was in this context that I wrote a letter to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) last spring. My letter was a culmination of the frustration I had experienced as a member of parliament, particularly with respect to objectivity or lack of it in the Middle East situation. I quote as follows the contents of that letter:

My dear Minister:

On several occasions I have expressed my views regarding an apparent one-sided attitude with regards the Middle-East crisis. Even though Canada purports to be completely unbiased, there appears to be much less understanding for the Arab point of view than there is for the Israeli point of view.

The world was shocked and made a great outcry over the tragic events in Munich last year. Rightly so. I suggest to you however that some of the incidents that have taken place recently, not by a group of hot-headed terrorists, but by a government, were far more serious than the Munich tragedy. I refer to the shooting down of the civilian airliner and more recently to the Israeli raid in Beirut which was highly organized by the armed forces of Israel into the heart of Lebanon's capital where people were massacred in their beds. I have heard no outcry, nor has there been a debate in the House of Commons, nor has the committee been seized of this murderous act.

You are aware that I was a member of the external affairs committee for some time but have not been involved on that committee for the past two years. The reason is not because I have lost interest in the international affairs affecting Canada, on the contrary, I am probably more active in this regard than most of my colleagues. The reason is because that committee has done nothing or very little of importance since I have been an M.P. The Middle-East situation and what Canada's posture should be in that regard has never been a subject in that committee even though it is probably the most important international situation in the world today. Several other items of great importance have been ignored or haven't been considered worth bothering about.

With regards the Middle-East, if the population in Canada and the United States are not aware of both points of view it can be attributed to a superior skill at propaganda of one side over the other but surely members of parliament and your department cannot be placed in the same category as those subjected to the ordinary media. Surely the members of this House should be given the opportunity to understand both points of view and one of the best ways would be to have a complete and objective study in the committee. As far as I am concerned personally, you know that I have always insisted on exposing myself to both sides of every controversy. During the Nigerian civil war, I refused to return to Canada before having seen both sides. I have done everything in my power to keep an open mind regarding communist countries and went to Cuba for that reason. In the case of the Middle East, I made sure to visit Israel as well as the Arab countries and in this way I have practised what I believe should be Canada's attitude in maintaining a neutral, non-partisan point of view. I must say however that with the overwhelming evidence of Canadian indulgence regarding several crimes committed by Israel while at the same time condemning every act of even a remote terrorist makes it very tempting for me to take a partisan attitude in favour of the Arabs.

● (2200)

When I was in Cairo three years ago, I recommended that the Arabs give official recognition of the State of Israel and thereby show that they were willing to take a positive step toward solving the crisis. I actually believed that this would serve to convince Israel that negotiations could begin and a lasting peace could be agreed upon. Since that time the Arabs have stretched out their hand on many occasions in an effort to make peace with Israel and to have their lands restored but it has never been enough for Israel. It is becoming more and more obvious that Israel has no intention of withdrawing from any of the occupied country and since their aggressive attitude has not met with even a slap on the wrist from Canada or the United States there is no reason for them to change their aggressive attitude. Not only is this situation deplorable but it is made more so by the attitude of this country which seems to want to ignore the poor co-operation on the part of Israel. I suggest it is time our friendship for the Arab world be shown more positively by seeing that at least our elected representatives be given the opportunity to understand the Arab point of view.

That letter was dated April 12, 1973. The minister answered it and stated, among other things, that he did not think Canada was biased in its attitude. He pointed out that he did not find it helpful to comment publicly on every incident of violence related to the Israeli-Arab dispute. He pointed out that Canada remains committed to the Security Council resolution 242 as the best means of achieving peace in the Middle-East. He also stated that Canada supported the mission of Ambassador Jarring.

He suggested that if members of parliament are not sufficiently aware of the Arab point of view, a discussion of the situation should be initiated by means of a request to the chairman of the external affairs committee. Mr. Speaker, my experience with that committee, as quoted in my letter to the minister, would seem to obviate any formal request for discussion of a matter which seems to be the most important problem in the world today.

I found it amazing yesterday during the question period to witness the display in this House of some honourable members, in particular of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), asking the government to term as aggression the action of Syria and Egypt and to try to place the blame upon whom and at what point the first shot was fired. I did not notice the right honourable gentleman being so concerned—and I am sure he is always concerned about human rights—about the shooting down of the Lybian airliner by Israel some months ago. He was not ready to brand Israel as an aggressor when Syrian planes were shot down in international skies far away from Israeli borders a few weeks ago. Nor did he have any remarks to make when another civilian aircraft was forced down in Israel simply because they thought some undesirable people might be aboard.

What the right hon. gentleman does not seem to realize is that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. He deplores acts of terrorism, as we all do, when they are committed by Palestinians, but the same act committed with the sanction of the Israeli government into the heart of the Lebanese capital seems to be all right with him.

Then we have our friend the leader of the NDP. Yesterday he was very concerned in this House about Canada's position regarding the right of Israel to exist. He repeated this fear again tonight. I want to assure the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) that I believe in Israel's right to exist and I do not have a biased attitude in this regard. But I have enough objectivity to want to know if that right to exist on the part of Israel should exclude the right of the Palestinians to their homeland, and indeed if it should mean that we must condone the acquisition by Israel of a piece of Syria, a piece of Jordan and a piece of Egypt, as well as the creation of a racist state throughout all of Palestine where no one but Jews can exist as first-class citizens.

I have said that Canada has taken a one-sided view because it does not know both sides of the story. It is not possible for any of us here to make any kind of judgment unless we understand the problem itself. We cannot go into all the history here, but a knowledge of 50 years of history presents realities that should be remembered by those in this House who are ready to condemn out of hand, without knowing the facts, the results of this long chain of events that have been taking place in the Middle East.

I am sure there is none of us here who does not sympathize with the long suffering of the Jews in Europe. But, I ask, should the Arabs be punished because of it? In this respect a leading Israeli journalist said, "Whatever their subsequent follies and outrages might be, the punishment of the Arabs for the sins of Europe must burden the conscience of Israelis for a long time to come".

What of the great powers? They have continually interfered in the Middle East situation. Before they started their meddling half a century ago, Arabs and Jews lived side by side without serious problems. Since the great powers have created this terrible situation, it is up to them to solve it. But the solution is not in the feeding of arms to both sides of the conflict.

Unfortunately, the United Nations has not been able to do very much. Resolution 242 was passed unanimously. It asked for the withdrawal of the Israelis from lands which were occupied by force during the 1967 war. The resolution has gone unheeded. When Mr. Rogers, the secretary of state of the United States, made an effort to negotiate a settlement, his efforts were turned down completely by Israel. Dr. Jarring made a valiant effort on behalf of the UN and his efforts were turned down by Israel, which in effect suspended his mission. Therefore, it would appear that only the big powers would be able to bring about a settlement. In any case, as long as the Israelis occupy Arab lands which were acquired by force, the Arabs feel they are in no position to negotiate because there is nothing left to bargain with.

Where does Canada stand in all of this? I reiterate that there is only one possible course for us to take and that is one of objectivity. However, we cannot possibly be objective if we continually listen to only one side of the story. For example, how can we receive unbiased reports from Canadian journalists who report the war through information received in Tel Aviv? This one-sided reporting has been typical of what has been available to Canadians for many years. In any case, there is no excuse for the Canadian government to adopt a one-sided attitude. It is up to us to support whatever effort could bring about a just peace.

A few hours ago we heard that the Egyptian president offered a measure of negotiation. I do not know what the details were because I was in this chamber and heard very little about what was said. Obviously, he is now in a position of greater strength and sees a possible way to end hostilities—hostilities, Mr. Speaker, that in the end can be of benefit to no one. Perhaps Canada could encourage Israel to accept this kind of offer. Certainly, we all want to see an end to bloodshed, but we want everyone to be able to live in dignity and safety. Whatever we do, it is time for Canadians in high places to act as statesmen and not from political considerations which may affect them in their individual constituencies.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in following the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) may I say that, as always, he spoke clearly and no doubt with a great deal of conviction. Yet throughout his speech he failed to direct his mind to any approach or action that we, as Canadians, should consider in order to end this tragic war. I think I can say on behalf of all hon. members that casting back in history and blaming all the actors on the stage of time will do nothing to stop the fighting. That should be the end to which we ought to direct our minds tonight. My hon. friend said that the only possible course for Canada is one of objectivity. I say no, that is not a course: it is a stance, or attitude, and a commendable one, and from that vantage point a decision must be made and a course of action determined.

All Canadians ought to deplore this war, and I believe the majority do. But in a finite world, living as we do in a community of nations, we cannot be indifferent to the outcome of this war. No matter how objective, detached or neutral we try to be, in one way or another, consciously or unconsciously, Canadians are in their own minds asking three specific questions. I suggest the first is, how did this war start? Second, what are the objectives of the belligerents. Third, how can it be stopped? The answers to these questions must determine the attitude Canada takes toward this conflict and to the parties engaged in it.

● (2210)

I say, and I say it very carefully, in matters as grave as this we cannot indulge in the luxury of having no opinion. As I said, we are a member of the community of nations as established, however imperfectly, in the United Nations. On this issue, with its potential for disaster and its ultimate questions of international morality, we cannot abdicate our responsibility to make our own decisions as to what the parties to the conflict ought to do both in the short-term and in the long-term. I cannot say too strongly that to have no opinion, to try to abstain from any position, is to abdicate completely that responsibility which is ours as a member of the United Nations and as a nation that prides itself on its sovereignty and high purpose in the world.

When we ask, how did this war start, I do not mean what are the causes. For that we must search history, and such a search hardly concludes with an answer that satisfies anybody, let alone the belligerents. However, as to what happened the facts are clear and uncontroverted. They are, on October 6 the armies of Egypt and Syria attacked Israeli forces in the Sinai and the Golan Heights. This ended an uneasy truce that had existed since 1967. Put simply, Egypt and Syria deliberately chose to ignore the provisions of United Nations resolution 242 and decided to forgo a negotiated settlement in favour of a resort to armed conflict as a means of settling the differences existing between Israel and themselves.

The second question is, what are the objectives of the belligerents? The Israelis are fighting because they have no choice. The enemies of Israel are fighting either to restore the boundaries prior to the 1967 six-day war or to extinguish the state of Israel. I say the Israelis are fighting because they have no choice. If the objective of the Arab states is to restore the old boundaries, those boundaries leave Israel in a hopeless position to defend itself, lacking other guarantees which are presently non-existent. If the objective is the extermination of Israel, the question answers itself.

Out of this, one thing is certain. Only one side in this conflict has the option to withdraw, to cease the immediate hostilities. That, of course, is the stronger side. There is an old saying that it takes two to make a fight. What is often forgotten is the equally true observation that in an unequal contest it only takes one side to end it. That option, as I have said, is only open to the stronger. It ought to be plain that of the belligerents in this case, the Arab states are now the stronger militarily both for the present and no doubt the future, at least with the continuation of present conditions and circumstances. I refer, of course, to the overwhelming numerical superiority of the Arab nations and their ability to acquire supplies of modern weapons.

As other hon. members have pointed out, there is a deadlock. While we would wish that at an early moment both sides could simultaneously agree to a ceasefire, such an event is unlikely. One side must make the first move. That must be the side with the least to lose by such a move. In my view, Israel cannot unilaterally withdraw from engagement, that is, make the first move without risking the elimination of the Israeli state.

But there is such an option open to the Arab countries. Such a move could be made with no risk to their continuation as viable nations and would be greeted around the world with admiration which would redound to their international credit. Such a move would clearly indicate that the Arab nations agree with this country that Israel has a right to exist, not just for the moment but indefinitely into the future.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we should do everything possible to persuade the Arab nations and the other nations of the world, including the Soviet Union, that if the immediate fighting is to stop without further bloodshed, someone must make the first move. And the first move in this case must arise from the magnanimity of those who are immediately and potentially the stronger.

The question of borders, the question of refugees and other questions such as the relations between Israel and its neighbours must be negotiated. If the negotiations are to be successful, both sides will have to compromise or alter present strongly held positions. But the weaker cannot disengage in the absence of some meaningful assurance from the stronger. It is, I believe, this message which Canada must carry to the belligerents so that a new start and, perhaps, a real start can be made to establish peace between nations on both sides of this conflict whose friendship with Canada is to our mutual advantage and is the profound desire of the Canadian people.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the present conflict between Israel and Egypt breaks the heart of the whole world. But this conflict is far from being recent, it is the consequence of actions which have been taking place for several years. I listened to the members of the Progressive Conservative, New Democratic and Liberal parties. Some of them say: We must make a decision. The Progressive Conservatives today opened the debate which is now going on, by saying that we should take a stand.

● (2220)

And having listened to them, I found out that none of them is taking a stand except the member for York South who said that Israel has a right to exist. I also believe that Israel has a right to exist. This is a fact.

But, Mr. Speaker, how can we put an end to the conflict over there? Even if we discussed the matter here for two days, what could we do to solve the problem, except to suggest to the Great Powers to convince Israel and the Arab nations to sit around a table where they could discuss their problems and reach an agreement.

This is what is called diplomacy. Diplomacy has been going on in the Middle East for quite a while. The failure of diplomacy in the Middle East did not start in 1940. In 1916, almost 60 years ago, following the dismemberment of the Ottoman empire after the First World War, Great Britain and France agreed to place Palestine under British mandate.

Everybody agrees on this. One year later, in 1917, Great Britain published the Balfour Declaration advocating the creation of a Jewish national home state in Palestine. In 1919, two years later, an American Commission concluded that the Balfour Declaration could not be enforced without the use of military force against the non-Jewish populations. In 1922, the League of Nations placed the Palestine territory under British mandate. This territory is divided between Palestine and Transjordan. While the Allies of Great Britain supported the Balfour Declaration, the Arab states responded time and again with explosions of violence.

This took place in 1922, that is, 51 years ago. In 1937, the Arab-Jewish conflict convinced Great Britain that the mandate was inapplicable. Palestine had to be divided according to the British. When Great Britain went back on her decision concerning the Balfour Declaration, zionists reacted with violence.

In 1947, British diplomats recognize their failure and leave it to the United Nations Organization to solve the crisis. Great Britain gives up its mandate in 1948. Israel proclaims its independence with the support of the United States and U.S.S.R. Both powers support the independence of Israel.

The war breaks out in the Middle East and ends in the victory of Israel and the armistice of 1948. In 1956, France and Great Britain join Israelis in attacking Egypt. This was not too long ago. The U.S.S.R. and the United States intervene to stop the war, an U.N. force is established for the maintenance of peace. Then, peace was maintained.

Arab-Israeli War

In 1967, the Six Day War broke out; Egypt expelled the UN Force, the American and Russian organisation, and closed down the straits of Tiran. During a blitz war, the Israelis get, thanks to their offensive the Sinaï Peninsula, the Golan heights as well as the lands on the left side of the Jordan river.

In 1970 the UN representative, Mr. Gunnar Jarring, organized through his mediation the talks between Israel, Egypt and Jordan. Israel took exception and withdraw from the talks. The latest developments date back to 1971. Egypt signed a treaty of friendship for 15 years with Soviet Russia, after, of course, the U.S.S.R. had endorsed the creation of the state of Israel. In 1972, Egypt sent the Soviet advisors back home. In 1973, the precarious peace was shaken up by commando raids and guerrilla attacks. And now, it is war.

Mr. Speaker, if we consider that background we see that there are two sides there that have practically no say in that matter: the Israelis and the Arabs. At a certain point France and England decide for those two countries. At another point it is the United States, the U.S.S.R. and Israel, and the Arabs have nothing to say. And things go back and forth. And here we saw how members rise and say that a decision must be reached. Yesterday, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) said that the government must take a stand. Earlier I heard the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) make a cautious speech, saying that no government can take a stand. Furthermore, he said it in English so he would not be understood but I did anyway.

Mr. Speaker, it is the same thing with the Liberals. The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) is honest about it. One thing is sure, those who are going to solve the problem out there are not Canadians, Russians or Americans, but Jews and Arabs. It is a matter of offering our mediation to allow them to meet and talk like men. Let the fighting stop. I believe there is enough room in the world for understanding. There never was any formal agreement in that area. If we take position in favour of the Arabs the Jews will hold it against us. If we take position for the Jews, the Arabs will be offended. And when we meet them, they say it is up to them to solve their problems. I do recognize that it us up to them to solve their problems. The financial schemers behind the conflicts who are seeking oil ought to be hunted out. There are some in the United States and some in the Soviet Union. Also there are the arms dealers. Right now, while there is a war going on, France—Long live free France!—as well as England, are selling weapons to the Arabs and to the Jews. That is a paying proposition, for they sell twice as many weapons. So, they make profits. Not one word is heard from either France or England.

Mr. Prud'homme: So that they may have them destroyed and order some more.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Sure enough, more are being destroyed. At least if they were interested in manufacturing tractors to help those people produce wheat in their country. But a tractor would last ten years and this is not good for business. Whereas howitzers may be destroyed immediately. Another one is sold the next day.

The "payoff" is higher. This is the game played behind the scene by America and Russia, as well as by France and England. You hear nothing from them. The Americans say: Israel must be protected: The Russians say: the Arabs must be protected.

I fail to understand why the NDP will from time to time argue for the U.S.S.R. or Czechoslovakia. Those countries are going to finance the Arabs against them, and then they speak in favour of socialism. The Canadian government, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) was right when he said earlier that Canada can suggest a meeting of the states involved. Everyone is anxious to see the end of this conflict but let them not feed it any longer. If weapons were no longer supplied or sold there, these people would have to stop fighting. I think that Canada can make a contribution by suggesting to the great powers to put an end to the sale of arms, by suggesting to France and England that they do the same so that this war may finally end and so that the Jews may be recognized in their country and the Arabs in their own. If such a right has been given to the Israelis, they are entitled to live in the world, to have their country just as the Arabs are entitled to theirs. But let us put a stop to this fighting done for the sake of countries having only financial interests in such conflicts.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 10.30 o'clock p.m. this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 o'clock p.m., pursuant to the special order made this day.

At 10.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order made this day.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, October 17, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. MacINNIS—DISCREPANCY BETWEEN DOCUMENT PRESENTED TO COURT BY CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION AND EVIDENCE TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising from an answer given me yesterday by the Minister of Justice when I asked him a question with respect to the discrepancy between a court document presented by the Cape Breton Development Corporation and evidence to the contrary as expressed in a letter, and before a parliamentary committee, by Mr. Tom Kent, the responsible officer for that Crown corporation.

I have evidence to substantiate my statement and refute what was said by the Minister of Justice, who told the House he had had this discrepancy investigated. Perhaps I should first quote what the Minister of Justice said yesterday as reported at page 6906 of Hansard in the second column:

> I have had a report on the matter which leads me to believe there is no such element present.

I have here a letter dated April 14, 1969, referred to as exhibit E, presented to the court by the Cape Breton Development Corporation and signed by E. C. Cuddy, director of claims and benefits of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, in which a statement is made about preretirement leave as applied to Cape Breton miners. I do not intend to quote the whole letter, but this is part of it:

> As mentioned in your sub-plan, payments are not earnings.

It is emphatically stated in this document, used in court, that they are not earnings.

I quote, now, from a letter directed to me by Mr. Tom Kent on April 3, 1973, after the court case had been terminated. The opening paragraph reads:

> I think you must be misunderstanding PRL. The payment has always been considered earnings at all times.

Mr. Speaker, there is no question or doubt that the views expressed in court by Devco and those expressed after the court action by the president of that Crown corporation are diametrically opposed.

If this evidence is not enough to convince the minister that the whole system has gone wrong and that the miners of Cape Breton are not getting their due in accordance with the legislation passed in the House in 1967, I can provide the hon. gentleman with details of a discrepancy between the views of the late Mr. Justice Gillis and the Minister of Justice himself. Two points of view expressed in a letter from the minister to myself are diametrically opposed to what was contained in the judgment handed down by the late Mr. Justice Gillis.

I am prepared to table the letter from Mr. Kent. I am also prepared to table a copy of the document used by Devco in order that these discrepancies may be fully examined by the minister. If the hon. gentleman wishes, I will also table his own letter and the judgment handed down by the late Mr. Justice Gillis so that he may be aware of the discrepancies in them.

During the hearings in the committee the discrepancies which arose were too numerous for me to mention at this time. I refer this matter to the Minister of Justice. What he is supposed to provide in this country is justice for all, not justice for the high-paid employees of this corporation who have taken care of themselves and who have yet to initiate any action to implement the legislation as provided in section 18(a)(1) and 18(a)(2) of the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act. I can provide document upon document, including one of the minister's own, pointing out the discrepancies in this whole affair.

Mr. Speaker: With respect, I suggest to the hon. member and to the Minister of Justice, who have been involved in an exchange of questions and answers for some time in relation to the very important matter which has been raised, that there should not be a debate at this time. The hon. member has raised this matter by way of a question of privilege, but it would be very difficult for the Chair to agree that there is here a breach of parliamentary privilege which ought to be looked into and investigated by a committee of the House.

The hon. member may have a grievance. He says there are discrepancies between statements made or letters which have been written. That is quite possible. But, with respect, I suggest this is not the type of situation which can be cleared up by means of a debate under the guise of a question of privilege. The whole matter to which the hon. member has been alluding has, in the past, been considered by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. If the hon. member has a grievance, as may well be the case, maybe it could be revived in that way. As I said, I respectfully suggest it should be done in some other way than by a debate on a question of privilege.

The hon. member referred to the possibility of tabling documents. The Standing Orders do not provide for this procedure. If the hon. member has documents he would like the minister to see, he can always send them to the minister. Regretfully, I have to inform him that, as he knows, hon. members cannot table documents in the way he is now proposing to do. I would suggest that the documents be forwarded to the minister and that, with the agreement of the Minister of Justice and all members of the House we might for the time being allow the matter to rest on the statement which the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond has made.

Privilege, Mr. Lewis

● (1410)

MR. LEWIS—BUGGING OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY CAUCUS MEETING

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am. I rise on a very serious question of privilege. I appreciate that I have not given Your Honour notice as required by the rules, but I did not learn about the matter I want to raise until literally 12 minutes ago when the bells were already ringing.

I do not want to make a mountain out of this but it does concern a very important matter of privilege affecting the House of Commons, parliament and all members of parliament. I learned at about two o'clock—I grin a little about it because of events that have happened elsewhere—that we had a bug at our caucus meeting this morning. During the meeting of the caucus the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), who is our caucus chairman, pulled a little mike out from under the table, put it on top of the table, and said to me and to others: "This looks like a bugging device". Having no knowledge of such things, I could not tell him whether it was or not and we went on with the meeting. However, the person responsible for placing that bug there, a journalist working for the CTV network—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —was honest enough to come up to me at about two o'clock and inform me that they had done this in connection with a program that they have in mind, to be aired in the month of November, in which they will be attempting to show, so he informed me, how easy bugging a meeting is, and how important legislation to deal with the matter may be.

Whatever purpose, admirable or not, the people responsible for this in the CTV network may have had in mind, I suggest to you, Sir, that it is a violation of everything I can think of in connection with the privileges of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Whether or not it is illegal under the present Criminal Code, or any other statute of which I may not know, is irrelevant. Certainly it is totally illegal as far as the rules of parliament are concerned. I hope that those responsible will not find it more offensive than I intend it to be when I say that it is morally and socially wrong in every respect for them to have done this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: No member of parliament, no politician, certainly not a leader of a political party, wants to alienate anybody in the fourth estate or fifth estate, or maybe all four or five estates that they now represent, as I sometimes think. But I believe that the search for news and for spectacular things in the news, particularly as far as television is concerned, should no longer justify and never should have justified the kind of action which is considered by everybody with any sense of propriety to be indecent and anti-social.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I have no motion to move, Mr. Speaker, though I am going to suggest something in a moment. I am not worried about what happened at the caucus or about the publicity it receives. I am certain that the people concerned, when they were honest enough to tell me about it, will be honourable enough to deal with the matter in a way which we will approve rather than in a manner which would be wrong. However, that is not the point. The point is that everyone in this country, every member of the press gallery and every other person concerned ought to know that this parliament will not stand for that kind of behaviour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Even though I have the assurance from the person concerned that the tape will be brought to us, as a mark of official action by the House, if Your Honour considers there is a point of privilege. I would move that the person concerned be ordered by this parliament to deliver that tape either to Your Honour or to me, whichever you think more appropriate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the question of privilege raised by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. As the Chair is aware, I and other members on this side of the House have spoken to this matter on more than one occasion in the past. Indeed, Your Honour has caused two investigations that I know of to be conducted into allegations that bugging activities were taking place within the confines of the House of Commons and other buildings.

The example that has been exposed by the Leader of the New Democratic Party brings to the fore once again a situation which I, and I am sure all other hon. members, believe to be deplorable in the extreme. I am not satisfied that the activity is not more extensive and is as isolated as the instance which has been mentioned by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, particularly since the evidence which the standing committee examining the bill dealing with this matter has received indicates there have been well over 1,000 instances where telephone taps or electronic interventions on telephone apparatus have been placed by the police forces of this country.

I would go further than the hon. member for York South and suggest once again, particularly in light of the circumstances disclosed here today by him, that Your Honour cause a further investigation to be made into the whole matter of eavesdropping and electronic devices being placed on members' telephones and in offices as well as in their caucus committee rooms. I do not think it is enough that the House simply order the tape to be produced by the offender. This offence is serious enough to require the offender to come before the bar of the House and give an explanation of the whole affair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The House has the power to so order. I am not going to suggest anything other than that the Chair consider that course of action at this time. This is certainly not something that can be sloughed off by the mere production of a tape. It is an extremely serious affair and one that should be considered very seriously by the Chair. My suggestion is that Your Honour consider the advisability of having the offender appear before the bar of the House to explain the origin of the idea, the manner in which he accomplished his objective and, indeed, all of the details of the rather sordid action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that at this stage it might not be in order to have a debate on the very important point raised by the hon. member for York South. In any event, it is obvious to the Chair that there is a prima facie case of breach of privilege involving the type of situation which is normally investigated and looked into by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections of the House of Commons. The hon. member for York South proposes a type of action which might better come as a recommendation from the Committee on Privileges and Elections. At the same time, if there is a desire on the part of the House that the motion proposed by the hon. member be put to the House at this time it would have to be done by unanimous consent because it is a substantive motion.

● (1420)

With respect, I would suggest to the hon. member for York South that for an hour or two the matter might be allowed to rest unless he wishes to put the usual motion that the matter be referred forthwith to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. There could be an immediate meeting of the committee and an immediate recommendation perhaps that the action suggested by the hon. member for York South and the hon. member for Yukon be taken. It would be more regular if we proceeded on this basis rather than on the basis of the motion suggested by the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: On this point, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks you have made. I wish to make it very clear to the House and to the CTV employee that I have complete confidence in that employee's decency, honesty and integrity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: And he bugged you!

Mr. Lewis: I am as ready to condemn people as are others. Some people may be in a position to do things but I am not prepared personally to be judge, executioner and perform the punishment and everything else at the same time. What concerns me is whether or not that person keeps his undertaking to me. Obviously the tape is in someone's possession and could be duplicated between now and the time it comes into my possession. It is for that reason, Sir, I think my motion should be acted on by the House immediately and without debate, I hope.

May I also say that the best way to point out the concern of the House is to take action immediately without the usual delay of committee meetings. The committee can discuss the broader issue but this matter should be dealt with now. I would therefore move, subject to you, Sir:

That the person or persons who taped the proceedings of the NDP caucus this morning be required to surrender any such tapes forthwith either to me as Leader of the New Democratic Party or as the hon. member for York South or to Mr. Speaker.

I would urge you, Sir, to ascertain whether members will agree that the motion be put immediately without debate so that there is action taken without delay.

Mr. Speaker: A moment ago I indicated the thoughts of the Chair that the regular motion would be a motion to refer the matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. At the same time, if there is unanimous consent of the House to put the motion at this time I will put it. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The agreement is that the motion be put at this time. Mr. Lewis, seconded by Mr. Knowles moves—

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, it comes to our minds that the motion should be worded on the basis of any or all tapes, because we are now checking our caucus room to make certain there are no taping devices there.

Mr. Lewis: I am quite agreeable to that amendment, Mr. Speaker. I hope the Conservatives are paid the same honour. I do not know whether there would be any value in doing it to the Liberals.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I suggest, with respect, that the motion should be worded that the tape or tapes be returned to the leader of the NDP. The privilege that has been abused in this case is the privilege of that group which was conducting its considerations of policy, as is its duty. May I point out, with respect, that I do not believe that those tapes should go to anybody else but the people who were in that room at that time. That is their privilege and their business. I think it is extremely important that we keep in mind that those tapes belong to the people who were recorded, not to anybody else in the House.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure how we are proceeding. We have had a suggestion by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster that the motion be amended to read, "any or all tapes". The hon. member for Vancouver South has proposed that the motion be amended in some other way. My understanding was that we were proceeding on the basis of unanimous consent. For the orderly conduct of the business of the House I think we should consider the motion I have in my hand, which is in writing as required by the Standing Orders, proposed by the hon. member for York South. Hon. members may want to vote against it, they may wish to do so, but the motion will be put in the terms in which I have received it. I suggest that any other procedure would be disorderly and certainly very complicated. Mr. Lewis, seconded by Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moves:

That the person or persons who taped the proceedings of the N.D.P. caucus this morning be requested to surrender any such tapes forthwith either to the member for York South or to Mr. Speaker.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

TRANSPORT

SHORTAGE OF BOXCARS FOR SHIPMENT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA LUMBER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 43, to seek the consent of the House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity, the subject matter of which was an exchange of question and answer between myself and the Minister of Transport yesterday, relating to the shortage of boxcars for lumber shipments in north central British Columbia. I would therefore like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House urge the government immediately to establish a lumber products railway car co-ordinator to ensure an equitable distribution and adequate supply of railway cars to lumber shipping points and sawmill sites in British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Skeena. This motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the hon. member's motion cannot be put.

* * *

GRAIN

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgency arising from reports from western Canada that many country elevator points are plugged with grain and many farmers have been unable to deliver a single bushel in the new crop year to date. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight):

That the whole matter of grain movement and the ramifications of the feed grains policy on the movement of Canadian Wheat Board grain be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture for study and report.

● (1430)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

[Mr. Speaker.]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

[Text]

DEPARTMENT OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS POLICY ON GIFTS AND DISCOUNTS

Question No. 2,246—Mr. MacKay:

Does the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs have a clear policy on accepting gifts or discounts?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes. it is departmental policy that gifts or discounts offered to public servants by members of the public should not be accepted. In special circumstances, however, after discussing the situation with his branch director, an employee can accept a gift of nominal value where it would be wrong for reasons of courtesy to refuse.

NUMBER OF INDIANS IN EACH PROVINCE

Question No. 2,350—Mr. Bawden:

To date, how many (a) reserve Indians (b) non-reserve Indians (c) unemployed Indians are there in each province?

Hon. Jean Chretien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development):

	(a)	(b)
	On-Reserve	Off-Reserve	Crown Land
Prince Edward Island	276	181
Nova Scotia	3,393	1,483	14
New Brunswick	3,470	1,197
Quebec	17,171	7,392	4,671
Ontario	33,665	19,616	4,487
Manitoba	26,666	9,366	2,030
Saskatchewan	27,211	10,656	1,209
Alberta	23,823	5,105	1,896
British Columbia	32,852	16,982	428
Yukon		874	1,737
Northwest Territories		457	6,372

(c) This information is not available within the Department at the present time.

SPECIAL MISSION RELATING TO DEATHS OF MARJAN DRIJBER AND CHRISTINE SINCLAIR

Question No. 2,376—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. What was the name of the representative of the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the government sent to Zambia in connection with the deaths May 15 of Marjan Drijber and Christine Sinclair?

2. Did that person (a) travel to Zambia on commercial or government aircraft (b) stay in a hotel or private or government residence?

3. What was the total cost to the Canadian taxpayer (including the equivalent cost if that person travelled by government aircraft or stayed in private or government accommodation) of this mission?

4. In the past five years, on how many occasions has the government guaranteed anonymity to a person or persons as a condition precedent to the undertaking of a special mission by that person or persons which involved either a direct cost to the Canadian taxpayer or the use of government aircraft or similar services?

5. What was (a) the purpose (b) the cost of each such mission in the past five years?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Dr. W. J. Phillips, the special envoy sent to Zambia has now agreed that his name may be made public. His previous wish that his name should not be made public had not been made a precondition to the mission.

2. Dr. Phillips (a) travelled to Zambia on a commercial aircraft and (b) stayed in hotel accommodation.

3. The total cost of the mission was $2,768.50.

4. As far as the Department of External Affairs is concerned, there have been no such occasions during the past five years.

5. Not applicable.

COMPUTERIZED GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Question No. 2,440—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. What government programs are computerized?

2. What was the annual cost per program for such services in the fiscal years 1971-72, 1972-73 and 1973 to date?

3. Are these services secured by tender and, if not, how are contracts awarded?

4. What was the total cost in the years mentioned?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. Computerization has been applied to accounting as well as research and the storage of data banks. Under these various functions most government programs today use computers in one way or another.

2. While the cost figures for electronic data processing are known generally, financial procedures have not demanded a per-program reporting of all computer uses and such figures are not available.

3. Government contract regulations apply when computer services are obtained outside the government.

4. Not applicable.

CANADA WORLD YOUTH

Question No. 2,471—Mr. Rose:

1. What are the names, occupations and home addresses of all the applicants for participants, group leaders and co-ordinators of World Canada Youth?

2. What are the names, occupations and destinations of all the participants, group leaders and co-ordinators of World Canada Youth?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Canada World Youth is not a project administered by the federal government, but one of several non-governmental voluntary organizations in the private sector in receipt of grants from the Department of the Secretary of State under its Travel and Exchange Program. Requests for detailed information on its operations should therefore be directed to the organization headquarters, 1750 St-Denis St., Suite 100, Montreal.

LABELLING OF PRODUCTS

Question No. 2,571—Mr. Mather:

On what date will the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs issue regulations governing information to be given to consumers on the labels of products, as required under the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act of 1971?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): As required by section 19 of the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act, proposed regulations were published in the Canada Gazette (Part I) on September 22. A period of two months from date of publication will be afforded to consumers, dealers and other interested persons to make representations. It is intended that the act will be proclaimed and the regulations issued by the end of this year.

DREE—DESIGNATION OF REGIONS

Question No. 2,574—Mr. Darling:

1. On what date will a new list be published of areas that are eligible for DREE grants?

2. For what reason was the Parry Sound-Muskoka region on an earlier list and then struck from the list presently being used to determine eligibility for DREE grants?

3. Will the Parry Sound-Muskoka region be included in the new list of areas eligible to apply for DREE grants?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. The current designations of regions under the authority of the Regional Development Incentives Act will continue until December 31, 1973. Consultations are now under way with all provinces on the new approach to regional development, as outlined by the minister on April 10, 1973, to the Standing Committee on Regional Development. These consultations will include the question of future designated regions. An announcement will be made concerning the designation of regions, as covered in the Regional Development Incentives Act, at the conclusion of these consultations. This is expected to be in the fall of 1973.

2. Under the Area Development Incentives Act, the Parry Sound-Muskoka region was a designated area for the period August 4, 1965 to July 9, 1969. With the enactment of the Regional Development Incentives Act on July 9, 1969, new designated regions were established after consultation with the provinces. In the case of Ontario, the Parry Sound-Muskoka region was not included as a designated region because its main development potential was considered at the time to be in fields of activity other than those covered by the Regional Development Incentives Act. It was designated as a rural region under the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act and assistance has been provided to the rural area since 1970 under the ARDA program.

3. Same as answer number 1.

LIMITED AND PROHIBITIVE USES OF NATIONAL PARKS

Question No. 2,591—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. What uses of Canada's national parks have been declared (a) limited (b) prohibited in each year 1967 to 1973 in (i) Banff National Park (ii) Jasper National Park (iii) Waterton Lakes National Park?

2. In each case, what was the reason for the change in status of the use?

3. What other changes in use of each of (a) Banff National Park (b) Jasper National Park (c) Waterton Lakes National Park are contemplated and what is the reason for each contemplated change in status?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): After a careful search of records covering the period 1967 to 1973, we can find no instance of any of the traditional "uses" of Canada's National Parks being prohibited in Banff National Park, Jasper National Park, or Waterton Lakes National Park. All types of uses such as riding, boating, fishing, camping, skiing, etc., which were permitted in 1967 are still permitted in 1973. However, in many instances, and for many different reasons, and for varying lengths of time these uses may have been limited. Hiking trails can be used to illustrate this situation. There are many such trails in each of the three parks in question and one of these trails might have been closed because of fire hazard, bear activity, avalanche hazard, overuse, etc. and for varying lengths of time. The work involved in finding out and listing the limiting factors applied to each use in each park would be an expensive undertaking both from the point of view of manpower and financial resources. In view of this, it would not seem to be in the public interest to carry out the necessary research.

IMPORTATION OF UNIVERSAL No. 65 TRACTORS FROM ROUMANIA

Question No. 2,594—Mr. Schumacher:

1. What was the nature of the discussions held by the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the dealer(s) responsible for the importation of Universal No. 65 Tractors from Roumania?

2. How many dealers were involved?

3. What was the name of each of such dealers?

4. What agreement was reached as to the servicing of any of such tractors imported?

5. How many people were brought into Canada to (a) sell (b) service such tractors?

6. What was the (a) previous position held (b) qualification (c) immigrant status (d) job opportunity offered for each person brought in for the purposes of selling and/or servicing these tractors?

7. What arrangements were made for the setting up of servicing facilities for these tractors in each province?

8. How many Canadian technicians (a) were employed on the arrival of these tractors (b) are now employed across the country to service these tractors?

9. How many people brought in under agreements made for the importation of these tractors are (a) in Canada on temporary visas (b) in Canada as Landed Immigrants (c) returned home?

[Mr. Prud'homme.]

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1, 2 and 3. The Department of Manpower and Immigration has had no discussions with potential or actual Canadian dealers regarding the importation of Roumanian tractors. Those discussions which have taken place have been with the Canadian importer (Westport Importers, Provost, Alberta) and Roumanian government officials and were for the purpose of arranging for the temporary admission to Canada of those Roumanian nationals who would be involved in launching this operation.

4. It was agreed that temporary admission would be authorized for sufficient Roumanian personnel to provide an initial servicing capacity and to train Canadian residents to perform such functions in the future. Once this has been accomplished, only those considered necessary to look after special problems of service and warranty are to remain in this country on a temporary basis. It was also agreed that temporary admission would be authorized for those required to look after the Roumanian manufacturers' interests in this operation.

5. (a) None; (b) the number of service personnel has fluctuated between 12 and 15.

6. (a) Service personnel of Roumanian tractor manufacturers; (b) qualified mechanics or technicians; (c) non-immigrants; (d) servicing tractors and training Canadian residents to perform a similar function.

7. Dealers, with initial assistance from Roumanian mechanics, are to establish their own servicing facilities.

8. (a) None; (b) approximately 240.

9. (a) sixteen including service and management personnel; (b) none; (c) five or six of the original entrants, but they have been replaced by others.

ROYAL MAIL/POSTE ROYALE DESIGNATION ON NEW MAIL BOXES

Question No. 2,617—Mr. Forrestall:

Is the government giving consideration to placing the words "Royal Mail/Poste royale" on the new series of mail boxes being put into service across Canada and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): No. As far as it has been possible to ascertain, the words "Royal Mail/Poste Royale" have never formed part of any legend or insignia on Canada's mail boxes.

PROPOSED BUILDING OF SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH LABORATORY AT IGLOOLIK

Question No. 2,624—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Have discussions been held between the people of Igloolik, NWT and representatives of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development regarding the proposed building of a scientific research laboratory at Igloolik and, if so (a) by whom (b) how many times (c) on what date?

2. Prior to the announcement that the building of the laboratory had been approved and the money needed allocated (a) were any meetings held between representatives of the laboratory and the local people (b) had any literature explaining the laboratory, its purposes, functions, staffing, been prepared in the Inuit language so that they could consider the project and its implications for them?

3. Have there been discussions between the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as to the role of the local people in the research laboratory (the numbers that would be employed, etc.) and, if so, have any such written assurances been given to the local residents?

4. What response, if any, has the Minister made to the proposals of Inuit Tapirisat of Canada, that more information about the laboratory be given to the local residents in their own language, following which, discussions be held with them to actively involve them in the whole project?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes; (a) Mr. Graham Rowley, Scientific Adviser of the Department; (b) originally at a public meeting at Igloolik called for the purpose by the Village Council and subsequently on several occasions with the chairman of the Village Council; (c) The public meeting was held on November 14, 1971.

2. (a) Yes. (b) No; the public meeting, conducted in both Inupik and English, covered these points.

3. Discussions have been held; no written assurances have been given.

4. Matters concerning the laboratory are being handled through the Village Council whose chairman is Mr. Joseph Kadlutsiak, a member of the Board of Directors of Inuit Tapirisat. Since November 1972, the department has had a scientist at Igloolik to make preliminary arrangements for the laboratory, in which several local residents are actively involved. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is also in direct correspondence on this matter with Inuit Tapirisat of Canada.

CBC—INTERRUPTION OF PROGRAMMING FOR UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S SPEECH

Question No. 2,645—Mr. Dick:

1. For what reasons do Canadian television networks cover the President of the United States and interrupt their programming to carry live his half-hour speeches?

2. Do American networks every carry our Prime Minister's speeches?

3. Is it part of CRTC policy to Americanize our television networks?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): 1. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation feels that it has a public responsibility to carry U.S. Presidential speeches when these are expected to be of major historical or international significance or are expected to contain information of importance to Canada. For example, the U.S. President's address of August 15 was his first following the many revelations of the Watergate hearings and this was considered by the CBC to have major historical significance. A similar judgment was made by other radio and television broadcasters and the news media around the world including the BBC, which felt the speech warranted scheduling of a live satellite feed at 2 a.m.

It is not the general practice of American networks to carry speeches by our Prime Minister. However, one network in particular, NBC, has carried excerpts from several addresses in addition to an exclusive 14-minute tape interview with Mr. Trudeau broadcasted September 16, 1970.

3. Part of the mandate of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission is to encourage Canadian programming. A recent example of CRTC policy in this regard is the regulation concerning the reduction of non-Canadian programs on Canadian television stations from 50 per cent of the total broadcast day to 40 per cent. This regulation became effective October 1, 1972.

ENTRANCE FEES TO NATIONAL PARKS

Question No. 2,676—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. Are direct fees charged for access to each national park in Canada?

2. What are those national parks for which entrance fees are (a) charged (b) not charged?

3. If entrance charges apply to some national parks, and not to others, what is the reason for the difference?

4. How much money was received in 1972 from park entrance fees?

5. Into what budgets were the proceeds of those entrance fees deposited?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Daily and seasonal park motor licence fees are charged at some but not all National Parks.

2. (a) Park motor licence fees are charged at: Banff, Elk Island, Glacier, Jasper, Kootenay, Mount Revelstoke, Point Pelee, Prince Albert, Riding Mountain, St. Lawrence Islands and Waterton Lakes National Parks; (b) Park motor licences are not charged at: Baffin Island, Cape Breton Highlands, Forillon, Fundy, Georgian Bay Islands, Gros Morne, Kejimkujik, Kluane, Kouchibouguac, La Mauricie, Nahanni, Pacific Rim, Prince Edward Island, Pukaskwa, Terra Nova, Wood Buffalo and Yoho National Parks.

3. In accordance with the National Parks Highway Traffic Regulations, P.C. 1971-940 of May 18, 1971, park motor licence fees are charged at the parks enumerated in 2(a) above. No park motor licence fees are charged at Baffin Island, Forillon, Gros Morne, Kluane, Kouchibouguac, La Mauricie, Nahanni, Pacific Rim and Pukaskwa as these areas are not officially national parks as yet and thus national parks highway traffic regulations have not been invoked in these areas. No park motor licence fees are charged at: Cape Breton Highlands, Fundy, Kejimkujik, Terra Nova, and Prince Edward Island National Parks. When some of the parks in the Atlantic region were first established the lands were provided by the provinces with an agreement that no park motor licence fees would be charged on through highways. This precedent has been continued. Park motor licence fees are not collected at Georgian Bay Islands, as the National Parks highway traffic regulations do not apply to this water-oriented park. No park motor licence fees are charged at Wood Buffalo because of the low volume of traffic into or through this park and the costs of operating and maintaining an entry gate (s). No park motor licence fees are charged in Yoho as many vehicles entering Yoho do so via Jasper, Banff, Kootenay or Glacier National Park, where a park motor licence fee has already been levied.

4. Revenue collected from park motor licence fees for the fiscal year 1972-73 totalled $1,907,147.

5. This revenue is deposited in Parliamentary Vote 70 Conservation Program, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

CIDA AID LOANS

Question No. 2,694—Mr. Stevens:

As of August 31, 1973, what were the aggregate outstanding CIDA (a) 0-10-50 (b) 3-7-30 Aid Loans and, in each case (i) who were the debtor nations (ii) what was the amount outstanding from each nation (iii) were all loans in good standing?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs):

Canadian International Development Agency

(a) $558,409,997.
(i and ii)

Afghanistan	$1 1,272,691.
Algeria	768,762.
Bangladesh	4,750,000.
Barbados	663,090.
Bolivia	190,845.
Botswana	23,759,066.
Brazil	847,001.
Chile	3,964,096.
Columbia	15,179,828.
Dahomey	3,788,818.
Dominican Republic	95,000.
East African Community	13,605,744.
Ecuador	1,967,840.
El Salvador	269,643.
Senegal, Mali, Mauritania	897,855.
Ghana	10,235,230.
Guyana	6,733,156.
India	276,379,861.
Indonesia	11,544,358.
Ivory Coast	4,705,848.
Kenya	894,042.
Malawi	1,468,043.
Malaysia	396,276.
Morocco	3,621,073.
Nepal	2,046,070.
Niger	13,749,236.
Nigeria	25,613,980.
Pakistan	76,421,690.
St. Lucia	308,738.
Senegal	435,149.
Sri Lanka	14,175,902.
Tanzania	11,218,196.
Thailand	994,180.
Togo	3,672,595.
Tunisia	16,556,937.
Uganda	1,654,400.
Zaire	1,856,730.
Zambia	1,708,028.
Total	$558,409,997.

(iii) All loans are in good standing.

(b) $34,623,227.
(i and ii)

Barbados	$ 1,812,689.
Brazil	6,962,420.
Chile	2,971,804.
Jamaica	7,333,642.
Korea	999,242.
Malaysia	4,492,425.
Nigeria	1,822,704.
Trinidad and Tobago	3,208,301.
Turkey	5,000,000.
Total	$34,623,227.

(iii) All loans are in good standing.

LUMBERING OPERATIONS IN WOOD BUFFALO NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 2,725—Mr. Stevens:

1. Are lumbering operations currently being conducted in Wood Buffalo National Park and, if so (a) who are conducting the operations (b) how extensive are the operations (c) what revenue does the government receive from the lumbering?

2. Since Wood Buffalo National Park was established (a) how much commercial lumber has been cut in Wood Buffalo National Park (b) who cut it (c) what revenue did the government receive from such lumbering?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes. (a) Swanson Lumber Co. Ltd. of Edmonton, Alberta. (b) Two timber blocks of approximately 192 and 55 square miles respectively. (c) For the 192 square mile block: Ground rent, $5 per square mile annually; forest fire protection charges, $12.80 per square mile annually; and timber dues, subject to annual review, presently at $6.75 per 1,000 board feet. The actual figure depends upon the total lumber cut every year. For the 55 square mile block: a combined ground rent and forest fire protection charge of $30 per square mile annually; and timber dues based on the same rate as that prescribed by the Province of Alberta for timber cut in the vicinity, as reviewed from time to time, which is presently $8.50 per 1,000 board feet of spruce saw timber.

2. (a) 296,550,000 feet board measure. (b) (1) Eldorado Mining & Refining Co. Ltd. (1959-62, burned down); (2) Denney Logging Co. Ltd. (1959-60, defunct); (3) Northern Forest Products Ltd. (1960-62, defunct); (4) Wood Buffalo Park Timber Co. (1955-57, defunct); (5) R. Walter (1961-64, defunct); (6) Primrose Forest Products Ltd. (1968-70, defunct); (7) Swanson Lumber Co. Ltd. (Since 1955 to date). (c) $588,855.

ACCOMMODATION AND NEEDS OF YOUTH TRAVELLING THROUGH CANADA

Question No. 2,726—Mr. O'Connor:

Has the government and particularly the Department of the Secretary of State any plans to comply with a resolution of the Town of Georgetown, Ontario, requesting the development of a program to provide for continuing facilities for the accommodation and needs of youth travelling through Canada with the encouragement and financial assistance of the government?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): The provision of facilities for the accommodation of travelling youth is the subject of continuing review by the Department of the Secretary of State and in this process consideration is being given to the resolution of the town of Georgetown, Ontario.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR FRANCOPHONES, FREDERICTON, N.B.

Question No. 2,730—Mr. Corbin:

1. Did the Department of the Secretary of State receive an application for assistance (a) to finance a school for French-speaking students in Fredericton (b) to finance a cultural centre for francophones in Fredericton?

2. In either case, under which agreement or program would the financial contribution be made?

3. (a) On what date was the application made (b) by whom, on behalf of the Provincial Government (c) orally or in writing?

4. What would be the contribution of the federal government and, what is the total estimated cost of the project?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. The Premier of New Brunswick has had discussions with the Secretary of State about the desirability of considering a joint project in Fredericton for a French language cultural centre that would include educational facilities. He was advised by the Secretary of State of the willingness of the federal government to co-operate in such a project.

2. Such co-operation would be offered under the federal-provincial program of bilingualism in education.

3. Not applicable.

4. Information not yet available.

REGISTERED MAIL

Question No. 2,748—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Are registered letters delivered personally to the door of the addressee by the letter carrier?

2. In the event of non-delivery during the first call, is an additional charge made for a second call and, if so, what is the amount of the additional charge?

3. Does the additional charge for second calls represent a new policy and, if so (a) on what date was the change made (b) what was the former procedure (c) for what reason was the change made?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): 1. Yes, where letter carrier service is in operation.

2. Yes, 25 cents.

3. No, this policy has been in effect since March 1961.

Order Paper Questions

GRANT TO PACT

Question No. 2,751—Mr. Hellyer:

What were the names and addresses of the Co-ordinator and support staff of PACT (Peoples Acting on Concerns Together), in Winnipeg, who received payment from the $5,000 grant announced by the Secretary of State on July 27, 1973?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): The cheque for $5,000 was mailed June 7, 1973. The director and support staff were at that time: Reverend Wm. J. Jay, director; Mr. Ambrose Ojah and Mr. Fred Prebilcock, 650 Burrows Ave., Winnipeg, Manitoba.

FRED AGREEMENT

Question No. 2,766—Mr. Corbin:

1. Since 1970, has the government of New Brunswick requested the federal government to extend the FRED agreement to the whole of the province or to other areas not presently covered by the agreement and, if so, when was the request made?

2. Was such a request made before 1970 and, if so, on what date?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. At the request of provincial officials the possibility of extending the geographical area covered by the FRED Agreement was discussed, on an exploratory basis only, by the Federal-Provincial Joint Planning Committee in December 1970.

2. There is no record of such a request prior to 1970.

NUMBER OF VISITORS TO FUNDY NATIONAL PARK, 1973 SEASON

Question No. 2,768—Mr. Fairweather:

1. How many visitors were at Fundy National Park during the 1973 season?

2. How does this compare with 1972, 1971 and 1970?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. 713,068 (April 1-August 31, 1973).

2. 605,080 (April 1-August 31, 1972); 629,786 (April 1-August 31, 1971); 568,283 (April 1-August 31, 1970).

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order arising out of the answer given on Monday last to my question No. 2428 by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) in which there is an obvious discrepancy. I have given the minister notice of this matter and I hope he will be able to correct it. The reply to the fourth part of the question reads in part as follows:

—as no interest has been registered by any other party, the ministry has no plans at this time for calling tenders.

The question was with respect to the operation of a bus line. The date of that particular answer was Monday of this week.

In a letter which I have here, dated September 18, written on the letter paper of the Department of Transport, and signed by an official of that department, the following sentence appears:

Other operators have expressed an interest in this service so it must be let to tender.

The discrepancy is obvious. I should like it cleared up.

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising from the answer given, when I was unavoidably absent on Monday, by the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) in response to my question No. 2414.

For fully three and one-half months my question concerning the Opportunities for Youth program sat unanswered on the order paper, and I rose at one point to draw my question to the attention of the parliamentary secretary.

The refusal of the Secretary of State to supply answers to questions on the order paper within a reasonable time limits the usefulness of putting questions on the order paper in the first place. This minister has made it clear that he will not answer letters from members of parliament concerned about the program. In my case, for example, I wrote the minister on July 23 and September 11, and since that time called his office once or twice in regard to one project. All I have received in the intervening three months is a letter from the minister's liaison officer dated July 30 stating that the minister would be in touch with me "in the near future."

On Monday the minister answered my question on the order paper by refusing to give information to which members of parliament, who ultimately must accept the responsibility for government programs, are entitled. The first aspect of my question, which dealt with grants requested and given within the constituencies of ministers and parliamentary secretaries, was dismissed with the assertion that "OFY does not maintain statistics on grants by constituency."

In my hand, Mr. Speaker, I am holding a copy of the applications sent me by the minister last April 2 in which he included a memorandum, sent to me, requesting my comments and stating that the bundle represented "copies of the summary sheet of all submissions concerning your constituency." It is quite apparent that the applications were sorted out by constituency. The minister's memorandum which was addressed "To all Members of Parliament," and his assertion earlier this year that members of parliament would be requested to comment on applications from their constituencies, should leave no doubt of that fact. Yet the minister on Monday informed this House that no such data is available. No doubt there are bound to be errors in the sorting of applications by constituency, but the minister did not even bother to try to provide the information and his answer only served to mislead the House.

The second aspect of my question that was dismissed by the minister was my request for the names of the people who acted as references or contact people for applications who also were made members of the local advisory boards passing on their projects, and further information concerning the acceptance or rejection of their projects. The minister's reply to me was that, "Information is not available as to the number of reference or contact people involved with the making of OFY applications who were also members of a local advisory committee."

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

No answer could be more patently incorrect unless this multimillion dollar program is so incompetently organized that the department does not know to whom money is given or on whose advice it is given. Unless, after sending copies of this information to each of the members of parliament concerned, the department mysteriously destroyed the information for some unknown reason, this data is still available. Indeed, the minister sent me the relevant information for my constituency, and I have it here in my hand.

In two instances the reply given on Monday by the minister was demonstrably false and he has misled the House, albeit unintentionally, with his sloppy and inadequate responses. As a member of parliament, and as a member of the standing committee responsible for overseeing the administration of Opportunities for Youth, I believe that my rights to obtain important information have been abridged by the minister's answer, and it is for that reason that I rise on this question of privilege.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, my point of order concerns a question I have had on the order paper since May 17 regarding Collins Radio Canada Ltd. of Toronto, Ontario, and Triton Industries of Vancouver involving a contract awarded to the Ontario company on a tender, and not submitted to the company in Vancouver which already had the radio in question in stock. I would like to know when the government intends to answer this question because it is a very important issue.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that the notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might raise a point of order with respect to the lack of response to motions for the production of papers that were passed by this House many moons ago. The parliamentary secretary and I have had a number of conversations about this matter. I do not want to misrepresent his view, but I gather that each time he spoke he said they would be tabled soon. I am talking about an exchange of papers relating to a fish cannery in British Columbia. Can the parliamentary secretary tell me when these will be tabled?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, these papers will be tabled as soon as we have the translations.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—ASSURANCE OF SUFFICIENT SUPPLY FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA CONSUMERS THIS WINTER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I hope he is in a position to give the House specific answers with regard to fuel supplies for the coming winter. Can the minister now answer the question I asked him on September 21? Has a way been devised to avert the possibility of a cutback in supplies to gas consumers in British Columbia? When I asked that question on September 21 the minister said that he expected to be in a better position to respond in a couple of days. Can the minister respond today?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The National Energy Board has taken as a matter of priority the securing of alternate supplies of gas for the West Coast Transmission system in lieu of those lost in British Columbia because of the structural fault in the field.

The West Coast Transmission Company, at the urging of the board, has carried on negotiations with Alberta gas suppliers for access to Alberta gas supplies, both in the northern part of the province and in the southern part as well. I understand that those negotiations are now in progress between the companies. The position we take is that until the situation is clear with regard to alternate supplies we would not move to take action to curtail.

In addition, some of the British Columbia distributors, particularly Inland, have been in conversations with their customers to discuss the arrangement of alternate supplies where dual burning facilities are available to industry within that province. Indeed, the Chairman of the National Energy Board is meeting this afternoon with the Chairman of the British Columbia Energy Commission for the purpose of clarifying the current state of negotiations for alternate supplies and to discuss further steps that will be taken.

• (1440)

Mr. Stanfield: I gather that the situation is still in doubt.

OIL—SITUATION RESPECTING SUPPLIES FROM MIDDLE EAST AND CARIBBEAN

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Can the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tell us what contingency plan he has ready in the event Middle East supplies of petroleum to Canada are interrupted?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, depending on the nature of the commodity and the type of interruption, there are at the moment reserve supplies of between 45 days for crude oil and products to over 100 days for home heating oil. Arrangements have been made to call a further meeting of the industry in Canada, particularly the industry operating in eastern Canada, to discuss their present arrangements for supply from overseas in the face of a possible Middle Eastern interruption. I would hope that meeting could take place on Friday but at the moment a final date has not been confirmed. I think it will depend very much on the exact arrangements each company has, to be able to predict the contingency arrangements we should have.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that although the minister has apparently been worried about supplies from the east for years he has not had this kind of meeting previously. Can the minister tell us what the status of heating oil for the winter is with regard to supplies normally delivered to Canada from Caribbean refineries?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have responded several times in the past on this question that, because of the tight supply internationally of these commodities, Canadian purchasers of home heating oils have not been able to secure the same supplies overseas as in past years. It is for this reason that I took the initiative in mid-summer of obtaining assurances from all of the major importers and refiners that supplies were adequate. Until the potential interruption—there has been no actual interruption in Middle East or other supplies to Canada—we have the assurance that while it would be a narrow balance there would be adequate heating oil supplies for this winter. I think one of the questions that we will want to canvass with the companies is what, if any, effect the events in the Middle East in the last ten days have had upon those assurances earlier this year.

Mr. Stanfield: You have not canvassed them yet? Oh, oh!

NATURAL GAS—SUPPLIES FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA CONSUMERS—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE THAT CUTBACK, IF NECESSARY, WILL BE MADE IN EXPORT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the statement reported this morning to have been made by Mr. Ronald L. Cliff, Chairman of Inland Natural Gas Company, Limited of Vancouver, who seems to be much less optimistic than the minister about securing alternative sources of supply for the gas consumers of British Columbia, can the minister give us a clear and unequivocal statement to the effect that if a cutback is necessary in gas consumption in British Columbia this winter it will come out of the 70 per cent of British Columbia gas which is exported to the United States and not out of the 30 per cent which is absolutely essential to meet the needs of the people of British Columbia?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I cannot be specific on a hypothetical question like that. The priority which we have given to the National Energy Board is, of course, to see if alternate supplies can be arranged, as I indicated to the Leader of the Opposition. I do not know what Mr. Cliff said, but the advice I have from the board is that there is some expectation in any event that alternate supplies may be arranged with Alberta producers. We will know the outcome of those discussions better in a few days.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that the Alberta and Southern Gas Company has announced its willingness to ship gas to British Columbia through an interconnection at Pendleton, Oregon, and that Mr. Cliff, the Chairman of Inland Natural Gas Company, Limited, says that the APCO group has refused to allow this transfer of gas, I want to ask the minister what steps he and his department are taking to ensure that this gas will be made available to the province of British Columbia and at what price will it be made available? Does the minister think that the people of British Columbia should continue to export cheap gas and pay for higher priced gas from Alberta?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the information I have with regard to the APCO arrangement is not in accordance with what has been stated by the hon. gentleman. I think I would like to ask the board to confirm from Inland if indeed the APCO refusal has been made because my understanding is that this is not so.

NATURAL GAS—POSSIBILITY OF EXPORT CURTAILMENT UNTIL BRITISH COLUMBIA DOMESTIC MARKET SATISFIED

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary. I should like to ask the minister if he is aware that Inland Natural Gas Company, Limited expects a critical period as soon as November 15 and that in order to take any advantage of Alberta gas a 40-mile pipeline would have to be built? Can the minister tell us—he has avoided the question—if the National Energy Board has made any decision to curtail exports of gas until such time as domestic markets are satisfied in British Columbia?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, no decision to curtail exports has been made. The priority, as I stated to the Leader of the Opposition, is to secure alternate supplies. The board appeared to feel that in turn the distributors felt this could be arranged.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I have stated to the minister that it is quite impossible to build a 40-mile pipeline in two weeks. What other steps has the minister taken to secure not only industrial but domestic users of natural gas in British Columbia and, particularly, has he assured that this shortage will not result in higher prices in British Columbia?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I prefer to take the advice of the National Energy Board rather than that of the hon. gentleman on this question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Can you build a pipeline?

An hon. Member: Thumper is back!

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

[Translation]

SUPPLY OF OIL FOR EASTERN CANADA—RESULTS OF MEETING BETWEEN MINISTER AND VENEZUELIAN AUTHORITIES—PROPOSED EXTENSION OF PIPELINE FROM TORONTO TO MONTREAL

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary to the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Could he tell us if the recent meeting which he attended in Caracas allows him to be optimistic as regards the supply of oil products to eastern Canada, and if he intends pursuing his efforts for the extension of the pipeline from Toronto to Montreal?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have had discussions in Venezuela concerning the supply of crude oil in the long and the short term for the eastern Canada markets. There is no firm commitment as regards the short term supply, but we shall have discussions in order to arrange, if possible, for an agreement concerning the long term supply of oil. As for the Montreal pipeline issue, it can indeed be said that such an arrangement with Venezuela could be made in conjunction with the operation of the pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal.

[English]

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS AND INDUSTRY TO ARRIVE AT NATIONAL POLICY

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is as follows: In view of the pledge the minister made to the standing committee and to the House when the papers on energy were submitted that there would be a meeting of provincial governments, industry and the federal people interested to try to arrive at a national energy policy that would enable Canada to act on its own initiative rather than responding to these continual crises, has the minister yet decided on a date for that meeting?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, I have had meetings with all of the provincial governments on this question and, indeed, with a broad spectrum of the industry. With respect to a federal-provincial conference, in this regard at least it is the view, I understand, of the premier of Alberta that the appropriate time for such a conference would be May, 1974, and that we would for this purpose have a meeting of the federal and provincial ministers on November 23 next to set the terms of any such conference and discuss arrangements for it. At the moment, we have in contemplation a meeting of governments, federal and provincial, rather than a three-way meeting of the two levels of government and industry.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will note that there are a few members seeking supplementaries on this subject. Perhaps we should try to limit supplementaries for the time being in the hope that we can go on to other subjects. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain is rising, as are the hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Calgary North. I would hope we could go on to the next subject after their supplementaries.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Will the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources have an opportunity, as the minister promised, to discuss these matters with him before he meets with the provincial governments or with industry again?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. gentleman that the committee now has an order of reference in general terms before it which would enable this discussion. I would be quite prepared to meet with the committee any time it wishes to arrange new hearings.

● (1450)

NATURAL GAS—REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT BY GOVERNMENT THAT BRITISH COLUMBIA CONSUMERS WILL BE SUPPLIED

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is a rather uncomplicated one. Short of all possible decisions that may come from the Energy Board discussions, is the minister prepared now to commit the federal government to the proposition that it will move to ensure supplies of natural gas to British Columbia consumers?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, they will certainly make every effort to do so. It depends, really, on the availability of the gas.

Mr. Howard: It is available.

OIL EXPORT TAX—DIVISION OF PROCEEDS BETWEEN FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister. He mentioned that there would probably be a meeting with the provinces in May, 1974. Has there been any meeting so far with the Alberta government, and as a result of that meeting is there an agreement to return to that province 100 per cent of the surtax now being collected on crude petroleum?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there is no agreement on that. There is agreement to meet with the Alberta ministers again later this month for the purpose of discussing that question.

Mr. Woolliams: Has there been any meeting with the province of Saskatchewan, which stands to lose $70 million by this tax, and is there an agreement with them to return 100 per cent of the tax?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we have met with both the provinces of Saskatchewan and British Columbia as well as with Alberta on this question. Essentially, the division of the proceeds of the export tax, once passed by parliament, is a matter still to be settled with all three provinces.

EFFECT OF PERSIAN GULF OIL PRICE INCREASE ON PRICE AT MONTREAL

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of the proposed 17 per cent increase in the price of Persian Gulf oil, will the minister advise the House whether this will result in a corresponding increase in the price of crude oil at Montreal?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think I am correct in saying that about 60 per cent of the oil arriving in the Montreal market comes from elsewhere than the Persian Gulf. I think it is true, however, that an increase of this kind, whether it be a Venezuelan tax measure or an increase in the posted price in the Gulf, is bound to increase the cost of oil landed in Montreal, and in due course that will affect the price of products in the eastern Canadian market.

OIL—PRICING POLICY FOR DOMESTIC CRUDE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view, particularly, of the answer the minister has just made, can he tell the House if he proposes to use the meeting to be held on November 23, I believe, with the provincial energy ministers to reach a decision on pricing policy for domestic crude in Canada? Does he intend to reach a decision with regard to pricing policy at that meeting or prior to that meeting?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the discussions on the question of pricing policy have been extensive. I am not certain whether we are at the point where an earlier decision could be taken in that regard.

OIL EXPORT TAX—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT POSITION ON DIVISION OF PROCEEDS—POSSIBLE CURTAILMENT OF PRICE INCREASES BY COMPANIES

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact the government has not reached an agreement with the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta on the question of the allocation of funds resulting from the implementation of the tax on oil exports, can the minister inform the House of the position the federal government is taking on this oil tax? Can he also inform the House as to what action is to be taken if American oil prices should increase and whether the 40 cents a barrel export tax will therefore be increased?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, specifically, in response to the hon. gentleman, the answer would be yes. The intention is to achieve a two-price system in this country. If the fair and reasonable price for Canadian oil in the American market should increase, then the differential would increase and, therefore, so would the tax return. The principle upon which settlement could be made I have reiterated publicly a number of times, and it is that a large part of the proceeds of the tax should be returned to the producing provinces—

An hon. Member: One hundred per cent.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): —for the purpose of stimulating additional energy supplies available for Canadians in all parts of the country.

Mr. Knight: In view of the minister's answer that he is moving—

Mr. Stanfield: I wish the minister would answer a few questions.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I have a question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, if I have to talk louder I assure you that I can.

Some hon. Members: Louder!

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of his statement that he is trying to establish a two-price system related to the use of fuels in Canada, can the minister inform the House if he has been in touch with Imperial Oil and other major oil companies in view of their desire to increase prices on the domestic market in Canada, and is the minister prepared to curtail any increases in those prices in light of the excessive profits which have been occurring in that industry?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we have had requests, as indicated in the Prime Minister's statement, for increases in product prices in the eastern Canada market resulting from increases in the landed cost of oil. No decision has been taken in that regard.

* * *

[Translation]

FEDERAL PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE FOLLOWING QUEBEC ELECTION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Acting Prime Minister.

Since the premier of Quebec stated last week that he would seek the holding of a constitutional conference if he is re-elected on October 29, would the minister tell us if the government would favour calling such a conference?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it has been quite clear for a number of years that the government of Canada is prepared to sit down with the provinces, and has already sat down, and if there seems to be some promise, some expectation of a useful revision of the constitution, we will certainly be prepared to participate again.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance.

In view of the contradictory opinions expressed with respect to the budget presented by the Parti Québécois, would the minister inform us if he intends to comment upon it publicly, or have it done by analysts from his department?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt that the hon. member's question is in order. I doubt that it comes under the administrative jurisdiction of the federal Minister of Finance.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO NEW PROGRAM

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Could he tell the House whether the new departmental program concerning Quebec economic expansion will be officially announced before October 29?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I would think not, Mr. Speaker.

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF PROGRAMS TO YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister on the same question which I have asked him several times before. Since he has had the matter under consideration for many months, can he now inform the House, and particularly residents above the sixtieth parallel, when DREE is going to be applied nationally to those parts of Canada as well as to the rest?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I thoroughly agree with the proposition posed in the hon. member's question. My colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and I and our officials have been working on some mechanism which would achieve the result the hon. member is seeking.

* * *

BUGGING AND WIRETAPPING

COMMITTEE STUDY OF BILL

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In view of the interest of the House today in bugging and wiretapping, would the minister indicate whether the wiretapping bill is being held up because the government has instructed the chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs not to call the committee until November 6 for clause by clause study, which may mean that it will be too late for us to get the bill through all stages before the end of the session?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, there certainly has been no such instruction, which would be quite improper. The government is most anxious to proceed with this important measure, particularly in view of the fact the bill contains important provisions making illegal the possession and sale of the kinds of devices which can be used in wiretapping.

* * *

ENERGY

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASED OIL IMPORTS FROM VENEZUELA IN EVENT OF INTERRUPTION OF MIDDLE EAST SUPPLIES

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In the event of a disruption of Middle East oil supplies to Canada and the necessity of increasing our imports of Venezuelan oil, what conditions did the Venezuelan government put before the minister for increased import of their oil?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it was clear from the discussions that Venezuela would not be in a position to make any substantial increase in exports either to Canada or to any other country. Our objective really was to obtain the assurance that the very substantial supplies coming to Canada would not be interrupted in so far as the government of Venezuela can take action in that regard.

● (1500)

Mr. Symes: Has the government of the United States requested the Canadian government to increase supplies of oil to the United States and, if so, what is the position taken by the Canadian government?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No such request has been made.

MEASURES TO PROVIDE HEATING OIL FOR ONTARIO AND QUEBEC THIS WINTER

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Following the minister's statement I should like to address this question to him. In view of indications that parts of Ontario and Quebec will also be faced with critical shortages of oil for home heating, could the hon. gentleman tell us what special measures he is taking to ensure such supplies will not be cut off this winter?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I have already responded to questions in that connection asked earlier today.

AGRICULTURE

FLOOD DAMAGE TO CROPS IN AREAS OF MANITOBA—GOVERNMENT ATTITUDE TOWARD FEDERAL COMPENSATION

Mr. Peter P. Masniuk (Portage): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Has the hon. gentleman been contacted by the province of Manitoba concerning the need for assistance in consequence of heavy rains which have caused flooding, resulting in severe damage to hay and other crops in the Interlake region?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I would have to check and let the hon. member know.

Mr. Masniuk: Bearing in mind the assistance given to other areas in past years, would the minister look favourably upon a request for assistance in this case from the Manitoba government?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, as I have said before, when it has been a question of aid provided to one segment of our farm population, the same treatment will be accorded to farmers in any part of the country.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO DECISION ON REPLACEMENT FOR TRACKER AIRCRAFT—POSSIBILITY OF CONTRACT BEING AWARDED TO McDONNEL DOUGLAS

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Considering the fact that the McDonnel Douglas Aircraft Company, employing many thousands of people in northwestern Toronto, will soon have completed its production of DC-9 and DC-10 wing assemblies, and in view of the fact that many thousands of people in this community are afraid of consequences similar to the Arrow experience, can the minister tell us when the decision concerning a replacement for the navy's Tracker aircraft will be made, and whether McDonnel Douglas' superior entry is being looked on favourably?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): We have completed our studies of the proposals made by four aircraft manufacturing companies and I expect to be announcing in the near future the entry into the contract definition stage with two companies.

INQUIRY AS TO DECISION ON REPLACEMENT FOR ARGUS AIRCRAFT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I have a supplementary to the Minister of National Defence arising from the fact that his statement of October 10 regarding the role of the forces and related capital expenditures raised more questions than it answered. Could the minister tell the House the situation with regard to the Argus replacement? When will an announcement be made in this case to reduce the number of competing companies to two for detailed specifications?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I was referring to a replacement for the Argus and possibly, also, for the Tracker when I referred to the studies which have been taking place. We will be entering the contract definition phase in the near future. I expect to make a recommendation to cabinet within the next two or three weeks.

* * *

EDUCATION

SECOND LANGUAGE INSTRUCTION—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ASSIST PRIVATE SCHOOLS

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact the government of British Columbia has declined to apply for assistance on behalf of private or independent schools under the federal official second language instruction program, can the minister tell us what steps, if any, are being contemplated to make financial aid available to these schools on the same basis as the public school system?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member probably knows, there has been an indication of a change in policy with respect to independent schools. I received a letter from the education minister of British Columbia, Mrs. Dailly, on September 29 indicating a change in position, and as a result of that letter my officials are in British Columbia today discussing possible changes arising from that change in policy.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VENUE OF NEXT LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the political unrest in Chile, would the hon. gentleman inform the House whether it is still the intention to hold the next Law of the Sea conference in Santiago, Chile, next spring as scheduled?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I would doubt that the conference would be held there, but no decision has yet been made.

Mr. Crouse: In view of the importance to Canada of the outcome of this conference, and since bilingual translation facilities are available in Canada, would the minister consider extending an invitation to the nations concerned to hold this conference in Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: I think that is a very useful suggestion. I can assure the hon. member that there will be many competitors.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

PUBLIC SERVICE

PAY INCREASES FOR CLERICAL EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of Treasury Board why, when the cost of living is rising this year at a rate of more than 8 per cent, his officials in Treasury Board were not willing to offer the clerical employees of the federal civil service an increase of more than 3 per cent this year, 3 per cent next year and 2 per cent in the third year?

Mr. Howard: Cheap, that's why.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I think the hon. gentleman is asking me to comment on negotiations which are still in progress, and this has not been the policy.

Mr. Orlikow: If the minister does not feel he can comment at this point, possibly he could comment, when the process is completed, on the very generous increases given to senior civil servants of between $4,000 and $10,000 a year, though only 3 per cent is to be given to the clerical civil servants.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Would the minister advise the House whether he is now prepared to withdraw the offer made to public servants in the clerical group and to make a new offer indicating that the government recognizes the cost of living is rising for these public servants?

Mr. Drury: When the application for binding arbitration was made, the government appointed a mediator under whose auspices some six meetings have since taken place, leading to modifications of the wage demand on the part of the employees and a counter offer by the government.

* * *

[Translation]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

DESIGNATED AREAS—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW POLICY

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

On September 7 last, the hon. member for Bellechasse asked whether the policy concerning designated areas or special areas would apply in the future. The minister replied that he was discussing with the provinces a new policy to assist the slow growth areas. Can he say when he will announce that new policy and will it be before this coming winter?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure it will be done before the winter. The draft of the joint development agreement with not only Quebec but all the provinces but one is virtually ready for submission to my colleagues in the federal cabinet and to those in the provinces. I expect this development agreement and the subordinate agreements which will flow therefrom will be ready in a month from now, or a month and a half at the outside.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-U.S. ACTION TO CLEAN UP POLLUTION OF GREAT LAKES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of the Environment. In light of the recent meeting between Canadian and United States officials of the International Joint Commission on the Great Lakes water quality agreement, can the hon. gentleman assure the House that adequate staffing and funding will immediately be provided for the proposed clean-up, as the IJC has admitted the lack of same? Further, is it the intention of the government to accelerate steps to prevent the continual discharge of water pollutants into the Great Lakes before it is too late?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Yes, I am glad to give the hon. member that assurance, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL-MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT BE PERMITTED TO ATTEND EDMONTON TRI-LEVEL CONFERENCE AS OBSERVERS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the importance of the national tri-level intergovernmental meeting in Edmonton next week, and the fact that this meeting is open to the press but closed to official observers, will the minister undertake to ensure that members of parliament wishing to attend the meeting will be accredited as observers?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Arrangements of this sort are under the direction of the secretariat which is organizing the meeting, and the direction of the chairman who is acting on behalf of all three governments involved. I understand that the problem is purely physical inasmuch as there is just not sufficient room available.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS TO PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS AND EMPLOYMENT ACTS

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to those asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North and the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. It is directed to the government House leader. In view of the fact the Speech from the Throne promised that revisions will be proposed to the Public Service Staff Relations Act and the Public Service Employment Act, can the hon. gentleman indicate when we may expect the necessary bills to be brought down?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): As the House will recall, the chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board, Mr. Finkelman, is currently examining proposed revisions to the legislation. He has not yet completed his work, but I expect it will be completed within a reasonable period. The report will be made public and the House will have an opportunity to deal with measures at that time or subsequent to the tabling of his report.

* * *

● (1510)

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—PROPOSAL FOR TRANSMISSION FROM PRUDHOE BAY BY TRANS-ALASKA PIPELINE AND TANKER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I should like to ask the minister whether the government of Canada considers the proposal of El Paso to move Prudhoe Bay gas to market by means of a trans-Alaska pipeline and tankers both practical and feasible?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): So far, Mr. Speaker, we have had no report on this matter. As the hon. member knows, there has been no application filed with the Federal Power Commission regarding this proposal, but it does seem to be a feasible one. The real question is that of cost relative to construction of a pipeline up the Mackenzie Valley.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INVOLVEMENT OF BLACK PANTHER MOVEMENT IN DISTURBANCES AT CAUGHNAWAGA RESERVE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is the minister aware of the involvement of members of the Black Panther movement in the recent disturbances and violence at the Caughnawaga reserve, and could he say what steps have been taken to ensure that the activities of this uninvited group have been stopped?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have heard these rumours myself and, to palliate this situation, we have made sure there would be adequate police protection in Caughnawaga. The matter of undesirables entering Canada comes under the Department of Immigration. We have brought this problem to the attention of this department where we were advised that the utmost would be done to prevent their entering Canada.

May I take this opportunity to thank the hon. member for claiming, as I do, that Canadian problems may be solved better by Canadians than by foreigners.

* * *

[English]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST THAT PENSIONS BE TIED TO INCREASES IN COST OF LIVING

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that most pensions that come under the responsibility of the federal government either are, or soon will be, escalated by the full percentage increase in the cost of living, would the minister seek to prevail upon Canadian National Railways so that CN pensions can also be escalated not just by 2 per cent a year but by the full percentage increase in the cost of living?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows very well that this is something that is negotiated between the unions and the railway company. I in fact supported the original demand that was made when I was a member of the committee before it became the negotiating committee. Now the figures are being revised by an inquiry officer. I think Mr. Deutsch is the one looking into the data that have been supplied by the companies, so let us wait and see what the result will be.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's answer, but in view of the fact that employees who have already retired are not covered under any such collective agreements, and in view of the fact that Dr. Deutsch is not studying the pensions of those already retired, would the minister again consider the plea that I make to him to make these representations to Canadian National?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, when I was in the labour movement as a unionist we were interested in former union members and it was the union that made representations, not members of the House of Commons or members of any other legislative assembly.

* * *

LABOUR RELATIONS

SETTLEMENT OF RAILWAY STRIKE—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question may I ask the Minister of Labour when we can expect a report from Judge Hall in connection with the negotiations settling the rail strike?

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I cannot say precisely, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, this is a complicated area. Judge Hall has been meeting constantly and steadily with the parties and is working as quickly as he can to get his report out. I cannot tell the hon. member precisely, but perhaps within a few days I will have information in rather more precise terms as to when this report will be available.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT TO CHINA—REACTION TO ALLEGED VERBAL ATTACK ON ISRAEL DURING OFFICIAL BANQUET

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the Prime Minister, at a recent official banquet in China, simply chose to ignore a vicious verbal attack on the state of Israel by Premier Chou En-lai, as reported in the media?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we might assume that the question has been asked directly rather than asking the Acting Prime Minister to confirm or deny a press report. The Chair is prepared to assume that the question has been asked directly.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when I heard this story I immediately transmitted a message to Peking and found that it was completely without foundation. No such attack was made upon Israel in the presence of the Prime Minister.

* * *

BUGGING AND WIRETAPPING

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON BILL IN LIGHT OF WATERGATE REVELATIONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the House showed today its reaction to bugging, even though in no way was a member of the press gallery connected therewith. None the less, what Watergate has revealed is the danger of empowering a small cabal to bug even for a few hours. Therefore I would ask the Minister of Justice this question. Having regard to the revelations in Washington, does he not now feel that that portion of the bill now before the committee which permits emergency bugging should be withdrawn?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the so-called emergency provisions which allow for the use of electronic devices to detect serious criminal offences when a judge is not available are, of course, similar to what some of the colleagues of the right hon. gentleman would have made the general rule in regard to the whole use of such electronic devices. Since the responsibility of the Attorney General or the Solicitor General is involved in those cases and was the source sought by some of the hon. member's colleagues as the only responsible source, the government felt, in contrast, that as a general rule a judge ought to approve the use of any of these devices. But notwithstanding that, on the clear evidence that serious crime might not have been detected but for the very rapid use by law enforcement officers of such devices, it was felt desirable to keep in their hands, under the responsibility of the Attorney General or the Solicitor General, use of those devices to detect serious crime so as to ensure the safety of all citizens in Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that statement is, of course, a transparent deception. My impression is that there is no part of Canada where judges would not be available. My suggestion to the minister is that, if this particular provision remains, every Canadian will be subject to snooping for a period of 36 hours. That is a dangerous challenge to Canadian liberty.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will, of course, allow the minister to reply, but I would suggest to hon. members that at this point we are debating an order of the day that is not before the House at the present time.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I have been able to obtain and to place before members of the public, and bring to the attention of the public, police information that on some occasions such serious offences as shipment of a very large quantity of heroin was brought to the attention of law enforcement officers at 2 a.m. on a Sunday, that within 30 minutes a meeting would take place in a city, and that very prompt action was required on the part of the law enforcement officers. It was surprising that they were able to obtain the information without having to go to a judge. In the interest of apprehending such criminals, who themselves use these devices, I think we are justified in giving this power to police officers as well.

* * *

ENERGY

OIL—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ENSURE SECURITY OF SUPPLY TO EASTERN CANADA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I address my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. With regard to supplies of oil from the Middle East, in the event of a cut-off of supplies, which has been a matter of concern for some time according to the minister, I ask whether the minister has done anything specific to increase security of supply to oil consumers in eastern Canada in the event there is a cut-off, other than the projected meeting he will have with the industry? Has he done anything at all to increase the supply for eastern consumers such as, for example, increasing storage supplies?

● (1520)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out in specific response some time ago to this question, the proposal for storage was found not to be practicable. At a time when it is difficult to secure regular supplies of oil because of the tightness of the international situation, it is obviously difficult to obtain additional supplies. I remind the hon. member that extensive discussions were carried on with the United States to obtain a security agreement to protect Canada. That was not possible. Extensive discussions were carried on in the OECD but for reasons over which Canada had no control the OECD discussions broke down. I have taken direct steps by talking to our principal supplier, Venezuela, to attempt to secure protection of the supplies now coming to Canada. In addition, we will have a meeting—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the position of the minister: the question asked was in very general terms and it was difficult to reply briefly. I bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that we have reached the end of the question period. I had hoped to be able to recognize a number of members. Perhaps before calling orders of the day the Leader of the Opposition might be permitted to ask a supplementary, and that the minister would reply.

Mr. Stanfield: I want a simple, direct answer. Has the minister done anything?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should advise the House that in accordance with the special order which was passed, found in Votes and Proceedings for Friday, July 27, tomorrow we will be dealing with the report stage of Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code. Under the terms of that special order, the sitting of the House will begin at 11 a.m., although routine proceedings will take place as usual at two o'clock. While I am on my feet, may I say that if the family allowance bill is passed we will spend the rest of the afternoon on the CNR financing bill.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURES TO PROVIDE FOR PAYMENT OF FAMILY AND SPECIAL ALLOWANCES

The House resumed, from Tuesday, October 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-211, to provide for the payment of family allowances in respect of children to supplement the income of Canadian families and for the payment of special allowances to provide for the care and maintenance of other children, and to amend the Income Tax Act in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I was saying yesterday that it is really discouraging to realize that, from 1950 to 1972, that is to say over a 22 year period only, the birthrate for Quebec has fallen from 30.3 per cent to 15.2 per cent per 1,000 habitants.

The current birthrate, especially in Quebec, is one of the lowest for the entire western world—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. I again bring to the attention of hon. members that when we call orders of the day it is extremely difficult to proceed with the business before us when members carry on discussions, interviews and consultations, sometimes standing in the House which is highly irregular. I suggest to hon. members that these discussions take place sotto-voce or behind the curtains.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) is trying to make himself heard and perhaps we should have the courtesy of listening to him.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I am most grateful for your intervention because it is quite difficult to make a speech when there is so much noise in the House. I was saying that the current birth rate, especially in Quebec, is one of the lowest in the western world while a few years back it was among the highest.

Faced with all those facts we should respond as soon as possible. This is why we suggest that, to be at the level of the present situation, family allowances should be depending on the number of dependents and increased to $30, $60 and $90 a month.

And yet all hope is not lost. This progressive society should do its utmost to increase its population through generous incentives which would encourage married couples to bring their contribution to the demographic needs of a comparatively young country so as to give it the population required to meet its objectives.

We are all aware that the birth rate is intimately connected to the economic conditions. Let us take the necessary steps to settle this thorny problem and ensure an adequate well-being to all families.

Since the aim of the production of consumer goods and services is to meet peoples' needs, work and capital are the means to reach this goal. Profit is an incentive aimed at facilitating the work of grown-ups but it should not take too much importance in the life of our society.

This is the origin of all our economic troubles. Although good in itself, profit becomes bad and even harmful when reaching excessive proportions. In our affluent country the richest are becoming richer and richer and the number of poor is increasing daily. This economic unbalance is prejudicial to children, students, the unemployed and the small wage-earners who do not have sufficient income to enjoy our resources comparatively to the prices asked. What makes it so difficult to adjust family allowances to the cost of living and the rise of the gross national product is precisely the fact that we never consider our economy as the activities of the people as a whole, in order to meet their needs. For many years, the members of the Social Credit have been advocating the payment of a stable and guaranteed salary to each Canadian. I am sure that such a step would cope with most social problems of our country.

I support the bill although I would have liked the government to do much more for the welfare of young Canadians.

[Mr. Allard.]

[English]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable pride that I participate in this debate. I wish to point out that I have had occasion to participate in debates on other legislation presented to this House, all of which has been most progressive indeed. There has been a considerable amount of discussion on this bill. The position adopted by the Progressive Conservatives in this instance ought to be given very little attention, primarily because it is very difficult to ascertain exactly the position of that party although it is easy to determine what the conservative position might be.

We have heard the contribution of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). I will have more to say about that later. We also heard the contribution of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). I commend that hon. member on a very excellent contribution. It was one which might well be classified as being a liberal contribution. I also wish to refer to the contribution of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner). It appears that his association with the Liberal party in the past has put him in good standing with regard to this bill.

From reading the contribution made by the hon. member for Hillsborough which appears at page 6871 of Hansard for October 15, it appears that the position of the Conservative Party is indeed expressed in his words as follows:

● (1530)

However, I am a little unhappy—indeed, I am profoundly disturbed—that at a time when the country faces an economic crisis of pressing gravity the response of the government time after time is to throw out another welfare measure. In the emergency session in August and September it was the minister who came through with measures. There was a little change to old age security, an alteration here, another there—

It appears that the legislation introduced by the government in respect of family allowances is considered by the hon. member for Hillsborough, the lead-off speaker for his party, to be a welfare measure. It is little wonder that there is no Tory record of social legislation in this country. It is distinctly repugnant to them to adopt anything which smells of social security because they define it as welfare and use that term as meaning a hand-out.

We saw this attitude recently in the Ontario edition of the Conservative Party. They attached very little importance to the bill presently being debated. It has been noted that they might consider reducing the amount of the welfare payments which would otherwise be payable to welfare recipients in proportion to the amount by which their revenue might be increased as a result of this particular legislation. It is not surprising, therefore, that there is this penury of social legislation coming from the Conservative Party. Someone might ask: Why, then, are they supporting this particular piece of legislation? The reason, I suggest, is that this legislation is demanded by the Canadian people and is an expression of the Canadian wish. The expression of that wish has been received by a party which has been accustomed to presenting social legislation of this type and calibre.

When I turn now to the NDP my heart is glad. I am encouraged by the fact that the NDP have chosen to actively support this legislation. However, I am somewhat saddened by the posturing which has been engendered by that party. Indeed, the posturing was very well expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in the debate of October 15 when he claimed complete credit for this piece of legislation. He said the following, as recorded at page 6881 of Hansard for October 15:

> If some of my friends in various parts of the House think that I am being too generous—

Indeed, he was most agreeable to the legislation.

> —in welcoming this legislation, it must be obvious that the reason we welcome it is that we know we are responsible for it.

He expressed those words with great relish. However, I would point out that the day after, yesterday, he was promptly corrected by one of his own backbenchers. The hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney) indicated that he recognized—indeed, he recognizes it because it is an historic fact—that our social security legislation is a product of Liberal governments and is a Liberal philosophy. As recorded at page 6909 of Hansard, the hon. member for Scarborough West said:

> As a final compliment, Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the minister and the government on his and their return to the policies of the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson and the late Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King.

Of course he is right historically. We accept the commendation. We accept the recognition by the party to the left—I stand with my back to you, Mr. Speaker, when I say "to the left"—that the Liberal Party has generated socially conscious legislation. I refer to the old age security legislation, the unemployment insurance legislation, the veterans allowance legislation and the family allowance legislation. All these pieces of legislation which have evolved, and have been consolidated, improved and approved throughout the years were introduced in this House by a Liberal government. There have been some improvements. There have been contributions from private members of other parties. There is no doubt of that. I will not deny there have been contributions from Conservative members in respect of this legislation. I have seen in committee how effectively they work. However, their principles have not changed; they are still there.

No one pretends to know everything about any given topic, so every piece of legislation when it is introduced is not invariably right and can be improved by this House. This is indeed a parliament and it can work only if the government introduces legislation. It is recognized in our parliamentary system that the government is responsible for this legislation, so, for members of the NDP to claim they are responsible for it is indeed misleading and most inaccurate.

The minister said that there will be an increase of $840 million in total capital expenditure for this program. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that is because the economy of the country can absorb this additional expenditure. This is the time when family allowances should be increased. Indeed, the government chose this time since the economy is booming; our productive capacity is up to 94 per cent. There is demand for a greater quantity of Canadian goods. There is need for additional investment in manufacturing and processing, and indeed in the extraction industries. No one can deny this. We have a very rich economy. The tax revenue is proof of this. The indexing of income tax announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is another indication of the substantial revenue available to the Canadian government and the Canadian people. Now is the time when this legislation should have been introduced.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party—and I would like to emphasize the word "new"—was not even here when the Liberals were legislating on these basic principles.

And I should like to point out to the House that they are now claiming responsibility for the bill before us. This reminds me, Mr. Speaker, of a fable by the great poet of two hundred years ago, Lafontaine, who, with his pen, reached across two centuries to describe these people to the left of the spectrum. I quote:

> Climbing a hill through sand, as though the load were lead,
> Scorched by burning sun directly overhead,
> Six horses dragged a coach with a lurch.
> Women, a monk, as well as old folk were walking,
> Yet the sweating, blowing horses were balking
> When a fly buzzed toward them determined to perch;
> Convinced that noisiness could goad the horses on,
> Stung one, stung all, sure that what she had done
> Could move the weight at a bound.
> She rode on the coach pole; soon the driver's nose smarted,
> As the wheels were turning round
> And the vehicle started.
> Then insisting that credit be laid at her door,
> She would rush to and fro like a sergeant till spent,
> Who must urge his men forward wherever they went,
> While claiming the honor of winning the war.
> The fly complained that what she had done,
> Was a task for them all and not for her alone.
> Heavy work each should do had been left to her.
> The monk had let matins be his share;
> They took a long time. A light heart overflowed,
> But song can't move coaches along the road!
> Pestering each ear, Dame Fly must incommode,
> Buzzing in foolhardihood!
> At the top of the hill the tired horses delayed.
> "Better stop for a time! Take a breath," the fly said.
> "Since I've guided you up to the level again,
> My good horses, admit that I've been under strain."
> So consummate boors, too brash to be lessoned,
> Making disturbance everywhere,
> Worry themselves with a world of care—
>
> As pests whose departure one longs to have hastened.

This, Mr. Speaker, is an accurate description of the situation and of the position taken by the New Democratic Party. This fly wants to claim all responsibility for the legislation brought before this House.

● (1540)

[English]

I have heard that a number of times before. I have been told by all members of that party to whom I have spoken that they are responsible for the legislation which is now before the House. Nothing could be further from the truth, and I take strong issue with the leader of that party who today commented in the House that bugging the Liberal caucus might not be worth while.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blais: I suggest that discussions in caucus, which I am not at liberty to reveal, are most interesting. This is my first year in the House. The last election was not quite a year ago.

An hon. Member: And it is your last.

Mr. Blais: I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that Liberal caucuses—indeed, I am sure all caucuses held as a result of the traditions that have been established—are most helpful and useful. That is why I am sad when a member of the press uses the caucus as a source of information for the special program that he is planning. I am in agreement with the motion which was put forward today. I feel it is very important that we protect our prerogatives. But I take issue when someone says that the Liberal Party does not contribute its greater than fair share to the affairs of this country.

It is a Liberal government that is administering this country at a very difficult time. No one can tell me that there is an economic crisis in Canada at present. The opposition might want to create some sort of panic, but the fact that this particular piece of legislation has been introduced, as well as the fact that some hon. members, at a time when they say there is a terrible crisis, call for an investigation into the situation in North Africa, proves that there is no economic crisis in Canada. Surely, had they believed that there was a terrible crisis in Canada, they would not have gone to North Africa.

Mr. Epp: You are not at your best right now.

Some hon. Members: A little louder.

Mr. Blais: I have invited contributions from the peanut gallery, Mr. Speaker, but these are unintelligible comments and therefore I cannot reply. Those gentlemen who enjoy the lakes of northern Ontario cannot now say they cannot enjoy them in perfect peace. Those members who enjoyed the last three weeks when the gorgeous leaves of northern Ontario were most beautiful cannot now say that we are facing an economic crisis in Canada.

Indeed, as I was saying before I was interrupted, the legislation presently before the House is indicative of the fact that we are concerned with social security and interested in the equitable distribution of wealth, we must recognize that there is wealth to distribute. There is no question in my mind that we will be able to pay the $840 million, and that it will not impose an additional burden on the taxpayers of Canada.

I suggest that this legislation is worth while, and when I look at the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who has been in the House almost since the year I was born, I say that this is not the end-all of the equitable distribution of wealth; it is one step in the right direction. A number of other steps will be taken and I would like to be here when they are taken. However, at this time this is the best legislation which can be presented in our economic situation and I invite all hon. members to support it wholeheartedly.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party reminds me of the chameleon which continuously changes colour so as to blend into its environment. It is interesting to note how that party responds when it is under pressure in this country. They seem to have come a considerable distance in our direction or in whatever direction protests come from. I recall the 1940s when the CCF party first won an election in Saskatchewan and came very close to it in Ontario. It went ahead of the Liberal Party nationally at the polls. I remember the era when family allowances were first introduced, the era when the Wheat Board was first set up when there was a grain crisis. That is why I say the Liberal Party is very much like the chameleon because it makes changes in order to adapt to its environment. Nothing is more indicative of this than watching these fellows since last October 30 and seeing the legislation that is brought before the House. It is indicative of the chameleon-type attitude of these people.

Last year they brought in a very complex family allowance bill which contained a means test. Family allowances were supposed to go up or down according to age, sex, family income, and so on. That bill was so complicated that it would have made the Unemployment Insurance Act look simple. Our party objected strenuously to it and said it was unrealistic. The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) also objected strenuously to that bill. We said it should be a universal bill, that it should not contain a means test and that the rates should be increased.

According to government members at that time, those demands were unrealistic and impossible. That was prior to October 30. Now, suddenly we find the Liberal Party accepting our ideas. They have brought in a bill that is universal, that provides more money for the families of this country and that is sound in principle. It is interesting to watch the Liberal Party. That is why I was so pleased the other day when I saw the popularity of that party drop down to 35 per cent in the public opinion poll.

Perhaps that chameleon party will be bringing forth some more progressive legislation as they sink lower in popularity. When they sense danger, they respond. Perhaps that is the best hope we have until our party or other progressive elements in the country can form a government that is truly representative of the needs of the people. But the Liberal Party has always fascinated me and I think the legislation before us today is really indicative of how they can change their colour so quickly and appear so natural in a different skin. How anyone can do that as neatly and as subtly as the Liberal Party of Canada, I do not know.

● (1550)

As I said already, the bill before us is based on a sound principle. It will put more money into the hands of ordinary citizens by raising the family allowance from an average of $7 a month to an average of $20 a month. I think that is very good in light of the increase in the cost of living which basically hits people living on low income. However, at this stage I appeal to provincial governments from one end of the country to the other not to cut back on their welfare payments because of the increase in the family allowance, using this as a means of saving provincial money. I know that some provinces have already clarified their stand. My own province of Saskatchewan is not going to penalize welfare recipients. It will increase the allowable welfare level so that family allowance is not deducted.

I would like to see all provincial governments do this, including the Conservative government of the province of Ontario which up until now has hesitated to make this decision. I know that the Ontario minister of social services says his province is considering it, and I think this House should say to him and to all provincial governments that they should not take advantage of this bill in order to cut back on provincial welfare payments; otherwise the increase in family allowances would be quite meaningless to many people.

As I say, this is a good piece of legislation. It is based on a sound principle. But as parliamentarians we should not be carried away, slapping each other on the back, pontificating about what great guys we are and that we are doing such a lot for the people of Canada. Basically this bill will do very little to redistribute income in Canada. It will do very little to assist lower income people meet the cost of living which has gone up faster this year than in any year since the Korean war. As politicians we must not become smug and patronizing toward the ordinary citizen, because really the ordinary citizen is not getting a very decent break at all. To understand this, all one has to do is refer to the statistics mentioned in this House previously which show the distribution of income in Canada.

We find that in the last 20 years income distribution has stayed approximately the same for both the poor and the wealthy. In 1951, the lowest 20 per cent of the population, in terms of income, received only 6 per cent of the disposable income in Canada. In 1971, the lowest 20 per cent received only 7 per cent of the disposable income. In other words, over 20 years, despite all our social plans and programs, the lowest 20 per cent income bracket families have received only 7 per cent of our disposable income. In 1951, the highest 20 per cent of the population, in terms of income, received 41 per cent of the disposable income. In 1971, that 20 per cent received 39 per cent of the disposable income. In my opinion they still receive a much greater proportion of disposable income than they should, despite the large number of social plans which we have, despite programs such as the family allowance program which basically and essentially is a very good one.

I would like to remind hon. members that the Senate Committee on Poverty stated that 4½ million poor people in Canada are living in poverty, and of them 1.7 million are children who are deprived of decent nutrition and cannot develop in a healthy manner because they do not have a decent diet. This is something that will affect those children and the families to follow in the years to come.

We should reject some of the insinuations made in this House by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) who referred to this legislation as a welfare type of hand-out measure. Mr. Speaker, it is not a welfare measure. It should be viewed as a measure that is helping the children of the country, that is helping in a small way to redistribute income and wealth all across Canada. As I say, it is only a small step in that direction. Much more has to be done. The House should seriously consider the idea articulated many times by the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) of paying salaries to mothers who elect to stay at home and look after their families.

For mothers who do not want to stay at home we should be accepting the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women and spending a lot more money right across this country, including provinces which have NDP governments, on day-care centres. By doing so the mother would be liberated in the same way as the man. She could go to work and pursue a career, without being restricted to staying at home and looking after her family, or she could choose to stay at home and look after the family. This type of choice should be allowed in a society as affluent as Canada's. The provision of day-care centres, or of salaries for mothers who elect to stay at home and look after their children would give a great deal more freedom to Canadians in general. This would provide a great deal more initiative to people in terms of exploring their creativity and developing themselves. It would be a boon to the economy by placing more purchasing power in the hands of people who really need it.

As I have said, we should not regard this legislation as being the be-all and end-all. But it is one measure to help redistribute income and wealth. That is the main issue. In some way we must do more for the lower income people by providing them with more funds, with better jobs, by providing retraining, higher minimum wages, more work opportunities in processing and manufacturing industries that are labour-intensive and have potential in terms of growth, and by encouraging the average citizens to form and organize trade unions so that their points of view will be represented at the bargaining table, where presently one-third of the work force is represented, that third being the highest paid segment.

These are things that must be done if the ordinary lower income citizen is to receive a greater portion of the income pie in Canada. For people at the top of the income scale who make their money through dividends, capital gains on the stockmarket or other speculation we should have a more progressive taxation system so that they would not see their incomes go up by leaps and bounds every year despite their being only a small proportion of the population.

Along with all this we need strong governmental action in other areas to protect our citizens. As I said in the House a few days ago, we need a prices review board that is really tough, that has some guts, to stop the gouging and profiteering in areas that affect families, in areas such as food prices, the price of lumber, fuel and energy. These are the things our party says should be controlled if there is excessive pricing and gouging. In Canada we produce energy, lumber, fuel, iron and copper ore. These should be controlled on a selective basis for the benefit of the Canadian consumer. In these areas we, as federal legislators, can take action and this could have a spin-off effect to help the ordinary consumers and families of the country.

● (1600)

It is in this context that we should look at legislation of this sort, even though it is very good and very progressive. With that, I encourage the provincial governments not to take advantage of this legislation to cut welfare allowances for the very poor and unfortunate. I also encourage the people of Canada to keep on mistrusting the Liberal Party and forcing them into this kind of situation. They are communing with nature and changing their colours as the attitudes and opinions of the people of this country change. It is for us on the opposition side to push them. The minute they become smug is the time they will stop bringing forth legislation such as Bill C-211.

I am pleased to support this bill, but I serve notice that I will not be satisfied by it and will continue to push as hard as I can for much more original and progressive legislation that will help the people of this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, some time ago, several of my constituents, particularly mothers of large families like those we have in the constituency of Madawaska-Victoria, good families, complained that for some time we had been giving too many increases in old age security pensions and that the government was not doing enough for young families, for young parents who want to have children and provide them with the necessary comfort during the period of their development and education.

Of course, I told them that I respected their opinions, but that I did not necessarily share their points of view and I explained to them why.

For both groups, that is for older citizens and young parents, we could perhaps contribute more. But, what pleased me most recently when discussing with these people was their approval of a formula featured in the bill of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde); not only did they recognize all its social justice because of its flexible approach but they also saw it as being essentially an initiative of the Liberal government, despite the claims of hon. members on the other side who compete to inflate like frogs to attribute themselves all the credit for it.

All great social measures in Canada have been Liberal initiatives, Mr. Speaker, and history speaks for itself. Recently, during a social meeting with my constituents, we spoke at great length about government programs relating to equality of opportunities in society. I am referring in particular to many employees of the Fraser companies, in Edmundston, who repeated the request they had already put forward to reduce to 60 years the optional age of retirement so they can qualify for the old age security pension, Canada pension plan, etc. for themselves and their spouse.

Of course, this debate is not the ideal background to discuss this matter, but many Canadians are ever more conscious of it and I tend to agree more and more with it and I even believe that this matter falls within an overall policy of social security and socio-economic strategy. I intend to ask several questions to the minister and, consequently, the government about this matter during the next meetings of the Standing Committee of Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. The only requirement, in my opinion, for a serious and in-depth discussion of all this problem is that hon. members be provided with all available information in order to easily and effectively deal with it.

To come back to family allowances, I cannot help thinking how much easier it would have been for my parents, as for those of many of my friends in the village where I was born, to keep us in college, for instance, at a time when there were no scholarships or loans to students. These parents would have been assured at the same time of more comfort, had family allowances been a little higher at that time. However, we got out of it and in any case, I am pleased, as all my constituents are, with the excellent legislation now under consideration and which will answer a great many of the most immediate needs of the Canadian family.

Like my colleague from Westmorland-Kent (Mr. LeBlanc), I regret the kind of publicity which, at first sight, seems misleading in a certain New Brunswick newspaper, and which tends to serve the political purposes of that province's government regarding the announcement of contributions to the family allowances program.

The least I can say is that that newspaper remains faithful to its tradition, a questionable one, brought to light a few years ago at the time of the Senate inquiry on Canadian newspapers. The fact is that the federal government is paying the full amount of these allowances and I do not think that it would be possible to keep on misleading New Brunswickers much longer. They will repudiate that kind of crafty journalism in their own way.

As most other members who spoke before me, I could boast to no end the merits of this Bill C-211, but it has all been done many times before. I shall abstain. But for a few moments, I shall dwell on one or two parts from the speech delivered by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde).

I should like to quote a part from pages 11 and 12 of the text of his speech. There it is:

> Apart from increasing the income of Canada's "working poor", the increased allowances should to some extent ease the pressure on provincial social assistance expenditures. The increase in the allowance should in many instances be enough to keep families off the welfare rolls.

I don't know exactly what the minister means by this part which, in my view, lends itself to two different interpretations. The minister obviously recognizes that provincial governments have jurisdiction in matters of administration of public assistance programs, but there is the fact that the family allowances plan is not a public assistance program, as we usually mean it, that is a welfare program, since it is a universal program. But I wonder seriously if provincial governments should or even have the power to reduce their provincial public assistance programs through the family allowance plan. Of course, the provinces might talk about the burden of their program but at the same time it seems to me they would really jeopardize the prime objective of family allowances which is alleviating the burden of poor families.

I do not know whether I interpret the Minister correctly. I hope I am wrong in my interpretation. Finally, perhaps it was necessary to make a concession to the provinces—I do not know—but a thorough investigation of that matter in committee will allow to shed some light on that point.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I consider essential to the intrinsic value of the bill, the provision calling for periodically-increased allowances to offset the increase in the cost of living. This has been done or is being done for other pension or social security plans and it must, of course, be done for family allowances to maintain the purchasing power.

Mr. Speaker, when one has before him such an excellent bill as this one one cannot but desire its quick passage and congratulate quite earnestly the minister and his government for their initiative.

● (1610)

[English]

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has referred to the similarity between the Liberal Party and the chameleon which changes its colour to blend in with its surroundings. Fortunately for the people of Canada, the last election put the Liberal Party into the position of needing to adopt some ideas of the NDP. I say that is fortunate for the people of Canada. Yet not even the chameleon is capable of adopting the sort of advanced colouring that is represented by all the ideas of the NDP, and we are finding out that the government cannot adopt all that colouring. That is why, although we accept this measure with satisfaction, we are at pains to point out that it is only a partial measure, only one among others required to bring dignity, security and proper pride to the families of this country many of whom are labouring under great difficulties. I say that what has happened is fortunate for the people of Canada because one year ago the Liberal Party, in the full glow of its false or fancied security, showed colours that are vastly different from those it is showing in bringing forward this bill.

Like the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, I was a member of the standing committee on health and welfare which studied the previous FISP bill. I shall not quickly forget the great dismay of members, even on the Liberal side of that committee, when they realized what a nightmare that bill was. It was apparent that there would be much red tape and much filling out of unnecessarily detailed forms. We all realized the foul-ups that would occur and the confusion that the FISP legislation would create among the mothers and fathers of this country.

I recall that some members from remote areas of this country practically begged for assurances from the then minister that in remote areas there would be a government agent who could assist parents without too much schooling, and without too great a familiarity with elaborate government and legal documents, with filling out forms. Many changes in situation and status would need to be listed if a family was to get the proposed level of family allowance. All kinds of details would be listed, and all kinds of changes in status would need to be set down.

People would need to list changes in levels of income. If the family received a little more in unemployment insurance, that would need to be reported. If the father's wage or salary went up, that would need to be reported. If one of the children attained a certain age bracket, that fact would need to be reported. If a child moved out, or if the family's circumstances changed, that would need to be spelled out. The whole thing was a nightmare. Now, as another colleague who spoke for our party said yesterday, we are back on track; we are back to the original intent of the legislation. Actually, I think we have gone a little further. I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) put it in proper perspective when he spoke on this measure the other day and said, as recorded at page 6866 of Hansard:

> The original family allowance program was introduced for the purpose of giving a maximum measure of income support to families to help ease the financial burden of bringing up children and to provide a measure of equal opportunity for children regardless of a family's economic situation. The objective of the new family allowance program is to provide a supplement to the income of Canadian families in such a way that those with the greatest need will receive the greatest benefit.

There is a difference, Mr. Speaker. Under the old family allowance scheme there has been an undifferentiated handing out of income to Canadian families without regard to the economic position of the family. With the new measure there has been an improvement. This bill seeks to supplement the income of Canadian families in such a way that those with the greatest need will receive the greatest benefit.

How is this to be done? For years the NDP has been told that this is impossible, that this type of selectivity, inside a system of universality, just cannot work; it just cannot be done. When we advocated the universal old age pension and later, as well, when a Liberal government wanted to introduce a means test principle, we were asked—

An hon. Member: That was typically Liberal.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Yes, typically Liberal. At that time we were asked, "would you give the old age pension to the millionaire just as you would to the poor person? Would you give it to the millionaire who does not need it? How shamefull!" We answered by saying, "There are more ways of killing a cat than by choking it to death with butter. Of course we would give the pension to millionaires too, but we would use taxation to take money back from those who did not need it, and the recovery would be in direct proportion to their affluence." Again we were told that this would be quite impossible. Now, thank goodness, because the Liberal Party has been forced to adopt the ideas of the NDP in this regard we are able to make some headway along these lines. This measure is a definite improvement. It returns to the original concept and takes a step forward as well.

It is apparent, by the various measures the present minister has introduced, that he knows there are wide differences in income in this country. I am glad he has not indulged in this silly talk about averages. I am sick and tired of hearing what the average Canadian income is, what the average Canadian spends on food and what this and that average is. People are not averages; people are people, with wide differences in income, wide differences in needs and wide differences in capabilities for meeting them. The minister knows this. I do not know how far he will be able to push his colleagues. It all depends on how much push we NDP members are able to exert on behalf of the people of the country whose views we are expressing here. It depends on that, and the minister knows it.

I like the way in which the present minister is concerned about bringing up the level of income of different groups in society. He wants different groups to enjoy a liveable income. He is concerned about bringing up the level of the old age pensioners, of the veterans, of the people on the Canada Pension Plan, of public servants and of other groups in society. One of these days, if the minister lasts long enough and if we NDP members last long enough and are strong, there will be a guaranteed annual income in this country. We will get a guaranteed annual income with the same type of flexibility as the present measure. Its level will depend not on any average income but will take into account differences in needs and capacities of the people involved.

A guaranteed income involves more than handing out money to people, more than handing out a cheque or calculating some sort of negative income tax at the end of the year. A guaranteed income has with it other programs. I know that this minister knows about those programs, too. You cannot have a workable guaranteed income without at the same time having a guaranteed occupation. Guaranteed jobs with earnings attached to them are necessary so that people can live by them properly, not as working poor but as people who work for an income of a dignified kind. This is also necessary to make a guaranteed income work. You must have guaranteed occupation of a socially useful and socially satisfying kind.

● (1620)

We are beginning to realize that this is not going to be easy to secure. One of the reasons is that during the two worst years of unemployment, that is, between 1970 and 1972, we allowed our young people to simply drift about in idleness without giving them any direction, any purpose or useful work to do. At the same time, we told them absolute lies. We told them that the idea that work was a useful life-giving thing was a puritan ethic which should be buried deep. That advice was given by people who held satisfying and good jobs, many of whom worked far too hard and worked themselves into early graves because they were doing something which seemed to them worthwhile and satisfying.

