I think that this would be a much more positive way than throwing out or blaming foreigners for coming here to finance or invest in projects which are definitely interesting. Of course, foreigners do not come here simply to please Canadians. On the contrary, there is interesting business to be done in Canada, and these businessmen are always interested in greater profit. Therefore I think that we have the responsibility of attempting to motivate Canadians to invest more in our Canadian businesses.

I would also like to mention that I have already hoped for the sales promotion of our Canadian products. I think that this speaks to the pride of Canadians and that is something that many of us lack. We should think more often about the necessity to encourage Canadian firms and their products, so that they may attain a more competitive position on world markets.

When we talk about foreign investments, we are seeking economic independence for Canada. And then, we take for granted that it is probably through very strong incentives given to Canadians eager to invest in our industry that we may acquire this economic independence. So, whether we like it or not, if we want to be independent as Canadians, we shall have to pay the price sooner or later. We must therefore adopt measures which may mean sacrifices for us, but if we are really sincere when we say that we want to put our economy back into the hands of Canadians, we must also accept a number of sacrifices.

For a number of years, we have heard of a revolution in industrial development. It would be desirable that the development and all related investments be made by Canadians. Again, there might be a lack of incentive and inducement so that Canadians would prefer foreign investors.

There is always the same question of incentive. Even though we introduce new legislation or changes in legislation, if we do not succeed in stimulating and interesting Canadians I feel we are in the wrong direction. It is clear that the foreign investor as well as the Canadian businessman will not care about investing money in a Canadian corporation. I think that in order to motivate Canadians and interest them we have to offer them some advantages. So, during the few minutes left to me, I would like to urge hon. members to think about this possibility.

It is very easy to talk about these nice principles and I think it is an example which could interest Canadians in investing more in Canadian companies. We would simply have to consider the possibility of giving a deduction of up to $500 on the dividends for every investment made by Canadians in Canadian companies. I think that the fact of having a deduction of $500 on dividends would prompt any Canadian to invest in Canadian companies. If this Canadian benefited from such an advantage it would mean that at current interest rates he would have invested about $6,000 in a company.

We are well aware of the interesting effects that it could bring to the Canadian who, being interested in a company, holding an equity and having been motivated to invest his money, would become a better citizen, a Canadian more interested in his country's affairs. Therefore, he would become much more interested in his country's businesses; it might be surprising to find out how many Canadians could invest small amounts which would build up into a sizeable fund to help the economic development of Canada.

I imagine that the minister or the appropriate department will find other proposals as interesting and efficient as my own. I think that would be a way of creating motivation for Canadians.

Once more, as I said, all that motivation and pride we must have as Canadians demands sacrifices. So, through an interest we could awaken in individuals we would manage to help considerably industry and curb foreign influence on the Canadian economy. A step such as the one I suggest could have very interesting effects in various respects.

I would also like to take this occasion to express my views on an amendment now before the House, namely the right of veto for the provinces. Personally, I would be tempted to support that amendment since I always regarded highly the right to speak, the right to act for the provinces in co-operation with the federal government; however, I feel that considering our system we have an obligation to give the provinces the right to express themselves on foreign investment that in some cases may not have the influence hoped for but in other cases may often bring the province new possibilities. That is true but as members of this House we have a responsibility to give the provinces the right to speak, negotiate, consult, and finally the right of veto on foreign investment.

I think it is perfectly normal in the present system for the provinces to have a say in and be consulted on foreign investment.

I would also like to remind the government, on the occasion of the study of this very important bill, that the present situation related to oil is particular and must make us think twice about what may be the result on our economic future of an overly heavy influence by companies whose majority of shares are not held by Canadians.

It seems to me entirely justified to talk about the establishment of a national corporation to mitigate a little that influence which the oil companies seem to have on the government.

In my opinion, a national corporation would likely give Canada some control. I believe the present situation is a perfect illustration of the absolute power of those companies. Of course, we have every reason to ask for the creation of such a corporation which could give the government, therefore the people, some control again.

Those were the remarks I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker, because I think that as members of Parliament we have suggestions and opinions to offer. I hope the government will take them into consideration and I insist that Canadians will find a greater Canadian identity and be more interested in investing in their economy inasmuch as they will be motivated by legislation introduced in the House of Commons. Thus we will succeed in reducing the influence of foreign investors on our future.

We naturally seek a degree of economic independence in Canada and I think that making Canadians consider their future with pride, concern and responsibility and introducing very practical and interesting measures is the way to achieve the aim that every member of the House is pursuing.

[English]

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I have already addressed myself to the amendment and I want to speak very briefly to the subamendment which seeks to include the words "territorial council". Clearly, this amendment has no real merit since it tries to make fun of the prime amendment moved by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). The prime amendments moved by the hon. member for Central Nova make a great deal of sense to many members of this House who are very much in favour of legislation that somehow will control the spread of foreign investment in Canada and the control by foreign investment of the resources of our country.

Some day the territories may become provinces. At the present time they are not provinces, for the simple reason that these vast areas of land are populated by very few people. Indeed, more people voted for me during the last election than voted for all of the parties in both territories—and I received less than 40 per cent of the votes cast in my constituency. Therefore, to suggest that we include the words "or a territorial council" in the amendment is ridiculous, though it is promoted by a party that is capable of making ridiculous suggestions.

Mr. Peters: Don't underrate the Northwest Territories or the Yukon. There is only one member on your side from the Yukon, but don't downgrade his position.

Mr. Blenkarn: I would not want to downgrade the territories, but we must remember that the resources of the territories are held in trust for all the people of Canada and are different from the resources which, in accordance with the interpretation of our constitution, are held in ownership by the people who reside in the provinces. As I say, one of these days our two territories may be added to another province, or they may form a province of their own in much the same way as the provinces today were carved out of the previous Northwest Territories limits, as hon. members know.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) should understand that we are a growing nation, and with a free enterprise economy we will continue to grow. But we will never grow under the philosophy that his party represents.

Mr. Peters: Time will tell.

Mr. Blenkarn: The provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, Saskatchewan and now Ontario have either passed legislation controlling the ownership of the land both by persons within the province and without, or they are considering it. Indeed, one province has even stated that Canadians who are not Prince Edward Islanders are not allowed to own significant pieces of land within that province. Clearly, the ownership of land is within the ambit of provincial control. When this matter came before the committee, many of us asked, "Where does land begin and business end, or vice versa? When is a company in business, or when is the business of a company involved in the ownership of land?" The same applies to natural resources, such as mining, timber limits and oil. It is virtually impossible for any of us clearly to define what is control over the land and land-oriented resources of a province and what is control over business within a province. This is the kind of problem that continually besets this House.

Our constitution was drafted in 1867 or thereabouts, long before we had high-speed transportation and started to worry about foreign control or the ownership of business. I submit that our constitution is not clear or specific enough and it is really impossible for this parliament to control foreign ownership without the co-operation of the provinces. May I say through you, Sir, to the minister that it is not with any intention of holding up this bill or of preventing its passage, but strictly with the intention of telling the government that the bill will not work without complete consultation with the provinces, that these amendments have been presented. To include the territories would make it a laughing stock. The territorial councils do not have control over the resources or over the land within the territories. But the provinces are in an entirely different position; this is one of the prime reasons why the minister must accept the amendments presented in honesty and in faith by the hon. member for Central Nova. These amendments could well unify Canada.

One of our major problems is confrontation between the federal government in Ottawa and the provincial legislatures and the hopes and aspirations of various parts of the country, such as we have seen in the recent oil issue between this government and the government of Alberta. The people in these parts of Canada feel they are being pushed around. They say they are being pushed around because they have only 19 members in the House of Commons and that the big bloc of Ontario and Quebec, central Canada, will destroy the future as they are trying to control their natural resources.

This legislation, in terms of growth of natural resource development in this country, of development of this nation's land resources, water resources, timber resources, and so on, will only work if it is implemented in consultation with the provinces. This party understands that, as should the minister. He should not be so bullheaded and just say that it will work. He should realize that the briefs received from the provinces of Ontario and Saskatchewan both refer to the fact that their input must be felt in terms of what is of significant benefit to Canada.

This is not a filibuster and my speech is not designed to prolong this debate. I am speaking tonight simply because it is essential that the amendments put forward by the hon. member for Central Nova carry.

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to participate in the debate on Bill C-132 I have the thought and feeling that few issues of Canadian economic policy in the past ten years have aroused as much interest, yet as little resolution, as those surrounding foreign investment and particularly the changes proposed in this bill. The approach to the problems of direct foreign investment has to date involved the development of a collection of policies in the form of laws and agreements of a unilateral, bilateral and multilateral nature. In general, this approach has been one of ad hoc reaction often associated with a particular individual who has shown an interest in the topic and the problems as they have arisen. This approach has obviously not been successful.

Other members on this side of the House have pointed out that this bill is so strongly biased against foreign investment that it would damage the Canadian economy. This is a possibility. Quite obviously, the extent to which this is true will depend largely upon the willingness and ability of Canadians to fill any void that may be created. Large new capital investments are required in Canada on a scale well in excess of previous experience. If Canadians and the Canadian government are unable to meet this challenge, then of course our economic prospects will be affected and our present standard of living will be greatly eroded.

There are a number of small and medium sized private businesses in this country—indeed, a number of them are in my riding of Elgin. I have frequently been told that this bill places a particularly heavy burden on small businesses whose resources are already strained to the limit in reporting to the government. I share their concern. The government can go a long way toward alleviating these fears by simply issuing guidelines which would let small businesses know exactly where they stand. This government has shown it has a total lack of vision and courage in projecting even five years ahead. In fact, it would be a great feat if we could manage to get the government to think past the next crisis which we as a nation will have to face, instead of edging along day by day on this ad hoc, crisis-to-crisis basis.

On an over-all Canadian basis, some acceptable alternative to the present trend must be found. When we reach the point, as we did five years ago when over 46 per cent of our metal fabricating industry, over 86 per cent of our transportation equipment industry, over 71 per cent of our machinery industry and over 99 per cent of our petroleum and coal products industry—as measured by total assets—was owned by people outside Canada, then we reach a rather sobering situation. Since then, the level of foreign ownership has continued to increase. Something must be done, and we must reassess our position.

I believe it is extremely important that my party's position on this matter and on the amendments we have put forth should be considered very seriously. The honorable member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), the party spokesman for industry, trade and commerce, has pointed out many times that the real problems facing Canada have not been dealt with in this bill. More importantly, however, he has pointed out a sound and positive approach to help Canada in its present position. First, the Progressive Conservative Party's full employment proposals would include a more expansionary budget. Our second point is that we believe our tax laws must be changed so as to encourage greater savings, greater investment and risk-taking by our fellow Canadians. At the present time, taxwise an American in many cases is in a more opportune position to invest in Canada, in many fields, than is a Canadian. This situation must be changed to ensure that a Canadian has an advantage if he or she wishes to invest in such fields in their own country. This thought is basic and any other suggestion is certainly ridiculous.

Third, we say that Canadian business in general has fallen behind the world in the last few years in research and development. Federal leadership is required to allow us to regain our momentum in this important field. We intend to outline certain proposals to allow our businesses, especially those which are Canadian-controlled, to regain their position in the world. Let me underline our party's position. Research and development are the forerunners of business development. During the past ten years Canada, with all its resources and with all its potential, has fallen into the bottom third of the world's first 25 countries in terms of rate of growth per capita. For a country with the potential Canada has, this is an extremely sad situation. It is time this trend was changed.

Fourth, our party believes our financial institutions should be redirected and restructured to ensure that Canadian business can be properly financed within Canada, including proper financing of regional activities of companies in our five main regions. Fifth, we believe that through a more aggressive export policy, a positive trade balance in current account can be achieved exclusive of whatever resources are sold. Such a positive balance would create a cash pool which could then be directed toward acquiring substantial or controlling interest in Canadian institutions now foreign-controlled. There are many fields in which we believe Canadians could buy sufficient equity to ensure our control of many of the multinational corporations. In this regard we are suggesting it is high time Canada started to live as part of the economic world.

To summarize, most Canadians are in favour of economic nationalism. But the question is: What is economic nationalism? To some, it is the taking of positive economic steps to strengthen Canada's position at home and abroad. To others, it is the welcoming of foreign or Canadian investment and technology to achieve these ends, with proper safeguards to protect Canadian industry. To this end, greater co-operation between the provinces and the federal government is required.

Several provincial premiers have spoken out against the bill, stating that the federal government would not fully take into account the special needs, aspirations and interests of a particular province. This is a real and very dangerous problem that must be faced and resolved by consultation rather than confrontation.

In a world of economic change, where Canada has much to gain and even more to lose, it would be unfortunate if we embraced a form of negative nationalism wherein the exponents were anti-foreign and, in particular, anti-American. In rather emotional arguments, these negative nationalists take statistics on foreign ownership and use them out of context in an alarming way. They allege that various types of ownership are harmful, without meaningful proof. They fail to appreciate Canada's involvement in today's multinational world economy and they put forth no creditable alternatives to replace what they would destroy.

The positive Progressive Conservative policy that has been outlined many times on this subject is far more important than anything the government has offered. In fact, the only thing the government has done is to show the country that it does not understand the economic world of today. We have tried to show that it is possible not to just keep a situation from further deterioration but to do something about it and move in the direction of a real solution involving greater Canadian participation and incentives for Canadians to invest more heavily and actively in this great country—Canada.

Mr. Norval Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this very important debate on foreign ownership I wish to deal generally with the bill, and especially with some of the amendments. We in Saskatchewan view with suspicion what appears to be a desire by the federal government for more control over the provinces. We look at the DREE programs, the LIP program and some of the other programs which do not seem to be designed having us in mind.

Today such clichés as "Buy Canada back", "Canada for Canadians", and so on, are very popular. Foreign capital has been necessary in the past. It is here and we can live with it. The challenge really is how to maintain control when using foreign investment, and not how to stumble along without it. In fact, it is difficult to get Canadians to invest in high-risk ventures such as oil exploration. There seems to be a correlation between the distance from Ottawa and the confidence in the government. This might explain why people from other countries more readily invest in high-risk ventures in Canada than do Canadians. A good deal of investment capital will be required, for example, in oil exploration alone. It is estimated that $30 billion will be needed during the next ten years for exploration if we are to maintain and ensure security of supply. It is doubtful that this amount of money could be raised in Canada; therefore, we will have to look to foreign investment.

I should like to deal specifically with the amendment of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). I believe this amendment to be of particular interest to the people of Saskatchewan who have always viewed with a great deal of suspicion the motives of eastern bankers and eastern businessmen. In a recent publication by Norman Bromberger, entitled "Conflict and co-operation", there is an outline of the problems of credit in Saskatchewan, particularly farm credit. In his opening remarks Mr. Bromberger states that the settlement and development of western Canada was promoted to develop eastern commerce and industry. Further, he makes the statement—this is following confederation—that westward expansion served the interests of two sections of Canadian business, that is, the railroad interests and the growing commercial and industrial interests. He also states that although western settlement did not come with confederation as anticipated, it was a deliberate policy decision by eastern business and commerce to set up a hinterland for commercial and industrial exploitation. So the people in western Canada—which includes Saskatchewan—have for a long time had a deep-rooted suspicion that central and eastern Canada are not out to do them much good in terms of investment.

The finding of investment capital in Saskatchewan has always been a problem. In recent years, provincial governments have been involved with new enterprises entering their provinces. I would mention examples such as the Interprovincial Steel Company and the Prince Albert Pulp Company. The premiers of all provincial governments went south to the United States, where they found the required money. Then they came back and started the businesses. In the case of Interprovincial Steel Company, I believe this has been quite a valuable acquisition for the city of Regina and the province of Saskatchewan. I am wondering whether that business would have been established under this proposed legislation.

For many years the NDP received most of its capital from the United States. The provincial minister of finance would sojourn to New York every year to obtain money for rural Saskatchewan farms. A strange thing about the NDP is that it does not particularly favour United States capital. In fact, most countries outside of Canada are referred to by that party as "foreign"—but with the NDP some countries are more foreign than others. There were recent plans to bring in a Romanian tractor company. The NDP government of Saskatchewan had no objection to their retaining 51 per cent control. It would throw in 49 per cent of the capital and forfeit any control. However, last Saturday was a rather eventful day for the NDP Premier of Saskatchewan. The Canadian Press carried a half-page cover story. Over the picture of the premier the headline of the story was "Sask. economy to go boom-boom soon: Blakeney".

While that appeared in the eastern papers and in some Saskatchewan papers, the headline stories in the Saskatchewan papers on the same day did not indicate a boom-boom for Saskatchewan. In fact, the Romanian tractor deal, after two or three years of discussion, folded completely. The Romanians will not be setting up the tractor plant, so that big election promise goes down the drain.

Also, the Burns company in Regina not only does not intend to expand as previously announced and provide 300 or 400 new jobs, but is to close down its plant in Regina leaving 340 people to look for new work. Of course, the Burns' decision resulted from Liberal policies which emptied the feedlots in Saskatchewan so that the packing plants would have nothing to do the following year. It also resulted from the policy which raised interest rates. I think I hear the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) say that I agreed with the policy.

Mr. Knight: That is what the Star-Phoenix says.

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): It comes from "you know who". I think he looks after the Department of Justice. Certainly Burns' reason for closing their plant and not expanding was the high interest rates. On the same day, to top off the picture, John Richards, secretary to one of the ministers, announced he was leaving the government and would sit as an independent until the new Waffle party was formed. I do not know on which side of the fence the federal NDP members are, whether they are Waffle, or NDP members, or just NDP wafflers. That is a decision they will have to make. Certainly, John Richards is a strong nationalist and will form what he terms the real socialist party in Saskatchewan.

Saskatchewan is a tremendously wealthy province in terms of mineral wealth. All it needs is the money to develop it. Capital, whether it is Canadian or foreign, is limited and the available money goes to areas where there is a safe political climate, where the ground-rules are such that investors can operate or where the people investing have confidence in the government's administration. A good example is the difference between the province of Alberta and the province of Saskatchewan. The new rapeseed processing plant in Lloydminster is being set up on the Alberta side. One could give an endless number of examples of new industry being set up in Alberta which could as easily, except for the difference in government philosophy, be set up in the province of Saskatchewan.

After many years of CCF and Liberal governments in Saskatchewan, we are not setting any records in that province so far as the manufacturing industry is concerned. We are not doing too badly there now—and if all goes well, by the end of 1974 the population of Saskatchewan should increase to the point where it was in 1931!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): We are quite a few years behind the rest of Canada in that regard. In the 1973 Saskatchewan economic review it is stated that the production of agricultural commodities accounted for 46.4 per cent of the total value of all goods-producing industries. So you can see that agriculture is still the mainstay of Saskatchewan. In the non-agricultural section, mining accounted for 37.5 per cent, a quarter of which is potash, manufacturing accounted for 24.7 per cent, and construction for 27.6 per cent. Most of the goods that leave Saskatchewan do so in the raw form, to be processed elsewhere. This might be one of the reasons for the low population growth. Surely the problem is lack of investment capital in the province. In that review, increased capital spent on farm machinery and housing is predicted, but no mention is made of any increase in expenditures in industry or manufacturing. Mining investment in 1968 amounted to $225 million, and in 1972 it was $100 million.

Obtaining capital for investment and the control by the province of who invests in Saskatchewan and who controls the investment are very important. Provincial political parties always seek support on the basis that they can attract the most capital if they are elected. The late Ross Thatcher worked hard to meet an election promise and managed to attract funds for a pulp miill in Prince Albert. It was not easy. As the late Woodrow Lloyd said, the province assumed 80 per cent of the risk in return for 30 per cent of the equity. A New York firm, Parsons and Whitmore, ended up with 70 per cent of the equity. Most of the money for the mill came from the United States. The pulp mill employs about 1,00 people and has been a boon for the city of Prince Albert and the northern area. The argument as to whether it was a good deal for Saskatchewan will probably go on indefinitely between the provincial NDP and Liberals until such time as they have amalgamated, I suppose.

Mr. Knight: Impossible.

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): My point here is that if Mr. Thatcher had been forced to use Canadian funds to build a pulp mill at Prince Albert, he would have completely exhausted the funds in those areas. Were it not for the Americans taking a chance at Prince Albert when Canadians would not, there would not be a pulp mill there today. A similar arrangement for a mill at Meadow Lake was entered into by the Liberals. They spent about $6 million. They were defeated in the June, 1971, election. Along came the new NDP government which said, "We will give you $5 million or $6 million to get out of it". So the province was out $10 million and all they had left to show for it was a pretty good education.

Mr. Knight: The best thing they ever did.

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): I never studied the problem one way or the other. I was not involved in provincial politics then, and had no reason to be. Perhaps the hon. member would like to repeat the statement in Meadow Lake.

Lack of investment is not the only reason for the slow growth of industry in Saskatchewan. Another reason is our young people's mobility and desire not to draw unemployment insurance, that is, not to be unemployed. Millions of dollars on DREE programs and LIP are spent in areas of high unemployment. In Saskatchewan, people simply move to the jobs: this is an example which people in other parts of Canada could follow. For years DREE grants in Saskatchewan went only to Saskatoon and Regina and the rest of the province was industry-starved. The fact that the only Liberal member from Saskatchewan came from Saskatoon may have been part of the reason money was restricted to the large cities. A town could be 50 per cent unemployed, but if it did not have an Unemployment Insurance Commission office it was assumed by DREE to have 100 per cent employment.

Since this bill is directed at foreign investment, perhaps one should look at the Canadian money flowing into American-dominated international unions—something which I thought the NDP would clear up because they are specialists in unions.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Unions own their party.

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): In a six-year period from 1962 to 1967, international unions made a net profit of $68 million, according to Kent Rowley, secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Council of Unions. It appears that it is all right if union money flows into international unions which are controlled by the Americans—but the NDP do not appreciate foreign control here. What about Canadians who invest in other countries? According to the Watkins report, in 1964 foreigners owned $33 billion of assets in Canada, while Canadians owned $13 billion abroad. The per capita investment of Canadians in the U.S. is probably higher than that of Americans in Canada. The figures may differ in 1973, but the proportions are probably similar.

In closing, I want to warn hon. members that Canada is still going to require a great deal of foreign capital. In the oil industry alone, as I mentioned, to assure a long-term supply would require five times the available investment capital that Canada possesses today. We had better be certain that in a nationalistic fever we do not establish ground rules that will discourage foreign investment and destroy the confidence of the world in Canada as a good place in which to invest.

● (2130)

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in the debate on the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) who I think left the House with some erroneous impressions. The subamendment obviously takes care of an oversight. We in this party are very conscious of possible developments in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. We have in our midst the very able hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) who is forever reminding us that his area will soon become Canada's eleventh province. I am sure the NDP member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) has similar views. I would like to hear him speak on the subamendment.

Mr. Watson: Does your leader agree with that?

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I would think so. It is a question you had better put to him.

Mr. Watson: All those resources for 20,000 people?

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): All those resources for Canada, the same as all resources are for Canada. The Premier of Alberta has been the first to admit that Canada comes first. Representatives of the oil industry came down here in 1969 and said, "Let us build a pipeline to Montreal." But the cabinet said no. The present minister wasn't in the cabinet: he is a Johnny-come-lately; his talents have just been recognized. In 1969 the oil industry was told, "Peddle your oil elsewhere. We don't need it. We would rather buy oil from the Middle East." Now the cabinet is attempting to treat Alberta like some kind of blue-eyed Arab. Nothing is further from the truth.

As recently as last week, the minister of intergovernmental affairs for the province of Alberta said, "We will give you all the oil it is possible to deliver by the present means to the Montreal market." He estimated that deliveries could total something like 100,000 or 150,000 barrels a day.

Mr. Breau: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I listened to the hon. member with great interest for an hour the other day, but I do not think he is now speaking to the substance of the subamendment and he should be called to order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The point raised by the hon. member is obviously well taken. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) has already spoken for the full time allocated to him under the Standing Orders on the motion before the House. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has moved a subamendment, and if hon. members are going to speak a second time on a motion to amend the bill they should restrict their contributions to the subamendment before the House. I am sure this is what the hon. member intends to do.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that I was replying to some heckling from the other side, and the answers I gave were not the ones they wanted. I think somebody should put two or three Brownie marks beside the parliamentary secretary's name because he has done yoeman service; he found that my answers were ridiculing the arguments the government is trying to sell across Canada and he immediately acted to stop me.

When I rose to speak I had a copy of the subamendment in my hand. Then I was rudely interrupted by hon. members opposite. As I was saying, the subamendment fills an oversight in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. Mackay). It is a worthy subamendment and one with which the hon. member for Yukon would certainly agree.

The hon. member for Timiskaming said some interesting things when he moved his subamendment. There is a great deal of oil in the Yukon. Oil was discovered over 100 years ago in the Norman Wells area of the Yukon. We would like to think that the Canadian market would be made available for that oil—but that will not happen unless we have foreign capital. It will take $5 billion or $6 billion to build a gas line down the Mackenzie Valley. If the gas line is built, you will see extensive drilling taking place along the route. Of course, it would be even more costly to build an oil pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley.

Some members of the NDP have a mistaken belief that the oil in Alberta does not belong to Alberta, does not belong to Canada but belongs to somebody in a foreign country. The oil now being found and developed in the province of Alberta belongs to the people of Alberta. The oil companies don't own it; they could not extract one barrel of oil without the permission of the provincial energy board. How much they extract from each well is determined by that energy board. There is no ownership of the oil itself. There is ownership of the drilling rights; they buy the drilling rights, and pay a very steep premium for them, but it cannot be said that they own the oil in the ground. Albertans own the oil in the ground, and they limit the amount that comes out. As I was saying, there is room for great potential development in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

The minister's speech in support of this legislation was rather weak. In an earlier energy debate in this House the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) said that we are being strangled by private enterprise. I thought that was a rather strange statement, but perhaps coming from him it is not strange. He has got himself hired on as a two-bit professor at some university and now he has become an academic and a long-haired theorist on socialism.

At one time we sat in this House and wondered if the Waffles would take over the NDP. But they did not have to do that, Mr. Speaker; they were swallowed up. No Waffle member could say more in support of state control than the statement uttered by that hon. member, that we are being strangled by private enterprise. We need private enterprise to move into the territories and help develop their resources so that Canadians will have continuous reserves of oil and gas. There is absolutely no need for Canada to be short of oil or gas this winter. But because we have not encouraged enough money to come in and develop our resources, we may well remain at the mercy of the Middle East and its pricing system.

An editorial in the Financial Post of November 10 contained the following:

> Our major expansion money is going into the U.S. Our Canadian growth will level out, while our U.S. growth will really take off.

That is a quotation from a statement made by a company president. That is certainly what will happen if this bill goes ahead. The minister piloting this legislation is from Toronto. A few wealthy Torontonians have told him there is enough money in the country to develop it—

Mr. Breau: On a point of order—

[Mr. Horner (Crowfoot).]

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Another two Brownie points.

Mr. Breau: With all respect, the subamendment is very simple. It adds the words "Northwest Territories and Yukon territory" to the amendment presented by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), and I would suggest that the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) is not speaking to that at all. It is obvious that these hon. members want to filibuster.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure what the hon. member is speaking about, but I think it is the responsibility of all hon. members who take part in debate in parliament to respect the rules. If there is any rule that members should attempt to take into account, it is the rule of relevancy. That rule means that we should discuss what is before the House. If members are moved to move subamendments or amendments to the motions, we will be here for a long time and they are attracting, of course, this additional debate. I am not sure whether the hon. member is taking advantage of the fact that this subamendment is before us. He has 20 minutes in which to make a speech. Perhaps the easiest thing is to allow him to make his speech until another subamendment is moved. But for the moment I will hear him out.

• (2140)

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would it not be in order for Your Honour, in the circumstances related to this amendment, to rule that one would be able to discuss the question of financing oil and gas development in the territories?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's approach to such matters is very liberal, obviously. I am not prepared to go as far as him in a liberal interpretation of the rules.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your counsel. I always pay close attention to it and will attempt to adhere to the amendment. Apparently some hon. members are not aware of what the subamendment would do. It does not deal with the Yukon, but just says:

> —following the words "a province" the words "or a territorial council".

There are two territorial councils, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. Provinces are not necessarily named in the amendment. I just point that out so that next time the "Brownie" seeker jumps up he will use the right word. There is certainly great potential for gas and oil recovery in the Northwest Territories—but that is not all that is there. There is a tremendous amount of mineral wealth there, and it needs to be developed. I remember when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was prime minister he introduced the roads to resources program. Many roads were built up to those resources so that the mining and development necessary to get the metals to market could begin. That was a very worth-while project, and it took capital which the government of the day advanced to the provinces and the territories. The roads moved the minerals out and the Pine Point railroad also moved the minerals out. However, despite what some people might think, we cannot move the oil and gas very efficiently because if any means other than a pipeline is employed, huge amounts of foreign investment will be necessary. If we do get the pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley, this will require further foreign investment.

I read a moment ago a newspaper article which says that foreign investment will be curtailed. It says that our major expansion money is going to the U.S., that Canadian growth will level out while U.S. growth will really take off, and that this kind of loss hurts. Another headline in the same paper says that every major cost and tax will be higher in Canada. That is interesting, Mr. Speaker. We are not keeping up with our major competitor for money, the United States.

This afternoon the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) said that few people live in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, and that more people in his constituency voted for him than live up there altogether. This will continue to be the case as long as we keep out the foreign investment that is necessary to develop that area. It is all well and good for the lost souls from Saskatchewan in the New Democratic Party to say they have to manage their economy and curtail their growth. Saskatchewan is a very rich province in minerals, but it is very afraid to develop and it has frightened off foreign investment. Some of that investment has come to Alberta, where we have confidence in ourselves and in the province. We are not afraid of managing foreign money and I think we have done a relatively good job of it under the present and former governments.

The federal government could do it, too. Foreign investment could not go into the Northwest Territories without full consultation with the federal government, because that area does not yet have provincial status. I suppose the NDP would like to think they would curtail the growth there so that their power over the people living in the area would remain in Ottawa and they would never be given provincial status. I do not agree with that, Mr. Speaker. Canada is a vast country, a very regional country, a confederation of areas—and those areas should be encouraged to grow and develop.

I notice that no one in this House speaks out strongly against development in the north at James Bay. That is a similar region and huge amounts of foreign capital are going into it. Why do we say that we must control the foreign investment going into the Yukon and the Northwest Territories? Is it because they are undeveloped areas and we want to keep them undeveloped so that control will remain here; so that the population will always be small and will never bother Ottawa very much?

I should like to pose a question to the minister in charge of this bill. When he sets up his agency, will there be somebody on it from the territorial Councils, because of the rich mineral wealth that is there?

An hon. Member: Of course there will.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Someone says, "Of course there will". I would like to think so, but the minister steadfastly studies his papers when the question is posed because he does not know who will be on the agency. He will not have the authority to appoint them; that will be done by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The minister cannot say that there will be people from the Northwest Territories or the Yukon on the agency; but certainly those areas should be represented as well as the other major provinces in Canada.

A great deal of care must be used in setting up the agency so that none of the bitter, cantankerous feelings that have been apparent recently, and best exemplified by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), become dominant factors in it. There should be complete regional representation on the agency so that this sort of feeling could be suppressed and controlled at all times and there would be no particular hatred against any region, certainly not against a region with so much development yet to take place and with so much room for growth in population as in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

We are dealing with a very important subject today, Mr. Speaker. Someone on the other side suggested this is a filibuster. If you make two speeches on a matter, you are filibustering around here.

Mr. Breau: What about 25 speeches?

• (2150)

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Perhaps it will take another 25 speeches to put the government into a receptive frame of mind for suggested amendments.

Mr. Breau: We are very receptive.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): If the government remains steadfast and will not perceive the usefulness of worthwhile suggestions from this side of the House, let me say to the parliamentary secretary who is continually interrupting me that a minority government should always have its ears open for good ideas—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): —because it does not have the support of the House of Commons. The vocal group to my left are pounding their desks. They had 17.8 per cent of the popular vote last time; they know how much support there is for socialism in Canada. Even so, they had to hid their true colours. They had to push the Waffle, the real socialists, out; yet they are still Wafflers. Their leader is outwaffling Mr. Laxer by a long shot. They could not be tarnished when going to the people in the 1972 election; they had to hide their true feelings. But even so they got only 17.8 per cent of the vote.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret very much to interrupt the hon. member. Of course, he may continue if he has the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent. The hon. member, I am afraid, will have to wait for another amendment.

Mr. Knight: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might be permitted to ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair thought it heard the hon. member refusing, a moment ago, consent to extend the hon. member's time. If the hon. member has changed his mind and wants to allow the hon. member additional time, if he has the consent of the House he can ask his question. Is there unanimous consent to extend the time of the hon. member for Crowfoot?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): For one question.

Mr. Speaker: There is a very qualified acceptance—for one question.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) the following question. As the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) expressed a view exactly opposite to that which the hon. member for Crowfoot expressed about the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), I wonder if the hon. member for Crowfoot in this instance, especially in view of his record as an individualist within the party's ranks, would inform the House whether he or the hon. member for Peel South is speaking for the Conservative Party.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very good question. I particularly like it because we, in the Conservative Party, are very broad minded. We are not sterile. We do not believe that only one person should speak and that we should not listen to anybody else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Yet that is how the NDP group operates. Those members think they must follow.

I have looked at the subamendment. I think it is very worth while. I think it was slipped in by oversight or by error. I personally thanked the honorable member for Timiskaming for suggesting this subamendment. I know the hon. member would never do anything without consulting the whole caucus of his party. I know the whip of the NDP group will certainly support the frontbencher of that party who has brought forward this subamendment.

Further, I know that the hon. member for Northwest Territories of the NDP will certainly support the subamendment. I can assume that the whole group to my left will wholeheartedly support the subamendment and I wish to thank that group for supporting it. I think it is worth while. Between now and the time when we vote, they can rest assured that I will have lengthy conversations with the hon. member for Peel South and will attempt to persuade him to support this subamendment also.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any further questions?

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I too am strongly in favour of strong provincial input into these matters we are discussing—and I think the territories were not included in the legislation because of an oversight. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), moved an amendment which may correct this glaring oversight. I am sure the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) is entirely in agreement with it.

The territories, even more than the provinces, are concerned about representation with respect to decisions affecting investments. Some suggest that as there are only a few thousand people in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, we do not really need to bother about them. Some say there are too few people up there to affect the resources of the region. I ask, what about the neighboring state of Alaska? Compared with the population of New York state, California or other states in the U.S.A., the population of Alaska is very small indeed. Yet that state is important. It is equally important for the people in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon to have a say in decisions affecting investments in their area. Why, Mr. Speaker? The reason has to do with discoveries of oil and gas and with the building of pipelines in those areas.

The courts have pointed out that jurisdiction and ownership with respect to thousands of square miles of land in the Yukon and Northwest Territories will need to be examined if we are to build pipelines from those areas. It is important for native peoples and others affected to have some input into decisions respecting investment in areas in which they live. This investment, in the foreseeable future, will take the form of gas and oil pipelines and things like that. In the previous parliament we discussed the Yukon minerals legislation. It was found that a group of civil servants in Ottawa had designed the minerals legislation for the Yukon. It was an autocratic piece of legislation which did not take into account certain needs and was detrimental to the development of the Yukon.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been made.

TRANSPORT—PREVENTION OF ABRIDGEMENT OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND'S RIGHT TO FERRY LINK WITH MAINLAND—POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT OPERATION OF SERVICE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on September 18 I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) if he was actively seeking means whereby P.E.I.'s constitutional right to transportation links with the rest of Canada should not again be abridged. I further inquired whether he was giving consideration to having the ferries operated by the Department of Transport. For some reason, the minister in his reply talked about the right to strike and asked whether hon. members wished to remove the right to strike. My question was not one dealing with labour relations. Rather, it was concerned with transportation and the right of Prince Edward Island to be connected with the rest of the Dominion by reliable and adequate transportation links.

This chamber, and the one which existed before the great fire of 1916, echoed with the complaints of Prince Edward Island members of parliament troubled about their province's lack of transportation facilities. A vital question when we entered confederation a century ago was transportation. We entered because we were promised continuous and efficient communication with the mainland. This hundred-year old promise was never fully implemented. It certainly was very much in abeyance during the last railway strike and two preceding ones.

It is a strange thing that Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, the two provinces from which the CNR has made a most thorough withdrawal, should suffer most when the CNR and its employees have a row which brings on a strike. The vast number of people crossing on the Island ferries are not railway passengers at all. Yet the ferries are operated by the CNR. My belief is that that corporation should be removed from the picture and the ferries operated directly by the Department of Transport. Premier Campbell has suggested a provincial Crown corporation to operate the service. I cannot see this as a realistic notion. The province of Prince Edward Island could not afford to operate the ferry service, nor should it. Interprovincial transport is purely and simply, clearly and definitely, the responsibility of the government of the Dominion of Canada.

But what troubles me most about the whole matter is the lack of action and communication between the government of Prince Edward Island and the government of Canada on this vital link. Surely the break-off of service should have shocked both governments into action. But on October 29, in reply to an order paper question, I learned there had been no formal communication from the government of Prince Edward Island or suggestions for the avoidance of any future cessation of service on the Borden-Tormentine run. No formal word from the Prince Edward Island government, and from the federal department the reply, "The continuance of alternate routes should guarantee that Prince Edward Island is not completely isolated in the event of future work stoppages."

In other words we are back to where we were last summer, six years ago, and in 1951. Leave it to the Northumberland ferries! They did a good job and I am surprised they have not been paid for their great work. I am surprised, too, that the P.E.I. government has not presented a bill for what it had to do to relieve some of the strain of the shutdown of the main ferry service.

However, the status quo is not good enough and I think the minister should do something. I do not think our island province deserves to be cut off as it was three times in recent years. Now is the time to move. Now is the time to learn the lessons of the strike. Montesque said that to govern is to foresee. Let us see some foresight, some action, some concern on this vital issue.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the fall of 1972 a team of CN and MOT officials began examining the organizational structures of the east coast ferry services to Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island and considering alternates. Many alternatives were considered, among which were: creating a separate entity for ferry services that would report to the CN vice-president responsible for the Atlantic region; creating a separate CN subsidiary with its own board of directors; creating a Crown corporation; bringing east coast ferry service activities into the public service.

On October 12, 1973, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) jointly announced with the president of CN a new east coast ferry operating administration to be based at Moncton, New Brunswick, with operating units in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, responsible for all ferry and coastal services managed by CN for the Ministry of Transport. Featured in the reorganization was the creation of a directing committee for the new administration, composed of senior Transport and CN officials. CN president J. MacMillan announced that Rupert J. Tingley, formerly CN area manager in Newfoundland, had been appointed as general manager. The major objectives for the new administration are the co-ordination, improvement and expansion of the present ferry and coastal services to meet expected increased traffic demands.

It should be noted that in regard to all of the alternatives employees would either have by law the right to strike or be able to choose the right to strike as a means of dispute settlement. Even if by some means the services could be declared essential and prohibited from striking, there is no guarantee that the employees under certain conditions might not find it necessary or desirable to initiate a work stoppage. One way of avoiding shutdown of the ferry services would be to have the services run by the military, but this has never been considered a viable alternative. The government is not considering abolishing the right to strike.

CRIMINAL CODE—REQUEST THAT ABORTION BE REMOVED

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, this morning, two days after the acquittal of Dr. Henry Morgentaler on a charge of performing an illegal abortion, the Montreal Gazette spoke out strongly in favour of a change in the present abortion law. Editorially, it congratulated Dr. Morgentaler on having the courage of his convictions, adding that he had "done more than a full parliament of MP's to bring the abortion issue squarely before the public". The Gazette is quite right. The government of Prime Minister Trudeau, and indeed most members of parliament, have been remiss in their duty to respond to human need by repealing Canada's outmoded and unworkable abortion law. Instead, like the ostrich this House has buried its head in the sand and hoped that the whole matter would go away. It will not!

In Canada there are 1,422 hospitals. Only 247 have established abortion boards. The result is that these hospitals are overloaded and that women in places where there are no hospital boards are compelled to attempt ghastly "do it yourself" ways to find relief or to look about desperately for someone, far too often an incompetent practitioner, to save them. Meanwhile, women with money can get safe abortions in New York. No wonder Dr. Morgentaler commented on his acquittal in these words:

> Even if I lose the appeal the point will have been made. Public opinion will pressure the government to establish clinics so that women who want them can have them safely and with dignity instead of going to butchers . . .
> "It's not just helping these people that interested me, but helping get the law changed across Canada".

In face of this tragic and absurd situation, what is the response of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang)? Clothed in rectitude and rigidity, he warns hospitals to narrow their interpretation of the abortion law so that social and economic factors will have little or no weight in permitting an abortion. He turns a blind eye, a deaf ear and a cold heart to the misery of those who need help.

The Toronto Globe and Mail of this morning comments editorially:

> Almost from the day Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau brought in the present abortion rules he has been under attack for not liberalizing them further. He has kept doggedly to his stand that the government would not consider further reforms so soon after the 1969 changes. The existing system works and there is no need for further relaxing the rules, he says. He's wrong. The present system works but it works badly. Therapeutic committees are cumbersome. Some hospitals will not establish committees. Others interpret the abortion section of the Criminal Code so strictly that whole communities are denied the right to abortions. Hospitals vary so widely in their approval to abortion that it's true to say the law on abortion varies from community to community, which is an intolerable situation.

Of course, we cannot materially reduce the great numbers of abortions, legal or illegal, until we have birth control knowledge and access to contraceptives fully available. Contraception is the first line of defence against unwanted pregnancy. We are far from that state of affairs today. Meanwhile we must get rid of our present abortion legislation which gives rise to such absurdity and injustice all across this country.

When is this government going to permit freedom of conscience to the people of this country by taking abortion from the Criminal Code and allowing the decision to be made in each individual case by the woman involved and her doctor?

[Translation]

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Montreal case will probably be appealed but we cannot make comments on the future development of events concerning possible amendments to the Criminal Code.

The general position of the minister inside and outside the House is as follows: He objects to any amendment to the abortion legislation as it now stands.

The hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) has insisted that abortion legislation should be liberalized and amended according to the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court. It has also been stated that in several areas, hospitals refuse to set up abortion committees thus overburdening other hospitals and compelling women who wish to obtain an abortion to travel to other provinces or abroad or still to rely on those who practise illegal abortions.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway).]

On August 25, 1970, in the 10 provinces and Yukon Territory, it was reported that 143 hospitals had appointed therapeutic abortion committees. Their distribution is as follows: Newfoundland, 4; Prince Edward Island, 2; Nova Scotia, 6; New Brunswick, 7; Quebec, 16; Ontario, 48; Manitoba, 4; Saskatchewan, 8; Alberta, 18; British Columbia, 29; Yukon, 1.

It appears that the abortion rates vary considerably among the provinces and are in no way connected with the availability of chartered or approved hospitals which have appointed therapeutic abortion committees. The statistics for the first six months of 1972 are also available. The therepeutic abortion rate, compared with the total number of births, had been 7.6 per cent for the first semester of 1971. In 1972, for the same period, the rate was 10.1 per cent. Here again the rates varied according to the provinces. For the first six months of 1971, the statistics varied from 19.3 in British Columbia to 0.5 in Newfoundland. For the same period in 1972, these rates were 22.4 in British Columbia and 1.2 in Newfoundland. For the period of January to June 1972, the total of therapeutic abortions was 18,817. For the same period in 1971, the total was 14,168.

The number of abortions for women from elsewhere or residing in the province, other than those reported in the province, was negligible. In 1971, foreign residents accounted for 0.1 per cent. During the same year, patients residing in a province other than that concerned in the report represented 0.7 per cent of the total. For the first six months of 1972, the figures are the same. Here are publications of Statistics Canada in support of what has been said.

1. Special publication on therapeutic abortions in Canada, from August 26, 1969, to August 25, 1970, dated November 20, 1970.

2. Therapeutic abortions in Canada in 1971, dated May 3, 1972.

3. Therapeutic abortions in Canada, from January to June 1972, dated December 11, 1972.

The minister has also been asked from time to time about the publicity in Canadian publications offering abortions in locations where they are legal, in New York for instance. The minister simply replied that he was studying this publicity and that his department would soon complete its research in this matter.

AIR CANADA—CONSTRUCTION OF NEW COMPUTER CENTRE AT DORVAL—EFFECT ON WINNIPEG CENTRE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, over the past few months I have spoken several times on the subject of Air Canada and for the most part my remarks have concerned the transfer of the Air Canada overhaul and maintenance base to Dorval in 1969. This House is quite familiar with the circumstances surrounding that transfer and the destructive effect the move has had on the aerospace industry of Manitoba. I believe that part of the base should be returned to Winnipeg.

Tonight I intend to discuss a situation which in many ways bears an ominous resemblance to the transfer fiasco.

I refer to the construction by Air Canada of a new computer and systems service centre at Dorval. In spite of assurances to the contrary from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), I fear that this new facility might render the computer operation in Winnipeg obsolete. Such a move would force many employees to move to Dorval.

I am skeptical of the minister's assurances because they resemble those false assurances about the maintenance base given to the people of Manitoba during the 1950s and 1960s. Successive Liberal governments repeatedly denied that the base was to be moved—but it was. One thousand Manitobans were forced to move to Dorval. Today, employee morale is incredibly low, especially among transplanted Manitobans. The people of Winnipeg do not want a repeat of the air base debacle. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) termed the transfer "one of the worst mistakes ever made in Canadian history". We do not want to be the victims of another government mistake.

The new computer building is scheduled for occupancy in January. But who exactly is going to occupy the 25,000 square feet of floor space? Air Canada maintains that the building will house employees and equipment presently located in various other areas of the base. However, there appears to be some doubt whether a building of this size is necessary if in fact it is to be occupied only by those currently working in Dorval.

A letter sent last spring by Air Canada to Winnipeg's civic executive policy committee stated that the airline was moving the Winnipeg accounting department to Montreal. Air Canada, however, claimed that this information was erroneous and have since continued to assert that no facilities will be moved. But for obvious reasons I am skeptical, and so are employees at the Winnipeg branch. History has made it hard for us to be confident of government assurances.

Even with the guarantee that the computer centre will remain in Winnipeg, the Manitoba aviation industry will continue to flounder. The government has failed to live up to past commitments. I suggest that rather than moving the Winnipeg branch to Dorval, Air Canada should centralize its computer facilities in Winnipeg. It is functionally possible to locate a central computer for all Air Canada requirements outside central Canada, with no loss of efficiency. Both the TransCanada Telephone Company and CN-CP Telecommunications are technically able to provide data transmission at reasonable cost because rates are rapidly becoming distance-insensitive.

Most airlines in the United States have decentralized their operations. United Airlines has its headquarters in Chicago and its main computer in the western city of Denver. Eastern Airlines has its head offices in New York but has computer centres in North Carolina and Florida. However, according to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Guay) this is not what the government means when it speaks of decentralization. The hon. member stated in a recent letter to me that centralization "does not apply directly to such Crown corporations as Air Canada". I quote further from his letter:

> Air Canada is, of course, expected, as a Crown corporation, to recognize the government's social and economic policy. However, any decision regarding the actual operation of Air Canada must be left to its management which is responsible for the performance of the airline.

This is without doubt one of the most incredible statements I have read since becoming a member of parliament. I suggest that as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport the hon. member should read the Air Canada Act. Crown corporations are clearly subject to the people through parliament and are dependent upon parliament, especially the cabinet, for policy orientation. To imply, as the hon. member does, that Air Canada runs its own affairs independent of the cabinet is an insult to hon. members' intelligence.

An example of just how much direct influence the cabinet does have in formulating Air Canada policy can be found in a decision by the airline last spring to extend a contract to CAE aircraft in Winnipeg. CAE was awarded a contract to build galley equipment for Air Canada's New Lockheed jets without even having entered a bid. Furthermore, CAE had no experience in this type of work. Noorduyn Norseman Limited of Montreal had won the contract with a $200,000 bid, but was later informed by Air Canada that the contract was to be assigned to CAE.

CAE is Air Canada's replacement at the Winnipeg base and has been plagued with difficulties. Former Air Canada president, John Baldwin, frankly admitted "it will cost us more, substantially more, to have the galley equipment, and so on, built by CAE". He also said the airline had an obligation to Winnipeg. It is obvious that Air Canada was advised by the government to give the contract to CAE, yet the parliamentary secretary asserts that Air Canada makes all its own decisions. Even Mr. Baldwin admits this is not so.

Thus, the government does control Air Canada policy and is in a position to steer that corporation on a road to decentralization. This it must do. Not only must the computer office remain in Winnipeg but the government should consider centralizing all computer facilities in that city. This, combined with the return of portions of the air base, would not only alleviate the deteriorating situations in Dorval and Winnipeg but would prove to the people of Manitoba and western Canada that this government is sincere when it talks about decentralization.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to say that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) was already on the air on this subject on station CJOB yesterday morning, making the same statement as he made here a moment ago and making many allegations which he cannot substantiate. If he has a real problem, let him spell it out here, instead of all this literary writing that he is doing in the House.

In fact, Peter Ward, the investigating reporter for CJOB, said on that station recently that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre was known to exaggerate. I think that I myself would not want this said about me. Speaking about CAE, this is another thing. He should read in the House the letter which he received from the manager of CAE in Winnipeg contradicting what the hon. member said on the air, in the House and elsewhere.

After taking this into consideration, I would now like to return to the matter of the computer. On June 6, the day after the hon. member asked his question in the House, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) sent him a letter in reply. The situation, contrary to the allegations made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and also by another member of the opposition, has not changed since then.

Air Canada is changing computer equipment at both Winnipeg and Montreal and some computer operators are regularly transferred in these operations. Those transferred from Winnipeg are replaced, and the total staff size in Winnipeg is being maintained at last year's level. Beyond this I can really only repeat the substance of the minister's June 9 letter, that Air Canada's plans are to result in a significant upgrading in technological resources at Winnipeg. Through a new, flexible terminal computer, Winnipeg is being interlinked with Toronto and Dorval real-time computer capabilities and the technology available at both these locations is thus becoming available to the Winnipeg group. That is contrary to what the hon. member keeps saying. The Winnipeg group is having its knowledge updated accordingly.

Air Canada regards it of prime importance that the same relative levels of advanced technology be achieved, regardless of geographical location, to provide uniformly up to date and efficient service to all Air Canada users of computer services at any of their prime three locations and to ensure equal opportunity for promotion to all their employees across their system.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

THE LATE HARRY KUNTZ

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we learned with sadness this morning of the death of our colleague and friend, Harry Kuntz, member for Battle River.

Born and raised on a farm in Alberta, he had a deep respect and love for the land he represented. Although he was a relative newcomer to federal politics, his record of public service at the community level in Camrose was well established. As the father of five sons, he had an enthusiastic interest in amateur sports and volunteered his time to work with young people. Since he was elected to Parliament last year, he quickly became known among his colleagues as a dedicated constituency man. The concerns of his riding—agriculture, transportation and small business—became the concerns which he keenly pursued as a member of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I know all members will join with me in extending our sympathy to Mrs. Kuntz and her sons.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I was very shocked this morning to learn of the death of the hon. member for Battle River. It is always with particular sadness that one learns of the death of someone who is young in years, a husband and father of a young family.

Harry Kuntz came to the House of Commons from a part of the country where much remains of the spirit of the pioneers. He applied that spirit himself to the service of his neighbours. He was very active in the economic life of his community, in its civic affairs and, as the Prime Minister indicated, in community affairs.

His concern for the future of agriculture and the agricultural communities in his constituency was demonstrated with great sincerity and great conviction in this chamber. He was a man of very sound judgment, a man who spoke out when he had something to say. Knowing our hon. friend from Battle River, I and other members who come from other parts of the country came to appreciate the feelings and aspirations of the people he represented. I will miss his counsel.

On behalf of myself and my colleagues I join the Prime Minister in expressing our deepest sympathy to Mrs. Kuntz and her family.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I join with the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition in expressing our sorrow at the sudden passing of the late member for Battle River. Although Harry Kuntz had been a member of this House for only the period since the last election the seating arrangements have been such that he was near us, physically at any rate, and my colleagues who sat close to him found him a delightful person to know. All of us wish to express our regret at his sudden and untimely passing. We extend our sympathy in particular to the Leader of the Opposition and to his party in the loss of a valued colleague.

We would ask that you, Sir, express on behalf of all of us in the House our deepest sympathy to Mrs. Kuntz and the five sons. The loss of a husband and father at such an early age is indeed a time of sadness, but we trust that the precious memories they will have through the years that lie ahead will be a source of strength and comfort to them even now.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and myself should like to join the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in expressing our heartfelt condolences to Mrs. Kuntz and her children.

Mr. Kuntz was a very devoted and active member of parliament. I believe that the House has lost one of its good members and this is why we join all hon. members in expressing our deepest sympathy to his family.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Later today it will be my duty to convey directly to Mrs. Kuntz the sympathy and condolences which have been expressed by the party leaders on behalf of all members of the House.

PRIVILEGE

MR. COSSITT—NATURE OF REPLY TO QUERY CONCERNING UNANSWERED ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Last Wednesday, on a point of order, I drew attention to certain questions which I have on the order paper and which have remained unanswered by the government for some time. My question of privilege arises from two things that have occurred subsequent to my raising the point of order last Wednesday.

The first is the nature of the reply made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council which I have had an opportunity to examine in Hansard and which contains what I find impossible to construe as anything other than a threat to the right and privilege of members of this House to ask questions of the government. The following were his words:

I want to inform hon. members that I am attempting to find out the cost of answering these questions and on some of the more absurd ones I intend to make cost figures available.

It seems to me clear that in reality what has been said here is that members of the House should take warning not to continue asking too many questions of the government or they will be dealt with as posers of costly absurdities. There is, indeed, a not very veiled and threatening suggestion in the parliamentary secretary's remarks that members who ask questions of the government had better watch themselves or face unpleasant consequences. This sort of threatening language strikes at the acknowledged and long established duty and privilege of opposition members to examine and question in detail, without interference, any aspects of the governing of the country.

The second point on which I raise this matter of privilege arises from an article on page 41 of the Ottawa Citizen of Thursday, November 15, which reported my question and the parliamentary secretary's reply. This article contains information which the writer attributes to an unnamed member of the Privy Council staff who has told him that the Privy Council has had to hire extra staff for the sole purpose of answering questions from the member for Leeds. This is an untrue, malicious and blatantly irresponsible allegation by an employee of the government to a member of the news media, and it can scarcely be interpreted as anything other than an attempt by the government through one of its bureaucrats to discredit and interfere with the right and privilege of an opposition member to examine properly matters of concern to his constituency and to the country as a whole.

In conclusion, I make no apologies for questioning this government as often as possible and, like other members on this side of the House, I will continue to exercise my right and privilege to do so regardless of direct or indirect threats to desist from a government obviously easily embarrassed when its activities are questioned.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The President of the Privy Council.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the first part of the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) it should be made clear to him at this point that there has always been a tradition in the House of Commons to refuse answers to questions that involve an inordinate expenditure of public funds. That precedent has been quoted more than once in the House, and if he will look at a primer on Canadian government he will find that this fact has often been quoted and established. I would refer him to MacGregor Dawson's book on Canadian government.

We intend, in the answering of questions, to be as responsible as possible and to produce all the volumes of information that can be produced, but I think we ought to assert, as has been asserted in the past, that in particular cases where the cost of answering a question is very large the government can refuse to answer it on that ground. In doing so we are not establishing a new precedent at all. As I say, it is a precedent that has been quoted in the House before this session.

[Mr. Cossitt.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Leeds has raised the matter by way of a question of privilege. There is no motion. I would think it is a subject of debate, and I do not believe the Chair should be required to make an extensive ruling. The President of the Privy Council was allowed to reply according to practice. I suggest to hon. members that not much would be gained by pursuing the matter further and having a debate on the point raised by the hon. member for Leeds.

Mr. Cossitt: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I must point out that the President of the Privy Council is in error if he is implying in any way that any of my questions have involved, to use his word, "an inordinate expenditure of public funds."

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cossitt: This is a patently false statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Bell: It is just a case of revenge. You don't like him because he was a Liberal.

CHILEAN REFUGEES—ADMISSION TO CANADA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact hundreds of refugees from Chile have sought refuge in such countries as Panama, Honduras and Argentina and that many of them are seeking entrance to Canada, along with hundreds needing asylum within Chile, and in view of Canada's abysmal lack of response to this pressing human need, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin):

That this House instruct the government immediately to follow the measures adopted toward political refugees from Hungary in 1956, Czechoslovakia in 1968, and Uganda in 1972, thereby respecting the traditions which the Canadian people wish to have respected, and to instruct our embassies and affected departments to act accordingly.

Mr. Speaker: The motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

CHANGE IN NAME OF CONSTITUENCY FROM LASALLE TO LA SALLE-ÉMARD-CÔTE SAINT-PAUL

Mr. John Campbell (LaSalle) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-228, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

● (1120)

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to change the name of my constituency from "LaSalle" to "LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul". The basic reason for the change is that Émard and Côte Saint-Paul form integral parts of my riding and therefore I believe should be represented in the name. I ask that the name be changed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

AIR TRANSPORT

ACTION TO ENSURE SERVICE NOT INTERRUPTED BY SHORTAGE OF FUEL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

What measure does he intend to take to ensure that air transportation of passengers and goods will not be interrupted through the relative uncertainty of the oil reserves situation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): So far, Mr. Speaker, air transport companies have indicated to us that they had enough fuel to provide all services in Canada, the only problem being that of supply in the United States where there is a rationing system.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the reports that some American planes are leaving Canadian airports with unnecessary amounts of additional fuel on board, will the minister check to make certain that this is not going on in such a way as to erode the reserve supplies available to Canadian aircraft?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the problem we have is that fuel is rationed in the United States and it is not rationed in Canada. Would it be fair to say, therefore, that we are going to ration only American aircraft and not Canadian aircraft? We are looking into that situation now. This is why some Canadian airlines have to curtail their provision in the United States, and the reverse is not true. If we are going to have a shortage of fuel, I think we will have to do the same thing as they did to us in the United States.

[Translation]

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister satisfied that the emergency plan which he has developed will be sufficient to ensure adequate air transport under any circumstances in Canada?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): At this time I would say yes, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot say whether this will be so throughout winter.

[English]

ALLOCATION OF MILAN ROUTE TO CANADIAN CARRIER

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Can the minister tell the House if the oil shortage has had anything to do with the year's delay in assigning the Milan route to a Canadian carrier? Can he tell the House now when it will be assigned and what reason the government has for this unconscionable delay in providing an opportunity to a Canadian airline?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, maybe we can set up an inquiry board to see if there is a relationship between the two.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister advise the House what new crisis has made it—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member's question supplementary? I gathered that he was rising on a supplementary question. If not, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Vegreville for a supplementary and then the hon. member for Greenwood.

EFFECT OF FUEL SHORTAGE ON INSTITUTION OF NEW ROUTES TO UNITED STATES UNDER BILATERAL AGREEMENT

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In light of the growing fuel shortage and its effect on the air industry, particularly in the United States, can the minister advise the House whether this will have any effect on the institution of the new air routes under the bilateral agreement which was to have been initiated on January 1, 1974?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a little bit too soon to say. I do not know exactly when the bilaterals are going to be ratified by both governments, and I do not know what the fuel situation will be in Canada and the United States at that time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STEPS TO ASSIST CHILEAN REFUGEES WISHING TO COME TO CANADA

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the many assurances given by the minister both inside and outside the House that the problems of Chilean refugees would be dealt with in the same humanitarian manner as the Hungarian, Czechoslovakian and Ugandan refugees were dealt with by the government in the past, and in view of the mounting evidence that no adequate steps have been taken to implement these assurances and that very few applications have been processed either in Chile or in other countries to which the refugees have gone, can the minister state now what steps the government has taken or proposes to take to ensure that Canada maintains the humanitarian standards to which the minister referred?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that the humanitarian attitude taken by Liberal administrations toward the Hungarians, the Czechs, the Tibetans and the Ugandans will be continued.

An hon. Member: Paul Martin.

Mr. Trudeau: Shut up!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I would ask Your Honour if it is within the rules for one hon. member to tell another hon. member to shut up.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I should like to assure the hon. member for Greenwood that very special steps are being taken to deal with cases of Chileans either in Chile or outside of Chile who wish to come to Canada. Within Chile there has been a very limited interest in coming to Canada. We do know, however, of the presence in Panama, in San Jose and in Honduras of a number of people who have expressed an interest in coming to Canada. A team will be arriving in Panama on November 19 to begin processing applications. Another team is being sent to look at the whole situation in Panama, San Jose and Santiago to make sure that the willingness of Canada to accept those who wish to come to Canada is well known and that we shall take whatever steps are necessary to meet needs.

Mr. Brewin: In taking those steps, is the government giving consideration to doing what I understand was done at the time of the Hungarian episode, that is, provide means of transportation? Often these refugees have not got the means and without them they cannot come to this country.

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, some preliminary consideration has been given to this. The teams that are being sent to Santiago and to the other points outside where there are individuals who have left Chile will report back within a week, when the government will take a decision on this particular point if, in fact, there is the kind of interest that has been suggested and there is need for special assistance.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Humanitarian considerations notwithstanding, can the minister give assurances to the House and to the Canadian people that all steps are being taken so that the entry of such refugees into Canada will be based on the investigations that the department generally undertakes in such cases?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, in such cases the Canadian government believes, as it did in the case of the refugees from Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Uganda and Tibet, that humanitarian considerations should prevail.

INSTRUCTIONS TO CANADIAN AMBASSADOR TO CHILE RESPECTING PROVISION OF ASYLUM WITHIN EMBASSY TO CHILEANS

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As our embassy in Chile has been instructed by the Department of External Affairs to allow asylum within the embassy only in cases where individuals are being hotly pursued, that is to say, when they are being chased down the street by armed policemen, would the minister undertake to give different instructions to the ambassador to Chile so that we can see very clearly just how many people want to seek asylum in the embassy and then, in turn, seek refuge in Canada?

● (1130)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a very difficult problem and I would hesitate to give any such assurance. Our experience in Chile has been an extraordinary one. I would like to pay tribute to the work of the ambassador and the members of the embassy for the way in which they have worked day and night in an effort to deal with this very difficult problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: I say to the hon. member that he has not helped in facilitating the work of that ambassador.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Scarborough West on a supplementary and then attempt to complete the first round of questioning by recognizing the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, I will not take up the point of privilege which I would be allowed following the remarks of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. They are very much in the nature of remarks he has made previously to the effect that I am spreading misinformation and making unworthy suggestions. I will not take up that point now. I will gladly take it up later if the minister keeps it up.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harney: In view of the fact Canada in 1956, under the active participation of the Hon. Jack Pickersgill, not only dispatched teams to Vienna but fortunately undertook to intervene directly to save the lives of refugees arriving from the Hungarian uprising at that time, will the minister now change the instructions he has sent to the ambassador so that Canada can have a record in this case at least as good as that of Sweden?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member it was under my administration that similar teams were sent to Czechoslovakia. I do not take any such remarks in good part. I say to the hon. member, and I repeat what I said before, that his action in distributing cables which he obtained somehow or other has made it very difficult indeed for our ambassador to operate effectively in Chile. Indeed, we have had to put special guards on the embassy.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, I have to rise on a question of privilege. In 1972, when the government of the time took generous action vis-à-vis Ugandans and were suffering attack on the hustings for doing so, I definitely approved and applauded their action. I think the minister is being extremely testy at the moment. I suggest I have a complete right to let the people of Canada know what their ambassadors are doing abroad, if the Department of External Affairs will not do so.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think the Secretary of State for External Affairs would want to pursue the matter further. He has made a point. The hon. member makes a point. At this time I should like to recognize the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION AND DISMISSAL OF EMPLOYEE FOR RELEASE OF DISPATCH FROM EMBASSY IN CHILE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question arises out of questions that have been directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has an employee of the minister's department been investigated and possibly dismissed as a result of the release of a confidential document to a member of an opposition party in this House, as evidenced by a quotation from a dispatch allegedly from a Canadian diplomatic mission abroad, specifically our embassy in Chile, appearing on page 7504 of Hansard, following the recent precedent established by the dismissal of an employee of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for similar conduct?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I would just add that this is the first time in my experience a member of parliament has connived in this way in the distribution of a leaked document that could endanger the position of an ambassador abroad and jeopardizes diplomatic relations between Canada and foreign countries.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question—

Mr. Woolliams: A question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, surely there is a question of privilege when the minister refers to conniving by a member of parliament. It is a slight on every member of parliament. I do not know what the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs had for breakfast. One told us to shut up. The other suggests that members of parliament on this and even on the other side of the House are conniving with certain public servants. I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs should withdraw those remarks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Calgary North. I was referring to one member of parliament who has distributed some documents that were leaked from our embassy in Chile.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for coming to our defence but I think I can handle this one myself. I did not connive. The documents were handed to me and I made them public almost immediately. It is up to me as a member of the House to judge whether my actions will affect the well-being of Canada, here and abroad. I would say that if there has been any conniving it has been done on the other side, not on this side, because in this matter we have been getting much less than the full truth. People outside the House know the truth, and it can be fully documented, but we cannot get at the truth in the House. All I can say is that it takes a conniver to know one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Rather than attempting two withdrawals we will call it a draw. I will return to the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich for a supplementary.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of entering this dispute over connivance. However, I would like to know whether there has been an investigation with a view to a possible dismissal for the divulgence of classified documents from the department?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, an investigation is under way. It has not yet been successful.

ENERGY

PURCHASE OF HEATING OIL BY CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY ON USE

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I will direct my question to the Minister of Supply and Services. In view of the announcement that spot purchases of oil by the Canadian Commercial Corporation on government account will be used exclusively for government heating requirements, suggesting a government first policy on energy use, will the minister inform the House if priority is being given to the government having adequate supplies of fuel oil ahead of the government showing economies in its use?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will soon announce the policy which the government intends to implement to cope with the present conditions.

● (1140)

[English]

Mr. Stackhouse: Taking some comfort from the assurance that a policy will be announced some day, may I ask the minister whether he will indicate to the House the extent to which the use of federal taxes to subsidize federal government energy requirements is now creating a price shelter at the expense of Canadian consumers?

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will also indicate the government policy as to the problem raised by the hon. member.

AIR CANADA

POSSIBILITY OF MAINTENANCE AND OVERHAUL AT WINNIPEG OF AIRCRAFT TO BE PURCHASED

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. In the event of Air Canada purchasing a number of new DC-9s and other aircraft, is the minister considering having those aircraft maintained and overhauled at the Winnipeg air base?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that the question has hypothetical implications. I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that the question is hypothetical.

Mr. McKenzie: I will rephrase it, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister negotiating with the province of Manitoba with regard to these aircraft being serviced in Winnipeg?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): There are not usually negotiations on these matters, though there might be talks between the two governments. Air Canada, as is public knowledge, is about to buy new aircraft. We hope that some offsets can be negotiated and I hope some of them will be for the benefit of Winnipeg.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Has a final decision been made by Air Canada with respect to the location of its new computer centre and, if so, where is that centre to be located?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether that is a supplementary. Perhaps the hon. member will be recognized in a moment.

ENERGY

SUGGESTED CONVENING BY PRIME MINISTER OF FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the situation that is developing from day to day in connection with energy and the widespread demands that the Prime Minister should at once convene an energy conference representative of the federal government and the various provinces. Is he giving consideration to calling such a conference now?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have been in correspondence with the various premiers on this very subject in the past few weeks. I have told them we were going ahead with our program to have the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources meet with their ministers on Friday of next week to lay the groundwork for such a federal-provincial conference, probably at the first ministers level. So far I have received no replies from the premiers indicating that they want to proceed with a full-blown conference without going through these preparatory stages for which we have laid the basis.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the Prime Minister tell us which of the provinces with which he has been in communication have replied to his suggestion?

Mr. Trudeau: I said none had replied to my suggestion. Therefore I take it they are happy to see the arrangements I have suggested to them go forward. One premier, Premier Barrett, and also the premier of Ontario, I believe—I will have to check my memory on that one—did suggest such a conference but I reminded them that this other conference has been scheduled for some time and that they would probably want their ministers to attend it and then make an assessment about the timing and subject matter of a future conference.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Having regard to the very serious situation in our country—indeed, there seems to be a stalemate of confusion on the part of the government—does the right hon. gentleman not think that now is the time, in the interests of the Canadian people, to convene a conference of first ministers to the end that this problem might be faced and suggestions put forward on the basis of which there would be agreement on a national energy policy?

Mr. Trudeau: That would be very nice, Mr. Speaker, but I must remind the right hon. gentleman, as I have done on a few occasions in the House, that we have wanted to put this subject on the agenda of federal-provincial conferences before, notably at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference last July. We wanted to have the subject of energy as one of the items on the agenda. It was apparent from the refusal of the western provinces to allow it on the agenda that they had not arrived at a joint position with regard to it. I have no evidence that since then they have reached such a joint position. I think this is why they are generally in agreement with my suggestion that a preparatory conference be held at the level of the responsible ministers before going into a federal-provincial conference at the first ministers' level.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SETTLEMENT OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES' DISPUTE—PUBLICATION OF ARBITRATION RESULTS

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Transport.

It seems that the 100,000 non-operating railway employees who went back to work after last summer's strike are still waiting for the results of the arbitration ordered by special legislation of the Canadian Parliament concerning their new work standards. Since this has been going on for nearly three months, could the hon. Minister of Transport tell us how negotiations are progressing and if the results will soon be published or if all the settlement of this conflict will be forgotten much longer?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this question is somewhat contradictory as the hon. member asks how the negotiations are going when the problem involves arbitration, which means that the parties are not negotiating and are submitting their case to an arbitrator. But I think that the hon. member would get a more complete answer if he asked his question to the Minister of Labour who will probably be here Monday, since the report will be made to him.

INCOME TAX

POSSIBILITY OF EXTENSION TO SMALL BUSINESSES OF TAX-FREE, ROLL-OVER ADVANTAGES APPLICABLE TO FARM FAMILIES

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I would address my question to the Minister of Finance. It arises from a statement by the hon. gentleman in the House some time ago that he would give further consideration to extending to small business the tax-free roll-over advantages now allowed between a farmer and his family. Can the minister inform the House whether there is at this time any plan to extend such advantages to small family-owned Canadian businesses which are so vital also to the Canadian way of life?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I want to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question. The Department of Finance is actively considering this matter. Of course, any resolution of it, if in the affirmative, would be a budgetary matter. There are, as I have said earlier, some special considerations militating in favour of special treatment of the family farm, one being the lack of liquidity of the holding. These are matters which would have to be dealt with.

FAMINE IN ETHIOPIA—DIRECT ASSISTANCE BY CANADA

Mr. Ed Nelson (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I have a straightforward question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, if he has recovered from the last round. In view of the famine that is causing extreme suffering to many of the people of Ethiopia, and in view of reports that Canada's relief contribution through the United Nations is not reaching Ethiopia, can the minister say whether the government is considering direct assistance to that country?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, it is only in comparatively recent days that the government of Ethiopia has admitted the extent of the drought and the effect upon the people there. This problem is now being considered by officials of CIDA. We have already sent a certain amount of limited direct assistance through the Red Cross and we are considering other measures.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport related to those asked earlier on the subject of fuel shortages. Does the minister, in the interests of economy and efficiency, intend to pursue the suggestion made by the president of Canadian Pacific Airlines that the discrimination between first and second class status for passengers be ended?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): This will be among the measures that will be considered if ever there is a real shortage of fuel.

In view of the fact that aircraft burn huge quantities of fuel whether it is in short supply or not, can the minister inform the House whether railway companies intend to take advantage of the present situation to restore passenger train services which had been discontinued for many years, especially during the winter season, when travel becomes much more difficult, particularly in eastern Canada?

AGRICULTURE

REASON FOR RETURN OF MINISTER FROM FAO CONFERENCE IN ROME

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would he be kind enough to advise the House of the nature of the new crisis that has arisen requiring the calling back of the Minister of Agriculture four days before he was expected to return from Rome to attend a special cabinet meeting tomorrow morning, while at the same time sending the Secretary of State for External Affairs to Moscow?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): You spent all that time just to ask that?

Mr. Hees: I want to know the answer.

ENERGY

OIL EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES—INFORMING OF ARAB COUNTRIES OF CANADA'S POSITION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the different and conflicting statements by various ministers on the question of oil exports to the United States, will the minister tell the House whether a statement representing Canada's attitude on oil exports has been sent to the Arab countries, especially to Saudi Arabia?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the nature of Canada's relations with the United States has been made quite clear to the Arab countries, and I think the statements that have been made by various ministers are consistent and are quite well known.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, having in mind the Arab states and the fact that recent ministerial statements are confusing and have left doubt as to this country's policy on this matter, will the minister undertake to send special representatives to the Arab oil producing states to assure that Canada's position will be clear?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as far as I know from my conversations with the ambassadors here in Canada there is no such misunderstanding as the hon. gentleman suggests.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

POSSIBLE INCREASE IN RESPONSIBILITIES OF MINISTER IN LINE WITH SENATE COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to pose a question to the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to modify or increase the responsibilities of the Minister of State for Science and Technology in line with the recommendations in the third volume of the report of the Senate committee on science policy? Will this entail legislation and if not, will a statement be made on motions?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the third volume, along with the others, has been the subject of discussion between myself and the Minister of State for Science and Technology. We do have a plan for acting upon some of the recommendations therein and making various other policy decisions respecting science and technology. I would inform the hon. gentleman that it will not be at this session of parliament, but I think he may find traces of it in the next Speech from the Throne.

AIR CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO DECISION ON LOCATION OF NEW COMPUTER CENTRE

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Has an official decision been reached as to the location of Air Canada's new computer centre and, if so, whatever the location is, will the minister give us his assurance that this will not result in any further loss of employment by Air Canada in the Winnipeg area?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will read Hansard of yesterday he will see that my parliamentary secretary spoke on this during the late show last night and gave all the answers to the questions he has put now.

AGRICULTURE

REASON FOR RETURN OF MINISTER FROM FAO CONFERENCE IN ROME

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to go back to the question involving the Minister of Agriculture and address my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Does the recall of the Minister of Agriculture from the very important meetings of the FAO in Rome dealing with the world food program for the next critical years mean a repudiation of the Canadian government's support of the world food bank and other proposals to meet this very serious problem?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would take that to be a most preposterous interpretation of the minister's return. He has already expressed Canada's policy at the FAO meetings, I believe on Wednesday of this week.

An hon. Member: In a most qualified manner.

Mr. Trudeau: He has attended the most important part of the meetings and had planned to come back over the weekend at any rate. I am very happy that he will be here in time for tomorrow's special cabinet meeting.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister on this very serious matter. It is because the minister's expression of Canada's viewpoint is so important to the world at this particular moment in history that we are concerned about his recall without a reason being given. Is the Prime Minister considering sending somebody else of ministerial capacity to show the rest of the nations that we are maintaining the position taken by the Minister of Agriculture last Wednesday?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I must emphasize that the minister has not been recalled. The minister had planned to come back and is coming back at the beginning of the weekend rather than at the end. His participation in Rome was a very important one, and we feel that the ministers of agriculture of the many nations assembled there have benefited greatly from the presence of our Minister of Agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I am very pleased that this confidence in his ability is shared by all sides of the House.

An hon. Member: Don't smile.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I think they will understand that after his very valuable contribution in Rome he is also a very valuable minister in our cabinet and we would be very sorry if we had to hold this meeting tomorrow without his presence.

An hon. Member: Isn't Mitch valuable too?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: We want Mitch.

Mr. Trudeau: Therefore I think it is only fair to Canadians as well as to our responsibility as citizens of the world that the minister share his time equally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I understand the hon. member has a supplementary question, but I should remind the House that we are running short of time.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this is not a supplementary question, it is a request of the Prime Minister which I put in all seriousness and sincerity. In view of the importance of mounting a big world food program over the next four or five years, would the Prime Minister not consider having somebody of ministerial capacity, perhaps the minister in charge of fisheries or somebody associated with the food of the world, represent Canada at these very serious meetings of the FAO in Rome?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I must repeat that the minister has participated very earnestly for several days. He is leaving in Rome his deputy minister and many officials who will be carrying out his policy participation. There is some need, as the House will understand, for limiting ministerial time travelling abroad, as was just mentioned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I see that Conservative members support this proposition. Surely they should make up their minds whether they want ministers to be in the House or to travel outside the country.

An hon. Member: Keep Mitch here.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there has been some reference to the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Some hon. Members: Let's keep Mitch.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, there is a very hungry world out there.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HEALTH

THALIDOMIDE—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO FAMILIES FROM QUEBEC LIVING IN UNITED STATES IN ACTIONS AGAINST MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Since a fairly critical stage was reached yesterday in the court proceedings instituted on behalf of a number of Quebec families living in the United States with thalidomide victims in their midst, does the hon. minister intend to assist these families in their lawsuits against the American firms concerned?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, judging from the results they have obtained already, these families appear quite capable of taking very good care of themselves and to be very well represented. Under these circumstances, there is nothing I can add to what I have already said concerning thalidomide children.

EDUCATION

SECOND LANGUAGE INSTRUCTION—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ASSIST PRIVATE SCHOOLS

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on October 17 I directed a question to the Secretary of State in the following words:

> In view of the fact the government of British Columbia has declined to apply for assistance on behalf of private or independent schools under the federal official second language instruction program, can the minister tell us what steps, if any, are being contemplated to make financial aid available to these schools on the same basis as the public school system?

● (1200)

In reply the minister indicated that his officials were discussing this matter with representatives of the British Columbia government. I wonder whether he is in a position to give a reply today.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I am not. The discussions are continuing. I will get an updated report and speak to the hon. member personally.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

ALLEGED DIFFICULTY IN TURNING OFF LIGHTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. In view of the difficulty the government apparently is having in turning off the lights in government buildings at night, would the government consider investing in one of these new machines that automatically turn off the lights, and thus end the controversy once and for all?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we have no problems at all in finding the switches, but if the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster will put his finger on a live light bulb he will find that it has not only light but also heat.

DRUGS

INQUIRY AS TO LEDAIN COMMISSION FINAL REPORT—POSSIBLE LEGISLATION ON DRUG ABUSE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, after this bright exchange I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in respect of the final report of the LeDain Commission which was expected 13 months ago. Can he advise when he expects to be able to present this document to us, and can he also indicate whether he intends to bring forward legislation on the matter of drug abuse as promised by his predecessor?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, a couple of days ago I received a letter from the chairman of the commission advising me he expects to be in a position to make the report public in the latter part of December. But in light of previous experience with this particular commission and this particular report, I will limit my comments to that.

WELFARE

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S CONTRIBUTION UNDER CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN TO MEET INCREASED HEATING COSTS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the increases in the cost of home heating oil will mean an extra tax burden to the people on welfare, and in view of the fact that many provinces have to increase the fuel allowance at this time of year, has the minister received any requests from the provinces to increase the 50 per cent cost-sharing under the Canada Assistance Plan, and what is the position now?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

ALLEGED SHORTAGE OF APARTMENTS FOR THOSE ON FIXED INCOMES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs responsible for housing. In view of the fact that certain metropolitan areas in Canada are facing a critical shortage of apartment units, and in consequence rents will substantially increase and bring hardship to those on fixed incomes, what special programs, if any, other than the amendments to the National Housing Act which are not helping, has the minister devised to assist the cities and provinces to cope with this shortage?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have seen the report to which the hon. member refers. The difficulty is that building activity in the country is being carried on at an extremely high level, and we expect building activity to be as great next year, so any increased activity will place an almost inflationary pressure on the supply of labour and materials. In terms of the people for whom the question expresses concern, the low and moderate income earners in Canada, the programs of social housing under the National Housing Act are being used as extensively as possible.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North, then the Leader of the Opposition, and then call orders of the day.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether the minister is having any program devised to replace the large pools of money which resulted from investment by wage earners, professional people and small businessmen and which have dried up. Prior to the changing of the Income Tax Act these people could use the depreciated cost allowance on apartment buildings as a write-off against their taxable income, so millions of dollars were poured into apartment blocks which kept the rents at a reasonable level for the average man.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, we have in front of the committee right now Bill C-135 which is designed to help allay some of the difficulties to which the hon. member refers.

EFFECT ON INFLATION OF ENCOURAGING HOUSE CONSTRUCTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the minister suggested that a greater building program might lead to inflationary pressure. I should like to ask the minister whether it is the policy of the government to in fact encourage the construction of housing, which seems to be the view expressed by the Minister of Finance, or whether the minister feels this would be more inflationary so far as the price of housing and apartments is concerned compared with the inflationary pressure induced by an actual shortage of houses?

Hon. Ron Basford (Secretary of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, our goal is to meet our medium-term objectives which are about 250,000 units per year.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FLOODING OF SKAGIT RIVER VALLEY—DELIVERY OF TEXT OF RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY HOUSE TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Bill Clark (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday I asked the Prime Minister a question concerning the delivery of the text of the unanimous resolution of the House to the government of the United States and he replied that he would inquire into the question of who looks after such matters. I wonder if I could inquire through the Chair whether the Prime Minister has found out who handles such matters.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I discussed the matter with the Secretary of State for External Affairs who assures me that the resolution has been transmitted by his department to the State Department for further transmission onward to the western states concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

AMENDMENT DELINEATING GOVERNMENT'S POWER IN DISPOSING OF PUBLIC LANDS

The House, resumed, from Friday, November 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill S-4, to amend the National Parks Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, before I resume my remarks on Bill S-4 I am sure the House will allow me, as a member from Alberta, to express on behalf on my colleagues in that province our deep regret at the death of our colleague Harry Kuntz. We perhaps knew him best and had the best opportunity to appreciate his practicality and good advice. I would think the House would also allow these remarks because of Harry Kuntz interest in matters touched on by the bill we are discussing today, matters concerning national parks, particularly those in the north. He travelled with members of the standing committee to visit parks in northern Canada during the summer and planned to do so again. We will miss his company and his counsel.

When I began my remarks the other day, I indicated the general support members in this party have for the principles contained in Bill S-4, which is now before us, but also indicated the very grave concern we have for the lack of adequate provision in the bill as it stands for public consultation with those people who are concerned about either additions to or subtractions from the national parks in Canada. We believe substantial progress was made in the other place when an amendment was introduced and accepted requiring the printing of a notice in the Canada Gazette. We also indicated our intention to seek a more extensive provision to ensure public consultation on these matters.

The discussion of this bill in committee will provide an opportunity to review the whole national parks procedure which has caused a great deal of concern to people who have had to deal with that in the past. As the House will know, members of the standing committee will be returning to Whitehorse early in December, at which time they will have an opportunity to continue hearings there on matters relating to the establishment of parks. We had the opportunity earlier to visit the spectacular site of the new national park in the Northwest Territories. Also, as the House would know, there is very grave concern in the north about some of the boundaries of the proposed new national park in the Yukon, concern on the part of representatives of a cross-section of Canadian interests, such as wilderness groups and the native people. We hope to give them all a fair and full hearing. It would be very useful to us to have the bill before us for those purposes.