Work is the umbilical cord which attaches us to life. Work is the way we find our friends. Work is the way in which we earn our bread. Work is the way we carry our share of the load. Work is the way we make our social contacts and exchange our ideas. And work is the way we develop the capacities we have within ourselves. With one stroke, the government, by its absolutely stupid idea of trying to fight inflation in some mysterious and arcane way by which it neglected to provide jobs, cut the umbilical cord for thousands of young people in this country and allowed them to drift in a kind of death-in-life from which many of them have not recovered nor will recover during their lifetime. Pick-up programs have been introduced since that time and other opportunities are beginning to develop in some measure, but the ideas put forward at that time were a terrible sin and crime against the young people of this country.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway).]

I am glad to see that once again we are trying to demonstrate some kind of care for the children of our nation. I am glad the minister has this vision and that some of his colleagues are beginning to share it with him, even though in a much more limited form. It has not always been like this. There have been means tests. As for my friends over here to the right, my memory goes back to the time when the then premier of Ontario referred to family allowances, when they were introduced, as a bribe to the province of Quebec. He thought that the purpose of family allowances was to enable la revanche des berceaux—the revenge of the cradles—to have its way in Quebec so that Quebec would outpopulate Ontario.

Mr. Paproski: WASP.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): That may be WASP, but it is true. WASP or not, that is what happened. Let me say that I hope things are different now. But I have been noticing that in the Ontario legislature it took two days of waffling back and forth before the Conservative minister of welfare of that province finally made up his mind that he would recommend that they do not cut the family relief allowances in Ontario in respect of family allowances, that they would not reduce the assistance because people were receiving the additional family allowance. Thank goodness he took two days and that he waffled so that people in our party and others were able to get up in the legislature and make a strong plea for common sense and justice. I recommend to the Ontario legislature that they do not cut the relief allowance because people will be receiving the family allowance.

I am proud to be able to announce that in my own province of British Columbia the full amount of $20 will be paid to each child and no cuts will take place in other family assistance rates. I hope this action will encourage some of the other provinces to do likewise, particularly those affluent provinces which have been keeping very quiet on this matter to date. I hope they will be encouraged to come out and we shall see the full $20 given for the children involved.

As I said, I am glad to see that recognition is being given in this legislation to the importance of young children. I think we have been neglecting the needs of families and children for far too long. As a matter of fact, my colleague from Yorkton-Melville made reference to the opportunity I have taken for some years now of urging that where a mother decides to make a career of raising her children and remaining at home instead of going outside the home to seek gainful employment, she should receive a salary for so doing.

I remember the first time I raised this question some years ago it was regarded with some amusement tinged with hostility. People felt that mother love itself was quite enough to raise a child on; there was no need for diapers, bottles, clothes or anything else. It was sufficient for the mother to simply croon to the child, "I can't give you anything but love, baby." That was supposed to be quite enough. Now, thank goodness, women are beginning to discover that they, too, need to have the wherewithal to do the job well.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): It seems to me that if we had the wit to make available a proper salary for mothers with children at home, we would find it much easier to keep women at home in much larger numbers. Over and over again statistics show us that the biggest single cause of women seeking employment in the labour force, full time or part-time, is that the husband's pay cheque is not sufficient to cover the cost of living or because the woman alone has no means of bringing up her children other than going on social assistance. Women who are too proud to go on social assistance are often driven to neglect their families in order to provide money for them to live on.

Many women have come to me and said that although they have a job, by the time they pay their babysitter and pay the extra expenses involved in being presentable and decent at their job, they get less money to take home to their families than if they were on social assistance. That is the truth. If that sort of thing is hard on the morale of a husband, to hang around on social assistance, how much harder is it on the morale of a mother who sees her children dependent on her, in many cases solely dependent on her, when she wishes to bring them up properly.

I wish the minister would give some thought to a measure which I understand has been in existence for some time in France. France has several things we hear about, some which we like and some which we don't like. The measure I refer to is something which they seem to keep under wraps. Whether it is because of their modesty, or whether it is because Canadian journalists have not been interested in finding out about it, I cannot say. But in France, when a mother wishes to stay at home and bring up her family properly, a salary is available. Unfortunately, the salary is paid to the father, unless there has been a change. In Canada there would be no danger of that, even with the Tories in power, because Women's Lib would not let them get away with it.

● (1630)

Mr. Rodriguez: We don't trust them.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Neither do the women. That is a double entendre and you can take it as a compliment if you like. I think recognition is beginning to be given in this measure not only to children but to family life, to the role of the mother in family life. Surely women should be given the choice whether to go out to work full time outside the home, or to work outside the home part time, or to do small jobs at times when they are not too occupied with household duties. But I firmly believe that, in the case of the majority of women today who have small children, if they had an adequate income and the state were to recognize the service they render by giving them a proper salary to bring up their children, you would find these women beating a path back to their home and children. That is because they would have the wherewithal to bring them up in decency.

How can the male members of this House, so many of whom talk of the sanctity of family life, the importance of motherhood and children and all the rest, be so backward in voicing the needs of women and mothers for an adequate salary to further the well-being of their families? Do they take it for granted that in all cases the salary of the husband will be sufficient to provide for this, or do they think that in all cases the husband dutifully goes home and hands over the money to run the home? Or do they think at all? I believe it is time we started to think along these lines.

This measure does have its shortcomings. The minister gave us some very convincing figures showing that people in the lower income groups receive larger benefit from taxation than those in the higher income groups. But it is not what one pays in taxes that counts; rather, it is what one has left over to live on after paying taxes. That is the important thing. People at the top of the income ladder still have a far greater share of their income to live on than those at the bottom after taxation has been deducted.

I can well understand that the minister has to be discreet in cabinet, but I wish he would find some way of handling the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and getting him to zero in on this particular problem. The minister has been exposed to consumer and corporate affairs and he has seen how some people live.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He has also been exposed to justice.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Yes, he has been exposed to justice. But time and again the minister gets up in this House and says he cannot understand what all the fuss is about, because, after all, our gross national product is surging ahead by leaps and bounds, our production is simply super and there are more people with jobs than one could ever believe.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): He even has a fan over there. The minister is at a loss to understand the needs of lower income groups. He goes along, of course, with social security measures, though he does not really see the need for them, with a booming economy and a booming everything else. The Minister of Finance is thinking in averages, not of the fact that this great big national income is largely syphoned off by a small fraction of the population, leaving a large fraction of the population living in insecurity, misery and all the rest.

Therefore, I hope the Minister of National Health and Welfare will be enabled in some way to get the Minister of Finance to stop thinking in terms of averages and to start thinking in terms of men, women and children, and preferably not the most affluent ones. I cannot introduce him to the most poverty-stricken ones right away because it might be too great a shock to him; but let him at least see some that he would recognize are living below his ideal average. He might then be prepared to loosen the purse strings a little and do something for them.

My hon. friend to my far right, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), talked the other day about the fact, with which we all agree, that low income consumers are today hardest hit by rising prices. All right, we agree. But let me ask the hon. member for Hillsborough whether he was thinking about this when the Minister of Finance brought in his proposal the other day to cut the corporation tax rate from 49 per cent to 40 per cent. If he was, did he also think of the large profits made by corporations in this country, which have been growing steadily?

If he was thinking about both of those facts, the cut in corporation tax and the profits being amassed by the big corporations, and if he is aware that among these corporations are many of the big food chains and food outlets, then I would ask the hon. member for Hillsborough what was his reason, be it moral, political or anything else, for voting for the measure to cut corporation tax from 49 per cent to 40 per cent?

As a result of this action, the Minister of Finance will have to get additional revenue through applying heavier taxes, directly or indirectly, against poorer people, those who are hardest hit by the rising cost of living.

An hon. Member: That is the Tory approach.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Yes, but it is not a very sensible one. Perhaps the Tories would move an inch or two on this, because we have to move a little bit these days if we want to continue to live. In other words, we have to get to the root cause. We must get beyond the notion that the welfare state is the cure for everything.

It took a long while to get the idea of the welfare state going and to put in the pieces that make it up, such as the old age security pension, family allowances, veterans pensions and other pensions and allowances. But we are now beginning to discover that it is merely a cruel deception, an illusion, to give raises to people who need them so badly and at the same time permit those raises to be taken away very swiftly and decisively as a result of increases in the cost of living, increases that are controlled by the very large and very irresponsible corporations in this country.

I feel that we have to take measures to bring these large private corporations under control. If we cannot bring them to heel by taking measures to cut their profits and control their operations, making sure our people have a well-rounded diet instead of letting the magnet of foreign trade attract our foodstuffs in great quantities to Japan, the United States, Britain, Europe, Asia and Africa, then all our social security measures will be brought to naught. Yes, the next step has to be control of our means of life in this country.

● (1640)

We have had to fight the large corporate sources of wealth. These must be brought under public control. In many cases there should be public or co-operative ownership at different levels. This will have to be done by various means such as taxation and more and more stringent rules. We are making a start on this, but it must be done much more quickly. It is in this context that we are glad to see this piece of legislation.

We hope the minister will not relax his efforts and will not rest until the guaranteed income is brought in in its initial phase. I hope he can convert the Minister of Finance at least to the point where the money required to do this will be made available. We can press from the outside, but the minister must do it from the inside. I do not know how close he can get to the Minister of Finance at cabinet meetings, but somehow it must be done.

Although we are glad to have this legislation, it will need improvement in committee. One improvement must be an escalator clause based on the full increase in the cost of living, such as is being incorporated into other legislation. We hope this can be achieved, because it is badly needed. There are other improvements that must be made in committee. Having made these criticisms, I conclude by again saying we are glad to have this piece of legislation and we support it very strongly in principle.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, we have been very pleased this week to listen to the statement made by the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) concerning the bill on family allowances. At first sight, this bill is most interesting as it aims at increasing the purchasing power of Canadian families. However, when we compare this with the increase in the national product and those granted in several other areas, we must come to the conclusion that the family allowance rates under Bill C-211 are clearly lagging behind. And considering that the initial Family Allowances Act dates back to the '40s, it is clear that what is being proposed now would have been equitable in the early '60s. To allow families to balance their budgets is about the best thing a government can do, for it is obvious that the best investment we can make as administrators is increasing the families' purchasing power. And we know that it is there where it will do the most good. Our families are our best consumers since they have so many needs.

Moreover, we do not even have to wonder about it since we are not dealing with grants nor with allowances following niggardly inquiries but with the recognition of the right to live. And since the right to live is the first of all rights, family allowances should be given priority. And it is a well-known fact throughout Canada and especially in the province of Quebec that most fertile couples would like to have three or four children. But in view of the spiralling inflation and of the number of three-and-a-half-room dwellings built under the aegis of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, people prefer to abstain. Therefore we have to come to the conclusion that it is the present economic situation which is responsible for the sterility of Canadian couples.

Mr. Speaker, it is my firm intention to support this bill. However, I still hope that the hon. minister will make a few changes to it. I feel that the minister which his age and experience should use his prestige to request the Minister of Finance's (Mr. Turner) co-operation.

Going back over the years and especially to 1944 when the national product was $12 billion, one finds out that old age security pensions were $20 per month while family allowances were $6 per month. In 1973, the national product being $114 billion, namely nine times as much as in 1944, we have followed the graph in the case of the 65 year old retired people by granting them $179 per month. That is fine and I am delighted along with all the Canadian people. Nevertheless, the legislation now brought forward by the hon. minister is really not in accordance with the production capacity of this country. As a matter of fact, at page 6238 of Hansard for September 5, 1973, one can find a reply given by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to question No. 2488 put by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert). I am quoting it:

1. What percentage of the gross national product was spent on family allowances, as at July 31, 1945?

2. What percentage of the gross national product was spent on family allowances, as at July 31, 1972?

3. What percentage of government revenues was earmarked for the payment of family allowances, as at July 31, 1945?

4. What percentage of government revenues was earmarked for the payment of family allowances, as at July 31, 1972?

As a result of an understanding between the Minister of National Health and the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), it was agreed that the department would provide an answer for 1947, since the statistics were more easily available than those for 1945. Now the answer for No. 3 reads as follows:

3. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1947, expenditures on family allowances were 8.99 per cent of federal government revenues.

As for question No. 4, the answer is as follows:

4. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1973, expenditures on family allowances were 2.48 per cent of federal government revenues.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the bill now under consideration proposes an increase; it is true, but such are increase will average $20 per child, three times the present amount.

• (1650)

Two and a half multiplied by three only gives 7½ per cent of the federal government expenditures for 1972 compared with the 9 per cent allotted to that item in 1947.

So, I repeat, the Minister of National Health and Welfare would do well in getting the co-operation of all his colleagues of the cabinet in order to review those figures somewhat.

If it is through administrative techniques that our governments have fostered poverty and unemployment, it is also through corrective legislative techniques that they will restore the balance which will favour Canadian families.

Nowadays, the more people work, exploit the natural resources of this country and increase production, the lower the family allowances percentage. It is a fact that Canadian families and particularly those in the province of Quebec live in very difficult conditions. It is obvious that the proposed increase is a good move for the benefit of families mainly due to the fact that these allowances will be taxable and that taxation rates are relatively low; we must conclude that family heads will receive in one hand and give back with the other.

Then, it is with this situation in mind that I think of the co-operation that the minister should obtain from other cabinet members in order to bring about the early reform needed regarding taxation at source.

Considering that the national output reached $114 billion in 1973, or an average of $5,000 per capita, or $25,000 per family of five, I think it would be possible to exempt from taxation all married couples who earn less than $8,000 a year. By doing that we would only leave them the bare necessities, as an enquiry revealed recently that all Canadian citizens earning less than $8,000 a year cannot even dream any more of buying a house.

I would also like to mention the rate of family allowances in all provinces of the country. I think that the bill before us allows too much latitude to the provinces and the amount paid should be the same on a national basis.

I have some fears, Mr. Speaker, regarding the legislation allowing the provinces to choose the payment method because in Quebec particularly, we still have a bad experience in the field of student loans.

The minister concerned has become an expert in intrigue. Young people have to wait months and months before knowing their faith. Unfortunately, there seems to be a very exclusive group which benefits from a large percentage of the money granted this way to the children of the rich, while these grants are restricted or even refused in the case of most students. I have even seen students who had to obtain the services of lawyers to get what they were entitled to receive. And now, three months before the implementation of the legislation before us, the Quebec premier, whom we all know, has told us that he intends to juggle with the figures.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, before we obtain a guaranteed annual income, I wish that the legislation before us be adopted in order to prevent our families from becoming the victims of illusionists.

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say a few words in favour of the bill before the House, and especially about its fundamental value.

I have listened attentively to most of the remarks made by the previous speakers this afternoon concerning the value of the bill before us, and I do not wish to say any more than is necessary on this subject. However I should like to add a few comments which I believe to be of special importance.

Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of the 29th Parliament, in the Speech from the Throne, it was said that the policy of the government contained two important elements: the economic issues and the social issues.

We know that on the economic level, the budget speech of February 19 last brought several solutions to the problems raised. Other departments, under federal-provincial agreements, the departments of Regional Economic Expansion and of Industry, Trade and Commerce, for instance, took appropriate measures. In the social field, it has been announced that the government intended to review all its social policy.

Last April, the new Minister of National Health and Welfare announced in the House his intention to review the whole social security system in Canada over a period of four or five years. Some aspects of the review of the social security system have already been agreed to by parliament as far as older citizens are concerned. In a few weeks or a few months, assistance will be granted to disabled persons, widows and pensioners and the matter now before us, family allowances, will be dealt with.

There seems to be some features of this bill which should be emphasized and recalled to the Canadian public. They are aimed at children up to 18 and this involves about 3,500,000 families throughout the country. From $6, $8 and $10 they are increased to $20 a month per child in most provinces.

It is worthwhile emphasizing the provincial variations which might be made by provinces in the light of their own priorities as regards age, family size and sometimes both age and family size.

One of the most important features of this new policy at the time of an astounding rate of inflation is the yearly escalation of those benefits. As you know, the new family allowances will escalate with cost of living. Because of inflation which exists not only in Canada but in most countries of the world, and which is hardly manageable even with supposedly adequately flexible structures, this tie in with consumer prices will be definitely a major factor and the most important aspect of this new social policy.

As you know, social benefits were established in 1945 for children up to 16 and the payments were from $5 to $8 a month. A few minor modifications were made along the years in 1949, 1957, and 1964. As everyone remembers, the 1964 improvement was aimed at increasing the eligibility age from 16 to 17. Perhaps I should add that in 1961, that is, four years before the federal government approved the payment of family allowances in respect of 17 year old children, the Quebec government had already established a school allowance, that is three years before the federal program was approved.

Mr. Speaker, there are in my riding a great many families and families with many children. The unemployment rate is also very high there and, as I stated during the debate on the budget, the high unemployment rate is attributable to the manufacturing industries which are encountering great difficulties. However, Mr. Speaker, I must say that in recent months there was a net improvement in that area but the unemployment rate is still much too high. I think that the bill after being agreed to between the provinces and the federal government will surely be the most important bill to be passed in the last two or three years. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that although it does not solve all the problems of a great number of Canadian families at the low income level that bill represents a definite improvement, and I think it is certainly one of the bills that will have the most effect on Canadian families, on the budget of large families, particularly at a time when inflation is so difficult to control.

There is another point, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to raise; that new social policy is the result of negotiations with provincial governments. The new minister in charge of the Department of National Health and Welfare showed an open mind by listening to the provinces and their priorities with respect to new social security programs in Canada. We are certainly moving toward one of the best organized social security programs in the world; the bill before us is but a step in the revision of the social policy of this country. The new minister in charge of the department made what could perhaps be called a giant step toward the improvement of mechanisms to bring about a greater understanding between the various levels of government in Canada.

In the speech he made in the House when he introduced his bill the minister said and I quote:

> In addition, it will advance the development of a more equitable regional redistribution of income across Canada. For these reasons, Bill C-211 represents a major step in the overall reform of the social security system to which this government is firmly committed. As a matter of fact, it constitutes I believe the largest single federal expenditure ever voted by Parliament for any new program.

[Mr. Pelletier (Sherbrooke).]

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this is surely one of the most important bills, as far as my riding is concerned at least, and I feel, as regards the provinces that are less fortunate than others, and even the whole country, that this bill will get the support of most Canadian families. I will conclude my comments by quoting the last paragraph of the speech delivered by the minister:

> Mr. Speaker, I am personally encouraged by the spirit of co-operation which has been shown by the governments of the provinces toward the review of Canada's social security system. I am confident that given the goodwill that has prevailed to date, we shall be able, within the next few years, to set in place a social security system which will ensure a better standard of life for all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleagues—regardless of their party—who will approve this bill. I believe that we must approve it as soon as possible because winter is almost here and a large number of Canadian families would like to see this bill passed without delay so that they can take full advantage of this review of our social security system, in particular as far as family allowances are concerned.

● (1700)

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all members of the House will be pleased with the change that has taken place in the past year with regard to family allowances, and with the fact that we have before us now legislation to provide increases in family allowances on a universal basis. I do not think there will be many complaints about the fact that the minister has seen fit to raise to $12 the benefit immediately in the non-taxable category, and on January 1 to raise the benefit to $20 for all children of all families in Canada up to the age of 18. I am sure that in some provinces this has made a considerable difference, because in some provinces the youth allowances program is different than in others and the program is not universal as is the family allowance program.

I am particularly pleased that the minister does not adopt the male chauvinistic attitude which was made evident in his province in the last year or so when this matter was discussed and considerable arguments were raised against payments going to the mother. Arguments were being put forward in favour of the father receiving the money. It seems to me that the present arrangement is excellent for the Women's Lib movement. The children get the $20 through the payment to the mother, the mother gets the money and the father pays the tax on that money. It seems to me to be a fairly good arrangement.

However, I am concerned—and other members of the House have expressed this concern—about two or three other problems which have not been given much consideration. One of them is a problem which we have not faced, and which we are certainly not facing in this piece of legislation. I am referring tc payments to the young person—here I am not referring to those up to 18 who continue their education but, rather to those beyond the age of 18—whose need for financial assistance to continue his or her education becomes considerably greater and for whom no arrangement has been made in many of the provinces.

All provinces administer a program of student loans for education, but the need of young people for special assistance to enable them to continue their education has not been met. Loans and assistance are given in relation to the income of the father and the mother of these young people as well as any other income that may come into the family. The expenditures which families may have are not taken into consideration, nor is another important factor taken into condideration, namely, whether or not the young person wishes to remain under the care of the family.

I am sure that all hon. members know that if a young person is married, he or she does not qualify for provincial assistance in the form of loans or grants for education in all the provinces. The requirement is for them to be in the labour market for a period of time which is different in various provinces. It does not seem to me that because a young woman does not feel happy living at home and does not get along too well with her family, and certainly does not receive any money from her family, it is fair that in considering her application for assistance to continue her education the government should consider the income of the family. I know of several young women who have married for the simple purpose of gaining independence from their parents. This happens more often in the case of families that are well off than in the case of families in the middle or lower income group.

Another aspect which may not meet with approval from all members of the House is that when family allowances are increased, welfare payments may be cut accordingly. I would like to quote from today's Toronto Star a passage regarding a statement made by Mr. Brunelle in the provincial legislature. It reads as follows:

> In the legislature yesterday, Brunelle denied reports that Canada's ten provincial welfare ministers agreed in a closed meeting in Ottawa last week to prevent welfare families from getting the full benefit of the increase.

I am sure the minister does not agree that they should not get the full benefit of the increase. If it had been his position, obviously this plan would not be on a universal basis and we would be again faced with the FISP of last year. The article continues:

> Holding up a clipping from the Star, Brunelle said Ontario has not made up its mind but definitely did not agree to abide by a federal government suggestion to keep part of the family allowance raise away from welfare families.

● (1710)

In my area the two groups receiving most advantage from family allowance are the low-income group and the welfare group. In setting the allowable budget for welfare families in Ontario, family allowances should not be included. If they are, then you and I, Mr. Speaker, and every other member of this House are being ripped off. Almost all members of this House agree that we should increase the amount being paid through family allowance to $12 per child immediately, without any income tax provision, and to an average of $20 per child after January 1 next.

Obviously we intend that the mother will get $20 for each child. I understand there has been agreement with the provinces of Quebec and Alberta to vary the amount per child. I have not heard the details but I presume that the younger the child, the less the payment; and the older the child, the more the payment, provided the average remains at $20. But if we are to be told by the Ontario minister of social and family services that he will deduct the $20 family allowance from the budget allowed to welfare families, then I think we had better make this payment in another way. We certainly should not make it in a way whereby the provincial government can benefit from it. That would be dishonest and the public should know about it.

An hon. Member: It's a Tory government in Ontario.

Mr. Peters: Yes, a Tory government; and certainly the Tories are even less apt to be fair to the poor than the present federal government.

Mr. Jamieson: Thanks very much.

Mr. Peters: In the province of Ontario, if a person receives workmen's compensation or some federal payment and he lives in a rent-to-income project, his rent can be increased. I know of one family in such a project who paid $36 in rent for an apartment. Then the family was covered by a cost-shared program. It must be remembered that in Ontario the provincial government pays 40 per cent of cost-shared programs, the federal government 40 per cent and the municipality 20 per cent. Anyway, as a result the rent of that apartment went up to $84, even though the cost of the apartment was covered initially by the $36 payment. That is often done in welfare cases.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) should be prepared to introduce an amendment to ensure that the Ontario minister cannot take the increased family allowance out of other welfare payments. Of course, we could increase family allowances to the point where Ontario would not have to pay anything. But, Mr. Speaker, Ontario is not a poor province; it does not have to be niggardly.

This is something that has also been done by the federal government. When old age pensions were increased, the increase was taken off war veterans allowance. A previous minister of veterans affairs could never understand this. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and I spent half an hour one day trying to explain it to him. We tried to show him that the veterans would lose money. The present Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) has been able to get that point across in cabinet, so that an increase given under one piece of legislation will not be removed under another piece of legislation.

The government must be given full credit for the universality of the family allowance scheme. I will not complain if people who have enough money of their own must pay back some of the family allowance through income tax, but I repeat that it would be a shame if provinces deducted the increase in family allowance from welfare payments. Welfare families constitute the one category that needs assistance above all others. We have all dealt with welfare people. We know that there is a certain percentage of people who, when they receive welfare cheques, may spend them on drink. But the family allowance is paid directly to mothers, and in my experience they use the money to buy clothes and food for their children.

I certainly do not want to leave the impression that all welfare families take their cheques down to the local liquor store to cash them. That is not true. But it is a fact that many people on welfare have difficulties, mentally, physically and emotionally and in a number of other ways, and are least able to look after their money and to provide for their children. If Mr. Brunelle in the province of Ontario deducts the additional money that will be paid by the federal government now, and in particular after January, the people who will be hurt are the children, the very people whom we are passing this legislation to protect.

● (1720)

Members of this House can say that is a provincial matter, but I am not very sympathetic to the provinces playing around with legislation when we are making the sole contribution. I do not see Quebec's point of view at all. I do not see why Quebec wants a different program from anyone else, and I do not see why Alberta wants a different program. If the province of Quebec feels that the youth allowance should be increased, then they should put some money into it and increase it. That is true for the province of Ontario or any other province. We have the responsibility for all Canadian children and we should provide them with a benefit which is applied all across the country.

If the minister replies, Mr. Speaker, I am sure he will indicate that he has had meetings with the provincial welfare ministers and that they have made it difficult for him to explain this welfare program. I am sure the province of Ontario would like him to give them one large sum of money once a year in lieu of the family allowances, and I am sure most of the provinces would agree to such a proposition and then make their own distribution. But in my opinion it would seldom get to the children and the youth of this country and I am therefore pleased that the minister has agreed to make this program universal. I will be sympathetic with the position he has had to take with Quebec and Alberta.

It may cost less to raise a one year-old child than an 18 year-old child; maybe there is some merit in that argument. I am not prepared to argue that there is not. I have raised children, and in my opinion they were pretty easy to raise when they stayed in the crib; problems did not develop until they started to wander around. Of course, it got worse the more they wandered around; the further afield they wandered, the more expensive it became.

I am concerned about this idea of allowing the provinces to take the low end of the strap, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre congratulated the minister because this is a redistribution of wealth. It is not going to be a redistribution of wealth in the province of Ontario if the minister responsible for social welfare in that province decides he is not going to pass on the $20 payment that we will be making after January, but will deduct it from the amount he has to pay to maintain the young people in the province.

What really concerns me, Mr. Speaker, is that it will be two or three years before there is an election in Ontario. A lot of hardship and sorrow could happen in that time. A rich province like Ontario could use the $20 or a portion of it to add to the welfare rolls that they would normally have to carry and are in fact now carrying at a specific level. This could mean a reduction in the level. And Mr. Brunelle does not make any bones about it; he says that Ontario has not definitely agreed to abide by a federal government suggestion regarding part of the raise in the family allowance being kept away from welfare families. He says they did not agree, and if they did not it means that he is probably going to take this into consideration as part of the payment.

I come from a wealthy province, but welfare is a problem both for the municipalities and the provincial government in my area. About nine-tenths of the townships I represent are unorganized townships and have no form of municipal government. They therefore come directly under the municipal authorities for welfare and are paid directly by the municipal welfare branch. I am concerned that the families are not going to get the benefit of the payments that we are making.

The minister should give some consideration to the arrangement that we are making in terms of the cost-shared programs which are already operating. We give 50 per cent of that money and then an additional outside payment. The amount the federal government will be paying and the amount the provincial government will be paying into that welfare structure will be decreased by the amount by which we increase the family allowance. If that happens, Mr. Speaker, a lot of people are going to be very unhappy about the role played by members of parliament in providing for the middle-class, and in some cases the upper-class in our society while having neglected to make the full benefit available where it is most needed, at the welfare level.

I have read that the minister says he did not have the meeting, and the provincial minister said that he did. I am sure the deputy minister discussed it or it was discussed at another level. I strongly urge that in addition to the cost-sharing welfare structure, we bring as much pressure to bear as is possible to see that all welfare families in this country receive the full benefit of the federal government's generosity which should be universally available regardless of a family's income or in what province they may reside.

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address myself to this bill for a moment. I remember my grandfather taking his old age pension cheque and using it every month to buy a box of very expensive Cuban cigars. He used to wave his cheque and say, "This is my box of Rey del Mundos". At that time they cost 67½ cents each and it used to rather rile me. He used to pick us up and take us home from the store and I did not say anything, but I wondered what he was doing collecting the old age pension if all he did with it was buy a box of cigars, each cigar costing 67½ cents.

I confess that for many years, Mr. Speaker, I thought that selectivity was the way that pensions should be presented. Until I came to this place and understood the practicalities of the matter, I asked myself why someone who had a substantial income should be collecting a pension. Not until it was explained to me—after all, I do not pretend to be an expert on pensions, taxation and fiscal policies—did I realize, although my grandfather did not realize it, that he was not paying for that box of cigars with his old age pension cheque. I like to think now, may he rest in peace, that he was being taxed at a level at which he was actually paying back the taxpayers' money. That money was going to those people who could use it or who needed it. My grandfather, although he did not know it, was making a considerable contribution through his taxes.

● (1730)

An hon. Member: So that he could smoke White Owl cigars.

Mr. Stollery: My grandfather liked expensive cigars.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps he is still being taxed.

Mr. Stollery: I think that is why the Toronto Star for a long time supported selective pensions and a selective family income security plan. To many of us it seemed reasonable that the money should be paid to those who need it most. Of course, under a system of taxation that is properly managed, that is exactly what happens.

I was also impressed by the reference in the minister's speech to this program as being the initial phase of a program of income supplementation for Canadians whose earnings from employment are insufficient. Personally, as I see it, this variation of an old program is an important step forward in terms of the sum of money involved, as it moves in the direction of a guaranteed minimum wage for all Canadians, and I emphasize "all" Canadians. During the recess I had the pleasure of making my first visit to the eastern Arctic. I must say that I feel happy that this money will help, in a way, to reinforce Canada and will help Canadian families in many parts of the country with which I am not familiar. That is an important aspect of the program. I think this program is probably the most important single initiative to be taken in the field of social security since the original program was introduced by a Liberal government in 1945.

I should like to bring several points to your attention, Mr. Speaker. I have received some correspondence from constituents who complain that they will be taxed at a higher rate because of what they regard as this useless contribution to Canadians. The people, of course, who send these complaints are not in that group of Canadians who will profit from this program. I have received several letters. Actually, I am replying to one now and am explaining to the gentleman that, first, taxes will not be raised. Taxes have been reduced this year. The cost in toto of the new program, as the minister has said, is to be $1.8 billion, as compared with $640 million for the old program. The old program ended on October 1 when the government increased family allowances to $12 on a non-taxable basis for the remainder of this year or until the new program comes into effect.

I have tried to explain to this gentleman that, although he may complain, it is increased revenues resulting from this government's management of the economy, or the increase resulting from an expanding economy, which will pay for this program. I said that his taxes were probably reduced this year and the program will not cost him any more money. His taxes are not going to be increased. Actually, by making the new family allowance taxable, the federal and provincial treasuries combined will recover about $465 million. Therefore the cost is being borne by an expanding, healthy economy.

I hope this situation is understood in the country. It is not costing Canadian taxpayers more money to redistribute income and ensure that Canadian families in lower income groups can live better and more equitably, find their place in our great country and receive their share. For that is what is happening. They are simply receiving their share of an expanding economy and that, in my opinion, is how it should be.

I am not the first to say that this government has given priority to social security legislation. Mr. Speaker, I think the Liberal Party has always made a significant contribution in this area. We have always displayed real concern about the social problems of Canada. One has heard during the past while some rather hyperbolic statements about this government and, I suppose, about the Liberal Party. I should like to mention the names of some men who have been responsible for social security legislation in this century. They have been members of the Liberal Party, or of a Liberal Party. May I bring to the attention of hon. members men like Sir William Beveridge, Ramsay Muir, Walter Layton, John Maynard Keynes, who were all members of the Grasmere group and were prominent in bringing forward social policies during this century. It is not unreasonable for me to bring these names to the attention of hon. members of the House, as I am sure they are interested in knowing that they were all members of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the hon. member a brief question, if he will accept it, which he should be able to answer very briefly as well.

Mr. Stollery: Mr. Speaker, I will not accept a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member knows the rules. A question cannot be asked unless the hon. member who is to be asked agrees.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tell us where those persons lived.

Mr. Stollery: They lived in England. I would have thought that was evident to the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So they were not members of the Liberal Party of Canada.

Mr. Stollery: Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. gentleman opposite had his turn yesterday and if it would not be inconvenient, I should like my turn now. I should like to bring one more point to your attention. I am speaking of federal-provincial co-operation which is so important with this kind of bill. I should like to mention a fact which is often forgotten by Canadians. Canada is a country of 11 governments. For this kind of complex proposal and project the federal government requires agreement of what in effect are 11 governments. This is often extremely difficult.

● (1740)

The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) made a point about day-care centres and their importance to the women of this country which I support completely. In the province of Ontario for eight years now, I believe, the provincial government has failed to embark upon a serious program of day-care centres although the necessary legislation has existed for that length of time under the Canada Assistance Plan.

This question is particularly important to my constituency because it is a working constituency housing large numbers of immigrant people and wives who have to go to work while trying to look after large families and receiving practically no assistance in terms of day-care centres. One of the things we have to be grateful for in the Local Initiatives Program is that it drew attention to some of these social problems. It pointed out the weaknesses in the provincial social assistance program and the province of Ontario is now, I understand, reviewing its position with regard to day-care centres. I hope they will take action with the utmost speed as particularly in urban areas this is a matter of very great concern.

I would also add my voice to those who hope that the minister responsible in Ontario will not use this money to cut the welfare program. Next month, I presume, across the province, and I know for certain in my own area, the OHC will be reviewing the rents charged to senior citizens. There is a real concern that the OHC when it reviews the rents will take the old age pension increases as a factor in the income on which the rent is based. We can only hope they will not do it and that the minister will shortly be able to assure citizens of Ontario that this will not be so, and allay their fears.

An hon. Member: Do you want to bet?

Mr. Stollery: I see this increase to $20 as another long step on the road to a guaranteed minimum wage for all Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Before I recognize the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) it is my duty to inform hon. members that if the minister takes the floor at this time he will conclude the debate.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a few minutes at the conclusion of this debate on second reading to make a number of points and to clarify, if I can, certain others. First, I wish to thank all hon. members who have participated in the discussion for the support they have expressed concerning the principle of this legislation, for their agreement to give it early consideration and, one hopes, early adoption in order that Canadian families may be assured of receiving the benefits of this measure by January 1 of next year.

[Mr. Stollery.]

The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) made a point of the fact that the previous bill on this subject passed by the House had no certain time limit attached to it. This was intentional; the object was to make sure that the increase in family allowance to $12 would be in operation until the bill presently before the House came into effect. I may say that if this bill is passed in the course of the next few weeks there should be no administrative problem in making sure that it takes effect on January 1.

I was somewhat surprised to hear the comments made this afternoon by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) concerning the effect of the bill before us in terms of income redistribution, and its effect on various regions of the country. I do not wish to go into great detail on this subject at the present time because I dealt with this particular aspect of the legislation in the course of my opening speech. I suggest that if the hon. member was not in the House at the time I delivered it—and I believe this was the case—he should read it, because I gave a number of statistics relevant to the point he raised, in particular figures showing the degree of income redistribution which would result if the bill were adopted.

I was also surprised by the comments made by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) who said—and I believe I am quoting him honestly here—

[Translation]

... he said in the House that families with an income ranging between $6,000 and $10,000, for instance, would not have their family allowances increased under this legislation, since the latter provides that such allowances will be taxed. Here again, I did quote rather accurate figures in the statement I made when I opened the debate on second reading, and I cannot understand that the hon. member can make such an assertion in the House. That he makes it here, this is not too serious a matter because we can always correct it immediately, but I hope that neither he nor any member of his party will spread such false information in the population. Such an assertion is groundless, as I believe I have shown it in my statement during the debate on second reading.

As to the ever useful and relevant comments of the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—

[English]

I should like to stress once again that this is, indeed, only a partial measure, only a step toward a complete revision of our social security arrangements. It has not been put forward by the government as being anything else. As I say, it is only a step, though, I believe, a major step in the review and reorganization of our social security system.

We took another step at the recent federal-provincial conference of welfare ministers in which we agreed to make important changes, particularly in the field of pensions under the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan. Other steps are to be taken with regard to community employment, income supplementation and the question of a guaranteed income. Working parties are actively engaged in a review of this field at the present time and there is no reason to expect that this joint review will not be completed before the deadline which the government has set itself. We are going ahead as fast as human resources will allow and I hope that our two-year deadline will be met in ample time.

● (1750)

The next step, the hon. member said, is to control the means of life in this country, and she mainly related this to control of large corporations. This is a subject that is outside my jurisdiction but certainly one which is being considered and discussed. It is in this regard that the government undertook certain steps recently in connection with beef and pork. We have even taken steps with regard to oil. However, it seems to prove that the big problem may not only lie with large corporations but also with large provincial governments. I hope the hon. member will give her support to the government when and if it becomes necessary for the federal government to exercise its true responsibility for the national interest of this country.

Finally, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) said that if the provinces want to change the family allowance configuration they should do so by using their own money. I think there are two points to be made here. The act provides that the provinces can modify the federal plan according to age or number of children. As I have stated, two provinces have indicated that they will do so, namely, Alberta and Quebec. In addition, Prince Edward Island has decided to supplement the plan with their own money.

I wish to point out that both Quebec and Prince Edward Island are adding substantial funds to the federal family allowance scheme. Quebec is adding roughly $100 million of its own money through its own family allowance scheme to supplement the amount being provided by the present legislation. As for Prince Edward Island, it has decided to use the funds coming into the province by way of income tax transfers as a kind of windfall gain so that the province, through fiscal arrangements with both the federal and provincial governments, can effect an increase in family allowances of $10 for the fifth and subsequent children. So this province, too, will effectively use money coming back to it via income tax transfers to increase family allowances.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the few points I wanted to make. The committee will have an opportunity to go into the details of the bill. As the hon. member for Hillsborough has said, various new initiatives and aspects are put forward in the bill which deserve thorough examination. If the committee so wishes, I shall certainly be pleased to make myself and my officials available to the committee in order to discuss the points that have been raised. I might also say that in all likelihood I will have a few amendments to propose at the committee stage.

I listened with great interest to the contributions and suggestions made by the various members of the House regarding the bill. As a result of the two meetings I have had with my provincial colleagues, further suggestions have been made for improving or refining the bill. I hope that when these proposals are put forward at the committee stage they will receive the same degree of support that this bill in general seems to have in the House at the present time.

I should like to conclude with those remarks and I once more thank hon. members for their contributions to this debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the minister permit one question before he sits down?

Mr. Lalonde: Surely.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is he in a position to say whether one of the aspects of the bill to which he may propose an amendment relates to the escalation of family allowances according to the increase in the cost of living?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, as I have said, I am taking account of all the points which are raised by hon. members and by my provincial colleagues. I am afraid the hon. member will have to wait until the specific amendments are put forward before I am able to answer the question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I shall be there.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Before calling it six o'clock perhaps I should remind hon. members that the House will meet at eleven o'clock tomorrow morning. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, October 18, 1973

The House met at 11 a.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

REINSTATEMENT OF LAW RELATING TO CAPITAL PUNISHMENT THAT EXISTED PRIOR TO DECEMBER 30, 1972

The House resumed, from Tuesday, July 24, consideration of Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, this has been a long, drawn-out debate. The issues are well known to the House, to the media and across the country, and I am afraid that as far as members of this parliament are concerned convictions have hardened and people have already made up their minds.

The reason I am boring the House today with a short contribution to this debate is simply that I have not spoken on the matter yet in this chamber. Frankly, I feel somewhat uncomfortable for that reason since, as usual, my own views and experiences do not parallel those of anyone else in the House. I feel I have a duty to indicate those views and experiences in the course of this debate, especially so that my constituents may be able to judge them. As a matter of fact, I think we all have a duty and a responsibility as elected representatives to voice the opinions, desires and needs of our own constituents not only on this issue but on other issues that come before us. I ask you rhetorically, if I may, Mr. Speaker: Why are we all here if it is not to represent the views of our constituents? I ask a further question: Is there anybody here who believes he has been elected to come here because, in the opinion of his constituents, he knows better than they what is good for them?

I think there can be no doubt whatever respecting the feelings and opinions of by far the larger number of people in this country on the general issue of capital punishment. A great number of public opinion polls have been taken on the subject, some of them scientific, others unscientific. I have yet to see one of them which indicated there was a majority of opinion in favour of the abolition of capital punishment in this country. I have seen a great number of these polls and the number of citizens expressing a desire to retain capital punishment for the crime of wanton, premeditated murder ranges from a low of 60 per cent to a high of more than 90 per cent. I believe that especially on an emotional issue such as this the opinions, the sensibilities, the conscience of the average citizen are every bit as reliable as those of any member of parliament, and that we in this House have a responsibility to conform to the clearly expressed wishes of those who elected us.

● (1110)

Because of the intervention of the recess may I take a moment to remind hon. members of what we are discussing. I point out to hon. members that prior to the Criminal Code 1967 Amendment Act a planned and deliberate capital murder in this country was punishable by death, but since 1967 the killing of police officers and prison authorities acting in the course of their duties have been the only murder offences punishable by death under the law. We have gone through the period of the so-called five-year moratorium.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate, of course, to interrupt the hon. member. I understand that his comments at this stage are of an introductory nature, but I am wondering whether we may all be labouring under a difficulty now in the sense that what is before the House at the present time is the amendment standing in the name of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert. I assumed when the hon. member took the floor that he wanted to address the House on that amendment rather than on his own amendment which is the next item of business. Perhaps I am mistaken and the hon. member is actually speaking on the hon. lady's amendment. If that is the case I apologize to the hon. member for having interrupted him.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I was acting on the assumption that debate on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert had been completed and that the vote on it was being held over until tonight. Perhaps Your Honour would like to clear up a possible misunderstanding on my part.

Mr. Speaker: I suspected that this was the misunderstanding and certainly it is not the hon. member's fault. We have had a long adjournment on this item of business. What was called for consideration at this time was the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert. When we adjourned that debate the hon. member for Brandon-Souris had the floor and was speaking to that particular motion. Since no member sought the floor except the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham he was recognized, obviously on the mistaken understanding that he would be addressing himself to the motion before the House.

I assume again that there are no further contributors to the debate on the motion before the House and I will therefore put the question on the understanding that the vote will be deferred until eleven o'clock tonight, along with the division on the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. The order of the House is clear that these votes will be taken at eleven o'clock this evening.

Criminal Code

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): At 10.45.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the motion moved by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert. All those in favour will please say yea?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I understand that according to the special order of the House the recorded division will be deferred until ten forty-five o'clock this evening.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham) moved:

That Bill C-2, an act to amend the Criminal Code, be amended in clause 2 by deleting on page 1 the comma in line 15, by inserting an "(a)" immediately before the word "in" in line 16, by renumbering paragraphs (a) and (b) as (i) and (ii), and by adding immediately after line 5 on page 2, the following new paragraphs:

"(b) in respect of any person, where such person causes the death of a human being while committing or attempting to commit an offence under section 76.1 and

(c) in respect of any person, where such person causes the death of a human being and has been previously convicted of murder, whether or not such murder is punishable by death."

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: What some people will do to get extra applause, Mr. Speaker! In any event, I was indicating that over the last five years the killing of police officers and prison authorities acting within the course of their duties have been the only murder offences punishable by death under our law. This, as I said, was the period of the so-called five-year moratorium. But under the bill we now have before us, the amendment we have just finished discussing as well as the amendment we are discussing now, the issue to be decided by us, all of us, is whether that moratorium should be continued, whether offences calling for capital punishment should be widened, or the further alternative of whether we go back to the pre-1967 state of our law.

Whether we go back to the pre-1967 state of the law or not, for me this debate and the time we have all devoted to it has had a real air of futility and frustration about it. I say that because, even though we know what the law is, since 1967 no police killers and no prison guard killers have been executed in this country despite the fact that in the four years from 1967 through to 1970 16 policemen in this country were murdered in the course of their duties. All of the killers, when convicted of capital murder, had their penalties commuted by the cabinet under the procedure known as the royal prerogative of mercy.

The royal prerogative of mercy is a further appeal that is built into our system under which, after all the trial and appeal procedures in the courts are completed, the cabinet discusses whether or not the penalty should be carried out. I feel that the royal prerogative is a protective, sensible and needed provision in our legal system in case there is new evidence or other factors that indicate a miscarriage of judgment at the trial and/or the appeal processes of our court system, or some other honest doubt has been created about the guilt of the accused. But I say to you, Sir, that this procedure was never designed to subvert the law. It was never designed to subvert the opinion of parliament and the people. It was never designed to undermine the morale of our law enforcement agencies or the processes of our judicial system. Yet under successive governments, not just this one but successive governments, the law of this country has not been upheld; commutation of these death penalties has been automatic and has been expected.

[Mr. Speaker.]

• (1120)

I suspect that despite this debate today, what has gone on before and what will follow, and no matter what the decision of parliament is, no matter what people's opinions may be and no matter what the laws says, under this government we will continue to have the death penalty commuted. Therefore this debate is frustrating and futile because it will have no realistic effect whatsoever. Nevertheless, there is a bill before us. It was drafted by the government, approved by cabinet and is supported unanimously by the ministry. We are now debating it and will vote on it as if it could change the situation.

The purpose of the amendment we have just finished discussing, introduced by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin), calls for the institution of the death penalty where death results from capital murder committed during the course of a rape. If the hon. lady were in the House I would say to her that I certainly intend to support her amendment. My own amendment deals with two matters. It deals with a murder, a killing, a death as a direct result of an act of air piracy or, as we familiarly call it, hijacking. Second, it provides that the death penalty will be instituted where a second conviction for murder occurs. My intention obviously is to vote for my own amendment as it is to vote for the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert.

I hope the hon. lady will not mind if I tell her that even if her amendment is carried and even if my own amendment is carried I intend to vote against third reading of the bill. My logic or the lack of it, as some may claim, is simply this. I do not believe that the bill before us is complete. Obviously, this is one of the reasons why I introduced an amendment. I believe we should go back to the pre-1967 law where for all cases of capital murder the death penalty is instituted. In the case of the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert and my own amendment, if the bill is defeated on third reading, we go back to the pre-1967 law which includes the offences that are before us today and, of course, a great many other offences. It will not include air piracy or hijacking, of course, but I hope that is something the House can clear up in another manner after third reading. However, in respect of the rape provision and the double murder provision, obviously the pre-1967 law will include both of these offences and others.

May I now speak for a moment on the question of air piracy or hijacking. I wish to quote some statistics that have not been quoted in the House before because the matter was not before us. Hon. members may be surprised to learn that the first recorded attempt, and a successful attempt at that, to hijack took place in 1933. According to the Lloyd's list, between 1933 and 1968 there were in all 100 international attempts to hijack aircraft in the world. All of those attempts were successful.

In 1967 the problem suddenly worsened. It accelerated drastically. All governments, airlines and airports began improving security. In 1969 there were 86 recorded attempts in the world in respect of the hijacking of planes of scheduled airlines. In 1970 there were 80 recorded attempts, 62 in 1971 and 60 in 1972. In actual fact, the number of recorded attempts to hijack in the world has declined very slowly, but I wish to point out to the House that as time went on hijackings became much more dangerous, violent and difficult.

Up to the middle of August there have been this year seven internationally recorded attempts to hijack. These statistics show that while the number of acts or attempts at air piracy is decreasing, the property damage, the number of aircraft destroyed and the number of persons killed or injured are increasing quite rapidly. In the period 1968-71, there were 12 passengers or crew members and 18 hijackers killed. An additional 71 people were injured. In 1972 alone there were 13 passengers or crew members and 22 hijackers killed. The number of fatalities in 1972 was more than the combined total of the previous four years. In 1972, 29 other people were injured as the result of hijacking attempts.

The figures for this year are incomplete and therefore I cannot give them. In May, 1973, a Russian Aeroflot TU-104 was hijacked over southern Siberia. The aircraft crashed, presumably killing all aboard, after a gunfight between the hijacker and an armed guard. The number of casualties has never been announced by the U.S.S.R.

The statistics and the trend of the figures are there. This is a serious problem. It is getting more serious. Strong, deterrent action is needed because with the trend toward larger aeroplanes and more air miles covered each year there is potential danger to a growing number of innocent people who use the airlines of this country and the world.

To date, Canada has been remarkably free from hijackings with only a few attempts, but the situation can change. Hijacking is an international offence or, if not, it should be, and we in this country are in danger of these matters flopping over or slopping over into our jurisdiction. If the House does decide that the death penalty is required, I think that strong deterrent action and statutory law are necessary.

May I now move on to the other thrust of my amendment, namely, that in the case of a second conviction for capital murder, the death penalty should apply. I think this is obvious and I do not intend to speak long on it. Certainly our penal and police records show that some in this country who have committed murder have done so more than once. Many have done it more than twice. For example, we all got rather excited just last May when there was an escape from the Laval Correctional Development Centre. One of the persons who escaped at that time and who had broken out twice from an institution was described by the minister at that time as the meanest and toughest type of inmate. That escapee was a confessed double murderer.

● (1130)

Surely there can be no doubt about a repeater. If the death penalty is to remain for anyone surely there should be no doubt that on a second conviction the ultimate penalty should be applied. I say that because surely it is a wrong toward our fellow man and society in general to allow a dangerous undesirable criminal to remain in that society with the probability of causing further harm. This is the basis of my thinking in respect of the whole issue of capital punishment. When the Solicitor General, as he so often has in the House during this debate and in committee and through the media and elsewhere, asks how can we possibly help the victim by executing the offender, my answer to him is simply this: Mr. Solicitor General, you are on the wrong tack completely. When a man or woman has been killed no one can possibly help them. What we should be worried about is the protection in the future of other innocents.

Let me give you my own historical background, Mr. Speaker, in respect of this whole question, because at one time I was an abolitionist. I felt and still feel that hanging is a repugnant act. I still feel that the execution of my fellow man is a terrifying admission of our own failure. Nevertheless, at one time I had some responsibility for the safety and public security of our citizens. At that time I must admit to you, Sir, I went through a real evolution in my mental processes and attitude toward the whole question. I am now a retentionist in respect of capital punishment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: May I take the time of the House merely to say to you, Sir, that the final element in my conversion took place in the spring of 1971 as a result of what we now call the Kingston riot and the subsequent trial of 13 inmates of Kingston, more familiarly known in the legal profession in this province as the infamous Kingston 13. Let me take you back to the evening of Friday, April 18, 1971, at Kingston penitentiary, Kingston, Ontario. At approximately 8.30 p.m. on that evening the ringleaders, a portion of the inmates of that institution, overpowered their guards and took over the institution. For three days within that federal institution there was utter chaos, utter confusion and absolute rampage. During the first two days savage beatings took place and indescribable acts of sadism and bestiality. Some of these matters have never been made public.

On the second night, Saturday night, the segregated prisoners from the first floor of the institution were taken from that floor into the middle of the dome of Kingston penitentiary. Kingston penitentiary, for the information of members, generally speaking is built in the form of a cross with a wing extending out on either side. In the centre of this cross is the area called the dome which extends from the first floor to the ceiling. You can look into the dome area down on to the floor below. The segregated prisoners, what the inmates call the finks, the diddlers and the stoolies, were gathered together by the ringleaders. They were taken to the main floor. The area is about 50 feet across. In the centre of that well is a circular radiator. Fourteen of the inmates were dragged to this radiator ostensibly to be used as a bargaining lever in respect of the whole riot. They were tied facing inward on steel chairs and then all of the chairs were chained together.

At this time the whole institution was controlled by and in the power of the ringleaders. All of the inmates of the institution were then called by the ringleaders to come out on to the balconies to watch the show that was about to take place. At about 2.00 a.m. on Sunday the show started. I do not intend to indicate to you, Sir, all of the details of what took place. I merely say that it started by the beating of these 14 men with steel locking bars taken from the doors which lock the cells in the penitentiary itself. As the turn of each of these 14 poor individuals came about the ringleaders would call out to the assembled crowd, "Do you like this guy?" Invariably, because of the nature of the offence for which that person was in custody, the answer was a resounding "no".

In almost every case as the ringleaders went about the first thing that happened was that the kneecaps of the individuals were smashed. That was just the beginning. Their noses were then smashed. Later indescribable acts took place with straight razors and instruments such as that. That went on for four hours. It was all over by five o'clock. Most of the 14 inmates were terribly lacerated and horribly mutilated. Some of them will never move again under their own power. It is a miracle that only two died, one almost immediately and the other several days later as a result of his injuries. These two people were Ensor and Robert. They had cranial injuries. Others were maimed. Thirteen inmates were charged, all of whom were between the age of 18 and 39.

In the ensuing investigations that took place at Kingston there were very great difficulties in identification. Some of the people who came forward to identify those who took part in these acts are still in security and solitary confinement today because the Solicitor General and his officials, quite rightly, cannot allow these people to intermix with the rest of the prison population for fear of what would happen to them. The difficulties of identification were immense. All prisoners were interrogated and all the prisoners who were charged, the Kingston 13, were people who were in Kingston as a result of rape charges, robbery with violence charges, gross indecency charges as well as other offences. One of the 13 had previously been convicted of manslaughter. Two of the 13 had previously been convicted of murder but had had their sentences commuted.

The purpose of bringing these matters forward is to indicate the mentality of a small portion, a very infinitesimal minority, of the people of this country. There are people whose mentality is such as I have just described. They are not safe, whether they are in prison or outside of prison. As a matter of fact, one of these people has since escaped from Millhaven. I believe there are some members of the prison population of this country whom it is not possible to rehabilitate. They can be identified by medical tests and they are known to the counselling staff. They have been given every psychiatric and sociological test in our prisons, and our prison authorities know who these people are.

• (1140)

I spoke to one very well known member of the Ontario legal profession after a trial. My job was to supervise legal aid at the time to ensure that prisoners had access to it. I asked him what he thought about his client and he said: "Al, that man was pure brute". Another well known counsel came to me after the trial and indicated that his client was all animal. I simply say that when there is such a prisoner, the other prisoners and even the prison staff live in perpetual fear for their lives and safety. Some of these people are in solitary confinement. They are isolated from the rest of the prison population not for purposes of punishment or for the purpose of rehabilitation, not for revenge or retribution, but solely and simply for the purpose of protecting everyone else in the prison.

There are people in our prisons today, some of whom were involved in the Kingston riot, whose only seeming purpose in life is to kill others. One Kingston guard said to me that one of those individuals who was involved in the Kingston riot would obviously kill anyone who came within three feet of him. If anyone came within striking distance of him, that prisoner would strike. As long as there are such people alive today, whether they are in prison or outside of it, there is a real danger that other persons, in some cases innocent persons, will be in danger because of the mentality of that individual.

I say to you, Sir, forget the philosophical discussions in which we have all been engaged in the House on whether capital punishment is or is not a deterrent. Forget these claims about how hanging brutalizes our society. If you want, even forget the horrifying execution practices that still exist in this country. Forget some of the statistics that have been fed to us ad nauseam about the increase in violence and murder in this country. I ask you, Sir, and hon. members to think for just a moment of the future and of the innocent people who can still be killed, tragically maimed or injured by people who have a mentality such as I have described. There will be people who will be brutally killed in the future if people like this are left alive today. They constitute, obviously, an infinitesimal minority, but if we do not retain the death penalty for these people I think we will be abrogating our responsibility so far as the future is concerned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: There are some people who choose to ignore the laws of society or fail to comprehend the standards of civilization. They simply cannot, will not or do not want to be rehabilitated. I say to you, Sir, that the only way to deal with the situation is for an assurance to be given to our citizens that the crime will not be repeated. In a small number of cases where the crime is murder there can be no such assurance so long as offenders with the mentality and attitude I have described are alive.

I say to the House that by abolishing the death penalty, by continuing the abuse of the commutation prerogative, we are condemning innocent children, innocent women and innocent men to future death at the hands of this small number of people. I urge support of the amendments before the House. If the bill passes, those amendments will make it a better bill. But I also urge hon. members to vote against the bill on third reading so that the law will return to its pre-1967 state.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the amendments placed before us this morning I wish to go on record now as saying that unfortunately I will not be in the House this evening at 10.45 to vote. I have voted for the bill in the past, but there will be one less vote this evening. However, I am about to do something that six months ago I would not have thought possible. I intend to change my vote on third reading of Bill C-2. In so doing, I wish to point out with every ounce of energy I possess that I have not changed my principles. First, last and always, I deplore the taking of the life of a human being in any way, shape or form. I cannot, and will not, change this basic principle and cannot envisage any situation which would alter my determination. Coming to the decision to change my vote, however, has been a long and painful process, and I intend to delve into that process briefly to justify this action which is so unfamiliar to me.

When the bill was introduced I studied it very carefully, fully realizing all its shortcomings. I realized that similar legislation had been in effect for five years, that it had not been followed, to the everlasting discredit of the government composed in part of those opposite me—had it been followed, there would perhaps have been a real analysis of the worth of such legislation—that the bill continued discrimination between classes of people, giving protection to those who carry firearms and none to those who do not, that it did not provide the public with protection from disturbed persons with a tendency to kill, and that it did not protect the public from the abuses of the Parole Act or change it in any way. I was fully aware of all these things, and I know the feelings of my constituents. I too listened to the people in my riding and talked to them about this sort of thing.

With all this in mind, I still felt I had to support the bill at second reading for two main reasons, both of which support my initial, basic principle. I believed, first, that it was the best legislation we would get from this weak government. Second, it was my understanding that legislative safeguards would be introduced which would protect the public and put at ease the minds of ordinary men and women who read time after time of atrocities committed by parolees, of the hotel-like atmosphere of our penal institutions, of repeated leaves, and of the pampering of convicted persons, all without any visible improvement in the crime rate or the penal system. So I voted for the government bill. I did so, content that some of the men and women from both sides of the House whose opinions I respect most highly voted as I did. I did so asking for the understanding of my constituents, both those who supported as well as those who opposed my stand. I did so knowing how emotional the subject was and yet how basically unimportant the bill is at this time of frightening inflation and unemployment, at a time when amongst our native peoples more persons are in danger of death from starvation, under nourishment and neglect than from violence.

● (1150)

I did not speak on the subject prior to the second reading of the bill. I could have and perhaps have added a tiny bit to the debate. The nonsense with regard to a referendum could, I feel, be shot down easily. The weight of evidence, to a reasoning person, indicates that capital punishment is not a deterrent. I could have used the Bible as a reference manual, as both sides have done in their presentations. I could have but I did not because I felt that the time being taken could be put to a better purpose having regard to the vital necessity of discussion and legislation on economic matters. I do not intend to dwell on the amendments, although support of the motion of the hon. member for Louis-Hebert (Mrs. Morin) and the motion of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) would make as much sense to me as the two classes of people named in the bill as it now stands. I could, but for that reason I am not going to do so.

Given all the foregoing, Mr. Speaker, I am now prepared to change my vote, for three reasons. The prime reason, the overwhelming compulsion to go contrary to my initial instincts and vote against the bill, is that the fumbling and bumbling of the government have not only not produced any safeguards for the public but have allowed the continuation of practices which have produced the intolerable situations that are so evident today. We still find totally unrehabilitated criminals on the loose, either with the blessing of and at times financed by the government, or having escaped because of incredibly inept administration of our penal institutions.

There are still laws on the books that allow a man to kill two teenagers and get off with only a fine of $125, excused simply because he was intoxicated and driving a motor vehicle. If this man had soberly stopped his car and bludgeoned them to death his fate would have been far different. To me this does not seem to be any safeguard for the public. In short, instead of taking into consideration the obvious and frequently voiced requests of the majority of Canadians, the government has gone blindly and blithely on its way. It has not taken a single, serious, considered step toward penal reform that will either protect the public or, for that matter, benefit those within the institutions.

Second, in voting against this bill I am content in my own mind that I am not jeopardizing the life of anyone. Since the cabinet in defiance of its own legislation has not seen fit to carry out the death penalty, even when called for under the experimental act of the last five years, I see no imminent possibility of a reversal of its attitude. How much easier it would have been for those of us who favour abolition of the death penalty if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his cabinet had followed the act, because then we would have had something on which to base our decision instead of the farce we have had up to now.

Finally, and I dislike intensely using this argument, I feel that the bungling, inefficient handling of this legislation in every phase does not deserve support. That argument alone would not change my mind when the life of anyone, even of a convicted murderer, was at stake. But since, as I have said, I see no danger, it must be considered. I cannot believe that the minister was so naïve as to allow the debate to go on as long as it did without giving any indication of his intention to alter the bill drastically in committee if there had not been some intention to deceive not only members of the House but the public at large. If the minister has no better appreciation of the problems of our penal system, of the mood of the country, or even of the rules of parliament than to make such a stupid, blundering attempt, his legislation does not deserve my support.

As I said at the beginning my principles have not changed. I still believe strongly in the futility of taking any life. In voting against the legislation I do so in the anticipation that, hopefully, with a good deal more commonsense and perhaps with an entirely new minister we may have legislation presented that will clean up this sorry mess. Hopefully we will have legislation that will provide for the people of Canada the safeguards that they expect and deserve, that will provide for those within our institutions a rehabilitation process that must surely be less costly than our present methods of incarceration, that will provide for the humane segregation of incorrigibles in institutions, thus not allowing either escapes or riots such as we have experienced in the last few years.

My family, my friends and constituents are aware of the difficulty I have had in making this decision and, while they may have tried, my colleagues have in no way influenced my change of heart. I have made my decision freely and hopefully in expectation of a new approach to this very difficult problem.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we are now considering the amendment of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) on capital punishment.

Before the adjournment I had the opportunity to state my views to the House. Since then, we have got acquainted with those entertained here and there in Canada. As the mover said a while ago: Canadians in general object to the abolition of capital punishment. There are some exceptions. We hear sometimes that we do not have the right to hang someone in revenge. I think that we must upheld the principle of—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The abortionists have the right to do so.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Pardon me?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The abortionists have the right to do so.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): The abortionists, as mentioned by the member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), have the right to do so, but to punish a gangster or kill him if he has committed a murder, this is not allowed.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the principle is not based on revenge and I would be sorry if it were. It is not an emotional issue either but a matter of protecting the community. If, for example, an individual has a piece of land which is dangerous, he is compelled to set up a fence. For example, at my place in Hull I have a swimming pool. The law requires me to put a fence around my swimming pool so that young children for instance might not fall in it and drown. That is altogether normal and in order. And so capital punishment, in my view, is precisely a fence which sometimes keeps people from committing deeds that they would not commit if there were a barrier, a fence. In my view, capital punishment is the barrier which invites a criminal to refrain from committing murder. It is especially in that spirit that we oppose the abolition of capital punishment. We claim that the amendments now before us are not serious enough to enable us to adequately protect society.

I have received in the mail two letters and one telegram in favour of the abolition of capital punishment. One telegram from Ottawa, for instance, was sent to me by a Mr. Rodrigue Tremblay who sends me his impressions.

● (1200)

[English]

Mr. Caouette in regard to your meeting in Ottawa since your last three days relative to the death penalty for prisoners accused of murder you are hereby advised that I myself and my community—

[Translation]

I do not know what community he wants to refer to.

[English]

—shall fight against you because five years ago it was taken off for a good psychological purpose. I myself and other people of my community are telling you not to exercise your powers so much and keep on salesman for selling cars. Yours truly, Roderick Tremblay.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if people in favour of capital punishment or its abolition all reason like that I think it is a rather faulty line of reasoning. On the other hand, the two other letters I have here express views against capital punishment on religious grounds: Thou shall not kill, etc. But when I consider the truly serious mail I receive from various points in Canada I see that some people are in favour of capital punishment. For example, I have here a letter from Miss Irene Bird of Regina. That person is all in favour of retaining capital punishment. Somebody sent me a newspaper clipping from the Quebec L'Action of July 24, 1973, where the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) is reported as saying in the House, on television and elsewhere, and I quote:

"How in God's name do we pretend to help the stricken family by killing another person".

That is a most nonsensical line of reasoning. We hear things like that but where is the seriousness in them?

The minister received a letter from a lawyer who is certainly as important as he is. Incidentally, I will tell the Solicitor General that there are Liberal members seated behind him or on his side who do not share his views at all. They found deplorable the approach he took with respect to capital punishment and the amendments before us.

I have here a letter from a rather influential lawyer in Montreal, Mr. K. H. Brown, Q.C. For the information of the Solicitor General, I will quote it. And that letter is dated September 25. So it is rather recent.

[English]

—I very much appreciated your thoughtful letter of July 26, 1973, answering mine of July 24 with which I had sent you a copy of my brief dated June 11, 1973 to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

That brief was in fact a retitled version of a memorandum dated March 9, 1973, which I had sent to a number of members—

[Translation]

I am not the only one who received this letter. Some Montreal members have also received a copy.

[English]

—from whom (notably Mr. Woolliams and Mr. Nielsen)—

[Translation]

—two Progressive Conservatives have also received it.

[English]

—I had received appreciative replies. More formal replies were received from several other Conservatives, and some Liberal members to whom I had sent copies of the memorandum because they had spoken in the House in favour of capital punishment.

[Translation]

As I said, this letter has not been written by a nobody, but by a lawyer, an experienced man from a very important law office which employs at least twenty lawyers, Lafleur et Brown, in Montreal. The Solicitor General is certainly not aware of that.

[English]

I now note that the matter is to receive top priority when parliament reconvenes on October 15 and, since you and those to whom I am sending copies of this letter are clearly interested in the matter to the point of taking positive action, I venture to suggest that, apart from the obvious course of persuading as many members as possible, regardless of party, to vote against the bill, these members (or some of them) might consider advancing the arguments which I am mentioning below, which I have not seen pressed very hard so far.

I realize that Madame Morin's two amendments are still under debate, and of course they are desirable as far as they go, but I still think that the bill itself should be relentlessly attacked, and defeated if possible.

[Translation]

This is what we are going to help to do, that is defeat this bill.

[English]

I would first refer to Mr. Allmand's constant theme, last expressed I think in the House of Commons on July 23, 1973 (see Hansard of that date, page 5902) as follows:

> How in God's name do we help the victim or help the family by hanging the murderer? If any hon. member . . . can show me we can help the victim or the family of the murdered person by hanging somebody, I would be happy and willing to change my position.

[Translation]

I for one would feel uneasy to stay on such a position.

[English]

It seems to me that the best attack here would be to challenge Mr. Allmand, directly, to produce one single instance of anybody ever having said that killing a live man could help a dead one or his family. If he cannot (and of course he cannot because obviously nobody ever said anything so silly), it might be suggested that he stop talking as though anyone had ever said such a thing, and trying to make a case for himself by demolishing a non-existent argument.

[Translation]

I repeat, these are empty arguments.

[English]

That line of attack would of course lead directly into the argument about deterrence, and the usual figures, criminologists' reports, etc., would no doubt be invoked by Mr. Allmand.

At this juncture it might be helpful to draw an analogy based upon something which every member of parliament must have experienced in his own personal life. Often it is more useful to bring the matter "close to home" in this way than to debate on a higher but not necessarily more theoretical level.

It could first be pointed out that deterrence is obviously almost entirely a subjective area in which actual proof is next to impossible to obtain (though I did point to specific, proven cases in my brief) because people are simply not going to come forward and say "I was deterred from committing murder".

That much having been pointed out, it becomes evident that the figures, if they prove anything, can only prove that there does exist a hard core class of criminals who cannot be deterred by the death penalty or by anything else.

This is where the analogy might be brought in and I suggest that members be invited to cast their minds back to their school days, as I have done, and I think my experience was typical.

I was in a class of say 30 boys. Punishment for misconduct ranged from the strap as a maximum, down through detention after normal school hours for various periods, deprivation of certain privileges, etc.

Now in that class of 30 there always was a hard core of, say, two or three who were not deterred by the strap or anything else, but surely that would not have been a reason for eliminating it as an effective deterrent for the other 27 or 28 in the class, which it certainly was.

I think that the analogy is complete but in any case I submit it for whatever it may be worth.

● (1210)

As I said before, it is my hope that your evident interest, and that of the gentlemen to whom I am sending copies of this letter, in this matter may make it possible for you to think up some way of making a co-ordinated, organized attack on the bill by members, regardless of their party affiliations, who will have fortified themselves by searching out all possible sources of information and arguments beforehand. I am certain that a fully organized attack is of critical importance because there is certainly a powerful organization supporting the bill.

If my brief to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, or this letter, or any other material which I can furnish, will be of any help, please let me know. Copies of the brief are of course available from the secretary of committees of the House, and if you would like any further copies of this letter you can telephone me or my secretary "collect" and the copies will be forwarded at once.

Yours sincerely,

K. H. Brown, Q.C.

Copies of this letter were sent to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this letter comes from a Montreal legal firm. I have received, from Montreal also, a letter written by Mr. Bouthillier, which ends as follows:

> I believe that it was necessary to give these arguments in order to shed more light on the study of the bill which will be brought before the House of Commons and which will probably have serious consequences for the welfare of the Canadian citizens.

It seems necessary to maintain capital punishment in order not to abolish the equal rights of all citizens to life and death, especially since the extenuating circumstances stipulated in the Criminal Code have already reduced to a minimum the number of executions.

I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that the law must be amended so as to eliminate risks and uncertainties. When there is any doubt as to the guilt of a murderer, he should be given the benefit of the doubt. However, if there is no question concerning his guilt, if the case is absolutely clear, accurate and proven, then society should be protected against criminals.

In fact, certain countries, like England, who had abolished the death penalty a few years ago, are seriously considering re-establishing it. I have right here a newspaper article stating the position taken recently by the State of California. I quote:

[English]

California returns to capital punishment on a limited basis.

[Translation]

Some countries will resort again to capital punishment. In Canada, it is right to say that "for the sake of humanitarianism", "for the sake of the individual" the one who killed, even if he were fully conscious of the seriousness of his act, he should not be sentenced to hang.

Mr. Speaker, the law is not applied or established only after someone has committed a murder. The law exists, and nobody in unaware of that. The citizen is free to respect the law or to break it. But should he transgress it, should he commit a murder, he will know in advance that the law will punish him.

Mr. Speaker, the minister says capital punishment should be abolished "in the name of God", but if Marcotte the "Santa Claus" who fired point-blank and coldly at policemen, were released today from the Montreal penitentiary after having served a seven, eight or ten year sentence and if the Solicitor General needed an honest and loyal employee, would he hire Marcotte? Surely not. Not a single business man, not a single employer would trust a murderer.

But for the sake of society and of humanitarianism, the minister says capital punishment should be abolished "in the name of God" in order to help a family. Those are false arguments, that is stupid reasoning.

Mr. Speaker, the Creditistes will not make a political stock argument out of that. Let us not play politics with it. When it was decided in this House that there would be a free vote on the bill on capital punishment, we were pleased to hear the government give us that promise and that is why Mr. Brown, the lawyer, advises us to get together, Liberals, Progressive Conservatives, NDP members—if there are some against abolition—and Creditistes, to prevent this bill from being passed by the House.

Mr. Speaker, those are the remarks I wanted to make. I have letters, another one here from Chatham, Ontario—

[English]

We support your stand on capital punishment—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him under the special order has expired. He may, however, continue with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I gather it is given.

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to my colleague for at least letting me conclude my remarks. I shall be brief.

I received another letter favouring the retention of capital punishment. It is from Mr. Lawrence P. Ripley, 7730, 23rd Avenue, Montreal. Mr. Ripley also talks about the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). Would Mr. Ripley not be living in the minister's constituency? I quote:

[English]

Mr. Allmand described the cruel form of execution used in Spain. He did not describe the many cruel ways that a murderer uses such as a gun, a knife, strangulation, a club, rape or, worst of all, death by fire.

[Translation]

The minister ought to know that when a bandit armed with a submachine gun enters a bank, it is neither to say his rosary nor to do the stations of the cross, in God's name. When he does, his mind is set on killing if his robbery fails. The minister should think about this for a while. When he reasons this way, I cannot help wonder who his advisors are or whether the Holy Ghost is inspiring him in his sleep.

At any rate, we are investigating this matter everywhere in Canada. I was in western Canada during the last weekend, specifically in Edmonton and Vancouver, where I was asked lots of questions about capital punishment. I claim that 90 per cent of our population favour retention.

I have before me a letter from Mrs. Katherine Cordaro, from Georgetown, Ont., which is not even my riding. I quote:

[English]

There are many, many people who will back you all the way in your comments on capital punishment.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I could quote letters all day long and pursue the debate until next week to demonstrate how much the people are in favour of maintaining capital punishment. Again, I shall repeat it: I hear New Democratic Party members speak about the humanitarian feelings we should show towards murderers and say that we should not kill those murderers but when we speak about abortion or the murder of a young child in his mother's womb, a child who never committed a murder, who never harmed anyone, who never asked to be born, they blame us. In the one hand, they say: kill the baby who did nothing wrong but protect the bandit who killed his fellowman.

As far as capital punishment is concerned, logic was certainly not born in New Democratic Party ranks.

Mr. Speaker, I have here another letter from Mr. Alvin S. Nemetz, Mississauga, near Toronto. The Solicitor General and the member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) received copies of that letter. I quote:

● (1220)

[English]

Sir:

I regret that more urgent matters have kept me from commenting earlier on the matter of capital punishment.

I cannot possibly express adequately my disgust and disappointment upon finding that our government has sunk so low as to be guilty of a flagrant breach of ethics. Mr. Allmand's action in radically altering the bill after it received second reading strips him of any right to ever discuss or comment on ethics, morality or justice. In permitting him to do so, you have once again revealed your utter contempt for parliament and the Canadian public.

[Translation]

That letter was sent to the Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau and copies were sent to three other members of parliament, including the Solicitor General.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, I could quote letters all day long. I would like to quote a leading article on capital punishment:

He who infringes social order deprives himself of the right to live or to be free, by committing his offence;

It is not the government, it is not members of parliament. It is he who infringes social order who deprives himself of the right to live or to be free. He is aware of it. Therefore, if he is aware of it, he must act consequently. I go on quoting:

—through the execution of the punishment, it is the property of life or freedom to which he was no longer entitled that is taken away from him in fact".

And many comments, articles, editorials, support the retention of capital punishment.

I would like now to quote a circular coming from Toronto:

[English]

This letter is from Miss Rita Hogg, president, Concerned Residents Action Committee:

We urge retentionist members to keep up the excellent work they are doing for we are more than ever convinced by the trend of events in our society today that it is indeed time to reinstate capital punishment.

Then a postscript:

Your leadership and solidarity have accomplished a very great deal. We are grateful to you. Keep up the good work.

[Translation]

This circular letter was sent to many parliament members. Probably the Solicitor General received it also. Perhaps he will speak during the debate on the amendments before us but many competent people spoke in the past; today they speak again in favour of the retention of capital punishment.

I am looking at the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) in his seat. When he was Minister of Justice for the province of Quebec, he was in favour of retaining capital punishment and after it was abolished, five years ago, he still was for retention. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe is as good a lawyer as the Solicitor General. He was Minister of Justice in Quebec; it is a position as important as that of Solicitor General but the latter is speaking in the name of God. In the name of God we want justice to be rendered; we want a murderer to be punished for his crime against society. It is not as a vengeance but for a better respect of law and for the respect of the human beings who want to live in peace and order in our Canadian society.

[English]

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, this is the first occasion that I have spoken on this measure and I trust that it will be the last. I am now speaking to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence), and as I intend to speak only the once I trust I shall be able to exercise some leeway in regard to the aspects of the bill with which I wish to deal and also the amendments.

First of all, this bill is a very confusing piece of legislation. There is no need for it to be confusing. One would think the simple question whether or not certain persons should be put to death if they commit certain offences is straightforward. Yet we find ourselves in a peculiar position when we take a look at Bill C-2.

The legislation states that a certain section of the Criminal Code in the Revised Statutes of Canada will be repealed and the following substituted therefor:

214. (1) Murder is punishable by death or is punishable by imprisonment for life.

If you gave the bill to a person not used to the intricacies and the tortuous method of passing legislation through this House, I am sure that person would assume that this bill calls for capital punishment. "Murder is punishable by death", says the bill. Only through the machinations and confused operations of the present government could they have managed to bring forward a bill that calls for punishment by death and yet places parliament in a position where the retentionists are going to vote against the bill and the abolitionists are going to vote for the bill, which as I say calls for "murder punishable by death".

Given the premise that we start with a bill that says exactly the opposite to what it is supposed to say, a lot of extra difficulties have been created as a result, and totally unnecessarily. The original amendments which were submitted received a fair amount of forethought, I believe. I am sorry that the amendment asking for a plebiscite was ruled out of order because I would have voted in favour of it had it been possible to do so.

The hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) has asked for an extension of the classes of murder which could be punishable by death. I am inclined to agree that if one accepts the philosophy that murder should ever be punishable by death, then one death is not greatly different from another provided there is the intention to murder someone. While I respect the right of a policeman on duty and penitentiary guards to ask for extra protection, I feel it is possibly a more heinous crime to murder defenceless children than it is to have a shoot-out with a policeman. But this is a matter of personal opinion and I would find no difficulty in supporting the amendment moved by the hon. lady from Louis-Hébert. Having accepted the principle that it is possible to put a person to death for certain types of murder, I do not see the logic of trying to be quite as narrow as this bill is in regard to what types of murder should be punishable by death.

● (1230)

For the most part, the debate so far has been conducted with a fair amount of reason. Members appear to be divided into roughly three divisions. Retentionists are quite happy to retain capital punishment. On their outer fringe, they appear to want to have people put to death. On the other extreme are the abolitionists who appear to have been born that way. They have never been required to search their conscience on that matter. The third group is centered between those two. They do not wish people to be put to death, but they see no reasonable or possible alternative. Others will not vote for retention.

I am disappointed in the amount of intolerance both in the corridors and in the speeches by members of all parties. One would expect the abolitionists to be a little more tolerant of the views of their colleagues than has been evidenced. I say this with a great deal of regret.

I sometimes believe that I must be the only individual in Canada who did not spend his time talking about capital punishment before becoming involved in politics. I can honestly say that I never expressed an opinion on whether we should have capital punishment until the election campaign got under way. The first few times I was asked for my view about capital punishment I was inclined to say it was my own business. That is not so. I was a candidate for political office and people presumed they had a right to inquire into my views on the subject. On consideration, I believe they were correct. They have a right to know how a candidate is going to vote on a matter such as this, although I am surprised people would change their votes for candidates for the House of Commons depending on how they were going to vote on capital punishment. I would think a voter would be interested in how a candidate was going to vote on capital punishment but, with all the other important issues with which we are involved, I was surprised to hear many people say that if I voted for abolition they would not vote for me or if I voted for retention they would not vote for me. There seemed to have been an equal division. My letters indicated they would or would not vote for people because of their vote on this measure. I am also sorry to report that.

A member of parliament must decide whether he is better qualified than his constituents in this matter, if we are going to go by the results of polls and letters. If a member of parliament is convinced he has a more highly qualified opinion on this matter than the average constituent, he should have no hesitation in voting whichever way he feels. I, personally, do not feel that way. I have no qualification that would enable me to say that I have better judgment on whether a person should be put to death for certain crimes than anyone in my constituency. The person with a menial job and perhaps very little in the way of education might very well be right on this issue and I might be wrong. Consequently, I do not hesitate to accept the wishes of my constituents in this matter as I can determine them. I make no apology for so doing.

I feel that democracy is exercised all too seldom in this country and surely the basis of democracy is rule by the people. In a matter such as this, I have no hesitation in accepting the advice of the overwhelming majority of my constituents. There are other issues on which I do not hesitate to go against the wishes of the majority of my constituents. I have done so on two occasions in this parliament. It is a matter of what you consider to be your qualifications.

[Mr. McKinnon.]

I have travelled a great deal in Canada and have rubbed shoulders with many different groups of people in various parts of the country. In certain matters of national import I believe I am better qualified than the average constituent in Victoria. I hope I will not be thought too conceited for that remark. One of the measures I am referring to is, of course, the official languages bill.

During this debate we have heard a great deal about Edmund Burke. For many years I have been fond of reading his speeches. I have always considered that he put words together in a manner that should be an example to everyone using the English language. I recommend his speeches to all. However, I think they have been used during this debate in a manner he would not have defended.

Mr. Burke was born an Irish Catholic. In 1774, he was elected to parliament at Westminster to represent the constituency of Bristol. He represented it very well for six years. In 1780, he found to his horror that the people of Bristol were not likely to renominate him. He then made his famous speech in the Guild Hall in Bristol, a speech that is often quoted and frequently misquoted in this House. It is often said that because Burke was willing to vote against the wishes of his constituents we should do the same. However, Burke did this on the very type of matter I have been talking about, a matter on which he was an expert. He went against his constituents on matters where their prejudices were prevalent, the Irish question and the American revolution.

I always thought his best speeches were on the American revolution where he took a very tolerant attitude early in the revolution and suggested there should be some compromise. He also voted according to his wisdom on the Catholic relief bill and the Irish trade bill. I think he was quite right in doing so. He had more wisdom and knowledge on these matters than his constituents, so he voted the way he felt. He pointed this out to them.

Early in his so often quoted speech in the Guild Hall he said that by all means he should consider the wishes of his constituents wherever possible and on those matters on which his constituents were knowledgeable he should consult their opinions. However, in matters where he had superior knowledge and intellect and had studied and worked, he felt quite at liberty, as do I, to vote according to his own knowledge and intelligence. As a footnote, I should add that after Mr. Burke's great speech that is so often quoted he lost the nomination and was never again truly elected. He did not get the nomination and from then on represented a private constituency owned by the Duke of Rockingham. So while he went down in history in respect of this one speech, he was a failure in a political sense.

● (1240)

Another thing that happened in the early stages of the debate on capital punishment was that capital punishment was linked to the question of law and order. At first I rejected this and said that the two were different subjects. I said that capital punishment is a subject by itself when we consider whether or not we will take the life of a human being because the state wishes us so to do. The matter kept coming up and I began to wonder if perhaps I might be wrong and that the two are rightly linked. I was impressed by a column written by Richard Needham who regularly writes for the Globe and Mail. I refer to an article that was syndicated in a Victoria newspaper on September 17, I believe. He was speaking of the lack of religion in our society. I think the article was headed "Nothing Is Sacred". He mentioned that in this day and age more and more crimes, such as murder, robbery, rape and so on, occurred in churches. There was the case of a Canadian minister who was set upon in New York City while walking from one church across the street to another. Mr. Needham quoted Dostoyevsky. His version was quite abridged. I believe the entire quotation is worthwhile. It was written some time in the mid-19th century. Dostoyesky wrote as follows:

> If you were to destroy in mankind the belief in immortality, not only love but every living force maintaining the life of the world would at once be dried up. Moreover, nothing then would be immoral, everything would be permissible, even cannibalism.

In his abridgement I believe Mr. Needham said, "if there is no God, anything is permissible". I believe we have a situation today in this country that the strictures and standards that had been set for so many years, based on the law of Moses, the Ten Commandments, and which served as a structure for our social and moral life, are considered today by younger people and some not so young as being irrelevant. However, there is nothing to replace those strictures that were impressed upon people with the effect that they believed if they were evil they would suffer damnation thereafter. Several other people have been quoted on this subject. I suppose one of the best examples is Voltaire who said that if God did not exist we would have to invent him. When so many of our people appear to no longer believe in or accept religion, the lawmakers must bring in some kind of philosophy for the people to replace these strictures. We have failed miserably in this regard.

I spoke to a friend of mine in the New Democratic Party yesterday, who unfortunately is not in the House today, who said he has no problem in this regard because he believes in the rule of law and that he has almost made this belief the equivalent of that held by people who believe in the law of God. In other words, if you worship the law then you need no other strictures on your behaviour. I find that this goes a bit far, but we are faced with this dilemma and I do not know how to solve it to everyone's satisfaction. I am sure there are greater thinkers than I who are worrying about this problem. When we look round the House we realize that there are 264 members who are placed in the position of trying to represent the collective wisdom of the country. I think there may be better judges of the problem facing us or of the rightness or wrongness in respect of this matter. But it is now our responsibility.

Many members of the House have participated in state killings. I am speaking of world war II when we were sent out and, after a certain amount of what modern-day persons refer to as "being psyched up" to something, found ourselves able to take lives on behalf of the state with no particular qualms of conscience. I suppose years later some of us worried about it. However, it was done at the time. Incidentally, I was chosen to participate in the execution of General Kurt Meyer which was to be carried out by the Canadian forces in 1946. I approached this as another job. It did not bother me a great deal. I am sure, had we gone through with the execution, it would not have bothered me a great deal. As I say, we were psyched up, and we were young.

This debate has bothered me a great deal. I am sure it has bothered most members. I am glad it is coming to an end. I intend to vote against the bill on third reading. I shall vote against the amendment which is before us now largely because I do not care for its wording. The part I am most unhappy about is the part in which a second murder is not spelled out as murder but as the death of a human being. It seems to me this amendment would have to be further amended to indicate that the second taking of life must be murder. I suggest to the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) that since the second part of the amendment states, "in respect of any person, where such person causes the death of a human being and has been previously convicted of murder, whether or not such murder is punishable by death", it seems to me that this would not cover the situation where a person convicted of murder, not punishable by death, was involved in an automobile accident which resulted in the death of a person. Such a situation, I suggest, should be excluded from this provision. Had the word "murder" been included I would have supported the amendment. However, I do not think it has much chance of being passed. I shall vote against the bill at the third reading stage. I hope we can then forget the quarrels and bitterness and go on from there.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I propose to speak very briefly. I shall confine my remarks entirely to the amendment. The amendment presented by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) represents a conscious attempt to try to pull some reason out of a bill with which even the minister was not satisfied. When he appeared before the committee he tried to amend the bill all over again by changing its very nature and status. I am indeed surprised that the minister, having proposed to the committee that the whole concept of capital punishment should have been taken out of the bill in the first place, did not withdraw the bill completely and start again from scratch and really produce what he intended to produce in the first place—legislation which would provide that nowhere in the Criminal Code of Canada would there be a provision for the taking of life as a penalty. Having confused everybody in the committee and having stirred up the country the minister decided to carry the bill through. It was forced through the committee and reported to the House.

● (1250)

An hon. Member: It was not forced through, it was passed.

Mr. Blenkarn: Let me tell hon. members what they already know, that very close to 90 per cent of the people in Canada demand that capital punishment be put into the Criminal Code as the maximum penalty for heinous murder.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: That bill was forced through the committee because, in terms of ideology, the committee did not present a true reflection of the opinions of this House or a true reflection of the opinions of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: The committee was really stirred up. An effort was made to put forward an amendment in connection with euthanasia. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham tried to put forward that amendment. He said: "Let us get rid of the rope. Let us not be cruel in exercising the death penalty." That is not before us, unfortunately, because again it was blocked by procedure. At that time there was no reason whatsoever why the minister should not have admitted that there is disagreement and confusion in the country and that this legislation will affect every citizen in Canada. But what did the minister do? He said that in no way is he forcing it through but that it has to go through in the way he says it should and that what the people of Canada are saying does not matter.

I commend the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham and the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) for their amendments because both these hon. members have been trying to present to the House some form of compromise. It is well known that right across Canada people demand the reinstatement of the maximum penalty because they are disturbed and incensed at the fact that some people can go out and murder and get nothing more than a nice sentence to a comfortable jail. We know that something must be inserted into our criminal law that will satisfy the people of Canada. Those hon. members have tried to do that in their amendments.

I hope that the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) will change his mind and vote for these amendments tonight. I hope that hon. members opposite and members of the NDP who have been adamant against capital punishment will say that at least we have reflected to some extent the opinion of our constituents. We have said that those who murder in the course of airline hijackings, which is a heinous crime, should be subject to the death penalty as well as those who have murdered again following escape from those nice, tight secure jails of the present Solicitor General. Surely these people have lost their right to be in our society.

These amendments are not good amendments; they are makeshift amendments because the bill is a makeshift bill. It should have been withdrawn and rewritten from scratch. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham and the hon. member for Louis-Hébert have put forward these amendments to try to make some sense out of the bill and to try to solve the problems because it does not do so. But what does the minister do? He does not want these amendments. He does not want the Criminal Code of Canada to reflect the morality of Canadians and the desire of Canadians for the kind of punishment which they feel should be in their statutes.

I do not intend to say much at this time about the concept and the reason for capital punishment being in the Criminal Code. I may speak about that later in the debate on third reading of the bill. But at this point let me plead with hon. members to realize that these amendments, particularly the amendment of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, do make sense and will at least allow some hon. members who really do not want to see capital punishment contained in the Criminal Code to say to their constituents and to the people of Canada that they as members of the House were at least responsible regarding the matter of double murder and murder during airline hijacking. The minister cannot refuse to listen to the people. This House is not an ivory tower, although members to the left of me continue to think it is. Surely we can accept this small compromise, this small bone, if you want to put it that way, tossed out by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. At least we will have shown that we pay attention to the people of Canada. If we do not do so as members who represent the people of Canada I suggest that some of us had better find another job, perhaps join the ministry or become social workers. They had better not continue being members of parliament because obviously they do not really want to listen to the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: One o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I could interrupt the hon. member at this time. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

FISHERIES

COMPENSATION TO NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN AS A RESULT OF STORM DAMAGE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Mr. Speaker, on June 17 and 18, the Atlantic area, and particularly the east coast of Newfoundland suffered the loss of fishing gear and property, the estimated value of which was $1.4 million, as a result of storm damage.

In view of the fact representations have been made to this government by the individual fishermen from the province of Newfoundland, the premier of the province and, as well, by myself on numerous occasions in attempts to determine what this government is doing to compensate the fishermen; and in view of the fact compensation has not yet been granted, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan):

That this House direct the Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of Finance to submit immediately to cabinet all findings relating to the storm damage of June 17 and 18, and further, that the cabinet and particularly the Minister of Fisheries release immediately to this House their findings and the actions they will undertake in order to help alleviate this situation.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

TABLING OF REPORT ON MONITORING OF EFFECTS OF SALES TAX AND TARIFF CUTS

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 41(2) I should like to table, in both official languages, copies of a report on the effects of the tariff sales and excise tax changes set out in the February 19, 1973 budget, on consumer prices.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR WAGE PARITY FOR NURSES IN VETERANS HOSPITALS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek the unanimous consent of this House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity with regional as well as national connotations. It has to do with the widespread unrest of nurses employed by the federal government which has been exacerbated by a recent arbitral award.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Treasury Board, in general, and the Solicitor General and Ministers of Veterans Affairs, Health and Welfare and National Defence, in particular, review present government policy in respect to national wage parity for federal government employees in this case, nurses, across the nation, with the object in mind of phasing out, in an orderly fashion, the inequities and confusion which now exist across Canada and to thus ensure with regard to the nurses that their different status, regarding salaries, compared with what is available elsewhere, in no way affects their capacity, willingness and efficiency to care for our veterans, regardless of where in Canada they may be.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

UNVEILING AND DEDICATION OF NEWFOUNDLAND BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the members of this House of a highly significant and solemn ceremony which will take place this Sunday afternoon in the Confederation Room of the West Block. I am referring to the unveiling and dedication of the Newfoundland Book of Remembrance which, after the dedication, will be placed, along with the four other Books of Remembrance, in the Memorial Chamber of the Peace Tower.

It was more than six years ago that the government of the day approved the plan to produce a Book of Remembrance which would commemorate the names of the Newfoundland men and women who gave their lives in the defence of freedom between 1867 and 1949, the year when Newfoundland became part of Canada. The committee which was set up to complete the project has worked tirelessly and efficiently, and the results of its work will be a lasting testimonial to the 2,327 Newfoundlanders whose names are inscribed.

• (1410)

I am sure hon. members will be pleased to know that 110 Newfoundland veterans and their wives will be among the invited guests at the ceremony. This delegation will be headed by the Hon. Joseph Harnum, Lieutenant-Governor of Newfoundland and Mr. Frank Moores, Premier of Newfoundland. The dedication will be made by the Chaplains-General of the Canadian Armed Forces, Brigadier-General James A. MacLean and Brigadier-General Joseph Cardy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I can do no less than commend the minister and his committee for bringing to completion their work. The Book of Remembrance has taken more than six years to compile. I am pleased to have attended many of the committee meetings which were held over those six years.

I think we should commend, too, all those who played a part in the completion of this book which is nothing less than a lasting memorial to the veterans of Newfoundland. I might add that the forthcoming dedication arises in a sense, of course, from the union of Newfoundland with Canada.

I can assure the minister that I and my colleagues from Newfoundland will be very happy to participate in this ceremony on Sunday.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to join with the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) in offering our commendation to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) on the significant announcement he made this afternoon. We are glad to know that the names of Newfoundland veterans who gave their lives are to be, along with the others in the various Books of Remembrance, kept in the Peace Tower of this building. Like the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, we welcome this further evidence of the unity of Canada from coast to coast.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Social Credit Party of Canada, to join my colleagues of other parties to commend the minister for that initiative which surely deserves all our attention and particularly all our congratulations.

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, this gives me a unique occasion for bringing to the minister's attention the fact that, notwithstanding that the Yukon is part of Canada, it is not represented in any significant way, as are the provinces, in the memorial chamber, although the first motor machine gun brigade to go into action in the first world war came from the Yukon.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Yukon says this gives him a unique occasion. It is unique in many ways, particularly from the point of view of the Standing Orders of the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

PROVISION FOR OBSERVERS AT TRI-LEVEL CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I wish to propose a motion under Standing Order 43 concerning the important national tri-level intergovernmental meeting to be held next week in Edmonton, which is to be open to the press but closed to official observers for reasons of space. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary North:

That the planning secretariat be instructed by the federal government to permit one official observer from each political party in the House of Commons to attend this meeting, thereby ensuring the right of Members of Parliament to inform themselves on public issues.

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed by the hon. member under the terms of Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

TAKEOVER BY CAPITAL AND COUNTIES PROPERTY COMPANY OF WESTERN REALTY LIMITED—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter which I believe to be both important and pressing. In light of the takeover by the Capital and Counties Property Company, Limited of London, England, of a Canadian company, Western Realty Limited of Vancouver, recently for some $48 million, and in light of Western Realty's large land holdings in western Canada and its plans to merge with Great Northern Capital Corporation, with large holdings in eastern Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

[Mr. Matte.]

That this House instruct the government to prohibit any new foreign takeovers until this House passes adequate takeover legislation.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

OIL—REFERENCE TO MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON RATIONING—DISCUSSIONS WITH ARAB STATES ON EFFECT OF CUTBACK ON CANADIAN SUPPLIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether he received any additional information between the time he answered my question in the House yesterday with regard to contingency plans in the event of oil from the Middle East being cut off, when he said "I think it will depend very much on the exact arrangements each company has, to be able to predict the contingency arrangements we should have", and his going out of the House immediately afterwards and saying in response to a question about the same subject in the event of "an interruption for a period in excess of 60 days, then, of course, we would have to look at some form of rationing, that is to say, rationing of less essential use of oil products in favour of more essential uses". Did the minister get some additional information from the companies in the meantime as to their plans which enabled him to go considerably further outside the House than he went inside the House?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Sir. It was a different question asked me outside the House.

Mr. Stanfield: That's a great way to run an oil policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the minister whether he has been in direct contact with the governments of the Arab states in the Middle East, or their representatives, to discuss the cutback formula that has been announced. If so, can he inform the House whether it is intended by those states that these cutbacks will affect Canadian supplies, or whether this policy will, in fact, affect Canadian supplies?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The international community generally is attempting to get a clarification of the announcement made by the Arab petroleum exporting countries as well as the statement made by the oil minister for Abu Dhabi regarding reduction of supplies. At this moment, we have not had a more precise interpretation of the OAPEC statement that the output reduction will not affect any friendly states which will help the Arabs in a fruitful and effective manner, or the statement of the Abu Dhabi minister that the cut-off was directed to the United States and that similar action will be taken against any state which supports Israel. As I say, the international community is seeking further clarification of these announcements. As soon as we have ascertained its impact on Canada I will, of course, be happy to let the House know.

PRICE FREEZE ON OIL—POSSIBLE REQUEST FOR PRICE INCREASE AS RESULT OF INCREASED PRICE OF OFFSHORE CRUDE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps we will be fortunate enough to get this supplementary information immediately after the question period outside the House.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): When better questions are asked.

• (1420)

Mr. Stanfield: I wish to ask the minister one further supplementary question relating to the voluntary freeze the government has requested the oil companies in Canada to adopt and the traditional exemption mentioned at that time, namely that an increase might be considered in the event the cost of crude landed in eastern Canada is increased. Has any request for an increase been made as a result of an increase in crude prices from Venezuela? If so, what decision has been reached?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker. A number of eastern refineries have sought an increase, not confined to those dependant on Venezuela crude, depending upon the source of their crude feedstock. Officials of my department have been seeking more information from the companies on the cost effect of this, but at the moment no decision has been taken by the government in this regard.

OIL—POSSIBLE EFFECT OF ARAB CUTOFF ON ANY VENEZUELAN-CANADA AGREEMENT

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the minister's attempt to get Venezuelan assurance for the supply of oil, in the event of an Arab cutoff, will any Canada-Venezuela agreement or offshore agreement be over-ridden by OECD which would be forced to initiate worldwide rationing?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The objective of Canada, of course, would be to co-operate with the other members of OECD in having the best possible arrangement to protect our supplies, as well as those of other countries. Therefore, I would have to say that any arrangement we may have directly with Venezuela would be subject to those other arrangements.

OIL—POSSIBILITY OF SUPPLYING EASTERN CANADA WITH WESTERN CRUDE—EXTENSION OF PIPELINE TO MONTREAL

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the minister a question arising out of his statement made outside the House that it may be necessary to resort to rationing of petroleum supplies in the event the Arab states carry out their policy of restricting supplies to this country. In view of the fact that Canada is a net exporter of oil, quite able to maintain supplies for its own people, at least at the present time, is it the government's intention to meet any shortage in eastern Canada by curtailing to some extent the export of Canadian crude and making it available, particularly with reference to home heating fuel for the eastern part of Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the difficulty of that suggestion is that there is not in place a delivery system to bring any substantial quantity of either refined products or crude from the end of the interprovincial pipeline to Montreal. As hon. members know, the government has proposed an extension of the pipeline, but that has not been done as yet.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that as long as the St. Lawrence River is open, very substantial quantities could be moved by barge or at least by truck to meet an emergency situation, has any firm decision been reached by the government with respect to extending the pipeline? Have the necessary discussions and arrangements been completed and how soon does the government intend to proceed with this project?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): With regard to the comment made by the hon. member, we have determined that except in a very marginal sense neither by shipment on the lakes when they are open nor by rail or truck transport could sufficient quantities be moved to meet the demand. With regard to the second part, the hon. member will recall the government's decision in principle to have a pipeline extension to Montreal was resisted by certain of the provincial governments. We now have under discussion with the officials of the province the possibility of extending the pipeline. I suspect that current events will perhaps have persuaded them more closely to our concern about security.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for one further supplementary. I will then recognize the hon. member for Champlain and further supplementaries on this subject immediately after.

OIL—POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's statement to a convention here on Tuesday to the effect that the Venezuelan government would like to deal with a national petroleum corporation in Canada to ensure a long-term guarantee of supplies, I want to ask the minister whether the government has now decided to set up such a corporation in line with the preliminary energy report which was diluted by the cabinet. Has a decision been made and when will action be taken in this regard?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the discussion with Venezuela in this regard concerned the period when Venezuela itself would have acquired full control of its oil industry between now and the end of the concessions in 1983. There is still some consideration to be undertaken in the Canadian context as to whether a national state company is the best vehicle for ensuring the petroleum interests of our economy.

* * *

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—REQUEST FOR DOCUMENTS PERTAINING TO EXPROPRIATION—MEETING WITH MINISTER

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to ask a supplementary. I should, however, like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Public Works.

Could he tell us if he intends placing at the disposal of those concerned and the general public all the papers concerning the settlement of each case of expropriation relative to Mirabel international airport?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, 3,100 different properties were involved; I think that it would be very difficult and expensive to have copies made of all the papers. However, we have nothing to hide from the population; 90 per cent of these cases of expropriation have already been settled and if the hon. member wishes to consult any particular paper, I shall be happy to make it available.

Mr. Matte: Could the minister tell us if he intends meeting with the people in charge of the Ste Scholastique expropriated owners committee in the near future if he intends meeting them at all?

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of meeting them about two weeks ago. The Minister of Transport and myself have accepted their graceful invitation to meet with them again during the next few days.

* * *

[English]

ENERGY

OIL—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF SUPPLY FOR THERMAL POWER PLANTS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question related to those asked previously of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that many thermal electric power plants in the Atlantic provinces—and in the case of Prince Edward Island I believe all of them—are oil-fired what action is the minister prepared to take to ensure adequate supplies of oil to thermal power plants in that area, which are totally dependent on offshore oil, in the case of disruption of supply.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in the case of disruption, obviously that kind of situation would be one of the priority uses for the purpose of the allocation system.

ATHABASCA TAR SANDS—FEDERAL POSITION ON DEVELOPMENT—EFFECT OF FEDERAL PRICING POLICY

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the world energy situation at the present time, I wonder if the minister could inform the House whether he is doing everything within his power to ensure that the Athabasca tar sands will be developed as quickly as possible?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Well, Mr. Speaker, the decision in that regard is not totally within my responsibility, but to the extent it is my responsibility I see no difficulty in that regard. Indeed, we have proposed to the government of Alberta significant federal assistance in developing the oil sands.

Mr. Yewchuk: I will be more specific, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister indicate to the House whether during his meeting with the President of the company that is prepared to go ahead with the construction of a plant immediately—the meeting he had a few days ago—he gave that gentleman the kind of assurance he was seeking with regard to price and export of their product.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I did not have a meeting with the president of the company. I have met with a number of the principals who are the principal shareholders of the company who have indicated that the proposals we have with regard to the price of oil on the Canadian market would be adequate to assure the continuance of the project.

• (1430)

OIL—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FEDERAL PRICING POLICY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the minister please be good enough to take us into his confidence and tell us what his proposals are with regard to the pricing of crude in the Canadian market?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The comment made many times both in the House and outside has been that the pricing of oil would be founded upon a price determined by the international price of crude landed at Montreal.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North on a supplementary, and then the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

ATHABASCA TAR SANDS—POSSIBLE EXEMPTION OF PRODUCTS FROM SYNCRUDE FROM SURTAX—EFFECT ON DEVELOPMENT OF FEDERAL PRICING POLICY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister if I am correct in thinking that he left the impression that the surtax would not apply to crude petroleum processed from the tar sands by the Syncrude plant and now, I understand, he has reversed his policy. In the light of the fact that there appears to be a shortage, would the minister take a hard look and assure us that that development will go forward, an $800 million development guaranteeing 10,000 jobs and a sufficient supply of crude petroleum for all of Canada and elsewhere?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The hon. member is correct in saying that he has misunderstood. As I indicated, the principals of the company concerned agree that with the prospect of the international pricing determining the price in Canada, there will be no difficulty in going ahead and they need seek no exemption from the export tax.

Mr. Stanfield: Why were you so evasive yesterday?

Mr. Woolliams: In the light of the waffling which we get from the minister, I wonder if he would now come clean and tell us to what officials and to what companies he is referring, so that there will be no question in the future as to what he meant today.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would be glad to communicate to the hon. gentleman the details of the Syncrude project, the partners, and the role that the government of Alberta proposes to take. I would have thought that, as member for Calgary North, he might have known these details already.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INVESTIGATION OF MERCHANDISING IRREGULARITIES REPORTED BY FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD—REQUEST FOR REPORT—OTHER MEASURES TO PROTECT CONSUMERS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the minister's announcement a few days ago that he has assigned top priority to the review of more than 100 cases of alleged merchandising irregularities reported by the Food Prices Review Board, have irregularities been found and, if so, how many? Are charges being laid and prosecutions launched under the Combines Investigation Act and, if so, how many?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, officers of my department and those of the Department of Justice are continuing their work on the reports given to them, and I would be happy to give my hon. friend further information as soon as it is available.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, first of all, could the minister tell me when that information will be available and, second, what other steps he has in mind for the protection of consumers during this period of rising prices and rising profits?

Mr. Gray: Dealing with my hon. friend's second question first, may I refer again to the steps outlined in the statement of the Prime Minister indicating measures to increase disposable income, measures to create subsidy programs in the area of milk, bread and so on.

With respect to the other part of the question, I will be happy to give the hon. member the information as soon as I receive it from the officers of the Department of Justice.

* * *

ENERGY

SUBJECTS TO BE DISCUSSED WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for that master of diplomacy, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: This gives me some indication of the government's view of diplomacy. Would the minister advise us whether his department is preparing special recommendations on energy matters for the meeting between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and Mr. Kissinger and, if so, will the minister take parliament into his confidence as to the nature of the recommendations he will be making?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we will be discussing with the United States a broad range of issues on energy questions. Perhaps I could refer the hon. member to the energy analysis for the kind of questions which are most relevant between Canada and the United States.

Mr. Clark: Does the minister intend us to understand that no matters will be raised in discussions between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and Mr. Kissinger that are not referred to directly in the studies to which he referred just now?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think it is fair to say that we did not anticipate in June that there would be a war in the Middle East in October, so that the answer to the hon. member's question is, not exactly.

An hon. Member: You should have been ready.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Skeena, who has a supplementary, then I will see the hon. member for Lisgar.

Oral Questions

FOOD PRICES

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that of my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway, to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs about food prices. Was the minister stating government policy a week or two ago when he said with respect to food prices that an average family today has only two choices: to readjust the household budget to allow more dollars for food, or to stretch the food dollar by shopping more wisely? Does that represent government policy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question asked in those terms is not in order.

Mr. Howard: May I pose that question then to the Acting Prime Minister and ask him whether the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was expressing government policy a few weeks ago when he made the statement which I just read.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have heard the hon. member read some words. I do not know whether that is what the minister said, and I will have to check.

Mr. Howard: May I ask a further supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lisgar.

* * *

TRANSPORT

AVAILABILITY OF GRAIN CARS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the government acting upon what has become a very serious problem in connection with grain movement in a good many parts of Manitoba where some points have not had grain cars for quite some time and as of today the prospects of obtaining these cars are very slim indeed. Has the minister been in touch with officials from his department in connection with this matter of grain movement, and what is the government preparing to do about moving grain out of Manitoba?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, both my colleague, the Minister of Transport, and I have been discussing this matter. We have had discussions at the official level throughout the period of, and after, the strike concerning the difficult problem regarding the availability of cars. There is a shortage of cars in relation to the demand for many products in addition to grain, and we are doing everything we can to try to facilitate the movement of products so as to get back to normal as quickly as possible.

[Mr. Speaker.]

BACKLOG OF FREIGHT AT NORTH SYDNEY—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO LESSEN—POSSIBLE USE OF HERCULES AIRCRAFT

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Gleave: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has a supplementary question, and he has been recognized for that purpose. I will see the hon. member afterwards.

Mr. Lundrigan: My question is related to the backlog in the movement of goods. In view of the fact that exactly a month ago today there was a backlog of 650 cars in North Sydney, at which time the minister said it would be cleaned up in two weeks, yet today there are still 650 cars there at this very minute, can the minister indicate whether he is now prepared to go along with the co-operative spirit of the Minister of National Defence expressed on Monday when he indicated he would be willing to place more department of National Defence Hercules aircraft at the disposal of east coast terminals in order to move this freight? Has he taken concrete action to put that into effect immediately?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the strike in Saint John, notwithstanding the collapse of the bridge, and notwithstanding the rail strike, right now there is a backlog of a little more than 100 cars in comparison with the number last year at which time the hon. member never said anything. Last year at this time there was a backlog of 520 cars; now, there is a backlog of 670. So, I think we have brought the situation back to about normal, despite the increase in freight movement. So, I do not know what the hon. member is trying to ask. No need has been expressed by the government of Newfoundland which has not been met.

Mr. Lundrigan: I cannot understand why the minister is getting so upset.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We have a new statesman here.

Mr. Lundrigan: Without getting into a fight with my colleague, who is noted for that in the House of Commons, may I place before the Minister of National Defence a question. Perhaps he can give me a more rational answer, being in charge of defence. I wish to ask him if he is prepared to uphold a commitment made on Monday, which is recorded in Hansard, that the government is willing to place certain aircraft at our disposal to help us clean up the backlog, a backlog which is exactly the same today as it was a month ago, whereas you said it would be cleaned up in two weeks. Here I am pointing to the Minister of Transport.

• (1440)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the minister, but I would remind both amiable members that they should address the Chair as much as possible.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member realizes that this is not a military operation. It is a problem of transport. I said in the House two days ago, and I repeat again today, that the Air Forces are prepared and ready to be of assistance whenever they can be of help in this case, but the request must come from the Minister of Transport—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Richardson: —and he has just answered the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate on a last supplementary, and then I believe the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar has his own supplementary. I would hope we would try to make some headway with questions.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is very straightforward. In view of the seriousness of the situation will the Minister of Transport please co-operate with his colleague, the Minister of National Defence, in order to have some more planes placed at our disposal—perhaps seven or eight planes for a couple of weeks? I am sure that would help us get 400 or 500 of these cars moving.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, everybody recognizes that it not just with the Hercules aircraft that we will substantially reduce the backlog. The Hercules aircraft were brought there in order to meet the urgent cases.

Mr. Lundrigan: And the cement.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): And the cement, which you misrepresented to the House, because it wasn't cement from Newfoundland but cement brought in for Nova Scotia. Anyway, that is another subject.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, we have a co-ordinator nominated by the government of Newfoundland, and if he indicates there is any urgency then I have the undertaking of the Minister of National Defence that Hercules aircraft will be brought there in a very short time to meet the urgency. But right now if the hon. gentleman wants to indicate some urgency, outside of the furniture car he tried to put on a priority list, we are prepared to listen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: On a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: The minister's answer isn't really as concrete as the product he is moving. But on the question of privilege we all, as members of parliament, have had occasion to try to help local business firms in our areas by trying to get products moved, and that is what is reflected in the particular circumstance mentioned by the minister. We are not talking about all of the backlog being of an emergency nature. We are talking about the very inefficient nature of the operation. We do not feel we should have to call on DOT because of that. We are just asking for ordinary freight deliveries.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

* * *

GRAIN

ALLEGED OFFER OF RESIGNATION OF MEMBER OF WHEAT BOARD

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to the original question. I direct my supplementary to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact that the grain movement has been delayed to the extent that it has, and that the block system and the operation of the quota system have become almost totally paralyzed and are in a state of disorder, and in view of the statement carried in the press the other day to the effect that at least some members of the Canadian Wheat Board were offering their resignations, may I ask the minister if he has received any offer of resignation from any member of the Board, and whether or not he is considering accepting it?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to inform the hon. member that I have heard nothing about resignation from any member of the Board.

* * *

FINANCE

EFFECT OF RESTRICTIVE MONETARY POLICY—SUGGESTED FIRING OF ECONOMIC ADVISERS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that several indicators, including the gross national product and the real domestic product, for the second quarter indicate a substantial reduction in the growth rate, does the minister intend to continue to follow a restrictive monetary policy parallel to that predicted for the United States by Arthur Burns?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the monetary policy of the United States is keeping their monetary supply growth at a negative rate. Our monetary supply is expanding at an annual rate of 15 per cent.