As the House knows, this bill establishes legal descriptions, and in some cases new legal descriptions, for several parks in several provinces. It also changes the status of two historic parks, Fort Beausejour and Fort Anne, and it empowers the government to establish by order in council, as a result of the intervention of the Senate, through publication of a notice in the Canada Gazette, new parks in British Columbia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Newfoundland and Ontario. We believe, as I indicated, that the amendment regarding the publication in the Canada Gazette is a significant improvement on the bill as presented to the other place.

There are some points which I wish to emphasize today. The first concerns the procedure of enshrining park descriptions in the statute, yet specifically allowing additions to national parks by order in council. This means that boundaries can be enlarged by order in council but they can only be diminished by parliament. I accept that parliament should pass on any proposal to diminish the boundaries of national parks; it is an acknowledged and welcome national responsibility of parliament to protect national parks for the enjoyment and use of future generations. However, we want an answer from the government as to why parliament should be asked to approve only diminutions of national parks. Why should we not be asked to make decisions with regard to additions? Why should that be a power that the government can exercise by order in council? Is the diminution of public land more important than the expropriation of private land? That is the principle inherent in the double standard which the government applies in this bill. It leaves citizens less protection than the state, and that is a principle about which we are concerned.

The second matter to which I would like to draw attention is the fact that this bill, as it was originally introduced in the other place, proposes that the enlargement of public land and the expropriation of private land be achieved virtually without notice. That is unacceptable to us, as it was to the other place which introduced the amendment requiring publication in the Canada Gazette. In the testimony there, the director of Parks Canada indicated that there would be adequate safeguards by allowing groups who are interested to appear before the committees of this House and the other place. I think that the argument is a faulty one. People from distant parts of Canada will clearly not be able to come here to make the kind of representations that would be useful to committees of parliament, even if we have the time on our schedules to hear them, which we do not.

I want to point out that that argument, which the government attempted to incorporate in the bill that went to the other place, could be used to avoid public hearings on any subject. The House should note that the government's attempt to achieve this objective was stopped by the other place, which clearly possesses within its walls members who have a greater sense of democracy than does the government. As I indicated, the amendment regarding the Canada Gazette is an improvement, but we believe that the provision relative to public notice must be improved and fortified even more.

A third matter to which I would like to draw the attention of the House is the requirement in the bill for the agreement of any province to enlarge or establish national parks but it requires only consultation with the Northwest Territories. That is one more indication and affirmation of the colonial attitude which this government takes to the people who live within our Northern Territories. It is particularly dangerous coming from this government because it is clear on the record—and particularly clear on the recent record—that to this government consultation means mere advice. We would want to seriously consider and propose to the committee that the Northern Territories be treated in the same manner as the provinces, so that before parks are established in those areas there would have to be agreement rather than mere consultation.

The bill as it stands also proposes certain so-called housekeeping amendments, and principally an amendment which would allow the collection of traffic fines within the national parks. But I think it is the clear impression of members of the House, certainly members who are acquainted with the situation in national parks, that important as the question of traffic fines might be, there are several more important matters that have to be put in order in national parks. It is, of course, nonsense that matters relating to traffic fines must be referred to Ottawa now, but there is much more nonsense than that going on in the national parks as they are regulated and administered today. The committee members who came from other parts of Canada had the opportunity to visit townsites in the national parks of Banff and Jasper, and came away shocked at the colonial conditions there. They realise there is a much broader range of housekeeping matters that must be attended to, and I hope that we can attend to some of them in the committee. It is perhaps proper to ask why the government would stop to deal with the grievances of the RCMP, and not deal also with grievances of other citizens who live and work within the national parks.

I believe that the basic change which is needed in the administration and attitude of the government toward our national parks, and the people who live there, is the awareness that administration at a distance is not the best way to preserve the park values which most members in the House and most people in the townsites in the national parks know to be important. I referred earlier to the visit of the standing committee to the national parks of Banff and Jasper. Members of that committee from both sides of the House were shocked at the standard of architecture and at the look of the town of Banff. What shocked them most was the developments which had taken place under the direct control of the federal government. The reason they were undertaken is that the decisions were made at a place distant from the people who live there. By living in those places they indicate their own appreciation of the values and the beauty of the region, which is not necessarily reflected by those who live at a distance. It simply stands to reason that people who live in Ottawa and administer the parks will not be as careful about the look of a community like Banff as the people who have to live the rest of their lives in that community. It is simply one more indication of the dangers of administration at a distance which has been the underlying principle of the approach of this government to national parks.

There has been a consistent denial of self-government to the towns in the national parks. Discussions are now proceeding with the community of Banff. That does not indicate a conversion or a change of attitude; it is simply an accommodation to pressure, because extensive pressure has been applied by the residents of Jasper and Banff, as well as by the government of Alberta, in an unanimous resolution calling for a change in the approach to the administration of the two townsites. Now the government is creeping along because it knows that if it does not creep we will push it. I think members of the committee generally agree that the pace at which they are creeping now is not satisfactory, so we will push them beyond the meagre limits to which they want to go. The director of Parks Canada appeared the other night before the standing committee and refused to give a timetable for the vesting of some degree of self-government in the townsites of Banff and Jasper. I think it is very much the case that if the government is seriously interested in the housekeeping arrangements in the national parks, as indicated by the bill, we should give very high priority to self-government there. We hope that can be done.

One other aspect—and I think it is not particularly well known to people who live outside the parks—is that while the federal government keeps tight control of the right to govern which would be enjoyed in other communities outside the parks, it also keeps a tighter than usual control of the funds that are available to people who have the responsibility of administering whatever meagre powers are enjoyed by those townsites. I want to quote to the House from a letter written to me by the secretary treasurer of the Jasper school district relating directly to the grants in lieu of taxes from federal sources, which should come but which do not come to that community, from the federal government. It reads:

Assessed value of federal property (at present) is $1,081,000 and at our current mill rate of 37.207 should produce $40,250.53 in grants in lieu of taxes.

Last year (1972) we received $7,970.00 grants in lieu of taxes at a mill rate of 48.085.

That is a shortfall of some $33,000 in the grants in lieu of taxes that would be paid by the federal government to a normal community. This is another example of the discrimination that is practised by the government against the residents of the townsites in the national parks.

Now I want to pass quickly to the lease situation in the townsites. There are in excess of 40 kinds of leases in operation, with the application of different terms, sometimes pertaining to the same sites. Some of these leases were imposed by duress upon the people who hold them, and the government refuses to recognize the duress that was involved. Instead, the government suggests to people who have problems that they take the matter to court, which is surely the last resort, but in this case is the only resort.

Another highly important matter that I think members of the House should be aware of, which concerns national parks, and which we might be able to consider in committee on this bill, is that there exists a very great uncertainty regarding the future of the people in the townsites within national parks and the degree to which they will be able to participate in the planning of those communities, let alone in the government of those communities.

Master plans for the townsites have been promised, and then delayed. In some communities there is a real fear that the communities themselves will be torn right by the federal government. I received a letter the other day from an executive assistant to the minister, a very alarming document, in which he expressed reservations about the right of the people in Waterton to take part in such planning. It is a dangerous precedent, I submit, for the government to suggest that the only people who have any claim of residence at all in a community have no right, because of technicalities, to participate in the planning of that community. As I say these are matters we will want to go into in more detail in committee.

Members of my party take a great deal of pride in the fact that it was a national Conservative leader who first established national parks in Canada and brought the national parks system into being. Obviously it is a distinctive and important feature of Canadian life, which allows us to maintain a respect for nature and the wilderness "for future generations".

I believe, and members on this side of the House believe that the government has taken important initiatives, some of which are outlined in this bill. We commend the minister and the government for this, but again I want to make the point that the initiatives they have taken are relatively easy initiatives. We would welcome this legislation much more if it had tackled some of the hard problems in establishing national parks in places closer to the people of Canada. Still, this bill is an important step forward. It will allow us to discuss in committee various important matters respecting the national parks system, matters that are important to the people who live within the parks. We are pleased that the bill is before us. We look forward to a productive discussion on the principles and precise details when the bill reaches committee.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, when the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)) introduced the second reading stage of this bill on behalf of the minister, he spent some time outlining the expansion of our national parks system which has occurred recently, an expansion which has also been mentioned by the minister, both in this chamber and elsewhere, as being a matter of great satisfaction to him. At the outset I would like to say I share that satisfaction, and I believe that the minister quite properly can take some pride in the progress that has been made in this direction since he assumed this portfolio.

For my own part, I am happy to say that both before and since the present minister took office I have believed in the desirability of expanding our national parks system, as to size and to number of parks, and over the years that I have been a member of this House I have done what I could to further that end. I just hope that the bill now before us does not represent the end of our forward movement.

The bill proposes some alterations in the method by which lands can be put into national parks. It makes provision for additions of lands to parks by proclamation of the Governor in Council, while preserving the basic concept that once lands are dedicated, as we sometimes say, to the national parks trust, they cannot be removed except by an act of the Parliament of Canada. This is a principle I can accept because there are cases when additions to existing parks are necessary and desirable, and subject to the agreement of provincial and local government authorities, I think it is reasonable that minor additions, and even possibly major additions to existing parks, could be made without having to undergo the delay involved in having legislation for that purpose introduced and passed by the two Houses of parliament.

There are two other ways in which the bill provides for additions to our park lands. One is that by proclamation certain parks which are currently, shall I say, in the process of formation, can be added to the national parks system in a formal way. One of these is currently known as the Pacific Rim Park in my constituency, a major seashore national park. This, of course, has involved negotiations with the province of British Columbia, and other parks are in the process of formation as a result of negotiations with other provincial governments.

The third proposal in the bill for the addition of lands to the national parks—and I make this distinction deliberately—is for major additions to the parks system in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. I make this distinction because the lands involved in the creation of these national parks constitutionally at the present time are held in the hands of the government and the parliament of Canada.

I and my colleagues can accept all three of these proposals, with one important proviso, and one or two of my colleagues may have something to say about this aspect of the matter as the debate progresses. That proviso, Mr. Speaker, is the still uncertain status of much of these lands in relation to the title of the aboriginal people of Canada. Of course, this has particular application at the present time with respect to the proposed national parks in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and the committee should consider it very seriously if this bill passes second reading.

● (1230)

The situation is not confined merely to the acquisition of park lands in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, however. It certainly is involved in the question of park lands within the province of British Columbia, and it certainly is involved in the question of lands for the parks proposed in this bill. By way of illustration, Mr. Speaker, within the proposed Westcoast National Park a number of reserves are set aside for the benefit and use of the Indian bands in that area.

In this connection, I should like to remind the House that the National Parks Act contains a provision which allows lands to be taken from the Indian people. The minister possesses this authority, but I am well aware that as far as the park to which I have made reference is concerned he has stated in writing to the Indian people that he will not use it. However, my colleagues and I have some very basic reservations about this important concept in regard to the acquisition of park lands as proposed in the bill.

"Public lands" as described in the bill, even as amended, means lands belonging to Her Majesty in right of Canada. That is still the basic position which the minister has maintained in respect of lands within the national parks, even though they may in fact have been set aside as Indian reservations. This matter may be rectified in committee of course but I just want to say that while I approve of this bill in general on second reading, as far as this party is concerned its final passage through this House may be contingent upon resolution of that aspect.

Having indicated that I agree with expanding the area and the diversity of lands within Canada which are to be put into the national parks trust, I must say that the fact that there has been a rapid expansion in the number and diversity and location of these parks puts a particular responsibility upon members of this House to broaden the understanding of the role of national parks by the Canadian people. I think we have a clear responsibility to eliminate some of the confusion which currently exists in the minds of most Canadians regarding lands in the national parks trust, and lands which may be set aside for what is commonly referred to as recreational purposes. The hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) expressed a wish for the establishment of parks nearer to the people, and if this comes to fruition it is perhaps more important that the distinction be clearly defined than it was in the days when we only had a few wilderness parks in the Rockies.

In the case of the Pacific Rim Park, which had already achieved some status as a provincial park before the national parks were established, there is still a disposition to think of it as a place to play golf or other activities—and quite properly so—but the basic purpose of setting aside that area of the west coast of Canada was to preserve, for the enjoyment of this and future generations, some of Canada in its natural state.

The degree of misunderstanding that exists on this point is evident from the diversity of approach in the briefs submitted to the committee which was considering this subject. It brings up the related question of what steps can be taken by members of parliament individually and collectively to promote the idea of the necessity for increased recreational areas outside of the national parks system and I think we should be addressing ourselves to this key question. Indeed, the aspirations which the minister has expressed for further expansion of the national parks system are largely contingent upon a growing awareness of the system by the Canadian people.

Another matter which becomes increasingly important with the growth of national parks is the use of land immediately surrounding the parks by visitors. This immediately involves the provinces and while it may have been tentatively discussed with provincial authorities, I do not think that it has been adequately covered. The question of visitor service facilities outside the boundaries of a park is an idea which must be considered although it may not be too easy to put it into practice. This aspect is designed in part to avoid the kinds of complications which are referred to so often by the people in Banff and Jasper and by members representing those areas in this House. That is the sort of thing to which the hon. member for Rocky Mountain was just referring, and it is designed to avoid that kind of paternalistic administration which has so long characterized the life of the communities of Banff and Jasper.

In a speech that I once made following an earlier visit of the committee to Banff and Jasper, I suggested that the House should recognize that Banff and Jasper are anomalies within the national parks system which should never again be repeated. Although we recognize that because of the size and location of those parks they are useful and necessary to those who live in those particular parts, nevertheless there is a danger, and it is a very real danger which is based on my observations of Pacific Rim Park, the park which I am best able to keep under direct observation, that in the vicinity of the parks there may arise that uncoordinated sort of development which, in other localities, is described as urban sprawl.

Although that kind of development in our urban communities is considered undesirable by some, I submit that that kind of development in the territories surrounding our park is of even more serious concern, because it can ruin the parks themselves. Although the provincial authorities must of necessity be involved in this situation, I none the less urge upon the House, and I am inclined to think that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) will not quarrel with this, the idea that some of the other ministries of the federal government should concentrate on this situation to a much greater extent than has been evident up to this point. I urge that some retailoring be done with respect to some programs introduced by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion; that, possibly, the thrust of the Industrial Development Bank should be reconsidered. Indeed, it may be necessary to retailor some of the programs carried on under the aegis of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. That should be done so that we can easily make available the necessary financial muscle, for the use of those who are involved in the territories immediately surrounding the parks.

While it is all very well for us to urge upon provincial authorities the need for an interrelated planning concept in keeping with the needs of the parks themselves and the development of adjacent areas, none the less, in the total picture of provincial responsibilities, the fact remains that the thrust of a national decision to spend federal tax moneys in parks may create special, and in some cases unacceptable, burdens upon agencies of provincial governments which may have direct responsibility in those areas.

If we are to get the kind of co-operation we need from provincial authorities for their agreeing to transfer to the public lands of Canada pieces of territory within existing provincial boundaries, this Parliament will have to provide a clearcut understanding as to the ancillary role which the federal authority will play in making sure that we shall avoid repeating the mistakes in other parks which we have made in Banff and Jasper. As well, we must ensure that necessary ancillary services, which in many places means appropriate recreational areas, are available in the territory adjacent to the parks.

The only other point I wish to touch on at this time, and I do so because it was raised by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain, is that of self-government in the existing communities of Banff and Jasper. One need not remind hon. members of the House, especially some of those now present in the chamber, that this has long been a thorny problem. It has been a matter of great regret to me that the report of the committee of this House following the visit by that committee to Banff and Jasper in 1966-67 was, in my view, a complete whitewash with regard to existing problems of Banff and Jasper and the need for constructive solutions to them. I am rather hopeful that the present committee, after having received, as was mentioned by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain, some report on this matter from the Director General of Parks of Canada, will perhaps bring in a more constructive report, with recommendations to this House for action by the government in this area.

Really, the things which were said to committee members during the recent visit to the parks this year are not very different from the kinds of things which were said to the committee in 1966-67. However, I am pleased to note that the kinds of things which the minister's officers said to the committee were slightly different from those things which were said following the visit in 1966-67 by the then minister and his officials when they met with the committee. Although this subject matter is really not directly related to the bill before us, I think the hon. member for Rocky Mountain properly brought to the attention of the House how important and urgent the matter is. I hope that the minister, perhaps when he is closing this debate, will give some indication of the kind of thrust he hopes to see the government take in connection with this long standing problem.

I am sure that the committee will want to go into detail about the proposals for specific park boundaries, and so on, as outlined in the schedule to the bill. We shall consider that when the bill comes before the committee. I do not think we can usefully consider this at present, during the second reading stage. Generally speaking, apart from the basic questions which I raised earlier, my preliminary observation is that, from a parks point of view, the areas which are proposed are ones which can be considered as suitable and appropriate as part of our national parks system.

Following that kind of detailed consideration by the committee, and possibly some agreement on any changes that may be desirable in the minds of the committee, hopefully we will be able to report back to the House a recommendation for the passage of this bill. However, I remind the minister that as far as the members of this party are concerned, our whole consideration of that final decision is going to be contingent in large measure upon what understanding we can reach in relation to the basic question of title to land which, according to the existing terms of the National Parks Act, are lands belonging to Her Majesty in right of Canada.

Mr. Dinsdale: May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, when introducing this subject to the House on November 2, the parliamentary secretary to the minister made the statement that Bill S-4, presently before us for second reading, did not incorporate any major policy changes in the National Parks Act. I have read the bill thoroughly, I have followed the debate in the other place, and I agree with the parliamentary secretary that this is the case. In my view this is the fundamental weakness of the measure. I believe new policy initiatives are long overdue.

The legislation before us contemplates the addition of new parks to the system and the alteration of some existing park boundaries. I wish to talk this afternoon about national parks policy in general and I trust that the minister, who is in his place, will also be making some observations on this subject. I am sure he agrees with everyone who has held ministerial responsibility for the national parks program that we are faced by a crisis situation calling for the wise management and multiple use of our renewable resources, a situation which can only be dealt with by comprehensive changes in government policy on park development generally. Here I am referring, of course, to the many other categories of parks outside the National Parks Act. These must be dealt with and considered if we are to meet the growing needs of our population for recreational facilities as well as the needs of a booming tourist industry.

I am delighted that at long last formal approval is being given to the acquisition of new parks. The discussions and negotiations which have been going on in this connection have covered a period of some 15 years. When I took over responsibility for national parks in the early sixties, most of the areas covered by the legislation now before us were under discussions and consideration. As a result of renewed emphasis on national development, there was a major effort at that time to come to grips with policy initiatives on many fronts which were coordinated to deal with resource areas and development in Canada, much of which had been neglected for far too long.

The Atlantic Development Board was one of the key instruments in this regard, and it was during that time a decision was made to restore Louisburg as an historic park of some considerable magnitude at an initial cost of $9 million. The cost has, of course, increased considerably since that time because of the continuing problem of inflation in Canada. The decision to restore Louisburg is the kind of initiative that governments must take if we are to provide an adequate commemoration of our historic sites and at the same time provide some living memorials, living or animated museums so that succeeding generations will have the opportunity to actually experience the atmosphere of the highwater marks of the development of Canada as a nation.

In the area of new national parks, Terra Nova in Newfoundland became an early initiative, and later Kejimkujik National Park in Nova Scotia. That is a tongue twister, and perhaps the reason there has been such a delay in actually getting Kejimkujik formally established is because of the difficulty in pronouncing its name. The first time I came in direct consultation with the hon. member of Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), who is now the leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, was when we were undertaking negotiations which led to the establishment of this beautiful park in Nova Scotia, the second of its kind for that province, which is now being formally declared as established by the legislation before us.

The concern about northern Canada, and its lack of development, was expressed by the late Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent back in 1953 when Canada first assumed its responsibilities for the 3.5 million square miles of territory north of the 60th parallel and made it an integral part of the Canadian body politic. He used a phrase at that time which I think describes the situation quite eloquently when he said that the country had been occupied and administered in a state of absent-mindedness since confederation. A growing interest in northern development led to a consideration of the necessity of preserving some of the huge wilderness areas in the north for all future generations, and it was at that time that discussions in respect of Nahanni, Kluane and Baffin Island National Parks were commenced.

I want to pay tribute to some of the old pioneers of the north who first conceived of the notion of reserving these wilderness areas for posterity. Too often the residents of the north are accused of being only concerned with exploiting resources. The accusation has been made that those engaged in the mining industry, for example, are only interested in making a quick buck and getting out of the north. I can give evidence here today that the original suggestions for preserving national parks came from some of these pioneers of the north, the men who made it possible for the upsurge in northern development which began under the leadership of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

In addition to some of the pioneers there were newcomers, and I refer particularly to a gentleman from Baffin Island—that great and magnificent scenic wilderness up in Canada's archipelago—Mr. Bryan Pearson who originated the idea of preserving some of the scenery in Baffin Island. In fact, he pioneered in the tourist industry with a project designed to attract the attention of the jaded sophisticates from the urban communities of Canada to lure them into the high Arctic and taste some of the savage beauty of Baffin Island. He used to advertise in some of the best tourist magazines in the United States. That gentleman is now a member of the Northwest Territories Council and is still active in promoting the northern part of Canada.

I do not want to refer to each of the areas referred to in the bill. They have been under discussion for a considerable length of time and it is unfortunate that it requires so much time and that there is so much delay in implementing programs which were emergent as far back as 15 years.

There is one area not mentioned in the legislation and that is the proposed Prairie Park which has been under discussion for a number of years. I see the minister nodding his head. There is all sorts of space on the Prairies. In fact, that is the one thing of which we have most, lots of open spaces. I would have hoped that by this time the government would have negotiated with the provinces concerned in respect of a tract of land that could be preserved for all time to perpetuate the sort of sentimental nostalgia referred to in a song we sing out west quite frequently which is in part:

> Where the deer and the antelope play,
> Where never is heard a discouraging word,
> And the skies are not cloudy all day.

There are great areas on the Prairies still available for this sort of preservation, and unless the government gets busy soon we will have lost the opportunity to develop a typical prairie park. I am sure the right hon. member for Prince Albert, who is in the House this afternoon, will endorse what I am saying, because it was one of his visions which encouraged the minister of his day to try to get this kind of wilderness area preserved under the terms of the National Parks Act.

There is obviously a need for upgrading national parks policy. The parliamentary secretary in introducing the legislation talked about the over-use of existing parks. We used to talk about that 15 years ago. It has become chronic now. That hon. member gave the figures showing that in 1952 there were 2.5 million visitors to the parks, in 1962 the figure had more than doubled to 7.5 million, and the latest figure for 1974 is something more than 14 million visitors. Most of these people have to be accommodated in the national parks system which, with the exception of the parks mentioned in the bill before us, existed when the pressure was much less. No additions have been made to the recreational areas of Canada. I had hoped that long before now there might have been an attempt to implement a definite policy in respect of recreational parks.

In 1958, the camp ground and picnic site program was initiated in co-operation with the provincial governments in order to provide adequate tourist accommodation along primarily the Trans-Canada highway system which was then under construction and, to a lesser extent, along the other major highways throughout the provinces of Canada. That program expired in 1962. We were in the process at that time of activating a program to succeed and expand the picnic site and camp ground program which would be known as the recreational parks program. Nothing transpired in this direction until the minister introduced his by-ways and highways and special places program which was announced about a year ago. The title of this program is a high-sounding phrase for a recreational parks program. There have been long delays in coming to grips with this problem. Even at the present time I am not aware of any excessive activity under the by-ways and highways and special places program.

Before there is a move into the area of recreational development, there must be consultation with the provincial governments. A relationship of trust must be established between the federal and provincial governments. This is one area in which the present government has succeeded least. It believes in a policy of confrontation rather than a policy of consultation in the area of non-renewable resources. In the current energy crisis this has led to the impasse, which all hon. members have been made fully aware of in recent days. For the purpose of consultation and continuing discussion, a federal-provincial parks conference was established to bring together from time to time on a continuing basis the provincial resource ministers and the federal minister responsible for the national parks in order that they might work together on a comprehensive policy that would meet the growing recreational needs of the population explosion that was referred to by the parliamentary secretary.

This consultation has not continued and as a result we are faced with a crisis situation which can be resolved only by some sort of emergency response on the part of the current government of Canada. In addition to recreational parks there must be another category of park established. We must have multi-purpose parks. Many of the national parks in western Canada do not fit into the rigid structure of parks as defined by the National Parks Act. This is quite obvious in respect of Banff, Jasper, Prince Albert National Park and Riding Mountain National Park. These parks have been in existence for many years, and, because of the shortage of recreational facilities in the western part of Canada, they have assumed a multipurpose role. In his remarks the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) referred to this problem. I have been a member of at least four parliamentary committees the members of which have made pilgrimages to the mountain parks in order to try to understand what the people of those park areas want. We have made recommendations. We have urged that a special status be established for these mountain parks which obviously do not fit into the pattern.

We have urged the adoption of a principle that would preserve the wilderness concept while at the same time cater to the growing demands of the tourist population and the Canadian population which visits the western parks. However, nothing has been done in this regard. Instead there is a tendency on the part of the government, increasingly pronounced over the past ten years, to remove the facilities which are already there rather than utilizing them to the maximum and providing the recreational facilities that are required by the Canadian population today. I could refer to Riding Mountain National Park where a roller skating rink was closed down. It was located on the fringe of the park. It was a very wholesome recreational facility. It was close enough to the edge of the park so that it would not conflict with any wilderness aspect. It was arbitrarily closed down notwithstanding a strong protest from the people of Manitoba who were concerned that the taking away of this wholesome recreational facility— this was back in the 1960's, the decade of turmoil among our young people—would mean that the young people would turn to less wholesome pursuits for their recreation.

There was also an attempt to close down the church camps which provide excellent camping facilities for the young people of the province of Manitoba in Riding Mountain National Park. It was only after a massive protest by the church groups involved that the minister decided to intervene. He delayed the implementation of that policy until 1984. I do not know whether there is any significance in respect of the date 1984. It happens to be the date George Orwell referred to as the time of the takeover of all things in the Utopian state of which he wrote. I say to the minister that we must establish in concrete legislative terms a zoning policy, a multi-purpose park policy and a recreational park policy that will meet the obvious growing needs the demand for which has never been met. Because it has never been met and because of the long delay we now face a situation in which emergency legislation is necessary.

Turning again to the north which is an area in which the wilderness values I believe would be most beneficial to all the people of Canada, I might point out that there are only some 50,000 people still in the three and a half million square miles which constitute the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories. I would hope that a wildlife sanctuary and a migratory water fowl sanctuary might be provided because the demand, as I believe the minister will agree, is even greater for this type of conservation activity than it is at this stage for the large national parks which are established under the legislation. It is not difficult to establish the huge areas which are marked in the legislation subject to the approval of the native people about which we have been made very conscious these days especially since the James Bay decision of yesterday which will require consultation with the native people even though it is now after the fact.

We also need wildlife and wild bird sanctuaries. The Wood Buffalo National Park fits largely into this category because it is there that the large herd of wood buffalo is preserved for posterity and also where the whooping crane, a species that came during the decade of the 1950's near to extinction, with only 23 birds remaining, finds a breeding ground. During the early 1960's public interest in the whooping crane became phenomenal, one of the major conservation issues. Eggs were flown south to hatching grounds in the southern United States where the birds winter, and still, as far as we can determine, the population of this beautiful white bird has not reached more than 42 in its natural habitat. Were it not for the Wood Buffalo National Park, the species would be even more threatened as it makes that hazardous flight of 3,000 or 4,000 miles across the happy hunting ground of the Prairies and still manages to survive. This is the sort of thing that is needed in greater abundance in the northern regions of Canada.

To bring my remarks to a conclusion, I want to refer to the necessity of co-ordinated intergovernmental action in order to accomplish what must be accomplished urgently in the parks policy and in all these other conservation matters to which I have referred briefly this afternoon. In 1962 the Resources for Tomorrow Conference took place in the city of Montreal. In the light of what is happening today with the crisis in energy and so forth, even the title of that conference is prophetic today. Some 1,000 concerned Canadians met in the Queen Elizabeth Hotel in Montreal to bring their collective wisdom to bear on the problem of the threatened renewable resources, and since that time the renewable resource area has become a matter of prime concern to governments at all levels. But I remember in 1962 it was rather an "in" joke to laugh at a government that was occupied with the conservation of water resources—such a colourless subject when Canada had an abundance of water. In fact, I believe that the phrase used by one of the pundits of that day was that we had water running out of our ears.

It is only eleven years later, but we are all aware now that we are faced with problems of wisely managing our renewable resources. When I say "managing" I do not mean to put a lid on it. We had a positive attitude toward renewable resources. It was managing in such a way that they would be constantly renewable, and we are still far from achieving this high ideal.

Out of that conference, a Resource Ministers Council emerged which was to meet regularly to co-ordinate provincial and federal policy because of the problems of divided jurisdiction. That council did not receive the backing of the governments that have been in office from 1963 to 1968 and from 1968 until the present time, with the result that it has fallen into disuse and is now completely abandoned, so I understand. It might rise from the ashes under a new heading because there is a tendency of the government to re-issue old policies and put their own particular stamp upon them.

I will close with the admonition of the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark). If we are going to meet the demands and the challenges in the park area in the renewable resource area, it can only be achieved by continuous consultation, not token consultation. There was an attempt to decentralize the administration of the parks in 1962/63 and regional offices were established across Canada. Recently, two additional offices—originally there were three offices—have been established, one in Winnipeg and another in Quebec city. But the establishment of regional offices will serve no useful purpose unless there is a decentralization of authority, unless there is some local autonomy in this area. If the regional offices that have been established, and this has been the pattern over the past ten years, are merely a vehicle through which the people in the areas concerned and the provincial authorities have to approach the summit in Ottawa, it complicates the process of consultation rather than facilitates it, and this has been the pattern that has developed.

I would urge the minister to give some real autonomy to these regional offices and to let them consult with the people who are concerned. Theirs is a positive concern, not a selfish or negative concern. The message now is accepted by all serious minded Canadians that we have to manage our renewable resources wisely, and if the message has not come through loud and clear to this point, the trials and tribulations through which we are passing at present because of the government's failure to come to grips with the resource policy will bring the message home to every Canadian loud and clear. This legislation is going to the committee and I hope that we have a thoroughgoing discussion on the broader issues. This is a housekeeping bill when we should be having a major breakthrough in parks policy after these long years of delay. I am hoping that after we are through with the bill in the committee some amendments will be adopted which will help to put some teeth into the legislation, particularly in the consultative process. Unless we bring all the people of Canada together in support of a comprehensive resource policy we will not get anything more than we have here this afternoon, namely the formal legislative approval, to discussions, negotiations, and actions that have been under way for at least 15 years. Governments which wish to cope successfully with the challenge must move much more quickly than that.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, my remarks today will be of very short duration. First I would like to pay tribute to the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Kuntz) whose tragic death we mourn today. I would like to pay tribute to him especially because he was very active in the northern affairs committee, was very concerned about national park matters, and played a real role this summer when we visited many of the national parks. We certainly mourn his passing.

I would like to divide my remarks about the parks into two sections, and as I said they will be short. The first has to do with the role of the Indian people in the parks. I am concerned especially about the Pukaskwa National Park, which is not mentioned in this bill. It is a park about which negotiations are going on right now, and is located on the north shore of Lake Superior.

There is the problem that arises when we take the rules under which we operate our parks and apply them to an area where our native people have been living for tens of thousands of years. We have records in that area showing that native people have been there for 10,000 to 15,000 years. Perhaps it is improper for me to say that a people are part of the environment, but in discussing Indian people we have to look at them really as people who are part of the environment. They know their environment, they understand it, and they live in it.

To say we are creating a park to preserve the environment, and then remove the Indians from that park, not allowing them to hunt or fish in it, is ridiculous. The native Indian people of Canada still feel strongly about their environment, and when we understand that then we can see the ridiculousness of the situation. There is a growing movement among native peoples to look back, to meet with their elders, to talk to the wise people and to the medicine people. More and more the young people are getting together with the medicine people and are studying their way of looking at the environment. Traditionally when an Indian killed a deer he did so for one reason, and that was for food. He also honoured the deer when he killed it. We have to learn about their attitude to the environment. One of my good friends, an ecologist, a top man in his field, says that the original ecologist is the Indian.

I am not satisfied when I hear our national parks people talking about making a deal with Indians so that in some way we can recompense them for taking away their freedom to hunt and live in the parks. That is not adequate. We have to be very concerned about the Indian people in a park like Pukaskwa—and I know there are others across the country—where they are part of the environment, and whose traditional life should not be disturbed but encouraged. They have a role to play in that park in terms of continuing to live in the manner in which they have for thousands and thousands of years.

The other point I wish to make concerns something quite different, namely, the communities of Banff and Jasper. They are two anomalies in our parks, but nevertheless they exist, have existed for many years, and will continue to exist as communities. There is no doubt about that. There is no question of their disappearing. They are very viable communities, but communities which are in a great deal of trouble. I think the most characteristic thought you get when you visit Banff concerns crowding. It is tremendously crowded. Far too many people are living in a small space. It lacks planning and cohesion. There is a great need for more space, and I think the extra space should be provided not at Banff itself but around Canmore. Jasper is not so crowded, but it, too, lacks planning. It does not know where it is going.

Both communities have one central problem to which we as parliamentarians must direct ourselves. All citizens of this country, no matter where they live, should have the right to govern their own affairs within their own community. A community cannot exist if its citizens do not have the right to make their own rules to govern themselves. This is something that is lacking in both these communities. One of the citizens of Jasper said to me that he has only one vote, and that that vote is for the federal representative, the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark). This is not to say that he is not doing a good job. I think he is doing a fine job for those communities, but the fact remains that the citizens of those communities have only one vote. They do not have a provincial vote or a municipal vote. In effect, they have no mayor and no provincial member. They have a federal member of parliament and that is it. They are denied other representation because they live in a national park. The point I wish to make is that both these communities must be given some kind of status within the parks, and be given it soon before lack of planning destroys these communities and the respective parks completely.

One other point I would like to mention about Jasper is that it is a railroad centre. A great deal of thought should be undertaken before any move is made to remove the railroad and railroaders from Jasper. I would be very concerned if any efforts were made to remove this turn around point without first having the utmost consultation with the people involved, with the railroad unions, and with the railroads. It is something that should be examined carefully. Having visited Jasper many times I see no reason why the railroad should not stay there and, as I say, before any steps are taken to remove the railroad considerable examination and consultation should be undertaken.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I am going to make only a brief intervention in this debate on the bill to amend the National Parks Act. I do so for two reasons. One is that I am genuinely interested in national parks and in their importance to our national life. The second is that the Prince Edward Island National Park lies mostly within my constituency, and I am especially interested in it. The Prince Edward Island Park is one of our smallest national parks, embracing only something like 150,000 square miles, yet over one million people visit it in the course of a year, which represents an extremely high use for this small area of land. Although this is very commendable, it also creates special problems.

In his speech introducing second reading stage the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)) said, as recorded at page 7494 of Hansard:

> The second important purpose of the bill is to allow future additions to existing national parks to be achieved by proclamation, thus avoiding the necessity of having to introduce new legislation for each such change. The other clauses amending the National Parks Act are basically administrative and updating.

To me this is an important procedure on which we are embarking because we are removing from Parliament control over changes in park boundaries. Changes can now be made as an administrative function, eliminating the role of the member of parliament as a representative of the area affected. Although I am in favour of this because it is necessary from the point of view of efficiency, it places upon the administrators a special responsibility to be extremely sensitive to the desires and will of the people affected by the changes they make. Local relationships are extremely important in matters like this. My caution applies with special force to the Prince Edward Island National Park because it is located in a relatively high density population area. Our greatest resource in Prince Edward Island is land, but this resource is limited so we must make sure that we use every bit of it to the best advantage. When these extra powers are put in the hands of the park administrators they have, therefore, a special responsibility to make sure that their actions meet with the approval of the local people.

In one sense, as the previous speaker pointed out, a national park is a local residence and everything that takes place there affects the local environment and the people who have been living there for generations perhaps. I would urge that the minister impress upon his officials the importance of maintaining rapport and an excellent relationship with the people who live in the area of the park and who would be affected by any changes. While I have a great respect for experts, Mr. Speaker, I have a deeper respect for the innate knowledge of the local people. I believe there is a duty on the park administration to ensure that what looks fine on paper in some high rise office in Ottawa, makes sense when it is applied in a local area thousands of miles away. The parks administrators should make it a practice to take local people into their confidence, and to seek the advice not only of provincial governments but also of local governments and the individuals and associations concerned.

A case in point is the Prince Edward Island National Park. I am not in a position to judge the validity of the criticism or anything else, but apparently the park administration decided—and perhaps for good reason—that the very famous Green Gables golf course should be reconstituted and redesigned. They propose to subtract some land from the course, then buy other land to replace what has been removed. Hundreds of people were shocked and amazed at this action. There are two possibilities here: one is that the action was sensible and the other is that it was really necessary; but if such is the case it has not been properly explained to the people. I hope this is not being done just because of an administrative whim; perhaps they should have left it the way it was even if it were not so neat from an administrative point of view.

Another example might be given concerning that same national park which involved the intense use of land and the local facilities. The Stanhope school stands cheek by jowl with the national park. Two or three other local schools were added to it. Control over private property in the immediate area was lost, perhaps due to lack of suitable zoning by the provincial government, and so there is a great increase in the number of children but there is no proper playground for them. A request was made for a little bit of parkland to be used as a playground on a temporary basis. I do not know the outcome of this request, but I am sure the minister will give it sympathetic consideration.

I should like to cover two other points, Mr. Speaker. I agree, of course, with the change in the name of the park to Prince Edward Island Park from Prince Edward Park. In the bill there is an appendix which describes the new boundaries of the park in technical and legal terms in five sections; I would suggest to the minister that maps should be provided when the bill goes to committee in order that the proposed change in the boundaries of the Prince Edward Island National Park may be easily understood. I recognize the necessity for legal description, but it is meaningless to people not thoroughly familiar with the area.

I should like to reiterate how important it is for the park administration to realize that, in one sense, a park is a legal residence; it has to fit into the local community. Any action that the administration takes should be in harmony with the will, the desires and the activities of the area in which the park lives, so to speak.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, Bill S-4, an Act to amend the National Parks Act, deals among other things with speed limits within national parks as well as the enlargement of some of them, particularly in Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island.

As regards the province of Quebec we deal with Forillon but not with St. Maurice or Témiscamingue Parks.

Mr. Béchard: Is there a Témiscamingue Park?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, this park is supposed to exist but I will not speak very long about Bill S-4. However, I would like to mention that for a few years now we have been asking the minister to instruct one of his officials to consider the possible establishment of a national park in Témiscamingue. Of course the minister cannot decide about the establishment of such a park without consulting the province. But I believe we are still waiting for provincial studies; we are waiting as well for Quebec authorities to decide to establish a park in Témiscamingue. When some pieces of land likely to be used for this park were proposed, they realized that there were economic rather than political interests that had to be protected at all costs such as forest and mining industries, on which the citizens of the rural Témiscamingue depend.

Of course, they assessed the situation and this is probably why provincial authorities were so slow in proposing a concrete and comprehensive program to the federal government. The bad thing about all this, Mr. Speaker, is that for some years, they have been trying to use Témiscamingue Park as a political trump by saying: the Liberals will give you this park if you vote for them. They say that at both provincial and federal levels, but we are still waiting for the park. And yet, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Béchard: At the federal level, people did not vote.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, they did.

An hon. Member: But not for the right party.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Pontiac electors voted Liberal in the federal election.

Mr. Lefebvre: Yes, quite right.

Mr. Béchard: In Pontiac?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, in Pontiac, in the federal election. At the provincial level, Témiscamingue is Liberal!

Mr. Speaker, in my constituency, the electors show intelligence only at the federal level, since they vote for the Social Credit Party of Canada.

Mr. Béchard: Not always.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I believe a question—

Mr. Béchard: Ask Mr. Tétrault.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): We could also ask the Liberal candidate in the Rouyn-Noranda constituency, a Mr. Millejour, I believe. Mr. Speaker, it was not because of the voters' convictions that they voted Liberal in those areas and in the hon. member's constituency, but because of their fear of separatism. But this has nothing to do with the national park.

Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that it was fear that decided the vote. Quebec premier Bourassa is the first to admit it. He is troubled by the fact that he has 102 members; I would have preferred him to have 30 fewer members but that will surely occur one of these days!

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing against the Liberals. It is the separatists that I resent; I am honest and I say so in all sincerity.

Mr. Ouellet: The Liberal party?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): No, I did not bear the Liberals a grudge.

An hon. Member: For whom did you vote?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I voted creditist. Of course, I admit that I lost my elections.

Mr. Prud'homme: How did Mr. Wagner vote?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I do not know.

Mr. Speaker, coming back to the Témiscamingue national park, I would like to point out to the minister not the area already considered or surveyed, but a specific area extending from Belleterre up to the Domaine in La Vérendrye Park. The Domaine is a rest area. From there to Belleterre is the finest natural site. It would not be necessary to carry out works, it is natural and lovely. There are large lakes, beautiful forests and maple groves. In short, everything is found there. It would merely be necessary to build a proper road and the park would be an entirely natural site.

I wonder then whether the federal government could not co-operate with the provincial government to develop this land strip from Belleterre to the Domaine. We would not have to stop forest operations, a basic industry, we would not be an obstacle to thousands of farmers, and we would own the most beautiful natural park of the world.

Mr. Speaker, I see the previous member for my constituency nodding in approval. He is right. It is not a question of politics, of partisanship, but rather a matter of logic. We have the land and its numerous opportunities, without weakening the local economy, taking anything away from anyone. The northwestern region of Quebec would be provided with one of the most beautiful parks, if not as beautiful as Forillon, certainly more so than Saint-Maurice Park. It would attract tourists who at present will not bother to make a detour by Rouyn or North Bay to get to Témiscamingue, but who would then drive through the Domaine at the heart of Témiscamingue.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the minister should have his officials give special consideration to my suggestion to provide Témiscamingue not with an artificial park, but with a park that needs only to be acknowledged and developed.

● (1510)

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, you can rest assured that I am quite pleased to participate in the debate on Bill S-4, which we are called to pass on second reading and whose objectives are as follows: first, to include Kejimkujik and Forillon in the national parks system; second, to authorize the Governor in Council to set aside by proclamation lands for eight additional national parks, including St. Maurice, and third, to extend, by proclamation, existing national parks without having to resort to a legislative measure in each case.

The most important aspect of this bill, as regards the province of Quebec, is obviously the establishment of two parks in that province, namely Forillon and St. Maurice.

It is not the first time that I speak about the establishment of a national park in Quebec, more specifically in the Gaspé Péninsula, as I advocated in my maiden speech delivered in this House in 1963.

Mr. Béchard: —and also your colleague from Bonaventure.

Mr. Cyr: In this regard, I say that I have always been seconded by my colleague and friend from Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine.

I knew then that such a tremendous project could not be achieved overnight. However, I also knew that if the project were approved in the near future, the citizens living near the park and Gaspé people generally would be very happy to benefit from the many advantages deriving from such a park.

Following that I continued to make representations to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as well as the secretary for the province of Quebec. That was done only within the framework of the Canada-Quebec agreement for the development of the Lower St. Lawrence and Gaspe area. Section 55 of that agreement provides that Canada would undertake the development of a park in the Forillon Peninsula. The province of Quebec would take it upon itself to purchase the land and hand it over under a lease free of encumbrances to the government of Canada for a period and on terms acceptable to both parties.

As a follow up to that original agreement on May 26, 1968, negotiations took place between the two governments and I would like here to commend the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) and pay tribute to the courageous minister as well as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), formerly in charge of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, for bringing those negotiations with the province of Quebec to a conclusion.

In the agreement of May 26, 1968, it was agreed that the province would undertake to take the necessary steps before December 31, 1970, to free the lands from all possible encumbrances or acquire their ownership free of encumbrances, inform the government of Canada as the said lands are released or acquired and give free tenure of the said lands to the government of Canada before December 31, 1970.

That is one of the obligations of the province of Quebec under that agreement. On the other hand, the government of Canada makes the commitment that the development and administration of that park will fully reflect the linguistic duality in Canada and more specifically the French characteristic of the province of Quebec and the Gaspe area. On the other hand, Quebec has agreed to have a utilization plan prepared for the pieces of land bordering on the park, while respecting its objective, natural beauty and fine qualities. The lease is for a 99 year term; however, there is a provision in the agreement whereby Quebec may, following a 60 year period, purchase Forillon Park from the Canadian government by reimbursing all capital expenditures which the central administration may have incurred.

Mr. Speaker, in the annex to this agreement appear all the amounts which must be spent during the period from 1970 to 1976-77, that is a total of $8,887,000 for the development of this park by the federal government.

Present and future economic benefits of such a park for the area are indeed numerous. Already, since the development operations of the park began in 1973, it has provided jobs for 175 Gaspesian residents. Last year's budget for Forillon Park totaled $2,500,000 and no change is expected this year. In wages alone $823,000 were paid last year to the park employees in that region. To this amount you can add the capital input of tourists. The park is obviously an incentive and a monetary input for the region directly involved, mainly the Forillon peninsula.

In 1972, the first year of operations, 84,726 visitors were recorded and their number increased to 165,000 in 1973. At the current rate, as someone said several years back at the time of the establishment of the park and as stated by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), Forillon Park should receive over 600,000 visitors.

As early as 1976, Forillon Park will become a genuine wildlife museum extending over 92 square miles.

Through the National Park Act which is aimed at ensuring the perpetual conservation as national inheritance of the regions containing important geographical, geological, biological or historical elements, the Forillon peninsula, by its history and situation, is an intouchable entity of this patrimony. Its 92 square miles and its varied natural elements surrounded by the sea are a splendour which no Canadian can ignore during a Gaspesian trip.

For true nature lovers and for the amateurs of natural sciences and the geologists or botanists, as well as for the historic peculiarity enthousiasts, Forillon Park will become a sort of museum of wilderness which will exhibit in their original surrounding the remains of prehistoric civilizations, the remains of ancient Micmacs camps, a lead mine opened by Superintendant Talon in 1758 and, offshore, ships sank by the Kirke brothers in 1628.

This park also includes Fortune Fort, an underground fort built during World War II to protect the Gaspe Bay against German submarines. This fort was restored last year.

Forillon National Park is also a sanctuary for several species of game animal, sea birds, birds of prey and marine mammals. Common and grey seals have also been observed in the territorial waters of Forillon Park from mid-May to the end of December. Their arrival seems related to a biological factor, the young being born around this period.

Now I should not want to use all my time as I know that several members wish to add their comments. It would take hours to describe the wonders of Forillon Park but, Mr. Speaker, I would like to report to this House for the first time and announce publicly also for the first time in Canada a discovery we made this summer in the park. We found in Forillon Park the white headed eagle called the bald eagle and I quote a report prepared on the subject.

> We observed that bird on June 4 and September 9, 1972. In both cases the weather was clear and it was easy to make a positive identification. In June 1937, Ball (1938) observed one of those eagles at Grande-Grève.

Mr. Speaker, this is to give you an idea of the fauna, birds of prey and game we find in Forillon National Park.

An hon. Member: Name them.

Mr. Cyr: If you want to know their names I have here a whole book on the subject.

An hon. Member: Name them.

An hon. Member: Table the book.

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, this gives only a small idea of what Forillon Park is and what it will be when we shall have finished the arrangements. I think this park will become a paradise for tourists in Gaspe Peninsula and I invite my colleagues here in this House to spend their next vacation in that beautiful part of Canada: Forillon Park in the Gaspe Peninsula.

[English]

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I may not have interpreted him correctly, but as I understood it the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) seemed to be claiming that the appearance in Forillon Park of the bald eagle was unique. I would like to point out that in Pacific Rim park they are very plentiful.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I commend the government for bringing forward this bill to regulate our national parks. It is about time it was brought forward. These parks have been under consideration for a long time and this is a matter we should deal with in the House of Commons. I bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that a speech made in this House by the minister's parliamentary secretary and printed in Hansard was circulated throughout the country. Unfortunately for the people of Canada, the minister felt that should be done. It is that kind of thing which runs the cost of government up and up and up. If a minister makes a speech in the House of Commons, it is not fair if he uses his departmental budget to circulate the speech across the country. Like any member, he has the right to purchase copies of Hansard, but it is an abuse of the money set aside to run the department if a minister uses a speech which he or his parliamentary secretary makes in this House as a method of propaganda.

I want to comment on one clause in this bill that bothers me. It has also been included in other bills which have come to this House. I refer to clause 3 which provides a criminal sanction against those who use the park—in a sense a new form of criminal law that activates within national parks and is created by the governor in council making regulations. I would not be so concerned about this except that it is the duty of parliament to make laws, especially laws which affect the rights and freedom of our citizens.

For too long we have allowed government, through some nameless bureaucrat, to produce regulations which somehow get pushed through the Privy Council office and approved by the governor in council. The new statutes thus created penalize people and amount to a new type of criminal law. Ordinary citizens can incur penalties imposed, almost at the whim of someone employed by government, because he has broken laws which have never been debated in this House or considered by the justice committee.

The particular provision which bothers me provides that for breaking these rules—rules which do not even exist so far—a person may be denied access to a park for up to five years. I wish to draw to the attention of the House the fact that major national highways pass through certain of our parks—those at Gaspé and Banff come immediately to mind—and it could easily happen that a person could be denied the right to traverse a park solely because some bureaucrat had made a rule or had been out to get him.

There is, of course, a need for regulation with regard to conduct in national parks. We must get tough with the polluter and the despoiler, the person who hacks the trees and leaves garbage around. But surely these rules governing the use of the parks can be brought by the Minister to the House for final determination, as is the case with any other criminal sanctions which apply throughout the country. As an illustration of what so often happens under the present system, I would refer hon. members to the rule which the National Capital Commission has made imposing a speed limit on the new route to the Ottawa airport. A new expressway has been constructed, yet a speed limit of 40 miles an hour has been imposed, one which is almost totally unenforceable and constitutes nothing more than a speed trap, for no reason whatsoever.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: This is the sort of thing that goes on when bureaucrats who are not subject to election make rules and laws. This kind of thing constitutes an abuse of the rights of the people of Canada. I read with interest the statement made by the parliamentary secretary at the opening of the debate. I wish to bring the attention of hon. members to one paragraph of that statement in which the hon. gentleman said:

> This brings us to the immediate and future needs of Canadians living in cities and growing urban centres who want, and need, easy and quick access to recreational land.

Unfortunately, this is all he says on the subject. He simply says he recognizes that Canadians in urban areas need ready access to recreational land. And he says nothing else. I regret that neither the minister nor his parliamentary secretary are here. Perhaps they will read Hansard. I should like to bring it to their attention that more than 80 per cent of the people of Canada will shortly be living in urban areas. It is all very well for us to establish national parks to reserve and preserve the national heritage of Canada, but a great many of these parks are totally inaccessible to the vast majority of the population.

While it is necessary for us to preserve the Virginia falls and the ice-caps of Baffin Island, I must say it doesn't do my constituents much good. I suppose this is equally true of those who live in most of the other constituencies represented in this chamber. We must tackle the real problem which the burgeoning urban growth of Canada is presenting. In 1952 a hurricane destroyed the lives and property of a great number of people in metropolitan Toronto. It is an ill wind that does not blow some good for someone. As a result of that hurricane, conservation and flood control measures were financed by the government of Canada. Certain parks were created. If hon. members go to those parks on a fine day in summer, they will find it very difficult to get in. By ten or eleven o'clock in the morning the gates would probably be closed. This is because there is such a pressing demand for parks around our great cities.

I shall be parochial for a while and refer to the great city of Toronto and the golden horseshoe area. We are in a difficult position because our recreational land, our wilderness land is to a large extent to the north in the shield country and it takes at least an hour, possibly two hours, to reach it. Unlike Montreal and Vancouver, there is no open land relatively close to our city. The province of Ontario has recognized this situation and has proposed a parkway belt around Toronto. It has also proposed to create parks of fairly significant size in and around the city. The intention is to freeze development and purchase as much as possible of the Niagara escarpment.

Unfortunately, while Ontario is treated as a wealthy province, when you get right down to it the reason they cannot acquire that parkway belt, the reason they cannot acquire the Niagara escarpment and assemble the recreational resources so urgently needed by those who occupy apartment buildings and townhouses, is that they do not have the dough. Hon. members may ask why this should be so. One of our problems is that the province of Ontario is rich and it pays 50 per cent of the total cost of the national government; and the great bulk of this contribution comes from the golden horseshoe area. I suggest that our contribution to the national revenue exceeds that made by all the industries and businesses in the provinces of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

Mr. Cullen: What do you get back for it?

Mr. Blenkarn: I am glad the hon. member asked that question, because we get back very little in terms of what can be done for the people who create the wealth of this nation. One of the things those who create the wealth need is a place to relax, to get out of the smog and breathe fresh air. Maybe the smog results from our creating wealth, but somewhere along the line we must recognize that the people who work must have a place where they can relax, enjoy themselves and get some fresh air into their lungs. This is an important national interest and it is a matter in which this government should take a keen interest when considering a new parks policy. Not only do we need a new parks policy to reserve and preserve the beautiful and the historic but we need a policy designed for the purpose of providing recreation close to areas where our people work and live. Such a parks policy would cost a great deal of money. Recreational land is at a premium already and is being snapped up by people who build elaborate establishments, put fences around them and hang "No trespassing" signs on the fences. They sometimes even have a big dog and put up signs telling people to beware.

I suggest that farmland is being picked up in this fashion and the price is getting higher and higher. Very soon there will not be enough land left for the purpose of recreation. This is a serious matter and it is imperative that governments begin to consider the problems of people in the cities who want to get away on occasions to hike, ride bicycles, operate snowmobiles, fish or do other things of a recreational nature.

One might suggest that we build another Highway 401 or 400 so that people can drive 150 or 200 miles away from the cities, perhaps up to areas like Témiscamingue, but we have problems such as shortage of fuel and insufficient time. We must build recreational resources close to where people work and live. I urge the government to get together with the province of Ontario to work on this matter. The Niagara escarpment would be a beautiful place to preserve as a national park. Perhaps it could run from the escarpment or from Niagara Falls back through the gorgeous rocky rim to the trees and the bush along the Bruce Peninsula. But this cannot be done without money and without a government which is prepared to come to grips with urban problems.

Members of this House must pay attention to urban problems and the needs of the people living in urban areas. The province of Ontario is attempting to freeze or hold back development, but holding bylaws are of no real value because people build bigger establishments and bigger fences and then we have to expropriate the land at a much higher price. It is imperative that the national government recognize this as a national priority and get together with the province of Ontario or its conservation authority to build national parks close to where people live. This involves areas of high taxes and perhaps great wealth, but these are the areas of central Ontario which have a tremendous need for recreational facilities.

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak today on Bill S-4 coming from the Senate. I have always spoken in favour of the conservation of our natural resources, the preservation of our environment in its natural state.

As most other members, I had the opportunity to visit several national parks throughout Canada and we from New Brunswick are particularly proud to have Fundy National Park among the national parks as it will soon be the case of the new Kouchibouguac Park which is the subject matter of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker, the member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) has made, in my opinion, a quite valid criticism of the provincial government which does not seem to have any logical policy for the development of its parks. It undoubtedly shows a division between the federal and provincial wings of that party and I hope that the Tory members of Ontario will succeed in reconciling their views on the matter.

Mr. Speaker, the member for Peel South has also mentioned that the hard-working Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) and his parliamentary secretary had distributed throughout Canada a great many copies of the excellent speech which the parliamentary secretary delivered in this House on November 2.

I find that there again it is perhaps a matter of petty and parochial politics. If we stop to consider, for instance, that the parliamentary secretary to the minister was the first Indian elected to the House of Commons, that the minister has honoured him by asking him to pilot this bill in the House, it does seem to me that it is hardly the right time for an hon. member issued from the first citizens of this country to start playing party politics.

Nevertheless, the speech to which I listened two weeks ago was one of the best I ever heard and I recommend its wide distribution across the country.

Mr. Speaker, the bill before us gives us the opportunity to speak in favour of our own area, our parish, if I may say so.

Of course, I support the bill and I feel bound to say at the outset that there is no problem here. As the parliamentary secretary put it, it is a milestone but an important one in the development of a national parks system throughout the country in the framework of a consistent national policy.

In Madawaska, people wonder whether a national park should be developed. They have been wondering about it for many years now. I might outline to my colleagues the geographical context that I am referring to. Madawaska was one of the first areas of New Brunswick to be settled. I shall not dwell on the circumstances which led Acadians, and later on Canadians from Quebec, to settle in that area. Anyway, the St. John River flows through this area and some 250 miles downstream into the Bay of Fundy.

Two major streams flow into the St. John River; on the one side, in the state of Maine, there is the Allagash River, which the Americans have tried to preserve in its natural environment, and on the other side, rolling down from the province of Quebec, there is the Saint-François River. As there are many rivers with that same name in Quebec, I wish to specify that I am referring here to the one which forms, here and there, along the border between Canada and the United States, a chain of lakes in a natural environment that is most picturesque and virtually inaccessible, except by way of a rough country road that we have been trying to improve lately.

Mr. Speaker, that area formed, in the early days of the settlement, an extremely large unit, not a political unit but a community of interests, on account of the background of its inhabitants, who were Acadians, and therefore French-speaking. Later on people from Boston, Connecticut and other areas, following the American wars also settled in the area.

Now, in 1842, the Madawaska area was brutally divided into two parts, by the Ashburton-Webster treaty, negotiated by Lord Ashburton from England and Daniel Webster, of notorious renown for some reasons in the United States. The Madawaska community was thus divided into two parts and that division still exists and one should not be surprised for instance to find out that the vast northern section of the state of Maine is mostly inhabited by French-speaking people. I point out that Madawaska is also, of course, of French origin.

However we warmly welcome all people who come to visit us, or live with us regardless of their ethnic origin. This is the attitude that prompted us from time to time, through a gesture that has nothing to do with folklore but comes from a longstanding tradition, to proclaim the existence of the Republic of Madawaska.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the minister, as I have already done in writing a few years ago, to consider the advisability of developing an international park in this area enclosed by three borders, that of New Brunswick, that of Quebec and that of the United States. We have international parks in Canada that are more or less important according to their origins.

But as for us, the people from Madawaska, who have been historically denied some of our rights, who have lost a large part of a territory that we were traditionally claiming, we would readily accept a gesture of reconciliation on the part of the Canadian and the American authorities as well as the government of the province of Quebec, namely the establishment of an international park in the River Saint-François area.

Mr. Speaker, as time is running fast, I will put an end to my remarks. I simply wish to give the minister the friendly warning that I intend to submit this proposal in the future, whether in this House, in committee or in private, because the minister has much sympathy for me and for all representations from the Republic of Madawaska. Therefore, I will only ask today, perhaps for the first time in this House, that an international park, a tri-border park, be established in our beautiful part of the country.

[English]

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few brief remarks in respect of Bill S-4 which is before us. As a rookie in this House I find it rather strange that the bill should come from what I often hear referred to as the other place. Be that as it may, there are several points I should like to make.

First, I am very happy to see a bill before this House which gives us an opportunity to discuss the question of parks. If I had my way, the whole of the Northwest Territories would be a park and all the people here would be invited to visit us once in a while. I have found from my travels throughout Canada that many white people also like the idea of parks. They have to struggle in a concrete jungle for nine or ten months of the year, or more, and enjoy spending a few weeks in the hill country living something like the Indian people.

There are two particular points I should like to mention. I hope hon. members will bear them in mind when this bill is studied further and comes to a vote. One involves clause 10 which refers to agreement being reached with the province concerned that the lands to be set aside are suitable for a national park. Clause 11 provides:

> The governor in council may, after the consultation with the Council of the Yukon Territory or the Council of the Northwest Territories, as the case may be, by proclamation, set aside as a national park of Canada, under a name designated therein—

I am a little concerned about the words "after consultation" because of previous experience in respect of consultation in the Northwest Territories. The consultation, to say the least, has been very poor. There is a danger inherent in this clause, as I see it, which could cause some worry especially to the native people of the Northwest Territories who at present are preparing a position to place before the government to the effect that there may not be any land to claim if the parks are set up by proclamation. That is one point I wish to make which I should like hon. members to bear in mind, that is, that the question of land settlement has not been settled in the Northwest Territories.

There are also questions in respect of the hunting and fishing rights of the people in the Northwest Territories. These rights must be protected. I do not believe the National Parks Act at present protects the hunting and fishing rights of the native people of the Northwest Territories. This must be borne in mind when one discusses the idea of national parks for both the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

In order to point out the importance of hunting and fishing to the people of the north, I should like to refer to one or two statements made to me not too long ago. A chief from the area of Fort Franklin was quite concerned about hunting and fishing rights being eroded as a result of legislation in other parts of the country. He said that the white man has his bank, and that when things get tough he can go to the bank, write a cheque and receive the money necessary to buy groceries in order to keep going until things are better. The chief said that he did not have a bank in this sense, but that his bank is Great Slave Lake or Great Bear Lake where there are plenty of fish. He said that when things get tough and he needs a food supply for his family and his dog team, it is there. That is his bank and he would like to have it protected.

Another matter concerns the employment of native people in the parks across the country. I do not know how good the record is, but I would point out the experience of two chiefs from the Northwest Territories who visited our national parks four or five years ago. After visiting some of the parks they returned to the territories and said that the people of the south desperately needed parks because their lands were being used for other purposes; therefore land should be set aside for their recreation and that of future generations. They said they did not see any Indian people employed in the parks. They did not even see any who were visitors to the parks. They said that the only Indians they saw near a park were two outside the park who had to pay to enter it. That did not leave a very good impression.

I should also like to refer to a comment made by the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) who suggested that it would cost a great deal of money to acquire land and operate parks in Canada. I would mention the fact that before the coming of the white man this whole country was a park and my people ran them on total unemployment. We might examine this question with a view to reinstating that idea. The Indian people, being some of the great socialists of this country are, I believe, also some of the greatest park keepers this country has ever known.

Briefly, those are some of the points I wanted to make and I hope hon. members will bear them in mind when this bill goes to committee and comes up for a vote.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I assure the minister that our party wishes to see this bill go to committee soon, so I will keep a watchful eye on the clock.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Schellenberger: I wish to echo the words of hon. members who spoke before me, specifically the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), and the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth). I realize that wide-open spaces are very nice and I wish I could be there, living as I do so close to Edmonton, but this raises a point on which I wish to comment.

There is a small provincial park a couple of miles from my home. It is 15 miles from Edmonton. Almost any day of the week when you go past that park during the summer, you find an overabundance of trailers and people in it. Therefore, I think there is a great need for the federal government to find a way of financing small recreational-type parks within easy reach of people living in the cities.

A number of problems are tackled in the bill before us, such as the consideration of new park boundaries, the addition or deletion of the boundaries of parks and the administration of the parks. Because this bill outlines such housekeeping activities in parks as the collection of fines and traffic control, it opens up the whole question of self-government of the townsites in the national parks.

Although there is no national park within my riding, I am aware of the necessity for control of the internal administration of townsites by the people who live in them. Surely it is one of the principles of democracy that people living in a town should have jurisdiction and control over the traffic in that town, the repair and upkeep of its streets, the disposal of sewage and the proper development of the town. Surely people in townsites such as Jasper, Banff and Waterton have the right to self-government. However, I should like to caution the minister on one point before he grants self-government to these townsites, and that is that there should be full consultation with the inhabitants.

I might add to what was said by the hon. member for Northwest Territories that in many cases the government does not seem to have the word "consultation" in its dictionary. However, I have confidence in the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) because his answers appear to be straightforward and I believe he will engage in full consultation with the towns if he has in mind giving them self-government in the future. I would add that he might consider increasing grants, which the hon. member for Rocky Mountain has described as being pitiful, in lieu of taxes. I hope that in the future these townsites will receive the $33,000 which they seem to think should be coming to them.

Coming as I do from a small town in the riding of Wetaskiwin, I know that people are trying to escape the urban sprawl and migrate to smaller communities so that they can enjoy country life, what they call the good life. I think it is necessary for the minister to consider people who have residences within the townsites, who do not live there the year round but only come to them for the scenery or for skiing once or twice a year. Because of the great shortage of housing in the townsites of Banff and Jasper—I am aware of this because I was a member of the committee which went to those townsites and heard the people voice this problem—the minister said that he would provide trailers as a temporary measure to alleviate the problem. I understand, however, that he has had a change of heart. I hope that people who have lived in these areas for generations will be allowed to build houses there.

A point that was brought to my attention and which I believe should be mentioned is that there are no old-age homes within the townsites of Jasper and Banff. I may be wrong, and if so I stand to be corrected. However, I think it is totally wrong that people who have lived all their lives in these areas should have to go to Edmonton or other cities in their old age. I would like the minister to take this matter into consideration and provide the necessary facilities.

It is close to four o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and I will conclude now.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a presumption on the part of some hon. members, especially the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger), that so long as he has an opportunity to say what he wants, no one else has anything to add to the debate. There are a few remarks which I would like to make, and I think other hon. members also have a few comments to make on the bill. I should like to speak about the situation in my own province where there are delightful areas for the establishment of national parks for the preservation of nature and of the beauty of that province, especially in its northern portions. Before I embark upon extolling the beauties of the northern part of British Columbia to members of the House, I wonder whether I might leave that to another day when the bill comes up again for debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the unanimous consent of the House to revert to motions in order to table a committee report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is this agreeable to hon. members?

Communiqué of Canadian and European Parliaments

Mr. Chrétien: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps we could pass this resolution first and then meet the request of the hon. member, because I understand the debate on second reading of the bill is concluded.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I gather the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) was asking whether the debate could be adjourned and said that he wished to speak another day. Because there are only 15 or 20 seconds left, I think that is a request that we might meet, as we do usually.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) that we revert to routine proceedings so that he may present his report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

JOINT COMMUNIQUÉ ISSUED BY REPRESENTATIVES OF CANADIAN AND EUROPEAN PARLIAMENTS

The House proceeded to the consideration of the subject matter of the joint communique issued November 1, 1973, following the meeting in Ottawa between delegations of the European and Canadian parliaments, pursuant to the order made Wednesday, November 14, 1973.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps it is a somewhat unusual procedure, but for once in our lives we do not have a motion which someone moves and someone else seconds. I now call on the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras).

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, before I begin my remarks I should like to express my appreciation for the way in which my motion was received by the House last Wednesday. It required the unanimous consent of members of the House for this debate to take place on the joint communique issued by the members of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence and the European parliament. It was granted, and I appreciate that very much.

My main purpose in bringing this matter before the House is to focus the attention of hon. members on an aspect of Canada's foreign relations which it seems to me has not been considered seriously enough. I am referring to Canadian relations with the European Economic Community, the EEC of the EC as it is now called. As many hon. members are aware, a delegation from the European parliament was in Ottawa from October 31 to November 1 of this year. This was the first formal contact between the parliament of Canada and the European parliament, a fact which is rather surprising when one considers that the Treaty of Rome creating the original six-member EEC was signed as long ago as 1957.

It is appropriate that I mention how this first formal contact came about and how the two committees became involved. When the committee on foreign affairs of the other place undertook an examination earlier this year of Canada's relations with the European Community, they visited the Community headquarters in Brussels for several days and had an informal meeting with a delegation of the European parliament chaired by Mr. Peter Michael-Kirk, a British MP and chairman of the Conservative group in the European parliament. Subsequently, in their report the committee of the other place recommended some form of interparliamentary link with the Community parliamentarians. With the approval of both Speakers a letter was sent to the president of the European parliament, signed by the chairmen of both Canadian parliamentary committees dealing with external relations, inviting a delegation to visit Ottawa this fall.

I mentioned that it is perhaps surprising that no formal contact had been made between the two parliaments. It surprises me because the European Community is such a major force in the world today. Canada cannot afford to ignore it even if it wished to do so. Even before its enlargement from six to nine member states earlier this year, the European Community had become the world's largest trading entity. Its imports exceed by a significant amount those of the United States. Canada, as a major trading nation itself, must seek in every possible way to intensify its relations with this new economic giant in Europe.

As those hon. members who participated in the discussions of November 1 will agree, it was a stimulating and informative encounter. Led by Mr. Pierre-Bernard Cousté, a vice-president of the European parliament, the delegation was made up of members of all the nine nation states of the community except Ireland and Belgium. However, despite the fact that the various nationalities of the delegates were easily distinguishable, it was clear that this delegation had come to Canada not as representatives of their own countries but as members of a cohesive European parliamentary group with a remarkably homogeneous outlook on the matters under discussion.

[Translation]

Before dealing with the subject matter of the communiqué, Mr. Speaker, I should like to express on behalf of the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence our deep appreciation to you and your colleague for your co-operation and support that made that visit a success. The committee members were very satisfied with all the arrangements to which your staff co-operated so willingly.

[Mr. Dupras.]

Following the joint meetings of November 1 last, both delegations prepared and approved a release in which they recognized that the links between Canada and the Community could be improved and intensified. Both delegations agreed that periodic meetings should be organized between the European parliament and the Parliament of Canada. Regular contacts would help promote a better understanding and overcome disagreements.

I agree with that statement, Mr. Speaker, but I would go even further. I would like the matter of a regular interparliamentary link rather than periodic meetings to be examined thoroughly. I believe further parliamentary exchanges between both groups would be beneficial and would draw the attention of the European Economic Community on certain Canadian interests, particularly in the area of trade and economy. Indeed, I strongly urge Canada to take the initiative of establishing an interparliamentary link without delay. The report of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee on Canadian Relations with the European Community stated, and I quote:

> Delay could result in the build-up by the Community of a network of parliamentary links with third countries' parliaments, leaving the members of the European Parliament with far less inclination or time to consider such links with Canada.

That is the risk involved and pointed out by the Senate committee.

The second point of the statement I wish to discuss especially, Mr. Speaker, concerns the following recommendation:

> "that the establishment in Ottawa of an Economic Community delegation, together with an information office, should be considered as a priority by the European Community."

There is no doubt that very few people in Canada are aware of the existence of the European Economic Community and of the part it plays in the changes taking place in Europe. We undoubtedly need a positive information program to explain the Community to Canadians.

This delegation of the European Economic Community in Canada would serve as a link both ways, not only making Canada more aware of the Community and understand it better, but also keeping Brussels informed of Canada's particular interests and points of views.

Mr. Speaker, when thinking of Europe, Canadians are still inclined to recall the old traditional and bilateral relations, namely the relations which we had with France, Belgium, Great Britain and other European countries. From now on, we must learn to imagine new relations, Canadian relations with the European Economic Community. On the other hand, many Europeans have a tendency to consider Canada as an integral part of the North American entity, assuming that they could have with us more or less the same relations that they have with the United States.

Mr. Speaker, to clear up any misunderstanding and dispel any wrong interpretation on both sides, it might be appropriate to hold regular interparliamentary meetings and have a delegation of the Community in Ottawa.

Perhaps it would be interesting and useful to remind hon. members of some facts about the European Parliament. It is often mistaken for the Constituent Assembly of the Council of Europe with which the Canadian Parliament has already had numerous exchanges.

Although the two groups meet in Strasbourg and are formed of Europeans, they have very few points in common. The Council of Europe, made up of 17 member states, is only an advisory body and is mainly concerned with human rights and co-ordination of national regulations and legislation, mostly in the social and cultural fields.

The European Parliament comprises representatives of the national parliaments of the nine member states of the European Economic Community, that is Belgium, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Ireland, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom.

There are nominally 198 members, although the British Labour Party has until now refused to appoint representatives. That number would increase when the Labour Party decides to send its own delegates. Even though the powers of the European Parliament have so far been of an advisory nature, this organization follows closely the progress of the Community through oral and written questions sent to the Commission, that is the bureaucracy, and to the Council of Ministers. Its powers are increasing and by 1975, it will have acquired budgetary control over administration and information.

In the European Parliament, the debates are conducted in the six languages of the Community members: Danish, Dutch, English, French, German and Italian.

It is interesting to note that members of the European Parliament do not sit by nationality but by party or ideological affiliation. The present parliament is made up of five main groups and a number of non-affiliated members. These main groups are the Christian Democrats, the Socialists, the Liberals and allied members, the Conservatives and the European Democratic Unionists.

The European Parliament meets once a year, mostly in Strasburg, but often in Luxemburg where the secretariat is located. The parliament includes 12 standing committees which meet mostly in Brussels, capital of the European Community.

If one compares the future importance of both groups, that is the European Parliament and the Advisory Assembly of the European Council, I believe it is fair to say that the European Parliament will probably gain in importance. When the Community will have integrated its trade business and can begin integrating its economic and monetary objectives, some form of political integration will most certainly follow.

At the present time, one can only surmise the impact of a political union of Europe on the European Parliament, but it will surely bring about eventually a substantial increase in parliamentary powers and control. Mr. Speaker, I think that this organization will become one of the most important parliaments of the future, and it is in the interest of Canada to establish close relationships with it.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate the External Affairs Committee of the Senate on taking the initiative, in the spring of 1973, of making known its intention of meeting with delegates of the European Parliament and of visiting Brussels last March to start discussions with representatives of the various member countries of the European Community. Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the motion I moved on Wednesday was received with so much enthusiasm. I know that several members of the opposition have made known their intention of participating in this debate on the joint statement made public by the delegates of the European Parliament and by those of the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence and of the Senate Committee.

For their good work, Mr. Speaker, I want to express to them once more all my gratitude and appreciation.

• (1610)

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras) for his initiative and the informative and interesting remarks which he has just concluded. I think it is all to the good in this chamber from time to time to take the opportunity to deal with the kind of matters which parliamentary groups have been discussing. If I may say so, I think the other place long ago set a good example on this sort of thing. I commend the hon. member for his initiative and I support completely, thoroughly and most sincerely, the suggestions he has put forward and which are contained in the communiqué.

One cannot overemphasize the importance of our contacts with and broadening our knowledge of what might be called the new Europe—a new Europe exemplified in the parliament of Europe which the hon. member has so succinctly and so well described. Some of us, although not very old, remember when Europe was a divided Europe with contact points. Now we have developed a Europe which is much more than just a place where other great powers divide and perhaps confront each other explosively. We have seen the era of ostpolotik. I wish the Berlin wall had come down, but in many ways I think it is crumbling and that is to the good. I am very pleased that our country has an ambassador accredited to Brussels. This is a suggestion that I used to make during the past three years. I think on another level this typifies the significance of contact.

It is interesting that in a world of celerity and sophistication in communication, so often we are not really communicating very well. In Canada in the last weeks many people have suddenly awakened to the fact that there is such a world as the Arab world—but it has been there for a long, long time. The new Europe is there, with a tremendous impact and tremendous possibilities. I would like to see us developing the kind of parliamentary arrangements that we have had so long and so successfully with the United States. That is a most excellent group. I hope as parliamentarians we will be in the forefront of developing ties, regularizing contacts and meetings, not with the nation states of Europe—with most of them Canada is not unfamiliar—but with the new Community. This is not a Community which is only economic, but it is a political one in the broadest sense of that expression. So I look forward to the parliamentary exchanges and to our finding more and more opportunities for dialogue with the Community.

While this is a good thing, Mr. Speaker, it is also imperative. I remember not long ago someone appearing before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence and saying that perhaps a bigger danger than being taken over economically was being left out when it comes to trade. This statement was made by Mr. Fowler, a prominent member of the Liberal Party who made a thoughtful presentation to the committee. It would be unfortunate in the great world of economic and political giants if we were to find that we had been left out. So it is incumbent upon us to see that this does not happen not only in hard economic terms but in people-to-people contacts.

I am not quite becalmed despite the many assurances that all is going to be well in terms of trade. I do not think we know yet that there will not be ramifications and repercussions that could quite possibly be painful. One thing we do know however—that contacts, associations and friendships should all be stored for the mutual benefit of this country and the community of Europe.

Mr. Speaker, I know that some of my illustrious colleagues also wish to address themselves to this matter, so I simply conclude by quoting from the remarks of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) delivered by the eloquent voice of his parliamentary secretary during the visit of the European parliamentarians. He said:

> In this context the suggestion of a Canada/European community declaration is attractive. But the determining factor will be substance—not form. Canada is seeking opportunities to develop a dynamic, meaningful and distinctive long term relationship with the European Community. If it is clear that such a declaration can contribute to this objective we will be ready to participate in its elaboration.
> With or without a declaration the future evolution of the community's transAtlantic relationship will be of critical interest to Canada. I am confident that common interests and common sense will prevail.

I end as I began, Mr. Speaker, by expressing great pleasure in a debate which was so well launched by my hon. friend.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I shall try to emulate the admirable brevity of the last speaker. I, too, would like to commend the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras) for his contribution to the debate and his statement about the European Economic Community and Canada's relationships with it. In this party we recognize the value of this interparliamentary encounter. I was one of the delegates who met with the delegation from the European parliament. I agree very much with what I think was one of the key statements in the communiqué, which was that regular contact would help to promote better understanding and overcome disagreements. The communiqué provided that this event, which had happened for the first time in history, would be followed by periodic meetings and regular contacts at a later date.

I am reminded, in this connection, that for I think 11 years now representatives of this House and of the Senate have been meeting annually either in Washington or in Ottawa with representatives of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America. Over the years I think we have come to know each other better. We are very close to the United States, in any event. It seems to me that there is, if not an equal need at least a clear need for the parliamentarians of Europe, particularly of the nine countries which form the Community, to meet their Canadian counterparts so that we can understand each other's problems and in dealing with each other, as we are bound to do, learn to appreciate each other's problems.

We must recognize the new realities. The European Economic Community is one of the new realities of the world. It is a trading partnership. It is a new political creation, not necessarily like any we have known before. I think, the hon. member for Labelle told us that the Community has a commission which is composed of experts, or what we call permanent members. It has a council of ministers who negotiate, particularly on trading matters, for their particular countries, and it has a European parliament in which all the nine member countries are represented by members designated from the various parties. They meet, I think, about 100 days in the year. It is a truly functioning organization and is likely to grow and change.

We in Canada must recognize the great importance of this Economic Community. I will put a few figures on record. They may be well known to some. They illustrate that for our own prosperity and well-being, we must deal with the Community. The enlarged community has a population in excess of that of the United States, our largest trading partner. The Community's population is 250 million, the people mostly having attained a very high level of civilization and development. The population of the United States is 207 million. The Community has a gross production rate in excess of $700 billion a year. Since the British entry it has become Canada's second largest trading partner. In 1972 the nine member countries bought $2.5 billion of Canadian exports, or 45 per cent of all our exported goods not going to the United States.

In 1972 the Community sold us $2.2 billion worth of goods. The amount of goods imported by the Community is significantly more than the total amount of goods imported by the United States. In 1971 the Community imported over $10 billion worth of finished goods from outside countries. Canada's share was only 1 per cent of this finished product market. The implication for employment in these figures is tremendous. Last year, 1972, Canada lost its traditional balance of trade surplus with the Six and had a trade deficit. So without going into further figures, it is easy to see that the terms of access of Canadian goods and Canadian products into the Economic Community are of the greatest importance.

I think the hon. member for Labelle has already mentioned that there is a great need for having the European Community delegations come to Ottawa so that they may know what is going on here. It is important for Canadians to be made aware of the new Europe. Significantly, the conference which we had was hardly mentioned in the press. I think Le Devoir was one of the few newspapers in Canada which thought it worth while noticing the conference. The Globe and Mail of my home town, which calls itself Canada's national newspaper and which used to be one of our best newspapers—I use the past tense deliberately as it no longer covers international affairs as well as it did—said nothing about this unique event. It said nothing about the representatives of the European Community being in this country, although I am informed the newspaper was fully notified of the event. How can Canadians learn to adjust to the realities of the new Europe if events such as this go unnoticed, unattended and unassessed?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: It is also important for Europeans to distinguish between Canada and the United States. We share the same continent, much of the same culture, and we enjoy a very close and intimate relationship with the United States. For these reasons Europeans sometimes think they need not consider Canada as a separate entity from the United States. They assume that Canadian concerns are similar to those of the United States and that the Economic Community's policies with regard to the United States can apply to Canada as well.

I think it is very much in Canada's interests to mark the differences between ourselves and the United States. The European delegation which came here acknowledged in the joint statement that European Community policies must recognize distinctions and differences between the interests of Canada and those of the United States. The United States and the European Community are already preparing a declaration regarding the principles of their relationships with each other. I think we need a similar statement which would apply to Canada.

The European Community is primarily a trading or economic bloc and as such is of very great importance. I want to mention another factor. No one can foresee exactly what it will grow into. There is every likelihood that it will grow into a more closely knit political organization. The Community now takes part in GATT negotiations on behalf of its nine member nations. This fact in itself shows that the Community is of very great importance. In addition, as I understand it the members of the Economic Community have now said that in the discussions with the United States about a new Atlantic charter they will work together. It is of the utmost importance to consider that although this trading partnership perhaps will not grow into a single state in the foreseeable future, it will grow into a more closely knit political entity with great power and influence in the world and it will act as a counterbalance, if you will, to the two superpowers of the United States and the U.S.S.R.

It behooves us, considering the position we are in, to maintain the closest contact with the European Economic Community, to have the fullest knowledge of it and to show the greatest sympathy for it. That should not be difficult because our links in any event are very close, not only with mother countries such as France and Great Britain but with other countries as well. Many people in Canada come from countries of the European Economic Community. There are very few parts of the world with which we maintain closer historic links.

I close by saying once more that I am glad of the initiative which enabled those of us who were present at the conference to testify to its importance. I express the wish that it will prove to be merely the start of close and growing co-operation between our respective countries.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Before the Chair recognizes the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. De Bané) and the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), in that order, as well as other hon. members, let me say that I have checked with the officers at the table and understand that the document previously alluded to has not been printed anywhere in any form which would make it readily available to the public. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) also spoke about this difficulty.

In order to make that four-page communiqué more meaningful to those who may wish to refer to this debate, I wonder if it is the will of the House to print the document referred to as an appendix to Hansard. It would be inserted at the conclusion of this debate.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dupras: I so move, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

[Editor's note: For text of communiqué referred to above, see appendix.]

● (1630)

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, as the previous speakers, I also wish to commend the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras) for the motion he has put before the House, which enables us to learn more about the work of the European Parliament and Canada's relations with the European Economic Community. All of us have followed the development of this community and I think the recent meeting is an historic event in a new direction. I feel Canada has shown maturity.

Until now, we used to evolve within a closed circuit with Great Britain and the United States as major partners, and many entertained great fears when Great Britain expressed the wish to join the Common Market.