Mr. Hellyer: On a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, that does not seem to be indicated by the rate of unemployment. In view of the statement by Arthur Smith that "1974 is likely to be a year not only of slower over-all growth in output and employment—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hellyer: "—but also of some increase in unemployment—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hellyer: "—during the year, relatively high continuing levels of over-all price increases—

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please.

Mr. Hellyer: "—accelerated wage and salary advances—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Hellyer: "—generally reduced profit margins—

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member resume his seat?

Mr. Hellyer: "—and possibly of some further increases in interest rates—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is entirely out of order. I have been calling the hon. member to order for some time, asking him to resume his seat. He is an experienced member of this chamber, and he knows that the question he is asking now is entirely out of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that I could not hear your intervention at all because of the catcalls.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I accept the hon. member's explanation, but the question still remains out of order when asked in those terms.

Mr. Hellyer: Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose my supplementary question, if I may.

Mr. Speaker: I certainly do not want to be difficult, but again I refer to the hon. member's experience in the House and seek his co-operation. The hon. member knows very well that he cannot ask a question which is clearly out of order and then claim a right to the automatic privilege of asking a supplementary. It is clear that if a member asks a question that is out of order he does so at the risk to his right to ask a supplementary. But to show that I do not hold this incident against the hon. member, I take it as certain that he will heed the Chair's advice in the future, and so I will recognize the hon. member, not on a supplementary but on another question which I hope will be in order.

Mr. Hellyer: I appreciate your co-operation very much, Mr. Speaker. I regret the long preamble but it seemed necessary to ask the Minister of Finance if, in view of all of these indicators, he does not worry so profoundly that he would now fire some of his advisers and hire contemporary economists who would help him prepare a rational policy?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

EFFECT OF MANAGEMENT POLICIES ON RAILWAY SERVICE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—GOVERNMENT ACTION—POSSIBLE VISIT TO VANCOUVER BY PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have given notice of my question to the Minister of Transport. In light of the fact that CN management policies have contributed to significant numbers of experienced Vancouver area yardmen, machinists and truck drivers quitting their jobs in recent months, thus adversely affecting rail service for all of British Columbia, I would like to ask whether the minister and his colleague, the Minister of Labour, are engaged in efforts to solve this problem and, if so, what specific steps are being taken?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite true that this is a very difficult situation in British Columbia. As was the case in the movement of grain, there is definitely a shortage of lumber cars in British Columbia, which is due to many reasons, such as the increase in the activity and the strike at the National Steel Corporation where cars that were supposed to be fabricated were not fabricated. Because of the seriousness of the situation, I propose to call in as soon as possible the President of the CNR and the President of CPR to see what they intend to do in order to correct the situation.

• (1450)

Mr. Rose: I thank the minister for his answer. Certainly, there are problems. They are not single problems, they are multifaceted but these have resulted in low morale—

An hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might like to ask the supplementary.

Mr. Rose: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I did not hear your intervention because there were so many catcalls to my right. I should like to ask the Minister of Transport, since these problems resulted in poor service and certainly low morale as well as a shortage of boxcars especially for interior forest products, if he is considering supporting a House order for the Standing Committee on Transportation to visit Vancouver for an on-the-spot investigation and a close look at the situation?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think before considering or making a decision on this I will wait until I see the report of the representatives of the Presidents of CN and CP and see if they can correct the situation. If there is still a problem after that, maybe we can have a discussion on the subject brought forward this afternoon.

ENERGY

MEETING OF MINISTER WITH UNITED STATES REPRESENTATIVE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In anticipation of Dr. Kissinger's visit to this country in the early part of November, I was wondering if the minister could indicate if he plans to meet again with Secretary of the Interior Morton of the United States so that the wounds might be healed that were opened in their last meeting 18 months ago by the minister?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will be meeting with the President's energy co-ordinator next week.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

MILK SUBSIDY—REASON FOR DELAY IN APPLICATION TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the concise and laconic Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister reveal when the federal milk subsidy will be made applicable to and operative in Prince Edward Island? Can he indicate the reasons for the delay on this serious matter concerning which Premier Campbell made strong public criticism yesterday?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member confused me with some of his complimentary remarks and I did not hear what subsidy he was talking about.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, may I say the subject is milk, the province is Prince Edward Island and the problem is delay.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: As is usual with that government.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

POSITION OF MINISTER ON COMPLAINTS OF NURSES IN VETERANS HOSPITALS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In light of the fact that the award of the Public Service Arbitration Tribunal pertaining to the nursing groups in veterans' hospitals has been totally unacceptable to the professional institute of the Public Service and morale and nursing attention will now only deteriorate, will the minister withdraw his public statement that the nursing groups who register complaints with members of parliament are only practising gimmickry?

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, to the Solicitor General—

Mr. Fairweather: Wait a minute; the minister was answering.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously, the minister wanted to reply to the hon. member's question, but I suggest a question asked in those terms is out of order and the Chair cannot allow the minister to respond. If the hon. member wants to rephrase the question he will be recognized for that purpose, following which I will recognize the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, the minister made a statement on a television show last night that the nurses were only practising gimmickry when they made complaints to members of parliament. I think this has to be explained, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY INTO ADMINISTRATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General regarding the riots last week in the British Columbia penitentiary and it relates to the resignation of the inmates committee. In view of the fact that the prison staff—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: They all want out.

An hon. Member: It is a walkout.

An hon. Member: There is no one left.

Mr. Reynolds: In view of the fact that today the prison staff announced that they would work to order, would the minister advise if he will speed up his promise for an independent inquiry into the administration of the British Columbia penitentiary?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked me if I would conduct an independent inquiry into the situation at the British Columbia penitentiary and I told him I would consider that. We are presently having an internal investigation of the situation there. I might say that I am not convinced that the solution to the problem at the B.C. penitentiary is another inquiry or study. The major problem is over-population and we are looking for a resolution of it. We are building a new penitentiary at Mission, British Columbia and are looking for a site for another penitentiary in British Columbia.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—SUGGESTED ADJUSTMENT OF RECREATIONAL TIME

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question deals with one of the real problems at that penitentiary which is a lack of recreational time for inmates. Can the minister advise if any adjustment has been made in regard to the recreational time, particularly for winter, which is one of the causes of riots?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the hon. member right now that there has been any adjustment in the recreational time for inmates but I will look into that. Again, I must say that the lack of time for recreation for the inmates is due to the very large population in the B.C. pen and the number of staff available to handle that population. We are getting resources now to deal with that but it will take some time to resolve the problem.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR MEETING OF JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON BILL C-176

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a housekeeping question for the President of the Privy Council. I wonder if the House leader would discuss with the vice-chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs the need to call the committee on an urgent basis to complete consideration of the right to privacy bill, C-176.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: Will the minister accept our assurance or an assurance from this side that we are anxious to expedite the passage of this bill?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer to both points is yes.

* * *

BUGGING AND WIRETAPPING

SECURITY OF CAUCUS ROOMS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the President of the Privy Council. Will the minister discuss with the Chair and the staff, while we are waiting for the government to get off its backside and get this Bill C-176 back before the committee so that it can be dealt with, the interim security of caucus rooms so that the occurrence that was raised by the Leader of the New Democratic Party yesterday will not happen again?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It is obvious you cannot understand what you read.

Mr. Muir: Joe, you are sitting on your brain.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): As is well known, the responsibility for the House of Commons and its operation does not reside within the government; it is a responsibility that is presently ably discharged by the Speaker of the House of Commons.

[Mr. Leggatt.]

TRANSPORT

TENDERS FOR BUS SERVICE BETWEEN VICTORIA AIRPORT AND VICTORIA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. To clarify a great deal of confusion about a point of order that was raised yesterday, does the minister intend to call for tenders for the transportation contracts between Victoria International Airport and Victoria?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that the point that was raised by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich yesterday was well taken. There are a few facts on this that he was not aware of when we discussed the matter. Between the two days when the question was put and the answer was given in Hansard there was somebody who indicated his interest in tendering and that is why we have this apparent contradiction. When the question was put there was nobody to indicate an interest and after that somebody—I do not remember the name—was interested. That is why we indicated to the Vancouver Island Transportation Company that we were going to call tenders, because there was someone interested.

● (1500)

Mr. McKinnon: Are we then to consider that the minister's answer as reported on page 6839 of Hansard, is inoperative?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The question was put at the beginning of July and the answer was ready at the end of July when the House adjourned. This is why there has been such a long delay. In the meantime, somebody indicated he was interested in tendering. That is why the letter was sent on September 18, and that is why I think we should consider that the answer given should not be taken as the true answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN REGULATIONS TO DEFINE CORN AND SOYBEANS AS GRAIN TO PERMIT DEFERRAL OF INCOME

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister tell us whether the government has made a favourable ruling on representations made to his office that regulations for tax purposes be changed so as to allow corn and soybeans to be classified as grain, thus enabling payments to producers to be deferred and classified as income in the next taxation year as is the case of grains so defined under the act?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): We are reviewing this matter very carefully.

ENERGY

OIL—EFFECT OF PRICE OF OFFSHORE CRUDE ON FEDERAL PRICING POLICY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for the purpose of clarifying a most important matter. The minister said a little while ago that the price of crude in Canada would be based upon the price of offshore oil landed in Montreal. Does he mean it is government policy that the price of crude in Canada will in fact be the price of offshore supplies landed at Montreal, adjusted for transportation costs across the country and that it will move with the price of offshore oil landed in Montreal? Or does he mean simply that the price of crude in Canada will be based upon some formula related to the price of crude oil supplies landed in Montreal?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The second formulation by the hon. gentleman is the accurate one.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Carter: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have been trying to get Your Honour's attention for the purpose of asking an important question of the Minister of Fisheries, one which affects the livelihood of a large number of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Of course, as usual I can tell hon. members I have no objection to a question being asked, not as a point of order, but as a straight question, if it is the wish of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate that the hon. member has been trying to get the floor during the whole of the question period, but so have other hon. members. I try to be as fair as I can.

* * *

FISHERIES

COMPENSATION TO NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN AS A RESULT OF STORM DAMAGE—REASON FOR DELAY

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): My question, Mr. Speaker, is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. It follows the motion I sought to move under Standing Order 43 this afternoon and it concerns the request by the fishermen and by the government of Newfoundland for compensation to help overcome the severe losses suffered in the storms of June 17 and 18. Has a decision been made in this connection and, if not, when can we expect one?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): As the hon. member knows, the payments will be made by the provincial governments. The provincial governments are aware that the federal government will be making a substantial contribution toward these payments. The payments could, in fact, be made now, but the precise amount of the federal contribution to the province has not been determined. It will be announced in the next few days.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Bell: I just wish to ask the regular question about House business, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacEachen: As hon. members know, we are under a special order today dealing with the amendments to the Criminal Code. If the debate on the report stage should terminate earlier than 10.45 this evening, I would call the CNR financing bill to occupy the House until voting time. Tomorrow we shall consider third reading of the amendment to the Criminal Code. My present plan is to keep that item before the House until it is completed. Early next week I shall be able to consider with my counterparts what further business we shall undertake.

Mr. Bell: Would the minister interpret the resolution of the House and say whether private members' hour would come up if we were discussing the CNR resolution? And if the debate on capital punishment, on Bill C-2, ended very much earlier than we all expect, what would we do?

Mr. MacEachen: My expectation is that we would not face such an issue before Monday, even in the most favourable circumstances. But in such an eventuality I would probably call the Foreign Investment Review Act, depending on the availability of the minister. I will inquire whether he will be back from Moscow.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

REINSTATEMENT OF LAW RELATING TO CAPITAL PUNISHMENT THAT EXISTED PRIOR TO DECEMBER 30, 1972

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, and motion No. 3, of Mr. Lawrence.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, when the House took recess at one o'clock I had almost completed my remarks and I have only one or two further comments to make. I have in mind the amendment which calls for capital punishment in the case of a person who commits a second murder having already been convicted of murder.

The issue here is a question of security for the people of Canada. When we consider the way in which the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) has been managing the prisons of this country, we can only conclude, I submit, that the amendment has a great deal of merit. There have been so many escapes from our prisons that a great many people have written to me from various parts of Canada expressing alarm and concern. In these circumstances, the amendment must surely commend itself even to the Solicitor General. In my view, the amendment offered by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) in connection with those who commit a second murder deserves considerable attention even by hon. members who would be inclined to vote for the bill as it now stands.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, once more I rise to take part in the debate on Bill C-2 and to support the amendment in the name of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) and the one in the name of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence). We have heard a great many speeches since this bill was introduced last winter; in the neighbourhood of 200, I would say. I doubt whether at this point our speeches are likely to change the minds of many hon. members of this House.

We can address ourselves to our constituents, or to those in the gallery; we can speak to the fourth estate or to the public at large, but it boils down to one factor—the 264 members of this House who will be making up their minds and deciding what is to happen to the measure before us. Many of us could be quoted as saying, "My mind is made up. Don't confuse me with the facts." I believe I have mentioned this before. Everything that can be said has been said many times. It might be a good idea for each of us to address Your Honour and say, "Mr. Speaker, my remarks can be found on page 3964 of Hansard of May 22, and again on page 5895 of Hansard of July 23." We could certainly cut down a great deal on printing and time, and get down to other business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: Those of us who feel that capital punishment should be retained should not consider themselves obliged to go into each detail of their reasoning. Those of our abolitionist friends who are misguided in their thoughts, in the minds of some of us, do not have to trot out the gory details of executions going back to the Middle Ages, and so on. I feel we should try to get this bill through as soon as possible.

● (1510)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: As one favouring retention, I am against hanging. I believe it is a terrible and barbaric way of execution. But in the final analysis, when crimes have been committed such as those outlined in the motion of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert, such as rape killings, capital punishment must be applied and it must be administered as painlessly as possible. I think this is the feeling that should be presented to members of the House. I am aware that this is an emotional subject. I am also aware, as are all hon. members, that the overwhelming majority of the people of Canada are in favour of, and in fact are demanding, the retention of capital punishment.

There are some very fine members, even some not in our party, who are abolitionists and I should like to see some of them come back after the next election. This is why I hope they will give second thought to the amendments to this bill when they are finally voted upon. Whether they realize it or not, our constituents are very concerned about this question. It is all very well for the most knowledgeable members to speak at great length and to say they know a good deal better than their constituents what is good for the people they represent. That is possibly so in certain complicated cases. But there is nothing complicated about this capital punishment bill, or as our friends in the fourth estate and on television call it, this hanging bill. This is not a hanging bill; it is a not hanging bill.

The press and other members of the media would by a great majority favour abolition if a poll were taken of them. As a result, their news forecasts have been slanted, and let no one think that is not so. I have not yet seen today's newspapers, but I am sure that in some papers across Canada we will be seeing grisly cartoons portraying the terrible aspects of capital punishment. We have all seen cartoons of the cold, grey dawn, the noose and the scaffold. A great many of us who are in favour of capital punishment are at the same time opposed to hanging. We just want to see murderers dispatched as painlessly and as quickly as possible once they are found guilty of murder in the first degree.

One newscaster earlier this year, when reading the news made no mention of Bill C-2; again there was reference to the "hanging bill," and portrayed behind him was the noose and the scaffold. In all fairness, he might just as well have portrayed a murdered child or elderly person on the screen behind him. Let us not kid ourselves; the media can shape public opinion and they have done so. As I have said before, and as many hon. members have agreed, the media have never been able to sell the Canadian people on abolition of the death penalty in Canada: about 90 per cent of the people are still in favour of capital punishment.

Some members of the House to whom I have spoken since returning here indicated that they have received a great deal of flak, shall I say, or criticism from their constituents. One of our members this morning said he had had a change of heart, that he would be supporting the amendment and voting against the bill. If my memory serves me correctly, 138 members voted in favour of this bill on May 29, and 114 voted against. That is a difference of 24. So those of us who feel that law and order is necessary, and that we must retain capital punishment in the law of Canada, have only to talk to 13 people and get them to change their vote in order to defeat this bill, which is the wish of the people of Canada as the government is well aware. I am sure the Solicitor General knows the feelings of the ordinary citizens of Canada. The percentage in favour of retention runs anywhere from 90 per cent to the most conservative estimate, with a small "c" of 60 to 70 per cent.

Millions of words have been printed on this subject. Whether or not the people in the cities are aware of it, people in rural Canada are very concerned about their safety, about the fact that law and order is not what it should be in this age of permissiveness. As a result, I am sure if this parliament in its wisdom decided to defeat Bill C-2, this would truly reflect the wishes, indeed the demands, of the people of Canada.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the two amendments now before the House are an indication that some modification must take place in relation to those in society to whom the death penalty should apply. I listened to the speech made by the mover of the second amendment and was surprised to hear him say that if he were able to get it accepted, he would vote against the main bill that he was amending. What he is suggesting is that if a person commits murder, following which he serves a term of imprisonment, having been tried and convicted, and is released and commits a second murder, he should be hanged. Since he has already said that he wants them to be hanged the first time, that seems to me to be an anomaly.

His second point concerned the hanging of people who hijack aircraft. If there was ever a field in which more hysteria has been developed, with less justification, it is in the field of hijacking. In a very short period of time many countries passed a convention which was acceptable to most.

Mr. Gilbert: But it is unenforceable.

● (1520)

Mr. Peters: The hon. member says it is unenforceable. That is true. It is a bit like riots. You can make a lot of pious statements about prohibiting riots or you can read the riot act. You can do that with hijacking. The point I want to make is that hijacking is carried out for many reasons. The first is monetary. Some hijackers have held up aircraft for very large ransoms. That is the worst possible type of abuse. In my opinion countries should not bargain on that basis. The company that owns the aircraft should not be permitted to pay the ransom. The safety of everyone on board is sacrificed because the aircraft is worth $5 million, $7 million or $10 million. No price is put on the lives of the people on board. A great deal of hysteria has been built up around hijacking; therefore it is very easy to include this matter as an amendment to the bill before us. It involves something that is fundamental to this debate: either you are in favour of the death penalty or you are not.

When the five-year moratorium on the death penalty for murder in Canada was originally introduced, protection was given to prison guards and policemen. That was a bit like saying, "We are going to have a war, but we must provide special protection for the soldiers." However, it is the civilian, the innocent bystander who is not trained to protect himself. Civilians are not involved and in many cases are not even familiar with the problem. I was never in favour of providing that kind of protection even to satisfy those trying to put a stumbling-block in the way of total abolition. I always felt the prison guards knew what they were doing. Also, a policeman knows what he is doing. He would not command the salary he is receiving today if it were not for the fact he is taking a risk. Anyone who is afraid of being shot at should not be a policeman. Most policemen are not shot at, but they know there is that possibility. Soldiers do not think they will be killed; very few would go to war if they thought they would be. We originally had these exceptions, and now we are dealing with more exceptions in this bill.

What really bothers me is the attitude of the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). If he had minded his own business and did what he started out to do, namely, asked that the moratorium be extended for another five years, that would have been fine. I am sure there would not have been this great hue and cry. There certainly would not have been the two amendments that are before us today. There are other amendments that have not yet have been reached which are just as foolish. One is the female chauvinist amendment. Each amendment adds another exception and I object to them.

I was prompted to rise today by the statement of the Solicitor General. He calmly told this House that because of the great problem of overcrowding he is prepared to build more penitentiaries. However, he does not have the guts to fire Mr. Street, the man responsible for the overcrowding. The parole board is inoperative. Instead of doing something about the parole board, the minister is asking parliament to add more people to it. You can have all the people you want on the parole board, but unless a certain percentage of prisoners are released on parole in an orderly fashion it does not matter a hoot.

The minister said an additional penitentiary will be built in British Columbia and that he is looking for land for another one. He must have a hole in his head. The minister should be the last to bring forward this type of legislation. An easy way for him to get rid of some of the people in penitentiaries would be to hang them. Why has he brought forward this piece of legislation? By regulation, the minister has made it mandatory that a person convicted of murder be committed to the penitentiary for ten years. It is also suggested that the judge will be allowed to add to that an additional ten years. The minister talks about building more penitentiaries. If he continues with this kind of legislation we will have the biggest building boom in history; we will not be able to keep up with building new penitentiaries because of the numbers waiting to get into them.

By providing a mandatory prison sentence we do not allow the parole system to operate. If we are really that backward, we should do what the retentionists say—let's go back to an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. If a person does something wrong, put him in jail. I presume the Solicitor General is in favour of bringing back the paddle, the lash and all the other things that go with an obsolete penal reform system.

The question is, not how many exceptions there should be but whether anyone should be hanged. It hinges on whether society believes in an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. If so, it means there is no penal reform. It means the Solicitor General will be right in saying that more penitentiaries will have to be built. In that case we may accomplish something in this country which no other civilized society has ever done; we may have the largest percentage of persons in penitentiaries of any country in the world. That is a possibility. If Mr. Street remains in control of the parole board, we will certainly be heading in the direction of accomplishing that. Also, this Solicitor General has done more than his share in that regard.

Surely, in a country as advanced as Canada we do not believe in the argument of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. Surely, we believe that people can be rehabilitated. One of my colleagues told me today that he visited the penitentiary in Prince Albert. He told a very interesting story about a man who had been in solitary confinement, and segregated from the other inmates for a number of years. He said when the man got out, he was crazy. Obviously, the court did not decide he was crazy or he would not have been sentenced for the crime. However, from a layman's point of view something is wrong with this person, yet he is released and may do whatever he did before because we have not really helped him. We do not help him by punishing him. We help him by attempting to fit him back into society. I am sure no one would suggest that we have penitentiaries for any other reason than to contain people who stray from the norms of society. They are contained there not for their own sake but for the benefit of society.

● (1530)

We place a person in segregation, we leave him there for a period of years, then at the end of his sentence we allow him to come out of segregation—where he was kept because he was considered too dangerous to mingle with the other inmates—and we put him on the street. When we do this, something must be wrong with our heads. If there is a mad dog in a pound it is ridiculous for the poundkeeper to say, "We cannot train him, therefore we will put him on the street." I do not think anyone in this House would agree that a man who for years has been segregated in a penitentiary because he is dangerous is suddenly eligible to be put on the street. However, that is what we do. In many cases we put on the street a man who is considered by all the guards and most of the prisoners in the institution to be mentally unbalanced.

The minister has done very little in this regard. He has not done anything about classification officers or improvement of psychiatric treatment. He has not done anything in co-operation with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), who plays with wheat instead of looking after the Department of Justice. The Minister of Justice should be making a decision in respect of changes in sentencing people. He should be taking steps so they may be refitted into society. This is what the parole board is supposed to do but it is not what it has been doing. The members of the parole board have been going around talking to these people. It is like a premiere performance in a theatre. The man has been waiting for the day when the parole board will interview him at the penitentiary. He has rehearsed and thought about what he will say. He has been doing this for weeks and weeks. He has a command performance before the board. If there is anything more phony than this situation, I fail to see it. The inmate puts on his grand performance and the members of the parole board say, "Sonny, you can go home because we think you are reformed" or, "We do not like the show you put on, so you had better go back and try again later".

Surely we should look at the problem. There are members of the Conservative Party who say they stand for law and order. They stand for law and order like Spiro Agnew. The case of Spiro Agnew is a very good example of law and order. This is a man who should have kept his mouth shut because he had his hand in the till. I am not suggesting that the Conservatives are in that position, but they may be looking at the past rather than today in respect of this problem. It is a fact that very few people murder a second time. It is also a fact, with the exception of political terrorists, that very few people have been killed in hijackings. Hon. members know that with relation to the number of people carried by international airlines, the number of people killed is infinitesimal.

They must know that very few people have been murdered in Canada during the last 20 or 30 years. They must also know that most of us believe in law and order. Most Canadians are proud of the fact that one can walk down the street in most of our communities at night without any danger of being robbed, mugged or raped. This is not true in other countries. It does not have anything to do with the death penalty, the penitentiary system or anything else. It is an attitude of society. It is interesting that in places like England where there are large populations in concentrated areas, the members of the police forces are not armed and very seldom are the gangsters armed. We also find that robbery with violence is seldom carried out.

I suggest that the people of Canada who stand for law and order should not relate this to belief in an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. There is a more enlightened way. If the authors of the Bible were to return today, I am sure they would write it in a different way. I am sure they would not be in favour of stoning people and many of the other things which took place. We are asking for public hanging again, in the name of law and order. There is no record to indicate that this has an effect on law and order.

I suggest these amendments only add to the two or three exceptions we now have. The issue, really, is not whether more murderers should be given the death penalty; it is, rather, that we should face the problem in respect of law and order. We should face these problems as they develop. This the Solicitor General has not done. We should start to rehabilitate people on the day we put them in jail. We should provide them with sex in the penitentiaries and all the other amenities of society before we release them.

If there is anything that bothers the average Canadian, it is the differing treatment given to people in penitentiaries. What happened in respect of Mr. Ballard? He was a white-collar prisoner so he received the best treatment. What does the blue-collar prisoner get? He does not get the same treatment. He does not receive the type of legal counsel provided for Mr. Ballard, because the legal advice provided to him is free or almost free. Now we have the situation where Mr. Ballard gets out. He does not give the money back. Perhaps the income tax people will collect some of it on a sliding scale. We give him all the advantages. He is not asked to go into the ordinary penitentiary; the penitentiary people placed him in a halfway house, with a quarterway house just down the street. I do not know whether the minister is a good friend of Mr. Ballard, but what was done by the parole board in that instance was not normal. It was done because Mr. Ballard is—

Mr. Allmand: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

● (1540)

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. The minister rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has spoken a lot of nonsense this afternoon. I was waiting to reply to him later, but on this point I feel I must reply right away. To begin with, Mr. Ballard went through the same process for parole as anyone else. He was eligible only after serving one-third of his sentence. Then he was granted parole by the board, which granted it to him as a quasi-judicial body. In addition, he paid back the debts he owed. The parole board encourages an inmate to pay back the money he owes after having committed a crime such as the one that Mr. Ballard committed whenever that is possible.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the minister, and I think he will agree with me, that this is hardly a question of privilege, although I appreciate why the minister wanted to rise at this time and make his point. However, this gives me the opportunity to remind the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) that in any event his time expired at 4.41. He may continue only with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to accept the correction made by the Solicitor General. I am certainly happy to learn that the information which I obtained from the newspapers is erroneous. I am also happy to learn that the parole board was responsible for the arrangement made respecting Mr. Ballard. However, I am surprised that the Solicitor General has not made this information available to the national press so the general public could be informed.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I am still puzzled about the amendments to Bill C-2, because they apparently show that we are far from agreeing on the basic principle of the legislation seeking to abolish the death penalty. It is wished to abolish capital punishment while admitting criminal liability in a larger number of cases so as to punish with capital punishment the truly capital murders. Therefore, this dilemma always brings us back to the basic questions which we must ask ourselves in order to decide how we should consider this bill.

Of course, I shall repeat what I said at an earlier stage of the debate on this bill: does our present society deserve to have capital punishment abolished? Is our society prepared to admit that we should abolish capital punishment? It is most important since it could be demonstrated ad absurdum that if an individual does not commit any murder, there is no need to discuss capital punishment. This, of course, is what we would like.

Even if capital punishment were maintained, even if we could improve society to the point where capital murder would no longer exist, it would not be applied.

Therefore, since the great majority of Canadians are in favour of retaining capital punishment—this seems obvious and a referendum would actually prove it no doubt—and even though we should ask ourselves whether our society is prepared to agree to abolition, we should choose retention instead while shaping the law so that crime would disappear from our society.

Mr. Speaker, this has not yet materialized. We have not yet passed enough measures in favour of the true freedom and development of the individual so that crime may disappear, but unfortunately we have not yet reached that point. But we must judge in a concrete way and say: Well, since in society, even modern society, wanton crime still exists, therefore society does not deserve the abolition of the death penalty. And it is society itself which can alone determine whether it must be abolished or not since all society has to do is to ensure that there are no more murderers, and even if one law maintained capital punishment, that law would obviously never be enforced.

In my view, it would be a mistake to abolish capital punishment on all kinds of more or less humanitarian pretexts. We would be ill-advised; we should follow rather the very evolution of society.

On the other hand, the study of the amendments now before us shows that we want the abolition of capital punishment, but that it should be maintained in such and such a case. Judgments would then have to be much more accurate and complete, which means that all the cases in which there really is a capital crime, where the crime is really foul and truly deserves the supreme punishment, should be accurately described. They would all have to be listed. Since there is the danger of forgetting some, it is much easier not to list all the cases and instead of re-establishing capital punishment, to amend the legislation so that each murder case be judged on its own value and that the judge may consider all the facts and decide whether there really was a crime, whether it was a capital or a foul murder or whether it was simply a case of self-defense, of accident, or manslaughter, etc. In fact, only judges can pass judgements in such cases once they are aware of all the facts. If they rule that the accused does not deserve capital punishment, they will simply pass judgement in consequence. And when they decide that a murder warrants capital punishment, they will give the sentence accordingly.

• (1550)

I think that presently that is the only logical way to consider capital punishment, that is to judge each case on its own true merit, under the real circumstances, so we will not continuously be forced to amend the law. That would make it truly possible to punish those who commit the most heinous crime there is.

The examination of those amendments leads us to that type of reflection, and that is why I say that we are getting lost in all that. In fact, why inflict capital punishment on a double murderer, as the amendment says, that would mean doing away with only one person who has already done away with two. It could be in both cases that they were not real capital murderers but because two crimes have been committed the supreme punishment would be approved. I find that still ambiguous. That is why we try by all possible means to bring the government to specify a few cases that could satisfy public opinion, the great majority of which favours the retention of capital punishment.

I think that we are simply losing our time and that it would be much simpler to do what most people want, that is maintain capital punishment and have each case judged in all justice to avoid forever misunderstandings or errors—we must come to that—that could lead to somebody being sentenced unjustly. I fully agree with that but, on the other hand, I think in today's society we must really punish those who deserve to be, and I would even say want to be, since when we deal with real murderers who are very dangerous, one can say that the role of society is nothing else than to get rid of them. We must not either establish a distinction that might be unfair, because when we say, as this legislation does, that capital punishment is maintained in cases of murders of prison guards or policemen, we are being unfair, in my opinion, to all other groups of people who have the same value and who, besides, Mr. Speaker, may happen to find themselves in situations similar to those of policemen and prison guards. I refer in particular to bank managers, cashiers, all these people who never know when they can expect to face gangsters. In my view, these people run the same risk and even more—since they usually do not carry any gun—as policemen or prison guards who expect such a situation and who therefore carry a gun and may defend themselves more easily, as part of their job.

Therefore, this provision in the case of murders of policemen and prison guards is, in my view, unfair to all other groups of citizens and I do not believe that our role in this chamber is to establish such distinctions. And if we look at statistics, Mr. Speaker, we realize that there are no more murders of policemen and prison guards than of any other group of citizens. For instance I referred to one particular group: bank employees. Even a businessman may at a given time be subject to the cupidity of gangsters and his life can be even more jeopardized than that of policemen.

I wonder then why he should not have the same advantages or he would not be under the act in the same way as policemen and prison guards. Thus the law contains something abnormal if not unfair and the only correction we should bring now would simply be to reinstate or maintain capital punishment but we could spell out for the judge the way prosecutions would have to be conducted in order to discover among all the murderers in general those whose crimes deserve the supreme punishment. I think this is the part we should play, and so we would agree with those who accept it. As our society breeds murderers, we have to respect the view of the vast majority of citizens and maintain capital punishment. Consequently, I do not think the amendments refine the act in any way and if they did, we should introduce many other amendments in order to determine all cases of murder deserving death punishment. But then we risk forgetting certain categories of crimes and, once again, to be unfair. This is why by simply maintaining capital punishment and judging each case on its own according to the circumstances, we could be fairer towards everyone and we could faithfully reflect the general views of all Canadians.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked this morning to take part in the debate and I would have thought that we could perhaps have discussed the two amendments which were before us, since there is a rather close connection between both. However, we must accept the Speaker's decision, but it was ignored as soon as it was given, since almost anything has been discussed. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) launched a scathing attack against the Parole Board. We have heard many other things. Several of my colleagues in the House have spoken to the bill as a whole rather than to the amendments. I would have liked to speak during the debate, because I could have easily—and I am going to do so—supported the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) as well as that of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) although I find some difficulties in its wording, especially concerning the proposed paragraph c) on the second death.

[Mr. Matte.]

[English]

I did not speak on second reading of this bill, Mr. Speaker. Some people may complain that this debate has been going on for a very long time, but I point out that it has taken place bit by bit. It started in January with the minister's speech proposing this amending bill. Then there were possibly two days of debate in February and, lo and behold, some debate in April, some in May, some in June and some in July. The government introduced the bill in January and I cannot for the life of me understand why it did not continue to deal with it at that time.

Probably these comments should be made on third reading. However, I believe that in dealing with this bill the minister has been flying kites, testing the wind and then retreating in face of the violent reaction of public opinion. Canadians, in the great majority of cases, disagree wholeheartedly with this bill and with the manner in which the administration of justice has been carried out by the government. It is like a man trying to test the temperature of his bath. He puts in his big toe, but the water is too hot so he removes his foot. He dances around a few times, as this government has done, and then puts his toe in again. This House went by dribs and drabs, and then we had that ludicrous performance in the committee hearings. I say that in all seriousness.

● (1600)

I know the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) is very serious and is dedicated to his job, but I suggest to him and to the administration, if it was in support of his move, that the amendment the minister put in committee was in violent contempt of parliament. I am not casting any reflection on the minister as to his own personal qualities, but he did not have the political guts, or the administration did not, to put that amendment or proposition to the House instead of asking the House to vote on a bill which was to be a mere extension. In addition, he then offered suckers or lollipops to soothe the objections of some of the abolitionists and also perhaps throwing a sop to those who believe the system was releasing convicted murderers and putting them back into society.

There were some unfortunate incidents as a result of that policy of sort of trial and error. Some uninformed, unintelligent ad hockery has been the history of this bill and what preceded it. Then there was the attempt in committee to totally abolish the death sentence. Why did they think the committee was going to be pressured, that it could be packed, that there was not to be any free vote, that party pressures would be on? Since one party in the committee, as a party position, had decided to abolish capital punishment, were government representatives going to be pressured into voting for the Solicitor General's amendment? This is where I find that this line of conduct was totally unacceptable and less than respectable.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) made sense with some of his remarks this afternoon, but unfortunately his ideological blindspots took over and he went on a trip. He is right when he says that somewhere, somehow, in the minds of a lot of people this is a debate about the abolition of capital punishment. Of course, it is not, because since 1967 the amendments to the Criminal Code have retained capital punishment.

People are wrong when they say that decision with regard to the abolition or retention of capital punishment is an exercise of the royal prerogative. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, with all due deference, that this is not flaunting the law, it is flouting the law—that this is no reflection upon the royal prerogative as such. Yet we know who exercises it. For a short time I was a part of the system and I think it is wrong. But I will talk about that on third reading. This has been said before; the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said it in his remarks on second reading even though he is a convinced abolitionist.

We could remove all restrictions on capital punishment, those that exist in the law that goes back to 1961, or only those that were in the amendments of 1967: we could go back prior to 1961 and it would not make any difference with an administration that says there shall be no hanging. They will rationalize and find every excuse, legitimate or otherwise, to justify a commutation. All the documentation is privileged and no one can really judge objectively whether the commutation was legitimate or not.

I am not attacking the personality of any past solicitor general. The cabinet members were entitled to their views and I do say that they held them honestly. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the system is right and therefore I come back to my charge. When the newspaper editorialists, columnists and the media in general refer to this as a debate on the abolition of capital punishment, they are wrong. This is merely a bill for restriction of the categories of crime for which capital punishment shall be the penalty or may be the penalty. That is all, so let us be honest.

If there is abolition de facto, it lies in the exercise of the royal prerogative. I know what the law was before 1961, and certainly the occasional death was carried out, but the pattern was evident before that: it depended upon the views of those who sat in cabinet—not upon the views of parliament but upon the views of the men who were the dominant personalities. I do not like a system of justice which has that basis, Mr. Speaker, but be that as it may.

The amendment put forward by my colleague, the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence), tries to respond, as does the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin), to public demand for a widening of the categories of murder to which the death penalty shall apply. This is a reduction of the so-called privilege of position, the privilege of right to life that is given to categories of persons in rather more hazardous walks of life, policemen on duty and prison guards. I will withhold my argument on that philosophical stance until later.

I fully agree that the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert is merely trying to reassert a portion of the law that exists today, that of capital punishment, for the unlawful taking of life during the commission of a crime of violence. The amendment refers to rape or attempted rape, but surely there could be added other crimes of violence. My colleague from Northumberland-Durham suggested hijacking, and I agree in a way with the hon. member for Timiskaming who said that this is in response to public outcry. True enough, the crime is new and if it is a heinous crime let us recognize it as such; and if capital punishment is the answer to it in part, then so be it.

● (1610)

There is nothing so cowardly as a hijacker, whatever his motives may be. It may be a case, as the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) suggested, where some economic justification is supposed—a poor guy trying to get into the money. But I have never heard of that as a valid argument in favour of theft. Or it may be someone who feels that a political consideration justifies harming, threatening and even killing innocent persons who have no recourse. To this extent, I agree.

As to the second portion of the second amendment, I find the language a little difficult, though this might be corrected. The proposed amendment reads:

in respect of any such person, where such person causes the death of a human being and has previously been convicted of murder—

Very well. Suppose a man has been convicted of non-capital murder and has served his sentence. He might be out on parole, or even that period of supervision might be over. And then he is convicted of manslaughter. Well, manslaughter certainly fits into the category of cases where a peson causes the death of a human being; the amendment does not say whether voluntarily or involuntarily, and to this extent the language is infelicitous. Be this as it may, it seems to me my hon. friend is responding to a public outcry which does not want society to be unprotected in such circumstances.

I can assure hon. members that the question of capital punishment loomed large as an issue on public platforms during the last election, at least in my part of the City of Edmonton. Unequivocal answers were demanded from candidates. The feeling was overwhelmingly in favour of the retention of the present law, that is, the 1961 amendments categorizing capital and non-capital murder. If the present administration were not so blind it would know this but, of course, the election results showed it was blind to public feeling, though the climate of opinion in western Canada was obvious. Thus, to the extent that these two amendments open up the bill—an ill-devised bill, in any case—I intend to support them.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I think we can all agree with the hon. member who preceded me that, on paper, the bill before us is not one which abolishes capital punishment. But I recall very well the remarks of the Solicitor-General (Mr. Allmand) when he introduced it on second reading. I think he used the words "de facto abolition". At least, we inferred from his remarks that the bill was one along the road to total abolition. I think it is more correct to put it in that way. He said the bill before us took us along the road to abolition.

I agree with this. I believe we should be moving along the road to abolition. Most of the debate which has taken place has been concerned with the narrow issue of the death penalty or its abolition. That is as it should be. I think that is what the public are interested in and what they wish us to discuss. Before us today are two amendments. The first would impose capital punishment on those who commit a second murder. I think I am correct in saying that in the history of this country there have only been two instances where a convicted murderer has subsequently repeated his crime. So the number of people the amendment is attempting to catch is really quite insignificant.

As to the second portion of the amendment dealing with hijacking, the security precautions now in force, causing some inconvenience at airports, appear to be proving effective. Since they have been imposed there has not been a single hijacking incident in this country, and very few internationally. Therefore, I submit that the proposed amendment does nothing to increase public safety. Nevertheless, I agree with those who say the public are justifiably concerned about this issue because of the fear they have for their own safety. The difficulty is that capital punishment does nothing whatsoever to increase the safety of the Canadian people. Remember that as a society we originally decided to give up our right to defend ourselves as individuals. We gave up this right to another authority. It was in the nature of a bargain. We said: We will no longer defend ourselves; we will give that task to the police. At the same time we made a bargain with the police, and said: We shall obey the laws if you give us protection.

One of the causes for anxiety when we consider the rising crime rate is that every level of society has violated this bargain. Offenders range from the man who tries to beat a parking ticket to the man who flashes the lights of his car to tell others that a radar trap is ahead. The law has to apply to all of us, not just to some of us. This is something Spiro Agnew has just found out to his chagrin. It is for everybody. It is not "law for you, and I will give the orders." The great authority on law and order has been found with his hand in the cookie jar.

Mr. Danforth: Trial by newspaper.

Mr. Leggatt: He was not tried by a newspaper but by a court. It is not a coincidence that most of the hard line law and order defenders are also advocates of capital punishment.

Capital punishment is not a solution. It is interesting to note the stages by which this debate developed into an emotional orgy in which members lost sight of reality. I am sorry the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) is not here. This is what he said in July about his decision to become an advocate of capital punishment. He said the case of Tanya Bush was the one which finally swung his opinion from abolition to retention. He said:

> My friend, a learned criminal lawyer, fully knows the facts on Tanya Bush. They fit directly into the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). Three child killings and then, while the culprit is out on weekend leave from a penitentiary, because he has a grudge against Tanya Bush's father, he kills Tanya Bush, who is eight or nine years old. Four child killings, three girls and one boy.

As I say, I wish the hon. member for Annapolis Valley were in the House today, because if he would examine the facts he would find that the murderer of Tanya Bush murdered only once. Yet I have received letters from people insisting that this man was repeatedly a murderer. No one will defend that kind of monstrous conduct. He was a dangerous sexual offender. With the kind of emotional orgy we are engaging in we have lost all sense of logic and reason. I hope when the hon. member for Annapolis Valley finds out the real facts of the Tanya Bush case, the case that apparently convinced him to be an advocate of capital punishment, he will equally be persuaded to return to the sensible position that he once took, that of abolition.

● (1620)

The real facts are that capital punishment does not increase public safety; it reduces it. There is every reason to believe this. First of all, the kind of person who murders is one who often has a suicidal tendency. The question of penalty is immaterial; he may commit a murder in order to seek death.

Mr. Yewchuk: Where did you get that from?

Mr. Leggatt: From 16 years of experience. That is one instance where capital punishment reduces public safety. A second, and perhaps more important one, is the refusal of a jury to convict when they know that the death penalty will compound their error if they make one. Put a person in a dock for a week, then try to convince the jury over and over again that they must be certain beyond reasonable doubt of his guilt before taking the man's life, and the chances of his being released are much greater when there is a death penalty hanging over his head. Therefore, if you want to increase public safety you do not vote for capital punishment. Under capital punishment there is all sorts of evidence that the guilty go free.

Let me give the House another example. Let me go back to the Tanya Bush case to which the hon. member for Annapolis Valley referred some time ago. This was the case that convinced him to change his position. The evidence against the accused was circumstantial. There was evidence that two Crown witnesses changed their story. There was no eye witness to the crime. The chances of that man's being freed on the basis of the case they made out against him would have been much higher had capital punishment been hanging over him and the jury had to be sure within moral certainty that they would not take his life in error.

Mr. Yewchuk: What about keeping him in jail for life then?

Mr. Leggatt: There is no doubt that if you are to sit in judgment on a man you are much more ready to send him to jail where a reasonable doubt exists than you are to take his life. Although the argument that the public are concerned is a valid one, the argument that capital punishment increases public safety simply will not wash.

I suggest we have to get back to respect for the rule of law. That means that we do not walk against a red light at Wellington and O'Connor. It means that we do not try to beat a parking ticket. It means that we do not speed. This principle must be adhered to by the whole of society. A society with a low crime rate is a society where laws are obeyed by every level of that society. One of the real problems in this country is that we are breaking society into sections and classes. Where advantage can be taken, it is being taken. It is just as wrong to beat the income tax as it is to beat your wife. You do not draw divisions on this question. What we need to come back to is a cohesive society where we all obey the law, and capital punishment will not do anything to encourage that.

As far as increasing public safety is concerned, six million people in this country have a gun. Under the present law, any person, regardless of mental history, can walk into a store and buy a gun. He may very well have been beating his wife for the previous three weeks and have a paranoid delusion that she is about to kill him. There is no law to stop him purchasing a rifle. I suggest this is one area where we can make a positive contribution to public safety. The very minimum that we should require, surely, is that a person who wants to buy a gun should have a certificate of competence, that he be without a history of mental illness or criminal activity, and that he should be a person who knows something about the law relating to guns and their use. We do not have such a minimum standard in this country.

I rather agree with those in this House who have expressed their view that the majority of the people in this country favour retention of capital punishment. There is no point avoiding public opinion when it seems to be so obvious. Certainly, my mail reflects the fact that the majority of those in my riding favour retention of capital punishment. If this view is so important to them, if it is the most important subject on their minds at the moment, then they will defeat me in the next election, and they will have the right to do so.

Mr. Blenkarn: You had better believe it.

Mr. Leggatt: I respect the democratic process.

Mr. Blenkarn: You had better make that clear.

Mr. Leggatt: I made that clear before I ran for office. The hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) says I should make it clear. I made it perfectly clear before I was elected. I make it perfectly clear now, and I will make it perfectly clear in the next election. I do not think the people in my riding do believe that this is the only issue in this country. I do not believe they think this debate the most important issue facing us today. Therefore, when we stop blowing this issue out of all proportion and look at all of the issues facing us, I think the majority of the people in my riding will recognize that their member of parliament does not have to agree with them on each and every subject.

Let me give an analogy to show what I mean. In my riding the number of people who are Roman Catholic is very small. When a Roman Catholic holds a view on abortion that is different from mine, I respect that view. If he wants to run for election and holds the view that abortion is wrong, that it should not be committed under any circumstances, and he makes this clear to his constituents, after which he is elected, then I can say at least 80 per cent of the people in my constituency will disagree with him. But I would respect his right to come to this House and to vote as his conscience dictated, just as I will vote on this issue as my conscience dictates.

What we in this country need to do is to continue to seek a humane, compassionate and civilized society. Within such a society this kind of penalty has no place whatever.

I remember the emotional speeches that have been made in this House, and I still think one of the most moving statements came from the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). He asked, what did Christ say when He was on the cross and was being murdered? He did not cry: "Hang them", though certainly they were guilty. No; He said: "Forgive them, for they know not what they do". That is an attitude this House should consider.

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, in addressing ourselves to Bill C-2 and these amendments, once again before us, we realize that there are as many shades of opinion on the abolition or retention of capital punishment among members of this House as there are degrees in a compass. However, attention should be focused on the fact that there is a common link in both arguments. It is based on the fact that the compassion for human life is a basic, all-embracing tenet of western civilization, and thus the common concern in both arguments is the preservation of life itself.

• (1630)

Advocates of abolition, however, imply that a retentionist is not concerned with life and that his argument in favour of the death penalty is a barbaric and uneducated one. Typical is a speech by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) who said:

> The outcome of this debate will reveal the level of civilization, sophistication, compassion and understanding in Canadian society.

Thus, abolitionists would have those who argue for the retention of the death penalty feel that their view is a retrogressive one, not compatible with the temper of the times. Abolitionists would have those who argue in favour of the death penalty feel that they have only to wait and they will see the light.

From those intellectuals who are seized with the problems of the higher civilization, an occasional tear might be looked for over the savagely mutilated bodies of victims and their mentally ravaged kinfolk. There are those who say that corpses don't talk, but as Molly Lefevre pointed out in her book entitled "Evidence for the Crown", corpses talk. They talk of stupidity, depravity, perversion. They talk of crimes of every kind and they talk of easy living in pleasant homes, of hard lives, of joys that ended in sorrow, of tragedy and of broken hearts. That we are living in the super-civilized 20th century is indeed a fact. Unfortunately, the fellow with the gun does not seem to know one century from another.

It is one of the stock arguments of anti-capital punishmentarians that the threat of the death penalty is an empty threat and frightens no would-be murderer. However, while arguments and statistics have been stacked on both sides of the balance, the deterrent effect of capital punishment remains unresolved. On these grounds, Mr. Speaker, I challenge the dogmatic assumptions of those who say the death penalty serves no purpose, as the statement has obvious imperfections.

The categorical assertion that "the death penalty serves no purpose" is contradicted by a number of self-evident facts. There is no shortage of reported instances wherein more than one homicide was committed by the same culprit, either as a result of not being apprehended on time during an escape or after being erroneously acquitted. This being so, it is at least indisputable that a killer, once he has been liquidated, is forever incapable of killing again. Considered under this aspect alone, it would seem that the death penalty has in the past achieved at least one purpose.

With the passing of years, the character of the prison population is being increasingly tainted by a continual infusion of more belligerent inmates. It is perhaps the too-ready acceptance of the dogma that the death penalty serves no purpose that has helped to give rise to a situation in which the maintenance of discipline within prison walls is an increasing problem.

Under the morality of our time, severity in dealing with those guilty of bloodshed is stigmatized as revenge and this is looked upon as a greater crime, or at least as great as the motivating offence, but the alleged sinfulness of vengeance, revenge, or retribution—call it what you will—has never been established.

There are those who seem to think evil deeds ought to be resented, but not punished, or at least not punished to the extent of the death penalty, but should it be a wrong doctrine if we seek to impose it on those who will have none of it? To us, the legislators who urge that this moral precept be converted into an act of parliament, the following question could be asked: whose cheek is it that we are so ready to turn to the hand of the smiter? Is it your own cheek or those of the other people? Shall we admonish a distracted widow, crying out for the law's vengeance, there, there, now, you musn't be so vindictive.

Those opposed to the death penalty frequently argue that there is always the possibility of some innocent person being destroyed, either through malice or error, and that to avoid such tragedies, it is better that no one be executed. It should be pointed out, however, and this cannot be too strongly maintained, that there is not a single human enterprise or sphere of activity that is not marred at some time or another by a deplorable episode. Although much is made of the comparatively remote possibility of some innocent person being put to death for a crime he did not commit, hardly any note is ever taken of the lethal aftermath that can follow an erroneous acquittal. It is a false and utterly unattainable idea of perfect justice and unerring accuracy. It would sacrifice a hundred real and present advantages to society through the permanent removal of men who are and can be at times really no better than noxious animals, thus obviating the possible infliction of wrong upon some unknown victim at some unknown future date. To insist that the execution of specific enemies be forbidden on humanitarian grounds makes neither moral nor political sense.

In an ideal society, war would not be one of the normal activities. Violence would not be one of the normal activities of even the smallest minority of its members and there would be neither need for prisons nor for punishment. It is not to crush optimism that I say there will never be a utopian society, but that being so, it is not necessarily the best policy to endeavour to approach its imagined conditions.

What is wanted is the best possible society, and there is no reason to assume, given the knowledge that such a society will contain and endorse violence, that the best possible will exclude the death penalty. In fact, the Canadian people have indicated that they believe otherwise. Although here and there triumphant, the movement for the total abolition of the death penalty has by no means been greeted with universal acceptance.

If our parliamentary democracy is to respond to the people, our fellow Canadians have indicated—and we have heard numerous constituency polls cited in the House—that capital punishment should be reinstated. In the October 1972 Weekend Magazine poll of readers from urban and rural centres, some 30,139 indicated that retention is necessary compared to 3,383 who think it is not. In April 1966, 255 people voted in this House in favour of the retention of capital punishment. However, in 1967, Bill C-168, introduced by Solicitor General Pennel to confine for an experimental period of five years the possible imposition of the death penalty to the murder of police officers and prison guards while on duty, was passed by a reasonably comfortable majority.

● (1640)

On July 4, 1972, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer), then Solicitor General, said:

> It is difficult in the present situation to make an accurate assessment of the five year trial period since it has not ended.

He added that the required statistics which would make retrospective analysis possible would not be available until one more year had lapsed.

The year has now lapsed, the July date has come and gone and again we find before us a request for the introduction of a five-year ban on capital punishment. We find ourselves once again at square one because this government circumvented the will of Parliament by commuting death sentences in cases to which capital punishment still applied, and which in normal circumstances would not justify the exercise of the prerogative of mercy. Because it is a question so fundamental, it is the last of issues upon which a nation's leaders should abdicate, as has been the case.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on the amendment before us which proposes that this bill be amended to provide for capital punishment in the instance where a person already convicted of murder commits a second murder, and in the instance where someone has been found guilty of air piracy or as it is sometimes called skyjacking, I do so because I feel there are certain matters which perhaps are not properly understood by certain members of this House.

Surely, the question of the abolition of capital punishment or its retention is something on which the government in power has a responsibility to take a stand. We see in this instance that the government has chosen not to stand up and be counted, but indirectly to give the impression that there is a free vote in this House. It is granted, Mr. Speaker, that there is to be a free vote in the technical sense, but I suggest when the vote is taken later this evening concerning the amendment before us we will see the whip will be present and that, for example, every member of the cabinet will vote against this amendment. Surely, if members of the cabinet are so uniform in their view in respect of the amendment and the bill itself, they should have the courage to endorse this measure as a government measure.

I mention this because I feel perhaps their handling of this legislation, including the unfortunate performance by its sponsor during the committee hearings, is so typical of the government's mishandling of matters generally. I see, for example, that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) graces the chamber today. Surely, there is no other department which more clearly illustrates the lack of foresight of this government than his department. Here we are situated with a minister who, because of lack of foresight, is jumping from country to country and from province to province in an effort to solve various problems which he should have been solving months and even years ago.

To come back to the question of capital punishment, I mentioned lack of foresight because I sincerely believe that in respect of capital punishment this government again is out of step with the world. Others in the world know there is an energy crisis. It was foreseen five or ten years ago. Many governments took steps to minimize its effect, but not our government. In the case of capital punishment, we know that the world, rather than going abolitionist at the present time, is actually becoming more retentionist. Yet we find an instance here where the government indirectly—and I emphasize that—is attempting to bring in an abolitionist measure which it does not have the courage to sponsor. In doing so, it is out of step with the main trend in the world. Our honourable friends to the left have said, "Where?"

Most of us have heard of the United Nations. I think most of us have great respect for that body. I believe it would be interesting to read a current publication put out by the United Nations which indicates, contrary to the public view which people like to express, especially the academics, that the world in fact is not becoming more and more abolitionist.

Mr. Gilbert: Give us an example.

Mr. Stevens: The hon. member asks for an example. I would refer him to a publication by the Centre for Economic and Social Information dated March 29, 1973. It reads:

> Because published studies on capital punishment have tended to concentrate on the developed world, particularly the Western nations, the world has a misleading picture that there is a general trend towards abolishing capital punishment when in fact only nine States Members have totally abolished the death penalty in their legal systems, according to a new report by the Secretary-General.

An hon. Member: Tell us who they are?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the members of the NDP are anxious to hear this report, but I think that after I have finished quoting from it they will not be so eager if they are as sincere abolitionists as they have been implying they are. The précis to which I refer goes on to state:

> In its survey . . .

The survey done by the United Nations.

> . . . of the world situation, the study points out that periods of abolition or non-use of the death penalty in a country may be succeeded by widespread executions in a revolutionary situation or by a sudden return to the death penalty.

Then, it is pointed out that there is often an unfortunate repercussion. After the death penalty is abolished, it is restored with harsher methods of execution being introduced as a supplementary means. In dealing with this matter, I think it is interesting to note what is said in paragraphs 23 and 24 of the report of the United Nations Economic and Social Council which is dated February 23, 1973:

> An important consideration in any truly international appraisal . . .

That is of the death penalty.

> . . . is that most published studies of the death penalty have taken their data and orientation from the developed world and largely from the western world. The result has been a rather misleading picture which has frequently given an unwarranted universality to values, theories or practices prevalent in the west. In academic circles it has sometimes become unfashionable to support capital punishment: civilization is tolerance and severity in punishment a sign of backwardness and regression, and so liberal thinking and the abolition of the death penalty are expected to coincide.

Again, as an aside, I would point out that that, of course, is not so in the most genuine liberal or socialist or communist countries such as Russia or China.

● (1650)

An hon. Member: You're in good company.

Mr. Stevens: As the study says:

> Therefore the writing available on the death penalty leaves the impression that there is a certain inevitability about the movement to more "civilized standards" and fewer executions. A reader could be excused for concluding that throughout the world there is in fact an irrestible and ineluctable trend toward the abolition of capital punishment or that even where death is still a last legal resort, the penal codes have fewer offences leading to capital punishment or that methods of execution are becoming more humane or that the persons liable to the extreme penalty will usually have the benefit of the best legal safeguards.

Paragraph 24 then states:

> In fact, the world picture provides no such assurances. If one spreads consideration to include developed countries of both the east and west and the wide range of developing nations in Asia, Africa and Latin America, the picture changes appreciably. It is extremely doubtful whether there is any uniform progression toward the restriction of the use of the death penalty; progress is discernible only in the very long run and it is usually marked by many ups and downs.

Mr. Orlikow: Why don't you give us the names of the countries?

Mr. Stevens: I would be very pleased to give the hon. member the names of the nine countries. They are in the publication. I might say to the hon. member that one of his colleagues earlier asked the same question, and at that time I gave him the list of the countries.

Mr. Gilbert: When?

Mr. Stevens: During an earlier debate of the bill. But if the hon. member insists on having the list of countries read out, I will be able to read them into the record.

Some hon. Members: Let us have it now.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I may come back to it. I will refer to the nine countries that are totally abolitionist in due course.

I mentioned this because I believe it is important that Canada does not unintentionally get out of step with the rest of the world. At a time when the world is at least having second thoughts concerning the abolition of capital punishment, it is wise for this nation also to have second thoughts concerning any rapid turn to an abolitionist or near abolitionist state.

The hon. members to my left have asked: What about countries such as the United Kingdom? As they know well, that country is a partially abolitionist country. It is not one of the nine countries to which I have referred. But I would draw the hon. members' attention to the fact that even in the United Kingdom members of the ruling party, the Conservative party, perhaps much to their dislike, have recently passed a resolution at their conference calling for the restoration of the death penalty in England.

Mr. Orlikow: Their members of parliament will ignore that resolution.

Mr. Stevens: I see that hon. members in the socialist ranks know more about England than the Conservative members in this House.

Mr. Gilbert: Was it moved by Enoch Powell or not?

Mr. Stevens: For the record, and to protect the socialists to my left from any further anxiety, I must name for them the nine countries listed by the United Nations as being totally abolitionist. I know they expected me to read out the name of the United Kingdom, but the sad fact is that they are wrong. The truth is that the only nine countries that are totally abolitionist as listed by the United Nations are: Austria, Columbia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, Iceland, Uruguay and Venezuela.

Mr. Gilbert: Give us the crime rates also.

Mr. Stevens: I suggest to the members to my left who advocated that we should not only accept the partial abolition proposed by the government but that we should adopt total abolition in this country, that what they are suggesting is that Canada should become the tenth member and join the ranks of those countries I have just read out.

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, and we will leave you China and Russia.

Mr. Stevens: Surely, those who propose to vote for abolition should ask themselves whether they truly believe that there is no crime so heinous that it does not warrant the supreme punishment, that is the loss of one's life. I would like each of those members, when they ask themselves that question, to read the gruesome details of, for example, the candy store murders which were recently in the public news in the United States. The fact that one or more persons systematically murdered relatively young people, had their bodies mutilated and buried, numbering as many as 20 at a time, indicates that although we may wish to do away with capital punishment, although we think that it is a desirable goal to never be put in a situation of having to take another person's life in the name of the state, we would be wise to ask ourselves how we in this country would react if such a heinous crime occurred here. Is that not at least one case where the convicted person who is responsible for this crime should be asked to pay the supreme penalty, that is the loss of his life?

Having said that, I feel that it is important that we bear in mind that one of the most heinous crimes is that of air piracy where a person, for reasons of his own, is willing to murder the occupants of an aeroplane. There is little imaginable that could be worse than that type of activity. That is the partial effect of the amendment that is before us. It proposes that capital punishment be applied in the event of murder connected with skyjacking. I think it is important, in view of the general trend noted by the United Nations which is not toward abolition but toward retention of capital punishment, that we in this country make sure that Canada does not become a haven for those who conduct skyjackings in any place in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: I say that the laws will toughen up on this subject worldwide, and it is not the time for this incompetent government to be taking Canada in exactly the opposite direction to the general trend in the world.

If I may conclude my comments on this amendment, I will simply refer to a statement made by the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). On July 23, as recorded at page 5902 of Hansard, he asked:

● (1700)

How in God's name does one help the victim of help the family by hanging the murderer?

With all due respect, I suggest that that is not the question. It is quite true that neither the victim nor the family is aided by capital punishment, but it is not the purpose of capital punishment to do so. The state ought not to be concerned with providing retribution for the victim. The punishment is given because the murderer has broken the law. Punishment is a transaction between the offending individual and the state, in which no one ought to interfere and which should be carried out by the state solely with reference to its own laws which have been broken and without reference to anything extraneous to that fact.

I suggest that the Solicitor General's question obscures the distinction between why one punishes a person because he has broken the law and what purpose the punishment is intended to serve, that is, deterrence, reformation or some other reason. I believe the victim or family ought never to enter into the consideration with respect to punishment. Were they to so enter, what argument could the Solicitor General provide to prevent one from applying his question to all forms of punishment? It could be asked: How in God's name does one help the victim or help the family by jailing the criminally negligent drunken driver? Punishment surely is not handed out for the benefit of certain individuals. It is the action of a state for the general benefit of its members. I believe the Solicitor General obscured this fact when he asked how it helps the family or the victim. That, I repeat, is not the question.

We need laws in this country. We need stronger laws to deal with some of the criminal activity in this country. It is up to the government in power at the time to introduce those stronger laws and to see that the penalty, be it the death penalty or otherwise, is executed. In that connection I would suggest that the present government, perhaps more than any government since confederation, has brought our legal system into disrespect through its commutation of death sentences without exception.

I see that my time is almost up, Mr. Speaker. I simply conclude by urging hon. members, before they vote on this matter, to give it serious second thought if they choose to vote against the motion proposed by my hon. colleague, because I believe that by voting in an abolitionist way we are in fact going against the world trend, and I know we are going against public opinion in this country.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, so far I have not spoken at any stage of this debate except in committee, and then only with respect to details of the bill and not on the fundamental question that we are being asked to deal with here. At this stage of our proceedings I do not expect that anything I say will overly influence anybody one way or another, either on the amendments or on the bill itself at third reading, but I feel it necessary to express my feelings on the subject as I have done in previous parliaments.

First, I think there was an element of extreme weakness on the part of the government in taking the course that it did; in other words, trying to have it both ways. I wish the bill before us were absolute in one direction or another so that it either proposed to endorse the concept of capital punishment for all murders, or proposed not to have capital punishment for any murders. In that way parliament could give a clear response to it.

It is to be regretted that the government, which was in office last year, knowing the five-year experimental period was coming to an end, sought to play a little political game and hide from the five-year termination period with the hope that the October election would return the Liberal Party with a comfortable majority so that this year it could do as it saw fit with respect to capital punishment. But that did not happen. In any event, we are now faced with this bill.

I do not favour the concept of capital punishment. I never have. I look upon this bill as posing a difficult question to hon. members, because to vote for it now and on third reading is to vote for capital punishment in a limited way, and to vote against it is also to vote for capital punishment in a limited way. Either way, yes or no, parliament is endorsing in a limited manner the concept of capital punishment. That is why I wish the government had been more determined in its approach and had proposed a bill clearly one way or the other. But it did not.

We can look at the question of murder and of capital punishment in relation thereto from the point of view of capital punishment being a deterrent, or from the point of view of it being the state responding in a vengeful manner to the taking of life. I, for one, cannot condone the idea or concept that the state—meaning the entire nation, the country, the government and parliament—can possibly think in terms of revenge. I cannot believe that the state can possibly adjust its thinking in a mass way to say: We are going to reflect the view of the injured party and wreak vengeance on the person who committed the offence of murder.

I think, with respect to what the state is, the nation is and the government and parliament are supposed to be, that we have to think in terms of the potential of a deterrent. Is the threat of criminal law sanction sufficient to deter a person from committing a particular crime? That is the way I try to look at it and that is the way I feel about it. I do not believe the threat of capital punishment is any more a deterrent to the commission of the crime of murder than is the threat of a long jail sentence—neither any more nor any less.

While we are on the subject, Mr. Speaker, let me point out that the law for the past five years has said that a person convicted of murdering a police officer while on duty, or a prison guard, shall be subjected to capital punishment. As much as I abhor the concept of capital punishment and think it is not a deterrent, as long as that provision was on the statute books then those people convicted under it should have been hanged. The government had no right whatever, and either did its predecessor nor the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he was prime minister, to avoid a law passed by parliament by the use of the royal prerogative of mercy. If parliament passed a law to the effect that if you murder a policeman while he is on duty, are convicted and sentenced to hang, then you should be hanged, much as I detest that concept. The law should not be brought into disrepute by an action of government.

● (1710)

I am as sure as I am standing here, knowing the position of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield)—he has declared it and he is an honourable man—that if he became prime minister, regardless of the speeches made by members who want to retain the death penalty, he would exercise this so-called royal prerogative and commute the death sentence. He has said he would do that. Is that flying in the face of the potential law any more than the present government is? No. It is the same situation. I have the view that when parliament passes a law it should expect it to be carried out, not subverted, not distorted, not put to one side.

If we want, as a parliament, to declare that there shall be no capital punishment, then we should do so. However, we should not be hypocritical and say we are going to vote for or against a bill knowing full well that nobody is going to be hanged because of the declarations on the matter by people in responsible positions. But, Mr. Speaker, that is aside from the general question.

Let us look at some circumstances, Mr. Speaker. This is the way in which I tend to relate my feelings about whether the threat of capital punishment is a stronger deterrent than is the threat of life imprisonment. If we look at the emotions of human beings, we see that these are inflamed or distorted or advanced as a result of family quarrels, lovers quarrels or mix-ups in family life. We see that they are inflamed or distorted as a result of excessive drinking, whether it be in a tavern or a home. We see that the emotions are anaesthestized by alcohol or some other chemical and perhaps a murder takes place. We are entitled to ask ourselves if the threat of capital punishment would deter a person, under these circumstances, from committing murder. It would not be a deterrent, it would not even be a factor in a person's thinking.

If two individuals get into a squabble after sitting in a tavern all night and retire outside to settle their differences in a physical way during which one kills the other, he has not considered the possibility of the death penalty. It was not a factor in his thinking at all. An emotional disturbance in a home, a shooting as a result of all night drinking or a reflection of what poverty does to a family, are not factors when it comes to the question of murder.

The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) referred to rape. I suppose, but I do not know, nor I am sure does any other member of this House know from personal experience, that in the process of an act of rape the emotions of the aggressor are so distorted, inflamed and out of touch with reality, that that person is not thinking about the threat of capital punishment or any other kind of punishment but is influenced by the immediacy of the situation.

Let us put it in reverse. I do not like to do this in any unkind way to the hon. member for Louis-Hébert but I think her amendment distorts the relationship between man and woman, because it speaks in terms of a male person committing rape upon a female person. The reverse is true, Mr. Speaker; the reverse circumstances have happened. I know of an instance some years ago where a woman forced a man at gunpoint to perform the act of cunnilingus on her. That is rape. It is not rape in the pure legal sense which, as I understand it, is a penetration of the vagina by the penis. It is not that kind of rape but it is certainly forcing an individual to perform a sexual act. The hon. member for Louis-Hébert did not take that into account obviously, but it is a fact of human behaviour.

An hon. Member: She has not been around as you have.

Mr. Howard: My smart-assed friend says she has not been around as I have. Mr. Speaker, I am trying to speak on a matter that is pretty serious and not reflect upon comments anyone else has made during this debate. If the hon. member wants to make that comment during the course of a speech, all right. He may have done so, already, but let us not cast aspersions against the feelings that one individual has about something.

What I am trying to get at, Mr. Speaker, is that the amendment on the question of rape referred to a highly emotional situation. I submit that the threat of capital punishment or a life sentence would not have any relevance whatsoever in the circumstances. Even a person about to commit a bank robbery or some other kind of criminal offence is not thinking of the threat of capital punishment or of a life sentence. The criminal mind says "I have looked at all the circumstances. I can perform this robbery and if in the course of it I am about to be apprehended by a policeman and I shoot him, I can get away with it. They are not going to catch me".

The criminal sets out a careful plan for avoiding apprehension. He looks at the possibility of a life sentence but feels he is going to get away with the bank robbery because he has laid it out carefully. In the city of Montreal, the criminals have bank robbery almost down to a science and have it timed to a minute and 15 seconds or something. The bank robbery is laid out so carefully that the robbers know it takes a certain number of seconds from the time they get into the bank until the police get there—unless the police happen to be just around the corner. It is a carefully laid plan, and the threat of capital punishment or a life sentence is not a deterrent to the commission of the crime.

The psychotic, the person completely out of touch with reality, the dangerous sexual offender, the person who attacks another and cuts him in pieces, who buries him alive or performs some obscenities on the body or commits all sorts of atrocities—that person is not considering the threat of capital punishment. I do not know what factors such persons consider, and I do not know whether, even psychiatrists know, but the threat of capital punishment is not any more of a deterrent than any other form of punishment that carries with it some strong sanction, such as life imprisonment.

● (1720)

I can think of one set of circumstances in which the threat of capital punishment might be a deterrent. That is the case of an individual who has been sentenced to imprisonment for life, which means 20 to 25 years. The death penalty might be a deterrent in that instance because he can only receive one life sentence; he can only spend the rest of his life in jail. Perhaps in that situation the possibility of losing his life might be a deterrent to committing murder.

On the other hand, depending upon the individual, it might be attractive to commit murder. Talk to people who are in jail, people who are subject to sentences of 45 or 50 years. Talk to people who have been sentenced to life imprisonment because they have committed murder. Talk to them about a life-term jail sentence. They say; "I would just as soon be dead as face the prospect of life in jail." So this person might ask: What have I got to live for? And if I die, I might as well take one of those screws—prison guards—or one of those finks or informers with me.

I cannot myself think of picking and choosing instances and circumstances and saying to myself, guided by my own conscience, yes, it is all right to impose capital punishment in circumstance (a) but not in circumstances (b) or in circumstance (c). Yet this what we are seeking to do in the bill before us. This is what the minister was seeking to do when he introduced this bill. He was saying it was acceptable to impose capital punishment in two sets of circumstances but not in others. And in my view he picked the two that are meaningless, the two which have no consequence.

Is there a world trend in this regard? Does it matter to the conscience of people here whether or not Great Britain retains or does not retain capital punishment? Does it matter whether Iceland does or does not retain capital punishment? Capital punishment might be in force there one week, and the next week it might not. Attitudes throughout the world, in every jurisdiction are subject to change. Attempts have been made to deal with the question of criminality, to deal with the question of taking of life. All it proves to me, both from a logical and a statistical point of view, is that in every jurisdiction where an attempt has been made to use capital punishment as a deterrent to murder, they cannot prove it has succeeded. And in every jurisdiction where capital punishment has been avoided, they cannot show success either. In other words, it is a draw. In other words, no great deterrent to murder is achieved by the threat or imposition of capital punishment.

I had the idea that I might discuss the question of unrest in prisons, a point touched upon by one of the earlier speakers. I think, now, I shall not do so. It is beside the point. There is a reason for it, but the situation can be dealt with without the threat of imposition of capital punishment. The problem of the anger and unrest in prisons can be dealt with by a little straightening out in the department itself.

I know we all have a tendency in certain circumstances, at the moment of a heinous crime, at the instant of an atrocity against a person, to look at the circumstances and say, "My God, isn't that terrible? That person should be hanged."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret interrupting the hon. member. Perhaps I should just ask the House to give unanimous consent to the hon. member's going beyond the 20 minutes limit. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: That is extremely kind of the House, Mr. Speaker. Let me conclude by saying I hope the general public will tend to think of this issue in terms of what the state should do to advance the respect we must have for life itself, and whether or not capital punishment is a deterrent to the crime of murder. When we read of some dreadful crime, our response, in a vengeful, sudden mood might be so strong that we might want to strangle the criminal ourselves. I hope the general public would want us as legislators to look at the question in light of the deterrent effect of capital punishment and in light of the state helping to strengthen respect for life itself, and not the state operating from a sense of revenge. If society moves strongly out of a sense of vengeance and kills people out of revenge, we are helping to degrade the respect for life we should all possess and try to develop. Regardless of how this vote goes, regardless of whether the bill passes or fails to pass, because of the lack of guts on the part of government a parliament will be back again considering the same subject and engaging in the same sort of wrenching discussion and examination five years hence. I just hope that because it is the lesser of two bad situations, the bill passes, and I hope it will have some value in influencing the conduct of society and the conduct of parliament from now on.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, having spoken at length on the principle of this bill on second reading, I shall refer only at this time to the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence). That hon. member has offered two amendments in one package for our consideration. In one part of the package he suggests that a person be subject to capital punishment if he causes the death of a human being after having been previously convicted of murder. In the second he suggests a person be convicted of capital murder if he commits murder in conjunction with a hijacking. The wording of the second part of the amendment uses the following terminology:

> ... any person, where such person causes the death of a human being and has been previously convicted of murder, whether or not such murder is punishable by death ...

● (1730)

With all due respect, I point out that the situation envisioned by the hon. member is an extremely rare occurrence. The commonly held view of the average murderer as being one who either repeats his crime or commits other crimes is simply erroneous. The recidivism rate of murderers is among the lowest of all types of crime. Indeed, in the entire history of Canada there have been only three individuals who have ever been convicted a second time of murder. That being the case, I feel the amendment suggested by the hon. member seeks to effect a cure for a disease which is so rare as to be almost non-existent.

It is also conceivable that a case could arise where a person falling under the provisions of the amendment would have been guilty of a first murder which was considered much more heinous than the second murder. As a matter of fact, the second event might not even be a case of capital murder at all in terms of the present law. According to the hon. member's wording, he says "where such person causes the death of a human being". I suggest that that wording is very bad from the legal point of view, but I presume that according to that wording a person could be convicted of capital murder after having committed manslaughter in the second instance, or having committed non-culpable homicide according to the terms of the present law. Yet he would be executed because of the second event. I do not use the word "murder" because the hon. member who put forward the amendment did not use that term either.

With respect to the second amendment which deals with skyjacking, the hon. member seeks to extend capital punishment to the case of, again using his words, such person who "causes the death of a human being"—again he uses those words instead of "commits culpable homicide", or something to that effect—"while committing or attempting to commit an offence under section 76.1 of the Criminal Code." Section 76.1 deals with hijacking.

Before getting into the entire hijacking question, I suggest that from a legal point of view merely to say "causes the death of a human being" without defining the type of murder or offence is not satisfactory.

With regard to aircraft hijacking, I agree that this subject has sparked considerable debate throughout the world. The fact that all nations consider aircraft hijacking to be a severe threat is reflected in the fact that many nations, including Canada, have moved to take strong action to prevent such incidents from occurring. For example, in Canada in recent years we have had amendments to the Criminal Code and the Aeronautics Act; within the RCMP we have set up special constables to deal with airport security, and we have mandatory checks made to prevent hijacking. So, we have taken considerable steps to try to prevent hijacking or terrorism on aircraft.

As a further expression of this concern, the amendment offered by the hon. member is certainly understandable. However, I would argue that the benefits that may at first glance seem to accrue from this amendment are illusory. Perhaps the main objection to this amendment on purely legal grounds is the difficulty of interpretation that might ensue.

Another argument that I feel offers sufficient grounds for rejecting the amendment arises from a consideration of the very different circumstances in which hijacking has taken place. I have in mind recent examples where the hijacker was very disturbed and the hijacking was almost entirely the product of his mental disturbance, although his mental state was not such as to make him unfit to stand trial. If by some mischance his action had caused death, it would not seem that his case should be one to which the death penalty should be automatically applied. James A. Arey, who has written a very detailed book on the subject of skyjacking, offers us his opinion that skyjackers fall into five major categories, which he defines as, first, losers and misfits; second, emotional disaster cases; third, criminals on the run; fourth, individuals with personal, political reasons, and fifth, people or groups with organized political motivations.

With specific respect to hijacking, I feel it vital to emphasize again that it is the almost unanimous consensus of the experts that hijackers are best deterred by preventing them from getting on an aircraft in the first place. That is the best deterrent to the hijacker and the best prevention of the problems he may cause.

In the past year, as hon. members will recall, elaborate ground security installations have been made in airports across Canada and the United States, as well as Europe. I think it should suffice to say that since those security checks were begun there has been only one Canadian hijacking: the attempt by a man to divert a Quebecair flight from its scheduled Wabush to Montreal run on December 14 last. Before those measures were introduced there were seven hijackings over Canadian territory. Mr. Ted Abrams of the International Civil Aviation Organization in Montreal was quoted as saying that "1973 was a good year" with respect to hijacking. He said that hijackings have decreased mightly around the globe. And a Federal Aviation Administration spokesman in Washington, D.C. confirmed that since January 5, when the FAA made pre-flight security checks mandatory for all passengers and baggage, there have been no hijackings of U.S. planes.

In the light of these facts, I think it is fair to say that the amendment offered by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham is again a case of much too much too late. The problem of hijacking appears to have been controlled by much less severe measures than those which he advocates. Furthermore, the usefulness of a death penalty in connection with hijacking offences is seriously questioned by experts in the field. Mr. Arey, in summing up the opinions of experts with respect to this problem, finds "general agreement in regard to a multilevel approach." He suggests that a consensus can be found concerning the following important points:

[Mr. Allmand.]

> The act of skyjacking must be recognized as a crime by all aviation bodies and all governments; severe punishment should be swift and inevitable.

I stress the next sentence of Mr. Arey's conclusion most emphatically:

> Punishment should not include the death sentence, because that penalty is unlikely to have any effect on extremely unbalanced or desperate individuals. It should consist of long incarceration in a prison or a mental institution. Sentences should be made as uniform as possible throughout the world.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I call upon hon. members to heed the words of experts in the field, experts who feel that the death sentence would simply have no effect on the sort of person who engages in the crime of hijacking in the first place. In view of the fact that some of the skyjackers are severely unbalanced individuals bent on suicide, a death penalty may actually serve as incentive to the commission of the crime.

With these arguments in mind, I feel that an overwhelming case can be made that the suggestions offered by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, while offered for our consideration with the best of intentions, simply cannot stand up to examination on legal, psychological, or statistical grounds. I stress again that these arguments can be made against the amendment irrespective of one's view on the general question of capital punishment.

Before I close I should like to respond to a few of the remarks made earlier this day in the debate on these amendments. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) was quoting from a document which pointed out that there were only nine countries in the world that have completely abolished capital punishment. I think that is probably true if it applies to all crimes; but if he considers the complete abolition of capital punishment for cases of murder, which is what we are considering in this House, then he will find that there are many more than nine countries. For example, the United Kingdom has completely abolished capital punishment for murder but not for treason, and this is why it is not included in the group of countries that he put forward. Many of the states of the United States have completely abolished capital punishment for murder, but in the United States generally they have capital punishment for treason and perhaps other offences, very rare offences, against the state.

● (1740)

In Canada, with this bill, we are only considering capital punishment for murder. Whether the bill is carried, or defeated, we will not touch upon the question of capital punishment for treason which exists under another section of our Code, or the old crime of piracy which also still exists: it is sort of an anachronism in our law, but it still exists.

In quoting the cases, I think the hon. member may have misled the House to a certain extent. The important question is, how many countries have completely abolished capital punishment for the crime of murder? He also referred to my statement in which I asked, "How in God's name does it help the victim or the family of the victim if we maintain capital punishment?" In stating that, I was merely replying to some arguments of members of this House who suggested it was helpful to the family of the victim and maybe to the victim himself. That is why I phrased my reply in that way. That certainly is not my principal argument on the question of capital punishment.

The hon. member also wanted to know why we had not taken a position as a government. The bill before the House is a government bill; it was put forward by the cabinet. Under our constitution, the cabinet is legally the government. This is a cabinet bill, approved by cabinet. In that sense it is the same as the bill put forward in 1967. However, it is different from the motion of 1966 which was put forward by four private members of this House. In all cases there was a free vote, but in 1966 there was not a government bill. In 1967 there was a government bill. This is a government bill. For the members of our party and all other parties, as far as we are concerned it is a free vote, but not for the government, meaning the cabinet. This is a cabinet, government bill. Cabinet discussed this question and we decided to put forward this bill. I put it forward on behalf of the government.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) referred to the amendments I attempted to put forward in committee. They referred to that as contempt of parliament. In one other case the hon. member suggested that it was unethical. There is nothing in our rules to suggest amendments cannot be put forward either in committee of the whole House or in one of our special or standing committees. As a matter of fact it has been done many times, not only by members of the opposition but by members of the government and its ministers.

If I remember correctly, during the tax reform bill several amendments were put forward by the government. The hon. member for Edmonton West did not complain at that time. No one has complained about the other amendment I put forward in committee, the one to restrict the parole eligibility provisions for murderers. If members are against the principle of ministers putting forth amendments in committee, they should object to that amendment as well. They object to the amendment they do not like, but not to the one they like. It has not even been mentioned in this debate.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During his remarks, the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) suggested that I had sort of misled the House by my reference to the fact there are only nine abolitionist countries in the world. Those are total abolitionist countries and do not include countries which have abolition with respect to murder in the sense that we are contemplating in this amendment and the bill.

I would like to reply, to clear the record. If the Solicitor General wishes to take the expanded definition to which he referred, there are still only 23 countries in the world in that category. This is in table 2 of the United Nations' list. Very few of those countries have brought in abolition in the sense the minister is speaking about. Those countries are the United Kingdom, in 1969; Malta, in 1971; and Peru, in 1971. I simply make the point that I do not want the House to believe that my reference to nine countries was misleading. If the minister wants to extend it to 23 for all crimes, the fact is the same; we are out of step with the rest of the world.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, there is quite a difference between nine and 23, but the fact is this: I do not have the list before me, but I know that in western Europe, where most of the people of this country originate from, only three countries have not completely abolished capital punishment for murder. Many of them have it for other crimes. The three countries are Ireland, France and Spain. Africa, Asia and many communist states have capital punishment for many crimes. In South Africa they hang people by the dozen from month to month; but I do not think we should emulate that country.

I wish to refer to some of the remarks of the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn). He said we must support the amendment of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) because the government had not done anything to deal with the question of security in penitentiaries, and that murderers were escaping on a large scale. I wish to point out that since the rash of escapes in April and May—one of which was an escaped murderer—namely, in June, July, August and September we had a 75 per cent decrease in escapes from Canadian penitentiaries in comparison with the year before. This is because we took very serious measures to deal with the problem of security. We increased the number of guards, the perimeter of security by erecting extra fencing, and so on. We have dealt with that problem. If that is the reason the hon. member is supporting the amendment, it is not very good because we have already taken steps. I regret we had to do that, but it was necessary.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) said he supports the bill. I thank him for his support. He made some points in his speech with which I should deal. He referred to answers I made today in the House in which I said we were looking for new penitentiary space in British Columbia. He thought that was a very bad move. In the penitentiary at New Westminster, B.C., there were approximately 630 inmates last week. This is in a penitentiary that is supposed to hold approximately 550. It is a maximum security prison. The hon. member seemed to imply that we should put these maximum security inmates on parole. He blamed the cutback in parole on the chairman of the parole board. I should point out that under the present chairman paroles reached an all-time high in 1970. They increased at a very extensive rate between 1965 and 1970. However, after 1970 they found there was a very high rate of violation. The people who are back in penitentiary are for the most part there as a result of violation of parole.

Over the 14-year period the parole board has been in operation, the failure rate has been about 20 per cent. However, last year it was 56 per cent. We are very concerned about that failure rate, as is the chairman of the parole board. He is re-examining the position he took in 1968, 1969 and 1970 to try to see what went wrong during those years in order to correct some of these matters. In the meantime we are faced with a situation in British Columbia where the prison population last year increased by more than 14 per cent when the usual increase is only 4 per cent. Many of these people are maximum security risks. We cannot place them on parole. We must find institutions in which to put them. That is what we are trying to do. I think I have dealt with some of the remarks made in the debate. I suggest again to the House that the amendments before us at this time are poor in law and in social policy. I ask the House to reject them.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If a division arises from the motion I shall now put, it will take place at 10.45 p.m. this evening. The question is on motion No. 3 (Mr. Lawrence). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The recorded division will take place, as agreed earlier, at 10.45 p.m. Since the House has concluded the consideration of the report stage of Bill C-2, with the exception of the division to take place later today, and since it is understood that the required recorded divisions have been deferred as noted until 10.45 p.m., the House will proceed to another matter of government business, namely government order No. 26.

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At the time of adjournment the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) had the floor on the bill. Is it agreed that it is six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 5.55 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES AND DEBENTURES

The House resumed, from Monday, April 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-164, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the CNR financing bill has appeared on the order paper for several years, and for reasons that need not be repeated since most members are aware of them, it has yet to be called and passed. Now during that period, it has been impossible to submit to the consideration of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications the annual reports of the CNR as well as those of Air Canada, because under the law, before being tabled in the House, those reports must be audited by firms of accountants recognized throughout Canada. Now, precisely on that point the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance who introduced the bill in April 1973 mentioned that it might be advisable to make some changes in the appointment of auditors. I think that the first change that we should make—and I am pleased to see here the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) responsible for the bill—would be to delete in the legislation the provision requiring Parliament to appoint the auditors of the books of the CNR and Air Canada.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that among all Crown corporations that come directly or indirectly under the federal government, this is the only case where Parliament has to appoint a firm of auditors in order to have these two corporations' books audited in an efficient way.

In my opinion, the first change that should be made would be to remove from Parliament the responsibility for appointing auditing firms in order to let private enterprise and other firms of auditors the opportunity to enter into competition with the auditors appointed by Parliament.

If we go back several years, we notice an anomaly: the auditors appointed to audit these corporations' books were always employed by English firms, which means that there was never an opportunity for a French firm to get the auditing contract for the CNR or Air Canada.

I think that this is an anomaly that should be straightened out as early as possible because we certainly cannot by an act of Parliament rule out the possibility that qualified French firms, which have expanded in this country, might compete with these two firms.

As I said earlier, the fact that Parliament has to appoint auditors is delaying the procedures of the Transportation committee, including consideration of the annual reports of these two firms, and I believe that passing of this legislation is urgent. By my action tonight, I certainly do not intend to delay referral of the bill to the committee, which should take place at the earliest opportunity, but rather to point out that this bill contains an anomaly which should be straightened out as soon as possible.

Let us now take the examples of some Crown corporations, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Industrial Development Bank, to name only two. We note that the auditors are appointed alternately, as suggested by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Comtois), but the alternance is based on bilingualism, in that an English-speaking firm alternates with a French-speaking one, which means that those firms which have reached a certain level of maturity and importance in respect of their personnel may hope to obtain contracts for auditing the accounts of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or the Industrial Development Bank or the Bank of Canada, which is not the case for two large corporations, namely the CNR and Air Canada.

I should like to deal also with the competition on the commercial routes of the CNR. As it had done many times before, the Canadian Trucking Association and the Quebec Trucking Association have stated recently that because there is no separate accounting for the money received by the federal government and the CN and that paid within their own operations, it is very difficult to determine whether the federal government is now advancing money to help competition against private enterprise. If such were the case, I believe that it would constitute another injustice to be rectified.

If you refer to the 1972 Canadian National Railways annual report under consolidated income statement, you will note that the net revenue of separately operated trucking companies amounted to $1,766,180 in 1971 and $2,464,306 in 1972, which means that at the present time, the CN are competing more and more against private trucking companies which are not subsidized by the federal government. For instance, I believe that we should perhaps obtain figures showing how the National Railways spend the subsidies which they receive, and if these subsidies are used to promote competition with private businesses, we should rectify this failing of the legislation and propose an amendment. Obviously, this amendment should be submitted by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) when the bill concerning the Canadian National Railways is studied, and not in relation with financing. Such amendment should be submitted in order to stop this organization from having trucking activities and, consequently, to prevent it from competing against private enterprise.

● (2010)

[English]

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have risen to speak on this particular CNR financing bill. I have reviewed the debate that has taken place on it, going back to last April when it first came before the House, and so far as I can gather an adequate explanation has not been given, to the House and the country, on the need for this bill, or of how the CNR and Air Canada operated without a financing bill being passed by the House of Commons for over two years.

At one time we were presented with Bill C-4, dealing with loans and expenditures with respect to CNR and Air Canada, for the period January 1, 1971, to June 30, 1972. It was not passed by the House, yet both companies managed to continue their operations. Now, we have Bill C-164 which deals with CNR financing from January 1, 1973, to June 30, 1974. What has happened to the intervening six months from June 30, 1972, to January 1, 1973? What is the explanation for that gap? How did the CN and Air Canada finance their operations during that period? I suppose there is an adequate answer, and members of parliament are entitled to the explanation.

There is a further question with regard to the audited statement of the companies. Ever since I first came to the House of Commons, the annual reports of the CNR and Air Canada have been referred to the Standing Committee on Transportation. Now, the story is that the annual report was tabled but the auditors have not been assigned. The Auditor General, because of some mix-up at the time of the change over, brought about to satisfy the new Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand)—

An hon. Member: Now, don't get political.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I am just asking for an explanation of this. The government switched the auditors. The Auditor General has not examined the CNR statement, so it is not an officially audited statement. Yet, it has been laid before the House without any full explanation.

Now, we have Bill C-164 before us, providing for capital expenditures of $75 million, including $8 million for branch lines. We want to examine the details of that $8 million for branch lines. In western Canada we are continually told that branch lines are to be abandoned, but here we find $8 million allocated for construction of branch lines. Then, there is the provision of $167 million for new equipment and $140 million for Air Canada. These expenditures have not been fully explained in the debate to date.

When parliament was called back to settle the railway dispute the Minister of Transport made a great speech about labour trouble. It was a very emotional pitch. He referred several times to blackmail being threatened. Blackmail is not a very common or polite word, but certainly political pressure was placed on the government for eight weeks and it failed to act quickly to settle that strike. As a result, the revenues lost to the railroads were greater than would have been the case had parliament been convened earlier, or had a suitable settlement been reached prior to that. I only hope that judge Hall, in his review of the matter, will find a settlement satisfactory to both parties.

When we talk about CNR financing, we are often told about the heavy burden of debt, that nobody has yet lifted from the back of the CNR. We are repeatedly told that it is an old debt, the debt incurred in the building of the defunct railroad which were taken over by Canadian National in the period 1917 to 1922. The fear is that this debt is too great a burden for the CNR to carry, and that is why they have to come to parliament for financial assistance from time to time and why the final accounts are in the red.

● (2020)

This thought, I believe was best expressed by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) on April 16, 1973, as recorded at page 3353 of Hansard:

> Under successive old style governments it has been a tradition since 1923 to establish a public corporation to which they pay lip service and then refuse to let it function as it can and should. They handicap it with a debt structure that makes it impossible for it to succeed in any meaningful way . . .

He goes on to suggest that this debt was incurred in the building of the Grand Trunk Railway and, as a result of the union of the Grand Trunk with the Pacific Railway and so on. If one stopped in the middle of the sentence in which he referred to the debt structure, one might think he comes very close to Social Credit thinking that group always accused the old style governments of operating in a debt structured economy. What he was really referring to, however, was the burden of debt incurred by the CNR during the early years of settlement in western Canada between 1917 and 1922.

What was the amount of that debt and where is it now? In 1936, the debt of the CNR stood at $2,435 million. The Dominion of Canada reduced that debt by roughly half to $1,184 million. That is the outstanding long-term debt brought about by the creation of the CNR. In 1951, the House of Commons passed the National Railway Revision Act, and the long-term funded debt of the company was again cut in half. I am rounding off these figures, Mr. Speaker. In 1951, the long-term outstanding debt of the CNR was cut from $1,472 million to $615 million. Then, that amount was further reduced by another $121 million.

Accepting the long-term debt of the CNR in 1951 as $615 million, we must still ask why it is as large as it is today. What is the problem? Shortly after Donald Gordon took over, he brought in what was called the complete dieselization of the Canadian National Railways. That was embarked upon in 1950-51 and cost the CNR $630 million, more than the long-term debt at that time. Mr. Speaker, any efficient business should be able to pay off its own capitalization, and it is important that this fact be pointed out so that we realize it is not necessarily the long-term outstanding debt of the CNR that causes it to finance as it does.

When Mr. Gordon took over the CNR in 1950, he complained about the outstanding debt until he got the House of Commons to reduce it by more than one-half, but as he pointed out succinctly at that time, much of this indebtedness arose out of bad bookkeeping. That may be so, but what are the bookkeeping practices of the CNR today? A close examination of the ledger would show how it is done.

When the dieselization program was inaugurated, many steam engines had been purchased and some had only served 10 years but were being amortized over nearly 40 years. Naturally, when they were retired after only ten years the bookkeeping debt against them was quite large. Mr. Gordon revamped the bookkeeping system of the CNR. He did not want the same thing to happen to the diesel engines, so they were amortized for one-third of their expected life of 35 years. Amortizing the purchase of machinery over one-third of its life expectancy makes the bookkeeping and the debt look very bad. One could almost call it creative bookkeeping and, in effect, that is what it is. The CNR financing system is programmed to show a gross national revenue of a little over $1 billion. By the time expenses are deducted, the revenue will exceed the operating expenses, but along comes a $42 million interest on debt and that puts the company in the red. They do not mind being in the red because the federal government picks up the tab.

I do not necessarily say this should not be so, but I do say that it was to Mr. Gordon's advantage to bring in a creative bookkeeping system. It did not bother him to do that because he knew if he painted the picture in the red the government would pick up the tab. That is part of the motivation and it should be understood. The men charged with the operation of the CNR were motivated to conduct the bookkeeping that way because of the lesson learned in having to scrap the many useful steam engines and the heavy expenditures caused by dieselization.

I think we are coming to the point in our society where many people are suggesting that governments can run things as well as private enterprise. That feeling is apparent in some of the socialist provinces. Somewhere along the line we have to look at that picture and decide whether it is true.

It is interesting to note that in Kenneth Galbraith's book on the new industrial state he makes the statement that in the western world, the United States and Canada, highly skilled executive types have been developed and that they probably work just as hard for a government as for private enterprise because they feel that they can thus maintain their stature as the elite of executive management. This is not borne out when one studies the other great railroading problem of recent times, the wreck of the Penn Central. This company was the result of a combination of two great railroads in the United States, the New York Central and the Pennsylvania Railroad. All the facts were fed into a computer and it took ten years to make the decision that those two railroads should work well together. They complement each other. Why, then, did Penn Central go bankrupt shortly afterwards? It was because the personalities managing the two railways were not compatible. The trackage may have been, but the personalities were not. It is still people who in the end decide what will happen—people and what motivates them. Some of the brilliant men on the one railroad would not co-operate with those on the other.

● (2030)

In Canada, in 1967, the National Transportation Act was passed, designed by people who thought they had the answer. It was, indeed, a common notion in Canada, Britain and a number of other countries that if we could simply free the railroads from controls of one kind or another they would become competitive with other forms of transport and all would be well. Since 1967, the railroads have been given a great deal of freedom. Ask the minister a question about freight rates or schedules and he replies by saying the matter is out of his hands; parliament has passed the legislation and all he can do is ask the companies about it. It seems the idea of competition will not work in connection with a national transportation system which is supposed to serve the whole country.

The railroads were getting a subsidy of $108 million a year back in 1967, and the legislation passed in that year was designed to reduce the amount of that subsidy by about $14 million, so that inside of eight years no subsidy whatever would be forthcoming. This reduction would be accomplished by allowing the railways to charge whatever rates they wished. Well, we have seen the reduction of subsidies in one form and the building up of subsidies in another. It is time Canadians realised that we have to do much better than we have done so far in managing the railroads. We have to accept the fact that living in a country four or five thousand miles in breadth, a country which needs to be tied together, the subsidy idea was not bad at all.

If we study the operations of some of the finest railroads in the world, we find they are subsidized. Even in Japan, with its heavy population, railroad operations have to be subsidized to a large extent. This is true of railways in the United States, too. I have already referred to Penn Central. I should like to read what Mr. Perlman, one of the brilliant railroaders of his day, had to say about the decline of that railroad.

I say that under the present system of regulation, under the present system of subsidies to the other three forms of transportation, under the system where we are not allowed to make rates competitive with other modes, it is a dying system. I still say the steel wheel on the steel rail is the most efficient form of transportation in the world. And it is being killed. We are not letting it die, it is being killed. I think it is a tragedy today to see it being killed that way. All I say, as a taxpayer, is: Treat them all alike. Don't give any of them subsidies—or subsidize them all.

Those views are still current in the minds of many people. Recently the government held a western economic conference and one of the subjects discussed was the transportation problem we encounter in the west. The act of 1967 has proved a colossal failure. It might have worked all right in other parts of Canada, but in the west it has been a colossal failure. The government has not even attempted to wrestle with this issue. Railway finance bills are brought before parliament. None of them are getting passed. No logical answers are given to explain how the railways are financing their operations without them. The government is reluctant to amend the transportation legislation of 1967 in any way. At the same time, the indebtedness of Air Canada has grown and parliament has yet to conduct a searching examination of the direction in which the corporation's affairs are going.

In 1967, the interest on Air Canada's debt amounted to $13.9 million. Today, it is $20 million. It is time we took stock of the direction in which we are moving, both in railroading and in air transportation. I spoke earlier about the long-term debt of Canadian National which has grown to around $1,894 million. In 1951, it was down to $615 million. Then, with the heavy expenditure during the years of dieselization in the 'fifties it rose by $630 million. Today, as I noted, it is $1,894 million, another $600 million between the 'sixties and now.

I see the purpose of this legislation is to provide funds for the building of more railway track and the purchasing of more equipment at a cost of $167.5 million. As late as last year, we were concerned in the Transport Committee about the accident rate of the CN and I was surprised to learn that only 19 per cent of the rolling stock of that company has Timken bearings in it. There is still 81 per cent of the CN rolling stock—or it might be this figure relates to all railroads—which has the old hot box problem, and most accidents are caused by this defect. Where has the company been spending the money? We do not seem to be getting value for it when, on examining the expenditure made by the CNR on equipment, we find we are still with the old hot box problem.

We see the CN developing turbo trains. Every now and then they make an experimental run from Montreal to Toronto to determine whether or not any improvements have been made. No one appears to have questioned this expenditure and considered whether this form of turbo train is feasible. The Japanese are experimenting with the magnetic train. The power of magnets is used to run these cars; there are no wheels on the trains at all. I note that the CN is taking a look at the possibility of running such trains at speeds up to 300 miles an hour between Toronto and Montreal using the magnetic track principle. If this turns out to be feasible, surely we do not need two airports in Montreal and two in Toronto. But no one has really examined the proposal yet.

● (2040)

Recently some new bilateral air agreements have been completed with the United States, and it is of interest to note that the U.S. got the first jump at servicing Canadian cities. The odd thing about these agreements is that because of shortage of fuel in the U.S. they may not be able to take advantage of this part of the agreements. Certainly we should have had the opportunity of servicing American cities to the extent the United States has of servicing Canadian cities. I think the whole series of agreements was a mistake and should be re-examined as soon as possible.

At times I wonder how Air Canada operates. A few years ago it introduced what was called a regional air policy, which I thought was a good concept. But the surprising thing about it has been the growth of regional air lines. We gaves these regional air carriers all the short, non-profitable runs with perhaps one or two good ones thrown in, yet they made a real success out of these short and mostly poor runs.

Why, then, is Air Canada still piling up its present debt structure? Pacific Western, an airline operating between Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver and places in northern Canada, has developed into the third largest airline in Canada. It is almost of national status. That airline operated an airbus service between Edmonton and Calgary that was so successful that Air Canada quit running between those two cities completely; they just could not compete with the managerial expertise of private enterprise.

I am suffering under the illusion that if we allowed private initiative to develop a similar airbus service between Montreal and Toronto, it would immediately prove to be a successful arrangement and Air Canada would have difficulty competing. A few years ago Air Canada declared it would commence an airbus service between Montreal and Toronto, but it has never come about. At least, any time I have tried to get on it I have been unable to do so.

The old story that has been running around here for years is that we should sell Air Canada. It was never explained whether or not Air Canada was to be taken over by the Canada Development Corporation. Is the financial structure of Air Canada to be separated from that of the CNR? That question has not been answered either. If Air Canada continues to relinquish some of its routes within Canada to some of the regional airlines, I would not be a bit surprised if the growth of the airline industry of this country proved to be second to none in the world. I say this because we are fortunate in having fuel for our planes. The United States might have to shut down a lot of its big jet routes this winter owing to shortage of fuel.

Another matter that has always bothered me is this. Generally speaking, when aircraft become too small for the national airline they are sold to one of the regional air carriers. Why was not the Viscount sold far earlier to some of the regional air carriers? Air Canada kept the Viscounts flying until they could hardly fly any longer. The regional air carriers never bought them. As soon as they came up for sale, the regional carriers said that although it was a sturdy aeroplane to fly, it was the most expensive aircraft to keep in the air anywhere in the world and therefore they would not touch it. They said it was uneconomic and they would go broke trying to run it. Yet Air Canada kept them for 22 or 23 years; they were their real workhorses. Was this contented socialism at work, or is it a bad example of a contented management that was not prepared to scrap an aircraft and to use initiative? I really question the motivation of the management of that airline in regard to that particular decision.

Then instead of getting rid of the Viscounts earlier than they did, Air Canada bought a bigger Viscount, the Vanguard. They could not sell the Vanguards at all on the North American continent; they had to give them away, almost, to a country in Africa. The aircraft just could not compete economically. It was not a bad plane to fly in, but it just could not compete economically with other aircraft that were for sale. So the Vanguards had a very short life. They should never have been purchased in the first place; that was a colossal error. Here again, was this the action of a contented executive that was not prepared to look around or try a little harder?

These are some of the questions that arise when we examine air policy. Perhaps the regional air carriers should have a little larger share. According to an article not long ago in the Montreal Gazette, Mr. Pratte said, "We can do better", meaning that Air Canada can do better. I am glad he thinks so, because it is obvious to a lot of people that they should be doing better.

Then the government built the No. 2 air terminal at Toronto, and every member of the House of Commons has had a kick at this one. Most people consider it an inefficient terminal, difficult to manage and expensive to run. Again, was this government interference in the management of an airline which is government-owned but which should be run independently of government?

I think it is high time the officials of Air Canada and the CNR appeared before the transport committee of this House so the committee can examine their operations very carefully. Just recently Mr. Baldwin, one of the chief managers of Air Canada, took an early retirement. Was this the result of disagreement or disharmony within the executive of Air Canada? To me, his action was suspicious and requires examination.

There is one other point I want to make before closing. I return to the concept of socialism with which I started. It is high time we examined this concept, and for two reasons. We know that the present government is able to do things with the help of its partners on this side of the House. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his cabinet are able to do more with the present marriage in the House of Commons so far as socialism is concerned than they could prior to the marriage. The socialist transportation experts of the NDP say that the trouble with the CNR is its national debt. The national debt of the CNR is 2.2 per cent of its gross operating income.

[Mr. Horner (Crowfoot).]

● (2050)

I ask my friends to our left whether they would advocate that any corporation cannot give up 3 per cent of its gross income and not go broke, but can continue to operate with a profit. They are always talking about the large corporations making a big rip-off, but 3 or 4 per cent is peanuts to them. That does not bother a big corporation at all. Yet the members of the NDP try to say that the long outstanding debt of the CNR is the cause of the CNR's poor financial showing. It amounts to only 2.2 per cent. The CPR's interest on debt is greater than that. Those members must examine the whole problem a little further.

The CNR is very labour-intensive; labour plays a very prominent role. In his book "Canadian National Railroad History," G. R. Stevens suggests that almost $2 out of every $3 that the railroad earns is spent on labour. That gives us some idea of the prominent position that labour plays in the success story of the CNR.

During my remarks a while ago hon. members to my left were worried when I referred to Penn Central problems in the United States. They said the railroads in the United States do not have a public conscience. That party and the main support of that party, the unions, must also display a public conscience if they seriously want the CNR to come up with a better financial picture. Having said that, I will allow someone else to continue this debate. Before the debate closes or the bill is allowed to pass, surely we should have an explanation as to how CNR and Air Canada have been financed without a bill such as this, for three years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in participating in this debate I wish to say that a number of the questions put forward by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) are most pertinent. Many times I have a little difficulty agreeing with the hon. member's questions. Where I have my difficulty is dealing with the conclusions he draws from them. I think the hon. member for Crowfoot is one of the most knowledgeable members of this House of Commons on railway matters. In fact, I have so much confidence in his ability, knowledge and experience in this field that I nominated him as chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. Someone across the way says the committee was a disaster. I would not disagree with that too much.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rose: However, I would not suggest that the disaster can be laid completely at the feet of the hon. member for Crowfoot. One of the reasons for the disaster, if that term is to be applied to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, was the fact that the committee had very little work referred to it by this House precisely because an opposition member was chairman of the committee.

The hon. member for Crowfoot is knowledgeable. He is from western Canada where we have severe transportation problems. In fact, that was the motivation behind my nominating him as chairman of the transport committee. If it did not work out that way, we can blame the government or this parliament because the committee, in spite of the massive transportation problems we have in this country, had no work to do except examine some piddling little bills on which weeks were spent.

The committee did not have an opportunity to look at the CNR financing bill. It was never brought before it for debate. We are only on second reading of this bill. This is the first such bill we have had for 2½ years. The hon. member for Crowfoot asked the germane and crucial question, how have Air Canada and CNR been financed in the intervening months not covered by either previous legislation or this legislation? What are they doing—going into debt even further?

An hon. Member: You know that.

Mr. Rose: We do not know how they are being financed. We do not know why there was never an audit of the CNR financial statement. Because there was no audit, the annual report could not be referred to the committee for discussion. I said that I agree with a number of questions asked by the hon. member for Crowfoot, but I have a lot of difficulty with his conclusions. He spent a good deal of his time making what I felt to be a snide attack on the concept of socialism and socialistic thinking. He was very gentle about it, in contrast with his usual stand; he was most gentle about it tonight.

To back up his argument he used some quotations, out of context, from Mr. Gaibraith's magnificent book entitled "The New Industrial State". I read that book past page 2. What Mr. Galbraith was principally concerned about was the fact that the multicorporation, the private enterprise business corporation, was stronger than national governments. It was not that socialism had the upper hand, but the multicoporation, operating with massive capital in various countries, was going to be a threat to the national or sovereign governments of those countries. He was concerned about the fact that private enterprise, which has no democratic roots, was going to be stronger than freely elected governments.

The hon. member said—this amused me—that individuals, industries, concerns and enterprises paid out of the public purse lacked incentive and because of that were not efficient. He cited a number of examples which he used to explain why Air Canada and CNR might have had some problems. If that argument is going to be applied to those industries or crown corporations paid out of the public purse, it might as well be applied to the hon. member for Crowfoot. Outside of his cowboy business he is paid out of the public purse—and no one would want to suggest that the hon. member for Crowfoot lacks incentive.

An hon. Member: He lacks sense.

Mr. Rose: He may, but he does not lack incentive; he has a great deal of incentive. We should bear in mind which government nationalized the CNR. I can recall a conversation with that celebrated Canadian, ex-Premier W. A. C. Bennett. I was his neighbour in Kelowna. He used the CNR as an example of how the Conservatives were really the first socialists. I realize that this was not really an intervention in the form of toe-testing of the water of socialism for any particular reason in terms of public consciousness or concern, but rather to bail out their buccaneer friends who got in trouble with organizations like the Grand Trunk Railway. As the hon. member for Crowfoot says only 2 per cent of the CNR debt was needed to take care of Donald Gordon's diesels and so on which will be obsolete soon. We hear of electric trains being tested and so on.

● (2100)

So far as the hon. member for Crowfoot, and many members of his party are concerned, they do not want anything to do with crown corporations or public ownership in any form. As a matter of fact, they feel that all schools and hospitals should be private. I suppose we should go back to toll roads and toll bridges and perhaps the ferry service to Newfoundland should revert to private enterprise. Then, we could not bother the Minister of Transport if they were not working properly. These private enterprises would make fantastic profits. We would forget about the concept of linking our country together because all we would be concerned about would be the profit figures. Let us not forget this and get lost in all the mythology we hear from them, because unfortunately they formed the government for a number of years. Why did they not sell Air Canada and the CNR? They had the opportunity. Nobody would buy them. The only sucker who would take over that outfit was the government which did so in 1921 or 1922.

Mr. Speaker, the foregoing is known as the introduction to my speech or the pleasantries. I am about to get to the main body of my address. This will give some people an opportunity to get back to their correspondence and to their reading. Last Friday night, along with the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather), I attended a meeting of about 30 men in the municipality of Surrey. These men were railway workers. We listened for two and a half or three hours to a litany of complaints and concerns expressed by these men, many of whom had spent a lifetime working for the CNR. They were embittered. They were very lacking in any kind of morale. One might say they had a rather hopeless concept of what might be their future.

Today, in the House, I raised a question with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) as did the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta), the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) and the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave). These questions and replies indicated that the service of these railways, particularly the CNR, from Newfoundland to Vancouver Island was an absolute shambles. What is behind this absolute shambles of the CNR? What is the matter with that railway? Is it because it is a public corporation; is it because there is inept management; is it because there is constant government interference? Have we not been subsidizing the railways enough or have we been allowing them to use obsolete equipment such as the Vanguards and Viscounts which have been mentioned in respect of Air Canada?

Perhaps the reason is much deeper than that. Perhaps it is because secretly we wanted the Canadian National to fail so that our private railway could become more successful. I think that is an essential question we should be studying. Are we looking into the problems in the Committee on Transport and Communications? Of course not! Why not? Because the hon. member for Crowfoot is chairman of the committee. Because he is the chairman, the government refuses to send any kind of issue of importance to the committee.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. The member has referred to my chairmanship of the CNR—of the transportation committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): He suggested that because I have in some manner been less than diligent in chairing that committee, the government has refused to co-operate with it. That certainly has not been the case. I could not let that reflection upon the manner in which the chairman of the committee has carried out his duties pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I do not suppose the hon. member wishes me to make a ruling, but if I were to do so I suppose I would say that it was very improper for the hon. member to refer to himself as president of the CNR. However, this was accidental. I do not see any real point of privilege, but there could be a point for debate.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Crowfoot knows I would never question his diligence, his competence, his conscientiousness or anything else publicly.

As a result of the meeting with a number of men who have had up to 30 years experience with the railway, I think I can say with a good deal of sincerity that they want the railway to run successfully. I was a little disappointed to hear the hon. member for Crowfoot, at the conclusion of his address, suggest that the men also had a responsibility to see that the railway is successful, almost implying that somehow because of their lack of co-operation they were responsible for the problems associated with the railways. I think the situation is quite the reverse. I believe it is the errors of management which have caused the difficulty, and now management wants the men to bail it out and subsidize transportation by means of the payment of lousy wages.

We tried to correct that situation through a special debate and found that when the vote came there was a difference between 34 cents and 38 cents. We know how the Conservative Party voted. However, that was better by four cents than the Liberal Party proposed. I do not have any figures, because it is almost impossible to obtain a statement from Canadian National in terms of a cost accounting, certainly on a regional basis, but it has been suggested that because of problems in respect of transportation in the Vancouver area the CNR in that region has lost $3 million.

● (2110)

The Canadian Pacific Railway is working to overcapacity and Canadian National Railways are not able to deliver the goods. We are concerned about a shortage of boxcars for B.C. interior lumber and for prairie grain. Do you know where those boxcars are? They are on the sidings, loaded. There is no room in the Vancouver yards and they are stored in many small, out of the way places because they cannot unload the cars in Vancouver.

Management is blaming the rail strike for the delay. The cause is not the rail strike at all. The cause is the wages paid to the truckers which are so low, about $1 an hour below the prevailing rate, that fully one-third of the truckers who would unload the cars have resigned in the last four months. This is why they cannot unload those cars. The truckers went to work for private industry and private truck lines under a Teamsters Union contract which rewards them a good deal higher.

Where are the 200 cars we need so desperately in the interior of British Columbia? My answer is that they are sitting on the sidings, loaded. That may not be of any concern. In the last few months 90 switchmen or yardmen, experienced men who can achieve the productivity which we need, have resigned because of poor morale. I have a list of these experienced people and the number of years they have been on the job. If I had time I could read out their names and when they joined the company.

When you lose such people, how can there be high productivity? How can the company retain these experienced people if the working conditions and pension benefits are so poor? I will deal with that matter in a little while. I have another list of employees, machinists in the Vancouver port yard, 20 per cent of whom have quit their jobs in the last few months. They include machine apprentices. Also, 18 per cent of the electricians in the Vancouver port yard have quit. There are 40 carmen of whom 10 have quit, or 25 per cent, after a minimum of four years and a maximum of 15 years experience.

I asked today whether the standing committee on transport could go out to look at this one problem. Of course, there are many other problems. All you have to do is ask the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). We have had the Harbours Board problem and many other problems. We also have many benefits. Just living there is a benefit. But we must not forget the problems.

Four months ago I put forward a motion in the standing committee on transport that we appoint a travelling committee to go out to hear these concerns and complaints. We are still considering it. The minister did give us some hope. He said he will contact the CNR management and ask them for an explanation. I know what kind of an explanation he will get. No more than a week ago the CN management told the union representatives that nobody was quitting and that they really did not have any problems. Yet I have a list of the men who have quit. At least 100 of the approximately 400 men in the Vancouver yard have left the work force.

We have no money for the men, but we can pay the hotel expenses of management personnel, those snoops, those promoters and master mechanics, who come out of Edmonton, Regina, Moose Jaw and other places to supervise and spy on the men. Do you know what they are doing? They are working to rule. The rules are the uniform code of operating rules. If the men break those rules, they get demerits; but if the company breaks those rules they get profit, because the company is its own policeman. There is constant pressure and harassment of the men to break the rules to improve productivity. There are officials following the men around. They are just waiting for Chief Justice Emmett Hall's report and the Deutsch report, and I predict that if the reports are not favourable we will lose a lot more of them.

How can you increase productivity, have the boxcars unloaded, and provide boxcars in a boxcar-short country if there is that kind of low morale and lack of experienced people working in the yards? The philosophy outlined by the hon. member for Crowfoot is all very well, but these are practical problems that are bothering these people every day. They are resentful, bitter, and they are right; no one will get around that one. They also have other problems. They are in a minority in Canada. The railroad workers in British Columbia are in a minority among railroad workers in Canada. It is impossible for them to have any say in such unions as the IWA, the United Auto Workers, and perhaps the steel unions as well. It is impossible for them to gain their own autonomy, to gain control of their own union in Canada.

There are impediments in making any move under IRDI to get any kind of reasonable and meaningful Canadian autonomy in their union or even to influence their western chairman or national officers. They have to win a 25 per cent referendum among all the UTU workers or, in general, all the workers in both Canada and the United States, and they cannot even get the list of membership from the grand lodge. So what have they done? They have stopped paying their dues. They said to themselves that the only way in which they could get these people to listen to them was to hit them where it really hurts, which is in their pocketbooks. When they stopped paying their dues, CNR became worried because they have had a happy relationship with some of these rail unions. So the management said, "All right; if you do not pay your dues you do not get your seniority rights." So they will have to go back to paying their dues or they will lose the better jobs.

That is not all. The international office in Cleveland, Ohio—the international president, in fact—decided that some of these dues payers, or non-dues payers, are all in one locality and they should be disciplined. So they wrote the members of the CN local 1747 and the treasurer of CP local 442 and said that from then on all CN yardmen and yardmasters would be transferred to CP local 422. As if that was not enough, they said that none of the present officers on CN local 1747 would be permitted to seek office in the expanded CN-CP local 442 unless specifically approved by the Cleveland office. The officer who is in charge of CN local 1747 has never held back on his dues, yet because those two locals have been merged in a high-handed, bureaucratic and foreign manner he cannot even seek office.

I have outlined the litany of complaints against management. Here is their problem with their own union. So we see that they have a lot of trouble and no chance of winning any kind of change within 18 months because they are prevented from doing so by national legislation. Therefore they are fed up. That is why they are leaving, and that is why there is loss of productivity on the railroads. That is why they are embittered. They have agreed to work to rule and to withdraw their dues because they have no other way of fighting.

In addition, they have had an increase of only 34 cents in the last package, and we directed them back to work as if they were slave labour. The best estimate is that the men are subsidizing the CN by about $500 million a year in underpaid wages. In addition to that, CN has $900 million of the men's pension money. The board of directors has invested this matter. I do not think there are any CN men on the board of directors of the CN pension plan. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will certainly correct me if I am wrong on this, because he is our expert on pensions as well as on many other things. That money is invested at 8 per cent to 14 per cent interest by the CN pension board. But anything over a 3 per cent return to that fund reduces CNR's obligation. That is criminal and fraudulent. It is the men's money, $900 million, yet they have a niggardly pension.

• (2120)

The other day the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pleaded with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) to abase himself before the CNR pension directors so that the retired men can get a little bit more. All he got was a lecture about the work being done by Mr. John Deutsch. That indicates lack of understanding of the question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

People get extremely angry about this subject. The union officers in the western region can sign on behalf of the men for anything, and their contracts can be legal without any ratification of the members. That is not good enough. How on earth can you ever have any kind of morale, spirit, joie de vie or anything like that in such a situation? The whole thing stinks, and it is time we did something about it. That is why I am trying to do something about it now. I want to apply some pressure, if ever this little diatribe of mine gets out of this building, on the CNR management in Vancouver. Incidentally, I hear that a committee of parliamentarians is going out to Vancouver this weekend. Perhaps there is something that 60 or 80-member committee could do.

Much more could be said about the CNR. I do not know how long I have been speaking, perhaps for half an hour—

Mr. Paproski: Carry on.

Mr. Rose: The hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) is always pleased if I get up to throw a rounder at the unions. I don't blame him. I do not think they have the answers to everything. No one has. But there are things here that, as Canadian nationalists, we should be doing something about, and there are things we should be doing to satisfy these people's grievances.

For a few moments I would like to speak about the Air Canada situation, following the general line of the hon. member for Crowfoot. I am not going to discuss the technicalities of the archaic Viscounts and Vanguards. With respect to the reluctance, I suggest that maybe the management was a bit gun-shy when it came to a decision on spending money because it felt some parliamentarian would get up and say the public corporation was wasteful, or maybe management was just being thrifty; it may have been a bad decision by management. Mr. Speaker, if there were no bad management decisions, why would we need bankruptcy legislation? We need it to assist private corporations to bail themselves out when they make bad decisions. No company, private or public, has a monopoly on bad decisions or on good ones. Nevertheless, there is concern about Air Canada among some of the people I represent on the west coast.

In this connection I would like to read from a letter received from an Air Canada pilot. Naturally for reasons best known to myself, I would prefer to make him anonymous. I might say that I have had conversations with others who are a little concerned about the situation, especially people who live in the west. Here I am speaking not only of pilots but of the general cabin staff. This pilot is concerned that the "gravy runs" are not going to Air Canada. That is one of the reasons Air Canada's profit picture is not as bright as it might be. He suggests that when it comes to passing out new routes, whether to Milan or China, Air Canada is usually last in line. In fact, it could be argued that regional air carriers are getting good routes and are skimming off the profit. I am not making that statement in this context but I know it has happened in other fields. I know that the cable companies serving our cities get their profit by skimming the populous regions and not giving service where the population is scarce.

This pilot also says that aside from Air Canada being last in line when it comes to handing out the juicy routes, it is "a very eastern-oriented airline, as demonstrated in the latest aircraft and pilot assignment list." He enclosed that list. Obviously, 1974 is going to be a big expansion year for airlines. According to this list, 28 crews are to be added to Toronto and 28 or 29 crews to Montreal, bases which are just 400 or 500 miles apart. But in terms of expansion there is not one extra crew member going to Vancouver for the 1974 season.

Pilots with three or four years training can operate out of central Canada, if they care to live there; but people with that kind of experience can never become much above a first officer in western Canada. This is basically inequitable and unfair. I think the Toronto and Montreal bases tend to be favoured. Whether this is because representatives from those areas have more political clout than westerners, I do not know; but we do know there are 23 representatives from the city of Toronto and 27 from Montreal and we cannot match their voices in western Canada.

The pilot I have referred to writes:

> While countries like New Zealand and Australia ponder the right of CP Air flying into their countries, possibly Air Canada should have the door of the Orient open to them via the Vancouver airport. This leads us to wonder how and why the China run was ever awarded to CP in the first place. Using the reasoning that they already fly to the east is not valid. It might apply to a shipping company, but not an airline flying 550-mile an hour jets.

This and a number of things I have said this evening will indicate why we are not very pleased about seeing this Air Canada financing bill only from time to time. It is like the magicians' card trick—now you see it, now you don't. It is used as a sandwich-filler. If there is nothing more to talk about, let the boys whack away at it. I am sure the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) must say to himself, "Let the boys hammer away and get it out of their systems, as long as we do not have a debate that is too concentrated."

The government does not really care whether we deal with this bill or not. But in the meantime the CNR is losing 18 per cent of its work force, some 7,000 men, each year. As a result of recent attrition, 23 per cent of the CN work force have been on the job less than two years. There is no way in which we can increase productivity of this national railway and provide Canada with the services it needs if we have an inexperienced work force. Here we have a work force that is inadequately equipped, that is bitter and has low morale.

The new training scheme for engineers is an example of the frustration which is experienced. For the past three years I have been trying to get an answer from the regulatory body known as the CTC on the question of who is in charge of a train when a student is abroad with the engineer, along with a master mechanic. We cannot get that answer from the CTC. Mr. Speaker, you may recall that every winter we lose railroaders in the Fraser Canyon because of snowfalls. There is an example now of a man being charged because he refused to hand over the running of his train. He was the engineer, and the master mechanic ordered him to hand over to a student. He refused because it is not clear who would have been responsible had the train been involved in an accident while the student was at the controls. You would think that would be an easy thing to straighten out. Just call the CTC and get an answer: find out who is in charge of the train, the engineer or the master mechanic. But we cannot get an answer, Mr. Speaker, so these frustrations pile one upon the other. These molehills build up into mountains of dissatisfaction and are bound to have an effect upon the railroad.

● (2130)

If we put the two systems together we might find that we have a rationalized transportation system, half private and half public, and it might work to the advantage of the Canadian public. It is certainly not working to anybody's satisfaction, today.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, after the last two speakers it looks as if we might make the vote at a quarter to eleven by the time I get through, if things go as they normally do. It is no coincidence that we have the CN financing bill before us tonight at the same time as the fifth game of the world series. It seems to me that nobody wants to interfere with the world series, so it is a case of let's bring on the CN financing bill and maybe make a few frivolous remarks and pass a few jokes, then get on with more serious business tomorrow. Indeed, it seems that some members treat the occasion of the CN financing bill as an annual joke. When we speak we know that not much is going to come out of it. At least, that is the feeling I get this evening. Even the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has not thought it necessary to be here.

A couple of evenings ago I was in the company of some friends from western Canada and one was asking, "Where is my wandering bull tonight?" I am wondering where the Minister of Transport is tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: He should be here taking part in the CN financing bill. I wonder if the government is trying to switch the ministers around again. They got into all kinds of trouble when they had the Minister of Transport and the minister of DREE occupying their previous roles, so they were switched. I do not know what is happening now, but transportation is becoming a colossal joke in the House of Commons day after day. We see evidence of this every day with the Minister of Transport.

A few weeks ago when the strike was on I saw a clip on one of the national television programs. I believe Norman DePoe was doing the voice-over. It was bits of an old film about the original railroading days. It gave me a feeling of nostalgia and identification with the railwaymen, and a remembrance of the old cowboy movies and the part the railwaymen played in them. Do hon. members remember the sounds and the music of that era? Even today you can turn on the radio and hear Johnny Cash or the blues singers with their beautiful railway songs about the times when people were building something. People across the nation were opening up our frontiers, allowing the country to grow and develop.

Today one TV commercial talks about building "the Canadian dream". Mr. Speaker, if you say that and were from some other country, you might believe it. You might believe they are building the great Canadian dream, seeing the prosperity and involvement across the nation, with CP and CN building that dream. I would like some of the people who get hundreds of thousands of dollars for such advertising to go to some parts of Canada that have made the headlines, and see the extent of this great Canadian dream. I think we are going to get a revival of the blues for a different reason—people are going to mourn the passing of the great transportation days. The blues singers are now singing the blues about what is happening today. When we talk about transportation, we talk about the future of our country, Mr. Speaker. I doubt if an industrial nation has ever grown to greatness without a transportation system that was modern in that day and age.

At a meeting of the Atlantic Advisory Council last week the chairman said something to the effect that the transportation system in the Atlantic provinces in no way impedes the economic growth of that area. I can speak with some knowledge of the Atlantic area, Mr. Speaker, and I say we cannot reach any great level of economic growth unless we take issue with the present transportation system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: I have listened to members from the Prairies and British Columbia speak, and it seems to be the consensus that we are wasting our time with all our talk about economic policies and DREE programs unless we are willing to provide the country with a modern transportation system. I believe it was in 1885 that the last spike was driven in the national railway. Mr. Speaker, almost a century ago we had a national transportation system, a brand new system. It had taken the imagination of our greatest leaders of various political stripes decades to put it into effect in face of the financial difficulties, scandals and political upheaval that surrounded it.

Imagine the railwaymen of that day. The railwayman's cap is to me a symbol of the workingman and the growth of industrial development. These people put together a system that must have been a hundred years ahead of what we have today, in terms of the comparative economic needs of the country. We hear talk of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, their industrial incentive programs and loans programs, but we hear nothing about transportation except that a province is willing to negotiate an extra bit of blacktop somewhere on a road in an Atlantic province. Our transportation system is archaic compared to conditions of a decade ago. If I may be forgiven for being a little parochial, I will tell hon. members something of our own transportation today compared to ten years ago or longer. I would like to get this on the record and in some small way try to tell the Canadian people of a problem we have. I do not think it is unique, but it is an indication of the seriousness of our transportation problem.

● (2140)

In 1949 we became part of Canada. Under term 32 of the Terms of Union we concluded an agreement with the federal government which was signed by our Fathers of Confederation who certainly could not look forward many generations. Nor can anybody look ahead, today, to the future with any great certainty. But in that day and age they realized transportation should remain some kind of government responsibility and they placed in the act, under term 32, a provision that Canada should provide a link between mainland Canada and the island part, the province of Newfoundland, and arrange for the existence of a transportation system carrying goods and services commensurate with the needs of the province.

This was spelling out in the Terms of Union between Newfoundland and Canada, the marriage contract, if you want to call it that, in 1949. In that day and age we did not depend very much on a modern transportation system. We were more involved in coastal trade because we had literally hundreds of our own freighters, schooners and other ships which used to provide us with goods from Europe, the Caribbean, the New England states and even from that foreign country which was called Canada. But we did have a fairly adequate transportation system. As a result of our entry into confederation we got a "Go" ferry operation which provided a link over 100 miles of water from North Sydney to Port aux Basques. Today, in 1973, we are almost totally dependent on outside sources for all the goods which are needed to serve 500,000 Canadians on the east coast of this country. I should like mainland Canadians to recognize this.

If we were arguing in support of a transportation system to ship goods in from Japan or some other foreign country, I would expect some Canadians to get their backs up. But today we are almost totally dependent as a province on goods shipped from central Canada. We are the most captive of all the parts of Canada in terms of consumer demand. We are virtually non self-supporting in all areas of consumer goods. We are an exporting province. We export a variety of raw resources. We export a large amount of mineral resources, mainly from Labrador and some from the island part of the province, and a tremendous quantity of fish products which go mainly to places in the United States. We are beginning to export a variety of wood products, paper from both the east and west coasts, and linerboard which, by the way, is going to Montreal now and serving the needs of some of the strike-ridden parts of Quebec.

We are an exporter of raw resources to other parts of Canada and North America. We are an importer of every type of consumer goods. We get up in the morning, and all the dishes we have come from Ontario; the knives and forks come from Ontario. The stoves we use come from somewhere in Ontario or Quebec, or some other part of this industrial nation of ours. We go to bed in the evening, and all our bedclothes, the bed, television set and furniture come from central Canada. Everything we have in our provinces is imported. We are a captive market, and our imports from mainland Canada over the last ten years have about doubled. I calculated a few weeks ago that we have in the last 12 months increased our imports from central Canada by about 15 per cent.

We have a transportation system today which is grossly inferior to what we had in 1969. First of all, in 1969 we had a passenger service which ran across the whole of the 580 miles of the island. At that time the minister of transport was Jack Pickersgill who used to be the member for the riding I now represent. He afterward became the czar of transport as chairman of the transportation commission. I have admiration for him as a parliamentarian, but I lost a great deal of respect for him as a result of transportation decisions which he made.

The CNR, under the calculated guidance of the minister, cooked the books in such a manner as to enable Canadian National to argue that the rail transport service was a non-paying venture—as if it was a paying venture anywhere in Canada. The end result was that they abandoned the rail passenger service and gave us a bus system. Every time I talk about the bus system I am reminded of an old colleague of mine with whom I had a bite to eat about a week ago, the former member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, Mr. Ambrose Peddle, who sat in this House and made a tremendous plea. I would call him the father of the effort to get back a rail system when he spoke out in almost his first speech against the decision of Canadian National to abandon this service. We did everything in our power, next to short-circuiting the whole activity of parliament, to get that system back. But we lost.

The CN had decided, with all the inside track it had with the Canadian Transport Commission, that the service was going, and it went. I can remember rolling a barrel full of signatures collected from 31,000 Newfoundland people—the biggest petition ever taken up in Canada—protesting the abandonment of the rail passenger service. The petition could not be presented to the House because the rules provide that petitions must be presented in such a magnificent fashion, under such formal conditions, that it is not feasible to do so. So what we did was to present a token petition to symbolize the 31,000 petitioners who protested the abandonment of the service. And we still lost, because CN decided that we were not going to get any rail passenger service in the future.

[Mr. Lundrigan.]

I have perhaps put my finger on one of the most significant aspects of the matter we are discussing today. Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that we in this chamber have any control over the transportation system in this country? Do you think that even the Minister of Transport is able to exercise any control? So we get ourselves a big department of government. Most of us haven't enough ability to run the average office. I find myself struggling from day to day to keep two people functioning efficiently, let alone manage a department of government. Yet a minister takes office; and if he is in office for 25 years he might know about railway operations as much as an experienced railway worker, let alone the manager of the corporation. Consequently, this being only one of a minister's responsibilities, he is bamboozled into believing whatever he happens to be fed.

I found myself during the last few days trying to get some kind of responsible reaction from the Minister of Transport. But he is so defensive of CN you would think his grandfather owned it. He stands up in the House of Commons and loses his temper. Have you seen him? We had a little Pekingese one time. He would bite your legs off if you looked at him the wrong way. That is what the Minister of Transport reminds me of. When you ask him about the CN you would think you were asking about his closest relative. This is as a result of what they are feeding him. I remember last Thursday. By the way, I have been the best dispatcher the CNR has had for some time. In the last six or seven weeks I have been involved in trying to route a carload of goods out of North Sydney over to Newfoundland. I think there would have been almost an economic standstill on the northeast coast of our province if I had not become a CN dispatcher. The only thing is, I didn't get paid for it.

Last week a businessman phoned me and said, "We have a hotel ready to move into. Our move has been delayed for over a month. Is there any way you can put a spark under the rear ends of CN people to move a carload of freight for us?" I phoned and I said, "Boys, can you move this carload?" And they moved it. They phoned the minister immediately and he said, "Look, if he ever throws anything at you, just tell him that the only thing he has ever had moved, or the thing that he classifies as an emergency, is a load of furniture." This is what is surprising to me—that the communication I had with the North Sydney agent got up to the Minister of Transport to the point at which he was to be armed with his defences—"You moved a carload of furniture". He also had the statistics on the number of backlogged cars in North Sydney a year ago.

This is the way they have armed him, and instead of saying to those fellows, "Look, you bunch of beggars and you deceitful fellows who are trying to sell me this line of goods, we want something done about it," he stands up and tries to protect the Canadian National Railways. I would like to see people in other countries like Japan, which has one of the most modern transportation systems in the world, especially the monorail system, and even England, which has a railway system which would put us to shame, come in and analyse what we have got going in this country of ours. I think that even Newfie jokes would have nothing on that. These people would laugh at us for weeks; indeed, it might almost stop the war.

● (2150)

We are not able to handle goods and services adequately with the present transportation system in the Atlantic provinces. We are not able to develop economically as we would like. Yet in this part of Canada there is one of the highest unemployment rates in the western world, and this has been so since day one, 1867. You would think that one government at least would have the imagination and vision to recognize that lack of economic growth is the reason for our high unemployment rate. This is why the government should harness a program that would not only give us the transportation facilities we need but would in the process help us overcome our unemployment difficulties within five or ten years.

I just want to set the record straight on a few things, Mr. Speaker. I am disappointed that the Minister of Transport has not had the decency tonight to be here and take part in this debate, placing on record the argument for CN. He is the spokesman in this House for CN and his absence is a disappointment to every member of the House. Ten years ago CNR guaranteed three-day delivery of express goods from points in Toronto and Quebec to Newfoundland. I know this is a frivolous subject to the sophisticated members from the large centres of Canada. One of the problems in this House is that we have now become such a great nation that divergent parts of the country are almost like ruptured appendices: they should be cut out.

I have gone off at a tangent and I will get back to my point, but first let me say there does not seem to be any responsiveness on the part of the federal government to the different needs of the regions of this country. If there is a problem in a major area with a large population which would have a tremendous effect on the political fortunes of a particular party, then the attention paid to that problem is magnificent. But if the member from the Yukon raises a problem, or there is a problem in the riding of Skeena, in Prince Rupert, in the Athabasca area, in Timiskaming or in some other part of northern Ontario—it almost seems to be out of order these days to talk about northern Ontario—then the situation is entirely different. One almost hears a groan from the House these days when northern Ontario is mentioned. There are only four members from P.E.I.—and do they have a real voice in this House?

I have talked about problems till I am black and blue in the face. I am getting completely frustrated and so are the people I represent. I see the Minister of Transport making a momentary appearance for 60 seconds. He will be back again in a moment because I see he has his notes all ready, prepared for him by Mr. MacMillan of Montreal, no doubt.

I am concerned that the problems of my region are not being properly received or transmitted. I am sure that in the last five years the seven members from the province I represent have had their say in this House; I am convinced of that. I am convinced they have told their stories about our problems. But I am equally convinced that there has not been much reception of those problems. Unless there is a better way in this federal system for the government to recognize the legitimacy of what we say, then I do not feel like tearing around the countryside in my eagerness to be a Canadian.

Canadian National Railways and Air Canada

Recently a little strike took place. As a Canadian, I was embarrassed to see the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) get up in the House and try to say the reason for the strike was that the workers would not move our goods. Even Newfoundlanders can go on strike, he said. No one bothered to tell him that at no time was there any agreement during the strike to move goods across 100 miles of water. Unfortunately there was an agreement with regard to passenger service, but because of some upheavel that agreement was broken and as a result personal hardship was caused. But there was no agreement to move freight. Along with the Premier of P.E.I. we argued constantly that the federal government had an over-riding responsibility, under the constitution, to see that goods were able to move between the provinces of Canada. As a result of a three-week strike there will be a backlog of freight until the spring of 1974.

I know it is a waste of time talking about this. I am not saying it is the media's fault, but I am sick and tired of going outside this House and finding a cubbyhole to talk into the tape machines they have about this problem. For one reason or another the government will not recognize that we do have a second-class system, one that is worse than the system we had 50 years ago. Then today the minister had the absolute gall to say that if there is an emergency he will make some special effort. He does not recognize the fact that goods have been tied up in our transportation system since September 3, six weeks ago, which in itself is an emergency.

I can tell hundreds of stories concerning the impact that the transportation system of this country has had on the economy of our coast in the last number of years. It got to the point last year where one small businessman who had been receiving fresh goods shipped in from Toronto found they were arriving so late so frequently that the shipper decided not to ship to Newfoundland any more. The only compensation he was offered was that CN or Air Canada agreed to pay if the goods were spoiled. But we have to wait so long for our money that these goods are now shipped south of the border where the market is just as good.

Ten years ago, in 1962 or 1963, we were guaranteed three-day delivery of goods sent express to Newfoundland from central Canada. Today the minimum time express goods from central Canada take to get to Newfoundland is ten days. I have been told by people on the firing-line, people right in the sheds who receive the freight, that they are lucky to get it under two weeks; usually it takes much longer than that. That is the quality of the service we get.

I am disappointed that "his nibs" was not in the House earlier to hear some of the complaints that we have brought to his attention as the eminent Minister of Transport. We are not standing up in this House because we like to hear ourselves talk; we have legitimate complaints to make about the quality of CN service. Instead of attacking members of parliament who say they have a problem, why does not the Minister of Transport call some of the fellows in charge of this great national system into his office and start asking them some questions?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It sounds like playing games.

Mr. Lundrigan: They are playing a political game. If we had not kicked up the fuss we did, we would have 1,500 cars in North Sydney today. Can you imagine CN officials saying to the Minister of Transport that they want a special effort made because they are not moving the freight fast enough? September 19 was the day the minister told us to learn to swim, and since then I have been taking swimming lessons every day. He said the backlog would be moved in two weeks. That was on September 19. Today is October 18, one month later. There are exactly the same number of cars today in North Sydney. Cars are sitting in the Moncton system.

● (2200)

Hon. members may be interested in knowing what happens to goods leaving Toronto or Montreal destined for the Atlantic region. The Atlantic region is able to accommodate only so many cars. The first delay is in Montreal. The cars then go to Moncton, where they are again delayed. That is the second stage of delivery. I have been told by businessmen that cars have been sitting in Moncton since September 3. They eventually move to Truro and then to North Sydney. Halifax is another terminal point. After that, someone eventually recognizes the problem and they get to Port aux Basques, a western terminal, then on to the southern centres of distribution.

No matter what is done with the existing boats and existing facilities, there is practically no way of improving the transportation system into our province. That is a fact. The only thing that could be done in the short haul, and this could not last very long, would be to keep it at the level it is now, with a backlog of 500 or 600 cars. If 10 or 12 Hercules aircraft were put into operation for a couple of weeks, we might be able to move the non-essentials. They are non-essential in the sense that people will not starve if they are not moved, but they are essential because people demand and need the service. Also, many things are important for our economic growth. This would clear up the problem in the short haul.

Some fairly major decisions will have to be made with regard to the province I represent. More ports will have to be opened. Some will have to be winter ports such as there are on the south coast, perhaps at Bay d'Espoir. Others will have to be built on the east coast. There is a harbour facility which was hardly completed when the government took out Clarke Steamships. Clarke Steamships was receiving a subsidy which was taken away three years ago. There are multimillion-dollar storage facilities there, with nothing moving through them because neither this minister nor anyone else is willing to go there and find out what is the problem unless people like myself take up the time of the House to bring it to the attention of the minister. Tomorrow there will be 15 people from CNR feeding the minister junk and garbage about the quality of service they are providing. Sometimes I do not blame him for accepting that. As I have said before, he is one man, with a big department.

If the minister would recognize the urgency of what we are saying, I would be very happy. Some major changes have to be made if our province is going to survive as an economic entity in Canada. For the past five years CN have let the whole thing slide. It has become one big mess. No one bothers about it too much unless there is a real logjam like there is at the present time. That is why we are in this House every day, crying about the problem. We will be here every day until someone does something about it. I cannot wait to get my teeth into some of those CNR fellows when they appear before our committee to explain the mess on the east coast today.

I am very serious when I say that our people are becoming extremely frustrated. The situation is becoming almost contradictory. We should be, and have been, the most exuberant Canadians in this nation. We have the spark and fire of Canadianism throughout our whole province. However, we are getting to the point where we feel ours is a voice in the wilderness. No one listens to us and, even more important, nobody gives a damn. I hope the minister will consider our economic problems and look into the serious backlog that will take until the spring of 1974 to clear up. If we were a powerful part of the country with 50 or 60 members, we could handle ourselves easily. We would defeat this government and get in somebody else. If they did not handle our problem, we would get rid of them as well.

We have the most problems and the least amount of power. Our problems are almost boring because they affect so few people. It is like someone talking about the Indian problem or problems in the Yukon. People are bored because it affects too few people. Because of psychological irritants, some patients end up going batty. It is these little things that are causing a tremendous amount of damage to the fabric of confederation.

My time is almost up. I want to say something which I have thought about for some time. What would happen to some central Canada industries if we were not a market for them? What would happen if we could negotiate our own trade deals with the European Economic Community and other parts of the world? What if we had our own currency and controlled our imports? I wonder how much would be lost to central Canada. I suppose no one has ever done the research to find out the impact that 500,000 people have on the market. What would happen if this market were lost to central Canada? What would happen in Oshawa? Cars stream into Newfoundland every day. What would it do to the employment situation in that part of Ontario? I do not know how much 500,000 people consume in food and material goods, but obviously this is a fairly important factor.

Every now and again we hear about equalization payments. Some members from Ontario get their backs up. It is as though we are the welfare part of the country. One fine day they will recognize the value of our great untapped resources, minerals and oil, to the economic security of North America. Perhaps then the mentality will change. In the interim, it might be wise for the government to have a bit of vision. We do not see this in governments today. Governments do not think a decade or two ahead. Most think about and react to yesterday's problems.

Has anyone ever given serious consideration to some form of subsidized freight rates in order that we may buy a car or other goods at the price they are being sold for in central Canada? Is this what Premier Lougheed talked about at the recent western economic conference? He talked about the need for major changes in transportation costs to points divergent from central Canada. Not only do we buy our goods from Ontario, such as cars from Oshawa and washing machines from Toronto, but we have to pay substantially higher prices because of the freight costs involved. We are thankful that we can provide jobs, but we feel freight rates should be equalized so that goods cost the same in one part of the country as in another.

This is a big country, 5,000 miles wide and thousands of miles from north to south. Something should be done about our transportation system so that people in all parts of the country will feel they are part of Canada. At present, this is a real disadvantage. On the northeast coast of Canada, the north shore and possibly northern Ontario, people feel they have to pay a price for being part of confederation, without receiving the benefits.

● (2210)

I know I am wasting my breath in speaking to the minister along these lines. If he would even solve the problem of the backlog in North Sydney he would feel as good as Napoleon did after his escape from Elba. That would be an achievement for him. I do not expect him to become involved in the matter of monorails and cross-subsidies, because that would be an exceptional challenge. But he might keep this matter in the back of his mind, and some day when we stand and ask a question about the backlog, he might recognize it is legitimate and start talking to the big guns in Montreal who manage the great system of CN and are building this great dream for us in Canada.

Why does he not call them all in, put his finger in their mid-sections and say he is not satisfied? Why does he not look at the legislation to see whether he can pull a few strings in respect of these people? He must have some control. I get the impression that in talking about the railway we are talking about some little prince in the wilderness over whom no one has control. I should like to think that this spirited minister from Quebec, for whom I have great respect, would manifest some of that spirit when dealing with the great monopoly called Canadian National Railways and drag these people into his office and lay his cards on the table, so that some day he would be able to come here and tell us that these things will be done. I can tell him that if he did this we would have much more respect for him as the spokesman for Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I did so many times.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-164 contains some recommendations regarding the state-owned corporations, the CNR and Air Canada, and when you study those recommendations you find that they are a bottomless pit able to swallow up any amount of money. We are given a forecast of possible expenditures between now and June or July 1974, but it is added that Parliament may be asked to vote additional moneys should those state-owned corporations be unable to finance themselves through their operating revenues. I would like to quote the following recommendations:

His Excellency the Governor General has recommended . . .

Canadian National Railways and Air Canada

. . . to extend the limit of refunding under the Canadian National Railway Refunding Act, 1955, to one billion dollars; to authorize Her Majesty to make loans to the Canadian National Railway Company and Air Canada to meet deficiencies in operating revenues to June, 1974 . . .

This means that should the amount now being requested, namely $669 million for the two State-owned corporations, be inadequate for their operations, we are empowered to vote additional amounts to meet the requirements. And I quote further:

. . . any such loans to be repaid from revenues of the Railway Company and Air Canada or, if revenues prove insufficient . . .

When the 669 million have been eaten up . . .

. . . if revenues prove insufficient by subsequent deficit appropriation by Parliament.

This means that there are no limits. Therefore, if it is considered that there are no limits, then why give the figure of $669 million?

However, we are asking Parliament to standardize freight-rates throughout Canada so that western people do not have to pay more than the eastern Canadians for transportation from one area to another within Canada. If it costs a little more, what can the minister say for himself?—We have the power to vote supplementary credits! There is nothing to prevent us from doing it, but let us let justice prevail in all areas of the economy with respect to freight rates in Canada. That would solve the problem concerning the famous feed grains we wish to carry from west to east, that would solve the transportation problem from the east to central Canada as far as fish is concerned. Even if the minister said: We need $225,500,000 for extension and improvement purposes, etc. Out of that amount, $75,000 are allocated to new construction. I refer here to branch lines, etc. In clause 3 the government gives the estimated amounts for 1973 and I quote:

Road property	$138,978,000.10

Those 10 cents are important.

Branch lines	13,000,000
Equipment	31,897,000
Telecommunications	25,946,000
Hotels	5,679,000
CN Tower Limited	8,800,000.15

As far as hotels are concerned, they have precious little to do with transport: Parliament is asked to vote $14 million to complete what is connected with hotels in Canada.

● (2220)

We are no longer dealing with the CNR or Air Canada but, after consideration of the government we must still compete with private entreprise and with the hotel trade in general. Thus, with respect to transport by the CNR or Air Canada, we are asked to vote such fabulous estimates to compete with private entreprise which is faced with increases in prices, taxes and cost of materials. Mr. Speaker, the bill now under consideration is an impediment to private entreprise. It is not honest competition.

Those who must buy trucks worth $40,000 or $50,000 to pull trailers have seen the price of their licence plates triple in the past seven or eight years; diesel oil now costs about twice as much as it did five years ago. The carriers must incur cost increases, while they have no other income than the freight or transport rates they charge in their business. In addition, they must balance their budget and also pay fantastic amounts in income tax to the federal government which introduces a bill designed to compete instead of walking on one's feet, I wonder what it is, if not an unfair competition for private enterprise in the field of transportation.

As regards the services provided by these means of transportation, we have been asking for years that more suitable trains be put into operation between Ottawa and Montreal, Montreal and Quebec City, Montreal and Toronto, that the Trans-Canada, for instance, which runs between Halifax and Vancouver, be improved. Mr. Speaker, there is room for improvement and I feel that we should not be satisfied to provide hundreds of millions, even almost $1 billion a year at present, to enable them to pursue their unfair operations as regards private enterprise. This is where politics comes in, of course. Whether you call it the Canadian Transport Commission, with its control over the Department of Transport, those state-owned corporations have too many employees compared to private enterprise. Employment security is given as a pretext! Employment security paid by the Canadian people, no way! When there are too many employees in an area, they should be allowed to go and work somewhere else. It is simple as that. Mr. Speaker, one cannot always try to make his way through the economic conditions that prevail in crown corporations. Where there is one man employed in private enterprise, there are five in a crown corporation, in an attempt to secure votes for the next election. It has reached such a point that people must wear steel-tipped shoes so that their toes are not crushed when they tread upon one another's feet. We do not have anything against employment but this is an undertaking that is not economic, and the proof of this is that we are asked $100 millions every time to make up deficits. Moreover, they meddle in almost every field, including the hotel trade.

Mr. Speaker, the Creditists want better railway services across Canada. Let Parliament not only pass votes. For example, some say that useless expenditures are made. I will merely give you an example. Air Canada has three daily northbound flights: two Viscounts fly during the day and at night a DC-8 leaves Montreal flying directly to Val d'Or and then Rouyn. There, the aircraft empties and passengers embark for Montreal at 8:55 p.m. That is flight 553. It leaves Rouyn, stops again at Val d'Or and then flies to Montreal. When one knows that the take-off is the major cost element in a flight why does Air Canada not schedule a flight that would go directly to Val d'Or letting off passengers at that point and flying back to Montreal with new passengers. The Rouyn-Montreal flight would be shortened by at least three quarters of an hour and the corporation would save thousands of dollars.

Air Canada tells me that the Rouyn runway might not be long enough for a full plane. I talked to the Minister of Transport but he says that the runway is long enough. The pilot up in the air tells me that the runway might be a bit too short. I ask that that runway be extended, and I am told that there is no money available. It would cost less to extend the landing strip in Rouyn then it would to make the repeated stops at Val d'Or, Rouyn, Montreal, Val d'Or, Rouyn, and Montreal. That is the kind of economy practised by Crown corporations.

Quebecair serves Val d'Or and that company makes money. Air Canada and the CNR make deficits. They are asked to improve their service in our areas. The CNR complains that people no longer use its trains to go to Quebec City or Montreal. Mr. Speaker, let them come with me on the CNR in the North and it is clear that they would not do it again. Only one trip would suffice. In fact, the service is not improving. There is the whole staff, all the employees who are travelling from Noranda to either Quebec City or Montreal. The train is divided first in Senneterre, and then in Hervey-Junction. One part of the train proceeds towards Montreal, while the other goes to Quebec City. The cars are almost empty, except for lumberjacks in the Clova area, but there are hardly any at all now.

Still, there is the transport of wood supplies towards either Montreal or Quebec City. Mr. Speaker, if the passenger service were better, the CNR would operate at a profit in these areas.

As for freight, the CN operates at profit. This is perhaps one of the most profitable activities of this Crown corporation in the field of lumber or mineral ore transportation from the North West. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) is not aware of that and neither is the Canadian Transport Commission. And that Crown corporation, the CN, does not realize the possibilities—in that area, especially with the James Bay development which will last for more than 3 years. It may be a matter of 15, 20 or 25 years considering the new mines which will be discovered in that area. The CN might do well to get off the pot and ensure that their services improve rather than content themselves with asking for votes—to pay their good-for-nothing people or make up for their deficits due to poor management. To ask that votes be passed to improve services would be more encouraging.

I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that these Crown corporations should not be used to compete unfairly with private trucking enterprise, which is a viable and a worthwhile industry. Because it is that, it is made to compete against an unfair rival which depends on moneys voted by Parliament.

Every year, the same thing happens. I have been here for 15 years and every year we are asked to make up the CNR and Air Canada deficits yet we hear my socialist friends attack the Canadian Pacific and CP Air because these two concerns are making profits.

Private enterprise carries on a profitable business while the Crown corporation registers deficits. And yet, we are not convinced. Rather than say: Let us improve the Canadian National services, we say: Nationalize the Canadian Pacific to make it like the Canadian National.

For our part, we say: Either abandon the Canadian National or force it to continue its operations in the same manner as the Canadian Pacific. Then, we shall have fewer budget allowances to vote and we shall not have to support the insatiable spenders that government corporations are.

Mr. Speaker, enough is enough and I sincerely believe that there are abuses as concerns the expenditures of government corporations such as Air Canada and the Canadian National. I think that the time has come for the government to accept its responsibilities and protect private initiative and enterprise in Canada.

It is not by giving billions of dollars to deficit ridden corporations that we shall promote the normal development of a country like ours. We often hear complaints such as those expressed a while ago by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan). He speaks of Newfoundland and says that it is a new Canadian province and that Newfoundland alone is different from other provinces. The same thing is said about other areas.

In western Manitoba and Quebec, you can hear the same complaints. Things will continue to go badly as long as we do not have a uniform policy for all Canada, including Newfoundland and British Columbia, and as long as we do not realize that when you step on the tail of the dog owned by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate, the same dog barks in Vancouver.

Do you understand? This means an equal and uniform policy, one that is beneficial to all Canadians, and that is what the Creditists wish with all their hearts for Canada.

● (2230)

[English]

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I was very happy to hear the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) indicate to this House that men were leaving the CNR to work for private truckers because private truckers manage their businesses well, as private enterprise can, and provide better working conditions and pay. I hope this indicates that the the NDP are finally seeing the light and realize that some of the management techniques of public ownership are not very good and the working people of this country would be far better off if they did not have to put up with some of the things that happen in the public management of business. I was also happy to hear the hon. member for Fraser Valley West talk about American control of unions and control of pension funds, and to hear him criticize the unions. That was a refreshing theme to hear from the NDP who so often seem to be under the thumb of the unions. In our debate of just a month ago in settling the railway dispute, that party did everything possible to prevent the settlement of the dispute by voting against the bill and against the amendments produced by this party.

To give some further information and light with respect to the pension fund held by the CNR, I want to tell the House that in the financial statement of the Canadian National Railways the total amount of reserves in the pension fund as of December 31, 1972, was $1,454 million, a considerably larger amount than indicated by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West. Further concerning pensions, I note that in 1971, while $261,800,000 was put into the pension fund only $75 million was paid out to workmen who are retired or have otherwise left the CNR. Clearly, the pension fund is growing like a monster, and clearly retired workmen are entitled to something better. I hope the investigation by John Deutsch will show that this kind of money should not lie dead and that men who contribute should get a decent pension.

Canadian National Railways and Air Canada

This bill, which is of a similar nature to those produced by ministers of finance in the past, permits more money to come from the public till to Canadian National Railways and to Air Canada. In analysing the need for money, I think it is high time we said something about what appears in the balance sheets of the CNR and Air Canada. For a moment I would like to deal with those balance sheets and put on record some of the financial facts as they really are. They are pretty hard to find in the balance sheets, but let us see what we can do.

Before I do that, however, I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when I was a young fellow going to high school and eventually to university, they kept telling me it was no wonder the CNR kept losing money. After all, it had to take over all these bankrupt railway lines, bail out these foreign capitalists and take over all this property that wasn't worth a darn. They had to run horrid transportation lines through uneconomic areas, through towns that were not "making it," and areas that were no good for agriculture, mining or anything else. My investigations show that that is not so.

We all have had something to do with real estate. Just look around at some of the real estate held by the CNR, real estate in downtown Toronto, not cheap real estate but about the most expensive you can possibly buy. Mr. Speaker, the debt of the CNR is more than covered, many times more than paid off in the inflated values given to the CNR in the enormous properties they hold in every city in Canada in downtown locations. There is absolutely no reason, if those assets were used properly, why the corporation should have any debt at all.

Let us get into the debt factor. From the CNR's financial statement we find that the corporation has gross assets with a book value—remember, the land we are talking about did not cost a dollar in many cases and the rights of way were given them free; a great amount of the property they have is totally depreciated and was written off long ago—of $4.2 billion and it owes approximately $1.9 billion. You can say that that is a lot of debt. It is a lot of debt. But of that $1.9 billion, $1.1 billion is owed to the government of Canada and much of it on terms that bear no interest whatsoever. So when we talk about the real debt of the CNR, it is about $800 million and the highest interest rate paid on that debt to the public market—that is the only real debt there is, the public market debt—is 5¾ per cent per annum. Any other debt of the CNR, if interest is paid on it at all, is paid into the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, as I say, at rates that bear no relevance to the cost of money. Having analysed that, we find that the interest paid on this $1.9 billion debt was only $66 million.

Let us go on to the next question. Look at the revenue of this national railway. I am rounding the figures off because there is no point in filling Hansard with long, detailed figures. We find from the financial statement that the CNR took in gross revenue, from its operations last year, $1.4 billion. As was pointed out by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), the debt charges, compared with the gross income of the corporation, for the year ending December 31, 1972, were 2.1 per cent of the gross revenues. Any corporation can certainly afford to carry that small debt factor.

But what does the CNR do? What do these directors do with their fancy annual balance? They produce a table and show that if they did not have to pay any interest, they would make a profit. And what interest do they have to pay? They pay $66 million in interest, and they say that is why they lost $17 million. They did $1.4 billion worth of business. Their debt and their interest costs represent only 2.1 per cent of their total revenues, and they cook their balance sheet to show that that crushing debt is hurting them.

● (2240)

When analysing the situation, Mr. Speaker, I think we should look at the balance sheet of that other railroad in Canada which for some strange reason always makes a very good profit. I went to the library and got the balance sheet of the CPR for the year ending December 31, 1972, and found that it had a gross revenue in that year of $709 million—half the gross revenue of the CNR—and it had a debt of $267 million on which it paid interest of roughly $25 million. The debt ratio to the gross business done by the CPR was not 2.1 per cent of the gross but 2.8 per cent. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the CPR did not complain about the fact that it had to pay interest. It showed a profit. The cost of money borrowed by the CPR was 2.8 per cent of the gross revenue, but the cost of money borrowed by the CNR was 2.1 per cent of its gross revenue. That clearly indicates to me, as it should to every member of this House, that it is not the debt that causes the problem in the CNR but is, perhaps, inept management. The CPR, paying a greater share of its gross revenue to service the interest on its funded debt, makes a profit; and the CNR, which ever since I can remember has been screaming about the horrid cost of its debt, has only 2.1 per cent of its gross revenue going to service its debt.

In making this interesting comparison between the private railroad and the public railroad regarding profit and revenues and other business aspects, I found it is very difficult to discover the right figures because of the way the companies set up their balance sheets. Some adding and subtracting is necessary. Consolidated balance sheets of corporations reflect the consolidation of a number of operations, and consequently one has to realize that what is treated as one item in one balance sheet may not be the same item in the next balance sheet. As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, at the last year-end Canadian Pacific Railway had done $709 million worth of business.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being 10.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to the special order made July 27 last, to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the report stage of Bill C-2, an act to amend the Criminal Code.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

REINSTATEMENT OF LAW RELATING TO CAPITAL PUNISHMENT THAT EXISTED PRIOR TO DECEMBER 30, 1972

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs; and motion No. 2 of Mrs. Morin and motion No. 3 of Mr. Lawrence.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). May I suggest to hon. members that when the vote is called, those supporting the motion vote as we do in committee of the whole, starting with the first row to my right, followed by the other rows to my right, then the first row to my left, and so on consecutively.

● (2300)

The House divided on motion No. 2 (Mrs. Morin) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 41)

YEAS

Messrs.

Alkenbrack
Andre
Arrol
Beattie (Hamilton Mountain)
Bell
Blenkarn
Campbell
Caouette (Charlevoix)
Caouette (Témiscamingue)
Carter
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Crouse
Danforth
Darling
Dinsdale
Dionne
Dupras
Epp
Frank
Gauthier (Roberval)
Godin
Hargrave
Higson
Hopkins
Horner (Crowfoot)
Horner (Battleford-Kindersley)
Hueglin
Hurlburt
Jarvis
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Laprise
La Salle
Lawrence
Lessard
L'Heureux
Loiselle
MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond)
MacKay
MacLean
Madill
Marshall
Masniuk
Matte
McCain
McCleave
McKenzie
McKinley
McKinnon
Mitges
Morin (Mrs.)
Muir
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Neil (Moose Jaw)
Nesbitt
Nielsen
Oberle
O'Sullivan
Paproski
Patterson
Portelance
Reynolds
Schellenberger
Scott
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stackhouse
Stevens
Thomas (Moncton)
Towers
Trudel
Turner (London East)
Wagner
Whicher
Whittaker
Wise
Woolliams
Yewchuk—78.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Atkey
Baker
Baldwin
Barnett
Basford
Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo)
Bégin (Miss)
Blackburn
Blais
Boulanger
Breau
Brewin
Broadbent
Buchanan
Cafik
Chrétien
Clark (Rocky Mountain)
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté
Cyr
Danson
Davis
De Bané
Demers

Messrs.

Douglas
Drury
Dubé
Dupont
Ethier
Fairweather
Faulkner
Firth
Fleming
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Gauthier (Ottawa East)
Gendron
Gilbert
Gleave
Goyer
Gray
Grier
Guilbault
Haidasz
Harding
Harney
Holmes
Howard
Hymmen
Jamieson
Knight
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Lachance
Lalonde
Lang
Laniel
Leblanc (Laurier)
Leblanc (Westmorland-Kent)
Lefebvre
Leggatt
Lewis
MacDonald (Cardigan)
MacDonald (Egmont)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacDonald (Miss) (Kingston and the Islands)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
MacInnis (Mrs.) (Vancouver Kingsway)
Mackasey
Macquarrie
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
McRae
Morgan
Munro (Hamilton East)
Neale (Vancouver East)
Nelson
Nesdoly
Nystrom
O'Connor
Olaussen
Olivier
Orlikow
Ouellet
Pelletier (Sherbrooke)
Peters
Poulin
Prud'homme
Railton
Reid
Reilly
Richardson
Ritchie
Roche
Rodriguez
Rooney
Rose
Rowland
Roy (Laval)
Saltsman
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Sharp
Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Stanbury
Stanfield
Stewart (Cochrane)
Stollery
Symes
Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)
Walker
Whelan—115.

● (2310)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The Chair will now put the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence). I gather it is the wish of the House that we proceed with this division as we did on the first division, with those in support of the motion rising by rows, starting with the first row to my right.

The House divided on motion No. 3 (Mr. Lawrence) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 42)

YEAS

Messrs.

Alkenbrack
Andre
Arrol
Beattie (Hamilton Mountain)
Bell
Blenkarn
Campbell
Caouette (Charlevoix)
Caouette (Témiscamingue)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Crouse
Danforth
Darling
Dinsdale
Dionne
Dupras
Epp
Frank
Gauthier (Roberval)
Godin
Hargrave
Higson
Hopkins
Horner (Crowfoot)
Horner (Battleford-Kindersley)
Hueglin
Hurlburt
Jarvis
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Lajoie
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Laprise
La Salle
Lawrence
L'Heureux
Loiselle
MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond)
MacKay
MacLean
Madill
Marshall
Masniuk
Matte
McCain
McKenzie
McKinley
Mitges
Morin (Mrs.)
Muir
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Neil (Moose Jaw)
Nesbitt
Nielsen
Oberle
O'Sullivan
Paproski
Patterson
Portelance
Reynolds
Schellenberger
Scott
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stackhouse
Stevens
Thomas (Moncton)
Towers
Trudel
Turner (London East)
Wagner
Whicher
Whittaker
Wise
Woolliams
Yewchuk—75.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Atkey
Baker
Baldwin
Barnett
Basford
Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo)
Bégin (Miss)
Blackburn
Blais
Boulanger
Breau
Brewin
Broadbent
Buchanan
Cafik
Chrétien
Clark (Rocky Mountain)
Corbin
Côté
Cyr
Danson
Davis
De Bané
Demers
Douglas
Drury
Dubé
Dupont
Ethier
Fairweather
Faulkner
Firth
Fleming
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Gauthier (Ottawa East)
Gendron
Gilbert
Gleave
Goyer
Gray
Grier
Guilbault
Haidasz
Harding
Harney
Holmes
Howard
Hymmen
Jamieson
Knight
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Lachance
Lalonde
Lang
Laniel
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent)
Lefebvre
Leggatt
Lewis
MacDonald (Cardigan)
MacDonald (Egmont)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacDonald (Miss) (Kingston and the Islands)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
MacInnis (Mrs.) (Vancouver Kingsway)
Mackasey
Macquarrie
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
McKinnon
McRae
Morgan
Munro (Hamilton East)
Neale (Vancouver East)
Nelson
Nesdoly
Nystrom
O'Connor
Olaussen
Olivier
Orlikow
Ouellet
Pelletier (Sherbrooke)
Peters
Poulin
Prud'homme
Railton
Reid
Reilly
Richardson
Ritchie
Roche
Rodriguez
Rooney
Rose
Rowland
Roy (Laval)
Saltsman
Sharp
Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Stanbury
Stanfield
Stewart (Cochrane)
Stollery
Symes
Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)
Walker
Whelan—114.

Capital Punishment

● (2320)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General) moved that Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Lundrigan: Just to indicate that I was present for both votes but did not register a vote.

Mr. Speaker: It being after eleven o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow until 11 a.m.

At 11.25 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, October 19, 1973

The House met at 11 a.m.

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROCHE—OPPORTUNITY FOR MEMBERS TO ATTEND TRI-LEVEL GOVERNMENT CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting all members of parliament.

Two days ago I asked the Minister of State for Urban Affairs if members of parliament could be accredited as observers at the national tri-level intergovernmental meeting to be held in Edmonton next week. This meeting is to be open to the press but closed to observers. The minister replied that observers could not attend because "there is just not sufficient room available."

Yesterday, I moved a motion that the government direct the planning secretariat to permit one member of each of the four parties in the House of Commons to be accredited as an official observer. This motion was blocked by the government supporters.

Following this action, I consulted with the management of the Macdonald Hotel in Edmonton, where the meeting is to be held, and I was informed that the extended Tonquin Room holds 1,100 people theatre-style or, for a dinner setting, 800 persons. The suggestion that four members of parliament could not be fitted into a room of such dimensions is ludicrous and underscores why I am raising this question of privilege.

The meeting next week will be the second national tri-level conference. It will deal with the super-problem of urbanization, considering such issues as management of growth, land use, housing, transportation and finance. These are problems that parliament as a whole has a responsibility to solve, not just the government. It is vital, and within our rights, for members of parliament to have first-hand information on the various points of view presented by all governments. If members of parliament are forced to rely on press reports we may get a picture that is incomplete, to say the least.

For example, the Western Economic Opportunities Conference in Calgary last July was open to observers. It is a good thing it was, for the day after the Calgary conference I was able to come back to the House and report to all members my impressions and evaluation of the conference which were quite at variance with the slick, co-operative image of the federal government conveyed by the communications media. That speech is reported on page 6054 of Hansard. If members of parliament had not had direct access to the western conference, we would not have known the full story.

Of course, the government does not want opposition members of parliament around when they are doing business. The record of this government has been one of continual downgrading and diminishment of the role of the member.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Roche: The case I am presenting to Your Honour today—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should indicate as soon as possible the nature of his question of privilege. The hon. member did give me notice of his intention to raise this matter by way of a question of privilege and I had serious doubts whether it was. I think hon. members who claim to have a question of privilege should indicate to the Chair as quickly as possible the nature of that question so as to give the Chair an opportunity to make a ruling. The hon. member might wish to conclude his remarks as soon as possible.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence, I might be of some help in this situation. I received a letter from the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford), delivered to me last evening, which I have not had an opportunity to convey to the hon. member who is raising this question of privilege. The contents of that letter might be of interest to him.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I want to make two points. The first point, which has been referred to by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), is that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford), after consulting with the co-chairmen of the tri-level conference has extended an invitation to each of the parties to provide observers to this tri-level conference. So, as the Leader of the Opposition has stated, the member who has raised this question of privilege has not been fully informed of events.

The second point I want to make is that I take very strong exception to the growing practice of members making straight political speeches and attacks on the government under the guise of a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fairweather: The nobodies have become somebodies and you do not like it.

Mr. MacEachen: If this practice is to continue, if members of the opposition are allowed on questions of privilege to make political speeches, we shall demand the opportunity to reply on each and every occasion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Visit by Prime Minister to China

Mr. Bell: I have two points to make. First, if it had not been for the initiative of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona, nothing would have been done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1110)

Mr. Bell: I think he deserves a great deal of credit for getting up in the House and making democratic representation at this meeting possible. Second, the House leader can tell us when we are supposed to bring up these matters of justifiable complaint and we will comply if we are out of order in the opinion of the Chair.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SOCIAL AFFAIRS

Fifth report of Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs—Mr. Railton.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORT BY PRIME MINISTER ON HIS VISIT TO CHINA

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to report to hon. members on my visit to China which, as the House knows, concluded just a few hours ago.

The invitation to me to visit the People's Republic of China was first extended by Premier Chou En-lai in 1971 and was renewed again several months ago.

We left Canada with high expectations. I am able to say, Mr. Speaker, that the willingness of the Chinese government to accept our point of view and to engage with us in activities of benefit for the people of Canada more than met those expectations. The high degree of interest of the Chinese government in Canada and the willingness of that government to work toward the maintenance and strengthening of friendly relations with Canada were made evident by the amount of time they, the Chinese leaders, were willing to devote to me and to my party. Chairman Mao Tse-tung extended to me the courtesy of a long conversation. Premier Chou En-lai met with me for many hours of formal discussions over the course of several days and chatted with me at even greater length in informal circumstances on a number of occasions.

One of the main objectives of any visit by a head of government, whether a Canadian travelling abroad, or a prime minister coming here, is to ensure that each country understands the policies of the other and the circumstances which give rise to those policies. It is seldom possible to come to agreement on the wisdom or the effectiveness of all policies, nor would one expect that this could be the case in a world in which the vagaries of history, the realities of geography, and the variations of social systems lend distinctive directions and points of view to governmental policies. What I found most heartening, however, in my discussions with the Chinese leaders, was their understanding of, and sympathy for, Canada's foreign policy. In particular I was not subjected to any demands that future Canadian relations with China would depend for their warmth on our attitudes toward any other country. I stated in Peking, both in the privacy of conversation with the Premier and on public occasions, that Canadian foreign policy seeks to avoid tension, to strengthen the institutions of international cooperation and to assist the economic development of the newly independent countries. I said as well that, in my belief, the true measurement of national greatness was found not in military might or in political hegemony but in the willingness of a country to recognize the importance of individual welfare, human dignity and a sense of personal accomplishment and fulfilment.

Many of the issues which were discussed with the Chinese leaders, and in the several committees of officials that were established during the course of the visit, reflected these beliefs and the desire of Canada to expand its international trade.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Premier Chou and I signed a formal trade agreement which will serve as a framework for the development of trade between Canada and China for the next three years. I should like to table now, in both official languages, copies of this agreement.

Hon. members will find that this agreement established a joint trade committee which will meet annually. The Canadian suggestion that the committee address itself immediately to the areas of transportation, forestry and agriculture, was accepted by the Chinese. Agreement was reached as well that detailed discussions be initiated quickly in the fields of aluminum and wood pulp. We also agreed that further discussions take place soon with respect to potash, sulphur and nickel. The Canadian side was heartened by the obvious Chinese interest in increasing the purchase of Canadian manufactured goods and contemplating the purchase from Canada of complete plants. Throughout our discussions in this area, emphasis was lent by both sides of the mutual benefit to be gained from long-term commercial agreements.

Satisfying as were the discussions on trade and commercial relations, I was moved most by the several understandings reached in the areas of medicine and human relations. Hon. members will be familiar with the important work done last spring in China by a joint governmental and professional medical mission to China led by Dr. Gustave Gingras, the then President of the Canadian Medical Association. That mission recognized the immense benefits that could be realized in health care services in Canada if more were known about several areas of Chinese medical techniques. The hope was subsequently expressed by the two major medical bodies in Canada that the Canadian government attempt to encourage the Chinese to engage in co-operative activities with Canadian doctors to these ends.

I am delighted in the progress that we were able to make in this respect during my visit, which provides for teams of Canadian and Chinese physicians visiting one another's countries to study advanced techniques in each place. The field of interest chosen by Canadian doctors in this first phase is that of acupuncture analgesia. I am informed that if this technique proves as successful in the Canadian social environment as has been the case in China, its contributions in the elimination of anaesthetic complications, in the reduction of costs associated with surgery, and in the extension of surgery to elderly and high-risk patients now denied treatment, will rank it as one of the major contributions to Canadian medicine.

I am particularly appreciative of the willingness of Premier Chou to agree to my request that facilities be instituted which will lead to the reunion of families. Just as I regarded this question of reunification as one of the most important of the subjects in which I engaged Premier Kosygin in discussion—and which has since led to the exit from the Soviet Union of several hundreds of persons to join relatives in Canada—so I emphasized to Premier Chou the importance with which Canadians as a whole viewed this aspect of Canadian-Chinese relations.

I have instructed Canadian officials to waste no time in the implementation of this new understanding which permits Canadian immigration officers to proceed to China to process applicants for entry to Canada. An officer of the Department of Manpower and Immigration is already on his way from Ottawa to Peking.

Understandings were reached in other fields as well: cultural and sports exchanges, for one, consular arrangements for another, and science and technology for still another. The latter was made possible by the extensive work done in advance of my arrival by the Minister of State for Science and Technology.

● (1120)

[English]

My visit to China, Mr. Speaker, leaves me without any doubt of the wisdom of the decision of the Canadian government to reverse the longstanding policy of ignoring the People's Republic of China.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Because that immense country of talented and industrious people will have an increasing impact on world affairs, and because a strengthening and enrichment of the bilateral relationship between Canada and China can be beneficial to Canadians, that decision was right and will increasingly prove to be right. The presence of China in the United Nations and in other international councils makes it vital that Canada's interests and Canada's views be understood and, hopefully, supported by the Chinese government. It will be of increasing advantage to Canada that Canadian leaders have opportunities to explain Canadian attitudes and policies to Chinese decision-makers just as, amongst other things, I exposed to Premier Chou the positions Canada will advocate at the forthcoming Law of the Sea Conference.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I was heartened again and again by the genuine friendship extended toward Canada and Canadians by the leaders and the people of modern China. I am confident that the diversification and enjoyment of our new ties with China will not interfere with the longstanding friendly relations which we enjoy with those several countries with which we have special ties. Nor will it detract from our efforts to seek, to our advantage, the easing of tensions and the increase of contacts with other parts of the world.

It has not been the vastness of the Pacific that has acted as a barrier between Canada and China. The gulf has been found all too often in the minds of those of us who are unwilling to recognize the magnitude of one of the most significant revolutions in the history of the world and the extension of basic human amenities to hundreds of millions of persons to whom they had been denied for millennia.

The name of Canada is held in high respect in China, Mr. Speaker, and as a consequence Canadians are beneficiaries. It is the aim of this government that this reputation, and those benefits, increase and continue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before commenting specifically on the visit of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to China I should like to take this occasion to congratulate him belatedly on his birthday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I think that the good wishes of the House on the Prime Minister's birthday are really quite relevant to any discussion of the China visit because of the right hon. gentleman's published tributes to the aging leaders of that centuries old society. The Prime Minister is quoted as saying in regard to this aging leadership: "It is this kind of faith that leaves me full of admiration when I see these really aging leaders prepared to begin all over again." Along these lines, Mr. Speaker, I feel obliged to remind the Prime Minister that, while he has had another birthday, I am still older than he is. Of course, I am doubly pleased that the Prime Minister's remarks indicated an appreciation of all leaders who are capable of beginning all over again. Here again, I might claim membership in that club.

When I visited China in 1971 it was a wonderful, illuminating and fascinating experience, but I encountered somewhat the same difficulty that I faced on a visit to the Soviet Union in 1970. This related to clarifying my position as Leader of the Opposition. I found on both occasions that, while I was most hospitably received, within the systems of government operating in those states an identifiable and active leader of the opposition was a rather foreign concept. I came to understand that in certain parts of the world it was accepted that by the time you found out there was an effective opposition, it was perhaps too late. The relevance of this observation to the contemporary Canadian scene is perhaps, I think, self-evident.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Visit by Prime Minister to China

Mr. Stanfield: The exchanges of people and ideas in the areas of medical science, health care technology, culture, education, sports and the media should be very beneficial. There is much that we can learn from one another. There is no doubt about that. In the technique of acupuncture alone we have already seen remarkable results in Canada. Just look at what it has done for the Ottawa Rough Riders.

Our economic and diplomatic relations with the Peoples Republic of China are only beginning to develop fully and to offer significant potential benefit to our country. I feel it is helpful and timely that the Prime Minister, the head of our government, participate directly at this stage of the relationship. Therefore I offer the Prime Minister my congratulations on his visit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I feel that the visit further demonstrated that our two countries are building friendly and constructive relationships and that Canada has a growing commitment to expand its activities on the Pacific rim.

I am sure that all Canadians were pleased to learn of the various projects between our two countries that were formally announced during the Prime Minister's visit to China. With regard to trade and economics, we welcome the agreement establishing a joint trade committee which will meet annually. The understanding of both governments to increase and widen trade between our two countries can be of great importance. Interchanges suggested by the Prime Minister in the areas of transportation, forestry and agriculture are certainly appropriate. However, the agreement really only establishes a framework to develop our trading opportunities. It provides a challenge to Canada and should be seen in that light.

While we expect a significant increase in the volume of trade with China next year and have long supported the continued growth of our wheat exports, Canadian trade with China, and with everyone else for that matter, must involve a far greater proportion of manufactured products. We are faced with extremely energetic competition in this new market. If we are to realize our true potential with regard to China, decisive strategic leadership must be taken at home. Any effective long-term trade relationship with another country must also be a two-way relationship. With that in mind we accept that part of the agreement, of course, which extends most- favoured-nation tariff treatment to Chinese goods entering Canada. This is realistic and quite equitable, because it should be pointed out that Chinese sales to Canada totalled only about $48 million last year, less than one-fifth of our sales to China.

● (1130)

I touch on only one disturbing note, Sir. There was no mention in the Prime Minister's remarks today or in his Peking communiqué of nuclear bomb testing in China. I would sincerely hope that our new relationships as well as our older ones would permit us to be prepared to be frank and open on matters of Canadian and world-wide concern. I felt that we were less emphatic than we might have been in our protests to the French government over their latest test series. I hope the Prime Minister will be able to give the House some assurance that he did convey to the Chinese leaders the very deep concern of the Canadian people about continued nuclear bomb testing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I do not wish to be misunderstood, Sir. I repeat what I have said in the past: The comments of Canadian leaders on sensitive issues do not have to be rude or offensive, and I do not expect them to be, but they must be firm, they must be unequivocal and, most important, they must be made.

In the consular field we welcome the simplification of visa procedures and the provision for each country to set up a consulate general in the other country. I welcome fully with the Prime Minister the fact that it will now be possible for the Canadian government to process within China applications for the reunion of families. This, of course, is of deep concern to many Canadians, and I trust this long hoped for opportunity will be acted on energetically and as a high priority.

I again congratulate the Prime Minister. I am pleased to see that the Prime Minister and Mrs. Trudeau have completed their long journey and returned home in good health.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I join the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in congratulating the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) belatedly on his fifty-fourth birthday. I merely add this: In his statement he talked about the realities of geography. He experienced those realities himself, as I understand he celebrated his birthday twice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: He was making up for all his earlier years.

Mr. Lewis: He celebrated two birthdays without any advance in age. He did so as a result of the realities of geography in this world. He did so in China on October 18, and he did so in Honolulu on the same date, October 18.

I also want to join the Leader of the Opposition, although I shall put this in slightly different language, in welcoming the Prime Minister and Madam Trudeau back to Canada. I think all Canadians recognize the role Mrs. Trudeau played in the success of the Prime Minister's visit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: He should have taken Justin, too.

Mr. Lewis: What this trip and what the last two or three years indicate is the unwisdom of Canada and other countries in having refused to recognize the Peking government of China for so many years. As every member of this House knows, my party has been advocating that recognition since 1950. I think the value of recognizing a large country, despite the disagreements we may have with some aspects of the social system there, has been fully justified by what has happened, culminating in the trip the Prime Minister has just made to that country. I express the hope that other countries, particularly our powerful neighbour to the south, will see that any attempt to isolate any country, large or small but particularly an important country like China, is harmful to the future of the world and to the relationships that must be developed in the world. I look forward, if I may say this as a Canadian without trying to interfere, to the day, I hope soon, when the United States of America will also recognize China. We will then have a situation in the United Nations in which no one fails to recognize the importance and place of the Chinese Republic in the present world situation.

The modern world, Mr. Speaker, has produced new problems as a result of technological and industrial development and it has inevitably produced different social systems and different social ideas. One absolute precondition for peace in the world and for the possibility of the world's continued growth and development is that all of us must accept the fact that there are differing social systems and differing social ideas in this world and not make them an issue for war or conflict or a refusal to deal with each other as citizens of the world.

I note that toward the end of the Prime Minister's statement there is a very important sentence which may have escaped the attention of hon. members. I congratulate the Prime Minister on using these words:

> The gulf has been found all too often in the minds of those of us who are unwilling to recognize the magnitude of one of the most significant revolutions in the history of the world—

Note the following words, Mr. Speaker:

> —and the extension of basic human amenities to hundreds of millions of persons to whom they had been denied for millennia.

I take from those words a recognition that the government and the people of China is doing its best in its way to improve the standard of life of its people, and the Prime Minister congratulates them for the progress they have made and wishes them well in future. As a fellow Canadian I join him in those congratulations and in those wishes.

The Leader of the Opposition has dealt with most of the important, relevant details of the agreements as set out in the statement, all of which my colleagues and I support wholeheartedly as, indeed, did the Leader of the Opposition. There are times, Sir, when partisanship is pushed aside, and those times are probably the best in the history of our parliament.

I want to say this in conclusion. No one in Canada who knows anything about foreign affairs has ever had any illusion that our country can play the role of superpower, can play the role of imposing ideas on any part of the world, or that we are able, because of our economic and military power, to push people in a right or wrong direction as we see our interests to be. No one has ever had that kind of illusion about Canada's role. But some Canadians underestimate the role that Canada can play. Canada is an important middle power. Canada has a history without any colonial connections. Canada has a history of supporting all peoples around the world seeking independence and freedom. Canada has no black pages in its history of colonizing people or exploiting them from the centre of some imperial power. Because it is a middle power, because it has that happy history, Canada can play a significant role in relations among the governments and nations of the world. I am delighted that our Prime Minister has tried to play that role in his visit to China.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1140)

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. members who have just spoken, I am glad to see the right hon. Prime Minister returning in such great form.

We are happy to see him and Mrs. Trudeau in perfect health and happy after an excellent journey.

May I take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate the Prime Minister on his birthday. We have something in common: we are both Libra. As there is a two year difference between us, he must certainly be older than I am. Being both Libra probably means that we are the two better balanced hon. members in the House.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's statement certainly gives us food for thought. Approximately twelve years ago, I heard about and read a book entitled "Two Innocents in China". As I was reading a few days ago about one of these innocents who had certainly never expected to return as Prime Minister of Canada, I could somewhat envision what had happened previously.

Mr. Speaker, here is what riveted my attention and which makes sense in the Prime Minister's statement.

> I said as well that, in my belief, the true measurement of national greatness was found not in military might as in political hegemony, but in the willingness of a country to recognize the importance of individual welfare, human dignity and a sense of personal accomplishment and fulfilment.

Those thoughts should be pondered over not only in Canada but also in other countries.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister then stated that trade agreements have been concluded with China. He said, for example, that the Canadian delegates noted, to their great satisfaction, that the Chinese were anxious to increase their purchases of Canadian manufactured goods and that they were considering the purchase in Canada of complete industrial facilities. Throughout those talks, emphasis was laid on both sides on the mutual advantages of long-term trade agreements. In my opinion, it would now be necessary to know exactly what we could exchange with the Chinese from the technical or technological point of view. But the cultural and scientific agreements are quite valuable; they will greatly help Canadians learn about China and the Chinese to learn about Canada. Acupuncture, which was a laughing subject for years, and which is now considered with greater attention and seriousness in Canada, is mentioned here. Moreover, the Prime Minister says that some Canadians have ensured him, and I quote:

> —that if this technique proves as successful in the Canadian social environment as has been the case in China, its contributions in the elimination of anaesthetic complications, in the reduction of costs associated with surgery will be remarkable—

Mr. Speaker, these are essential points, and when I was questioned during the Prime Minister's visit in China, I answered unequivocally that not only did I not object, but that I would also encourage these scientific, technological and cultural exchanges which could increase not only our own knowledge but also that of other people.

However, I did find the following comments, which have also been mentioned by the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis), somewhat revolutionary, and I quote:

It has not been the vastness of the Pacific that has acted as a barrier between Canada and China. The gulf has been found all too often in the minds of those of us who were unwilling to recognize the magnitude of one of the most significant revolutions in the history of the world and the extension of basic human amenities to hundreds of millions of persons to whom they had been denied for millennia.

I am rather skeptic about these remarks contained in the Prime Minister's statement. The Prime Minister did certainly not see a parliamentary system like ours in China. There are no leaders of the opposition in China like there are here. There is no freedom such as ours in China. I therefore think that it is a bit much to praise a revolution because the country which made it is large. This is the same as saying: We are happy about what happened in Cuba and Czechoslovakia. We welcomed the events which took place in Chile and China. If we consider what is happening closer to home we would be glad to have the separatists controlling the province of Quebec for the very same reasons as those mentioned in this statement!

The freedom of speech and action we are enjoying in Canada must be respected and we should not yield to anybody through any system imposed forcefully through revolution while there is so much room for agreement, comprehension and co-operation.

I do not accept the Quebec separatists nor their spirit of revolution and the violence they use and I will never approve violence in any country whether it be China or Russia. Even though the Prime Minister's visit was beneficial in certain areas, if we must recognize a forcefully imposed political system I disagree. For instance I agree in the case of—

Some hon. Members: As in Chile.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Certainly, the very same thing happened in Chile. When it happened in Cuba our NDP friends did not object. When communists are responsible for bloody revolutions, they are applauded by Canadian socialists.

Mr. Speaker, I have seldom seen liars of this kind. In Parliament we are shown a window display but they do quite the reverse outside.

When I mention revolutions it is to state clearly that I object to them and when I say that we should not encourage those revolutions in Quebec—they raise fear throughout Canada.

Should the Prime Minister say: At last, Quebec which has been misunderstood would do well to separate from the rest of Canada because since Confederation it has been under the tutelage of the federal government, we would not accept that.

Mr. Speaker, I believe in exchanges while having our identity respected, but our identity is characterized by freedom which allows us to breathe freely as human beings can and must do in the world.

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

● (1150)

[English]

FISHERIES

EFFECT OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE REGULATIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to present a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that a large number of Newfoundland's inshore fishermen are adversely affected by the existing Unemployment Insurance Commission regulations, and in view of the federal government's obvious lack of concern and understanding for this problem, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall):

That the Ministers of Manpower and Fisheries, in their collaboration in working out changes to the existing Unemployment Insurance Commission regulations as they apply to fishermen, be instructed by this House to adopt the recommendations of the Newfoundland Fishermen, Food and Allied Workers Union which are as follows:

"1. That the date of eligibility for benefits be advanced to October 15 from the present date of December 15.

2. That the maximum period of eligibility be increased by one month to a total of 24 weeks.

3. That benefits be calculated on an average of all stamps rather than on 20 as is now the case."

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

* * *

FOOD PRICES

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY CONSUMER AFFAIRS MINISTER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to seek leave to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the continuing attitude of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) with regard to the matter of food prices. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis):

That the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs be required to appear before the Committee on Trends in Food Prices to explain his statement that—and I quote: "With food prices going up the way they have been lately, the average family today has only two choices: readjust household budgets to allow more dollars for food, or stretch the food dollar by shopping more wisely".

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a question of privilege. On two occasions I have sent a note to the hon. member asking him to give me the page number and exact reference to demonstrate where I am supposed to have made that statement, and as yet he has failed to do so. I ask him to do so now.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, if I can speak to that point of order since it has reference to me, it is a sad state of affairs when a minister of the Crown has to write to a member of this party—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Howard: —and ask where those offensive statements made by the minister appear. I will gladly give him the documentation right now.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I feel I have to do so directly in this way since I was not able apparently under the rules to get my point across. My point of order relates to the attempt by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs indirectly to leave the impression that he did not in fact make the statement I have attributed to him which was the substance of a question I asked him yesterday, to which he declined to reply and of my motion today. I think the minister should be required to state directly that yes, he did make that statement or no, he did not.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows full well that is not a point of order nor a question of privilege.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—ACTION TO AVERT POSSIBLE SHORTAGE FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA CONSUMERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question related to our petroleum problems and I direct it to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It arises from the fact that the chairman of the National Energy Board and the chairman of the British Columbia Energy Commission met, I think two days ago, to discuss the problem of alternative supplies to avert the possibility of a gas shortage for gas customers in British Columbia. Can the minister now tell the House what action will be taken on this matter following that meeting?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my understanding of the report of that meeting is that the chairman of the British Columbia Energy Commission agreed with the position of the National Energy Board that the first immediate step should be for West Coast to secure alternative supplies of gas, principally from Alberta producers. My understanding equally is that those discussions are continuing at the instance of West Coast; I understand there is no conclusion to report at the moment.

OIL—POSSIBILITY OF EXPORT CUTBACK BY ARAB COUNTRIES APPLYING TO CANADA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): With regard to security of supplies of petroleum in the east, has the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources now been able to ascertain whether the declaration made two days ago, I believe, by the Arab Middle East countries regarding a cutback in exports of oil will apply to Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): As I indicated yesterday, and again this is the situation today, the international community generally has been having some difficulty in clarifying the exact impact of these various announcements by the Arab oil producing states.

MINISTER'S PROPOSAL TO SYNCRUDE RESPECTING PRICING OF CANADIAN CRUDE—RELATIONSHIP TO LANDED PRICE AT MONTREAL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): In relation to the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that the principals of Syncrude had found that his proposal for the pricing of Canadian crude would permit the continuance of that project, involving an investment of about $1 billion, I should like to ask the minister what proposal he described to the principals of Syncrude, since this is of great importance to all Canadians, and whether in fact he proposed that the price of crude in Canada will move up or down to the extent that the price of crude landed at Montreal, measured by some index, moves up or down. What precise proposal did the minister describe?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it was in terms no more specific than in talking to the various parties. In essence, it was that the price of crude oil products in Canada should be related to international prices at Montreal. The difficulty in calculation is, of course, with the great variety of sources of oil at Montreal and the great variety of freight rates. As the hon. member suggested yesterday, a formula will be required for the purpose of determining a fair average price which in turn will determine the Canadian price.

Mr. Stanfield: I have one further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of this matter being fully clarified. Does the minister mean that, once an index is worked out for measuring the price of offshore crude landed at Montreal, the price of crude in Canada will move up or down as the index of the price of offshore oil landed at Montreal moves up or down?

● (1200)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The intention would be that the National Energy Board would decide, on a month to month basis or perhaps quarterly, what the price was and that price would then be the basis for the determination of the price throughout Canada, with a deduction for transportation costs as you move back to the producing centres.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Would the minister inform the House as to the formula he has in mind in connection with relating the price of crude from Syncrude to the international price of crude landed at Montreal?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Depending upon the quality of the oil, the producers of Syncrude would be paid the same price as any other producers in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A number of members are seeking supplementaries. With the co-operation of the House, the Chair will try to complete the first round of questions and then return to these supplementaries.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE BENEFITS OF TARIFF AND SALES TAX CUTS NOT CANCELLED OUT BY PROFIT-TAKING AND DATA ON WHICH REPORT BASED

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It arises out of the report tabled in the House yesterday. In view of the extraordinarily high profit performance this year in the corporate sector, three further examples of which were reported this morning, what assurances can the minister give the House that such benefits as may have flowed from the reductions in tariffs and sales tax were not, in fact, cancelled out by unconscionable profit-taking?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The only answer I can give is to refer the hon. member to the conclusions of the report itself. This is the information I have and which I presented to the House.

Mr. Grier: Mr. Speaker, since the report itself is not accompanied by any statistical evidence whatever to support the conclusions to which it came, will the minister table in the House the data which entitled him and his department to draw those conclusions?

Mr. Gray: The nature of the data behind the report is outlined in the report itself. I will be happy to check whether it is in a form that can be appropriately tabled and report to the hon. member later.

POSSIBLE NEW MONETARY MEASURES AND EXCESS PROFITS TAX TO COMBAT RISING PRICES

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): I should like to direct a final supplementary to the Minister of Finance. In view of the conclusions to which the report came, is he now prepared to announce new monetary or fiscal measures to combat rising prices, especially for food, fuel and shelter and, particularly in view of recent profit performances, is he entertaining the possibility of an excess profits tax or some measure of that kind?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): All the items to which the hon. member referred are, of course, budgetary items and any changes would be announced in the usual way.

* * *

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF CULTURAL AND COMMERCIAL AGREEMENTS WITH NEW GOVERNMENT OF CHILE

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the statements that he made earlier concerning agreements reached with the People's Republic of China, can he say whether he also proposes to reach such cultural and trade agreements with the new Chilean governments?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is no doubt aware of the fact that in 1968 or 1969 the Canadian government sent to South America a departmental delegation in order to reach with these countries a maximum number of trade, cultural and scientific agreements.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I should like to put a supplementary question. Are these agreements or meetings with the Chilean authorities continuing since the overthrow of the Allende régime?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would have to get more details. However, in a general way, the new Chilean government has certainly not indicated to Canada that it proposed to cancel any practice or agreement.

* * *

[English]

ENERGY

PRICE OF WESTERN OIL UNDER PROPOSED PRICING FORMULA—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF EQUALITY OF PRICES ACROSS COUNTRY

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I should like to have further clarification from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources concerning the proposed pricing formula. Once the average price is worked out for offshore oil landed at Montreal, does he envisage that the price paid for western oil will be more, about the same, or less?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): In effect, depending on where western oil is delivered the price will, subject to deduction for transportation costs, be related to the price of western oil delivered to the Montreal market if that be possible, and would therefore be equivalent to the average I have talked about. In Edmonton, of course, it would be a lower price because of the reduced transportation cost.

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, may I put the same question in another way. In view of the fact eastern oil companies have one request for an increase currently before the Energy Board and that possibly there will be another before the end of the year, can the minister give the House some assurance that the Montreal price will prevail across the country and that there will, in fact, be equality of pricing?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Is the hon. gentleman talking about the present period or about the period when, in effect, the national oil policy line ceases to exist? I think this is an important difference.

Mr. Bell: I should like an assurance from the minister that there will be some guarantee in future of equality of prices across the country with the exception, of course, of differentials for transportation costs?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): In general terms, I think that would be the objective. Certainly, it would be much more the case than at the present time.

PRICE GUIDELINES FOR OIL PRODUCTS—SUGGESTED NEED FOR ADDITIONAL LEGISLATIVE SANCTIONS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): In view of recent examples of the failure of the government's voluntary price guidelines covering oil products such as anti-freeze, gasoline and engine oil, would the minister now bring in additional legislation which would put more teeth into those guidelines?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I point out to the hon. member that the products he mentioned were not covered by the freeze right from the start.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If hon. members are interested in proceeding more effectively, perhaps we should try to move to another subject. There are six or seven members seeking supplementaries on this subject, which would take up most of the question period. I am not sure if that is what the House wants, particularly if each member insists on having two or three supplementaries.

NATURAL GAS—GUARANTEE OF SUPPLY TO BRITISH COLUMBIA CONSUMERS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources a supplementary question related to gas. Does he have any information to impart to the House as a result of the discussion held two days ago, I believe, by the National Energy Board and the Energy Commission of British Columbia about a guarantee of supplies of gas to consumers in British Columbia?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I think I have just answered a similar question from the Leader of the Opposition in the sense that one cannot be more specific about this matter until one finds out what the alternate supplies are.

NATURAL GAS—PRICE OF POSSIBLE ALTERNATIVE SUPPLIES TO BRITISH COLUMBIA CONSUMERS—REVIEW BY ENERGY BOARD

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary on the same subject. Has the minister asked the National Energy Board to review the impact which alternative natural gas supplies to British Columbia will have on the prices consumers will be asked to pay for these new supplies?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Sir.

[Later:]

OIL—POSSIBLE INTRODUCTION OF RATIONING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question to address to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Outside the House a few days ago he indicated that in certain conditions Canada might have to institute oil rationing. Can he now confirm his thinking on this subject matter?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I indicated we were considering all possible contingencies over a period of time. In specific response to the question whether rationing was one of those possibilities, I said yes. I would not wish at this point to give further details of the whole range of contingency planning.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISIT BY PRIME MINISTER TO CHINA—DISCUSSION OF RICE IMPORTS BY CANADA

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Prime Minister. In the conversations in Peking, did the Chinese raise the embarrassing fact that Canada imports rice from the United States to a value of about $12 million or $13 million a year? This rice is imported from the United States, not from China, and both countries are exporting rice.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, not in my presence, but I would have to inquire whether the matter was raised during the meetings of officials which went on parallel to my own meetings with the prime minister and his ministers.

● (1210)

[Translation]

DISCUSSION BY PRIME MINISTER WITH CHINESE AUTHORITIES BY CESSATION OF NUCLEAR TESTS BY THAT COUNTRY

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the government leader.

Could he tell this house if, during his talks with the political authorities of the People's Republic of China, he discussed the stoppage of nuclear tests, and if he has defended in Peking Canada's point of view in this regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have defended in general Canada's point of view on the nuclear question. I did not specifically bring up the subject of nuclear explosions in China by China.

[English]

INQUIRY AS TO RECOGNITION OF GUINEA-BISSAU

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that on Monday, September 24, 1973, the recently formed National People's Assembly in Guinea-Bissau declared their country an independent and sovereign state, in view of the fact that Canada has frequently proclaimed, together with other nations of the world, its support for the independence and self-determination of the people of Portugal's colonies, and in view of the fact that the greater part of the country is in fact under the control of and administered by the representatives of the National Peoples' Assembly, will the government recognize the new independent state of Guinea-Bissau?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have on several occasions opposed the colonial policy of Portugal. I have also encouraged the independence of those areas now under Portuguese rule. We are watching developments in Guinea-Bissau with great interest. So far we have not been able to establish that the so-called independent government is effectively in control of that country.

Mr. Brewin: If as I am informed, most of that country is now in fact under effective control of the so-called liberation forces and the independent government of the country, will the minister undertake in those circumstances that recognition will be granted?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. The question of recognition, as the hon. gentleman knows, so far as Canada is concerned is who is effectively in control and able to discharge international obligations. As I said in my earlier answer, we are following events there. We have not been able to establish the fact, as the hon. gentleman put it, that the so-called independent government of Guinea-Bissau is effectively in control of that country. In fact, the capital and most of the larger centres are still under Portuguese control.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo has a supplementary to earlier questions and will be recognized, followed by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe.

[Mr. Wagner.]

ENERGY

OIL PRODUCTS PRICES—POSSIBILITY OF ADDITIONAL MEASURES TO STRENGTHEN GUIDELINES

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arises from his earlier answer to me. In light of the minister's admission that none of the proposed guidelines currently in effect will do anything to regulate the prices of oil products such as antifreeze, gasoline and engine oil, what additional measures does he intend to put into effect to do something about the prices of these very important products?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): We indicated before that our primary purpose was to reach the prices of gasoline and heating oil, which have had the most direct impact on the consumer price index. At the present time, I have no intention to extend it to a further range of oil products.

* * *

FISHERIES

RESPONSE OF SOVIET UNION TO REQUEST TO CEASE EXCEEDING ICNAF HERRING QUOTA

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment I should like to address my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the minister advise the House if he has had a response from the Soviet Union to the request of the Minister of the Environment that it cease fishing herring beyond the ICNAF quota on George's Bank?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take notice of that question. I am not absolutely sure what the present situation is.

* * *

TRANSPORT

ICEBREAKING—TRANSFER OF INFORMATION CENTRE FROM SYDNEY TO DARTMOUTH

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask the minister if the ice operations information centre for the icebreaking fleet on the Atlantic Coast is to be located this winter at Dartmouth instead of Sydney where it has been for many years?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the ice operations centre which is now at Sydney will be transferred to Dartmouth but the icebreakers will remain at Sydney. There is no link between the two. This is not a problem of eight or ten jobs as was mentioned but half a job a year plus four assistants for part of the year. This means that altogether two and a half jobs are being transferred; that is all.

Mr. Muir: Mr. Speaker, I am always amazed at the vast amount this minister knows about nothing. May I put a supplementary to him. The transfer is already a fait accompli. In view of the fact that the cabinet representative for Nova Scotia is from Cape Breton Island, is it the intention of the government to remove every federal government facility it can from that island? This is going on daily, one facility after another.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman made the same kind of argument concerning the Coastguard College. He contended that it was going to be moved to Ottawa, which is not right. The Coastguard College is going to be improved and the number of students increased. Contrary to what he stated, it is going to stay there and will not be moved.

Mr. Muir: I have a question of privilege, with your approval, Mr. Speaker. Joe, why don't you remain seated on what brains you have.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Muir: My question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is that as usual the minister is misrepresenting the facts and attributing to me lies and misconceptions. He recently announced that the removal of the Coastguard College was to be postponed for one year. He did not say it would stay there permanently or that it would be expanded. Is this because he thinks there may be an election and that this action will get him over one year? What happened to the pilot boats and all the other facilities that were moved from Cape Breton Island? The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) ought to get to work on you; he is sitting next to you.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

* * *

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

POSSIBLE CONTRACT TO AMERICAN CHAIN AND CABLE COMPANY FOR MAIL SORTING EQUIPMENT—SUGGESTED POSTPONEMENT OF DECISION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Supply and Services who has had a quiet time lately, although I am sure he has been busy behind the scenes. In connection with the Post Office mechanization program, is the Department of Supply and Services awarding a contract to the American Chain and Cable Company and its Canadian associate, McInnis Company of Windsor, in the face of criticism from project officers of the Post Office Department and consultants to the Post Office arising from the lack of technological competence and experience of the McInnis Company in manufacturing sophisticated mail-sorting equipment and also its failure to meet the specifications under the provisions of a performance type contract?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the minister can reply to that question very briefly he will be recognized for that purpose, but I suggest to the hon. member and to all hon. members that a question of this type should be placed on the order paper. If there is urgency it could be considered at the time of adjournment. However, the minister might be allowed to reply briefly.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of this file, generally speaking, and you may be sure that I shall be pleased to review its particulars and inform the hon. member as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: In view of the fact that technological competence is essential in meeting vitally important delivery and operational deadlines announced by the Postmaster General for the Post Office mechanization program, and in light of the superior technological competence of other firms bidding on the contract, will the minister postpone his decision until all tenders have been reviewed as recommended by the Post Office consultants?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, if my memory is not failing me, the contract has already been awarded.

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ATTITUDE OF CHINA TOWARD MIDDLE EAST—INDICATION OF CANADIAN POSITION BY PRIME MINISTER DURING VISIT

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he indicated to the Chinese leaders our concern or even disapproval of the policies of states such as China which further inflame the situation in the Middle East?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We had quite a lengthy discussion on the situation in the Middle East. I indicated to the Chinese authorities that our policy was quite different from their policy in that respect. They announced that they disagreed with us, but that they would respect our views and would not try to change them. I indicated in turn that I did not think I would be able to change the views of the Chinese authorities on that matter. Therefore we both stayed on our positions.

* * *

● (1220)

URBAN AFFAIRS

LAND ASSEMBLY PROGRAM BY CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING—MEASURES TO FORESTALL SPECULATION—RESTRAINT OF URBAN GROWTH

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and it refers to the announcement by the president of CMHC that the corporation plans to buy large tracts of land to stabilize prices and put speculators out of business. In view of the fact this announcement was first made to those elements in our community most involved in pushing up land prices, what mechanism does the minister's department or CMHC propose to put into effect to forestall the speculation that will certainly ensue from the president's announcement?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the president was referring to provisions in the budget for national housing.

Mr. Harney: In view of the fact that the president of CMHC claims that the proposed land assembly program is a short-term measure to alleviate what he at least candidly admits to be a critical housing shortage, can the minister indicate whether the middle and long-term planning of his department includes a determination to restrain urban growth?

Mr. Basford: We have been devoting a great deal of attention to the matter of the management of growth rather than the restraint of growth and, of course, starting on Monday in Edmonton we will be having a tri-level conference, the theme of which is the management of growth.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Solicitor General but he is away on one of his frequent temporary absences. If he returns to the House, perhaps you will recognize me for the purpose of asking a question.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DISCONTINUANCE OF VETERANS LAND ACT BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION—REASON FOR ACTION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In recent radio advertisements the statement has been made that Veterans Land Act benefits will be cut off on March 31 of next year. In view of the fact that veterans did not sign up for any specific period of time, will the minister take steps immediately to extend the deadline indefinitely so that the needs of all veterans who have earned and qualify for these benefits can be fully assessed?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this legislation, as well as other legislation of the Department of Veterans Affairs, is always under study.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crouse: Since this program only serves to make money available at cheaper rates for veterans who have earned and qualify for such rates, why is it being discontinued?

[Mr. Harney.]

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): The chief reasons are that these provisions have been in operation for 30 years for second world war veterans and for 20 years for Korean war veterans. Legislation was passed by parliament eleven years ago indicating that this action would be taken. It was pretty well accepted across the country, and if any change is necessary it will be determined.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact that some 125,000 have been certified as qualifying under the Veterans Land Act, and in view of the fact it is expected that only 5,000 will benefit, will the minister take a humane approach and review the administration of the legislation to give all veterans the benefits under the act?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): As the hon. member realizes, the legislation was passed by parliament and we have to deal with it. We have no right at this time to deviate from the legislation as it stands.

Mr. Fraser: You can change the law.

* * *

LABOUR RELATIONS

STRIKE AT WHITESHELL ATOMIC ENERGY PLANT—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact a crippling strike by tradesmen at the Whiteshell Atomic Energy Commission installation at Pinawa, Manitoba, has been going on for more than a month, can the minister indicate what action he has taken in order to bring about meaningful negotiations between the company and the employees involved?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that this dispute has gone through full conciliation and the conciliation board process. After the report of the conciliation board, strike action was taken in September, as the hon. member has indicated. We have had mediators endeavouring to bring the parties together to effect a settlement. I am renewing those efforts today and will continue to do so during the course of next week.

* * *

ENERGY

WHITESHELL ATOMIC ENERGY PLANT—POSSIBLE CUTBACKS IN RESEARCH AS RESULT OF STRIKE

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the disrupting strike that has been going on, and in view of the widespread feelings at the Whiteshell installation that there will be cutbacks in the research program due to the strike, can the minister indicate what position his department is taking in respect of any expansion of existing or projected research projects in the Whiteshell installation at Pinawa?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, with regard to Whiteshell in particular I would have to take that question as notice and respond in detail to the hon. gentleman.

* * *

FINANCE

ENTRY OF CHASE MANHATTAN AND FIRST NATIONAL BANKS INTO CANADA—ACTION TO MAINTAIN CANADIAN CONTROL OF FINANCIAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the announcement that the Chase Manhattan Bank is about to begin operations in this country and as this follows upon an announcement earlier that the First National Bank of Chicago is now active in Canada, is the minister contemplating stronger rules and regulations regarding foreign ownership which would keep financial activities in this country under Canadian control?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are reviewing that very carefully. We are also reviewing the fact that Canadian banks now hold about a quarter of their assets abroad.

Mr. Nystrom: As a supplementary question I should like to ask the minister whether or not he is monitoring the activities of these foreign near-banks, as they might be called, so as to determine what impact they will have on Canadian monetary and fiscal policy?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is a little hard to trace the source and application of funds. We do monitor the source of funds in the sense that we know the volume coming across both ways month by month and week by week.

* * *

FOOD PRICES

ALLEGED LACK OF RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN PRICE OF BEEF AND PRICE OF CATTLE—FAILURE OF REVIEW BOARD TO ACT

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that Canada, and Ontario in particular, has been the recipient of abnormal shipments of live cattle, can the minister assure the House that he has contacted the Food Prices Review Board as to why they have not shown more concern regarding the fact that beef prices have not come down in accordance with live purchase prices?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that this question relates more to the responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture, but I would be happy to see that the hon. member's remarks are brought to the attention of the board.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: What nonsense!

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

COLLINS BAY—ESCAPE OF FOUR INMATES—POSSIBLE COLLUSION WITH CRIMINALS OUTSIDE INSTITUTION

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General a question. In view of a report that the body of an escaped inmate from Collins Bay penitentiary was found on Wednesday trussed in a blanket on the banks of a river in western Ontario, with several bullet holes in the torso, and in view of the apparent organized way in which the escape by four inmates was made last weekend, has the Solicitor General made any attempts to discover whether the escape involved collusion with criminals outside the institution?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, once the escape was discovered we took every step to alert the police forces, the Ontario provincial police, RCMP and so on, about the escape. They have been investigating it ever since, and they are considering the aspect which has been brought to my attention by the hon. member.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PAROLE ACT—SUGGESTED MEETING OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON BILL

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): In view of the way in which some inmates wait for the Parole Board to assist them in leaving institutions in view of the backlog of applications to the National Parole Board for the granting of parole and day parole, and in view of the minister's desire for speedy passage of the bill amending the Parole Act, what steps has the minister taken to obtain a meeting of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to deal with this bill which is now ready to be discussed by it?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Yesterday afternoon I spoke to certain members who have responsibility for the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and suggested that they call the committee as soon as possible to deal with that bill.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—POSSIBLE CO-OPERATION OF CHINA IN SECURING RELEASE OF POLITICAL PRISONERS

Mr. Ed Nelson (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the obvious success of the Prime Minister's trip to China and the improved relations resulting therefrom, is the minister in a position to say whether our two governments will now be ready to work together in renewed efforts to secure the release of political prisoners in both South and North Viet Nam?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is our desire that political prisoners in both North and South Viet Nam be released. I would assume, however, that the Chinese government would not support the idea that there are political prisoners in North Viet Nam.

* * *

● (1230)

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

RECOMMENDATIONS OF NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN REGARDING BENEFITS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. A letter to the minister on January 12, 1973, from the President of the Newfoundland Fishermen, Food and Allied Workers Union made certain recommendations with respect to unemployment insurance benefits for fishermen. Can the minister tell the House what action he is taking on this, and what are the prospects of having these changes made?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, subsequent to the receipt of that letter,—I do not recall the exact date but some time in the spring of this year—the president of the union referred to attended a meeting arranged by me with the Chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and one or two other officials. I think the general feeling or consensus—and here I do not want to misinterpret the views of the leader of the union—was that this particular proposal would not be the most suitable one. Since that time a number of negotiations have been taking place with a view to reaching an alternative formula. As recently as yesterday the Minister of the Environment and I had another meeting, which will be followed next week by a further meeting with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration when he returns from his visit to western Canada, to see what kind of formula can be devised.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MANPOWER MINISTER CONCERNING UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION—POSSIBLE NEW PLANS TO COPE WITH UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the startling and disconcerting increases in unemployment revealed in the last statistical reports, with which I am sure he is familiar, can he indicate whether the Minister of Manpower and Immigration was stating government policy during his swing in western Canada over the last couple of days when he said employment is good where it counts and is only poor in terms of opportunities in certain regions for young people?

[Mr. Nelson.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to refer to the full text of the minister's statement, and perhaps I can give an opinion after that.

Mr. Lundrigan: In view of the fact that unemployment is severely critical among the age group from 14 to 24 years, and in certain regions of the country, on a continuing basis, as has been the case for the past several years, has the Prime Minister any intention of announcing new plans, policies or budgetary provisions in the near future to overcome this particular problem?

Mr. Trudeau: The matter is under consideration. I have no announcement to make this morning, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

TRADE

PULP—DISCUSSION OF POSSIBLE PURCHASES BY CHINESE WITH PRIME MINISTER DURING VISIT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In his negotiations with the Chinese did he indicate that the government might be willing to assist the Chinese in purchasing pulp from Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question of forest products was discussed in some detail and, as I indicated in my statement, one of the subjects which will be discussed, in an early exchange of visitors from both countries, will be that of the forest industries.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

DATE OF PUBLICATION OF REGULATIONS UNDER AERONAUTICS ACT—PROPORTION OF COST OF SECURITY TO BE BORNE BY AIRLINES

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can he tell us when the regulations with regard to Bill C-128 are to be published or, failing that, can he tell us now what portion of the cost of security will be borne by the airlines?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): So far as the last part of the question is concerned, Mr. Speaker, this is something which has to be decided by cabinet. I have had a memorandum prepared for that purpose, so I hope that very soon we will know what kind of proposal we are going to make to the airlines. So far as the first part of the question regarding the regulations is concerned, I hope that we will have the regulations prepared in a few weeks and will then be in a position to discuss them.

TRADE

FOREST PRODUCTS—POLICY OF GOVERNMENT ON EXPORT OF PROCESSED PRODUCTS AS OPPOSED TO PULP

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Is it the policy of the government to encourage the export of pulp and not to insist on the export only of processed forest products like paper, liner boards and things of that nature?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at least in my presence the export of pulp as such was not discussed with the Chinese. As I indicated, the first step will be a visiting delegation which will look at the total subject of the forest industries. It will be on that occasion that we will reiterate our policy of ensuring that we export products in as finished a state of production as possible.

* * *

HEALTH

ALCOHOLISM—FEDERAL MEASURES TO COMBAT

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Having in mind the fact that federal revenue from alcohol now exceeds $1 million a day whereas federal expenditures on combating alcoholism run at the rate of about one-tenth of one per cent of that figure, what steps is the department taking or considering in an effort to combat what the LeDain Commission termed Canada's greatest drug problem, alcoholism?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is quite appropriate to try to equate revenues and expenditures of the government in such an instance. If that were done there would be nothing left to carry on the other programs of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

* * *

AIRPORTS

VICTORIA INTERNATIONAL—ALLEGED LAY-OFF OF FIREFIGHTERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, and possibly to the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence if it is true that his ministry or the Ministry of Transport has sent out lay-off notices to almost half of the firefighters at the Victoria International Airport?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not want to be difficult, but I am sure the hon. member knows it is not correct procedure to ask a minister to confirm or deny a report. The question could easily be asked directly. We will assume it has been asked directly. The hon. member may complete it.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Have notices been sent out to almost half the firefighters at the airport, following the decision to phase out the anti-submarine squadron from that airfield and, if so, how does the minister expect safety and fire protection services to be provided at that airport?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, before answering the question I will have to verify the facts. This is the first time I have heard about it.

* * *

HEALTH

AMPHETAMINES—REGULATION OF PRESCRIPTIONS—REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION WITH MEDICAL BODIES

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare and arises from the recent announcement regarding regulations governing the prescribing of amphetamines and other related stimulants. In view of the fact the decision to impose controls in the first instance was not a subject for debate, and in view of the fact that this unprecedented unilateral action by the government infringed on the prescribing rights of physicians and reflected on their professional integrity, would the minister indicate if he is now prepared to discuss with responsible medical bodies or with the House the fundamental issue of the prescribing rights of physicians?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I certainly will not accept the prelude to the question, or the implications and assumptions behind it. The one main fact is that, thanks to the regulations that were enacted, there was something like a 90 per cent reduction in the consumption of amphetamines during the period concerned. So far as discussion of this problem with the proper medical bodies is concerned, there was indeed discussion before the regulations were enacted as there was discussion when the regulations were amended. So far as discussion with this House is concerned, I will be pleased to discuss the matter at any time with the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs when it meets and has the estimates of my department under consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order relating to the question I posed yesterday and again today with respect to a statement by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs about government policy with regard to food prices, and the intimation on the part of the minister that he had no knowledge of such a statement. He requested in a note that I identify it. I wonder if I could have consent of the House to table the document?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that he cannot table documents. The Standing Orders do not make it possible for private members to table documents. Orders of the day.

Capital Punishment

Mr. Frank: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I am the first one to recognize my lack of knowledge of the House rules. However, I would suggest to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that he should be a little more subtle in passing the buck, because I am sure the Minister of Agriculture was not the one who started the board. I believe my question is a very important one which the consumers of Canada are asking of their members of parliament and of everybody else.

● (1240)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

REINSTATEMENT OF LAW RELATING TO CAPITAL PUNISHMENT THAT EXISTED PRIOR TO DECEMBER 30, 1972

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General) moved that Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens).

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I believe the voting in this House last night on the amendment to this bill shows very vividly that whether we like it or not, this bill is going to be pushed through by the government.

Mr. Reid: Not true!

An hon. Member: Ask your leader.

Mr. Stevens: I point out in this connection that not only can we take the actual vote, in which there was only a handful of retentionists from the Liberal side, but we can review the remarks made yesterday by the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) when he was discussing amendments then before the House. As recorded at page 7015 of yesterday's Hansard the minister said:

> The bill before the House is a government bill; it was put forward by the cabinet. Under our constitution, the cabinet is legally the government. This is a cabinet bill, approved by cabinet.

He went on to state:

> —as far as we are concerned it is a free vote, but not for the government, meaning the cabinet.

Mr. Speaker, I emphasize this because I believe that if this House votes in favour of this bill we are taking a step that we will regret in five, and certainly ten, years' time.

Yesterday I referred to the fact that a recent survey conducted by the United Nations reported that very few countries in the word were abolitionist countries. I said that only nine countries could be actually categorized as abolitionist, according to that report. The Solicitor General took exception to that comment and said that he thought it was unfair—I think he used the words "a little misleading"—without indicating that there were other countries that were nearly abolitionist and only had the death penalty for very severe crimes.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Let us put the record straight on this question, Mr. Speaker. If we are going to be out of step with the rest of the world let us understand that we are. The hard fact is that out of 132 member countries in the United Nations, 102, according to the United Nations review, are retentionist. That is, 77.3 per cent of nations belonging to the United Nations are actually retentionist in the sense that they have the death penalty for many ordinary crimes, as well as the crimes referred to by the Solicitor General yesterday.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Stevens: Yes.

Mr. Allmand: How many of those countries have democratically elected governments and parliaments?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I am rather glad that the Solicitor General raised that point because my second line of attack was going to be that I believe this government, in pushing this bill through, is not going along with the democratic wishes of the people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: You forgot to answer the question.

Mr. Reid: What could be more democratic than putting the question into the House of Commons for a free vote?

Mr. Stevens: Surely, Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General has not forgotten the recent Gallup poll which showed that 63 per cent of the people in Canada support the restoration of the death penalty. Before he starts pointing his finger at other countries, and questioning whether they are democratic, I believe at some stage he should be willing to tell the people of Canada why he went against their wishes.

The general tone of the government's position on this bill, Mr. Speaker, has been that we should join the more Liberal ranks, the far-sighted ranks, and that we are doing something that is generally accepted throughout the world. However, I believe that the figures I have given demonstrate that is not true. Not only is it not true, Mr. Speaker, but I think it is interesting to review what is happening in certain countries that have removed the death penalty or partially removed it.

The United Kingdom is often mentioned by the government as a country that has abolished the death penalty and they suggest that we should follow its example. But yesterday I commented that in the United Kingdom there are serious second thoughts about the matter. I would also point out that at the recent Conservative conference in that country the matter was raised and, by a vote of 1,404 in favour and 1,228 against, the motion was carried for the restoration of the death penalty.

The United Kingdom is not the only country showing a definite trend back to the death penalty. Our nearest neighbour, the United States, is having serious misgivings concerning the abolitionist stance in many of the states and of the federal jurisdiction itself. Last week I had an opportunity to attend a conference in Washington, D.C. which was called to consider peace in the world. I think it is most significant that I was warned not to risk walking the streets of Washington alone at night. I was told that if I were to walk from the conference hall to my hotel for example, I stood a 50-50 chance of being mugged. That is the atmosphere of which I believe this government is not properly cognizant.

There is, to a certain extent, a rising trend of violence and murder. I think it is interesting to look at the situation in the state of California which has a population approximately equal to that of Canada. That state experimented with abolition of the death penalty for murder. It is interesting to note that, unlike this government, the state of California decided to ask the people for their verdict on whether the death penalty should be restored. In the referendum conducted last year, the people voted by approximately 57 per cent to restore the death penalty in that state.

● (1250)

In this connection I will be interested to know if the Solicitor General has actively discussed with his counterparts of the governments of the various states of the United States of America, and with his counterpart in the federal government of the United States, the concerns and attitudes respecting the continuation or restoration of the death penalty in that country. I say that because I think it might be interesting to review some testimony given by the Attorney General of the State of California. He testified before the legislature of the state in support of a bill for restoring the death penalty. For example, the Attorney General was asked, "Is the death penalty a deterrent?" His reply was:

Yes. The rise in the homicide rate during the last ten years, the experience of jurists and persons in law enforcement, and common sense indicate that it is.

Then, he broke his answer into three separate parts. Dealing with homicide, he pointed out that from 1956 to 1962, there were between five and eleven executions per year in California. During that time the wilful homicide rate fluctuated between 3.5 and 3.7 wilful homicides per 100,000 persons. Then, he said that since 1962, when the courts effectively abolished the death penalty in California, with the exception of one execution in 1967, the wilful homicide rate in California increased to 8.7 wilful homicides per 10,000 persons. I mention these figures because it is alarming to note that the same trends have appeared in Canada as a result of the death penalty not being imposed for murder. As I said when speaking during the second reading debate on this bill, murder statistics for Canada for 1971 demonstrate that the rate of murder in this country has more than doubled since 1956 and now stands at 2.4 per 100,000 persons.

The Attorney General of California went on to point out that jurists and law enforcement officials have repeatedly come into contact with individuals who have stated that they did not carry a weapon, or that they carried an unloaded weapon, because of fear of the death penalty. He then mentioned that he felt it is just common sense to accept that the death penalty is a deterrent. He testified that this inference is substantiated by the fact that in 1960 there was one robbery-murder for every 300 robberies, while in 1972 the rate had increased to one robbery-murder for every 200 robberies.

The state of California chose to ask the people of the state what they desired with respect to the restoration of the death penalty. The people voted overwhelmingly in favour of the restoration of the death penalty. According to the returns on Proposition 17, the title given to the referendum, 5,386,904 Californians said, "Return to death penalty", whereas 2,591,547 persons said, "Do not restore it". That proportion supporting the restoration of the death penalty in California, I suggest, is very similar to the proportion of people in Canada, who would favour the restoration of the death penalty.

I have already referred to the Gallup poll of Canada which last year indicated that 63 per cent of the people in this country favoured the restoration of the death penalty. It is interesting to note that the percentage in favour of restoration last year was substantially higher than the percentage which was in favour of restoring the death penalty in 1966. At that time only 53 per cent asked for the death penalty to be retained, whereas it is clear that the percentage in favour of retention has risen by 10 per cent in the intervening five or six years.

The government ought to take cognizance of what the people of Canada are asking. Why can we not trust the people, and at least delay the railroading of this bill through Parliament, so that the law may be restored to its former status or left as it is at present. In the next election, which hopefully will come soon, the people of Canada, in addition to voting for those who are to represent them in this House, could also be asked to vote on the question of the continuation or abolition of capital pubishment in this country.

It is unfortunate that we in this country tend to react rather than give leadership. Surely, we do not need to wait until other countries in the world restore the death penalty before finding ourselves totally out of step. I feel I am representing my constituents well when I support the restoration of the death penalty in Canada. I took it upon myself to ascertain the wishes of my constituents, and I polled them. I point out that 89.4 per cent of those responding to that poll we conducted in York-Simcoe asked for the death penalty to be restored or retained.

If we vote in support of this bill today, we will regret it in future years. I urge members of the House either not to vote in support of the bill or, perhaps better still, if they support it, to change their vote, so that we are not put into the position in which criminals of this country will begin to regard the death penalty as the ultimate punishment to which they can be subjected if they do not obey the laws of the land.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): One o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

Capital Punishment

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, prior to the luncheon break I was saying that I felt the government, in sponsoring this bill, was out of step with many of the countries of the world and that in fact we were not taking a lead in going the way many abolitionist countries and states in the United States are tending to go, that is back to the institution of the death penalty.

Referring to the state of California, I think it is interesting to note that not only have they had a plebiscite which indicated by 67.5 per cent that the public in California felt the death penalty should be restored, but that state in fact brought in legislation that goes surprisingly far in restoring the death penalty for various crimes. I wish to summarize the crimes for which the state of California now imposes capital punishment as a result of a recent bill introduced in that House. One point that is made is that the death penalty should be for those killers and those crimes on which California juries actually and unconditionally returned death verdicts. Their bill provides that the basis for the death verdict must be first, that a homicide has been committed, that the killer has been sentenced to death and that he must have personally caused the act which caused the death, unless he contracted for the murder.