So as to define the current situation I think we can do no better than look back to see wherefrom those two groups had the idea of meeting today. I was going through the journal International Perspectives when I came across an article by Maurice Torelli which reads as follows:

Canada's reaction to Britain's entry into the European Economic Community reveals the basic ambiguity of the Canadian attitude towards the latter; on the one hand, Europe represents the colonial past, the "Land of Sin" as Jefferson put it, whereas, on the other hand, the EEC, which is the largest trade bloc in a world in which an economy of conglomerates is becoming the rule rather than the exception, is acting more and more as a powerful attractive force. Futurologists à la Herman Kahn speak of the vitality of certain "winning" groups such as Europe or Japan, and of the decline of certain "losing" groups, such as the United States or the U.S.S.R., whose aging administrative structures are beginning to constitute a threat to economic growth. As far as its relationship with these large conglomerates is concerned, Canada, a country that certainly would never have been invented by an economist, is more or less associated with each of them, but the process of becoming a satellite, although it is at a very advanced stage, is not yet complete. This process may be stopped provided Canada adopts a policy consistent with the objectives of national independence and a general increase in prosperity set forth in 1970. In other words, Canada needs a policy of diversification that would make it possible to control the domination of its economy resulting directly from the very magnitude of its relations with the United States and to find the new markets the structure of its economy requires.

Up to the present, however, Canada, unlike the United States, has not taken Europe seriously; nevertheless, three factors militate in favour of a change of attitude. On the one hand, the end of the war in Vietnam seems for the moment to have checked the observed shift in the economic axis of the developed world Japan exerts a considerable attractive force, but Europe remains clearly the principal economic partner of the United States. On the other hand, Britain's entry into the Common Market puts Canada in a situation similar to that which prevailed after 1846, when Britain abandoned Imperial mercantile protectionism in favour of a system of free exchange, thereby rendering European markets accessible. Because it eliminated the tariff-free importation of Canadian wheat into Britain, the repeal of the Corn Laws in 1846 was considered in certain Canadian quarters to be a "betrayal" and forced Canada to re-evaluate its general orientation.

This re-evaluation led first of all to the conclusion, in the 1850s, of the Reciprocity Treaty between Canada and the United States, which set up a sort of common market between the two countries for a whole range of products, and then, after the failure of the treaty, to Confederation in 1867. Confederation was the expression of Canada's will for a legal definition of its independence and led to a policy of economic nationalism and to the construction of Canadian transcontinental railways. Canada had decided to find its own identity without either Europe or the United States.

Today, with Britain's entry into the EEC, Canada feels somewhat as though it were the victim of a second British "betrayal"; the end of modern-day preferential treatment by Britain will certainly create difficulties for certain Canadian industries that will be in an unfavourable competitive position on the British market in comparison with the other EEC member states. Canada can opt for a rapprochement with the United States, as it did in 1846, or once again revert to economic nationalism. There is, however, a third solution; it consists in creating closer ties with Europe, the legal terms of which are yet to be defined but whose economic justification may be stated precisely: the third factor that makes Europe particularly interesting for Canada is the complementary nature of the two economies.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to quote part of this article because I think it is partly the prelude of this very recent meeting which has corroborated the ideas of this article's author.

I have here the joint declaration issued at the conclusion of the meeting between the European and Canadian parliamentary delegations. May I quote some parts of it:

Both delegations admitted that there were numerous ways of improving relations between Canada and Europe. For their part, European delegates admitted that EEC policies should take into account distinct interests of Canada and the United States.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that this is one of the most important points of the present statement which says that, at last, the European Community distinguishes us from the American block, makes a distinction between Canada and the United States, between the Canadian and the American economy and between Canadian and American commerce. I think it is a victory for our representatives here in Canada that they have indicated this approach and have had the European Community make this distinction.

We read further:

Aware, on one hand, of their common interests and ideas and on the other hand, of possible disagreement between Canada and the Community both delegations agreed that periodical meetings should be organized——by both Parliaments. And still, this is another argument, it is understood that if we want to remain friends and to keep up this friendship, there must necessarily be a place of meeting. Then, we spoke of an information office in Canada and of a similar office at the EEC. Such an office is absolutely necessary to be able to discuss all points daily, at each meeting in order to follow the progress of commerce, industry and politics.

Mr. Speaker, we then read:

The extent to which present GATT negotiations will succeed in further liberalizing international trade in industrial and farming products, as well as defining a good behaviour code has been judged of significant importance both for Canada and for the Community.

Mr. Speaker, all the new transactions concerning the western grain, for instance, were conducted mostly on the European market, as Great Britain was the major importer of Quebec cheese. I believe this will open new horizons and broaden for Canada the access to European markets, those of Great Britain as well as of France and other member countries of this community. And if this is good for Europe, I believe it is even better for Canada, because, once more, it shows maturity in opening the door to other markets while breaking away from previous ones, mostly American, without neglecting them for all that.

I believe it is time more than ever before for Canada, as an independent country, to trade with other nations and take its place on the international markets.

Mr. Pierre de Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we can say that the constructive dialogue promised by the Nine at their Paris summit in October 1972 is well under way. Owing to various circumstances involving the gorvernment, Ottawa has hosted earlier in November large groups of European visitors representing European institutions and the information media the influence of which on the development of our relationship with Europe could not be overestimated.

Whether they were members of the European Economic Council like Sir Christopher Soames, Vice-president and Commissioner for External Affairs of the Council, coming for further discussions with Canadian ministers and officials, or representatives of the European Parliament coming to meet their Canadian counterparts, or representatives of famous newspapers from Western Europe coming to participate to the conference on Canada and the European Community organized by the ICAI with the co-operation of the Department of External Affairs and the European Economic Council, the government was very pleased to welcome them because their visit gave to Europeans and Canadians an exceptional opportunity to discuss the extension and deepening of relationships between Canada and member countries of the European Community. Those discussions should not be short-lived. It is desirable that the dialogue with the European Community be on a permanent basis and with good will that such exchanges of views be frequent and profitable.

It is with the greatest interest that we read the joint statement issued at the meeting between European Parliament delegation and the Canadian Parliament delegation on November 1. The government is encouraged in his own efforts by the positive tone that both parliamentary delegations gave to their discussions on the various items on the orders of the day.

The government particularly noticed the recommendation made to draft a statement on the various principles that are to govern the relations between Canada and the European Community. We must be aware that the continuing concern of the government is to ensure that the distinctive Canadian entity in North America, and its own interests and yearnings should be recognized as such by the international community as a whole, and particularly by our European partners, because of the leading part that they are bound to play in the policy of diversification in our external affairs. This means that the matter of a distinct declaration between Canada and the European Economic Community is presently undergoing a thorough examination within the government. Besides, it was already mentioned in a preliminary way with the member countries of the Community. We insist on the fact that in this matter as in others, the material is the most important. What we want is that the relations between Canada and the Community should from now on develop in concrete and dynamic co-operation. If a policy statement could contribute to the achievement of this objective, the government would certainly welcome it.

The joint communiqué suggests that the European Economic Community ought to give top priority to the establishment in Ottawa of a Community delegation, including an information office. This could not agree more with the views of the government. There cannot be any real communication unless it is bilateral. A European Economic Community mission in Ottawa would be the useful if not essential counterpart of our own permanent delegation to the Community in Brussels. It is certainly not for us to decide which priority should be given by the Community to the establishment of such a mission, but we can only wish that it be top priority.

The government will welcome the full support given by both European and Canadian delegates to freer trade. In fact, it has often stated its policy with regard to freer international trade and it would like it to be even more extensive. It is because we are convinced that such a liberalization would benefit all members of the international community members that we are pleased to see the European Economic Community take such a positive position with regard to a still greater liberalization.

It must be noted that the delegates have acknowledged the common interest that Europeans and Canadians have in cooperating so that Canadian raw materials may be further processed before being exported. This is a major concern of the government. Even if Canada is regarded as an important raw materials supplier, the Canadian people's interests require that these products be further processed before being exported. We would favour for this purpose the development of joint projects with the cooperation of European companies.

Obviously, this question bears a direct relation to that of foreign investment in Canada. The foreign investment review bill established a number of concepts in this regard. It is to be hoped that Europeans may continue to invest in Canada with tangible benefits for the Canadian economy.

Communiqué of Canadian and European Parliaments

In this time of fast development on both sides of the Atlantic, it is important to remember, even if it is a truism, that as important as it is, the economic side of our relations with the EEC is not the only one to be considered, nor even the one that matters most. On this point, it is pleasant for us, but also greatly significant, that the European delegation has expressed its satisfaction over the constructive role played by Canada as concerns the CSCE. That part of the statement clearly shows that Canada is pursuing vital objectives in Europe, and it recognizes that the security of Canada cannot be separated from that of Europe and that bonds of all kinds, made through our history, origins and common ideals, encompass and surpass our respective policies for the greater prosperity of all concerned.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to join with the previous speakers in congratulating the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras) who introduced the motion which is now before us.

[English]

That was at your initiative, Mr. Speaker, having so graciously suggested that we table the communiqué of this meeting. With your permission I should like to enlarge the debate slightly, taking this as a point of departure. I should like to formulate a plea which has both historical and parliamentary overtones. What I want to see is a regular record of the meetings which parliamentarians attend, whether they be here or overseas. The latest example of such a meeting has just closed its formal gathering with a luncheon today. I am not suggesting that we try to put on the record of Hansard all the proceedings, but at least the agenda of the matters that were covered.

I should like to go back a bit in history and indicate just what is the degree of record we have of these various gatherings. I went back as far as 1959 because I had a direct interest in the initial proceedings of the Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group. At that time we managed to have tabled the record of the first meeting of the Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group. That followed through sequentially year after year until about 1966. For some reason not clear from the record, we did not manage to carry on. There was a break in 1966, and then in 1970 the Clerk of the House laid upon the table copies of the report of the thirteenth meeting of the Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group. I submit that is not good enough. Some of us in this House were chosen as delegates to this international gathering. We cannot all be there, but when we come back from such meetings we should be able to at least table the record here so that those who were not privileged to attend the meetings would know what we were doing. The Canadian public should know also.

I have been extremely fortunate in the short time I have been a member of this parliament to have attended no less than four of these meetings. One was in Bonn, before this session first convened, of the North Atlantic assembly. Unfortunately, the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) is not here; I was going to refer to something of interest to him. I also attended in July a meeting of the international parliamentary group in Washington. This was a very important one for me because the main problem discussed was the movement of tankers through the Strait of Juan de Fuca. I was also a Canadian member at the meeting of l'association internationale des parlementaires de langue française. I also participated at the meeting of the Canadian Parliamentary Association with the European Economic Community. Today we have, thanks to the initiative of my colleague the hon. member for Laprairie and our Speaker, the record of that meeting. We do not have the record of these other meetings in Hansard, but other places provide a partial record of the meeting in Washington.

I do not have much time left, but my plea this afternoon is merely to obtain the approval of the Chair and of this House to the suggestion that when meetings of this sort take place, someone who attends ought to table the report in this House, whether for debate or simply for the record, so it shall be known and there shall be a complete sequence in this House of the text of other gatherings in this country or abroad.

I hope, for example, that within the next week or so we shall have the means of tabling, just as a matter of routine, the proceedings or the agenda of the meetings we have just been attending here in this building, attended by the legislators of our provinces. There was an exchange of ideas to our mutual benefit, and that is a great thing. But more than being to our mutual intellectual benefit, it was to our mutual political benefit in the context that we were able to meet with our fellow parliamentarians and legislators across the country and discuss questions of importance to us.

I regret, as I said, that the hon. member for Laprairie is not here as this is one of the strange anomalies of tabling various reports. He was charged at the North Atlantic assembly with preparing a report on the fisheries of the North Atlantic. He did so and tabled it at the fisheries committee. It is there among parliamentary records, but it should be on Hansard. It is my plea that before too long we shall be able to proceed in this way in the normal course of events, so there will be a record of all these meetings on our record.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would not by any stretch of the imagination want to take up very much time, except I have an idea—which is perhaps a bit dangerous—that if we really mean what we say in this most interesting hour of debate, and I really think we do, one way it might be accomplished is for us as a parliament, if the government cannot do it, to persuade the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), on an urgent basis—I am very serious—to visit first of all Brussels to ensure that the Canadian public and this parliament understands the importance of the link between the old Europe, which has sort of been reincarnated in the European Community, with Canada and also to visit other European countries. I have been here as long as the Prime Minister and I must say I did not think it would be so hard to get the right hon. gentleman to travel. I hope that if he or his advisers have time to read the remarks which have been made in the last hour there will be an understanding of the serious urgency of having the Prime Minister of Canada visit Brussels.

My own leader made such a visit in 1970, well before an ambassador was nominated for the special post of ambassador to the Community. I think in all the travel plans the Prime Minister has, none can be so urgent as a visit first to Brussels and, hopefully, to other countries of the Community. If invitations are wanted, of course they can be easily obtained. I hope this whole idea will go forward quickly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I sense that the House has met the objective raised by the hon. Member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras) in presenting his motion on Wednesday, November 14. Accordingly, the hour for private members' business has expired. It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX

JOINT COMMUNIQUÉ OF THE MEETING BETWEEN THE DELEGATION OF THE EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT AND THE DELEGATION OF THE CANADIAN PARLIAMENT IN OTTAWA, NOVEMBER 1, 1973

A delegation from the European Community's Parliament today held the first formal meeting with members of the Canadian Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the House of Commons Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

The two delegations recognized that much could be done to improve Canada-Community relations. The Canadian delegation welcomed the specific mention of Canada in the Paris summit meeting communiqué as a country with which the Community should maintain "a constructive dialogue". For their part, the European delegates acknowledged that EC policies must recognize the distinction between the interests of Canada and the United States. To this end all delegates agreed that a separate EC-Canada dialogue should be maintained. Taking note of the proposed US-EC declaration, the delegations further recommended that a separate declaration of principles be drawn up for Canada-EC relations.

Conscious on the one hand of the common interests and perceptions they share and, on the other, of the areas of potential disagreement that could arise between Canada and the Community both delegations agreed that periodic meetings should be organized between the European Parliament and the Parliament of Canada. Regular contact would help to promote better understanding and overcome disagreements.

The necessity for an EC institutional channel in Canada capable of two-way communication was recognized by the Parliamentarians of both sides. It was agreed that the establishment in Ottawa of an EC Delegation including an Information Office should be given the very highest priority by the Community.

In respect to general EC-Canada trade relations, Canadian members stressed the commitment which Canada felt to a truly multilateral trading system and their apprehension over the possibility of the major trading groupings becoming inward-looking. Such a development would run counter to the efforts of both Canada and the Community to diversify their economic and other relations. The success of the current GATT negotiations in further liberalizing international trade in industrial and agricultural products and in reaching agreement on trade conduct was considered to be of great importance both to Canada and to the Community. The delegates of the European Parliament stressed that both their own policy and also the overriding necessities of the Community's economy made trade liberalization a major priority for them. The whole recent history of the Community, and also the very high degree of trade liberalization which the Community had already achieved was evidence of this policy.

The European delegates expressed their appreciation of the constructive role Canada is playing in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

The two delegations recognized that although Canada was an oil-exporting as well as an oil-importing nation, it confronted many of the same problems the Community faced. The delegates concluded that methods for co-operation exploration and development of oil sources in the North Atlantic and Eastern Arctic and the Alberta tarsands could be profitably examined. The two delegations recognized the great importance of co-operation in the field of scientific research and technology. The European parliamentarians underlined their interest in the results obtained in Canada in the field of nuclear reactors.

In addition, it was agreed that co-operation between member states of the Community and Canada in the upgrading of industrial raw materials could be mutually advantageous. Canada, a major supplier of primary products to the Community, was interested in joint ventures with European companies to develop further processing of its industrial raw materials before export. For their part, some member states of the Community were interested to ensure future supplies through such joint undertakings.

The Community is Canada's largest export market for agricultural products (35%). Canadian export sales to the European Community itself as well as to third markets are affected by the CAP system of support prices—e.g. for barley. British entry has meant that the impact of the CAP is being felt even more deeply. However, the Canadian parliamentarians recognized the important social and political significance of the Community's agricultural policy.

In discussing foreign investment in Europe and Canada, the two sides agreed that there were increasingly interesting investment possibilities between the member states of the Community and Canada in both directions. The delegates expressed the hope that such reciprocal investment projects would increase, whilst recognizing that the question of multinational corporations would inevitably have to be examined.

The European and Canadian parliamentarians, while recognizing the significance of their respective aid policies, agreed on the need to take more energetic action in implementing their responsibilities to developing countries.

THE PARTICIPANTS AT THE MEETING BETWEEN THE EUROPEAN AND CANADIAN PARLIAMENTARIANS IN OTTAWA, NOVEMBER 1, 1973

FISHERIES

FLEET DEVELOPMENT POLICY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgency. The fishing fleet development policy announced last week by the Minister of Fisheries imposes serious implications on the social and economic life of Canada's east coast fishermen. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter):

That the matter be referred immediately to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry and that the committee be empowered to travel from place to place to hold public hearings with the fishermen concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

TRANSPORT

PROVISION OF RAILWAY CARS TO SHIP BRITISH COLUMBIA LUMBER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise under Standing Order 43 to seek the permission of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the continuing shortage of railway cars for the movement of lumber out of British Columbia, compounded by the implication the other day in the statement of the Minister of Justice to the effect that the railways are not competent enough to deal with this matter by themselves. Therefore I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave):

That this House recommends to the government it enter into arrangements forthwith to provide railway cars for the loading and shipment of lumber as it did with respect to providing hopper cars for the loading and shipment of grain.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity, therefore the motion cannot be put.

3. In April 1972, the city of Chatham applied for a financial assistance grant of 100 per cent of the cost, up to a maximum of $100,000, of upgrading the present 3,000 feet turf runway to a 3,000 feet x 75 feet asphalt runway with a paved taxiway.

4. Two millions dollars is provided annually in the estimates for financial assistance grants for the development or improvement of community airports, and is allotted to specific airports as the applications are reviewed and approved. The application by the city of Chatham is under review at this time.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE—SERVICE CONTRACTS

Question No. 2,204—Mr. Forrestall:

With respect to Department of National Defence maintenance and service contracts, excluding construction-related contracts (a) how many such contracts have been made (b) at what locations were these made (c) who is the contractor in each case (d) what is the cost of such contracts or sub-contracts held by each contractor (e) what is the type of skill required of workers employed by such contractors or sub-contractors (f) how many workers are employed for each such contract (g) what is the length of each contract?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): (a)Twelve. (b) 1. Canadian Forces Base Ottawa, Ontario. 2. HMC Dockyard Esquimalt, British Columbia. 3. Defence Research Establishment Suffield, Ralston, Alberta. 4. Canadian Forces Base Suffield, Ralston, Alberta. 5. Canadian Forces Base Edmonton, Edmonton, Alberta. 6. Canadian Forces Base Edmonton, Edmonton, Alberta. 7. Defence Research Establishment, Valcartier, Quebec. 8. Canadian Forces Base Gagetown, Oromocto, New Brunswick. 9. Canadian Forces Base Downsview, Downsview, Ontario. 10. Canadian Forces Recruiting & Selection Unit, Vancouver, British Columbia. 11. Canadian Forces Base Halifax, Halifax, Nova Scotia. 12. Canadian Forces Base Halifax at Stadacona, Halifax, Nova Scotia. (c) 1. Modern Building Cleaning, Division of Dustbane Enterprises, Ottawa, Ontario. 2. (g) 1. 2 years; 2. 2 years; 3. 1 year; 4. 1 year; 5. 2 years; 6. 2 years; 7. 1 year; 8. 23 months; 9. 18 months; 10. 2 years; 11. 2 years; 12. 2 years.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT ACT—GRANTS MADE FOR CONSTRUCTION OF ARENAS

Question No. 2,425—Mr. MacLean:

1. Have grants been made by the Department of National Health and Welfare toward the cost of construction of arenas in Sherwood and Morell, Prince Edward Island, St. Catharines, Ontario and for a swimming facility in Arichat, Nova Scotia and, if so, in each case (a) what was the amount (b) when were commitments to pay these grants made (c) on what date were the grants actually made?

2. Under what policy of the government were these grants made?

3. On what date was the decision taken to launch such a policy and for what reasons?

4. Have any other grants been made under this policy and, if so (a) to whom (b) to what amount in each case?

5. Has a request for a grant or an inquiry about the possibility of qualifying for a grant been received from the Community Gardens, Kensington, Prince Edward Island or from the Crapaud Rink, Crapaud, Prince Edward Island and, if so, was the request approved and, if not, for what reasons?

6. Have other requests been received from other organizations for grants that have not been approved under this program?

7. Is the policy under which these grants were made still in effect and, if not, on what date was the program terminated and for what reasons?

8. Is it the intention of the government to reinstate this policy at any future date and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Grants were made by the Department of National Health and Welfare toward the cost of construction of arenas in Morell, Prince Edward Island for $25,000;

Sherwood, Prince Edward Island for $50,000; St. Catharines, Ontario for $50,000 and a swimming facility in Arichat, Nova Scotia for $50,000. (b) Yes. (c) Cheques were requisitioned on the following dates for these grants: St. Catharines, Ontario, February 5, 1973; Arichat, Nova Scotia, February 6, 1973; Morell, Prince Edward Island, February 13, 1973; Sherwood, Prince Edward Island, February 5, 1973.

2. These grants were made under the authority of the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act.

3. Discretion to make such grants has existed since the inception of the Fitness and Amateur Sport Program and does not require the development of a special policy. The grants were made pursuant to the general objectives of the Act; to "Promote, encourage and develop Fitness and Amateur Sport in Canada".

4. No.

5. A request for a grant was received from the Community Gardens, Kensington, Prince Edward Island. It was not approved. There is no record of a request for a grant or inquiry from the Crapaud Rink, Crapaud, Prince Edward Island.

6. Yes. A number of requests have been received. They have been acknowledged but were not approved.

7 and 8. Grants to finance local facilities are no longer made and there are no plans to reinstate the program. It was terminated at the end of 1972. A re-examination is under way, in co-operation and consultation with provinces, municipalities and universities concerning the establishment of a policy to bring selected facilities across Canada up to international standards. In this review, the department will also be looking into opportunities to develop specialized training centres in conjunction with existing facilities.

OUTSTANDING CHARTERED BANK SMALL BUSINESS LOANS

Question No. 2,747—Mr. Stevens:

As of September 18, 1973, or to the nearest date feasible, what were the total outstanding chartered bank small business loans (i.e. under $200,000) where the banks were receiving the minimum rate of ¼ point over prime and, as of that date, what percentage were such total small business loans to total bank business loans and to total bank general loans?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The most recent statistics on the distribution by size of account of chartered bank loans are for July 31, 1973. On that date the outstanding amount of business loans under authorizations of less than $200,000 was $3,610 million. This was 23 per cent of the outstanding amount of all business loans and 13 per cent of general loans which also include the banks' personal loans. In May 1973 most banks introduced dual lending rate systems under which the rates charged on business loans under authorizations of less than $200,000 are linked to a separate base rate that is lower than the prime rate applicable to larger accounts. In mid-September when prime rates were increased by ¾ per cent to 9 per cent the base rates for smaller accounts were raised by only ¼ per cent to levels three-quarters to one percentage point below the prime loan rate. The actual rate charged to particular borrowers, whether large or small, depends also on the nature of the loan and the credit standing of the borrower.

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT AND MONTREAL DORVAL AIRPORT

Question No. 2,775—Mr. Stevens:

1. Since the opening of Terminal 2 at Toronto International Airport, what has been the average number of flights per gate per week, and for the same period, what has been the average number of flights per gate per week at Terminal 1 in Toronto and at Montreal Dorval Airport?

2. What is the average passenger Terminal floor space per gate at Terminal 2 in Toronto compared to the average passenger Terminal floor space per gate at Terminal 1 in Toronto and at Montreal Dorval Airport?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Since the opening of Terminal 2 at Toronto International Airport, the average number of flights per week at Terminal 1 have been 1,124 and 1,539 at Terminal 2. In the corresponding period the average number of flights per week at Dorval have been 2,347. There are 24 gates at Terminal 1 and 16 gates at Terminal 2; these are supplemented by off-gate aircraft positions to an extent which ordinarily raises the number of actual gate positions to 32 at Terminal 1 and 22 at Terminal 2. There are 37 gates at Dorval which are only occasionally supplemented by off-gate positions. In this context therefore the average number of flights per gate per week at Terminal 1 (Toronto) equals 35; at Terminal 2 equals 70, and, at Dorval equals 63.

2. The total passenger terminal space at Terminal 1 equals 797,252 square feet; at Terminal 2, 628,231 square feet and at Dorval equals 606,000 square feet. In context of total gates served these figures equate with square feet of passenger terminal per gate as follows: 24,914 square feet at Terminal 1; 28,556 square feet at Terminal 2; 16,380 square feet at Dorval.

NOTE: It should be noted that Toronto Terminals 1 and 2 combined have accommodated 58 per cent more passengers than Dorval in the same time period; additionally, there is a higher proportion (fluctuating) of passengers involved in trans-oceanic/trans-border traffic at Toronto.

NORTHERN MINERAL EXPLORATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Question No. 2,835—Mr. Firth:

1. What were the names of recipients benefitting from the Northern Mineral Exploration Assistance Program (NMEAP) in each of the fiscal years 1972-73 (January 1, 1973 to end) and 1973-74 to date and what were the amounts of money involved in each case?

2. Has the Department completed its comprehensive evaluative study of the program and, if so, what was the date of the report?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. 1972-73 to March 31, 1973:

Company	Amount Paid $
Charta Mines Ltd.	16,489
Five Star Petroleum	16,669
Teslin Explorations Ltd.	10,247
Duke Mining Ltd.	4,631
Dynasty Exploration Ltd.	50,000
Boswell River Mines Ltd.	21,487
Norman H. Ursel	3,689
Cessland-Fort Norman Syndicate	50,000
High Country Minerals	6,150
J. M. Wheelton	419
Darnley Bay Syndicate	24,777
Vestor Explorations	50,000
Claymore Resources	2,949
Silver Spring Mines	12,496

1973-74 to October 22, 1973

Five Star Petroleum	27,727
Savanna Creek Gas & Oil	26,346
Trans Columbia Exploration	1,151
B.C. Yukon Exploration	3,367
Ice Station Resources	33,198
Dynasty Explorations Ltd.	50,000
Silver City Mines Ltd.	8,468

2. An evaluative study of the program has been carried out and is presently under review.

ADJUSTMENT OF STATUS PROGRAM—HALIFAX REGION

Question No. 2,837—Mr. Forrestall:

How many immigrants illegally in Canada turned themselves in during the recent "Make this country your country" campaign in the Dartmouth-Halifax region?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The number of aliens registered under this program in the Dartmouth-Halifax area is 655 made up of 583 registrants and 72 dependants. The program did not differentiate between persons in Canada legally and those in Canada illegally but rather made its benefits available to all who met the criteria.

CANADIAN PENSION COMMISSION APPLICATIONS

Question No. 2,940—Mr. Marshall:

1. How many applications have been received by the Canadian Pension Commission since the Pension Act was amended on March 30, 1971 and, of these, how many have been adjudicated?

2. (a) Of the number adjudicated upon, how many were resolved (i) in favour of (ii) against the veteran (b) as of September 31, 1973, how many applications were still on hand?

3. How many claims are being adjudicated each month during 1973?

4. As of the end of September 1973, how many claims were on hand and, of these, how many were (a) over a year old (b) over nine months old (c) over six months old?

5. As of the end of September 1973, how many claims were for World War I veterans?

6. What is the average age of war veterans who served in (a) World War I (b) World War II (c) Korea?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Applications received to end of September, 1973, 24,472; Applications completed, 15,764.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

2. (a)(i) in favour of the veteran, 7,769; (ii) against the veteran 12,492. (b) Applications on hand, 8,708.

NOTE: Many applications cover more than one condition and/or more than one period of service.

3. January, 822; February, 982; March, 827; April, 679; May, 559; June, 706; July, 866; August, 811; September, 1,194.

4. Statistics on outstanding claims are not available for the precise periods indicated in the question, however, following are figures for closely related periods: Total claims on hand, 8,708; (a) one year or older, 2,822; (b) over 10 months old, 2,822 plus 930 equals 3,752; (c) over seven months old, 2,822 plus 930 plus 1,567 equals 5,319.

5. Statistics available on the number of outstanding claims are not broken down by periods of service.

6. The only accurate figures available on the average age of all war veterans are taken from the 1971 census which showed as follows: World War I, 76.7 years. World War II and Korea combined, 51.8 years. The average age of disability pensioners as of September 30, 1973 was: World War I pensioners, 79.77; World War II pensioners, 57.85; Special Force (Korea) pensioners, 47.04.

CRTC—FREE-TIME MINISTERIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS

Question No. 3,021—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

Has the government given any consideration to the application in Canada of rules applied to the BBC and independent television in Great Britain establishing a category of free-time ministerial announcements to which there is a formal right of reply by the Opposition and (a) if so, for what reason is it not now in effect (b) if not, on what date will it be?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): The Canadian Radio Television Commission has no such regulation. The government does not intend to take any action to establish such a procedure in Canada.

CONTROL OF TICKS IN KEJIMKUJIK PARK

Question No. 3,023—Mr. Crouse:

1. Has the government made any effort to control the ticks which are a nuisance to Nova Scotians and which constitute a menace to tourists visiting Kejimkujik Park and, if so (a) what process has been applied to control these pests (b) what amount of money has been set aside for this project?

2. Is the government familiar with the progress being made by ZOECON of California in preparing hormonal insecticides to control pests that attack both ornamental plants and food crops and, if so, is it prepared to have this process applied by officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to the Nova Scotia ticks in Kejimkujik Park?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) No chemicals are currently being used by Parks Canada to control ticks in Kejimkujik National Park. Parks Canada by participating in a provincial committee is studying the problem and the park circulates brochures which inform the users of ways to cope with the tick. (b) Not applicable.

2. The juvenile hormone, ZOECON, is not yet registered for use in Canada. The use of this hormonal insecticide will not be permitted in parks until registered with the Department of Agriculture and it is proven that there are no detrimental side effects to the environment.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS—GREY-SIMCOE

Question No. 3,051—Mr. Mitges:

1. How many farm improvement loans were distributed in the electoral district of Grey-Simcoe in 1972 and to October 1, 1973?

2. What was the total amount in dollars?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1. and 2. The requested data is not maintained by electoral district.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS GRANTED IN ONTARIO

Question No. 3,052—Mr. Mitges:

1. How many farm improvement loans were distributed in Ontario in 1972 and to October 1, 1973?

2. What was the total amount in dollars?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1 and 2:

	Farm Improvement Loans Distributed in Ontario
Year	No.	$ (million)
1972	8,705	3,116
*1973 (to October 1)	7,172	2,913

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1 and 2:

	Small Business Loans Distributed in Ontario
Year	No.	$ (million)
*1973 (to October 1)	411	4.2

*Preliminary data. All final returns for September not yet recorded.

Order Paper Questions

PASSENGER TERMINALS IN FREDERICTON, SAINT JOHN, MONCTON, HALIFAX, CHARLOTTETOWN

Question No. 3,059—Mr. MacLean:

How large are the floor areas of each of the passenger terminals and what is the passenger load in each case for the last period for which figures are available for each of the following airports (a) Fredericton (b) Saint John (c) Moncton (d) Halifax (e) Charlottetown?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The floor areas of each of the passenger terminals at the following airports are: Fredericton, 7,343 square feet; Saint John, 6,610 square feet; Moncton, 8,468 square feet; Halifax, 147,234 square feet; Charlottetown, 4,900 square feet. The passenger load for the last period for which figures are available for each of the above listed airports reads as follows:

	Period—1/1/72 to 31/12/72 Passengers
Airports	Enplaned	Deplaned	Total
Fredericton	71,755	66,563	138,318
Saint John, New Brunswick	72,136	72,453	144,589
Moncton	83,479	85,674	169,153
Halifax	427,033	422,695	849,728
Charlottetown	52,306	50,013	102,319

CANADA-USSR FISHERIES AGREEMENT

Question No. 3,098—Mr. Crouse:

Has the government or government officials signed an agreement with the USSR that would allow the use of Tasu Inlet as an operational base for Soviet vessels and, if so, what was the basis for the said agreement and what are the particulars relating to the scope of the operation of Soviet vessels in this Inlet?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): On January 22, 1971, an agreement was concluded with the USSR on co-operation in fisheries in the north-eastern Pacific Ocean off the coast of Canada. The agreement came into force on February 19, 1971, for a two year period and was extended with amendments in February 1973 for a further two year period. Article VII of the agreement states: "The Government of Canada will permit fishing vessels of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and their service vessels to conduct loading and unloading operations in Tasu Sound and in the territorial sea of Canada off the west coast of Moresby Island between 52 degrees 23 minutes north latitude and 52 degrees 56 minutes north latitude. Such vessels will be permitted to enter Tasu Sound through an entrance corridor of Canadian internal waters extending two miles to the south and two miles to the north of the centre line of the entrance to Tasu Sound. To ensure safe navigation each fishing or service vessel of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics must notify the Canadian Director of Fisheries, Pacific Region, through the radio stations at Victoria, Tofino or Bull Harbour, preferably twelve hours but in no case less than two hours in advance of its expected time of arrival at the entrance to Tasu Sound." The basis for this agreement is described in its preamble, which may be summarized as recognizing the mutual interest of both countries in co-operating on fisheries in the area, and in conducting operations on a scientific basis with due regard to conservation. In particular, through this agreement the government of Canada secured the removal of Soviet trawlers from the Big Bank area on the high seas off the coast of Vancouver Island where there had been conflicts with the operations of Canadian fisherman. The agreement has operated to the satisfaction of both countries, as evidenced by its recent renewal.

LIST OF ELECTORS—SPECIAL VOTING RULES

Question No. 3,115—Mr. Forrestall:

1. For what reason were the numbers of electors on the voting lists for the last federal election not given for those Canadians voting under Special Voting Rules for any federal constituency except Gander-Twillingate in Newfoundland?

2. What were the numbers of electors on the lists who were eligible to vote under the Special Voting Rules in the last federal election for each riding other than Gander-Twillingate which alone appeared in the report of the Chief Electoral Officer on page 799?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. As the lists of Canadian Forces and Public Service electors, prepared pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 37(5)(c) of the Special Voting Rules (Schedule II to the Canada Elections Act), do not include dependant electors, the lists give in fact only a close approximation of the number of electors who are eligible to vote under the Special Voting Rules in a particular electoral district. For that reason it has never been considered advisable to include that information in the report which the Chief Electoral Officer is required to publish pursuant to subsection 58(9) of the Canada Elections Act. However, as under an amendment made to the act in 1970, copies of the lists applicable to each electoral district were forwarded by the Chief Electoral Officer to the appropriate returning officer who had to make them available for inspection during the period of the general election by the candidates officially nominated in that electoral district, pursuant to subsection 28(1) of the act, a number of returning officers, including the returning officer for Gander-Twillingate, did add up the number of names on their lists and included the figure so obtained in their Recapitulation Sheets which served as the basis for the preparation of the statistical report published pursuant to subsection 58(9) of the act. Through an oversight, the figure respecting Gander-Twillingate was included in the report of the Chief Electoral Officer.

NOTE: The predecessor to the Special Voting Rules, the Canadian Forces Voting Rules (superseded on April 12 , 1971), did not provide for the preparation of lists of Canadian Forces electors by electoral district.

2. Since returning officers were not required to report in their Recapitulation Sheets information respecting the number of Canadian Forces and Public Service electors appearing on the Special Voting Rules lists, and as the lists themselves were destroyed shortly after they were returned by the returning officers because by statute they are not open for inspection outside the period of an election, information is available in respect of only the following electoral districts, where the returning officers reported that information in their Recapitulation Sheets: Abitibi, 191; Ahuntsic, 117; Brandon-Souris, 282; Bruce, 146; Champlain, 225; Compton, 249; Duvernay, 120; Esquimalt-Saanich, 1,675; Fort William, 150; Halton, 140; Hamilton Mountain, 175; High Park-Humber Valley, 121; Joliette, 162; Kamouraska, 221; Kootenay West, 189; Lambton-Kent, 173; Lincoln, 174; Mackenzie, 153; Manicouagan, 106; Northwest Territories, 38; Outremont, 99; Peace River, 163; Port Arthur, 171; Provencher, 181; Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, 269; Red Deer, 265; Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata, 257; Roberval, 152; Rosedale, 157; Saint John-Lancaster, 713; Saskatchewan-Humboldt, 234; Sault Ste. Marie, 184; Sherbrooke, 299; Skeena, 118; St. Paul's, 112; Stormont-Dundas, 250; Surrey-White Rock, 285; Timmins, 197; Yorkton-Melville, 262; Yukon, 95.

WEDDING GIFT FOR HRH PRINCESS ANNE

Question No. 3,126—Mr. O'Sullivan:

Did the government purchase a wedding gift for HRH Princess Anne and, if so (a) what was the gift (b) what was its cost, including transportation (c) by whom was it chosen and what criteria were used in its selection?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): The government of Canada, on behalf of the Canadian people, offered a tapestry by the internationally-renowned Canadian artist, Mariette Rousseau-Vermette, to Her Royal Highness the Princess Anne on the occasion of her wedding to Captain Mark Phillips. In keeping with the occasion and the person to whom the gift was destined, a body of officials and experts considered the selection on its originality, uniqueness, Canadian-ness and artistic value. Protocol demands that discretion be observed in connection with monetary value in matters of this particular nature.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

*RENOVATION OF CONFEDERATION BUILDING

Question No. 2,585—Mr. Coates:

1. What has been the total estimated cost of renovating the Confederation Building for offices of Members of Parliament and how was the contract in question awarded and, if tenders were called, what were the names of the firms that submitted tenders and was the successful tenderer the lowest bidder?

2. How many offices were created in the renovation and, of these, how many are being used by Members of Parliament and how many by staff?

3. What is the breakdown in the size of offices and suites provided to Members of Parliament?

4. Was the furnishing of the offices a part of the general contract or were such furnishings provided in a different manner under a separate contract and, if so (a) by what firm or firms (b) were tenders called in every instance and, if so, in each instance (i) by what department (ii) was the lowest bidder awarded the contract (iii) what was the amount of the contract and if there were any exceptions to the low bidder receiving the contract, what are the full details with regard to the calling of tenders, the firms submitting bids and the reason the low bidder did not receive the tender?

5. How were plans conceived for the (a) renovation (b) redecoration of the Confederation Building and, in each case, were outside consultants involved and, if so (i) what outside consultants (ii) what are the estimated fees that will be paid to said outside consultants (iii) what were the names of the firms and how were they selected?

6. (a) How were the furnishings secured for the offices in the Confederation Building and what was the cost and what firm or firms supplied the furniture and, in every instance, were tenders called and did the lowest bidder receive the contract and, if not, for what reason (b) what were the names of the firms who secured those contracts with all details in relation to the subject?

7. How many special facilities have been provided for Members of Parliament in the Confederation Building (a) what are they (b) how were they established (c) how many people will be involved in the servicing of these special facilities (d) what will be the estimated cost in salary and wages for the staff in question?

8. What individuals will be allowed to use the facilities of the cafeteria, the lounge, the barber shop, the sauna and the recreation room in the Confederation Building?

9. (a) How many mini-buses are provided for travel between the Confederation Building and the Parliament Buildings (b) what was the cost of each mini-bus (c) how many people are involved in the operation of this service (d) what will be the estimated total cost in salaries and wages for the operation of this service?

Return tabled.

APPLICATIONS UNDER CANADA MANPOWER MOBILITY PROGRAM

Question No. 2,980—Mr. Leggatt:

1. What was the number of applications received under the Canada Manpower Mobility Programme for (a) Exploratory Grants (b) Trainee Travel Grants (c) Relocations Grants in each fiscal year 1972-73 (June 1, 1972 to end) and 1973-74 to date, by province?

2. In each fiscal year and by province, how many applications for each type of grant were (a) rejected (b) accepted?

3. In each fiscal year and by province, how many recipients of Exploratory Grants found employment in the area of job opportunity explored?

4. In each fiscal year and by province, how many recipients of Trainee Travel Grants found employment in the trade for which they were trained under the travel grant?

5. In each fiscal year, how many recipients of Relocation Grants subsequently registered at Canada Manpower Centres as unemployed?

6. In each fiscal year and by province, what was the total operating cost of the Programme?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO OFFSET DECLINE IN REAL DOMESTIC PRODUCT IN THIRD QUARTER

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister concerned about the significant decline in real domestic output in the third quarter, and what remedial measures does he plan to implement?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is talking about the real domestic product. We have not had the third quarter gross figures produced or published yet. They reflect, as I indicated to the House some weeks ago, a certain turndown as a result of the rail strike and other strikes in the third quarter.

MINISTER'S INTENTION RESPECTING IMPLEMENTATION OF ECONOMIC COUNCIL RECOMMENDATIONS—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF REPORT TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): In view of the fact that our real domestic output has begun to decline while our price performance in 1973 has been quite unsatisfactory when compared with six other OECD countries, does the minister intend to implement any or all of the recommendations of the Economic Council? Further, will he agree to refer this report to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take that suggestion under advisement. I see no reason why not but, Mr. Speaker, the problem of growth at the moment is not a shortage of demand but a shortage of supply in many parts of the country, a shortage of materials and of labour, skilled and unskilled.

Mr. Hellyer: There is, as the minister knows, still a considerable unemployment problem in Canada, which makes it difficult to understand the shortage of supply, but in view of the obvious impact on taxes and inflation of the increasing cost of unemployment insurance benefits, will the minister recommend to his colleagues changes in the act which will make it easier for legitimate claimants for whom the fund was intended and much more difficult for those who abuse the fund as an inexhaustible source for rip-off?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I could not put it any more fully or better than my colleague did some days ago in the House.

POSSIBILITY OF CUT IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact government expenditures during the five years of this administration have risen by over 63 per cent, and in view of the fact the Economic Council report recommends most strongly to the minister that over the next five years government expenditure increases be held to 5 per cent or under per year, can the minister advise the House if he is considering any cut in the gross expenditures of the government?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the percentage of federal expenditures as against the gross national product has remained about constant over that five years, whereas provincial and municipal governments, in terms of their expenditures, have penetrated even farther into the gross national product.

I might point out to the hon. gentleman that he and his colleagues during the last budget debate, when they were arguing about a cash requirement of $2 billion as suggested by the government, said it should be doubled to about $4½ billion. I wonder where their change of mind comes from.

ENERGY

MEETING BY TANKERS OF STANDARDS SET AT INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE IN MOVEMENT OF OIL FROM WEST COAST TO EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment. Inasmuch as the movement of oil by tanker through the Gulf of Georgia and the Strait of Juan de Fuca from west coast ports will pose the threat of serious ecological damage if an oil spill takes place, will the minister assure the House that any oil tankers used to transport oil from a west coast port to any port on the east coast will be required at the very least to meet the standards for oil tankers agreed to at the recently concluded IMCO conference, about which the minister spoke so highly and glowingly?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to give the House that assurance. I might also point out that if oil does move from the west coast to the east coast it will be in quantities which are interim only and minute in relation to the vast quantities of oil proposed to be moved from Alaska to the Pacific northwest.

Mr. Howard: That is precisely why I asked the question. I did not want us to have a double standard, one applying to ourselves and another to somebody else.

POSSIBLE MOVEMENT OF OIL BY TANKER FROM WEST COAST TO EASTERN CANADA—PROTECTION OF CONSUMERS AGAINST PRICE GOUGING

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources a supplementary question with respect to this potential movement of oil out of west coast ports. Inquiries have been made by Gulf Oil, Shell and Golden Eagle and apparently steps are being planned by Trans Mountain Pipe Line Company to provide oil for shipment through Panama to the east coast. Will the minister establish a monitoring system to ensure that this mechanism of moving oil will not be used to gouge eastern consumers?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. gentleman there is a good probability that the price of oil delivered in this way to eastern Canada could be lower than the price they would have to pay for offshore supplies.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, are we to conclude that the minister will abandon his idea of establishing the domestic price next year based upon the importation of oil into the Montreal area?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, Sir. I would point out that at the moment the price as frozen by the government is lower than it would have been if some of the opponents of the freeze had had their way.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STOPPAGE OF WORK ON JAMES BAY POWER PROJECT FOLLOWING COURT JUDGMENT—FURTHER ASSISTANCE TO INDIANS ON APPEAL HEARING

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Did the minister take any steps to check if the works on La Grande River, at James Bay, have really been interrupted?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I did not take any steps but according to the information I received the works have now been stopped. Some people are still there on account of the great distances and the isolated site.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Has the hon. minister directly offered the Quebec government to act as a mediator in this conflict and, in the event the proceedings reach the Supreme Court, will his department continue to provide financial assistance to the Indians concerned?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the second part of the question, I must say that we are still responsible for the Indians in Canada and that we shall continue to help them vindicate their rights. As to the first part of the question, indeed I did offer my services to the Indians and the Quebec government.

ENERGY

INQUIRY AS TO STATEMENT ON GUIDELINES FOR CONSERVATION THIS WINTER

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can the minister confirm that he will be making a statement on conservation measures this week and that there will not be a delay of a week or two as has been rumoured over the weekend?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am meeting with the provincial ministers on Friday of this week.

Mr. Lawrence: That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It has everything to do with it because I think some of the important measures to be taken are within provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Lawrence: They have already started.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would think it would be desirable to have consultation with the provincial ministers before making an announcement. I would expect, therefore, it would be made a week from today.

Mr. Bell: Since two of the provinces have already gone ahead within their jurisdictions with very commendable conservation measures, and since we all know the minister's record of moving very slowly, will he give an assurance to the House that some leadership will be shown by the government on the very important conservation measures that all other countries that are affected have been taking?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I point out to the hon. gentleman that the measures that we indicated to the House some two weeks ago are those that the provinces have been following. I am sure the hon. gentleman would prefer that we have consultation with the provinces before acting in this area.

Mr. Bell: Federal jurisdiction!

OIL—SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF RESIDENT AMBASSADOR TO SAUDI ARABIA

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Having regard to the statements made by the ministers of Arab oil producing countries that the Arab oil embargo will be partially lifted for many countries in the European Economic Community, and having regard to the fact that Canada was not included in the Arab list and that our current representative in Riyadh lives in Beirut, is the Prime Minister giving consideration to naming a resident ambassador to Saudi Arabia provided he can be sure that the classified reports from that mission will be kept confidential?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

INCREASES IN NATURAL GAS PRICES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—MINISTER'S POSITION—PRIOR CONSULTATION WITH FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the increases in gas prices by Westcoast Transmission, encouraged by the British Columbia Energy Commission, of upward of 80 per cent, in this within the guidelines of the voluntary price freeze suggested by the minister some time ago?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the price freeze related to oil rather than natural gas. I have noticed that the NDP government there has increased the price by 81 per cent, and I leave that for reflection.

Mr. Ritchie: Did the government of British Columbia have any consultations with the minister and the federal government before these increases were made?

● (1420)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we have had some discussions with that government but I must confess I did not expect an 81 per cent increase.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STUDENT DEMONSTRATION AGAINST GREEK GOVERNMENT—REQUEST THAT CANADA MAKE REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING PRESERVATION OF DEMOCRACY

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister make representations to the Greek government, as a member of NATO and the United Nations, at this time when students are laying down their lives in the struggle for freedom, expressing the deep concern of the people of Canada about the preservation and recovery of democracy in Greece, the ancient home of democracy?

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take due note of the hon. member's representations.

[English]

Mr. Brewin: Again, I wish to address this question to the Prime Minister, but perhaps the parliamentary secretary will give the answer. Would the Prime Minister also make representations urging that student demonstrations in the cause of freedom not be used as an occasion of suppression and denial of human rights?

[Translation]

Mr. De Bané: I am also taking note of these representations.

FISHERIES

PROPOSED LICENSING POLICY FOR EAST COAST FISHERMEN—SOCIAL IMPLICATIONS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the serious restrictions being placed on our fishermen by the proposed licensing policy as outlined in the minister's statement of November 14 and the implications of this new policy for our fishermen, particularly in Newfoundland, is the minister prepared to say if similar restrictions are being imposed by other ICNAF countries on their fishermen?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, no new restrictions are being placed on any of our fisheries. Other countries have limited fleets, but the rule is to subsidize the industry where it shows capability of expansion.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the minister's statement in which he said that a licensing program would be imposed on the fishermen and fishermen without a licence would not be able to fish. That must mean restriction. Is the minister aware of the social implications of this policy for the province of Newfoundland in that, in addition to placing unfair restrictions on Canada as a coastal state, it would have the effect of destroying a centuries old way of life in Newfoundland?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, certain segments of the industry can be expanded very considerably to take advantage of quotas which have been negotiated internationally and where we have a prospect of making a very good return on new investment in new vessels.

PROPOSED LICENSING POLICY FOR EAST COAST FISHERMEN—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the serious economic and social implications of the minister's policy statement for the people of Newfoundland, is the minister prepared to have this matter referred to the fisheries committee so that it can serve as a vehicle to hold public hearings before this restrictive policy is implemented?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, certainly the matter can, should and will be referred to the committee. It has already been extensively discussed, however, with the industry, with the fishermen and with the provincial fisheries service and, broadly speaking, they all endorse the policy.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, as the policy is to be implemented by the first of the year and as the people of Newfoundland do not fully appreciate yet the very serious implications of the policy, will the minister postpone the implementation date so that the people of Newfoundland will have a chance to realize exactly what is happening to them?

[Mr. De Bané.]

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the registration of vessels begins on January 1. Some vessels are already registered; others should be. That is all that begins on January 1. So far as the numbers of vessels are concerned and the granting of subsidies in some areas but not in others, this is certainly a matter for further discussion.

EAST COAST—AREAS AND SPECIES INVOLVED IN BAN ON NEW FISHERMEN

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's own words that in certain areas of the continental shelf and with regard to certain species no new entrants will be permitted, no new registrations and no new vessels—I think that spells out the restrictions to which the hon. member was referring—have he and his bureaucrats decided what areas we will not be permitted to fish in terms of new entrants and the species that are on the restricted list?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the species on the restricted list were spelled out in my statement last week. Herring is one example; lobster in the Maritime provinces is another.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I want the minister to tell us which areas and which species are involved. He indicated in his statement that only in areas which are considered underexploited will new entrants be permitted. Have the minister and with his officials determined which geographic areas of the great expanse of the northwest Atlantic are underexploited and which areas are overexploited? Can he tell us if other countries have the same restrictions on involvement by their fishermen with regard to specific areas?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there are no restrictions envisaged other than with respect to the species mentioned in my statement last week such as lobster and herring.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Humbert-St. George's-St. Barbe have supplementaries. I will first recognize the hon. member for Skeena.

EFFECTS OF SALMON LICENCE LIMITATION PROGRAM IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—STEPS TO PREVENT SIMILAR RESULTS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my supplementary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Has he had an examination made of the salmon licence limitation program in effect for some years now in British Columbia to determine the injury it has caused to the salmon industry there, the fishermen in particular, and the confusion created by it? Following that examination, will the minister take whatever steps he can to prevent a similar visitation upon the people of his own province?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): If that question gets by Your Honour as being non-argumentative, I will be glad to answer it to the extent I can. I will take it as notice and try to give a more detailed reply later.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EAST COAST—REQUEST FOR EXEMPTION OF INSHORE FISHERMEN FROM NEW POLICY RESTRICTIONS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact inshore fishermen are the victims of the over exploitation the minister is endeavouring to stop, will he exempt inshore fishermen from the restrictions he is imposing?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, essentially the inshore fishermen taking groundfish are exempted from the provisions of the statement I made last week.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe will be recognized for a last supplementary and then the hon. member for Scarborough West who has a supplementary to the previous question.

Mr. Marshall: Will the minister agree and direct that the matter contained in my motion today be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry so that representatives of all parties may hear the views of Atlantic fishermen before any action is taken?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to answer questions on that subject at any time in the committee.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GREECE—SUPPRESSION OF STUDENT DEMONSTRATION—POSITION OF COUNTRY AS NATO MEMBER

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary to that of the hon. member for Greenwood to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since the armoured and military equipment used by the Greek government during the weekend to suppress mass demonstrations were supplied through NATO, will the Canadian government raise the issue of the Greek membership within NATO during the NATO defence ministers' meeting in December, in Brussels?

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): I do not think so, Mr. Speaker.

ENERGY

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF BODY TO INVESTIGATE PRICE INCREASES PROPOSED BY OIL COMPANIES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

In view of the fact that whole milk producers must submit milk price increases to a government board and that relevant public notices must be published in newspapers so that consumers may give their opinions, does the minister intend to propose similar measures for oil companies requiring them to proceed in the same way before they can increase their prices?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I did not understand to which product the hon. member referred at the beginning of his question.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): With your permission, Mr. Speaker, since it is an issue of national interest, I will repeat my question.

In view of the fact that whole milk producers must submit milk price increases to a government board and that relevant public notices must be published in newspapers so that consumers may give their opinions, does the minister intend to propose similar measures for oil companies requiring them to proceed in the same way before they can increase their prices?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having repeated his question, but I can assure him that I will not propose similar measures.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: This time I hope the minister will hear the supplementary question of the hon. member for Bellechasse.

● (1430)

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, given the explicit answer of the minister as well as the ever increasing public concern and since companies are allowed to increase their prices without any warning and without being subjected to any regulation as in other economic sectors, especially the one I referred to, can the minister say whether he intends to propose other measures to protect consumers?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the problem is as follows: in eastern Canada we depend on off-shore imports for our crude oil supplies. This is why we do not have the same control as for production cost of whole milk.

PURCHASES OF FUEL OIL ON GOVERNMENT ACCOUNT—SUGGESTED TAKING OF OPTIONS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. Can the minister explain his many references in the House to purchases of fuel oil made by the Canadian Commercial Corporation when in fact that corporation has not purchased a gallon of oil to date?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, it is quite simple, the Canadian Commercial Corporation has constantly been mentioned while I referred to the fact that my department had purchased oil. Anyhow, the government has purchased oil through the Minister of Supply and Services.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Would the minister agree that rather than purchasing the oil his department might be better advised if it were simply to take options capable of being exercised or not at a later date?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, the oil market is very tight right now. It is now important to find as much oil as possible to face the shortage that will occur in eastern Canada. If we could do it under perfect conditions, at prices which are more advantageous than those we are negotiating, we would do so. If we could simply get these options and be satisfied with them, we would. In fact, we made firm purchases and we got a part of this quantity of oil under option. So, we act according to the market possibilities which are extremely difficult.

COMMUNICATIONS

REPORTED NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN FILM BOARD AND CANADIAN NATIONAL HOTELS FOR OPERATION OF UNLICENSED PAY TELEVISION—MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Communications. Over a year ago the Canadian Radio-Television Commission issued a public statement that pay television in Canada would be carried on through federally-licensed broadcasting and receiving undertakings. It now appears that the National Film Board is negotiating with Canadian National hotels to have unlicensed pay television run by Columbia Pictures under the name of Trans-World in the hotels. I should like to know whether there has been a complete reversal of policy since a year ago.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, there was no change in policy. This agency is not under the responsibility of my department and I personally do not know which transactions may have taken place, between the National Film Board and the CN or CP hotels.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate that the minister is not responsible for the Film Board but he is certainly responsible for the CRTC. Would he look into this matter, and can he tell us today the status of the meeting of ministers of communication at the end of this month. Will it be an open meeting? Can observers be present? Has there yet been agreement upon a definite agenda?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Within the logic of the decision taken by the provincial ministers of communications to admit members of the media and newspapermen to the conference, it became imperative that observers and parliamentarians be admitted also and thus it will be a completely open conference. As to the second part of the hon. member's question, I will answer the agenda is established with as much accuracy as we could obtain through agreement with the provincial departments. I will not say to the hon. member that I am satisfied with the degree of accuracy we have reached but, apparently, it was the maximum degree of exactness we could reach by consensus with provincial ministers.

GRAIN

SUGGESTED DELIVERIES BY FARMERS ON MONTHLY BASIS—CLEARING UP OF BACKLOG

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice responsible for the Wheat Board. Now that the Wheat Board has committed itself to final payments at a certain level and since deliveries to the terminals are hopelessly behind, has the minister any plans whereby deliveries may be made on a monthly basis so that farmers will at least have an idea as to what they can deliver in the next few months?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): The Wheat Board has estimated what the final payments will be. It has not made any commitment as to the final payments, as the hon. member suggests. Delivery opportunities will be offered to farmers as fast as the grain can be moved forward. Farmers now know the extent of guaranteed minimum quota levels for the year on wheat, barley and oats and a cash advance program is available to them in case delivery opportunities do not arise as fast as they would wish.

Mr. Korchinski: Does the minister anticipate that the backlog, which amounts to something in the order of 75 million bushels, will be cleared by January or February? Does he have any deadline at all in mind for catching up?

Mr. Lang: The volumes of grain on hand at the west coast and Thunder Bay are gradually growing. The challenge is to get enough grain, particularly barley and oats, into Thunder Bay and then into eastern positions before the winter, and to find alternatives if this cannot be accomplished. The question of the backlog is, in the end, really a question of the volume of grain we can export this year after three years of exporting more than we have been producing. We shall do that once more this year but obviously a target of about 800 million bushels may be a reasonable one to achieve.

DATES OF ISSUANCE OF PRICE LISTS FOR FEED GRAINS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Can the minister tell the House when the next price list for feed grains will be issued if it has not already been issued this weekend? Will the minister ask the Wheat Board to establish dates on which these prices will be regularly stated so that the trade and the farmers may know when to expect them?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I believe the most recent prices will have been announced in Winnipeg a matter of minutes ago following the pattern established several months ago, namely, the announcement of these prices every two weeks on Monday afternoon. This is Monday, and the hon. member may expect another announcement two weeks from now.

PRICE OF FUEL OIL TO WESTERN FARMERS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question similar to the one asked by the hon. member for Bellechasse. Since the government is in the position of establishing set prices for farm produce in this area, can he also guarantee farmers that they will not be required to pay more than a set price for fuel oil in western Canada since it is produced there?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): In this case the price is not set by the government but on the basis of a policy which the government has determined, namely, that the price should be on the same basis in all parts of the country. The feed grain price is, in fact, set by the farmers according to their choice when they deliver in the off-board market.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REPORTED RESISTANCE OF SENIOR STAFF TO MOVING TO ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Would the minister put to rest the suggestion that senior staff in his department are resisting moving to the Atlantic provinces which, if correct, demonstrates serious opposition to the policy of the government and a very ill-informed view of the pleasures of living and working in the Maritimes and Newfoundland?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am more than pleased to put that to rest. As I have indicated on a couple of previous occasions, there were some minor problems with some people with regard to moving, but I do not think any of this reflects upon the Atlantic provinces in any way. I am happy to say that progress has been made and, indeed, the Assistant Deputy Minister for the Atlantic provinces has already been appointed and his name announced.

AGRICULTURE

APPLICATION OF MILK SUBSIDY TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture, in whose surreptitious and silent return to this country we rejoice openly. Can the minister indicate when the five cents a quart milk subsidy will be made applicable to Prince Edward Island, and can he reveal the causes for the inordinate delay, for which Premier Campbell blames the federal government?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, all I can report is that negotiations are still going on. It would be unparliamentary for me to say what stage the negotiations have reached at this time.

LABOUR RELATIONS

PROGRESS TOWARD SETTLEMENT OF HALIFAX AND DARTMOUTH DOCKWORKERS DISPUTE—CONTINGENCY PLAN

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. I do so with some urgency because of the developing situation in the cities of Halifax and Dartmouth as a result of the port strike. Can the minister report any progress from the mediator he kindly named last week, and at the same time can the minister indicate whether or not he is going ahead with some contingency plan to restore port activity in the event that mediation breaks down?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think it is extremely unfair to talk in terms of mediation breaking down. I would advise the hon. member that Mr. Gibbons is arriving in Halifax today and meeting with the parties. Perhaps I will be able to give the hon. member more information tomorrow after I receive a report from him later today.

TAXATION

POSSIBILITY OF REMOVAL OR REDUCTION OF FEDERAL SALES TAX ON CLOTHING AND FOOTWEAR

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Can the hon. gentleman tell the House whether he has any plans to remove or to adjust downward the federal sales tax on all clothing and footwear following the move made by the premier of Prince Edward Island who took this course of action recently?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, any plans to that effect would have to be announced, if affirmatively, in a budget. I would recall to the hon. gentleman that this government reduced the sales tax on children's clothing and footwear as long ago as last February, when it eliminated sales tax and tariffs on $1,400 million worth of consumer goods.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief supplementary. I wonder whether the minister would tell the House if he has any plans to remove or downwardly adjust any tax that the government has imposed in an attempt to give the Canadian consumer a break?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

POSITION OF MINISTER ON CONCLUSION OF ECONOMIC COUNCIL—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF CERTAIN ALLEGATIONS BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can the minister advise whether he is in agreement with the Economic Council's conclusion that unemployment insurance payments are transfer of welfare payments? In other words, unemployment insurance to the Economic Council of Canada is the same as welfare.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to have an opportunity of examining that report in detail before making a detailed reply, but I doubt very much that I would be in agreement with the terms the hon. member has used.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member on a supplementary, then the hon. member for Charlevoix, the hon. member for Assiniboia and the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the fact that the statement I have just made has some truth, in view of the inconsistency of the statements made by the minister and the department with regard to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and in view of what has been said by the hon. member for Hastings, would the minister now see to it that the whole matter of unemployment insurance is passed to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration in order that the whole question can be looked into, with a view to having the act revert to a true UIC bill and so the allegations of the hon. member for Hastings can be answered? Unless this is done we have no opportunity of questioning the minister and his departmental officials in depth.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the opportunity to discuss questions concerning the Unemployment Insurance Commission will present itself in the normal course of examination of the estimates by the committee. In the meantime I would welcome with a great deal of enthusiasm an opportunity of dealing with the rather curious, out of date and biased comments of the hon. member for Hastings.

Mr. Alexander: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton West is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I do not see the hon. member for Hastings here today, but I know he would want me on his behalf to take advantage of this situation to point out to the minister that the hon. member has had no opportunity whatsoever of probing the UIC. In view of the minister's statement in which he called the hon. member's paper, which I think was a very critical analysis, biased, the hon. member should be given every opportunity—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: —as should all hon. members, to probe these inconsistencies—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Charlevoix.

ENERGY

JUSTIFICATION FOR OIL PRICE INCREASES IN EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Following the answer he has given just now to my colleague that prices in eastern Canada were subject to increases on the international market, can the minister tell if his department did make a study on the price increase in eastern Quebec and if so, has it been really determined whether the increase reflects exactly the international increase in oil prices or if some companies do not take advantage of the opportunity to raise their prices without any valid reasons?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in the light of investigations made up to this day, we think that the companies have followed the policy on this matter but we have to point out that this policy does not apply at the retail level and that it is quite possible that retailers have individually taken advantage of the opportunity to increase their retail price.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are only a few minutes left before the oral question period ends.

[English]

The Chair will recognize first the hon. member for Assiniboia.

AGRICULTURE

EXPANSION OF MARKETING AND RESEARCH SERVICE TO CO-OPERATIVES

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the Co-operative Union of Canada, which represents millions of Canadians who belong to the co-operative movement, has asked the minister about the possibility of expanding the marketing and research that is made available to co-operatives to the point where there is at least an assistant deputy minister in charge of operations, would the minister inform the House whether this kind of action has in fact been taken?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have taken a step in that direction by appointing for the first time in the history of the Department of Agriculture people to look after co-ops in regard to research and gathering and providing information on behalf of the government. This operation has just commenced, and what the hon. member asks for may well become fact sooner than he or I think.

Mr. Knight: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a supplementary but again I point out to hon. members that there are only a few minutes left before the end of the question period.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that since 1970 there has been a massive increase in the number of upper echelon public servants in Ottawa, would the Prime Minister inform the House whether he would give consideration to moving many of these public servants and establishing a new co-operatives department which would give initiative in terms of tackling this new area of endeavour?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is a representation.

CRIMINAL CODE

ABORTION—POSSIBILITY OF AMENDMENT IN LIGHT OF DECISION IN MORGENTALER CASE

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice.

In view of the well known outcome of the proceedings against Dr. Morgentaler can the Minister of Justice inform the House whether he intends to tighten the provisions of the Criminal Code with respect to abortion?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to comment on the specific decision itself, which I understand is under appeal, but I can say that I have asked my officials to look at the question whether a reference of this issue is reasonable, and to discuss the question with the provincial authorities in view of the importance of determining the issue as quickly as possible.

● (1450)

Mr. Norval Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In light of the recent court decision it would appear we now have abortion on demand in Canada. Would the minister say whether that is government policy or, if not, is he is prepared to bring in legislation?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the expense involved in renovating, furnishing and heating the old mansion at Meach Lake for last Saturday's cabinet meeting, is it the intention of the government to turn the renovated building into a national historic site and allow it to be used as a summer residence for the leader of the NDP in return for past favours—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair thought the hon. member was promoting it as a residence for the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

INDUSTRY

PETROLEUM REFINING—MEASURES TO ASSURE SUPPLIES OF BENZINE AND OTHER PRODUCTS TO PLASTICS MANUFACTURERS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the extreme shortages being experienced by the petroleum refining industry and in view of the fact that benzine and other related products are very essential to the plastics industry, I should like to ask the minister what steps he proposes to take or has taken to make these products available to the plastic industry in Canada?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have been in consultation with the users of these products as well as the producers of these products. We are doing everything we can do to ensure that the users get the necessary supplies.

Mr. Hales: Is the minister contemplating putting on export permits or introducing a quota system?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, at the present time no, but this is under continuing review.

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF WORKERS AS WELL AS INDIANS—DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Montreal-Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The minister said earlier in reply to an answer that he was always ready to stand for the interests of the Indians. Since the decision handed down by Mr. Justice Malouf did he contact the premier of the province of Quebec to solve the conflict and vindicate the interests of either the workers or the Indians affected by that decision?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I talked to the premier of Quebec several times during the weekend. I met with his representative this morning. Friday night I met with the Indians and Eskimos in Montreal and we agreed to undertake rapid negotiations so as to meet the legitimate claims of Indians and protect the rights of workers employed in that area.

APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER FOR ONTARIO TO CANADA GRAINS COMMISSION—DUTIES, RESPONSIBILITIES AND SALARY

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Recently an assistant commissioner for Ontario was appointed to the Canadian Grains Commission. In view of the fact that the Canadian Grains Act section dealing with licensing elevators in eastern Canada has not been proclaimed to date, can the minister tell the House the specific duties and responsibilities of the Ontario assistant commissioner and whether his salary is on the same level as his four western counterparts?

Mr. Speaker: This question should be placed on the order paper. If there is urgency, it can be considered at the time of adjournment.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST THAT STEPS BE TAKEN TO END DISCRIMINATION AGAINST PERSONS SEEKING JOBS WHO HAVE RECOVERED FROM EPILEPSY

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that people who have completely recovered from epilepsy or have the malady entirely under control are still being discriminated against when applying for positions of employment, would the minister take the necessary steps to remove this stigma from all applications for employment and thus end this discriminatory practice which has played such havoc and hardship in respect of all those concerned?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member I have sympathy for the theme he is developing. I wonder whether he would be kind enough to supply me with further particulars so I can investigate.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for York East and then call orders of the day.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT'S REASONS FOR ACCEPTING CHILEAN REFUGEES WISHING TO COME TO CANADA

Mr. Ian Arrol (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns refugees from Chile. The Secretary of State for External Affairs spoke in the House last Friday of the willingness of Canada to accept Chilean refugees who wish to come to Canada. In view of the fact it is traditional for Latin-American countries themselves to accept refugees from neighbouring countries, why does the government of Canada feel it necessary to facilitate the entry into this country of these communists?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that a question asked in those terms is argument and is not acceptable. Orders of the day.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning the answers by the Minister of Fisheries to our questions regarding the licensing of fishermen and the effect it will have on Newfoundland fishermen. On November 14 the minister issued a statement which is entitled in Hansard: "Statement on Fleet Expansion in Atlantic Coast Industry, Subsidies and Licensing". The minister would have the House believe that these restrictions will not have any implications so far as the average fisherman in Newfoundland is concerned. I should like to quote, if I may, a few excerpts from the minister's statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will hear the hon. member but I hope he will indicate what the point of order is or on what he founds his alleged point of order. We should not have a debate. The hon. member, after the question period, seeks the floor for a debate. I would hope the hon. member would guide and assist the Chair on this point.

Mr. Carter: My point of order, Mr. Speaker, is that the minister in his answers has misled the House. In his statement to which I referred a moment ago he said:

> A word with respect to licensing, Mr. Speaker . . New entrants will be encouraged as long as they do not add, unnecessarily, to the over-all pressure on fish . . . all vessels skippers and operators will be licensed . . . all craft, skippers, crews and other operators which have a history in the industry will, automatically, have a right to fish . . . New vessel registrations in the groundfish fishery will be encouraged for underexploited species and areas.

In this statement the minister clearly indicated his department's intention to place restrictions on fishermen, in Newfoundland particularly, in respect of new entrants into the industry. If that is not restriction, I do not know what the word means.

Mr. Speaker: It may or may not be a restriction, but the hon. member will appreciate again that this is hardly a point of order. It is a point of debate between the member or hon. members and the minister. I suggest to hon. members with respect that we cannot have a debate under the heading of a call to orders of the day. I suggest that, with respect, to the hon. member.

Mr. Lundrigan: I rise on the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It will have to be a different point of order. I have already made my ruling that this is not a point of order but is debate. I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the rules of the House, I would suggest to all hon. members, make it necessary for hon. members to be honest in their questions and answers. In the past two weeks we have had two events happen in Canada. One was that a broadly travelled minister went across the country telling the fishermen of Canada that we would own the resources off our shelf. Subsequently we had a white paper or green paper or blue paper presented to the committee on external affairs indicating Canada's position to be taken at the Law of the Sea Conference. This indicated clearly that Canada would push for management and control of this resource.

Last Thursday the minister brought in a program which he announced in the House wherein he indicated that our fishermen in regard to certain species would have certain restrictions placed on them. Our members have no objection to certain restrictions with regard to lobsters and crabs, but he went further to refer to coastal species and areas of the northwest Atlantic where no new entrants would be encouraged. My colleague from St. John's West has just referred, as he did in questions, to the minister's statement and the minister today sat in his place and indicated that there would be no new restrictions placed on fishermen.

Your Honour, I can quote from four different places in the statement made by the minister last Thursday to indicate very clearly the extent of the restrictions that will be placed not only on every fisherman in the Atlantic region but even in terms of the further development of our smaller communities. We are very concerned about his statement in Hansard of Thursday last. It is inadequate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I say to the hon. member, as I have to the hon. member for St. John's West, that he is rising on what he calls a point of order. I suggest to him and to all hon. members that this has nothing to do with a point of order. The hon. member is arguing that the statement made by a minister is not correct. That cannot be the subject of a point of order. This is debate. The minister or another member might rise on a point of order and say he thinks the hon. member himself is wrong. Where that would lead in relation to orderly debate in the House I do not know. I really think that this matter should not be pursued by way of a point of order.

• (1500)

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to complete my point of order. I can quote four different passages in the minister's statement—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lundrigan: —indicating that he is deliberately misleading the House—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lundrigan: —and the people of my province.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member resume his seat. The hon. member is charging another hon. member with deliberately misleading the House.

Mr. Lundrigan: What else is he doing?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member kindly give the Chair a chance to express itself. The hon. member has, in other circumstances, used what I thought was language which was not parliamentary. He is again doing the same thing today. I call to his attention that he cannot tell another hon. member that he is deliberately misleading the House, whether that hon. member is a cabinet minister, a frontbencher or a backbencher. This relates to basic proprieties in the House, and I would hope that hon. members would keep that in mind in their debates. It seems to me it should be possible to have debate in the Parliament of Canada without using unparliamentary language and making charges. That is entirely wrong, and I think the hon. member will have to withdraw his remark.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: At the time to which you, Sir, referred, I indicated that the minister was telling lies, but out of respect for Your Honour and after a delay of three or four days, and with the knowledge that the matter would be handled by a committee, I backed away from that position even though the fact that I backed away from it was an admission on my part that I was not willing to uphold the truth, which is a very serious situation. The minister goes about the country telling half truths. Today he comes here and say something which is completely contradictory of the facts he placed on the record on Thursday. On Thursday he indicated a program which will have very serious implications for our people, but today he says he did not say that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lundrigan: I will not back away an inch.

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member, with great respect, that he can feel very strongly about the matter if he wishes. I know that when we have had difficulties in the past the hon. member has felt very strongly at the time and he had every reason to feel strongly, just as he has the right at this time in relation to this particular incident to feel very strongly. But that does not justify the hon. member using language and making charges which, by more than 100 years of parliamentary practice, are not accepted by all hon. members and should not be accepted by them.

That is why I suggest to the hon. member that he should again, as he did the last time, in co-operation not with the Chair but with the institution of parliament and with the House of Commons as well as with his colleagues on both sides of the House, accept these restrictions, since we are talking of restrictions, which place limitations on the language we can use. I know that the hon. member feels very strongly about this kind of debate, but it seems to me that in this instance he got carried away a little too far. It would be much easier for the House and certainly for the Chair, as well as for the orderly conduct of business, if the hon. member would indicate that he is prepared to co-operate with the Chair as he has always done in the past.

Mr. Lundrigan: Perhaps it is time in our parliamentary system—and I am no great parliamentary reformer—

An hon. Member: No, you are not.

Mr. Lundrigan: —perhaps we have reached the stage in our parliamentary history, especially since we brought in the new rules a few years ago and especially in view of the restrictions on the question period and the type of answers we are getting these days, to take a serious look at whether these ministers should be allowed, on the one hand, not to answer questions and, on the other hand, to give information which is not in accordance with the facts. Perhaps the minister could clear up the whole mess if he would stand up and admit that the answers he gave to my colleagues were not in accordance with the earlier statement he made. I am more interested in the quality of our performance as members than I am in a silly rule of 100 years ago.

Mr. Speaker: Rules, even though they are 100 years old, are not necessarily silly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: It is hon. members who elect the Speaker, and there has to be some semblance of order in any kind of public assembly. Members in any assembly get together and choose one of their members, who is elected in the same way as all of them and who represents a number of constituents. That person is selected by the House, by his colleagues and peers, to try to have the rules respected. The Chair does not make the rules.

The hon. member suggests that the rules should be changed. I see nothing wrong with an evolving, moving and progressing institution such as parliament, and it may well be that the rule to which the hon. member takes exception is wrong and should be changed. But as long as it is there I am sure the hon. member himself would expect the Chair to see that this rule is enforced. It relates only to the use of certain words and certain language which when used, I suggest, complicates the proper conduct of our business. This is why I am asking the hon. member to change the wording that he has used. This is not the end of the world. The hon. member has indicated that another member has misled the House, has given wrong information to the House. It is quite possible, according to the rules, to make that kind of charge. It is possible for a member to say of another member that he has given false information to the House, that he is wrong, that he is incorrect, indeed, that he is misleading the House. What is wrong is to charge another hon. member with deliberately misleading the House. This is a moral accusation, and I think that is why it is wrong. I doubt whether this is really what the hon. member wanted to do, and I hope he will find some way of assisting me in this respect.

Mr. Lundrigan: For the last year we have had the same circumstance occurring, and I am very serious about this. In the previous instance, regarding the minister's statement in New Brunswick when I indicated he was guilty of an offence, I backed away from that and I think I was dishonest with myself in doing so. He is guilty almost every day of telling the country half truths, and again today—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lundrigan: He must change his attitude.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member says he is not backing away from anything. Does he expect the Chair to back away from the enforcement of rules? It has to be one or the other. I have to ask the hon. member to make it possible for the Speaker to do his work in the House of Commons. It must be one or the other.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Other rules are respected. As the hon. member knows, I am pleading with him to make it possible for the proceedings of the House to be conducted in an orderly and civilized manner. I think hon. members have the responsibility, and I cannot think of a single member who does not have that responsibility to facilitate the orderly conduct of business. The Chair simply asks an hon. member, instead of accusing another hon. member of deliberately misleading the House, to change only one word to facilitate the task of the House and allow us to go on with our business. It seems to me that that is not asking so much. I take into account the fact that the hon. member feels very strongly about this matter. As he looks around him he sees that members sympathize with his position, and I would hope he would want to have sympathy for the position of the Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I wonder perhaps if we could allow a little time for this matter to cool off and to give us a chance to examine the record and what the minister did say.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not according to the practice of the House. It is the fact that the words are used, not what was said or what was done, that is relevant at this time. It is simply that a charge is made by a member and that words are used that ought not to be used.

I think it would be difficult, indeed unacceptable, to suggest that the Chair and other hon. members be given an opportunity to look at the record.

• (1510)

Reference has been made to another incident. In that incident there were considerable difficulties in that there was noise in the House. No one knew exactly who said what, and I felt to be fair to hon. members that I should be given an opportunity to look at the record, which in fact made it even more difficult the next day to make a ruling. That is why, in such circumstances, I think there is really nothing to be gained by delaying the difficulty with which we are faced.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Speaker: I plead with the hon. member in that if he does not withdraw I will have the very unpleasant task of naming him. I have been Speaker of this House for eight years, and I have never had to go to this extreme. I think it really hurts the House of Commons, and hurts our image when we are placed in that position. This is why I think that out of respect for the institution, for the House itself and for all hon. members, individual members have a duty and an obligation to co-operate with the Chair, and make it at least half easy for the Chair to make a ruling.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise only for a moment to express what I believe is the wish of the entire House that the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) respond to your request. I appeal to him that what is at issue is not the difference of opinion between himself and the minister, not the question of what he thinks about the way that minister performs, or his own view of what he said, but the only issue at this moment is the authority of the Chair which speaks for the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Chair has said that a statement that a minister deliberately sought to mislead the House should be withdrawn. I think the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate will rise higher in our estimation if he will bring this incident to a close by a simple withdrawal.

Mr. Lundrigan: I am not unaware of the interest of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in the good conduct of the House, and I am not unaware of that good conduct myself. But, Your Honour, we have got responsibilities over and above certain things which are not pleasant, and this is not pleasant. We have had occasions here when, with respect to the minister, there were presentations to the House which were misleading. Again, we have seen it today—a clear cut example of it.

I think myself that if we want to improve the quality of the performances of the members of the cabinet we have to make some serious representations through Your Honour to have some of our rules modified. I, personally, from now on, if it takes me the rest of my political career, which might last just one minute, will try to see to it that this minister will hold to some semblance of the truth in any presentation to the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Again the hon. member, in his last words, has not indicated very much that he is prepared to assist the House. I say it is not a question of assisting the Chair but of assisting the House and hon. members, because this is a matter which affects all members. I would again ask him to reflect, to act wisely, and prudently, and kindly, and with charity towards all members and towards the Chair in saying, in admitting or in accepting that he has transgressed the rule in the words he has used, that in fact he did suggest that another member deliberately misled the House. I think if he said simply that the minister or the member has misled the House, that would be most acceptable, and then we could go on to other matters.

Mr. Lundrigan: Your Honour, my House leader has just passed me a note which reminds me of one very unpleasant event in our party today, which perhaps places us in a position of some responsibility. I am going to say now that tomorrow I am going to say the minister has misled the House, and if the minister is prepared tomorrow to stand in his place and correct the record, which will be obvious to him then, having had that 24 hour period, Your Honour will not be forced to make a decision.

Mr. Speaker: I am prepared to make a decision now. It is not tomorrow that I want to make a decision.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member says that he is prepared to say today only that, in his view, a statement made by another member is misleading—if I understand correctly, these are the words which the hon. member would like to use—then I think a ruling should be made today.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Speaker: I think I have been as helpful as the Chair can be, and I have allowed as much time as possible to make sure I was not acting under pressure, without complete equanimity, and with every possible ounce of charity in my heart. That is why I am again appealing to the hon. member to share the charity that I have to the House. Knowing the particular regard that I have for the hon. member, I would hope that that perhaps might help him to help me.

Mr. Lundrigan: I have already indicated that I am quite willing today to indicate to the House that the minister has made a statement which is misleading, and is not in accordance with the statement he made on Thursday. I am hoping tomorrow he will not enjoy the unfortunate spectacle of having Your Honour placed in a very difficult position. I don't enjoy this any more than Your Honour does. It is not the kind of position that leads to great popularity, political or otherwise, and I hope that tomorrow the minister will stand in his place—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Tomorrow will be another problem, another question. What I have suggested to the hon. member is that for today in any event he adopt a certain course. He says he said it. I did not hear that very clearly. If he says now that he is not saying the minister has deliberately misled the House, then certainly I will accept his statement. As I said, tomorrow is another day, and the day after tomorrow is again another day. There may be other difficulties. Maybe this will all be cleared up in other days. But for today there has to be a clear understanding that the hon. member has withdrawn his statement.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I make one more brief effort. In view of the disclosure of the note from the House leader of the Official Opposition to the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate, I wonder if he, the House leader for the Progressive Conservatives, would join with me and others in requesting the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate to co-operate with the Chair.

Mr. Lundrigan: This is a form of bloody persecution. This is a form of persecution, a form of blackmail and persecution. This member stands in his place! I have already indicated to Your Honour that I am quite willing to stand by the remarks I have made respecting the minister's statement. I have seen members stand in their places—I could point them out in dozens—and make statements along the lines that I made today without nearly all the fuss and cut up in this place today. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), flexing his muscles about his knowledge of parliamentary procedure, is placing other members in a difficult position. I only hope he would keep his nose clean—keep his nose out of this entirely.

I have indicated that I am willing to say that I have made a statement that the minister has made a statement which is misleading the House. I have said that two or three times. I hope that he will come in here tomorrow, stand in his place and correct his statement. If not I will place him in a most embarrassing position.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, since I have been mentioned as opposition House leader I think I should say, first of all, that we have a different idea of individuality in our party than some other members of the House have, but it is not my intention to raise any partisanship in this debate. I simply feel that there is now a way out to have this matter set over until tomorrow. Three times the hon. member has used the word "mislead" but not the word or phrase "deliberately," which I think is the word that would be bothersome to the Chair. So if there could be an acceptance of only the use of the word "misleading" we have got over the impasse for the time being at least.

● (1520)

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is not here to make complications for hon. members. I have asked the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) to change his remarks. Now, whether he has to the extent that the Chair ought to be satisfied, and whether he has changed it to the extent that the other hon. member of parliament who is involved ought to be satisfied—he has not indicated whether he is or not and that, in itself, does not facilitate the task of the Chair. The hon. member says that he would like the matter left over until tomorrow so he can look at the record. Certainly, the Chair cannot make a ruling on that basis. The hon. member said that, for the moment, what he says is that the minister has misled the House. It may be that the Chair, exercising extreme leniency, would say that that constitutes a withdrawal. I would accept the hon. member's statement only in this way, that I would myself consider it as a withdrawal of the words which he had said and these words are that another member has deliberately misled the House.