It is interesting to note that in the courts of California the process for the handling of murder trials is significantly different. It is a two level type of trial in which the man is found guilty or not guilty at the first level. If he is found guilty, there is an entirely new trial to determine if the facts dictate the mandatory imposition of the death penalty.

The California act will apply first to first degree murder if the victim is a peace officer and, second, if the victim was a witness to the crime and killed to prevent his testimony. The California governing officials have found instances where a person charged with a crime has admitted that he killed his victim because he realized the victim could testify against him. He knew there was no worse punishment in the then existing laws of California if he killed the man compared with the punishment for whatever crime he had committed. To cover that, the state has now provided for the death penalty where the victim was a witness to the crime and was killed in order to prevent him testifying against the accused.

California has also instituted the death penalty in the case of a multiple murder or of a person who has prior murder convictions. It has been instituted where there has been a history of two or more separate convictions for violent criminal conduct. If there is a first degree murder, they have instituted it if the accused was killed by torture. Finally, it is instituted in the case of first degree murder if it is felt that the accused is not rehabilitable and there are no mitigating circumstances.

In addition, the California act applies where a prisoner under life sentence kills another. It applies to skyjacking if any victim of the skyjacking should die. It applies to kidnapping for ransom, robbery, etc., if the victim dies. Finally, the act in California applies if a train wrecker causes victims to die as a result of a train derailment or the wrecking of some mode of transportation. I remind hon. members that the state of California has found it necessary to institute such a wide return to the death penalty because, as the Attorney General indicated that, although a few short years ago he was an abolitionist, it was believed that the abolitionist stand resulted in a significantly higher homicide rate in that state than existed in prior years. I would remind hon. members of the facts that he brought out. In 1963, the homicide rate in California was 3.8 per 100,000 population, while in 1971 it had reached 8.1 per 100,000 population. As I indicated earlier today, by 1972 the rate had gone even higher in that state.

[Mr. Speaker.]

● (1410)

In short, the people of California asked that something be done. They were given an opportunity to reflect their wishes in the plebiscite to which I referred earlier. Sixty seven and a half per cent of them said the state should restore the death penalty, and the state legislature has met their wishes.

However, the government of Canada has refused to acknowledge the popular will of the vast majority of Canadians concerning the same subject. I believe that when we consider this matter we should realize that, while it is nice to take trips to China, to Russia and to certain other Communist countries, we will not find in those countries the lenient attitude towards the death penalty which this government feels is the proper attitude to take in Canada.

Mr. Allmand: You would like to copy them?

Mr. Stevens: In a lead story by the Associated Press from Moscow, which appeared in the Toronto Star in May of 1973, it is disclosed that the Soviet Union has the highest rate of executions of any of the industrialized countries of the world. A Soviet court can stand a person before a firing squad even for endangering the life of a policeman. The article states:

> In little more than two years since September, 1970, at least 24 Soviet citizens were reported shot for crimes ranging from profiteering to rape. In addition, at least 34 were hunted down by special secret police squads and executed as World War II collaborators or nationalist partisans.

The article points out that hundreds of thousands of people over the last 50 years or so have been executed in the Soviet Union, sometimes virtually without even a trial. I mention this because, living as we do in a democracy with our great freedom, we must always be aware we can only preserve this freedom, both within the nation and externally, if we are on our guard. I believe the people of Canada have a right to expect that they may go about their business and other affairs in the safe knowledge that they are free from the threat of violent crime and certainly from murder. I believe that leaving the death penalty on our statute books for those who commit what we feel might be the most heinous of crimes is a deterrent to those who would challenge the freedoms of you, Mr. Speaker, me, every member of the House and the people of Canada who wish to go on their way without feeling their lives are in danger.

In taking the stand it has on this bill, I feel the government must make clear to the Canadian public at the present time, and I hope during the coming election, that over the last few years it has failed to accept its responsibility for instituting not only the death penalty but for seeing to it that, if a person is found guilty after proper court proceeding and is sentenced to death, the penalty is carried out. The government's habit of commuting death sentences has reached the point where it has virtually made it a certainty that no one will hang, despite the law of the land, and has brought our whole judicial system a disrespect that I feel is unfortunate. The people of Canada and, judging from the figures I have cited, people throughout the world, are expecting a return to law and order. This government is not contributing to bringing law and order to this country by pushing Bill C-2, and I certainly intend to vote against it on third reading.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief in my remarks, since I do not think there is very much that can be added to this long, and I think about to become tedious, debate. I should like to say that as a new member in this House I was very proud to be in the House last night when the majority of members who had considered this issue elected to continue this country on its road to progress in the 20th century rather than take a step back into a less civilized and less humane society.

I am urged to rise to my feet because the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) continues to argue, as the main thesis in his proposal for the retention of the death penalty, that Canada is out of step with the world. I hope the hon. member is not speaking as a potential minister of external affairs in a government that his party might form. Surely, it has been Canada's traditional role to lead the world, particularly in the area of humanity and decency.

Let me deal with this issue of how the majority of the people of this country think. Gallup polls would probably show that the majority of people in this country favour retention of capital punishment. I want to tell the hon. member for York-Simcoe that I have another poll showing that 50 per cent of the people of this country want to take over and nationalize the natural resources of this country. Would the hon. member change his view on that subject in view of that poll? I would doubt it. I think Burke said it for all of us when he said that the traditions of this House are that our constituents are entitled to the best judgment of their member. I think they respect the best judgment of the hon. members of this House.

Mr. Stevens: Do not forget that Burke was defeated at the next election.

Mr. Leggatt: Yes, I was aware that Burke was defeated following the magnificent speech that he gave. I do not know whether that was the issue on which he was defeated, but as I have indicated before I am happy to go back to my electorate and run on the basis of the decision I have taken. I explained it before I ran in the last election, and I have explained it since. I believe that once this issue, which has been blown out of all proportion in this country, is considered and dealt with, those of us who vote for abolition will all come back here. The public will understand that there are issues other than capital punishment which are of concern to them.

● (1420)

What would happen if the proponents of retention win the vote on the particular issue? Of course, one can say there is still the prerogative of mercy. Well, you know how that prerogative works? I will tell you how that prerogative worked. If the murderer was a well-known person in the community or the son of a well-known person, then the telegrams and the petitions started to pour into the Cabinet. Those with power and those with influence had their sentences commuted. But if a lonely Indian on a reserve had killed his wife, or if the convicted man happened to be a friendless individual in this society, the prerogative of mercy would probably not be exercised. So, the prerogative of mercy is necessarily a discriminatory thing. And the law is very imperfect, too, in the way in which people are convicted. Those with money and those with very good counsel have a far better chance of being acquitted in the courts of this land. So when society exercises the death penalty it will be exercising it in an extremely discriminatory and, of necessity, unfair manner.

I do not intend to say very much more on this subject. I cannot conceive of a country like Canada, which has led the world in many ways, particularly in the United Nations in taking positions in the world which enhance world peace, taking this kind of step backwards. I think we are going to say something about the society in which we live if we make an election to bring the death penalty fully back into this country and, make no mistake, I am sure this would be the effect of a vote defeating the bill before the House at this time.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe has insisted that we are out of step with the society we are in; he has insisted we are out of step with the world community—like South Africa, I suppose, and like Russia and China. I ask him to reconsider. I ask him to let Canada be a country that gives leadership to the world in terms not only of progressing within our own society but of persuading others to progress to a civilized and humane state.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise in the debate on third reading of Bill C-2. I already made my views known in the debate on second reading and the amendments which were introduced; in the few minutes at my disposal this afternoon I would like to give a few new arguments in further support of the position that was mine during all the debates that took place in the last several years and particularly the position taken in the constituency I represent.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the people in my riding as well as in the province of Quebec and Canada in general are concerned with the increasing rise in crime in Canada. Not only are we experiencing a rapid increase in the rate of unemployment, the rate of inflation, but also a simultaneous increase in the number of crimes in Canada, and that is of great concern to the population. It seems that the softening of our laws and the tendency of federal and provincial authorities in matters of justice and crime repression have in a certain way promoted the rise in crime in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I was completely baffled when I read the evidence given on April 27, 1972, before the Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs by Mr. Justice Ciale of the Criminology Centre of the University of Ottawa where he stated that in 1967, according to the last comprehensive statistics available, 1,229,000 crimes were committed in Canada. Of course, those are not murders, Mr. Speaker, but crimes and the figure of 1,229,000 must be considered seriously. Those are crimes made known to police departments; how many others were not reported, how many others are in a certain way legalized? We are sometimes inclined to say that the worst criminals are not always behind bars.

Mr. Speaker, in his testimony Mr. Ciale said the following and I quote:

—with approximately 7,000 inmates in the penitentiary who have gone through the entire criminal justice system including the corrections stream. This is approximately one-fifth of one per cent in terms of crimes committed. So we have over one million crimes, but only about 7,000 people wind up in Canadian penitentiaries.

Mr. Speaker, a very small number of criminals are punished and I feel more and more strongly that they know it. I also believe that police authorities may have had orders not to search too much for criminals for if they were all arrested, we would have no place for them. And although we recently built prisons that look very much like palaces, it remains that the available space is nevertheless limited and the prospect of having to provide for prisoners' needs is disturbing for Canadian taxpayers.

We say that the big criminal or murderer doe not start at the top; he begins with larceny. If he is not punished, he gets worse and worse.

I was reading reports from the United States. For instance, in the March 7, 1973 edition of La Presse, one can read the following, and I quote:

The legislative assemblies of two thirds of the 50 states of the United States of America are considering the establishment of capital punishment and in four other states, the legislators already passed laws to restore capital punishment.

The United States Supreme Court decided last July, with respect to cases concerning Georgia and Texas, that capital punishment, as applied in most states, was unconstitutional. The ruling that was passed, the vote being five against four, nevertheless leaves the door open for the establishment of capital punishment, provided that the latter be uniformly applied.

An Associated Press survey shows that the capital punishment issue has been brought up in nearly all states. Most of the projects being considered maintain the death penalty for the murder of a police officer or a fireman, a murder during a plane hijacking, and various other types of murders, including murder committed during another criminal action.

This shows, Mr. Speaker, that legislators and police officials in the United States are concerned about the rise in the crime rate and are studying the possibility of taking action to rectify the situation.

In the newspaper La Presse of September 7, 1973—which is not that long ago—Mr. Jean Pochet wrote as follows, and I quote:

In 1972, there were 18,520 murders committed in the United States (900 more than in 1971), and 54 percent were committed by means of handguns. One hundred and eight policemen were shot with firearms. Nearly 100,000 people were threatened with a handgun, and 245,000 armed robberies were committed.

To this first group of figures, let us quickly add a second one. Each year, 1,800,000 Americans purchase a handgun. The national figure for handguns is about 30 million. To which we must add more than 60 million guns of all sizes.

Nearly one out of every two Americans has the means to kill his family, his neighbours, a stranger or himself. In the single week between March 4 and 11, 1973, 325 people were killed. The victims were wives, husbands, children, lovers, robbers, robbed people, policemen on duty. As a whole, 40 per cent more than in 1969!

● (1430)

A visit to a psychiatrist in the United States often costs $40 while the purchase of a hand gun only amounts to $8.

Therefore, for a hare-brained American, it is less expensive to revenge himself than to use another means to understand a situation. This is what is happening in our neighbors' country, but at home, it is not so different, proportionally.

In the Montréal-Matin of September 21, 1973, it is reported that a murder was committed and that the murderer had killed the wrong person. That is too much! One does not even care to ensure that he is going to kill the right person. And in the case I have just referred to, it was the 32nd murder in that city this year. People kill because the hot dog they are served is not hot enough; they kill for almost any reason; they shoot on all sides, it has become a real jungle.

Then, Mr. Speaker, no wonder the Canadian people are increasingly concerned about this situation. And we are right to be concerned as well and to take the necessary steps in order to correct this situation and stop the crime upsurge. We must try to find out the causes of this situation but in the meanwhile, if we amend the Juvenile Delinquents Act, I sincerely think we are to blame. We don't care enough about the situation and despite some efforts, we have still an enormous task in this respect. And we make our young people believe by all sorts of means that once their studies are finished, they will get all opportunities to earn their living. But after their studies they find they have been misled because we cannot give them what we promised. In many instances, they cannot find a job in the trade or profession of their choice. Discouraged, they have to find another way to earn their living, but it is not always a good one.

Recently in my area, we witnessed a murder which disturbed the public opinion. A well-known and esteemed man owned a little business profitable enough to make a living. One evening, two young people who preferred to live by theft and rapine, came to rob him of his money but because he had the courage to defend himself, he was murdered.

Today, this happens everywhere. It starts with a theft and when people offer some resistance they are murdered or shot. Mr. Speaker, I think we must put an end to this situation and make potential criminals understand that if they want capital punishment abolished, they must begin by refraining from committing crimes.

Mr. Speaker, I think that we should restore the death penalty not for any case, but to punish capital murder, according to the provisions of the 1961 amendments. In my opinion, the danger of making a mistake is rather remote.

Thanks to justice and the appeal procedures, the accused can use every means to defend himself. When it has been shown that a murder was premeditated and committed in cold blood, we should then impose the death penalty so that at least the individuals concerned will know what are the risks by doing so. I sincerely think, Mr. Speaker, that the people will feel protected by the passage of a legislation. Such is their wishes and their will.

[English]

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, during this protracted debate more evidence has been put forward by those who favour the bill and those who oppose it. What I should like to do this afternoon is not simply repeat what has already been outlined but rather deal with certain basic arguments advanced by those who support Bill C-2, arguments which I suggest lack fundamental logic. They are inconsistent. They do not ring true. They are not convincing to the people of Canada and should not convince members of the Parliament of Canada.

The first is the question raised by those who advocate abolition under the guise of this bill which does not abolish the death penalty but restricts it to certain crimes, namely the murder of a police officer or the murder of a prison guard. These people ask what good would the death penalty do the victim. We might very well ask the Solicitor-General (Mr. Allmand) what good the death penalty for the murder of a police officer or prison guard will do any victim. That is the question which arises. If it is a logical question for him to ask what good would the death penalty do the victim of any homicide, why then does he bring into the House a bill that provides for the death penalty of the murderer of a prison guard or police officer? He asks us to support something which, in his thinking, does not do any good.

● (1440)

Mr. Allmand: Right.

Mr. Stackhouse: Oh, then he believes he is wrong. Right is wrong. That is an example of the double talk which you get from this minister and, indeed, from the government in general. The point is that there is no death penalty that can be devised which would do any good for the victim. It is not logical to say: let us abolish the death penalty because it does nothing for the victim, and at the same time not abolish any death penalty. What good does it do the victim to incarcerate the murderer in a penitentiary? Is the NDP advocating that we abolish the penitentiary services? The point is that the death penalty would not only be a punishment of the murderer but a demonstration of society's abhorrence of the crime of murder, and society's serious concern about this threat to public security. Society would be saying to the family of the survivors of the homicide act that we share with them in the devastation, in the tragedy that they have suffered, and we show our abhorrence by demanding that he who has callously taken the life of another shall be prepared to forfeit his own.

I suggest that, as we are practising the law in Canada, we are not demonstrating that to the families and loved ones of the victims of murder. We are sending murderers into penitentiaries, not for a life sentence—we use the term "life sentence" in a euphemistic way meaning that we will send them there for ten years before letting them out on parole—but for a much shorter time after which they can be permitted to go out on temporary absence or day parole. It is possible for a murderer, after a short time in penitentiary, to be allowed out on a temporary absence or day parole so that he can go to university at public expense and enjoy the life of a university student, the life of a campus community. At the same time, however, the family and survivors of the victim of his homicidal act are deprived of the one who was their breadwinner, their father, their husband, the one who was the guardian of the home. That is the attitude that we are showing as a society. That is what we are saying to the family of a policeman struck down by a murderer. We are saying that we will not do anything more to the murderer than give him the opportunity to advance himself.

I submit to you that when we ask the question what good does it do the victim, we should be asking: what good will any penalty do? We have to have a penalty that will demonstrate to the whole of society, as well as to the criminal element, that society has this kind of abhorrence for the crime of murder.

The second point that has been made in this debate by a number of speakers is that they cannot support capital punishment because they believe that life is sacred. This has certainly been a strong point strongly made. But if we believe it consistently, we should ask ourselves: how is it that we vote for Bill C-2 which provides at least the legislative authority for the capital punishment of the murderers of prison guards and police officers. If we are opposed to capital punishment in principle so that we deny the right of the state ever to take a life, how can we possibly, consistently and logically support this bill?

Moreover, how can we support many of the other measures that we endorse in parliament which lead, at least potentially, to the possibility of the state taking human life? How can we support a budget in excess of $2 billion for the armed forces which have the potential for taking human life on a grand scale? We are concerned about the principle involved in the possible taking of life of one, two, three, four or five murderers, but here we are supporting the equipment of the armed forces which could take thousands of lives. Similarly, how is it that we support arming the police forces across this country, all of them having the potential for taking life in the line of duty and in the interests of protecting society? How can we support putting shotguns into the hands of prison guards on the perimeter walls and on the watch towers? How can we give them the means by which they can take the life of an escaping inmate for the great crime of attempting escape from an institution? I am not suggesting that any prison guard would deliberately take the life of an escapee, but it certainly could happen with the use of a shotgun. We would say that, should it happen, a guard would certainly be excused the act since it was committed in the line of duty.

If we are thus supporting all these things—and I think it is right that we as parliament should support them—are we not saying that the state has the right and the authority under the circumstances to take life? It seems to me that we are logical and consistent only if we take the thoroughgoing pacifist position of saying that the state never has the right under any circumstances to take life. Then, we have to ask serious questions about the state's right to take life in other circumstances, namely in time of war or in the exercise of a policeman's duty.

A third argument that has been advanced in this debate is that capital punishment is too extreme a penalty for society to exact because the courts, being human, are fallible—judges make mistakes and juries make mistakes. There is always the danger of the innocent being convicted and executed. I find this to be a very strong argument. I must say that I am deeply impressed by the need for society to take the utmost care that no innocent person be convicted of a crime and sentenced to death.

However, let us recognize certain other aspects of this point. It shows, not the need to abolish capital punishment, but the need to have an adequate appeal court system, one in which there is ready access to the highest courts of the land so that any person convicted of a capital crime will be able to appeal that sentence and have the trial reviewed in such a way that the highest courts of the land will be satisfied that he had a truly fair hearing when his trial was conducted. It shows, secondly, the need for having some provision for non-capital murder so that any acts of homicide will not lead to a charge of capital murder, unless there is no doubt about the guilt of the person convicted of that murder. Where there is any doubt, certainly where there is any reasonable doubt because a conviction would rest upon circumstantial evidence, there should be provisions for non-capital murder so that the person, if convicted unjustly, would not be executed but would still have the opportunity to have that sentence reversed.

I am saying these things should be, but I recognize, as do all hon. members, that we already have these things; we already have an appeal court system. We already have legal aid throughout the land so that any citizen can have access to the highest courts. We already have provision in the Criminal Code for non-capital murder. In recommending to the House that Bill C-2 be defeated, we are not asking that capital punishment be provided for in the Criminal Code but rather that we return to the 1961 system in which a distinction was made between capital and non-capital murder. At that time a capital murder charge was reserved for those acts of homicide where the evidence led one to believe that the accused committed murder willfully, and with some premeditation.

● (1450)

Under that system we recognized the desirability of having the charge of non-capital murder brought against the accused in cases where there was some doubt, or where the presumption of guilt rested on circumstantial evidence; where there was no premeditation, where homicide took place as the result of an impulsive action, the so-called crime of passion.

The further argument brought before us is that capital punishment does not deter. The evidence for saying this rests on the fact that in the states where capital punishment is part of the legal system there are still murders. I point out that those states represent most of the member nations of the United Nations. That argument is brought forward by many abolitionists as though it were a great revelation, as though it were the final argument to be made, as though there were nothing more to be said. The point we must recognize is that regardless of what penalty we have for murder, or for that matter for any other crime, there will always be some instances of the crime being committed.

[Mr. Stackhouse.]

If it is logical to say that we are going to abolish capital punishment because in countries where it exists people still commit murders, we could use the same argument to say that we are going to abolish penitentiaries, simply because in our country people are still robbing banks and committing other crimes. People have been committing these crimes for years, and have not been deterred from committing them by prison sentences.

We are submitting that capital punishment has validity since some people are deterred from committing homicide because of the presence of the capital punishment threat in the Criminal Code. We are also suggesting that the growth of the rate of homicide in Canada since the de facto abolition of capital punishment is evidence of the contrary being the result, that capital punishment is in effect a deterrent, and that the lack of capital punishment is one reason why crimes of violence and homicide have increased and are increasing in our country.

A further argument put forward on this matter is that society is at fault, and that we should not bring down upon a single, helpless victim of social ills the final, supreme penalty of capital punishment. If I recall correctly, in his opening address on this bill the Solicitor General said that every murder represents a failure by society. This is an example of the kind of double talk that is permeating our whole thinking today.

Hon. members will recall the satire written in the late 1940's which visualized the world that was to come in 1984. The society that was to develop by 1984 was to be one in which the meaning of many words would be reversed, so that people would think freedom was slavery, war was peace, and so on. Once again we have an example of that confusion of language and thinking in the way some people are now prepared to suggest that when a murder is committed the murderer is not at fault, but the rest of us are. I suppose that, if we follow that through logically, we should all be punished in some way if we are the ones who are really guilty. But that is not suggested, Mr. Speaker. On the contrary, it is suggested that we should minimize the punishment for the person who committed the act.

I submit that our penitentiary system must rest on the belief in individual responsibility. The responsibility of the individual to give an accounting for his behavior is one of the fundamental beliefs of our society, of any civilized society. Unless the individual is responsible for his behavior, then we really cannot expect a society to have any moral foundation at all. We are submitting that the penitentiary system in Canada ought to have the character of individual responsibility as one of its foundation principles. We ought to say to a murderer who has willfully committed that crime, taking from another his most precious possession, life itself, "You are responsible for what you have done. You, having willfully taken the life of another, must be prepared to forfeit your own."

One of the things that impressed me on recently reading a book called "The Valacchi Papers" was the judgment of some friends of the mafia killer, Joe Valacchi, that "Joe believes everybody is to blame for Joe, except Joe." Are we not saying that over and over again in the way we are modifying, changing and adjusting our attitude to law enforcement? We are saying that everybody is to blame for a crime except the criminal. What we must insist upon once again is the need for society to say to the individual, who in effect is making war upon it, "You are responsible for what you have done."

The debate on Bill C-2, Mr. Speaker, has aroused more public interest than any other debate by parliament in this session. One reason for the widespread interest is that the people of Canada feel profoundly about the significance of the issue before us. The people of Canada are concerned not only with the letter of the legislation before us; they are concerned with the spirit that it expresses. As a parliament, we ought to ponder profoundly the message that is coming to Parliament Hill from every corner of Canada, the message which says that people want a firming up in the administration and enforcement of law.

People look upon this bill as symbolizing the attitude of Canadian society. One reason the majority of people oppose this bill is that it does not represent their attitude to law enforcement. People want a firmer, more just law enforcement than this bill provides. If parliament were really listening to the people of Canada it would resoundingly defeat this bill.

• (1500)

In the course of this debate there is one negative aspect of the discussion that has concerned many of us, and that is the way some members have imputed certain motives and certain deficiencies to others. There has been an easy assumption on the part of some of those who favour Bill C-2 and are thus abolitionists, that those who oppose it are blood-lusting sadists, red-necked, narrow-minded bigots who want revenge. On the other hand, those who have argued against Bill C-2 and are thus considered retentionists, are sometimes inclined to think that those who support it are woolly-minded do-gooders, and so on. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I think that both sides have come to the debate with honest, serious, heart-searching conviction. In this respect it has been a very good debate and expressive of the best character of parliament.

This House cannot take a decision which will satisfy everybody, but a debate which gives the opportunity to all to express their diverse views, as has this one, is a demonstration of the democratic process. I have welcomed the opportunity to address the chamber, and hope that in the course of the next few days a sufficient number of members will reach the decision that we should defeat this bill in order that the people of Canada may believe their parliament is truly and democratically trying to carry out the will of the people, clearly, forcefully and visibly expressed as that will has been.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have already spoken in this chamber on this matter; I have written magazine and newspaper articles on this topic; I have appeared on radio and television programs in support of Bill C-2—and here I am, back for another try. This is not because I enjoy talking with a lower jaw that was recently smashed in a car accident, but because I do not give in easily. I hope, just as fervently as the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse) hopes that he can convert people to his cause, that I can convert one or two people to mine. This is going to be my last shot at it and I hope hon. members will find it a good one.

Earlier this afternoon the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) said he had assumed, on the basis of last night's vote, that the government was not allowing its people a free vote at all and that we were going to have Bill C-2 rammed down our throats. I think he is wrong. I am not worried about any tyranny exercised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or his followers: if any evidence is needed of that, there is the fact of the lunatic amendment to provide capital punishment for murder committed during rape. I do not know how that ever got on the order paper. Apart from the morality involved in the commission of rape, it is one of the most lunatic propositions ever put forward, especially when you consider the burden placed upon the Crown prosecutor to obtain a witness in a case of that nature, the victim having been already killed. I do not think we need to fear tyranny from the government. I think it will be a free vote over there as it certainly will be over here.

If I become any more unpopular in my own caucus for espousing a cause, Mr. Speaker will have to put my chair in the smoking lobby because no one will sit beside me. I am not afraid of the tyranny of the Prime Minister or anyone in this House I am not afraid that the whips are going to be laid on us and that Bill C-2 is going to be rammed down our throats. What I do fear, Mr. Speaker, is the tyranny of the so-called public opinion poll.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reilly: We have seen members of parliament stand in this House, go on radio and television and be interviewed by the media, saying, "I, personally, do not believe in capital punishment. I think it is a terrible thing to take another human life. But I have surveyed my riding, I have sent out a questionnaire and the results are conclusive and overwhelming; the majority of my constituents want capital punishment to be retained and therefore I shall have to vote against Bill C-2 and for the retention of capital punishment in all its aspects."

Mr. Speaker, I say to these people that they are doing one thing and one thing alone: they are putting their consciences up for sale. They are bidding for votes at the next election. If they truly believe that capital punishment is a bad thing, let them have the guts to stand up like men and women, state their positions, vote according to their positions and take the consequences next time the only real ballot that means anything is taken—that is, at the next election. Let them have the courage of their convictions and not hide behind this phony defence of a poll. In many instances the polls that I have seen ask, "Are you opposed, or not opposed, to capital punishment: yes or no?" Not any choice, not any option just—"Do you oppose, or favour, capital punishment: yes or no?" That is it. Those polls are phony, Mr. Speaker. The only poll that counts is the poll taken on election day.

I have been accused of taking the position that I am going to vote against the will of my constituents because I have not taken any poll. I have not consulted my constituents on this matter, and I have no intention of doing so because I consulted them on October 30 last year. On that day last year, 55,024 votes were cast in Ottawa West and all but 245 were cast in favour of candidates who had publicly declared, in a record number of candidate meetings, some on television and radio and all reported in the local press and nationally—I cannot think of a riding in which more interest was shown by the media—and put themselves on record as opposing capital punishment and favouring Bill C-2.

There cannot be any doubt in my mind where my constituents stand on the issue, Mr. Speaker. There was over an 80 per cent turnout at the polls, and those who voted for me voted for a candidate who had publicly pledged himself to support a five-year extension of the legislation in existence, which is the idea that we now see embodied in Bill C-2. My Liberal opponent took the same position, as did my NDP opponent. The only one in favour of doing away with Bill C-2 and reinstating capital punishment was the Social Credit candidate who received those 245 votes.

If members are interested in polls or opinion-testing, attitudinal surveys or whatever you want to call them, I can tell about one which is more scientific than the ones used here, which are just drops in the ocean and touch one householder out of eight or nine voters. This survey was conducted by a man at the University of Western Ontario. I will not give his name because I have not been in touch with him to get his permission. He selected a sampling of people in the city of London, Ontario, who to his best knowledge and that of his associates made up a representative sampling of the people in that city. He sent out experienced interviewers. I will not go through all his findings, but here are his conclusions:

● (1510)

The most direct implication of the present study, however, is that some of the motives and characteristics associated with favouring the death penalty are inconsistent with important Canadian values and goals. Canadian people and institutions formally endorse the principles of humane legal justice, democratic as opposed to authoritarian values, and equality for all citizens. The present survey suggests that people who favour the death penalty, especially those who favour it most strongly, are likely to have characteristics which are anti-thetical to these values and goals: they are more likely than persons opposed to the death penalty to be seekers of vengeance and punishment, to hold authoritarian instead of democratic social and political beliefs, and to score high on measures of prejudice. These conclusions would seem worthy of consideration by political, governmental, and legal decision-makers; simply noting percentages in superficial public opinion polls is not enough.

I submit that, counter to the nineteenth century views expressed by many of the proponents of the return to the Dark Ages, the problem that the people of Canada face is not that of murder. There is no "Mack the Knife" around every corner, ready to stick a knife in your back. The people of this country do not go to bed worrying about being murdered in their beds. On the other hand, they are concerned about the rising incidence of crimes against the human person which fall short of murder.

[Mr. Reilly.]

Let me quote some statistics in connection with Ottawa. I chose the month of August, 1973, at random. It is usually hot in August in Ottawa, and if there is ever a time when violent crimes or murder may be committed in this city, it is in August. There were no murders, no manslaughters and no attempted murders. There was one rape and ten other sexual offences. There were 89 assaults, and 17 robberies. In the year 1972 there were five murders, no manslaughters, one attempted murder, and 12 rapes; there were 145 other sexual offences, 18 woundings, 973 assaults, 184 robberies, and so on.

Our legal system provides stiffer jail sentences for stealing somebody's property than for beating that person half to death. I suggest that we need in this country a thoroughgoing review of the sentencing provisions of the Criminal Code, of the bail provisions, of weekend tickets of leave, parole and other associated provisions. I have said so to the Solicitor General personally and I have said it to him in writing. I believe that is the thing all the people of Canada have the right to be concerned about. The passing of a law that will give the state the right to execute another human being is not going to remove the legitimate fears of our citizens that they may be the victims of violence directed against the person which may fall short of murder.

I will give an example, right here in Ottawa. A few months ago a small store on St. Laurent Boulevard was held up. An innocent bystander was shot and killed in that robbery. Three men were arrested in connection with the robbery. Two of them at that time were out on bail for the offence of possessing a sawed-off shotgun. Actually, I believe the weapon was a sawed-off 22 caliber gun, which is of no use to anyone except for criminal purposes. I could not hit the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) from where I stand with a 22 caliber sawed-off gun, no matter how good my aim is. A gun like that is no good for target practice, no good for pest hunting and no good for anything except holding people up. And you can buy such a gun in any store that sells it so long as you have the $10, or whatever it takes, to buy it.

That people who were hauled in for possessing such a weapon should be turned loose on bail is incomprehensible. Those people were turned loose, just like the snap of a finger, on their own recognizance. I do not want to prejudice their trial and I will not mention any names. In fact, I do not know what has happened to the case. However, if it turns out that they are guilty, we ought to look at two choices—the return to capital punishment, or my suggestion that we pass Bill C-2 and concentrate on stricter bail laws and parole regulations. If we go back to the Dark Ages by resurrecting capital punishment, in the end three people will have been killed, the man who was shot in the store and the two men who will presumably hang for murder if they are found guilty.

If my formula had been followed, nobody would be dead because those men would not have been loose on bail to kill an innocent man, and they would not be executed. We call ourselves civilized, yet sometimes after listening to some speeches I wonder how civilized we are. I could think of a great many crimes for which we ought to prescribe the rope, if we are to include murder as an offence punishable by death. I do not think we ought to kill anybody for anything. Several members who want to see Bill C-2 defeated have been almost Jesuitical in their arguments. They force reasonable people into a compromise position and then turn that compromise position against those people and say that is a reason for not adopting the principle at all.

Those of us who support Bill C-2 do so with reservations, of course. We do not believe that there should be capital punishment for any cause at all; but we are prepared to accept, under pressure, the idea that there may be a certain deterrent effect in the case of prison guards and police officers. And because we are trying to meet the legitimate objections of people who want to hang everybody in sight, what happens: they turn our own decency and our own middle of the road position back on us and try to make this into an argument for rejecting the whole thesis.

If we are to retain the rope, I can suggest a few more categories that might be included in the law. Let us bring to the gallows the directors of companies who run off with company assets, so causing the company to go bankrupt and pouring down the drain the savings of widows, pensioners and orphans. Send to the guillotine all governments that create half a million unemployed deliberately and so kill people, perhaps less quickly than by the gun but none the less effectively. To the guillotine with those people! Send to the guillotine landlords who charge extortionate rents. There is a whole list of people who commit crimes infinitely more harmful to our society than the killing of one human being.

The fact of the matter is that by far the majority of murders in this country, or crimes that are classed as murder, are the result of domestic disputes. Usually the victim is related in some way, often by marriage, to the executioner. The person who commits the crime is not a criminal; yet those people are referred to by certain hon. members as "those members of the criminal element" as though such murders were deliberately committed. They are not. They are committed by men and women who have been pushed too far, so they commit a crime. They are not criminals, and the purposes of our society are not served by their spending one day in jail. But there are other people who commit crimes of violence which fall short of murder. They, in my opinion, ought never again to see the light of day except in the exercise yard of a prison.

Everywhere I have gone in this country I have spoken to audiences that heretofore had been in favour of the reimposition of capital punishment. Everywhere I have gone, people have come up to me and said, "By God, that is a proposition that makes sense, because you are right." Murder is not the rule. It is crimes against the human person that we ought to fear. We punish more severely offences against property than we do crimes against the human person. As I said before, it is possible for a criminal to be given a stiffer penalty for stealing my car than for beating me unconscious. We glorify so-called athletes who batter each other around in the plain view of millions watching an NHL game on television. Those people are considered to be heroes. We do not prosecute them for causing bodily harm to one another; we applaud. We do not censor our children's television programs to make sure that violence is removed from those programs, as we ought to do.

If the people of Canada are worried about anything, it is not that they are going to be murdered as a result of a meticulously carried out, exquisitely planned execution. What they are worried about is that they may be assaulted and robbed as they walk through the park at night, that their daughter may be raped, that their little child may be molested by a sex pervert, or that they or members of their family may be run down by a drunken driver. Those are all legitimate concerns.

• (1520)

I suggest this parliament would do much better to address itself, its energies and its time in meeting those legitimate concerns, to a proper review of sentencing, parole and bail regulations than by spending a great deal more time discussing whether it is right or wrong to kill a human being, regardless of what he or she has done, because there is only one answer to that proposition: it is wrong—and there is no way around that answer.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of speaking in this debate other than to comment on some of the things I have heard in the House as this bill has wound its way wearily through this session. There was supposed to be a free vote by members of the House on this bill. I suggest that proposition is utter drivel. Yesterday the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) made it very clear that this is a government bill, a bill introduced by the Liberal government of this country as a government measure, and that the government would—as it indeed has—support the bill completely on every division despite the personal feelings noted by many members on this side and on the government side on an individual basis.

This is a government bill on which the government has deliberately unified, and it has been presented, supported and pushed through this chamber as quickly and as hard as it could be. Despite what the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Reilly) said, the government has used its resources to influence the number of members who were here who may not have wanted to vote for the bill. The government has used its resources to put pressure on people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: There is no question about it. It is not a free vote on a bill when there are other forms of pressure that that available to the whips.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Maybe we pressured your leader, too.

Mr. Blenkarn: The foolishness and silliness of this bill was exemplified by the activities of the minister when the bill was before the committee. The minister made a farce of the committee. He attempted to change the whole concept of the bill. He said: Members of the committee, I do not even believe in capital punishment. I want people to be put in jail for 25 years. I want to abolish the whole thing.

Capital Punishment

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I never at any time suggested that a man be put in jail for 25 years as a minimum sentence. I ask the hon. member to withdraw that statement or produce evidence to the contrary.

Mr. Peters: You said ten years by regulation and ten years by the judge.

Mr. Allmand: I rise on a further question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) is also wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I wish to remind hon. members that they are allowed to raise points for the purpose of making corrections, but when it comes to debate hon. members should make their own speeches and give their own interpretations. In due time they can make their speeches and it will all be balanced in the end.

Mr. Blenkarn: Unfortunately, I was not able to be at all the committee hearings.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: I was involved in other matters. I may have misread the report. One member proposed an amendment that imprisonment be for 25 years. The minister did suggest a long prison term. The government wanted to get out of the whole concept of capital punishment but did not have enough nerve to bring it before the House. They were a bit disappointed with the original bill and wanted to change it when it got to committee. Fortunately, that change was not in order.

Rather than stand by their principles—and members may well ask, what principles—they decided to carry on with the bill in its present form. Even though the minister has admitted he does not believe in its principle, he still wants to press the bill through the House as a government bill. We have the strange situation where this government is trying to impose on the people of Canada a government bill that the government does not believe in and does not really want. The minister improperly tried to change it in committee. He did not have the guts to withdraw it and issue another bill calling for the complete abolition of capital punishment, if that is what he really wants.

As the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse) said, we have a situation of "newspeak". If you are in favour of the abolition of capital punishment, under this bill you vote for capital punishment for those who murder police officers and prison guards; if you are against the abolition of capital punishment, you vote against capital punishment for those who murder police officers and prison guards. What "newspeak" this government has produced in the name of abolition! What "newspeak" this government is trying to press on Canada!

A lot has been said about constituency polls and what the people of Canada feel. This kind of thing goes on in Canada all the time. I have taken constituency polls by the usual mail-out. There is no question about it; they are not statistically accurate. However, a statistically accurate poll was carried out by students of the T. L. Kennedy secondary school at Mississauga. That was done with all the finesse possible in the system of taking public opinion polls, by students who were studying and working on that matter. It showed in excess of 80 per cent of the people polled were in favour of capital punishment.

My own mail-out in December of last year, which I admit is not statistically accurate, showed 70 per cent of the people in favour of capital punishment. In September of this year, when the question was asked, "Do you support the complete abolition of capital punishment?" 88.6 per cent replied "No." When they were asked, "Do you support the bill as it now stands?" 89.1 per cent replied "No." You can say those polls are not accurate; you can say any poll is not accurate. As the hon. member for Ottawa West said, the only accurate poll is the one taken at election time. Several other hon. members had better realize that the only accurate poll is taken at election time.

• (1530)

If this issue were a key election issue on which the election of a party or a member would stand or fall, then I suggest those who vote for abolition of capital punishment in the "newspeak" method the minister has presented to this parliament will not return. These members do not trust the public of Canada. They think they are superior. They are superior to people who work in offices, to people who drive buses, to people who live in apartments, to people who really work for a living, because they sit in this great chamber and know better than their constituents how they should be treated. Perhaps we should throw out the entire judicial system which lets the jury decide. Perhaps we should let the superior men and women decide what is best for the poor public.

There are many issues in this country that the average person on the street may not be ready, willing and able to decide. That is why there are members of parliament. They examine issues across Canada, get the facts, and are given research facilities which the ordinary guy on the street does not have. This is why we are elected. Nevertheless, on an issue such as this, which is a clean question of: How, Mr. Citizen, do you want your Criminal Code written under which you and the rest of society are going to be governed?—between 80 and 90 per cent say they want to retain capital punishment in the Criminal Code. Only 1.1 per cent of the people in this poll are undecided on that question.

It is not a case where the evidence has not been put before the people of Canada. They have had the evidence before them for 10 or 15 years. These are people who are obligated to pay the penalty under the Criminal Code, as are we, and these people say, and say clearly, that they want a symbol—I say that this whole debate is totally symbolic—in our criminal jurisprudence that indicates that if a person commits a heinous murder, he pays for it with his life.

Before this bill comes to a final vote hon. members had better realize that this question is going to be an issue with people in the next election. The people of Canada expect their members to trust them, to look at their opinions seriously, instead of discarding them holus-bolus on the ground that those they represent do not have the ability to make up their own minds. I say members who vote against the opinion of the people of Canada had better have some darned good explanations to give them. There is a demand in this society of ours for justice. Our society today is looking at the symbol of capital punishment to show that our Criminal Code means business.

A lot has been said about the right of the Crown to exercise the ancient right of clemency. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) suggested that that right of clemency has been available only to the rich and the privileged. That is the kind of remark one would expect from a member of his party. That is not at all the case. The prime minister has been exercising clemency in every case since 1962. This right of clemency, on recommendation to the Governor General, whether exercised properly or not, remains the prerogative of the Crown and has been a prerogative of the Crown since time immemorial.

The right of the Crown to exercise clemency, leniency and justice is inalienable. To suggest that it is used only for the benefit of the rich and the privileged is utter nonsense. Our people want a symbol in the Code that provides the maximum penalty for those who commit the most heinous, miserable and horrible crimes contemplated by the Code, including not only murder but treason. This provision of the maximum penalty must remain in our Code.

It is essential in this nation that our criminal law reflects the concepts and ideas of the people of Canada. The people of Canada, including our police forces, prison officials and public officials generally who are in charge of the administration of the Code say that the Code must have the respect of the people. Without this maximum penalty provision in the Code, the Code will not have the respect of Canadians. It is imperative that criminal laws which affect every one of us have our respect.

When we make criminal laws that do not reflect the mores of the society that governs us, we breed disrespect for those laws and for our judicial system. In the result, we hurt all of Canada. This bill and the votes on it are symbolic in that respect. Our system of law must respect the mores of the society it governs, and that society clearly demands that there be capital punishment. When we tell society to go away, that we will not give them capital punishment, we breed disrespect not only for the Criminal Code but for all our laws.

● (1540)

This is one of the reasons for the growth of violence and the growth of disrespect for moral issues shown throughout our society. Perhaps people are not respecting the law. Perhaps they say: Oh, it doesn't matter what the law says. Parliament can do what it wants. That is not the thing that should happen. Parliament must pass laws which reflect the mores, desires and will of the people it governs. This whole debate has turned into a symbolic thing and on that basis, if on no other, the bill must be defeated.

The past election has been referred to. I said there should be capital punishment for murderers of police officers, prison guards and perhaps for airline hijackers and paid killers. There has been a great deal of pressure, a great many speeches, a great many killings since that time. It has been pointed out to me that to say just hijackers, just paid killers, does not cover all of the aspects of heinous, premeditated murder. It has been pointed out to me that the killing of a police officer may not be nearly as serious as the cold-blooded murder of young children. Yet the cold-blooded murderer of young children will go into our luxurious prison system from which he can probably escape if he wants to, and the person who happens to kill a police officer in a gun battle will hang. I have not hardened my views. I have said that we must better define what is a heinous, premeditated murder and provide for capital punishment in those cases.

It was my hope that when this bill went to committee there would be some real study, an honest attempt by the government to try to develop a position toward the Criminal Code which would bear some acceptance by the vast majority of Canadians. But we did not have that right. The government decided it was going to play hanky-panky with the committee, hanky-panky with the people of Canada and do what it wanted.

A great deal has been said about the question of deterrence. It is clear from the government's view of the bill that the government regards capital punishment as a deterrent, otherwise Bill C-2 would not have been presented to us. The government says that if we provide capital punishment for the murder of police officers and prison guards, that is sufficient deterrent. The question of deterrence has been raised by many. I refer hon. members to the whole Criminal Code system. The Criminal Code provides that if you commit a crime you receive a penalty, and the concept of the penalty is that it will deter others from committing the same type of crime. Therefore, for impaired driving we provide a minimum fine of $50 and a minimum three months' suspension on the first offence, and it does not take long before you face a minimum six months in jail or a minimum never drive again penalty. All of us know this has deterred some of us from imbibing more than we might otherwise have done.

We come to the question of car theft, for example. We provide for a minimum sentence of one year. Perhaps it does not deter people from stealing cars, but it sure as heck has an effect when a case comes before the court, because there is another offence called joy-riding and there is a real attempt to reduce the charge from stealing because, they say, perhaps that sentence is too rough. Maybe the deterrence of capital punishment is too rough, but the people of Canada do not think so. I say to the minister that the Criminal Code is governing the people of Canada. He is not governing the people of Canada. He is not a dictator. The government is not a dictatorship yet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired unless he has the unanimous consent of the House to continue.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Some hon. Members: Two minutes.

Mr. Blenkarn: I shall conclude what I have to say in two minutes. I thank hon. members for allowing me to do so. It is essential that we develop something to improve our society's mores, our society's attitude to life, our society's respect for law and indeed cut down the amount of violent crime and other offences that are occurring. A lot has been said by members about the present penal system. We are not happy with it. A committee of this House has been touring the countryside looking at our penitentiaries, and I hope it will soon make a report to this House. One of the things I have heard from members of that committee is that the system is not working well. We are not in fact reforming some of the people who cannot be easily handled, and we are not keeping them under control as we should. Some people are pretty dangerous types and are pretty horrible types. With some people you begin to wonder whether they are people or not. So we have to do a great deal of work in prison reform. That is where the time of the House should be spent, not on this debate.

What we must do is build a more loving society and work on systems that can reform and change people. If there was ever an argument for capital punishment of those who commit heinous murder, the argument is this: the system does not protect us against a person murdering a second time. From the matter in which we have run our prisons, from the inability of our prison system to reform dangerous criminals, persons on the street who may fear for their lives are entitled to demand the protection which the death penalty gives.

[Translation]

Mrs. Albanie Morin (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that everything must have been said on capital punishment, judging by the number of debates we had and the length of speeches delivered on this subject. Many things have been said, but one surprised me particularly. Not a single hon. member cared to discuss the lot of the murder victim. We did not ask ourselves what we could do to save the life of the victim of a rape or of a kidnapping. We talked about parole, penitentiaries, in short about things which were not relevant at all to the amendment I had introduced.

Anyway, we talked about the value of life, but we did not say a word about the life of the person who has been assassinated. We have also said that capital punishment was not a deterrent and we proved it with several statistics. This proves absolutely nothing because no potential criminal or no confirmed criminal will come and say: I was prevented from assassinating someone because of capital punishment. It proves absolutely nothing. Yet, a criminal arrested recently boasted that he had killed 28 persons in different countries, some of them in the province of Quebec. With capital punishment, the lives of several of these victims would have been saved, including the lives of two fathers of several children; not a single word was said about it.

Here is the best proof that capital punishment is a deterrent: during recent weeks, we visited 15 penal institutions and all but four guards assured us that capital punishment was a deterrent because, for a prisoner sentenced to life imprisonment one or two murders do not make any difference; he is sentenced to life imprisonment in any case. This is proof it is a deterrent, particularly among prisoners.

In everyday life, no criminal will come and say he was prevented from killing because of capital punishment. A lot has been said, including some platitudes spoken a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Reilly), but—

[Mr. Blenkarn.]

• (1550)

[English]

The hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) when referring to my amendment said that what appears to be rape is the result of provocation or invitation. Let me refer to statistics. From 1961 to 1970, 86 women were killed as a result of sexual assault. Of these 86, 21 were under 15 years of age. So I ask the hon. member, where is the invitation or the provocation when a young girl of two, three or four years of age is involved?

Mr. Peters: Ask me about the 15 year-old ones.

Mrs. Morin: I am referring especially to young girls under 15 years of age. The hon. member for Broadview further mentioned that I had a certain hangup with regard to the crimes of kidnapping and rape, that there was an emotional involvement in my presenting the amendment and therefore it was difficult to be rational about it.

The hon. member evidently did not listen to my speech. I wonder where the irrationality is when I explained that the criminal act of kidnapping was a two-stage decision, and stressed this point particularly. There are two separate criminal acts in the case of kidnapping. Once the kidnapping is carried out, where the aim is ransom money or the liberation of a criminal, it is logical to assume that before the victim is put to death the death penalty will have a deterrent effect. It is only logical to think that. Anyone who is mentally unbalanced is never sentenced to death, anyway.

Another hon. member mentioned that in the United States capital punishment has been abolished. I have a little bit of news for him. I should like to remind this member, first, that a year ago after the Supreme Court outlawed capital punishment, the legislatures in 17 states introduced new laws to meet the objections raised by the Supreme Court. Second, Congress has a variety of bills aimed at overturning the Supreme Court's ruling. Third, President Nixon has called for legislation making capital punishment mandatory for certain federal crimes, including hijacking. So rather than capital punishment being abolished, it seems that some convicts will be sentenced to die in the electric chair or in the gas chamber.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) suggested that many rapes are committed under severe emotional stress when the accused is under the influence of liquor or drugs. I should like to remind the minister that when psychologists, psychiatrists and psychoanalysts testify to the effect that the individual is not in full possession of his faculties, this is always taken into consideration. I should like to repeat this——that the ultimate goal of my amendment was mainly to prevent the murder of kidnapping and rape victims.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin), who is not afraid to give her opinion and to express her convictions. I even wonder if she would not be more at ease among us Creditists, because when amendments to legislation as important as Bill C-2 are put to the vote and that this vote is said in the House, in the newspapers, on radio and on television to be a free vote, I wonder if the purpose is not to laugh at the Canadian people; I wonder if it is not to mislead them to make them think that there is a free vote on the capital punishment issue.

I noticed yesterday—I do not wish to make any comments on the vote—that cabinet solidarity is a fact. Members representing constituencies which are completely opposed to the abolition of capital punishment rose to vote against the logical amendments that were before us, but they are ready to vote on third reading for the adoption of the bill as it is now. Besides, some members did not show up in the House to vote because there had been an agreement not to concur in the amendments in order that the government win its case as a result of the vote. That is exactly what occurred yesterday. There is only one solitary group, which has been following its policy since the beginning of this discussion, that is for five years, and it is the NDP members' group who are "against" the abolition of capital punishment.

An hon. Member: They are in favour of abolition!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): They are in favour of abolition. Even Bill C-2 stipulates that, for another five year period, the extension of the law would have for result that murderers of a policeman or a prison guard would be likely to be sentenced to death.

Recently, that is on last May, in the Senate, the Hon. Paul Martin said, and I quote:

Honourable senators, on Tuesday last Senator Choquette asked me for information as to how many persons have been found guilty of murdering prison guards and police officers, and how many have been executed, since the passage of an act to amend the Criminal Code, Statutes of Canada 1967-68, Chapter 15.

The legislation was passed in 1968 but brought before this House in 1967.

The office of the Solicitor General has now advised me that six persons have been found guilty of such a murder and none has been executed. Four sentences were commuted, as follows:

DATE OF CONVICTION	DATE SENTENCE COMMUTED
11 April 1968	3 July 1969
20 January 1970	4 February 1971
12 March 1970	23 December 1970
15 October 1970	24 February 1972

The two other cases, in which the trial courts registered convictions and passed sentences of death, are still before the courts. One of these cases is before the Quebec Court of Appeal and the other will be before the Supreme Court of Canada, if an extension of time is granted.

Mr. Speaker, after this legislation was passed, there were six convictions but no execution. I therefore wonder about the usefulness of such a law. Why are we discussing a piece of legislation if it is not complied with, if it is not applied? The government and the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) favour the total abolition of capital punishment. That is exactly what we are doing right now. The provisions of the law are not followed and we are about to renew for five years this same law, which condemns and commutes sentences. Commutations follow condemnations.

Mr. Speaker, murderers laugh in their sleeves when they see this. The hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) just mentioned a typical case, that of Mesrine, who has recently been recaptured in France. He boasted that he had killed at least 28 or 30 people and stated boldly: I am ready to kill others. He likes it. It is a sport for him. He is arrested in Canada, he escapes, he is recaptured, he escapes again; it is easier to get out of jail than to get in.

Mr. Speaker, Mesrine was caught again in France. He could easily earn his living: he was an architect. All he had in mind was to kill.

Another one with whom we put up until he killed four young children was a man named Dion, from Quebec City. The law did not deal with him. His own jail companions did: they executed him. Meddling with the law like that does not make any sense. Mr. Speaker, I heard some New Democrats say: In developed and civilized countries, the death penalty has been abolished. However, in all socialist countries of the world, the death penalty is still in force. The death penalty is there.

Members of the New Democratic Party should go to Cuba and try to oppose Castro, and let them tell me whether the death penalty does not exist there. They should go to Morocco and see whether there is no death penalty. There is not even a trial. Let them go to Russia and oppose the communist government to see whether they will put up with them. Let them go to China from where our Prime Minister has just returned. The firing squad speeds up things over there.

Mr. Speaker, I hear the New Democrats speak of civilized countries—but is killing young children civilized? As stated by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin), little girls of seven, eight and nine years old are the victims. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) said: When they are older than 15, they may have made advances, but not those of 7, 8 or 9. It is mere bestiality on the murderer's part.

Everybody knows what a murderer is. We try to rehabilitate him, as the former Solicitor General said, who is now Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer), but society does not want him anymore. This minister would not hire a released murderer. Myself, I would not hire one in my business. Then, what can a released murderer do? He only can keep on killing, committing armed robberies and doing as he did before being imprisoned, condemned and released.

Mr. Speaker, surveys have been conducted throughout Canada on the issue of capital punishment on which we will vote freely, maybe not this afternoon but probably Tuesday, because too many members will be absent Monday.

Some ministers who are strongly opposed to the abolition of capital punishment will have to vote for it. They will have to explain away their action to their constituents.

But all sorts of organizations are opposed to the abolition of capital punishment. For instance, my friends from the New Democratic Party—

● (1600)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) permit a question from the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer)?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Of course, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, while the hon. member for Témiscamingue is looking for his papers, I might perhaps help him by putting a question to him. The hon. member says that a number of members can vote as one man for the abolition of the death penalty, but knowing very well the discipline and the disciplinary talents of the leader of the Social Credit party, could he explain why all the members of his party, without exception, will vote for the retention of capital punishment? Is that freedom?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, that is just about the most stupid question I ever heard, but anyhow, supposing that it is intelligent, I suggest that everyone of my colleagues of the Social Credit party will freely give him a personal answer, without having consulted me concerning capital punishment. None has received any instruction from me to vote either for or against capital punishment. And the minister may smile or laugh as much as he wants—

Mr. Peters: The same is true of us.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I did not say that the New Democratic Party had to toe the party line; I said that the ministers had to.

Mr. Goyer: Prove it.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I undertake to prove to the minister of Supply and Services and former solicitor general, in his own riding, that he is wrong and I am right.

Mr. Goyer: We are going to compare our majorities.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Sure, and I would be pleased to do so. Mr. Speaker I was saying that we are receiving comments on Bill C-2 even from labour organizations, and my friends of the NDP are experts in union matters. I have here a letter received from the Brotherhood of Railway, Airline & Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station employees. There is absolutely no doubt that NDP members know these organizations. I have a copy of this letter that was sent to the right hon. Prime Minister. I quote:

During a regular meeting, it was resolved to inform you that Local # 2303 is in favour of the retention of Capital Punishment". We hope to receive your comments on the retention or the abolition of this penalty. On behalf of the members of our Local # 2303, I remain

Sincerely Yours,

R. De Lorme, Chairman.

In another part of the province, namely in Sept-Iles, a kind of referendum or public opinion poll was carried out by the Chamber of Commerce, and very clear questions were asked. I quote:

I support the abolition of capital punishment.

Yes: 51; No: 300

I support the retention of capital punishment as applied before.

Yes: 295; No: 33.

According to you, has the number of murders increased in Canada during the past five years?

Yes: 316; No: 23.

Do you believe in the parole system and in the rehabilitation of murderers?

Yes: 83: No: 265.

Have you ever been a direct or an indirect victim of a murderer's actions?

Yes: 38; No: 308.

Do you know the difference between non-capital murder and capital murder?

Yes: 278; No: 59.

Do you know that California is the last state to have reinstated the death penalty?

Yes: 216; No: 130.

And what people did not know either is that California reinstated the death penalty a few days ago, and it was the last state to accept legislation to abolish the death penalty.

How old are you?

The average age of those polled was 34.

So do not tell me those are aged people or kids; these are ordinary people stating their point of view. And at the end of the letter we are told by the Chamber of Commerce:

Please send your early reply to the Sept-Îles Chamber of Commerce . . .

This is a local Poll. For some it is a matter of religion. I must say that I received more letters against the abolition of the death penalty from Protestant ministers than from Catholic priests. But I have been reading Catholic news reports and an article of a magazine called Aujourd'hui Québec which is constantly quoting St. Thomas d'Aquinas and I quote:

So, said St. Thomas "although it is bad to take the life of a man keeping his dignity as a reasonable human being and sacred person . . ., to take the life of the sinner (that is to say he who through a serious sin has lost his sacred character) may be a good thing."

This is the point of view of an undisputably competent philosopher. Once more about capital punishment, the director of the magazine Rev. Guy Poisson stated and I quote:

DEATH SENTENCE AS AN EXAMPLE

It was recently suggested by abolitionists that in countries where the death penalty had been abolished the crime rate had not increased. Their adversaries stated the contrary. In my opinion those are simplistic views because at the same time we should study all other factors liable to increase or decrease the number of offenses and among others:

the organization of work and leasure, standards of living, the police force, the multiplication and control of liquor stores, etc . . . And then, all those who have been dissuaded from committing a crime through fear of capital punishment are not boasting about it.

The hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) referred to it a while ago. The article goes on:

This debate on capital punishment retained the whole country's attention following the sad stories of Victor Spencer and Gerda Munsinger. We are informed that representations will soon be made to ask Parliament to legalize abortion.

What will then be the Prime Minister's position? Will he invite members of Parliament to vote "ACCORDING TO THEIR CONSCIENCE"?

Will those who appealed to sentiments to protect life touch the same sensitive chord to prevent the murdering of innocents? Or will they maintain that God remains the absolute master of life?

Mr. Speaker, we receive comments from almost everywhere against the abolition of capital punishment.

I have here a letter from Mr. René Bilodeau, from Sherbrooke, who conducted a survey in that city and I quote:

... report on a survey on capital punishment involving 100 persons, 30 years and over, all walks of life; 77 for capital punishment, 7 undecided, 16 against. General comment: why should we reward a murderer who now costs $10,000, keeping him in a warm place, well fed, with medical care, T.V. etc., and denying a pension to eight applicants of 60. I am 59, victim of asbestosis ...

That man does not get any pension while murderers have security.

Mr. Speaker, as I said it is not because we are vindictive men that we are retentionnist. For instance, hijackers constitute a real danger for thousands of lives. If capital punishment had been invoked for those individuals, 90 per cent of hijackings would have been avoided. In several places, the number of murders would have decreased instead of increasing as is the case now. Every morning when I glance at a newspaper, I can read on the front page: One, two, three murders have been committed last night. The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) says: On behalf of humanity, we must save the murderers' lives. If we condemn them to death, that will not prevent other murderers from continuing their activities. One thing is sure: When we hang a murder, he will stop killing. That is a sure thing, but the law maintaining capital punishment constitutes a barrier, a fence, everybody knows that. If you go over it, if you plunge, if you go beyond, you fall into an abyss. For the one who does not want to be hanged, the only thing to do is to refrain from it. Everybody is on an equal footing before this legislation.

Indeed we sincerely believe that this legislation should be replaced by the one in force previously, but which was improved, and under which we would be given the assurance that should there be any uncertainty, small as it might be, the convict would be given the benefit of the doubt and, we would not take the risk of a miscarriage of justice by imposing hanging in a doubtful case.

There have been and, there still are such cases in Canada. Therefore, it is sufficient to avoid passing such sentence—

● (1610)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair is in some difficulty in that the first speaker for the hon. member's party did not use the 30 minutes allocated to first speakers and in fact finished within 20 minutes. Perhaps it is the mood of the House that the hon. member who now has the floor should have the right to 30 minutes, although this is some deviation from the order made. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKinley: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, extra time was granted to another speaker this afternoon and it is only right that the hon. member who is speaking should have extra time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is in the hands of the House. As I say, there is a difficulty considering the way the order was passed; but the suggestion has been accepted.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Thanks to my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—

● (1620)

I also owe to my colleagues this opportunity of completing my remarks. I will not take unfair advantage of their courtesy.

But, Mr. Speaker, before closing, I should like to say that people who write to me to congratulate us on our stand are not only from the province of Quebec.

I have here a letter from Old Orchard Trailer Park, in Chase, B.C., which says as follows:

[English]

I fully support your opposition to the government's effort to extend the partial ban on capital punishment. Specifically, I believe that the penalty for murder must be hanging or similar execution.

I am sure that if a national referendum were held the Canadian public would uphold your views on this matter.

Yours sincerely,

M. H. McMurray

[Translation]

I have also received letters from other regions, including Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Here is one from Mr. Armand Langlois, who resides in Chandler, in the Gaspe riding, which reads in part as follows:

In Le Soleil, issue of Tuesday August 3, 1971 appeared the following news or release:

Social Credit Offensive to Reinstate Capital Punishment in Canada.

I hereby declare that I fully support the Social Credit Party of Canada in its efforts in connection with the reinstatement of capital punishment, which is of pressing necessity.

Armand Langlois,
Chandler,
Gaspe South County, Quebec

Here is another one, from Annapolis Valley, in Nova Scotia, which congratulates us on our stand in favour of the reinstatement of capital punishment. It reads in part:

HURRAH!

The word is written in large capital letters.

[English]

Some of us here will be backing you up and praying for you.

[Translation]

—to reinstate the death penalty in Canada, and at the same time, I am flabbergasted to see the attitude of the minister who lives in Montreal, where 90 percent of the people are in favour of maintaining the death penalty. And the minister has the nerve to tell us that the Canadian people want the abolition of capital punishment.

Mr. Speaker, the solution is simple. At election time, why not write the following simple question on the ballot: for or against death penalty, throughout Canada, you will see the reaction. It is being said that the government is killing people by the people for the people. A democratic government must take into account the views and the will of the people. What is happening to that democracy at the present time? We fall into the trap, we play the game of those who wish to have murders committed in Canada. We are scared of taking position. For what reason? Under whose influence? I do not know.

As for us, we are surely expressing the will of the electors not only of our constituencies, but of the whole of the province and of the whole of Canada on the death penalty issue. I am coming back to what I was saying at the beginning. In several countries, rather strange executions are performed.

When the military junta took over in Chile and confined some 7,000 persons in a football stadium, the members of the New Democratic Party cried shame.

It was totally unacceptable for those bad rightists to crush leftists in Chile. But the New Democrats did not object when students in Czechoslovakia tried to recover part of their freedom that consisted only in putting down their ideas, in writing, not revolting against the regime but only writing down what they thought.

Mr. Speaker, the Soviet army was called in to crush those students. In 1956, Hungary wanted to recover part of its freedom and was literally crushed by the Soviets. Did we hear the NDP protest against that? No. That was all right.

In all countries where there has been bloody revolutions this is the way things happened. But when rightists in Chile returned to power under arms, Mr. Speaker, how unfortunate, scandalous, frightening it is all. The Parliament of Canada is being asked to pass a resolution condemning the army in Chile. But let us not condemn Cuba, or any of the communist or leftist countries in the world. When I hear people reason like that, I wonder what would become of Canada if we ever had a socialist government.

Mr. Speaker, we are lucky to still have in Canada the freedom to face one another, to tell one another what we think, some thing that does not exist in several countries presently, Thanks to British freedoms, we have that right. We have the right to oppose government members. We have the right to talk against Tories, NDP members in the same way they have the right to talk against us. That is freedom. The day we lose it there will be tears shed, tears of blood, to reconquer that freedom. Mr. Speaker, we want that freedom for everybody. We want it for murderers but we also want it so that before a murderer commits his crime, some law will stop him from going ahead, under the penalty of paying for it. Then there might not be so many murderers and order would prevail. It would be more respected in Canada and, naturally, there would be more justice. Some economic and social conditions incite people to revolt. Then, they lose their head and can be provoked into killing.

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

So let us establish social, economic and political standards of justice that will enable man to fulfil himself. In doing so, we will finally create a better balanced society where it will be good to live, a society which will characterize the finest country of all, Canada.

[English]

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, for a few minutes I wish to reiterate some of the views expressed on second reading of this bill. As I listened to the speeches on second reading, and now on third reading, I felt a deep regret that so often we have to approach this subject from an emotional point of view. Some seem to think that others have not given full consideration to the question. The abolitionists seem to feel they are the only ones living in the twentieth century. That is not the case, Mr. Speaker. I believe every member of the House has looked at this question very seriously from both sides and has reached a reconciliation with his conscience.

● (1630)

If an hon. member's conscience happens to agree with the generally held views of his constituents, then he is not subjected to the tyranny of the opinion poll: his conscience is in agreement with the views of the constituents he represents. There are times when individual members will vote contrary to the generally held opinions of their constituents. If a member says in this House that he is in favour of retention, and that his view happens to be shared by the majority of his constituents, that does not mean in any way that there has been any tyranny of any opinion poll or that there is any reflection on his conscience. It does not mean that he is playing politics or that he is simply doing what the general public wants him to do.

Having looked at this question closely, I have distinguished between premeditated and non-premeditated murder. As I said in the debate on second reading, I would not support the death penalty in cases involving non-premeditated murder. A number of abolitionist speakers have said that many murders are domestic matters; they are not premeditated and, therefore the death penalty should not be invoked. I think many retentionists agree with that position. But there is another type of murder, Mr. Speaker—premeditated, wanton murder in which a person cold-bloodedly calculates taking the life of another person. That type of wanton, cold-blooded murder must be punished with the supreme punishment which we are discussing today in this debate on Bill C-2.

Nothing in history shows that a democracy is measured by the yardstick of whether or not capital punishment is invoked. The strength of a democracy and of a government lies in its ability to protect the freedoms and rights of all its citizens. It does not depend on whether a democracy is liberal in its thinking, or whether we are free thinkers. Democracy is not born of weakness and is not exercised from weakness. A democracy is only as strong as its individual citizens. It is strong only so long as the government representing the individual wishes of the citizenry is willing to back up the freedoms which are our right. Those freedoms can exist only if we all obey the law. It is the inherent responsibility of government to maintain the laws of a society and to punish those members who disobey the law. You cannot escape punishment for wrongdoing. Often we consider that punishment for crime is mere retribution. It is not retribution; it is justice.

There is one other point I want to put on record. The case I will mention took place in Manitoba not long ago. It is now before the courts. I will not dwell on it except to say that it involves an 11 year old girl who was sexually molested and left to die. When you meet brutal cases like that you must look at this issue squarely and consider your position on capital punishment.

Why is it that some people who are brought to court are given seven to eight years imprisonment on reduced charges? How soon are they paroled? Actually, Mr. Speaker, capital punishment for premeditated murder is not retribution; it is justice. It has been that way since time immemorial. This is at the back of the principles which this country has upheld for years. I urge all members of the House to seriously reconsider the question of premeditated murder. The only penalty that will bring justice in that situation, if there is justice, is capital punishment.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, before addressing myself to the business at hand I ought to begin by saying that we have wasted enough time debating the question of whether or not the life of the murderer is worthier of consideration than other serious problems facing our nation.

I congratulate the movers of the amendments we voted on last night, the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) and the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence), for having brought those amendments forward. I was glad to support the amendments, and sorry they did not pass. However, the will of the House prevailed and that is part of the working of our democratic system. That system has been protected so long by our penal code which we have found beneficial in the past. Part of that code has involved down the years the maintenance of capital punishment as the supreme deterrent, of which I am a supporter.

The members of this House know, my constituents know and I want the Canadian people to know that I am a retentionist on this question. I am a retentionist because I believe that any corporate nation or state should always retain the right to demand the life of any citizen for capital crime. I believe that this ultimate deterrent should not be abandoned. I forget how many times I have spoken on this topic. I recall that I spoke last in support of capital punishment on May 23 of this year. Several months have passed since then. I must say that it appears the issue of capital punishment has taken precedence over the important issues that we should be trying to resolve.

I listened with interest to the speeches made this afternoon. I note that the NDP member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) said that the issue of capital punishment has been blown up out of all proportion. I believe I am quoting him correctly. I challenge him on that statement. He also said that some of us are out of step with the world community. I also challenge him on that statement. I employ a recent report of March 16, 1973, to do with the United Nations, the highest and only authority of our world community. The report reads in part:

> New forms of terror and violence are provoking countries to revert to the death penalty, still favoured by the majority of people and governments, a U.N. study said yesterday . . .
>
> The study said that opinion polls made both in countries which have abolished the death penalty and in those which retain it, show a majority of people favouring it.

So many speeches have been made on this subject, Mr. Speaker, that it would be difficult at this point for one to avoid repeating previous remarks. There is also the possibility that one may repeat statements made by other speakers. I noted that the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Reilly) berated the tyranny of public opinion. I remind him of the headline in today's Toronto Star which says that it is foolish to underrate public opinion polls. The hon. member for Ottawa West does not like the tyranny of what he calls public opinion. I prefer that tyranny, if it can be termed as such, to the tyranny of lawlessness and anarchy which has so filled the Canadian people with revulsion that they now demand a strong deterrent and retribution in cases involving capital crime.

This is the same Liberal government that was in power when parliament approved the present five-year partial ban on capital punishment. It was the will of parliament during that five-year period that anyone convicted of capital murder would suffer the death penalty. It is implicit in the present law that capital murder is defined as the murder of a policeman or prison official while such an official is considered to be on duty. This is a fine distinction since it has always been considered that a policeman is on duty 24 hours a day. Leaving that aside, the fact is there have been a number of such murders in which it has been demonstrated that the officials killed were in fact acting in the line of duty.

● (1640)

Many members who were sitting in this House during the debate on the bill introduced in 1967 will remember the government's insistence that valuable data on the working of this law would be available to us at the end of the five-year period. Data was to be available to assist us in making up our minds whether capital punishment limited to these cases was in fact a deterrent to the murder of policemen. It has been stated over and over again during this debate that there is no such data. We do not have the valuable data the government insisted would be available to us. As we well know, the government has flouted this law, the law they wanted so much to have parliament approve. The partial ban on capital punishment was not an opposition motion; it was the brainchild of the government: it was they who fought to have it approved and implemented.

Speaker after speaker on the government side in 1967 called for the execution of murderers of policemen, calling policemen the guardians of public life and prosperity. Now we have the government backing off from their brainchild. In fact, they started backing off as soon as the original bill was enacted into law. There is clear evidence at this point that the government never intended to live up to the will of parliament. No clearer evidence is needed than the fact that every convicted murderer of a policeman has had the death sentence commuted by the cabinet since that act came into force. The Canadian people are watching the government's pattern in giving dispensation with regard to the murder of Constable Maitland in Toronto.

It has been pointed out by many of my colleagues in this House that the government has in fact opted for total abolition of the death penalty. In taking this stand the government has not only abdicated its responsibility with regard to parliament's expressed will in this matter but it has also chosen to ignore the weight of public opinion. It has long been known that the great majority of Canadian people favour some form of capital punishment for capital crimes. I cannot in good conscience adopt a position on this matter that does not take into account the wishes of my constituents.

Parliamentarians in Canada, Great Britain and possibly some other countries delight in quoting the great parliamentarian Edmund Burke. There is no doubt that when Burke was in his prime in the 1770s he was among the greatest parliamentary orators. On at least one occasion Burke said that while he was always cognizant of the majority opinion of his constituents, he did not feel bound to act in accordance with majority opinion in all cases. The present government appears to carry this to the opposite extreme. They do not feel the majority opinion carries any weight at all.

It is this attitude by the government that is holding up settlement of the issue of capital punishment. I cannot accept this attitude, especially in light of a general breakdown of law and order in Canada today and the concern of millions of law-abiding Canadians that their interests are not placed above those who hold our laws and institutions in contempt.

When speaking in this debate last summer, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Beattie) noted that some people argue that capital punishment cannot be justified on the ground that the execution of a murderer does not bring the victim back to life or ease the burden of grief borne by the victim's family. He said that the act of murder should carry a price as high as the value of the life taken. To carry it a logical step further, the same people might argue that putting an arsonist in jail for burning a house does not restore the house to its original state.

I do not believe that the state should be denied the power and the right to exact the death penalty whenever it is thought by responsible people that extreme measures are needed to correct an intolerable situation. In my opinion, the recent rash of murders of policemen across Canada is an intolerable situation.

Some strange and interesting stories are told and written about in the anals of crime and punishment. One such story is said to have occurred in revolutionary Russia in the year 1920. The government of that time abolished capital punishment for a while, giving the reason that capital punishment was a bourgeois institution. During a meeting of the revolutionary council, one member announced angrily that a prominent general had been sentenced to death for treason while state law forbade the sentence of death. Another member leaped up and said the general had not been sentenced to death but had only been sentenced to be shot. That apparently satisfied the council. Such is the case in oriental countries today. That great and respected civilization for which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has so much admiration, the Chinese, still practice capital punishment in a very stringent manner. When they deem it necessary, they line people up against a wall and shoot them.

[Mr. Alkenbrack.]

The point I am trying to make is that many of those who plead the case for abolition are only trying to get out of making a decision that may be unpopular, or a decision that may cast them in the role of executioner. Abolitionists in my riding have said to me, "You are a retentionist. Would you be the executioner?" No, I would not be the executioner. The majesty of the Canadian people would be the executioner. In a civilized society such as ours, those of us in parliament must at some point accept the fact that some of our decisions are going to be difficult. I cannot cast my vote in favour of the murderer, and ignore the victim and the victim's family because my decision might label me as an executioner. I must be prepared to accept this eventuality, and so must every other member of this House.

Should a judge hesitate to sentence a dangerous and deranged criminal to penitentiary for life because some people feel that even animals should not be caged? Should a judge hesitate to pass sentence because the person sentenced will be denied the pleasures of the society that he has rejected and rebelled against? I cannot accept such logic, or absence of logic because I feel too strongly that the chief responsibility of parliament is to the millions of law-abiding Canadians. As legislators, we are denied the luxuries of vacillating and equivocating that are the privilege of some other spheres of activity.

● (1650)

We cannot abondon our responsibility to the majority of Canadians, using the thesis that life is sacred and that not even the state has the right to take a human life. The state does have that right. Capital punishment is an instrument of the state, and while it should be used only in the last resort, and while every avenue of appeal should be readily available to any who are sentenced to death, that right must be provided to the state.

The present government's policies of permissiveness, coupled with the ipso facto absence of the death sentence provided for in Canadian law for capital crime, are already showing their potential as a threat to organized society in Canada. The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain also noted in his speech in this debate that there have been recent cases of policemen being shot and killed while investigating minor crimes, one case involving a relatively minor traffic offence. This is an indication that something is drastically wrong and it is time for those who plead the sanctity of human life to plead for the lives of the victims of violent, senseless crime.

Like most other members of this House, Mr. Speaker, I was appalled when the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) in July attempted to influence the standing committee to accept an amendment to abolish the death penalty completely. I know that I should not address myself at length to the committee hearings on this bill, but I wanted to make the point that this government in fact tipped its hand as far as its attitude to capital punishment is concerned. It also indicated that its old arrogance has not been abandoned at all; it has only been kept under wraps.

In light of the electoral position in this country today, just give this government another majority like it had before and it will be worse than ever.

In the absence of any clear proof to the contrary, we have been prepared to accept the view that the cabinet commuted each death sentence passed in the last five years on its own merits and that this was not a calculated thing, a case of government policy. Now we find that the government in fact wants total abolition. No other case can be made for the actions of the government in the past few weeks, and like some of my colleagues I must ask, why did the government not table a bill that called for abolition? I would like to know the reason, but unless enought of my colleagues also want to know, then we will be kept in the dark.

I would like to say at this point, Mr. Speaker, that last night I supported the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert. While I accept the argument advanced by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that rape and murder would both have to be proved and that this would be virtually impossible, I would still like to see in the law such a provision as that proposed by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert. It should be in the law if only for its possible, and probable, deterrent value.

To sum up my remarks and my feelings on this matter we are debating, I must say that I cannot vote in favour of the bill now before the House. As I have said many times before, the bill as it now reads will do nothing in the way of providing protection to the law-abiding Canadian citizen against those who resort to violent crime as a way of life. It will not ensure that proper punishment will be exacted for the crime of capital murder. I know that there are people today who claim that our objective in this matter is not to punish, but until we are able to develop an utopian society where punishment as such does not enter into the scheme of things, then we must continue to punish wrongdoers. No one has come up with a better solution to a very serious problem and we are faced with a problem of major proportions.

I have always regarded myself as a realist and I cannot in good conscience approve of theoretical solutions to a real problem. It should be obvious to anyone that we cannot apply utopian theory to the very real problem of violent crime and brutal murder. I cannot believe that anyone elected to parliament to serve the interests of a constituency would come here and ignore the wishes of the majority of his constituents on a matter as serious as capital murder and violent crime.

My colleague the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) has sent members the result of a questionnaire that he mailed to his constituents, and these figures pretty well match those from my own riding of Frontenac-Lennox and Addington and from other ridings. They show that 88.6 per cent of the constituents polled in Peel South oppose abolition of capital punishment, and 89.1 per cent are opposed to the bill we are now debating. Most Canadians appear to want capital punishment reinstated as a penalty for murder, not because they have a taste for blood but because they would like at least to have us try something more drastic in our struggle against rampant lawlessness. They hope, I am sure, that the deterrent value of capital punishment will at least prevent some of the violent crimes and some of the murders.

I have said, and many of my colleagues have said, that we appear to be paying more heed to the sanctity of the life of the murderer than to the sanctity of the life of the murder victim. Let us put this matter back into perspective. Let us offer at least as much protection to the victim as to the criminal. It is not my responsibility to berate the government every time it commutes a lawful death sentence for brutal murder, and it is not for me to insist that the government live up to its responsibility under Canadian law and allow the decision of the courts to stand in respect of the death penalty. This bill has been proven to be total abolition of the death penalty inasmuch as the government has commuted every death sentence imposed in the past six or seven years for the murder of policemen.

I am not a vindictive man, and to my knowledge no one has ever suggested that I am bloodthirsty. However, my concern is more for the innocent victim of crime than for the criminal; therefore, I cannot support a bill that does not provide that measure of protection to which the victim is entitled. In conclusion, I am confident that if every member votes on this bill as his constituents feel on this question, as judged by surveys and questionnaires, the bill will not be passed by this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps before adjourning the House the acting House leader would indicate whether this measure will be continued on Monday. There is the difference between whether I adjourn the House until eleven o'clock in the morning or two o'clock in the afternoon. I presume this is what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was going to ask.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Reid: That is so. That is the proper understanding, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then it being five o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned till Monday, October 22, 1973, at eleven o'clock a.m.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, October 22, 1973

The House met at 11 a.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

REINSTATEMENT OF LAW RELATING TO CAPITAL PUNISHMENT THAT EXISTED PRIOR TO DECEMBER 30, 1972

The House resumed from Friday, October 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand that Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code, be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate not with the contemplation of any particular pleasure in discussing the question of suitable punishment for those who commit murder but because I think it is a subject that parliament should approach with as great objectivity as it can command on this subject which is bound to be an emotional one.

At the commencement of my remarks I should like to express my congratulations to the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) on the very excellent speech she made last Friday.

I feel I have a special responsibility to take part in this debate because it so happens that of the four members of parliament from the small province of Prince Edward Island I seem to be the only one who is, in the popular jargon, a retentionist. I think a great many people in our province, probably the majority, feel as I do on this important subject. Whether they are in the majority or are a minority is, of course, only of secondary importance, but I believe that every point of view should find its expression in the House in this important debate.

The basic question that I think we have to ask ourselves is: What are the ethics, the mores, of our society in regard to murder? After all, any legislation that we pass can only be good and effective legislation if it expresses and generally reflects the most widely accepted wishes of the people whom we represent.

● (1110)

I think we should be clear in our minds concerning the purpose of the bill before us. The purpose is not to abolish capital punishment but to reduce the category of murder for which capital punishment is the penalty. In a nutshell, the bill before us reduces that category from all those who commit premeditated murder to those who commit the murder of police officers and penitentiary guards. So we are merely reducing the category of murder for which capital punishment is the penalty. We are not discussing under this bill the method of capital punishment to be used. I think that parliament should consider that aspect at an early date. Whether or not this bill passes it is something we should consider because in any event capital punishment will not be eliminated under our law. So long as capital punishment is not eliminated I think we should carefully consider the method to be used in carrying out that sentence.

I believe we should base our consideration of the question on whether or not as a society we believe in the sanctity of human life. We must ask ourselves whether it is wise and reasonable to do so. It is certainly not necessary from a purely philosophical point of view because many societies in the past have not believed in the sanctity of human life. Individual societies in the past, which have continued for perhaps thousands of years, have thought it quite all right to kill other humans for food. I refer to the practice of cannibalism. Other societies have thought it right to kill in order to occupy or take over the land of other humans, to kill for ceremonial purposes or merely to kill in order to acquire goods as the cheapest or most efficient way of increasing one's standard of living, if you like.

Until recent times at least it has been recognized in many societies as being ethically right under certain circumstances to kill in order to acquire power or in order to take over the position previously held by the victim.

Through a painfully slow process we as a society have come to the conclusion at least partially that this previous way of looking at the lives of other humans is not viable in a highly civilized community and that in the long run it is perhaps self-defeating because sooner or later in the general scheme of things, if we give ourselves the privilege of killing humans, we ourselves are likely to become the victims of that practice. So we have come to the conclusion that we should look upon human life as something to be protected at all costs.

This view is evident in many other phases of our way of life. We keep alive people, who, because of accidents or disease, are from a medical point of view merely vegetables. We believe that we have an obligation to provide at great expense services for that purpose. I think that is correct if we say that we believe in the sanctity of human life. There is the argument that under no circumstances has the state the right even in the name of society, to practice such a barbarous thing as the carrying out of capital punishment.

At one time I thought it was very inconsistent that many people, though not all, should believe, on the one hand, in the elimination of capital punishment and, on the other hand, that abortion on demand is reasonable and a right women should have. I have always looked on that as being a paradox, an inconsistency. I consider the life of an unborn child is just as important, or perhaps more so because it is not in a position to defend itself, as the life of anyone else. While I have always considered that to represent inconsistency on the part of many people, on thinking about it further it would seem that perhaps it is not inconsistency. On both counts it would seem that such people do not believe in the sanctity of human life.

I am a retentionist because I do believe in the sanctity of human life. Therefore it is my view that when an individual decides to take the life of another human, an act that is abhorrent to our view of the sanctity of human life, the penalty for such an act should be capital punishment not as punishment or as revenge but chiefly as an indication of the abhorrence in which society holds such a person. At the moment I am talking about premeditated murder in which a person has a plan to wipe out someone else. I am not talking about crimes of passion or homicide which could be construed as manslaughter or anything of that sort.

I would never want anyone, of course, no matter how gruesome the crime, to be subject to capital punishment on the basis of circumstantial evidence. If there is a shred of doubt, the accused person should be given the benefit of that doubt. I agree with that principle. However, as an ultimate sanction by society in respect of those who would ignore the view of our society, which I believe holds that human life is sacred, there should be no doubt in anyone's mind concerning the seriousness with which society views such crimes.

● (1120)

There is the argument, of course, that in the case where capital punishment is in force there is always the danger that an innocent person may be convicted and executed. I consider the chance of that happening as being very remote, especially in circumstances where it should be the recognized practice, as I think it is, that no one should be convicted and suffer capital punishment on the basis of circumstantial evidence. We should ask ourselves what the potential risk of this happening to an individual is. I contend that any Canadian citizen—you and I included—stands a far greater chance of being murdered than of being executed as a murderer who is in fact innocent. The relative chances are infinitesimal. If our purpose is to protect society, we should remember that the penalty should be such that no one can construe society's attitude as being in the least bit soft or as condoning in the slightest degree the taking of human life illegally by someone who plans it for his convenience or advancement.

It is a fact that when murders are committed the victims, generally speaking, have no means whatsoever of preventing it from happening. They are victims in the sense that they have no means of protecting themselves in advance or of taking precautions against it happening so as to make certain that they will not become murder victims. On the other hand, we can protect ourselves from the gallows. Any individual who takes the view that it is a terrible thing to inflict capital punishment on a Canadian citizen, regardless of what he has done, should remember that no one will ever be executed for murder or suffer any other punishment for murder, including imprisonment, if he chooses not to because all the citizen has to do to avoid that danger is not to murder anybody. Surely that is not too great a demand to make on the ordinary Canadian citizen.

[Mr. MacLean.]

That sums up my views in a very rough and ready way. We should consider this matter against the much broader background of what the mores of our society are at the present time. I fear that, with the rapid urbanization that has taken place in recent years all over the world, with the urban sprawl where communities are wiped out, most of our large cities are only dormitory areas where people sleep during the night and carry on their activities during the day in an entirely different environment. Among these people the sense of community has disappeared, to the detriment of our society. As a result of the destruction of small communities where people were each other's neighbours in every sense of the word, we are gradually becoming a society of Levites who pass by on the other side of the many problems that face us, especially in the large urban societies. This is one of the reasons that many people, especially the young, are being "turned off" by our society, are being frustrated by it, are being pushed into ways of living that can only be detrimental to them, to us and to society as a whole in the long run.

I want to say one more thing before concluding. I make no apology for the stand I take. I am sick and tired of being preached at by people who hold the opposite view and who say I am some sort of mossback and that I should "get with it" and advance. We are bound to advance by the fact that time moves on—we cannot do anything about that—but that does not guarantee the improvement and progress of every generation and of society as a whole. I imagine, although there is no way of knowing, that people supporting the policies that brought about the fall of the Roman Empire said to the critics of the day, "get with it, we want progress". I do not want progress, nor do I want to accelerate it, if that so-called progress is not real progress but only accelerates the decline in our standard of life and the quality of our society.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I never expected that I would rise so early in the day to take part in the debate. I do not mean to say that the debate has just started. I know it has lasted a long time. I have been here long enough to know that this subject was debated for quite a few days in 1966 and 1967, and it is being debated again in 1973.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I participate in this debate with the conviction that I have neither to apologize nor explain the position that I intend to take when voting. I also take part in the debate to outline my viewpoint and I do not propose to act like those who have spoken Friday, for instance, to indulge in rhetoric and judge the morals of my colleagues. Everyone is entitled to his convictions in the course of this debate on a subject which is of prime importance for the people of Canada.

When the point is to speak about the freedom of Canadian citizens, of those living on the fringe of society, we must not forget about the freedom of victims, of my colleagues, of mine as well as of the security of all Canadians. Since 1967, the Canadians that I have consulted, that I meet, do not stop indicating to me all their apprehension and dismay when seeing what little respect some citizens show for the people. Different opinions are held as indicated by the speeches which have been delivered; we have noted at times that this debate was fairly emotional.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to apologize for holding my opinions nor will I try to understand, for example, those who are resorting to all kinds of academic exercises to try to convince their colleagues and themselves that society would truly be better protected if the death penalty were abolished.

During this debate, Mr. Speaker, we have referred to Gallup polls and surveys made by many of my colleagues. As for myself, I have asked the advice of my constituents and I intend to continue that kind of consultation or survey. Some hon. members have acted likewise, but having obtained the answer of the population, they turn down their views, they rise in the House to state that they do not wish to become prisoners of public opinion. As for the survey carried out by my colleagues as well as that of October 30, 1972, we are all closely bound by them and we must take them into account.

If I decided to waive aside the results, I should be forbidden to carry out other surveys. I do not want to see the intelligence of Canadian people being abused, but we should know how to make surveys. We ask for public opinion on certain issues, but then the results are spurned when the people are clearly told: You have let me know what you thought about such problem, but I do not share your opinion and I will not consider your answers.

Mr. Speaker, I have no difficulty in believing in the result of the survey because, like 66 per cent of my constituents, I want the death penalty to be maintained. During the last few weeks, we have heard all the reasons that could be given for maintaining or abolishing capital punishment. Of course, Mr. Speaker, it would be much easier for someone on this side of the House to get up and say that he too supports the great majority of cabinet members who are in favour of abolition.

The position which I have chosen is much more difficult; very few have chosen it. Until now, very few have taken this position on third reading. I believe that what I am doing is right because I have read about this subject for months, Mr. Speaker. Some may say that people with a legal background are better qualified to give an opinion or become experts in this matter, but I do not think so. To arrive at a fair conclusion, you should first of all have a sufficient knowledge of life. You must also have studied the subject and consulted experts in order to be able to judge the situation. I sometimes wonder if certain lawyers who fervently support the abolition of the death penalty lack faith in their own talent. Do they have doubts about the quality of the services which they can render to their clients when they have to defend them and save them from the death penalty?

Mr. Speaker, during this debate, we have talked about life and about clemency and we have quoted texts from the Bible. I have no intention of doing this. As you know, the Bible contains as many texts in favour of maintaining the death penalty as texts against it. I would like to talk about life, to which each one of us is entitled and which is jeopardized by these people who live outside society and threaten the citizens. How many times have we been seeing people who, while serving their sentence, were paroled and perpetrated a second crime, even more abominable than the first one. While concern is shown here about the criminal there does not seem to be enough interest taken in the poor victims. Mr. Speaker, when we think about these atrocities from which some elderly, some women and some children have suffered, we can say that to anyone who tries to imagine these pains it becomes almost physically intolerable to imagine to what extent these victims had to suffer through the hands of these criminals.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I am unable to support the bill under consideration. I will have to vote against it. I would not want to give the impression, Mr. Speaker, that I am definitely and straightly in favour of the maintenance of capital punishment.

• (1130)

I am also in favour of abolition of this type of punishment, but I do not believe that our society is ready in this year of 1973 to indulge in such a luxury.

We should consider, Mr. Speaker, the impact of the abolition of capital punishment. Let us consider, as an example, some possibilities. A provincial cabinet minister, the Hon. Pierre Laporte, was assassinated in a cowardly manner almost three years ago, and it is not impossible, in the event of the accession to power of the political party advocating the separation of the province of Quebec from the rest of Canada, that we would witness the release of the authors of this atrocious crime.

It is due to a weakness in the present act that a criminal may be released. Let us seriously think of the consequences that could derive in the province of Quebec if all those who had anything to do with the kidnapping and the horrible assassination of Pierre Laporte were released following the Parti Québécois' victory.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I am unable to support the bill before us. Therefore, I shall vote against it.

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I was not long in coming to the House this morning, because I was definitely intent on making known my position in respect of this bill before it is read the third time.

I can state positively and without hesitation that I am as I have always been against capital punishment. If I am, Mr. Speaker, it is because I am deeply convinced as a Christian that demanding an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth serves no purpose and, I don't know how it is said in the Bible, I am not one of those who cry vengeance for a criminal act of this nature.

I have heard several hon. members using highly condemnable cases of murder as examples and demanding in an almost sanguinary voice that the murderers be in turn exterminated, hanged, in order to get rid of them once and for all instead of "freezing" them for many long years in our penal institutions.

I was still quite young when a person to whom I was very close was the victim of a murderer. That person was my uncle and godfather, the chief of police of a small town. The story was in every Canadian and American newspaper because at that time it was not very often that policemen were killed in the course of their duties.

It is not for me to discuss the circumstances of the crime. The murderer was committed to a psychiatric hospital; he has been there ever since and I do not think he will ever get out. The victim's close relatives are still alive. His children are active in their professions in the locality. The murderer's parents and children are also still alive. All of us who were close to the victim's family have the greatest sympathy for them and we try to have toward the author of the crime no other feelings than those inspired by Christian charity.

I am making this statement without ill feelings and when you are close to such facts as I have been as a journalist during the inquiry and subsequent judgment I can confess that I have in my heart not a feeling of vengeance but rather a feeling of deep compassion.

I think that, first and foremost, society should admit that we are encouraging circumstances which lead to murder, crime and violence. As most hon. members I watch television on weekends. I not only watch baseball, hockey and football but also the kind of programs intended for our children and I am astounded by the number of violent actions shown on the screen. There was a time when parents could, up to a certain point, control the watching of violent acts in the movie theaters but today television is invading the privacy of Canadian families and unless you simply throw the television set through the window it is absolutely impossible to control what our children are watching.

And yet violence does exist. Violence is shown by a state corporation, by private broadcasting corporations, radio and magazines which are giving detailed reports of heinous crimes and our children are exposed to all those facts.

Of course, in a free society and a democracy our children should be appraised of those facts but it is time that the Canadian legislatures, both the Parliament of Canada and the provincial assemblies, should deal with violence aimed at Canadian families, at innocent children who quite often are discovering life under such circumstances. This is no way of presenting reality, however heinous it may be. I believe that society must above all examine its own conscience and not take the bloodthirsty attitude of seeking vengeance against those that committed the crime.

These are, Mr. Speaker, some ideas which I wanted to put forward during this debate. As I have said before, I am an abolitionist, by deep Christian conviction. And I always remember, in difficult circumstances, whether in my dealings with the press, in political debates, or in personal relationships with persons with whom I work or with members of my immediate family, that there is one thing one must never forget, Mr. Speaker, and that is to forgive others as we want them to forgive us.

● (1140)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Mr. Corbin.]

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to special order made on Friday, July 27, the recorded division on the motion for third reading of Bill C-2, an act to amend the Criminal Code, stands deferred.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think it has been agreed that instead of proceeding with another item of business we will call it one o'clock and resume sitting at two o'clock, if this is agreeable to all parties.

Mr. Speaker: Before I inquire whether this is the desire of the House perhaps I should inquire what would be the disposition of the House with relation to the special order for special hours this afternoon and again this evening. I assume hon. members would want to resume the hours of operation under the Standing Orders.

Mr. MacEachen: That, I believe, is the desire, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered. I therefore leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 11.47 a.m. the sitting was suspended.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARAB-ISRAELI WAR—STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING CALL FOR CEASE-FIRE BY UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government warmly welcomes the call for a cease-fire by the Security Council jointly sponsored by the United States and the Soviet Union. We hope that it will be formally accepted by the parties to the conflict in the Middle East and put into effect as quickly as possible. The position taken by the Canadian government from the beginning of the recent outbreak of fighting, and as expressed by me last week, was that there should be a cease-fire linked with negotiations as soon as possible. We have also urged the United States and the U.S.S.R., as the major suppliers of arms, to use their influence toward the achievement of a cease-fire followed by negotiations on the basis of Resolution 242.

The linkage with negotiations is in our view vitally important. It is not clear at this point what auspices will be considered appropriate by the parties for the negotiations that are envisaged to take place immediately and concurrently with the cease-fire. We have suggested that the machinery of the United Nations should be made use of. However, if there are possibilities of negotiations under the auspices of the great powers, we would certainly not wish to oppose this or any other method of bringing the parties together.

Since the cease-fire is to take place in the positions that the forces now occupy, there will likely be a useful role for UNTSO in helping to implement the cease-fire. It may be that UNTSO will need to be expanded to improve its capability for this purpose. The Canadian government would look sympathetically at any request from the Secretary General for additional Canadian officers for UNTSO.

If the process of negotiations does get under way, and we emphasize most strongly that it must, then there may be a need for some peacekeeping force in addition to the cease-fire observation function discharged by UNTSO. As I have said before, we are prepared to consider participation in such a force if we are requested by the parties concerned and if we are satisfied we can play a useful role. This could be a very different force from the United Nations Emergency Force.

In 1956, one of the objectives was to remove the danger of a confrontation between great powers. This time, fortunately, the two super-powers have come together on a joint proposal for a cease-fire and it may be, therefore, that in this encouraging climate of détente there may be a place in the peacekeeping operation for forces supplied by the great powers. We will follow closely developments at the United Nations and consult with other governments on the situation.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, needless to say, we welcome the statement and, more important, the news that came out of the United Nations with reference to the cease-fire. These last three weeks have been most strenuous times. The suffering of the people directly involved must touch us first, but we must also remember that in all this time we have faced a grave and potential threat to the peace of the world.

The situation in the Middle East has been a long, long time in its origin and creation and it will be a long time before we reach a final settlement. But this must be the goal. Let us hope that yesterday's news was the first step toward this ultimate and desirable goal.

I note the minister's reference to the super-powers. That is an indication of realism, that where the super-powers determine upon a course of events something can be set in train. I note, too, his reference to the climate which the much welcomed détente has allowed to develop. Hopefully, within this climate even this most grave, most difficult, most explosive conflict may be resolved.

I note the minister's preference for a United Nations body in the negotiating process. I would have the same preference, but I would go a little further than his statement that the government would not oppose a group of super-powers or any other body. Indeed, we would welcome in an empiric way any group or organization which could advance peace in this long troubled region.

The minister is profoundly correct when he set out this view that negotiations are of the essence. The cease-fire is a beginning, it is something, an essential element but the world must move toward the resolution of this difficult problem. I note that the government will be in touch with other powers, other countries, and I presume most assuredly with the United Nations Secretary General.

I am sure all the people of Canada would want us, their representatives, to indicate that this country is prepared to make some efforts and, indeed, some sacrifices if, under the proper auspices and with reasonable hope for success, the kind of force the minister mentioned should be set up. I believe we should sacrifice something for peace in the Middle East because in doing that we would be doing much more. We would be sacrificing something for the peace of the whole world.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we, too, welcome with a spirit of thankfulness the Security Council's call for a cease-fire and the apparent acceptance of the call by the main parties concerned. We concur with the view expressed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) that an important feature of the cease-fire is that negotiations for a permanent peace based on Resolution No. 242 should immediately follow the cease-fire, preferably under the auspices of the United Nations.

These negotiations must take into account both the claims of the Arab nations for the return of territory occupied as a result of the six-day war in 1967 and the right of the Israelis to secure and recognized boundaries. We assume that implicit in the acceptance of the cease-fire by Egypt and Syria is a readiness to negotiate on the basis of the recognition of the independence and territorial integrity of Israel. Because of the absence of such negotiations, Resolution No. 242 of the Security Council was previously inoperative.

Another subject which will have to be dealt with in the negotiations is the situation of the Palestinian refugees. These problems will have to be solved by co-operative action not only on the part of the Israelis but by her neighbours and the world community as a whole.

The world will feel a sense of relief that it appears the great powers have been able to bring about a cessation of hostilities without becoming further involved in confrontation amongst themselves.

Finally, we will support a Canadian role under the United Nations in helping to implement the cease-fire and, if necessary, to keep the peace afterwards.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, it is always extremely unfortunate to see that even today countries continue to resolve their differences through war. Therefore, it is heartening to see that Canada acts as a valuable mediator whose obvious good faith and good will are beyond doubt.

Broadcasting

We can only hope, Mr. Speaker, that the recent action taken by the United Nations will finally succeed in bringing together the belligerent parties. And we wish that Canada's helpful intervention will contribute in an increasing way to the establishment of a lasting peace in all countries of the world.

* * *

● (1410)

[English]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

HOSPITAL NURSES' PAY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity related to the protest and impending general slow-down by nurses in the federal employ which will particularly affect war veterans in veterans' hospitals across Canada. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the question involving pay differences between the nurses and Treasury Board be immediately referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs in respect of those matters concerning the department's responsibility for treatment services to war veterans.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: This motion proposed under Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

* * *

BROADCASTING

ADVERTISING ON CHILDREN'S PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek unanimous consent to put a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the failure of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission to implement the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts as concurred in by the House of Commons on July 24, 1973, in connection with the examination of the subject matter of Bill C-22, to amend the Broadcasting Act (Advertising on children's programs), and in view of the commission's position as outlined in a public statement dated October 16, 1973, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the public announcement by the CRTC dated October 16, 1973, be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

[Mr. Matte.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

* * *

[Translation]

CANADA PENSION PLAN (No. 2)

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ANNUAL INCREASES AND LEVEL OF INCOME ON WHICH CONTRIBUTIONS PAID

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-224, an act to amend the Canada Pension Plan (No. 2).

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk)

[Text]

MEMBERS OF ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL

Question No. 1,728—Mr. Muir:

1. How many members are presently on the Atlantic Development Council?

2. What are their names, addresses and professions?

3. What amount of salary does each receive?

4. What amount did each member receive in expenses since his appointment and for what purposes were these expenses incurred?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. As of July 4, 1973, there are 11 members on the Atlantic Development Council.

2. The Council members are as follows: Mr. Gordon Campbell Eaton, MC CD, (Chairman); Managing Director, Newfoundland Tractor and Equipment Company Limited, St. John's, Newfoundland. Mr. Alyre H. Cormier, Executive Vice President, Atlantic Holdings Limited, Moncton, New Brunswick. Mr. John B. Foote, President, J. B. Foote & Sons Limited, Grand Bank, Newfoundland. Mr. F. Carl Hudson, President, Municipal Spraying & Contracting Limited, Bedford, Nova Scotia. Mr. J. J. Kinley, President, Lunenburg Foundry & Engineering Limited, Lunenburg, Nova Scotia. Mr. Paul LePage, President, New Brunswick Federation of Labour, Bathurst, New Brunswick. Mr. John R. Lynk, President, Nova Scotia Federation of Labour, New Glasgow, Nova Scotia. Mr. Keith MacKinnon, President, MacKinnon Transport Limited, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. Mr. Philip W. Oland, President, Moosehead Breweries Limited, Saint John, New Brunswick. Mr. Calvert C. Pratt, President, Steers Limited, St. John's, Newfoundland. Mr. Esau E. Thoms, General Chairman, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, Freshwater, Pla-centia Bay, Newfoundland. Messrs. Eaton, Cormier, Foote, Hudson, Kinley, MacKinnon, Oland and Pratt are businessmen; Messrs. LePage, Lynk and Thoms are labour leaders.

3. Members of the Council serve without remuneration. There is provision for an honorarium of $5,000 per year for the chairman, but Mr. Eaton has asked that he be permitted to serve without honorarium.

4. The following are the amounts received in expenses by Council members since their respective appointments: Mr. Gordon Campbell Eaton, nil*; Mr. Alyre H. Cormier, $1,706.17; Mr. John B. Foote, $2,642.45; Mr. F. Carl Hudson, $92.13; Mr. J. J. Kinley, $1,676.95; Mr. Paul LePage, $2,-035.33; Mr. John R. Lynk, $1,420.18; Mr. Keith MacKinnon, nil; Mr. Philip W. Oland, $1,323.30; Mr. Calvert C. Pratt, $2,466.79; Mr. Esau E. Thoms, nil. These expenses were incurred by attendance at meetings in connection with their duties as Council members.

———

*appointment effective June 14, 1973.

appointment effective April 1, 1973.

*COST OF POTTED PLANTS FOR NEW NATIONAL DEFENCE HEADQUARTERS, OTTAWA

Question No. 1,964—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What is the total number of and total cost of potted plants for the yet unopened National Defence Headquarters in Ottawa, purchased or contracted for or anticipated?

2. If an equivalent sum of money were spent (a) how many days could it sustain fuel cost for HMCS Iroquois (b) how many hours could it sustain in-flight operational costs of one CF-5 (c) how many hours could it sustain in-flight operational costs of one Argus (d) how many hours could it sustain in-flight operational costs of one Tracker aircraft (e) how many units of Permanent Married Quarters could be given complete re-plastering and re-painting?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The answer is as follows: 1. two thousand two hundred and fifty at a cost of $81,434.

2. (a) 34; (b) 185; (c) 53.5; (d) 137.7; (e) 135.4.

1971 FIRENZA CARS

Question No. 2,069—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs sent any representations or communications to General Motors Corporation in connection with public complaints concerning the 1971 Firenza and, if so, what is the nature of such government representations or communications and what response has the government received from General Motors?

2. Is the government considering any possible ways in which it could assist General Motors in realizing their obligation to dissatisfied purchasers of the 1971 Firenza?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Yes. The Department has been in communication with General Motors Corporation in connection with public complaints concerning the 1971 Firenza. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is investigating complaints received from dissatisfied Firenza owners and bringing them to the attention of General Motors with a view of trying to assist in obtaining satisfactory solutions to these complaints. The Firenza problem has been dealt with by correspondence and by discussion between Mr. J. N. McGill, Owner Relations Manager of General Motors of Canada Limited and officials of the Department. G.M. informed the department it would: (1) investigate and effect repairs within the terms of the warranty; (2) consider claims for repairs required after the warranty has expired; (3) provide each Firenza owner with a $250 voucher, if the car was purchased new prior to April 14, 1973, which can be used in an original owner trade in of a Firenza on a new G.M. automobile.

2. No. The government is not considering ways to assist General Motors in realizing its obligations to dissatisfied Firenza owners. The government considers that it is the responsibility of General Motors to meet its obligations to its customers.

CANADIAN EXPENDITURES IN VIET NAM

Question No. 2,293—Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway):

1. What was the total amount of expenditure by the government in South Viet Nam from 1966 to the present?

2. How much of this was spent in various forms of aid?

3. What forms did this aid take?

4. What was the total expenditure by the government on the International Control Commission in Viet Nam from 1954 to 1972?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Total government expenditure in Viet Nam from January 1, 1967 (the earliest date for the compilation of an aggregate figure) to May 31, 1973 totalled approximately $22.77 million. (Recoverable amounts have not been taken into consideration in this total. For the period until February, 1973 expenditures made in North Viet Nam are also included since the 1954 Commission's operations and financial reporting extended to both countries.)

2. The Government expenditure on aid in South Viet Nam during this period was $15.13 million.

3. The Canadian Government maintains a program of medical and relief assistance in the Republic of Viet Nam. This assistance has been provided in response to requests for medical, social and humanitarian aid. Projects have included a T.B. clinic at Quang Ngai, a rehabilitation centre at Qui Nhon, a Public Health Field Training Development Program, educational texts and training, food aid, refugee housing, and other forms of emergency relief. Canada has also made contributions to the International Red Cross for its programs in Indochina.

4. Government expenditures in connection with the ICSC from 1954 to the present amount to approximately $17.5 million. (Recoverable amounts have not been included. Because of accounting procedures some expenditures made in Laos and Cambodia are included.)

CANADA SAFETY REGULATIONS

Question No. 2,457—Mr. Marshall:

Under Canada's Safety Regulations, what is the minimum amount of space per person required for passengers in public transportation vehicles under (a) buses (b) trains (c) planes?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): (a) The provincial Governments have authority under existing legislation to limit the number of passengers on public transportation buses in relationship to the designated seating capacity. (b) There are no regulations with respect to space per person upon trains. (c) Space per person requirements are not stipulated for aeroplanes. However, regulations require a seat and an individual safety belt or safety harness for each person in the aircraft, other than infants.

EXEMPTION OF CPR SUBSIDIARIES FROM TAXATION

Question No. 2,509—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. Does the CPR subsidiary Marathon Realty or any other agency of CPR benefit presently from any exemptions from (a) local (b) provincial (c) federal taxation, other levies or regulations in consequence of original grants of land to the original CPR by the government?

2. If there are present exemptions, what is the nature of each such exemption from (a) local (b) provincial (c) federal tax, levy or regulations?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: Subsidiaries of Canadian Pacific Limited, such as Marathon Realty, do not come under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Transport Commission. Consequently, the Commission does not receive reports from these companies nor does it have access to internal financial reports or agreements.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—EMPLOYMENT OF MR. GERALD BLACKMORE

Question No. 2,526—Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond):

1. Was Mr. Gerald Blackmore under contract to the Cape Breton Development Corporation and, if so (a) for what period (b) what was his salary?

2. Was the contract completed and, if not, for what reason?

3. (a) What was total payment to Mr. Blackmore (b) what total expenses were incurred by him during his employment with the Cape Breton Development Corporation?

4. Was Mr. Blackmore given any paper(s) of recommendation at the time of his separation and, if so (a) who authorized same (b) who signed it?

5. At the time of departure was Mr. Gerald Blackmore paid any form of severance pay, either lump or otherwise, in relation to his separation from the Cape Breton Development Corporation and, if so (a) what was the total amount (b) how was it received by him (c) who approved any such payment or payments?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. Yes; (a) five years; (b) it is contrary to the policy regarding employees of Crown Corporations to publish specific salaries or other payments.

2. No; terminated by agreement.

3. As for 1(b).

4. Yes, concerning Mr. Blackmore's professional status; (a) and (b) the President of the Corporation.

5. Yes (a) as for 1 (b); (b) cheque; (c) the President of the Corporation.

[Mr. Marshall.]

RURAL MAIL CONTRACTORS

Question No. 2,557—Mr. Godin:

Owing to increases in the cost of motorcars, gas and living in general, is the government considering reviewing the plight of rural mail contractors bound by contracts dating several years back and, if so, on what date will the government announce its projects and be in a position to make an adjustment to enable such contractors to earn wages comparable to those paid in other sectors?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): In accordance with the terms of the Post Office Act, mail services are performed under contracts awarded following invitations of public tenders. Contract rates including wages are therefore initially set by the contractors themselves when they submit their tenders. Section 35 of the Post Office Act provides for upward adjustments in mail contract rates at specified periods to compensate contractors for increases in operating costs. One of the stipulations therein is that contractors must file an application if they wish to have their contract rates reviewed. Once this condition has been met, the Post Office Department ensures that contractors are adequately compensated for increases in the cost of performing the mail services since they were awarded the contracts or since the last adjustments in their contract rates. The Department is presently updating its formula under which adjustments in mail contract rates are authorized to ensure that mail contractors will benefit from increases in wages comparable to those paid in other sectors of the economy.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—FINANCIAL INVOLVEMENT WITH HUSTLER CORPORATION

Question No. 2,582—Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond):

1. Was the Cape Breton Development Corporation involved financially with the Hustler Corporation and, if so, to what extent, either in loans or grants?

2. (a) On what date (b) for what reason did Hustler discontinue operations in Cape Breton?

3. Who was president of Hustler Corporation when its Cape Breton operations closed down?

4. (a) What was the state of Hustler's finances at the time of closure (b) did Hustler have a bank balance and, if so, how much?

5. Did the Cape Breton Development Corporation recover its investment and, if so, to what extent?

6. What was the final disposition of the Hustler bank account?

7. Were all creditors paid off?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. Yes, $659,264.26 by loan and loan guarantee and $65,000 by grant.

2. (a) June 30, 1970. (b) Appointment of a receiver by Court Order.

3. Wylie Mason.

4. (a) A state of difficulty. (b) Yes, $212.07.

5. Yes, to the extent of $64,151.19 in cash and $300,000 by agreement for sale of premises.

6. Taken over by the receiver.

7. No.

DIRECTORS AND EXECUTIVE MEMBERS OF LE CONSEIL DE DÉVELOPPEMENT SOCIAL DU MONTRÉAL MÉTROPOLITAIN

Question No. 2,593—Mr. Hellyer:

1. Who are the Directors and Executive Members of Le Conseil de développement social du Montréal métropolitain?

2. What are the (a) names (b) qualifications of the persons undertaking the research into long-term causes of economic inequalities among individuals and families under the grant recently provided by the Department of National Health and Welfare?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. President, Mr. Serge Carreau; 1st Vice-President, Mr. Michel Bourdon, C.S.N.; 2nd Vice-President, Mr. Pascal Laforest; Treasurer, Miss Ginette Mackenzie; Secretary, Mr. Maurice Lafond; 1st Counsellor, Mr. André Messier, F.T.Q.; 2nd Counsellor, Mrs. Pierrette Cambron; Director General, Mr. André Carrier (commencing September 10, 1973).

2. (a) Claude Parent, Pierre Bouchard. (b) These researchers were chosen with the following qualification in mind: (a) that both be available for full-time work; (b) that both be familiar with methodological problems in relation to research; (c) that one have a Master's degree or equivalent in mathematics and/or computer science; (d) that the other have a Master's degree or equivalent in economics and/or economic sociology.

HALIFAX INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—AIR CONDITIONING

Question No. 2,630—Mr. Forrestall:

On what date will the government proceed with plans to install an air conditioning system in the Halifax International Airport to (a) alleviate the extreme heat conditions (b) alleviate the extreme humidity conditions (c) provide humane conditions for both employees and airport users?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Ministry of Transport has planned the installation of full air conditioning to all areas of the terminal building in fiscal 1976/77.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

Question No. 2,704—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is the Minister of Transport considering any of the recommendations of the 1971 Carr Report and, if so (a) what are they (b) on what date will they be implemented?

2. Is the Minister of Transport considering any of the recommendations of the Bind Report and, if so (a) what are they (b) on what date will they be implemented?

3. Is consideration being given for freezing the tolls on the St. Lawrence Seaway at the level established by agreement between Canada and the United States in 1959, similar to the action of the United States Government?

4. Is consideration being given to absolve the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority from the necessity of collecting past, present and future interest on capital costs involved, similar to the action instituted by the United States?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority advises as follows: 1. A study of the recommendations in the Carr Report is continuing and no decision has been reached as to whether or when they will be implemented.

2. No.

3. The United States Government relieved The St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation from the responsibility to pay interest on loans for construction costs. Although this reduces the debt burden of the United States Corporation it does not amount to action to freeze Seaway tolls. No decision has been made to freeze the tolls indefinitely.

4. Consideration is being given to the possibility of refinancing the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. No decision has been made concerning interest on capital costs.

OLD AGE SECURITY PENSIONS AND INCOME SUPPLEMENTS

Question No. 2,710—Mr. Hueglin:

1. According to the latest statistics available, how many individuals who are not Canadian citizens are obtaining (a) Old Age Security Pensions (b) Income Supplements and, of these, how many are citizens of the United States of America?

2. Is any check made to see if they are in receipt of Social Security payments from the United States of America?

3. If they are in receipt of such a Social Security Pension, does this, in any way, affect their eligibility?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Parts (a) and (b) can not be determined since Canadian citizenship is not a requirement for entitlement to an Old Age Security pension or a Guaranteed Income Supplement.

2. Not in connection with an application for an Old Age Security pension. If a pensioner applies for a Guaranteed Income Supplement, however, he is required to state his income, including United States Social Security benefits, if any. His statement is subject to verification through income tax records.

3. Not insofar as the Old Age Security pension is concerned. Eligibility for a Guaranteed Income Supplement is affected, however, since entitlement is directly related to the amount of income a pensioner receives.

PASSENGER TERMINALS

Question No. 2,736—Mr. McKinnon:

How large are the floor areas of each of the passenger terminals and what is the 1972 passenger load for each of the following airports (a) Victoria (b) Edmonton International (c) Regina (d) Gander (e) Yellowknife (f) Toronto including Terminal 2 (g) London?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport):

Air Terminal Buildings	Gross Floor Area S.F.	Annual Enplaned and Deplaned Scheduled and Charter Passengers (1972)
(a) Victoria	24,000	286,849
(b) Edmonton International	360,000	754,615
(c) Regina	37,000	317,874
(d) Gander	155,000	111,499
(e) Yellowknife	14,000	53,921
(f) Toronto Aeroquay 1	819,000	7,671,369*
Toronto ATB 2	648,000	—
(g) London	42,000	187,552

*Total Toronto International

Orders for Returns

MARINE ACCIDENT INVESTIGATION

Question No. 2,762—Mr. Forrestall:

In what percentage of the accidents involving significant property damage and/or serious or more grievous injury to occupants to water vessels has the investigation been partially or otherwise concerned with procedures of the other agencies of government that are charged with a regulatory function with respect to marine transportation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Marine accident investigation procedures require the investigation of all factors which might have a bearing on or cause or contribute to a casualty, including the practices and proceedings of other government agencies charged with any regulatory function when these are considered relevant.

HANDLING OF ORE CONCENTRATES IN OPEN RAILWAY CARS

Question No. 2,769—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the Department of Transport or the Department of the Environment aware of shipments of ground lead and zinc in powdered form being transported in open railway cars from Escatall Mines in Kidd, Ontario to Eastern points in Canada?

2. Will the government take steps to require that such open railway cars be properly covered in order to prevent their contents from escaping in any way?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. The Ministry of Transport and the Department of the Environment are aware that ore concentrates are shipped from Kidd, Ontario to Eastern points in Canada in open top rail cars.

2. The Canadian Transport Commission, in cooperation with the Ministry and the Department of the Environment, is investigating this movement to ascertain if there are any problems associated with escape of concentrates while in transit.

* * *

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS IN OTTAWA, HULL AND VANIER

Question No. 1,984—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. To date, what buildings are (a) owned (b) leased by the government in (i) Ottawa (ii) Hull (iii) Vanier City?

2. For each year 1968 to 1972 inclusive, what was the total rental cost for those buildings leased by the government?

3. (a) Who is responsible for negotiating rentals on behalf of the government (b) what is the mechanics by which rental premises are arranged?

4. For that same period 1968 to 1972, how many (a) commercial buildings (b) single-attached dwellings (c) multiple dwellings were (i) purchased (ii) demolished by the government?

5. What was the value of each (a) building purchased (b) land purchased?

6. What was the demolition cost of each structure destroyed?

7. How many buildings are (a) being built (b) will be built within the next five years by the government in (i) Ottawa (ii) Hull (iii) Vanier City (iv) Toronto (v) Montreal (vi) Quebec City (vii) Halifax (viii) Winnipeg (ix) Vancouver (x) Edmonton (xi) other cities?

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Return tabled.

MOUNT HOPE AIRPORT—LANDINGS AND DEPARTURES OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Question No. 2,445—Mr. O'Sullivan:

1. In the period October 30, 1972 to June 1, 1973, how many aircraft owned, rented or operated by the government (a) landed at (b) departed from Mount Hope Airport?

2. What was the point of (a) departure (b) destination for these aircraft?

3. What were the names and government positions of all persons aboard these aircraft, other than crew members?

4. What was the operating cost of each of these flights?

5. What was the reason for each of these flights?

Return tabled.

* * *

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DEDICATION OF NEWFOUNDLAND BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE COMMEMORATING THOSE WHO GAVE THEIR LIVES IN WAR

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will agree with the motion I wish to make. It arises out of an event that took place yesterday in the West Block Confederation Room when, as indicated two days ago by the honourable and gallant Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) would take place, a ceremony did take place by which the Newfoundland Book of Remembrance was dedicated. You, Sir, were represented by the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger). The minister himself made an eloquent address, and it and the fine address by the hon. member for Mercier ought to be available to the people of this country today and in the years ahead.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: As the only member of this House who served in the Canadian Armed Forces in the first great war, I hope and trust that the House will not consider me presumptuous in asking that consideration and consent be given to having the speeches of the minister and the hon. member for Mercier printed as an appendix to today's Hansard. There were also addresses by the Speaker of the Senate and by Senator Major Carter. I take it that their speeches will be made available through the proceedings of the Senate.

● (1420)

In the battle of Beaumont-Hamel on July 1, 1916, on the Somme the soldiers of Newfoundland showed dauntless courage and overwhelming sacrifice. Today their service and their sacrifices have become part of the tradition and, indeed, of the inheritance of our country. What they did there will always be remembered and honoured by all Canadians. That service, of course, was continued throughout the rest of the first world war and the second world war as well as in other parts of the world. That tradition of service is exemplified since 1916 over and over again, and I feel that it would be only proper that the House be given the opportunity to permit what was said by the hon. members who served with such distinction in the last war to be made available to the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not at all certain whether parliamentary procedure requires a seconder for this motion. I think the reaction of the House makes clear that it will be accepted unanimously. I do want, however, on behalf of my fellow Newfoundlanders on both sides of the House to express my thanks to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and my colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), for the generous comments made yesterday and again today with reference to my fellow Newfoundlanders who gave their lives in various conflicts throughout the years in defence of the liberties we all hold so dear.

There have been in my life in parliament three very memorable occasions. First, I believe I am the only person here present who was in this chamber or in the other place when the actual terms of confederation between Newfoundland and Canada were signed 25 years ago this coming December.

The second most memorable moment was when I made my maiden speech as a backbencher in this honourable House in our centennial year, an appropriate recognition, I felt, for Newfoundland as all of Canada celebrated 100 years and we were in every respect the baby of the family.

The third most memorable moment, and perhaps the one that will stay with me longest, was yesterday when some 150 veterans from Newfoundland joined with veterans from other parts of Canada and with parliamentarians of both Houses in the magnificent Confederation Room to record after a quarter century, through placing them in the Peace Tower of this magnificent building, the names of those Newfoundlanders who, while now at rest, and who thus join those hundreds of thousands of other Canadians in becoming posthumously members of a great Canadian family and to share with them the contribution that preserved for us all the liberty we epitomize in this House.

I express my gratitude to all for this consideration of Canada's newest province and oldest cornerstone of the whole Commonwealth. Thank you very much.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in just a word may I say that all of us who had the privilege of being present at yesterday's ceremonies agree as to their importance and their significance. I think we all owe a debt of gratitude to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) for making the suggestion he has proposed to the House at this time. Possibly, the motion might be enlarged somewhat so that the entire record of what took place yesterday could be included in Hansard, whatever they might do in the other place. But in any case and in whatever form the motion is presented, we are very happy to give it our support.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will appreciate that the proceedings are somewhat irregular. We may be proceeding at this time under Standing Order 43 (a) or 117, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would suggest. I am not sure whether it is the desire of the House to hear further comments at this time. As I said, I have some doubts about the regularity of the proceedings. The hon. member for St. John's East is seeking the floor. Perhaps he might be recognized briefly, and then I think we would have to go on to the next order of business.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I merely wanted to rise to associate myself and my colleagues with the remarks of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo. He stated our position very eloquently and very well. I also want to thank on behalf of my colleagues the distinguished right hon. member for Prince Albert for his noble gesture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I understood you correctly, I would imagine there would be a disposition by unanimous consent to revert to motions so that the motion presented by the right hon. gentleman could be put.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think there is really any motion to be put. The right hon. member has sought the unanimous consent of the House for an order that the proceedings of yesterday's ceremony be appended to Hansard. There is a slight difficulty in that, to the best of my knowledge, there is no taped record of the proceedings.

An hon. Member: Perhaps there was a bug in the room.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the difficulty that that might cause, I think the order of the House would be that the contributions made to the ceremony by the hon. members referred to by the right hon. member for Prince Albert would be printed as an appendix to Hansard. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

[Editor's note: For text of certain addresses at dedication of Newfoundland Book of Remembrance, see Appendix.]

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—POSSIBLE CURTAILMENT OF EXPORTS TO PROTECT BRITISH COLUMBIA CONSUMERS—COST OF ALTERNATIVE SUPPLIES FROM ALBERTA

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I am sorry to have to come back to this problem, but in view of the demand by the Attorney General of British Columbia on behalf of the people of that province that by noon tomorrow the federal government make a firm decision on curtailing exports of natural gas until such time as the shortage of supply has been averted, can the minister now tell the House what his decision is with respect to this demand?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I responded to the Attorney General by pointing out to him that his ultimatum, if I may call it that, was in direct contradiction and, I suppose a repudiation of the view of the principal energy adviser of the province, the chairman of the B.C. Energy Commission. The chairman of the commission has advised the holding of a meeting, and I understand from the National Energy Board that there was a meeting this morning, between representatives of the commission, of West Coast Transmission and of Alberta's gas utilities with regard to possible supplies from northern Alberta. With regard to possible supplies from southern Alberta, West Coast Transmission in conjunction with PGT and APCO is preparing an application to the National Energy Board for the transmission of gas from southern Alberta sources and a similar application will be made to the Federal Power Commission. As soon as the application is received, the board will deal with it with utmost dispatch.

Mr. Oberle: Can the minister tell us specifically whether he has now ruled out cutbacks in the 62 per cent of B.C.'s natural gas going to the United States, and has he reached a decision as to whom will bear the cost in the event that reserves from Alberta are rerouted for the benefit of consumers in British Columbia?

● (1430)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing here with a licence issued by the National Energy Board. Therefore in the first instance it will be a question for that board to hear evidence and to make a determination. I think I can say to the hon. gentleman that a cutback in exports of natural gas is indeed not ruled out, but I would not want to go further than this before I have an opportunity to discuss the matter with the President's energy advisor tomorrow.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I have one more supplementary question. In view of the difference of opinion expressed by these two regulatory bodies, is the minister prepared to make an offer to meet with his counterparts in British Columbia and Alberta in an attempt to avert this very serious crisis?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there does not appear to be any difference of opinion at all. The British Columbia Energy Commission holds the same view as the National Energy Board.

NATURAL GAS—COST OF POSSIBLE ALBERTA SUPPLIES TO BRITISH COLUMBIA CONSUMERS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources similar to one asked about this matter last week. Is he in a position to say what the cost will be to consumers in British Columbia of this rerouted gas? Will it not be more than what they are paying already?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this is obviously a question that will be included in the application to the Energy Board. I will then be in a better position to advise the House.

GASOLINE AND HEATING OIL—DECISION ON POSSIBLE PRICE INCREASES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question or two to direct to the same minister. Last Friday after he had met with representatives of the oil industry he announced, according to press reports, that the government would probably agree to an increase in the prices of gasoline and home heating oil in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces and that it might have to consider similar increases for the part of Canada west of the Ottawa valley now served by oil from Canadian sources. May I ask the minister whether he has made such a decision and, if so, what the increase will be?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Sir. No such decision has been made yet.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the continuing considerable profits made by these large multinationals, and particularly in view of the fact that they sell to themselves from wellhead to refinery at prices they themselves set, may I ask the minister whether he is persuaded that an increase in the consumer prices is justified in those circumstances?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is the decision to be taken.

Mr. Lewis: Can the minister inform the House (a) when the decision may be expected and, (b), what elements he and the government are considering with respect to the application for price increases?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, such a decision might be made during the current week. I think the most critical element will be the cost of crude oil from offshore sources being landed in Canada. As the hon. gentleman will recall, Venezuela has increased its tax on crude oil, and as well as that there has been a 70 per cent increase in the price of crude oil coming from the Arab states. So the principal element to be taken into consideration will be the landed cost of oil in eastern Canada. Another factor will be the ultimate impact on the Canadian market once the restraint comes off, and whether or not there should be graduated raises to meet these increases.

OIL—REPORTED POSSIBLE DIVERSION OF TANKERS DESTINED TO CANADA TO UNITED STATES PORTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of a report I received less than an hour ago that there is a possibility that tankers bringing oil from the Middle East to Canada will now be diverted to ports in the United States, will the minister investigate that report and, if that is the case, instruct the companies or owners of the tankers to deliver that oil to Canada, its original destination?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am much obliged to the hon. gentleman for bringing this to my attention. I will look into it right away.

[Translation]

GASOLINE PRICE INCREASES—POSSIBLE AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES TO REDUCE TAX

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

In view of the fact that gas prices are increasing in a staggering way, can he tell us whether he is going to have an agreement with the provincial authorities in order to reduce the tax on gas?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is a very relevant question; we will consider the hon. member's suggestion.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT PROPOSAL THAT NORTHWESTERN UNITED STATES BE SUPPLIED BY CANADIAN OIL RATHER THAN BY TANKERS CARRYING ALASKAN OIL—INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that on September 4 statements made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment indicated it was still Canadian policy to provide Canadian oil to the Pacific northwest in order to keep oil tankers out of the Puget Sound area, and in view of the fact that on September 20 a statement was made in the House that leaves this very much in doubt, can the minister advise if Canada has abandoned its policy of supplying Canadian oil as a substitute for tankers carrying oil from Alaska?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman has said, there have been quite a number of changes in circumstances since the first statement was made on September 4 and, indeed, since September 20. In the first place, there are indications that we do not have unlimited supplies of oil in Canada. Second, in view of the changing circumstances it might be worthwhile to build a pipeline across Canada. All of these problems have to be looked at afresh. It is still our policy to try to minimize and, if possible, avoid entirely the dangers inherent in big supertankers coming into those waters.

Mr. Fraser: With respect, Mr. Speaker, my question was specific and it remains specific. Has Canada changed its policy of asking the United States to consider Canadian imports in order to keep the tankers out of there and, if not, what steps have been taken recently, despite the changing circumstances, to maintain this position with the United States?

Mr. Sharp: As I have said, Mr. Speaker, we have been reviewing our oil policies. We have not made a decision yet on this question. At one time this looked like a perfectly feasible method of avoiding bringing tankers close to our coast. I am sure the hon. gentleman would agree that, because of the changing petroleum situation throughout the world, we cannot now be quite as sure as we were.

INQUIRY AS TO CANADA-UNITED STATES OIL SPILL CONTINGENCY PLAN ON WEST COAST

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Can the minister advise the House, with respect to this whole problem, whether there is in fact now in existence a joint Canada-U.S. oil spill contingency plan and, if so, how soon Canada will have sufficient oil pollution containment equipment and personnel on the west coast in order to meet our obligations under any such plan?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of course it will be some years before there are supertankers coming down the Pacific coast carrying Alaskan oil. There is now, of course, some movement into many of our ports, as the hon. gentleman knows, and for some time now we have had very active discussions, with plans being made to try to minimize damage from oil spills on both the west coast and the east coast. I am sure he will agree that, while we are greatly concerned about the west coast, there are also problems on the east coast.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will recognize the hon. member, but he has asked a question and three supplementaries. I think there has to be a limit to the supplementaries asked by a member.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): He has not had an answer yet.

Mr. Fraser: One of my colleagues says that I have not had an answer yet. A letter delivered to me, September 7, from the office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs contained the following:

An elaborate joint oil spill contingency plan has been developed.

My question is this: has that plan been developed or not, or is it still being discussed?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, a plan has been developed and it is still being discussed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: My answer to both questions is yes.

* * *

ENERGY

PLANS TO ASSIST OIL FIRED THERMAL POWER PLANTS TO CHANGE TO COAL

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Has his department any contingency plans to assist thermal powered generating stations to change to the use of coal, or to make some other adjustment, so that areas of the country that are completely dependent on oil fired thermal power plants will not suffer unduly because of the increasing cost of crude oil?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would assume that the hon. member is more concerned in this particular context with the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. MacLean: Yes.

Mr. Jamieson: We have been discussing with the three maritime provinces the whole question of energy supply and expansion, but not necessarily up to now in terms of conversion. The question has been primarily one of nuclear powered plants as being supplementary to those now in existence.

● (1440)

OIL—ACHIEVEMENT OF AGREEMENT WITH ALBERTA GOVERNMENT AND INDUSTRY—SUGGESTION AS TO POSITION MINISTER SHOULD TAKE

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since the minister has now struck out for the second time with the province of Alberta on energy matters, the latest being his reply to a question by the hon. member for Calgary North on October 18 concerning exemption of Syncrude, Canada, Ltd., from the export tax, which has been refuted by Mr. Spragin—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might like to ask a question rather than submit an argument. A question should not be argumentative.

Mr. Towers: Will the minister now go hat in hand to the province of Alberta on October 29 to initiate an agreement between that province and the oil industry and the federal government which will be of benefit to all Canadians?

[Mr. Fraser.]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. gentleman that I was not speaking to Mr. Spragin; I was speaking to his principals, and I still think that my comment stands.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Prime Minister. If the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources strikes out the third time at the meeting with Alberta on October 29, will the Prime Minister assure this House that the minister will be out?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary is hypothetical.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT PAY AWARD TO NURSES BE REVIEWED

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to nurses in the employ of the federal government most of whom work in and for the Department of Veterans Affairs, but I should like to put my question to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as minister responsible for the Public Service Staff Relations Board. In view of the fact that the nurses concerned, many of whom are not reporting for work these days, feel that the arbitral award in their case was unfair in that it did not take all the factors into consideration, will the minister take up with the Public Service Staff Relations Board the possibility of having that award reviewed?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will have a word with the chairman of the board and discuss the point made by my hon. friend.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the apparent discontent of many nurses in veterans affairs hospitals, which is going to interfere with the care of war veterans, has the minister made his colleagues in cabinet aware of the situation, has he had consultations and has he made representations to ensure swift settlement of the issues before many of our veterans are ignored?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the hon. member that I have spoken to one member of cabinet, the President of the Treasury Board. I would also like to assure the House that our veterans are well cared for. A segment of the nursing staff is off for three days registering their objection but I am informed that the veterans are still being well looked after.

Mr. Marshall: In view of the fact that the Assistant Deputy Minister of Hospitals has resigned, is the minister making an immediate appointment so that the mechanics of the treatment of veterans will continue uninterrupted?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, the doctor in charge of transfer hospitals has not resigned; he has indicated his desire to retire on December 21. This has been well accepted, although we are very sorry, but it is due to personal reasons.

Mr. Bell: Something like Agnew. He retired early.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the President of the Treasury Board has been mentioned, may I address a supplementary question to him? In view of the unwillingness of the government to pay adequate salaries to the nurses, will the President of the Treasury Board make it clear that the government will not buy the recommendation of salaries of $60,000 a year for deputy ministers?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I can accept the premise of the hon. gentleman's question, that the award was unfair.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A number of supplementaries are being sought on this subject. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Champlain, the right hon. member for Prince Albert and then return to this subject.

* * *

[Translation]

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF INTERVENTION BY PRIME MINISTER IN QUEBEC ELECTION CAMPAIGN

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister.

Could he tell this House if he will intervene directly or indirectly in the election campaign now under way in the province of Quebec, should he think that the interests of Canadian federalism are threatened?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt that the hon. member's question is in order. In any case, be it sufficient to say that it is hypothetical.

* * *

[English]

ENERGY

STUDY OF POSSIBLE RAILWAY LINE FOR SHIPMENT OF NORTHERN OIL TO AVOID POLLUTION BY TANKERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that a group of scientists and professors of Queen's University recommended some months ago that the solution to the problem of the dangers of environmental destruction as a consequence of the movement of oil by ship was that alternative action be taken, is there a task force now in the department which is evaluating the question of shipments being made by a railway that will take several years to build? What is the present position of that task force?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker, under the aegis of the Department of Transport and my department a study is under way. The team is made up of representatives of Canadian National Railways and Canadian Pacific Railway and they are considering the feasibility of a northern railway for the purpose of shipping oil, with the expectation that we will have a report about the end of the year.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wonder if consideration is being given to the best possible location for the terminus, in the city of Prince Albert?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, that assumes more than usual importance.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

REGIONAL PAY INEQUITIES—REASONS FOR NOT APPLYING SAME PRINCIPLE TO MEMBERS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to those asked earlier by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe and is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the refusal of the Treasury Board to at least commence phasing out regional pay inequities across the nation for employees under its jurisdiction, does the President of the Treasury Board have under active consideration, for the sake of consistency, a measure to pay members of parliament on a regional basis as well?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the House is aware that pay arrangements for the public service arise from a process of collective bargaining leading to an agreement. I have not heard any suggestion by members of parliament that they should be paid on a regional basis.

Mr. MacKay: Can the minister then explain the reason for treating this diverse group of federal representatives in a fashion different from the public servants who perform similar tasks in different areas of the nation?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, as I say, the present arrangement in respect of the public service is as a result of collective agreements arrived at by collective bargaining. An agreement means just that—an agreement.

* * *

TRANSPORT

SHORTAGE OF BOXCARS FOR LUMBER AND GRAIN—ACTION TO INCREASE SUPPLY

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and arises from the serious effect of the shortage of boxcars upon industry, particularly the lumber industry in British Columbia which has some 4,500 boxcars of lumber awaiting shipment from interior British Columbia, and the continual backlog in the movement of grain from the western provinces to the ports. Can the minister advise the House if he has had discussions with the two national railways on which he can report to the House, and has he recommended increasing the supply of boxcars to Canadian industry since this has been a chronic problem for a number of years?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if I may start with the last part of the question, Canadian National, the British Columbia Railway and Canadian Pacific ordered railway cars for lumber at the beginning of the year. Unfortunately delivery was not as expected because of strikes and other conditions, and it is impossible to lease any cars from the United States. Canadian Pacific succeeded in getting 300 cars, but that is all that are available on the market because in the United States there is a shortage. I hope I can meet with the railways on Thursday.

Mr. Mazankowski: Can the minister inform the House whether he has recommended a complete study of the availability and future need of boxcars, particularly the practice of the United States in holding boxcars in that country for some 45 days causing disruption in the movement of boxcars along with the much needed future expansion of boxcar allocation? Can the minister indicate whether he has recommended that the railways or his department undertake such study, in order that we might be able to overcome the critical and chronic shortage of boxcars in future years?

● (1450)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, this is normally done each year. Last year they provided for an increase in activity of about 6 per cent. It is not unfortunate, but the increase in activity was 14 per cent and this is why there is a gap between forecasting and the situation now. At any rate, I am going to discuss these matters with them and hope to find a formula that will avoid a repetition of what is going on now.

BOXCARS FOR GRAIN—REQUEST FOR MEETING OF RAILWAYS, WHEAT BOARD AND UNION REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the request the minister has had from the National Farmers Union to call a meeting of the railroads, the Canadian Wheat Board and the unions as well as others interested and involved, has he acceded to this request or will he do so, survey the total situation and come up with some answers?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know that last Friday there was a meeting in Montreal between the representatives of the Wheat Board, under the auspices of the Minister of Justice, and the railways. I have not had any report on that. The Minister of Justice is not here. As for myself, I am going to meet with the railways on Thursday about the situation prevailing in British Columbia.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a last supplementary on this subject, and then recognize the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, may I again ask the minister if he will broaden the scope of these meetings and ask not simply representatives of the grain groups and the railroads but involve all those people who have anything to contribute if we are to move grain? May I also ask him if he would persuade the minister in charge of the Wheat Board to quit politicking in western Canada and get back to his job?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

[Translation]

EFFECT OF FREIGHT RATES ON ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT—POSSIBLE FURTHER REGIONAL CONFERENCES BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND PROVINCES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the promises that were made on January 4, in the Speech from the Throne, as regards national transport problems, and in view of the conference arranged in western Canada a few months ago to study the impact of railway freight rates on the economic growth of the west, could the right hon. Prime Minister tell us if he intends to set up soon other federal-provincial conferences in other parts of the country in order to study similar questions and to show the people of this country that these were not hollow promises?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member refers to the decisions that were taken during the western conference, he will see that the parties and the governments attending the conference decided to follow up with government policies in several ways, both by referring these problems to the Canadian Transport Commission and by providing for the review of transport problems by a standing committee that must report before the end of the year.

Other regions of this country were treated in a different way. The Minister of Transport held recent meetings with the Atlantic ministers of transport, about one month ago, if my memory serves me right. Therefore, as the hon. member may see, the government deals with problems in a way that is proper to every region.

[English]

REQUESTS FOR COMPLETION OF PLASTER ROCK-RENOUS HIGHWAY AND MODERN ROAD BETWEEN FREDERICTON AND SAINT JOHN

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, while we are on the same question of transportation may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of repeated requests for federal assistance for the completion of the Plaster Rock-Renous highway in central New Brunswick and the building of a modern road between Fredericton and Saint John, New Brunswick, would the Prime Minister not pay too much attention to the corridor proposal through the state of Maine which is brought to his attention from time to time?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member's question is a representation. It is not a supplementary. The hon. member asked a question on transportation. It may have been a related question, but it was not a supplementary question.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR ADMISSION TO CANADA OF CHILEAN REFUGEES NOW IN BUENOS AIRES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister received representations from the Canadian Council of Churches and the Canadian Catholic Conference in respect of 150 refugees from Chile who are, I believe, at the airport in Buenos Aires in the Argentine and who are seeking to come to Canada. They have been threatened with immediate deportation back to Chile or to their countries of origin. Will the government take urgent steps with a view to permitting as many as possible of these refugees to come to Canada in accordance with the undertaking given by the minister to the House that the government will adopt a humane attitude in such cases?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on the specific question as to whether I received representations from the Canadian Catholic Conference, I do not know whether in fact I received representations. My department reports, however, that this situation, which was outlined to me in the letter from the hon. member of October 22, is a situation of which they were unaware. Therefore, I asked our office here to get in touch with Buenos Aires, and I am now expecting a report. If, in fact, the situation is as reported, I can assure the hon. gentleman that the Canadian government will apply the humanitarian standards that it has always applied to similar situations.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question, may I make a recommendation? Does the minister not appreciate that there is great urgency involved in this case, as these people may be deported and it may be too late to do anything?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as I say, the department had been unaware of this, but as soon as the hon. member's letter was received I had a message sent off to Buenos Aires, to check on the report.

* * *

TOURISM

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF MEASURES TO ASSIST INDUSTRY

Mr. Keith Taylor (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Since the session is now almost ten months old, and since the Speech from the Throne indicated that measures would be introduced to assist in the development of the tourist industry in Canada, would the Prime Minister advise the House whether any action other than the usual issuing of press releases will be taken this year on this important matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to consult with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to see if he intends to make any announcement in this regard.

* * *

ENERGY

NUCLEAR AND HEAVY WATER PLANT IN NEW BRUNSWICK—DATE OF DECISION ON PROGRAM

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of present energy difficulties, can we expect that the government will be accelerating its program of nuclear plants and, in particular, will the first decision, the one in which New Brunswick is interested, be made almost immediately? If so, when?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the proposal, as the hon. member knows, is not only for a nuclear plant but also for a heavy water plant in New Brunswick. I hope that the question of a heavy water plant can be decided by the government before the end of this month.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF COST TO STANDING COMMITTEE—POSSIBLE INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the government House leader. As the unemployment insurance ceiling, as set out in prior legislation in the amount of $800 million, has been dispensed with, and as we note with concern the increased cost of unemployment insurance, which may be greater than perhaps it was last year, would the government House leader now direct that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration be struck, in order that it can be studied?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to discuss this matter with the minister and to give consideration to the proposal made by the hon. member.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the minister responsible for UIC has repeatedly indicated that he proposes to introduce legislation dealing with the UIC, can the minister advise the House if it is still the intention of the government to introduce such legislation and, if so, when?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, unless I am out of touch with the legislative program, it is not the intention to produce new amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act in this particular session.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I have one last supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Lanark-Renfew-Carleton on a supplementary question.

● (1500)

DATE OF PROCEEDING WITH BILL C-125

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Privy Council. In view of the fact the government recognized the concern of Canadians during the October, 1972 election over the misuse of unemployment insurance funds and, indeed, introduced Bill C-125 to rectify the situation, and in view of the fact the Prime Minister of this country stated the bill would be debated and disposed of within a few weeks of February 3, 1973, can the minister advise when this long delayed legislation will be brought before the House for debate?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the House has already dealt with a measure having to do with the unemployment insurance fund. The second bill is still on the order paper. Consideration will be given to bringing it forward at an appropriate time.

* * *

FINANCE

CONSIDERATION OF THESIS OF DR. DEUTSCH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It refers to the statement made last week by the former chairman of the Economic Council of Canada to the effect that Canada should reconsider its devotation to the growth of the gross national product in light of present economic thinking and conditions. Can the minister reassure this House and, therefore, the country that someone in his department is giving serious consideration to the thesis put forward by Dr. John Deutsch and many other leading thinkers in this country?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

BROADCASTING

ADVERTISING ON CHILDREN'S PROGRAMS—POSSIBLE NEED FOR LEGISLATION TO IMPLEMENT COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications whom I am glad to welcome back to the House after his trip abroad. Can the minister inform the House when the Canadian Radio and Television Commission intends to proceed with implementation of the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts with regard to advertising directed to children which was concurred in by the House on July 14 or does the minister share the view that legislation is necessary before the commission can comply?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in advising me around noon that he would ask me this question.

I have consulted the files and I believe that the decision of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission on this subject reflects several of the recommendations contained in the report which was tabled and sanctioned in this House. In my opinion the question of whether it is necessary to have legislation allowing the CRTC to go further, if such were its decision and the formal recommendation of the House, should be closely examined.

As for the second question, I should like the hon. member to give me a few days to reflect on it.

* * *

[English]

SPORTS

FINANCING OF COLISEUM IN EDMONTON—FULFILLMENT OF GOVERNMENT OBLIGATION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact the city of Edmonton and the province of Alberta have fulfilled their promise of helping to finance the cultural and sports coliseum in Edmonton, when can we expect the federal government to fulfil its obligation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether the question is of such urgency that it should be asked as a verbal question at this time. If the minister can reply briefly, he will be recognized. This is the type of question which could easily be put on the order paper or considered at the time of adjournment. If the minister can reply briefly, he will be recognized for that purpose.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the last part of the hon. member's question.

Mr. Paproski: I want to know when the government is going to fulfil its obligation with regard to the cultural and sports coliseum in Edmonton.

Mr. Lalonde: I think Your Honour is right, the matter should be debated. There have been discussions with representatives of the city of Edmonton, but I do not know to which commitment the hon. member is referring.

Mr. Paproski: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

AIR CANADA

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF AIRBUS SERVICE ON TORONTO, OTTAWA-MONTREAL ROUTE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport who is responsible for Air Canada. In view of the bedlam that exists on weekends and the scarcity or reserved space on Air Canada on the Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal flights and in view of the fact the national capital should have the best possible air service, will the minister ask Air Canada to institute an airbus service similar to that which exists with great success between Calgary and Edmonton?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is on the agenda of the transport council. We are discussing that at the present time. I hope we will find a solution because I also travel between the airport and Ottawa.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CANADIAN POSITION ON OWNERSHIP OF MARINE RESOURCES

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the absolute necessity that Canada state a definitive position with regard to the marine resources of this nation as they pertain to the international law of the sea conference and because the minister promised such a statement would be made, as recorded in Hansard for June 28, stating Canada's position in anticipation of the Law of the Sea Conference, can he tell us when this statement will be forthcoming?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, consultations with the provinces have now been completed. My officials inform me it is likely I will have a statement on my desk for approval toward the end of this month.

* * *

FISHERIES

SALMON STOCKS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GUIDELINES FOR NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. I note he is not here. Perhaps he can reply when he returns. It relates to the secret Canada-United States meetings held between September 26 and October 4 with regard to salmon stocks on the Pacific coasts of both these nations. Will the minister, as he did with regard to the IMCO conference in London, make a statement on motions to inform the people of this country of Canada's official position at these meetings with regard to salmon stocks and the guidelines the government set out for negotiating them?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I shall advise the hon. minister of the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena.

* * *

[English]

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact there was a promise in the January 4 throne speech that the government would introduce legislation to deal with conflict of interest of members of parliament, ministers of the Crown and public servants, what plans are underway to introduce this legislation to the House?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, possibly I may reply to the question. As soon as the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections completes its study of the election expenses bill, it is the intention of the government to send to the committee the green paper on conflict of interest with the draft bill attached thereto on the independence of parliament. That will give hon. members of this House and of the other place an opportunity to consider the proposals which have been made, and, if they are found acceptable, to embody them into the law.

● (1510)

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair will recognize the hon. member and the hon. member for Rocky Mountain for a first supplementary but we will have to call orders of the day after that. I appreciate that a number of hon. members could not be recognized—the hon. member for Victoria, the hon. member for St. John's West, the hon. member for York East and others. I hope they will be given an opportunity tomorrow.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

Mr. Baker: I withdraw the supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I relinquish my right to the floor.

* * *

INDUSTRY

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION DEALING WITH COMPETITION

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question also concerns undertakings given in the Throne Speech. In the light of the promise in the Speech from the Throne—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was recognized for the purpose of asking a supplementary to the question raised a few moments ago. Perhaps he can be recognized now for the purpose of asking a related question, after which I will call orders of the day.

Canadian National Railways and Air Canada

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Thank you, Sir. In the light of the promise in the Speech from the Throne concerning the establishment of a competition policy, may I ask the Prime Minister if he would explain to the House why nothing of this nature has been introduced in parliament to date, and would he advise us when legislation will be introduced to parliament concerning competition policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We do intend submitting a bill to this effect to the House for first reading within a week or two.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I apologize for doing so at this point. It relates to an answer to a question on the order paper which was received during the question period. The answer was in response to question No. 2509 asking whether any subsidiaries or agencies of the CPR are exempt from levies or regulations imposed by the federal government or other governments and the nature of such exemptions. The answer was that such subsidiaries do not come under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Transport Commission. Naturally, that non-answer was over the signature of the Minister of Transport. I intend to re-submit the question but I want to draw to the attention of the House, on this point of order, the recurrent attempts of the government, on questions of this kind, to avoid answering legitimate and important inquiries.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES AND DEBENTURES

The House, resumed from Thursday, October 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-164, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railways Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, when I last spoke on this subject last Thursday I had partially completed my remarks. I was discussing the financial statements of Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway and showing that the excuse offered in the past for the poor financial performance of the CN that debt charges were responsible for its lack of profit was nonsense. A comparison of debt charges against operating revenue of the CPR and the CNR shows that Canadian Pacific in fact carried a greater burden of debt in proportion to operating revenue than did the CNR. On this basis alone, there is reason for concern among members of this House and Canadians generally when they are frequently being asked to supply additional funds to the Canadian National system.

As I said the other evening, it is most difficult, because of the nature of the balance sheet, to be sure of extracting accurate figures but I believe the figures I am giving are accurate. I have spent a fair amount of time on them. Gross revenue from railway operations only earned by the CPR during the last fiscal year amounted to $709 million. Revenue of the Canadian National system from its rail operations only was $1,257 million. After taking into account all debt charges, the CPR made a profit of $44.6 million on its railway operations. The CNR, not taking debt charges into account, made a profit on its railway operations of $23 million. Both railway companies possess additional sources of revenue, such as telegraph operations, hotels and other activities. After allowing for debt charges, the CPR made a profit of $70.4 million. The CNR took another $24 million out of its ancillary operations, but after paying its debt charges it lost $17 million, and the CN was quite proud of that performance. Clearly, in the field of railway operations alone, the CPR is able to generate a significant profit. The CNR, when debt is taken into account, generates no profit at all. But the statement as made up by the CNR tries to bury this fact, though it is one which must, I submit, cause concern to all hon. members.

The national railway system was an important factor in the building of Canada. Parliament has always considered the railways to be a vital means of tying our nation together. The events with which the railways were associated in the last century—the bringing together of the various provinces, the entry of British Columbia into confederation, to name only two—were matters of constant concern to parliament until the driving of the last spike. There is no question that Canadian Pacific received significant land grants as well as what were large sums of money in those days from the federal treasury. But I would point out that with the exception of certain operating subsidies affecting lines of national importance, the CPR has received no money from the federal government since that time. I would also remind the House that the Canadian National system was virtually completed prior to the first world war. Some 60 years have elapsed since then. But since the take-over of the Canadian National by the people of Canada, vast sums of money have been advanced to the CN in addition to the original land grants made during the earlier years of the system. It occurs to me it is time a serious analysis were made of the viability of this Crown corporation and the capacity of its management. As I pointed out the other day, on the basis of established values we should not be continually faced with appeals for further money for operating capital to supply the need of this railway.

I wish to draw the attention of the House to certain figures which appear in the balance sheet of the CNR. Net new investment made by the CNR during the last fiscal year amounted to $102 million. The capital cost allowances for tax purposes on existing equipment owned by the company was $126 million. So the CN had at its disposal more funds than were, in fact, necessary to replace its stock and make the additional capital investment, since the difference between capital cost allowances and new investment amounted to $24 million. These railways are now in such a state in terms of capital assets that the depreciation of existing assets should more than supply sufficient cash reserves for new capital investment, if the process is properly managed. Clearly, according to the CNR, it does. Yet one of the things the present bill talks about is the advance of money to the CN for the very purpose of providing for the extension and renewal of the system. I am suggesting that, according to the CN statement, this requirement of public funds is not, or should not, be needed. If it is, in fact, necessary, the management of the CNR has a great deal of explaining to do before members of this House.

One of the things that bothers me about the CNR is its propensity to become involved in the grandiose and the spectacular. Sometimes I wonder whether the motive is of a political nature or whether these proposals are simply designed to enhance the public image of the company. A proposal was made to build a communications tower in Toronto. Originally, the tower was to have been owned jointly by the CN and the CP. The CP looked at the Tower of Babel, and decided it was not a good investment. The CN, without consulting the people of Toronto or the Council of the City of Toronto decided to go ahead using its power over Crown land.

I note the bill before us contains a recommendation that an advance be made to the railway company by the people of Canada of $8.8 million to CN Tower Limited. If this bill should pass this House, then the directors of the CNR must be brought before the standing committee of the House and give a detailed explanation as to why this railway, which if it has any justification for its existence must be the justification that it will move grain, people and freight across the reaches of the country, should be building a Tower of Babel in the city of Toronto.

● (1520)

I come to the next matter of experimentation. The CNR decided to engage in an experiment in connection with a turbotrain. That train has yet to run. We have no idea what is the cost of the experiment to the Canadian National system in connection with that train. The directors of CNR had better explain this to the members of the House one of these days.

I come now to commuter services. It is my hope that the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) will be speaking to this House later in this debate, but it is clear that the Canadian National Railways operates the commuter services into the city of Toronto. It is also the agent for the province of Ontario which operates the rail service for commuters into the city of Toronto under the Go-line system. The information we on this side of the House have is that the CNR makes a very handsome profit from the people of Ontario and the government of that province in operating the Go service into Toronto and is not at all willing to do anything other than make money out of Toronto commuters. Many of us would like to know the exact cost of operating that Go service. There has been much evidence that rail costs that are totally unrealistic vis-à-vis the capital equipment used, use of rights-of-way and so on, are passed on to commuters. The directors of the Canadian National system had better be well prepared to answer these questions when they come before the committee.

I note also that the Canadian National system wants some more money to refurbish its hotels. When the railways were first built in this country, rail travel was the only means of communication. Obviously, it was necessary at that time for the railways to enter the hotel business. As far as movement of people is concerned, the railways are no longer the prime mover, except for the commuter services. Yet this railway has decided that it has to expand its hotel business.

If we were desperately short of hotels and motels in this country, perhaps that might be a fair decision to make. But we are not. Private industry has been very competent at building hotels right across Canada. I do not have to mention the chains run by the Highland House people, the Four Seasons, the Holiday Inn group and so on, which have been building quite excellent facilities in cities right across the country and, indeed, in some smaller places. Is there any real need for the people of Canada to provide $5,679,000 to the Canadian National Railways to build hotels? After all, the purpose of the railway was to forge links of steel across the nation to unify the country. Has this company any business going into one new venture after another without really getting down to fulfilling its major undertaking?

The other day in this House the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) about the ferry service and the number of rail cars presently awaiting transit to the island of Newfoundland. The minister stated that the situation was not all that bad, that there were only 520 cars in the line last year and only 670 cars this year. These railway cars, Mr. Speaker, have been lined up, waiting, waiting, waiting, as the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate said, not for one day, two days or three days, but waiting with their cargoes for up to six weeks. Neither this railway, the government nor the Minister of Transport get upset about this, and they now come to the House asking for another blank cheque. Clearly our national railway is not doing its work properly, despite the subsidies it receives. The directors of this system have a lot to answer for, and they will have to answer to the committee of this House.

I now want to talk for a moment about Air Canada. This is quite a fine corporation that we have, but I suspect it would operate much better if it were not for the interference of the present government of Canada with its operations. A lot has been said in this House about the building of Terminal two at Malton Airport in Toronto. The suggestion was that we would build a new terminal for foreign carriers and Terminal one would be for the exclusive use of Air Canada.

I have placed a number of questions on the order paper with regard to this matter. What happened when the building was completed? It was so poorly and ineptly designed that the private carriers would not have anything to do with it. The rents were so high that the private carriers said, "no dice". So, this government admitted it had goofed and decided to force Air Canada to take responsibility for the goof. It did so, and Air Canada spent a fortune in our money. They are now coming to us and asking for the money that they used to make up for the goof of the government in the design and administration of Terminal two. I wonder what these independent directors of this supposedly independent Crown corporation were thinking of to be such stupid businessmen that they would take a lease of a terminal which was totally unsuited to its operations. These directors will have to answer some questions about this matter.

Then, there is the matter of certain landing rights. We have been discussing in the House the landing rights at Milan. Air Canada has been seeking these landing rights and so has CP Air. Whether or not Air Canada gets them, the right to fly from Toronto to Milan is an exceedingly valuable right. But rather than assist Air Canada or CP Air to make some money from this route, the government makes no decision; it simply sits on its hands.

Another matter that Air Canada had better explain is the relationship between the government of Canada and a person by the name of Ward, as well as the purchase price of an airline called Wardair which seems to have integrated itself with the government system for charter purposes. I do not have the balance sheets to give the House figures on this, but the very strong suspicion I have regarding the value of the aircraft purchased and the previous profitability of Wardair is that Air Canada paid three or four times what it should have paid for the Wardair system. I think this House must demand from Air Canada a complete explanation of the Wardair transaction.

● (1530)

Even today, we have heard concern expressed in this House about service. When I go to Ottawa airport if I do not have a standing reservation I am lucky if I get out of this city to fly to the Mississauga airport in my riding. There is not nearly sufficient service. The occupancy rate or load factor as shown by Air Canada is 65 per cent. I want to say to members of this House, and I am sure my observation can be confirmed by almost every member, that very few of us have ever flown on an airplane in the last year or so when that airplane was not full. I would say I have yet to fly on an Air Canada plane when it was only 65 per cent occupied. Other airlines operate on a much lower load factor. Yet this airline, on its own figures, has an occupancy rate of 65 per cent and should supply a better service between important business locations.

When I hear, as set out earlier today, and as the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) set out in his remarks on this bill, that there is more than adequate air service between Edmonton and Calgary operated at a profit by a private carrier, because Air Canada could not be bothered, I wonder why we cannot have, without more and more study by the minister, an airbus service between Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto. The reason for this is simply beyond me. The directors of Air Canada have much explaining to do.

Another thing they should explain to us is the reason this airline has decided to use a multiplicity of aircraft. It is presently using Douglas aircraft, the DC-8's and DC-9's, Boeing aircraft, the 747, and the famous Lockheed 1011. I shall not comment on the value of these particular aircraft but it strikes me, as a person with some business experience, that a sensible corporation would attempt to stay with one company so that it would have one set of parts in terms of spares, and one set of maintenance problems rather than three. This might sound a little confusing, but it strikes me as being sensible that one type of aircraft, or one maker and certainly not three, is really all that is required.

[Mr. Blenkarn.]

Now, to discuss some of the ramifications in respect of the annual reports, I looked carefully first at the Canadian Pacific report. The report is a considerably thinner document than the Air Canada report, but it is printed in just one official language. If one examines the quality of paper, one will find that it is not glossy, fancy paper. It is pretty good paper but of poorer quality when one compares it with the fine paper used by Air Canada and the Canadian National. The Canadian National and Air Canada, after all, can afford the glossy, fine-textured paper and a fine printing display because the payment for this comes from only one source. They have parliament and if they need money they come and get it. They do not have to answer to a great number of shareholders who have their money invested in the company. The situation should be the other way around. The CPR has to market its stock and borrow money on the open market. It has every reason to produce a very classy, if you like, image. But this other company—it is really only one company because CNR owns Air Canada—has only the members of this House to think of and it could print its annual report on mimeograph paper for all we would care. We do not need the fancy printing or the rotogravure. We would be quite happy if it came to us in English and French on Gestetner paper. But they have to make a good show. For whom? I say, Mr. Speaker, probably for themselves.

I wish to go further and do a quick analysis of the profitability of Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines, because the situation is the same as with the railways, except that Air Canada does make a small profit and the railway system loses money. In 1972, Air Canada had an investment of $816 million. With this investment it had a gross revenue from fares of $475 million. In other words, it took nearly $2 of capital to produce $1 of revenue. The Canadian Pacific system had a gross investment of $161 million and a revenue from fares of $172 million. For $1 of investment Canadian Pacific was able to generate slightly better than $1 of revenue.

Let us see what effect this had on its profitability. Air Canada, with $816 million invested—and much of its debt money without interest—after taxes produced a profit of $8.5 million. The Canadian Pacific system, with $161 million in capital, produced a profit after taxes of $5.1 million. Although Air Canada is nearly five times the size of Canadian Pacific, its profit amounts to a difference of only $3 million. This is ridiculous. Air Canada has every bit as good a routing system as Canadian Pacific and has every bit as good facilities at airports. Air Canada has the same technical assistance as the Canadian Pacific system, and yet it cannot show as great a profit. This points out the whole problem in respect of Crown corporations. These Crown corporations should do two things. First, for their profit-oriented sector they should perform every bit as well as a private corporation and indeed, because of the ability to borrow money at less than the market rate in many cases, they should do better. But do they? They do not.

• (1540)

We must say to ourselves that if a Crown corporation is in competition with private enterprise and cannot do as well, then we had better look very hard at the directors, the system and the organization of that Crown corporation—indeed, at the validity of Crown corporations in the first place. When this bill comes before committee, the directors of this corporation, if they have not already been questioned by members of the committee, had better look after themselves. They will have to explain—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. He could continue with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blenkarn: I have only one or two remarks, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that since this Crown corporation was set up for the purpose of providing service to the public, we as a government should determine the public service quotient in it. If we had a private corporation doing that work, the same thing would apply. We should receive the public service that we require from the corporation. We should then say to the corporation officials: "Do not tell us about the public service problem. We have paid you well for that. It should have brought you profit. You must perform as does any other business, and if you cannot perform that well, then there is something wrong with your management".

Unless we start looking at these corporations very seriously, we will wind up with bills such as this every year. We have the same problem with the CBC. We are told we need that corporation for national communications. It costs us about $100 million a year. We do need that corporation for national communication in part, but let us buy the national communications service from the corporation.

The same applies to transportation. Let us buy the transportation service from the corporation at such rates as we need to pay in order to tie the country together. Having done that, these corporations must stand on their own feet, and so must their management. If they cannot do so, then there is mismanagement somewhere. These people are not working for the public service. They are working for Crown corporations and they are paid as they would be on the ordinary commercial market. These corporations are supposed to pay taxes and do something for the economy of the country. So I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to members of the House, that the management of Air Canada and of CNR leaves much to be desired and there is much to be explained.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I will probably speak for a relatively short time this afternoon, but there are one or two matters which I should like to bring before the House. Much has been said about the CNR and Air Canada, and about the fact that they do not operate as well as private enterprise. I find it rather strange that this point should be made so strongly. Let us remember that the CNR came into business because a number of private railroad companies were going bankrupt. Initially, the CNR was a rescue operation.

Mr. Blenkarn: That was 60 years ago.

Canadian National Railways and Air Canada

Mr. Gleave: I thought everyone knew that the CNR was a rescue operation. I cannot even say which particular government performed that rescue operation, whether it was a Conservative, a Liberal or a union government, but whatever government it was I suspect that it had no alternative. I do not see why we quibble about that matter. So far as the CPR is concerned also, I suppose, the people to my right would say that that company is a great example of private enterprise operating well. Initially, that company also was a great example of a group of skillful financiers and promoters being able to take the public of Canada into camp and come out very well as a result of their manipulations. Let us face it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Shysters.

Mr. Gleave: I do not see the point of wailing about this particular aspect. If the members here want to talk about the type of service that is given by the public corporation, then I think they are quite justified in examining this aspect, and I myself would like to examine it in particular. I regret very much that the matter of CNR financing did not come before a committee of the House before we recessed and before the rail strike occurred. There are railroad employees in my constituency who wanted to put across their points of view with regard to pensions before that committee. They wrote to ask if they could do that. They sought a hearing but were unable to get it. This failure lies at the door of the government across the way. For some reason or other, apparently they did not wish to see CNR financing before the committee. This contributed to some of the unrest that occurred among workers on the railroad because they felt, I think rightly so, that they were being unfairly treated.

The hon. member who spoke before me was very unhappy with the fact that the CNR is in the hotel business, they have been in the hotel business for a long while. I might say, on the opposite side of the fence, that I am very unhappy at the fact they got out of the hotel business in Saskatoon.

Mr. Whicher: They did not make it pay.

Mr. Gleave: As a matter of fact, it did pay the year they sold it. I want to tell the hon. member something else, namely, that the CNR had spent a lot of money on that hotel. They had remodelled the main floor of a very attractive building and they had done a good job. They put in a swimming pool and brought this hotel up to the top standard.

Mr. Whicher: They got the money from us last year.

Mr. Gleave: That is absolutely right. They got the money from the people. And then what did they do? They sold it to good old private enterprise at a figure that they will not disclose. The CNR and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) will not tell the people of Canada the price for which they sold that hotel. I wrote the minister a letter on August 8 asking him for the price at which the hotel was sold, but he has not yet replied. I received a reply from the minister which is dated October 18 and came into my hands today. It took the minister two months to inform me that he would not reveal to a member of the House of Commons the price at which the CNR, a Crown corporation, disposed of one of the most valuable pieces of property in the city of Saskatoon.

● (1550)

As I say, it took him two months to write this letter which reads in part:

I have discussed this matter with the Management of the CNR and I am advised that the purchasers of the hotel are Management Associates Limited of Saskatoon . . .

The matter of the sale price is one which the purchaser would desire remain confidential and, in any event, it is not the practice nor the policy of the CNR to disclose terms and conditions of transactions it may have with other parties.

Why not, Mr. Speaker? Incidentally, for the benefit of hon. members to my right, the head of Management Associates is a very prominent person in their party, if that is any comfort to them. Why cannot the members of this House be told the price at which property, which belongs to the taxpayers of this country, is disposed of by the CNR? This is a disgrace, Mr. Speaker. Is the government afraid? Is the minister afraid to disclose the price? Was the price so low that it was not in the interests of the people? Was the price so low that the government dare not inform the people? As I have said, this is one of the most valuable pieces of property in the city, but the government is afraid to disclose the price at which it was sold.

There has been discussion of the amount of debt owing by the CNR. I do not know how important that is, because debt is only relevant to assets and the productivity of a business operation. A debt of $1,000 may be enough to ruin one individual, but another individual or corporation may have a debt of $500,000, with no real problem, because cash flow and turnover can take care of it.

Referring to the service that the CNR gives Saskatchewan people, I would also like to mention how it treats our industry. Hearings were held on the transportation of rapeseed and products manufactured from it, out of Saskatchewan to eastern Canada. After a lot of talk we managed to get a reduction in the freight rate on oil cake meal, but not on the oil.

According to the financial pages of the newspapers the other day Agra Industries, a Saskatoon company, privately owned, has taken over some operations in Montreal where it will manufacture rapeseed products. The reason for this is that the CNR freight rates are so high on the finished product which is manufactured in Saskatoon that it pays the company to ship the raw product to Montreal and process it there. This same company has an operation at Nipawin, where it handles the entire production right through to margarine. It has the capability and know-how, but the freight rate structure is such that it is to the company's advantage to move part of the manufacturing to Montreal in order to be competitive.

As I said at the beginning, Mr. Speaker, I do not worry too much about whether the CNR is publicly owned or privately owned, or whether the CPR is publicly or privately owned, but the manner in which they serve the regions of Canada is something we should all be concerned about in this House. Our record in many instances is not too good, especially when one looks at the outlying regions of Canada, the regions which are totally dependent on rail traffic.

[Mr. Gleave.]

The hon. member who spoke before me referred to the wonderful rail service in parts of Ontario. There railways have to be competitive with water and truck transport, and they must give service. But out where I come from they are the only carriers for some goods. We must use whatever service they care to provide. That is the basis on which they operate.

Here I would like to say a word or two about the condition of the CNR branch lines. The same thing applies to the CPR in our area. There was a small accident on one of the subdivisions. An investigation was held, partly at my urging. The fault was placed on the train crew for running the train at 20 miles an hour. The track was so bad that there was a speed limit of 15 miles per hour. If the train were to run at 20 miles an hour the roadbed would not stand it. There are thousands of miles of track that have not been properly maintained. This is not good service to the people of Saskatchewan.

It is the same story whether it is a question of moving oil or refined products to eastern Canada, whether it is maintaining the roadbeds, or anything else. Today, I talked to the President of the National Farmers Union who told me that the supply of grain cars in Western Canada is in arrears, even though the elevators at Thunder Bay are less than half full. This situation cannot be blamed on the labour dispute which ended a month ago. Something more basic is the cause of what is happening in Saskatchewan and other parts of western Canada. British Columbia has a complaint with respect to the shipment of lumber. What is needed is a different attitude on the part of railroad management. An attitude of expansion instead of contraction is needed. This attitude is prevalent in British Columbia and the Yukon with the development of additional rail lines and services, but for that attitude to fully benefit Canadians it has to reach the interior regions and the prairie regions so that we have a wholly integrated and forward-looking system of delivering service to the people who need it.

● (1600)

Finally, I want to say a few words in respect of the so-called servocentre system. In eastern Canada, as well as western Canada, station agents have been removed and the areas put on an integrated servocentre system which the railroad claims is an improvement. That remains to be seen, Mr. Speaker. I might as well say that in much of my constituency it is not being easily accepted as a better system. I would like to read a letter from one of the towns in my area to the superintendent of express and intermodular services, Canadian National Railways, Saskatoon. In that letter of May 3, 1972, the town clerk wrote:

At our last regular meeting of the town council your proposal to reduce services to Tuesdays and Thursdays came under discussion. As a town, we oppose any form of reduction in services. By not giving service farmers deliver grain elsewhere and freight and express is given to those who give the best service. It appears that poor service is deliberately planned to reduce the volume enough for a permanent shutdown. If this is a sample of what servocentre can do we in small communities have little to look forward to.

That is a sample of some of the letters and opinions that have come to me from towns in my constituency, and I am sure other western members could give similar examples. They do not have to be solicited, they just come. Our problem is to try to deal with them and to get back from the railroad concerned the kind of service that was once given to those towns. Most of the machinery parts that we get in the town of Biggar come by passenger bus. Now, buses were not designed to haul machinery parts; they were designed to haul people. For a number of years the railroads have made it clear that they do not want to haul people, and now it appears they do not want to haul parts for machines.

We have one of the most efficient agents in our town, and he pointed out that the little baggage compartment of a passenger bus can only hold so many machinery parts in addition to all the luggage. Any parts that cannot be put into that compartment are just left. He says that eventually the agents give up on the whole thing and drive to Saskatoon to get the parts.

The main CN line from Montreal to Vancouver runs through Biggar, yet the main line passenger bus is hauling machinery parts to this town. The only conclusion one can reach is that service to the customer is not the prime objective of either the carrier or the Canadian Transport Commission. I do not leave the Canadian Transport Commission free of blame. I know that its powers are very limited, but I have yet to see it come before a committee of this House and ask for a change in the act so that it can protect the needs of the customer.

As a result of the MacPherson Commission in 1967 and various other hearings and proposals, the new Transport Act created circumstances under which some subdivisions can only tolerate the trains moving at 15 miles an hour. Mr. Speaker, there was a time when I could move as fast as that on a saddle horse, but that is as fast as the CNR can move trains over a subdivision in my constituency. It is ridiculous, but that is the way it is. We haul machinery parts around in passenger buses and people living 70 miles or more outside Saskatoon have to bypass perfectly good towns and machinery agencies to drive God knows where to get parts. Perhaps this House will not believe me, Mr. Speaker, but there are places in southwestern Saskatchewan where the people would not use a car; they would use an aircraft to get the service they need. If this is supposed to be progress, then someone had better change the definition of that word in the dictionary.

I do not particularly want to say anything about Air Canada, as some other hon. members have. I suppose it has its problems, just like everybody else. In the part of the country from which I come, I think Air Canada takes second place to rail transportation, except for moving people. We are mainly concerned about rail and road transportation. If we do not have rail transportation, we have to spend a lot of money building highways for more buses and trucks to do the job that the railways will not do. If the railways eliminate branch lines, then we need more trucks and more expensive highways to move the grain, the produce and the livestock. Rail transportation is pretty important to my area, to the people who use it and the people who run it. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I hope we come up with a satisfactory settlement so that we can do the transportation job that needs to be done for the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1610)

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I do not particularly relish speaking this afternoon on this bill dealing with the financing of the CNR because, frankly, I look at it with a feeling of hopelessness and complete frustration. I look on it with frustration because, ever since coming here in 1968, I have heard members on both sides of the House intelligently criticizing the operations of Canadian National Railways, yet nothing has happened as a result of those criticisms. Of course, the same situation existed for many years before 1968. I hope that members of the government, particularly the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), will read the last two speeches made in this House, the one by the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) and the one by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), both of whom are members of the opposition. The feelings they expressed this afternoon are not representative merely of the feelings of the Conservatives, the NDP or of the Creditistes. They are shared sincerely by those who sit on the government side of the House.

I said I was frustrated because I have spoken on this subject on numerous occasions and have listened to others speak on it, but nothing has happened. I also have a feeling of hopelessness, because I am almost totally certain that no matter what the opposition has said in the past or this afternoon and no matter what I say, nothing will happen. The CNR will carry on in its own way, doing exactly as it sees fit. It will not pay one iota of attention to the wishes of the House of Commons. Certainly, this has happened in the past, as far as I can see. The fact is that our feelings, as voiced by the constructive criticism which has been given by members of this House, are shared, in my opinion, by the people of Canada. Those feelings the CNR has completed ignored over the years.

With respect, I suggest that the members of one side of this House are in the position to do something. Surely, I do not exaggerate when I say that the government has the right, the ability—

An hon. Member: And the obligation.

Mr. Whicher: —and the obligation, as an hon. member has said, to do something about this. Canadian National Railways may be a very important segment of the economy of Canada, but if they think they are bigger than the government of Canada or the parliament of Canada, they have gone too far. I suggest respectfully, and I say this apologetically as I hope members of the opposition will appreciate the position I am in, that the government is obligated, not only to parliament but to the people of Canada, to move into this field and, especially in extreme situations, to act.

It is unfortunate that the Minister of Transport is not present this afternoon. I would not want hon. members to think that I would refrain from the remarks I am about to make if he were here. He is obligated not merely to represent the department of government for which he is responsible; he is obligated, as well, to parliament and to the people of Canada and, so far as I am concerned, in some instances that obligation has not been fulfilled.

Let me give an example. Many examples were brought forward this afternoon; however, let me tell you of one that strikes home, that shows that the government has ignored the wishes of parliament and of the people of Canada. Over 18 months ago the committee of the House dealing with transportation visited southwestern Ontario. It went to four cities and towns, Stratford, London, Chatham and Walkerton, the county town of Bruce County which I have the honour to represent. Twenty members of parliament representing all parties in the House were sent to those places to look into railway passenger service as provided by the CNR as well as by the CPR in that particular locality. I will not tell you what went on at the various committee meetings; I will merely say that those members of parliament were so impressed by what they heard that they made a report to this House. It was signed by all 20 members who represented all parties in the House. That report recommended to parliament and to the government that passenger service in that area be reinstated immediately. I am sad to say that that passenger service has not been reintroduced in accordance with the wishes of the committee.

I know members of parliament cannot demand that the government do certain things, obviously. However, I say with respect that when 20 members of parliament representing all parties in the House recommend a certain thing, that thing should be looked into most seriously. It has not been looked into seriously by any means.

We took this matter up with the Minister of Transport. Many members representing all parties in this House have taken up this matter with him. I repeat, respectfully, that that committee report recommended that certain passenger service be reinstated immediately. That service did not involve Ottawa, Vancouver, Montreal or Toronto. I believe Kitchener was involved. The service to which I have referred does not affect the western or eastern parts of Canada. It affects that particular area of southwestern Ontario which I mentioned.

The Minister of Transport has said, under repeated questioning by many hon. members, that he does not have the power to restore the train service, and that the Canadian Transport Commission, established by an act of parliament, runs the whole show. May I remind you of something that happened several months ago. When Bell Telephone came before the Canadian Transport Commission for a rate increase, the government, for reasons unknown to me—and I am speaking as a private member and giving my personal view—rolled back the rate increase awarded to Bell Telephone. If the government can do this with respect to telephone rates, it can do something with respect to the railways.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: If the Minister of Transport wishes to reinstate the train service in southwestern Ontario, he can do it. If he thinks he cannot do it, all he has to do is come before parliament with a bill. I suggest, although I cannot speak for my friends in the opposition, that we, on my side of the House, would give the minister any powers which are necessary for restoring this train service. But, no, he will not do it. We should look at this situation closely.

[Mr. Whicher.]

Many arguments have been brought forward and many constructive criticisms have been made during the present debate, as well as in years gone by. However, I have spoken of one problem that faces us at the moment. Included in that committee report was a suggestion that after the trains were put back in service, there would be consultations with the federal, provincial and municipal officials as well as the railways to try to develop the most economical method of transportation in that particular area. There should be a meeting. It may very well be it may not be necessary to have two trains running into the same city or town on the same day. I will give an example of this.

● (1620)

The city of Owen Sound, a city of just over 20,000 people with another 10,000 in the surrounding district, before the edict of the CTC removing the train service, was served by not only a daily CPR train, but a CNR train. No one in his right mind, in this day and age, would suggest there should be two trains, but for many years there was CP and CN daily service. On a certain day, this service was cut off. There has not been one train since, in spite of the fact the restoration of the service was recommended to the Minister of Transport. The committee's report to parliament suggested that, after the re-initiation of passenger service, there should be meetings to discuss these matters. To give a hypothetical example, perhaps there should be only three trains a week into Owen Sound. Perhaps there should be twice-weekly service or service five times a week. The point is that previously there was seven-day service from two railways.

We asked that the most economical transportation system be developed. This request has been absolutely ignored by the Minister of Transport. I remind hon. members that the subsidies on these trains were something in the nature of three quarters of a million dollars yearly. I am completely against subsidies if something else can be done about the situation. If three quarters of a million dollars is too much, perhaps it should be cut to one half or one quarter million dollars. The people of southwestern Ontario see that the government is able to find hundreds of millions of dollars to increase old age pensions and veterans pensions. They see that the government has increased the tax exemption from $1,000 to $1,500 in one year's time. I feel these people have a very legitimate complaint.

Is three quarters of a million dollars too much of a subsidy for the breadbasket of Canada? I do not use the word "breadbasket" in a boastful way. I want some action. As western members know, one third of the agricultural produce of the whole of Canada comes from the province of Ontario. A great deal comes from the area I am speaking about at the present time. I feel there should be some type of service to that area. A magnificent tower costing millions of dollars is being built in the city of Toronto, perhaps justifiably so. I understand it will be the highest tower in the world. The people in my area are glad to see that, if it is necessary to have the highest tower in the world, costing many millions of dollars. They do not have anything against that. However, they think that passenger service should be re-initiated in southwestern Ontario, especially when it was asked for by 20 members of parliament who studied the question in great detail.

We should look into the whole question of passenger service, not just in southwestern Ontario, but in the whole of Canada. It is suggested that in the foreseeable future the price of gasoline may be $1 a gallon. There is a great problem of pollution in our cities. Surely, this is not the time when railway passenger service should be finished, especially when 100 per cent of the committee members recommended that train service be re-initiated in the area from which I come.

I am sure members will not be shocked to learn that, instead of re-initiating service, the railway stations in this area are being torn down. One could very well ask what we, as members of parliament, are doing here today or any other day discussing the question of CNR financing. We, the representatives of the people, are asking that passenger service be re-initiated. Not only is this government not doing anything about it, but it is permitting the stations to be torn down. These stations were the real foundation of this country. This is why the railways were built in the time of Sir John A. Macdonald. Without the railways to unify this country, there would have been no country.

I am not the least bit happy with what has been going on in so far as CNR transportation policies are concerned. I could deal with many other areas. I hope that someone in the government will read what has been said this afternoon, not only by opposition members but by me. I wish to give a warning to this government. A month or two ago, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), along with many other people, boarded a train in Toronto and travelled to the city of Owen Sound. At various places along the way, he said that not once during the time he was Prime Minister did he take off any passenger train service in this country. This government had better be listening to what I am saying this afternoon, because the people in that area certainly listened to the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: One cannot help but respect a gentleman who has given so much service to this great country. Even at his age, he thinks enough of this country, including that area, to travel 125 miles to Owen Sound to look over the situation and say to the people that, in his opinion, there should be train service in that area, particularly when a committee of the House of Commons has unanimously recommended such service. I hope the Minister of Transport will read these words. I say to him that it is high time the government started listening to the voice of the people in this and other areas. If the government does not listen, I say sadly they will be moving to the other side of the House and there will be people sitting on this side who will do these things. The people of my area, in which there are many constituencies, have a desire for the service which has been recommended by the parliamentarians. The government has an obligation to see that they get it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I greatly enjoyed the speeches by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) and the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn). I particularly enjoyed the fine remarks just directed to the House by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher). May I say to him I have heard many of his speeches. It was an outstanding, direct speech of the kind a good representative should make in this chamber.

● (1630)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: I was wondering whether the quality of his capacity as a parliamentarian derives in part from the fact that he has spent some time in the opposition. I believe that being in the opposition is good for a member of parliament. Now, I have been here too long. I have been six years on that side and ten here and if I were to stay over here much longer I would be too good, and that upsets the balance! But I believe that to be nurtured and nourished in the opposition makes for the kind of fine representation we have just heard—vigorous representation on a most important matter.

As I join this group of people complimenting the CNR today, I agree with those who point out that this is a fundamental question both in magnitude as it extends across the country and in depth, historically. The hon. member is right. The birth of Canada, the creation of the dominion under Sir John A. Macdonald, was attained only through the practical tie of a railway. One of my political ancestors on the Conservative side—I prefer the progressive side—but one of my ancestors on the Conservative side, old Sir Alan MacNab used to say simply "Railways are my politics" and let it go at that. When I was checking on that piece of data to find out whether it was MacNab or Hincks, I discovered a delightful interpretation of what the letters CNR really mean. In the olden days those letters used to mean two things—"certainly no rush", and "collects no revenue". That was said 90 years ago, 80 years ago, 70 years ago. And I hear people saying it in so many words today.

I share the view of the hon. member for Bruce. When it comes to these railway operations there is a feeling of futility, a feeling of resignation. If I were not a stubborn Presbyterian I would say we could do nothing about it. But we must keep going on. I know exactly how the hon. member feels about the report of the committee. I was on the committee when it went east. It heard all sorts of briefs about the Prince Edward Island causeway and there was not sufficient courtesy shown to that committee as to enable it to get its report presented before the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stood up and said the commitment to Prince Edward Island was being abrogated and that the inhabitants were not getting a causeway. Talk about not allowing the ink to dry. They did not allow the report even to be typed in either language.

Many things disturb us. I, too, am tired and saddened by the tendency of the CNR itself to adopt an attitude of resignation—to pull up lines and tear down stations. I believe that many in this chamber will live to see new railways being built, because in these days of pressure on the highways and danger to the environment there is still an important role for railways to play and it is a great pity that over the last decade or so we have not seen more imagination, more initiative, more determination on the part of those concerned to make the railways stronger and more competitive, more attractive. Railways can still function.

It has been shown in many parts of the world that not only can railways still function but that they can make money. There is no reason we should weep bemoan and cry our way out of the railway age. If we had the whole winter in which to do so we could bring up from all parts of the country the evidence to underline and reaffirm the assertion that it is lack of good service which has caused the present trouble. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar almost made a slip when he talked about a train that went all across the country. Then he corrected himself and said "the one that begins in Montreal". We in the Maritimes never were linked to the trans-Canada network. We could never get aboard a train in Halifax, get a sleeper and go across to Vancouver. It was always necessary to stop in Montreal for hours and hours. We were never hooked into the system—and this is not to mention Newfoundland at all.

One of the members on this side of the House referred to the situation in Newfoundland. It is a most appalling situation. We on the east coast, in the two island provinces, have had railway service withdrawn from us more completely than any other province in the country. Yet when the railway gets into conflict with its own employees, what parts suffer most? The two island provinces. We don't have passenger service in P.E.I. and in Newfoundland. The "Bullet" has long since been spent, winging its way into forgetfulness as some people would wish. Yet we are the ones who are isolated. We are the ones who lose millions of dollars when our basic industries of fishing, agriculture and tourism are knocked all to blazes in the fights between the CNR and its employees.

I have great sympathy for the people of Newfoundland. They have a terrible situation there. The backlog is enormous. They have our best ferry over there, the John Hamilton Gray. It was supposed to be back in Prince Edward Island around mid-October. But it hasn't come back. And we are now suffering. It isn't the fault of the people of P.E.I. that the Department of Transport or the CNR cannot move traffic from Nova Scotia to Newfoundland. It is not the fault of Prince Edward Island, yet we are joining once again the people of Newfoundland in paying for an egregious error on the part of someone else. It should not require a genius to tell you there is something wrong and that remedial steps are necessary if year after year there is a serious backlog in dealing with traffic.

I regret the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) is not here. I say with all due respect that he should be.

Mr. Mazankowski: Nor the Minister of Finance. It is his bill.

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes. The Minister of Finance should also be here. Why is he not here? This is a matter of tremendous importance and great concern to all our people. It is a sloppy situation. Years have passed during which things should have been done, and they have not been done, as the Anglicans say. The rights of the committee have been suspended or abridged. Opportunities for in-depth discussion have been vitiated. Yet we are at it again. Problems have come to attention even since I entered this chamber today. Near the City of Charlottetown, precisely joining it in fact, are two smart, up-and-coming communities of about 8,000 people. The residents of those communities cannot get CNR deliveries because they are not in the City of Charlottetown. How does one explain that?

The other day—an item not as glittering as the one described by the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn)—there was a big announcement of a new management team for the CNR ferry service. I read it many times over. It was fluff and complete buncome, absolute froth. Not a thing to give to people who had just gotten over another suspension of services from the mainland. We in P.E.I. will never be content, or feel we have been properly served, or ever feel that our terms of union with confederation have been properly fulfilled until our citizens have the same right to link up with the national transportation network as those who do not have the good fortune to live on a beautiful island. Why should our separation by nine miles of water involve us in constant frustration and heavy cost at all times? Have we not reached the stage of comprehension at which someone can say that for reasons of cost, convenience, speed of movement of goods and people it is proper, right and just and in accord with the terms of union to regard the link between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island as if it were a part of the trans-Canada Highway?

● (1640)

People from Saskatchewan travelling to Manitoba do not pay $3 to $4 to get across the boundary, but we have to pay through the nose every time we go to New Brunswick. We do not mind so much paying when we come the other way because when we get to P.E.I. we are somewhere pretty nice, but all the same it is just not fair. I am not the first—probably I am the one hundredth and first—representative from P.E.I. who has pointed out this fact in direct and sincere terms. But no matter what one's party label, action must be taken.

No member of the government needs to be told that, although transportation is vital and essential to the whole dominion, in the Atlantic area, an area where there are islands, peninsulas and inlets, transportation is the question. It was the question in our island in 1873; it was the question in the two mainland provinces in 1864 and 1867, and it has been the eternal question in Newfoundland. One has only to hear the question period to know that it is still a burning issue.

What has been done to alleviate our problems? During the last four years prior to the event of October 30, 1972 there were nine freight rate increases. These were scarcely helpful to our economy. How often have we called for movement into a stage of technological advancement? How many times have I alone pointed out the need for upgrading the facilities at Charlottetown Airport. Our province of something over 100,000 people has about one million visitors a year. They are smart people. The island is one of the beauty spots of this continent, indeed in this hemisphere. They want to come to P.E.I., and they want to come in comfort. The Charlottetown Airport is served by a very fine service which is provided not by the government but by Eastern Provincial Airways, one of the greatest friends Prince Edward Island ever had. You can fly by first-class, comfortable jet on three flights daily to Montreal and to other parts of the Atlantic region. EPA has brought us into the jet age, but the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and his predecessor have been keeping us in the prop age.

To give one rather meaningful illustration of what I am talking about, Charlottetown Airport has seating space for about one-third of the load of the aircraft that use the airport. Surely, this cannot be very clever planning. You would think someone in the department would come up with a better solution than that. I have made no mention of other requirements, such as a restaurant, lounges and all the rest, which the people in upper, central and western Canada have. We do well to have a coffee machine that works, yet we are one of the great tourist centres of Canada.

Why is it important to assist our tourist industry? Because Prince Edward Island does not have all that many other avenues for economic achievement and advantage. Surely, it is sound sense, sound administration and good government to develop such comparative advantages as a region or a province has. The movement of our choice agricultural products and fine products of the sea, as well as the rapid and comfortable movement of an ever-growing number of tourists,—all are important. The responsibility for this movement lies squarely on the Department of Transport, and largely on Canadian National Railways, the corporation we are discussing today and which our predecessors have discussed down through the years.

Our main concern is that some move be made to give us a more comfortable airport. I am pleased that some important steps—and they are important steps—have been taken to upgrade our airport in terms of safety facilities and so on. EPA has an outstanding safety record, and I think we now have pretty up-to-date technological improvements in that important area in the airport. Most Prince Edward Islanders have to fly Air Canada when they leave EPA because it is a regional carrier, so they are also concerned about the other aspects mentioned by previous speakers. I never thought it was very clever when the ticket office and the main ticketing process was moved from Ottawa to somewhere else. I am strongly opposed to any downgrading of service of any kind by the government for the nations capital. I noted the expression used by the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) today, and I think he is quite right.

Here I join with the hon. member for Bruce in calling for some attention to be paid to what members are saying and to what the committee is doing. I do not pretend that I am always a member of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, but I have the conviction that it is a committee that works very hard and has come very close to both the frustrations and the wishes of the people of Canada. I have looked over the reports of that committee and the evidence to come before it, not only with reference to the matters mentioned by my hon. friend from Bruce but with regard to the transportation situation all across Canada, and I would agree that, had the government and some minister listened and done something about the committee's recommendations, we would have had a great diminution of the kinds of grievances which pervade the generality of Canadian citizens when they think or talk about the two great carriers, Air Canada and the CNR. I should like to hear members of the House say that Air Canada is the finest airline in the world; but they would not be listening to what their people say if they did that.

I am sure none of us enjoys denigrating or criticizing Air Canada or Canadian National Railways. In a sense, Canadian National Railways was, in part, the creation of one of the greatest Canadians who ever lived, Sir Robert Borden. He saw what had to be done, and with his usual pragmatic commonsense, when someone was twitting him and saying "You don't believe in government-owned railways, do you?", he replied "I would rather a government-owned railway than a railway-owned government". And that was not so far fetched at that time.

● (1650)

We want to get away from this apology for our national services. We want to be proud of them. We want to see that the CNR and Air Canada are the best, but they regrettably have a long way to go until that time comes about. I believe it is our job, and the job of members of the committee, to speak out and to criticize if necessary as well as offer constructive suggestions where practical in order to bring about an improvement in the service. We must prevail upon these bodies to do much more than merely come here for money in order to discharge the great responsibility and immense trust which is theirs. Because it is theirs, it is also ours.

I believe we should stop this sloppy procedure and should, as one of the high priorities of this session and as one of the high priorities of the Parliament of Canada, listen to some of the cries of members who know the problems. We should be moving very fast because things are becoming worse. We read of more trouble in Air Canada, such as resignations and so on. This is not good enough. It is not good enough to vote sums of money and then forget about it. The problems are here. The situation is serious and it calls for remedial action.

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-164 is a bill to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada. This is a publicly owned transportation system in this country. The bill calls for an expenditure of $225,500,000. At the outset, I should like to say I have great reservations about this bill for a number of reasons. One reason for this exercise is that the CNR started out with the debts of bankrupt railways and has been saddled with these debts since.

I should like to quote a letter from the National President of the Canadian Railways Employees Pension Association in order to give the historic background. This letter was written in March this year and reads:

> The CNR came into existence in 1923 through the consolidation of a number of bankrupt railways which the government could not allow to go into receivership, for fear that the public and private credit of the nation would be impaired. One of these railways was the Grand Trunk Railway, which was British owned and directed from London. Since more than 70 per cent of the foreign investment capital in Canada between 1900 and 1913 came from the London market, $1,753 million out of a total of $2,545 million, the government was reluctant to allow the company to default. The other major company taken over by the government was the Canadian Northern, which had borrowed heavily on its securities from the Bank of Commerce. To allow the railway to go into receivership would have caused the bank's failure and financial panic. The CNR system's future profitability was further impaired by the government's policy of periodically transferring to it bankrupt lines acquired because it was politically, and socially necessary to maintain their operation. Furthermore, in addition to the system's heavy burden in having to maintain unremunerative services, the government transferred to it all the debts of the constituent companies, which means in effect that the government transferred its own railway debt to the national system. As a result the CNR has been able to meet all its interest charges only ten times; any wonder the CNR claim they cannot pay fair and just pensions to its employees. Don Jamieson, then Minister of Transport, said about 10 months ago . . .

You will remember that this letter was written in March.

. . . that the government was going to look at the vast debts which the CNR employees of today are carrying.

I might add that not only are the employees or CNR carrying it, but the people of Canada as well.

Let's hope they do it soon.

It seems to me that the government of Canada should remove this handicap by taking over the almost $2 billion debt of the CNR. As a nation, I do not feel we have any financial obligation to pay off the debts of bankrupt railroads. We do not have this obligation because governments are not known to pay off creditors in bankruptcy. This is one case in which the government has assumed an unusual obligation. Secondly, this ritual will not solve our basic transportation problems. Instead of voting more money to pay off old debts, our energies should be directed to rationalizing our total transportation system. State ownership of our entire transportation system appears the only long-term solution to obtain the kind of railways system required, especially in Canada's prairie region.

In a country like Canada, with a small population spread over a wide geographic area, transportation is a vital part of economic development. As such it should be controlled by the state.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Public Service—Regional pay inequities— Reasons for not applying same principle to members; the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin)—Airports—Mirabel—Expropriation procedure—disparity in offers; the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly)—Agriculture—Brucellosis—recommendations for control and compensation—government position.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

[Mr. Nesdoly.]

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

SPORTS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF FUND TO SUPPORT NATIONAL HOCKEY TEAM

Mr. Joe Hueglin (Niagara Falls) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the advisability of establishing a national endowment fund to which tax deductible private contributions may be made in support of a salaried Team Canada which would not only compete for Canada in international hockey but would also compete against local teams in all areas of Canada on a year round basis with proceeds from games played in Canada to be divided between Team Canada and the support of sports activities in the area in which the game is played.

He said: Mr. Speaker, last year in September two of the greatest competitive events which Canadians had the opportunity to witness were occurring at the same time. The first of these, in which many of us played an important part, was the election. The second, but first in the minds of the people of Niagara Falls and Fort Erie, was the hockey competition that was taking place between Team Canada and the team from the Soviet Union. Perhaps my fellow members of parliament did not experience the same reaction in their portion of Canada that I received. But as I attempted to knock on doors, the television set was on and I hesitated to break into the concentration. As I spoke to merchants, I found that their concern was about our team's position rather than about tax problems that they may have been facing.

● (1700)

Most important of all, my own concentration on the election was broken when I saw literally hundreds of the students at my high school following every play on a television set that had been established in the cafeteria. They were watching it with unified intensity in almost complete silence until a goal was scored either against us or for us. Canada's honour as a nation was, I believe, at stake last year. It was at stake in the minds of young and old, of Francophone and Anglophone, and of many who are not as fluent in either of those two tongues as they are in that of the land of their birth.

At that time, the idea of this resolution was born. It asks the government to give consideration to the creation of a vehicle that can serve as a unifying force in Canadian life, unifying in that it touches the interest of almost all Canadians of whatever age, economic status or origin they may be. This resolution is presented in my name, but its authorship must be given to many of the citizens of Niagara Falls and Fort Erie who discussed the subject with me last fall, and who really brought these ideas into being. The basic idea is that the government of Canada play a role in establishing a Team Canada. Beyond this basic point, there are many details which are included in the resolution upon which others more familiar with sports than I can no doubt improve. But if the basic point is accepted, no doubt the other points can be worked out satisfactorily to Canadians at least, although our sometime friends in the Olympic games may not find them acceptable.

Is there justification for the spending of public funds on such a team? If there is not, then there has been a misappropriation of many millions of dollars on other projects over the years, I would submit. Few Canadians out of the total will ever see the National Gallery, few will see the National Arts Centre, and relatively few will read or see books or films that are government funded. I am not saying that these moneys are ill spent. What I am saying is that these cultural activities do not touch most Canadians as Team Canada would. Culture in the narrow context has, in North America and perhaps in most other countries, always appealed to and been supported by a limited segment of the community, but plays, ballet, and so on, are state supported in Canada to some degree. Hockey is part of Canadian culture. It is a development within the Canadian culture. It is ours, and I submit that it is certainly worthy of support, as worthy as any of those cultural programs which are now funded.

If funds are to continue to go to these other activities which touch only the few, who would deny them to an activity that touches us all? Let the government endow this Team Canada, but let private individuals who wish to be patrons be allowed to donate their own funds as well. Thousands of private businesses and individuals support local teams. Indeed, without them many of our minor leagues could not exist. Permit them to do so at this level as well. Indeed, in recent months individuals have approached me to learn if they could be permitted to outfit local minor teams with the same tax concessions afforded companies at present. If they respond, as I am certain they will, the government role need be only that of providing an endowment, for these private contributions will soon play a major role in the financing of our team.

Perhaps such a happy combination of private and public means might even overcome the objections of those who presently deny us the right to participate in international hockey. Certainly, the combination of public initiative, coupled with private support, is something that can commend itself to each of us, no matter what our personal political philosophy may be. Young men who played for such a Team Canada would, in my estimation, have to be paid, certainly not at the levels at which some of our commercial teams are able and willing to pay their players. The commercial teams pay for profit; the players play for profit. Team Canada's players would have to be rewarded well, not with niggardly pay, for the time taken from their lives which they would be contributing, but they would be playing not for profit alone but for their country. I sincerely believe that we have young men who would play for this reason, young men who after a time would develop into a team which would regain us our stature in international hockey without us having to bring back all those men who have become professionals.

Will such a team be accepted in international hockey? If it is not, then the farce that we have seen in the last few years would be complete. We all know that foreign teams are not composed of amateurs in the true sense but of people who are supported in their careers. Indeed, we all know that even in local teams, in some cases at least, jobs have been opened up to players who are an asset. This is no secret, I believe, and I think it is generally accepted. The Olympics was started as an amateur venture. There are no real amateurs who take part in it in the sense in which it was started, that is, to give it a good try for a few weeks. All are dedicated athletes training full time. This does not take away from them in any way. I am simply saying that for them the sport absorbs almost all of their lives.

Surely, Team Canada, funded more and more from private sources, would have to be accepted. If it were not, then, in my opinion, we should do away with the hypocrisy of formal international competitions of this nature once and for all. Team Canada, funded initially by the federal government and increasingly by private contributions, calling upon young men of ability to represent Canada, what would it do aside from trying to get international competition to regain supremacy for us in our sport? It would do this. It would travel from Bonavista to Vancouver Island, certainly from the Great Lakes border and perhaps even to the Arctic circle. There are those things which unite us in Canada and those which unfortunately differentiate and sometimes divide us.

Certainly for me, coming to this House has been an enlightening experience if for no other reason than that the great differences that exist in our land have been brought home to me as never before. Having been raised and having worked very largely in southwestern Ontario, having spent years studying history and geography in college and years teaching history and geography, did not prepare me for trying to fully comprehend the breadth of our land or the great intensity with which members from other regions regard concerns which have been unknown to me or which I have found to be of no great importance. Canada is bound together by ties of history, economy and sentiment. We are faced daily with trying to reconcile divergent economic demands. Part of our history has been divisive rather than uniting in nature. Surely, any activity that ties us together by sentiment and by media exposure can be nothing but good, particularly if it is produced locally and is in no manner a divisive force.

For some, myself included, the expansion of commercial hockey in recent years has destroyed a focal point of interest. It used to be that I would support Toronto all the way, and then if they were beaten out of the play-offs I would immediately switch to the Canadiens as they were the Canadian team in the play-offs. Today, I am lost in a welter of teams, with the result that all bearings are gone, and this welter of teams is very largely foreign.

● (1710)

Team Canada would travel across Canada playing local teams. It may be too much to hope for, but perhaps local commercial teams would play for benefit performances. If not, then local teams of another nature would certainly be fielded. I have no doubt that if Team Canada came to Niagara Falls or Fort Erie, our arenas would be filled to overflowing. They would be filled for a number of reasons. First, there would be interest in our national team; second, there would be hope that our boys would upset them, and third, there would be a direct benefit to be derived by the local arena or area from the game.

Report concerning Team Canada on the national news could be a unifying force. As it moved from one arena to another across Canada, it would be a constant factor in the news, a constant factor to which we could all relate. It could introduce our young people to cities and towns about which they know little or nothing. It would be possible to put in the hands of our children Team Canada maps upon which they could trace the team's progress and learn about our country in the process. I know the ability we display in getting young children up in the mornings for hockey practice. I can see this as a very valuable teaching aid in the hands of good teachers. It could be a very considerable force for good.

I believe local people would look forward to a game because their team might be added to the victors' list. It is well known that each team has a good night and a bad night. I suggest each town would look forward to having its name on the national news as having beaten the national team. I know that the citizens of Niagara Falls and Fort Erie would be greatly pleased to have this occur, and I would suggest that in this they would be no different from people in the ridings of other hon. members. The team would be prepared for road trips abroad; they would be prepared for travel, and for strange arenas. They would be trained to play as a team, and they would be in shape. These have been problems in the past for our teams.

The final reason local citizens would support this concept of Team Canada is that it would bring benefit to local sporting activities. Surely, there are few municipalities in the country that could not use half of the net proceeds from a Team Canada game. I know that in Niagara riding arenas are needed, soccer fields are needed, baseball fields are needed, and a host of other facilities are required to provide recreation of a positive nature for our children. I expect that municipalities in other ridings across the country are in a similar situation.

Team Canada coming to play in a local arena would be a positive way of sharing in our national team's development, while at the same time contributing to local activities in a manner whereby something is received in return. Since this suggested venture involves the expenditure of public funds it is presented as a resolution, asking the government to give consideration to establishing a Team Canada rather than actually establishing it right now. To those who, either as private members or as ministers, are concerned about the expenditure of public funds on such a team, may I say one again that millions of dollars have been spent on cultural ventures which are of benefit only to the few, and some of which have no hope of ever being self-sustaining. It is my belief that if the government sees fit to adopt this recommendation Team Canada very shortly could be self-supporting.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, may I return to the origin of this resolution. It came during a time when we were united as a nation watching Canadians striving to win for Canada. It came from Canadians who were concerned that we be able to field a team of ability in the future. If adopted by the House, and acted upon by the government, we can not only produce such a team but have it perform a valuable role in strengthening our bonds of fellowship across the country and in aiding local sports activities.

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words in support of the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Hueglin). I am very glad to do so because the resolution takes into account the tremendous influence of hockey in Canada, not only as a sport but as an activity that provides a common denominator of Canadian interest across the nation, and because the resolution also indicates the hon. member's recognition of the fact that public as well as private enterprise is a very logical ingredient in this field of endeavour.

[Mr. Hueglin.]

It was last year in this place, noting across Canada the interest in hockey and that all the populated regions except those in the Atlantic area had major league public interest in hockey, that I proposed consideration be given to providing federal funds which, coupled with provincial and civic money, would make financially possible what is desirable, namely, the extension of major league hockey into the Maritimes. All across the nation, with the advent of T.V., hockey Canadians have something in common. We all relate in watching these games. But the people in the Maritimes are left out. They are not lacking in athletes or interest in hockey. However, they are lacking in one centre of population big enough to launch and maintain a major league hockey team.

A few years ago every man, woman and child in the country, all 22 million of us, contributed approximately $2.20 each to building the National Arts Centre in Ottawa, a monument to culture in Canada. I have nothing against that, Mr. Speaker. Yet the National Arts Centre probably plays a part in the lives of a minority of the adult population of the country. Relatively few Canadians will ever get a chance to visit the centre. But together we provided it. I wonder if, in the same spirit of co-operation, we could get together to provide covered stadia where they are needed for the promotion of hockey in Canada. Would this not be a worthwhile effort on our part to benefit Canadians? As the resolution before us indicates, athletics, sports, and particularly hockey provide a facet of Canadian culture, one which in my view should be encouraged.

The hon. member's resolution for a tax aid for Team Canada would also do as I have proposed, and I repeat the federal government should take the lead in promoting and aiding the establishment of major league hockey in the Maritimes, in a centre like Halifax. This would give Canadians from Atlantic to Pacific a common denominator of interest. Mr. Speaker, we do not have too many things in common in this country. Here, in what this resolution proposes, is something which, if we promote it, can have that effect, can be good for athletics, for sport and for national unity.

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing and allowing me to speak on this resolution, which I am sure has the support of most members of this House and most Canadians, with the exception of a select few, particularly those in a position of power within professional hockey, who might not support it. However, if I can talk about the resolution for the next few minutes, we may find that there are some problems involved that might jeopardize its success, problems which I think in all honesty should be brought forward. I probably would not be speaking on this resolution were it not for the absence of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Cafik), who in fact is in another arena today trying to draw together his own team, which I understand is not salaried and whose expenses are not tax deductible. Of course, when I speak of hockey and Team Canada and the role that sport plays in Canada, I can only speak as a spectator, not as a participant, as is the case with many Canadians. But I can share with all members of this House and people throughout the country, the special joy and pride in our national sport. I believe we should give serious consideration to the motion before us today.

● (1720)

I should like to refer to the Report of the Task Force on Sports for Canadians issued on February 28, 1969 which puts into perspective some of the problems we face in this motion. On pages 29 and 30, the report discusses Canada's national hockey team in the following words:

In Olympic competition, Canada was usually the undisputed world champion until 1956 when our team was defeated by the Russians. (The one exception, Britain's triumph in 1936, was hardly irritating to Canadians, since most of the players came from Canada). The U.S. won the Olympic title in 1960 and the Russians took it in 1964 and 1968.

As time has gone by our fortunes have gone down, until the report was issued in 1969. The report continues:

In 1930, there began the practice of an international tournament each year, sponsored by the International Ice Hockey Federation. This has come to be recognized as the world championship in those three years of the four when the Olympics are not held. Canada has not won this championship . . .

This report, of course, was published in 1969.

. . . since the Trail Smoke Eaters triumphed in Switzerland in 1961. Next year, the championship tournament will be held in Canada for the first time.

We recall that taking place. To continue:

It is worth noting that Canada, the original home of ice hockey, has no special place in the International Ice Hockey Federation. It is merely one member with two delegates. The weight of membership strength is in Europe. Further, the executive leadership of the IIHF has seemed to rest for a generation with a Mr. Bunny Ahearne, an Irishman resident in London. At present, very little ice hockey is played in Britain, and Britain rarely fields a team for international play.

The report goes on to refer to Mr. Ahearne. We all know of his problems and his impact upon Canada as head of the IIHF. Later, the article says:

The organization and selection of an amateur national hockey team for Canada has become a more difficult and thankless task since high quality teams began to emerge from Russia, Sweden and Czechoslovakia in the mid-1950s, just at the time when the quality of our national senior champions, the winners of the Allan cup, was slipping.

Five years ago, . . .

That would be 1964.

. . . the recognition that our champions alone or aided by selected players were inadequate as representatives in the international tournaments led to the development of the national team concept. The managers and scouts of the national team have found a strong resistance to their recruiting efforts among the owners of some amateur teams. These men do not wish to lose their stars because of the potential loss of revenue and the weakening of their teams' capacity in league play.

The professionals have resented the effort of the national team because it has and will deprive them of the services of some outstanding NHL prospects. The NHL has also been reluctant to release any professional players who sought to be reinstated as amateurs in order to qualify for the national team. There is an inherent difficulty, of course, in that the system of contracts, drafts and waivers in the professional hockey setup gives rights to every team in the arrangement, most of which are in the United States. Why should a manager in Tulsa or Baltimore waive on claiming a player just because he wants to play for and is wanted by the National Team of Canada?

You will recall some of the problems that we had in that situation last year, even with the Team Canada. To continue:

The concept of the national hockey teams had had several elements of reasoning and motivation. Firstly, there was the idea of providing some continuity of players and coaching from year to year. Secondly, there was the belief good playing talent could be attracted by the chance to represent one's country; to get a higher education while playing (especially a college education), . . .

Perhaps that could be part of the concept that the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Hueglin) puts forward.

. . . to have an income while playing and at college; to travel widely both in Canada and abroad; and to get a splendid opportunity to develop individual and group hockey skills under good coaching and through excellent competition.

The practical problem of financing the national team was faced by establishing the Hockey Foundation, under which businessmen raised funds through corporate donations, through obtaining government grants via the CAHA, and from the revenues brought in by games in which the National Team took part.

That is not something new; it has gone on for years and years.

At first, the National Team was centered in Winnipeg; then in 1967-68, another team or a "B" team was established in Ottawa. A surprisingly high number of young men has come forward in the past five years to try out for the National Team.

That is going back to 1969.

It is a fair judgment, we think, that the team representing us in this period has been better than we could get with an Allan cup or Memorial cup championship team. It has not been good enough and there have been problems in recruiting, in getting good competition, and in getting the necessary financial support.

There are several bald consequences of the failure of the National Team concept on the ice at international tournaments.

This is as it was in 1969, of course.

Despite the personal sacrifices of our young players, who have tried gallantly to uphold our hockey traditions, the defeats our National Teams have suffered have had an adverse effect, not only upon our hockey reputation, but upon the standing which Canada generally has abroad. Officials of the Department of External Affairs have assured us that this deteriotation in the over-all image of Canada abroad, and especially in Europe, because of our recent failures in hockey, is of much concern to them. The "body sporting" in Canada, including both those directly involved in the game and the huge public who know it enough to consider it our own, are discouraged, pessimistic, angry, or demanding of a better performance.

The article has summed up the problems of trying to put a national team together in 1969 and comments on why it did not work. Now comes the important part:

We found an amazingly strong agreement in all the meetings we held with various hockey groups across Canada that Canada must have a strong National Team. Accordingly, we sought out the area of friction and weakness, particularly by convening a "summit" meeting on hockey in Ottawa on December 10, 1968. There were present, representatives of the National Team, the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, the President of the National Hockey League, the senior officers of the Montreal Canadiens and the Toronto Maple Leafs, the Directorate of Fitness and Amateur Sport and a number of interested business men.

The following points emerged. Canada is being defeated in world competition because the rules of eligibility and the nature and application of the international playing rules work against her. The European countries, particularly the Russians, are not weakened in choosing their teams by the skimming of the cream of players into professional leagues as happens in Canada. Everyone with an interest in Canadian hockey must work together in a voluntary and free way in order to improve our representation and record. We must press for "open" competition. We must insist on the removal of artificial barriers to the participation of our best players.

Certainly, that concept changes part of the motion.

Meanwhile, we must create a unit involving all interested parties to develop and manage and sustain the Canadian team at international tournaments, whether these are "closed" as now or ultimately and hopefully "open".

We note approvingly the initiative shown at a gathering held in Ottawa on February 20, 1969, . . .

Just shortly before this report was released—

. . . chaired and convened by the hon. John Munro. Out of this meeting came the announcement of HOCKEY CANADA. As conceived there, it dovetails with the recommendations we now make, and it follows on from our summit meeting last December, and discussions previously held between the CAHA, NHL teams' officials and National Teams over the last two years.

This 1969 report of the Task Force on Sports for Canadians went on to recommend:

. . . that a non-profit corporation, to be known as HOCKEY CANADA, be established for the purpose of managing and financing the National hockey teams of Canada.

The report contains a series of recommendations on how Team Canada would be set up and these have basically been followed. In recent years, we have found that sport at the international level has assumed an increasingly important place in the eyes of people all around the world. We have had our own discouragements, as in the 1960's when we fell behind in world competition, and ran into problems with the International Ice Hockey Association.

The effect of international competition upon internal and domestic development of each sport is most important. The highlights of such events are individual performances. When you talk about hockey, you must look to what happened in the initial games last year. Players were picked out of the various teams and so the players had not worked together, but finally they came through for their country in a manner that I do not think any of us expected. The international effect of competition at home and abroad is very important and, as the task force report concludes, was felt last year in diplomatic circles in Europe. Apparently national prestige was low with European countries as the performance of our teams in international competition fell behind. Until the early 1950's, we were doing well in the world championships in ice hockey. The one exception was 1936 when the British team won the championship and that was principally a team made up of Canadians anyway, so we could not feel too badly about that.

● (1730)

We know about developments over the past two decades in Russia, Sweden and Czechoslovakia. Certainly the United States has come a long way. The national team concept, which started all this and which brings us to this discussion, was first introduced about one decade ago under the guidance of Father Bauer. That team was first housed in Vancouver, then Winnipeg, then Winnipeg and Ottawa. Again efforts were made to put together amateurs but we just could not keep up with the competition by working on that basis.

The problems of establishing an ongoing Team Canada today are even greater. The establishment of the World Hockey Association has created a war for the best available junior players, with the result that salaries have skyrocketed in the NHL and in the World Hockey Association. In essence, the sources of talent are being drained at a greater rate than in former years: anybody who watches hockey will not argue with that assertion. This has come about because of the expansion of the NHL and the introduction of the World Hockey Association.

Team Canada would have extreme difficulty in obtaining the kind of competition it would need in order to keep its players competitive and, indeed, it would experience great difficulties in keeping its players. Even if it were possible to obtain the calibre of player required for international competition, it is easy to visualize that those players would soon become bored with the usual kind of competition which could be offered to them and it is very likely that sooner or later most of them would return to the professional ranks.

You would need one excellent team with top pay; and remember you have to compete with the NHL and the WHA if you are to get it. In this case you are talking about millions of dollars and long-term contracts. The question is, even if you get players on the team, how do you keep them there when they do not have their own kind of people to compete with? The only way to do this would be to create the sort of Team Canada which we have had in the fairly recent past, and deal directly with the NHL and the WHA.

Such a team would be ineligible for Olympic competition; let us remember that. And assuming that it consisted of professional players who were salaried, it would have difficulty in arranging regular, ongoing games with teams from other countries outside of world championships or Olympic Games. Graduated junior players in themselves would not be competent to compete equally in world championships. That was borne out last year when the chief responsibilities for Team Canada rested with the experienced NHL players on the team.

It should be noted that the International Ice Hockey Federation does not recognize players in our established professional leagues, including the National Hockey League, the World Hockey Association, the Central Professional Hockey League and the Western Hockey League. That is where the professionals are; that is where the best players come from. The motion before us suggests that players of that caliber ought to be included on the team. Frankly, under the rules of the International Ice Hockey Federation they would not be eligible for certain kinds of competition.

The responsibility for fielding a hockey team to represent Canada in international play rests with Hockey Canada. It is a non-profit corporation established under part II of the Companies Act. All the varied interests in hockey in Canada, the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union, the Canadian professional teams, the NHL and the WHA, the players' association, the public at large and the government are represented on the board of directors of Hockey Canada.

I am saying that over the years we have tried to establish our national team. Father Bauer tried to establish it over one decade ago. We tried to take on the Allan Cup champions and the team could not keep up with them. You run into a difficult situation in competing with what are salaried and professional teams in Europe, something we cannot get across to Bunny Ahearne and others. One ought to point out, if we are to consider this motion seriously, that passing the motion will not enable us to meet all the requirements in this field.

Concern over this question has been generating through the years. That concern came to a head long before the showdown last year in which we came through in the final minutes. It came to a head with the task force report on sports and brought about the creation of Hockey Canada. Hockey Canadian fact represents all the groups in hockey. Hockey Canada is classified under the category of institutions to which one can make donations which are tax deductible. I think that is an excellent idea.

Perhaps one of the good things to come out of this motion might be the suggestion to Team Canada that they start a major fund-raising drive to support the team which is envisaged in the motion. The money so raised could be put into the kitty and, together with the funds derived from the games which would follow in which our best professional players would be used as they were last year, could then be disbursed in order to encourage amateur hockey across Canada.

It is a fact of life that if you want to employ a salaried team it will be classed as professional, and that rules you out of the International Ice Hockey Federation and out of the Olympic Games. So where will you use such a Team Canada. With whom will they compete? We could get the very best players and pay them wages which are above those paid by the NHL and the WHA. However, if the public which loves this sport so much was not able to watch such a team competing with teams in the NHL and WHA, at least not in the regular season—I do not know how one could arrange these games, although perhaps they could be arranged in the off season or in the training season—how could one hold such a team together?

Surely we should be spending millions of dollars for a team that was not at its best. It could not really compete in Canada and keep up with the rest of the teams playing, and meanwhile it could not compete internationally either in International Ice Hockey Federation games or in the Olympics. So I suggest that although there is a great deal of merit to this motion, there is no need now to establish a national endowment fund contributions to which would be tax deductible. I suggest that if we employed a salaried team that would rule us out in Canada and in Europe.

May I make one final point. A member of the New Democratic Party supported the motion. He suggested that the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Hueglin) recognized that sometimes the public sector can compete successfully with private enterprise, and therefore he was especially pleased to support this motion. I think we are entering very dangerous territory if we end up with a government-supported team. Instead of the independent body, Hockey Canada, being responsible in this field it might be the government which had a direct role to play. The government might be responsible for a team that could compete with our own national teams or with international teams.

If it were to fail internationally, we might end up with an election campaign in which the issues might not compete with hockey for attention but in which hockey might be a predominant topic for discussion, at the expense of other issues which are of vital importance but which may not receive such widespread public attention as hockey.

In conclusion, may I read a few sentences from "A summary of the organizational development, activities and achievements of Hockey Canada, January, 1969, to May, 1972." I will not read it all; I merely wish to put the following on record:

> Hockey Canada is an organization established early in 1969 to achieve the following objectives:
>
> 1. To develop, operate, and manage a national hockey team or teams to represent Canada internationally.
>
> 2. To foster and support the playing of hockey in Canada, and in particular, to develop the skill and competence of Canadian hockey players and coaches in co-operation with other hockey organizations.

I think we are looking for a better way to make our system of hockey work. I think Hockey Canada has given us a good start. I am not at all satisfied that the dispute in the private sector between the NHL and the WHA has been resolved to the satisfaction of the Canadian public, but surely that might be done by Hockey Canada which was an initiative of this government.

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is not often in this House that we have the opportunity to discuss such a pleasant piece of legislation or motion. I say this especially as we debated earlier today the bill on capital punishment. That has been a debate in which many members have been carried away emotionally. I am sure there will not be anything emotional about this debate.

May I inform the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Hueglin) that I share his views regarding the importance of our national sport. I am sure we all remember the high-class entertainment that was provided by Team Canada one year ago. Team Canada demonstrated to the whole world that hockey in Canada is not only a national sport, but that with the event of the Canada-Russia series it has become an international sport. We are very proud that Canada holds the world championship title in this sport. May I take this opportunity to congratulate all the members of Team Canada for their great victory over the Russians.

Our love for hockey and our concern for ensuring its continuity obliges me to take a stand different from that taken by my colleague from Niagara Falls on this motion. A government-sponsored team would bring serious opposition to private enterprise which has provided and is still providing us with our favourite entertainment. Such a team could hinder the financial success of teams in the private sector. Eventually we should see lower salaried players engaged in this sport, which would result in a lower calibre of entertainment. I do not think the hon. member for Niagara Falls wants this to happen, nor does any other Canadian want it to happen.

My first point is this: I doubt seriously whether the government should be allowed to compete with private enterprise.

An hon. Member: It is doing it in the oil business.

Mr. Ethier: About 300,000 Canadians participate actively in this sport, I am informed, and as that number includes high-salaried players playing for professional teams in our two hockey leagues, I am sure many young players today anticipate a future as professional hockey players. Without private enterprise which constantly contributes financially to our young hockey players, a great many of our young people would be deprived of an opportunity for a career that not many fields in private enterprise could offer if hockey were eliminated.

One must also consider the advantage derived from each young Canadian being able to develop physically while practising this sport. As one who has coached many junior hockey teams for numerous years, I would certainly feel a great loss if private owners of hockey clubs stopped sponsoring hockey because of a drop in their revenues occasioned by the competition of hockey teams sponsored by our government.

● (1740)

Another point we must consider is the high rate of delinquency in the young people of our country. We must appreciate what hockey does to reduce this. We must take into account the amount of time our youngsters spend in outdoor rinks and arenas. This takes them off the streets where they often get into mischief. We should be thankful we have Canadians interested enough to invest in and promote such a healthy sport.

In this bill the hon. member asks that donations to Team Canada or Hockey Canada be tax deductible. I am sure that at the present time donations to Hockey Canada are tax deductible because it is a non-profit corporation. The hon. member must also consider the possibility of teams being refused in international competition. Hockey players receiving remuneration or a salary certainly could not compete in the Olympics. For this reason I felt I should speak on this bill.

I enjoy the wonderful sport of hockey, as do most Canadians. I want to be assured it will continue. However, I cannot go along with the hon. member in asking that the government compete with the private sector. I am sorry to say to the hon. member that although I love the sport, I will not support this motion.

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to participate in this debate because the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Hueglin) has raised a point we must think about and discuss. I agree that people in his constituency, like mine and probably most others, feel very strongly about this subject. However, we must be careful that we do not get carried away in our enthusiasm to the point where we forget about sport for the sake of sport. We should not concentrate too much upon winning. This attitude has disturbed me somewhat.

In our whole orientation toward sports, particularly hockey, many of us grew up in the days when we did not have artificial rinks except for very special occasions. This made for a very erratic schedule, certainly around the Toronto area. I appreciate that it would be different in the Edmonton area. Even though it is windy there, if you could get on the windward side of the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski), you would be all right; you would be well protected.

In our relationship to sport there should not be emphasis upon winning at all costs. This is important. We have to rethink what we are trying to do in our society and in training our children. I am disturbed in this respect. I have four sons, all of whom are serious hockey and football players as well as participators in many other sports. Despite the fact they are good, cleancut athletes, I think they are taught to be dirty players: that is part of the game.

I spoke to a high school teacher who is coaching a football team. The school does not have a grade 13 and this is the first year it has had a senior team. Strangely enough, after losing the first game 48-0 and the second 38-0, they started to win the odd game. He took these young men who never played football before and welded them into a team. I am somewhat embarrassed to say that I am sure he is teaching them every dirty trick in the book.

An hon. Member: Did you speak to the principal?

Mr. Danson: I suggest it is a matter of principle.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danson: The point is, we can and must have clean sports. We must take away the emphasis on winning. This applies as much to international sports as to national sports in Canada. It seems we are building up an international relationship through hockey. I was proud of our national team but I was astounded at the behaviour of our fans who went to Moscow. Although I attended only one game, I was embarrassed at the performance of the fans in Canada. It was the greatest hockey I have ever seen—absolutely first-rate hockey. Certainly we should take hockey seriously. However, this killer instinct of winning for the sake of winning, or believing that Canada would be dishonoured if it lost a hockey game to the Soviet Union, is not right.

I always understood that lacrosse was our national sport but we seem to take hockey as the national sport. We should be pleased that hockey has been taken up by so many countries with Canadian coaches and players. These nations have done extremely well on their own. If they beat us in hockey that is part of the game, although I like to see us win.

Mr. Paproski: It is a good thing they won.

Mr. Danson: I think the hon. member has a point. I wonder how many seats in this House it would have cost if we had lost that series. I made a canvass in connection with the series, although I could not go from house to house to canvass all my constituents. I remember people running out on to their lawns when the winning goal was scored by Henderson. Two young men were roofing a house in my constituency. They had some other supplies on hand to help them enjoy the game and I thought they were going to fall off the roof. I continued canvassing because I am conscientious with regard to what is good for my country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danson: At the first house we could not talk to each other. We sat there with tears in our eyes. They gave me some medicine which carried me on for a little while longer.

The hon. member's motion is important. As the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming) said, most Canadians and most members of this House would have tremendous sympathy for it. I certainly do not object to it. I think it has immense merit, but not in its present form. Some of us support it in principle. It certainly would have an impact on the sporting community, particularly Sports Canada and Hockey Canada. I think there is some merit in the federal funding of a national team that represents Canada abroad, but it should be channelled through Hockey Canada. That is where it belongs. That is what Hockey Canada is all about.