He says now that he has said three times what he is saying now, that another member has misled the House. Perhaps I should be prepared to accept these words. I am not sure whether other hon. members standing in my place would not be prepared to do that. The situation is not easy. My responsibility is to ensure that the House will continue to function with equanimity and with some measure of efficiency, so perhaps I should be prepared to accept the hon. member's half-hearted withdrawal. I wonder whether the Chair should be placed in the position where I have to extract the full pound of flesh or whether I should be satisfied with something less than that.

The hon. member cannot agree that he has made the situation easy by his half withdrawal of the offending words. The hon. member having done this, perhaps I should be prepared to see what the hon. member will want to do tomorrow and accept for today the hon. member's half withdrawal.

Orders of the day.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House resumed, from Thursday, November 15, consideration of Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, at ten o'clock on last Thursday night we were discussing the merits of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). I heartily support the amendment for the reasons I detailed at that time.

I should like to point out that, with development and investment which affects the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, it is very important that the residents of the area have a say in what is to be allowed. Natural resources are vested in the provinces and under their provincial control; in the territories, they are under the control of the federal government so that decisions affecting the resources could be made without the people of the territories knowing anything about them. This is a very important matter in the Yukon and that portion of the Northwest Territories that is close to Alaska, because of the development following the discoveries made at Prudhoe Bay.

The Yukon and the Northwest Territories will be affected in years to come by what happens to the oil and gas in Alaska and the Mackenzie delta; presumably it will eventually come south. It has already been decided that an oil pipeline will run from Prudhoe Bay to Valdez, in spite of the discussion about the possibility of a Mackenzie valley pipeline. Should the pipeline through the Mackenzie valley come to pass, the question of Indian rights will be an important consideration. There has already been one very important court decision about the ownership of land in similar circumstances, the ecological effects of development and so on. It is important that the native people in the affected area have an input in all decisions. The United States has already decided upon the Alaskan oil pipeline. Had the alternative of the Mackenzie valley pipeline been decided upon, it would have meant a great deal of drilling and development work as much of the oil lies close to where the pipeline would go.

El Paso Natural Gas hopes to take gas from Prudhoe Bay to Valdez through a pipeline paralleling the Alaskan oil pipeline. In the Yukon and the Northwest Territories there are proven reserves of approximately seven trillion cubic feet, and it is estimated that there is another 100 trillion cubic feet in the Mackenzie valley and the Beaufort sea, while the North Slope has proven gas reserves of 26 trillion cubic feet and estimated reserves of up to 400 trillion cubic feet. This is more than double the potential reserves of the lower 48 states.

Similarly in the Canadian north, our proven and estimated reserves are double the reserves present in the northern frontier areas. Reserves of 7 trillion cubic feet are not enough to support a pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley to Canadian markets, and North Slope gas will be necessary if that pipeline is to be feasible. So it is most important, Mr. Speaker, that the people who live in those areas and who are represented by the territorial councils, should have some say about the possibility of a pipeline. If this is to come about we can estimate the cost at $5 billion. Most of this money will have to come from the great financial institutions to the south, and of course this investment will be reviewed by a board of civil servants based in Ottawa. It is easy to see, Mr. Speaker, that the decisions made could be detrimental to the people in the areas affected and to the development of those areas. I think it is important for those areas to which I have referred to be allowed to decide whether or not there is to be investment in those areas. Certainly, in northern Canada more than in southern Canada, it is likely that foreign investment will be necessary, as in the southern part of the country resources can be more easily developed without foreign participation.

It seems likely that El Paso will be required to move North Slope gas through Alaska. That is perhaps another reason why supporters of the Mackenzie Valley pipeline are not likely to see a pipeline built in the immediate future. It is a fact that many Canadians do not see the advantage of combining North Slope and Delta gas in one system. I say this because many feel that Canadian Delta gas should be left in the ground for some time into the future. I think this position is quite unrealistic. I think the development of the remote delta areas would bring important effects for those who live in the Yukon as well as in the Mackenzie Valley. Such development would lead to increased economic activity, that is, to greater development, more jobs and so on. Unless something like this is done, the development of these other areas may be seriously compromised.

To repeat, I support this amendment. I think it is necessary. I think amendments which give the provinces greater input in the decision-making process ought to be pushed strongly. The same argument applies even more strongly to the territories. They are a long way from Ottawa. The federal government owns the resources in the ground where the development will take place. I hope the government will see fit to accept the amendment at the proper time.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words about the subamendment proposed by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) to Motion No. 2, which stands in my name on behalf of my party. I say at the outset, as others have indicated, that the subamendment has merit. I support it wholeheartedly.

As I said earlier when I directed a question to the hon. member proposing the subamendment, it would be useful to have on record the definition of territory and territorial council, as those terms apply to this legislation. The relevant definition is set out in section 3.(1) of the Interpretation Act, which reads:

> Every provision of this Act extends and applies, unless a contrary intention appears, to every enactment, whether enacted before or after the commencement of this Act.

The definition section of the Interpretation Act says:

> 'province' means a province of Canada, and includes the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories;

Having said that, I feel that I was perhaps derelict in not talking over that interpretation in the first place with the hon. member for Timiskaming when he introduced his subamendment.

As the hon. member who has just spoken said clearly, the territories need as much protection, as the provinces, if not more. The mineral wealth in provinces is under provincial jurisdiction, whereas the mineral wealth in the territories at present is under the jurisdiction and control of the federal government. The people in the Yukon and Northwest Territories do not have the protection of provincial legislatures. Their governing counsels do not have the vested interest in their resources which provinces have in theirs.

Basically, the hon. member for Timiskaming seems to be showing concern for the rights of the territories vis-à-vis the provinces. He is concerned about the status of the territories as compared with the status of the provinces, in much the same way as we are concerned about the status of the provinces, as compared with the powers and prerogatives of the federal government. It is wrong to suggest, as the minister has by implication, that in this amendment we are discussing the veto power of the provinces, a veto power over decisions made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie). I do not think the minister meant to convey that impression so forcefully; certainly, it is not in accordance with the facts.

No one will argue that the bill, as drawn at present, gives the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce the ultimate power in deciding whether any foreign investment is of significant benefit for this nation. That is as it should be. Many members are concerned about the minister's curious reluctance to take into account the concerns of the provinces in this area and their very real desire to contribute to the various factors which the minister must consider in arriving at a decision. This is rather strange.

I do not wish to digress from the amendment or the general subject matter of the debate, but it is interesting to note that this government has adopted a somewhat inflexible attitude to what I consider to be a reasonable proposition, which is this. Before the government decides anything about the control of foreign investment, the provinces must be given maximum opportunities for consultation. Let me illustrate.

The United Kingdom, generally regarded as a more centralized state than ours, geographically and otherwise, with longer traditions in considering movements encouraging home rule for its various regions, implicit therein, has been considering some questions. For example, there is a major move to give greater powers to the various regions of the United Kingdom. I refer hon. members of the House to the royal commission studying these questions headed by Lord Kilbrandon. That commission rejected the case for granting complete sovereignty to an independent Scotland and Wales, on grounds that the majority simply did not want it. The U.K. Government is actively studying the problem. It is apparent that there is a move afoot in the United Kingdom to recognize some of the ancient prerogatives as well as current ambitions of territories and regions such as Scotland, Wales and England itself, which all are encompassed by the United Kingdom.

Let me read briefly from a recent news report carried in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald:

> The report said dissatisfaction in Scotland is largely based on economic considerations. In Wales discontent is linked with a desire to preserve the Welsh language and culture.
> Eleven members signed the report. The other two members produced a minority report calling for a wider interpretation of the commission's term of reference.
> Of the 11 who signed the report, a majority favored a plan of devolution which would transfer to directly-elected Scottish and Welsh assemblies powers over local government, town and country planning, education and other services.

That shows that the United Kingdom is prepared to make greater concessions to certain regions than it has heretofore. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce ought to consider that fact on continuing condition terms.

It is obvious that the representations we made to the minister in committee have been considered. However, I do not think we persuaded him to be more flexible in allowing the provinces more input into his decisions. It is clear that the minister is continuing to be completely inflexible in this regard.

We welcome this subamendment moved by the hon. member for Timiskaming. He wishes to include the Northwest Territories and the Yukon in any consultative input which might be granted to the provinces. That the hon. member wishes to extend to the territories this kind of right indicates that he and his colleagues of the NDP realize that the members of my party are not trying to hamstring the minister or the government in the advancement of legitimate Canadian nationalism. We are simply trying to give those parts of the country which are poorest by virtue of their economic circumstances as much influence as other parts of Canada might have. We want to give the people of those areas a meaningful opportunity to influence the minister.

● (1540)

In the absence of meaningful guidelines to foreign industry, I again plead with the minister to reconsider his attitude and to take note of the fact that apparently some members of the New Democratic Party are changing their minds about the effects of these amendments. They realize these amendments are not necessarily going to impede the efficient administration of this particular bill. Rather, they will simply make it a bit more open in so far as the provinces are concerned, and a bit more courtesy will be shown them with regard to what is happening. The provinces will be provided with information which I am sure they will regard as confidential, and in no way will the basic efforts the minister is attempting to make be impeded.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate on Bill C-132, I wish to make my position quite clear at the outset. While I am prepared to accept some of the amendments, I am not prepared to accept the bill as it now stands. I consider it to be totally unrealistic and unacceptable to the disadvantaged areas of this country. For that reason, I am not prepared to give it my support.

I have taken that position because I have a very good idea of the importance of foreign capital to certain regions of Canada. In particular, it is important to the province I know best, Newfoundland. I wish to make it perfectly clear also that we do not enjoy being dependent on foreign countries for our investment capital, but what choice have we had since becoming a province of this country in 1949?

Prior to confederation, there were three opposing forces in Newfoundland. One group supported the retention of the commission form of government that was imposed upon us by the British government in 1933. Another group supported a return of responsible government as it existed prior to 1933. The third group supported our becoming a province of Canada. A fourth group emerged some time later and advocated that we enter into economic union with the United States. I shall have more to say about that group later. The outcome of the ensuing referendum that was to decide our future is obvious because we are now the tenth province of Canada. There is very little to be gained or any justification for deliberating on past events or speculating on what could have been. However, there is a lesson to be learned from our past experiences as a province of Canada, and from re-assessing some of the shortcomings of confederation as they relate to our newest province.

In a great many respects, confederation has been very good for our people but, unfortunately, in certain respects it has been a dismal failure. I am afraid the bill we are now debating will add to our problems and further accentuate the shortcomings of confederation as far as Newfoundland is concerned. For almost 25 years, we have been victims of the upper Canadian attitudes as expressed in their unwillingness to invest their capital outside of the golden triangle, or as my colleague, the member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) put it, their unwillingness to invest off the 401 highway.

This attitude on the part of the upper Canadian investors is reflected in this and previous governments with perhaps one exception, that is the administration of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). His heart was in the right place. He recognized the problems of the so-called have-not regions of this country. What is more important, he was prepared to do something about it, and would have, had he not trod on the corns of central Canada and posed a threat to their comfortable monopolistic position.

For an example, let us examine the 1973-74 estimates of the Department of Public Works. The total expenditure by that department in the Atlantic area under all headings is $27,776,000. In Newfoundland, it is $7,749,000. The proposed expenditure by the same department for the same period in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec is close to $300 million. This government is spending more money on cafeteria facilities, parking garages and air conditioning improvements in these two provinces than on harbour and wharf facilities in Newfoundland. One has to remember that the economy of Newfoundland depends to a large extent on the fisheries which, of course, depends on the provision of adequate fishing facilities such as breakwaters, wharves and good harbour facilities, all of which are the responsibility of the federal government. While I am not opposed to proper air conditioning, parking or cafeteria facilities for our public servants, I am opposed to their receiving priority consideration when they are secondary needs. I will, however, leave it to Your Honour's personal conclusion as to their relative importance to the well being of this country.

As a further illustration of this attitude, let us take a look at Canadian National, or perhaps I should say the Department of Transport because CN is a creature of the federal government and is answerable to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). Their misplaced policies are probably the biggest single threat to confederation. While they moan and groan about incurring deficits in maintaining essential services such as rail passenger services in the poorer provinces, they are willing to spend $21 million on a useless tower in Toronto which will provide a variety of services, including a bigger and more sophisticated communications system in an area where there is already accessibility to 10 or 11 TV channels. At the same time, there are thousands of people living in the remote parts of this country, including Newfoundland, where TV, telephone or indeed any means of communication continues to be another unfulfilled dream. Is it any wonder that we view with mistrust and suspicion any attempt on the part of this government to take complete control of our destinies.

Earlier in my speech I referred to the political situation in Newfoundland just prior to confederation. I mentioned the various groups that were vying for power, including a group of people, many of whom have since distinguished themselves in business and Canadian politics. These people advocated that Newfoundland enter into a form of economic union with the United States.

On March 28, 1948, they launched their party and their leader gave a very stirring speech on the Newfoundland radio stations. Let me read into the record, a portion of the speech made in Newfoundland on that date:

> The goal of full employment for Newfoundlanders thus ensuring permanent prosperity for Newfoundland can only be obtained through economic union with the United States. There is no other course that can solve Newfoundland's problems. . . .
> In the event of economic union with the United States millions of dollars of American capital will flow into this country to develop our natural resources. Look to our great possession Labrador. Look to its vast timber and mineral wealth. Think what it would mean to this country to have this priceless territory developed. American money can do that, American capital must do that if we are to have a better way of life.

● (1550)

I have put those words on record for a very good and obvious reason. The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Jamieson) was obviously having a great deal of fun when he spoke on this bill last week. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) whom he followed in the debate, was, he said, singing "O Canada" to the tune of "God Bless America". In the years preceding Newfoundland's entry into confederation, the hon. minister was so busy extolling the virtues of Uncle Sam and the generosity of U.S. capital that he didn't have time even to learn the tune of "O Canada". The hon. member has proven beyond a doubt his ability to run with the hare and hunt with the hounds, because the words I have just quoted were written by him in 1948 in his role as chief propagandist and co-leader of the movement to have Newfoundland enter into an economic union with the United States. I am sure he has many memories, some of which must be embarrassing, of his involvement in that movement and the slogan he himself coined as its battle cry— "For a brighter tomorrow, vote economic union with the U.S. today".

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Carter: Let us, for a moment, consider how other undeveloped areas thrive as compared to those closer to home. Though I do not wish to downgrade Canada's investment in other countries, I cannot help but think it is ironic that Canada continues to invest hundreds of millions of dollars in underdeveloped countries and, at the same time, justifies withholding assistance from the financially insecure provinces in its own country. International development is an infinitely complex field; it compounds the subtleties of social development and international relations with the difficulties of cross-cultural communication but its potential for good is incalculable. For example, corporations such as CIDA continue to grow steadily. Total funds made available by parliament in 1971-72 rose to $431 million an increase of almost $48 million compared with the preceding year.

Canadian business is a vital partner in the economic and social progress of developing countries. Under CIDA administration services and expertise may be found in more than 80 countries. Grants and long-term loans provided through CIDA offer a source of financing for Canadian goods and services. By helping low-income countries achieve self-sustaining development, the Corporation assists in the expansion of world trade and increases the prospects for continuing exports of competitive Canadian products. I hate to say it, Mr. Speaker, but sometimes I wish Newfoundland were not part of Canada but, rather, a foreign country. Then, perhaps, we might at long last receive some type of assistance from this government.

From what I have said, Mr. Speaker, it is quite evident that Newfoundland should not have to go begging to foreign countries when we have such a prosperous country closer to home. But it seems that Newfoundland has no other choice than to do just that—to go abroad for assistance. Until I am convinced that the attitude of Canadian investors is changing or that the federal government is willing to pay more than mere lip service to the issue of regional disparity, I am not prepared to support any attempt on the part of the government or the financiers of Upper Canada to cut off our only real source of investment capital.

A lot of mistakes have been made in Newfoundland in recent years, but I contend that these mistakes and the losses arising therefrom are a direct result of the unwillingness of the Canadian government and private investors to recognize our need for assistance in developing our resources and diversifying our economy. As a province we have never pursued a policy of attracting foreign capital per se. Rather, our objective has always been simply to attract to the province sufficient development capital to enable us to attain our economic goals. As Canadians, we would prefer that this development capital be Canadian. Indeed, it has been most disenchanting to find, as Canada's newest province, that sufficient development funds have not been forthcoming from within our own country. Accordingly, as long as this situation continues, we have no choice but to welcome foreign investment under whatever terms and conditions are available. To demonstrate that sufficient development capital has not been forthcoming from Canada, one has only to examine the financing of recent major development projects in Newfoundland.

By now, everyone has heard of the Come-By-Chance oil refinery. The total investment of that refinery was in the area of $160 million, of which the government of Newfoundland contributed $30 million, and foreign investment $130 million. Nowhere do we see Canada putting up any money. Again, the second oil refinery proposed at Come-By-Chance will cost $308 million of which $78,500,000 will come from Newfoundland and $230 million from foreign investment. Again, we see no contribution, loan or grant made by Canada. A third example is the liner board mill in Stephenville. The total investment in this operation came to $160 million, of which $89 million came from outside this country. The province invested $73 million. Consider, in the light of these and similar figures, the role which foreign investment has played in the economic development of our province. One can appreciate our concern at the imposition of any measure which restricts our access to such capital or reduces the likelihood of its continued availability.

One important factor which I feel is often overlooked is that the amount of development capital available in Canada is limited. I am given to understand that two projects alone, the James Bay hydro project—a venture which most of Canada and all of Quebec does not want, but will no doubt get anyway—and the Alaska pipeline project, which stands to benefit the United States, would more than exhaust the supply of domestic capital. When we consider that these are only two of many large developments to be undertaken in Canada in the near future, the obvious question to be asked before a province such as Newfoundland receives any development funds is this: What are the advantages of supplying capital to an area where the financial risk is already high?

This, then, is the shape of the Newfoundland economy. To say the least, it is not a very pleasing picture. However, it should now be clear why it would be difficult for any Newfoundlander to vote for the bill before us. Past experience has taught us that if we are to survive we cannot depend on Canadian investors and that we must, therefore, depend upon outsiders.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take you even further away from the "Golden Triangle" to the extreme western and northern parts of our country as I make some comments on the bill and on the amendments before us.

As a small businessman and practical politician, I should like to pose this question: Why are we concerned about foreign investment? Why do we encounter a problem in this area? The answer, to my mind, having grown up in the business world and having established several business ventures, is that there simply is not enough capital in Canada to do the things that are necessary if we are to develop our potential and realise the dreams that Canadians cherish. One reason might be that there is no capital in Canada to do these things. The other reason might be that the people who control money in Canada are not willing to invest it in those areas where it does the most good. They have no faith either in the area or in the Canadian population.

It seems to me that the government can play a bigger role by telling banking and financial institutions in Canada that if they want to operate under a federal charter they should provide a service to this country. By this I mean to the whole country, not just to Toronto and Montreal, the "Golden Triangle" and highway 401. I am serious about this, Mr. Speaker. I am bothered by the fact that we have had a bill before us for the last two weeks which provides that some agency will direct foreign investment in Canada. A lot of work has been done by western Canadians to develop a dialogue with the Pacific rim countries, and they have also been expressing their anxieties at resource conferences that have been held. Some of this work, which has been done by sincere and dedicated Canadians, has been paying off in recent years, which might be one of the reasons we are so concerned today about foreign investment in Canada.

The government has realized there is a problem, and it has expressed itself by creating financial institutions like the IDB, the Farm Credit Corporation and so on. I, personally, have established several small business ventures, and on three occasions have gone to the IDB to apply for a loan for ventures in northwestern Canada. I knew that my ideas were sound, and indeed these ventures have all paid off and are still thriving today. But on each occasion that I applied for a loan I was told, first of all, to go to my chartered bank. I went to my bank, which is the Toronto-Dominion Bank. I do not think it should be called the Toronto-Dominion Bank; it should be the Toronto Bank because it certainly has no meaningful plans for investing its money in the Dominion of Canada. I have gone to other banks and blackmailed them into helping me out with my business ideas, because invariably it takes 8, 10 or 12 months to receive an answer from the IDB.

Here am I, Mr. Speaker, a young, vigorous man who has had only 15 productive years and has no time to waste. I have already stuck out my neck and started what I thought was another really good venture. Having on three occasions applied to the IDB, I was able to tell them after some lapse of time that I had generated enough profit from my ventures that I did not need their money any more. In the last instance, the IDB wanted to sue me for the expense they had undergone in processing my loan, and this 13 months after I had applied. They wanted me to pay their solicitor's costs; they had tried to find out the colour of my grandmother's eyes and God knows what else before they could help me out with a little business venture. This is the sort of thing new development is up against, Mr. Speaker.

It is no wonder that western Canada, mid-Canada and northern Canada are in the state they are today. The Farm Credit Corporations makes loans of up to $100,000 to farmers who want to stay on the land and who want to encourage their children to stay on the land. I have a thick file concerning farmers who have sons who have expressed a willingness to stay on the land. But we do not have any faith in our farming community, their ability to clear the land with the modern means that are available and to do something worth while. This is why we are afraid of foreign investment. Foreigners who have over-developed and over-populated their own country look to Canada with feelings of envy, and also with a certain amount of disgust because of the way we have managed our affairs. Governments in this country—and I mean provincial as well as federal—have no faith in our people, and this is why we have a foreign investment problem.

People from the Pacific rim countries are looking to Canada today to provide some of the commodities, such as energy and lately food, which are in short supply in the world today. They are travelling around northern and western Canada assessing the potentials that exist. Certainly, they can see the potential much better than the federal government, and they are willing to lend us money to develop this potential. All they want in return is a share of the market.

It seems to me that all we need to do is to control the amount of investment that we allow to be put into each individual venture. We should also have some control over where the profits from such ventures are reinvested. Certainly, this would make sense to me. But quite frankly, I do not have faith in this government, because it has not demonstrated to me that if it were given the power of veto any significant benefit from foreign investment would occur. These profits might well be spread along highway 401 again, or used in the "golden triangle", or in the building of more concrete monsters in our large cities, while the government continues to forget that there is a back country on which Canada has to build its future. If the government had not failed to provide access roads to the resources of our vast undeveloped regions, more Canadians would have been interested in developing these resources. I suggest we are over-playing this foreign investment business, just as sometimes we overplay all this business about the ecology and the environment.

This reminds me of the story of the gardener who was visited by his priest. He was very diligently hoeing the potatoes and tending the rhubarb, and the priest, who had not seen the farmer in church for a long time, said to him: "Isn't it wonderful what one can do in co-ordination with the Lord? This wonderful garden is here and you and the Lord did it all". So the farmer said to the priest: "Yes, isn't it wonderful, but you should have seen the mess this bloody place was in when the Lord had to look after it himself"!

In British Columbia there are vast timber resources that are over-mature. Thousands of square miles have been burnt up because there were no access roads to enable us to fight fires started by lightning. The timber is over-mature and will never be any good to anyone. We are harvesting only about 40 per cent of the timber resources of British Columbia; the rest is rotting away simply because Canadians do not have the faith to invest in their own country. Some of my colleagues sometimes ask for controls on lumber exports to the United States. They want tariffs imposed and more stringent controls. I say that is ridiculous. What we need is money to develop our vast timber resources that we are leaving to spoil.

I should like, for the benefit of the minister, to quote a statement made in response to an invitation by the Edmonton Journal to political and business leaders throughout Canada. I see the minister is not listening, but I should like to put on the record a statement made by one of his colleagues, which is the reason I refer to it.

Mr. Hellyer: We are also afraid that the minister will not be listening once this bill is passed.

Mr. Oberle: That is right. The statement was made by Izzy Asper in the province of Manitoba. He said:

> Manitoba and other western provinces have lived under a system of economic colonialism to eastern Canada for over 100 years and this cannot be allowed to continue.

Then he went on to say this:

● (1610)

> Eastern Canada is an industrial community and has demanded, and obtained, various policies of economic protection from the federal government, from protective tariffs to restricted foreign investment. These policies are very restrictive to the development of the Western economy which is natural-resource-based and depends on world markets, free trade and large amounts of capital investment, the latter of which is largely foreign in nature due to the reluctance of the Eastern financial centres to actively promote Western investment.

During the Western resource conference, the premiers of the provinces told the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) what they thought. All the premiers of the western provinces are Canadian nationalists. What they have said is: "Do not give us any more of your handouts, any more of your financial institutions to help development in the west; just leave us alone, let us incorporate and establish some of our own financial institutions so that we can play the role western Canada should play in Canadian unity and Canadian nationalism". But the message has reached deaf ears. There has been no response from this government. Sure, they were told they could own 10 per cent of a bank, but where on earth can one establish that kind of institution with that kind of faith in the future of Canada, particularly the future of our northern territories.

When I speak about the lack of faith we have in our population it reminds me of a little story I should like to tell, although I am straying a little from the subject we are discussing. I know a man named Dan Reagan from Prince George, British Columbia. He came to me with an idea he had. It is not an entirely new idea but he has perfected it to some extent. He says he has invented a new type of energy. Scientists have played with this idea for hundreds of years, but he now has a little generator operating at Prince George, British Columbia, right here in Canada. It sits on a table. I watched it operate. All it takes to light a series of light bulbs at the end of this little generator is a continuous flow of sea water. What he has done is not new. Hydrogen can be extracted from any kind of water. He controls the molecular movement in sea water or any other water. He arrests the energy generated. He advances the movement of the molecules and arrests and harnesses the energy generated by this movement. I was terribly excited about this and said that it was a big deal. I told him I wished to take it to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) in Ottawa and tell our people here that this was an idea which might become something.

I advised the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources about this idea. I told him that Dan Reagan is a man of moderate means who has an investment of a lifetime in this little generator. I told the minister I would like to have Dan Reagan travel to Ottawa and bring his generator here. For this purpose I asked the Minister if he would advance $500 to bring Dan Reagan down here so that we could set up the little generator somewhere in his office and he could see for himself how it works. The minister asked me to leave the idea with him and said that he would get back to me on the matter. One of his underlings came back to me and told me they had checked it out with some of their scientists who said it was balderdash and could not be done. It cannot be done because it is not in the books. It cannot be in the books, otherwise we would not be using other types of energy. If the scientists had said it could be done, they would have had to admit to being stupid, otherwise why would they not have done it. So, the minister is not about to give me $500 to bring Dan Reagan to Ottawa.

However, Dan Reagan will soon be on his way to Japan. He will have the patent papers in his brief case. He has the invention registered with the patent office. This cost him $300. This was not federal money or provincial money; it was his own money and the money of a few other idiots like myself who backed him. The federal government was gracious enough to lock his invention in the safe. Today, he has his generator locked up in a little trunk and he will have an all-expenses paid trip to Japan. The Japanese are interested in this invention. They should be, as should many other people. But our government is not interested in it. We have no faith in people.

When we recall other inventors, we realize that in their time they were all considered to be idiots. I know the Japanese and the Americans will come up with another source of energy, and we will take the back seat as we always do. This is an example of the lack of faith in our own country to which I referred, and the lack of faith in our own people. I am very much afraid that those people who have directed the investments of our financial institutions throughout this land over the last 100 years will now again be called upon to tell us where in Canada the need is for investment, and where it will be of the most significant benefit to Canadians. I am very much concerned that the answer will be that it be not in mid-Canada, northern or western Canada but where the financial institutions like to invest their money, that is closest to their front door so they do not have to worry about all the other things which are happening.

Canadian banks have never made a bad loan in Canada in 100 years. When I talk about this I get angry, and I often say if we could sell our Canadian banks to the Americans it would take us less than five years to buy back our country because of the way these banking institutions operate. The money would be made available to Canadians to live their dream and do the things they cannot do because they are hampered by these idiotic policies. The government should say to these institutions that if they wish to operate under federal charter they must make loans available where they are really needed. I hope the minister will realize that we from western Canada are very unhappy, that we must be assured we will have an opportunity to have our say and to demonstrate that investment made in western, mid-and northern Canada would be of significant benefit in respect of the future of our nation. Unless the minister gets this message, I expect there will be all kinds of problems for my colleagues in northern and western Canada.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the first question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is on the amendment of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) to motion No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay).

All those in favour of the amendment please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

• (1620)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed amendment stands deferred.

Is the House ready for the question on motion No. 3?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question on motion No. 2 will be put after the vote is recorded on the amendment.

All those in favour of the said motion No. 3 will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75 the recorded division on the proposed motion No. 3 stands deferred.

Is the House ready for the question on motion No. 4?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75 the recorded division on the proposed motion No. 4 stands deferred.

The question is on motion No. 5. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75 the recorded division on motion No. 5 stands deferred.

The question is on motion No. 6. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75 the recorded division on motion No. 6 stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to the consideration of motions Nos. 7 and 8 which have been grouped together to facilitate debate and which will be voted upon separately. The question is on motion No. 7.

Mr. Nystrom: I rise on a point of order. I notified Mr. Speaker when he was in the Chair that I wished to withdraw motion No. 7.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House give unanimous consent to the withdrawal of motion No. 7?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): We will proceed to the consideration of motion No. 8.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, as a result of discussions and further reflection, I feel that this particular amendment is redundant to some extent. It is almost the same in substance as amendment No. 6, and I would like to have consent at this time to withdraw it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree to the request of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) and give unanimous consent to the withdrawal of motion No. 8?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is suggested that motions Nos. 9 and 10 be grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on motion No. 9 would also dispose of motion No. 10. I will put the question on motion No. 9. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the Chair also put the question on motion No. 10?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I shall do so.

The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) moves motions Nos. 9 and 10 as follows:

Foreign Investment Review Act

That Bill C-132, An Act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be amended in subclause 24(1) by striking out "five thousand" in line 14 at page 36 and substituting the following:

"one hundred thousand".

That Bill C-132, An Act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be amended in subclause 24(2) by striking out "ten thousand dollars or imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months" on lines 25 and 26 at page 36 and substituting the following:

"one hundred thousand dollars or imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year".

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Motions Nos. 9 and 10 are basically very simple. Their purpose is just to increase the fines if someone knowingly breaks the law. Motion No. 9, the first motion, is to increase the fine. As the law is now written, a person who is guilty of failing to give notice on a proposed investment is liable to a fine not exceeding $5,000. It seems to me that a fine of such low magnitude is quite an insult, rather a laugh. The motion I am proposing is that the fine be increased to $100,000, which I think is more in keeping with what it should be if someone breaks the law as enacted by Bill C-132. If someone makes an investment and takes over a Canadian corporation without adhering to the regulations as outlined in the bill, and if he is the president of a huge corporation such as General Motors, a fine of only $5,000, in my view, makes a mockery of this law. It seems to me that if we do have a fine of that sort written into the law, we are accepting what amounts to a double standard, one for the rich and one for the poor. Even though it may appear to be a small thing, for some people in our society it makes some parts of the law, and some parts of the activities of this House a laughing matter.

The second amendment I am moving is similar to the first one. For failure to comply with the regulations there is a jail term which does not exceed six months. My amendment is to change the six months to one year. Again I think it makes the penalties a bit more realistic. In some cases six months may not be long enough. I believe it would be much more reflective of the opinion of hon. members if we changed this to one year. Basically, that is the purpose of the motions, to make the fines more realistic, increasing them from a maximum of $5,000 to a maximum of $100,000 and increasing the maximum jail term from six months to one year. I appeal to all hon. members to support them. They are realistic, and will make the bill more realistic. Symbolically it is important, when we talk about justice in our country, that it be seen that justice apply equally to ordinary citizens and to those who have a lot of money.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say one or two things with respect to the two amendments before us. I appreciate the concern of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) that there be sufficient sanctions in this bill to ensure compliance with respect to the provisions of the bill as enacted in accordance with the wishes of the people of Canada, expressed through their representative in parliament. But having said this, I suggest there are built-in sanctions in the bill which, I would argue, have the effect of providing sufficient inducements to compliance.

On the surface the amendments would make the penalties more severe in order to further the intentions of the bill. There would be increased fines for failure to notify the minister of a reviewable transaction. However, the real remedies in the bill are to be found in clauses 19 and 20. I would refer hon. members to those clauses, starting on page 31.

Clause 19 enables the minister to apply for a court order enjoining an investor who has failed to notify concerning a reviewable acquisition, or the setting up of a new business, from taking any particular actions which would prejudice the courts from acting under clause 20. Clause 20 permits the courts, on application from the minister, to make such orders as may be required to render an investment nugatory. This can include the courts ordering the doing of the following things—and these are the particular penalties which I think will ensure compliance with the bill's provisions, and which will have a greater effect than the penalties the hon. member is proposing: First, the revocation or suspension of voting rights attached to the shares of a corporation; second, the disposition by any person of any shares of a corporation acquired by him; and, third, the disposition by suspension of any property acquired by him that is or was used in carrying on a business. Failure to comply with an order from the courts would, in turn, allow the courts to punish for contempt of court.

I submit that these built-in sanctions, as well as those in clause 24(1) and (2) which the hon. member seeks to amend, are sufficient. For these reasons I submit that the amendments are not necessary to toughen the penalties.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is on motion No. 9. All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded divisions on motions Nos. 9 and 10 stand deferred. The House will now proceed to the consideration of motion No. 11 in the name of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay).

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova) moved:

That Bill C-132, An Act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be amended in Clause 27 by deleting all the words after the word "offence" in line 20 at page 37.

He said: Mr. Speaker, very briefly this is a housekeeping or draftsmanship type of amendment. Perhaps it is not all that significant. What it proposes to do is take away a redundant sort of situation where if a person, I suggest, clearly contravenes the legislation, the question should not arise as to whether or not a corporation with which he had some prior involvement was or was not prosecuted. As worded, the bill simply adds an unnecessary burden on the prosecution. I do not see the virtue of having this additional wording in there after the second mention of "offence." It seems to me there is really not much point in belabouring what seems to be the obvious. The draftsman, in putting this bill together, added an unnecessary factor. Surely, if a person contravenes this legislation it is not necessary to take into account this additional factor that is tacked on somewhat as an afterthought.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I would agree with the hon. member that this is a technical question, but the advice that I have received on this technical matter is that there is an important distinction in the paragraph as it is presently worded, and I would just like to review that with hon. members.

● (1640)

The words "whether or not the corporation has been prosecuted or convicted therefor", which are the words which the hon. member would delete in the last sentence of clause 27, are included in order to give notice that the government reserves the right to decide whether it would be worth while to prosecute the corporation for the offence, and that our right of action respecting the corporation is a matter completely separate and apart from our right of action against the officers, directors and agents of such corporation.

Mr. Speaker, I think that those are important distinctions, and I think they are not redundant nor irrelevant to the operation of the bill and this particular section.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question on motion No. 11?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed, please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion No. 11 (Mr. MacKay) negatived on division.

Foreign Investment Review Act

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Chair will now proceed to the consideration of motion No. 12, again appearing in the name of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay).

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova) moved:

That Bill C-132, an act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be amended in clause 30 by striking out the words "as soon as possible" in lines 4 and 5 at page 38 and substituting therefor the following:

"within sixty days".

He said: Mr. Speaker, the effect of this amendment is to indicate that we in our party are not satisfied with the rather imprecise terminology of this particular clause. I do not know for example how one defines "as soon as possible". I do not know how one distinguishes that with any certainty in a court of law and, perhaps more important, I am not sure how one would define it with any certainty in the court of parliament.

I have reason to believe that there is a certain sympathy for this on the other side, and that the minister is prepared to consider inserting some finite time rather than leaving it on the basis of "as soon as possible", thus leaving the phrase open to the interpretation, "when it is convenient" or "when we get around to it we will do something". I do not think that is a very good situation and such a possibility should not be left in the statutes of Canada. I do not think that provision should appear in a piece of legislation which, to some extent, is a landmark in legislation pertaining to the control of foreign investment.

I do not like to take an unreasonable or narrow interpretation of what definite, finite period should be put in there. It has been suggested that because of administrative complexities 60 days is not reasonable and, of course, I have to be guided to a large extent by the experience of the minister and those who have had administrative experience. However, Mr. Speaker, I still feel that there should be some period of time specified that will guarantee that parliament and the people of Canada will get an answer and a course of action.

One of my colleagues intends to speak to this proposition and possibly propose an amendment which will provide for a period of time in excess of that envisaged in motion No. 12. On that basis, I do not feel that I should take up the time of the House, except to reiterate that some finite period of time should be inserted to substitute for this vague term "as soon as possible".

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose to move an amendment to the amendment in the hope of meeting at least part way the reservations that the government exhibits. I am not, perhaps, as impressed as my colleague with the government contention that it could not meet the 60 day deadline. I suppose that to ask this government to do anything within 60 days is just about hopeless, and I guess this is one reason why this bill gives us much cause for concern.

Unfortunately, a very lax practice has developed over the years on the part of the government. On numerous occasions it has failed to file annual reports within the statutory limits set down by parliament, and it has become increasingly careless in meeting the deadlines set by parliament. One can only assume that this is a mark of general incompetence and laxness on the part of civil servants and government officials involved, or that it is in some cases a deliberate attempt to withhold from the Canadian people important information until that information is no longer current or newsworthy. For whatever reason, it seems to be unacceptable.

Personally, I am very reluctant to move any change to the 60 day proposal, but in deference to the admitted willingness of the minister and his officials, we are going to attempt a compromise. We hope this will meet with the general approval of the House.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the amendment be amended by striking out the words "within sixty days" and substituting the words "within six months" therefor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I hesitate to accept the amendment to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer). At first glance, the subamendment is a substantive motion in itself, as it may include a completely new proposal which would need a notice. Unless hon. members want to argue the point to help convince the Chair otherwise, I would have very much difficulty in accepting the amendment in its present form.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I would certainly argue that it is not substantive in the sense you have suggested. First of all, the government proposes that a report be filed; that is within the context of the bill as presented to the House. My hon. friend suggested an amendment that, rather than give the government open season and allow the government to take all the time it wished for filing a report and making information available to the House and to the country, some specific time limit be applied, this for the obvious reason that the regional wording was far too indefinite and consequently really put no pressure on the government whatsoever in order to get about the necessary work of preparing a report to parliament and to the Canadian people. So, the subamendment is related specifically to the government's original proposal.

It would be difficult to argue that the amendment was substantive, in the normal sense of that word. Consequently, it would be equally difficult to argue that my amendment to the amendment is substantive. It is relevant to this particular clause of the bill being considered, and is relevant in the sense that it offers what the government might consider as a more reasonable period of time in order to prepare and print the documents necessary to be placed before the House. To suggest that substituting six months for 60 days, in a clause which already requires the government to prepare and table at its convenience a report, is substantive would give the word "substantive" a meaning which it does not ordinarily have.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the point of procedure, it seems to me that one of the most standard and defensible kinds of amendment is the kind that proposes a change in a quantity already set out in a motion. We already have a motion which says that the time limit for filing a report shall be 60 days. The proposed amendment would extend that to six months. It seems to me that this kind of amendment presents the least difficulty.

Your Honour raised the question of this involving a wholly new idea. I submit that there is already in the bill a provision for the tabling of reports. I draw to your attention that nothing in the governor general's recommendation attached to this bill touches this aspect of the matter at all.

A while ago we had before us another instance where there was a motion to amend the bill by making reference to the provinces. A colleague of mine added to the ten provinces the two territories. That was allowed to be in order. As the House has already accepted as in order the motion on the order paper providing for a 60-day period, it seems to me that changing the time from 60 days to six months is hardly a new idea. So far as the government is concerned, the situation is not new. I hope Your Honour will find the amendment in order.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, when one follows the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), one is like a banjo player tuning up before a philharmonic orchestra. I wish to refer to something the hon. member said previously in this debate, when he supported the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). At that time he referred to Standing Order 75(8). In my humble opinion, the type of amendment proposed by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) is supplementary to the amendment standing in my name. With deference, I cannot see where there is a new idea in the amendment. It just extends the idea which had been originally proposed in the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Again, I say to hon. members that I sympathize very much with their opinions. Of course, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Trinity is relevant to the bill and relevant to the motion in front of the House. The weakness of his amendment is this: he seeks to substitute one amendment with a different amendment. The original motion consists of ten lines and the amendment itself is encompassed in the three words on the last line "within sixty days". If the amendment were covering a wider scope of the bill, in which was included an amendment also changing the delays with respect to reporting, then that would amend the motion with an amendment without destroying it. In this case the hon. member for Trinity to my mind is definitely making a completely new proposal to the House.

The House has before it at this time a motion which proposes a delay of 60 days. The hon. member wants, by an amendment, to eliminate that delay and replace it with another. His amendment asks for a six month delay.

I am wondering what is the purpose of having to give notice. In this case the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) went to the trouble of giving the Chair notice. He proposed that the delay be changed. In one simple amendment he proposed a definite figure. I do not think we can interpret the rules with regard to the amending of motions in a way—is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you would permit a question, even if it is rhetorical. I wonder if Your Honour is taking cognizance of the fact that the amendment is not proposing a delay in some action but is, rather, simply extending the time within which something can be done. It seems to me that forcing something to be done within a certain time is quite different from permitting more time for that something to be done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Perhaps I did not make myself clear. My basic point did not have to do with delay. The basic point is that we are, with this amendment, making a substitution for all the basic words of the motion. We are replacing them completely with new words which mean that a longer time will be permitted. I must say that, according to my interpretation of the rules, in particular of the rule of notice which applies to the report stage of the bill, I am sure that, procedurally, this kind of amendment cannot be proposed at this time. For these reasons it is not possible for me to accept the amendment couched in the present wording.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, if I may rise on the same question, I wonder if, instead of changing days to months, we might just change the number of days in the amendment. Let us put in 180 days instead of 60 days, six months merely being the rounded out figure. I propose this for Your Honour's consideration.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I think that would get us over the difficulty which Your Honour sees. That way we should not change the entire amendment, but merely substitute one number in the amendment with another. I would be quite prepared, in the circumstances, to change my amendment, so that it would read, "That the amendment be amended by striking out the word 60 in the last line and by substituting 180 therefor."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I still find it difficult to accept the change. This, of course, would have to be done by unanimous consent. I think, without setting any precedent, that the Chair should have time to look into the matter. There have been occasions where, by consent or at least by agreement an amendment was voted on although it was felt by the Chair it did not really correspond to our practices and procedure. With these restrictions, I am prepared to let the House vote on it. Although I have a strong reservation as to this type of amendment, I will put it to the House. The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) moves:

That the motion be amended by striking out the word "sixty" and substituting the words "one hundred and eighty".

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment on the amendment now that it has been ruled in order. Quite frankly, there were discussions among members of various parties with respect to the wording of the clause, particularly the words "as soon as possible".

Hon. members from both sides of the House know I was prepared to accept some substitution of those words because I, too, agreed it would be very useful to have a finite time. In other words, the will of parliament will be better preserved if we insist that the report be submitted within a specific period of time.

I was concerned about the original amendment "within sixty days". Clearly, that is an impracticable objective, laudable as it may be in terms of wanting to get a full report from the new agency or commissioner. In my mind, it is simply a question of what is a practical solution in the sense of a compromise between "as soon as possible" on the one hand, which provides maximum administrative flexibility and, on the other hand, the eagerness on the part of parliamentarians to receive the account of the foreign investment review agency. I do not think there is any magic figure. I think the technique that has been adopted in the past is good. That is to say the legislation respecting the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce requires that the minister shall, on or before the 31st day of January next following the end of each fiscal year or, if parliament is not then sitting on any of the first five days next thereafter that parliament is sitting, submit to parliament a report showing the operations of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce for that fiscal year.

That language is in the bill. My department operates under that legislation as do the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Department of Supply and Services. In effect, that particular legislation provides 10 months for the departments to submit their annual reports to parliament. The subamendment to the amendment, which would require that the report be made in 180 days, shortens that period of time from 10 months to six months.

I am prepared to accept it because it provides for a finite period. It may be on the tight side, but that will be the problem of a new agency to organize its affairs to provide a report to parliament. I accept the amendment because we on this side are anxious to have the foreign investment review agency play a very important part in the future development of this country. For that reason, I think it important that this report be placed before parliament as soon as it is administratively possible to do so.

I cannot help but observe that in moving the subamendment, the hon. member is not joined by all members on his side in wishing to have a report placed before parliament on such an urgent basis. From listening to some, it certainly appears they would prefer that this bill not be passed. However, I recognize there are a number of members on the other side who wish to see this act passed and see it work. For that reason, I am prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, as some members know, I and others were concerned about having a finite time limit on when a report must be submitted to parliament. The original wording in clause 30, as soon as possible, left it wide open. For that reason, I and others in this party wanted a definite time limit.

Like other members, I do not know the magic number. However we are quite prepared to support the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) setting a six month time limit on when the minister must report every year on the progress of the legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question? The question is on the subamendment (Mr. Hellyer).

Amendment (Mr. Hellyer) agreed to.

Motion No. 12 (Mr. MacKay) agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville) moved:

That Bill C-132, An Act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be amended in Sub-clause 31(1) by changing the period to a comma on line 15 at page 38 and adding the following:

"such a day to be no later than 60 days after Royal Assent."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment is similar in intent to the amendment we dealt with a few minutes ago in that it attempts to set a time limit. Clause 31 deals with the coming into force of the legislation presently before us. At present, the date is left open to be fixed later by proclamation. I am concerned lest the minister, for one reason or another, should choose not to have part of the act proclaimed for several months or even for several years. Or, should part of the act be proclaimed almost immediately, proclamation of the other part might be delayed for a year or two. I wanted to set a time limit, and my amendment therefore says that the date of proclamation shall be not later than 60 days after Royal Assent.

After consulting with a number of people I realise, now, that 60 days is probably too short a period; is would not give the minister sufficient time in which to draft regulations, hire staff, and so on. So, in a few moments one of my hon. friends will be moving a sub amendment extending that 60 days to six months or so. I think this would allow the minister a reasonable time in which to take all the action necessary.

I think it is important that we in this House should decide when the act is to come into force, not the minister. In my view, this is basic to the democratic process. In this way we can ensure that the act comes into force in the next six months. In the absence of such a provision, a whole series of hypothetical situations—and some might not be hypothetical—could conceivably delay the implementation of this measure. During that period all kinds of take overs and expansion into unrelated areas might take place.

So, I ask all hon. members to look seriously at clause 31 and try to reach some agreement on a definite time limitation in relation to the date on which this measure comes into force. As I said when I spoke briefly on the last amendment, I am not sure as to the precise terms of such a limitation but I strongly believe some date should be fixed so that the business community, those who are classified as non-eligible persons and the public generally, may know where they stand. This is only fair to everyone concerned. It is only democratic, and I trust the proposal I am making expresses the will of the House.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend has indicated, there has been discussion among the parties with respect to the terms of this amendment. As hon. members have just heard, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has put down an amendment requiring proclamation to be made within 60 days after Royal Assent. At present, the date is left wide open. I understand the minister feels that 60 days is too short a period. We are therefore, prepared to lengthen that period and we hope the alternative suggestion we make will be acceptable to the government and to the other parties in the House. Surely, July 1, 1974, is not an unreasonable date. Assuming that the bill is passed by the end of this month, this would give the government not just 180 days but between six months and seven months to get ready to proclaim the legislation. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That Motion No. 13 be amended by deleting therefrom the words "60 days after Royal Assent" and substituting the words "July 1, 1974".

At the moment, the amendment reads: "such a date to be no later than 60 days after Royal Assent". As amended, it would read: "such a date to be no later than July 1, 1974". I trust that this revision, or compromise, will be acceptable to the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It is acceptable to the Chair, anyway, from a procedural point of view.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I should like to identify myself with those who desire to see this legislation in operation as soon as possible, and in such a way as to ensure its effectiveness.

Consultation has taken place with respect to the time necessary to bring in the necessary regulations, and recruit the staff required. Account must also be taken of the time required for the passage of the bill through the other place.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't worry about the other place.

Mr. Gillespie: For that reason, I should like to suggest to the hon. member that rather than July 1, which is a symbolic date, rather an important date, another way might be chosen; it might be possible to get the act proclaimed before the date the hon. member has in mind. I wonder whether "180 days after Royal Assent" might not meet his point while yet providing for the contingencies he has mentioned. I put this by way of a question to the hon. member who has moved the sub-amendment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We may well be talking about precisely the same length of time. If this bill is delayed in the other place, so that it does not get by until some time in December, 180 days would bring us to the middle of June. If that proposition is more acceptable to the minister than the one I proposed I have no objection to asking the House to consent to my motion being changed so as to read:

That Motion No. 13 be amended by deleting therefrom the words "60 days after Royal Assent" and substituting therefor the words "180 days after Royal Assent".

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I, personally, believe it is much better to set a definite date for the coming into force of that part of the bill which relates to investment than to leave the date entirely open as is presently the case.

The reasons are obvious. There are too many areas of uncertainty at the present time as far as the business world is concerned. The mere passage of the bill will open up many areas of uncertainty until such time as guidelines have been posted by the minister and test cases have been presented to the agency and the Governor in Council has ruled on them. Uncertainty will exist until a body of law is established that will give business and individuals in Canada some appreciation of exactly what this bill means and how it is going to be interpreted. To have an additional area of uncertainty as to when new investment will be covered by the bill is, I think, just one more grey area that would cause a good deal of concern. I, personally, think it is a good thing to eliminate this uncertainty by proposing a time limit, as is the case in the subamendment now before us.

It is obvious that the 60 days referred to in the original amendment was inadequate. Indeed, the hon. member who moved the amendment realized that himself. Having talked to others, he came to the conclusion that this period was quite impractical from the standpoint of administration. He realizes, as do the rest of us, that 60 days will go by before the minister even begins to put the wheels in motion. Indeed, at the end of 60 days he will be lucky to have his stationery printed and to have a few desks and other office appurtenances in place. So to expect anything more than what is basically pro forma in the first 60 days is unreasonable.

To suggest that we bring into force the second part of the act before the first part has been implemented and before guidelines have been posted would have created, if I may say so, chaos on a scale unknown probably even in the present circumstances, which is saying something, Mr. Speaker. This is why the amendment as originally framed would have had, I think, a chaotic effect. It would have produced a situation that would have been quite unacceptable and which would probably have detracted from the implementation of the bill. Rather than making it possible to move into this area smoothly and firmly, to establish precedents and a body of law which would make it possible for the minister and his officials to work efficiently and effectively to achieve the purposes set out in the bill, a great area of uncertainty would have been created which, as I say, would have prevented us from accomplishing what we want this legislation to accomplish. Therefore, we appreciate the fact that something is going to be proposed of a finite nature, which is comprehensible and understandable, and yet at the same time will give the minister a chance to give the first part of the act a reasonable shakedown cruise before the implementation of part two.

I should like to make this further appeal to the members of the NDP, who have demonstrated their sincerity in this area, to do the same thing with in regard to one of the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). These hon. gentlemen represent a party that has three provincial governments in this country. Those provincial governments, as other provincial governments, are concerned about the problem of communications that exists between the federal and provincial governments. And their concern is well founded, Mr. Speaker.

The object of the exercise is to make this bill work in such a way that we can provide alternative investment capital necessary to develop all parts of Canada. In order to do this we must have communications of a sensitive yet instant kind, a kind that has not been forthcoming in this country for quite a while. We will require the kind of communications that are just the opposite of the sort we have had recently—the confrontation type of politics we have experienced between federal and provincial governments, particularly in regard to energy matters.

If the screening agency is to be effective and we are to use the mechanism that is set up to encourage Canadians to invest more fully in their own resource and industrial development, then it is absolutely imperative that from the very outset—not at some subsequent time but at the very outset—the lines of communication between the minister, his agency and the provinces of this country are kept open at all times. In other words, we must establish a hot line between the minister, his agency and each of the ten provinces, and indeed the territories as well. We should remember that they, too, are very directly concerned. Of all the areas of this country, there is probably no area that has more potential for development and is more concerned about obtaining adequate amounts of capital to finance that development than the two territories in the north.

Nevertheless, we do have this haunting fear regarding the lack of a time limit within which the minister must bring in his annual report. It is easy to see that wide latitude should be given. At the same time, unless there is some necessity to do something, the propensity is to find an excuse for not doing it. We now have a situation where the minister must file a report within a certain period of time. He has agreed this is a good provision and that there is pressure on him to comply. However, we also think there should be equal pressure on the minister to notify at once provinces that are affected significantly by any proposed takeover, in the first instance under the first part of the act, and then later on once the whole act has been proclaimed. What greater certainty could there be, Mr. Speaker, than having the minister and his agency required by law to consult the provinces by giving notice the instant they are advised of a particular situation coming within the ambit of the bill? We feel that this requirement is cardinal. We want a good bill, a bill that would be acceptable to all people across this country.

One could not help but be impressed this afternoon by the eloquence of those who spoke about the feeling that exists in the eastern and western regions in this country for some guarantee that the federal government will be sensitive to their real needs. Equally, one could not help but be impressed by the fact that the large amount of investment that has taken place in Newfoundland since Confederation has for the most part been from without Canada. This is not because that province would not have preferred to have Canadian investment and Canadian ownership and control, but when faced with the opportunity, Canadian entrepreneurs and financial institutions were not able to come through, and did not come through, with the necessary investment capital.

Perhaps there is a matter of insight involved in respect of those of us in central Canada who feel very strongly that we must come to grips with this problem, who feel very strongly that too much of our industry is owned outside of Canada, who feel very strongly that the trend in the future and immediately is toward greater participation in the development of our own industries and resources, and who feel very strongly that the moment of decision has come. We must also understand that people in other parts of the country feel equally strongly that their points of view be taken into account.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The minister seeks the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order because it seems to me the hon. member has wandered off the subject of the amendment before us concerning the length of time for the proclamation of part I of the bill. He seemed to be speaking to amendment No. 14 proposed by his party which would provide a veto power to the provinces over the operation of the act. Perhaps he should reserve his comments until we reach that point.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, every time the minister speaks he makes me more uneasy. He demonstrates, in his impatience, that lack of sensitivity which is precisely what some of my colleagues fear most. He would seem to believe that all others, including all provinces in the east and the west, should be seen and not heard. It is precisely because we are now coming to grips with the implementation of part II of the bill at a specific time, which is good, which gives a definiteness to the bill which was previously lacking, that it is important once again to revert to the question of how the minister will ensure that the provinces will know what investments will be made, rather than having it left to the haphazard notification methods which might be employed by industry or by the press from time to time. It is a question which is fundamental to the whole bill, but specifically to part II and the date of implementation of the legislation.

I must admit that the more I listen to members of parliament from the Atlantic provinces, from Newfoundland, from Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, and from other provinces as well, not just Alberta but also Saskatchewan which had very real reservations about the channels of communication, and also Manitoba and British Columbia, the more I feel that those of us in central Canada must be more sensitive than we have ever been to their point of view. It is difficult, without listening very closely and very carefully to what is said by the representatives of those parts of our country, to appreciate that they feel very differently in some respects from those of us in the central part of Canada. I think they have stated the case very clearly and very eloquently. All they really ask is that there be provincial participation, not provincial veto by any stretch of the imagination. The minister knows as well as any hon. member that the provincial veto cannot be given without in fact making the bill inoperative.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Hellyer: Certainly.

Mr. Gillespie: I should like to preface my question by reminding the hon. member that the fourteenth amendment, in the name of the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) reads:

> provided always that nothing in this act shall apply in any province until the minister shall have received the consent of that province to such application.

I suggest to the hon. member that there is only one interpretation which could be given to that particular amendment. Would he not agree with me that if that amendment were to carry, it would give any province concerned a veto power?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I would say—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The minister, a few minutes ago, rose on a point of order and suggested that the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) was speaking to amendment No. 14 which was not before the House at the time. Now he comes along with a question related directly to that amendment. I do not think this can be accepted.

The Chair has endeavoured to be lenient and allowed the hon. member for Trinity to generally speak of consultation in regard to the bill. Perhaps the Chair has given more leeway than it should. I believe the Chair has been lenient in respect of quite a bit of the debate. But a question directly related to an amendment which is not before the House, and concerning which the Speaker has already expressed some doubt, should not be accepted at this time.

Mr. Hellyer: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker. First of all, may I say your generosity is appreciated. I shall be more than happy to answer the minister's question when we reach that stage in our proceedings. I wish to make it very clear that the members of this party do not support provincial veto. The members of this party support provincial participation in the sense that provincial points of view are taken into account before the governor in council makes a decision. What we are really asking is that there be channels of communication which are so fool-proof that we do not find ourselves in the position where a decision has been made before consultation has begun; in other words, so that there is not a sense of confrontation and the inevitable breakdown of good relations which could occur under those circumstances. It is for this reason we would hope the minister and his supporters would reflect on their earlier opposition to giving notice to those provinces significantly affected.

The minister made some rather feeble suggestion that he thought this necessitated informing all the provinces in every case. I do not think that can be substantiated for one moment. The only suggestion was that those provinces which beyond question would be significantly affected must, of necessity, be advised at the outset so they will have the time to consider the matter, the time to make their presentation, the time to have their experts consider the evidence and the time to do the economic and other studies necessary in order to determine whether or not they want to support the particular application. That is what is being asked. Is that unreasonable?

I turn my attention to the members of the NDP, through you Mr. Speaker, and ask them if they do not believe in their hearts that the provinces represented by NDP governments, as well as other provinces, would feel that the very least that could be done in so far as participation is concerned is that the courtesy of instant notification be extended. Is that reasonable? This involves merely the courtesy of being informed of what is going on at the outset, rather than after the decision has been taken or is about to be taken; in other words, when it is a fait accompli.

I am pleased to have had this opportunity to say I think these two amendments will greatly strengthen this bill and that the bill was lacking in these two respects in particular. First, there must be an assurance that the provinces will be notified that they are involved and have an opportunity to do their own research, their own studies and their own thinking before being faced with an off-the-cuff decision without adequate time for reflection and study. Second is the determination of a specific date for the implementation of the second half of the legislation so that the absence of definiteness will not permit the evasion of the act and will not leave in limbo that great uncertainty which would otherwise be the case.

In closing, I would urge once again my friends on opposite sides of the House, on the government side and on the NDP side, to consider the advisability of making this an even better bill—I say "a better bill" because there are still some weaknesses in it—by the adoption of these two amendments which in our opinion would strengthen the bill for all concerned.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I address myself to the amendment concerning the limitation on proclamation of the legislation. I am a little confused at the moment as to whether we are talking about 180 days or July 1, and I am grateful that the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) should have come forward in this way with a date. I have been looking at the second subclause of this clause and find there is an open-ended time. In my ignorance, I am a little confused and I would be grateful for the comments of other hon. members, and particularly of the minister, as to whether this is an oversight in bringing into effect this legislation as it would affect new businesses in Canada; because the first subclause deals with what we commonly call takeovers, and the third large area of activity which concerns us all is not dealt with in the bill at all, namely, the expansion of existing businesses which are foreign-financed.

However, leaving that third section aside, I am concerned about when that portion of the legislation which relates to new businesses will be brought into effect. The wording has been turned into some sort of gobbledygook which defeats me. I understand it to mean simply that that portion cannot be brought into effect before the one which affects takeovers. But when will it be brought into effect? We know the record of the government in other matters. We were dealing with it in regard to filing reports, and we secured the unanimous consent of the House for an amendment requiring the agency to table a report within 180 days. But in view of the record of this government for putting things off I think that in subclause 2 we should have some assurance that if they are in earnest about this bill, they would be prepared to consent to a specific time limit for the coming into force of this legislation.

I am prepared to concede that this was simply a drafting error; but even this stretches my credulity to some extent because this is not the first bill of this sort that has been brought before us. Surely, with the drafting skills at the command of the government, they should not allow these oversights to occur in legislation that is brought before us. Therefore, I would be very pleased to hear from the minister or from other members of the House as to whether I am misinterpreting this clause. I believe we must have a time limit in clause 31(1) and that the same is required in clause 31(2).

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) is very interesting. Like the previous one, it proposes to substitute a finite time for a very indefinite state so far as the original legislative attempt is concerned. I think that most hon. members on reflection will feel this is the type of amendment that should be supported and, as the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) just said, one wonders at the drafting skill that brings to this House legislation worded in the way it is.

I think the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville has expressed in his amendment a real concern that no doubt has crossed the minds of many hon. members, I suppose mostly opposition members, that this government may be a little less than sincere and frank in its desire to implement the various provisions of this foreign investment review act. No doubt it is a perfectly legitimate action on the part of the government to attempt to get the very maximum political mileage out of this step to finally control foreign investment in Canada, and none of us can argue that they are not entitled to it. However, they have had an opportunity to do this for a long time. They could have taken this step in the last session of parliament, but for one reason or another it was not done. Now, having had the initiative to bring the bill before the House, one would think they would want to see the proposals implemented as soon as possible.

Certainly there is a great deal of room for speculation in this regard. Long before I became a member of the House I can remember reading in various publications about acts that were brought in which were ostensibly for the good of Canada and were to have a considerable impact on our nation, such as for example the Canada Water Act which was brought in with great fanfare. I believe it was discussed for a considerable length of time in this august chamber, and finally passed with unanimous consent. However, in my humble opinion this piece of legislation has not been very efficiently promoted or fostered by this government. There is also the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act which, when it was passed by the House, afforded a great deal of comfort, in theory, at least, to Atlantic Canada.

What I am wondering—and so is, I am sure, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville; perhaps this is part of the motivation for his amendment, apart from the excellent procedural point of instituting a finite time—is whether he is also of the opinion that this government might very well like to have the name but not the game. I am wondering whether he does not think the government needs to have some guarantee forced upon it so that it would in fact bring in the relevant provisions. I would suggest, again without being too cynical, that the government may be less than happy to act as expeditiously as some members of the opposition would like it to act.

Of course, the minister can make the point, and with some justification, that so far as provincial consultation and notice are concerned, he needs the consent of cabinet and that, even if he so wished, he will not be able to act as some sort of oriental despot who can do what he wishes under this legislation. There are certain political realities with which he must conform.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

However, I wish to take a brief moment to make a final plea to the minister, as did the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) and the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, and remind him that we have very real concerns in our various parts of Canada, including the territories. We hope that in considering the various ramifications of this type of legislation, the government will realize that we must have some sort of provincial consultation on the one hand and substitution of alternate forms of capitalization on the other. If some sort of attempt is not made by the government to understand this, then I fail to see how this legislation will receive the necessary acceptance and co-operation.

An objection has been made by some of my colleagues that the notice requirements, as defined by the Interpretation Act, would provide too much of an administrative burden for the government in supplying the various provincial administrations with the kind of information it would feel obliged to provide because of the definition of what "notice" may be. This is not entirely a valid argument. Surely there is some scope left to the government, and the minister does not necessarily have to follow in every literal respect the definition of "notice." Surely, with all the staff at his command, the minister would be able to provide the provinces, in some sort of summary form, the type of notice that would not be too bulky on the one hand and on the other hand would be sufficient for the provinces' interests.

There is really nothing more that needs to be said about the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. It is a good type of amendment and should be looked at seriously. Mr. Speaker, since you may require a little time to dispose of argument and perhaps rule on amendment No. 14, I will conclude at this point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question on motion No. 13 and on the amendment thereto?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre) agreed to.

Motion No. 13 (Mr. Nystrom), as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. At the opening of consideration of the report stage of Bill C-132 Mr. Speaker indicated that he had some reservations as to the acceptability of motion No. 14. Of course, there was no debate at that time, but it is suggested that motion No. 14 is defective in that it is a substantive proposal rather than an amendment. In effect, it purports to give a province or provinces the authority to determine if and when a statute of Canada shall have force and effect. In other words, it proposes an alteration or change in the legislative procedure.

Hon. members may refer to May's eighteenth edition at page 510, paragraphs 10 and 11, which read as follows:

Amendments to a bill proposing that an address or a resolution of one House of Parliament should effect the repeal of the bill, or that the provisions of a bill should be subject to a referendum, have been ruled out of order as proposing changes in legislative procedure which would be contrary to constitutional practice.

An amendment is irrelevant and cannot be admitted if it seeks to delay the coming into force of a bill relating to England only, until a similar bill should have been passed for Scotland.

Having put these thoughts in the minds of hon. members, perhaps I may call it six o'clock and later welcome comments from hon. members, unless they indicate satisfaction with the suggested ruling.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I believe that your ruling would find the favour of most hon. members of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It is my understanding that hon. members do not wish to question the doubts of the Chair as to the acceptability of motion No. 14. This being the case, the Chair rules that the motion cannot be accepted at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, since we have reached the end of the report stage amendments, perhaps I might be permitted, in the absence of other House leaders—I am sorry, one of them is reaching his seat now—to indicate that there is agreement that the deferred votes take place tomorrow afternoon after the question period.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, we on this side are agreeable, on the understanding that we continue on with third reading following the divisions.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, we agreed to this also. It does not suit everybody in our party but it seems to be the best time to have the divisions, and it is the time we generally thought last week we would have these votes. So in order to continue with third reading tomorrow, we agree to the votes taking place right after the question period.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, we give our support to what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) just said. We gave our support as early as last Friday.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it agreed that the deferred votes and recorded divisions on the various motions that have been considered at the report stage be postponed until tomorrow afternoon after the question period, and that it be so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested to me by one of my omniscient colleagues that perhaps the House might like to know what we shall be dealing with at eight o'clock.

Mr. Foster: At eight o'clock we will be continuing with government order 56, Bill S-4 amending the National Parks Act.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, we agreed to this. We appreciate the government telling us it was coming up, and we think it would be nice if it would bring the NDP into some of these consultations.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Who do you think suggested it?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

AMENDMENT DELINEATING GOVERNMENT'S POWER IN DISPOSING OF PUBLIC LANDS

The House resumed from Friday, November 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill S-4, to amend the National Parks Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I feel particularly pleased and honoured this evening to see so many cabinet ministers in the House, particularly the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) who is the sponsor of this bill. It is an unusual sight at this time of the day.

This is an important piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker, not so much for what it contains, because it contains very little, but for what it does not contain in providing for the process and the mechanism by which national parks are established. It also affords members an opportunity to extol the virtues of their own areas and the beauties there and to explain why there should be national parks in areas where they do not exist at the moment.

In my initial remarks I want to point out that northern British Columbia does not contain any national parks at the moment, and therefore if I were to relate this bill just to the interests of my own area it would not really matter whether it passed or not. It would have no bearing on whether a national park is established in that area. That will come about as a result of discussions between the provincial government and the federal government and the assignment of lands and all the other matters that enter into an agreement to establish a national park.

On Friday, the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) spoke about Forillon national park. What he said had merit but I want to depart from that position. He invited all hon. members and others to take a holiday and visit Forillon to enjoy the beauties of that park when it becomes developed. I disagree with the concept that a national park has to be developed before it can be enjoyed and appreciated. I think we have gone overboard on this concept of development and I apply this to provincial parks as well. We have tended to commercialize them, make them attractive to the mobile tourist who comes along with his trailer, portable television and all the accoutrements of home to visit these parks. I am one of those who wants to see them maintained and preserved in their natural state. I think the concept of parks should be that of preservation of wilderness areas and nature, rather than an encroachment upon nature and the development of blacktop roads, hot dog stands and commercial ventures and all the other highly organized accompaniments of today's concept of national parks.

Take, for example, the Queen Charlotte Islands, particularly the west coast facing upon the expanse of the Pacific Ocean. It is difficult to get to that area because there are no roads. One has to get there by boat or aircraft . Commercial aircraft do not fly there, so it becomes a charter venture which is not really that expensive when flying from some of the communities on the Queen Charlottes themselves. The west coast is an indescribable structure. It was the home of a number of Indian communities in pre-European days. It was an area in hibernation, so to speak, in which one could gain some concept of the spiritual nature of nature itself. The mere sight of that expanse of water, its movement and its surging, and the cliffs and trees and the sea life, with the wildlife of the area, is something to be remembered and preserved and conserved. I can think of no better way of doing it than by establishing a national park for that purpose.

Just north of Terrace where I live there are some lava beds, the result of an outflow of lava from a volcano that erupted something like 400 years ago. That lava flow is reflected in the stories and history of the Nishga Indians who live along the Nass River. They tell of the plight of their forefathers three or four centuries ago when the volcano erupted, spewed lava and drove people from villages to other sites. Just north, a few hundred miles away I believe, is the only active volcano in Canada. It is not active at this time, the eruptions taking place on a cyclical pattern which ends every 300 years or thereabouts.

I know that scientists of the federal Department of Energy, Mines and Resources are near Mount Edzizq, studying the lava flows in the Grand Canyon of the Stikine River. Several volcanoes have erupted in the region. There are a number of volcanic cones in the area. The top of this mountain area is glaciated. Areas like this should be preserved and dedicated in future as non-developed national parks. Their preservation as national parks is something that ought to be considered.

Also, we should consider our ocean spaces as national parks. A couple of years ago, as recorded in Hansard on October 19, 1971, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) spoke about what was loosely or generally referred to as an underwater or marine park in the Gulf of Georgia. Technically, it should be known as Georgia Strait; those of us who live in the area always refer to it as the Gulf of Georgia, although it is not a gulf. There is a reference in Hansard to the Minister of the Environment referring to studies and discussions taking place with the government of British Columbia about the park. Apparently, within a few weeks of October 19 there was to be a formal understanding with the province in that connection. We have heard nothing further since then.

There are a number of areas on the west coast and east coast, bordering on the ocean that should be preserved and set aside as conservation areas. In those areas people should be able to see the beauties of undersea life. In this connection I have heard it said that national parks and other parks are valuable from the point of view of tourism and tourists. I know there is a tendency for people to extol the economic benefits that come to an area in which there is a park. They say that economic benefits come from tourists who visit those areas. A great deal of that so-called benefit is mythical. It does not come about.

Near where I live the world's largest steelhead salmon was caught in the Kispiox River, a river that is frequented by tourists. A few years ago a young lad of 18 spent four or five hours catching this fish. In the end he pulled out of the water a 92-pound spring salmon—a fantastically big fish. Let me point out that the Skeena River is one of the most important salmon spawning rivers in Canada, as is the Nass River and the whole northern area. These rivers attract tourists who come to camp and fish. Many come with self-contained campers. They bring their own gas, often in 45-gallon drums because it is cheaper that way than buying it locally. They bring their own larders stocked with food. They do not even purchase a fishing licence, very likely having bought it as soon as they crossed the border, if they are American, or in another town if they come from Canada. They leave behind relatively little in an economic sense. They leave their garbage and their litter—we provide facilities for that. The concept that tourism brings economic benefits to an area is just not true when viewed over-all.

An unfortunate situation has arisen in some of our parks, regrettably, because both federal and provincial governments have not been sure who had legislative or constitutional authority in the area. I am referring to situations in which people, primarily from the United States—I am not knocking United States citizens for this—have come with camper units and, as well, with a small canning factory. They have spent their time, say, on the Kispiox River or elsewhere and have engaged in sports fishing, which comes under the jurisdiction of the provincial government. They catch fish and can them in these mobile canning units. They clean the fish right there and then, and bottle or can them right there and then and take them back home. They catch salmon and other species of fish, sometimes for commercial purposes.

We must prevent this happening. I do not consider that where this sort of thing takes place the activity is of any great value to the area. We want to put our objection on record and say that when we are talking of developing or establishing national parks we should not do it with that concept in mind. Such activity is not necessary for people who go to a park to enjoy it.

I have some objections to the bill, Mr. Speaker. One of my objections is companion to the objection raised by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) the other day. It has to do with the relationship between the federal government and the provinces and the federal government and the two territories. Under the bill, parks can be established or expanded in a province when there is agreement with the province. When it comes to the Yukon and Northwest Territories, no such agreement is necessary. The territorial councils are not considered even as being competent to make those decisions.

The Yukon and Northwest Territories are treated paternalistically in the bill. I know how much the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development detests the word "paternalism". He drags it out every time he is in a corner. The bill is paternalistic inasmuch as the section of the bill dealing with the relationships with the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories speaks not of agreement but of consultation. We know, from the history of this government, what it means by consultation. It does not consult for discovering what others want, or for the purpose of getting advice about something with respect to which the federal government may change its mind. With this government, consultation is merely something for providing a technical avenue by which things can be discussed so that the federal government can go ahead and do what it planned in the first place.

A couple of days ago I looked up the word "consult" in the dictionary. Perhaps the most appropriate definition that can be applied to this government is the reference that says "to consult your pillow"—in other words, to sleep on the matter or think about it in your dreams. That is the type of consultation that is involved.

Some parts of this bill have merit. Although they will have some value for simple questions, they will denigrate the position of the Yukon and Northwest Territories Councils with regard to groups to be consulted but not to reach agreement. As far as I am concerned, the bill should fail on those grounds if none other. Surely, in this enlightened day and age, with all the respect we have for levels of government and democracy, we should write into this piece of legislation with respect to the Yukon and, the Northwest Territories that the formation of parks should become a matter of agreement between the federal government and territorial governments. I hope when we get to the committee stage the appropriate amendment will be written in.

I want to talk about a gross failing in the bill. This has apparently been endorsed by the Conservative Party. At no time during the second reading debate on this bill has one iota of interest been exhibited on the subject matter of aboriginal rights of the native people of this country. The other day, in the province of Quebec, there was a Superior Court decision involving the James Bay project. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development took 275 per cent of the credit for that decision. I see the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) nodding his head and saying yes, he should. It is a shame that the hon. member is not raising the point I am going to raise with regard to this particular piece of legislation, because this carries with it a denial by the minister with regard to his concern for aboriginal rights.

If the minister and the government had that degree of concern totally and fully about respect for aboriginal rights, they would have included in this bill a clause repealing section 6 (3) of the National Parks Act. That is to be retained in the legislation; there is no thought of removing it. It is paternalistic and offensive. It should be offensive to the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo. The section reads:

The governor in council may authorize the minister—

That is the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

—to purchase—

That carries with it the concept of a mutual agreement.

—expropriate—

That means to steal.

—or otherwise acquire any lands or interests therein, including the lands of Indians—

The minister and other members of the government say how beautiful it is that they can stand up and say they respect the fundamental right of the Indian people with regard to the land they occupy, and want to carry it forward in the statute law of this nation. I know how much the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo wants to ask questions. I know how much he is in need of information. If he would do it in a formal way when I conclude my remarks, I will do my best to respond to him. To carry forward the government's right to expropriation of Indian lands flies completely in the face of the question of aboriginal rights. I would rather not see the bill proceeded with until we had dealt with this matter.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Ask the NDP in the province.

Mr. Howard: There goes the chatterbox from Kamloops-Cariboo. If he were the type of member he should be, and stood up and fought for the rights of the Indian people, I would pay attention to him. However, he has not done that. He has not done anything. He is an apologist for a weak, insipid government on the question of aboriginal rights.

I want to deal with another section of the National Parks Act. It concerns the relationship of Indian people and Indian lands. If the minister does not expropriate Indian lands, that is, take them without consent or agreement, but acquires them by lease under another section or regulation, the minister is permitted to levy taxes against those lands even though they were not expropriated. The act contains that provision. One thing the Indian people have held dear to them as a slim recognition of aboriginal rights is freedom from taxation on the reserve except taxation that the band council may levy. The minister wants to retain the authority to expropriate those lands and levy taxes for various purposes against them. If the taxes are not paid, the minister or the government can proceed to sell the land for unpaid taxes.

If the Indian people want to stand up for their fundamental right and say that the Indian Act states their land shall not be taxed, the minister can say it shall be taxed because the National Parks Act gives him that authority. That is regardless of what the Bill of Rights may or may not say. There was an indication of that a few days ago when the Supreme Court reached the stupid decision that the Bill of Rights had no validity whatsoever in any matter. If an Indian stands up for his right and does not pay taxes, the minister can seize and sell the land for non-payment of taxes.

There is another provision in the act. All of this can flow from section 6(3) of the act which is to be retained. If the Indian people want to exercise their fundamental basic right to fish or hunt for food, the minister can say they are in violation of a provision of the act because the regulations prohibit that, even though that is characteristic of the whole history of concern about aboriginal rights. It is easily understood; everyone has heard about it. There have been a great number of cases on this. If an Indian exercised his aboriginal right to catch fish, the minister could seek a conviction. The person would be liable to a fine of up to $500 and up to six months in jail if convicted.

If an Indian person decides to exercise his aboriginal right to fish and to hunt, which Indian people have done from time to time, this is their inherited right, something that was not taken away from them by treaty. If this is so, any park warden or any constable can without warrant or other legal process enter and search any building, structure, boat, vehicle, etc. In other words, mere suspicion on the part of a park warden could carry with it the authority to break into people's homes at any time of the day or night, within the park or outside the park, with respect to timber, minerals, hay, birds, fish, mammals—the latter being part of the way of life of the Indian people. And these powers are to be continued in the act.

As far as I can see, there is no provision in this bill which affects this right which the minister wishes to keep, namely, the right to expropriate Indian lands, to levy taxes against those lands and to sell them in the event the taxes are not paid, even though taxes may have been withheld on grounds of principle. All this, together with provisions for laying charges, imposing terms of imprisonment up to six months, and so on, is carried forward in the legislation as constituting authority which the minister wishes to keep. In my view this is contrary to what we should be doing in this House.

I have no great objection to what is contained in this bill, though I do have doubts about some aspects and I disagree with the position accorded to the Councils of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories inasmuch as they are not allowed any measure of real participation in making decisions about national parks. However, I do take strong and serious objection to the provisions which are allowed to remain in the act. For the life of me, I cannot understand why the minister should wish to retain those provisions, especially since he has been consistent, in the last few months anyway, in his statements about aboriginal rights.

All I can conclude is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has more to say in these matters than the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. We all recall the position taken by the Prime Minister in September, 1969, when he said in Vancouver that as far as he was concerned the Indian people did not have any Indian rights; the government rejected that concept. The same view was expressed on a number of occasions, and it was only changed when the Supreme Court of Canada rendered its decision in the Nishga case. Then the Prime Minister said, "Well, we did not think you had any aboriginal rights, but maybe you have some legal rights, whatever they are." He did not seek to clarify what those rights might be.

So either the provision giving the minister the right to take Indian lands, and the imposition of taxes and all the invasion of property which goes therewith is retained in the act as a result of an oversight on the part of the minister—and I cannot take this possibility very seriously—or it is retained in the act because basically the government has no regard for aboriginal rights. Oh, ministers will pay homage to those rights when they are won by somebody else in a court, but when it comes to action, to doing something about them seriously, the answer is, no Sir. What other reasons could there be for retaining in this day and age a provision which says that a cabinet minister has the right to expropriate Indian lands?

Let us talk about the Northwest Territories. Here there are no surrendered lands; all the land belongs, in an historical sense, to the Indian people. Yet all the government is prepared to do is to consult with the Council of the Northwest Territories, without regard to the people native to the area, without regard to their historic claims, without regard to the fact that the whole of the Northwest Territories in an historic sense comes within the domain of the people native to that area. This is also the case in my own part of British Columbia. Yet here again is an area in which the minister wishes to retain the right to expropriate Indian lands. And with respect to those areas in which he is the sole commander-in-chief he does not even want to enter into an agreement with the elected council of the territory but simply to engage in consultation.

I also object to the manner in which the bill reached us. My views about the Senate and its facility or opportunity to deal with matters of a public nature are well known. I think that a great many senators do not represent people; they represent money, banks, oil companies and the rapacious capitalists in this nation. They represent the interests of the multinational corporations as opposed to the interests of the Canadian public. Today we are considering a piece of legislation which I believe ought not to have originated in the Senate because it deals with the fundamental interests of human beings. Perhaps we should make a start in this parliament on a bill denying the Senate the right to look at legislation which fundamentally affects the rights of human beings.

At one time the Senate did have a function to perform. It used to pass on divorce cases from Quebec and Newfoundland. Quite appropriate, I thought. But parliament took that function away. The Senate used to deal with private bills to establish corporations, insurance companies, and so on. Those bills used to originate in the Senate, quite properly, I thought, because the Senate represents those interests. However, as a result of a series of objections by some of us in this chamber, that authority too was removed from the Senate. Now such incorporations or changes take place by the letters patent process.

The Senate only had two opportunities to do anything worth while. One was to deal with divorce and the other was the incorporation of insurance and finance companies. They were removed. What has probably occurred is that the Senate, realizing how useless it was becoming, recognizing what has always been the fact, has implored the government to give it something to do. Therefore the minister went to his old friend, Paul Martin, and said, "Senator Paul, I have a bill that is designed to keep intact in my hands the right to take away Indian lands, and I want to keep that right. If I bring the bill into the House early in the session"—and I point out that it was introduced in the Senate on March 27 of this year—"those guys in the Commons and those intransigent people in the Indian affairs and northern development committee will tear me to shreds. So how about you, an old friend of the people, introducing the bill in the Senate? In that way it will proceed through and no one will even know it is there. The public will pay no attention to it, there will be no press about it, and it will sneak through. Then we will bring it into the Commons in the last days before the Christmas recess when people are interested in other important matters, slip it through and no one will know the difference. Plus the fact that it will look like you guys over there are doing something".

After all, Mr. Speaker, this is Bill S-4, and bills are dealt with in the order they are introduced. Bill S-1 was the traditional, respectful piece of legislation which was not designed to go anywhere but just maintains tradition. What Bills S-2 and S-3 are, I have no idea.

Mr. Barnett: They must have got as far as S-6 by now.

Mr. Howard: My hon. friend from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) says that they must be up to Bill S-6 by now. But I do have this objection to a group of people in the Senate who do not represent any constituents or any particular areas, a group that is not concerned about the public good to any marked degree and who have no responsibility to anybody, introducing a bill of this type. Even if they goof, which is standard practice, even if the Senate is at fault and makes an error, there is no way the general public can cast their ballot and say "Out you go".

Mr. Rodriguez: There would be if they voted for us.

Mr. Howard: Indirectly the public could do this, since we are the only party that stands on all fours for abolition of the Senate.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have listened with interest to the hon. member for quite a while, wondering whether he was speaking about the bill before the House or, rather, about the other place. The hon. member seems to me to be digressing considerably from the principle of the bill to launch an attack on the other place, something the rules do not allow him to do. One thing that the rules do require, however, is that an hon. member limit his comments to the bill before the House, which I gather has to do with Indian affairs and northern development, being an act to amend the National Parks Act. I hope that the hon. member will deal with parks rather than with the other place.

Mr. Howard: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that use of the word "park" in its verbal sense might appropriately apply to the other place. In any event, what I am seeking to do is to establish the groundwork for showing that honourable senators in the other place, as it is euphemistically called, have no concern for the rights of the Indian people, and the same may be said of the minister, because they did not concern themselves with the effect and purpose of this particular bill.

I sorely wish that members of the Conservative Party, who on many occasions have raised in a theoretical sense the question of the aboriginal rights of the Indian people, would give this piece of legislation and the act that it seeks to amend that degree of study and examination that would require members of the Conservative Party to say that they, too, object to this bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to interrupt the hon. member, not because he is speaking about the other place this time but because his time has expired. He may obtain the unanimous consent of the House to continue and I am prepared to inquire whether that consent will be forthcoming.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There are dissenters.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In this place or in the other place?