It is a credit to parliament that it supported this government in establishing Sports Canada which has done a great deal. When members visit their constituencies they see that the fellows who used to run provincial and national leagues from kitchen tables now have at least minimal facilities. I see how great the spirit is in my constituency. We have a softball team which won the world championship in Manilla. The members of the team were welcome and honoured, when they visited our gallery, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), by parliament and by Sports Canada. I do not think this would have happened so readily if it were not for the great job Sports Canada is doing in all sports with which it is associated.

However, I do not think a permanent hockey team would really reflect the many top players we would like to see represented on a national team, although we see them playing together as a team all the time. Most of our players were far superior but they had not played together as a team long enough. Competition in our regrettably highly commercialized sport of hockey would make it exceedingly expensive or perhaps impossible. Finding a permanent team of sufficiently high standard would be difficult.

● (1750)

Though we were terribly impressed by the Russian team, I understand it is only one of about nine teams of a similar character. I was in Siberia, Russia, last May. I was not sent there; I was on a voluntary visit. It was a beautifully sunny day in the south of Russia, but in the north it was darned cold; it was below zero. I saw children between 8 and 10 years of age playing hockey on artificial ice in an indoor arena. It was very interesting for us to see those youngsters playing hockey so seriously. I do not say it was great hockey, but one could see the difference in style in the way they were being coached. Those children were really skating; there was very little body contact. However, the point I am making is that in Russia there are a number of teams of the highest calibre competing against each other, and this calls for a great effort on our part.

I think the hon. member is on the right track. In a sense, I believe one has to isolate Team Canada; I do not believe it would be good policy to make it part of a wider project. I believe people sincerely wish to support Team Canada. There is nothing seriously wrong about establishing a corporation, giving it a charter, and so on, enabling it to operate independently. But in my view this would be a wrong approach. I believe we should think in terms of Hockey Canada and establish a special fund for Hockey Canada or Team Canada in care of Hockey Canada. The fund would be devoted specifically to supporting the Canadian team. I think, then, the team would be better financed than an NHL team since, as I say, a large number of Canadians would support it on a regular basis.

The idea of a permanent team causes me some concern. I do not know where one would get the players to comprise such a team or who they would play against. I do not wish to talk out this motion, because I believe it is a worthwhile one. I would support it as Hockey Canada with a tax-free privilege for donations intended for Team Canada.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I compliment the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Hueglin) for bringing this motion forward for discussion. I suggest to him and to the hon. member who has just spoken that the most important fact in hockey is not money, but is conditioning and the will to play. As one who comes from a small community in Ontario, I well recall the days when we used to run to the barn to get out the squared-mouth shovel which we used to clean-off the ice in a ten-acre filed so that we could play hockey. Our sticks were usually from a branch of a tree cut in a nearby swamp, and in this way many of the great hockey players of the future developed in those years.

Mr. Bell: What about your pucks?

Mr. Hopkins: Since those days hockey in the rural areas has developed along more sophisticated lines. First, small outdoor rinks were built, and finally covered rinks, leaving the way clear for the establishment of what is known in the rural areas as a bush league. I have played in these bush leagues and I must say I was in much better condition then than I am today. I can recall occasions when I travelled six miles on foot to get a ride for another nine miles to play hockey in my home arena. The visiting team might have come from 30 miles away.

Mr. Bell: Did you ever use a magazine as a shin guard?

Mr. Hopkins: Players in hockey teams all over Canada have come up through these ranks—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret very much having to interrupt the hon. member whose speech was obviously of great interest. Indeed, hon. members might, by unanimous consent, be willing to allow the hon. member to continue for a while.

There does not appear to be unanimous consent, so I must consider that the hour set aside for private members' business has expired.

Canadian National Railways and Air Canada

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME AND DATE OF VOTE ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT BILL

Mr. MacEachen: I should like to report to the House that the representatives of the various parties have met pursuant to the special order dealing with the amendment to the Criminal Code, capital punishment and agreement has been reached on the time for the vote on third reading of the bill. The vote will take place on Wednesday next at 2.30 p.m. It is understood that whatever proceedings are before the House at that time will be interrupted, that the bells will ring for 15 minutes and that the vote will begin at a quarter to three. That is the agreement reached among representatives of the four parties.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Then it is so ordered.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES AND DEBENTURES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-164, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying when I was speaking at five o'clock, some hon. members who spoke before me were bemoaning the fact that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) was not in the House to listen to their words of wisdom. I am glad indeed the minister is present now; perhaps he will listen to my words of wisdom.

I have a special affinity for the railroads. Although I have never worked on the railroads, I have travelled a great deal on them. My first father-in-law came to this country in 1928 and worked for two years in northwestern Saskatchewan building a railroad from Shellbrook to Shell Lake, Saskatchewan, using horses, canvas tents and what-have-you. In those two years he earned enough money to bring over his wife and two children from White Russia.

In subsequent years I became a widower and remarried, this time a girl from Newfoundland whose father was a retired railroad worker. He tells me that he was one of the workers on the old Newfoundland railroad company which was going bankrupt and was inherited by Canadian National Railways, as I was pointing out prior to five o'clock. He was one of the gentlemen who was on the Newfoundland railroad company black-list—he was one of 30—because of their attempts to organize a union. As I say, he is now retired and he tells me the pension is not high enough.

I was trying to say before five o'clock, Mr. Speaker, that we have never had competitive railroad systems in western Canada. The CNR and CPR are like two trees planted too close together; the trunks and branches are so interwoven that neither is able to develop its full potential. For example, in areas of Canada CNR and CPR share almost the same roadbed, they are that close together. I am thinking particularly of one example between Perdue and Biggar, Saskatchewan, where the tracks are within a stone's throw of one another yet there are CNR and CPR trains going by several times a day on the main line.

To rationalize adequately our railway system in Canada all railroads should be brought under state ownership. The CNR is now state-owned, and the CPR should be. This has been the thrust of the policy of our party almost since its inception. In my own province of Saskatchewan, transportation policies have tended to work against Saskatchewan's small plant industrial economy. Basically, Saskatchewan is agricultural but we do have a small plant industrial economy too. There is a significant area of monopoly in the transportation industry with higher rates and service problems.

The railroads must develop reasonable rates with which the people of western Canada can live. If not, the government must step in and act, using transportation as a key instrument in national policy and national unity. I quite agree that a two-language policy is necessary for this country socially and culturally, but I feel transportation is also the key to national unity, something I think the government has overlooked.

For too long the railroads have been encouraged to extract their fixed costs and overheads from those areas which are not endowed with intermodal competition. Western Canadians have made disproportionate contributions toward the fixed costs of the railroads. The railroads must also be a key instrument in northern development. I think the government of the day must take a very close look at the whole concept of a railroad down the Mackenzie Valley and into northern Saskatchewan to transport the uranium deposits there which will be of key significance as we move closer and closer to a so-called energy crisis.

Several weeks ago I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about the high cost of food in the north—the Northwest Territories, northern Alberta and northern Saskatchewan. He replied that this was really the responsibility of the provincial governments. I think transportation is the responsibility of the federal government. When people have to pay almost $2 a dozen for eggs in Arctic Red River near the mouth of the Mackenzie delta in the far north, I think the time has come to develop the north; and transportation is one of the keys.

For too long the rate-setting policies of the railroads have been based on fictitious water competition. Rarely are we given details of the name of the water carrier, the rates charged, the tariff applied, the type of service and the frequency or capacity of the service.

● (2010)

I understand from the Western Economic Opportunities conference that the Government of Canada has agreed to make some of these figures, statistics, and so on, known to the provincial government. This is appreciated by the people of the west. We need a framework to compensate for the overwhelming advantages through the size, volume and competition in the transportation field which industry now enjoys in the most favoured regions of central Canada. Such an approach must take into account the total production and distribution problems of a single industrial plant, a group of plants or an entire industry within a province such as Saskatchewan, or even within a region.

The largest discrepancies exist between regions such as the western provinces and the central provinces, or between the maritime provinces and the central provinces. I am also opposed to rail line abandonment such as the proposed abandonment of the line from Shellbrook to Spiritwood and Turtleford. This would mean that some farmers would have a grain haul of 50, 60 or 70 miles. We do not dispute the fact that some rail lines should be abandoned, but it must be on a rationalized basis.

Provincial policy in Saskatchewan is to encourage decentralization as much as possible and to locate industries in the smaller towns and villages. We want to preserve the rural way of life. In the face of this, branch line abandonment and centralization of rail services is negative. Centralization in the form of servocentres will not necessarily give the best service. The CNR today is talking about servocentres. As I mentioned earlier, this does not mean there is no room for rail rationalization in western Canada, but it means we must be aware of all the social costs and psychological implications. It means that national transportation policies must be grounded in regional needs and regional economics.

Now may I say a word or two about the airlines. I have heard many people complain about the service of Air Canada. They have said that the service is terrible, the food is terrible, and so on. So far as I am concerned, the food is okay and the service is not too bad. Every once in a while one misses a flight out of Ottawa because of freezing rain or because the runway is icy, but that merely proves that man has not conquered nature completely. Despite man's great advances in technology, we still are not at a point where we can have de-icing machines and technology that make it possible for a flight to leave at the exact time every day, 365 days of the year.

I have flown on a number of airlines. The food service of Air Canada is not bad. The hostesses are always polite. However, I do have a few criticisms in the nature of suggested improvements. For example, I am rather opposed to these expensive air terminal buildings which are sometimes foisted upon communities as symbols of community pride or monuments to politicians. We have huge terminal buildings in Montreal and Toronto and a fair sized one in Winnipeg. The one in Saskatoon is too small.

When I fly into the northern part of my province, I am lucky to find a little shack to go into to keep warm. In some cases there is nothing; one must step out into the blustering wind and snow. I would sooner have decent runways and navigational aids in some of the outlying regions of Saskatchewan and northern Canada. In my constituency there is a need for good runways and navigational aids in places such as Meadow Lake, Buffalo Narrows, Beauval, Cluff Lake and many other northern communities.

Again, I should like to commend the federal government for taking the initiative in allotting $100,000 to the community of Meadow Lake to pave 2,800 feet of runway there. It will be the first paved runway in my constituency. I hope this is followed up with many more. It should also be an instrument of national policy to build roads to the north. I think we should be looking at things far beyond rail line or airline transportation. At least we should be willing to share the expense of road building with the provinces in the more inaccessible regions. For example, in my area a road is required to Cluff Lake and the south shore of Lake Athabasca. This would be a boon to the development of some of the rich uranium finds in the area. In Saskatchewan also we need a north-south jet service extending into the United States. The government of Saskatchewan asked for such a jet service and were refused. Air Canada should be looking seriously into the matter of serving some of our centres such as Uranium City, North Battleford, Prince Albert, Yorkton, Weyburn, Swift Current, and so on.

Coming back to the question of the railroads, if the railways insist on abandoning trackage then they should also forfeit an equal percentage of land and return it to the provinces concerned. They should return both the physical property and the mineral rights. For example, if they want to abandon 20 per cent of the trackage in Saskatchewan they should give us back 20 per cent of the 15 million acres of land, together with the mineral rights, to compensate our loss.

Only if the activities of the CNR and CPR are completely co-ordinated can a limited plan or rail line abandonment be struck. We must have complete co-ordination. The railways ought to sit down with the provincial governments involved, the elevator companies and, most importantly, the farmers' representatives and representatives of communities, the smaller communities in particular, to design a plan which would utilize the best tracks with the least detrimental effect to the communities concerned.

Why do railroads need money? Here we are about to vote $225 million. Why do they need this money if very little of it is spent on keeping up the trackage? In my constituency the elevators are plugged. There are no boxcars. The tracks are poor. One might ask why this situation is allowed to exist.

An hon. Member: A poor MP.

Mr. Nesdoly: A gentleman over there says it is because there is a poor MP. I think it is because of poor government, period: that is what we have had for the last 20 years.

I should also like to ask why the railways hang on to rights-of-way on which track was never laid or on which it never expects to lay track. I will give an example. There is a railway right-of-way in my area of northwestern Saskatchewan. Thirty years ago the right-of-way was obtained for the Canadian National from St. Walburg to Loon Lake, Saskatchewan. That trackage was never laid. There is no railway to Loon Lake, but they still have ownership of the right-of-way. In the village of Loon Lake, which is one of the very few places in Canada which is totally surrounded by an Indian reservation and which is one of the few villages in Saskatchewan still growing, the railway has a right-of-way on which 20 or 30 houses could be placed. They refuse to pay frontage taxes for sewage and water, or to give the land back to the village so that it would have the land for expansion purposes within the community.

● (2020)

I think, also, that the financial dealings, statements and transactions of the CNR should be more open to the public than they have been up to the present time. Many questions have been raised in my own province with regard to the sale of the Bessborough Hotel. When queried as to the price at which the hotel was sold, the company said it was not in the public interest to divulge it and that to give the information would be to give their competitors an unfair advantage.

So they would not reveal the price of the hotel. Yet they sold a hotel in Saskatoon. They spent, I do not know how many millions of dollars, on a huge edifice in Toronto which when it is completed is supposed to be the highest building in the world—over 1800 feet high. And for what? What does that have to do with transportation? I sometimes question what the CNR is doing. Certainly, if they spent a little more money fixing up the tracks in Saskatchewan and buying a few more boxcars, it would be money put to better use than on the CNR building in Toronto.

There are 2,000 hopper cars that the CNR and the CPR are supposed to use to haul grain. They cannot haul grain on half the trackage in the prairie provinces; and we have not yet heard from the government what the deal was with the CNR and the CPR with regard to the rental of these hopper cars and what would be their use.

Basically, railroads should be an instrument of national policy, of national unity and they should be used to serve this country and to bring about the unity of our nation. I will not stand here criticizing the CNR, because I am convinced that it is a good railroad and that it serves its social purposes—which the CPR refuses to do—despite the fact that its financial situation is not quite as good as that of the CPR. But I must also remind hon. members that the CPR was given large sums of the taxpayers' money, land and mineral rights in this country to build up the huge empire which it now has. Yet that company does not provide the type of services which the CNR provides.

[Mr. Nesdoly.]

Every time a little rail line goes bankrupt, the CNR swallows it, perhaps, as I said earlier, for social or political reasons. I think it is about time we looked at our total transportation system and co-ordinated it. I believe quite strongly that the CNR, the CPR and in fact the whole transportation system should come under state ownership.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I find that Bill C-164, gives members of the House an opportunity to look at the railway system and the airline system which is owned by the taxpayers of this country. I want to point out that the CNR is underwritten by the taxpayers of Canada. When it first set up its operation it amalgamated Grand Trunk, Grand Trunk Northern and Grand Trunk Pacific, and since that time any profits which accrue to the CNR operation are used to pay back the barons of England from whom the government of this country at that time had rescued these almost bankrupt railway companies. I hope the government will see the light and will realize it is time to liquidate the $1,900 million of public debt owned by the CNR, then perhaps we can go forward with the kind of profitable operation which we have proved the CNR could be.

I always find it rather strange that it is advantageous to those who support the free enterprise system—which you may observe is neither free nor enterprising—to maintain the present arrangement whereby the people of Canada have to cough up annually large sums of money to help pay the interest on that original loan. This effects the operations of the CNR and any profits which it has made. Indeed, it is always very nice to be able to say that the CNR did not make a profit. The public, of course, must not read between the lines and must not notice that the profit which accrues is used to pay off the interest on the original loan. People would like to say that the government cannot run any business profitably nor any transportation system. To say so is always in the interests of those who support the free enterprise system. I have only one answer to that, which is, as my colleague has suggested to me, horsefeathers.

It seems to me that when we look carefully at the operations of the CNR we find that in effect it has been very successful. We find that in the year ending December 31, 1972, for example, the CNR had a profit of about $45 million. As a matter of fact, the total railway operating revenues rose 10 per cent, from $1,141 million to $1,257 million. The carload freight revenues were up by 8.6 per cent, due mainly to the rise in traffic volume. Passenger service revenues rose 3.9 per cent. Also, the CNR paid $178 million in taxes to all levels of government in Canada in 1972. In addition to that, I repeat that the CNR's net profit was some $50 million.

Now let us look at how the CNR treats its employees, the people who help to produce the wealth of this railway company. I find the rates of pay of the CNR very interesting. For example, the CNR pantryman with 19 years of service or over gets $2.97 an hour. A waiter on the CNR with 19 years of service or over gets $3.11 an hour. A CNR porter gets $3.14 an hour. A cook assistant gets $3.21 an hour if he has 19 years of service or over, and the cook himself with 19 years of service or over gets $3.53 an hour. The chef gets $4.12 an hour.

If those are the rates of pay which this government-operated business pays its workers, no wonder we have the unrest on our railways that we are experiencing these days. I ride trains regularly, my community at Capreol is on the main line, and I find that the morale of the CNR employees on the trains is pitifully low. It is at rock bottom, largely because of some of the steps being taken by management to cut back the work force and to increase the workload. I find, for example, that in 1972 in the CN St. Lawrence region there were 1,000 persons employed in the dining and sleeping car service. In June, 1973, that figure was down to 347. Remember, Mr. Speaker, CNR passenger service has been increasing; indeed, revenues from passenger service have increased by 3.9 per cent—but the work force has gone down.

● (2030)

How does the CNR treat its retired workers? We find that as of January, 1971, the CNR was paying 5,052 pensions of less than $50 per month, and of that number most were pensions of $25 per month or less. In 4,194 cases, pensions up to only $99.99 were being paid. The Government of Canada has seen fit to provide for payment of pensions to employees of dozens of Crown corporations under the Public Service Superannuation Act. I maintain the government should force the CNR to pay the same type of pensions to its employees with provision for 2 per cent of salary for each year of service.

Other things are responsible for lack of morale among CNR workers. Air Canada employees receive a free pass once a year on the CNR but this does not work in reverse; CNR employees do not get a pass once a year on Air Canada. This can only lead to resentment, to a feeling of being second-class employees receiving second-class or indeed third-class pay. Another thing that concerns me about the CNR is its board of directors. I looked at that board and found it was sadly lacking in representation from ethnic groups. With the exception of two French Canadians it seems that Anglo-Saxons make up the board of directors. There is N. J. MacMillan, chairman and president, J. W. G. Macdougall, R. A. Bandeen—

Mr. Sharp: Those are not Anglo-Saxons; they are Scots.

Mr. MacEachen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the suggestion made by the hon. member is that these Scots are not real ethnics. The Scots were the first ethnics of this country.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, with a name like mine I was looking for more Irish names like my own on this board of directors. To continue the list, there is Pierre Taschereau, J. R. Richer, A. H. Hart, M. Archer, R. T. Vaughan, J. L. Toole, W. R. Corner, E. P. Stephenson, K. E. Hunt, George Lach, W. H. Bailey, J. M. Duncan, R. E. Lawless, D. W. Blair, J. F. Roberts, W. D. Piggott, A. R. Williams, J. H. Spicer, J. C. Gardiner, John Gratwick, S. D. H. Thomas, and E. J. Denyar. I also found that many of these people are on the boards of directors of other companies. There are no workers represented on the CNR board of directors, yet they are the ones who know what is wrong with the railway. Democracy is not apparent in these government-appointed directors. They are all appointees from a very elite group.

I am also interested in the way the CNR approaches the public. It seems it has discovered that its greatest source of revenue is in carrying freight and in that field it practices a great deal of discrimination against certain parts of the country. The greatest discrimination in freight rates is practised against northern Ontario. The hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly) mentioned northern Saskatchewan and the freight rate discrimination there. I say there is not an area in Canada more discriminated against, so far as freight rates are concerned, than northern Ontario. Indeed, the area between Quebec and Armstrong in northern Ontario shows the highest freight rate structure in northern Canada.

The freight rate structure in northern Ontario discriminates against local development. It is based on the volume of the items being shipped out. This has led to the development of northern Ontario as a resource depository from which raw materials are shipped. The mining companies get the benefit of lower rates. Recently I discovered that it costs $8.66 per ton to ship iron ore from Copper Cliff to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, but to ship a ton of fertilizer from Toronto to the Sudbury basin costs $90. How can we develop diversification of our industry in northern Ontario if freight rates make it more profitable to ship raw materials from there? This has been a bone of contention in the north for many years.

Recently the government of Ontario announced an 18 per cent freight rate cut on all freight shipped by the ONR or Star Transport. As you know, Mr. Speaker, ONR operates only in northern Ontario. It does not operate out of the region; we have to depend on the CNR or CPR for that and our hope was that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), or the government, would cut CNR freight rates in a similar fashion in order to assist the establishment of secondary industry in our area. But we have not heard one word of any reciprocal action by the federal government. Indeed, we see that what the Turgeon report had to say is as true today as it was when it was first made. It reads in part:

> It has been pointed out to the commission that in this regard railway management in the past has often proceeded, in fixing freight rates, without sufficiently considering the interest of the community to be served, and without even showing a proper conception of the long-run interest of the railway.

I suggest that we in northern Ontario have been discriminated against by the CNR in the matter of freight rates. This is why Eaton's and Simpsons have two catalogues, one each for northern Ontario and for southern Ontario. In all cases, the items advertised are more expensive in northern Ontario than in southern Ontario. This is why workers in the Sudbury basin must continually demand a higher rate for the work they do, because they have to contend with prices that are highly inflated due to freight rate costs.

This leads me to another point. The railway roadbeds were laid down about 70 years ago. These roadbeds were laid to accommodate trains of that time which were much shorter and lighter than modern trains, but no improvements have been made to them. It takes the CN passenger train 7½ hours to travel from Sudbury to Toronto. Apparently this is because of the slow orders on the line. When the track was laid, the trains were pulled by steam engines and the rail line went around the lakes so that the trains could stop to get water. That day has gone, but the lines still go around the lakes. Mr. Speaker, I believe the government ought to spend about $5 billion straightening out the lines to make the service faster and more convenient.

● (2040)

These days we hear a great deal about the gasoline shortage and the fuel shortage. We hear the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) saying that cities must not be allowed to sprawl the way they are at the moment. The railway lines are already there, and it seems to me we ought to be converting people to the use of public transportation. I am firmly convinced that the CNR does everything in its power to discourage passengers from using its service. It has taken a leaf out of the book of CPR in that respect, and I disagree with it. We should be trying to get the CNR to establish an improved passenger service.

During the last election campaign an announcement was made about the removal of railway lines from downtown cores. The CN quickly moved their lines from downtown Sudbury to the suburbs. But the CPR lines are still there. CN built what I call a little passenger hut, Mr. Speaker, because that is what it is. Every time we get a fog that closes the airport, a crowd of people go over to get the train and find they have to stand out in the rain. That little waiting-room is not any more than two feet by two feet, and I am not exaggerating. The area has a population of close to 180,000, so the waiting-room is not adequate. People become disgusted when they cannot even find shelter from the elements. The town of Capreol is on the transcontinental line, and there we find a building that must be at least 100 years old. It must have been there at the time of confederation, Mr. Speaker, and apparently has some historical significance because it is crumbling away. However, no effort is made to provide for passengers' comfort.

If we do get on the train, we find that the price of meals is exorbitant. I think inflation hit the railways ten years before it hit the rest of Canada, and I strongly suspect that they use the profits of the dining-car to pay for the private cars that they have all over the country for the personal use of the regional managers. Liver and onions costs $2.45, hamburger costs $1.50, coffee 25 cents, and Coke 30 cents a bottle. This sort of thing discourages people. If you want a sleeping berth, you are told that none is available. This happened to me, and then I went to the Ottawa station and asked for a berth to Vancouver and was told that one was available. There seems to be no system of reservations at all for the public convenience.

If the energy crisis continues, then a public transit system for this country will become increasingly important. But the government seems to think they have things under control. When we ask the minister a question about the possibility of cutting freight rates, we are told that this would have to be done by the Canadian Transport Commission. Mr. Speaker, who runs the country? Surely not some commissioners sitting around in opulent rooms. Surely it is the government elected by the people of the country. I believe the proceedings of the House of Commons should be televised so that Canadians could see what happens when important questions are asked. Matters touching on the lives of the half million people in northern Ontario are brushed aside and we are told that a commission has to make the decisions. Why do we need a government, if a commission can decide? I cannot speak too harshly about that kind of thing.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that it is apparently all right for CNR to subsidize commuters between Detroit and Pontiac, Michigan, to the tune of $375,000 annually. We have been doing that since 1954. If we can do that, then what about the people who live in northern Ontario? Perhaps we should subsidize their foodstuffs. If the government of the province of Ontario can equalize the price of beer between southern Ontario and northern Ontario, surely the federal government can do something to ameliorate freight rates in northern Ontario so that the region does not have to develop only as a resource economy. An adequate rail service would be the first step toward developing secondary industry in a area such as mine. Millions of dollars are spent on the educational system there, but when the young people reach working are they find they must leave because there is very little opportunity for those aged 18 to 25.

How can urban sprawl be stopped when the people of northern Ontario have no secondary industries, no interesting jobs in research and development to offer the young people who find they have to go to the large urban centres where the opportunites are greater? I wish the people of Canada could be transported into this House to see what goes on.

I urge the Minister of Transport to use the power of his office to make sure that Canadian National Railways, which is owned by the people of Canada, is used for the benefit of Canada. Some great things could be done. This railway system links the two ends of the country. Surely we could improve the system to the point where people would prefer to go by rail rather than drive on crowded highways on which they may be prone to accidents and the hazards of inclement weather in areas such as the one I represent. Can we not improve the service to the point where people will want to use the railway? I urge the minister to use his power in that way as an elected officer of this country.

● (2050)

Secondly, I am concerned about freight rates. They are most important, Mr. Speaker. The Ontario government has cut freight rates on the ONR by 18 per cent. Why cannot the CNR do the same? The CNR ought to cut freight rates in that area if we are to move out of that second-class slot in northern Ontario in which we merely take stuff out of the ground, ship it out and then take back the finished product. Surely we can expect the Liberal government to act in this regard. Liberal members have represented northern Ontario for the last 50 years. Formerly, 9 out of 12 members representing the area were Liberal. Just before I came along, 11 out of 12 were Liberal. Surely those Liberal members know that freight rates are at the root of our problem in northern Ontario. Surely those members who represent northern Ontario have the ear of the minister. Indeed, I think they also have his tail, but that is beside the point. The fact is that they ought to do something worthwhile for northern Ontario. They have the power, as they represent the area. The members of my party would be quite willing to support Liberal members who would like to work in the direction of improving the situation in that regard.

I also urge the minister to use his power with the CNR for the benefit of the workers. The workers are not slaves any more and deserve more than the paltry wages which I have mentioned. Also, pensioners ought to be treated better. As a publicly-owned transportation system, the CNR ought to set a pattern in this field which would be the envy of the so-called free enterprise system. I urge the minister to act in the three areas I have mentioned.

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I think it is safe to assume that members of this House wiser than I am might have been content, in contributing to this debate, to say, "I agree with what was said this afternoon by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher)." He represents a neighbouring riding, and I do not think the case with respect to rail passenger service in southwestern Ontario has been more effectively or forcibly put by anyone than it was by that hon. member this afternoon.

I am not indulging in wishful thinking when I say to the minister that in the part of the world which I represent, rail passenger service is not a partisan issue. It is not only Conservatives who ride the rails. Passengers include those who support the NDP and the Liberal Party. I think it is safe to say that the members of all parties representing that part of Ontario have spoken with one voice.

When I came to this House in January, I do not think I was so naïve, as a new member, as to think that the major problems of my constituency would be solved immediately. I confess I was naïve enough to think that I would be given the opportunity to discuss these problems in the House. I must confess, further, that I and many other members were disappointed in this regard. I therefore hope to find some sympathy in this House for my feeling of frustration. That frustration was spoken of so well this afternoon by the hon. member for Bruce, as we have been given little or no opportunity to discuss rail transportation in this House since last January. Those of us who are concerned about this important issue have been allotted a minimal amount of time in the standing committee, and in the daily question period to raise this issue. In the question period the answers or, more accurately, non-answers of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) have only added to our dilemma.

The hon. member for Bruce spoke of his feelings of frustration and hopelessness. I hope I do not sound as pessimistic as he did. Perhaps his pessimism was induced by the fact that he has been here longer than I have and knows the minister better than I do. The frustration I voice is also the reflection of the feelings of three pertinent groups in my area. These are, first, the rail passengers; at least, those who were at one time rail passengers and would like to become once more rail passengers. The second group consists of the employees of the railways, and the third group for whom little is said is the property owners' group through whose property railway rights-of-way run. This group includes other occupants of such property.

If I may speak about the first group, the railway passengers, let me point out that the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications was tabled in this House on June 21, 1972. It was a unanimous report. I attended meetings in Stratford. There were other meetings all over western Ontario. I remember very well that those who presented briefs or gave evidence usually prefaced their remarks by saying, "We do not think you can do much, but . . . On several occasions they were interrupted by the chairman or acting chairman as the case may be, who said, "We know what you have gone through. You have had meetings with the railways; they have shown a great deal of sympathy and have protested that they will make every effort to improve the situation, but then they have forgotten about you."

These people had met with the Canadian Transport Commission and again had been shown the same sympathy. They had been given excellent heavings, but then they had been forgotten. So when the members of this House making up that committee came to Stratford and called witnesses, the almost invariable response was, "We don't know why we are here, because we have gone through all this before." The committee members said, honourably and sincerely, "You are wrong. We are present to hear you and this is one time when something will be done." I see members of this House present tonight who sat on that committee. I know they are honourable men who meant what they said.

The committee's report was unanimous. It was published as a result of public hearings in western Ontario which had been called for the purpose of eliciting representations on the adequacy or inadequacy of passenger service in that area. It received 55 briefs and heard 68 witnesses. The committee was presented with petitions, letters and mail-in coupons containing several thousand names asking for restoration or continuance of rail passenger service in the southwestern Ontario region.

Despite those these hearings the CTC discontinued rail passenger service in the area effective November 1. At the time of discontinuance the Canadian Transport Commission assumed, and the residents of the area were so informed, that public transportation in forms other than rail would be provided. After about two years, the evidence presented to the committee indicated that there was widespread dissatisfaction with the type of passenger service then provided.

The bus service provided in the area did not constitute a satisfactory alternate public transportation service, nor did any other system of transportation solve the transportation problems of the public. The committee therefore recommended, among other things, first that all rail passenger services which were discontinued on November 1, 1970, should be re-established immediately and, second, that a moratorium should be placed on all pending passenger train discontinuance applications in Canada. The committee also recommended—and this recommendation was as important as the other two—that a joint study group composed of representatives of federal, provincial and municipal officials should be formed. In other words, it recommended that a trilevel study be established immediately, all of which was well put this afternoon by the hon. member for Bruce. This study was to determine a minimum rail passenger network as defined in relationship to the most efficient and adequate transportation system making the best use of all modes of transportation at the lowest possible total cost.

What happened? As the House well knows, members have been speaking on the subject, and speaking well, for a number of months. Certainly prior to the election of last October my predecessor representing my constituency along with many members of the House acted as spokesmen for the area—but to no avail. I do not think the minister has appreciated the reaction of the community. Those who represent the area no longer measure their mail in numbers of letters; they weigh it. I am sorry that I did not bring my file. I am sure my mail bag is no bigger or smaller than that of other members representing the area. I wish to quote from several letters to show the concern of my constituents. I will not bore the minister with reading all of them. I will read excerpts. First may I read part of letter sent by a senior citizen who is a constituent in Listowel, Ontario. He said, in part:

A great many residents here would appreciate it very much if you, as a member of parliament, could look into it and do something to improve our situation.

The second letter comes from Mitchell, Ontario. It says in part:

This service was hard-earned and paid for by our forefathers.

● (2100)

The following letter was received from the city of Stratford:

Please inquire into what has happened to the recommendations made by the Standing Committee on Transportation in the House of Commons.

The following is from the town of Palmerston:

We are not asking for something that is not our right, or that we should not have. Therefore, why can't we have it? Your support is now requested to keep this concern before the government until action is gained.

The next is from the town of Listowel:

If MP's had to put up with all that . . .

This was written after describing the horrendous situation in getting from point A to point B.

. . . it would certainly be the first motion to come up—It seems, if you don't live in one of the major cities, or want to drive your car, one is just supposed to stay at home.

The next is from a rural area outside Listowel, in Perth county:

Last year my doctor made an appointment for me to attend the cancer clinic in Victoria Hospital, London. I found out there wasn't train or bus service to London so changed my appointment to Wingham and couldn't get there either—I am sure there are hundreds of people having the same experiences.

What has been the reaction of the Minister of Transport and the Canadian Transport Commission? Apparently there is a Canadian Transport Commission study. The standing committee recommended a trilevel study. The Midwestern Development Corporation recommended a trilevel study. Many members of this House did the same. We have a study by the Canadian Transport Commission: right off the bat, that is suspect. In my opinion, the CTC is part and parcel of a deliberate attempt to downgrade rail service in Canada. In any event, this CTC study, which has not been published although it was supposed to be some time ago, was to involve local consultation. I personally checked with four of my colleagues who represent constituencies in this area. Neither I nor they could find one local municipal official who was consulted. We cannot find anyone who was ever consulted. If members, not only on this side of the House but in all parties, from this part of Ontario are skeptical, I think it is with good reason.

This past spring representatives of the Midwestern Development Corporation came to Ottawa to meet with the minister. Circumstances prevented his meeting them, but they met with his parliamentary secretary. When I suggested that this was mere window-dressing the parliamentary secretary was almost at a loss for words. This astonished me. The parliamentary secretary took great umbrage at the fact that I would suggest this was just another bit of window-dressing for the Minister of Transport.

The second group of people for whom I should like to make a plea are the railroad employees. I suggest to the minister that the railway is engaged in a deliberate attempt to downgrade roadbeds and rights-of-way. The result is that many members of the operating union of the CNR are fearful for their lives. I do not want to be an alarmist, but I am consulted almost every week by members of the union safety committee. Incidents such as falling trees and almost impossible visibility are now the rule rather than the exception on certain lines north of the city of Stratford and, indeed, lines that go into the constituency of the hon. member for Bruce. Roadbeds are so poor that reduced speeds are also the rule rather than the exception. In an article in the June 21, 1972, edition of the London Free Press on the condition of the roadbed, the hon. member for Bruce was quoted as saying:

. . . claims that the rail lines in the area are in poor repair and unsuitable for service are unfounded.

"The lines are not nearly in as bad a shape as some people think" he told the committee. "I see freight trains going over them every day."

That may very well have been true in June of 1972. I have no knowledge of the situation at that time. However, I wish the hon. member were in the House now to update his report. Remember, that was 16 months ago. On the basis of honest and sincere evidence given to me by the safety committee of the railway union in that area, I suggest these men are operating trains in fear.

The final group for which I wish to speak are those people through whose property the railways have a right-of-way. It is very easy to go on at great length about weeds, fences, and so on. Rather than do that, I wish to give the House one example. It would serve no purpose to name the railway or the specific location, because the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) have my complete file on this. Their file is as current as mine as of a week ago. This is a situation that has arisen in two rural townships. The best way to summarize it would be to paraphrase a letter from the fieldman of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture reporting to members of the federation with regard to having a certain situation remedied in the area.

Between June 1 and June 6 of 1973, 11 requisitions for fence repairs were forwarded to the railway. Apparently this is how you initiate fence repairs when it is the railway's fence: a farmer sends a requisition to a district office, rather than the railway initiating repairs on its own. On June 22 and 25, the fieldman of the Federation of Agriculture talked personally to the district engineer of the railway at the regional office. The engineer indicated he hoped to have something definite before the end of July. On June 29, after a meeting of the directors of the Federation of Agriculture, the fieldman wrote the district engineer asking that definite action be taken prior to July 15. A copy of his letter was sent to me. This was the first time I was made aware of the problem.

On July 9 and 17 I wrote to the Hon. Edgar J. Benson, president of the Canadian Transport Commission, Ottawa, asking for assurance that action would be taken without delay. On July 30 the district engineer of the Canadian Transport Commission in Toronto contacted the federation and obtained the names and addresses of the farmers affected. Remember, this was two months after the requisition had been forwarded. The district engineer of the Canadian Transport Commission is quoted as having said he would forward the recommendations to Ottawa and action would likely be immediate.

On August 10 more requisitions were forwarded to Ottawa. On August 22 the assistant director of the Federation of Agriculture wrote Mr. J. D. Beeton, secretary of the Railway Transportation Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission following a telephone conversation with the railway in Toronto. In this conversation it was stated it might take two months to get the money allocated as it had to be approved by a board in Montreal. Remember, this is a fence in the country which affects 11 farmers.

The letter to Mr. Beeton suggested the railway was dragging its feet. It stated the farmers would appreciate any help that could be given. A copy of this letter was also sent to me, and I again wrote to the Canadian Transport Commission. This takes us to the end of August. On September 12 I wrote a third letter to the Hon. Edgar J. Benson asking for immediate action. I raised this matter in the House of Commons on September 21 by way of a question to the Minister of Agriculture, in the absence of the Minister of Transport. On September 24 I received a letter from Mr. Benson acknowledging my letter of September 12. He indicated that the transport committee of this commission had taken up the matter with the railway. The last paragraph is interesting. I quote:

● (2110)

I thought you should know your representations have not escaped our attention in spite of the period of time which has elapsed since you first brought this matter to my attention. I will keep you informed as to developments.

This takes us almost to the end of September when I wrote to the Minister of Agriculture, with a copy to the Minister of Transport, sending him my complete file on this matter. In the last two or three weeks I have received an acknowledgment from the Minister of Agriculture and another letter from an assistant to the Minister of Transport acknowledging receipt of the correspondence. I received a further letter from the Federation of Agriculture in Toronto, at least a copy of a letter to the Transport Commission dated October 12, indicating that the work had not been started. Then I received a letter on Friday from the secretary of the CTC indicating that the work had been done. Which of these two letters is accurate, I do not know.

I cite this correspondence to show that if there is frustration and anger in southwestern Ontario, it is justified. This anger and frustration is not partisan, as was so well shown by the hon. member for Bruce. I suggest that the railways and the CTC are deliberately avoiding their responsibilities. No doubt they intend, as they did in the case of passengers and mail, to downgrade the service until the business is lost. No doubt they will apply for abandonment.

The Minister of Transport seems content to allow the present course of events to continue even in the face of a unanimous recommendation by the standing committee, in the face of the economics of the situation and in the face of the economics of the situation and in the face of common sense. I can only conclude that the situation in southwestern Ontario is simply a penalty for those ridings which return members who are not members of the Liberal Party, the only exception being the hon. member for Bruce who is trapped in a net because he is surrounded on two sides by water and on two sides by Tories. Thus he is in the same position as we are. It is a sad commentary on the just society.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few comments on the CNR financing bill which deals especially with the financial aspects of the CNR and Air Canada, the two largest carriers in their class in the country. The mere fact that no public audit has been presented to the House of Commons dealing with the financial aspect of the affairs of these companies, together with the failure of the government to refer the annual reports to the transport committee, indicates that all is not well in the transportation field as far as these publicly-owned carriers are concerned.

My riding, being highly rural with a relatively static population, is not faced with many of the problems such as urban sprawl, transportation and housing which confront metropolitan areas, but it is vitally interested in the retention of an adequate rail system and in the policy concerning branch line abandonment. Like the rest of western Canada, the area is heavily dependent upon grain as the main agricultural crop, the production of wheat complementing the grain growing. This means that should the transportation system be further reduced, it would likely result in a corresponding reduction in the productivity of the area.

As far as my constituency is concerned, proposals for branch line abandonment must be considered together with the so-called grain rationalization proposals affecting local elevators; how many would remain in operation, where they would be situated, and what is to be their capacity. Events of the last few months have shown that the world is faced with food scarcities and seems to have narrowly escaped a major food shortage. This has a strong bearing on railway transportation problems in the west.

The relatively rapid increase in the cost of diesel fuel, and the prospect of further substantial increases in the months and years ahead, bring into focus the interaction of various transportation systems and in particular the relative competitive ability of the trucking industry and the railways. I have been informed by reliable railway authorities that the resistance offered by a steel wheel on a steel rail is only half that of the rubber tire on tarmac. This may not be significant in itself, but it means that in terms of the energy the railway is in theory twice as efficient as highway transport. With the price of energy rising, this factor should considerably enhance the competitive position of the railways and may reverse to some extent the trend to move goods by highway rather than by rail.

I turn now to an issue which was well brought out at the recent conference between the western premiers and the federal government in Calgary, namely, that the railways have consistently refused to publish details of their earnings and costs in the various regions of Canada. In 1968, after my election here, I asked the parliamentary library to undertake a small research project along these lines. The librarian detailed to do this work stated after a few days that there was absolutely no information of any authenticity available with regard to the operations of the two railways—no idea what their costs were in the west or in any other part of Canada relative to the income they earned there. Unless this information is furnished there can be no enlightened discussion about grain freight rates or freight rates affecting secondary industries in the west.

It has always been the opinion of many people that the railways made money in western Canada. But the companies have consistently claimed that freight rates for western agricultural commodities, particularly basic agricultural products and resource products, have been too low. Not until details are made available shall we be able to make any reasonable assessment as to how badly off, or how well off, the railways are in the west. Certainly a comparison between some of the freight rates which particularly affect western Canada, for example, from Montreal to the central prairies, as against Montreal to Vancouver, throws considerable doubt upon the validity of the case made by the railways.

The western conference was preoccupied with some of these transportation questions. When answers are supplied, perhaps we can make progress. Appendix II of the transportation paper presented by the government to the western conference indicates that from 1968 to 1972 the so-called ton-mile of originating rail traffic increased in the west at a rate much greater than the national average, and now makes up more than 50 per cent of the national average. In 1968 the percentage originating in the west was less than 50—about 45 per cent. Westerners who attended the Calgary conference were dismayed by the lack of interest taken by the government in the transportation issue or, at least, by its inability to come forward with any solutions. All four western provinces seemed to regard the issue as one which primarily involved the freight rate structure, a structure which has not basically changed since the railways' task was primarily to move raw materials out of and manufactured goods into the west. Furthermore there were inequities in that governments, particularly the federal government, paid varying amounts of the cost of different modes of transportation. They contended that railways users pay the highest portion of these costs.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

• (2120)

The National Transportation Act of 1967 relies on carrier competition to control rates. The lack of competition in certain regions in the west gives the railways significant monopolies and the railways seem to set the highest possible rate. Numerous examples were given where the rail rate to a northern town would be immediately halved once the highway reached the town. It seemed important to the premiers that there be a full disclosure of the costs of all modes of transportation, and that a rate-setting procedure be established which would include a federal contribution toward costs comparable to that provided other modes of transportation.

A counter-proposal by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) at that meeting to the effect that the examination of rate-setting by the CTC of different commodities could and should be speeded up was about the only counter-proposal that I could detect. He pointed with great pride to the fact that the CTC had ordered the railways to reduce the rate on rapeseed meal exported out of western Canada. To the cynical, it should be pointed out that normally rapeseed oil is the most valuable product of rapeseed and that the meal is of considerably less value. But at that time eastern Canada was suffering from an animal feed shortage and the rapeseed meal, not normally a particularly attactive feeding supplement, was needed badly here in the east.

I suspect that had the feed grain shortage not arisen there would not have been any reduction in the tariff on rapeseed meal. Had the CTC been genuinely interested they would have reduced the freight on the oil, because it is well recognized by western crushers that the freight rate structure makes it cheaper to ship rapeseed to the crushers in the east than to ship the oil.

The proposal to review the freight rate structure commodity by commodity is long and tedious and each decision is almost out of date by the time it is made. The railway should be obliged to disclose its costs and revenues by regions. I think that western Canada, being a railway monopoly area, should have situated in it a substantial degree of autonomy in management and economic decisions. The present situation whereby the CNR runs the whole of the country from Montreal means automatic distrust and some poor decisions. Until there is more input into the railway management by people who live in the prairie regions, there will be continuing problems. At this western conference the bringing forward of Premier Lougheed's equitable pricing technique showed that the westerners did have productive ideas and thoughtful solutions.

I would like to discuss for a few minutes regional airlines and the service that is given to the smaller communities in the west. The CTC is allowing TransAir to terminate air service to the town of Dauphin. The town of Dauphin has been served by an airline since after the war, when the forerunner of the present CP Air established a line from Winnipeg to Dauphin to The Pas. This seemed eminently successful and provided a much needed service. But as time went on this forerunner of CP Air was dropped and TransAir took over. The growth of traffic to northern Manitoba reached the position where TransAir stopped direct flights from Dauphin to The Pas and attempted to work a schedule into Brandon and Yorkton and eastern Saskatchewan. This has never been entirely satisfactory and frequent delays, late arrival of planes or no planes at all at times, and no service on weekends, all contributed to damage the reputation of reliability that would have been necessary to make the airline route a viable enterprise.

The approval on October 1 by the CTC of the application of TransAir to drop their Dauphin run has set back the possibility of this community having a reliable air outlet. It is my understanding that in 1966, when the government declared a regional air policy, it was recognized that regional airlines would at times be flying routes on which they would be losing money, but they were to be compensated by the allocation of enough profitable lines to allow them to make a reasonable profit and provide service.

The departure of TransAir from my community means that 60,000 people live more than 100 miles, and many more than 200 and 300 miles, from an airport with scheduled flights. These people pay their share of taxes, and we in Canada support various transportation systems, including Air Canada, with massive sums of money paid out of the federal treasury. We all recognize that this bill is designed to allow Air Canada to purchase aircraft ultimately at the taxpayers' expense, and the cost does not amount to a few hundred thousand dollars but to hundreds of millions of dollars. If the country at large is going to have a subsidized air service, then small communities should have some share and some reasonable service for this public largesse.

The CTC should take into consideration the fact that regional air carriers must have enough profitable lines to carry some unprofitable ones, or there should be some direct assistance given to airlines to maintain service in rural areas. The subsidy method, I understand, has been used to help regional airlines in Quebec and the Maritimes to service some communities. A similar attitude should prevail in the west in some cases. Air service to Dauphin and Brandon and the rest of western Manitoba has been poor. I believe this can also be said of Yorkton and other parts of eastern Saskatchewan. Recognition of their problem is past overdue and immediate action is necessary if the people who live in large sections of rural western Manitoba, and perhaps eastern Saskatchewan, are to have some reasonable air service. Although these people may be scattered, in total they do represent many hundreds of thousands.

I believe that the regional air policy has been productive. I think other airlines that have taken over Air Canada runs are providing good service. Air transport seems to lend itself to competition among many small companies, although the safety factors must be controlled. In essence, I think the government must look at all the services that are supplied to the regions of this country and ensure that all areas receive reasonable service, so that people do not find themselves hundreds of miles from an airport that has a scheduled passenger service.

● (2130)

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, the few remarks I wish to make tonight will be fairly brief, indeed I believe I could deal within a short time with the few points I would like to make.

Since the beginning of this debate, a good many members have dealt with Canadian Pacific management and said one could be proud of it. I noticed also the numerous discrepancies in this House whenever we discuss bills on the means of financing the Canadian National Railways.

On the one hand capitalists in this House say: How is it that the CNR cannot be administered as well as the CPR? They answer: CNR management is inefficient. Let us put that company in the hands of private corporations which will make them produce to the benefit of all Canadians. On the other hand, socialists invariably say that we should at all costs nationalize the Canadian Pacific Railway because they are making profits. That a private company should make profits and even succeed in extinguishing their debts, contrarily to the CNR, that makes no sense.

There is obviously an element of truth on both sides. Undoubtedly, there are many reasons for deep reforms in that field, but beyond great perturbation, there is a daily fact one cannot ignore, it is that of experience. As a matter of fact, in the public as a whole, whose opinion we all reflect in this House, there is a general dissatisfaction with the services provided by either railway company. Railway employees on the whole are dissatisfied with their working conditions and the strike and recent strike threats speak volumes on that. People will say that the unions will settle their problems eventually. Yes, but after how many hardships, how many weeks and months of negotiations, to get finally less than half of what was hoped for.

I said that it was in the ordinary everyday relationships between an employee and railway companies that we have succeeded in forming a fairly accurate opinion about the quality of the service or of the management.

A few years ago, the area which I have represented in the House of Commons for nearly six years lost a passenger train service which we then considered as quite adequate, following an epic struggle involving private citizens, groups and associations, as well as unions.

As a matter of fact, we were trying to obtain service improvements when the Canadian National Railways announced its unilateral decision to abolish the service given by the passenger train known as the "Ocean Limited", that is to remove it from the Moncton-Edmunston-Montreal line in order that it may go to Montreal via Campbellton. The service which has since replaced it is far from satisfactory, so that it is unthinkable for me, for instance, as a member of Parliament, to use it to get to my riding or to return to the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, I still keep the pass given by authority of the Canadian Parliament to senators and members of Parliament, in case of a very urgent situation which would prevent me from using other means of transport. I have no intention of using this pass and I have used it only once, I think, since the removal of the "Ocean Limited", in particularly trying circumstances. I do not intend to use it again and keep it strictly for my souvenir album.

If, in the future, I have to use again the CN passenger trains I will pay cash without claiming any reimbursement. I must confess that when I get angry about the CNR

I sometimes think of burning this pass as a protest against their insulting service or their lack of service in certain cases.

The city of Edmundston, which is the chief town of the Madawaska-Victoria riding is the center of CN operations for northwestern New Brunswick. This is only logical. It is also more than that because Edmundston is the operations center for most of the railway line between Moncton and Lévis, over several hundred miles.

Edmundston is a key location for the CNR. For years, many people have found employment there but they have been concerned for several years by the centralization of services and certain operations in Moncton where a true administrative empire is being established. I am also worried about this decline which may be compared to a sacrifice on the altar of technology.

If it is truly impossible to repatriate the many jobs lost in the name of progress to the benefit of bigger centres, the railway could at least modernize its facilities in this city and spend there a small portion of the hundreds of millions of dollars allowed almost yearly by the government. A small amount is spent every year but very little. For example, the time has come to replace the dilapidated old buildings which are housing certain services of the marshalling yard, repair workshops, etc.

Rightly so, the city of Edmundston is proud to be the capital of the Madawaska republic but it is afflicted by a blemish which partly soils its charm.

When going along, for example, St-François St., we cannot miss behind a not overly old station as well as warehouses also not too old, it is true, wooden buildings which seem to be on the verge of collapsing at the slightest breeze.

Such is my personal reaction each time I go in there and I am always in a hurry go get out. However, the CNR should understand me well and I know that my speeches are read and that the CNR authorities always listen carefully when I speak about them in this House or in committee. I do not mean that they always answer my prayers, but at least they hear me.

I do not want those old buildings to be demolished and the services and jobs they lodge to be transferred elsewhere. Far from me this thought. I would like, as do the people who have to work there, to see modern facilities, warm in winter, comfortable in summer, some additions to the shops and the creation of new jobs.

With all due respect to the working class across this country, the kind of workmen who are found in Madawaska-Victoria and in Edmundston are a separate group, very hard-working, earnest, busy, qualified and willing to progress in every field. It was said again and again and I am proud to repeat it on every possible occasion: the greatest resource of my constituency is its human capital and the corporations that come to take advantage of this resource are wise including many businesses that are encouraged by the financial assistance program of the federal department of Regional Economic Expansion, businesses that later become customers for our railway companies and contribute to their development. I suggest that in turn, these railway companies should take more initiative.

[Mr. Corbin.]

I feel, Mr. Speaker, to deal with another aspect of the problem, that members of parliament and the leaders of the Canadian National are usually far from one another in their consultations and that they never meet. It is always the same old story. One day, the CN authorities announce a decision without, on most occasions, consulting municipal, provincial or federal authorities, Chambers of commerce or the management of regional development companies.

This results in a general outcry when the announcement is made. They all feel frustrated as a result of unilateral decisions that affect the economic conditions of a whole region. They then shower abuse on one another, they express their dissatisfaction. And yet, the CN should understand that the people's representatives, at all levels in a given area, must also fulfil a mandate, are responsible and deserve our confidence before so many decisions are taken. Oh, they would say, the CNR could never make the decision. There would be too much political interference. This, Mr. Speaker, could always be a possibility. But anything likely to improve relations between the representatives of the people and the railway companies in Canada,—I specially think of the Canadian National Railways—would be worth testing. This is a question of mutual confidence. I, for one who at one time strongly criticized the CNR, have the impression at times that the future could be more readily based on true dialogue and not the type or irreversible, unilateral action which we all witnessed in the past.

● (2140)

What is stopping that company in each riding or group or ridings from gathering members of parliament from time to time, that is those who want to know about the operations of railway companies, to talk to them about their projects, their needs, their problems in labour relations?

Quite impressive amounts from the public point of view, and that includes us all, are being spent in the form of advertising of all kinds but little case seems to be made of members of parliament in their capacity as representatives of the people. The CNR seems to be satisfied to force members of parliament to dig out the facts as best they can in the House through questions put to the minister responsible for it, through questions on the order paper that can be easily avoided under various pretexts, through examination in committee where the game we feel is not so much to inform or instruct hon. members but to hide the most facts possible.

If that continues, Mr. Speaker, the representatives of the people might react in a surprising way one of these days and the citizens of this country could wake up one morning to hear the newscaster with the other Crown corporation—the one which has to do with broadcasting—say that the night before the House of Commons refused to grant the CNR the votes they were requesting. This is of course a hypothetical situation that should in no way be interpreted as a threat. But I feel that after nearly six years in this House of Commons there is a feeling of frustration on all sides such that that could well happen.

Mr. Speaker, I could continue on but for brevity's sake, I join in my mind my intervention tonight with all those that I have made previously and which make up a file of claims a number of which have yet to be resolved satisfactorily by the Canadian National Railways.

I appeal to the common sense of the CNR authorities to deal in a more open frame of mind with the representatives of the people. I urge them to trust us more than they did in the past. While I am ready on my part, to co-operate, to pace up and down, as they say, would the CNR authorities be content to sit back behind the legislative wall that created it?

Criticism has its merits, Mr. Speaker, but it is understood that I am not here to praise the CNR. I stand when I have something to say, and that is what I had to say about this railway company.

However, I would not want to return to my seat before quoting from the last number of Tip & Topics, a publication of the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission. I quote in English a brief passage which follows an additional grant for the transportation of goods from the Atlantic region to western Canada, up to Lévis. The quotation is as follows:

[English]

The Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission welcomes this additional assistance as a very positive step to improve the competitive position of Atlantic manufacturers and producers in the markets of Canada west of the Atlantic region.

[Translation]

This is good, this is certainly encouraging for the government and appreciated by the citizens of the Atlantic region. Finally I should like to join my congratulations to those expressed in the news report and thank the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) specially for the prompt attention he gave to the problems of the Atlantic region.

[English]

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I suppose that every constituency represented by members of this House has something which is unique to it in respect of its needs as they apply to government services. Perhaps the most significant, or at least one of the three most significant needs of Carleton-Charlotte are the transportation requirements of the area. Transportation is the lifeblood of the industry which exists there, whether it be agriculture, lumber, the fisheries or manufacturing. The products of these industries is destined for markets in the main outside the confines of the constituency. Therefore, transportation becomes perhaps the single most important item for the economic prosperity of the area.

The railway company as it is presently serving the area leaves a great deal to be desired. There is no question that the subsidies which were mentioned by the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) are of help. The principle of subsidies for the railways of this nation has been substantiated in virtually every area of Canada. I do not think members of the House or members of this nation should consider that the Atlantic area is the only one which requires subsidies. It was with this in mind, and because of conversations I have over the years, that I placed on the order paper some questions with respect to the assistance given by the Government of Canada to the transportation system of this nation.

● (2150)

The information did not come to me in the fashion in which I asked for it, nevertheless it presented a picture which gave some detail although not sufficient. It showed that in 1970-71 assistance under the Maritime Freight Rates Act for the Atlantic region amounted to $16,800,000, in round figures, in 1971-72 to $20,049,000, and in 1972-73 to $20,573,000.

The information also showed that grants for various branch lines in 1970 amounted to $10,800,000, in 1971 to $22,900,000, and in 1972 to $22,800,000. These went to the Prairies area. I am not critical of any grants which might be paid to any area of Canada, but on occasion people have said to me, "You have the Maritime Freight Rates Act which gives you assistance from the Government of Canada which other areas do not get." What I want to make abundantly clear to the House is that up to July 31, 1973, assistance to various regions of Canada, outside the provisions of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, amounted to $105,829,000 from the federal treasury. So let us not delude ourselves into thinking that it is a unique situation in the Atlantic area so far as subsidies are concerned. It is a totally national situation.

Since land, sea and air facets of transportation are so vital to my area, I tried to get information pertaining to the costs and the programs of government. To give an example, I put a question on the order paper asking for the profitability of the railroads, according to their statements, on a provincial or zone arrangement. The answer was to the effect that neither the CPR or CNR kept regional, provincial or zone statements of profit and loss. This immediately presented me with a problem and a question. How can a government pay a subsidy to any part of the railroad structure in this country if that railroad does not produce figures of profit and loss as they relate to the area concerned for which the subsidy is paid? In our Department of Transport do we have a group of blank cheques which we sign on request from the railroads?

Is this the way it is done? It certainly cannot be based on any picture of profit and loss because that is not available from the CPR and the CNR. My question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) at this moment in time is: How do you define a need for a subsidy in any area? How do you justify payment of a subsidy if the railroads do not have their profit and loss figures broken down? The Department of Transport says these figures are not broken down. This puts the Minister of Transport and those agencies responsible to him in a virtually incredible position, and makes him responsible for wanton expenditures without justification by statistical data.

Of course, periodically we do have the ultimatum from our rail system to this effect: If we do not get more subsidies we will raise the rates on manufactured goods going to the prairies. In that case, do we just knuckle under and pay? According to the answer I got, that could be the case. The idiosyncrasies of the rail structure are acting to the detriment of the public of Canada. It is the responsibility of the Minister of Transport to sort this out.

I had the responsibility and the privilege to be a member of a committee in the province of New Brunswick which dealt with railroads and transportation for Canadians. There was no way we would get facts and figures from the railroad in question so that we could negotiate in good faith or intelligently with respect to retaining or reducing the increases in the rate structure being proposed.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): There was the audited report.

Mr. McCain: The audited report did not have it, although there must be a breakdown in there somewhere. But the parliamentary secretary should not quarrel. The answer I received came from the minister. He is responsible for the answer to question No. 2549 which I placed on the order paper on July 20, 1973. The answer reached my office on October 16, 1973, and was that "neither railway compiles profit or loss statements on a regional basis." But, Mr. Speaker, when a railroad wants to abandon a line it has facts and figures to show that the line does not pay. It has facts to show it loses so much and it itemizes the loss. And when it wants to remove passenger service on a particular line it itemizes the loss. Somewhere the CNR has zone, regional and provincial figures, and I believe we should get them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This seems a convenient time to call it ten o'clock.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: In asking the House leader the business for tomorrow, may I compliment the government on having eight ministers here for the entire evening. The reason for such activity completely escapes us.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I want to tell my hon. friend that the reason eight ministers are here tonight is to meet the formidable new House leader for the Conservative Party.

Tomorrow we will continue with this item, followed by the Customs Act.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order No. 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—REGIONAL PAY INEQUITIES—REASONS FOR NOT APPLYING SAME PRINCIPLE TO MEMBERS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) whether, in view of his attitude toward wage parity or equity for federal public servants, he was going to be consistent and use similar reasoning for paying members of parliament. The best answer he could give me was that members of parliament are not part of a collective bargaining process, as if we did not know that. And if we were, Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not believe that many of us would want the President of the Treasury Board as our spokesman because, with all deference, his antediluvian attitude in some matters causes me to wonder whether some day he will be dragged, kicking and screaming, into the twentieth century.

● (2200)

We are dealing tonight with thousands of nurses under federal jurisdiction who are aggrieved by the arbitral award brought forward by the public service arbitration tribunal. As a result, they are making their feelings known across the nation this evening and are manifesting those feelings in various ways. In Halifax, at the Camphill hospital, the operating room and psychiatric ward are affected. Some wards are doubled up and in many cases patients have been sent home. Similar conditions prevail in Whitehorse, at the Shaughnessy hospital in Vancouver, Deer Lodge in Winnipeg, in Edmonton, and so on across the nation.

In addition, to underline the seriousness of the situation, public health nurses are joining the protest and according to my information are booking in sick in places such as Prince Albert, Edmonton, Calgary, Halifax and Sydney, Nova Scotia, and reports are starting to come in from registered nurses. This government now has a situation on its hands that is affecting the care of veterans. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what class of people in this nation is more deserving of respect, of gratitude and of the highest standards of hospital care and treatment than veterans?

The hon. members for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) have been bringing the situation before the House, so the government cannot say it did not have warning. In the past, the hon. members for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), and St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) have all consistently prodded this government about its attitude toward regional wage parity. On occasion I have asked the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) about it, as has the hon. member for St. John's East. This government has been given plenty of reminders about its inequitable policies.

Let us consider a typical statement of government policy in this regard. I should like to read a document that is quite literally on its way to many members of parliament. It is a petition put out by the nurses who in their opinion are aggrieved by government policy. It reads:

> In view of the outcome of the recent federal nurses arbitration tribunal in which Treasury Board originally tried to suppress information of vital concern to the nurses and then failed to implement its own policy as stated by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board on April 17, 1972, and by the President of the Treasury Board on October 12, 1971 . . .
>
> The nurses as citizens and public servants feel it is their responsibility to submit a vote of non-confidence in the Liberal government.

Unfortunately, they can only do this symbolically, but it gives some indication of the depth of their feelings about the way they have been treated. There are sections of the Public Service Staff Relations Act which permit the government to modify its policies with regard to the way nurses are presently treated. Nurses would like to see national wage parity, but failing this they would like to be paid as well as their provincial counterparts.

Briefly, some of the worst areas are these: the maritimes, where nurses at the maximum level are about $570 behind; Quebec, where they are $1,491 behind; Alberta, $556 behind; Manitoba, $381 behind; and British Columbia, where they are $426 behind the maximum level. In Nova Scotia, public health nurses are below their provincial counterparts by at least $1,000. Also, the federal government has the worst vacation arrangements because their nurses get only four weeks vacation after ten years of service, whilst most provinces give four weeks after five years of service.

In the Treasury Board's arbitration brief which was submitted in relation to this particular group of nurses, I believe it was stated that as a nationwide employer it was essential that the government's policy on pay benefits take into account the rates of pay and patterns of benefits applying to workers in related employment in the private sector. It is very obvious that this is not the case, Mr. Speaker, and that the government has not in fact lived up to this policy.

I realize, as does our party, that it is not realistic to think that wage inequities can be corrected overnight, but we can surely make a beginning. Our national economy should accept the philosophy of equal pay for equal work, which could be carried out in basic stages. The first step would be immediate acceptance of equal pay increases so that the disparities are not forever increased. Secondly, one could immediately commence upward revisions and gradually phase out inequities on a regional basis over an appropriate period of time.

I suggest again, with deference, that for a change the government should practice what it preaches. The minister knows very well that the present position regarding nurses is not equitable. I earnestly ask the minister to take steps to give nurses under federal jurisdiction a better deal as a step toward more equitable regional pay in the public service generally.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Answering the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), Mr. Speaker, may I say that I hoped he might have said other things pertaining to nurses. For example, he could also have spoken about holidays and other fringe benefits. I say that from a personal point of view, with due respect.

If I may more directly answer his question, let me say the following. As the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) has said on more than one occasion, the government, as employer, is committed to paying rates which are equitable and competitive with rates being paid outside the public service for similar occupations. Where the outside pay data for occupational groups indicate significant variations from the Canadian average, and where the area of recruitment and the mobility of employees within the public service is limited, the government, as employer, considers it appropriate to pay regional and not national rates of pay.

Paying national rates of pay in such circumstances would only serve to overpay employees in some regions and to underpay employees in other regions in relation to the rates of pay prevailing in those regions, neither of which situation, from the employer's point of view, is desirable or viable.

With reference to the rates of pay for hon. members of this House, the Beaupré committee set up to make recommendations to the government did not, it will be remembered, recommend regional rates for members of parliament.

● (2210)

[Translation]

AIRPORTS—MIRABEL—EXPROPRIATION PROCEDURE—DISPARITY IN OFFERS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on July 5, I directed to the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) the following question:

Mr. Speaker, since there are disparities or differences in prices for those who are expropriated, . . .

depending on the airports and for pieces of land of equal value . . .

. . . can the minister ensure the House that he will carry on an investigation with the officials responsible for the expropriations . . .

Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the House the significant differences which exist between the prices paid to the land owners who have been expropriated to make room for the Mirabel Airport in Sainte-Scholastique and those paid for similar purposes at Pickering, in Ontario. I wish to point out, Mr. Speaker, the difference between the prices that officials offer to pay in relation with expropriations for the construction of both airports and even to the expropriated owners at the same airport location. The last figures we got give a good idea of the extent of the problem.

As the owners at Sainte-Scholastique receive on an average $200 per arpent—or acre—compared with $2,200 per acre to the expropriated owners at Pickering; as $3,000 are given to all former owners in compensation for the relocation when nothing is given to the owners at Sainte-Scholastique and as an annual rent of $2,000 is required from the former owners at Sainte-Scholastique compared with $1 a year plus taxes from the former owners at Pickering and as 10 per cent per acre above the evaluation price of $2,200 per acre is given at the time of purchase to the expropriated owners at Pickering as a readjustment for the cost of living when nothing at all is given to the expropriated owners at Sainte-Scholastique, and as an amount of $300 million has been set for the expropriation of the 18,000 acres of land for the construction of the Pickering airport when only $125 million have been set for the purchase of 88,000 acres of land at Sainte-Scholastique, I think it would be wise to study these enormous differences in evaluation.

I fail to understand the difference in the advance paid to the expropriated owners at Sainte-Scholastique and that vary between nothing at all and 100 per cent of the amount in some instances. Then I find difficult to explain why, after four years, some of these expropriated owners did not receive a letter or an offer in writing telling exactly what they will receive for their assets and damages incurred by the obligation to move out.

When I visited the two airport locations I had the impression that many aspects of the situation were the same. Yet there is a big difference in the way the expropriated owners are treated in the two airport locations. The enormous difference means that in Pickering speculation will benefit the expropriated while in Sainte-Scholastique, it will benefit no one. It will only succeed in making the expropriated lose large sums of money, because the difference of amounts paid for identical values is atrocious.

The manner in which the expropriation was done varies greatly between one place and the other. Here are two reasons why: first, the new expropriation act presented a few months after the Sainte-Scholastique expropriation and a letter from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) which assured the expropriated that they would be treated according to the spirit of the legislation; second, the determination of the people in Pickering not to give away their possessions or almost, and how I understand them!

I found out, Mr. Speaker, that expropriation causes less prejudice of all kinds to the farmers of Pickering than to those of Sainte-Scholastique, as far as the value of farms is concerned.

The farmers expropriated at Sainte-Scholastique face many problems which would be too long to list here, but I thought it advisable to inform the House. The loss in value is not taken into account, and those losses are even more detrimental because in Sainte-Scholastique, there are only 88,000 acres to disrupt.

Who knows what tremendous moral pressures and tensions every expropriated farmer was subjected to during the protracted negotiations which, in some cases, have been going on for 4 years.

I ask now, Mr. Speaker, that a special committee be set up in order to put an end to these blatant disparities between the treatment given to the farmers expropriated at Sainte-Scholastique and at Pickering and that justice be done in all cases, so that the former owners who must make room for international airports or for the expansion of international airports will be glad to move, because I think that those airports are necessary.

[English]

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay: (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, land at Mirabel was expropriated in March, 1969, whereas the Pickering expropriation took place in January 1973 under a new expropriation act which became law in July, 1970. Notwithstanding this, in the main the same basic principles for compensation were followed in both expropriations because the new act merely modified the rules for compensation allowed under the old act. In the final analysis market value is the basis for compensation under both acts.

We have stated repeatedly that it is not realistic to compare market values in one area of the country with those in another, particularly at different times and under different conditions. Market values in both cases were established by expert appraisers through the examination and analysis of comparative sales in the open real estate market to establish prices that willing buyers were paying for comparable properties. This then became the compensation base, and it is inconceivable that government agents would resort to intimidation and threats to force owners to accept an amount below fair value. The history of federal expropriations indicate the reverse is true.

Whether or not the Mirabel owners have been treated as generously as those at Pickering is a matter of judgment. Although government administrators attempted, to the best of their ability, to observe the principles of the impending new expropriation act, the very size of the project, coupled with severe operational time limitations, made it difficult at times to interpret the rules of an act which was still in the drafting stage at the time. While the same principles of compensation have been followed in both expropriations, confusion has quite naturally bred discontent and has led to charges of discrimination.

The record shows that all but 28 owner residents at Mirabel paid no rent of any kind for about 21 months, over 1,500 did not pay rent for almost three years, and at least 100 are still not paying rent. Nevertheless, the residents of Pickering were given rent-free occupation for 23 months, and in addition all had the opportunity to receive the full compensation three months after the expropriation, a benefit which could not be afforded the people in Mirabel under the old act.

Due to the confusion I have referred to, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Dubé) have arranged to meet, in November, with representatives of the people at Mirabel to discuss problems. Of course, I am not in a position tonight to prejudge or to announce what the results of that meeting may be.

AGRICULTURE—BRUCELLOSIS—RECOMMENDATIONS FOR CONTROL AND COMPENSATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, on July 13 of this year I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) several questions regarding brucellosis, a disease that is currently plaguing northwestern Saskatchewan. It seems to be concentrated mainly in that part of the country. One of the questions I put to the minister was this. I asked whether he had considered a brief presented to him by a group of farmers in northwestern Saskatchewan, and whether he was yet prepared to implement some of the recommendations contained in it. The answers given by the minister were evasive. His only contribution was to define the word "brucellosis" as "contagious abortion." Second, I asked the minister whether he was prepared to begin adopting a humanitarian approach to farmers who suffer losses when their herds are infected by brucellosis and when he intended to make the necessary decisions to help bring this disease under control. He had no answer to that question.

My main concern now is the necessity for a humanitarian approach to the situation of farmers whose herds of cattle are affected by the disease. In August, after the parliamentary recess had begun, many farmers were up in arms over the handling of this matter and this culminated in a demonstration at Debden, Saskatchewan, during which the federal government attempted to use strongarm methods, including the calling in of the RCMP. Demonstrators shouted that farmers were "fed up with legal robbery". Since August, as a result of various representations made to the government, the situation appears to have stabilized, at least temporarily. This is to the government's credit. It is certainly time this happened because some farmers have been fighting this disease for five years, during which time the approach of the government has been extremely inconsistent. I think it is to the credit of members on this side of the House that the government did finally take notice.

There are still a number of reasons for concern. I am thinking, particularly, of the method of compensation. A couple of farmers in the Debden area find themselves in difficulty because about $30,000 due to them in compensation has been held back. Their herds have been wiped out. They were told that until their premises had been cleaned up, no money would be forthcoming. These farmers are finding it very difficult to get by, and I think at least some part of the compensation should be paid them; perhaps the rest could be held back until the premises had been cleaned.

Another farmer, from Pierceland, Saskatchewan, suffered the loss of his entire herd. He was awarded a considerable sum by way of compensation and he has cleaned his premises to the satisfaction of inspectors. The work has been approved by veterinary inspectors. But no cheque has been sent to him. He is in need of the money; he wants to get back into the cattle business. Again, many farmers feel strongly that spring compensation rates should be higher than fall compensation rates, because the condition of cattle in spring is usually poorer than in the fall even though they may be as valuable.

● (2220)

Thirdly, many famers I have talked to feel that compensation rates should be set at least at 90 per cent of replacement value and that there should also be compensation for calves. This is where the government has been rather inconsistent. Some farmers were paid compensation for calves this year if they were insistent enough; others have not been paid such compensation.

Further, there are many farmers, including Mr. F. M. Clark of Meadow Lake, who are concerned about the taxation status of compensation received for animals affected by bangs. I did try to obtain some information on this question and a Mr. R. H. Ashman, the farm taxation expert of National Revenue, has confirmed that compensation received on animals affected by bangs is considered taxable income. The fact that this compensation may not even approach the fair market value of the animal is not considered because the agricultural operator has been allowed the cost of acquiring the animal or raising it.

According to Mr. Ashman, the cost of replacement is also considered a deductible expense for taxation purposes. So that if the replacement cost exceeds the amount of the compensation, no apparent taxable income, or in more general terms no net expense, is incurred. If a net income is incurred because the animal or animals have not been replaced, the agricultural operator can average out his taxable income over a period of five years, according to section 119 of the present Income Tax Act.

Many farmers feel that this is unjust. It seems to me that compensation payments should not be taxable until a farmer has had an opportunity to replace his herd—a period, say, of two years. If they are not replaced within two years, then the income should be taxable. I think special consideration should be given to these farmers, rather than applying the complicated procedure outlined by Mr. R. H. Ashman. Otherwise farmers will not have an opportunity to plan their finances.

I should like the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Corriveau) to comment on some of the matters I have raised.

[Translation]

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to provide the hon. member with a few facts on this situation. He mentioned that it had reached epidemic proportions. That, Mr. Speaker, is not accurate. If we consider Canada as a whole, we find that the infection rate this year compared to that of last year, is the same. In Saskatchewan, the infection rate has actually been reduced as compared with last year. Therefore, we are not faced with a brucellosis epidemic problem. Nevertheless, it is true that in Saskatchewan a few herds are or have been infected with brucellosis. Most of these are to be found in the northern part of the province.

Mr. Speaker, the department has studied the report prepared by the Northern Development Association on brucellosis control and has advised that organization. I think it is necessary to check the infection spread by brucellosis in that area and we will make every effort to reach that objective. As I said, Mr. Speaker, the Health of animals branch of the department deals with the control of that disease and thanks to its continuous effort in that field for the past several years, Canada enjoys world recognition as holding one of the best records in the control of brucellosis.

However, I have asked the department to intensify tests in Saskatchewan, to look after the testing of community grazing grounds and also to take measures concerning animals in stockyards and at auctions. Furthermore, my department will demand more cleanliness on the farm, a fumigation of premises as well as the implementation of a more rapid process for the slaughtering of animals with positive test results, and they will also require the application of quarantine measures to all infected herds.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I feel that through intensified government measures and with the understanding and co-operation of all farmers, that disease will be fully controlled in Canada.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.29 p.m.

APPENDIX

[Translation]

SPEECHES ON UNVEILING AND DEDICATION OF BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE COMMEMORATING NAMES OF NEWFOUNDLANDERS WHO GAVE THEIR LIVES IN WAR

MR. PROSPER BOULANGER (MERCIER): Mr. Chairman, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen. It is with deep emotion and great joy that I have the honour this afternoon to represent the hon. Lucien Lamoureux, Speaker of the House of Commons, and also the privilege of introducing the Hon. Daniel MacDonald, Minister of Veterans Affairs.

I think that there is no need to introduce Mr. MacDonald. Even if during the last years, he has been before all a politician—first at the provincial level and now at the federal level—he has remained nevertheless strongly devoted to his first love: farming. And whenever his ministerial responsibilities allow him to do so, he likes to go back to the red soil of his farm in his province.

[English]

That he is a war veteran is obvious; and the scars he bears show that he knows, personally, what it means to be at the "sharp end" in battle. He is well aware too, also from personal experience, of the provisions of Canada's veterans charter and of the way in which its benefits have been, and are, administered.

[Translation]

The contribution of Canada and Newfoundland to two World Wars was such that at memorial ceremonies, it is difficult to find someone who has not lost a relative or a friend. This is all the truer in the case of men such as Mr. MacDonald who fought the enemy at close range.

During the few months since his appointment as Minister of Veterans Affairs, Mr. MacDonald has proved that he has set his heart on the needs and aspirations of veterans and their family.

[English]

I am sure that, in unveiling this memorial to the war dead of Newfoundland, Mr. MacDonald will want to leave us a message that certainly takes a special significance, coming from a man with his past and experience.

Ladies and gentlemen, the Honourable Daniel MacDonald, Minister of Veterans Affairs.

HON. DANIEL J. MACDONALD (MINISTER OF VETERANS AFFAIRS): Mr. Chairman, Reverend Sirs, Honoured Guests, Ladies and Gentlemen:

I am indeed privileged to be playing a small part on such a solemn and historic occasion. We are here to witness, and take part in, the unveiling and dedication of a book which commemorates the names of more than two thousand men and women who gave their lives bravely and willingly for the ideals of freedom which we all hold so dear.

These were a very special group of people and they came from a very special place. It is fitting that the book bearing their names will rest, proud and silent, in the Memorial Chamber of the Peace Tower. Many of those whose names are listed here have no known graves but now their names are recorded forever in this book in the capital of our country.

It is also fitting that so many of their friends are here today. I would like to thank the province of Newfoundland for arranging to bring so many of your brave sons and fair daughters to be witness to this memorable event.

The story behind the production of this book started over six years ago. A certain pressure group from one of the larger island provinces felt, and I must say with justification, that the names of their fallen heroes should be enshrined in the Memorial Chamber along with those other Canadians who had made the supreme sacrifice for their country.

One of the main driving forces in this group was a veteran of both World Wars and a man who is held in great respect in his native Newfoundland. I refer to Major, the Hon. C. W. Carter, Senator. I know—but I want to be sure that everyone knows—just how much Senator Carter contributed to the successful completion of the project. It is said that no man is indispensable but Senator Carter came awfully close to proving that saying wrong.

A great many people contributed their talents and energies to producing this book and, unfortunately, it is impossible to name them all. There are, however, two whose dedication and industry must be identified. One of them, Major Sidney Frost, is with us today and I want to thank him officially for his part in initiating and bringing this project to a successful conclusion. The other one was Mr. Alan Fraser who regretfully did not live to see the fruition of his labours. I am happy to see Mrs. Fraser here today to witness the dedication of this superb piece of work to which her husband contributed so much.

Many others worked long and faithfully gathering the information which was required. I know that, when you see this book, you will appreciate that their reward is the knowledge of a job well done.

Canada has always deservedly had an international reputation for excellence in the ways in which she commemorates her war dead. Whether the memorials are in stone or vellum, they reflect the feelings we have for those who fell that we might live. They have a dignity and a glory worthy of those in whose memory they were created.

Just this summer, while on an inspection tour of our memorials and cemeteries in Europe, I had the privilege of visiting Newfoundland Park at Beaumont-Hamel. I know quite a few of you have made a pilgrimage to this hallowed piece of Newfoundland but I wanted to relay the feelings I experienced to all who are here today.

The impact of this impressive memorial was staggering. I came as a complete stranger but I was immediately filled with a compassion and awe for the courage of those who had passed this way on the first day of July in 1916. This monument is a worthy tribute to the fearless and intrepid men of Newfoundland who fell in World War I and who have no known graves.

In just the same way, I am confident that the Book of Remembrance which will be unveiled today, will be a magnificent memorial to all whose names are inscribed in it. A special copy of this book is being prepared which will be presented to the Province of Newfoundland and which I understand will be located in a place of honour in St. John's where it will be readily available to the public. Copies of this book will also be sent to all the other provincial capitals so that ex-patriate Newfoundlanders living in those cities will be able to see them.

I would like to tell you about our procedure in Ottawa concerning the showing of the Books of Remembrance. The pages are turned daily, always at 11 a.m. which was the time of the cease-fire of World War I. The control system is such that anyone can request and be told the date on which the page containing the name of their loved ones will be open. In this way families of those recorded in these books can time their visit to Ottawa to coincide with the date on which the page in which they are interested will be on view.

I mentioned earlier that this book contains the names of more than 2,000 Newfoundlanders. The exact figure is 2,327. We realize, even though the search for names was painstaking, that there may have been some omissions. Provision has been made in this book to add the names of any who may have been overlooked.

So, what has been a labour of love, has now been finished. It started when the Hon. Roger Teillet was Minister of Veterans Affairs and it was conscientiously continued under his successors, the Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé and Senator Arthur Laing. Now I have the privilege and honour of unveiling the Newfoundland Book of Remembrance. I do so with a deep feeling of both pride and sorrow.

(Minister reverently lifts flag from the Book, hands it to the Protective Service Deputy Chief who, with assistant, folds it and hands it back to the minister)

I will now ask the Hon. Joseph Harnum, Lieutenant-Governor of Newfoundland, to come forward, so that I may present this flag to him for safe-keeping in Newfoundland.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 23, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BROADCASTING

PRESENTATION OF PETITION RESPECTING ADVERTISING ON CHILDREN'S PROGRAMS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a petition under the provisions of Standing Order 67. Very briefly, the petition prays that the House will cause the Canadian Radio-Television Commission to implement the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts which were concurred in by the House on July 24. If the petition is found to be in order, it is my hope that by agreement the subject matter of the petition or the petition itself can be referred to an appropriate committee.

* * *

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF MOTION TO REMOVE CUSTOMS DUTIES FROM CERTAIN PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 60 I wish to table notice of a ways and means motion proposing the removal of customs duties for an initial period of two years for certain petroleum products including gasoline, light heating oils, diesel and aviation fuels and feedstocks for the petrochemical industry.

Mr. Speaker: I assume that the minister has the consent of the House to return to motions for that purpose. Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could have permission to revert to motions for a brief statement about the business of the House. I should like, first of all, to draw to the attention of hon. members who may not have been in the House yesterday when agreement was reached that the deferred division on the amendments to the Criminal Code will take place tomorrow, Wednesday, at 2.30 p.m. The normal business will be interrupted at that time for the purpose of taking the vote. Thursday of this week will be an opposition day to be taken by the New Democratic Party. Tomorrow, regardless of the progress that is made on the business already announced, we will deal with the report stage of the Canada Pension Plan bill.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE INCREASE—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION—DISINCENTIVES TO WORK AS FACTOR IN LABOUR SHORTAGES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance who has now had a week to examine the latest unemployment statistics which at that time he said were "startling, disconcerting and very difficult to reconcile" with what he termed to be the very strong expansion of the economy. Now that the minister has had a week to look into this question, has he been able to reconcile what appears to him to be a contradiction? In a word or two, has he an explanation he can give the House?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I gave an explanation in reply to the hon. gentleman's question a week ago.

Mr. Stanfield: With due respect, I do not think the minister expressed anything but surprise and amazement. Specifically, with regard to the widespread labour shortages which he said were being reported to him from across the country, has he found any evidence of disincentives to work in his examination of these labour shortages?

● (1410)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there may be a number of factors in play. One of them certainly is reflected in the help wanted index released yesterday which shows that the number of opportunities for jobs, as published in the daily newspapers across the country, rose by 21 per cent during the third quarter of 1973.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister, who a week ago seemed to be puzzled by the existence of these labour shortages in association with the sharp increase in the seasonally adjusted figure for unemployment, whether he has found any evidence that these unfilled jobs are the result of any disincentives to work?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I said to the hon. gentleman last week when he first put these questions to me that we are awaiting with great interest the study of the Economic Council of Canada analysing the state of the labour market as reflected in the statistics.

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE INCREASE IN LIGHT OF INCREASE IN JOB OPPORTUNITIES—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, on the point mentioned by the Minister of Finance that there has been a 21 per cent increase in the Canadian help wanted index I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who is now back in the House after four days' absence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: Would he like to indicate what explanation his department has for the fact that there is an increase of 21 per cent in the index of people seeking jobs, based on advertisements in newspapers, and there is still not only a high unemployment rate but there has been a very substantial increase in the unemployment rate in the last two or three months?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are always eager to improve the information base on which we provide matching of jobs seekers to existing vacancies. I cannot give any single, simplistic answer as to why that increase has taken place in the unemployment rate, but we are doing our best to improve our manpower office services to match jobs seekers to vacancies.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, assuming the minister is investigating the productivity of his Canada Manpower offices may I ask him this question. In view of his statement that employment is high where it counts and unemployment is high only where it apparently does not count, in certain regions and among young people, would he indicate what he meant by that statement and, more important, would he modify it and offer some constructive programs to the country to help the regionally depressed areas and particularly young people among whom unemployment is around 12 per cent?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the premise on which the hon. member bases his question is quite incorrect. That was not the statement I made. What I said was that while unemployment is unhappily high it does not represent one big monolithic unemployment problem, that we do have intolerably high unemployment among young people and serious regional unemployment, which I think is almost the opposite of the interpretation the hon. member put on my speech.

While I was away from the House during the four days to which the hon. member referred I was consulting with the western provincial governments and other people there, and we explored many of these aspects. As I did then I indicate now that we are looking very carefully at improving manpower services, with particular reference to job information centres and job banks.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker—

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lundrigan: I want to ask the minister another question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member and others, including the hon. member for Don Valley, apparently wish to ask supplementaries. My suggestion is that the Chair be allowed to attempt to complete the first round of questioning and then return to the hon. member and to others who may have supplementaries on this important matter.

* * *

ENERGY

OIL—POSSIBILITY OF DIRECT SALE BY VENEZUELA TO CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources but in his absence will direct it to the Prime Minister. During the energy minister's recent discussions with the Venezuelan government regarding oil supplies to Canada, did the Venezuelan government indicate that it was prepared to sell oil directly to the Canadian government?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will be in the House tomorrow and will be able to answer the hon. member.

* * *

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the hon. Minister of Finance.

Can he say whether a serious study on the profitability of Canadian federalism has been made by the federal and the Quebec governments?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, for the Department of Finance, Confederation is always profitable.

Mr. Beaudoin: Can the hon. minister say whether the federal government is aware of the fact that official figures provided by his department have been used during the Quebec election campaign?

Mr. Speaker: Order. In my opinion, the question as formulated is not in order.

[English]

The hon. member for Don Valley on a supplementary to the first question. In any event, I recognize the hon. member at this time. The hon. member for Don Valley.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PRESENT LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES AS FACTOR IN SLOWING DOWN ECONOMIC GROWTH

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Does the minister and the Department of Finance attribute and in what proportion do they attribute the slowdown in the growth of the economy to the high interest rate policy that the government is now following?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is no evidence that the high interest rate is either contributing to a slowdown or is geared to slow down the economy. It moderates the expansion of the economy in two ways, first of all, by responding to the extremely strong demands for credit to accommodate that expansion and, second, by reflecting the international interest rate structure.

Mr. Gillies: If the high interest rate policy is not slowing down the rate of growth in the economy and therefore moderating inflation in the way that the government is trying to solve the inflation problem, is the minister contemplating some policy that will reduce interest rates so that housebuilding and other activities in the economy may be expanded?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think the premise of the hon. gentleman's question is a little in error since new starts in housing are again at a record figure.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, may I put the question a different way. The evidence is quite clear that in the second quarter and probably the third quarter the economy is not expanding, unemployment is rising, there is a high level of inflation, and high interest rates are contributing to this. Is the government going to do anything about it?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the economy is still growing at the rate predicted by the government and rejected by the hon. gentleman in February. The real rate of growth of 7 per cent across the country shows that the economy is at or near capacity.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I want to pose this question so that I will not be out of order. Surely the Minister of Finance must realize as does everybody else in this country—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might ask the question, but if he wants to put it so that it will be correct procedurally I think he has started off on the wrong foot. He might try again.

Mr. Gillies: Given the fact that the growth in the economy experienced this year all took place in the first quarter and given the fact that in making economic policy one does not look backward but forward, is the minister going to do something about the interest rate policy in the country at the present time?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we are looking forward to a strong rate of growth both in 1973 and 1974.

DISPARITY IN COST OF LIVING FIGURES FOR VARIOUS CITIES—MEASURES TO CORRECT—ACTION TO REDUCE FREIGHT BACKLOG AT NORTH SYDNEY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact the cost of living index for regional cities of Canada released last Friday showed wide disparities, for example, an increase of 1.4 per cent in Thunder Bay as opposed to .4 per cent in Ottawa, is the minister looking into the cause of these price disparities, and what corrective measures does the government propose to take?

• (1420)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government has announced a number of measures over the past several months aimed at restricting increases in the cost of living and has made a commitment to introduce other measures as required. This is a matter in which I am certainly taking an interest and the Food Prices Review Board is as well.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I seek the co-operation of hon. members in attempting to make progress. We are still on the first question, as hon. members will appreciate. I will recognize the hon. member for St. John's East and then the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate, after which I will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a further supplementary to the Minister of Transport. As the same consumer price index showed a 3.2 per cent increase in the cost of food at St. John's, Newfoundland, the highest by far for any city in Canada, is the minister, in light of this fact, now prepared to take very serious measures to alleviate transportation difficulties, more particularly the freight backlog at Sydney, Nova Scotia, which has accrued as a consequence of the failure of the government to take necessary action.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that this is not in accordance with the facts. I regret that the hon. member does not recognize all the efforts that have been made in order to decrease the backlog. There are about 400 fewer cars there than there were three weeks ago. So we are making this effort. I might say that St. John's, Newfoundland, in common with all of the Maritimes, profits from special freight rates that do not apply in other parts of Canada.

Oral Questions

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF SPECIAL PROGRAM TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. As unemployement among young people under 25 is approximately four times the level among people over 25, and as the minister has indicated that employment opportunities are where they count, I wonder if the minister is seriously considering any special program for young people, aside from the anticipated Opportunities for Youth program for next spring, to make sure that our young people do not continue to be disillusioned and become disaffected from our economic system?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am a little puzzled by the hon. member's reference to "employment opportunities where they count." That interpretation of my speech is a bit baffling. Nevertheless, I do recognize the fact that employment opportunities for young people and for certain regions of Canada require a much more precise rifle shooting approach to them than is required to respond to the general, global unemployment rate. That was the theme of my speech the other day.

Mr. Lundrigan: Then why does the minister not do that?

* * *

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REASON FOR ALLEGED DECREASE IN FUNDS—CRITERIA FOR QUALIFICATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. As the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment has increased to 6 per cent and as unemployment among persons between 14 and 24 years of age has risen to almost 11 per cent of the possible work force, can the minister explain why funds made available for local initiatives projects, which involve mainly young people, have been reduced this year to $83 million from last year's start-up figure of $165 million and a further supplementary amount last year of $70 million?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the start-up figure last year at this time, if I remember correctly, was between $80 million and $85 million. This is under constant review.

Mr. Orlikow: In view of the very high unemployment among young people, why have the criteria for qualifying for projects been made so much more difficult this year, with the result that there will be far fewer people working on these projects?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I rather doubt that is the case. I think the revisions in the criteria were designed to ensure that the funds under this program would go to the pockets of highest unemployment rather than being diverted to other services no matter how worthy or justified they might be for other reasons.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE SLOWDOWN OR FREEZE ON TRANSFER OF HOSPITALS TO OTHER JURISDICTIONS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the abrupt desire to retire of Dr. Ritchie, Assistant Deputy Minister of Hospitals, can we now infer that there will be a slowdown or, even better, a freeze on the transfer of veterans' hospitals to other jurisdictions?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but I did not have my receiver on and did not hear the question.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, in view of the abrupt desire to retire of Dr. Ritchie, Assistant Deputy Minister of Hospitals, can we now infer that there may be a slowdown or, even better, a freeze on the transfer of veterans' hospitals to other jurisdictions?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to answer the first part of the question may I say there has not been any sudden intention at all, as is known by many of us. As far as hospital transfers are concerned, the policy of the government has not been changed.

* * *

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

STE-SCHOLASTIQUE—REQUEST OF PEOPLE WHOSE LANDS WERE EXPROPRIATED TO MEET WITH MINISTER

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Public Works.

Fifteen days ago I submitted to him a petition from the 582 expropriated owners at Ste-Scholastique. Can the minister tell us when he will meet with them?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have already had the pleasure of meeting in my office a committee representing the Ste-Scholastique expropriated owners. My colleague the Minister of Transport and myself have decided to go to Ste-Scholastique, probably in the next 15 or 20 days. The date has not yet been set definitely, but we are now checking what methods can be used to ensure that all cases are settled fairly.

* * *

[English]

FOOD PRICES

GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING REVIEW BOARD CLAIM THAT PRICES NOT ROCKETING OUT OF CONTROL AND EXCESSIVE PROFITS NOT BEING MADE BY PROCESSORS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. According to Canada

Department of Agriculture figures, the wholesale price of beef in Toronto declined by 17 per cent in the past ten weeks while weighted average retail costs on a survey of five Toronto supermarkets only declined by 6.8 per cent. Does the government continue to support the assurances of the Food Prices Review Board that food prices are not rocketing out of control and that excessive profits are not being taken by processors?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the facts speak for themselves.

Mr. Jelinek: Can the minister advise the House if it is the government's policy to encourage a slower decline of retail prices than wholesale prices?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

FINANCE

BASIS OF MINISTER'S FISCAL POLICY AND ECONOMIC PROGRAMS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. On October 9 the Governor of the Bank of Canada indicated that monetary policy is now based on the assumption that economic growth is largely responsible for inflation and we must live with a high level of unemployment. Is the minister now basing his fiscal policy and economic programs on the same assumption?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the premise of the hon. member's question properly reflects a correct reading of the governor's speech.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Sharp: Quote the speech.

Mr. Grafftey: I am quoting verbatim the speech made in Quebec. I was perhaps out of order last week, but not this week.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York East.

[Later:]

Mr. Grafftey: I simply wish to ask the Minister of Finance if his fiscal policies and economic programs are based on the assumption that economic expansion is largely responsible for inflation?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Grafftey: Will the minister then inform the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi has a further supplementary which he might be allowed to ask.

Mr. Grafftey: In view of the minister's answer, will he inform the House how he proposes to reconcile his views with the expressed point of view of the governor of the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is inviting the minister to make a statement which should properly be made on motions.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DATE OF PROCEEDING WITH BILL C-125

Mr. Ian Arrol (York East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House the President of the Privy Council was asked when Bill C-125, designed to tighten up the regulations relating to unemployment insurance, might be brought forward for debate. He replied:

Consideration will be given to bringing it forward at an appropriate time.

In view of the present desperate difficulty being experienced by many industries, particularly in Toronto, in getting permanent help, will the President of the Privy Council take appropriate action and bring the bill before the House this week or next week, certainly this session?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will consider the hon. member's representation in drawing up the legislative program for the next couple of weeks.

* * *

● (1430)

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARAB-ISRAELI WAR—CEASE-FIRE VIOLATIONS—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN POSSIBLE PEACEKEEPING FORCE

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns reported violations last night and today of the United Nations cease-fire in the Middle East by Egypt and Syria. Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs any further information to report to the House and the country with respect of these violations and the attitude of the Canadian government with respect to participation in a United Nations peacekeeping force in the apparent absence of any acceptance of the cease-fire by a number of states taking part in the conflict?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We are still hopeful that the initiative taken by the two superpowers and the action of the Security Council calling for a cease-fire will be effective. Yesterday I indicated clearly that if we could be helpful in getting a cease-fire established we would be ready to serve, or if we could be useful at a later stage in connection with the negotiations we would be very ready to serve there, too.

Oral Questions

IMMIGRATION

INTENTION RESPECTING EXTENSION OF ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of representations made by the Canadian Council of Churches and other organizations that the immigration adjustment assistance program be extended beyond its expiry date, October 15, may I ask whether the minister does, in fact, intend to extend that program?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I have weighed this matter very carefully on the basis of all the representations I have received, for and against, and other evidence I have sought. After assessing the question I have decided not to seek the authority of parliament to extend the opportunity for adjustment of status in Canada. I appreciate the opinions and sentiments expressed by all hon. members who have written to me.

Mr. Gilbert: In view of the department's practice of accepting early applications for registration under the act, will the minister consider accepting late registrations under the same act?

Mr. Andras: Since October 15, the expiry date, we have received only 33 such inquiries in all our immigration offices across the country. We have examined these and in cases where there are compassionate grounds for landing as provided in the existing act, which gives me some discretionary authority, we have taken such action and we shall continue to do so. But this does not in any way mean a restoration of the mass adjustment of status program that existed up to October 15.

INTENTION RESPECTING PERSONS WHO FAILED TO REGISTER UNDER ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): In view of the statement made by the minister on CTV on Sunday, October 14, that his deparment had no immediate plans to deport illegal immigrants after the deadline date, and his subsequent statement—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This might be a proper moment to remind hon. members that as far as possible questions asked in the House should not be based on statements made outside the House. We have often found ourselves in difficulty in the past as a result of trying to avoid this long established rule. I feel that in practically all circumstances the question can be asked directly without basing it on a statement made outside the House.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the House just what he proposes to do with illegal immigrants or aliens who have refused to register and are apprehended?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member did refer to a statement of mine, I should like to point out that I made whatever comments he said I made were in response to a question asking whether there was going to be a witch hunt. I said there was not going to be one. The new law is well known to all hon. members. The law will be enforced. Where there are reasons on compassionate grounds for considering a particular case, we shall do so. Otherwise, should a straight case arise, for example, involving a criminal who has been apprehended and who is in contravention of the Immigration Act, I think there is no doubt that deportation would take place. The hon. member is aware that the right of appeal has been restricted. The law will apply, and that is what hon. members recommended during the debate.

[Mr. Sharp.]

* * *

AIR CANADA

POSSIBILITY OF REORGANIZATION OF TOP MANAGEMENT LEVEL—REPLACEMENT FOR PRESIDENT

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact we have witnessed the departure this year of three top executives of Air Canada, including the president, John Baldwin, can the minister advise the House whether a reorganization of the top management level of Air Canada is taking place and, specifically, when we may expect an announcement as to a replacement for Mr. John Baldwin?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I do not know of any reorganization in Air Canada. The president left a few weeks ago and I hope he will be replaced very rapidly. But his departure is not related to any restructuring of Air Canada.

* * *

GRAIN

FEED GRAIN—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SELLING PRICES FOR WHEAT, BARLEY AND OATS

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice, in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Is the hon. gentleman prepared to announce this week the price of off-Wheat Board grain so that uncertainty may be removed from the operations of the feeding industry?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): The Canadian Wheat Board announced its selling prices under the new feed grain policy for feed wheat, feed barley and feed oats yesterday at about one o'clock, Winnipeg time.

* * *

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who admitted last week in a news release that he was basing his calculations for next year on a staggering increase in inflation amounting to 6.6. per cent. How does the minister intend to get inflation down to that figure?

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

STE-SCHOLASTIQUE—REVIEW OF EXPROPRIATED OWNERS' GRIEVANCES

Mr. Francis Fox (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Transport.

In view of the fact that the Ste-Scholastique expropriated land owners have serious grievances to air concerning the treatment they have received in comparison with those of Pickering, can the minister advise the House whether he intends to look into these and bring about the necessary corrections?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Public Works advised the House a moment ago that we intended to go very shortly to Ste-Scholastique to learn first hand of these grievances and make sure that the expropriated owners are fairly treated.

* * *

[English]

ENERGY

TAR SANDS OIL—NEGOTIATIONS WITH SYNCRUDE RESPECTING POSSIBLE WRITE OFF OF ALBERTA'S SHARE OF EARNINGS IN COMPUTING TAXABLE INCOME

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question either to the Minister of Finance or to the Minister of National Revenue. Jurisdiction appears to be shared between them.

Has either of the ministers taken part in any negotiations with Syncrude, in order that the development may proceed and a secure supply of crude petroleum can be obtained, with respect to a write-off from the taxable income of the Syncrude group of the 50 per cent which the province of Alberta will get out of the project when developed? Has there been any discussion along those lines so that the project may proceed and secure supplies of crude petroleum can be assured?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): My colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, says that he replies "no" to that question. I did have conversations, not with Syncrude but with the Minister of Finance of the province of Alberta, and I expect to be meeting him next week together with two of his colleagues.

Mr. Woolliams: Can the minister tell the House at this stage whether a decision has been reached by the federal government with respect to a write-off concerning this project which will go ahead if the federal government creates the proper atmosphere?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think the hon. gentleman would expect me to listen to the representations of the government of Alberta and, indeed, in due course, to the representations of the company in order that I might have all the facts available before making a decision.

FISHERIES

SUGGESTED SUBSIDY FOR REPLACEMENT OF OBSOLETE VESSELS AND SHIPS LOST AT SEA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a suggestion for the Minister of Fisheries which may help lower the unemployment rate. When announcing a three-month freeze in August on construction subsidies for all new fishing vessels the minister stated that this action was taken to achieve a controlled development of the fleet. In view of recently released figures which show a decline in Canada's groundfish landings, would the minister reconsider his action and at least make subsidies available immediately for the replacement of obsolete vessels presently used for fishing, as well as assistance for the replacement of ships lost at sea due to fire or storms?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that the hon. member's pessimism about the prospects of the fishery is not shared by those who are building fishing vessels. There has been a tremendous increase in the number of fishing vessels being built, to such an extent that our subsidy moneys have all been used up and we are having to make more funds available. Obviously the industry thinks that prospects are bright. We have simply tried to shave off the peak off what is an exceptional building boom and spread it out over a longer period.

● (1440)

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I asked a specific question of the minister in view of the fact he has placed a deliberate moratorium on the construction of all fishing vessels and he has not answered it. I will repeat it because obviously he did not hear it. I ask the minister whether he will reconsider his action and make assistance available to replace ships now fishing that are obsolete or ships that are lost at sea due to fire or storm? I submit such action would not increase the fishing effort—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crouse: —but would retain the status quo.

Mr. Davis: That is a new question, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member probably knows that we are considering another type of subsidy for the conversion, upgrading and otherwise of existing vessels.

* * *

HOUSING

ACTION TO REDUCE MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that 96 per cent of all NHA loans being made in the metro Toronto region go to people with incomes exceeding $10,000 a year, or family incomes above that figure, which means that the poor and people with average incomes are getting nothing, can the minister announce whether the government intends to do anything about bringing mortgage rates down soon?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, is in western Canada attending a tri-level conference dealing with this type of problem, and he has already stated the percentage of loans available under preferred NHA rates. In terms of the detail of that question, I will convey it to my colleague.

* * *

TRANSPORT

BACKLOG OF FREIGHT AT NORTH SYDNEY—SUGGESTED USE OF ARGENTIA-NORTH SYDNEY FERRY ON YEAR-ROUND BASIS

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact the Canadian government is unable to cope with the freight backlog at Sydney bound for Newfoundland, would the minister give consideration to having the Argentia-North Sydney ferry continue on a year-round basis as recommended by groups of people in that area and other bodies in Newfoundland?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the premise is wrong, but probably this is the normal way of putting a question to a minister. We have been looking at all possibilities in order to get rid of this backlog, which existed last year and on which I did not even receive one letter from the opposition. Notwithstanding that, we are going to look into all possibilities, including the one mentioned by the hon. member.

* * *

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ESTABLISHMENT OF REGIONAL OFFICES IN QUEBEC—DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the many problems that occurred last year at the Unemployment Insurance Commission, the minister informed us this summer that regional offices favouring decentralization would be set up this very fall in areas such as the north shore and the riding of Charlevoix, among others.

Mr. La Salle: In Joliette too.

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): Also in Joliette, for instance. In view of the fact that since September the Unemployment Insurance Commission has been at grips with delays such as have been experienced last year, can the minister say when the offices whose construction was announced last summer will be set up and when the operation will begin?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to separate that into the general and the specific. If the hon. member can give me some specifics I will look into those, but in general I think progress toward completing the reorganization of, or the so-called new approach to, unemployment insurance has been done with dispatch. It was started in April, accelerated in August and will be generally completed around the first of December. I commend the commission for their vigour.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Without generalizing, could the minister explain why people in the Quebec City area have been waiting since the beginning of September for their unemployment insurance benefits?

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I could be that general, but I would be happy to deal with specifics. If the hon. member will give me some case histories we will move very quickly on them.

PROJECTED BENEFIT AND ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS FOR 1973

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration as a supplementary. Given the optimism of the Minister of Finance respecting growth for the balance of the year and knowing that the government must have some projections in terms of employment and unemployment, can the minister advise whether he has any projected figures for the cost both of benefits and administration for the year 1973? Or can he assure us, because of this optimism, that the total cost will be less this year than it was last year?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered a somewhat similar question two or three weeks ago in which I indicated there are offsets. There is the rise granted by statute in the eligible income due to the increase in the average wage rate, which has an effect on the average cost per week of benefits. There is the factor of the length of time on benefits, there is the maturity of the plan in terms of maternity benefits and sickness benefits, and so on. The question cannot be answered either yes or no; anyone who thinks there is a simplistic approach like that is mistaken.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. At this point I bring to the attention of hon. members that there are only three or four minutes until the end of the question period.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I have one short supplementary question. Apparently there are no figures and I think the cost is going to be much higher, but let me ask the minister this. Is it the intention of the government to introduce by way of regulation an increase in employer-employee contributions? I have read it will be something like 50 per cent. Is that a fact?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, if such policy is determined it will be announced in the regular manner.

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN JOB VACANCY INCREASE AND INCREASE IN BENEFITS PAID

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. In view of the publication today of statistics expecting the rate of rise in job vacancies in this country, is the minister's department undertaking a study to determine whether or not that rise in the rate of job vacancies is related to the rise in unemployment insurance benefits that are being paid out?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have a monitoring process which was described in fairly gory detail in the House in the spring and which in several ways is constantly monitoring the activities of claimants to make sure they recognize their clear obligation to conduct an active job search. As vacancies occur in any given area and are identified, then that obligation becomes more intense, and our approach to claimants reflects this.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

GAGETOWN BASE—REQUEST FOR PROGRAMS TO ACHIEVE FULL UTILIZATION

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the excellent facilities at Canadian Forces Base Gagetown which are not being fully utilized, will the minister give consideration to new programs which will take advantage of the substantial public investment there?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to assure the hon. member that the Department of National Defence recognizes the value of the training facilities at Gagetown. We intend to make full use of them and in fact expand them over the years.

* * *

TRANSPORT

REQUEST THAT SEAWAY BE KEPT OPEN BEYOND NORMAL CLOSING DATE

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the failure of the railroads to move grain through the port of Thunder Bay at an adequate rate, and in view of the possibility that in the event of an impending oil shortage in the east considerable quantities of oil may be moved by tanker, is the minister considering ways and means by which the seaway might be kept open beyond the normal closing date?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if this is useful and it can be done we shall examine it, but we have no control over the weather and ice. This suggestion will be kept on the desk and if it is feasible the hon. member can be sure that we will take it into consideration.

Oral Questions

PUBLIC SERVICE

POSSIBILITY OF REVIEW OF NURSES' WAGES AND FRINGE BENEFITS IN LIGHT OF DISCONTENT

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of continuing nationwide discontent expressed by nurses under Treasury Board jurisdiction in regard to wage disparities and fringe benefits compared with those prevailing in the private sector and provincially, does the right hon. gentleman intend to instruct the President of the Treasury Board to review the situation with particular reference to section 76 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have absolute confidence in the President of the Treasury Board's handling of this matter.

● (1450)

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, in view of reports received from the nurses that they intend to seek a meeting with the Prime Minister to explore their grievance when he is in Halifax in the near future, will the Prime Minister agree to meet with them at that time?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have not received such a suggestion until now. I will look into the matter.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

STEPS TO ENSURE PROPER CARE OF VETERANS IN LIGHT OF NURSES' DISCONTENT RESPECTING PAY

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact hundreds of nurses involved in the dispute are working at veterans hospitals, will the minister advise, further to what he told me yesterday, what steps he is taking to ensure that those veterans under chronic and domiciliary care will receive proper treatment continuously?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The information I have from across the country is that the patients are receiving good care and that the morale is good and the nurses are doing a terrific job.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton will be recognized for the purpose of a supplementary. The Chair will then see the Leader of the Opposition and call orders of the day.

MEASURES TO INCREASE BED CAPACITY IN HOSPITALS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs and concerns the backlog of veterans seeking admission to veterans hospitals, especially at Sunnybrook Hospital in Toronto. What measures has the minister taken to increase the bed capacity of veterans hospitals?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to answer that question, it is not very long since I visited Toronto. I spoke to approximately 100 patients at Sunnybrook Hospital. They were very satisfied with the treatment they were receiving. So ar as I know there are ample beds at this time. If there are not, we can certainly look into it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the Leader of the Opposition. The hon. member for Témiscamingue wishes to put a supplementary question, after which I will recognize the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Last evening, on the CBC French network, Mr. René Lévesque stated that the Prime Minister would be resigning on November 15 next. Since when does the Prime Minister notify René Lévesque of his intentions before parliament?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will admit, I am sure, that it is not a point of order.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the members opposite, as Mr. René Lévesque, take their wishes for granted. Some people think that the representation of French-speaking persons in Ottawa is too strong, but such is not my opinion, Mr. Speaker. As for myself, I intend to continue to carry on my duties—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSITION OF MINISTER RESPECTING DELIVERY OF OIL BY TANKERS TO PUGET SOUND REFINERIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before I ask my question perhaps I could assure the Prime Minister, through you, that many in parliament will find that a comforting reassurance.

I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question arising from his assurance a number of months ago in connection with the delivery of oil to refineries in the Puget Sound area that he had only begun to fight. Can he tell us briefly how that fight is coming on or whether he has really left the ring?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, like the Prime Minister I intend to stay very much in the fight.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Bell: On a question of privilege.

[Mr. Scott.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a question of privilege. Before I recognize the hon. member I would remind hon. members that we have reached the end of the question period. However, I recognize the hon. member on his question of privilege.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, as recorded on page 7085 of Hansard for yesterday, column one, I made an interjection that I meant to reflect on the government, but I may have brought in a respected civil servant with a distinguished war record. I have been assured that the Assistant Deputy Minister of Hospitals resigned voluntarily for health reasons and that there was no implication of policy. Therefore I would withdraw that without reservation. Needless to say, I am still opposed to the government's policy of closing down veterans hospitals.

Mr. Marshall: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, in his answer the Minister of Veterans Affairs suggested that morale was high and that the service was as good as it should be—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Just listen.

Mr. Marshall: I think there should be a change because certainly many representations are coming to members of parliament and, indeed, to the minister indicating dissatisfaction in respect of the handing over of hospitals and indicating dissatisfaction with the services in the hospitals.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that this is a point of debate and not a point of order. I suggest again to hon. members that it is irregular after the question period to seek supplementaries on alleged points of order. I appreciate that the hon. member may feel he has a grievance in relation to the answer given to his question, but that cannot be raised by way of a point of order or question or privilege.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to rise on a point of order but I believe the issue is of national importance. I just received information a few moments ago that the Texaco and Imperial Oil Companies are diverting tankers from the Middle East to the United States. In light of that I wonder whether I might have the permission of the House to ask the Prime Minister whether or not he is aware of this?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure we could have a situation every day in which hon. members receive information during the question period and seek unanimous consent of the House to prolong the question period. I suggest to hon. members that is irregular. I am sure the hon. member can go to the minister, speak to him and obtain the information he is seeking.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order or perhaps I rise to give notice of a point of order having to do with the attaching of the Governor General's recommendation to a bill, first reading of which was given yesterday. I refer to Bill C-224 which proposes to amend the Canada Pension Plan in ways with which I completely agree. I wonder, however, if Your Honour would study the question concerning whether there should be a Governor General's recommendation with regard to a bill which involves no expenditure of public funds. I was indeed aware of the recommendation because it appeared on the order paper when the bill was presented for first reading yesterday, but I did not have the bill until this morning. I have carefully studied the bill. So far as I can ascertain every cent of expenditure referred to in that bill is to be paid out of the Canada Pension Plan fund. It is not a charge in any way on the federal treasury.