Mr. Speaker: Not necessarily from the other place; there are dissenters from this place. Therefore, the hon. member has been displaced.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order to point out that I did not request any additional time and did not want any.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, my first intention in rising and taking part in this debate was not to defend the Senate against the attacks that have just been directed at it. But I find myself compelled, for the second time in two days, to pay tribute to some efforts that were made by the other place.

I had the opportunity last Friday to take part in the debate on the joint declaration that had been issued after the visit of the European Parliament that had been arranged by the joint Senate committee and tonight I rise in a debate which deals with a bill coming from the other place.

However, this is not my only interest in this bill, as you will probably see in my remarks. The constituency I represent is very suitable for the establishment of a park. Besides, after I was elected, in 1970, I stood as champion of the establishment of such a park in the northern part of my constituency. And at that time, Mr. Speaker, the province of Quebec had just agreed, after hesitating for years, to admit the principle of the establishment of a park in the Gaspé Peninsula, and another one in the St. Maurice Valley.

My other interest is to take the defence—though he is very clever to defend himself—of the minister responsible for Indian affairs, because I had the opportunity, during the La Macaza title transfer on January 10, with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister who was with me, to find out, to really understand the minister's popularity among the Indian people of this country.

Mr. Speaker, most of the Indian leaders of the province of Quebec whom I saw during the ceremony have praised the minister on several occasions. Unfortunately, he was recovering from that unfortunate illness which kept him away from the House for several months. On that occasion, the Quebec Indian chiefs repeated over and over again how much he was appreciated, how the Indians recognized his efforts, his eagerness and his steadfastness to improve their living conditions, act as their spokesman and the champion of their interests throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, we saw his first reaction when he learned the judgment of the court on the James Bay issues. He immediately upheld the interests of the Indians and I think that the native people are grateful and have not missed, on various occasions and not only when I was in La Macaza, to show their attachment and their admiration for everything he has done for them.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, right after my election to this House, most municipalities in my riding made representations to me seeking from this government with the agreement of the province of Quebec the establishment of a national park in the northern part of my riding, that is in the uninhabited area situated north of Chute-Saint-Phillipe and Val-Viger, east of Mont-Laurier, stretching towards Abitibi in the north-west for about a hundred miles. This conforms well with the character of people of this area and those situated a little further to the south because for years the riding I represent distinguished itself by the way it welcomes tourists, making tourism its industry.

There is a long-established tradition and the people of that are conscious of having a special vocation for that industry. The people in my riding, in that area at least, could very well guarantee the success of such a project, enabling the more than two million people in Greater Montreal to get closer to nature, to the mountains we find in my riding, to the magnificent lakes and rivers and also take advantage of that greenery that is found almost everywhere in the constituency, and all the more as the building of the Sainte-Scholastique or Mirabel airport, whether we want it or not, will mean a very important increase in population during the next decade.

That move is already being felt months after months. The real estate agents in that part of my constituency, in the lower Laurentians talk again and again about the interest generated by the building of the airport.

There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the establishment of new provincial parks, especially in that central part of the province of Quebec, is a must. The development of Forillon National Park was excellent news in 1968 or 1969 and I could say that the development of St. Maurice Park is excellent news for the people of the province of Quebec, for it will be as beautiful as Forillon Park, but it is not as readily accessible to the Greater Montreal area as a park in the northern part of my constituency would be.

I estimate it would take beween seven and nine hours to travel from Montreal to Forillon, while the area I refer to, which is north of Montreal, could be reached within two hours. Access to that oasis could thus be made much easier and much more regular.

When Forillon Park was being created, Mr. Speaker, following long—I should say too long—negotiations with Quebec authorities, it was a result of pressures exercised by the people of the province who were asking for the establishment of national parks which could rival in beauty with those in the western provinces. They had been asking for these parks for years.

Finally, the provincial government of the time became sensible and gave in to the pressures or requests from the people of Quebec. However, we are still in the red considering the number of national parks which are found in Alberta, for instance, or in other western provinces, compared with the number that we have now in Quebec.

If you except the Plains of Abraham which, in my view, are much more a park of a special nature than a national park, I would say that both parks, St. Maurice and Forillon, will not meet the demand and requirements of the Quebec people.

It is true that today the number of national parks has nearly doubled compared with what it was ten years ago, thanks to the initiative and tenacity of the minister responsible. Not so long ago, he said that by the year 2,000, Canada should have at least 60 parks.

Who will profit from the facilities offered in these parks, Mr. Speaker? First, the population of Canada, and then the tourists who come to visit us each year from Europe or the United States. For several decades, people in North America, in Canada and the United States have gone to Europe, to the lands of their ancestors.

Now the European economy is allowing people from Europe to come to North America and visit this new land which has attracted so many of their sons. One finds, of course, a great many cousins in North America, both French-speaking and English-speaking, and of other ethnic origins represented in this country as well.

Since the European economy reached our level you can rest assured that Europeans with the easy means of communication available today will also want to enjoy our beautiful national parks, our beautiful rivers and lakes.

Surely those people will enjoy them as well as Canadians from all parts of this country who will soon enjoy a 38 hour week and undoubtedly a 36, 34 or 32 hour week would mean a work week consisting of barely four days of eight hours each.

All people, especially workers, do not have the means to buy a lot on the shore of a lake and enjoy the beauty of nature that can be found in the Laurentians. It will be pressingly urgent to set up facilities so they can drive their habitat with them, whether it be a trailer-tent, or ordinary tent, a trailer or a motor home and enjoy, as those well off, the beauty of nature and the pure air the Laurentians and a national park can offer them.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, before the province of Quebec catches up with some provinces in this country in terms of the number of parks several years will have gone by. However, I come back charging with the will of the representatives of city councils in my riding who in 1971 and early in 1972 asked that a park be set up in the northern part of my riding. Economically speaking, Mr. Speaker, it has become excessively difficult to interest industry in the private sector in coming down to that part of the province of Quebec which, under certain aspects, is still underdevelopped.

In my opinion it could be illegal to shift tertiary industry to this area when we think of the damages which the presence of heavy industries could cause to the environment. Because of the aptitude already shown by the population, because also of the sites and the facilities available, the establishment of a park in that part of the province would surely be welcome and would help create employment, thus ensuring the financial security of the people in that sector of my constituency.

Just the same I would like, before ending my remarks, Mr. Speaker, to deal with a few clauses of the bill, particularly with the one conferring to federal authorities the power to regulate or to apply traffic regulations on these lands, to enforce regulations and laws. Moreover, Bill S-4 will enable the Canadian government to amalgamate or to add to existing national parks lands which our country already owns.

Clause 9 of the bill specifies the boundaries and description of Forillon National Park. From the description of this park, in the Gaspé area in the eastern part of the province, it can be seen that this very beautiful park the equal of those established in western Canada, covers an area of 60,000 acres or 92,805 square miles.

We welcome such measures. The Quebec population is delighted at the decision of provincial authorities to yield to popular demands for the establishment of national parks. However, I am convinced that the population is not satisfied yet. During a campaign I started in 1971-72 for the creation of a park in my constituency, municipal councils were unanimous in calling for the creation of a new park at the northern end of the constituency of Labelle.

Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to repeat to the minister that popular interest for this project is very much alive in my constituency.

[English]

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this measure because I think that in referring the bill to the committee for study we will have an opportunity to examine in some detail the policy of this government toward the national parks and the national park system. One of the reasons I am particularly interested in this subject is the fact that although the government seems to have evolved a national parks policy, I submit that on the face of it the parks policy cannot work to the same degree in all national parks.

If I may, I would like to use as a prime example the national park in my own riding. The reason I use this park as an example is that although it is a famous park, it is probably the smallest national park in Canada. I have listened with a great deal of interest to hon. members who preceded me speaking of national parks of hundreds of thousands of acres and thousands of square miles in area. The park of which I speak, the Point Pelee national park, could be placed in one of the lakes of one of the Canadian national parks. Its area is less than that of the townsites found in the Canadian national parks.

Why is there concern about the policy? One should know something of the history of the Point Pelee national park to understand why there is a great deal of concern about the policy of this government with regard to national parks. That park is particularly noteworthy because it comprises the most southern part of this country, with the exception of Pelee Island lying in Lake Erie. Point Pelee national park is located as far south along the longtitude running through the city of New York and the parallel from New York to the northern part of the state of California. When you are standing in that particular park you are south of one-third of the population of the United States.

Because of this location, the forest, the fauna and the ecology of the park are unique in Canada. There are trees and plants to be found there that are not found in other parts of Canada, and there are birds there that are not to be found in any other part of Canada. It is the migration point of many of the birds in their migratory flight from the southern hemisphere to the north. Where else would you find butterfly trees? For those who are not familiar with butterfly trees, let me explain that these are trees which in the fall of the year are almost covered in their entirety with Monarch butterflies which rest there before migrating south across Lake Erie. Hundreds of tourists travel to that particular area to see this unique display.

This park has not always been a national park. It is comprised of some farmland, marshland and wooded land. The farmers there grew various crops, first grain crops and then specialized crops such as asparagus. There were apple orchards, and because of the particular nature of the point where the flow of the east and west part of Lake Erie come together with a vicious undertow, it was necessary in the early days to establish a lifeguard station. The lifeguards performed yeoman service, saving many lives. Even today it is necessary to patrol the beaches, which are unique for their very fine sand and are a great attraction to tourists, because they can be very dangerous owing to the undertow where the two bodies of water flow together.

The policy of this government with regard to the park went awry because the local citizens, municipal and township councils there were not taken into confidence by the government and had no idea what the government was attempting to do with the park. They just found that suddenly the normal use of the park was curtailed, and they were somewhat mystified as to what the government was proposing to do.

No doubt the government's policy in trying to preserve that park in its natural state was an admirable one. However, it must not be forgotten that throughout the years the park had evolved together with the community. Camps for boys and girls had been set up on an alternate basis. There were picnic grounds for family picnics and church picnics. This was part of the community. The park was an attraction for thousands and thousands of tourists, and as a result a tourist industry was developed all along the approaches to the park. Restaurants cropped up and cottages were built. The park became part of the community. Because it was a focal point for tourists, the area attracted hundreds of thousands of dollars each year for the people of the community.

Now, all of a sudden, because of the national parks policy, this is changed. The number of cars going into the park was curtailed, the parking areas were reduced, no new leases were granted to householders and no new camps were established in the park. The roadways were curtailed to traffic, and traffic was stopped at the main gate in the main part of the park. A train was introduced to take people through the park. Bird walks were established and so were trails through the park.

This is all very fine, but it changed the whole complexion of the park. Right beside the park there was an extensive marsh. An additional problem was created because all of a sudden hunters were told they could no longer hunt ducks in that marsh. This might appear to be commendable, but let me point out that the ban disrupted the community because in the original deed of that area hunters were granted the right to hunt in the park. The hunters did not go to the park for the sake of shooting only. Throughout the years hunters have carefully taken in thousands of bushels of grain to feed to the ducks. When hunting they were careful to make sure that a sufficient number of birds was left to ensure the continuation of the species. They were careful enough to see that the flocks did not grow so large as to become a nuisance to the surrounding farmlands. That was one problem caused by the marsh.

A second problem caused by this extensive marsh was that it was adjacent to diked farmland and more than once water broke through from the marsh and inundated the farmland. There was constant questioning about who should maintain the dikes, the farmers, the provincial government or the federal government, and always the answer came back that it was the federal government's responsibility because this was a national park. The national policy did not allow for sufficient consultation between those who actually knew the park and the administrators in Ottawa, hundreds of miles away. In fact, we would have had more chaos had it not been for the park administrators sent to the area. Fortunately, they had an understanding of what the government wanted to do, as well as a real appreciation of the feelings of the people of the area.

One bone of contention between the administration and the local people was a child's camp in that park. It was established under an estate legacy. A board of administrators was set up and took children from all the surrounding communities on a rotational basis. Groups of girls and boys were carefully supervised during their time at the camp. They walked forest trails, saw the beauty of nature and swam in the lakes. Most were city children who would not have an opportunity to go to other camps. But the national parks policy changed all that. The administration closed down the camp, and had it not been for the intervention of local citizens who were very wrought up about the matter, and finally the acquiescence of the minister himself, that park would have been closed to the children.

It is all very well to keep parks in their natural state for future generations, but surely the people and children of today have some rights. They must have some place to go. Reason must prevail. We should not shut out everybody in order to make plans for tomorrow. This is why I am interested in this bill, and it is why I hope when it goes to committee we will have an opportunity to inquire into the government's plans for the various national parks. Policies for national parks which encompass hundreds of thousands of acres may not be suitable for national parks that encompass only a few acres. My plea to the government today is that it take another look at park policies which encompass parks of totally different natures.

In my area, national parks are very scarce. Hundreds of thousands of people there would have to travel many, many miles to reach another national park. For them, Point Pelee national park has been an oasis for years, and it would be very sad if policies conceived by parliament and administered by Ottawa terminated the pleasure that local communities have enjoyed when using that national park. The local citizens are very proud of Point Pelee national park. Since they have a vested interest and are so proud of the park, it is only fair they should have some say in how the park is administered.

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my participation in this debate may be questioned by some who wonder why I should bother to speak about national parks since there are none in my riding. I would point out that the constituency of Moncton is situated halfway between the two national parks which presently exist in New Brunswick. Because many of my constituents enjoy the facilities of these parks and because Moncton, being the transportation centre of the Maritimes, is traversed by everyone who visits the parks, I have a very special interest in them. It is true, as the parliamentary secretary said, that this bill is merely a housekeeping bill, particularly concerned with updating the administration. I am particularly interested in clause 2 which gives the governor in council power to extend the boundaries and incorporate Crown lands within existing national parks.

I have mentioned that there are two national parks in New Brunswick. The problem of expansion is not too critical in the Kouchibouguac national park. It is a new park and the government is still upgrading facilities there. Therefore I shall confine my remarks to Fundy national park. The hon. member who preceded me said that the national park in his area is the smallest in Canada. I cannot argue with that; but if Fundy is not the second smallest, it certainly is one of the smallest. It is about 80 square miles in extent. Although small, it is one of the most beautiful parks in Canada. Visitors who have been there will confirm this. It contains some of the most beautiful scenery in Atlantic Canada, sea line, rugged forest and mountain lines. It is one of the real beauty spots. The problem at Fundy is simply that the park is too popular. Maybe that is not quite the proper way to put it. Anyway, it is so popular that it is now completely overcrowded.

In 1948, when the decision was made to develop Fundy national park, there were very few roads in there. Being a pretty rugged sector of the country, it attracted few visitors except campers and prospectors. The popularity of the park has steadily increased since then and I can give some figures in support of that. It is said that attendance at our national parks has doubled in each decade from 1952 to 1972. Fundy national park was officially opened in July, 1950, and in the year 66,300 visitors went there. By 1970, this had increased to 640,000 visitors. I have not seen the figures for 1972, but I venture to say they are over 700,000 and perhaps close to 800,000. The reason for this is simple.

Fundy is within a day's ride of probably the greatest concentration of population in North America. Fundy draws visitors from all the Atlantic provinces, plus the whole eastern seaboard of the United States, which is the heaviest settled area in the United States. As a result, it has become a very popular area for American and Canadian tourists. The most recent figures available show slightly over 700,000 visitors in an area of 80 square miles, or approximately 9,000 visitors per square mile; and of course, the whole area cannot be utilized for visitors as the bulk of it is forest and woodland which is, quite properly, conserved.

This brings up the conflict that seems to exist in national parks policy, Mr. Speaker. Instead of presenting a housekeeping bill, I had hoped that the minister would present some rational parks policy to resolve the age-old conflict between the two aspects of national parks policy—the first recreation, and the second conservation. In 1970, a series of hearings took place throughout the country in every area where a national park existed. The briefs and submissions pointed up the great conflict between the conservationists and those who thought parks should be devoted to recreational purposes. I wonder what has happened to those comprehensive reports and the submissions we heard in 1970. Maybe the minister could tell us what happened to them and, specifically, what is being done for Fundy and some other parks.

Our parks are desperately overcrowded. While I realize that many people would reserve them for conservation purposes, I think we must also realize that people are entitled to have a place for recreation, whether it be camping, picnicking, swimming or whatever is their pleasure. Surely we can strike a balance somewhere along the line and reserve one park for the nature lover and set up another for recreation purposes.

Over the years we have advocated that Fundy national park be enlarged to become an integral part of the much discussed Fundy trail.

The minister has often heard the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) and myself extol the beauties of the Fundy trail in this House. This trail would run from the Maine border through the southern part of New Brunswick up to St. Martin's and would co-ordinate the whole area. I know there has not been any agreement between the federal government and the province on the allocation of funds for such a project, but I have suggested in this House before that perhaps the most economic way to do it would be to extend the boundaries of Fundy national park 15 miles westward in a narrow corridor to the existing settlement of St. Martin's. This would provide the missing link between St. Martin's and the present borders of the park and would complete the Fundy trail. I do not know how many acres are involved, but the coast road along that part of the Bay of Fundy could be completed if this were done. I am sure under the terms of Clause 2 the federal government could work something out. Perhaps the provincial government would make the lands available to the federal government and they could become Crown lands. I should like to draw this matter to the attention of the minister because the time is long past when we should take action to provide adequately for the people coming to Fundy national park.

It has been estimated that by 1975, 3½ million visitors will be coming to New Brunswick every year and that this figure will increase by 25 per cent each year thereafter. If this is true, and if the same ratio exists as at present, in the next five years we will be getting over one million visitors. Unless something is done to extend the facilities, those visitors might as well stay home.

In his remarks the parliamentary secretary made reference to transit facilities within the park. But it is also very important to provide easy access. As the minister is probably aware, the main road to the park is very dilapidated and many tourists, especially those hauling small trailers, hesitate to use it. I think this is a proper subject for dicussion with the province. Perhaps a plan could be worked out whereby the highways to and from the park could be brought up to modern standards so that tourists from the United States and other areas would be glad to come to the park and enjoy its beauty.

I do not want to take up very much time, Mr. Speaker, because I agree with this bill. I have no quarrel with any of its provisions except that I hope that when we get to committee the minister will feel inclined to strengthen the bill to provide for the future expansion of parks. I hope he will accept some of the suggestions and criticisms made in committee. If he cannot do it with this bill, I hope that in the future he will bring in a more comprehensive plan to allocate parks for purposes of recreation and conservation. With this hope, I encourage the House to get this bill into committee so that the minister can give us his ideas.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would entertain a question?

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Yes.

Mr. Corbin: The hon. member has spoken in justifiably glowing terms of Fundy national park and I certainly have no quarrel with him on that, because he spoke well. He has also referred to the problems of overcrowding, increased tourist flow and the consequent need for additional facilities. Would the hon. member not agree with me that part of the solution to the overflow of tourism and the need for new facilities would be the creation of a third national park in New Brunswick, an international triboundary park between the province of New Brunswick, the state of Maine in the United States and the province of Quebec, part of which would be located in the "republic" of Madawaska, the beautiful doorway to the Atlantic provinces?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I understand the interest of the hon. member, but I do not think that he ought to take advantage of a question to repeat the speech that he has so well made recently.

● (2130)

[English]

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, certainly I agree with the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin). I point out that, as a member of the opposition, I can only plead with the minister on behalf of our province.

I will leave it up to the hon. member, who has influence with the minister, to get us another national park in New Brunswick.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in the few moments in which I will speak—because I wish to see this bill go before the committee—I wish to underscore the importance of consultation between the federal government and the provinces on the development of a national parks policy, particularly as, abhorrent though this may be to some, more and more people are being packed on fewer and fewer acres in our cities. This will create great pressures in the cities of Canada. We shall need the co-operation of federal and provincial as well as of other levels of government if we are to develop an adequate parks system which will satisfy the thousands upon thousands of people who must live in our urban communities.

For a few minutes I want to talk about an area that is of great importance from the standpoint of conservation and the development of a parks system. I want to speak about the Rideau River system which must be developed as a result of federal and provincial co-operation. That system extends from the national capital across the countries of Grenville, Carleton, Leeds and Frontenac down to the St. Lawrence River. The St. Lawrence has been neglected both by the federal and by the provincial government which has jurisdiction there. There is a crying need for action to be taken with respect to the river, as suggested in the CORTS study which has been lying relatively dormant for a number of years. The area ought to be redeveloped, as it has all the earmarks not only of a national park but of an area of tremendous historical significance. I ask the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, to consider reactivating that CORTS study so that within a reasonable time we can bring to fruition the plan suggested in that study. We must not overlook the historical importance of the river.

We must make a beginning by cleaning up the Rideau River. The city of Ottawa, with the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, has embarked upon a clean-up project which affects the Rideau River in the national capital area. I suggest that is merely the tip of the iceberg of the problem. Its solution will require all the resources of the city of Ottawa, of the regional municipality and, as well, of the provincial government. In order to administer a program for reclaiming or developing historical sites and developing national parks sites and camp sites for the accommodation of people, it may be necessary for governments to establish an authority composed of representatives of the federal, provincial and perhaps affected municipal governments. I think it is important for the work with respect to that great historic river to begin. As we are talking about national parks, I want once again to urge the reclamation and development of that great river which has such tremendous potential.

I also wish to commend the minister. In the southern part of my riding the St. Lawrence divides my riding from the thirtieth congressional district of the United States. On the banks of the river at Prescott, Ontario, there is a fort under the jurisdiction of the minister—Fort Wellington. If ever there is to be found an instance of co-operation between those responsible for federal institutions and those who influence the lifestream and lifestyle of any particular area, it is to be found with respect to Fort Wellington. I thank the minister for the co-operation he has shown me and the people of Prescott with respect to the use of the fort.

In this connection I must mention another part of the area coming under the federal government, Windmill Point, which is of great historical significance. I thank the minister not only for co-operating with Prescott and with other municipalities in the area, but for co-operating with me as the member representing the area. What has developed will, I hope, enhance the facilities for tourists in the area. As a result of this co-operation, which I am sure will be ongoing, I hope there will be an augmentation of the very worth-while programs which are undertaken by the local people in co-operation with officials of the minister's department. I want to pay particular tribute to the curator of the fort and those who work with him.

Along the St. Lawrence there are miles and miles of history. At Windmill Point, for instance, Schulz was captured in a Fenian raid and was defended by Sir John A. Macdonald, then a young lawyer in Kingston. Relationships between Canada and the United States had deteriorated to war, and that part of Ontario is of historical significance because an invasion was launched from that area into the United States.

It is important for there to be co-operation between provincial, municipal and federal governments in the development of a parks system so that the miles of history along the river, stretching perhaps from Kingston down as far as Upper Canada Village in my constituency, can be developed. As we grow older as a nation it will be important for us to look back and preserve the elements of our history which were made during our growth. Although co-operation between different levels of government is important in many areas, it is particularly important in the development of national parks, especially in the area to which I have alluded. That area will become more important as we grow more conscious of our history. It is important, as well, because it will afford a means of enjoyment for those who are congested in our cities.

I urge the minister to consider the matters I have raised. I commend him for the assistance he has given me and my constituents. I will sit down now because I do not want to delay the bill getting to committee. I felt that I had to make some brief remarks on this subject.

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I will speak for a few minutes only. I support this bill in principle. I believe my party does as well. I have travelled around this country a great deal and heard people here, especially Americans, say how wonderful our national parks are. In many respects they are the envy of the world. Nevertheless, I want to point to a few problems connected with our national parks system.

The fact that this bill provides for new parks is good; the suggested name changes are fine. I understand that some traffic laws are to be changed. Perhaps these are required, too. There has been concern for some years regarding traffic control in our national parks. Recently, and I do not know how widespread this practice is in our national parks, I received representations from several senior citizen groups who had toured our national parks by bus.

I understand that on one tour each senior citizen was charged $1 for a traffic licence to get into the park. I was told this was an administrative error and should not have happened, yet the bus driver collected $1 from each senior citizen. I understand the traffic licence is for a vehicle, not for the individuals inside it.

My constituency adjoins a park that was established in the 1920s by the late Mackenzie King, Prime Minister of Canada. He represented the constituency of Prince Albert for some time. He also had the distinction of being defeated by a CCF member in 1945. This is a large wilderness park, with one townsite, called Waskesiu. A number of problems have developed over the years in northern Saskatchewan with regard to this park. Many years ago it was decided that Prince Albert national park would be a people's park, catering to the rich and poor alike. Over the years, the park policy was to allow shack tents along a certain part of Lake Waskesiu. Some years ago a number of bureaucrats decided to get rid of the shack tents and people were told they must move them. Even though the shack tents had been there for almost a generation, these people were told they would no longer be allowed. As far as I and the people of my constituency are concerned, this matter should be straightened out.

Many of my constituents had shack tents in Prince Albert national park. They were arbitrarily told they would have to move them. After some appeals, delegations to members of parliament and appeals by chambers of commerce to government, and so on, it was finally decided to slowly phase out the shack tents. There are thousands of miles of shoreline in Prince Albert national park. There are huge lakes such as Lake Waskesiu, Crean Lake and Kingsmere Lake. There are many areas of shoreline property that could be developed. I cannot understand why these shack tents were not left alone.

There is another matter that concerns the people in my area. I understand that some steps have been taken in this regard. I am referring to the lease fees which people have to pay for their cabins. At Prospect Point there are huge, palatial summer cottages. For years people paid a yearly lease of $50 or $60 for them. However, the yearly lease on small skid cabins with two or three rooms is $80 or $90. I cannot see the justice in that. I understand there have been some changes in this regard, but they are not substantial enough.

Another problem plaguing this area is the question of roads. There is one main road into the southeastern end of the park. This goes through the city of Prince Albert and carries much of the traffic from the west, North Battleford, Edmonton, Calgary and the western United States, which has to travel an extra 50 or 60 miles in order to get to the park. There is a road coming from the southwest and a provincial highway which is paved to the edge of the park. There are 15 or 20 miles of national park roads. They are curving, dusty and treacherous. They are not paved. For years people have been asking the parks branch of the federal government to build up and pave these roads. The parks branch has said no, one entrance to the park is sufficient. We feel that a second main road into the park is justified. Most national parks have several roads leading to them.

Prince Albert national park is basically a summer park, mainly June to September. Many people in my province are ski enthusiasts, but they have no place to ski. If the people in my home town have the money, they go to Banff or Jasper once every three years.

An hon. Member: Build a mountain.

Mr. Nesdoly: Someone says "Build a moutain." Half a million dollars was spent building a mountain east of Saskatoon. As far as I am concerned, that was the most useless expenditure ever made. It would have been better to build a ski resort in Prince Albert national park where there are some large hills. Prince Albert national park can and should be developed into a winter resort. For the people of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and western Ontario the only national parks with winter facilities available to them are Banff and Jasper. Parts of Prince Albert national park should be developed for winter use.

In general, the national parks policy is good. I hope the national parks branch does not capitulate to private interest for huge-scale development. They should basically be wilderness parks. I sometimes wonder whether money is apportioned evenly between the national parks of Canada. A great deal of money has been spent on certain "Cinderella" parks like Banff and Jasper. For years people in my area have been crying for improvements to Prince Albert national park. Very little has been done.

It takes a great deal of money to build roads through mountains. It would not be very difficult to build roads into Prince Albert national park, an area of hills, lakes, muskeg and woods. If $10,000 were invested in that park every now and then, it would be money well spent. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) suggests that maybe they are waiting for Mackenzie King to come back.

I suggest another national park should be developed in Saskatchewan. I do not think there is a grasslands park anywhere in Canada. Some people may ask why we would want a grasslands park, because all you get there are gophers, prairie dogs and coyotes. Some of the shortgrass prairie is an element of our heritage that we should preserve. Perhaps that will happen in the future.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, Bill S-4 has many features. It has already been mentioned in this debate that many cities on the North American continent are becoming crowded and people are looking for greater access to rural areas, particularly parks.

I am glad to see this bill come before the House in its present form, but I wish it had contained provision for a project in which I took a great deal of interest along with many people in the upper Ottawa Valley. We received wholehearted co-operation from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), but I cannot say the same for the province of Ontario which I think has been very negligent in co-operating with the federal government in an effort to bring more national parks to the province.

I refer particularly to the project for an interprovincial national park which was being sponsored on the upper Ottawa River by the development committee of the town of Mattawa, the recreation club of Témiscamingue, Quebec, the chambers of commerce of both those towns and representatives of municipalities in those areas. We thought this would be a unique park among the national parks of Canada because it would be the first with an interprovincial flavour. It would take in a large area of the province of Quebec opposite the town of Mattawa, starting at a point about ten miles below the town of Témiscamingue. The northern boundary runs east of the Ottawa River to the town of Témiscamingue in Quebec, then along Highway 63 to the city of North Bay. The westerly side would be Highway 533 running from Highway 63 to a point just north of Mattawa, and from there over to the Ottawa River.

This takes in a region on the Ontario side of the river which is ideally suited for development as a national park. We also took into consideration the fact that Highway 17 would lead into the park from southern Ontario and the Ottawa-Montreal-Northern New York state region. Highway 11 would be the entrance from Toronto and other urban areas in the south as well as states bordering on the Great Lakes. Highway 17 would lead in from such northern cities as Sault Ste. Marie, Sudbury and North Bay. As well as being ideally situated, the park would be a tie between the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

The people of the area, including the representatives of the various organizations which represented the public thinking on the matter, spent a great deal of time on this project. They even went to the expense of renting a train for a day and taking a number of people on a tour, using the old CPR line from Madawaska across the Ottawa River and up the Quebec side of the river to Témiscamingue. We were met on arrival there by the mayor and his council as well as by members of the Chamber of Commerce who were glad to see such an upsurge of interest in this proposed national park. The town's only industry had closed down and the future looked black. In Mattawa, the Weyerhaeuser plant was closing down and this was the only major industry in the town. The people of the area were naturally concerned.

We took this issue to the federal Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I, along with others, had personal talks with the minister. We received positive answers. The minister went so far as to make a public statement in the town of Sturgeon Falls during one of his visits to northern Ontario. When asked about the possibility of an interprovincial national park to be established between Témiscamingue and Mattawa, he said he was definitely interested. Perhaps I could put on record part of a report which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of May 23, 1972:

> Mr. Chrétien said last week in Sturgeon Falls he is definitely interested in setting aside the area as a park but the matter was now in the hands of the Ontario and Quebec governments. They must expropriate where necessary and cede the land to the federal government. "If they say yes tomorrow, I am ready to go ahead".

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

[Mr. Hopkins.]

Mr. Hopkins: At this point, if there is a disposition to let the bill go through I am prepared to sit down. But if there is no such disposition I should like to retain my right to the floor.

Mr. Howard: Ten o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I suppose the hon. member wishes to call it ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS—ALLEGED WASTE OF MONEY IN THE PURCHASE OF ART OBJECTS DISPLAYED OUTSIDE BUILDINGS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, on September 14 I addressed a question to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Dubé) with respect to the art monstrosities which have been placed in front of various government buildings around the city of Ottawa. At that time the minister replied that these specimens—that is a very good word—are chosen by a select committee composed of some of the best Canadian artists. He said it had been the policy of this and preceding governments to spend 1 per cent of the cost of a federal building on art surrounding the building.

Later, a written reply in response to further questioning on my part indicated that the earlier reply had been in error. On September 19 the minister informed us that the policy had only been in effect since January 4, 1965, so other governments were not implicated in this particular example of waste and extravagance.

To date there have been 133 of these so-called artistic statues placed around government buildings. The total expenditure has amounted to $2,167,997. A good deal has been said in letters to editors in defence of this expenditure. Someone has referred to those who dared criticize this use of public funds as uninformed, because in expressing an opinion on public art they were handicapped by personal limitations.

One of the persons serving on the selection committee, Mrs. Suzanne Rivard-LeMoyne, has said that the advisory committee on art speaks of the shine of Robert Murray's Haida, the $35,000 steel sculpture outside the external affairs building, in these terms:

The contrast of his work to the heaviness of the building, gives me a feeling of lightness," she says, "Its, airy, spatial, spiritual in a way".

Some editorials have been written on this matter and I select one from the Ottawa Journal of November 10 last entitled "Art for anarchy's sake". I do not think that this is an opinion that can be described as uninformed. It says, among other things:

Some mod (or mad) hipsters on the public works advisory committee are approving such trash; and the like of the sculpture, if that's the word, Haida outside the external affairs building, or the magnified intestinal writhings in the park adjacent to the National Arts Centre. Why? . . .

Nor are we against modern art, from Cezanne to Braque and from there to Pellan, Pollock and Riopelle; and lest we forget, sculptors Epstein and Moore. They and others of like genius refashioned the form and content of art to give us new insights. They are the glory of the last 100 years.

But if they changed the rules radically, others simply abandoned any and all rules. Dadaism, self-proclaimed as anti-art, was early in this century accepted as art. Though that school died a swift death, its denizens left spiritual grandchildren among us. Their claptrap of rusty welded metal and other scrap makes a wasteland of our art galleries and desecrates our public buildings.

Then the editorialist concluded by asking why the taxpayers should have to pay for these monstrosities. Those who defend the art say that the artists are trying to say something. In last weekend's Journal there was a series of replies from people who are trying to describe these so-called artistic creations. Perhaps I can give the House some of the reactions of a cross-section of the Canadian public. The title of the article is "Junk: By any other name, Ottawans don't like it". One person suggested that it be called "Abortion without demand". She explained:

As a graduate of the Ontario College of Art in the days of Arthur Lismer, Frank Carmichael . . . and other greats, my first comment to my husband on viewing this monstrosity was "There was a time when this sort of thing ended up in the junkyard, where it belonged",

Someone else suggested it be called The Crunch because it reminded her, in a vague way, of the energy crisis . . .

It could, of course, perhaps be a symbol to government waste and stupidity, but surely another monument to this combination would be redundant.

Yet another suggested that it be called "The Peace of God", adding wryly, "because it passeth all understanding". My reason for raising this matter tonight is to get an answer from the government that will make some sense. The question I asked on September 14 was:

Does the minister intend to accept the advice of the hon. member for Cochrane, who has advised the government either to get rid of them or to place a shroud over them, or is he going to wait until the Canadian people place a shroud over the government?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have been requested to give an appropriate answer to the matter raised by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). I should like, first of all, to say I have been told that politicians are not necessarily experts in this particular field of art. For that reason, on December 23, 1964, the federal cabinet, by document No. 565-64, accepted a recommendation by the then minister of public works for the adoption of a fine arts policy to be instigated by the Department of Public Works in all buildings and programs serving the general public directly.

I should like to quote the answer given by the minister on September 14, as reported at page 6596 of Hansard, to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris:

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Public Works does not claim knowledge in the world of art. These specimens are chosen by a select committee composed of some of the best Canadian artists. It has been the policy of this and preceding governments to apply 1 per cent of the cost of a federal building to art surrounding the building. The question of what is art is a very subjective one and I would not want to impose my tastes nor the tastes of the hon. member on the public.

I spoke to the minister this afternoon and I should like to quote what he told me:

Someone has already stated, I do not recall if it was Shakespeare or my predecessor, that "Beauty is in the eyes of the beholder". What might appears to be a monstrosity in the eyes of one person could look like a masterpiece in the eye of another, which is why the government has wisely decided to establish an advisory committee composed of artists and supported by the National Gallery and the Canada Council who review the selections of these artists and proposed works of art. Who are we, mere mortals, to predict what in the future will be regarded as a masterpiece?

Those are the words of the minister.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—REQUEST THAT PENSIONS BE TIED TO INCREASES IN COST OF LIVING

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, October 17, as recorded at page 6958 of Hansard, I put this question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand):

In view of the fact that most pensions that come under the responsibility of the federal government either are, or soon will be, escalated by the full percentage increase in the cost of living, would the minister seek to prevail upon Canadian National Railways so that CN pensions can also be escalated not just by 2 per cent a year but by the full percentage increase in the cost of living?

The minister's answer was to the effect that pensions are negotiated between the unions and the railway companies and that I ought to have known that Dr. Deutsch was also looking into these matters. In reply I pointed out that collective bargaining between the companies and the unions did not include any representatives at the table from those already retired and that someone had to speak for them. I also pointed out that Dr. Deutsch's terms of reference did not include this area, namely, the escalating of the pensions of railway employees already retired.

Mr. Speaker, I believe from what I see across the way that the answer to my question tonight will be given by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Guay), my good friend from the neighbouring constituency of St. Boniface which I am happy to say is now part of my city of Winnipeg. I know where my hon. friend stands on this issue. He is just as concerned about it as I am. In his riding, as in mine, there are a great many Canadian National employees, both active and retired. In fact, the Transcona shops are in his constituency.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I wish tonight that somehow we could turn the tables so that the parliamentary secretary could ask the questions and I could give the answers. If he were going to ask the questions, what would he say? He would say, "Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre not agree that it is time for Canadian National pensions to be escalated every year, not just by two per cent but by the full increase in the cost of living? "He would also say, "Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre not agree that this is a matter that does not get negotiated at the bargaining table? Does he not agree that the only persons who are in a position to speak for the retired employees are those in parliament ant that it is the job of the government to tell Canadian National to get in step?"

If the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport put those questions to me, as I think he would like to do and I know he would do it with feeling, my reply to him would be that I agree absolutely. I agree, indeed I insist, that the time has come for Canadian National pensions to escalate every year by the full percentage increase in the cost of living, as most other pensions now do. I would say to the second question, "Yes, I agree that since the unions are not in a position to do anything about increasing the pensions of retired employees, it is up to the government to tell the Canadian National to get in step on this issue."

Now, since those are the answers that I would give to the parliamentary secretary if he were to put the questions to me, I hope he will reciprocate and give me the same answers to my questions that I would give to him.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to say that my own personal answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is that I agree with him wholeheartedly because I believe that the retired employees whom he has mentioned should certainly have their pensions increased by the full percentage relative to the cost of living. I also feel, and I have said it many times, that the railway employees should have pensions in parity with those of Air Canada and the civil service. I agree with that wholeheartedly, and let the hon. member rest assured that I have been saying this since 1968, since the first day I came to the House.

Speaking on behalf of the department with regard to the hon. member's question as recorded at page 6958 of Hansard, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) said in reply to the hon. member on October 17 of this year that he is quite sympathetic with their representations. He is just as keen as anyone to see future and past pensioners get the best deal possible. But the point he made was that these are matters for negotiation in the case of former workers already on pension and under negotiation in the case of today's workers. Negotiations are conducted between the union and management.

The fact of the matter is that the board of directors of the CNR has approved an increase of 2 per cent in pension payments to former employees and to widows of former employees. The increase, which takes effect from January 1, 1973, applies to all employees or their widows who retired on or before December 31, 1972. This decision was in response to representations made by the general chairman of the Canadian National Railways pension board and followed upon action taken during recent years to compensate pensioners for cost of living increases. In 1971, CNR increased individual payments by 2 per cent per year of retirement up to 1969, or more, and last year it increased by 4 per cent all pensions that had come into effect by the end of 1970, and by 2 per cent all pensions that had come into effect by the end of 1971.

The latest increase will affect over 32,000 pensioners presently receiving payments from the CN pension fund. It represents an increase of $11 million in the unfunded liability of the fund. This increase should not, of course, be confused with the pension rule changes requested by the general chairman and by a number of other labour groups for the adoption of a so-called 2 per cent per year of service formula as the basis for computing future pensions. That matter, as you are aware, is still the subject of collective bargaining and is particularly under discussion in current mediation proceedings with the non-operating unions.

I want to assure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that I am with him all the way with regard to the pensions of CNR workers.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

FISHERIES—SPORTS FISHING IN WATERS OFF VANCOUVER ISLAND—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I was beginning to believe that this was going to be an all-Manitoba night. First, may I say that I am pleased that the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries (Mr. Davis) is here tonight to participate. I know he is interested in this subject and I hope he will take the remarks I am going to make in the constructive sense in which I shall attempt to submit them.

On November 7 I asked the Minister of Fisheries what he planned to do to help restore sports fishing in the area around southern Vancouver Island. The minister acknowledged in his reply, as recorded at page 7624 of Hansard, that the cohoe runs were down but he did not appear to know why. He said discussions along the lines of moving the net fishermen were proceeding. I have a file full of letters from west coast fishermen describing the problem. I am sure the minister has a similar or larger file. The simple reason there are no cohoe for sports fishermen is that they are being decimated by the commercial fishermen. I, of course, do not want to stop the commercial fishing industry nor does anyone else, but a means must be devised whereby they can coexist. It is not impossible.

As the minister well knows, the fall-off in sports fishing began in 1957 when the net fleet was established at the western end of the Strait of Juan de Fuca in a move to get the salmon before the Americans did. This is the principal reason for the lack of cohoe in the fall season, but not the only reason. Expert opinion is that far too many cohoe are being killed by trollers fishing early in the Gulf of Georgia. The season opens in mid-April and cohoe are an illegal catch at that time. However, as the trollers are permitted to fish with hoochies and flashers, they catch up to one million cohoe by accident before the season opens on June 1.

It is difficult to determine exactly how valuable the sports fishing industry is to British Columbia. A Washington state study indicated that the Puget Sound sports fishing industry is worth $20 million per year. The McMynn study indicates that the B.C. salmon sports fishing industry is also worth $20 million per year. This study in 1964 estimated that 85,000 residents and 36,000 visitors were engaged in sports fishing and spent $19 million to catch only 1.6 per cent of the commercial catch. Clearly, the sports fishing industry pays a tremendous return for its share of the resource.

Mr. Roderick Haig-Brown, the world famous naturalist, estimates that there are now 300,000 sports fishermen attempting to catch fish from a supply that has been reduced to one-quarter of its former numbers. Surely all will agree that restoring these stocks is in the best interests of both commercial and sports fishermen. The people speaking for the west coast sports fishermen—naturalists, sportsmen, conservationists such as Alec Merriman, Haig-Brown, Rhys Davis, and Al Playfair—are not moved to this cause by a selfish desire to preserve something for themselves. They believe, that with proper leadership and management there can be sufficient fishing for 300,000 or more sports fishermen without seriously diminishing commercial fishing.

I would like to commend the minister for the initiatives he has taken in the area of hatcheries. I request that he show the same initiative in controlling the times and locations of commercial fishing. It has been recommended that, first, the net fishing should either go back to the river mouth fishing of former years or at least be located where it will not have its 98½ per cent cut of the supply before the sports fisherman gets his chance at his 1½ per cent, and secondly that the commercial fishermen might well stay out of the gulf until June 15. This would enable the 3 pounds to 4 pounds springs to put on some weight and would also eliminate the killing of thousands and thousands of young cohoe and undersized chinooks, fish which must be shaken off the hooks because they cannot be kept. At the very least, the commercial fishermen in the gulf should not be allowed to fish with hootchies and flashers.

I urgently request the minister to give immediate consideration to this matter. We have had two very bad years for sports fishing and cannot expect our tourists to be eternal optimists. More important, hundreds of thousands of us who like to try our luck are being deprived of one of sport's greatest thrills, a good British Columbia salmon on the end of a line and jumping.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) for his thoughtful remarks. In the next few weeks we will be having negotiations with the United States in respect of the sharing of salmon catches on the west coast, and I am hopeful that as a result we will be able to arrange our affairs in such a way that the escapement of fish of interest to sportsmen will improve not only around Victoria but also in the Strait of Georgia and off the west coast of British Columbia.

The salmon runs on the west coast of British Columbia are about as good as they were 40 or 50 years ago, but in respect of species some years are good and some are not so good. The sockeye run off the west coast of B.C. this year was the biggest since World War I, but it was a disaster in Alaska. Similarly, while sockeye was up in British Columbia, other species were down. The species of interest to sports fishermen, the cohoe and spring salmon, were somewhat below average.

A few minutes ago I phoned an official in the department on the west coast whose opinion I respect, and he told me that this year the cohoe which are normally resident in the Strait of Georgia were outside of the strait during the summer in the period when they feed and take a lure. This happens periodically for reasons that our scientists do not fully understand.

The escapement past the nets toward Victoria was roughly 50 per cent greater than the volume taken by commercial fishermen. Some 600,000 passed Victoria but were not feeding. Half of them went to the rivers and hatcheries on the Puget Sound side, and the rest to British Columbia rivers. Escapement both to hatcheries and British Columbia rivers was excellent this year, but they were not feeding as they went past Victoria.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DAVIS—REQUEST THAT MEMBER FOR GANDER-TWILLINGATE MAKE FULL WITHDRAWAL OF CHARGE THAT MINISTER DELIBERATELY MISLED HOUSE

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. I should like, through you, Mr. Speaker, to ask the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) whether he is prepared today to make a full and unequivocal withdrawal of the charge he made yesterday in the House to the effect that I deliberately misled the House.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Fisheries gave the Chair notice earlier today, as required by the Standing Orders, of his intention to raise this matter again today by way of question of privilege. Since receiving the minister's notice I have looked closely at what was said in debate yesterday when the Chair took exception to a charge made by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

After suggestions made by the Chair to the hon. member and to the House in general that a charge that another member deliberately misled the House is unparliamentary, the hon. member, perhaps not to the extent that the Chair would have liked, did say twice or three times that the statement he was making was that the minister had misled the House. It is, of course, well established that in debate a member can say at any time that another member is uttering a misleading statement. That has never been deemed to be unparliamentary.

The question I had to resolve yesterday was whether the withdrawal by the hon. member was satisfactory in view of the precedents and practice of the House. I had urged the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate to make a clear withdrawal. He made a statement which at the time I felt was satisfactory from the point of view of the Chair. I had invited hon. members who felt that perhaps they would like to contribute and give some guidance to the Chair on the matter to do so. I particularly at the time addressed myself to the Minister of Fisheries, and this did not evoke a response.

Hon. members know the rule to the effect that when a member has a question of privilege to raise it should be done immediately. When the matter in question was first brought up for consideration I had hoped that hon. members who felt they had a question of privilege or wanted to take part in that question of privilege, or who felt they were aggrieved in some way, would have assisted the Chair yesterday, and I doubt very much whether 24 hours later it is possible to revive a question of privilege which has been, in the opinion of the Chair at least, resolved.

The notice I received from the minister includes the suggestion that the matter was left unresolved by the Chair. That was not my impression.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would hope hon. members would refrain from either cheering or objecting to what the Chair is attempting to do at the present time. My thought was that, although the amendment or modification which had been made by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate was not entirely satisfactory, I was willing to accept it. Certainly I believe, in reading the record, I did indicate that so far as I was concerned this was closing the matter, and I did not expect that on a question of privilege the matter would be revived today. I would hope that under the circumstances we could allow the House to go on with its business.

I would like to reiterate what I said yesterday, that the House can operate efficiently only if members are prepared to respect the rules, traditions and practices of the House and to use parliamentary language. It seems to me we can have useful debates, for the benefit of the institution, by limiting ourselves to what are parliamentary expressions. When unparliamentary expressions are used I will consider it my duty to intervene and seek the co-operation of hon. members in using expressions that are accepted as parliamentary. I caution hon. members against excesses in language, and I am sure I will be able to count on their co-operation in the days, weeks or months ahead.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think it is an important matter that is before the House and was before the House yesterday. It is not my intention to make the situation more difficult, either for the Chair or for the House itself, but I do believe there is a basis for—

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the President of the Privy Council is speaking on a point of order. Perhaps he might be heard out, and then we can hear the hon. member for St. John's East.

Mr. McGrath: My point—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister is on a point of order.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I believe there was a basis for some misunderstanding about whether the question that had been raised yesterday had been finally resolved, and it is important because it does relate to the conduct of an hon. member of the House. I believe it is important that a few moments be given in order to have the situation stated as seen through the eyes of his colleagues in the House.

When the question was raised yesterday there were two suggestions made that final resolution of the problem be deferred until today, and it is my understanding that the matter did result in that decision. I draw to your attention, Sir, the final words of your own ruling to the effect—

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, with all respect, it seems to me that the government House leader, for whom I have the greatest respect, is questioning the ruling you have just made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1410)

Mr. Stanfield: With all respect to him, Sir, I do not think the House should hear him.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. House leader will see the difficulty of the Chair. The hon. Minister of Fisheries rose on a question of privilege, and there could have been the possibility of another person involved in the matter making a reply. I indicated that I had received notice, had given the matter serious thought and was prepared to make a ruling. I appreciate the importance of the matter, but I wonder whether it is possible at this point to revive the question after a ruling has been made. The President of the Privy Council rose on a point of order. In fairness to him I wanted to hear him out as I did yesterday hon. members who spoke on the question of privilege when it was raised on the initiative of the Chair. Perhaps the President of the Privy Council might indicate as quickly as possible what the point of order is on which he rises now.

Mr. MacEachen: The point of order, Mr. Speaker, relates strictly to the understanding with regard to whether the question of privilege had been finally resolved yesterday.

An hon. Member: The Speaker has ruled.

Mr. MacEachen: I am not in any way contesting the ruling of the Chair. I would draw to the attention of the Leader of the Opposition that I hope the respectful attitude he enjoins upon me toward the Speaker will be observed by his followers on the other side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. MacEachen: I am saying that yesterday we had the impression, Sir, and this is the point of order, that the matter had been left in abeyance. I base that misunderstanding on the final words of your judgment, namely:

[Mr. McGrath.]

> . . . perhaps I should be prepared to see what the hon. member will want to do tomorrow and accept for today the hon. member's half withdrawal.

I regret that I have placed the wrong interpretation on that sentence, Sir, and I do drop the matter out of respect for the Chair on the understanding that in the words used yesterday by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate he fully withdrew the allegation against the minister and that the rules of the House in your opinion have been fully satisfied. With that assurance, I will not pursue the matter further.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether any further ruling is required on the part of the Chair. Perhaps there was a misunderstanding in the interpretation of the words to which the hon. President of the Privy Council has referred. When I spoke those words I had reference to the suggestion that had been made during the long and numerous exchanges that took place yesterday afternoon that the matter might be revived today by an hon. member who had indicated that perhaps it would be revived. That is what I had alluded to, that if it were revived then at that point another ruling would have to be made. But it was my intention and my hope that the matter had been resolved and that, as the hon. minister suggested, the rules of the House had been preserved. Whether the practice had been fully preserved is a matter of interpretation. I am not sure that the rules of the House and our practices are always fully observed and respected. Perhaps yesterday we did not attain this measure of perfection. I would have liked personally that the matter be resolved more clearly.

I hope that this incident will help the Chair and hon. members, if another occasion such as this arises, to resolve the matter to the satisfaction of the whole House.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—LACK OF FUNDS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity which concerns jobs for our unemployed.

In view of the large number of serious and highly valuable projects submitted under the local initiatives program and in view of the insufficiency of the funds at the disposal of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras), I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

> That the House ask the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates to study this problem and that the President of the Treasury Board be called before this committee as a witness, following which the committee be requested to report to the House by November 30, 1973.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

INDIAN ACT

MEASURE TO REMOVE DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN WHO MARRY NON-INDIANS

Mrs. Albanie Morin (Louis-Hébert) moved for leave to introduce a bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Indian Act".

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mrs. Morin: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to correct to a certain extent the injustice and the discrimination towards Indian women, resulting from the implementation of section 12 (1)(b) of the Indian Act.

[English]

With the repeal of paragraph (b) of section 12(1) and the introduction of the amendment contained in this bill, a woman who is entitled to be registered as an Indian and who marries a non-Indian may elect to file with the minister an abandonment of entitlement to register as an Indian, and this may be filed at any time during her marriage. It ensues, therefore, that an Indian woman who has chosen to retain her Indian status may return to the reserve in the event of a divorce or judicial separation.

[Translation]

However, Mr. Speaker, this bill does not remove completely the discrimination towards the Indian woman who marries a white man, since paragraph 12 (1)(a)—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I tried to give the hon. member for Louis-Hébert all possible freedom. She could now try to complete her comment as briefly as possible. She knows that under Standing Order 68(2), she must confine her comment to a succinct explanation.

Mrs. Morin: Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief.

[English]

If all Canadians are equal before the law, and if there is really no discrimination because of sex, it should ensue that the Indian woman, who is also a Canadian, should not be discriminated against because of her sex.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ENERGY

ANALYSIS OF EFFECT OF PRESENT SITUATION ON ECONOMIC GROWTH AND EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I would ask him whether the government has undertaken a detailed analysis of the present energy situation and how it is going to affect economic growth and particularly employment this winter and next year? If the government has undertaken such a study, when it will be available and will it be made available to the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, this question is being studied. There are many aspects of it, including the possible regional impact of even voluntary restraint on the use of some forms of energy. Whatever action is required as a result of that study will be announced in due course.

STUDY OF EFFECT OF INCREASED PETROLEUM PRODUCT PRICES ON INDUSTRIES IN QUEBEC AND ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. What study has he undertaken to ascertain the economic effect of the increased price of petroleum products upon industries in areas suffering from regional disparity? I am referring particularly to the Atlantic provinces and Quebec where there has been a substantial increase in energy prices.

● (1420)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, a number of initiatives have been undertaken. I have discussed the matter internally with my officials and have ordered an assessment of the matters the Leader of the Opposition has mentioned. Two weeks ago I met with officials of Shaheen Natural Resources which has a new refinery at Come-By-Chance, with a view to seeing how much, if any of their product might be diverted for use in eastern Canada. In addition, I am in constant consultation with my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, on a general co-ordination of activity. On a fourth point to which I replied, I believe, to the hon. member for Saint John a few days ago, we have been negotiating and discussing with the province of New Brunswick the question of expanding nuclear power generating capability, not only for New Brunswick but for the Atlantic provinces generally.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister directed his response to the question of adequacy of supply of petroleum. My question was directed to the additional cost. Has the minister made a study to ascertain the effect upon industries in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces where prices have gone up substantially and further price increases are said to be following? Has the minister canvassed the situation, and can he assure the House that there are in fact no substantial industries of importance in those areas whose future will be seriously affected this winter and next year by the substantial increase in the cost of petroleum?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I apologize that my reply was incomplete. I did indicate that such a study is under way. I would be less than honest if I said it was complete at this moment. However, in the case of Newfoundland representations have been made to us primarily on the matter of supply and the same, I think it would be fair to say, for the province of Nova Scotia. It was to this I directed my initial efforts, but to this moment at least I have not heard of any serious industrial or economic slowdown as a result of price. I was seeking to contact the premier of New Brunswick half an hour ago but was unsuccessful. When I have a more detailed report I will be glad to make it available to the Leader of the Opposition and the House.

PETROLEUM—INTENTION OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING LIFTING OF VOLUNTARY PRICE FREEZE ON JANUARY 31 NEXT—REQUEST FOR DEBATE BEFORE REMOVAL

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether it is still the intention and policy of the government that the voluntary price freeze be lifted on January 31 and that the domestic price for petroleum products be at the imported price at Montreal? Is that still the policy and intention of the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In general terms, Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. I would refer the hon. member and the House to the statement I made on September 4 to the effect that we had obtained agreement from the major petroleum companies to accept a voluntary freeze until January 31. This is the undertaking I gave and this is the undertaking which I believe they intend to respect.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the changes that have taken place since September 4 and in view of the very serious likelihood of massive increases in the price of petroleum products if the freeze is lifted on January 31, can the Prime Minister undertake that parliament will be informed before the lifting of the price freeze and parliament will have an opportunity to debate and decide that issue instead of leaving it entirely to the government, in view of the very serious consequences to all consumers in Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that parliament would want to debate this subject. I would hope they would want to debate it after the effects of the lifting of the freeze are evident and the government policy attendant thereto is known to the House. Whether that can be done in the next few days or later will depend very much on two things, first, House time and, second, the time at which the government announces the rest of its energy policy.

Mr. Lewis: Following the Prime Minister's reply which suggests that parliament is to close the door after the serious consequences of an increase in the price of petroleum products hits the Canadian people, if that is what he has in mind will he undertake that the government and parliament will take the power to roll those prices back? Or are the Canadian people to be stuck with higher prices no matter what parliament may say?

Mr. Trudeau: I did not intend to convey the impression—I am sorry if I did—that this matter could only be debated after February 1. What I intended to indicate was that members should be in a position to know government policy related thereto in some detail and to assess for themselves, perhaps in advance of February 1, what the effect might be.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South may ask a supplementary, but the Chair is attempting to complete the first round of questioning, following which we can return to the other supplementaries being sought by a number of hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Does the last answer of the Prime Minister mean he is undertaking that a statement will be made within the next week or two by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or the Prime Minister himself on energy policy before we rise for the Christmas recess?

Mr. Trudeau: That might not necessarily be the case. What I indicated was that it could be the case.

ADULT RETRAINING COURSES—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF LENGTH

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

As the adult retraining program limits the courses to 52 weeks and that in many cases this restriction does not allow the students to complete their training, could the minister tell the House if he is considering immediate measures to lengthen the time of these courses?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I believe I should like to take that question under examination and as notice. I will try to get a reply for the hon. member shortly.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS—VOLUNTARY PRICE FREEZE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for York South. Since there will obviously be a very sharp increase in the cost of gasoline, heating oil and other petroleum products when the government lifts the freeze on January 31, what was the objective in putting on the freeze and then suddenly lifting it, with a resulting sharp impact on the economy instead of allowing prices to increase in a series of stages?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is debate.

IMPACT OF CRISIS ON FOOD PRICES—STUDY BY DEPARTMENT OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has the minister caused an investigation or examination to take place into the impact of the energy crisis on food prices? I ask this question especially in light of the statement by the Minister of Agriculture who is reported to have said that food prices will increase as a result of the energy crisis.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is being looked into within the department.

DEVELOPMENT OF COAL LEASES IN CUMBERLAND COUNTY, N.S., HELD BY CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion based on his statement regarding conversations he has had with provincial premiers. Did any discussion take place with the premier of Nova Scotia with regard to leases on coal in Cumberland County now held by Devco as a result of its takeover of Dosco?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Not specifically, although this morning I did make contact with the president of Devco who will be here in Ottawa for meetings with me on December 3 and 4 at which time this matter, among others, will be explored.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—MEASURES TO INCREASE SUPPLY AND AMELIORATE RISING PRICES IN LIGHT OF ECONOMIC COUNCIL REPORT—POSSIBLE NATIONAL POWER GRID

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the conclusion reached by the Economic Council of Canada that the inflation rate in this country is out of line with that of six other countries in the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, is the Prime Minister planning any new measures which would tend to increase supply in order to ameliorate the rising price situation in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In response to the preamble to the question I must point out that it is only correct if it refers to a very short period. If the hon. member would look at the total period over which this comparison has been made he would find that the Canadian government has done considerably better than most other countries.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Prime Minister's selectivity in the use of figures is very good; the situation is getting worse instead of better. Can the Prime Minister advise the House whether the government has taken any decision respecting a national power grid or whether he intends to leave the situation as it is at present so that Manitoba will feel obliged to sell additional energy south of the border?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that this question will have to be referred to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who has made statements previously on the government's position on an energy grid. It would probably call for a longer statement than either he or I could give in the question period.

Mr. Hellyer: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Prime Minister would describe the present policy of the Minister of Finance, and presumably that of the government, which has resulted in lower real output in the third quarter of 1973, in turn resulting obviously in higher prices, as a policy of moderated expansion or induced contraction?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member is not suggesting that kind of question is in order. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

ENERGY

POSITION OF SAUDI ARABIA ON SUPPLYING OIL TO CANADA THROUGH PORTLAND-MONTREAL PIPELINE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister arising from the question put to him by the hon. member for York South. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has been informed by Saudi Arabia that they do not intend to permit the shipment of oil that will go through the pipeline from Portland, Maine, to Montreal? Has the government had that information from the government of Saudi Arabia? If so, what steps is the government taking to meet this situation since it involves close to half a million barrels of oil per day for the Montreal market?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to refer the question to the minister. I know there has been some contradictory information on what some of the Arab states are doing with shipments of oil and I would not like to answer that particular question without checking.

STEPS TO CONTROL EXPORT OF HOME HEATING OIL FROM ATLANTIC PROVINCES AND CENTRAL CANADA

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion regarding the export of home heating fuel which for the first nine months of this year exceeded the amount shipped for all of last year, but more particularly the fact that since October 15 shipments have been in excess of the amount we shipped for the first six months of this year. Is the government taking any steps to control the export of home heating fuel from the Atlantic provinces and from central Canada?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my reply to the Leader of the Opposition, I have had some discussion, specifically with the owners of the new Shaheen refinery at Come-By-Chance which will be coming on stream during December. The basis of my questioning of them was whether or not a technique could be found through which the products of that particular refinery could be diverted for use in eastern Canada. I can say that they were most co-operative in their initial responses and undertook to advise me as soon as possible. I assume I will be getting a reply from them next week.

So far as other refineries in Atlantic Canada are concerned, the information I have is that the vast majority of their production is in fact now sold in eastern Canada and only relatively small amounts are exported. In so far as those small amounts are concerned, I believe that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has the matter under examination in regard to the export permit system, as he indicated some time ago.

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will be recognized for a last supplementary, and after that I will recognize the hon. member for Peel South.

Mr. Douglas: What I was asking the minister, Mr. Speaker, was this. In view of the fact our exports of home heating fuel for the first nine months were about five million barrels and since October 15, when export controls were supposed to have gone on, we have exported 360 million barrels in that short period, what is the government doing to ensure that sufficient home heating fuel is being held in the area east of the Ottawa Valley to meet domestic demands?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had answered that question, at least to some extent. In my own case, the conversations I have had have been limited primarily to officials of refineries in the Atlantic provinces, but I know the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has been doing the same in the case of other refineries. I think he has made the public statement, which I understand to be government policy, that heating fuel or any other kind of energy source will not be exported from Canada at the expense of Canadian consumers.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peel South.

Mr. Douglas: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a point of order. I will recognize the hon. member for Peel South in a moment.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I inadvertently said 360 million barrels. I meant 3,640,000 barrels.

[Mr. Douglas.]

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DETAILS OF OIL EXPORT TAX AND COLLECTION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that yesterday in committee the Minister of Finance said that he did not know which oil companies were reserving funds to pay the oil export tax, and in fact did not even know whether or not the tax was being collected, would the Prime Minister advise the House or have one of his ministers advise the House on motions as to the details of the tax and its collection?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this will certainly come to light when the House debates the ways and means motion on the tax itself, which will be put before the House in the normal course of events.

[Later:]

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Prime Minister is in connection with the oil export tax. In view of the great concern this tax has caused in regard to national unity in Canada, and in view of the fact the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have made contradictory statements about this tax, will the Prime Minister show some leadership and tell the House just what is going on?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

MANPOWER

USE OF IMPORTED PORTUGUESE WORKERS IN LUMBER INDUSTRY—POLICY OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Can he tell the House if his department has signed agreements with some forest companies concerning the import of manpower of Portuguese origin and does the minister intend to make public the government's policy on this matter?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge at this moment no such agreements have been made. It is not impossible that some companies have approached officials of my department in various locations and discussed the possibility of offshore seasonal workers. As to the latter part of the question, I have stated the policy in the past. Under certain circumstances, where Canadians are not available for a particular job, we have considered, as in the case of southern Ontario farmers, the importation of seasonal workers for fixed periods of time and under strict contractual arrangements.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister.

I would like to tell him that this concerns forestry manpower and in the case I am concerned with, the import of Portuguese manpower. Could the minister ensure the House that serious measures are being taken to avoid the exploitation of these foreign workers, as was the case for Mexican and Portuguese workers imported for the tobacco and fruit harvest in Ontario?

[English]

Mr. Andras: As a matter of federal jurisdiction we would only have a say where they come into Canada under contracts as offshore seasonal workers; in the past they have come mainly from the Caribbean. If that is the arrangement that the forest industry is seeking, then certainly we would have an influence over their working conditions; otherwise it would be a matter of provincial jurisdiction and provincial legislation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LIVING CONDITIONS OF CANADIAN CONTINGENT IN MIDDLE EAST PEACEKEEPING FORCE

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Defence. It is based on a recent news report contrasting the sorry plight of the members of the Canadian contingent with the living conditions enjoyed by the Polish contingent in the Middle East peacekeeping force. What arrangements were made prior to the dispatch of the Canadian contingent to the Middle East, and what steps have been taken to remedy the situation as it relates to the living conditions of our servicemen in that area?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, our Canadian personnel are able to be self-sufficient in the field. They have 30 days' rations; they have their own water purification system, their own generators, their own batteries and their own tents. My reports are that they are settling in very well.

STUDY OF ECONOMIC EFFECTS OF CONSERVATION MEASURES TO BE ANNOUNCED

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Having regard to the fact the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will be making a statement on energy conservation measures next Monday, has the Prime Minister given any specific instructions to his cabinet ministers to study the effects on the economy these energy conservation measures will have?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I believe this is another way of putting the question that was asked earlier by the Leader of the Opposition. My answer is yes, we are looking at the effects of these conservation measures, and I indicated that we were particularly doing so having regard to the regional impact.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of reports that the Prime Minister has expressed an interest in the presidency of Simon Fraser University, and in view of reports that a faculty official of Simon Fraser has been in touch with the Prime Minister with regard to this appointment, will he inform the House whether he has had any discussions about becoming—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will, of course, appreciate that a question of that type is entirely out of order. The hon. member cannot ask a question in those terms. The hon. member can ask questions of a minister on matters within his ministerial responsibility, but I am sure that on reflection he will agree his question is entirely out of order.

Mr. Hees: Tell us when you take over. It will be nice out there for you with Jimmy and the whole family.

REASON FOR REFUSAL OF LOCAL INITIATIVES GRANT TO FAMILY PLANNING ASSOCIATION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact the application of the Family Planning Association of British Columbia for a local initiatives grant has been refused, will the minister give the reason for such refusal?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I must admit to the hon. member that I am not aware of the specific details of this matter. I will have to look into it, just as I would in the case of a question about any individual project. I will do so and communicate with the hon. member.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that during the past year British Columbia has suffered more than 8,000 abortions, more than 11 per cent illegitimate births, an increase of 11 per cent in gonorrhea and 5,000 cases of children—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure these statistics are very interesting, but the hon. member knows that she should ask a question and not convey information for the benefit of the House.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I was not able to hear you.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is simply suggesting to the hon. member that a question should be asked rather than information being conveyed to the House.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I was laying the groundwork for the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, before I ask the question I should like to raise a point of order. There seems in this House to be some idea that these subjects I raise are not of interest to Canadians across the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): A schoolboy type of tittering goes on when these questions are raised.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): I want to say that the people in my riding are interested in these matters. As a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that it would behoove members of this House to give a respectful hearing even if they do not believe their people are interested, and I suggest they are wrong in that regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): In view of the facts I have just cited, would the minister undertake to review this decision to reject a preventive service, the cost benefits of which would be at least 20 to one?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly congizant of the very interesting and distressing information the hon. member has conveyed. I will look at the project again, although, with regret, it may involve a program that should be conducted under other measures than the Local Initiatives Program. These projects have as a basic criterion and prime objective the provision of employment.

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE SHORTAGE OF FUEL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport who indicated the other day that he saw no indication of an early shortage of fuel for aircraft in Canada. Has he had occasion to re-examine the situation in view of claims by responsible people connected with the aviation industry that there is in fact the prospect of a shortage and that there is a large leakage toward the United States?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, no gas is carried to the United States. At the present time, airlines are bound by annual contracts with oil companies in Montreal to deliver a certain supply of gas. Some companies have already taken delivery of all the fuel provided in their contract, in order not to buy gas in the United States or to save their quota there. Those companies are experiencing a shortage of gas, but neither Air Canada nor CP Air have yet cancelled a flight. The problem does not affect companies which have already obtained the quantity of fuel provided in their contract with Canadian companies.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, is the minister certain of the fact that there will be no fuel shortage for planes?

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway).]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure. No more than the Leader of the Official Opposition, the government and the Canadian people do I know whether there will be a shortage of fuel or oil this year.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST THAT FUNDS BE DOUBLED

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the fact that the funds allocated to the Local Initiatives Program are clearly inadequate, and that the project evaluation is nearly completed, can the minister advise the House, before it is too late, whether he is considering the possibility of doubling the funds presently available in order to be able to subsidize most of the projects submitted?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question of additional funding for local initiatives projects is under consideration, as I indicated earlier. This will be judged in light of current employment figures. If there is an announcement to be made I will make it in the House.

[Later:]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. In view of the minister's statement that the question of additional funding is under consideration, and in view of the very short time remaining for carrying out these projects, can he tell the House when he will decide whether or not to grant additional funds and on what date he will make his announcement?

[English]

Mr. Andras: Just as soon as possible, Mr. Speaker. I am quite aware of the urgency of this decision.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—POSITION OF APPLICATIONS BY NATIVE PEOPLE FOR GRANTS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of a recent directive sent to the chairmen of the constituency advisory groups indicating that projects proposed by native people should be given preference over all others, may I ask whether this has become part of the Local Initiatives Program? In other words, is an advantage to be given to projects proposed by native people?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I did send a telegram to the hon. members involved and to the constituency advisory groups. It was not a directive; it was an expression of a request to give at least equal consideration to requests from native people for access to funds to fund projects in those constituencies where native projects were being submitted. I repeat, it was not a directive; it was a request for equal attention so they would not be bypassed, which was the indication in some cases.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the moment has come to remind hon. members that we will soon be running out of time. There are three, four or five hon. members wanting to ask supplementary questions on this subject, which would eliminate other hon. members who are still waiting to ask questions. For the moment I will recognize the hon. member for Mackenzie.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact it would appear that on the administrative level these projects have been given priority, why were the amounts available reduced by 25 per cent with the result that all other communities are not given an equal opportunity to participate under LIP?

Mr. Speaker: Over, please. That is debate.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PERCENTAGE OF INCREASE IN WORKERS' PREMIUMS

Mr. J. R. Is the minister aware that the recent increase in the applicable allowable earnings ceiling, on which he did not comment in his statement, in fact means that a large percentage of working Canadians will pay an increase of 48.7 per cent?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I did not announce the increase in the eligible earnings, and therefore the increase in the maximum eligible benefits, simply because even the statement I made was criticized for its length. However, I did comment on that afterwards.

QUEBEC—ALLEGED DELAY IN PROCESSING CLAIMS FOR BENEFITS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of recent reports that indicate delays in paying legitimate claims to unemployed persons in the province of Quebec are far greater than in the rest of the country, can the minister explain the reason for this and indicate what immediate corrective action we can expect?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise, but again I would plead with the hon. member to give me specific instances of cases and I will be glad to step in and correct whatever administrative errors there may be.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO TRITON INDUSTRIES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It concerns a PAIT grant of $750,000 to a company called Collins Radio Canada which is 99 per cent owned by the Collins Radio Company of Dallas, Texas. In view of the fact this company, with the use of the PAIT grant, was able to bid successfully on a Canadian Coastguard contract, and in view of the fact that Triton Industries, a wholly owned Canadian company, has manufactured for some time exactly the same kind of equipment and the federal government failed to advise that company of the opportunity—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, Will the hon. member kindly ask his question.

Mr. Leggatt: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am getting to my question. In view of the failure of the federal government to advise Triton Industries of the opportunity to bid on that contract, placing the company in financial difficulty now—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Leggatt: —will the minister seek, through the Canada Development Corporation, some assistance to investigate this wholly owned Canadian company which is now under bid—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to rule that is a representation. The hon. member has to assume that the representation he has made to the minister will be taken into account.

Oral Questions

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

SUGGESTED LOWERING OF TEMPERATURE TO SAVE FUEL

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. In view of the complications in turning out the lights in federal buildings at night, would the minister, in an effort to regain his lost prestige, start a campaign to reduce the energy consumed in heating federal government buildings, starting with this building which at present is an energy wasting and unhealthy 76 degrees?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the complications are only in the mind of the hon. member. If and when the government decides to announce a full program of conservation of energy and light, it will be done in the proper fashion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CRIMINAL CODE

ABORTION—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON VERDICT IN MORGENTALER CASE

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since the decision rendered in Dr. Morgentaler's case runs counter to the Criminal Code and that it somewhat puts the stamp of approval on the abortion on request principle, what position will the government take in this respect?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the question has already been asked. If, nevertheless, the right hon. Prime Minister is willing to reply, I have no objection; I feel however that the question has already been asked a number of times in exactly the same terms which the hon. member has just used.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FINAL COMPOSITION OF CANADIAN CONTINGENT IN MIDDLE EAST PEACEKEEPING FORCE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Would the minister tell the House whether the final composition of the Canadian component in the United Nations truce force in the Suez has yet been completed? If so, have the personnel been designated and do they include any component of the Canadian Airborne Regiment?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, discussions are still taking place with the United Nations in New York. There has been no formal invitation for additional Canadian personnel at this time but we expect, as these discussions develop, that there will be a role in the logistics area for additional Canadian troops.

LABOUR RELATIONS

HALIFAX-DARTMOUTH DOCKWORKERS DISPUTE—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEDIATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. So that the port of Halifax does not contribute beyond its capability to energy conserving measures over the next few weeks, can the minister indicate what progress has been made between the two parties through the mediator appointed by him?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give too many details other than to indicate to the hon. member that Mr. Gibbons is meeting with the parties. I do not know whether he will be able to resolve the difficulty. Of course we are optimistic and hope he will be able to be of assistance in getting the parties together.

Mr. Forrestall: Can the Minister of Labour indicate whether or not the mediator, in reporting to him, gave any indication of how long the mediation process might continue?

Mr. Munro: No, he did not, Mr. Speaker, but in conversation with me he did indicate that the dispute has boiled down to two principal issues, and that could be regarded optimistically, I believe.

AGRICULTURE

CROP DAMAGE, NORTHERN ALBERTA—DEPARTMENTAL SURVEY AND FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE—ALLEVIATION OF FEED SHORTAGE

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Have he or his officials completed the survey of the crop damage in northern Alberta caused by an early and abnormal snowfall, and is he in a position to announce to the House whether the federal government will be announcing any form of financial assistance to the farmers who have suffered crop losses and a program to alleviate the problem of feed shortages which exist in that part of the country?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, before we participate in any program such as this we have to receive a formal request from the province concerned. I have checked my files and I find that as of yesterday there had been no such request from Alberta. I understand that our officials have nearly completed the survey so far as crops under snow are concerned and I am waiting for a final report from them.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—DATE OF TABLING OF GRANT FIGURES FOR CONSTITUENCIES

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that Renfrew county is a special area under DREE because of its high unemployment rate and according to figures I have seen it is getting $81,000 versus $526,000 for Rosedale under the Local Initiatives Program, I wonder when the minister will make these figures available to members of parliament, because they are already published and known within the civil service?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think they will be tabled tomorrow.

SHIPPING

NEW COASTING TRADE POLICY—SERVING OF NOTICE TO BRITISH GOVERNMENT OF WITHDRAWAL FROM COMMONWEALTH SHIPPING AGREEMENT

Mr. Paddy Neale (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In light of the new coasting trade policy for Canada announced by the minister on September 24, can the minister inform the House whether notice has been served on the British government of Canada's intention to withdraw from the British Commonwealth merchant shipping agreement? Further, if this has not been done, will he indicate to the House when that notice will be served?

● (1500)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will have to check whether the notice was served. It was our intention to serve it as soon as possible. I may be able to inform the hon. member tomorrow if this has been done effectively.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—REASON FOR DELAY IN HEARINGS BY GIBSON COMMITTEE

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would he advise why the Gibson Committee to consider the Pickering Airport decision has not yet got off the ground and held any hearings or otherwise communicated with the public, and could the minister also advise whether the government's decision on this project to date has taken into account the projected energy crisis and the possible decline in flight volumes we may experience in future years?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the board has been nominated and constituted. Offices have been secured, and I think preparations are now being made for public hearings. If the hon. gentleman wants to know more about the activities of the board there is nothing to prevent him getting in touch with the president, because it is an autonomous board. So far as the energy problem is concerned, this is something that should be brought to the attention of the commission.

PICKERING—REASON FOR DELAY IN PAYING EXPERTS WHO TESTIFIED AT EXPROPRIATION PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works, but for the benefit of the Minister of Transport may I first say that communications have been sent to the board and no replies have been forthcoming. Can the Minister of Public Works indicate why the objectors and the expert witnesses who appeared before the expropriation hearings on the aiport a year ago have not yet received the $10,000 owing to them, and does the government realize it has become a defaulting debtor in this matter?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into this matter. My recollection is that all those who have agreed to a settlement have received their cheques, but if this is not the case the situation will be remedied.

Mr. Atkey: I asked about witnesses.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House resumed, from Monday, November 19, consideration of Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions in relation to the report stage of Bill C-132, An Act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons. Call in the members.

And the members having been called in.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? The question is on the amendment in the name of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), to Motion No. 2, in the name of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay).

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Peters) which was negatived on the following division.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Gillespie moved that Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before we move to third reading I should like the privilege of moving that a well deserved encomium be expressed to the Clerk Assistant.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Clerk Assistant is inquiring whether the hon. member is using a parliamentary word.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I gather that by consent the motion will be put at this time.

Mr. Gillespie moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

● (1620)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether the minister is rising to speak at this stage. If he is, perhaps the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North would want to defer to the minister to allow him to open the debate, and the hon. member will be recognized immediately thereafter. Again, I am not sure whether the minister is rising for that purpose.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) for accepting the suggestion of the Chair and giving me an opportunity to introduce third reading.

It is now almost nine months, perhaps a little over nine months since this bill received first reading. It was some time back in March and April when the House debated second reading and approved the foreign investment review bill in principle. After that the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs held numerous meetings and received evidence from many persons—spokesmen for business, the labour movement, provincial governments and other interested groups. I and my officials appeared before the committee on several occasions. Subsequently, a number of amendments were proposed by members in committee. Some are now incorporated in the bill. Most are technical in nature. Others are intended to improve the administration of the legislation, and still others deal with such matters as the requirement to take into account provincial representations. This process has given us a better bill. I want to commend the committee for its work and to thank its members for their efforts.

Finally, during the past two weeks the House debated proposed amendments during the report stage, and adopted two of them as recently as yesterday. In short, Mr. Speaker, this bill has been subjected to lengthy and detailed scrutiny by members of the House. The time has now come to give the legislation our approval.

All of you are familiar with the background to the foreign investment review bill—the very high levels of foreign control of Canadian business, and the growing concern of the Canadian people. The work of my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray), who has given his name to the most exhaustive study of this area, contributed in a very important way to the understanding by the public of this problem.

The figures on foreign control of Canadian business have been cited many times. This makes them no less important today. They bear repeating. No less than 60 per cent of the capital employed in our manufacturing industries is controlled by foreign businesses. The figures are even higher for particular manufacturing sectors. For example, for rubber it is almost 100 per cent; automobiles and parts, 98 per cent; chemicals, 81 per cent, and electrical apparatus 75 per cent. In petroleum and gas, the comparable figure is 74 per cent, and for other mining 73 per cent. These industries are among the principal goods producing sectors of our economy. They are the engines of our economic growth. They are also the vital base that supports a large part of our service sector. They help to shape the character and quality of employment opportunities available to Canadians.

The Canadian future, Mr. Speaker, is not something that just happens. We, the elected representatives of the Canadian people, have the power, and more than that the obligation to help shape that future, for no country offers a greater opportunity to its citizens to share in building a future. At no time in our history have we had a better opportunity than we have now to build a distinctive Canada. It is our choice if we wish to make it. It is a question of political will, no more, no less. Bill C-132 is an important part in the exercising of that choice, in expressing that political will.

The kind of Canada we want to build must be more than a mere appendage of foreign corporate giants south of the border and the resource hungry multinational firms of other industrialized countries. We must look to the day when these astonishing figures on foreign control are more moderate, when Canadians themselves have an adequate degree of control over the Canadian economy, and when those Canadian firms that are foreign controlled are nevertheless more oriented to the needs and potentials of Canada.

This bill is an important instrument in support of our objectives for Canadian industrial development. As I have said on other occasions, those objectives can be summarized in six propositions: one, the achievement of the maximum attainable levels of employment to match the current and future growth of the labour force; two, the development of an efficient processing and manufacturing industry capable of meeting competition at home and abroad; three, the increased up-grading of our natural resources prior to export to maximize Canada's economic return; four, to provide for greater domestic control of the Canadian economy so as to create conditions conducive to greater Canadian entrepreneurship at home and abroad; five, to increase national income and to provide for regional economic expansion which will reduce regional disparities; six, To contribute to improvement in the quality of life in all parts of Canada by creating satisfying jobs for Canadians and by reducing the harmful effects of industrial activity on the natural and social environment. These six objectives are clearly central to our task.

Just as clearly this bill underlines how inter-connected are our industrial objectives and a coherent set of industrial policies. Our objectives for greater Canadian control of our domestic economy are interwoven with the other objectives. Just as clearly, our policies on foreign investment are interwoven with the other major policy areas. In short to achieve our objectives, to give effect to a coherent set of policies, and to implement our strategies for individual industries we need the passage of Bill C-132. This bill focuses on control, not ownership, because it is the actual power to make decisions rather than the mere fact of share ownership that affects the performance of subsidiaries in Canada.

Federal policy does not aim at cutting Canada off from foreign direct investment. Such investment has played an important role in our past economic development and, in my opinion, certain kinds of foreign investments will continue to have an important contribution to make in our future growth. Let us not forget that we still have the fastest growing labour force in the world. But Canada has also paid a substantial price because of this phenomenon. There are at least two dimensions to these economic costs.

The first is the impact on the general economic environment in Canada, the result of having such a vast proportion of our productive economy controlled by foreign corporations. We have become too accustomed to expecting others to do our research, product innovation and market development, and too accustomed to others telling us what we might do. We have not become nearly accustomed enough to deciding for ourselves what we should do. The degree of foreign control has dulled or inhibited entrepreneurship in Canada by Canadians in Canadian firms. Many Canadians have become too accustomed to playing second fiddle. If we continue to rely so heavily on others, we shall never ourselves become more innovative. If we lose the power to innovate in a changing world we turn over the future development of Canada to those who retain that power.

Earlier this year in Vancouver the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced the government's policy of insisting upon the further processing or upgrading of our natural resources prior to export. In a number of public speeches since that time, I have repeated the importance of this policy announcement and the importance of the bill now before us in giving effect to that policy objective. Under Bill C-132 the foreign investment review agency will have the power to obtain a commitment from a foreign corporation making a direct investment in a Canadian raw material enterprise when that investment involves control.

Similarly, the sourcing of components in Canadian operations—sometimes not too different in principle from raw material development where a foreign investor ships machinery in in order to ship unprocessed raw materials out—will be covered by screening where there are changes of control or foreign control involving the establishment of a new business. One has only to talk to senior officers of many of our leading firms—subsidiaries of foreign parents—to know that they do not have free access to the markets of the world for their products, nor do they have freedom to decide on the products that they will produce in their Canadian factories for distribution in Canada.

The point is simply this: There have been real costs to Canada. Yes, there have been important benefits, too. But our responsibility now is to ensure that we maximize those benefits and minimize those costs for the future industrial development of Canada. Only by conscious and purposeful effort to break this self-perpetuating chain of independence, an effort demanding active and vigorous support by businessmen and government, shall we succeed.

Will the boardrooms of New York, Detroit, London, Dusseldorf and Tokyo recognize Canada's needs and abilities? Will they do so if we do not insist? The answer is clearly, no. Do the decisions of other governments sometimes unreasonably deprive Canadians of legitimate economic opportunities? I think here the record says clearly, yes. These questions could, of course, be asked in relation to international trade as well as international investment. In the case of trade, governments have reached a high degree of agreement on the rules of the game. There are accepted procedures for international negotiation. These procedures assure Canadians that if their government negotiates skilfully, their economic interests will be protected and advanced. The rules of the GATT, while not perfect, provide considerable assurance against a return to the mistakes of the 1930s.

But, in the matter of direct investment, there is no comparable set of rules binding governments or multinational businesses. It is, therefore, not unreasonable for national governments to concern themselves with the impact of direct investment on their national economies. For the Canadian government, in particular, the need to be concerned is especially compelling, in view of the uniquely high degree of foreign control in our manufacturing and resource sectors. The fact is that both the structure and the growth of our economy are heavily influenced by corporate decisions taken outside our border. And these business decisions can be affected by the actions of governments which are not answerable to the Canadian electorate. Canadians want the advantages of international investment, as well as of international trade, and they want access to the new technologies developed elsewhere. But at the same time they want some reassurance that they are not unduly and sometimes detrimentally controlled by forces which they cannot influence. Canadians want to know that they retain considerable independence to determine their future.

Hon. members may be aware that I have spoken on several occasions about the fact that the government's approach on foreign investment rests on two pillars. One pillar is built on that package of policies—tax measures, investment aids, research and development incentives, export assistance, support for small business, are examples—which are aimed at encouraging Canadian businessmen to do more. I shall comment more fully on this aspect of our policy in a few moments.

The second pillar is based on that group of measures which might be called safeguards, those aimed at assuring for Canadians that certain vital national interests will be protected. The Tories would try to put down these safeguard measures down as negative measures. But I say to them that they are positive measures aimed at protecting and developing Canada. To listen to some of the Tories, Mr. Speaker, one would think there should be no restraints, no restrictions; that we do not need restrictions, that there is no reason to screen foreign investment. They say, Mr. Speaker, that they would rely on guidelines and incentives alone. Mr. Speaker, not all hon. members in the Progressive Conservative Party believe that myth but some do, and we have heard it in this House. Some right now are trying to tell me that they believe it. That is the only interpretation I can put on the heckling from across the floor. Mr. Speaker, I say that these measures are positive measures.

Part of the second pillar has consisted of identifying key sectors of the economy in which it has been necessary to require by law that all, or at least a large proportion of the firms in those sectors, can be Canadian-owned and controlled-chartered banks, life insurance companies, other financial institutions—

An hon. Member: What about trust companies?

Mr. Gillespie: Yes, such as trust and loan companies, broadcasting and newspapers. Liberal governments have legislated to ensure that in these sensitive areas, Canadian control is dominant. And, as you know, on the matter of foreign ownership of land, it was decided at the last meeting of federal and provincial first ministers to review jointly the legal, constitutional and land use aspects of this question and to consider ways in which the levels of government could co-operate on this problem.

Bill C-132, the Foreign Investment Review Act, signifies an important development of this second pillar of safeguards. One feature that distinguishes this bill from previous legislation is that it will apply across the entire economy and not just to a particular sector. Having described the bill during the debate on second reading and in considerable detail before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, I shall confine myself today to a brief review of its highlights.

The Foreign Investment Review Act would initially give the government the legal authority to review proposed foreign takeovers of Canadian businesses, above a threshold size. The threshold is not as high as the Tories would like. They wanted to raise that threshold, but they were outvoted when the amendment came before the House a little while ago.

Mr. Coates: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; the minister ought to know, even from the short time he has been in the House, that he is not supposed to refer to or reflect on a vote taken in this House. That vote has been taken; that matter has been finalized, and I hope the minister will stay in order in his remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the minister made a reference to the vote; I do not think there was a reflection on the vote. In any event, a number of votes were taken previously. I cannot say the minister was out of order because, in my opinion, he merely seemed to refer to a vote.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to state a fact. I was not trying to reflect on the vote. The point is that the threshold is related to the whole question of takeovers.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Are we on the threshold of a new era, in which there will be corporate marriages?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the hon. member for Crowfoot is interested in heckling, perhaps because his party at no time in the last 15 years has introduced any legislation in this important area. I can understand his wanting to heckle.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister referred to actions taken by my party in the last 15 years. I should like to inform him that he is in error. We brought in laws making unions disclose some things with respect to their money and making companies, public and private, disclose some of their operations. Certainly, we took steps along those lines.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I will not say any more. If the hon. member is basing the position of his party on those modest—that is an overstatement—measures, I do not need to say anything more.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, we are not a party of dictatorial rule, as is the party opposite and its friends to my left.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The minister has picked a very bad example to use for an insinuation because the minister and his colleagues are two or three years behind in bringing forward reports for which they are responsible, under CALURA, to Parliament and the Canadian people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all deference, I think members are acting as though we were debating the stage preceding third reading. I think the debate ought to proceed along more traditional lines for third reading.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I think we have all been around long enough to understand the tactics of the opposition in instances such as this. The takeover provisions of the bill would take effect after the first proclamation. After the government has gained experience in operating the takeover review process, and has consulted fully with provincial administrations—

An hon. Member: That is not correct.

Mr. Gillespie: —the second part of the bill will be proclaimed. Under this second set of provisions, the establishment of new foreign-controlled businesses, and the expansion of existing foreign-controlled businesses into unrelated lines, would be subject to review according to the significant benefit test.

I wish to talk about the significant benefit test, which is central to this bill. In reaching decisions on individual investment applications under this legislation, the government would be guided by the criteria set out in Section 2 (2) which includes such factors as: the impact on the nature and level of economic activity in Canada including employment and further processing of our resources prior to export; the degree and significance of Canadian participation; the effect on productivity, efficiency, technological development, product innovation and product variety; the impact on competition; and the compatibility of the transaction with national industrial and economic policies, taking account of the industrial and economic objectives of the provinces likely to be affected.

I should like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the federal government must take into consideration provincial economic policies. It also stipulates that the government must give consideration to any provincial representations in particular cases. The bill does not provide, as a few people have suggested it should, and as some Tory spokesmen opposite have suggested, that we should provide for a provincial veto.

Mr. Baker: That is not correct.

Mr. Gillespie: This bill provides a voice—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Where?

Mr. Gillespie: —but not a veto for the provinces.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): When did we ask for the veto?

Mr. Hellyer: Who was the spokesman who asked for the veto?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-132 is to be an act of parliament, not of provincial legislatures. It is to be an instrument of national policy, Mr. Speaker. We do not believe in adopting measures which would balkanize Canada. A provincial veto would do exactly that.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Tell us about the Canada Pension Plan and opting out provisions.

Mr. Gillespie: Since the federal government will be politically responsible for the effective administration of the law, it clearly follows that only the federal government can be made responsible for the final decisions in individual cases. Once again, I wish to state that I shall be in touch with each of the provincial governments once this legislation is in place. I do not think there will be any difficulties—

An hon. Member: May we quote the minister?

Mr. Gillespie: —in developing regular channels for consultation with the provinces in particular transactions.

Under Bill C-132, decisions will be taken by the governor in council on the recommendation of the minister. Decisions are to be taken by the government, by the cabinet—I wish to underline this point—which is representative of all the areas and regions of Canada. I wish to draw the distinction to the attention of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), who suggested in a speech that the decision will be taken by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I have been at some pains to emphasize that the minister will recommend but that the cabinet, which is representative of all parts of the country, will decide.

Another criticism which has been raised in the debate concerns judicial review of the concept of significant benefit. I suggest that it would be improper to have a judicial review of government decisions regarding significant benefit, in much the same way as it would be quite unreasonable to have a judicial review of the economic desirability of a budgetary tax measure for purposes of stabilization policy.

With cabinet responsibility, there is quite properly some room for ministerial discretion. But the amount of discretion will be limited by the fact that decisions must be based on the criteria spelled out in the bill.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Will the findings be made public?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had read the bill he would know the answer to that question. Decisions regarding the impact on employment, efficiency, competition and those other factors to which I referred a few moments ago will be governed by the economic facts. Furthermore, since economic strengths and weaknesses differ from region to region this policy, while national in scope, will be sensitive to differences in the needs of the regions.

I should like to say another word or two about the test of significant benefit. In my view this is central to our policy for Canada and is central to the bill itself. It is essential for two reasons. First, given the present degree of foreign control of the Canadian economy, it seems only reasonable not to allow that degree of foreign control to increase unless foreign investors are in a position to add something of significance to the Canadian economy. To have further increases in foreign control where there are not significant benefits is unacceptable.

Second, the significant benefit test puts the government in the position of being able to bargain to achieve improved benefits from foreign investment, to insist on certain practices or policies by the investor which become his commitment to the government, practices or policies which in the absence of the commitment could be altered at will by the arbitrary decisions of foreign-based businesses or pressures placed on them by foreign governments. We must have some capacity to bargain with investors about their plans for Canada. I expect that we shall be more successful in some cases than in others. The need for the government to intervene, and the capacity to do so effectively, will obviously vary according to the time, the sector and the economic circumstances. However, I have no doubt that the review agency will with perseverance and growing experience, bring to Canada benefits which it would not otherwise have obtained.

There are some people who think that this approach is wrong, that we should replace the significant benefit test with a no detriment test.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Right.

Mr. Gillespie: I am interested in hearing the hon. member say "right". I am interested in knowing whether he is declaring himself on the no detriment side. I gather by the nod of his head that he is.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I will be speaking after you.

Mr. Gillespie: The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) believes a no detriment test is better than a significant benefit test.

I have tried on previous occasions to explain why this test would be negative and unacceptable, but judging from some recent reports I have apparently failed to persuade some proponents of the no detriment test. The notion of a no detriment test involves an assumption that unless there are obvious and striking disadvantages from a foreign investment, Canadians should be indifferent to it. That view misjudges the intelligence of the Canadian people. However, that is the view of those who really want unrestricted access for foreign corporations, for takeovers and the establishment of new businesses. That is really their position, no detriment.

[Mr. Horner (Crowfoot).]

There will be cases where foreign investors have the potential to make significant contributions to our economy which they would not make in the absence of a significant benefit test, contributions which would be lost if we were to adopt the wishy-washy test of no detriment. It is a timid, tentative test at best. It is a look backward, not a look forward. This bill provides that officials of the foreign investment review agency can sit across the table from such investors and discuss with them the means whereby their initial investment plans might be improved to offer significant benefit to Canada. However, if we switch to a no detriment test, we will have given all the high cards to the investor. Maybe that is what its proponents want.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Gillespie: I will be very pleased to permit a question after I have completed my remarks. We will have no effective legislative authority from which to seek improvements. A no detriment test would castrate the intention of the bill. Canadians should benefit by being here just as others benefit by coming here.

I have referred in the past to our foreign investment policy being built upon two pillars, a pillar of safeguard measures of which C-132 is the major part, and a pillar of incentive measures designed to encourage Canadians to save, invest, manage, innovate and develop competitive modern enterprises. Let me refer to some of these other positive measures.

First, Canadian controlled private corporations pay a reduced rate of corporation tax on the first $50,000 a year of income. This reduced rate is 20 per cent on income from manufacturing and processing activities and 25 per cent on income from other activities. This reduced rate is not available to foreign controlled firms. Moreover, the savings from these advantageous rates must be repaid if the firm is transferred to non-Canadian control.

Second, the Canada Development Corporation was established to help develop strong Canadian-controlled businesses and to attract Canadian savings into such development. As is already evident, the CDC is actively at work assisting to promote Canadian ownership and control and a vigorous economy. Although it operates at arms length from the government, the CDC is an outgrowth of a Liberal initiative.

Third, the proposed new Canada business corporations act, Bill C-213, introduced by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray), the man who gave his name to the exhaustive examination of foreign investment in Canada, will require that all federally incorporated foreign-controlled corporations have a majority of directors who are resident Canadians and who are not employees of the corporation or its affiliates.

Let me mention a few other measures that are pertinent. There are some which do not discriminate between Canadian-controlled and foreign-controlled firms, but in fact principally assist Canadian-controlled firms. First, I announced a few months ago plans to revamp and expand the activities of the Industrial Development Bank. The necessary details are now being worked out. The new industrial bank and development agency will build on the accomplishments of the IDB. I think it is perhaps worth reminding hon. members that less than 1 per cent of the loans of the IDB have been made to foreign-controlled firms. This new agency will be more entrepreneurial in its lending and investment activity and will also be a major source of management advice and assistance to small businesses. I expect that the almost exclusive assistance to Canadian-controlled firms will continue.

Second, tax incentives have been implemented to stop the undue leakage of savings from Canada. Pension funds need to retain 90 per cent of their assets in Canada to avoid paying a penalty tax of one per cent per month on those of their assets abroad that exceed 10 per cent of their total assets. The gross-up provisions on Canadian dividends encourage investment in Canadian stocks.

Third, Canadian businesses are able to deduct as an expense the interest paid on funds borrowed to finance the purchase of shares of other firms.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the catalogue of accomplishments of the Liberal government that I referred to relate mainly to what we have done in the economic sphere. I could have also elaborated at some length on the various measures which have been taken to fortify and encourage Canadian cultural development, the Canadian content provisions in the CRTC regulations, the numerous positive incentives to the film industry and the book publishing industry, programs to foster bilingualism and multiculturalism and the various cultural activities which are supported so effectively through the Canada Council. When viewed as a whole, I believe it will become strikingly clear how much the Liberal government has done in assisting in the development of a Canadian identity and helping to build a Canada for Canadians—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: —an independent, vigorous and creative nation of which all of us can be proud.

The proposed Foreign Investment Review Act will be an important instrument of economic management. It will bring economic benefits to the Canadian people. More than that, it is part of a package of policies that is helping to strengthen the ability of Canadians to shape their own destiny at the same time as they participate increasingly as responsible citizens in the world community.

The House has now given careful study of Bill C-132 and after the vigorous scrutiny carried out by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and the improvements introduced by that committee, I believe the time has come to pass this bill. I urge that this House give third reading to Bill C-132. The Foreign Investment Review Act is an investment in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. Before I recognize the hon. member, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn)—Immigration—Possible exemption of Iroquois Indians wishing to move to Canada from having to apply for landed immigrant status; the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn)—Energy—Authority of government to enforce petroleum price freeze and price indexing; the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Accelerated coverage plan—Date of implementation.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gillespie that Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Could I ask the minister a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Would the minister be prepared to answer a question?

Mr. Gillespie: Yes.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Can the minister assure the House and the country that the agency which this bill sets up will act in a way absolutely independent of government influence when bringing down its findings—that it will not be like the National Energy Board has now become, a tool of the ministry concerned?

Mr. Gillespie: I do not know whether the hon. member is familiar with the relationship between the agency and the government. It has not been set up as a tribunal. It has been set up as a body which will report through a commissioner, a deputy minister to the minister. It will be concerned with the question of whether a particular proposal, whether a takeover offers significant benefit to Canada.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): It will be chock full of politics, then!

Mr. Gillespie: If that agency does not find any benefit or advises me that in the circumstances it believes a proposal could be improved, then I will advise and recommend to my cabinet colleagues a course of action consistent with the advice I get.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Another pork barrel!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have another short question for the minister. About 15 minutes before the end of his statement he mentioned that the extension of existing industries would be subject to review by the agency. But it is my understanding that only the acquisition or takeover of new businesses was to be the subject of review. I should like to have this point clarified.

Mr. Gillespie: I thought I made it quite clear in my remarks. I used the adjective "unrelated". I referred to the extension of a business to unrelated activities or the establishment of a new business. That is what the second part of the bill deals with.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): It is a particular pleasure to enter this debate just after the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) has outlined his views of what this piece of legislation will do for Canada. I consider the outline he has provided to be a devastating indictment of the Liberal party which has held office for 32 of the last 38 years. If this country has gotten into the terrible mess he tells us it is in at the present time, I can only say that the buck stops at the door of the Liberal party, for they are the people who allowed the things he says have happened, to happen.

One of the real problems a member from the maritime provinces faces when he comes to Ottawa lies in differentiating between what is said by cabinet ministers of the Liberal government and the facts as they affect his part of Canada. One of the reasons members from the Atlantic provinces have expressed such deep concern over the legislation presently before the House is that, day in and day out, their constituents encounter the many difficulties which arise in trying to remain part of this nation and trying not to feel they are second class citizens as a result of one action after another which federal governments have taken.

It might not be so great a travesty if the facts were different. But we came into confederation in 1867 as a prosperous area of a new nation. And we have gone downhill steadily ever since. It has been a very difficult role that the people of Atlantic Canada have played as citizens in the development of this nation. But we have stood with this nation. We have never talked about separatism. We have not adopted the sensible words of Joseph Howe when he spoke them in 1867 and warned us about our future. We have watched a tariff system established which has been of tremendous benefit to the central region of the nation but which has done vast damage to the remainder. We have asked over and over again for programs which will improve our position. As a region, we have been studied to death.

Some time ago I asked a question on this matter and I was told there had been some 250 federally-sponsored investigations into the problems which face our area. Yet today, when we look at the various indicators to determine our health as compared with the rest of Canada, we find we are a very sickly part of the nation. We have less of everything and we end up paying more for everything we require. It is just great for a minister from Toronto to get up and tell us how he is going to defend us and look after our resources and see that we keep them for our children and their children. But what comes to the minds of most of those who live in Atlantic Canada is this question: How are we going to live and how are our children going to live to enjoy some of the benefits available to the fat cats who live in central Canada, and who are now so concerned about the resources of this country.

We have resources in Atlantic Canada. They are providing jobs today for the people who live in that part of the country. By and large, these resources have been developed as a result of foreign investment. We would be much happier, as I am sure all Canadians would, if Canadian capital were developing our resources. But what we discover is that if foreign investment does not develop our resources, then no investment does. As a result, we are left without jobs for our people, which means they cannot maintain themselves and their families. That is the sad fact of the matter.

It is all very well to run down the multinational corporations and to accuse them of great rip-offs. But off the coast of the Atlantic provinces today a great deal of oil and gas exploration is going on which is proving to be very expensive. If it were not for foreign companies willing to gamble their profits, we would not know whether or not we have a tremendous resource here which, if exploited, will produce jobs and dividends for the people living in Atlantic Canada. So, we welcome such investment. The provincial governments in that part of Canada have indicated their concern about this particular piece of legislation. They are afraid it may deter the kind of investment that we still require in order to provide our people with the things they need and which, as Canadian citizens, they have the right to expect.

The amazing thing I have discovered during the 16 years I have been a member of this House is that, almost without exception, members of parliament from the Atlantic or maritime provinces find that their problems are looked at and appreciated by members from western Canada, and that almost always members from western Canada are talking about the same kind of situation which exists in their regions of Canada. In other words, almost always it is central Canada that finds favour as against the east and the west.

Mr. Baker: The rich get richer.

Mr. Coates: Let me give the House an example of how the rich do get richer and the poor get poorer. I have before me two newspapers published on the same day, November 15, 1973. One is a Toronto paper, the Globe and Mail, and the other a Nova Scotia newspaper, the Halifax Chronicle-Herald. Both papers are carrying two identical advertisements relating to a Zenith solid state Chromacolour II television set. Both advertisements carry the same wording. I might say in passing that I certainly have no complaint about Zenith television sets; I think they are excellent. But in Toronto, one of the television sets pictured costs $719.95; that is the price listed in the Toronto Globe and Mail. This same set costs in Halifax $829.95, or $110 more. The price of the other television set shown in the Toronto paper costs $789.95, and there is a little asterisk which denotes this is the suggested retail price. The price in the other paper of this same set is $869.95, in other words $80 more.

It might be said that transportation cost is the reason for the difference. Yet this smaller set that costs $719.95 in Toronto and $829.95 In Halifax is lighter in weight than the other one which costs $80 more. Whatever the reason is, all I can say is that it is just one more symptom of the sickness in this nation which means if you live in the Maritimes, where your pay cheque is less, you pay more for the goods you feel you require. The story is probably exactly the same in Winnipeg, Edmonton, Vancouver and Calgary. This is just one example that a constituent of mine has brought to my attention. We are living in a time of spiralling inflation, with costs increasing all across the nation, yet we in the maritime provinces pay even more than someone living in central Canada. In my opinion there are other basic matters requiring a great deal more priority than investment coming into this nation to create jobs for people who require them. Certainly, transportation is one of the matters that requires action, but action is not forthcoming.

This government has held office for 32 of the last 38 years. It seems that all of the things that it did not do during those 32 years it is now going to correct with this particular piece of legislation, though I do not know how and neither, I am sure, does the government. When the government does try to bring equality to the people of this nation I suggest this area should be number one on the list.

During the 1968 election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) talked a great deal about the just society. The just society just did not happen in his first four years in office, and it was not even mentioned during the last election campaign. The Prime Minister also talked about regional economic disparity, and some action has been taken in that regard, though not nearly as much action as should have been taken when one considers the kind of investment the government has made in the programs of that particular department. However, there has been some forward movement. Whether the federal government considers itself the main proponent of the improvements that have been made, and thereby the recipient of the kudos arising therefrom, is not really important. Although conditions are improving slightly, a great deal more improvement still needs to be made before we have anything like equality of opportunity.

The minister mentioned some of the areas in which he considered the government had taken action to protect Canadians and to maintain the Canadian heritage for future generations. I suggest that if he is anxious to see the Canadian heritage retained for Canadians there are certain areas in which he and his government should move, and should have moved long before now. We are faced today with a tremendous energy crisis. The minister could have assisted Canadians to enjoy a part of their own heritage had he agreed last January to the extension of the oil pipeline to Montreal. He did not do that, and this winter we must depend on other countries and their decisions for the necessary oil and gas to heat our homes.

I suggest that the minister and his government should also take another look at the tremendous coal reserves in this country. It is suggested they are in the neighbourhood of 120 billion tons. The government should do something about making this coal marketable in order that Canadians could produce the energy required to manufacture goods and produce the employment we need. Since confederation, more than 100 years ago, we have used less than one billion tons of coal in this nation. In other words, we have used just one per cent of our recoverable coal resources. As a result of the energy crisis, the President of the United States has undertaken a $3 billion research program in respect of their coal reserves in an attempt to find ways and means of gasifying the coal to produce the energy they require to become self-sufficient in the energy field by 1980. That is an example of what that country is doing in order to meet its energy crisis.

Much of our coal is located in the Atlantic area. Coal can be produced by the conventional methods, but we should also consider these resources from the point of view of gasification, cutting down the cost of production and other things of that nature. This can be done with the proper type of research. The minister has not said one word in this regard, except that the coal fields in my constituency, which other Liberal governments have closed down, should be reopened. Certainly, they should be reopened on the basis of conventional coal mining, and we should also look for other ways of deriving benefits from this resource.

An hon. Member: They are waiting for foreign investors.

Mr. Coates: The government is waiting for foreign investors, just as we in the Atlantic provinces are waiting for foreign investors to develop the tremendous energy potential from the Fundy tides. This is a gigantic project of the magnitude of the Churchill and lower Churchill Falls combined. It is comparable to the development undertaken in Quebec at James Bay. I was informed last week by the government, through the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), that after two years of re-examining a study produced in 1969, which indicated that the Fundy tidal power project was feasible from an energy point of view but not from an economic point of view, perhaps there will be another investigation carried out to determine further aspects of this project. The Premier of Nova Scotia recently suggested that this new study, which could cost another $1 million, might be a good thing. I wonder how many studies, environmental and otherwise, were carried out in respect of the James Bay project before the government of Quebec moved toward producing the hydro power associated with that development, once again with foreign capital.

The sad fact is that the development and employment we have today in this country results directly from foreign investment, that is investment by others who are more daring and willing to invest their capital in projects here than we in this country are. Surely, we should be trying to give Canadians incentives to invest in this country rather than making conditions attractive to foreign investment.

In 32 of the 38 years we have had a Liberal government, Canadians have been coddled to the extent they see nothing but mortgages and bonds in which to invest their money. They are afraid to take a chance, and I do not blame them if they have money invested in projects of this government. We should provide great incentives to Canadians to invest in Canada. We should make sure that they can obtain reasonable returns on their capital, while at the same time helping their fellow citizens toward a better way of life. This is what our party stands for; an incentive society in which people take advantage of incentives provided by the government. This government should provide incentives rather than detriments.

We have reached the point where people talk about rip-offs. I suggest we should rip-off this government in order to derive some benefit from the tremendous number of tax dollars that have been invested over the years. What better opportunity could we provide our citizens than tax incentives to encourage investment in this country. We should encourage Canadian investment to an extent comparable to foreign investment with comparable benefits.

I should like to make one or two remarks about land ownership. For some time I have been concerned, as a maritimer, about land ownership. I am not speaking as a member from the Atlantic provinces, but as a maritimer representing the view of the people of an area which has been a part of Canada for a long time. We lived, grew up and tried to get our children to grow up in that part of Canada even though we knew they could probably do better if they went somewhere else. But we did it for a great many reasons, and one of them certainly is the grandeur of the land itself.

We have discovered that people who went to the asphalt jungles of North America are now coming back to our part of Canada and are endeavouring to take us to the cleaners because they have made a lot of money. They can afford to offer us a sum of money for our land that we cannot refuse because we are not in the same league as they are. As a result, much of the recreational land that is associated with our way of life in the maritime provinces is being gobbled up by speculators from other parts of Canada and North America. I am pleased that the provincial governments are finally moving in this area, because we have only a limited amount of land and in my opinion our people have the right to first enjoyment of it. From that point of view, I do not mean that we should stop Canadians having cottage land or we should stop Americans and people from other countries buying a piece of land here and enjoying the scenery that we know so well. But I do believe we should put a stop to the kind of speculation that has been going on and that will increase if we do not do something about it.

I think there should probably be a national policy in this regard; but more important than that, there must be provincial government policies to see that our people who stay in the Maritimes and accept a life that is not as fruitful, from a financial point of view, as that available to those who live in other areas, have a right to the enjoyment of that land 12 months of the year, and not to have fences put up and access eliminated to the very best recreational areas and to the surrounding ocean.

[Mr. Coates.]

I want to conclude by saying that, so far as I am concerned, there are many pieces of legislation that this parliament could be considering that are a lot more important to people in the Atlantic provinces than the measure we are considering. At the same time, I would like to say that I am deeply concerned about any type of roadblock that is put in the way of investment in our area until we at least have an unemployment rate that is on a par with the rest of the nation.

I also think there must be a tremendous amount of guaranteed co-operation between the provincial and the federal governments. I regret very much that some of the proposals made by my colleagues, especially by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), have not been acceptable to the government. I would be much happier with an incentive type of bill that would convince Canadians that there are many reasons why they should be investing in this country rather than in another country, and that many good dividends are available to them if they do.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to take part in this debate for a very short intervention which will last not later than six o'clock, because of the view which my colleagues and I take of the importance of the issue of foreign control of Canada's economy. As I have travelled across this country in the last number of months, I have been very impressed by the fact—and it is a fact—that ever-growing numbers of Canadians in every part of Canada are deeply concerned about the foreign control of Canada's economy and about the impossibility of envisaging a future for Canada which is shaped by Canadians themselves if this foreign control continues at its present level, let alone if it is permitted to increase.

I do not think we can exaggerate the losses to Canada flowing from the fact that our economy in its most important aspect is in the hands of multinational corporations. Whether you look at the fact that our natural resources are yanked out of the earth and shipped across with very little processing, and the consequent loss of development and jobs in Canada; whether you look at the fact that little research and development is done in this country, that almost all of it is done at the headquarters of the parent corporations which control Canada's economy; whether you look at the danger that always faces a Canadian worker in a multinational corporation in Canada; whether you look at the fact that a multinational corporation may find it more economic to transfer its activities not only to the United States but to anywhere in the world, to Singapore, to Africa or elsewhere where they now have plants, and the danger to the jobs of Canadians in those situations—in our present society you will find that the moguls of industry have an immense influence on the ethos of society and on the standard of values by which society is governed.

This is a fact which I regret very much. They have an immense influence on the cultural and spiritual essence of a society as well as in the material and economic sense. When you look at all these aspects that are affected, indeed influenced and governed by the economic power which is now in the hands of multinational corporations, you find that no Canadian who looks ahead, who is not blinded by his subservience to the so-called free enterprise system, can fail to be concerned about our country's present situation.

It took many years for the Liberal government of this country, and the Conservative government before it, to realize the dangers we were facing. If I may say so without, I hope, being improper, some of us saw this many decades ago. It has been drawn to my attention that in a speech I made back in 1956 which was published in pamphlet form—I had forgotten about it until it was drawn to my attention—I gave a warning to Canadians about the foreign control of our economy. My colleagues and I have been warning Canadians for many years about it, not because I like an exploiting Canadian corporation any better than an exploiting multinational one but because multinational control carries with it consequences beyond mere economic questions in a country.

Finally, after years of study, the government brought down a bill in the last parliament which we were determined to stymie, a bill which did nothing at all, which dealt with perhaps 2 per cent or 3 per cent of the problem that is before us. But this year, undoubtedly because of the minority situation of the government, it has produced a bill that is considerably stronger. Instead of dealing only with foreign takeovers, it deals also with new businesses of foreigners and with the expansion of existing corporations in unrelated areas.

The minister has accepted some changes which my colleagues on the committee suggested, which have also served to strengthen the criteria which are to govern the agency and the government in making decisions under the bill. Because it has been considerably strengthened, we have said from the start that we would not block the passage of this bill and would vote for it. However, I want to make clear, Mr. Speaker, that we are under no illusions that Bill C-132 is more than a short step in the right direction. This is the main reason for my taking part in the debate at this stage.

The bill still does not deal with the most important part of the problem in Canada, which is the expansion of existing foreign corporations in this country. Even the present bill will deal only with 10 per cent to 20 per cent of the problem, depending on what happens in a given year, and the remaining problem will not be touched. The minister has again indicated with figures the extent of this problem. There is over 70 per cent foreign ownership in mining, and in certain manufacturing industries almost 100 per cent. It is almost 100 per cent in the automotive industry, and 90 per cent ownership of the natural resources of this country, including the energy resources to which I will return in a moment. There is something like 80 per cent foreign ownership of the refining facilities in this country. The minister quite rightly emphasized that all these important levers of economic control—"important" is almost an understatement—these almost overwhelming levers of economic control are now in the hands of multinational corporations.

When the minister says that the bill is good because it will prevent existing corporations from expanding into unrelated areas, if he applies it as it should be applied, I am a little less worried about that. It may be that other hon. members were as ignorant about this as I was until some research was done, but everybody thinks of Imperial Oil as being merely an oil, gas and pipeline outfit in this country. It is not. Is not that the company that has a tooth-brush factory, toilet-paper interests, furniture interests, interests in a good many areas—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): This government was going to let that company into our natural resource industry in the parks.

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) of course is ready to let them move into control of the natural resource industry.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I said the government was going to let them into the national parks.

Mr. Lewis: I am dealing with the government of the moment. I will return to the hon. member for Crowfoot with great pleasure.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Don't put words in my mouth.

Mr. Lewis: These multinational corporations are conglomerates. They are not limited to any one area. They are in almost every economic area. Their influence will not be touched by this bill. In the submission of my colleagues and myself, we will not do the job for Canada and Canadians until we take, not mincing steps to prevent further foreign expansion of economic control but decisive steps to repatriate the economy of Canada, to put it into Canadian hands and particularly into public ownership so that it cannot be sold to any multinational corporations.

There are some hon. members in this House who object to this bill. I do not know how they will vote, whether they will vote for it or against it if there is a division. But they object to this bill because basically they want foreign investment in this country. Basically, there are people in this country and members of this House who have no confidence in Canadians. They want forever to go begging to Washington, Pittsburgh, Chicago and New York to do the job which Canadians themselves are fully able to do. There are people in Canada—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): It is the direct opposite.

Mr. Lewis: There are hon. members in this chamber who have been persuaded by the myths propagated by the multinational corporations, (a) that we do not have enough savings in Canada and (b) that Canadians are not entrepreneurs, that they don't have the guts to undertake the risks. The hon. gentleman who spoke before me said something to that effect. It seemed to him that foreign investors are more willing to invest in Canadian resources than are Canadian investors. Mr. Speaker, the only reason—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): There are a lot of investors in your party. They have all of five cents invested in Canada.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, because my colleagues, unlike the hon. member for Crowfoot, represent the average Canadian and the average Canadian does not have much investment. That is perfectly true, Mr. Speaker. The only reason that foreign investment has come to Canada over the years is that governments and big business in this country have not wanted to expend what was needed to be expended to develop our own technological know-how and to undertake our own development, because they could make a faster buck by inviting the multinational corporations to come in and do the job for us.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lewis: A short one.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Would he take a few moments to outline the difference in the approaches of premiers Regan, Blakeney, Schreyer and Barrett in regard to outside investment?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is doing the usual thing that some hon. members of this House do—he really does not know what he is saying, but he says it. It is a fact that provincial governments in this country may go elsewhere to borrow capital, but that is not what we are talking about. We are talking about equity investment in Canada. We are talking about ownership and control of the Canadian economy, not loan capital. It is always possible to borrow elsewhere, pay interest and repay the loan, but we have seen another type of development—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Was Schreyer against foreign investment in his province?

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member for Crowfoot will have a chance to make a speech in time, if he will just shut up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. This is a good time to remind the House that when an hon. member is making a speech, nobody should interrupt him except to raise a point of order. We should allow the hon. member to carry on with his speech so that at least the Chair can hear.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind the interruptions—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I rose to ask permission of the hon. member to ask a question. This practice has been followed for years, and it does not behoove the Chair to remind me that I cannot follow a precedent long established.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I do not think the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) got my point. I was saying there should not be interruptions while an hon. member has the floor. I did not refer to members asking permission to ask questions.

Mr. Lewis: I would not mind the interruptions at all, Mr. Speaker, except that I have the pleasure of standing fairly close to the hon. member for Crowfoot, who has a strong voice, and when he interrupts me I cannot hear myself nor can anybody else hear me.

• (1750)

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): That is the first person you want to hear; you like the sound of your own voice.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on now; stop being an ass. Mr. Speaker, the only reason we have had foreign investment in this country is that there have been no policies directed toward the development of our resources by Canada for Canadians. Since I do not want to talk beyond six o'clock, that takes me to the energy situation.

There was never any reason why Canada should have an energy crisis. It is not as though Canada does not have enough oil and gas for its own needs from one coast of this country to the other. We do have it. The only reason we have an energy problem in Canada now is that we sold the resources in the west. The oil resources of Alberta were sold out—given away in some cases—for very little by the former Social Credit government. It was assisted by the federal government, particularly by the Tory government of 1961 dividing Canada into two markets,—drawing a line down the Ottawa Valley and saying that west of it Canadians would be served by western Canadian oil and east of it Canadians would be served only by imported oil.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member for Crowfoot rises on a point of order.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I think there should be some ruling in the House that hon. members should stay somewhere close to the truth. The last statements of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) have been completely erroneous, and he knows it. He should at least try to lay the honest truth on the table.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. This is another example of what I was saying. That is not a point of order. The hon. member will have a chance to make a speech later if he wishes.

Mr. Lewis: When I reach the stage, Mr. Speaker, that I have to come to the hon. member for Crowfoot for a lesson in honest truth, it will be a very sad day for me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: It is perfectly obvious that the hon. member for Crowfoot thinks it is a good idea to keep interrupting me, and he uses excuses for doing so. If he enjoys playing that kind of game, then I appreciate that he has not yet gone past the adolescent stage. But that is his trouble.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Oh, the exalted ruler speaks again.

Mr. Lewis: What I said was fact; that in 1961 the Tory government decided this country needed two markets. That was the Diefenbaker government. East of the Ottawa Valley we now have shortages that never would have occurred in this country, with the oil and gas that we have, if we had not handed over our resources to the multinational corporations.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Garbage.

Mr. Lewis: Under pressure, they were given a complete monopoly of the market west of the Ottawa Valley and the right to export 50 per cent of their production to the United States. Both by closing off the eastern half of Canada from the western market and by yanking out—someone suggested I am punning—the oil as fast as possible and shipping it out of this country as we have done for so many years—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): That is all nonsense.

Mr. Lewis: —we are now faced with a crisis. And that is not all. The Conservative government of Alberta, supported by the Conservative members of this House and supported, so far as I have been able to gather, by the Liberal Party as well, is now determined to sell out the remaining oil reserves, the largest oil reserves in the world, the Athabasca tar sands—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Absolute nonsense.

Mr. Lewis: —to a consortium of four multinational corporations—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Absolute nonsense.

Mr. Lewis: —which are demanding that the government give them certain concessions before they continue. It is this kind of sell-out that has taken a toll of our natural resources, particularly of our oil reserves, and has caused us problems which become more difficult to handle every day.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): A glaring distortion of the facts.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the only thing I have distorted is my friend's humour, and that is an object to be desired.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): A glaring distortion of the facts; a knowing distortion.

Mr. Lewis: These are the facts about Canada's economic situation. The fact that hon. members to your left, Mr. Speaker, are constantly interrupting everybody who speaks about Canada's independence and Canadian autonomy and the sell-out of Canadian resources shows you, as it will show the people of Canada, the impossible position that the Conservative Party finds itself in, when its leader rose in the House at two o'clock and asked a question about the shortage of oil and the price of oil in the Atlantic provinces—and the Conservative premier of Alberta determined to raise the price of oil not only for the Atlantic provinces but for all of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Now you are getting close to it. That last statement was the truest statement you've made.

Mr. Lewis: The economy of our country until now has been deliberately given away, deliberately sold out by the corporate interests of this country, supported by the government of this country, both Liberal and Conservative, and indeed by the provincial Social Credit government as well. As far as my colleagues and I are concerned, we will support this bill—but we will not be satisfied with this legislation in the slightest because it touches only a small part of the problem. We will not be satisfied until we have persuaded parliament and the Canadian people that the time has come to place such things as the tar sands under public ownership.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: The time has come to place under public ownership one or more of the large multinationals in the energy situation. The time has come, Mr. Speaker, to take control of the Canadian economy away from multinationals and give it to the people of Canada.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Tell us about General Motors and Ford.

Mr. Lewis: This must be done to allow Canadians to establish their own destiny, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): A really selfish speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, recently the people of Quebec were given a choice, for or against Canada. Overwhelmingly they opted for Canada. It was not easy, I am sure, for those who had supported the Party Créditiste or l'Union Nationale for long years, and some of their parents before them, not to support those parties in the election. It was not easy, I am sure, for many who for social or economic reasons, would have supported the Parti Quebecois to opt for Canada. Many others who supported the Parti Quebecois did so because they liked its economic and social views; they would not have supported the party if asked to vote on a referendum. The people of Quebec, Mr. Speaker, have opted for Canada. I am firmly convinced that if the rest of the people of Canada were given the same opportunity, they too would most certainly respond in like manner.

If there is one single issue which would catch the fancy of all Canadians, whether from Quebec or British Columbia, from Newfoundland or Ontario, from Alberta or any other part of the land, that issue would be the opportunity to opt for Canada and for the independence and the integrity of the nation.

I am not suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that the foreign investment review bill is by any means the vehicle which would catch the fancy of all Canadians. It is not that kind of bill. It is not that far reaching; it is not that exciting; it is not that stirring. None the less, it is, I believe, an extremely significant piece of legislation. It is significant, I submit, in two respects. First, it enables us to stand up and be counted. Second, it sets up a good mechanism which, if extended, could have a really important effect on all foreign investment in Canada.

As we approach the vote on third reading I should like briefly to review the status of foreign ownership in Canada at this time. With respect to foreign ownership, this country is perhaps like no other in the western community in the degree of equity ownership which we allow to outsiders. Most countries either limit ownership or take funds in the form of bonds or other non-equity or portfolio capital. Britain, for instance, financed a great deal of North and South American growth in the pre-first world war era with this type of investment.

The extent of foreign ownership in Canada in many areas of the economy is well known. I will mention only two or three areas. When we look at manufacturing, we are talking of foreign ownership in the area of 65 to 70 per cent. About the same amount of our mining is foreign-owned. When we consider petroleum and the petrochemical industry, we must concede that between 80 and 90 per cent of the industry is foreign-owned. That shows the extent of foreign ownership affecting our various industries. In addition, we must consider the matter of control. Much of the Canadian portion of the manufacturing industry, and particularly of the petroleum industry, is held in the form of preferred stock and not in the form of voting or controlling stock. That is the situation in this part of the 1970s.

A great deal of concern has been expressed in this debate and in committee hearings about the need for foreign investment. Without question, our affluence up to now has depended upon a great deal of money coming in from outside. I question, at this point, whether this is still true. Let me first of all say that I wish to ease the concern of some hon. members from the have-not provinces. I will mention this later. I know that some of those members are concerned that possibly their provinces will suffer if less foreign investment comes into the country.

Let me mention some figures. According to the latest American figures available to me, during the five years 1966 to 1970, $2.2 billion U.S. was directly invested in Canada. The outflow to the United States in the form of dividends, rents, etc., was $5.5 billion. Further, during that period U.S. interests acquired an additional $7.4 billion of assets in this country. In other words, for every dollar that entered Canada from the United States—this does not include money coming from Japan, Germany, or other areas—$2.50 went out in dividends and American interests acquired $4 worth of assets or equities. In other words, outside groups are buying Canada with our money.

I mentioned concerned groups. Perhaps the most significant group we dealt with in committee were some of the provinces which are not as well off as a province such as Ontario. I can understand the concern of these provinces. They fear that in some way or another foreign investment will decrease because of this bill. That is misplaced concern. At the very beginning of the second reading debate there was a lot of talk about the term "significant benefit". There are those who would like to water the words "significant benefit" down to "benefit". It seems extremely important to have the words "significant benefit" in the bill. What might only be of benefit to a province like Ontario could be very significant to a province like New Brunswick or some other province where the amount of investment is not as great.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) made a statement which impressed me very much. He talked about the kinds of foreign investments that are made in the poorer provinces. Generally, these are in raw materials and do not create many jobs. The processing is not done in the province. As the minister indicated, as soon as there is some slightly adverse situation, as was the case with the three fish producing plants in the Maritimes, the companies disappear as soon as prices become poor. The disadvantaged parts of Canada should not be concerned. They should welcome this bill. In many cases it is a way of attracting investment to those areas.

The other group which seems to be concerned includes some of the large corporations, some of which are multinational, some major oil companies and some real estate companies and other important groups in our corporate sector. There was one group of 32 companies of which one-half were Canadian-owned. The people who represented them were from companies where the majority ownership was American. In spite of the testimony, this bill will be an advantage to Canadian firms in this group. In a case where there is not significant benefit for an American firm to buy out a Canadian firm, that firm would not be able to do so. A Canadian firm in competition, trying to buy out the same company, would have an advantage. This bill, rather than being detrimental to the have-not provinces or the Canadian portion of the corporate sector, should be of real benefit.

There is one problem with this bill that has been cited by members of the New Democratic Party. It has to do with the fact it does not make provision for companies already functioning in Canada to expand. I can fully understand the concern of the minister in expressing the difficulty one would have in defining expansion. Where does expansion start and where does it stop? As a government, I do not think we are relying on this bill to prevent this kind of expansion or to increase Canadian ownership. There are other ways of doing that, and I wish to suggest one or two. First, the provinces must be concerned about land sales. I understand that in northwestern Ontario, in the area around Thunder Bay in particular, 10 per cent of the surveyed land is owned by nationals of another country; they are mostly American. The province of Ontario has had a select committee seriously considering legislation to correct this type of situation.

There is a whole series of areas where tax incentives can increase Canadian ownership. Many have suggested these. I do not intend to get into them at this time. The Canada Development Corporation is to be congratulated on its efforts in acquiring a principal holding in Texasgulf. There will be many more opportunities in the future to acquire control of other large corporations working in Canada. This should not be taken as a threat; it will come about in a very natural way.

There has been a tendency to look at all incoming capital as being always welcome. When we get into the whole area of energy with up to $100 billion in capital flowing into Canada in the next 15 years, it will have a very serious effect on the Canadian dollar, pushing it up considerably. It will also have a very serious effect in terms of purchase of energy. In other words, if the United States or other countries buy Canadian energy excessively, they will not be in a position to buy other manufactured goods. The Economic Council dealt with this question in its recent publication. This excess inflow would be significant enough that we could in some way or other arrange for a portion of it to be turned back in the form of equity. The same thing that Britain did between the wars and during World War II might occur. The Americans might well sell some of their equity to maintain a stable dollar and a stable trade relationship.

There is another field in which we can expand our Canadian ownership, control and input. This relates to the whole field of energy. There are those who ask why energy should be singled out as being different from manufacturing or any other sector of the economy. The present energy crisis tells us why. If, for example, the manufacture of plastics became a problem, we could survive. However, I am not sure we can survive without an adequate supply of energy. We must take a special look at this area. We must first become self-sufficient.

We must be able to control our energy supplies. That does not mean we should not sell excess energy; that is not the case at all. However, we must become self-sufficient. We must also have a single-price system across this country. To do this we need a national marketing board. This could be set up without too much difficulty. I think negotiations in this area, especially with the province of Alberta, are forthcoming. I talked about this before in terms of a quid pro quo.

Perhaps one of the most important steps that we must take is to set up a national petroleum corporation. That is an area in which it is important we act.

I think, too, we must acquire our own pipelines. We must ensure that our supplies are secure. I would be much more interested in a pipeline from Sault Ste. Marie to Montreal than a pipeline from Montreal through Toronto looping to Sarnia. It seems to me that if a pipeline were routed to Montreal from Sault Ste. Marie, with a short bridge to St. Ignace, a distance of 30 or 40 miles, we would be halfway toward completing a pipeline; and then the second link could be routed from Manitoba to Thunder Bay and around to Sault Ste. Marie. I understand the distance is about the same from Montreal to Sarnia as from Sault Ste. Marie or St. Ignace to Montreal.

Lastly, I think we should be most concerned to acquire and control the whole operation of the tar sands in the Canadian interest. The tar sands area has to be Canada's most valuable piece of real estate. This is not an energy debate and I do not intend to elaborate on this aspect, but I think it is very important for the people of Canada to acquire a considerable interest in this development, either through a national petroleum corporation in some other way, by arrangement with the province of Alberta. These are five or six ways in which we could extend Canadian interest in her own resources.

There is a popular fallacy that those who talk about being Canadian or acquiring an interest in Canada through Canadian ownership are anti-American. This label, which is immediately imposed upon them, is ridiculous. In the field of energy, I do not think anyone is suggesting we are cutting off oil supplies to the Americans. We are shipping over a million barrels a day to them, and to date I am aware of no proposals that this supply should be cut off at least for several years.

A national petroleum corporation should certainly not be a threat to foreign countries. It would create more competition—but competition is what makes the world go round. After all, British Petroleum is a nationally-owned company in competition with United States firms. The multinational corporations in the oil industry and elsewhere are used to tough rules in various countries, and to judge from some conversations I have had, I think they wonder how it is that Canadians are so easy to deal with in this respect. The changes proposed in this bill before us are not such as to create basic animosity. We must remember, as the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) reminded us, that other nations besides the United States are also becoming very large investors in Canada, and that funds of those countries might possibly replace American sources some day. I am thinking particularly of Japan and West Germany.

I have followed the debate in this House on both energy and foreign takeovers. There is one characteristic which I have noticed among spokesmen for the Conservative Party particularly—a constant reference to consulting with the provinces. I accept the need for consultation, but we cannot allow consultation with the provinces to mean the balkanization of Canada. Canada is far more than the sum of its parts and it is extremely important that politicians understand this. We must make decisions here. We will consult in the sense that we will find out how the provinces feel, but the decisions made by the government must be made for the good of all Canadians. Consultation is excellent as a way of finding out; but to the extent that it leads to balkanization—no.

In conclusion, I support this bill, partly because it gives us a good mechanism; but also because it gives us a chance to stand up and be counted. We have dealt with matters such as over-consultation with the provinces, such as reducing the word "significant" or taking it out of the phrase "significant benefit." We resisted these efforts because we felt we must be counted for Canada. This is a beginning, which will be followed by other actions particularly affecting energy policy. However, I think this measure is the beginning of an opportunity for Canadians to opt for the integrity of Canada.

Mr. Joe Hueglin (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, it was a very real privilege to hear the minister speak this afternoon. Always I have believed that what this government does is marked by the style rather than the substance. The speech we heard this afternoon has turned this belief into an unalterable fact based upon experience.

In his opening remarks, the minister said the bill was intended to provide opportunity for building our future and that it was a question of political will, no more and no less, that this be done. He then proceeded to list the problems which many people feel accompany foreign ownership—the dulling of entrepreneurship, control of markets, control of machinery purchases, control of component purchases. He then outlined the steps taken or promised—an increase in the number of Canadian directors until they constituted a majority, Canadian resources being refined in this country, an interest advantage in taxation matters. He referred to the role of the Industrial Development Bank and of the Canada Development Corporation in glowing terms and listed again the priorities set up by his department.

In school, years ago, we were taught to make précis. It would be interesting to determine which part of the minister's rhetoric related to the bill, which to the ideals that are not being met, and which to programs purloined from other sources but claimed now as Liberal achievements. The bill does not deal with the extent of present foreign investment or its expansion within the economy in any way, as long as the expansion is related to an existing undertaking. It does not provide better opportunities for the Canadian entrepreneur in any way—and this is not as dulled as the minister implied; it is simply unable to obtain capital in many instances. The measure before us does nothing to encourage or assist these men who wish to play their role in building Canada.

Claims have been made that the bill embodies innovative provisions including, as I have mentioned, arrangements for Canadians to be in the majority on boards of directors, tax relief in the field of interest, and increased local refining of Canadian resources. Mr. Speaker, these ideas are all taken from actions first carried out in Ontario by a Conservative government. This applies also to the reference which was made to the Prime Minister's speech in Vancouver. None of this is Liberal in origin.

Portions of the minister's speech related to significant benefit and cabinet responsibility. This same gentleman and his fellows presided over the disposition of Supertest Petroleum Corporation, an Ontario-based firm. Granted, the present bill was not then law but the cabinet would, presumably, act on the same basic principles. But though this was a Canadian company, although it was profitable, it was allowed to be sold to a foreign concern, ironically; a company owned and controlled by the government of a foreign country. The minister says it is a question of will, and I agree with him. But the will of this government is lacking, as it has been in the past, and all the will in the world cannot add solid meat to the sawdust that is represented in the minister's speech.

There is no will in this government except to survive, and it hopes the Canadian people will look no further than the rhetoric and not look for the meat. But they will not be so easily fooled as this. They will opt for Canada and for policies that give incentives to Canadians, not for hollow style that is aimed at grabbing headlines and providing grist for candidates trying to prove that their government has done something, that something has been accomplished.

[Mr. Hueglin.]

There are a number of important aspects of the control of foreign investment in Canada that must be clearly stated. Investment in the past has been beneficial. It has provided jobs for Canadians, which in its time was a fair bargain in view of the profit and increasing equity gained through such investment. Presently, however, little new money is coming into Canada relative to increased foreign control. In fact, most expansion is financed by Canadian savings, which year by year are becoming more and more adequate and capable of financing our own growth.

Canadian funds are being used to finance the takeover of Canadian companies by those whose primary interest is not necessarily the expansion of jobs in Canada and Canadian markets but, rather, increasing profits to send home. These are companies that look at the world not from a "Canada first" point of view, but from a multinational point of view in which Canada is merely one pawn in a widespread game.

This bill will not necessarily prevent the growth of foreign ownership in new industries. It most certainly will in no way place Canadians at any advantage compared to these many companies presently foreign-owned. Neither will it in any way encourage or assist Canadians either in buying or in retaining their interest in Canadian firms. It will, in effect, give the appearance of action, but will do little except build another department of government that will seem to be active but which in reality will not be. It will simply let the government convince those who are unwary that something has been done when it has not.

However, this bill is better than nothing at all, for the government at least will have to relate its actions to the act and the guidelines under the act, rather than to its own ad hoc actions, as has been the case in the past. But the legislation will do nothing constructive.

Although Canadians, particularly Niagarans, are presently, quite rightly, primarily concerned about rising prices and the energy crisis, there is no doubt that one of their greatest continuing concerns is the question of who will control our destiny. This government has failed in controlling inflation and in developing a rational, planned energy policy. It has also failed during its ten years of existence to address itself in any positive manner to this continuing concern of all Canadians.

The role of the government should be to assist Canadians who are willing to undertake risk, people who are willing to operate companies that can compete for sales at home and abroad and are willing to invest in the enterprise of others. Vast sums have been loaned to countries other than Canada at interest rates lower than Canadian citizens can obtain from the Export Development Corporation, indeed at lower interest rates than the Industrial Development Bank, which the minister boasts about, have offered. This is not just. Many millions have been spent on programs that are of no long-term benefit, often of little short-term benefit and at times of potential or real harm to our society. Could not these funds have been better employed in assisting Canadian enterprise to become more productive and competitive, thus opening up permanent jobs?

A Canadian Development Corporation has been established, but it has not as yet assisted small businessmen to any significant degree to obtain the equity capital which they need. Nor has it reached out in any way to the citizens of Canada, allowing them to assist in building a stronger Canada through personal involvement. The Canadian Development Corporation was claimed by the minister to be an achievement, but as yet it has not touched the citizenry of Canada. This is provided for in the act, so why has it not been done?

Over the years I have sought the opinions of the citizens of Niagara riding and their position was always clear. In the year since they saw fit to place me in this House, the message has become even clearer. Canadians, at least those in Niagara riding, are looking for leadership in regaining control of our economic destiny. They are looking for positive action and are willing to become involved themselves if given the opportunity and support that only the government can provide.

In summation, this bill does not in any way alter the situation of foreign investment in Canada, as it now stands. It is window-dressing that few who are really concerned will be satisfied with. Lastly, it is clear that Canadians who are looking for effective action that will be of assistance to them and will allow them to become involved in this greatest of all problems, that of our independent economic survival, will have to wait still longer than they have already. They will have to wait until the day when the positive programs of the Conservative Party are put forth in the form of government bills. Clearly, the minister does not have the political will to provide the opportunity for Canadians to share in building their future. Just as clearly, a Conservative government, when in power, has that will and will put it into law.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, over the last few months we have been spending many hours discussing Bill C-132. First of all, we dealt with the second reading stage and then had 30 to 40 meetings of the committee; then it came back at report stage, and finally this evening we have reached third reading stage of the bill. During its progress through the House, the committee of the House was able to get three or four amendments put into the bill which, in my opinion, strengthen the bill. Foreign ownership in this country is a very important question. This bill goes part way toward solving at least some of the problems of foreign ownership. It is a small step. It will deal with between 10 and 20 per cent, depending on the year, of foreign activity in Canada and I think it is the first step toward seriously repatriating the Canadian economy.

Canada, perhaps more than any other country, is dependent upon foreign capital. According to Statistics Canada, we now have in excess of $50 billion worth of foreign funds in this country. About 80 per cent of these funds come from the United States of America. On the other hand, as of 1970 Canada had about $6 billion invested in other countries. The reason that the issue of foreign ownership concerns me is really threefold. First of all, we are exporting capital from Canada today. We are a net exporter of capital, not a net importer of capital any longer. As a matter of fact, last year Canada exported some $2.3 billion of capital in the form of dividends, profits and interest rates to United States corporations alone.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): And union dues.

Mr. Nystrom: Perhaps there were union dues as well, though I do not have the statistics for them. But in the form of interest rates, dividends and profits, $2.3 billion went to United States corporations. Yesterday there was a story in the press to the effect that at the rate of outflow of funds, this year probably $2.8 billion of Canadian funds will go to United States investors. As I have said, about 80 per cent of the foreign ownership in Canada is United States investment, and I take it a lot of money in the form of dividends, profits, and so on, also flows out to investors in Japan, Germany, Britain or wherever those investors live.

The second matter that concerns me about the tremendous intensity of foreign ownership of our economy is that I think in the long run it hurts us in terms of jobs. We now have a branch plant economy that depends on the parent plant in many cases to make decisions that effect our economy. Thirdly, I believe that because of the tremendous influx of foreign capital into this country, some of our political and economic decision-making powers have been eroded. Our future is genuinely at stake. I know some people tend to look at some of us as narrow nationalists. I do not think we are. But if you are faced with a choice between nationalism or annihilation as a nation, one would come down on the side of a person who is a nationalist in so far as wanting Canada to develop its own economy in the world community, with the strength to make political and economic decisions.

I become very annoyed at times when I hear members of the Conservative Party suggest we in this party are anti-American. I am not anti-American, and I do not blame Americans for what has happened in Canada. I blame two groups for what has happened.

Mr. Paproski: The Grits.

Mr. Nystrom: I blame the Grits and other governments of this country, including the Tory governments, for the lack of foreign ownership legislation which we should have on our statute books. We have been selling ourselves out; we have been economic prostitutes, so to speak.

Mr. Paproski: Shame.

Mr. Nystrom: We have allowed foreign investors to come into our country, with very few rules or guidelines, to do to us almost anything they want. Secondly, I blame the multinational corporations or the transnational conglomerates which have established themselves around the world. They are vertically integrated and massive in their power. Many of them are much more powerful than the economies of entire countries; some of them more powerful than the economy of Canada. Huge, multinational corporations can affect the economic pattern of the world, the value of various currencies and the balance of payments of many countries. These are the people I blame for the type of situation we face today.

As I have already indicated, the bill before us has a couple of major deficiencies. It does not go far enough because it pertains only to takeovers and new investments. The bill is, in my opinion, too subjective and leaves too much of the decision-making process to the proposed agency. In some cases that might be good, but you might have an agency which is not too concerned about the question of foreign ownership in Canada and because of its subjectivity there might not be many positive decisions taken. As I said earlier, this bill deals with only 10 per cent or 20 per cent of foreign activity in Canada. It deals with takeovers, new investments and the expansion of existing firms into non-related areas; and this is where you run into trouble. How do you define what is a non-related area? You probably define it by product. Many of our multinational corporations are vertically integrated and are involved in literally hundreds of products.

Let us take the IT&T as an example. It has 58 different subsidiaries operating in this country, involved in literally hundreds of products from toilet paper to telephones. They are invoived in the hotel-motel business, the rent-a-car business and many other businesses in Canada. IT&T could literally expand into almost any product in this country and not be screened, because it would be expanding into a related area of one of its subsidiaries.

The same is true of almost any huge, transnational conglomerate now operating in this country. Let us consider Imperial Oil as an example of what I fear. Imperial Oil is operating now in the gas and oil business. However, it is involved in mining, manufacturing, the finance service industry, the wholesale and retail business in this country, in trade, transportation, utilities, construction and pipelines. It is also involved in many other areas and could expand into the binder twine and rope industry in Canada because one of its wholly-owned subsidiaries Polytwine, a company which manufactures rope. Imperial Oil could, through this subsidiary, expand into the twine and rope business. These are the things that concern me about the bill before us. I think it has many loopholes.

Gulf Oil could manufacture as much toothpaste as it wanted, as it is now manufacturing toothpaste in this country through a subsidiary and could further expand in this field. When one travels on an airline he often uses little plastic dishes; they are manufactured and processed by one gas and oil company. One can see that when we start to screen these companies which expand into unrelated areas, because of the vertical integration we will have a difficult time blocking or screening the expansion. Many of them are intertwined and greatly vertically integrated. Bell Canada controls Northern Electric, and Northern Electric controls Microsystems. Microsystems can manufacture a number of devices for Bell Canada; therefore Bell Canada can get into many related businesses through Microsystems.

These are some of the problems I see in the bill before us. I have given a number of reasons why we in this House should strengthen our foreign ownership legislation and should treat this bill as only a first step toward repatriating the economy of Canada so that we, as Canadians, have control of our own destiny. In the next few minutes I want to deal with what I think are two myths constantly referred to in the debate by members of the Conservative Party and many people who are afraid of stronger foreign ownership legislation in this country.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

I see that the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) has just entered the chamber.

An hon. Member: He has been here all evening.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No he hasn't.

Mr. Nystrom: Some of the arguments used by that hon. member are along the lines about which I have spoken. One of the myths is that Canada needs more foreign capital if we are to develop. The second myth follows directly from the first, that without foreign capital we would have more unemployment and less development. These are two myths about which the people of Canada should be aware. First of all, as hon. members have pointed out, we are financing our own takeover. Study after study has revealed that of the new foreign expansion in Canada each year, only about 6 per cent has been carried out with funds from abroad and the remaining 94 per cent has been carried out with capital raised in Canadian money markets, through Canadian banks or from profits and retained earnings reinvested in this country. In other words 94 per cent, if not more, of foreign investment is now being accomplished with Canadian funds.

We are using the savings of many ordinary citizens of this country to finance huge, foreign conglomerates which are expanding their industries in Canada, draining off many of their dividends to the foreign parents whether they be United States corporations or companies of other countries. The annual outflow of funds this year, in terms of dividends, interest payments, and so on, is expected to be about $2.8 billion. During the decade of the sixties there was a net export of capital from Canada of about $2 billion. There is more capital flowing out of this country than there is coming in.

We have the money in this country, but we are a net exporter of capital because so much of our industry is foreign-owned. This capital investment is becoming more of a disadvantage than an advantage to us because the percentage of outflow, in terms of capital, is increasing each year. To realize this fact one has only to read the annual statements of various organizations. For example, for the years 1962 to 1971 the payment of interest and dividends to foreign companies increased by some 90 per cent, and from 1967 to 1971 managements fees to parent companies from branch plants increased by 60 per cent. We find that the return on the foreign investment dollar in this country is continually increasing. According to the Shultz report on the Alberta oil and gas industry, for every U.S. dollar invested in Alberta since the Leduc find, there has been a return of 71 cents since the first year of the investment.

We find that foreign investment is very profitable for those who are investing in other countries. In the United States, for example, between 1960 and 1967—during that seven-year period—Americans invested around the world some $19.4 billion. The returns on their investments were some $33.3 billion. In Latin-America, during the same seven years, Americans invested $1.7 billion and their returns on those investments were some $8.8 billion. So you can see once again that the people who are helped most by foreign investment are those who are doing the investing, and not the country where the investment is taking place. It is about time Canada grew up and started to repatriate our economy so that we controlled it, and not the foreign corporations.

We find, for example, that our banks and our financial institutions are largely responsible for the sell-out of our country. About $2 billion to $3 billion of Canadian savings was lent to expand foreign activities in this country between 1960 and 1967. Between 1965 and 1969, the Canadian bank and bond market tripled the financing of foreign corporations in their operations in this country. Why do the banks lend to the huge, foreign companies operating in Canada? Basically, they do it for two reasons; one is for the security of their loan and the second is that it provides them with great profits. Canadian banks have been operating with tremendous profits in the last two years. Profits have approximately doubled those in the non-financial sector of the business world. From 1967 to 1971, for example, the banks' profits increased by 102 per cent. The five major banks hold some 70 corporate directorships. Of those 70 corporate directorships, about half are with foreign-owned corporations.

You can see, again, that there is a tendency throughout the whole banking and financial system for the banks to lend a great deal of money, perhaps as much as half of their funds, to foreign corporations operating either in Canada or outside the boundaries of our country. The banks also encourage the spending of Canadian money in other parts of the world. I have here, for example, a couple of advertisements from the New York Times and the Washington Post by the Toronto-Dominion Bank. The ad says, in a big headline, "We are happy to be accused of unCanadian activities". I have here another advertisement by the Royal Bank of Canada, saying in a great big headline, "We deliver Canada. Contact the healthy bank for a copy of businessmen's Canada". Again, that comes from a foreign newspaper.

What I am saying is that the banks in this country are largely responsible for the sell-out of funds, for the financing of foreign corporations in this country and for the draining of funds that are now leaving this country for other countries around the world. Our banks have 300 offices operating in 40 different countries that serve basically multinational corporations in the foreign countries. About 26 per cent of the assets of the Canadian banks are now held outside of Canada. I think that gives you an idea of the way banks are operating and how they are part of the drainage of funds and capital out of Canada.

Of the mutual funds in this country, some 38 per cent is now being invested in the United States alone. I suggest that the mutual fund market is another source of capital that could be used for the development of Canada for Canadians. So you can see that through the banks, through the bond market, through the financial institutions, through mutual funds and insurance companies we are financing our own sell-out. We are financing the purchase of Canada by foreign companies, by foreign multinational corporations mostly based in the United States.

It is not only the banks and the financial institutions that are aiding and assisting foreign corporations operating in Canada. The government, through DREE and many other programs in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, gives grants to foreign-owned corporations. For example, Imperial Oil a few years ago was given a grant of $10 million to build a fertilizer plant near the city of Edmonton, Alberta. We give many tax incentives—some members of the Conservative Party have been outlining them—to foreign corporations to expand their business in Canada, be it in mining, in energy or in manufacturing fields.

I think this deals with the first fallacy, that Canada does not have enough capital. We do; we are a net exporter of capital. Even the Toronto stock exchange officials, when they appeared before the committee, said that Canada has enough funds to develop its own economy. There is no reason why we should have to rely on foreign equity capital to develop the country in which we live. I think that all we need now are some government policies, some industrial development policies to repatriate our economy.

The second myth that I think prevails in the minds of many people is that if foreign investment or ownership is to be hindered in some way, we will lose jobs. I suggest that is a lot of nonsense. I speak as a person who comes from the Prairies, where many people do not live as they do in southern Ontario and where I have seen some of the direct results of the foreign control of our economy. In my riding, in the town of Esterhazy, there is the world's largest potash mine owned by International Minerals Corporation of New Mexico. A few years ago when there was an oversupply of potash in the world and the potash company had to cut back on production. Naturally, the company made the decision that the cutback in the American plant would be less than in the Canadian plant, so they cut back to 90 per cent production in New Mexico and to 40 per cent production in Saskatchewan. It was the people in my riding who were laid off and lost their jobs.

I suggest that if this were a Canadian-owned company, perhaps the cutback would have been less severe, but because it was a branch plant and the headquarters were situated in another country, quite naturally the management protected its own people first rather than people living in another country. You find the same situation in many places around the world. For example, let us consider the International Nickel Company. In 1971 they closed down two mines in Canada, despite the fact that they were making tremendous profits. Their profit in 1970 was $102 million. The reason for the cut-down of production and closure of two mines was that there was a reduced demand for nickel in the world.

But what did they do after they closed down the two mines in Canada? They opened up new plants in Caledonia, Indonesia and Guatemala. They used some of the funds to develop the new mines in Guatemala and Indonesia from the profits they made here in Canada because it is cheaper to lay off Canadian workers and to hire labour in what are called underdeveloped countries. The multinational corporations can do this. If this were a Canadian-owned corporation, and particularly if it were publicly-owned, you would not have seen this cutback in production but, rather, a continuation and expansion of those mines because there is a demand for nickel in the world.

Due to the fact that we are foreign-controlled and dominated there is a lack of jobs in the area of research and development. Just today, for example, I heard of a young physicist, or chemist who is 27 to 30 years old who has reached the top of his field in Canada. If he wants to advance in his career, he will have to go to the head offices of the plant in either Pittsburgh or New York. That is another real consequence of foreign ownership in our country where many of the people who are involved in research or development jobs have to go to the parent company because most of the research and development is done in the United States, in Japan or wherever it may be.

Another area in which we lose jobs in Canada because of foreign ownership is in the export of raw materials. We export them in the most crude form, have them processed and finished elsewhere and then import the manufactured goods. We import more manufactured goods into this country than any other industrialized country. We all know that it is in manufacturing, processing and developing that most jobs are to be found. These are labour-intensive industries, not capital-intensive industries. If we can control our own economy, we can do a lot more processing of foodstuffs and of natural resources in our own country rather than exporting them in a raw state to other countries.

Take the example of Sudbury, where nickel is mined and exported in its crude state to Pittsburgh, to be refined there and provide jobs for Americans. This is another consequence of foreign ownership where we lose jobs rather than gain them simply because there is so much foreign equity in the ownership of our economy. Another consequence of this which results in our losing jobs is that when the parent country is in trouble, it will introduce a program like the U.S. DISC program. The hon. member for Crowfoot is very well aware of it. Or a bill will be introduced like the Burke-Hartke bill in an attempt to reduce foreign expansion and investment. In that case we find Canadians losing jobs because branch plants here are not expanded and preference is given to the parent companies in the United States. We have had many examples of this over the past few years.

I contend that we have enough money in this country to develop it ourselves and to provide more jobs for our people. There is one other point I wish to mention about capital. It was raised again today by one of the members of the Progressive Conservative Party who accused one of our premiers of going to New York or Washington to borrow money on the financial markets there. I am not saying that all foreign debt capital should be excluded from this country. There is a difference between equity and debt. Many states have gone to other countries to borrow money to build up their industry and after a period of time have paid off the debt and owned their industry outright. But that is not what is happening with respect to our capital requirements today. Instead of issuing mortgages, we provide equity in ownership, so that the dividends flow back to the investors in various countries.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other areas in which we should be moving, beyond what is proposed in this bill. I wish to touch briefly on five or six of them before I conclude. First of all, we should have some legislation to deal with existing corporations as they expand. Since this bill deals with only 10 per cent to 20 per cent of foreign investment activity, obviously we are missing the boat. Obviously, we are not touching any existing corporations such as Imperial Oil, General Motors and IT&T, and we will have to find ways of getting at existing corporations.

Secondly, like the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae), I think we should be expanding the sector-by-sector approach to repatriating our economy. We have controls against foreign ownership in broadcasting and banking. I believe we should extend that control to the energy field because it is vital to all industry. At present, our gas and oil industry is 90 per cent owned by foreigners. All future development should not only be Canadian owned, but I would argue for its public ownership. Gas and oil are public utilities. They must be used for the benefit of the public. The industry should be operated as a public utility and run for the benefit of the people of the country. We can do that, Mr. Speaker.

The province of Alberta this year will be exporting about $1 billion in profits which will go to foreign oil companies mainly based in the United States. From my own province of Saskatchewan, which does not produce that much gas and oil, there will be an outflow of about $120 million to parent companies in the United States. What I am saying is that if we have control of the oil and gas industry, under public ownership, these profits would accrue to the people of Canada. We do have the funds in this country to undertake that. We can raise what we need. We can tax the gas and oil companies that we already have here. We can take the proceeds from export taxes. We can float bonds in this country. By using all these devices we will have enough funds to have the oil and gas industry in Canada taken into public ownership and made to serve the people of the country. All this we can do. We have the technology, we have vast reserves of gas and oil, and we have a need for them here in Canada.

The third thing we should be doing is reform the taxation system so that we do not continue to give huge tax incentives to foreign investors, particularly in the energy and mining areas. As has already been pointed out in this debate, foreign investors do have a tax advantage that Canadians do not enjoy. Fourthly, under the government's industrial policies we should enact legislation requiring resource industries in Canada, in mining and so on, to develop and process more of the raw materials in this country. This has already been done by various governments. It was done by the provincial government of Ontario in the area of pulp and paper mills. Now, timber cut in the province must be processed in the province, thus providing jobs for the people of the province. This could be done in many other industries and would provide more jobs for Canadians.

We must insist on having more research and development undertaken in Canada. Without research and development we will never make great progress in industry. At present there is not much specialization of industry in Canada. What do we produce as specialists in Canada? We produce very little because we have a branch plant economy which depends too much on the decisions made by parent corporations.

We must end a lot of the government's giveaway programs under which money goes to foreign corporations. Under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion I find that a lot of capital grants go to foreign-owned corporations. Under the IRDIA program, 39 per cent of the grants go to foreign corporations. Under the PAIT program, 45 per cent of the grants go to foreign-owned corporations. We must start to phase this out, and instead provide government assistance to Canadian corporations and citizens. A seventh suggestion I would like to make is that we use some of our foreign exchange reserves to buy back parts of the economy. Why do we not use $3 billion or $4 billion, using all these sources, to develop an all-Canadian gas and oil industry, rather than having that industry developed by foreign-based, multinational corporations?

As my eighth suggestion, I say we must have more public ownership in this country and much more development undertaken through Crown corporations. This is the only way in many areas. Really, what has private enterprise done in the Maritimes? What has it done in eastern Quebec? It will not go into those parts of the country because it cannot make a buck. It will only go there if you provide it with huge incentives—and once the incentives die, the companies that are established want to bail out. A good example is Devco, in the province of Nova Scotia.

My ninth suggestion is that we must have some investment controls making it mandatory that the banks and financial institutions in Canada lend more of their funds to Canadians. My understanding is that roughly half of the loans made by Canadian banks and financial institutions go to foreigners either operating inside or outside Canada. I suggest that the government over a period of years could make it mandatory for this figure to be increased, say to 60 per cent of their funds going to Canadians in the first year, 70 per cent in the next year, 80 per cent in the next, and so on. There is no reason why we should be financing foreign corporations that take over our own companies. Another way we might do this is by establishing a Crown bank in this country to provide more competition for the other banks and operating in terms of direct investment, in terms of direct funding of Canadian enterprises. These are some of the things that could and must be done if we are to develop a country that is truly Canadian and is owned and controlled by the people.

There is another thing we could do, and it has already been done by such radical countries as Switzerland. That is, to use foreign exchange controls to keep out some foreign funds. In Switzerland there is an 8 per cent negative charge on any money that comes into the country. We could use foreign exchange controls like that in order to guide and plan the fiscal and monetary development of our country.

There are just a few things that the minister could pursue in order to repatriate the economy. The bill before us goes only part way; it only screens the acquisition of Canadian companies by foreigners and new areas of expansion. That is a very small part of the problem, Mr. Speaker. It we are to take control of our own country and grapple with the question of foreign ownership, we need policies that go much further. We have the funds and we have the technology; all we need is the planning and policies. One way of achieving that is for those of us who feel strongly about it to squeeze as much as we can out of the orange before it dries up.

Mr. Blenkarn: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) on a point of order.

Mr. Blenkarn: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): That is not a point of order. Of course, the hon. member needs the consent of the hon. member to ask a question.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blenkarn: Is it the view of the hon. member and his party that they would be in favour of significant tax cuts to Canadians to encourage Canadian investors, including a lower income tax level to Canadian investors, corporate tax incentives and that type of program?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I think there are some inequities in the tax system vis-à-vis foreign investors in this country, but I do not think the way to solve that is by giving Canadians a much lower tax bracket or greater tax incentives. The Conservative Party has argued for years that the way to develop this country is through incentives—but that is not going to work. It is one of the reasons why development in Canada has been concentrated in southern Ontario—Montreal and Toronto. If you operate on that type of system, you will find the capital going where the market is, where transportation costs are lower, and so on. I do not think you can develop this country by providing greater handouts to businessmen, because there is not that much difference between the Canadian entrepreneur and the foreign entrepreneur.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is what we wanted you to say.

Mr. Nystrom: I see no reason why the foreign oil man should have a greater tax advantage than his Canadian counterpart. If you want to develop this country, you can do it by cutting the tax of the low income person or average income person. He will then spend more, he will need more consumer items and the economy will grow. This is one way to stimulate the economy. If a person can afford to buy another car, I am sure General Motors will not complain.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the reply given by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) to the question put by the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) with regard to incentives. If I heard him correctly, he said that incentive goes where the trade is; that money will search out the best place. He felt it would probably go to southwestern Ontario, or somewhere in Ontario, where the money already is. He would know what the situation is if he lived in the province of Alberta. In fact, he does not have to live there; he just has to use the telephone, which the government provides for him, to phone a real estate agent in Alberta. Nine out of ten of them are getting requests for opportunities to invest money from British Columbia, so there is some kind of drift of money out of B.C. to Alberta.

Any real estate agent in Alberta will tell you that in the last ten days he has had requests for opportunities to invest money in Alberta. There seems to be greater incentive there, or there seems disincentive in the province of British Columbia. The hon. member's party should try to find out why the flood of money is coming from British Columbia to Alberta. It certainly would be an awakening truth for his party to analyse that problem.

I ask him to just get on the phone tomorrow to any real estate agent in the telephone book in Alberta and ask if he has had any requests to invest money from British Columbia in the province. The answer will be, "lots of it". We are having a hard time placing it, Mr. Speaker, but we want it and we will do our best to sell them something. The hon. member spoke about the outflow of capital. There is nothing in this bill to prevent capital going out of Canada. But he said it four or five times. I generally repeat myself three times, but he beat me. All the mutual funds in Canada are finding some other source to develop their money, according to him.

The oddity of this piece of legislation is that it will encourage further outflow of capital. This afternoon the minister said there is one view, that government should not interfere in business, and there is another view that government should. He said he was one of those who thought that government should interfere. Is this going to encourage Canadian money to stay at home? I do not think so. Certainly money will seek the highest return. In the past, government intervention with major investors in Canada has caused concern to some individuals. Their hands have been burned because of government intervention; and if they have money to invest when this agency is set up, they are going to seek another country.

While the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville may have been making a point which school children could have understood, we in this House surely understand what it is going to do. We understand that it will encourage a greater outflow of capital. He talked about how we should develop processing in Canada. Of course we should, but we must have the capital to invest in the country. Then, when we have developed the processing, we have to find the markets. Saskatchewan has been traditional in the export of its raw material. What is its biggest raw material, exported for huge amounts of money? Wheat—and they get it out of there as quickly as they can. Feed barley goes out as well. They do not even want to feed it to their own cattle and have given no encouragement to invest in a feed plant in the province.

The hon. member said that the potash industry was in a terrible situation; that at one time there was a surplus of potash and foreign companies curtailed the production in Saskatchewan, and that if potash had been owned by a public company there would have been no curtailment. What nonsense, Mr. Speaker. He said there was a world surplus of potash. Naturally, the potash that is the most costly to produce is the first to go out of production. Naturally, if there is a surplus of potash and the price is low, it will not be produced no matter whether a Canadian or an international company is involved in its production.

A company will only produce something when the price is right. If there is a surplus of any commodity and the price goes down, it will not be produced. The Alberta Wheat Pool and the Calgary Wheat Pool were producing fertilizer in Calgary. When the LIFT program was introduced and the use of fertilizer in Canada was cut back, you should have seen what happened. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville should have visited the plant. He would have seen the surpluses piled up. He knows what the Alberta and Saskatchewan wheat pools did. They had surpluses, which they stockpiled in my constituency—good old Crowfoot. We encouraged them to stay in business. If those people had listened to people like the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), that co-operative fertilizer plant in Calgary would have been in severe difficulties.

Members of the NDP have implied that encouraging foreign investment in Canada is a sin and that only the Conservative Party wants to encourage it. What was the Saskatchewan government doing when it asked the Roumanians to build a tractor plant in Moose Jaw or Saskatoon? The people representing Moose Jaw and Saskatoon were going to Russia and to Roumania trying to get that plant established in this country. The Saskatchewan government was to give them everything under the sun in order to encourage them to invest in the province.

Odd as it may appear, Roumania said, "No, we do not want to invest in your country because you want to sell our tractors to the United States, and we do not want our tractors to go to the United States." The Saskatchewan government said that such manufacturing plant cannot be viable unless it is prepared to market its product in the United States. Isn't that odd? Because the Saskatchewan government said, "You must sell in the United States," that Roumanian plant was not established in this country. What does this mean? In this House we are speaking about the outflow of Canadian capital. The NDP members of the House want to build a fence around us; they want Canada to become an isolationist state. At the same time, the NDP government of Saskatchewan says we must sell in the United States. There is a mix-up in the thinking of the NDP. They should reconsider their position.

Canada is a trading nation. Nearly 80 per cent of Canadians, directly or indirectly, work in industries that are export-oriented. What about the automotive industry? It is 99 per cent owned by foreigners, yet the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) treads lightly there. The equity control, even of the automotive parts industry, lies not in Canada but in the United States. The NDP skirts around that question.

In our complex world we need multinational companies to market commodities. If you want to break into the Japanese meat market, the little butcher on Wellington Street will not do it. Only somebody with the finances and time can break into that market. That means a multinational company. Even the lovable farm boy, who may or may not know anything about the exporting of meat—I am inclined to think he knows very little—could break into that market. Whether we like it or not, it takes a multinational corporation to do that kind of thing. Many of those companies serve a useful purpose—

An hon. Member: Some are Canadian.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): —and many multinational corporations are Canadian multinational corporations. Surely we should not say, "you have grown too big; you have cut mama's apron strings and we are not going to look after you and claim to be your parents any longer." This is what this bill could do to many Canadian multinational corporations. We should have enough confidence in ourselves as Canadians to claim the parentage of the multinational corporations which have sprung from Canadian soil. We should be proud of their endeavours and use them to assist in the marketing of our goods.

The leader of the NDP suggested that Canadians have no confidence in themselves and that is why they need foreign money coming to do all these things for them. I consider that the reverse is true. Canadians have confidence in themselves and are prepared to use foreign capital to develop this country. They are not afraid. They do not need to shelter themselves. What person doing anything in Canada today is not doing it on borrowed money? There are very few. It is far easier to use money today than to use brawn. That is one thing my father taught me—although he taught me how to use brawn, too—and that is that you must have confidence in yourself to use someone else's capital, to use the banks and, if necessary, to use foreign capital.

I was very annoyed when the leader of the NDP talked about our energy industry. He said this bill will affect only a small portion of foreign investment in Canada, that it is just a short step, and that ultimately it may affect between 10 and 20 per cent—I think that is the figure he mentioned—of corporations. When he says that this bill is just a short step, he frightens Canadian investors and foreign investors in Canada. When he makes such utterances, we see a government wagged by the tail of the dog; we see a government kowtowing to the little group on my left which says that this is just a short step, that it will only affect up to 20 per cent of corporations and that it wants stricter laws.

Such utterances will make it mighty difficult to keep Canadian capital at home. They have not kept it in Saskatchewan, and are not keeping it in British Columbia. The Premier of Manitoba is doing a much better job in encouraging investment in Manitoba. He invited the Japanese over. He wants Japanese investment in Manitoba. He is not as narrow-minded and shortsighted as are certain people in this House, especially in the NDP.

The hon. member for York South suggested that oil and gas are in short supply in the Maritimes because in 1961 the Conservative government drew the Ottawa Valley line and said that western oil could be marketed as far west as the Ottawa Valley line but no farther east. He said that action has created the present high gas and oil prices in the maritimes. Well, every intelligent person in this House knows that the opposite is true. The hon. member knew it when he said it: he knows that exactly the opposite is true. It is terrible the way some people will play political games in an effort to scoop more votes. They do not consider what is good for Canada: Canada comes second to votes. I say that in view of the hypocritical statements which were made this afternoon by members such as the hon. member for York South.