I would point out, Sir, that when the Canada Pension Plan was first introduced the defence in respect of there being a Governor General's recommendation, and also a resolution back in those days, was that there were certain administrative charges until the plan was functioning. But of course we are away past that stage. I also remind Your Honour that there have been two or three private members' bills which have been allowed, despite the fact that no Governor General's recommendations were attached, because the Canada Pension Plan even to the point of administrative expense is completely self-sustaining.

● (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the hon. member giving notice of his point of order, but it seems to me that he is arguing the point of order which he says he will raise later. I appreciate the point which the hon. member is making. It will be notice, not only to the Chair but to hon. members to the left and to the right of the Chair, to give the matter some thought in the meantime so they will be ready whenever the order is before the House, which it is not at present.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES AND DEBENTURES

The House resumed, from Monday, October 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-164, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973 to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the first thing I should do now that I am rising again is to put the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) at ease. I am sure the information which was not given in answer to my question is available somewhere, but I am citing this incident as an example of the difficulty a member of this House experiences in participating fully and intelligently in any debate on transportation. There is no available means by which members may find out where the dollars and cents are going in the transportation system of our nation. Whether it be Air Canada, the public telecommunications system or the Canadian National Railways, these figures are absolutely unavailable, hidden or refused. I think it is significant that today the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) probably evaded the answers to all the questions except two. In answering those two, he had a chance to take a small crack at the Maritimes and to help Mr. Bourassa by going into the Ste-Scholastique problem. Those are the only two definitive answers that he could give in the House, and certainly all questions were within the scope of the minister.

There is no doubt that the initial planning of the transportation system of this country was conducted in a capable and wise way. The results proved the worth of the plan, or at least they did until such time as we found that we had no national transportation policy. We now find ouselves failing as government to keep pace with the needs of the times. This absence of policy, the absence of concrete action, the fractionalization of the whole problem as we take it point by point and region by region have all negated much of the good that should have come from the wisdom of our forefathers as they planned our system.

For instance, we have seen the passenger service virtually disappear from the scene. I submit to you that this was by design or through lack of action by the government at the crucial moment when the passenger system over the rails became so totally and utterly inconvenient that the travelling public refused to patronize it. When you find yourself at McAdam Junction, or in the wilderness somewhere in this country, waiting two, three or four hours to catch a plane you realize that with a little bit of co-operation between railroads and some good planning by the management of the travelling public could have been convenienced to the point where we could still have had not only an active but a prosperous railway passenger service, one which I think this country needs in the worst possible way.

I can remember as a young man sitting at Windsor Junction in Nova Scotia for four hours waiting for the CPR and CNR trains to connect so that I might move from one train to the other to my destination. I can assure you that any wait of four hours from 2 a.m. to 6 a.m. in the wilderness around Windsor Junction certainly discourages one from travelling by rail. It is a dandy little point, but a miserable station at which to wait. I submit that this was intentional. I submit that the government of Canada either does not know or did not care. These incidents involving misservice to the public took place one after the other.

With regard to the shipment of freight, it is obvious for those who are using the rail system, as it was to those who were using the passenger system and resorted to automobiles or aeroplanes as an alternative means of transportation, that there has been a serious breakdown of the dispatch system in the organization of the railroads. There has been an abandonment of the recognition that a perishable product has to be shipped promptly and that it cannot be allowed to rest on the siding. There has been an abandonment of the policy which kept cars rolling and thus utilized. I am wondering to what extent this abandonment of efficient dispatch has contributed to the car shortage which exists. I am not convinced that it is absolutely necessary that 500 of the rail cars of this country be tied up in Sydney almost as a habit, according to the Minister of Transport yesterday.

I am convinced that good planning, good dispatching and good organization by the CNR could move these cars, and that someplace, where there is now a shortage some of those 500 cars could be made available to the people who require transportation for various items of commerce within this nation. This puts the onus fairly and squarely on the government in general, and the Minister of Transport in particular. We can cite instances in agriculture where the turn around time for cars on a 450 mile haul is approximately 17 days. There is no excuse for any such delay. These cars are often loaded within a day. They can reach that 450 mile distance in 24 to 36 hours with proper dispatching. They can be unloaded, if placed properly, within a day, and they could conceivably be back for reloading quite comfortably within a week. If we consider the demurrage that an individual would be charged if he held that car for 10 to 11 days on his own siding, what must it cost the railroads to absorb the cost of idle equipment in this country by virtue of poor dispatching?

These are items to which I think in times of car shortages from the Okanagan to the Annapolis and from Newfoundland to Victoria, the minister should give his full attention. He should not be making excuses for them, he should not say that they are the result of habit. He should say that they are items to which he will give his immediate attention, and will try to resolve them forthwith. This is a serious matter. I was amazed at the fact that the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) could speak on this subject last night and not mention the problems connected with the transportation of agricultural products which exists in his constituency. In my opinion it was a gross oversight on his part. The transportation problem, both in respect of the time of delivery and the cost, of as well as the other ancillary charges which the railroads add to the transportation bill, has deprived that area of his constituency and a comparable area of mine of hundreds of thousands of dollars on an annual basis.

When one tries to discuss these items with the railway authorities, one receives no logical answer. Why does the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria not join me in putting pressure on the government to resolve these problems? This is the co-operation that is required in the interest of Canada, of his constituency and mine. This is a dire need for a portion of his constituency and mine, but it was not mentioned at all in his remarks last night.

I stated that it would seem as if the abandonment of the passenger service was almost intentional in view of poor connections and poor service. I am wondering if the dispatching complications which have arisen, and which require more turnaround time than would have been required 10, 15 or 20 years ago, are also intentional? Is there no solution to this? It certainly contributes to the car shortage problem for all commodities in Canada. Mr. Speaker, there is some proper criticism due to me in as much as I am being somewhat repetitive. If you look back you will see that I made somewhat comparable remarks, as reported in Hansard, at an earlier date during this session. But I think the remarks made by the various members of parliament, whether they come from P.E.I., Newfoundland, or from Crowfoot, should impress upon the government that the problem is of major consequence, and of particular consequence to my constituency, an agricultural one, which will only get competitive transportation if, as and when the railroads adopt an efficient and competitive pose toward that industry and its requirements.

[Mr. McCain.]

● (1510)

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention one other thing, which I am sure I mentioned previously, and on which I hoped I would have had an answer. It is a matter I certainly intend to press. As the CNR took over various facets of bankrupt railway companies, what became of the land grants made to those companies? Were they returned to the Crown? Are they assets of the CNR? To the best of my knowledge they are not. The CNR took over defunct railway lines with all their equipment and all their indebtedness.

Contrast that with the CPR. The CPR retained its lands, and presumably continued to manage them at a profit. But to the best of my knowledge—again I had hoped to have had an answer to this in reply to an earlier question—the total real estate holdings which the CPR received as an incentive to build its railway line are now retained in an independent holding outside the transportation field, and the benefit from these lands does not accrue to the transportation benefit of the people of Canada. That was not the intention when those lands were granted to the CPR. The lands were given to provide assets and revenues that, in the long run, would make the railway a viable operation. They have now been transferred to another account. Again I ask if this is correct? In my opinion something should be done about it.

We have a system in Canada of combination rates, Mr. Speaker. If you want to ship a carload of apples from a point in British Columbia by CNR to a non-competitive point in some other part of Canada, or a carload of apples by the CPR to a non-competitive point some distance from the Annapolis Valley, or a carload of potatoes from New Brunswick or P.E.I. to a non-competitive point, the railways will give you a specific rate. In effect they say, "Because this is a non-competitive point we will really collect from you." As a result, you may well pay 15 cents or 20 cents per hundredweight more to send goods to a non-competitive destination than you would pay to send them to a much more distant destination which is competitive. The Transport Commission is exercising no authority with respect to rates. The results of any investigation do not seem to be made available to the public, and this is to the detriment of the country.

If members opposite want to do something about the cost of living, then it is incumbent upon the government to take a look at some of the methods used by transportation systems, particularly the railways of this country, in imposing themselves on the people of Canada at any expense. The various subsidies which have been granted by the government are not negotiated as part of a national plan. The Minister of Transport made that quite clear today as he backhanded the Atlantic area. They are negotiated in isolation.

There are abandoned track grants for the prairie area. There is the Maritime Freight Rates Act for the Maritime area. There are other vehicles by which money is put into the hands of the railroads. But none of them are part of a national plan. All of them are used as a method to assuage a region at a particular moment when the pot is beginning to boil. This is not the way things should be done. Being primarily in agriculture, I am concerned about the fact that over the last few years the government has allowed the railroads to stop their priority for perishable products. These include livestock, fruit, vegetables and fish, not to mention frozen foods.

There used to be a clause in all tariffs respecting perishable products which demanded that the railroads move them to their destination by the shortest possible route and with the quickest dispatch. But now the railroads can put a car of frozen food or of fresh food on any siding and leave it there as long as they like. They no longer have any responsibility for its delivery in good condition. In such a circumstance, if you lodge a claim against the railroad it will remain on its books and on yours ad infinitum, while the railroad finds all kinds of reasons to blame the shipper or receiver for neglect, which neglect was the fault of the carrier. It is in these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, that the government of Canada is asking members who represent agriculture, and members who represent the fisheries, to support a finance bill for the Canadian National railroad. I find this goes down as sour grapes.

There cannot be adequate rail facilities in this country as long as there is no control, no investigation, no interest shown by government in the service that is rendered by this form of transportation. I want to cite one particular instance close to home, and if the railways could be used to transport this particular product those railways would probably pass through my constituency and that of the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria. But in this particular instance, because it would be a combination rate for the CNR and CPR between origin and destination, the rate is so high to carry the product from the northeast of New Brunswick to the southwest of New Brunswick that the manufacturer in the northeast has lost the business to an Ontario firm, which can ship the product more cheaply from a centre 500 or 600 rail miles further away from the point of consumption. This shows a lack of co-operation that hurts the country. It is something which should be investigated by the government and the Transport Commission.

I am sure it is not a unique situation. If you were to ship a car of potatoes to Newfoundland by CPR then the CNR says, "I am sorry, but you have cut our rail haul. We will have to add 20 cents a hundredweight to the rate." Then, people in Newfoundland would wonder why potatoes were so expensive coming off the CPR lines. That is part of the reason. It does not matter how many junction points the CNR has to take the car through, the result would probably be the same. This penalizes both the producer and the receiver of the product. These are things we must examine. Let us also take another look at areas where pooled rail lines could be operated to ease the economics of transportation. The railroad companies do not want to undertake this on their own, but they should be compelled by government to look at any means which would achieve reduced mileage of haul, and thus reduced rates. As I say, the railways do not want to do this themselves because of the freedom which has been given to the rail transportation industry in the Dominion of Canada by the legislation introduced and imposed by the government.

The problems exist from coast to coast. They are not unique to any particular area. As I have asked questions and received answers, evasive answers, incomplete answers, and no answers, I have wondered how I got into this maze of Alice in Wonderland. What is delaying the government? Is it looking for Merlin the magician to come from the court of King Arthur to solve the problems? Members of the government should put their heads together and give Canada the transportation policy which it so badly needs. Certainly, those people with the capability to ensure service by rail are not holding portfolios in this government. I plead with the government to come up with a rational solution for the rail transportation requirements of the country.

Other hon. members have spoken about air service. It certainly leaves much to be desired. I will not be repetitive in that regard except to associate myself with those who feel there is much to be desired in the service that is supplied by the nationally-owned air carrier. If the service provided by Canadian National Railways and Air Canada is an example of what nationalization of business can do, may God in His wisdom protect Canada from further nationalization.

● (1520)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, my comments on this particular piece of legislation will be brief. I rise only because I was prompted by what I thought was an outstanding speech made yesterday by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher). He outlined the problem in his part of Ontario. This problem has existed for several years, and I think it is something that demands attention not only from the people in that area but, if we believe that we represent our ridings as members of the parliament of Canada then we, too, should rise to defend the principles he put forth.

In this connection I should like to refer to one particular town in one geographical area of Canada where I spent my summers. My family roots are in that area; it is the town of Wiarton which was built for the logging industry many, many years ago. Situated at the base of the Bruce peninsula, it is the entrance to what will become the playland of the urbanites of Ontario. The provincial government of Ontario has already spent a great deal of money to expropriate land and build a huge parkland to which people can escape from the cities to enjoy the beauties of the Canadian countryside.

The people in the hamlets and towns in the peninsula, however, are isolated from the rest of Canada. If someone wants to go to Toronto on business, if a youngster wants to go to school there, it cannot be done unless there is someone with a vehicle to take them or unless they can afford the $10 or $12 for a cab to Owen Sound where they can take the bus to the population core of Ontario. It was the rural people who built this nation and now they are neglected.

As we argue for subways, for expressways, for better transportation in our cities, for the viability of communications between cities, we forget that the nation was built on communications across the country and the opportunity for people to move freely to other areas. In this town that I speak of there is no chance for anyone who is old or poor to move around. Surely, we could provide at least a token service; even service once a week would serve the small communities across the nation, whether this be done by again inaugurating some rail services or a transportation plan that is co-ordinated with the provinces.

We may argue that great things should be done for the cities but this country, which has been until now influenced by an east-west delineation rather than north-south, must not forget its obligation to people in the rural areas who have a right to communicate with and travel to those other parts of Canada where all modes of transportation are now concentrated.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to comment on some matters of local or regional concern because there is hardly a constituency in Canada that does not have a railway in it somewhere. I am told that is one of the difficulties.

I come from an area that was the original site of the western terminus of Grand Trunk Pacific, one of the railroads that went broke and had to be rescued by Canadian National. While I have not read any definitive history of the Canadian National to see what occurred, I have been told often enough that its purpose was to bring together a number of bankrupt or near bankrupt railroads that were started around the turn of the century or even before. Apparently, a lot of these railroads started because it seemed to be an easy way to make a quick buck. Grants of land were available in those days through the federal and provincial governments for the building of railroads and were obtained in many cases by people from other countries. Often the main purpose was not to build a railroad to connect one region or community with another, but was only to cash in on the generous grants that were available. It seems that the promoters in those early days did not particularly care whether the railroad functioned as a viable enterprise or not; they were not using their own money and the lands had been given to them by the government of the day so they had nothing to lose. These were the types of companies the CNR brought together.

We have been told so many times that the Canadian National Railways, having been formed for that purpose, guaranteed to the bond holders of those early defunct bankrupt railroads that they would not lose their money. This was one of the difficulties facing the CNR from the start.

Some members have given the House a good deal of information in the last couple of days. Some have made a statistical analysis of the position of the Canadian National, listing its debt charges, its income and a variety of other bookkeeping details to show that it really does not have a fantastic debt. They maintain that the CPR is in a worse position by comparison and that the problem exists as a result of the incompetence and mismanagement of the CNR officials. I will accept the charge of mismanagement on the part of CNR officials because we know that exists and have seen it in action. However, for every instance of mismanagement in the CNR you can find a parallel in the CPR.

[Mr. Fleming.]

An hon. Member: Twice as many.

Mr. Howard: My friend opposite says you can find twice as many. I am trying to get at the point that the difficulties have arisen not because one is private enterprise and therefore sacred, while the other is under public ownership and therefore suspect; the difficulties have arisen because of the very structure of Canada, the manner in which the country became operative, the development of the railroad system, the quick buck artists at the turn of the century and the support of governments over the years, Liberal and Conservative, for the railway systems. Thus, we suffer from the absolute barrenness of vision of both this government and the one that preceded it. The present hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) was minister of transport for a time in that Conservative government. That is why there are difficulties today. There is a lack of transport policy, and that lack is not associated particularly with any one political party or government. The fault lies with all of us in this chamber.

● (1530)

We look at a transportation policy from the point of view of the narrow interests of our own areas. We tend to want others in the country to be at a disadvantage. We may talk about a national transportation policy, but say, "Do not touch my home ground." We say, "By all means bring about reorganization, but do not touch the Newfoundland ferry service." Or, in another part of the country we may say, "By all means reorganize and restructure the rail transport system across Canada, but do not touch the Crowsnest Pass rates." We could go on ad infinitum talking about our approaches to transportation.

The direct connection between northern B.C. and the rest of the country is provided by the CNR. The north line of the CNR runs from the Jasper area in a general sense for about 1,000 miles westward, to Prince Rupert. I have talked to quite a few railroaders who work on that north line. Many have worked for the CN in other parts of Canada. What they have told me relates not simply to what might happen in the western region of the CNR, or to what the head office in Edmonton might say about the operation of the mountain region, or the western region. What they say applies all over the country. These railroaders, and I am also sure that this applies to the CPR because I have talked to men working for that company, do not feel the pride in their job that they once felt. There is no longer the long service conductor who began working for the railroad and wanted to work for 25, 30 or 35 years, until retirement.

Actually, you seldom see employees with 25 or 30 years of service on the railroad. You do not find that sense of dedication to the railroad which you found some years ago. Part of the explanation lies in the availability of other jobs, the mobility of workers, and the opportunity for families to move to other parts of the country and follow different vocations. However, part of the explanation lies in the fact that within the CNR and within the CPR there are too many chiefs and not enough Indians. There are too many people in managerial positions and too many bosses, one not talking to the other. Too many orders come down from on high, whether from the head office at Montreal or some regional office, to the men running the railroad, the engineers, conductors and station agents, as well as all the others who run the railroads at the community level and in the regions. The concept of relating in a human way to people working on the railroad has gone.

The workers do not feel the compulsion to do a good job. Let me give an example, to show why this is so. Who in the railroad hierarchy made the decision, the effect of which I will illustrate in a moment, I do not know. At any rate, here is the situation: There used to be a train that left Jasper, Alberta, in the evening. There were sleeper-coaches on that train. Mind you, the scheduling of trains changes about every six months. At any rate, that service was provided at one time. That train travelled westward; its terminus was Prince Rupert, about 900 or 1,000 miles away from the point of departure. Between 6 and 6.30 a.m. that train pulling a certain number of sleeping coaches was at about the half way point, at Prince George. At about that time, at 6.30 a.m., the people with kiddies, the families who had bought sleeper accommodation at Jasper and who wanted to go to Prince Rupert, 1,000 miles away, were aroused from sleep. They had to get up, clothe their kids and themselves, pack their luggage, move out of the sleeper car and go ahead two cars on exactly the same train. They had to sit in the day coach for the rest of the journey. This happened at 6.30 in the morning.

When the train left Prince George to go to Prince Rupert, the sleeper coaches were still on the tail end of the train. They were hauled empty all the way to Prince Rupert, 500 miles away, and all the way back again, empty. You could not occupy a sleeper coach on that train between Prince Rupert and Prince George, or vice versa. I do not know who thought of running the railway that way. It was not very satisfactory from the point of view of the passengers. The people who were most upset, because they had to go through this procedure every single day, were the railroaders themselves, the conductors and men on the train. Crews were changed at Prince George, and they saw the stupidity of what was happening. No matter how many complaints we lodged with Canadian National management, nothing happened. We might as well have complained to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray), for all the response we got. Management did not even take the trouble to explain what was happening. It did not acknowledge letters.

The Canadian National has an obligation to the area which I represent, which is just as great as its obligation to every other area it serves. It has a special obligation to the northern part of British Columbia, as it is the railway that ties northern B.C. into the national railroad system. Sure, there is a B.C. railway operating in that area as well in a north-south direction. Its terminus is in north Vancouver. We are connected to the national system at Prince George; therefore, I say that the primary responsibilitiy for maintaining that connection is with the CNR.

The Canadian National system traditionally has moved goods in and out of northern B.C. that go by rail. I am speaking in particular of lumber, which is sent to the markets of North America. The railway at the moment is shirking responsibility for providing adequate service to that industry. As has been indicated in the question period a number of times, there is a serious shortage of railroad cars to serve the north central and northern part of British Columbia. There is a shortage of box cars for moving lumber. Sawn lumber, some of it dried and some of it rough sawn, is piling up at mill sites and at shipping points. According to conservative estimates, about 400 million board feet of lumber which have gone through the mill are waiting to be moved by Canadian National. Between 500 and 600 people have already been laid off in the saw mill industry because there is no other place to pile the lumber that is run through sawmills. Some mills are operating at 50 per cent capacity, in a day when you can sell every stick of lumber you can run through a headrig. Further shutdowns in the sawmill industry in northern British Columbia are imminent. They may be taking place today in one area or another.

● (1540)

Where are the boxcars? In recent months the Canadian National Railways claimed there was a shortage of cars because they were not being returned from the United States with sufficient dispatch. There was an inability on our part to force a quick return of the cars. However, that does not appear to be a valid reason at this time. Surely, a group of people who have had the experience of running a railroad for as many years as the people running the CNR should be able to plan ahead and predict what use is going to be made of the cars. Surely, they should know from past experience that 40 or 50 days is an inordinately long time for a railway car to be sitting on a siding in the United States. It is being used as a warehouse, at per diem rate of approximately $7. This is done on a formal basis, but it comes to approximately $7 a day. CNR is renting boxcars for warehouse space at $7 a day. That is not very sensible planning. It does not take into account the need in this country.

The logging and lumber industry in the north is desperately trying to get out of the doldrums it has been in for the past few years. The provincial government in B.C. has recognized the detriment this situation is to our area by giving the forest resources to one or two large companies. It is now seeking to get into that monopoly position in order to get the small lumber operators back into business. A municipality in my area is seeking to get into the lumber business in order to take advantage of the opportunity to saw and ship lumber out of the region. Communities such as Smithers, Burns Lake and communities both north and south of Prince George are now struggling for some viability. They are being denied that opportunity by this government and Canadian National.

In the estimates for the current fiscal year, we passed an expenditure of $46 million to buy 2,000 hopper cars to ship grain. That is what it cost the taxpayers in Canada. I do not know the arrangements for leasing or renting these cars to CNR, CPR or any other railroad that moves grain, but the fact is the government of Canada responded to a shortage of railway cars for grain shipments. All we in northern British Columbia are asking for is similar consideration. We are disadvantaged because of a shortage of boxcars.

The provincial government in British Columbia foresaw this problem last spring. It took steps to deal with the matter at that time. By looking ahead, it knew there would be a shortage and there would likely be an additional shortage in the future. They moved to protect the interests of the communities in that area while CNR did its best to obscure and work against that concept. The British Columbia government recently began leasing 500 railway cars from a United States company. It is ridiculous that a national government, national parliament and national railway are unable or unwilling to cope with the question of a shortage of boxcars and are forcing a provincially owned railway to go to a foreign country to lease boxcars when they are built here in Canada. That is a ridiculous situation. It prompts me to ask whether anyone damn well cares what happens in this country. It certainly does not appear to be the case with respect to this government in view of its response to this problem.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) was asked about this the other day. His answer is recorded in Hansard. He replied that the railways have problems, everyone has problems and he does not know what to do about them. We tried to tell him what to do. Representations were made to the federal government. When this situation occurred before, the government appointed a boxcar co-ordinator. He had authority to give directions to the national railways of this nation to provide boxcars to areas short of them. We are again asking the Minister of Transport to appoint someone to the position of co-ordinator. I do not care what name is given to the position. He should have authority to look into the matter of boxcar shortages and give some direction to the railroads to ensure that the boxcars that belong to the people of this country are available to them, rather than having them on a siding somewhere for 40 or 50 days being used as warehouses.

Possibly someone from the Canadian Transport Commission could be appointed. I do not suggest the president, Mr. Benson, because he proved how incompetent he is when Minister of Finance. He is doing worse now. I suggest it should be someone with some expertise from the Canadian Transport Commission, a group that was set up to deal with transportation matters. This man should be sent to British Columbia, but not on a one-way ticket. We want him to come back. He should look at the situation and determine what is involved by talking to the mill owners, the Council of Forest Industries and the provincial government.

Mr. Rose: Send the standing committee.

Mr. Howard: I would not agree to that. The members of the standing committee are political people. They know the problem. It is the CTC and the Minister of Transport who do not know the problem. Possibly it would do some good to send the minister to western Canada. However, I do not want to get into an argument about who should go. I suggested someone from the CTC because that group was set up to function in this area.

Rather than wait until this bill gets to committee, we should demand right now that the CNR discontinue its pro rata system of distribution of boxcars. CNR should be asked why the sawmill companies on the northern line must truck their lumber to Prince George to be shipped in what few boxcars are available. They should be asked why the distribution of boxcars to mill points was discontinued. Why are mill owners being forced to pay between $5 and $15 a thousand to have their lumber hauled into Prince George when the railway runs right by their mills? Why did the railways scrap that system?

● (1550)

The minister is aware of all this if he reads his mail. In fact, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) gave him a directive to look into this situation. The Prime Minister referred the subject matter to the Minister of Transport a week or so ago. On the fifth day of October, a letter was sent to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister had no need, really, to refer that letter to the Minister of Transport, because the Minister of Transport already had a copy of it. But the Prime Minister formally said: That is Jean Marchand's baby and he will look after it.

In that letter sent to the Prime Minister by Alf. Nunweiler, who is the MLA for Fort George, all the facts are set out. Mr. Nunweiler knows the situation as intimately from the point of view of a railroader as can anybody, because he worked for the Canadian National for a number of years both in Smithers and in Prince George. This is his work every day, and he knows at first hand what the situation is. He says, in this letter:

> This is forcing industries from distant centres which already have a railway (BCR) on their millsites, to truck millions of feet of lumber to Prince George where the CNR then provides them with cars. At the moment, the CNR yards in Prince George are literally plugged with piles of lumber trucked in from places like Williams Lake, 100 Mile House, Quesnel, Hixon, Bear Lake, Mackenzie and others at exorbitant costs—about $5 to $15 per BFM, meaning higher cost of production.
>
> In past years, the CNR distributed cars for industry at these points on a pro-rata ratio based on regional loading needs to protect the regional economy and the public. Government railways are there to provide transportation services to the public, not to harass the public, especially in resource regions like this one where established railways are the lifeblood of the regional economy.

Such a well-respected and honoured group as the British Columbia Council of Forest Industries—I say it is well-respected, certainly, in government and Liberal party circles—says in a telex sent both to the Canadian Pacific and to the CNR that, whereas the CN used to distribute boxcars for the lumber industry on the basis of 40 per cent to mills on the CN line and 60 per cent to mill sites on the B.C. Rail line through the connection at Prince George, the distribution of cars on that basis has been discontinued. As I say, this is forcing people to bring lumber into Prince George. Mr. Speaker, there are 400 million feet of lumber sitting on the ground. Right away there is a need for 4,000 boxcars to move it out to shipping points.

Let us talk in terms of the loss of money to the area. Lumber mill operators have lost millions of potential dollars because they cannot get the lumber out to shipping points and sales centres. They cannot get it into the United States or eastern Canada. Lumber prices have been slipping lately. And all these losses arise because Canadian National has been sitting on that portion of its anatomy which does the least good—I used a much shorter word on an earlier occasion; everybody knows what it is, so there is no point in repeating it.

The only response the Minister of Transport has given the House so far has been to throw up his hands and say: Everybody has problems, Mr. Speaker. Oh, the actual words he used are in Hansard; he did not use those words, but that is what they amounted to. Even the B.C. Railway has difficulties, he told us. This is why I was prompted to say that the B.C. Railway had the foresight last spring to look ahead and prepare to deal with the problem, but not the government whose ministers sit over there and not the Canadian National. It is a sad state of affairs.

All we are asking for is the same sort of consideration as the federal government extends when it comes to the movement of grain. Maybe not even that. I do not mean we should dig into the public treasury right now and put out $46 million to build 2,000 cars—as a matter of fact, if we were to build flatcars we could build many more than that for $46 million. This does not appear to be the answer. What I am asking for is the appointment of someone as overseer who can say to the Canadian National, in this instance, or to the Canadian Pacific to the extent they are involved: In the national interest and in the regional interest you will provide boxcars in this area where they are needed. That is all. I am asking for the same consideration as has been given to grain farmers on a number of occasions. Why should northern British Columbia continue to suffer and be disadvantaged because of, first, the incompetence of the senior management when it comes to looking beyond the end of their noses and, second, the aloofness of the federal government which so far, has done nothing but say: Everybody has problems.

May we not expect a little response to be forthcoming this afternoon, through you, Mr. Speaker? I know the Minister of Transport came to the House in the hope of entering this debate and telling us why this difficulty continues to exist. I, for one, will listen with the most rapt attention I could possibly give. I trust he will assure us that the problem is on the way to being solved in British Columbia—that we do not need to worry about this any more. Will the minister say that?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, I can say that in a few words, if you will allow me to do so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the minister proposing to make a speech? I do not want to become too technical, but possibly the minister should make his observations by way of a question to the hon. member.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately for the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) I never used the words he attributed to me. Indeed, I never said anything comparable to them. I just explained the reason for the shortage of rail cars in British Columbia. I gave two or three reasons, the first being the growth in the activity of the industry. A year or two ago this was forecast at 6 per cent. It turned out to be around 14 per cent. This was the first mistake. Everybody made this mistake. There is great activity, great prosperity, a real boom. The CNR did not forecast it. The BCR did not forecast it. Neither did the CPR. Even the British Columbia government did not forecast such a rate of growth.

The second reason is that all the railways order cars which will be used exclusively for the carriage of lumber. The CN ordered 2,000 cars of which more than 1,000 would have been used only for lumber transportation. I believe the BCR ordered 1,500 rail cars for lumber, and the CPR ordered around 1,000. But because of the strike in the steel industry, delivery of these cars could not be obtained. I believe the railway strike, too, was responsible for a good deal of the backlog. These are the reasons I put forward—not because "Everybody has problems"; I never said that. The answer I gave was the one I have just re-stated. The hon. member for Skeena says 4,000 cars are needed immediately. I would like him to indicate to me how I can, in a short time, get 4,000 cars for that part of British Columbia. If he can suggest any means of achieving that objective, I am ready to adopt it tomorrow.

● (1600)

Mr. Howard: That is a most interesting question. Let me deal with two aspects of it. In the first place, I said that there is sufficient lumber on the ground now that it would take 4,000 boxcars to move it. I did not say "Put 4,000 boxcars in tomorrow"; do not be ridiculous. But there is that volume of lumber sitting there, and according to estimates it would take up to 4,000 cars to move that lumber.

Secondly, it seems to me that the minister and the government cannot have it both ways. He told us a moment ago that nobody could foresee what was going to take place. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) could see; that is what his budget last spring was all about. This is the Minister of Finance's persistent answer in the House these days about economic questions. He hearkens back to the spring of this year and says "We predicted this and it is going to get better in 1974". The Minister of Transport cannot turn around and say "We didn't foresee that; we didn't know". Of course he knew, and the government of British Columbia knew. The premier of B.C. is president of the B.C. railroad. That railroad took action in the spring of this year—

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The same for CN.

Mr. Howard: —and had cars built. The premier set up the machinery for building them. The CN did nothing of the sort. CN may have put in an order to somebody to build the cars, but the minister cannot rely on some kind of steel strike for the fact the cars were not built. Canadian National took no such parallel action.

A little while ago the British Columbia railroad leased 500 cars from the United States. It was forced to do so because this government is apparently unable or unwilling to do anything to get the cars needed. Instead of the minister standing up and repeating like a parrot what Canadian Nation tells him, if that is what he is doing, I ask him to appoint somebody to go out to British Columbia to look at the situation on the ground, to talk with the people there and see what is involved.

Mr. Paproski: Send Chrétien.

Mr. Howard: If he sends the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) we would get a lot more action than we would out of the Minister of Transport. He may not be doing anything in the field of Indian affairs, but he could deal with this problem; he has lots of time on his hands.

I see the Minister of Transport leaving now. Is he going out to B.C.?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, I am going to B.C.

Mr. Howard: Good. Seriously, Mr. Speaker, all we are asking the minister to do is to take some deliberate action, ministerial action if he likes, or Governor in Council action if that is what is involved, to appoint someone, whether from the Canadian Transport Commission or some other body, who is not connected with CN, the B.C. railroad or the provincial government, to look at the situation, see what is involved. This person should have the authority of a co-ordinator of boxcar movements to ensure that sufficient boxcars are available to move this lumber. Surely, there cannot have been such a lack of planning on the part of CN that the reason for the shortage of boxcars, as the CN has said on more than one occasions, is firstly demand, and secondly, the increase in the time needed to ship lumber to the U.S. and receive the empty cars back.

This was the point I was making initially. All the CN has to do under the inter-railway agreement on how much each railway charges the other for use of the cars on a per diem basis is to work out an accelerated per diem rate so that it is more costly to keep those cars in the United States to warehouse the lumber than it is to empty the cars and ship them back to Canada so we can use them. Let not inaction on the part of the minister, this government and CN permit what is a viable, developing industry in this part of B.C. to slacken off and stagnate. This does not take histrionics on the part of the minister as he tells us what he said or did not say; we want a response to this uncomplicated kind of request.

Perhaps the minister went out of the chamber to take this action, and if that is the case I am sure we would move quickly toward finding a solution to the problem. The minister does not need to ask me a rhetorical question such as whether I can tell him how he can get 4,000 cars there tomorrow, because I cannot. I do not want 4,000 cars there tomorrow, and even if I did it would be impossible to get them there. Not only that, it would be stupid in the extreme because there would be no place to put them. Boxcars have to flow in and out of the area commensurate with ability to load them. All we are requesting is a continual flow of boxcars so the lumber can be loaded and shipped out to the markets of North America, instead of letting the economic activity of the area to slacken off.

● (1610)

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, as all other hon. members, I have looked at Bill C-164 which reminds us that our railway companies operations, particularly those of the Canadian National, are not self-financing.

Before coming to the House in 1965 and during the first years of my mandate, I thought incompetence was causing this unpleasant situation. That is indeed what one is led to believe upon analyzing only the official figures the Canadian National releases in its annual report. However a comparison of those reports made me realize that Canadian National administrators are highly competent people and remarkable figure jugglers. According to statements by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and many of his Liberal colleagues, the CNR would now have the best administration of all times and our country would never have been so wealthy.

Then, Mr. Speaker, how come a railway company operating in such good conditions does not succeed in making both ends meet? To ask this question is to answer it. It is obvious that the Canadian people are simply cheated by such statements. If CNR administrators were badly paid, one might say: it is our fault. But it is not so, for even the President gets a suitable salary.

Mr. Speaker, it is often said that years follow each other but are very different. This is normal. But it is not normal, in my opinion, that the CN balance sheets are the same every year.

In 1962, the CNR had brought forward a balance sheet that shows a deficit of about $6 million, while working expenses had been reasonable and the gross national production amounted to $40 billion.

In 1971, while the gross national product had increased to $93 billion in an inflationnary time, after moving twice as many goods as during the period 1962-63 at rates that had also doubled, the Canadian National again succeeded in providing us with a table indicating $24 million deficit.

Mr. Speaker, this year, a particularly prosperous year under a Liberal administration, their financial statement indicated a $17 million deficit. For instance, if we refer to the statement of 1968 when the CNR stole $371 million from the fund of its retired employees, we find also a table showing again that the deficit was about the same as this year's.

If misappropriating $371 million is not reflected in the assets or liabilities of a balance sheet, I feel we should ask ourselves some questions. And I think that an investigation conducted by the RCMP will give an answer to our questions. If the Americans treated themselves to a Watergate, we, Canadians, should treat ourselves to the same. If we consider the financial statement of the CNR for the fiscal year 1970-71, we will see about the same deficit, that is $29 million. However, we all know that it was not a lucky year but instead a derailment year. I would like to quote from an Appendix to the Debates of the Senate, on Tuesday May 15, 1973. They give a list of derailments involving expenditures of $50,000 or more in 1970-71.

After adding the expenses incurred as a result of recent derailments throughout Canada, either in the Atlantic, St. Lawrence, Great Lakes, Prairies, Rockies areas, the total amount of $13,692,000 is reached and this only in accidents amounting to $50,000 and over. It is rather strange that we find almost the same causes for derailments in all provinces. We note that in the St. Lawrence area as in that of the Great Lakes, the Rockies or the Atlantic, they were caused by broken or burnt axles.

Now it is evident that from Vancouver to Halifax, axles require the same care; they must be lubricated. No private railway would allow its cars to run with non-lubricated axles. If it is not done today it is because the mechanics responsible for the maintenance of trains have been transferred; they are fewer. If you have the opportunity to talk with one of them, he will tell you: I did all I could but the train left before I had time to check half the axles. That is why the axles burn, the trains derail, which involved losses amounting to $13 million in 1970-71.

Here is another serious cause of derailment which is often referred to in the report I already mentioned: rail breakage. Rail breakages occur in the Atlantic area, in the Rockies and in the St. Lawrence area. Finally, the cause is always the same: the reduction in the number of linesmen and railwaymen. The number is almost always the same by shifts, but the distance that each shift must look after has tripled; therefore, they are unable to do their job adequately. These men work at the end of their rail section when they know there might be someting urgent they should do at the other end. They are often unable to get there because some urgent matters have to be attended to at a given place. When there are 40 to 50 miles of track to maintain, obviously, if they take two days looking after 15 miles, there will remain 30 which will not be maintained and then accidents may happen.

Some regional superintendents have obtained their position through influence and unfortunately, these fellows are two often unaware of the work required for the maintenance of railway tracks. For several of those who have reached the top without any effort, rails, railways, all that just happened. So, to them, something that just happens to be does not require any maintenance.

For reasons of economy, I repeat, they have laid off railwaymen, brigades have been reduced as the French would put it, which has led to the difficulties that we are experiencing now, namely too many accidents, and passengers who still have the courage to use this mode of transportation are risking their lives.

Besides, a great many more inspectors were appointed. Even station masters are supervised. An inspector used to look into the cash box which was under the station master's care. As its contents range from $100 to $300 this was not so serious and it was checked once a year. Even if these station masters have sometimes paid $10,000 to $15,000 in to the retirement fund, we have reached the point where these men are mistrusted and an inspector visits the stations about once a month so as to check their contents. Mr. Speaker, I repeat that the number of inspectors has increased so much that we are now under the impression that the Canadian National Railways have now become a second Canadian Senate, with the difference that many of these inspectors do not know each other. Then, you will say: They may not know each other because the country is so big. But it is not because of the size of the country; their number is now so great that if they knew one another, they would be ashamed to go out and do the work that is requested of them. Even in the city of Montreal, they are now spying on each other, apparently without knowing anybody.

Canadian National Railways and Air Canada

● (1620)

Mr. Speaker, last spring, I gave to all the members of this House a letter sent to me by a group of railroad workers. This group did not want to sign the letter. I learned the author's name three weeks later because Canadian National employees are scared, it seems. I would like to quote from this letter which I finally gave to all other members after having it translated for the benefit of English-speaking members. This letter said, and I quote:

> Our Members of Parliament have taken an oath to serve the interests of Canada, therefore of the people in general.
>
> The Canadian National, a Crown corporation, seems more than sick in its administration having become the property of a small group of about 2,500 officers who eat up and suck the receipts—company cars, paid expenses—so in order to try and cope with that plague of small bosses an attempt was made to cut down on indispensable people at lower echelons, namely linesmen, car inspectors, station masters, with the result that we know: accidents over accidents. And who pays the bill? Naturally, the bill comes back before Parliament. Even Canadian National officers can boast that our Members of Parliament are in Ottawa only for a while and that they are there to stay.

Furthermore, that group points out that their unions show signs of advanced decay. Why are they trying to protect companies to the detriment of employees? Then they come up with this answer: We have seen the acceptance of new pension plans that presently benefit only those who have 45 to 50 years of service and others to come in 25 or 30 years. What about those who have retired and are being prematurely pushed into the grave through all sorts of devious means? Furthermore, a train accident brings around seven or eight white hats and three or four workers who have their fill with that disgusting administration.

Union leaders are at the mercy of railway companies to ensure survival because those companies suck the pay cheques of the employees to pay the big union leaders. That is why they became weak before the railways and an important group of experienced workers suffer so much.

Why did the vice-president of the Canadian National want so much to discuss pension funds alone and behind closed doors with the unions?

A royal commission should be set up to investigate the relations between those gentlemen. Why is it necessary to die before you have a retirement to live?

Why did a station master retire a few years ago with an annual pension of $1,200 after 47 years of service, while the former president, Mr. Donald Gordon, retired with a pension of $20,000 a year after 15 years of service. Why?

Only the passing of an act could do justice to the needy railroad employees whose services are no longer required, unless they are forced to start all over again. What happened to our oath?

They call on hon. members and try to gain their support.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, many CNR employees sent us their comments about their superannuation fund. Compared with the possible retirement of Quebec Provincial Police employees, for instance, where a person is eligible for superannuation after 25 years of service, CNR employees are seeking voluntary retirement after 30 years of service. Canadian Armed Forces personnel are eligible for pension after 20 years of service.

I repeat, 20 years of service in the Armed Forces and 25 years in the Quebec Provincial Police. It is evident that the same privilege could be given to the railway employees who, in short, were also in the employ of the public service, night and day, during all their working life.

The old system under which the total pension could be paid only at the age of 65 is outmoded, in fact the majority of railway workers die before they reach that age.

A few days ago, the booklet entitled In memoriam, published this month by the railway companies, showed us that the people who are still working are right, as it gives a list of the deceased. The first nine on the list, who died in recent months, were aged 55, 52, 54, 49, 58, 53, 55, 45 and 51. The last six on the list were aged 45, 51, 55, 54, 57 and 51.

The CN financial statement is also proof that the employees die rather young. Indeed the 1971 statement reveals that only $75 million were paid to retired employees while during the same period, the Canadian National collected $261 million for a pension fund of $1.454 billion.

Mr. Speaker, I think those employees toiled hard throughout their life; we are happy to support them in their claims and I believe they are right. Considering that the Montreal stevedores who were laid off last year got their full pension because the company could do without their services, I suggest similar measures could be applied in some cases of dismissals or transfers within the Canadian National.

It is obvious that the CN needs money and this bill proves it. However, we should support this bill on condition that we really agree that the Canadian National should get the credits they are asking for, provided they promise to look after all employee applications.

[English]

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I should warn you that because I represent a part of Canada where we have some very serious transportation problems, especially in connection with the CNR, I shall forgo the luxury of speaking extensively about what is happening in the rest of Canada. Other hon. members who have spoken before me have done a good job in pointing out to the House some of the transportation problems which they are facing in their areas. It is rather strange that the previous speaker, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) who represents one of the most westerly parts of this country, and I, who represent the most easterly part of Canada, both have problems in our areas that are pretty well the same. It seems strange also that the culprit in our area in the east is the CNR and that in their case it is CN and the CPR.

The other day the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Lewis) replied in his usual eloquent way to the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on his return from China and said that Canada has a history without any colonial connections. He said that Canada had no connection with colonizing people or exploiting them to blacken the pages of its history. I am sure that is correct in the context in which the statement was made, but I am afraid that in certain parts of this country this government is guilty of the worst kind of colonialism which is exemplified by its attitude toward the Atlantic area and the other underdeveloped parts of Canada.

[Mr. Godin.]

I cannot think of any other factor that has played a more regressive role in the development of eastern Canada, particularly in the development of my province of Newfoundland, than the policy of the CNR, or, maybe I should say, the lack of a policy on-the-part of this government in matters of transportation. We all heard the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) give the Newfoundland members advice some weeks ago when, in answer to questions regarding the ferry service connecting Port aux Basques with Newfoundland, he asked: "Why don't you learn to swim"? Of course, the minister must realize that that kind of advice does not go down too well in Newfoundland, nor would it go down well in any part of Canada, I suppose.

In Newfoundland we have a very serious situation at present because of the freight backlog that has now piled up in North Sydney, despite the fact that the minister elects to ignore this and tried to give the impression that all is well. This backlog does exist, and it exists at the expense of people living in Newfoundland who are now paying more for their food and other necessities of life than are any other people in Canada. The transportation system is such that it contributes to a large extent to our having to pay more than any other province for our foodstuffs, our building materials and other necessities. I have always held the view that the 90 miles of water that separates our province from the rest of Canada should be treated as any other part of the Trans-Canada highway, because to us it is the same as any other 90 mile stretch of that highway. Therefore, it is my feeling that it should not cost us any more to travel that 90 miles, or transport goods over that 90 miles, than it would cost people living in other parts of Canada to transport goods and themselves over a comparable distance of the Trans-Canada highway.

● (1630)

This afternoon during the question period I asked the Minister of Transport about the Argentia-North Sydney ferry. The minister complains that Canadian National does not have sufficient ships to move the goods bound for Newfoundland that are now stockpiling in North Sydney. He complains that there are inadequate storage areas and not sufficient facilities. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, there is a ferry service operating out of Argentia, which is part of my riding, to North Sydney and back, but it operates only four months of the year. There, we have a multimillion dollar facility that is lying dormant eight months of every year.

I contend that Canadian National, and of course the Department of Transport, should give immediate consideration to the possibility of having that ferry service operate on a year round basis. Not only would that have the effect of providing additional, badly needed service to the province, but it would also have the effect of eliminating some of the heavy traffic that is now using the Trans-Canada highway in Newfoundland, turning it into a very dangerous highway. I contend that freight bound for the eastern half of the province should be rerouted through St. John's, and Argentia.

Another important factor in our province is the coastal fleet. I wish to take a few moments to explain what it represents to us. We have 7,000 miles of coastline around the province of Newfoundland and Labrador. Along that coast we have approximately 1,000 settlements, some small and some large. Under the Terms of Union in 1949, the Canadian government undertook to provide good passenger and freight service to and from our province and around our province. Although both Canadian National and the Minister of Transport will deny this, we now find that there appears to be a move afoot to phase out the coastal service which looks after the transportation needs of people living in a large number of these 1,000 communities that dot the coastline.

Since 1956, eleven ships have been discarded and taken out of service completely, with only three replacements being provided. This would suggest that Canadian National is now about to do the same thing with our coastal fleet service as it did with our railway passenger service in 1969 and 1970. Canadian National is now subcontracting some of this work to private ship owners. Of course, in this way control over the quality of service is lost by Canadian National.

Under the Terms of Union the federal government has a definite obligation to ensure that this service is maintained. Canada obligated itself to provide an adequate passenger and freight service to and from our province. At that time we were not dealing with Canadian National. Now, the Minister of Transport tries to shed the government's responsibility, pointing to the inability of Canadian National to provide adequate ships. I repeat that the people of Newfoundland did not negotiate with Canadian National; they negotiated with the Canadian Government.

We negotiated with the government of Canada which at that time gave an undertaking—not subject to the whims of Canadian National, not subject to there being no strikes by Canadian National, and not subject to the dictates of Canadian National,—but that the government would provide a first rate service to our province to move passengers and freight. I contend it has fallen down on that obligation because the service we are now getting is anything but adequate. Indeed, it is very inadequate.

It is becoming more obvious to those of us who live in the so-called have-not areas, the disadvantaged, underdeveloped parts of this country, that we are supposed to continue to be the tools of Upper Canada, that we are not supposed to become developed to the point where we might provide competition to other parts of Canada which traditionally have used the Atlantic area as a dumping ground for their goods. This is a sad commentary on Confederation, that certain parts of Canada appear to be kept underdeveloped, appear not to be encouraged to become developed simply because of the whims of the vested interests and the power brokers in central Canada, particularly those in the federal cabinet.

Before closing I have a few other points I wish to mention. I wish to refer specifically to the Canadian National dock operation in St. John's. I understand that this is the only operation of its kind under the jurisdiction of Canadian National. The reason for that is that Canadian National inherited the dockyard at the time of Confederation. St. John's, the riding which I have the honour to represent, could very well become the service station of the Atlantic so far as shipping and ship repairs are concerned. Our position on the Atlantic lends itself completely to our becoming that, but despite the great potential of the area and of the dockyard, very few improvements have been made at the dockyard since Confederation. Machinery has become obsolete. There has been no worthwhile expansion, or extensions, no great effort by Canadian National to get business for the dockyard, or to advertise its services and its strategic position. Consequently, I fear that it will eventually be phased out.

We find that the morale of the people working there is very low. They are unhappy because, as the hon. member for Skeena said earlier, there appear to be more chiefs than Indians. If you walk through this operation you see a lot more white hats than yellow hats on the job. The workers are becoming unhappy and disenchanted. This is unfortunate because the dockyard represents an important part of the economy of St. John's, of my riding, and of Newfoundland in general. If the government and Canadian National do not inject new life into this operation, advertise its potential and capability, I am afraid it will disappear. This will be unfortunate because of the serious effect it will have on the economy of the province, and particularly on the city of St. John's.

● (1640)

In the terms of union between Newfoundland and Canada, the province undertook to do certain things. We have not reneged on our commitments, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian government undertook to provide certain services, and I contend now that it has reneged, particularly in respect of its transportation policy, to the detriment of the province. Like the other maritime provinces, Newfoundland cannot achieve its true potential without an efficient, modern transportation service. It can never hope to attain the status of a "have" province unless and until the federal government recognizes its responsibility as far as transportation is concerned. The situation is unfortunate and I suppose it prevails in other parts of the country as well.

I am not suggesting that ours is the only province with transportation problems or the only province that has a fight with Canadian National. I have listened to other members so I know that the same situation prevails pretty well right across Canada. But, Mr. Speaker, our province depends very much on a transportation service. It is an island, so we cannot jump in our cars in St. John's and drive to Toronto; we have to contend with the 90 miles of water that separates Newfoundland from the mainland of Canada. That is why I think this government has a very special obligation to our province to provide a fast, efficient, modern transportation service. The gulf which separates our province from the mainland must be taken into consideration.

I do not think it is enough for the Minister of Transport to shrug his shoulders and pretend that all is well or just tell Newfoundlanders that they should learn to swim and stop complaining. The suggestion made by the hon. member for Skeena that members of the Canadian Transport Commission should leave their ivory towers in Ottawa and get around the country to see what is happening so that they can deal with some of the problems is a good one. I would welcome the opportunity to greet the Canadian Transport Commission in Newfoundland and let them have a firsthand look at the problems there. They could see the problems created by the removal of our rail passenger service. They might even be so brave as to ride on the CN bus service. I do not think they would last the journey, but I should like to see them try it.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I should like to invite the Canadian Transport Commission to Newfoundland and Labrador to see for themselves the problems with which we have to contend. If they would do, that I am sure they would be able to recommend to the minister and the government some major improvements in this country's transportation policy as it applies to Newfoundland.

Mr. Keith Taylor (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity this House has had to discuss Bill C-164 and more particularly the Canadian National Railways and Air Canada since 1970. As a new member I am not familiar with the ways of this government but I find their leadership in this House and the leadership they have provided to the Canadian National Railways and Air Canada is nothing short of appalling and deplorable. The government's lack of concern is evidenced by this particular bill. If this is a sample of the leadership they are providing to the executive of the CNR and Air Canada, whoever that may happen to be at the moment, I am sure those executives must be as frustrated and confused as is this House concerning the future of this country's transportation system.

Like most people in western Canada, my hopes were heightened by the press releases from the government early this year in which we were promised certain conferences from which great benefits were supposed to flow. For several days, we watched the ministers on television giving press conferences and issuing statement after statement about what they were going to do to rectify the problems in the west, particularly those relating to transportation. I am sure that any member of parliament from western Canada who had the opportunity to attend any meetings with that group got around to discussing the transportation system and its related problems.

At the conference, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) made various announcements, including what everyone took to be an announcement that there would be a freight rate freeze for at least 18 months. It was not very long before we found that the freeze was not a freeze after all, but merely an attempt at a public relations exercise. The freeze is not there in fact, and, of course, again the announcement has worked to the detriment of all Canadians, and western Canadians in particular.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, authorizes the expenditure by Canadian National Railways and its related systems of some $468 million in the period ending July 1, 1974. That amount will be added to the current $1.8 billion in capital debt. The bill further simply gives a blank cheque to the government to pay all the operating deficiencies of the CNR during that time.

I do not know what happens as far as these expenditures are concerned and will be interested to find out the details in committee. We are looking at a bill which authorizes the expenditure of some $225 million in the year 1973, and yet there are only two months of that year left and the bill still has not gone through this House. I am sure it is evident to everyone that it is not because members on this side did not demand that this matter be referred to the committee to be dealt with as speedily as possible. Here we are, with the government bringing to us an authorization to spend $225 million after the time for spending it has expired. We do not know whether the money has in fact been spent without the authorization of parliament or whether it is awaiting the approval of this House. It is a serious matter and shows the total lack of leadership of this government.

The same applies to the other expenditures. None of the provisions in the bill indicate in any way what is to happen to these capital expenditures in so far as any attempt at repayment or reorganization is concerned. There is simply an authorization to spend money. Terms of repayment are not indicated. Presumably this money will be added to the already overbearing debt which the organization must carry. That debt will be carried from year to year, and will cost the system millions of dollars in interest, which it must pay merely to carry on from day to day as at present.

● (1650)

As I said, this transport system is vitally important for the economic development of western Canada and for ensuring the day-to-day living of those in western Canada. Western Canadians, every bit as much as others in this country, must rely on an adequate transport system if they are to obtain the necessities of life. Nothing showed the truth of this more clearly than the recent railway strike. The people of many areas were literally at the point of starvation, because they could not obtain the necessities of life. This applies particularly to my area of northern Manitoba. We rely heavily on the Canadian National system. Many localities are served only by that system. True, there is a limited amount of air transport, but its capabilities cannot match those of the railway. These communities rely almost totally on the CN, the only railway operating in the area.

We quickly found that without the railway operating, without our being able to receive vital supplies, it was almost impossible for the residents of certain areas to carry on normal day-to-day living. Someone suggested that they could use air transport; however, as the fuel for the aircraft had to be delivered by rail, it was impossible to use aircraft to any great extent.

I want to refer to some specific complaints about the rail system. Let me say, first, that it is clear that local officials of CN are aware of the problems of the system and are doing their best to make changes which will remove some difficulties. However, the co-operation they have obtained from various agencies, particularly government agencies, is such that they have not been able to do very much for us, even though they are aware of the problem and sympathize with the residents of our area who experience difficulties.

Because the population of my area is limited, the railway has had to make small shipments to small communities. Because of high labour and maintenance costs associated with rail facilities, a number of shipping points have been closed and points to which and from which one may ship are ever farther apart. Moreover, the railway is refusing to accept responsibility for goods shipped to certain areas. It has withdrawn its agents and in some cases, has not provided an adequate replacement service to serve those areas affected. The result is that many shipments are delayed. Sometimes goods must be shipped two or three times before they are received by the intended recipient. This has created hardship, especially as in many cases one can ship only by rail, there being no alternate method.

The situation in the Port of Churchill, in my constituency, is critical. The railway is the only facility for transporting heavy goods. In our case, rail rates are specifically designed to discourage small shipments. In the southern areas where small shipments can be sent by truck or alternate means, Canadian National rates are different. In my area they are such as to discourage small shipments by rail. Because the railway provides the only practical means of transport for the residents of northern Manitoba, they must pay prohibitive rates, the result being almost intolerable freight rate increases which have been imposed in the last few years. However, we have no choice. When you live in the north, you pay and grumble, and that is as far as it goes. You cannot do more.

It is true that the railway serves isolated areas; that is evident if one examines the rate structure that the railway insists on using. Of course, the railway justifies the rate it charges by saying, even though there is no alternative means of transport, that the rate is competitive. I ask—competitive with what? At one time only the railway served Thompson, Manitoba. Subsequently a highway was built and goods were shipped in by road. Let us compare that community with Lynn Lake, Manitoba, which is about as far from major shipping centres as Thompson is. The result of competition in the case of Thompson was this: freight rates applicable to Thompson, Manitoba, were approximately one half of those applicable to Lynn Lake, where there was no competition. That shows what is happening to our remote areas. They have had to put up with the present state of affairs. Despite the efforts of various groups in the affected communities to rectify the situation, we have not been able to do very much. I think I speak for every member of the House when I say it is high time something was done to rectify the situation. May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Agriculture—Milk subsidy—Reason for delay in application to Prince Edward Island; the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight)— Grain—Wheat—Suggested change in crop year to equalize payments to farmers who made early deliveries; the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn)—Labour Conditions—Suggested increase in minimum wage.

If being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills. I understand that there is agreement about the order to be considered. Perhaps it could be stated and approved, and we could proceed to it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as nobody else has risen to speak, may I say that I believe the agreement is that we proceed to Order No. 7, the bill in the name of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

NEWS SOURCES PROTECTION ACT

MEASURES TO PROTECT JOURNALISTS FROM COMPULSION TO DISCLOSE NEWS SOURCES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved that Bill C-41, to provide for the protection of news sources (press privilege), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, never in history have the democracies depended so much on the dissemination of news in order to protect democracy. The United States for many years followed the English tradition of permitting freedom of the press and freedom of speech. The United States has protected that freedom by embodying it in the first amendment of its constitution. The subject was considered of such importance that it was embodied in the first amendment. Until recently, the United States courts always honoured the concept of confidentiality of news sources.

In Canada, this subject has not been as important as it has become south of the border, perhaps partly because of our colder climate and partly because or our less vigorous nature. I hope it also has something to do with the honesty of the Canadian people, something which may not be shown by our southern neighbours. However, Canadians should be no less vigilant in protecting their sources of news than the American congress was with its first amendment. This protection has been challenged in recent years. There are now 55 bills in congress, the purpose of which is to protect news sources in the United States. This situation results from a recent split decision in the Supreme Court which upheld the contention that newsmen must disclose the source of their information.

News Sources Protection Act

● (1700)

Only this month there were news leaks in the United States indicating that an investigation was being made into the financial dealings of the vice-president of that country. Those news leaks which were presented to the American public by a number of newspaper reporters resulted in the hastening of the case against the vice-president which subsequently culminated in his resignation from the second highest office in the United States. Possibly we should look very carefully at what is happening in Canada.

If we had the type of newspaper reporters in Canada that there are in the United States, I am sure they would be asking some very interesting questions about the CNR method of financing. One reason this matter has not been before the committee for a considerable period is that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) fired the auditors for the CNR. These auditors were appointed by the previous Minister of Finance. Without much explanation in the press or in this House, those auditors were disposed of and no new auditors have been appointed. Although there has been a lot of discussion, it is interesting to note that the CNR has not been granted any money by this parliament for the past two and a half years. This has never happened before.

In the United States, some newspapermen would have looked into the reasons for the firing of the old auditors and possibly the reason for the appointment of the new auditors of CNR. Obviously, someone made the appointment and obviously someone disagreed with it, but no one is looking into the reasons. Possibly this raises the question of whether we have a really responsible press in Canada. I do not know whether this is the fault of the newspapers or the reporters.

It has been a long time since I have heard of the Toronto Star hiring a train or plane to go somewhere to get a story. Although there has been a fairly active war going on for some time, with the exception of reporters in Tel Aviv, there have been no reporters in the Arab countries. Possibly the newspapers are not interested in sending reporters. It is interesting to note that neither the newspapers nor the CBC have seen fit to give actual reports from the battlefield. Maybe we have a different kind of press and what is happening in the United States cannot be duplicated in Canada. Possibly it should be. I think all members will agree with members of the United States senate and congress that one of the fundamental rights that must be maintained is to allow the press to make investigations. Obviously, they must have some source of information and that information should be protected.

Not too long ago in Canada we had a tempest in a teapot. It involved newsmen who over-reacted to police guidelines. As a result of a meeting, the Canadian police association decided to approach the heads of major newspapers. Most of them, certainly the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, agreed the police should have some say in what news is made public and that the police should be in a position to restrict the publication of any news. This caused quite a fuss. It is interesting to note that initially the Globe and Mail thought this was a good idea. There were a number of faults with the way the FLQ situation in Quebec was handled. As a result of that, it was agreed there should be some co-operation between the police and the news media so there would be no interference with the police in the discharge of their duties. It was not very long until the newsmen had second thoughts.

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Pierre Juneau, the chairman of the CRTC, had some thoughts on the matter. He decided to investigate the Canadian Association of Broadcasters submissiveness to the directive suggested by the chiefs of police. It is interesting to note that in the discussions that took place, no one pointed out that the public have a right to know what is happening. There was agreement that the police had the right to decide what news should be published in the public's interest. I suggest this has not been to the advantage of the public in other countries.

In the case of former vice-president Spiro Agnew, he advised his lawyers to serve subpoenas on the attorney general, officials of the justice department and a large number of newspapers and reporters. I wish to quote what one newspaper reporter had to say:

> Executives of news organizations whose reporters were subpoenaed yesterday unanimously condemned the action, charging the subpoenas violated the Constitution's First Amendment guarantee of freedom of the press and that the disclosure of confidential sources would cripple reporters' ability to gather news.

Other comments were made at that time. However, it is interesting to note that the police, the justice department and others all co-operated in dropping many of the charges against Spiro Agnew in return for his resignation as vice president and the fact that he repay some of the money he owed the tax department. In the United States the situation will probably result in either the assassination or the resignation or the impeachment of the President of the United States—or hara-kiri. Public knowledge of Watergate and the surrounding circumstances only came about because sources were available to the press, which, in turn, published statements containing information which was already available to many of the senior people in the government. The consequence was a hue and cry and the development of a public opinion which totally rejected the type of action which was being taken as exemplified by Watergate.

● (1710)

I could refer to a number of other situations which have developed in the United States, including the Pentagon papers which were exposed originally by the press, much against the wishes of the Justice Department. People have gone to jail because of their refusal to disclose sources of information in this connection. The same is true with respect to a number of other important documents.

In the course of his job, a reporter for any of the news media, whether radio, television, newspapers or periodicals, would, if his work was being done properly, be charged by his editor with getting a story and developing news. He would not merely be asked to report superficial events, as happens most of the time in Canada today. He would be instructed to develop this story himself. In so doing, he would find it necessary to search out a number of news sources, and these sources, I suggest, would become very scarce indeed if they thought that the reporter to whom they gave information would say, under pressure in court: Well, I do not want to go to jail, so I will name my sources as being so-and-so.

It is obvious, therefore, that if society is to benefit from in-depth reporting, reporters must enjoy the right to withhold information concerning their sources. Editors of some of the largest newspapers in the United States are saying that one of the fastest ways of removing the problem which has arisen in that country is to allow a large number of their reporters to go to jail. They believe the reaction from the public would be strong enough to change the present state of affairs. I could list a number of cases in the United States of reporters being sent to jail for refusing to reveal the sources of their information, cases involving such things as fraud in connection with the development of parks, cases where commissioners and other elected officials had been guilty of taking bribes.

There is, of course, the recent case of Spiro Agnew, who had taken bribes, and the indication the public has received in the last day or two that President Nixon may have received a political pay-off for allowing the price of milk to rise in the United States, not to mention the pay-off he may have received for allowing Hughes to develop gambling casinos. Hon. members may recall investigations by newspapers into numbers rackets, into the Mafia, into the wholesale importation of drugs from Mexico. In this last instance the police were able to secure a jail sentence for the reporter concerned because he refused to disclose the source of his information.

It seems to me we are seeing the press in the United States acting in a much more responsible manner than one would have thought possible. It was not Congress, it was not the judiciary, It was not the CIA or the FBI which broke all the major stories involving corruption and other acts which were placing democracy itself in jeopardy. It is the press which made these disclosures, resulting, in many cases, in the arrest, or, what is more important, in the elimination from office of persons whose operations, if continued, might eventually prevent democracy from functioning.

In Canada, too, there is a crying need for reporters who set the highest standards for their work. Maybe we should examine the performance of the press in Canada. I certainly give the CTV full credit for initiative in a recent venture. I think what they were doing was trying to force members of my party, who are probably more willing to undertake crusades than others, to do something about a situation which those responsible for the program believe is getting out of hand in Canada, a subject which parliament has not really considered very closely or intelligently.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They bungled it.

Mr. Peters: They bungled it, but I give them full credit for having tried. With the Conservatives, I imagine they did better. But that is just a guess.

There must be some investigative body working to see that democracy functions in the best possible manner. I do not believe the press in Canada has played such a role for a number of years, but I am as hopeful as are, I am sure, all members of the press and all members of this House that reporters and the news media in general will continue to develop in the field of investigative journalism so as to bring about a strengthening of the democracy upon which we depend. In a democracy, an informed public is a necessity, and if we fail to ensure the provision to the Canadian public of the information and knowledge necessary to enable each citizen to form his views in an intelligent way, democracy will quickly find itself in difficulty. No doubt there are some forms of government which cannot tolerate an informed press. But we in Canada, attached as we are to democracy, need a free and informed press and, therefore, to some extent, a protected one.

● (1720)

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to this bill having spent the first 11 years working within our news system as a journalist in the newspaper, television and radio media. I covered local politics and had my share of so-called "leaks" or inside information. I worked the past five and a half years, until becoming directly involved in active political life, as a news commentator and had the experience of receiving information with regard to which certain pressure was placed on me to reveal my sources. There was, however, no dramatic showdown when I did not wish to do so because I felt it would jeopardize the people who had given me that information which I felt should be made public.

Having said all that, however, I must oppose Bill C-41 because I believe it is not necessary in our system as it functions today. I believe that, rather than helping the media it would be dangerous to the quality of the products of our news media. I believe that if this bill were passed it would serve the reverse of its well-intentioned purpose. As the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) mentioned a moment ago, the news media must have the wherewithal to garner its news and to make it public. I suggest that if this bill passed and became law, and protection of source were given directly in the law, it would not in fact give them that wherewithal. It would put the wherewithal under great question, thus making the honesty and veracity of the press and the media questionable.

I think the issue can be divided into two parts, namely the public interest in the due administration of justice, and secondly, the public interest in the free and unrestricted flow of information and in the accurate reporting of this information. With regard to the former, that is the public interest in the due administration of justice, the free and unrestricted flow of information has prevailed until the present. The common law recognizes today that there is no privilege for newsmen. The common law principle is that there should be no general privilege of confidential communications, with very few basic exceptions. These exceptions are solicitor and client relationships, the Crown, and spouse privileges. These are the carefully reasoned exceptions to this rule. The four main common law jurisdictions continue in consensus on this point, subject to legislative amendments, such as the one we have before us today.

May I start by comparing some other jurisdictions with which Canada has a great deal in common. I begin by presenting the experience in statute law and in common law in England. The United Kingdom Law Reform Committee in its 16th report on Privilege in Civil Proceedings of 1967 stated the desirability of keeping the number of recognized privileges at a minimum, and added that the better solution is to grant a wide discretion to courts to permit non-disclosure "where disclosure would be a breach of some ethical or social value and non-disclosure would be unlikely to result in serious injustice in the particular case in which it is claimed". The common law in Britain has always upheld such a discretion in the judge to aid the reluctant journalist.

The case law in England is founded in three cases arising out of the Vassal spy scandal of 1963. In all three cases, the courts held that the journalists could claim no privilege, although in particular cases public policy might allow a court in its discretion to grant a journalist immunity. Therefore, the power lies with the court to consider particular circumstances. But always the weight lies not with the special privilege to be used generally by journalists; the weight lies with the law and the protection of society.

In Australia the leading case in McGuiness v. Attorney General of Victoria of 1940. The High Court of Australia unanimously refused to recognize any claim to privilege by a journalist. Dixon J. spoke of, "the necessity for discovering the truth in the interests of justice", and said the rule was inflexible that no mere obligation of honour could hinder the public policy inherent in requiring answers in the witness box. So there is the same treatment for everyone. I should like to argue as I go on that the best free press is the one that falls under the same guidelines and rules as any other individual in our society.

In the United States, 15 states recognize a privilege of non-disclosure in favour of journalists. These are the only exceptions for journalists in the entire common law world, and before using them as precedents one must ask, firstly, whether there is a difference from other jurisdictions in government structure. A wholly distinct executive may require more informal checks on its functioning than does the executive in a parliamentary system.

I do not want to go into the complications of this particular situation. We are all aware of the Watergate affair and of the problems in the executive branch. I am sure we have all had discussions as members of parliament with our own constituents and among ourselves in regard to the great feeling of satisfaction we have that we follow the British parliamentary system rather than the split executive-legislative-judicial system of the United States. Certainly, I can see in the United States some difficulty, which the first amendment was an attempt to cope with, because of the power that is held by the executive branch alone.

That is not a problem that we have here. If there is any supicion here that the person at the helm is not releasing information or is withholding facts, the pressures within the parliamentary sytem are such that this person can be forced into resignation because of rebellion within his own ranks, or he could be forced to give the facts. That same pressure cannot be applied in the same way in the United States.

The second situation in the United States is that where statutes conferring a privilege do not exist—that is to say, in the 35 remaining states in the United States and in the federal courts—the courts in the United States invoke the public interest in the due administration of justice in disallowing claims to journalistic privilege. The courts hold that this interest prevails even over the constitutionally protected freedom of the press, although such disclosure may impair freedom of the press.

Let me now come to the situation in Canada. There are two very important points to bear in mind. The basis of these points is that this question has been given very deep thought. It has been gone over in recent years and the conclusions are that this kind of act would not be in the best interests of the country, the press or our laws.

The report of the Ontario commission on civil rights, 1968, recommends that no changes be made in the common law position on the ground that "injury would be done to the administration of justice". The report notes favourably the operation of judicial discretion in this area.

The Senate committee on the mass media of 1970 has recommended that no change made in the common law.

In case law in Canada, the aforementioned English and Australian cases are mentioned. The two leading cases in Canada are Reid vs. Telegram Publishing Co. Ltd. and McConachy vs. Times Publishers Ltd. These cases illustrate that, although a court may relieve a journalist from his obligations to disclose at a preliminary inquiry or examination for discovery, the courts are obdurate in their refusal to grant an immunity at trial. Newsmen, like everybody else, are answerable to the law of the country.

It has not been reliably demonstrated that the absence of a journalistic privilege hinders freedom of information, but if this can be shown in an individual case, then it should be recalled that there is a discretion in a trial judge to grant immunity. Surely that is the answer right there to this whole issue today.

There has been some question in these days of bureaucracy of the press not having a full opportunity, as dedicated or investigative journalists, to get to their sources. If I may say so on an emotional note, over the years, especially during the last two centuries, particularly in countries under tyrannical rule, it has been the members of the press who, at risk to life and wellbeing, have come through with stories which have put pressure upon these nations. It is the tradition of a good journalist to do his very best, with whatever sources are available to him, at risk to his own wellbeing, to make his case commensurate with his principles. Surely, that is one of the great challenges of being a journalist today, one that should remain.

I would greatly fear that, if this kind of special privilege were granted, that challenge would be in jeopardy. No longer would you be sure of the material presented; if the source did not have to be disclosed there would be a danger of not knowing how reliable it was. This would not only depreciate what was found to be credible in the press; it would also depreciate the drive of the newsman at risk to find out the facts.

I should also like to touch briefly on the fact that there is a special lawyer-client relationship. I find no argument with this. Obviously, in order to work in courts and to protect the proper functioning of the judicial system there must be this special privilege. But I cannot see its application beyond an accused having the right to confidentiality with the person who is defending him before the law.

● (1730)

In one case, The Attorney General v. Clough, a tribunal was set up to inquire into breaches of security in connection with spying offences committed by an admiralty clerk in Great Britain. The day following the clerk's conviction, Clough published an article saying that the clerk's spying led to foreign trawler spying fleets turning up in the area of certain sea exercises. Clough refused to tell the tribunal the source of his information. We therefore come to a case where someone was able to publish a story without disclosing his source and without having pressure upon him to bring forward the facts to prove they were true. Then we have the case of The Attorney General v. Mulholland and the case of The Attorney General v. Foster. Both cases relate to the same inquiry.

Mulholland had written a colleague of his in the admiralty, called Vassall "auntie" to his face, that a girl typist had decided that no £15 a week clerk could possibly live the way he did honestly, and that it was the sponsorship of two high-ranking officials which led to Vassall avoiding the strictest part of the admiralty's security vetting. Foster had written that Vassall was known to have bought women's clothing. Both refused to answer questions as to their sources of information. We talk about democracy, which always renders a defendant the rights of an individual, but here is someone before the courts, with no recourse, because he is maligned, things are imputed to him and cannot defend himself. Surely it is basic that every defendant has that right in court.

We also have the case of McConachy v. Times Publishers Limited. A trade union official was suing a newspaper for libel, his complaint being that he was made out to be dictatorial and dishonest in the administration of the affairs of the union. On examination for discovery both the reporter concerned and the editor of the newspaper refused to answer questions as to their sources of information. As a journalist, I can see a reason for that; on the other hand, when we talk about the protection of society should such a person really not have the same right of recourse in the courts as any other citizen in order to know the facts of the information so that he may defend himself?

I might sum up by reading into the record a couple of quotations of Lewis H. Lapham who reported for the San Francisco Examiner and the New York Herald Tribune. He later wrote for the Saturday Evening Post, Life and Harper's Magazine. Writing in August, 1973, he said:

> City editors give thanks for news of shipwreck and prominent suicide, and the press must always be said to welcome a declaration of war.

As a newsman, one can accept that as being true. He continued:

> Even so, and despite all that can be said or proved about the viciousness of the press, I am addicted to newspapers, and I continue to believe that a belligerent and unruly press raises the best defence against the abuses available to the present system of American government.

As a journalist, I certainly support those words. Then he wrote:

> My objection to the shield law is that its enactment would encourage the press in its most cowardly instincts and so disembowel it.

Later he states:

> Contrary to fond expectations, the passage of a shield law would concede additional authority to those people whom the press chooses to identify as its enemies. Anybody who doubts this has only to consider the present reporting of the Watergate investigations. So many journalists have reported so many statements attributed to unspecified sources (most of whom must be assumed to be lying in their own interest) that the truth of the matter has been wilfully distorted. The resulting confusion serves the purpose of the men hoping to excuse themselves from blame and criminal convictions.

Perhaps I might end on that note because, as a former journalist, I believe it is the strongest point of all. If a journalist does not have to reveal or, as a fighting or crusading journalist, does not have to stand up and give the source of information or face the consequences at a certain point in time, and does not believe that the public interest is so great that he should reveal that source no matter what it means to his reputation as a journalist, then he is in a position to say things and accuse people of wrongful acts when there is no way to prove what his sources of information are or whether or not they are correct. In such a case, the press would not long be in a position to maintain the quality of reporting to which the public has become accustomed.

As much as this bill is well intentioned, I suggest no possible theme could be stronger and better in our society than a desire to do everything possible to keep a free competitive press which has access to information which can be made public. But nothing would be worse than to say we will help the press by giving them special privileges which mean the taking away of the freedom and the guarantee given to individuals in our society, although we appreciate the integrity and drive of the press.

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, in debating this bill, which I assume is of great importance to everyone in this House and to every Canadian, we are invited to take this opportunity to express our opinions and the opinions of those who elected us. Since this bill suggests that we change or amend the existing law—and I am sure it was introduced after numerous and lengthy interventions by previous members of this House—I wonder if one hour is sufficient time in which to deal with such a bill. Nevertheless, in such a short period I should like to air my views in opposition to the bill.

In a society such as ours the press plays a very important role, even in our parliamentary system. Members of parliament on the government side represent the majority. That is the reason they were called upon to form the government. Members of parliament in opposition represent and defend the views of the minorities. Thirdly, the minorities who have no representatives in this House depend upon the press to defend their views in addition to their duty of informing Canadian citizen of local, national and international events.

At this point I wish to compliment the members of the press for their very precise and rapid system of informing the Canadian people. We certainly appreciate the efforts made by reporters and their informants when we consider the on-the-spot reporting. One might mention the recent Middle East crisis, the Viet Nam war and the Chilean army coup. There is no doubt that press reporters covering such events risk their lives. This is done for one very important reason—so that the citizens of the country are provided with exact and rapid information. Surely this bill would destroy the reputation for honest and exact reporting held by reporters who take these risks and make these efforts.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, our press corps enjoys at the present time a reputation which is surely the envy of press people in many countries of the world. That is one reason why I cannot support Bill C-41. By giving our support to such an undertaking, I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the reputation which our press corps now enjoys will suffer greatly, since, because of existing legislation, the Canadian people are sure of the veracity of any particular report or piece of news.

If we should be irresponsible enough to accept the principles of Bill C-41, it would cast a doubt in the mind of the reader on the truth of reported facts. The reader would perhaps feel free, although without reason, to question this alleged veracity. I say "alleged veracity", for if information sources are not to be disclosed anymore, would it be not possible, even in this country, to see the creation of artificial information sources or of sources entertaining revolutionary ideas, which, under the cover of anonymity, would do irremediable harm to our country or would destroy the reputation of honesty enjoyed by members of the press in Canada.

[English]

Another role the press is called upon to perform in our democratic system is to criticize governments in office when the opposition is too weak to offer positive and constructive criticism. May I add that the press performs this function very well in the present situation. Mr. Speaker, you may think I am drifting from the subject, but I wish to establish the important role the press is called upon to perform in our parliamentary system. The existing law is to reassure Canadians that they are honestly informed and that the minority is honestly represented. There is no doubt in my mind that, with the existing law, the information furnished by reporters is of the highest credibility.

● (1740)

Support of this bill amending the existing law would cast serious doubt on the future of the very important role which the press performs in our parliamentary system. Can you imagine a politically interested reporter who would resort to so-called artificial information or, may I say, non-existent sources of information to attack or accuse certain people or parties of wrongdoing just because the law had been amended and the door opened for such practices? For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I wish to register my opposition to this bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Romeo LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the feelings which prompted the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) to introduce this bill but it seems to me that if he wants to protect journalists against some possible abuses, he also opens the door to dangers we cannot ignore.

[Mr. Ethier.]

As a former journalist, I take part in this debate for a few moments because I think that we deceive ourselves enormously if we think the quality of information can depend on some sensational leaks which can occur, by exception, and which would not be the outcome of continued, lasting work.

I think that in many cases information is available. It is sufficient that journalists work on it, that newspaper owners pay journalists well and give them enough leisure time to pursue the information work they want to do. I think that in many cases the judgments we give on some journalists should rather apply to the owners of newspapers who make them work too rapidly and in a way journalists could not accept if we want them to do careful and serious work.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that giving to a particular group the privilege claimed by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) is creating a new category of citizens, and I do not know many professional journalists—and I emphasize the word "professional", because I feel that in that trade one must be professional—I do not know many professional journalists who do not prefer a system under which they have to defend what they write, rather than to take refuge behind some kind of shield known as legal privilege.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I cannot support this bill and I think that on reflection my hon. colleagues will do the same.

[English]

Mr. Rod Blaker (Lakeshore-Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I rise somewhat in the same mood of examination of this bill as the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming) who spent a considerable number of years in the business of journalism. It has been said that inside every fat man there is a thin man screaming to be let out. Perhaps inside every lawyer there is a journalist screaming to be let out. I might add, therefore, that I spent the greater part of my professional life in law before becoming a journalist, so that I find the bill presented by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) particularly interesting to me and, I think, to many people including my confreres both in law and in journalism.

If I were to begin an examination of the bill, I believe it would be first in terms of what we expect from our system of justice. It has been mentioned in earlier speeches on this subject that there is a possible, although I believe not a necessary, contradiction between the interests of our system of justice, which requires the full disclosure of truth not only for the benefit of a defendant in a criminal trial but also for the benefit of the public, and the interests of the public which require access to the greatest possible degree of information.

Of course, the bill of the hon. member for Timiskaming bill is intended, and I think would in some measure be successful in that regard, to encourage individuals who might not otherwise be prepared to speak to journalists to do so in the knowledge that they would be guaranteed anonymity and that the journalists in turn could not be compelled in a court of law to reveal their sources of information and the documentation or, as in the most famous case these days, the tapes which go with that information.

We are faced—if I might begin my comments on the bill more along the lines of law than of journalism—with the age-old need to try to combine both truth and justice. While we can easily admit that sometimes justice is seen to be done and yet truth has not been achieved, and sometimes vice versa, none the less I cannot imagine how our legal and judicial system would work well unless we knew we were making every possible effort to bring forth not only justice but all the truth that we can obtain.

We have had many centuries of experience with law, and over the years some very fine minds have developed reasonably good systems which are intended to provide reasonable security and protection of the rights of individuals who are brought before the courts. I am thinking of a particular rule which is hardly ever challenged and is often held up as an example of how the law should work and how justice should be obtained; that is, the rule on hearsay. As a general rule we do not accept the idea that one individual may report on or give evidence as to what somebody else has said, except under very rare circumstances. Yet this bill in some measure is analogous to the concept of creating a class of individuals in Canada who would be entitled and privileged to use hearsay.

This would be in direct contradiction of the laws we have had for centuries. It would also create, as has been mentioned earlier, a special class of citizens of some 2,000 to 3,000 journalists in Canada. These people whom the bill refers to as journalists—I might add, in passing, that I am somewhat concerned about the definition—would be given the absolute privilege of refusing to disclose their sources of information and the documentation related thereto.

The bill, in clause 2, defines a journalist as an employee or self-employed person working in a newsroom in the news service or on the editorial staff. I mention only in passing that there seems to me to be some difficulty with that definition of a journalist. While I realize that a later clause of the bill includes the electronics media, there are a number of people in newsrooms, particularly in the printed press and television newsrooms, who would not qualify under that definition as journalists. If such legislation as this were passed by parliament, we would want to ensure that the definition of "journalist" be much more sharply defined than the one contained in the bill.

I would like to deal for a moment with the absolute privilege which the hon. member for Timiskaming wishes to assign to journalists. Speaking again as a lawyer, let me point out that the privilege which exists between my client and me, as a lawyer, is not for my benefit but for my client's, and it is entirely a matter of his choice whether he wishes to avail himself of that benefit. That privilege exists basically so that he will not be concerned, if he discloses information to me so that I can act on his behalf, that I in turn can be compelled by a judge to give up that information and therefore perhaps prejudice his defence.

● (1750)

That situation is quite similar to what is proposed in this bill with respect to the privilege granted to journalists. This privilege would provide a combination of non-disclosure of sources with an absolute guarantee to anybody who can qualify as a journalist that he need not be compelled in any way to disclose even the facts surrounding his undertaking to give that promise of non-disclosure.

I am concerned that the bill as currently drafted might cause a great deal more injustice than the benefits it would purportedly bring to the public by reason of there being additional access to information. There are many examples of this, but they involve essentially a situation where a journalist—admitting that such an individual can be adequately—defined is party to information relevant to either an ongoing or a recently committed crime. For reasons of his own, and without interest whatsoever in terms of the public welfare, such a journalist could prevent this information reaching the police, the court or the judge in time, for example, to stop the commission of a crime.

Again I say that should this legislation proceed, or should this concept proceed into eventual legislation in Canada, as it has begun to in the United States, then I would be most concerned that we define the word "journalist" more accurately and more extensively and, additionally, that we move very carefully to limit this privilege so that it will not interfere with the normal course of justice and with the protection of the public. There is very clearly a signal and a very real danger, as the bill is currently drafted, that a journalist could become party to a crime and, as such, could not be compelled to give testimony, nor would he have to stand trial as a party or associate to that crime.

The theory of the bill creates some contradictions which I feel might not very easily be accepted by most journalists. The hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming) has already commented that while on some occasions in his functions as a journalist he had given his word of non-disclosure, if necessary he had been prepared to show the courage of his conviction and accept a jail sentence. That may or may not be a particularly attractive way to resolve the problem, but it does raise the contradiction involved, that is, that the question which underlies this proposed bill is, as I said earlier, that of being able to give the public access to more detailed information while at the same time depriving the community and the courts of the same right. In effect, it would deprive the courts of the right to obtain information it may need in the interests of justice.

Again I would say that if a bill of this nature is brought forward for expected passage in this House, it must be clearly understood that its terms should provide the judge with the final capacity in law to determine which is in the public interest and which is in the interest of the journalist and the people from whom he has obtained his information. Right now this bill permits contradiction. There are cases where one can very easily foresee the possibility that the public benefit would be lost, that the injury caused would be greater than the benefit of having this right or privilege of journalists.

I am also concerned with what the bill would do to journalists. This point has been raised before but I think it can well and safely be raised again: I think it is an extremely important one. I have never yet met a man known in journalism as a competent and able reporter and found him to be in support of a bill of this nature. It has been my experience that those who most strongly look for the absolute privilege of non-disclosure of sources either have not thought through the dangers of creating a special class of Canadian citizens or perhaps see the possibility of an exceptionally easy way, an exceptionally simple route out of admission of error, out of their own admission of sloppy reporting, out of the admission of conjecture, by simply saying they have an undisclosed source, they shall not disclose that source and they cannot be compelled to do so. I think we would lose, again, the benefits we might achieve by giving up the right of the journalist to give testimony in court, and we would exchange for that the expectation that there would be at least some journalists who would completely abuse the privilege.

I would refer to the practice of recent years known as investigatory journalism, where in effect we see a journalist acting as a public prosecutor. The defendant seems to be an individual who is on the grill or who is being interviewed, and the judge is apparently the mass of the public. That constitutes something very close to a kangaroo court. Whether that trend toward investigatory journalism will continue or whether the extremely heavy expense, of newspapers in particular, pursuing it will prove worth while in terms of the publisher's interests, I do not know; but, hopefully, in the years to come journalists and publishers will come to recognize that the highly refined system of our law and courts, with prosecution, defence and judge, cannot be replaced by a one-man fringe show.

Mr. Peters: That has not been true in the United States.

Mr. Blaker: With respect to the hon. member's comment about the United States—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret very much having to interrupt the hon. member who has the floor, but the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES AND DEBENTURES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-164, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Keith Taylor (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments concerning the rates charged by Canadian National Railways on their line into Churchill. This afternoon my comments concerned some of the rates, but another factor that militates against the use of the facilities at Churchill is the recent practice of the CNR in going to a cubic rate as opposed to a straight poundage rate. The effect of this method of calculating freight rates has been to double, or triple in many cases, the rate that would otherwise be charged by the CNR. Anyone who knows anything about freight rates realizes that when you are dealing with rates on a cubic basis it is almost impossible economically to ship bulky items. Things like boats that are vitally necessary in the tourist industry such as we are hoping to develop in the north are bulky and the freight rates become almost prohibitive.

We have had many discussions with the CNR on this matter and, of course, the answer always is that the act which governs them makes it absolutely essential that this form of charge be levied and collected. None of the local officials will give any hope of the rates being changed. It is certainly in the vital interest of anyone involved in the tourist industry in northern Manitoba that something be done about this rate which, as I have said, is almost prohibitive.

As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian National Railways is the only means of transportation to the port of Churchill. If we are to develop Churchill, and I certainly hope that will be the case, it is absolutely necessary that the CNR adopt rates, attitude and policies which will encourage such development. All the freight to and from western Canada which goes through the port must use Canadian National Railways. The experience to date is that these rates, and these rates alone, in many cases make it almost impossible to use the port of Churchill as a means of shipping goods to and from the rest of Canada, particularly western Canada.

I should like to refer to some of the rates mentioned in the report of the committee on freight rates, published by Norman Regional Development Inc., in December, 1972. This is a Manitoba organization set up to study freight rates particularly in northern Manitoba and with reference, of course, to the port of Churchill. The commodity rate for shipping to Regina from Churchill is $126 per 2,000 pounds for 844 miles. From Montreal to Regina the freight rate is $82.20 per 2,000 pounds for 1,711 miles. So the CNR charges $43.80 more for 867 less miles. As far as machinery is concerned, between Churchill and Regina the rate is $56.80 per 2,000 pounds for 844 miles, and from Montreal to Regina the rate is $96.80 for 2,000 pounds for 1,711 miles. In this case the Churchill rate is $40 lower. At the Montreal rate per mile, the rate to Churchill would be $47.75, which would amount to a further saving of $9.05. Let me quote the rate for automobiles sent to Winnipeg from Churchill. The rate is $144 per 2,000 pounds for 978 miles. From Montreal the rate is $76.80 per 2,000 pounds for 1,354 miles.

Thus, the CNR quotes for Churchill $76.20 more for 376 fewer miles.

● (2010)

It is this type of policy which is at the root of complaints of those who are actively involved in the promotion and development of the port of Churchill. If the rates were fair and equitable they would make Churchill the most competitive port for shippers using western Canadian destinations. Yet because of the existing freight rate structure, the main reason for our difficulties, this is not the case. With present rates we find that shippers are reluctant to use Churchill.

Many developments are taking place in western Canada which affect the port of Churchill. I think the CNR owes a duty to all western Canada to review its freight rate structure and give relief to present users of the port in order to encourage its greater use. I have listened to various ministers of the government making excuses as to why the port is not being used to greater advantage. If they were to take a good look at Churchill and actively promote its development, they would not find any difficulty in convincing customers to use the port. Despite the policies of the government, many people are interested in using the port of Churchill.

The minister responsible for the Wheat Board, who is present in the chamber, made a great to-do in announcing that the Soviet Union had shipped wheat from Churchill for the first time. Anyone who has been associated with the port knows that was not the first time this had happened. It was merely another attempt on the part of Soviet authorities to use their know-how in making further use of that port with which they are familiar. They are more familiar with the conditions around the port than we are, and are better able to cope with those conditions than we are. The technology is there; it is the willingness to use the port that is not there. If it were, the port could be developed to handle a much greater capacity.

As I said, despite the lack of promotion there still is considerable interest in the use of the port by coal producers, sulphur producers and many others who ship bulk products which can be conveniently stored during the winter months and shipped out during the regular shipping season. However, we have yet to convince the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and the National Harbours Board that this is the route we should be taking. The minister should speak to Canadian National Railways and encourage the company to develop a rate structure that will promote increased use of the railway lines running to and from Churchill. That would be in the best interests of all residents of Manitoba. If we made greater use of that port, it would be of benefit to all western Canadians. Quoting government-supplied figures relating to this important port, I have shown that even with present CN rate structures it would be of advantage to us all if there were greater utilization of Churchill.

May I bring one further important point to the attention of the government and of the minister responsible. In view of the current energy crisis we are looking more and more to the north, particularly to the Arctic Islands, for our future petroleum needs. The resources are there in known quantities and merit immediately development. Yet we are still waiting for policies to be adopted by the ministers involved which will show us how these resources are to be developed.

An hon. Member: Don't hold your breath.

Mr. Taylor: Canadian National Railways has a vital role to play in the development of any sector of this country, particularly the north. I suggest to the minister that Canadian National Railways should examine the possibilities of a pipeline, and the role that the railway might play in the construction of such a pipeline, which would run from the Arctic Islands to Manitoba. It could be used to tap the vast petroleum resources in the north.

I suggest, further, that Canadian National should now be making proposals to the parties who would be involved in the construction of such a pipeline in order to encourage the use of railway facilities. We could reach and develop the Arctic Islands and deliver the resources to be found there by using the facilities of the CNR as well as by using the pipeline which would begin in that area.

Time does not permit me to deal with the position that Air Canada holds in my area. Air Canada routes run mainly east and west. A regional carrier, TransAir, looks after the needs of my constituency; but that is another subject. Canadian National Railways and Air Canada are under an obligation to western Canada. If the government's so-called regional development policy is to be enhanced, those companies must again look at the possibility of airport facilities being improved in western Canada. There must be the development of adequate air routes to and from Winnipeg.

Members on my side of the House have spoken in other debates about the merits of using the facilities available in Winnipeg. The advantages to be accrued from the use of those facilities have been nullified by the general policies of Air Canada. If those facilities were used to their fullest potential, Winnipeg would once again become an international air centre, which it ought to be but which it has not been since this government introduced its air transportation policy. I suggest that both Air Canada and CN have much homework to do. If they are looking for leadership, they are not likely to get it from this government. The companies ought to realize that and develop policies which will bring about not only what this government wishes but what the western Canadian provinces have been demanding for years. They are entitled to this, and it could be done without difficulty.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say a few words on Bill C-164, the CNR financing bill now before us. Many colleagues said, when we were debating the Criminal Code amendment, that it was time we finished discussing that bill. I can say the same about this bill, as many of my colleagues have brought to the government's attention the many weaknesses and inequities in our present Canadian transportation policy.

One point I should like to mention has to do with the continued deterioration of rail service in many parts of the country, particularly in the Atlantic provinces and specifically in that isolated part, the province of Newfoundland. Much attention has been directed over the past few months to our energy crisis and to the difficulty in finding a select and safe means of transportation. In this regard I think reference should be made to some comments of one of the higher officials of Canadian National Railways, Mr. David Blair, vice-president of the Atlantic region. He compared the transportation of energy resources by train with their transportation by truck, that is, by road. I can tell you that Mr. David Blair views most sympathetically the matter of transportation policy affecting the Atlantic region, and his words should be heeded.

● (2020)

Mr. Blair explained that transportation policies and services were based on the assumption that oil and gasoline would be plentiful and cheap for many years to come—of course, that is not the case any more—that these attitudes must change and would change as soon as transportation planners looked at which form of land transport provides the most effective use of the world's limited fuel resources.

A study conducted in the United States in 1970 showed that of the total amount of transportation fuel used in that country, trains accounted for only 3.5 per cent, as against 21.7 per cent for trucks; yet in the same period the railways handled almost twice as many ton-miles of traffic as the highway system. The study showed trains had a gross efficiency of 550 ton-miles per gallon of fuel, compared with 37.6 ton-miles per gallon for highway vehicles. I am sure the figures would be similar for Canada. I hope we can be supplied with similar figures as they apply to our railways, which always seem to be losing money with the taxpayer making up the losses.

If this is true for commodities being shipped by freight, the carrying of passengers must also be considered with regard to conserving fuel and energy. This makes me wonder why Canadian National is on a crash course to eliminate passenger service in Canada, if we can believe the words of the vice-president, Mr. Blair, and there is certainly no reason to doubt them. Another point of interest made by Mr. Blair refers to the electrification of railways in Canada, a process that is being extended in many parts of North America and, indeed, throughout the world. It is a step that offers even more efficiency, as well as a pollution-free transportation system, something for which everyone seems to be striving.

Something else that is difficult to understand is the apparent justification of governments, both federal and provincial, to go in two directions in providing transportation for Canadians. On one hand everyone is complaining about the fact that the cost of land is becoming exorbitant. It is one of the main problems in trying to find land for housing. The government is buying up the same land to provide road accommodation for vehicles, at the expense of the taxpayers. The costs are running away with our planners in government. On the other hand the government, the Department of Transport or the CNR, are eliminating passenger service because of losses. The taxpayer also has to pay for these. What we are really doing is doubling the effect of poor planning on the citizens of Canada when we should be upgrading railway service for Canadians, something which would overcome the runaway costs of transportation.

[Mr. Marshall.]

Canada, with its vastness, was opened to opportunity by the provision and indeed the vision of a railway system to open up the west, the east, the north and the south. However, governments of the day—this is becoming increasingly evident—did not improve the sytem of transportation along these lines but, instead, changed direction because of political timing. The end result has been a jungle of government bureaucracy with the various responsible departments going off in different directions. This has brought us to a point in time where no one knows in which direction he is going. If we continue in this direction we will reach a stage in our development where, because of lack of common sense planning, we will destroy our objective for political ambitions.

It is obvious that with our vast expanse of land in Canada transportation is becoming a very important factor because of its great cost to our citizens. Our planners have become blind to the fact that we must direct every available dollar to controlling pollution and acquiring land for more vehicle transportation. Why, then, have we not realized, as have other countries, that a railway system, particularly because of our vastness, is vital to reasoned development of our nation with its vast resources? However, our planners are going in exactly the opposite direction at the expense of our capability to provide continued progress for the benefit of Canadians.

If it is the intention of the government to push all 22 million Canadians to urban centres such as Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver in the next decade, we might as well quit and eliminate those provinces which are being ignored in the thrust toward providing a quality of life for all Canadians wherever they may live. The province of Newfoundland is a perfect example of what has happened with regard to the devious means of cutting costs without any projected planning by our supposed experts. For some reason or other rail passenger service was eliminated in favour of road transportation because it was decided, at the expense of the public, that road transportation is what is required for the development of our province.

Newfoundland is at a stage now, some 25 years after confederation, where it has the lowest category of trans-Canada roads, rail and transportation service of any province in Canada. There is no province in Canada where factors dictate more that a reasonable and planned transportation policy with rail service for both commodities and passengers would be beneficial to Canadians residing in that province. The problem of transportation in that island province should be directed toward its isolation and the need for uninterrupted service for its future development. It is time meaningful discussions took place to resolve the many simple problems that exist.

There is much talk about the exorbitant cost of living in the province of Newfoundland. The simple reason is the cost of transportation not only to the urban centres of transportation dispersal but to the isolated areas of our province which are suffering most. There is not much point quoting figures and the differences in the cost of food, housing, fuel and all the necessities of family living, but there are certainly enough examples to point out the low priority in which improvements in transportation services are considered in the province of Newfoundland.

I wish to give an example of freight costs. A businessman in my district showed me a freight bill for furniture. The weight of the shipment was 1,040 pounds. The value of the shipment was just over $500. The freight cost was over $170. That amounts to some 34 per cent. Is it any wonder that costs are higher in Newfoundland than anywhere else in Canada?

Another example of the problems in Newfoundland was brought to our attention during the recent railway strike in that province. This was referred to by members from Newfoundland who spoke earlier. The problem has been temporarily resolved, but the situation brought about an inconvenience to citizens which one would not believe possible with our supposed modern methods of transportation. What is the government doing about it? There is another re-organization, another study, another build-up of bureaucracy with new objectives, and another ad hoc approach without long-term planning other than seminars, meetings and more studies which we will probably never see.

We must give some recognition to the government for the fact they are trying to overcome the backlog of problems that exist between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. However, my main complaint is the lack of projected planning. The port of Corner Brook, which is the hub of transportation activity on the west coast of the province, is an example of the lack of projected planning for future needs. New facilities were provided in 1968, but through lack of foresight the facilities were cut because of, the government said, financial restrictions. It was only a matter of $3 million, and the increase in the needs would be a couple of hundred thousand dollars more. By the time the project was completed a few years later, the storage space provided was too small.

This emphasizes the fact that no one in the government listened to the interested groups about the steady build-up of traffic over the years and the fact that this build-up would continue. Here we are, just a few years later, and the situation has become desperate. There is no space for storing merchandise and this has resulted in cost increases due to breakage, with corresponding losses incurred both by businessman and by the consumer. An extension to port facilities amounting to only 22,000 square feet is required, but it is like pulling teeth to get answers as to the status of the project because in our bureaucratic system it seems no one knows what the other person is doing.

● (2030)

The government is blind to the fact that the economic development of Newfoundland will never be achieved unless transportation is treated in a manner which recognizes the geographic isolation of the island. This focuses attention on the need for improvement in port facilities, the lack of which presently deters the industrial expansion which could take place because of the richness of the province's natural resources.

Another example of the lack of foresight by our planners is provided by the circumstances in which a modern linerboard mill was established in western Newfoundland at the cost of $175 million. Not until the mill was almost completed was it realized that adequate port facilities were necessary to bring the timber resources from Labrador and to provide for the export of linerboard as well as for the pressure of incoming traffic. Already, after only a few months of operation, the presence of some 300,000 tons of commodities has taxed the 950 feet of berthing space available, and the volume of goods piling up will double before the end of the year. It is true that dredging work is presently proceeding under the auspices of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), but the need to extend harbour facilities has reached emergency proportions.

The western part of the province possesses unlimited natural harbour potential. I suggest every effort should be made to co-ordinate the efforts of the various departments involved, including Regional Economic Expansion, Environment and Fisheries, Public Works, and Transport to develop the potential of this region so as to benefit the province and the nation. Requests have been made to the government to develop the area known as Curling. According to a study completed by provincial government agencies, there is justification for improving harbour facilities there so as to enhance economic development. I suggest to the Minister of Transport that representatives of the four departments I have mentioned should visit the area with me and look into the possibilities in this part of Canada.

As I have mentioned on several occasions there is certainly a need to pay greater attention to the isolated part of Canada which lies to the north. There is particular need for the government to fulfil its promise to provide communication facilities to this part of Newfoundland. I refer to the agency know as Canadian National Telecommunications which comes within the responsibility of the Canadian National system. The report of the CNR for 1972 proclaims improvements in the service to northern Newfoundland, but though I have been in Ottawa for five years I have not seen much improvement in the service: I still cannot get through to these people on the telephone.

The report states that in Newfoundland, the Northwest Territories and British Columbia, the number of customers using CNT long-distance telephone increased by 20 per cent. All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is this: I suspect that whatever part of that 20 per cent increase applies to that area of northern Newfoundland which lies within my constituency consists of telephone callers trying to reach me, or me trying to reach them, and either I can't hear them or the lines are busy or they can't hear me. I can only say, further, that the Telesats and the Aniks have not done much for northern Newfoundland. The situation can only be described as shameful when in this day and age there is little or no communication possible with the part of Canada I have mentioned.

I turn, now, to the subject of air transportation, another form of transport which is low on the priority scale of the Minister of Transport, at least as it applies to that part of Newfoundland where we have the convenience of air travel. Here, again, there is a conflict of interest, if I can use that term. On one hand, when one wants to move from Newfoundland to the mainland one finds the most dedicated employees of Air Canada ready to help, but when one wants to move from the mainland to Newfoundland the reverse is true.

I venture to say that service on an Air Canada flight to my province can only be compared to the third-class service one used to get on the Newfoundland railway prior to the expressed intention of downgrading passenger service so that it could be eliminated altogether. If I had the time, Mr. Speaker, I could relate the greatest stories that could ever be told in connection with air travel to Newfoundland.

I have made some 132 trips to my district in the last five years, most of them by Air Canada, and the inconveniences I have experienced, and which must have been shared by most of the west Newfoundland passengers, are hard to exaggerate. The attitude of the stewardesses on these flights indicates they feel it is a punishment trip inflicted upon them for something they did wrong. I can say without fear of contradiction that many of them do not even know where they are going. Certainly they do not know the stops after they leave Sydney, because I have heard their announcements. Certainly, too, Air Canada officials do not know what it means to provide a little comfort for passengers; after trips back to my district I often end up with a charleyhorse.

In their efforts to save a few dollars, officials tend to eliminate or curtail service to citizens who are just as much Canadian as those in the larger urban centres. Here, again, no consideration has been given to the continued build-up of traffic, both passengers and freight, to and from the west coast of Newfoundland. I can only suggest that officials of Air Canada, particularly the vice-presidents of every department, should follow the example of the service provided in the smaller centres by their Air Canada staff and learn what service really means, even though they do enjoy a monopoly of passenger service.

To summarize, Mr. Speaker, I would refer to the obligation undertaken by Canada toward the province of Newfoundland in accordance with the Terms of Union, specifically section 32 which states:

> Canada will maintain, in accordance with traffic offering, a freight and passenger steamship service between North Sydney and Port aux Basques which, on completion of a motor highway between Corner Brook an Port aux Basques, will include suitable provision for the carriage of motor vehicles.
>
> For the purpose of railway rate regulation the Island of Newfoundland will be included in the maritime region of Canada, and through traffic moving between North Sydney and Port aux Basques will be treated as all rail traffic.
>
> All legislation of the Parliament of Canada providing the special rates on traffic moving within, into, or out of, the maritime region will, as far as appropriate, be made applicable to the island of Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker, these terms are very vague and do not meet the changing conditions which have come about over the years since 1949. It is incumbent, then, upon the Government of Canada to review the Terms of Union to give Newfoundland the consideration it deserves as part of our great Canadian nation. It is obvious that the Minister of Transport is cognizant of the transportation needs of all Canada—he has shown his sympathy—and I can only request that even though the population of the province of Newfoundland makes up only a small proportion of our nation, he will recognize, as pledged by his Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and many of his colleagues, that every Canadian, regardless of where he lives, should be able to enjoy the benefits of Canada's wealth and quality of life.

[Mr. Marshall.]

• (2040)

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to use the same point of departure as the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), and that is to say that it is about time this country, and specifically its government, took a good, long, hard look at its transportation policy. Indeed, that look is long overdue. The government should begin immediately preparation of a paper on transportation policy that will take into consideration road, rail, air and sea transportation and which would be transportation's equivalent of the orange paper on social security that was presented to this House earlier this session. In other words, we require a draft national transportation policy. We urgently require a document that could serve as the focal point for discussion of transportation in Canada by the relevant parliamentary committees, public servants both federal and provincial, the transportation industry, unions and management and by other interested parties.

To my mind, the point of departure for any such paper should be that transportation is part of the infrastructure of this country and an instrument of national policy, one of the several means that a nation can employ to realize national ends, such as the elimination of regional economic disparities and the arresting of the trend toward rural depopulation and the overgrowth of our cities. In a phrase, the point of departure of any such study should be service to the public rather than consideration of profitability. Such a study should set out national objectives and the design of a transportation policy to serve those objectives. Profitability should be a very much secondary consideration. This is not the case today with respect to the transportation policy of Canada, such as it is.

To me, it is the epitome of madness to see the Canadian Transportation Commission making decisions with respect to rail line abandonments that take into account the profit and loss picture for that particular piece of line but not the costs that would be incurred by provincial governments which, in order to replace that abandoned line, would have to build more highways capable of carrying much heavier bus and truck traffic, at the costs of farmers and merchants affected who would have to abandon trucks suitable for short-haul situations and purchase new and vastly more expensive long-haul equipment.

It is absolutely ridiculous to hear the Minister of State responsible for housing and urban affairs assert the necessity of arresting the trend toward increasing concentration of the Canadian population in a few urban centres and virtually simultaneously have the Air Transport Board approve an application by Transair Midwest to abandon its Brandon-Dauphin-Yorkton run. Obviously, if urban growth is not to continue at a horrifyingly unacceptable rate, smaller centres will have to be made more attractive to the existing population, especially the young people who live there, to industry, and to industry's skilled employees most of whom are now located in major urban centres. One obvious means of accomplishing that objective is to provide smaller centres with rapid transportation facilities, rail and air as well as road, as closely equivalent as possible to those available in major urban centres. Certainly permitting abandonment of services like Brandon-Dauphin-Yorkton is not the way to accomplish that goal.

The propensity of the transportation commission to approve applications for abandonment of air feeder lines, rail passenger service and rail lines, runs directly contrary to the objective of making smaller communities in Canada attractive places to live, and thus counter the trend to urbanization. Even more ridiculous is the lack of co-ordination between the government's programs to promote greater economic equality on a regional basis through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion particularly and its failure to develop a transportation policy that would further that objective. Indeed, the government's decisions with respect to transportation most often have exactly the opposite effect to that of removing regional economic disparities. Freight rate structures, for example, as was forcefully demonstrated by the four western governments at the Western Economic Opportunities conference, run directly contrary to the objective of fostering economic growth outside of central Canada's economic heartland.

In this regard, I think hon. members should pay particular attention to the kind of arguments presented this evening by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Taylor) in discussing the difficulties encountered in his own area as a result of inequalities in the freight rate structure, a structure that bears no relationship to the economic objectives of this country. Despite promises to correct the situation which the federal government made at the Western Economic Opportunities conference on the subject of freight rates, we have seen little evidence of government action in this regard.

An even more topical example of the government's right hand undoing the work of its left hand, more topical since talks on the bilateral air agreements reopen tomorrow, are the tentative agreements reached respecting air charter service. If I may refer to Suntours, this is a Canadian development conceived and executed by Canadian air carriers. Essentially, Suntours involves the provision to Canadians of the opportunity to take relatively brief and inexpensive tours to the world's sun spots during our colder months. The program is a major component of Canada's air charter business. In turn, charter business provides our regional air carriers with one-third of their revenue. Further, regional air carriers are major corporate citizens in some of our less advantaged regions. For example, Transair Midwest Aviation employs somewhere in the neighbourhood of 700 people in Manitoba and northwestern Ontario. It is a big outfit in that region.

With all these facts before it, what does our brilliant federal government do when it comes to negotiating an air charter agreement? During negotiations for a new bilateral air agreement it opened the discussions on an air charter agreement by offering American carriers about 30 per cent of the Suntours business. That was its opening offer. The government said, "We will give you 30 per cent of Suntours' business". And what does the government demand in return? Nothing. The whole thing is strictly Alice in Wonderland.

It is my understanding that the regional carriers and major air charter lines in Canada have prepared a submission for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) in which they urge the government to modify substantially its position respecting the air charter agreement. I would urge the minister in the strongest terms to pay the closest possible attention to those submissions, because a healthy air charter business is extremely important to the economic well-being of a number of the less advantaged regions of this country.

The bilateral air agreement as it affects scheduled commercial flights provides yet another example of the lack of any co-ordination between the government's policies of regional economic development and transportation. For years the government of Manitoba has been calling for a direct service by Canadian carriers from Winnipeg to Minneapolis, Winnipeg to Denver, Winnipeg to Chicago, Winnipeg to New York and Winnipeg to Los Angeles. At the Western Economic Opportunities conference the western premiers were assured that the representations of Manitoba and similar representations by other western governments would receive every consideration. The result was that the bilateral agreement does not guarantee Canadian carrier operations on any of the suggested routes until 1978. Moreover, it is not until halfway through 1976 that there is any possibility of a Canadian carrier providing service on any of those routes, and this involvement could only be advanced in the event of the total failure of the American carriers to provide the desired service by that time.

What happens in the interim, Mr. Speaker? Western Canadians wishing to travel to major eastern American centres will continue to be funnelled through the already overloaded facilities at Toronto and Montreal. In the case of the Winnipeg-Minneapolis run, Northwest Airlines, an American carrier, will continue to have the monopoly and, holding the monopoly, will continue to provide rotten service. I say "rotten service" advisedly. Moreover, in the event of another strike against that airline, Winnipeg will once again be without any air service to Minneapolis for the duration, which is bound to be lengthy because of the revenue-sharing agreements that American carriers have to cover strike situations.

Among other things, this means more damage to the Manitoba tourist industry of the magnitude that we in that province experienced during the last strike when, to mention just one business, $30,000 had to be rebated to persons from the Minneapolis area who had booked on the cruise boat Lord Selkirk II. And this was just one very, very small part of the tourist industry of Manitoba. I hope that when the talks on the agreement resume tomorrow, our negotiators will be doing all in their power to serve Canada's legitimate regional interests and aspirations.

● (2050)

I now turn to another area of federal concern, that of pollution abatement. It is a demonstrable fact that trains contribute only one-fifth the pollution of the atmosphere that highway traffic necessary to move an equivalent number of people contributes. Nevertheless, the CTC has blindly granted permission to the railways to reduce the transcontinental and intercity passenger service to almost zero and has made no protest about the downgrading of service on the remaining runs, which downgrading of service is calculated to make rail passenger travel even less attractive than the inconvenient schedules now make it. Where is the sense in that?

Then we look at Air Canada and CN, the two major Crown corporations in the transportation industry, and we see an even greater conflict between the expressed policies of our government and the actions of its agencies. Air Canada has consistently operated in a manner directly opposed to current expressions of government concern about our concentration of population in major urban centres and the desirability of removing regional economic disparities. In so doing Air Canada, and TCA before it, consistently misrepresented, dissembled and outright lied without having ever experienced even the mildest reprimand from the federal government which is supposedly its master.

In 1948, Winnipeg was the headquarters of TCA. Today only about 1,400 of Air Canada's employees find jobs in Winnipeg. Moreover, significant numbers of those carried on the books as Winnipeg employees, I am reliably informed, now find themselves on perpetual three to six months' temporary assignments to Montreal and Toronto. Further, better than a third of Air Canada's employees located in Winnipeg are engaged in accounting functions in the financial section. We have learned that Air Canada has ordered a new computer which will be capable of carrying out many of the functions now discharged by employees of the Winnipeg financial section. Where is the new computer centre to be located? In Montreal, of course—a city with a population of 2½ million. Specifications for the equipment, for which a tender has now been let, specify only remote terminals for Winnipeg. Why? Well, Air Canada says that it is more efficient to have the computer located as close as possible to its prime users. That statement is arrant nonsense in a world of instantaneous communication by telephone, teletype, electronic data transmission, and so forth.