The fact is that the creation of the Ottawa Valley line in 1961 enabled oil companies in Alberta which had been producing at less than 50 per cent of capacity to produce at least at 50 per cent of capacity. We wanted to build a pipeline to Montreal but were not able to do so. We said, "All right; give us a certain part of the market." Certain Canadian-owned companies were going broke, not having the resources to keep active in the Alberta oil business. Throughout the sixties these conditions brought about a reduction in the number of Canadian companies operating in the Alberta oil business. They were not able to sell enough oil and could not produce at even 50 per cent of capacity. Then along came the Ottawa Valley line. As a result, certain of the bigger companies developed the oil industry, exploration went on and to a certain extent at least that is responsible for our present increased reserves. We could assist eastern Canada with its needs if only we had the mechanical means of getting the oil there.

The leader of the New Democratic Party went on to say how terrible it is that Alberta is selling out the tar sands to foreign-owned interests. What sort of rubbish is that? Who can he convince that that is anywhere near the truth? I surely hope it is no one in this House. The Alberta tar sands consist of 15,000 squares miles. I ask my friends to the left to envisage that. The Syncrude project, which we in Alberta all hope will go ahead, is for the right to mine eight square miles over the next 25 years. They readily admit it will require a $1 billion expenditure to put them in the position of mining those eight square miles over the next 25 years. They hope their production will be 125,000 barrels of oil a day.

When the NDP say that because of Syncrude we are selling out our natural resources to foreign investors, that is puppycock. I say puppycock because they are puppies in the investment world. Not one in their group has invested a five-cent piece in Canada. The leader of that group said they represent the average Canadian. They do not represent the average Canadian because the average Canadian has invested in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): After the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville was elected, he attended university for the first two years he was here. He has never held a job. He has not done a thing. As far as I know, he has not put a nickel into Canada. By the way he talks, I doubt if he will ever save a nickel to put into Canada.

An hon. Member: He is saving to go to Chile.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): The Alberta and Quebec ministers recently discussed the energy problem. There is no doubt the Alberta government will encourage Quebec to invest in another eight square miles of the tar sands. If it wants, the Ontario government can invest in another eight square miles. We will require a major capital investment in those 15,000 square miles of oil sands if all of Canada, including Quebec and the Maritimes, is to become self-sufficient. We must become self-sufficient because we can no longer trust our sources in the Middle East. We hear the hue and cry about the terrible multinational, foreign-owned oil companies. Well, I would rather trust them today than the Arabs.

If the Canadian government wants to form an oil company to mine specifically in the Athabasca tar sands, that is a decision they will have to make. However, I would not want to see them trotting around speculating as to where the best political hay might be made. Because they want to get votes in Newfoundland, they should not drill a well off the Grand Banks. Maybe they are drilling for votes rather than oil.

The tar sands is a different situation. It is a known product that is there. If the government wants to mine there, let them put up $1 billion and get into the business. There is all kinds of oil there. One cubic yard will yield a barrel of oil. This is refined down to three-quarters of a barrel of light density crude. Squeeze out these cubic yards and you will have oil for a month or two. Everyone can go there. There is no problem; the oil is there. Let us not hear any more about Alberta selling out to foreign interests. We are still in the experimental stage of squeezing that oil out of the tar sands. We have not proven to the world that we can get that oil out of the tar sands. For the past five years, Great Canadian Oil has been involved in this and has lost money every year. To date, they have lost a total of $90 million, not counting the capitalization to get them started.

Mr. Gillespie: What was the average price of crude?

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): It has not been very high for the past five years. We hope this government will allow it to be high enough in the next one, two or three years so that the oil sands can be developed and we can become self-sufficient. If we do not become self-sufficient we will be at the mercy of the Arabs until hell freezes over. If we are to become self-sufficient, the government must encourage investment in these tar sands. Don't buy this puppycock from people who are reluctant even to invest in their own province.

We hear a great deal of talk about money flowing out of the country. Certainly, money will flow out of the country. Four wells in the North Sea have more reserves than has been developed conventionally in Canada to date. In Alberta we have been drilling quite succesfully for the past 25 years.

Mr. Paproski: Forty years.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I know it has been longer than 25. In the past 25 years we have developed a certain amount of reserves. However, as I said, four wells in the North Sea have as much reserves as all the wells that have been drilled conventionally in Alberta. That gives some idea where the money will go if we curtail it. It will not go to develop our oil fields.

There has not been a major find of oil in Canada for nearly six years. You cannot acknowledge that fact and then continue to discourage foreign investment in oil. They are discouraged enough. Outside of the tar sands there has not been a major find for six years. In spite of this we still hear all this garbage and see government intervention in the industry. Are we to sit idly by hoping that some day we, even with that kind of discouragement, will become self-sufficient in oil? I doubt it.

We must also consider the cost. It is obvious, and I know Your Honour will agree with me, that the first oil find is the easiest. The next find is the next easiest. For the past 25 years oil has been quite successfully found in Alberta. However, as the years go by the finds will be more difficult and more costly. That is pointed out in a brief that was sent to all parties by the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada. On page 53 it states:

> In 1968, production cost per barrel was 43 cents, development cost 28 cents, and finding cost $2.63 for a total of $3.34 to replace a barrel of oil in a developed field.

That was only five years ago. What has happened since then? This year there was a 10 per cent increase in inflation. Last year there was a 10 per cent increase in inflation. All this was due to bad financial handling by the whole Department of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): That, coupled with six years of no major find in Alberta and greater and greater finding costs, means the following were the costs in 1972: the development costs were $2.70; finding costs were $10.98, with production costs still at a relatively stable 50 cents per barrel; replacement cost last year was $14.18 per barrel, or almost double the new posted price for Venezuelan oil. I can say it is an exaggeration. I can say I do not believe it. But if I seriously want to help Canada become self-sufficient in oil, I must put some faith in these figures. They are the best I can get.

• (2140)

I do not know what it costs to produce a barrel of oil, but this is what they tell me. I have to pay some attention because I know oil companies are pulling out of the east coast. I know they made five major finds of oil off Sable Island. Since they are offshore, they would not be economic to produce. In any case, no settlement has been reached as to which government the companies would be dealing with. They do not know. We proudly say we want to become self-sufficient in oil. But we are still sadly lacking in an energy policy which would go any way toward enabling us to become self-sufficient in oil in the near future.

In 1969 the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada came to Ottawa and said it wanted to build a pipeline to Montreal. The answer was no. It was told Montreal wanted to stay with Middle East and Venezuelan oil. In effect, the association was told, "Go peddle your oil elsewhere". Can you blame them for searching out the market? The industry needs a cash flow in order to offset the expense of exploring and drilling for new supplies.

The spokesman for the small NDP group to my left tries to suggest he knows nothing about energy. He knows a lot more than he admitted. He knows enough to distort the facts. He knows enough to destroy the truth in the hope that doing so may gather him a few votes. In fact, he is copying another person who was elected to power by hook or by crook in a far away land, Germany. That person was elected to power and he used the technique of the big lie. I suggest that this little group to my left is very interested in that technique and may well attempt to copy it in the future.

The minister told us this bill was a good one and that there are five or six results the government thinks it will achieve. He said it would provide more employment. I do not see how it will. When I was old enough to work, as a boy of ten, my dad gave me a shovel and a pitchfork—and they did not cost more than $1.50. But I have three sons and I need to buy them some pretty expensive equipment before they can go to work. What I am saying is that not much capital was needed 30 or 40 years ago to get a job, but today it takes $60,000 to create one job in Canada with any degree of permanency.

This bill does not stop the outflow of capital; it encourages the outflow of capital. I do not want governments, whether provincial or federal, to get into business, but this may be the only source of capital available if we carry on as we are doing. I do not believe governments can do things better than private corporations. The governments I have seen around here in the past 15 years have not demonstrated any great degree of efficiency in terms of goods produced per man-hour. Sometimes they have laboured long and produced very little. Sometimes they have laboured very long and tried to produce a whole lot, which has only created more problems.

There is no one more anxious than myself to see more processing of raw materials done in this country, but I do not see how the bill before us will encourage such a thing. Nor do I see how it will upgrade our natural resource industry, as the minister suggested. He said there would be greater domestic content. Very often, people have said it is all right for a provincial government to go to New York to borrow money, that it was all right for Premier Bourassa to go to New York for funds to develop James Bay because that was not equity money; it would give them no control. Let me say once again in this House that the oil industry does not exercise equity control over the oil in Alberta. If the Alberta government so decides, the oil or the gas, as the case may be, stays in the ground. The company, whether American, or British, or French—it does not matter—may have drilled a well; but if Alberta doesn't like the price it is getting out of it, the price it receives, the oil stays in the ground. And no matter what the price may be, if the conservation authority in Alberta wishes to restrict the amount of oil coming out of that well, it stays in the ground.

It is often said that 80 per cent of our oil industry is controlled in the United States. That is not right. The oil industry, that portion of it which lies in Alberta, is controlled by the Alberta energy board. The portion which lies within Saskatchewan may well be controlled by a similar board, but most of the oil in that province has not been found because investment there has been discouraged.

Whether greater domestic ownership will be brought about remains to be seen. My fear is that the bill will lead to fewer Canadian companies. The minister went on to suggest that regional development, or regional input would be increased. Well, DREE was supposed to do that. It is operated by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. It should have solved all those problems. The former minister, the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) admitted in this House that he was slightly disappointed that after a year's operation DREE had created no more than 16,000 jobs having spent "X" million dollars.

The minister who is piloting this bill through the House is too stubborn or too much of a greenhorn in his department, or too frightened by cabinet domination, to accept a sensible amendment as moved by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). The amendment proposed that a copy of the notice should be sent by the agency forthwith, by registered mail, to a province or provinces likely to be significantly affected by the proposal or investment to which the notice refers. Mr. Speaker, that does not turn the legislation inside out. That does not call for any major decision. It just says that a region shall be notified.

Mr. Gillespie: No, it does not.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): The minister has made his speech, and he did not want to be interrupted then though I was trying to ferret out the truth. He may think he is trying to ferret out the truth now. If he did not mean that, why did he not explain it? He could have taken the spirit of that amendment and used his own words. But he did not. When he had finished his speech, I asked him a question; I asked whether this agency would operate completely independently of the government. He said no, it would operate at deputy minister level and report to the minister.

● (2150)

An hon. Member: Whoever suggested it would?

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I think it should, if it is to operate fairly. The National Energy Board was set up by a Conservative government to encourage energy development. Until last year it operated completely independently of the government, brought down its own findings, laid them at the door of the government and said, "Here are our findings. You can overrule them if you like, but these are our findings". They were never overruled until the last year or so. Then the chairman of the National Energy Board was silently done away with and the government's own stoolie put in charge. Now it operates directly under the thumb of the government. This is my point when I say that agencies tend to become political. As I said earlier, the fault and folly of minority government is that it tends to try to protect its own little political party without caring a hoot about the well being of Canada in the long term.

Mr. Paproski: Cheap politics.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Politics becomes the order of the day.

Mr. Baker: With one eye on the NDP.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): As the hon. member suggests, with one eye on the NDP, which has been the government's saviour to date. This is the folly of this whole bill; it is one more political pork barrel. Then the minister said that the bill would improve the quality of life in Canada. I thought he was really stretching for straws when he dragged that one in. We in Alberta tend to think that we have a pretty high quality of life. The air is quite pure; most people are working. Our biggest trouble is to keep a lot of these people we are talking about, and their money, out. We let it come in freely, but we do sometimes worry about it. There is no danger in Alberta. But I thought the minister was really reaching when he mentioned the higher quality of life.

Some mention was also made of the DISC program. The hon. member for York South is fond of holding up the oil industry as the culprit, but what about the automotive industry? Has he talked about that? Some time ago he said the government should go down to Washington and say we will cut off our energy supply unless the United States leaves the automotive pact alone. He was putting jobs in Ontario over jobs in western Canada, but I think it was safe for him to do that. However, the next crisis in Canada will be the automotive pact since 99 per cent of the industry is United States-owned. The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) tells me he is now driving a General Motors' car. I was pleased to hear that, though I know he was driving one of the smaller makes at one time.

There is no question that if we continue to discourage foreign investment, we are exemplifying a lack of confidence in our ability to manage foreign investment. We are encouraging a further drain of our own capital either into North Sea interests that are developing sea bed oil, or into the United States in search of gas and oil. We will not encourage more manufacturing in Canada; in fact, we may well be encouraging less.

What has been the origin of foreign money invested in Canada recently? It has been Japanese money.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret that the time of the hon. member has expired.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

IMMIGRATION—POSSIBLE EXEMPTION OF IROQUOIS INDIANS WISHING TO MOVE TO CANADA FROM HAVING TO APPLY FOR LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, on October 29, I asked the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) a question with respect to the fact that no longer will Iroquois Indians born in the United States be able to cross into Canada to settle without first applying in the United States for landed immigrant status in Canada. I stated in my question that the directive of November 30, 1972, went contrary to the historic rights and privileges granted the Iroquois as a result of their loyalty to the Crown during the American war of independence, and that special status should be granted them with respect to crossing the border and resettling in Canada. The minister replied that it was not the policy of the immigration department to grant special status to the Iroquois, and that therefore any Iroquois born in the United States would have to apply in that country for landed immigrant status if he or she desired to settle in Canada.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, many Iroquois have over the years, indeed for nearly 200 years, moved from time to time to the United States in search of employment and have remained there for considerable periods of time. They married, had children, remained there; and these are the people I am most concerned about in this short address this evening.

In the federal constituency of Brant, which I have the honour to represent in this House, lies the Six Nations Reserve with a band list of over 10,000 persons, a great many of whom live in the United States. As a result of the November 30 directive, these people have become very upset and consider this directive just another erosion of their native rights. As you know, native North Americans guard with great pride and determination rights and privileges granted them by the Crown.

The minister in his reply also stated that Indians would be treated the same as any other group and cases would be judged on an individual basis. That is a very nice, free-flowing expression. I could certainly agree with the minister with respect to Italians, Germans or Englishmen or any other ethnic group as far as the November 30 directive is concerned. But when it comes to the Iroquois and other Indian bands, I must emphasize that I cannot agree. These people were here long before all other national groups, and in my opinion an Indian born in the United States who is also a member of a Canadian band of Indians should not have to go through the procedure of applying for landed status in the country of his forefathers.

In a letter from the minister dated October 30, 1973, the fourth paragraph reads as follows:

> Canadian Indians consider that there is no need for them to follow these procedures—

That is to say, immigration laws and the November 30 directive.

> —since they hold that the Jay Treaty provides them with free and unrestricted movement across the Canadian-United States border. The Jay Treaty has of course no application in so far as Canadian law is concerned. In fact the Supreme Court of Canada, in a case brought before it in 1956, found that the articles of the Jay Treaty and the Treaty of Ghent which were pertinent to the question did not apply in Canada since they had not been implemented or sanctioned by legislation.

In the same letter the minister did indicate that—> —in the current review of immigration legislation we will be considering the possibility of recommending changes to the Immigration Act which would admit children of Canadian Indians who were born outside Canada provided they are registered with a Canadian Indian band under the terms of the Indian Act.

• (2200)

I wonder how long it will take to bring about these suggested changes, in view of the fact that many sections of the Indian Act are in such disarray? Moreover, with respect to the Six Nations Reserve, the recent Ostler decision in the Supreme Court of Ontario implies, or indeed states that this reserve is not in fact a reserve and therefore does not come under the Indian Act because the Six Nations Reserve was granted in fee simple by the Crown and is not held in trust for the Indians on that reserve by the Canadian government. I suggest that the immigration and Indian affairs departments get together on this matter and clear the air as soon as possible.

In conclusion, while the Immigration Department might be finding a way out for the Iroquois and other Indian bands, one of their fundamental and historical rights has been taken away from them in principle. Those Indians on the Six Nations Reserve to whom I have spoken, including their chief elected councillor, Richard Isaac, are not at all pleased with the way the Immigration Department is treating them. This is causing concern among many of the residents of the Six Nations Reserve, or the Tuscarora township if you wish to call it that, at this time. Many of the people who live on that reserve have moved to the United States or were born in the United States and came to Canada and are now to be subjected to what I must call an indecency in terms of their having to go through the immigration provisions in order to become Canadian citizens, when in fact they were the first Canadian citizens.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there has always been a certain amount of friction between North American Indians and the immigration service because of differing concepts of the Indians' position in modern North American society. These are epitomized in disputes over the effect of the Jay Treaty and the question of nationality.

In 1794, Great Britain and the United States concluded the "Treaty of Amity, Commerce and Navigation," commonly called the Jay Treaty, which says in effect that Indians living on either side of the Canada-United States border could freely cross that border into the other country. With the outbreak of the war in 1812, the United States considered the Jay Treaty abrogated, but some argue that it was restored by the Treaty of Ghent in 1815.

In 1928, the United States enacted legislation that allowed Canadian Indians to enter the United States under much the same terms as those embodied in the Jay Treaty, but Canada has not taken similar action. In fact, the Supreme Court of Canada, in a case brought before it in 1956, found that the particular articles of the Jay Treaty and the Treaty of Ghent that were pertinent to the question had no application in Canada since they had not been implemented or sanctioned by Canadian legislation, even if these treaties were valid. They were in effect treaties between Great Britain and the United States, and neither Canada nor the Indians were a party to either.

The nationality question, simply stated, is that some Indians refuse to recognize Canadian or American citizenship as applicable to them; they claim not only to be Indians first and foremost, but to be Indians only. The Indian Act permits an Indian to be registered as a member of a Canadian band without regard to his citizenship. The Citizenship Act accords an Indian Canadian citizenship if he is born in Canada or if he is born outside Canada to a Canadian citizen father and his birth is registered with citizenship authorities. The Immigration Act and regulations permit nearly free access to Canada by Canadian citizens, but insist on certain formalities for the entry and stay of all other categories.

The problem arises when a Canadian Indian returns to Canada, after a period in the United States, with a U.S. born spouse or children. If the Canadian Indian is a male and a member of a Canadian band, his wife and children may be registered under the Indian Act as members of the band. Under the Citizenship Act, however, the wife cannot become a Canadian citizen until a year after her admission as a landed immigrant. In the meantime, she remains an American citizen regardless of her status under the Indian Act. The children may be Canadian citizens if the fact of their birth abroad to a Canadian father is registered with the citizenship authorities but, if not, the children also remain American citizens. Under the Immigration Act, in turn, the wife and children, as American citizens coming to Canada to live, must be treated as immigrants, again regardless of their status under the Indian Act.

At a recent meeting with a group of Indian leaders, including Carl Brant, president of the Iroquois and Allied Indian Association, this whole matter was discussed and two very valuable avenues of approach were agreed upon. Firstly, Indian leaders will be urged to submit their suggestions on this subject to the task force reviewing current immigration legislation. Secondly, a meeting of the assistant deputy minister, Indian and Eskimo affairs, the assistant deputy minister of immigration and a senior representative of the Secretary of State will be held to determine if the registration of Indian children born abroad as members of an Indian band can be tied to the registration of births abroad for citizenship purposes.

ENERGY—AUTHORITY OF GOVERNMENT TO ENFORCE PETROLEUM PRICE FREEZE AND PRICE INDEXING

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, tonight I draw your attention to a question I directed to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on November 2 in connection with the purported freeze by this government on petroleum prices and as to whether the government felt it had the authority. I also referred to the activity of the government in disciplining oil companies if they decided on their own to disobey the freeze, if indeed there was one.

The Prime Minister brushed aside my question and sort of indicated that the government had the authority to control prices, in spite of the fact that I asked the question because in answer to previous questions he indicated that there was perhaps some doubt in that prices could only be controlled by provinces under the heading of "property and civil rights". Clearly, the Government of Canada has the authority under the "peace, order and good government" provisions of our constitution to control prices in the national sense.

However, what has happened is not control of prices but total sham, because not one iota of legislation has been introduced to this House entitling this government to control petroleum prices. We have been told that there is a price freeze and that the price freeze will last until January 31, 1974. But in fact there is no price freeze because there has been no legislation authorizing a price freeze. It is a voluntary action, it is not law. The rules that are voluntarily asked of the industry are meaningless—zip!

When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) was speaking to the House on November 1, he said that Gulf Canada had not obeyed the petroleum price freeze and they were bad corporate citizens. I do not want to defend major oil companies here tonight. On many occasions I have criticized the activities of these corporations in dealing with service station operators and the like. To some extent they are monopolistic. However, they are corporate citizens of this country. Gulf Canada in particular has a fairly large refinery in my constituency.

That corporation is a good corporate citizen in Mississauga. It allows its employees time off at full pay to run scouting ventures and other community activities. It contributes to the tax base of Mississauga. It tries to keep a clean ship and it is a good corporate citizen. But what does this minister say about the company? He says it is an American company run by an American president, and that it would not obey the "non-law". When, in the history of this country, has disobeying the edict of a government that has no authority and has not requested the authority from this House been to act as a bad corporate citizen?

Here we have a purported price freeze when in fact there is no price freeze. Here we have a company told that they are bad boys because they did not obey a law that does not exist. What kind of newspeak have we arrived at here? Here we have a government that says, "You have done wrong because we say you did wrong. Not because parliament said you did wrong, not because there is a law that says you disobeyed it, but because we in our wisdom say you have done wrong." According to press reports, the NDP has suggested that if the price freeze does not extend beyond March 31 it will vote against the government. Through you, Sir, I would like to tell the members of the NDP tonight that there is no price freeze anyway, and they can vote against the government right now and not be out of court on that score.

The government has used blackmail pressure against a corporation that is paying taxes in this country, that has obeyed every other law of this country, and has slandered that company and its president in this House where it is not subject to any of the laws of slander. The government has tried to enforce rules that do not exist and has indicated to the country that there is a freeze on petroleum prices when there is no freeze. It has not brought forth legislation. It has acted in a most irresponsible way.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on September 4 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced in the House that the oil industry would be asked to refrain from further increases to Canadian consumers before January 30, 1974. On the basis of this voluntary program there has been a good response from industry and to date there has in fact been no need for a legislative base for the program. The government started out with the concept of a voluntary program, which has operated well and there is no need to consider empowering legislation for the term of the program as now envisaged. As the Prime Minister said today in the House: "We had obtained agreement from the major petroleum companies to accept a voluntary freeze until that date. This is the undertaking I gave and this is the undertaking which I believe they intend respecting."

I would further draw the hon. member's attention to the comments of the Prime Minister this afternoon concerning the lifting of the freeze and government policy attendant thereto. The Prime Minister indicated that members of the House "should be in a position to know the government policy related thereto in some detail and assess for themselves, perhaps in advance of February 1, what the effect might be."

I would just add, Mr. Speaker, that the objection which I understand the minister had to the action of Gulf Canada in advancing prices at the time it did was not that it was forbidden by law to do it, but that it had agreed with the Government of Canada that it would not do so; and it was precisely the breaking of an agreement with the Government of Canada, and not the breaking of a law, which well merited the condemnation of the minister.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—ACCELERATED COVERAGE PLAN—DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, on October 24, 1973, I asked the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) about the five-year accelerated coverage plan the objective of which is to bring radio and television coverage to all unserved communities in Canada with populations of 500 or more, and whether this plan had been submitted to the cabinet for consideration and approval. He indicated to me that it had not been submitted to the cabinet for approval.

I should like to state that people in the north have had aspirations for television-radio coverage for many years. Politicians have been making them promises for years—politicians from both the old-line parties who happen to have been in power for years. I might also point out that on December 4, 1972, I received a letter from the CBC and I quote one paragraph from it:

> A number of improvements are envisaged in our future plans for the constituency of Meadow Lake. We plan to establish television rebroadcasting transmitters at Leoville, Green Lake, Dorintosh, Goodsoil, Beauval, Michel and La Loche. In future development of radio service, transmitters at Beauval, Buffalo Narrows and La Loche are envisaged. As all of these projects and hundreds of others across Canada are part of a master plan yet to be submitted to the government for final approval, we cannot yet be specific about the exact time at which they will be activated.

Several months later, in March of 1973 to be exact, I brought up this matter again and the minister, in a memo to me, indicated as follows:

> The corporation has just recently finalized its five-year accelerated coverage plan whose aim is to bring radio and television coverage in the required language to all unserved communities in Canada with a population of 500 or more. The plan will be reviewed by the CBC board of directors at its forthcoming meeting on March 26. If approved as presented, the plan will then be submitted to the Secretary of State.

Apparently the CBC has its plan finalized and it has been submitted to the Secretary of State, but I was wondering what the delay is in submitting it to cabinet and getting final approval on this project. One of the most obvious needs of northern Saskatchewan is radio and television service. At present, the only radio transmitter in northern Saskatchewan is a 40-watt relay station at Uranium City which broadcasts programs from the CBC northern service station in Yellowknife. Low-power television transmitters are operational in La Ronge, from CBC Saskatoon via microwave, and Uranium City from CBC Vancouver via satellite. Now the station in Uranium City is experiencing a great deal of problems as well, in that originally they were getting only programs from Vancouver and now they are getting programs from Vancouver and Halifax and other places in Canada, and in some cases programs have been repeated as many as three times a day.

Except for these two limited facilities, residents have either no service at all or poor and erratic reception of stations, often from other provinces or from outside of Canada. Owing to this situation, I am concerned that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has not sought licensing approval to extend radio and television service to other northern areas in Saskatchewan.

The CBC has presented an extended coverage plan to the federal cabinet to provide their services to unserviced communities of 500 population or more over a five-year period, and as yet the federal cabinet is holding back on its approval and I feel that the time has come to approve it immediately. Broadcasting facilities at some of the points I mentioned earlier in my speech would do much to overcome the lack of media service now available. There are other unserviced communities meeting the criteria of "500 population" that have not been included in the CBC listing.

Delays in receiving approval of the extended coverage plan have apparently not stalled service extensions in other northern regions. At least five communities in northern Manitoba are scheduled to receive television service this year. New radio and television transmitters are also operational or under way in northern Alberta, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. I applaud these extensions but believe that immediate consideration of the needs of northern Saskatchewan must also be made by the CBC.

Population figures would suggest that some smaller centres in other northern regions have been given priority over Saskatchewan communities. There are several northern Saskatchewan communities with populations of at least 1,000 lacking reliable radio reception and no television service at all: for example, Stanley Mission, with a population of 1,000; Ile à la Crosse-Beauval, with a population of 1,800; Portage La Loche, population 1,800; Buffalo Narrows, population 1,300; La Ronge, population 2,800. The extension of television service to La Ronge this summer was much appreciated, but the community's radio reception remains very poor.

In view of the fact that attempts are being made to develop northern Saskatchewan economically, I consider that the extension of radio and television service must proceed with urgency. I believe that in addition to providing news, entertainment and educational programming, electronic media can contribute in developing community awareness, interest and action necessary to facilitate meaningful northern progress. Ideally, it is hoped that the CBC plans for Saskatchewan might include establishment of a radio program centre in the north somewhat similar to that provided in locations such as Frobisher Bay, Inuvik or Churchill. Such a station could feed transmitters throughout northern Saskatchewan and would provide a worth-while blend of national, regional and local programming.

It should be indicated that the government of Saskatchewan is proceeding with the extension of microwave facilities in the north. Saskatchewan Telecommunications is completing service extensions to Buffalo Narrows and Wollaston Lake this year and will complete their program as far north as La Roche and Uranium City in 1974.

● (2220)

The distribution mechanism for radio and television signals is therefore available to service CBC transmitters, and now all the CBC has to do is co-operate with the government of Saskatchewan to use the facilities already there. I understand that the government of Saskatchewan is anxious to co-operate in any way possible to expedite CBC extension to northern Saskatchewan. I sincerely hope that the minister will expedite this program, which is an excellent one, as quickly as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to congratulate the previous speaker for his excellent remarks and especially for the very moderate way in which he made his important representations, which I shall naturally transmit to the minister.

I should also like to thank him for allowing me to say that I share his interest in the accelerated program which I hope will soon be implemented. Unfortunately, certain strategic areas of the country still lack the French or English radio and television stations which could reflect throughout the provinces the cultures of which Canada is rightfully proud.

I believe that one of the main purposes of the CBC is to work for a greater unity of all Canadians and I am completely in favour of this rather far-reaching program.

I believe that I should explain to my hon. friend that while we may agree about the principle of the project, it is extremely important that we should determine its terms and conditions. The case which he has just explained gives further evidence that these terms and conditions often are quite complex. We must therefore make sure that the program is just and that its budget is correctly estimated.

I can assure my hon. friend that the Secretary of State and myself are giving particular attention to this program. I can even assure him that an important step was made not so long ago, that intensive discussions are still going on with the CBC, and that we may hope that the project will be submitted very shortly so that it be adopted as soon as possible, since like my hon. friend, I consider its implementation as being a matter of high priority.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.26 p.m.

WATER DIVERSION PROJECT IN NORTH DAKOTA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that Canada, through a diplomatic note to the United States, urgently requests the United States to establish a moratorium on all further construction on the North Dakota project known as the Garrison Diversion Unit until Ottawa is assured "that Canadian rights and interests have been fully protected" under the Boundary Waters Treaty, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly):

That the House of Commons approves and supports in principle the diplomatic note defending Canadian rights and interests under the Boundary Waters Treaty in order to avoid the needless polluting of two major Canadian river systems.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIRLINE PROCEDURES AND EMPLOYEES' WORKING CONDITIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity having regard to a comprehensive brief presented to members of parliament by the Canadian Airline Employees Association containing such references as "airline procedures sometimes seem to disregard reality entirely" and "working conditions have been so bad at times that the staff have threatened to leave the premises". I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That this brief be presented to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications for review.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to point out that the parliamentary secretary is not saying no from his own seat.

Mr. Reid: I am just leading the chorus.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—CONSTITUENCY ALLOCATION OF GRANTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion under Standing Order 43. In order to ensure that future local initiatives grant distribution is closely related to economic need, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland):

That for 1974 a new system of constituency allocations be established based on the classification of federal constituencies as (a) affluent, (b) average or (c) needy, with each of the three categories assigned a different per capita amount.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

CRIMINAL CODE

ABORTION—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON VERDICT IN MORGENTALER CASE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since the decision rendered in Dr. Morgentaler's case runs counter to the Criminal Code and that it somewhat puts the stamp of approval on the abortion on request principle, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Caouette):

Small Loans Act

That this House instruct the Department of Justice to second by the approriate means the appeal made by the Crown in this case as in the case of the Minister of Indian Affairs and the Indians respecting James Bay, in order to avoid the inevitable abuses that will be derived from the sanction of the principle of abortion on demand.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

FOOD PRICES

REVIEW BOARD SURVEY OF RETAIL STORE PRACTICES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to put a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Considering that the survey of retail food stores published today by the Food Prices Review Board reveals widespread evidence of questionable and illegal food retailing practices which lead to higher consumer food costs, and in view of the government's repeated assurances that it would act upon recommendations of this board, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis):

That this House instruct the government to take immediate steps to implement the board's recommendations to correct this situation.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

SMALL LOANS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITION OF "LOAN" AND INTEREST RATES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue) moved for leave to introduce a Bill intituled "An Act to amend the Small Loans Act."

Some hon. Members: Explain.

[Mr. Matte.]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the sole purpose of this legislation is to protect small borrowers against sharks.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MOTOR VEHICLE AND FARM IMPLEMENT PARTS BILL

MEASURE TO ENSURE SUPPLY OF PARTS FOR PERIOD OF TEN YEARS

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-231, respecting the guarantee of supply of parts for motor vehicles and farm implements imported into Canada or sent or conveyed from one province to another.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Nesdoly: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to make certain that anyone who buys a motor vehicle or farm implement which is manufactured in Canada and conveyed from one province to another, or anyone who buys a motor vehicle, farm tractor or other farm implement which is imported into Canada, shall be guaranteed a supply of parts for a period of ten years. In this way farm tractors and farm implements in particular may not have to remain idle while the farmer loses money and waits an indeterminable length of time for a part to arrive from abroad or from some distant part of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member has indicated the purpose of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES—EXPENDITURES BY PROVINCE

Question No. 2,351—Mr. Bawden:

How much did the Department of Supply and Services spend, by province, in each of the past five years (excluding salary expenditures) and for each of the first six months in 1973?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): The figures in Appendix "A" attached refer to contracts placed for government departments and agencies, not expenditures made. They only relate to the year in which contracts were placed and not to the year or years in which the work was performed or expenditures made. They often account for the location of the administrative office of a contracting company when the work or service was actually performed or rendered at another location. The figures cover only DSS contracts and do not include contracting by other government departments or agencies under delegation by DSS. The Department of Supply and Services was established on April 1, 1969.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—BUDGET FOR GOODS AND SERVICES

Question No. 2,611—Mr. Forrestall:

For each fiscal year since 1963, what has been the dollar amount and the percentage of the total budget of the Department of External Affairs spent for goods and services in all forms and manners (a) inside Canada (b) outside Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The department's accounting system is such that expenditures are not recorded in terms of the locations where expenditures are made. The department therefore cannot answer the question.

Order Paper Questions

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD—EXPENDITURES OUTSIDE CANADA

Question No. 2,615—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Does the National Harbours Board spend funds for the purpose of promoting use of Canadian ports outside of Canada and, if so, how much has been spent in each of the past ten years and in what way specifically was the money spent?

2. Are joint promotional programs entered into with individual port commissions or authorities and, if so, at what cost and with which ones during the past five years?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board has spent the following amounts in promoting use of Canadian ports outside Canada through advertising and travelling expenses of senior personnel in visits to marine terminal and shipping establishments, and meetings with major industries and traffic supervisors whose decisions affect the stability of Canadian port operations. The effort is not designed to sell one port as opposed to another but to provide the total picture of available shipping alternatives to the shipper or customer.

Year	Advertising $	Travel $	Total Expenditure $
1963	197	1,108	1,305
1964	197	413	610
1965	198	1,502	1,700
1966	208	1,715	1,923
1967	209	178	387
1968	216	1,768	1,984
1969	295	1,491	1,786
1970	282	2,158	2,440
1971	300	6,814	7,114
1972	517	2,413	2,930

2. Joint promotional programs have been entered into with the Saint John Port and Industrial Commission over the past five years whose total annual budget from the city of Saint John is in excess of $100,000. The National Harbours Board share of such costs were as follows: 1967, $1,500; 1968, $1,500; 1969, $3,000; 1970, $3,000; 1971, $3,000; 1972, $3,459; total $15,459.

OIL AND GAS EXPLORATION THROUGH SEISMIC TESTING

Question No. 2,626—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many requests were received by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the past 12 months for the right to begin the development of oil and natural gas exploration through seismic testing or actual drilling?

2. (a) How many of these requests received approval from the department (b) where are those approved located?

3. (a) Were the local communities advised of these requests (b) were they asked for their views as to the projects (c) if they were opposed to any of these projects, what were the reasons for approving the go ahead despite this opposition?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): In the 12-month period preceding July 31, 1973: 1. Seismic Programs, 107; Drilling Authorities Issued 96.

2. (a) 201.

Order Paper Questions

(b) Seismic Programs		Wells and Structure Test Holes
Southern Yukon	2	0
Northern Yukon	4	2
Southern Northwest Territories	6	8
Norman Wells	4	10
Peel Plateau	15	11
Delta and Tuk	24	24
Offshore-Delta	10	1
Arctic Islands	35	39
Davis Strait	6	0

3. (a) Communities that could be affected by land use operations (seismic and drilling) were advised of the particulars of the applications received for land use permits. (b) Yes. (c) In two cases a land use permit for seismic work was withheld because of local concern about possible environmental damage that could have an adverse effect on the hunting and trapping economy of residents. The one area was Cape Bathurst near Tuktoyaktuk, Northwest Territories and the other Old Crow Flats, near the community of Old Crow in the Yukon Territory. The objections raised in two other cases were evaluated but were not found to justify withholding development and the permits were therefore issued. The areas involved were near the communities of Fort Norman and Grise Fiord. In the case of Fort Norman the objections raised were based on land settlement claims; at Grise Fiord the objection was the risk of deleterious effects on its local hunting economy. After a formal study of the animal population it was concluded that the risk of damage was very slight and a permit was issued however with stipulations made to further reduce the risk of any adverse effect on the hunting economy of Grise Fiord. About 10 per cent of all land use permits issued have constraining stipulations designed to lessen the potential adverse effects on people living off the land. These stipulations are drawn up as a result of discussions with communities.

DND SERVICE PAY ALLOTMENT CHEQUES

Question No. 2,636—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What steps have been taken by the Department of National Defence and the Department of Supply and Services to avoid a repetition of the high incidence of cheques to wives of CAF personnel in the sea element for Service Pay Allotment being received on the last day of the month as was the case in August 1973?

2. What date is set as a target date for such cheques being actually received by such wives of CAF personnel on a predictable and regular basis?

3. Has this date been altered in the past ten years and, if so, on what date and for what reason?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The Department of National Defence Queen's Regulations and Orders and Canadian Forces Procedures Manual provide for monthly allotment payments and that pay be issued at the middle of the month and at the end of the month. For many years the established practice has been that the monthly allotment cheques to servicemen's dependents be mailed by the Department of Supply and Services so that they are received at the end of the month. By arrangement, cheques to servicemen's dependents are delivered to the Post Office Department in Ottawa six banking days prior to the end of the month for delivery in all parts of the country by the last day of the month. This procedure was followed in August, 1973.

2. The target date set to deliver cheques to the Post Office Department is six banking days prior to the end of the month.

3. Target date has not been altered in the past ten years.

REFUSAL OF CLAIM FOR MEDICAL EXPENSES BY MR. ALVIN CHULY

Question No. 2,655—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Did the Treasury Board refuse a claim for medical expenses by Mr. Alvin Chuly and, if so (a) for what reasons (b) how long had Mr. Chuly contributed to the Employees Insurance Fund (c) was the illness contacted prior to taking out insurance?

2. Does the reason for denying his medical claim also apply as a condition for benefits under the Death Benefit Plan?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. Mr. Chuly made a claim for a monthly income-replacement benefit under the Disability Insurance Plan. This claim was rejected, not by the Treasury Board, but by the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada, the Underwriters of the Plan. The case was referred to a public service advisory committee which has been set up to review and advise on disputed cases. The appeal was not supported by the Committee. (a) This Plan does not pay benefits for any disability related to a condition which existed at the time the member became insured unless he afterwards completes a 13-week period of active employment without absences or medical consultation related to his condition, or unless he has been insured for one year when he becomes disabled. (b) Mr. Chuly had been a contributing member for one month and 13 days when he ceased work because of his condition. (c) Yes, according to the weight of medical evidence provided by his attending physicians and the hospitals where he received treatment.

2. No; benefits are payable under the Supplementary Death Benefit Plan in the event of a contributor's death, without regard to the cause.

ALLOCATION OF LIP FUNDS TO PROVINCES FOR 1973-74

Question No. 2,688—Mr. Dick:

How much of the $83 million allocated to the 1973-74 Local Initiatives Program will be made available to (a) British Columbia (b) Alberta (c) Saskatchewan (d) Manitoba (e) Ontario (f) Quebec (g) New Brunswich (h) Prince Edward Island (i) Nova Scotia (j) Newfoundland (k) Northwest Territories (l) Yukon?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): (a) British Columbia, $9,096,000; (b) Alberta, $3,635,000; (c) Saskatchewan, $2,326,000; (d) Manitoba, $2,981,000; (e) Ontario, $11,527,000; (f) Quebec, $27,408,000; (g) New Brunswick, $5,016,000; (h) Prince Edward Island, $945,000; (i) Nova Scotia, $4,580,000; (j) Newfoundland, $4,507,000; (k) Northwest Territories, $509,000; (l) Yukon, $291,000.

LIP—GRANTS TO P-P JANITORIAL SERVICES, VERDUN, QUEBEC

Question No. 2,797—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has a total of $444,532 been given in the form of LIP grants to P-P Janitorial Services of Verdun, Quebec since 1971?

2. Was $111,126.00 given in the form of an extension to October 12, 1973?

3. Has the project been closed down recently and, if so, for what reason?

4. Has this project been under investigation recently by the Department of Manpower and Immigration?

5. Has the RCMP made any investigations whatsoever in regard to this project, the grants in question and P-P Janitorial Services and, if so (a) who requested this investigation (b) on what date was it requested (c) what were the reasons for the investigation (d) what were the results of the investigation (e) are any charges contemplated or pending?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The following sums were paid out: for the 1971-72 program: $157,930; for the 1972-73 initial contract: $152,110; and for the 1972-73 extension, as of October 31, 1973: $110,566.

2. An extension of $111,126 was approved. Of this amount, $110,566 had been paid out as at October 31, 1973.

3. Yes. The contract had expired.

4. No.

5. No. (a),(b),(c),(d),(e), not applicable.

RECIPIENTS OF GRANTS UNDER DEVELOPMENT OF MANAGEMENT COURSES PROGRAM

Question No. 2,809—Mr. Rodriguez:

What were the names of the recipients of grants under the Development of Management Courses Program (DMC), in each of the fiscal years 1972-73 (January 5, 1973 to end) and 1973-74 to date and what were the amounts in each case?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Since inception of the program in 1972, the following contributions have been approved to associations, under the Development of Management Courses program: The Society of Industrial Accountants of Canada, $50,000; Mechanical Contractors Association Ontario, $29,250; Mechanical Contractors Association— Toronto, $21,000; Ontario General Contractors Association, $17,250; Montreal Dress and Sportswear Manufacturers' Guild, $5,000; Canadian Institute of Management, $19,650; Canadian Securities Institute, $18,750; Retail Council of Canada, $24,000; Atlantic Building Supply Dealers Association, $13,000; Canadian Industrial Communications Assembly, $18,956; Ontario Road Builders' Association, $7,538; Canadian Flexible Packaging Institute, $17,500; Automotive Industries Association, $11,250; The Royal Architectural Institute of Canada, $13,838; The Manitoba Hotel Association, $20,050; Purchasing Management Association of Canada, $18,188; Canadian Restaurant Association, Ontario Region, $9,000; Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada, $12,047; Total, $326,267. In the 1972-73 fiscal year the following actual payments were made, both of them after January 5, 1973. Montreal Dress and Sportswear Manufacturers' Guild, $4,500; Canadian Securities Institute $7,125; Total, $11,625. In the 1973-74 fiscal year, up to and including October 23, 1973, the following payments have been made: Montreal Dress and Sportswear Manufacturers' Guild, $500.00; The Society of Industrial Accountants of Canada, $6,122.00; Ontario Road Builders' Association, $5,062.50; Canadian Institute of Management, $2,897.74; Canadian Industrial Communications Assembly, $9,202.52; Ontario General Contractors Association, $1,125.00; Total, $24,909.76.

HARBOUR MAINTENANCE COSTS—ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF GREY-SIMCOE

Question No. 2,826—Mr. Mitges:

How much money was spent for maintenance and repairs of harbours in the electoral district of Grey-Simcoe for 1969, 1970, 1971, 1972 and to October 1, 1973?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Department of Public Works expenditures for maintenance and repairs of harbours in the electoral district of Grey-Simcoe, by fiscal year, from 1969 to 1973 have been as follows: 1969-70, $3,711.80; 1970-71, $9,787; 1971-72, $22,214; 1972-73, $80; 1973-74 (to October 1) $27,486.57. The higher total for 1971-72 was occasioned by a major project; $12,950 for breakwater repairs and access road at Collingwood. Similarly, the higher expenditure for the period to October 1 in 1973-74 results from disbursements of $26,050 in connection with north breakwater repairs at Meaford. The figures mentioned herein do not include amounts expended by the Department of Public Works on behalf of other departments (OGD Projects).

GRANTS UNDER PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Question No. 2,833—Mr. Knight:

1. What were the names of corporations receiving loans and grants under the Pharmaceutical Industry Development Assistance Program (PIDA) in each fiscal year 1968-69 to 1973-74 to date?

2. In each case, what amounts of loan and grant money were involved and what terms and interest rates were applicable?

3. Has the department conducted any evaluative study of the program and, if so, what was the date of the latest report?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. The names of specific firms and the amount of assistance applied for cannot be released to preserve the commercial confidentiality assured each applicant.

2. As of October 25, 1973, 26 applications for assistance under the Pharmaceutical Industry Development Assistance Program have been received since April 3, 1968 and the following loans approved:

Year	No. of Loans	Value $
1968/69	1	196,500
1969/70	1	100,000
1970/71	2	505,850
1971/72	2	670,000
1972/73	3	560,000
1973/74	1	350,000
		2,382,350

In all cases, the term was 10 years, and interest rates ranged from 7½ per cent to 9 per cent.

3. The program is under continuous evaluation and review.

AIR TRANSPORT, NEWFOUNDLAND-UNITED STATES

Question No. 2,844—Mr. Marshall:

1. In the past year, how many Newfoundland passengers were destined to the United States via Air Canada and Eastern Provincial Airways?

2. In the negotiations between Canada and the United States on an agreement on new air routes, was any consideration given to establishing direct routing between the Province of Newfoundland and the United States?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission and Aviation Statistics Centre report as follows: 1. Total air passenger journeys: 16,305 Newfoundland-U.S.A., 15,115 U.S.A.-Newfoundland.

2. Yes. Origin and destination traffic was examined to determine which point pairs in Canada and the U.S.A. would generate sufficient traffic to support a direct service. However, traffic volume was insufficient to justify a direct service from points in Newfoundland to points in the U.S.A. and it was considered that it would be better for service from Newfoundland to operate via other points in Canada to points in the U.S.A. In the present Air Agreement the United States has route 15 United States-Gander-Europe and beyond, and they have designated carriers to serve the route. No carrier operates the service, however, because of insufficient traffic.

BUILDING EQUIPMENT ACCESSORIES AND MATERIALS PROGRAM

Question No. 2,976—Mr. Broadbent:

1. What were the names of the corporations which received cash awards for design improvements, research, development and innovation under the Building Equipment, Accessories and Material Program (BEAM) in each of the fiscal years 1968-69, 1969-70, 1970-71, 1971-72, 1972-73 and 1973-74 to date and, in each case, what were the amounts of money committed and paid?

2. Have there been any changes in the specific objectives of the program since its inception and, if so, what were these changes?

3. What was the date of the latest evaluative study of the program conducted by the department?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. No corporation has received a cash award for design improvement, research, development or innovation under the Building Equipment Accessories and Materials Program.

2. There have been no changes in the objectives of the program which is to increase productivity and efficiency in the Canadian construction industry.

[Mr. Breau.]

3. The program is under continuous review.

WOOD ISLANDS-CARIBOU FERRY SERVICE

Question No. 3,056—Mr. MacLean:

Is it the intention of the government to provide a fourth ferry at an early date to help accommodate the tremendous increase in traffic in the Wood Islands-Caribou Ferry Service and thus provide an emergency economic lifeline to the province of Prince Edward Island, if for any reason the Borden-Cape Tormentine Ferry Service is not functioning?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): A study is under way into the ferry transportation needs of Prince Edward Island and this will enable the government to determine whether a fourth vessel is required on the Wood Islands-Caribou service. In the meantime, the three vessels now operating on the Caribou-Wood Islands service are capable of providing an economic lifeline with the mainland during periods when service between Cape Tormentine and Borden is disrupted.

BORDEN-CAPE TORMENTINE FERRY SERVICE

Question No. 3,057—Mr. MacLean:

1. Is a new vessel for the ferry service operating between Borden, Prince Edward Island and Cape Tormentine, New Brunswick in the planning stage or in some more advanced stage and, if so, will it be a rail-carrying, icebreaking ferry with full capacity for carrying automobiles, trucks and handling railway cars all year around?

2. Is it the intention of the government to extend the length of the Vacationland and the Holiday Island operating on the Borden-Cape Tormentine Ferry Service in order to increase their automobile-carrying capacity?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. A study of transportation needs between Prince Edward Island and the mainland is in progress and among the terms of reference is the consideration of additional vessel requirements. At this time, it is not possible to state whether additional or replacement vessels will have rail-carrying facilities, but this fact will be determined in the course of the transportation study.

2. The question of lengthening the Vacationland and the Holiday Island will be considered in the course of the Prince Edward Island transportation study. In the meantime, the technical aspects of such lengthening are being examined and consultants are investigating certain problem areas.

WOOD ISLANDS-CARIBOU FERRY SERVICE—IMPROVEMENT TO DOCK FACILITIES

Question No. 3,058—Mr. MacLean:

What action is the government taking to improve the dock facilities at Caribou, Nova Scotia which are vital to the efficient handling of the rapidly increasing traffic volume on the Wood Islands-Caribou Ferry Service?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): At the request of the Minister of Transport, the Department of Public Works is preparing detailed designs which would provide for construction of a second ferry slip at Caribou and reconstruction of the existing slip. These improvements would provide for efficient handling of any foreseeable increases in traffic on the Wood Islands-Caribou Ferry Service.

*CBC—ABSENCES FROM CANADA OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT

Question No. 3,067—Mr. Reilly:

1. In the 12-month period ended September 30, 1973, how many days have (a) the President (b) the Vice-President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation spent outside Canada?

2. What purposes have been served by the various absences of each of these officers from Canada?

3. What is the total of the expenses incurred by (a) the President (b) the Vice-President of the Corporation for trips outside Canada taken during the 12-month period ended September 30, 1973?

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. (a) 22 days; (b) 23 days.

2. As a member of the board of directors of Telesat Canada, the CBC President attended Telesat board meetings held in the U.S. in conjunction with the launching of the Anik I and II satellites. He also met with officials of U.S. networks and European broadcasting organizations and attended the general assembly of European Broadcasting Union. The Executive Vice-President attended meetings at experimental broadcasting centres in several European cities, represented the CBC on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the BBC, and visited the Eastman Kodak film processing facilities in Rochester, N.Y.

3. It has not been customary to require the CBC to disclose such details of its internal management and administration.

PROVINCE HOUSE—CHARLOTTETOWN, PEI

Question No. 3,077—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. As a result of agreements signed in Charlottetown on October 26 last, what is the nature and extent of the commitments made by the government towards the maintenance and restoration of Province House, Charlottetown?

2. What is the estimated amount of expenditure involved?

3. Does the agreement provide that those persons employed in Province House are employees of the government?

4. Would such employees have the right to strike and peacefully to picket the premises if legally strike bound?

5. Will the government pay the expenses for maintaining the Chamber of the Legislature of Prince Edward Island, including its employees?

6. Does the government own, in any other provinces, the building in which the provincial legislature holds its sessions?

7. Has any department or official of the government knowledge of any legislative body anywhere in the world which holds its sessions in a building which is the property of a government in or of another jurisdiction?

8. For what reason or reasons did the government assume ownership and control of the meeting place of the Legislature of the province of Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The document signed on October 26 last was not an agreement but rather a Memorandum of Intent undertaking to enter into an agreement effective April 1, 1974.

2, 3, 4 and 5. Because the final agreement has yet to be negotiated, it is not possible to provide responses at this time.

6. No.

7. Information not available.

8. The government has not assumed ownership and control of the meeting place of the Legislature of the province of Prince Edward Island.

GRANT TO UNIVERSITY OF WESTERN ONTARIO RELATING TO LANGUAGE STUDY

Question No. 3,087—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Secretary of State announce on October 30, 1973 a grant of $125,000 to the Department of Psychology at the University of Western Ontario for the purpose of financing a nation-wide study on attitudes and motivation associated with learning French as a second language?

2. Does the Secretary of State plan to announce a grant of $125,000 to the Department of Psychology of any Canadian university to finance a nation-wide study on attitudes and motivation associated with learning English as a second language and (a) if so, on what date will this grant be announced (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. Yes; press release of October 30, 1973.

2. The Secretary of State has not received any requests to date for financial assistance to conduct research on attitudes and motivation in the study of English as a second language. The Secretary of State, under the program to promote bilingualism in education does not commission research projects, but rather, is authorized to award grants to groups or individuals submitting research projects on the teaching or learning of the official languages.

VALUE OF IMPORTS FROM CUBA

Question No. 3,091—Mr. Cossitt:

What was the total value in dollars of imports to Canada from Cuba for the last year for which figures are available?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that: Total Canadian imports from Cuba amounted to $11,076,000 in the calendar year 1972.

COMMERCIAL AIR SERVICE BETWEEN CANADA AND CUBA

Question No. 3,092—Mr. Cossitt:

Has the government made any assessment of the need for commercial air service between Canada and Cuba and (a) if so, with what result (b) if not, is the government prepared to make such an assessment and to consider opening negotiations with Cuba for such a service if deemed advisable?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The need for a regular commercial air service between Canada and Cuba has been assessed on different occasions in the past. It was found that in view of the limited traffic charter services could fulfil most of the existing needs. The matter, however, is being kept under review.

VALUE OF CANADIAN EXPORTS TO CUBA

Question No. 3,094—Mr. Cossitt:

What was the total value in dollars of exports from Canada to Cuba during the last year for which figures are available?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that: Total Canadian exports to Cuba amounted to $58,943,000 in the calendar year 1972.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Oral Questions

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO CONTROL INFLATION

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Given the report just made public by an economist that the rate of inflation in Canada, which was the fifteenth in the world for the period 1970-72, in the last three months has increased so much that Canada has a faster rate of inflation now than only two other countries in the world, Greece and Japan, may we expect the government and the Minister of Finance to bring forward measures to deal with inflation before Christmas so that this terrible problem in the Canadian economy may be dealt with?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is being selective in his statistics. If he will look at the longer term he will see that our record compares favourably with the other industrial countries of the world.

Mr. Gillies: Every economist in Canada is predicting that the inflation rate will continue next year. The energy policy guarantees it will continue next year. We now have a faster rate of inflation than any country except Greece and Japan.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East.

Mr. Gillies: May I finish my question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member did not give me the impression he was going to ask a question. I thought he was making remarks. That is why I intervened and recognized the hon. member for St. John's East. If the hon. member has a supplementary question, he will be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. Gillies: What is the government going to do about the runaway rate of inflation we have in Canada at the present time?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, when the main force of inflation happens to be an imbalance of supply and demand, as the hon. member has admitted on some occasions, then the ways to handle inflation in this country are to increase supply and moderate the impact of that inflation on incomes of Canadians, particularly those on low and fixed incomes.

FOOD PRICES—STEPS TO IMPLEMENT REVIEW BOARD RECOMMENDATIONS CONCERNING RETAIL STORES TO PROTECT CONSUMERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the recommendations contained in the Food Prices Review Board report on retail food stores which was released today, what immediate steps are being taken to protect Canadian Consumers from the abuses that are taking place in the market place as listed in the report?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government has acted in some of the areas touched on by the report through the amendments proposed in the bill I tabled in the House a week or two ago. In addition, I can inform the House that some charges were laid in Montreal late last week arising out of the government's study of field reports from the board and it is expected that further charges will be laid over the next couple of weeks. I have also asked that the recommendations of the board in other areas be studied very actively so we can consider what further appropriate action we can take on the recommendations at an early date.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the fact the board outlines the shortage of adequate inspection services to enforce existing laws such as the Weights and Measures Act, the Agricultural Products Standards Act and so on, what immediate steps is the minister taking to increase inspection capability in the field to ensure that the existing laws of his department are properly enforced?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I will ask the hon. member to support the passage of my supplementary estimates.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I apologize for doing so, but the minister's answer cannot go unchallenged. The supplementary estimates of the minister now before the committee have nothing whatsoever to do with the fact that he has been negligent in his duties as Minister of Consumer Affairs.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

LAND ACT REGULATIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITION OF SMALL HOLDINGS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the unanimous decision reached by the House on November 9 asking the minister to give urgent consideration to possible changes with respect to the Veterans Land Act so that veterans applying for loans, even if mainly for the purpose of solving their housing needs, might get assistance, may I ask the hon. gentleman whether he has completed this consideration and whether he is yet in a position to report thereon to the House?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not yet completed my consideration of this matter.

REQUEST THAT DEADLINE FOR APPLICATIONS UNDER LAND ACT BE EXTENDED

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the same minister. In view of the fact the deadline for applications by veterans for holdings is March 1, 1974, about three months hence, can the minister advise the House what he intends to do for the 125,000 veterans who are still waiting and who will be denied their rights because of the absence of amendments to the regulations?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I am not sure the hon. member is correct in saying these applicants will be denied the privilege of building. I think applications by most of these people will be entertained.

Mr. Marshall: Suppose the 125,000 veterans were to apply today. Could the department cope with the applications?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's supplementary is obviously hypothetical.

BILINGUALISM

REQUEST FOR BILINGUAL PERSONNEL ON CANADIAN NATIONAL OTTAWA-MONTREAL TRAINS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Last Tuesday I used the Canadian National services to go to Montreal and I noted that on the 12:55 train, the conductor and the rest of the train personnel spoke only English. Will the government take some action so that both official languages may be spoken on the Canadian National trains, at least on itineraries such as between Ottawa and Montreal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall inquire into the facts mentioned by the hon. member and discuss the matter with the Minister of Transport. For the moment, I wish simply to add that after the decision by Parliament several months ago to support the language policy of the government, I have personally written not only to all deputy ministers but also to the heads of Crown corporations such as the Canadian National in order to request that they apply the bilingualism policy. I shall therefore inquire to see what is the truth of the matter.

If I may say so, our policy would obviously be stronger if we had obtained the support of the Social Credit Party of Canada on this point.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Témiscamingue is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, earlier, after my question, the right hon. Prime Minister suggested that my party had not supported the government when the bilingualism resolution was introduced. I think the Prime Minister is a man of intellectual honesty and I would draw his attention to the fact that if we did not support the government then, it was not because we were against the two official languages, but because we felt the resolution was not going far enough. So much so, Mr. Speaker, that last Tuesday I myself realized how inefficient it is within the Canadian National.

[English]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): May I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Will he move with the same speed and alacrity with respect to the fact that Canadian National Railways is not supplying sufficient boxcars to move British Columbia lumber?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—POSSIBILITY OF INCENTIVES TO INCREASE PRODUCTION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the Minister of Finance supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Don Valley. The minister quite rightly replied to that question by saying that inflation will only be brought under control if national production is greatly increased. I ask the minister whether he has plans to introduce production incentives in the near future to bring about this necessary increase in national production?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it just so happens that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce published today the intentions for business expenditures which will run in 1974 21 per cent over the level for this year, which was 15 per cent over that of 1972. The incentives that the government has introduced already are having this effect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, since that is the kind of answer that has been leading the country into the mess it is in today, again I ask the minister, does he intend to introduce production incentives to bring about this necessary increase in production? A statement like he has made will do nothing to bring about that end.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. On what evidence does the minister base his opinion that the rapid decline in the stock markets in Canada and the United States is an over-reaction to the energy crisis?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That was a matter of opinion, Mr. Speaker.

ENERGY

SUGGESTED BRINGING OF PIPELINES UP TO STANDARD TO TRANSPORT OIL TO QUEBEC

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question dealing with the energy crisis. In light of the fact that tankers are leaving Vancouver with Alberta crude and sailing through the Panama Canal, would the Prime Minister take the lead and see to it that transportation facilities, particularly pipelines to Montreal, are brought up to standard so that oil that is transported to Ontario can be transported to Quebec in the same manner?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is pointing out areas where we have taken the lead and where we will continue to take the lead.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder whether the Prime Minister would enlighten the House. The Prime Minister says that he has taken the lead, but our pipelines are totally inadequate to transport crude petroleum to Montreal. At the moment it has to be transported around almost all of North America. Would the Prime Minister give an undertaking to the country that our pipelines will be brought up to standard so a sufficient supply will be delivered to the province of Quebec?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is indulging in a bit of hindsight. It is true that certain pipeline facilities do not exist, but this is a result of the Ottawa Valley line policy which was introduced by a Conservative government many years ago.

PENITENTIARIES

PRINCE ALBERT—TREATMENT OF INMATES IN SEGREGATED AREAS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, that last gratuitous remark is not what I rose to speak about but it indicates that the Prime Minister still forgets—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman has been recognized for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Solicitor General about the situation in Prince Albert penitentiary, where inmates in the segregated areas are locked up in their cells for all but half an hour a day, are given mattresses for their beds only at night, and where in two of the three ranges of cells there are no electric lights. As Mr. Harridence, a great supporter of the government, has said, they are caged like animals. I ask the Solicitor General whether he will have an independent investigation made into these allegations, which are clearly established, to the end that these conditions shall not be permitted to continue, for there is the basic reason for the recent outbreak in that penitentiary.

● (1430)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I must say I am surprised at the allegations. I have a report dated November 20, yesterday, which states that conditions are normal at the Prince Albert penitentiary, but I will certainly investigate these allegations and report to the hon. member as soon as possible.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister. The very intelligent prisoners recently engaged there in counterfeiting, realizing how inflation is using up the Canadian dollar, have restricted themselves to the production of $100 bills.

FOOD PRICES

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT BY GOVERNMENT TO ACT ON REVIEW BOARD RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that in establishing the Food Prices Review Board the minister then and consistently since has refused to give the board any powers to act itself, preferring rather to act on recommendations of the board, will the minister, now that the board has brought in specific recommendations, give the House a commitment today that the government will act upon these recommendations?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have already said to an hon. member of the Conservative party that in fact we have given that kind of commitment and we are studying the report very actively to see what further action we can take in light of the recommendations. Second, but equally important, we have indicated we are already taking action in some areas mentioned through the legislation introduced in the House just a week or two ago.

Mr. Hees: And on, and on, and on.

REQUEST FOR EARLY CONSIDERATION OF BILL AMENDING COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT AND LEGISLATION TO BREAK UP CONCENTRATION IN INDUSTRIES

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. At least those of us on this side of the House are able to make a distinction between study and action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grier: In view of the board's recommendations, will the minister speed up second reading consideration of his amendments to the Combines Investigation Act and other legislation introduced recently and, further, will his department accelerate the consideration and introduction of legislation to break up the concentration in the food and other industries which is injurious to the consumer?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to see second reading of the competition policy bill introduced a few days ago brought forward as soon as possible. I would also be happy to see further policy decisions taken in this area by the government and announced in the House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will be recognized on a last supplementary, and then the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Hillsborough.

Mr. Grier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the decision as to when second reading of this legislation will take place lies in the hands of the minister and his colleagues and not in the hands of the House, will the minister make representations to the government House leader to the effect that this legislation be proceeded with before Christmas?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I have already been doing that and, with my hon. friend's support, perhaps we can continue the discussion on a different level.

HEALTH

REPORTED VIOLATION OF STANDARDS BY RETAIL FOOD STORES

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Having regard to the Food Prices Review Board survey teams' opinion that a surprising number of stores have violated health and cleanliness standards, what remedial and effective steps will the minister take to assure that health inspectors will check on these allegations, and do so right quickly?

FOOD PRICES

STEPS TO ENSURE RETAIL FOOD STORES WILL NOT RAISE PRICES OF ITEMS ALREADY ON SHELVES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Having regard to the agreement made by Dominion, Food City, IGA, Canada Safeway and Woodwards that prices of any food items on store shelves, which prices had already been marked, would not be raised any more, and the fact that the survey found that none of these organizations had fully followed through on this agreement, what specific steps will the minister take to assure that retail stores will follow this decision and thus protect the consumer?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have already anticipated this point—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: What jail are they in?

Mr. Hees: He is alive.

Mr. Gray: —having placed in the competition policy bill the proposal that this practice be banned in the terms reflected by the bill, and my hon. friends will recognize that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST THAT GRANTS BE MADE FOR CONSTRUCTION OF RETAINING WALLS ON ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works.

Considering that the minister has often answered members' questions in the House by saying that the present rules of his department concerning the maintenance and construction of retaining walls along the St. Lawrence do not allow him to give favourable answers to riparian residents' requests on this matter, has he recommended or will he recommend to his colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, the acceptance of LIP projects submitted in reference to maintenance or construction of retaining walls?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that my colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, has noted the suggestion of the hon. member. It will be his decision.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

JERICHO LANDS, VANCOUVER—INQUIRY AS TO ACCEPTANCE BY GOVERNMENT OF PAYMENT IN AMOUNT OFFERED BY CITY

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Will he tell the House whether it is the government's intention to accept the cash offer of approximately $400,000 received from the city of Vancouver covering the property generally known as the remaining 38 acres of the Jericho defence lands in Vancouver and, if so, when will the transfer of the property be completed?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, these negotiations are continuing.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister advise the House whether the government has reconsidered its earlier position that the city must pay for the land, or does the government now support the Conservative and opposition position that the land should be returned to the city of Vancouver for $1?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my reply to the first question, this subject is still under negotiation and the government's position is not being announced at this time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HUMAN RIGHTS IN SOVIET UNION—SUGGESTION THAT GOVERNMENT RAISE QUESTION AT UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the refusal of the Soviet Union to discuss the question of human rights involving individuals and groups within that country with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, will the government consider raising the question further in the United Nations as both Canada and the U.S.S.R. are adherents to the United Nations declaration on human rights, the twenty-fifth anniversary of which is on December 10?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Before answering that question, Mr. Speaker, I would want to have a report from the Secretary of State for External Affairs on exactly what happened at the meeting at which he raised that subject, and I would want—

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member brings up an important question but I think the minister responsible is the Minister of Communications, since it is a matter of broadcasting.

PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO ELIMINATE POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST ON PART OF PRIVATE PLAN DIRECTORS IN MAKING INVESTMENTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance of which I have given him notice. In view of the possibility that directors of private pension plans may be investing pension plan funds in ways which do not give the best possible return to those who have contributed to these funds because of conflict of interest on the part of directors, as illustrated by the recent purchase by the Canadian Pacific employees pension fund of almost 800,000 shares of Algoma Steel, I should like to ask whether the minister and his department are giving consideration to possible amendments to the Pension Benefits Standards Act which would eliminate any possible conflict of interest on the part of directors of private pension plans?

● (1440)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of his question. I am informed that the three pension funds for employees of Canadian Pacific own a total of 394,000 shares in the Algoma Steel Corporation and that none of the pension funds have bought any such shares since September 24, 1971. This represents 3.4 per cent of the outstanding shares of the Algoma Steel Corporation. I am also informed there are no purchases or sales of any shares between the pension funds and any of the Canadian Pacific Companies, so there does not appear to be any conflict with the regulations under the Pension Benefits Standards Act. We are reviewing the regulations, however, to see whether any improvements can be made.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in the survey or study that the minister is going to undertake, will he make an examination of the Canadian National Railways pension fund to see that the board of directors of that corporation is not misusing the pension funds by directing the investments of that fund to the ends of the CNR at low interest rates?

ADVERTISING DIRECTED TOWARD CHILDREN—REQUEST FOR RESTRICTION

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe wish to put a supplementary question?

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put to the Minister of Communications the question I asked a while ago to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to wit whether we can expect the minister to take immediate steps to restrict the excessive advertising aimed at children and parents before Christmas so as to comply with the wishes of all members.

[Mr. Gray.]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the member for Saint-Hyacinthe is badly or inadequately informed as regards radio and television. I had the opportunity to say in the House—and this created an incident with another member—that the CRTC had encouraged radio and television broadcasters to agree on a self-imposed code. The CRTC opted for that voluntary solution because the passage of formal regulations would have taken too much time for any effect to be felt during the Christmas season.

RECOMMENDATION THAT TELEVISION ADVERTISING DIRECTED EXCLUSIVELY TO CHILDREN BE PROHIBITED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister what he proposes to do about the unanimous recommendation made by the House that the CRTC immediately bring in regulations to prohibit advertising directed exclusively to children on television?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I made a very detailed study of this report and I think that the hon. member should do the same, for on the points he has just raised the report is contradictory, recommending now the establishment of a code, now new regulations, now the complete abolition of publicity, and now the preservation of private stations interests, which are perfectly incompatible objectives.

IMMIGRATION

CIRCUMSTANCES IN WHICH STAGE B OF SECURITY CHECK NOT ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY UNDER RECENT ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of the minister's recent statement that there are circumstances in the recent amnesty period in which the stage B performance of the RCMP security check is not absolutely necessary for granting of landed immigrant status, will the minister tell the House what these special circumstances are?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there are really three stages to the judgment whether a person should or should not be landed under that program. The first was under the relaxed criteria which is simply a judgment whether the person under consideration would fit into Canadian society in terms of employment. The second was the requirement of a health and medical examination which took a little longer but is being conducted in every case. The third was a background inquiry as to the person's record in terms of criminal and other matters. All those investigations will go forward on all people who applied. In the meantime they sign an attestation declaring their position with regard to any criminal record. If it turns out in subsequent investigations that the information given was not correct, then the law will be applied.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Can the minister inform the House as to the need for urgency in granting landed immigrant status when these applicants had been in the country almost a year or more and had to be flushed out of hiding?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, approximately 36 million tourists come to Canada every year. With these, and Canadians leaving Canada and coming back there are about 76 million border crossings each year. There is no way in the world any bureaucratic system could or should be set up to examine every one of those in such detail—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the minister is completely confusing the issue. I am not referring to visitors going back and forth across our borders every year. I am referring to the 50,000 people who declared themselves during the recent 60-day amnesty period—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a point of order.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DISPUTE WITH WIRE SERVICE GUILD EMPLOYEES— POSITION OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State in the absence of the Minister of Labour in respect of the dispute between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the Canadian Wire Service Guild. Can the minister inform the House how negotiations are coming along and, particularly, why the CBC in effect refused the conciliation commissioner's report on October 5, which was a new procedure implemented by the Minister of Labour, when the union and the CBC negotiator accepted the report? Could the minister bring the House up to date in this regard?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to comment on the substance of the negotiations because the collective bargaining process is being carried on. The dispute is presently being mediated by Mr. Charles Poirier of the Department of Labour and I am hopeful that it will be resolved shortly.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the minister is up to date. Be that as it may, he still did not answer my question why the conciliation commissioner's report was not accepted by the CBC. I shall ask that again, but to bring the minister up to date it is my understanding that mediation proceedings have completely broken down and that the mediator—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask a question. I think he will recognize that he should not at this point attempt to convey information either to the House or to the minister but should seek information by way of a question.

Mr. Alexander: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just thought I would lay a little groundwork for the minister. Can the minister now advise the House what further steps are being taken by himself or by his colleague in order to see that negotiations are continued and that this dispute is handled amicably in such a way that we can expect a very early settlement?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, I will not comment on future steps but I will certainly make sure that objective is met.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Since there has already been one work stoppage, does the Secretary of State intend to use the prestige of his office to encourage CBC management to abandon its present intransigence so another costly strike such as the one in respect of NABET can be avoided?

Mr. Faulkner: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will be recognized for a last supplementary, following which I will recognize the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour or perhaps to the minister replying on behalf of the Minister of Labour. In spite of the excellent work of the commission and the co-operation by the Canadian Wire Service Guild and as the differences between the guild and the CBC have not been resolved yet, since the new commissioner concept has failed in respect of a Crown corporation, what steps does the Department of Labour or the minister intend to take to enhance the success of this system—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE MINISTRY

DIRECTION OF DEPARTMENTS BY MINISTERS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Now that a public statement has been made by a Liberal member of the House and Privy Councillor to the effect that some cabinet ministers run their departments and others are prisoners of their departments, will the Prime Minister take steps to ensure that cabinet ministers representing the people in this parliament will run their departments?

● (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we will try to do a little better in this regard than the Conservative opposition obviously is doing with so many of its members, because it obviously has the wrong policies.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure what will be served by that kind of question and exchange.

HEALTH

SHORTAGE OF PITUITARY HORMONE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the extreme shortage of pituitary glands—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: In the cabinet.

Mr. Rynard: —and the number of patients now going without treatment, which can be tragic, particularly for children, would the minister look into this to see if, by pituitary banks or other means, this treatment could be made available and shortages avoided?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the federal government, through the Medical Research Council, is supporting research and development in this area. I am advised that the supply of this hormone is very limited. Since it takes about 100 pituitary glands to produce the necessary hormone for one treatment, it would appear that there will need to be concentrated effort by provincial governments and hospital administrators in particular with regard to services available in this respect in order to have a sufficient supply.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE BY MINISTER THAT LAND CLAIMS OF JAMES BAY NATIVES WILL BE RECOGNIZED IN NEGOTIATIONS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Will the minister assure the House that in negotiations with the native people of James Bay he will recognize their land claims based on aboriginal rights, and that he will resist attempts to have a quick cash settlement substituted?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Indians of James Bay enjoy more than a simple definition of their native rights, for their rights have been specified in the treaty of 1912. In the present negotiations, we want to maximize the social and economic benefits of the Indians and try to reach an agreement as soon as possible, for the Indians are not systematically opposed to the development of James Bay.

[English]

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Will the minister give his assurance that there will not be a repeat performance of the discussions which occurred yesterday when attempts were made to force the native people of James Bay into a quick cash settlement rather than negotiate their land claims?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the allegation made by the hon. member. I have met with the Indians, as is my duty; we had long discussions yesterday and we have made progress. I think that I have always shown my interest in protecting the rights of Indians and in finding satisfactory solutions to their problems.

[English]

NEGOTIATIONS WITH YUKON NATIVE BROTHERHOOD—REASON FOR SUSPENSION

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development with respect to the negotiations which were scheduled to have been carried on last Friday with the Yukon Native Brotherhood but which were delayed as the result of the delay of his own official in getting to the negotiations. Can he tell the House why those negotiations were suspended and whether or not the reason for the suspension of the negotiations last Saturday was in order to enable the brotherhood to consider an offer made by the federal government?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the negotiations on the dispute in the Yukon were interrupted because the officials representing me made a proposition on the status of the Indian in the Yukon. The chiefs representing the Indians then asked to consult with their members before making a decision. It is as simple as that.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Can the minister inform the House whether any offer was made by the federal negotiating team with respect to either cash or land, or a combination of both, to the Indian side?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: No, Mr. Speaker, the negotiations have not reached that point yet.

TRANSPORT

SHORTAGE OF RAILWAY FREIGHT CARS—SUGGESTED AMENDMENT OF CNR FINANCING BILL TO PROVIDE FUNDS TO PURCHASE ROLLING STOCK

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance relating to a matter that has been raised repeatedly in this session and for a number of decades. In view of the chronic shortage of railway rolling stock to move a variety of products, lumber, livestock, potatoes, grain and so forth, and in view of the fact that the CNR financing bill is presently before the transport committee, would the minister consider bringing in amendments to that bill to provide for additional capitalization for the purchase of rolling stock required to move Canadian products on Canadian National Railways?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly discuss that with my colleagues, but I would wonder whether that would be beyond the scope of the current measures in the financing bill.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Transport and the busyness of the Prime Minister I will direct my supplementary question also to the Minister of Finance. Since the CNR financing bill already has provisions in it for the purchase of railway rolling stock his answer is incorrect—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Misleading the House.

Mr. Benjamin: —but will he and the Minister of Transport prevail on Canadian Pacific, in view of the fact it has ample capital to finance high rise buildings, shopping centres and other activities—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that is argument, not a question. We are running short of time. The hon. member has had a question and has attempted to ask a supplementary. Perhaps he might ask his supplementary quickly, and then I will try to see two or three more members before the end of the question period.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Transport prevail upon the Canadian Pacific Railway to place a higher priority on capital allocation for the purchase of rolling stock than for its other operations?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I believe that is a representation, and it will be noted.

FISHERIES

REQUEST THAT NEW LICENSING POLICY FOR EAST COAST FISHERMEN BE REFERRED TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader a question relating to the licensing program announced last week by the Minister of Fisheries. If he has not already done so, can he give us the assurance that this program will be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry and, if so, say when it will be referred?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have not given final consideration to this suggestion but, aside from the importance of the subject, there are quite a number of committees meeting at the moment and I am very hesitant at the present time to add to the work load of any of the committees. It is in that light that the decision will be made.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I guessed what the answer would be. There is no reference before that committee yet. May I ask the Minister of Fisheries whether—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Will you believe him?

Mr. Lundrigan: —if in view of the fact that the program does have very sweeping implications for the people of the Atlantic region in particular, he would be prepared to hold the program in abeyance until it does have a proper hearing before the fisheries committee and subsequently, hopefully, it does have proper public hearing?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, there is no intention of modifying the salmon licensing program as announced and put into effect two years ago, but I would be very happy to discuss this matter or answer any questions in committee if the hon. member wants to attend.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I want to get my question cleared up.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for a supplementary question, but we have reached the end of the question period.

Mr. Lundrigan: With regard to the program announced last Wednesday, with specific reference to licensing of fishermen, boats and gear and the like, would the minister be prepared to hold that program over until we have a chance to have public and committee hearings?

Mr. Davis: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lundrigan: That was the question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GARRISON DAM DIVERSION, NORTH DAKOTA—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REMOVE THREAT TO BOUNDARY WATERS—POSSIBLE REFERENCE TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the Canadian government's request for a temporary halt to the Garrison dam diversion project and the consequent serious degradation of the waters of the Red and Souris Rivers flowing into Manitoba, what other steps is the minister taking to remove this threat to communities along these vital boundary waters?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, a submission has been made through the appropriate channels to the government of the United States in this connection. We have yet to hear from Washington officially in this regard.

Mr. Dinsdale: Because the downstream damage violates the Boundary Waters Treaty, is the International Joint Commission seized of the issue and, if not, will the minister refer this matter to this agency which is charged with the responsibility of resolving boundary disputes?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the International Joint Commission is watching this situation carefully.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I noticed a number of members rising, as I did myself on several occasions today, and I wish to protest, Mr. Speaker, against the practice of recognizing people on the official lists. Each member of the House is, if I understand correctly, equal under the Standing Orders. The parties are separated for certain purposes under several sections of the Standing Orders, but one of them is not the question period. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the use of these lists is both dishonest and unfair to you. I suggest that each member should be given recognition. I did not continue to rise and I do not intend to, Mr. Speaker, but I noticed, for instance, that the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi did and was not recognized. The hon. member says he was not on the list. Mr. Speaker, that is the point.

It may be that in your discretion you are willing to accept a number of people on the list as well as a number of people not on the list, but these questions by members on the list are questions being asked collectively by parties in the House through the research people who are being provided by the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peters: These questions must be causing you some concern, Mr. Speaker, because they are long, they have a preamble and they are not necessarily shortening the question period to allow other members to participate.

I am aware that a committee is seized of this matter and I have had, on occasion, the opportunity to sit on that committee. However, on behalf of many members, Mr. Speaker, I protest the importance that the lists are receiving and the impossibility of the individual member, even though he rises only occasionally, gaining recognition. The less often you rise the less likely you are to be recognized. I think this is unfair to many members of the House, and I would ask Your Honour to give less consideration to the lists and more consideration to your own inclination.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak on this same point of order. I do not want to prolong the matter because it is being considered elsewhere. I hope the hon. member used the plural, "lists", because there is not just one list.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the allegation of the hon. gentleman is correct I wonder if the rules of the House should not require that these written questions and lists of questions, upon which members of the opposition are relying, be produced.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Davis.]

Mr. Fairweather: What about the answers?

Mr. Trudeau: Alternatively, Mr. Speaker, if the questioners are genuinely seeking answers, perhaps they might extend to us the courtesy that we do to them by giving us the questions in advance in order that we can prepare answers.

An hon. Member: Like questions on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see at least six hon. members who would like to take part in this debate. Order please. May we have order, please. I bring to the attention of hon. members that this is a matter which has been referred to a committee. It is before the committee now, so I see no point in having a debate on the subject at the present time.

The point made by the hon. member for Timiskaming originally is a valid one in the sense that the Chair should not be expected to be bound in any way by suggested questioners. Hon. members know that when a list is submitted to the Chair it is very seldom that the Chair follows it strictly. I think today is a very good example of the situation. But I have personally found it helpful for the different parties to suggest to me who might be recognized first or second or if there is priority. This may be wrong, but I think it facilitates the task of the Chair. If it is the feeling of the committee that this system should be abandoned, and that such suggestions should not be made to the Chair because they are improper, I would, of course, discontinue this practice which has been followed in previous years and has not worked too badly.

Mr. Hellyer: On the point of order raised by the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to miss this opportunity to repeat the same protest I often make, namely that it is true that there may exist lists within certain parties; it might be because there is little discipline or too few members stand up in those parties but the fact remains that the abuse in the question period lies in the great number of supplementaries. I think that the problem stems much more from that level than from the lists with respect to the discipline of a party.

The situation would be much improved if all parties stopped abusing supplementaries.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that you are the best voice in Parliament to convey that request to the committee and that should be put on the order of the day of the committee so a way can be found to curb the abuse of supplementaries and allow all hon. members to voice their views.

As to the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), if he were in a party where there is no party discipline but where the member counts he would not have the problems he has now.

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister suggested that it would facilitate matters if we gave notice of some of the questions. On July 19, I put 12 easy questions on the order paper asking for simple information, none of which have been answered yet. Under the circumstances one wonders how it facilitates matters to give notice. This government is hopelessly inadequate—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Let's have an answer to that one.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I heard the hon. parliamentary secretary to the House leader indicate just a few days ago that the percentage of questions on the order paper which had been answered was in the area of 85 per cent. I would think that if hon. members opposite wanted to institute the practice which is followed in Great Britain of submitting questions to a ministry for oral answer in the House of Commons, and if they were looking for information rather than some cheap publicity—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I appeal to hon. members. Order, please. My original thought was that we should not discuss under a point of order a matter which is before a committee. The hon. member for Trinity persisted in pursuing the matter, the Prime Minister spoke a second time on the same point of order and now the hon. member wants to do the same thing. It seems to me that we are certainly not going to solve any difficulty by this kind of debate.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has a duty to members—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: —I ask him to withdraw—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: I think the hon. member has just given an example of seeking cheap publicity.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): What about your motorcycle days?

Mr. Trudeau: Did you ever drive a car? Are you looking for publicity?

● (1510)

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I, personally, would be happy to accept the Prime Minister's recommendation that members should provide written questions in advance. I would accept it on the basis that he provide me with the list of the ministers who are responsible for each department.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Former privy councillors have made public statements to the effect that many ministers are run by their departments.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think we have something going. Unless that last suggestion is going to be—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! I have some doubts as to whether the Prime Minister should speak again on the point of order which was raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming. It is the same point of order which was discussed a few minutes ago and for members to speak more than once on the same point of order is irregular, I think. I suggest to hon. members once again that perhaps it might be better if we left the consideration of any difficulty which relates to the question period to the committee which has been charged with this responsibility.

Mr. Hees: Simon Fraser, here he comes. Goodbye, Pierre.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House resumed, from Tuesday, November 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gillespie that Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended speaking on this important bill until I heard a couple of the speeches made last night by members of the NDP, and the outstanding speech made by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner).

The speech made by the hon. member for Crowfoot was completely at variance with the speeches made by our socialist friends. Their speeches were speeches of gloom and doom. They suggested that because of the activities of multinational corporations, of big business and of people in private enterprise, the average Canadian is unhappy and economically bankrupt.

I feel that is the wrong impression which this House ought to leave with the citizens of Canada. I will be the first to admit that there are many things which should be rectified in our society. The fact remains, however, that the average Canadian today never had it so good.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: Yes, he never had it so good. A few weeks ago, on November 11, some of us attended at the cenotaph in remembrance of the thousands of Canadians who lost their lives in the battles of the two great wars. I wonder what would happen if those whom we honoured on that day could come back to Canada, look over the situation today and compared it with the situation existing when they, unfortunately, lost their lives. Would they be happy, or not? Although there are many faults in our society, I suggest they would be extremely happy.

I remind my socialist friends that, no matter what they think of our society, when they return to Canada after having left it for a visit to another country, they are always glad. I remind them, those who live in this city, that when they get up in the morning and look out of their windows, they will see the finest housing available anywhere in the world.

Since Confederation, this country has been governed by the Liberal and Conservative parties, that is, by so-called free enterprisers. Let me say that it was not socialism which produced the finest housing in the world in this country; it was free enterprise.

An hon. Member: Tell that to the Indians.

Mr. Whicher: I could give many examples. It seems to me that the speeches of my socialist friends, and I advise all members to read them, were little else but condemnation of Canada and the citizens who live here. We have much to be proud of in Canada. Let me make this suggestion to my socialistic friends: if they can sing at all, let them go to some quiet room and sing, "O, Canada".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: That song is sung quite often in this country; it will be sung at the Grey Cup game, soon to take place. Its words are significant. I remind hon. members that we Canadians live in the finest country in the world. It has been made so, not by any socialist party, but by people who are willing to work, by businesses, big and small, and by those who are willing to invest their money in Canada.

In addition to seeing fine housing, you will see hundreds of thousands of cars if you live in Canada. You will see them in Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver and elsewhere. The cars are owned by the workers of this nation. They could buy them because of our system of government.

Mr. Hellyer: Ross, you are on the wrong side of the House.

Mr. Whicher: We have more refrigerators, more stoves and more amenities than almost any nation our size. Medical care is almost free for Canadian citizens across Canada. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we should sing of the advantages of being a Canadian instead of constantly condemning this country, as some people do, pointing to some weak spots, minimizing what is good and emphasizing what is bad. We should not do that. Again I say, show me the socialist who, after visiting another nation, does not say, after crossing the border of Canada, "Thank God I am back in this private enterprise country!" Show me the socialist country which in any way compares with our great country, in which the average citizen enjoys such a high standard of living.

An hon. Member: How about Sweden?

Mr. Gilbert: Boy, you are going to be swept out of power.

Mr. Paproski: You are right on, Ross; carry on.

[Mr. Whicher.]

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, when the great architect of the universe created this earth, he gave Canada something special. I am sure that the people of Vancouver, and of British Columbia generally where much growth has taken place, are proud of the Rockies. I am sure the people of the Prairies are proud of the millions of acres of grain they can harvest. Some of the greatest grain crops in the world have been taken from that area. I, as a citizen of Ontario, am proud of Ontario. As a citizen of Ontario, of course, I have the right to think that perhaps Ontario is the finest place in the world. On the other hand, my friends from Quebec, with the great natural resources of that province and the things they have done, may think their province is the best. For example, some of us have been critical of the fact that the Olympics will be held in Montreal. Let me tell hon. members that it took Quebecers and the mayor of Montreal to bring the Olympics to that city. I do not blame them for being proud of that fact.

Then, we go to other areas in the Maritimes. When we look at beautiful Prince Edward Island, we must surely admit it is something special in this world. More than that and more than the Maritimes, western Ontario, Quebec and so on, when the Great Architect of the universe created this earth, he put into Canada people who were willing to work hard. Our forefathers were not looking for a 35 or 40 hour week. They were not looking for an old age pension of $200 a month or $20 a month for each child. They were only looking for the opportunity to work hard. They certainly did work hard to make this country what it is. In so doing, they were happy.

Much has been said about this bill, the terrible Americans and the fantastic amount of money they have invested in Canada. I listened to the leader of the New Democratic Party. He said there is no reason why we should have an energy crisis in Canada because we are lucky in having all the oil we need. Who could disagree with him? Of course, we are lucky. We are also mighty lucky the Americans invested hundreds of millions of dollars in western Canada. Otherwise, we would not have any oil in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: If a person is unwilling to face that fact, there is something wrong with him. What would be the advantage of building a pipeline from western Canada to Montreal if we did not have any oil to ship through it? Where would the oil come from if it were not for the American dollars that were used to drill for the oil 10 or 15 years ago?

A couple of years ago I had the opportunity to visit Sept Iles, Quebec. If I recall correctly, the wage earners of that community are the second highest paid in all of Canada. The people in Oakville are first. Twenty-five years ago there were perhaps six or seven shacks there. You could not really say anyone lived there. Today, Sept Iles is one of the most modern cities in Canada. Over 20,000 people live there. It has one of the highest standards of living in the world. One American laid out the town and developed the two mines that are there. Every single dollar that was spent was an American dollar. Every single labourer who worked on that project was a Canadian, except the man at the top. They paid 100 per cent Canadian taxes. If the Americans had not come, there would still only be six or seven shacks in Sept Iles.

An hon. Member: There would be 50.

Mr. Whicher: That may be true. When I was a member of the Ontario legislature, I had the privilege of listening to a man whom I regard as the great Canadian, the Hon. Leslie Frost, who was then premier. He was speaking in an offhanded way. He said that in his opinion, there is not much difference between an American dollar bill and a Canadian dollar bill. He said if you go to the grocery store, you can buy just as many groceries with one as with the other. I will agree that things have certainly changed since the days of Leslie Frost.

There is no doubt that, as Canadians, we should have the control of our destiny and assets that are in Canada. On the other hand, we need the help and assistance of the United States and other foreign countries. We must be very thankful for the help we have received. I have the highest respect for my friends who are referred to as being "to the left" here in Canada. One thing is certain, they are sincere. They are sincerely wrong. Nevertheless, they are sincere and really believe that what they are doing is right.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is a man whom I really appreciate. He is a devoted, honest politician. When he was honoured for the length of time he has been a member of the House of Commons, he mentioned that when he came here there was no old age pension or, if there was, it was $20 on a means test. Today, it is substantially higher. I am in favour of old age pensions. I believe in assisting people who need assistance. However, you can only have the social security programs the country can afford. Somewhere along the line you must stop. What worries me about the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is now that the pension is $150 a month, he will want it to be increased to $200 a month. When it gets to $200 he will want it to go to $250. When it gets to $250, he will want $300.

I ask my socialistic friends, who made it possible to pay pensions at the level at which they now are? Who made it possible to give free medicare within reason across Canada? These things have been made possible through the development of this country by Canadian business and foreign business which invested here. It has been made possible by the individuals who pay the taxes. My friends to the left must remember that when pensions are increased substantially every year, the tax load goes up and up. They must remember that 85 per cent of the personal income tax that came from Canadians was paid by people who earned less than $15,000 a year.

In conclusion, I am glad this bill has been introduced by the minister. I have never really worried as long as foreign business interests have obeyed Canadian laws and hired Canadian labour. That is what is important. If this bill is not strong enough, and if we find the odd foreign enterprise which is not willing to do what we as legislators wish them to do, under our democratic system we can change the law so they will do what they should do for us as Canadian citizens.

Foreign Investment Review Act

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to follow the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher). He used to sit across from me when the Liberals were in the position of having a rump on this side of the House. As one of my colleagues said, perhaps we converted him because there was much in his speech with which I personally agree.

An hon. Member: He will be joining Paul Hellyer.

Mr. MacKay: With the different kind of rump we now have in the House, the NDP, I am sure the hon. member for Bruce will not sit there. While I am sure the hon. member for Bruce is happy about the concept embodied in this legislation, I believe that like many of us he would be happier still if the minister were not so intransigent and if he had been more agreeable to allowing for more consultation with the provinces. However, much has been said on this point and I do not wish to go over old ground. The hon. member for Bruce has reminded us of the wonderful nation in which we live. I think he would agree, though, that the traditional free enterprise system which has made Canada such a great country has been badly eroded in recent years, and I am sure he is a little concerned about the alliance between his party and those in the New Democratic Party who are so left wing they would make the late Salvador Allende look like Ronald Reagan. Even so, there are differences of opinion within that party and, indeed, no party is entirely undivided when expressing opinions on this subject of foreign investment.

● (1530)

It seems to me, as the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) said yesterday, that during the period in which Liberal governments have been in control of the country, that is to say for 32 of the last 38 years, we have seen evidence of a deterioration in many aspects of our society. Perhaps this was to be expected. The present administration pays lip service to the idea of controlling foreign investment, but I am not at all confident that they are sincere in their promise of action to carry it out. Anyone who takes the trouble to look back in Hansard and refer to some of the promises which have been made by government spokesmen from time to time will understand the reason for this lack of confidence. I will cite just one example from the Hansard of March 14, 1972. The then minister of transport, now the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), is reported as saying:

> I agree with the claim that a reorganized structure is necessary in order that members and the country generally can obtain more information, and obtain it more easily, about all aspects of transportation. With this objective in mind, I propose to bring before the House in the next session three important pieces of legislation on which work is proceeding at the present time. The first of those is a bill designed to reconstitute Air Canada as a separate Crown corporation, thus divorcing it, as it were, from the CNR. I will also introduce a Canadian National Railways Revision Act and a companion piece of legislation covering amendments to the Railway Act. Hon. members will know how involved and far reaching these changes are; they have been asking for them for the last two or three years. These changes have entailed a great deal of work, which is still proceeding. I believe, however, that these bills are essential and I will bring them forward as soon as they are ready.

This is the type of thing the country and the House has grown to expect from the government opposite. I sincerely hope we shall not see an example of foot dragging in the case of the bill now before us, comparable to the example I have just cited. There are many other examples I might have used. Looking back on the record of the government during the last 32 out of 38 years, as far as examples of initiative and progressive action are concerned, and bearing in mind the situation today, I am bound to say I am reminded of the remark by Winston Churchill in his book "Great Contemporaries" when he said of Lord Roseberry: "He had outlived his past by 20 years and his future by 10." That comment could be directed with some justification toward the present administration, because it has been given no end of time in which to accomplish something.

Much has been made of the fact that in 1961 the Ottawa Valley Line was instituted to provide eastern Canadians with a source of oil other than western Canada. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) said not long ago, that for years eastern consumers benefited from this decision. We have seen no essential change made in these arrangements, since 1961 though during the intervening years a man has been put on the moon and the economic condition of the entire world has changed. This government did not possess enough initiative to make any change in the policy set in 1961 as far as energy is concerned, although the situation changed.

To get back to the question of foreign investment in this country, I would again ask the minister to show a desire to be open, fair and frank in his administration of this legislation. In this way, those who have to deal with this policy would know in advance the criteria to be met. It is true the minister told us he would provide certain guidelines. He has told us that various circumstances would be taken into consideration. But once he has made a decision he is under no obligation to build up, as it were, any jurisprudence, or to give reasons for his decision. I believe he should keep this aspect in mind when administering the act; disclosure is necessary. I fail to see how this legislation can have its full impact unless Canadians are given an incentive to invest in their own country, to take a few risks and be rewarded for doing so. As long as tax anomalies exist which afford certain advantages to foreigners at the expense of Canadians, the type of legislation we are now considering will not be as advantageous as might otherwise be the case.

Like the hon. member for Bruce, I want to refer to another party in this House, the socialist party, the New Democratic Party to my left. It is interesting to listen to what some members of that party have to say, because in that party just as in my own, there is a considerable divergence of opinion. This applies not only to the particular piece of legislation we are now considering but to many other subjects as well. It is apparent to me that the NDP understands perfectly well some of the negative aspects of foreign investments. Speakers for that party have drawn attention to the fact, as, indeed, speakers from my party have done, that in some cases when a large consortium invests in Canada there are certain undesirable side effects. Sometimes a corporation tries to bring in its own employees and technicians. Sometimes it tries to make certain that much of the heavy equipment is supplied by firms with which these financiers have close ties.

[Mr. MacKay.]

A situation of this type is bad, and this legislation, as far as it tends to reverse it, is certainly good. The government, as many of us have stated, is to be commended for bringing the bill forward at this time. We are not denigrating hon. gentlemen opposite for bringing it forward. We think it is a constructive step, possibly one of the few constructive steps hon. gentlemen opposite have taken.

Mr. Breau: Don't get political.

Mr. MacKay: I see the parliamentary secretary partly agrees. I say to him: Go a little further. Let him seek to persuade some of the policy-makers in the cabinet to give a tax break to Canadians who are running family businesses, to Canadians who are in business in a small way.

Mr. Breau: We did.

Mr. MacKay: Well, the government has not gone far enough. It is not sufficient to adopt a negative approach and curtail foreign investment unless one is prepared to encourage Canadians to pick up the slack and take the risks which must be taken if this country is to be developed. A capital gains tax has been introduced. This is a fact of life. Although many people on the extreme right politically were against this tax, I felt it was time a capital gains tax of some kind was enacted. But in our tax law no consideration has been given to the position of the investor who sets aside money systematically over the years, and invests it over the years, for the purpose of building up a fund for the education of his children. No consideration is given to this investor when he sells his securities. He is hit with the same kind of capital gains tax as the wealthy speculator who cleans up on the Toronto stock exchange and makes $20,000 in six months. This is wrong.

● (1540)

There are many other modifications that the government must make in taxation policy. Kicking and screaming, they finally agreed that they were wrong about taxing family farms and corrected the situation; I commend them for that. But I say with all sincerity that they have to go a lot further than that if they want to promote Canadian nationalism and encourage Canadians by giving them a break, in so far as taxes are concerned.

The New Democratic Party recognizes the problems that are implicit in foreign ownership, but they are very negativistic, if I may use that word, in looking at the corollary to which I have referred. They do not concede, for example, that the provinces need to be consulted, as we have suggested should be provided for in this legislation. At least, if they do, then they have not shown that to be the case. I suggest that the New Democratic Party has certain members who are very uncomfortable, as are some of us, about some of the provisions in this bill.

Just so that I will not be accused of making idle references, I had occasion not too long ago to refer to an interesting speech made by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) on a different issue, unemployment insurance. I have always admired my hon. friend from Waterloo-Cambridge, and I realize that in many ways he is probably an ideological prisoner of the NDP. I should like the House to listen to what he said about unemployment insurance, which is one of the "holiest of holiests" as far as socialists are concerned. As reported at page 5892 of Hansard for July 23 last he said:

> What is the point in fishermen being included under the provisions of the act?

He advocates taking fishermen off unemployment insurance, apparently, because he goes on to say this:

> Insurance is supposed to take care of unpredictable hazards. What is unpredictable about fishermen being unemployed?

I will not comment on that observation; I merely use it as an illustration that certain members of the New Democratic Party have strong opinions. It makes me chuckle when I hear them in this House day after day taking the sanctimonious approach that everything they propose is an example of, shall I say, complete and utter unanimity within their party. The other day the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) proposed an amendment, but his party did not support him on it. Nothing much has been said about that, though it is of interest that when that sort of thing happens to the Conservative party, where there is a little more freedom to be individuals, the NDP, attempt to make a great deal of capital out of it.

It is also very interesting, when talking of the members of the NDP, to examine some of the comments made recently regarding some other contradictions in their official policy. I have in mind a very interesting article by a journalist named John Nichol, in which some of the NDP economic theories were attacked. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) in a speech not too long ago in this chamber made mention of various provinces and took issue with some provincial administrations, their history and background. This particular article, which I am prepared to table if you wish, Mr. Speaker, goes on to say, in part:

> Headline: Looking for hard cold cash?
> Picture: Cash register with its drawer open.
> Text: Come and get it!
> You'll have to put it to use by locating within this province. But it'll be worth it. Look at the facts. Resources, labour force, markets—East, West and South, all at your fingertips.
>
> If you're in manufacturing or processing industry looking to expand . . . take a hard look at Saskatchewan. If you qualify, we can help you greatly.
> How much in hard cold cash? Write us. We'll come to you.

This advertisement was placed by the deputy minister of the department of industry and commerce of the province of Saskatchewan, the Saskatchewan Power Building, Regina, Saskatchewan. The article points out:

> This conflicts directly with the views of the national NDP leader David Lewis.

I do not want to read this fairly lengthy article into the record in its entirety, but it goes on to say this:

> The campaign of the NDP in the recent election campaign was one of very narrow focus. The only spokesman who got any attention was David Lewis, and he confined himself to his themes of "corporate rip-offs" and "corporate welfare bums" and the "phony incentive society".

Then, Mr. Nichol has this to say:

> It is important to note that there are many dedicated supporters of the NDP who do not support Mr. Lewis on this issue.

I mention this not to be unkind to the leader of the New Democratic Party, a very able parliamentarian but one who, I think, sometimes degenerates into some sort of parliamentary "Pushme-Pullion" of Dr. Doolittle fame. He is pushing here, pulling there, all the time with great vigour, supposedly trying to topple the government, huffing and puffing but being completely ineffective and manifestly insincere. What John Nichol is pointing out is this:

> The Manitoba Development Corporation, a Crown agency of Premier Schreyer's NDP government, loans tens of millions of dollars a year to private enterprise.
> In short, these NDP supporters accept the fact that industrial incentives are an essential tool of government in desperately important tasks of finding jobs.
> The premiers and the officials of the Canadian Labour Congress have active responsibilities for jobs. David Lewis does not. Therein lies the difference.

Looking once again at the ramifications and implications of this particular piece of legislation, just as the hon. member for Bruce indicated he was proud, so I too am very proud of being a Canadian. Indeed, I am sure all hon. members of this House are. We have a great deal of respect for the efforts that our forefathers made in building this nation. They did it, as the hon. member pointed out, with hard work and they were not unduly concerned with socialist doctrine. A lot of people from socialist countries who have voted with their feet, as the saying is, by crossing the border have come to Canada because they feel they have a chance under a free enterprise system. When I hear New Democratic Party members denigrating private enterprise, saying it has not done what it should and that the only answer is some magical solution to be found in socialism, I sometimes think that my hon. friends opposite on the government benches must be very uneasy indeed about associating themselves with such remarks and acceding to some of the policies to which they have been forced to accede in order to retain their precarious hold on power.

The day will come, Mr. Speaker, when there will be a reckoning. I have no doubt that in the not too distant future some of the provisions of this particular bill will be modified. They will be modified by a Progressive Conservative government. Hopefully, they will be modified before some of the more obscure and bureaucratically oriented provisions have damaged the economic climate in Canada to a very great extent.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by making a few comments on the speeches of the two members who have preceded me. The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) spoke for some 20 minutes, and it was not until the last minute of his speech that he said he was going to support this bill. The whole tenor of his remarks was a defence of the greatness of the free enterprise system, a defence that led me to believe he felt that the free enterprise system was so effective in meeting the needs of the people of Canada that we really had no need for the kind of legislation that his minister introduced and which the members of this party are going to support. However, the reason the hon. member for Bruce is going to support a bill which he spent 99 per cent of his time criticizing by implication I will leave the hon. member for Bruce to explain.

I want to say a few words about the speech made by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) who has just taken his seat. It was a speech that I could listen to with a good deal more comfort than I could yesterday when I heard the speech made by another Conservative member, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). If the hon. member for Central Nova does not agree with members of the New Democratic Party that does not surprise me. If he did agree he would be over here as a New Democrat, and if we agreed with him we would be sitting somewhere near him, but certainly not near the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner).

● (1550)

There is one thing the hon. member said to which I want to take sharp objection. If I misunderstood him I apologize in advance. He said that many people in Canada had showed what they thought of socialism by leaving socialist countries. If the hon. member for Central Nova implied that the people who came to Canada from communist countries because they did not like their systems felt there was any resemblance between the systems of those countries and the NDP and its policies, I reject that out of hand. If the hon. member did not imply that, then what I have said does not apply to his speech.

An hon. Member: What do you stand for then?

Mr. Orlikow: The NDP is associated formally and informally with the Labour Party of Great Britain, which has been and will be again the government of that country; it is associated with the Social Democratic Party of Sweden, which has been the government of that country for 40 years; it is associated with the Labour government of Norway, and that party has formed the government of that country for the better part of the last 30 years, and it is associated with the Social Democratic Party of the government of Willie Brant of West Germany. Those are the parties with which we are associated both in philosophy and through membership in the Socialist International. If the hon. member for Central Nova or any other member wants to criticize our position on this or on any other question they are welcome to do so. This is a democratic country and we are prepared to let the people of Canada, by their votes and in other ways, show what they think of our position. I want to say in the strongest terms that any suggestion by any hon. member of this House that our program has anything to do with or anything in common with countries in the communist world is simply not true, is unfair and a completely unfounded allegation.

We are discussing a bill which we hope, for the first time, will permit Canada to deal with one of the most important problems faced not only by this country but by every country in the western world. We have often heard it said here in the House and outside that we ought to look for examples of a country which has had the finest growth record since the end of World War II, and I suggest that country is Japan. For years now Japan has had legislation which requires that no foreign firm shall own more than 50 per cent of the company in Japan in which it has invested. This legislation was adopted years ago. It is not surprising then that we are for the first time beginning to think about what can be done in this country regarding foreign control.

The huge corporations of the world are, year by year, becoming bigger. The annual output of the 300 leading multinational, transnational, or whatever you want to call them, companies which are today doing $300 billion worth of business a year will by 1990, if their present rate of expansion continues, be doing $2,000 billion worth of business. They will be responsible for 50 per cent of the gross national product of the free world. Those companies do not really produce and sell in the countries in which their factories happen to be located, their mines, their wells and other things. They set up branches and subsidiaries in other countries, import and export between each other and decide where they will get their raw materials and where they will produce their finished goods.

The hon. member for Bruce talked about visiting Sept Îles and referred to how prosperous a city it was. I suggest that Sept Îles is the port through which the iron ore taken out of northern Quebec and Labrador is shipped. There are some 10,000 miners digging iron ore in Quebec and Labrador. They are getting good wages, but that iron ore is shipped to Sept Îles and most of it is exported to the United States where probably 200,000 U.S. workers are getting very good wages turning that iron ore into finished steel as well as processing that steel into manufactured goods such as cars, refrigerators, you name it, which are then sold in the United States, in Canada and in other countries. I suggest those workers in the United States are reaping the benefits of that iron ore, not the Canadian workers in Sept Îles or in the iron ore mines of Quebec and Labrador.

In an article which appeared in the Toronto Star sometime ago Walter Stewart referred to the question of who makes the decisions in these multinational corporations. He quotes from the head of a British owned multinational corporation as follows:

"There is no such thing as a multinational firm. We have plants in half a dozen countries, trade in dozens more, but if you want to know who runs us, look where the control is—in London. That's where the budgets are approved, that's where the policies are laid down."

We should not be critical of the multinational corporations. They operate under the laws we have passed, and if we have failed to pass laws which assure that multinational corporations operate in the interests of the Canadian people rather than in the interests of their shareholders then we are at fault, not those corporations. Their objective, and it is legitimate from their point of view, is to make more money. The important thing is how they can make more money, where is the best place to provide jobs and where is the best place to locate their major plants? The answers to these questions in most cases are very simple. For political and economic reasons, the best places are not in Canada but in the country in which these companies have their head offices, where the real decisions are made. In most cases as far as Canada is concerned that is the United States.

It may be that because of the current crisis in the energy field resulting from decisions of the Arab states to cut back on the production and export of oil there will be a precipitous slowdown in economic activity, and I certainly hope that is not the case. However, when times are difficult, United States owned firms naturally tend to keep U.S. plants open at the expense of plants located in Canada. This has already happened in respect of certain industries. Westinghouse, for example, closed a plant in London, and General Electric shifted its purchasing of T.V. tubes from Toronto to a plant in Japan. One could go on and on with examples, but this is the reason Canadians are concerned about foreign ownership.

● (1600)

This government has dithered and "dothered" about this for years. First, it had a study made under the former minister, Mr. Gordon, headed by Professor Watkins of the University of Toronto. Then, there was another study which they attempted to hide and which was finally made public. This was done under the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray). Then, last year a bill was brought in which did not begin to deal with the question. It was not proceeded with because we indicated very strongly that we would not support it. This is why we now have a bill which will give the government an opportunity to begin to deal with the question. There are many things which we believe should be contained in the bill which are not included. In earlier discussions we have suggested things which we believe should be included in the bill which are not. Some amendments and some improvements have been made, and because of this we will support the bill.

I want to say to the minister that we are very skeptical. In such a situation, the Americans would say they were from Missouri. I do not know what the Canadian equivalent is to being from Missouri.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Manitoba.

Mr. Orlikow: My colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says the Canadian equivalent is Manitoba. I can accept that as a Manitoban. However, I should like to say we are very skeptical about the real intentions of this government and this minister. One can have the best legislation in the world, but if a government does not want to use it and does not want to enforce it, then the legislation will not be much used. One could not have a better illustration than the fact that for almost 50 years anti-combines legislation has been on the statute books, and for 50 years nothing effective has been done to control the ever-growing power of monopolies in Canada, to disperse or break them up.

So, I say to the minister that, of course the first step in doing anything about this question is the passage of legislation. The second step, however, about which we are skeptical and in respect of which we will be watching very carefully the performance of the government, and particularly of the minister, is the use of the legislation when enacted, to police the situation and to do whatever can be done to ensure that the continued takeover of Canadian industry by multinational corporations be, if not halted, at least slowed down.

Let me point out to members of the House that the extent of control of foreign corporations in this country is fantastic. It is of an order which has not been duplicated in any other country in the western world. Over 90 per cent of the oil and gas resources in this country are foreign owned. Over 80 per cent of the mining resources are foreign controlled. I think over 60 per cent of the manufacturing industries are foreign controlled. The percentage of that control has been accelerating rather than slowing down. According to Statistics Canada, in 1970 the last year for which it had figures, foreign investment in Canada increased by a record $2 billion. United States firms account for $1.6 billion of that $2 billion increase in 1970. Their total holdings amount to $21.5 billion, a 7.7 per cent increase over their interest in 1969. That is what foreign control means.

I suppose one of the worst examples to indicate that we cannot afford to manage this country without foreign investment is in the speeches of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). The speech he made yesterday was by its nature a classic example of the type of speech he makes. It is the kind of argument which, if not endorsed by all members of the Conservative Party, seems to be supported certainly by every member of parliament from Alberta, everyone of whom, of course, is a Conservative. The hon. member for Crowfoot heaped scorn on us. According to him public ownership does not work. We believe in public ownership. He suggested that without private capital there would be no oil industry, no expansion and so on.

I wish to deal for a few moments with the illustration he used, the industry he used, as his clinching argument to show the fallacies in respect of public ownership and the fallacies concerning the position taken by the New Democratic Party. It is interesting to look at what has happened to the oil industry worldwide in recent years. I am sure I do not have to tell members of parliament what has happened in the countries which own the overwhelming majority of the proven oil reserves in the world. In virtually every country in the Middle East the situation has changed fantastically in recent years. From a time when the multinational oil corporations, such as Exxon, Shell and Gulf, owned the oil and paid a small royalty to the countries in which they extracted the oil, you have a situation now where in many cases the countries themselves have taken over and now own the producing oil wells. They have made arrangements with the multinational corporations to market the oil and so on but they now own it.

In other countries there has been a takeover to the extent of joint ownership, ownership on a 60-40 basis and so on, but increasingly the oil producing countries with the largest oil resources own the oil themselves or in partnership with private enterprise. The day when private enterprise was given free and exclusive rights to develop the oil resources in those countries is gone. What about the western world? In Great Britain, the largest company I believe is the British Petroleum Corporation. BP is almost 50 per cent owned by the British government. I am not sure whether that share of BP was acquired while the Labour Party formed the government or while the Conservative Party was in power. The Conservatives have been in office now for several years, and to my knowledge there has been and is no proposal that the state divest itself of its share. In France, the French government has a 35 per cent interest in CFP which is the eighth largest integrated oil company in the world. It also has a 100 per cent interest in the ELP oil company which was set up to exploit the crude oil deposits in those areas which operate with the French franc as their monetary standard.

The Italian government owns 100 per cent of the only oil corporation in the country, ENI, and incidentally it is the largest national oil company in the world, operating in Italy and many other countries. I have completely excluded countries which are communist controlled, and I give these illustrations simply to prove that more and more countries in the western world are finding it to the advantage of their people to have the state involved in the oil business and energy business. That is precisely what we have been advocating here.

Let me turn to the other point which was made so effectively last night by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), and I mean effectively if one thinks in terms of making a case for the oil companies. As I listened to the hon. member I was sorry I did not have a bucket with me to catch the tears which poured from his eyes as he told us about the plight of the poor, defenceless oil companies if the rights which we have given them to find oil in this country, to own oil, to sell oil at current prices, were not continued. He told us also that if they were not allowed to increase their prices, they would be bankrupt tomorrow. Somebody has to answer that kind of argument put forward by the hon. member for Crowfoot. As I say, it was an extremely effective argument if one were only interested in the welfare of the oil companies. I want to put the facts on the record about the poor oil companies which, to listen to the hon. member for Crowfoot, are virtually going bankrupt. Let me take just three of those companies.

Gulf Oil in the five years from 1968 to 1972 in round figures made profits of $522 million. That is over $100 million each year. In deferred taxes, that is, taxes which it did not have to pay because of the kind of encouragement which governments have been persuaded oil companies need if they are to do business in Canada, to look for oil, and so forth, from 1968 to 1972 Gulf got over $109 million. Its actual profits for those years, and by actual profits I am talking about net income plus deferred taxes, were over $588 million. If you look at the return to the shareholders, which is shown as a percentage of net income, you see that between 1969 and 1972 that income was never less than 6.9 per cent in any year, and went up to a high of 8.7 per cent in 1972. If you include the deferred taxes as part of their earnings, their earnings for 1972 were 11.1 per cent. Need I tell hon. members of the House that because of increases in prices and increased use of oil, profits of the oil companies for the first nine months of 1973 are running at somewhere between 30 per cent and 40 per cent higher than they were in 1972?

Let me now turn to Shell Oil, another one of the companies about which I presume the hon. member for Crowfoot is concerned. In the ten years from 1962 to 1972, Shell Oil had a net income of $478 million. Its net income in 1972 was $79 million, an increase of 27 per cent over 1970 and, as I say, this year its profits are up probably by another 30 per cent. In 1971, Shell Canada had deferred taxes of over $8½ million, and in 1972 its deferred taxes were over $10 million. Its actual profits with deferred taxes in 1971 were just under $71 million, and in 1972 they were over $89 million. The return on shareholders' investment capital in 1972 was 10.4 per cent. That is a pretty good profit for any shareholder. I am not saying there is anything illegal or improper from their point of view. They are interested, and so they should be, in making as large profits as possible.

Now, what about the giant, the largest company—Imperial Oil? Between 1963 and 1972, Imperial Oil made $1,010 million in profits after taxes. In 1972, its profits were $151 million, an increase of 11 per cent over 1971. In 1971, its profits were $136 million, an increase of 29½ per cent over the previous year. So far in 1973, its profits are running in the neighbourhood of 35 per cent more than they were in 1972. But, Mr. Speaker, that was not enough. In 1971, Imperial Oil was able to defer payment of taxes to the amount of $11 million, and in 1972 was able to defer payment of taxes to the amount of $26 million. Is it any wonder that members of this party cannot feel very sorry for the oil companies? They are doing very well for themselves, Mr. Speaker. If you look at the return on equity to the shareholders in percentage terms, through the years 1963 to 1972 you see that Imperial Oil never made less than 9.7 per cent, and in 1972 the return was 13.9 per cent. These were unconscionable profits.

This country faces an oil shortage in the maritime provinces and in Quebec. Why is that? It is not because of a shortage of oil. We have more than enough oil in western Canada to meet the needs of the eastern provinces. But we cannot supply those needs because there is no oil pipeline to carry the crude oil from Sarnia to Montreal. Why is there no such oil pipeline? The reason is simple. In 1961, the then Conservative government decided that the best way to meet the oil needs of the people of Canada was to adopt a policy under which oil for Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Quebec would be supplied by imports from Venezuela and the Arab states, and that the rest of Canada from the Ottawa River west would be supplied with oil from Alberta sources. Mr. Speaker, until this year crude laid down in Montreal and purchased from Venezuela or the Arab states was cheaper than crude shipped from the west, so that is what the user got. The price of oil west of the Ottawa River was set by the oil companies in Alberta and that was what the consumer had to pay, even though it would have been cheaper to bring oil from Venezuela into Toronto. The Toronto-Hamilton-Ottawa user had to use western oil.

The price of oil has gone up now, and I do not blame the Venezuelan government for that. They are going to charge what the traffic will bear, but the eastern user is going to have to pay more. Had we built a pipeline, as members of this party and representatives of the independent oil producers have been recommending for years, western oil could now be shipped to Montreal to meet the needs of the eastern user. But that did not suit the western oil producers who had set the price so that they could make high profits. It did not suit them to have that pipeline built and former Conservative and Liberal governments went along with that.

It is not bad enough that homes and industries in the eastern provinces are going to have to pay more for oil because they have to pay the price which the Venezuelans and Arab countries want, but it is now proposed by the oil companies, by the government of Alberta and their friends the Conservative members of parliament from Alberta, and also for reasons which I find impossible to understand by the Liberal party, that not only will the eastern user be held for ransom but that as of the end of January 1974 the price freeze imposed by the federal government will be removed. That will mean that the price of oil produced in western Canada will be as exorbitant as the price which has to be paid in Montreal.

The hon. member for Crowfoot talks about the interests of the western people. If the Parliament of Canada permits the oil companies to charge what they want, and if the Parliament of Canada permits the premier of Alberta whose brother by the way—and I do not know whether or not this is a fact—is vice president of an oil company—

Mr. Andre: That is a cheap, cheap, cheap, statement.

Mr. Orlikow: If the government of Canada permits that increase in the price of oil to take place—Mr. Speaker, somebody interjected from the corridor to the effect that what I said about the relationship between the premier of Alberta and his brother was a cheap thing to say. If the hon. member who made that statement says that it is not true, then I will withdraw the statement. However, if the statement is correct Mr. Speaker, there is nothing cheap about it; in fact, it is a very expensive thing for the Canadian people.

There is one thing which should be noted today, Mr. Speaker, and I hope it will be kept in mind by the constituents of the hon. member for Crowfoot when the price of gas goes up. If the government of Canada lets the price of oil go up the way the oil companies want, and certainly the Conservative party and certainly the hon. member for Crowfoot want, the price of gasoline will increase by 10 or 12 cents a gallon early in 1974.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. Orlikow: Certainly.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): My question to the hon. member is this: if there were a shortage of school teachers and if you were to freeze their wages would you get more teachers? He seems to understand school teachers' language, and that is a simple question.

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member for Crowfoot was not in his seat until a few seconds ago, Mr. Speaker. I saw him sit down a little while ago, but I do not know whether he was here when I began to make my speech. I have already put on the record the profit statements of Shell, Gulf and Imperial Oil. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, the profits of the oil companies are high enough that they can afford to do the exploration that may be necessary.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): They will go to the North Sea! They will go to Indonesia!

Mr. Andre: Do you know how much they make on their investment? Seven per cent.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am no more bothered by the interjections of the hon. member for Crowfoot than was my leader the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) the other night.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Well, you are telling a little more of the truth than he did the other night!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member only has one minute more, so I suggest that he be allowed to complete his remarks.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, in calculating my time I hope you will not deduct from it the time taken by the interjections of the hon. member for Crowfoot. In my view, and I think I documented this pretty closely and conclusively, the oil companies operating in Alberta are making a very good return on their investment. I put the facts on the record, and their returns are more than sufficient to meet the needs, the desires and the legitimate—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Buy some of their shares then.

Mr. Orlikow: —requirements of their shareholders. I say they have the ability to do the exploration for new resources which are needed and if they do not, the people of Canada through their government can put up the money. We can put up the money if we can continue to collect the export tax which the federal government imposed some time ago. I say there is no reason for an increase in the price of gas. I drive a car, though not very often, and an increase of 10 or 12 cents a gallon will not affect me very much.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. However, he can continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will not abuse the privilege you have extended. Let me simply say that the hon. member for Crowfoot may have to answer to the farmers he represents when they come to buy the fuel for their tractors, their combines and all the other farm equipment they need. If they have to pay 10 or 12 cents a gallon more to the oil companies which, in my view, are already making exorbitant profits and then wonder what hit them, they can do no better than look at the speech made by the hon. member for Crowfoot, to find the reason.

• (1630)

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): And when all farmers in this country have run out of oil, perhaps they will read the hon. member's speech.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence, I wonder if I might raise a point of order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), in his speech, suggested that I was trying to imply something unfair about his party. I want to assure my hon. friend that I had no intention of associating his party with international communism, because that would be like associating a cold sore with lip cancer. Also, I wonder if I may ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Only if the hon. member has the unanimous consent of the House, as the hon. member's time had expired, been extended, and has expired again.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, before beginning my main remarks I wish to refer to the closing of the debation the report stage on Monday evening. As Your Honour is aware, I had an amendment to this bill which was listed last on the order paper. At six o'clock that day the Acting Speaker, then the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel) suggested that it might possibly be out of order. As it was six o'clock, he suggested that perhaps comments could be made on the matter.

At the time I was unfortunately absent in Alberta, attending the funeral of our late colleague, Harry Kuntz. I only regret that the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) and the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) were in such a mood at that time that they felt this bill needed very speedy passage. I felt that the acting speaker at the time could have chosen some better precedent for ruling my amendment out of order. I believe His Honour expressed the feeling that the amendment interfered with the legislative procedure which we have grown accustomed to in this country. I am not saying my amendment was completely in order; I would not have been surprised if it had been ruled out of order. However, I should not like to see that ruling, which did not evoke any response, to become the precedent for future rulings on amendments of that kind.

It seems to me that the legislative procedure has been adopted whereby we allow the provinces to accept or reject federal legislation in many areas. As an example, I can think of the Criminal Code, which allows provinces to hold lotteries or not hold them, as they will; I think of the Canada Pension Plan, under which we require provincial consent if the plan is to operate; I think of the medicare legislation, which a lot of provinces did not accept immediately. We needed the club of the federal spending power to bring them into line and participate in that federal legislation.

In 1964-65, this House passed special legislation setting up a procedure for allowing provinces to opt out of what is primarily national legislation. So, I do not know whether the ruling was well founded; however, I want to point out to the House that it was not—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I understand the hon. member's difficulty. It arose because he was not here that evening to defend something which he proposed to do at the report stage. I think his point has been noted by the Chair and by the officers present. Nevertheless, the ruling was made in good faith by the occupant of the chair at that time. Perhaps the hon. member would be good enough to drop the subject and proceed with his speech on third reading.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it perfectly clear that I am in no way critical of the hon. member who was Acting Speaker at that time, because he was the one who invited comments. I am complaining of hon. members of this House who failed, in my view, to live up to their duty and give him some assistance. That is the point.

The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) said, when speaking on this bill at the report stage, that in his opinion this is the most important piece of legislation the present parliament has so far considered. I agree. This legislation will have far reaching effects on the economic and social life of this country. I do not apologize for the time I shall take in dealing with it. Perhaps I will use my 40 minutes; perhaps I will not. I will do my best to cover the situation, and I apologize in advance if some of my remarks appear somewhat disjointed. As has been pointed out, this bill will have far reaching effects. It will be of concern to every part of the country and therefore deserves full and complete discussion.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) suggested that Canadians are concerned about foreign investment in Canada. I suppose he meets more people than I meet in his perambulations around the country. I think all members do a fair amount of travelling and talk to many people. I must say I have not noticed any burning concern across this country about foreign investment. Perhaps there is a burning concern in a certain select, elite group in Toronto, concentrated probably most heavily in the editorial rooms of the Toronto Star. I know that Hon. Walter Gordon has had certain ideas on this question for a long time. I suppose he is using his influence with the Toronto Star, and of course he has some influence. I suggest that the main thrust behind this legislation comes from there. Of course, the Toronto Star influences commentators, newscasters of the CBC, and others. The main news gathering and public opinion promoting facilities of the corporation are based in Toronto. That city is also the headquarters of the Canadian television network, of Maclean's magazine and of other great makers of Canadian public opinion. I suppose, as a result of cross-fertilization among these entities, there is now a strong pressure for controls over foreign investment in Canada.

We did not hear too much on this subject from that area when investment was needed to make it what it is now. People like Eddie Goodman of Cadillac Development Corporation—many call him Fast Eddie—support this type of legislation. Let me say that the system which allowed Fast Eddie to arrive where he is today could work well in other parts of the country. Mr. Goodman and his friends are not offering any of their profits for the development of, say, the Atlantic shelf, that is, for the development of energy in that region. I do not know how great a risk he and his friends would be prepared to take in investing profits, derived in large measure from the activities of people who have utilized money from outside Canada, in the development of that particular area.

I want to spend most of my time trying to relate this legislation to the energy field. As a member from Alberta, I am probably most acquainted with the relationship of this legislation to that particular field of endeavour. I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) so blatantly state the facts when referring to the problem of the great oil companies. However, it is important to note that the facts should be set out in a little different way.

I wish to refer to a story that appeared in the infamous newspaper the Toronto Star on November 14 under the heading "Imperial Oil tells employees its profits are not excessive". I quote:

In the current oil crisis, gasoline prices have been going up. Are the oil producers getting a larger share?

No, contends J. A. Armstrong, president of U.S.-controlled Imperial Oil Ltd.

Here's how he puts the company's position in a report to employees: "On the average the price Imperial receives for gasoline—the wholesale price at which the company sells it to the dealer, exclusive of federal and provincial taxes—has increased 21 per cent since 1948. In the same period . . . average weekly wages and salaries have increased by almost 400 per cent.

That does not sound like gouging.

"To put it another way. In 1948 the Canadian wage earner had to work 25 minutes to buy a gallon of gasoline. Today, he works eight minutes and today's gasoline is vastly superior to the product he bought in 1948."

Armstrong concedes that Imperial's profit has been increasing and has drawn some criticism. He mentions the high cost of exploration—$23 million spent by the industry during 30 years of exploration—

I question that. I think the reporter or typesetter left a zero off that figure. That should probably be an annual figure rather than the figure for 30 years. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I should have read a little further ahead.

—$23 million spent by the industry during 30 years of exploration in the Prairie provinces before discovery of the Leduc field in 1947 and $300 million risked in searching for oil on the Atlantic shelf since 1960.

We all know there has not been a find of commercial quality off the Atlantic shelf in that period.

"The Canadian oil industry made an after-tax profit in 1972 of 7.4 per cent on the money it used in its business. The after-tax profit in manufacturing generally that year was 7.3 per cent—essentially the same return in an industry that, by normal standards, is considered to face less risk."

Imperial last year had a profit of $151 million but, says Armstrong, these figures "tell nothing about the size of the investment on which it is based."

"A more meaningful way to look at a company's profit is in terms of how much it earned in total revenue. In 1972, Imperial's profit on each dollar was 7.3 per cent, which is just about the company's average of the past 25 years."

We have to realize that much capital is required in the resource industry. It is certainly a risky business, as I will attempt to show later. As indicated in Mr. Armstrong's statement, $300 million has been spent in the last 13 years off the east coast of Canada without a commercial find. We will not get people to put up that kind of money unless there is some hope for a better return if and when something is found. It is not the same as making widgets in Montreal because if that does not work, the company can go into something else. There is not the same risk over a long period of time.

Reference was made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North to other countries. He mentioned British Petroleum, a company in France and an Italian company. It should be pointed out that none of those companies were formed for operations within the territorial boundaries of those countries. British Petroleum was formed under the auspices of the late Sir Winston Churchill when he was First Lord of the Admiralty prior to World War I. He realized Britain needed a secure source of fuel for its navy. He felt it necessary to have a company in which the government had an interest in order to ensure national security. Since that time there has not been any operation by that company within the territorial limits of Great Britain, except possibly in the North Sea where a great number of companies are operating. The North Sea has certainly not been closed to foreign companies.

We now find more Canadian companies changing the emphasis of their exploration from Canada to the North Sea, yet the NDP say that we have a situation in Canada where there is no risk. They say there is no need to worry, you can drill anywhere and find anything you want. If that is so, why is interest being lost in Canadian operations? Why are exploration companies moving from Canada to the North Sea and the American Gulf coast? It is primarily because they do not know what the climate will be here. They do not know whether restrictions will be placed on future access to foreign money markets or whether the federal government will have policies to artificially keep the price down. They do not know whether there will be a change in the tax policy, the competition act or any number of things that are making the people engaged in that industry pull out their hair.

There is too much concern about the financial side. We have to look at the human side of the problem. After all, these Canadian companies employ Canadians, as do the foreign-controlled companies. Canada has developed a large body of scientifically trained personnel who are engaged in this industry. If the present situation continues much longer, we will lose them. The minister said yesterday that this legislation is necessary in order to get Canadians involved. I can say that in the energy industry we have an indigenous group of research people and highly qualified technicians who are liable to disappear if the policies of this government and its socialist friends are followed much longer.

I do not think members realize what the energy industry does for employment in this country. I wish to put some facts on the record. For every oil or gas well drilled, there are 16 people employed directly on the rig as well as two employees from a testing company, two employees of a logging company, two from a coring company, one welder, four camp caterers, two mud suppliers, two cementing company employees, two casing company employees, two bit supplier employees, three employees of the fuel dealer who supplies the fuel for the operations of the rig, three water haulers, eight employees of a trucking company, three rathole-conductor contractor employees and three lease construction employees. There are two surveyors as well as between 15 and 25 people employed in electrical, plumbing, hardware, rental, grocery, fishing and other occupations. For every oil drilling rig, between 70 and 80 people are employed.

I have listened to Eric Kierans. As far as he is concerned, the oil and gas industry does not employ anybody. It does not really deal with labour at all. Well, why is it that the unemployment rate in Alberta and Saskatchewan has been lower over the past number of years than in any other part of the country? Why is it difficult to find people to take jobs available in those areas if it is not because of the operations of the oil companies? In addition, the oil drilling industry is a totally Canadian industry. It is 95 per cent Canadian owned. Granted, it depends on two types of customers—oil companies which are not Canadian controlled, and oil companies which are. But this drilling industry, which employs a vast number of people, is 95 per cent Canadian owned and controlled. We do not always keep these things in mind. It seems to me we are sometimes so concerned about controlling foreign investment that we ignore some of the human consequences which may follow when some of these bureaucrats start fiddling around, as bureaucrats are apt to do, unsupervised by someone who has the interest of the whole country at heart.

The minister turned down every effort to get increased provincial participation in this area. He is convinced, it seems, that the job can be done just as well by some board which he intends to appoint in the interests of the whole country. I believe it is well known, however, that the interests of the whole country have not been well served up to the present time. This is why the party opposite me was turned down so resoundingly last year in every province but one. It is because hon. gentlemen opposite do not have a feeling for the whole country. They have a feeling for the triangle, Montreal-Toronto-Ottawa, and in this case I think it is Toronto which is calling the tune to which the government is dancing. I am not prepared to allow that type of interest to be injected into the national life of the country if I can possibly prevent it.

I should like to say something about the practical effects of this legislation. Here is a piece of legislation which will control every business and economic undertaking in the country right down to small businesses having $250,000 in assets and $3 million in turnover. Sometimes I think we become dazzled by figures. We must believe this is an awful lot of money and that these are large undertakings. I want to give hon. members an example of the kind of business these figures cover. I am thinking of the local Oldsmobile-Chevrolet-Cadillac dealership across from my office in the City of Drumheller. It employs a dozen people. It has assets of $150,000 and its turnover last year, in the second year of its operation under the present ownership, was $2 million. As things are going at present, it will not be long before its turnover exceeds $3 million in volume. Is it at all reasonable that a bunch of bureaucrats in Ottawa should be placed in the position of deciding whether or not it would be all right for someone from Montana to buy that business? What are we coming to when a government is so grasping that it wishes to exercise that kind of control?

I was about to mention that a rapeseed processing plant is presently proposed for the Town of Sexsmith in Alberta, a short distance from Grand Prairie. A report on this undertaking appears in the Albertan Business Report for November 13. I should like to quote from it:

> This sleepy northwestern Alberta village where the main industry now consists of six grain elevators employing six people is about to get a shot in the arm from a $10.3 million rapeseed processing plant.
> Sod for the plant, which will employ more than 60 people and have an annual pay roll of more than $450,000 will be turned shortly . . .
> Nora Holscher, Village Secretary-Treasurer, says more than half the employees will come from Sexsmith, which has a population of 622, and the rest from the City of Grand Prairie, 12 miles to the south. "The plant will be the lifeblood of the village", Mrs. Holscher said.

[Mr. Schumacher.]

The difficulty here is that money put up by Swedish and West German interests will finance the construction and operation of this new industry. What would happen if this development were proposed after the implementation of the legislation we are now discussing? There is a rapeseed crushing plant located in or close to the City of Montreal. Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that the bureaucrats would say it was of significant benefit to establish this new plant in Alberta when it might possibly have an adverse effect on employment in the City of Montreal? I wonder what the answer to that question would be.

I, for one, do not think it would be favourable to Alberta, especially in view of the fact that the minister wishes to retain political control over all these decisions. If he wishes to give us clear proof of his bona fides he would be advocating a screening office one step removed from his own office and not subject to his dictates. After all, he is going to appoint people who will do as he says. I think this screening board should be given a measure of independence and that there should be representation from all parts of the country among its members. As things are, perhaps there will be one member from the far west, one member from the Atlantic provinces and four or five from the centres of Ontario and Quebec, directing all the new investment which is to be allowed to flow into this country. I am not optimistic about how this thing will work, if it ever is allowed to work, which I hope will never be the case. As far as I am concerned, the minister has not shown his complete bona fides in the way he is handling the situation.

Mr. Caccia: What about saying something positive now?

Mr. Schumacher: Very well, I will say something positive. What this country needs is money to build. I would rather see Canadian money used before any other, but we will never develop this country completely by using our own financial resources. No other country has done so. The United States did not reach its present exalted position by building from within; it borrowed money extensively from Great Britain, France and other countries.

Mr. Caccia: Is that where you want to borrow?

Mr. Schumacher: If the hon. member can tell me of any country that has been built up entirely by using its own resources, then I would be glad to hear from him. Indeed, I hope he is going to participate in this debate. If there is one country, I suppose it might be Saudi Arabia. We have great resources in this country, as I think all members of the House will agree, but they do not magically fall from trees. You do not gather them up with a rake. You have to build buildings and dig holes. Incidentally, I would remind the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) that you do not dig for oil, you dig for coal. But he does not know too much about the industry.

The fact is that there is a lot of work to be done and it will take a lot of money. I completely agree we should use

Canadian money first, but when you have a coalition of socialists and semisocialists you are never going to have sufficient funds. All of the money will be wasted on grandiose, bureaucratic plans that take most of the thrust from the use of this money. The federal government itself is setting a bad example by paying higher and higher salaries. Look at our deputy ministers today. Certainly, they look after themselves very well. But you cannot have everything; you must have some sense of priority. If the federal government wastes money, then this sets a bad example to the provincial and municipal governments. They are just about as wasteful, but they have a good master to follow.

As I say, a lot of money will be required to develop this country. As Canadians, we should at least be given the same opportunity as foreigners to invest in our resources. This is what I have been requesting since I came here five years ago, but this bunch of so-called brains sitting on the treasury benches cannot seem to grasp the message that they should give Canadians a little bit of a break, or at least parity with foreigners, in the matter of investment. In this way you would be taking positive action. You say to Canadians: "We will give you a chance to invest in your country". But as long as we have something like the Benson tax bill that is going to take everything from our citizens or the great unemployment insurance rip-off, spawned by the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) and costing billions of dollars that could be better spent on developing the resources of this country, our citizens will never have sufficient investment funds.

Let me put on the record some figures that relate to the energy situation today. Over the next ten years, $1,000 billion will be required to be spent to find new sources of energy. The industry itself can put up about 60 per cent of that, or $600 billion. This leaves a shortfall of about $400 billion. What I am fearful of is that, far from having too much foreign investment in this country, we will soon be reaching the situation where we will not have enough money to develop our resources. In Canada alone during this period about $30 billion will be required. The industry will be able to supply between $20 billion to $25 billion from their own resources, though the amount can vary, of course, with government policy. This leaves a balance of $5 billion to $10 billion which must either be raised in Canada or brought to Canada from abroad in order to make sure that we have a secure supply of energy. Thank goodness the policies we have followed to date have provided a good source of energy supply. It is fortunate, as the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) pointed out, that federal government policies have ensured that this safe source of supply will be available to all Canadians. Nevertheless, we have to admit that shortsightedness is a human frailty which is found in all people, and I suppose in Canadians in particular.

I was disappointed to hear, in these days of shortage of supply, that when the province of Alberta offered to make sure that Canadian interests would be served first a spokesman for the province of Quebec said: "Well, if you insist on building a pipeline to supply us with the oil that we need, we might take it on the clear understanding that it is a two-way pipeline. Then, if circumstances change, we can send oil out west through this pipeline". I do not regard that as the type of statement that produces a great feeling of national unity in this country. I am happy, however, that the province from which I come has recognized its duty, as a partner in confederation, to ensure that Canadians from coast to coast will have oil and gas made available to them in this time of difficulty, even perhaps to the extent of damaging permanently the fields from which those resources come.

Whether or not the government is going to do anything along this line, we do not know. I have to admit that when such a proposal was first made in 1959 and 1961, the Conservative party was in office. Representatives of the Alberta petroleum industry came to Ottawa to see whether they would be permitted to supply their products to Montreal. At that time western oil was too expensive so the idea was dropped. Just four and a half years ago, in June of 1969, the offer was repeated, and again the door was slammed in the face of western oil interests. I think the offer was renewed in January of 1972, but a lack of interest was still shown. I hope that the opportunity will be given Albertans to assist their fellow citizens in this time of difficulty. However, the fact is that if we follow the line of thinking embodied in this bill we are not going to have sufficient known sources of supply in Canada, even though we know they are there. It seems that a number of people in the federal bureaucracy, the opinion makers in this country, think you can turn on oil and gas supplies the way you turn on the water faucet, but this is just not so. It takes a long time to discover reserves, and I am afraid that unless action is taken now to encourage exploration activity we will not have the known reserves required for the future.

At this time I should like to say something about the composition of the Canadian energy industry. This is a very technical and high risk industry requiring large amounts of risk capital. The industry is composed of over 600 different companies ranging in size from the major international companies with assets in the billions to one-man geological operations. In the past number of years there has been increasing development of Canadian-owned firms. This is really amazing when you consider the tax and other difficulties which have been placed in the way by this federal government. These small firms have been influential in generating a large body of expertise in all phases of this operation, but I am afraid this expertise will be lost as a result of the attitude of the present government. The development of this expertise has been inhibited to a large extent by our tax policies. Our policies do not encourage Canadian companies or individuals to carry out exploration for oil and gas in this country.

It is interesting to note that while we are happy to have our known reserves, we must recognize the fact that these are known reserves because the U.S. government has in its wisdom subsidized U.S. exploration to the extent of 90 per cent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Perhaps he could have more time.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I think you misunderstood me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I did not see any other hon. member rise to speak.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie).

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Speaker, I did not realize there was consent for me to continue.

An hon. Member: Oh, yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. Do I understand the House gives unanimous consent to the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: It is such a beautiful speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the hon. member rise on a point of order?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask whether the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) would entertain a question? I understand that the House has agreed to extend his time.

Mr. Schumacher: Sure, go ahead.

Mr. Nystrom: It is my understanding that the hon. member hopes this bill never comes into effect. I wonder if he would tell the House, in the few minutes left at his disposal, how he intends to vote; whether he will vote with the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), who thinks it does not go far enough, or with the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), who thinks it goes too far? We would all be interested in knowing how he will vote on third reading.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question, I think the hon. member will have to wait to see. There may never be a vote, one never knows.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: A Conservative filibuster.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for the opportunity to continue, and I undertake not to impose on their goodwill for too long. I am afraid I have not progressed very quickly, as I still have a lot of material I should like to put on the record, but perhaps I might just finish this phase of my discussion.

It seems that recently there has been an increasing development of small independent operations in the oil exploration field in western Canada. Perhaps it would be useful to again look at some of the figures when dealing with this matter. In 1972 there was a total of 325 dry wells drilled in Alberta, of which there were 66 drilled by major companies. In addition 11 producing wells were drilled. It is interesting to note that you do not get a producing well every time you put down a hole. During the same period of time, there were 259 dry wells drilled by independent oil companies, as well as 66 producers. Almost 81 per cent of the wells drilled in Alberta were drilled by small independent oil companies rather than by those major bogey-men my friends from Toronto seem to fear so much.

There was not the same degree of activity in Saskatchewan, but almost 92 per cent of the oil wells drilled there during the same period were drilled by small Canadian independent companies. The situation in British Columbia was somewhat different. The major companies seemed to have more confidence in the new government there, with the result that only 39.1 per cent of the wells drilled during that period were drilled by independent companies. At the same time all the wells drilled in Manitoba were drilled by independent companies. In total activity, 81.9 per cent of wells drilled in 1972 were drilled by small companies.

Considering the number of wells drilled one must realize that a great deal of money is required to carry out this activity. I am happy to see that Canadian companies are taking part to such a great extent in this activity, but I remind hon. members that they depend for their lifeblood on sources of funds outside Canada. These companies cannot operate without access to foreign investment. We must bear in mind that the financial communities of Montreal and Toronto are not free and easy with the money they control. An example of this is the fact that the premiers of various provinces, notably socialist premiers such as Premiers Barrett, Blakeney and Schreyer, immediately upon being elected ran off to New York, Switzerland and London for money. If there is so much money at such favourable terms in Canada why are these premiers not tapping this source? I know that members of the NDP will say that this is debt money rather than equity, but the fact is that the companies to which I have referred require debt money as well. That is the type of money we need in order to keep the cost of Canadian money competitive. There must be free access to foreign investment because Canadian investors have not shown any great ability to handle the job.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, a review of the progress of social, political, and economic thought since ancient times shows that interventionism evolves in spirals. This is the point I wish to deal with because I think that Bill C-132 relates to some kind of state intervention in very important areas.

We must accept this process not because we lack defensive means but because of our realism and understanding of the domestic and external economic and political environment of this country. If I were to give a name to this century, from an economic point of view, I would call it the "century of interventionism".

Interventionism is beneficial where it is well adapted. It is not surprising then to see states with the most liberal socio-economic ideas recognizing the principle of intervention and applying it in key areas of their society.

● (1720)

This is not the place to promote this principle but we should sensitize our leaders to this increasingly serious phenomenon in order to make everyone realize that this is not a magic panacea but rather a liberal principle that we should, in my opinion, not relinquish but modernize and adjust.

In liberal societies like ours, the intervention of governments is essential to regulate our activities. We must re-instate through government legislation the essential activities that will then become ordinary and timely.

The subject matter is very interesting and I could say, Mr. Speaker, that the present and former leaders of the government have implemented in the last years several interventionist plans in some very important fields. I could mention hospital insurance, the Canada Assistance Plan, unemployment insurance, family allowances, old age security, regional development incentives, social security, under which 50 per cent of all social security in Canada is paid by the federal government to the blind, the needy, the widows, the disabled, the welfare services and so on. Then the government intervenes in the areas essential to the quality of Canadian life.

Bill C-132 is merely intended to protect the high interests of the country and also to check in a certain way the economic problems caused by international operations.

Before dealing with the bill it could be useful to speak about the whole economic situation. Canada is a young country, a developing country, one of the largest territories in the world whose population is spread over 10 territorial entities and concentrated mostly in large centres.

Thus, the Canadian mosaic is characterized by population, geography, culture and economic voids. Political efforts consist, consequently, in rectifying the existing lack of balance between regions, areas, cities and urban centres, and also between fisheries and agriculture, between commerce and services, between communications and cultural laws governing the life style of Canadians.

The primary effort, I believe, should bear at first on the elimination of obstacles to development, while preparing welcoming structures to be used as solid foundations to the construction of a strong and united Canada.

The economic philosophy of the country and the noble nationalistic worries have left, in previous years, a free field to foreign societies and to capable businessmen, so that they were able to mold the Canadian economy in accordance with their own criteria.

As a matter of fact, during this stage of national construction and cultural harmonizing, Canadian leaders noticed that Canada's resources had passed into foreign hands, meaning that these resources were not used directly for Canadian needs, but in the interest of foreign countries.

Thus, Canada has become a raw material supplier, in the same way, maybe, as a few underdeveloped countries, which constitute a group of poor countries in front of the group of industrialized countries. The consequences of this situation on the Canadian economy are easy to forecast. Power no longer belongs to Canadians, but to those who own vital and economic interests, which causes a shift of the economic and political power.

Second, we have an economy sensitive to any socio-political change, hence the loss for all Canadians of the control over their social and economic destiny.

Third, the bridle of the Canadian economy is in the hands of foreigners and runs through the pulleys of foreign metropolises. I am talking here about multinational corporations.

In such a situation the effects of any economic chaos are easily felt because that close dependence ties us to economies enjoying far greater production and consumption capacities.

Fourth, the fact that Canadian products are destined to serve foreign interests results in a lack of jobs for Canadians. That is because those resources are channeled through a processing method without the Canadian economy, something which benefits in various respects to outside economies both in terms of employment, income, and market.

Fifth, that processing of resources moved outside our territory results in our infrastructure being incomplete and stopping at the limit of our frontiers.

The problems resulting from previous situations have the main effect of deteriorating exchange rates. Canada, a country rich in raw materials has to produce more, invest more, work more, and use more machinery to end up receiving in return the same service or the same machinery that cost increasingly more.

I could go on adding to that list, Mr. Speaker, but I think that the problem is well understood by the average Canadian citizen. We must now concentrate our priorities on curbing a situation unfair to Canadian interests.

This bill is undoubtedly a step in the right direction. It ensures a flexible Canadian attitude that I find wise and reasonable.

[English]

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, during this debate on third reading of this bill, we again are discussing the problem of foreign ownership of our economy and national life. It is too bad that, in respect of this bill, the minister did not see fit to accept some amendments, particularly the amendments dealing with the input the provincial governments should have with regard to the decision-making process of this tribunal which is being established. Without this possibility of the provincial governments having some input, the way the bill is set up makes it possible they would not even know that a takeover problem existed or that a company was being formed or being taken over until after the event. So, after listening to considerable debate, I am more than ever of the opinion that the effect of this legislation will not be what was intended because of its substantial deficiencies.

● (1730)

The first defect is that Canada should have expanded its approach to sector control of the economy, something which has already started in certain areas. But this legislation does not deal with that. In the beginning, I was of the opinion that there were certain significant areas of our economy that should have been protected from foreign ownership. We are involved in communications, yet sometimes when I listen to the CBC I wonder if it was worthwhile trying to protect that part of the economy from outside influences.

There were other areas, and I mention one, uranium. But it should be remembered that uranium is found in vast quantities around the world. We must also remind ouselves, when we are thinking of these things, that we have substantial stakes in other parts of the world. We have a large Canadian aluminum industry, and according to the papers the other day a survey indicates that the aluminum industry will probably grow much more rapidly than any other metal industry. But where does most of the raw material for that industry come from, Mr. Speaker? It comes from outside Canada. Would we be so happy if people in other countries insisted on that raw material being processed there before being exported?

But having decided on what I would call this second best course of controlling foreign investment, basically we are falling back on a tribunal of civil servants who will impose their will on each and every business, with the sanction of the cabinet. What more autocratic or more bureacratic decision making process could there be to decide on whether the person who wants to buy the corner store or the little gravel hauling industry is entitled to do so?

These civil servants live in Ottawa. One of the great failings of people who live in this atmosphere in the centre of the country is that they grow insensitive to the surrounding regions with which they are not familiar. This is a very understandable human trait. We all share it. But in a country like Canada civil servants living in Ottawa take the country to include an area 100 miles around Ottawa. They are conscious of the strong influences of Quebec and Ontario. As a result, I think the rest of the provinces are in for a pretty rough time at the hands of this tribunal. Perhaps we would have been more fortunate if we had had our national capital in Prince Edward Island, a small province, where it would not be subjected to such great pressures, from the larger provinces, economically and politically. But this is an idea I would not want to discuss at great length with P.E.I. members.

There has always been a large degree of foreign ownership of our economy. This has been due to the fact that we have wanted a high standard of living, and we failed to invest in our own country to the extent required. I suggest we have failed, not because we have not wanted to develop our country, but because we have not had the investment money to do so. Without foreign investment, we would be without jobs for our rapidly growing labour force. We must remember that each time we complain about high unemployment, the answer we get from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) is that Canada has the most rapidly growing labour force in the world. Without foreign investment, it would be impossible for us to give our people the high standard of living they demand. All of us want to live as well as the Americans, as well as the Europeans, and through our social services we are making a strong effort to do so. But it is interesting to note that the Americans, with whom we compare ourselves and who have a somewhat similar economy, have not developed the welfare state concept to the extent that we have, although their economy is considerably richer and more mature than ours and basically they could afford a much higher welfare state than we can afford.

Because oil and gas are so important at this period in our national life we should take a look at investment in this industry. We may not like the American companies, just as the NDP do not like them. We may be anti-American. We may deplore the fact that they are here. But, let us face it, without the American oil companies most of Canada would be pretty cold today, including B.C. and Ontario, because no oil of any consequence was found in western Canada before 1954 when the Leduc field was opened. I can remember my family living on a farm in which they invested $1,300 back in 1937, at a time when that was a lot of money, and all they got out of the Alberta oil fields was a little bit of paper. In the main the American investors drilled the holes. Those who tell the story of the finding of Leduc in 1954 can recount how the premier of Alberta at that time brought certain people down to Montreal and Toronto to see if eastern financiers were interested in investing in oil. The answer he got was, "So what? You have a hole in the ground with a little oil in it. We are not interested in investing in that." It is fair to say that probably they did not have enough money. They had other things in which to invest.

As a result the Americans took over the oil industry to a large extent, mainly because of their investing habits. It was not a question of the large oil companies in the beginning. Many small American individuals, the professional people, the lawyers and doctors, people who were willing to put $1,000, $5,000 or $10,000 into betting on a hole in the ground. It was just like betting at a race track. They were the ones who originally opened up the oil fields. And what did the American government do? It allowed these people to write off their investments against their personal income tax. Even yet, in the three western provinces where intensive drilling is carried on, most of it is done by small independent companies financed by similar types of American investors. It is only in the Arctic islands that the large oil companies are actually involved in drilling. After the holes are drilled, then the large oil companies take over.

● (1740)

In 1948 or 1949 a group of people in my town wanted me to join with them in an enterprise in which each put in a couple of thousand dollars to form a small oil company. In those days it took $10,000 to drill a hole in the Lloydminster area. I did not get any results, so I suspended the operation. A year later I asked one individual if he was still involved in the Lloydminster oilfield. He replied that the federal government had changed the tax law so he could not now deduct his losses from his income tax, and he was not going to risk his money any further. It took 20 years for amendments to be made to the income tax law to provide that losses could be written off, and even then there was a maximum of $1,000 a year. So if you lost $5,000 it would take five years to write it off. Mr. Speaker, with inflation the way it is you should be able to write it off in six months if the amendment is to be of any value. This action by the federal government, however, does not seem to have been any inducement for investment in the small oilwells.

Some people have said that the Maritimes and Montreal do not have any oil because of the Ottawa line. Perhaps the people in Ontario have paid slightly more to assure themselves of a supply of oil, but without this they would be pretty cold this winter. Until recently the attitude of the Americans has been that they did not want our oil, but after the Suez crisis in 1967 they saw Canada as a secure source of supply. For years the Venezuelans demanded that the Americans take a certain amount of oil from them but the Americans refused although at that time oil was a dime a barrel all over the world. One cannot help thinking that they would have been no worse off if they had dealt with the Venezuelans instead of the Canadians.

The Globe and Mail today carries a report to the effect that Mr. Bourassa is not enthusiastic about a pipeline to Montreal. He wants it if necessary apparently, but wants the federal government to pay for it. He also wants the federal government to pay for the oil that is transported through the line. According to the article he wants to continue to rely on offshore oil for the factories and refineries that he hopes to build in Quebec. I think this indicates the feeling that we will eventually return to normal conditions.

It has been said in this House by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) that we will have to hold the line on gas and oil prices, and that after the end of January he will bring down the government unless this is done. I do not know how this fits in with the fact that Westcoast Transmission in British Columbia, encouraged by the B.C. Energy Commission, has raised the price of natural gas by 81 per cent. This fact was admitted by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) in answer to a question I put to him a couple of days ago.

A report was carried on the radio last weekend to the effect that Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan told the New Democratic Party convention there that the dwindling oil reserves in that province would last for about 16 years, but he added that if no exports were allowed the supply would last for 50 years. Does this mean that he intends to keep the oil at home, Mr. Speaker? Where would we be if we all adopted this attitude, that our resources must be kept within our provincial borders and not sold on the open markets of the country. There seems to be a great deal of inconsistency within the New Democratic Party.

If we deplore the foreign investment in our country, we should realize that there are many countries in a similar situation. In the last century the United States was largely financed by British capital. It is always stated that capital in the form of loans and bonds is better than capital in direct investment because of the possible conflict of interest between decisions made in local head offices and decisions made in corporate head offices outside Canada. I think this theory is greatly overrated because, although it is often indicated that decisions by parent companies outside Canada are not good for Canada, very little evidence of this has been produced that I have seen.

When this bill was in committee, the management of a small oil company with 28,000 U.S. shareholders was asked what influence the shareholders had on company policy. The management of this company was Canadian I might add. The answer given was that there was no evidence of influence, that all the shareholders wanted was a reasonable return on their money. They wanted some profit and the only time they were likely to interfere was if they did not get it.

There seems to be substantial evidence that we are buying back control of our economy. So long as the shares of large companies are traded freely on the stock exchanges, Canadian investors will be able to buy these companies back. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that many Canadians are not greatly interested in this. In effect, so-called Canadian ownership will depend largely on whether Canadians as a whole are interested in saving for this possibility. These savings in the final analysis are a matter of individual preference.

We have only to study the effect of the new Canada Pension Plan, which has a new cost of living clause built into it, to realize that for many Canadians in the lower income brackets it is almost foolhardy to have any personal savings. With complete medicine, hospital and nursing care for our citizens over 65 years of age, and with old age pensions and escalating Canada Pension Plan benefits, there is no need for the lower income Canadian to suffer. He may, of course, want to buy some article that will be helpful or gratifying in his daily life but in fact with the old age pension and the Canada Pension Plan available to him, the average individual could not save as much money as would give him a comparable annuity in his old age. Considering present inflation rates, why would any person want to save, say up to $500 per year, especially as the return on the money would be so small as to make the saving hardly worthwhile. I am reminded of the person who took an airplane trip to Hawaii; he said that at least the income tax man cannot take away that experience.

There is substantial evidence that investment money, at least from the United States, will recede in the immediate future. Passage of the American DISC program, the fact that there is a distinct possibility that Canadian provinces and municipalities may be shut out from the New York market, the surcharges of a year or so ago and changes in the investment picture all point to the fact that the Americans want their capital to come home. We had the funny experience of seeing Canadian unions trying to show their American counterparts the folly of supporting the Burke-Hartke bill presently before Congress.

The other day the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) was complaining that American auto companies had not invested enough money in auto plants on the Canadian side of the border. We are now witnessing the fact that at a time when the demand for oil and gas is at its height and we are running short of supplies, drilling is decreasing in the western provinces. It has decreased in B.C. and Saskatchewan. Last week, Winnipeg newspapers reported that Canadian expertise is flooding over into Montana. Apparently Canadian experts are active in all the oil fields of the world. Significantly, an analyst in a Montreal newspaper said the other day that if you want to invest in oils, invest in Canadian companies which are active outside Canada; do not invest in a company whose main drilling rights are in Canada, because we do not know what their future will be.

Two or three years ago we passed legislation in this House aimed at controlling the manufacture of drugs in this country, in the interest of lower drug prices. That legislation wiped out their patent protection. It may have lowered drug prices. That is difficult to say. We are paying for that lack of protection in other ways. New drugs are being mentioned in the medical literature of the United States, of western Europe and of England. Those drugs do not seem to be available in Canada. I think, without any doubt, the drug legislation, which may have lowered drugs costs, has also discouraged the introduction of new drugs into Canada. The drug industry shows what foreign investment can do. Expertise in drugs is not confined to one country. Knowledge about drugs stretches beyond the borders of the United States, beyond the borders of western Europe, and extends to the communist world as well.

Turning to the instrument by which this government hopes to control foreign investment, its obvious weakness is its autocracy. Businesses will be controlled down to the value of $250,000. That means that a great many businesses will need to be screened, and often the seller will not know who the buyer is to be. In effect, this provision means that any business with three or more employees will have to be screened. I can see that the small businessmen will undergo considerable strain in trying to find out whether or not a buyer will come under the definition of foreign owner. I submit that the seller often will not know.

Let me refer to an article carried in the Globe and Mail of November 20, 1973, entitled, "Proposed investment review act comes under strong criticism." The investment review bill was strongly criticized by a former official of the department. The article reads in part:

> The proposed federal Foreign Investment Review Act has come in for some strong criticism at the University of Toronto Faculty of Administrative Studies Issues at Interface Seminar.
> Andrew Kniewasser, president of the Investment Dealers Association of Canada, said the difficulty with such legislation arises from the fact that 'its real effect will turn largely on the administrative performance of the agency.'
>
> The act provided for creation of a review board reporting to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce with power to prohibit takeovers unless they are found to be of 'significant benefit to Canada.'
> Mr. Kniewasser, a former deputy minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said:
> 'I doubt very much if it would have been possible to limit administrative discretion by putting more criteria in the bill.'

In other words, the weakness of the bill is this: how are you to decide the criteria on which decisions should be based? You might as well toss a coin. You are as likely to be right as wrong.

The article continues:

> Canada is still regarded by foreign investors as an interesting place to commit funds, with first rate economic propects and a rather moderate degree of government red tape . . .

If this bill passes, that may no longer be so. Mr. Kniewasser then said:

> If the administration of the Foreign Investment Review Act does become restrictive or cumbersome or if it should lead to serious confrontations and additional uncertainties between the Government of Canada and the provincial governments, we would quickly be in trouble.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Six o'clock.

Mr. Gillespie: Question.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if someone on the government side of the House, perhaps even the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) who is talking to someone on the government side, will tell us what we shall be doing tomorrow.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I was just trying to get confirmation of that from the government. Word has been passed, through the page boys, that we may take the wiretapping bill. That is all I know.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

NEWSPRINT SHORTAGE—PROPOSED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek unanimous consent under Standing Order 43 to present a motion of urgent and pressing necessity to my own constituency and, I am sure, to many other constituencies throughout Canada. In view of the fact that newsprint shortages are seriously jeopardizing the existence of many of the smaller newspapers in the country and as these newspapers often present the only alternative to large newspaper monopolies, I ask leave of the House to move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) the following motion:

That the question of newsprint shortage in Canada be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs forthwith for immediate consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion requires the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS, JAMES BAY INDIANS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek the consent of the House to move a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 in a case of urgent and pressing necessity. The decision rendered by an appeal court in the province of Quebec setting aside the injunction obtained by the Indian people with respect to the James Bay project has effectively removed the leverage that the Indian people had in any negotiations and has created a situation where there is now no compulsion on the James Bay Development Corporation or the province of Quebec to negotiate in good faith or to attempt to come to a fair settlement with the Indian people.

I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House instruct the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to lend every assistance possible to the Indian people in the province of Quebec in order that the negotiations relating to the James Bay project will result in a recognition of the aboriginal rights of the Indian people and bring for them a respect for their way of life and the fullest measure of benefits.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

JOB VACANCIES AND UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE RATES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43 to seek leave to move a motion. In view of the way small businesses in metro urban areas are having difficulty getting help at rates of $2.50 and $3 per hour, in view of the reported high job vacancy rate and in view of the way the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) has announced an increase in unemployment insurance rates, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That this matter be referred to the Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

TAKING ON OF BUNKER OIL BY AMERICAN SHIP AT VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Paddy Neale (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of the present oil shortage and in view of the fact it has been reliably reported to me that a ship of American registry, the Alaskan Mail, was smuggled into the port of Vancouver last weekend, took on 313,000 gallons of bunker oil, and then left the harbour without loading or unloading any cargo and without paying any wharfage fees, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport to conduct an immediate investigation as to the facts of this situation with a view to putting a stop to this practice and to determine who is responsible for the virtual blackout of information regarding the coming and going of the Alaskan Mail.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put. Introduction of bills.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LEWIS—MAKING OF STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON BROADCAST MEDIA RATHER THAN IN HOUSE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which affects this parliament and every member of the House. I appreciate that I did not give Your Honour notice, but I could not until now. This is the first opportunity of raising the matter.

As everyone in the House knows, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is scheduled to make a statement of some sort, so we are informed, on energy policies this evening at 9:30 over the media of this country. I waited during the period of motions to see whether the Prime Minister would rise to make a statement to the House with regard to anything he intends to announce at 9:30 this evening.

The Prime Minister has often been accused of disregarding parliament. I can think of no more basic example of that disregard of parliament than the Prime Minister is showing today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: I remind the Prime Minister, and I suggest this is a most legitimate point of privilege, that we do not yet have a presidency in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: The Prime Minister does not have to imitate President Nixon in every respect. At least, Mr. Speaker, we are sure of getting the tapes of the broadcast.

I suggest to Your Honour that if there is going to be a statement regarding energy policy of any sort it ought to be made in the House first. It seems to me that the Prime Minister is showing not only disregard for parliament but a lack of courage to face the members of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Neale.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: It is obvious to every member of the House as well as to every Canadian that the energy problem is one of the most serious facing this country not only this winter but for years to come. It is the duty of parliament, not only the government, to decide on the policies to be pursued. The Prime Minister has no right to disregard parliament and go on the air at his convenience. I suggest this is not only disregard of parliament in the technical sense but it is an abrogation of his responsibility to parliament and to the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult for me to understand the strong language used by the leader of the New Democratic Party and these various catcalls which are arising from the Conservative party in his support when we are merely dealing with a statement I might be making tonight which might have nothing to do with the kind of fear the hon. gentleman has just been expressing.

The assumption is that I am going to make some major policy announcement to the nation tonight on the media. If that assumption were correct, perhaps the question of privilege might have some basis. Perhaps tomorrow the leader of the New Democratic Party might have some cause to raise a question of privilege if, in fact, the hypothesis under which he is working fulfils itself tonight. But I went out of my way to indicate to those members of the press who caught me before I entered the chamber that this was not to be a policy statement, that I was merely going before the nation in order to explain the situation with regard to energy in Canada, the measures the government has taken and the explanations we have for those measures. I do not intend to make any major announcements but I do intend to clarify a lot of the muddled thinking which has its residence on the other side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ENERGY

NATURE OF STATEMENT TO BE MADE BY PRIME MINISTER OVER BROADCAST MEDIA TONIGHT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Without getting involved in any controversy about whose thinking is muddled and without, I hope, offending the Prime Minister in any way by pursuing this matter, may I ask him whether he intends to outline any policy or plan that has not been previously announced in the House when he speaks to the nation tonight?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am afraid the Leader of the Opposition will have to wait until he hears my statement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I express the hope that the Prime Minister will live up to the traditions of the House and of his office and present to parliament any statement of policy which is being made for the first time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South. Order, please. If the hon. Leader of the Opposition is rising to ask a supplementary he will, of course, be recognized for that purpose, and then the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Stanfield: I was proceeding to the supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I was simply expressing my confidence in the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether he has any new information with reference to supplies of petroleum from overseas and the kind of shortages we may expect this winter. Does he intend to give any such information to the country tonight and, if so, will he advise the House as to this information this afternoon?

Mr. Trudeau: I have no information to give beyond that which has already been conveyed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or other members of the government. If, indeed, I have such information which comes to me before tonight—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, surely there can be no objection to my answering that very question by the leader of the catcallers on the other side. Do they want me to answer the question or not?

• (1420)

Mr. Stanfield: I hope the Prime Minister will appreciate that I am trying to be very polite and courteous to him, despite his provocations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether it is his intention to give the Canadian people tonight any information as to what may be the effect of the energy crisis generally on the Canadian outlook with respect to international trade and, if so, whether he proposes to provide that information to the House also?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think my answer can only be in general terms. I intend tonight to explain the situation in the energy field to the Canadian people. I do not intend to convey to them any major, shattering, new announcement. I cannot interpret the possible feelings of opposition members after they have heard my speech tonight. If tomorrow they think I have done something that is unparliamentary, I will be prepared to answer for it. In the meantime, I think they will have to realize that once in a while the Prime Minister of the nation can talk to the Canadian people—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: —about subjects which are of great concern to the people from coast to coast. In view of my respect for parliament I will do my best not to introduce into my speech tonight anything that might be considered by the opposition as a major announcement which would have been better made to the House of Commons. I repeat, I hope that they and all Canadians will be listening to the speech tonight, and if their fears of today are justified I will be prepared to answer to the House tomorrow.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to suggest to the Prime Minister that muddled action is worse than muddled thinking.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South was recognized a moment ago on a question of privilege at which time he made certain suggestions. The hon. member is recognized during the question period for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. Lewis: Personally, Mr. Speaker, I am no more impressed by the catcalls of the Liberals than I am by the catcalls of the Conservatives. For one thing, they are the same. I noted that the Prime Minister in his answers emphasized that he would not be making any major or earth-shattering announcement of policy this evening. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether that means that there will be some policies announced which have not yet been announced in parliament? If not, are we to take it that he is merely going to give a little story to the people of Canada to justify the inaction of the government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question asked in those terms is clearly out of order.

Does the hon. member for Témiscamingue wish to ask a supplementary?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the hon. member for York South.

Oral Questions

PETROLEUM—RESULT OF DISCUSSIONS BY MINISTER WITH ALBERTA GOVERNMENT—INTENTION RESPECTING LIFTING OF PRICE FREEZE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I turn to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on a supplementary. Will he inform the House briefly as to the results of his discussions in Alberta, and indicate particularly whether it is still his intention to lift the price freeze on January 31 permitting prices of petroleum and petroleum products to go up as of February 1?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity of meeting with the Alberta Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. We had a discussion about the consultative process, in the course of which it was agreed that with the rapid movement of events consultation in both directions had not been as effective as it could be. We have agreed upon a procedure to make it more effective in the future. I am pleased to say that the minister will be participating in the federal-provincial meeting tomorrow, and I expect to meet him at a bilateral meeting later the same day.

Mr. Baldwin: How did you get your foot out of your mouth long enough to say that?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister to answer the second part of my question, whether it is still his policy and the policy of the government to lift the price freeze on January 31 and permit prices of petroleum and petroleum products to go up to the import price at Montreal as stated earlier?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there have been suggestions from a number of quarters as to the appropriate manner of indexing the Montreal price, and we are studying these. In general terms, however, it remains my view that the international market mechanism should determine the Canadian basic price.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Témiscamingue and then return to supplementary questions on this subject.

POSSIBLE CONSTRUCTION OF HEAVY WATER PLANT AT GENTILLY

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

We have learned that a heavy water plant will be built in Gentilly. Have the department or the government finalized the decision to build a heavy water plant in Gentilly?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have not finalized our decision in this matter. We have established that another heavy water plant is needed, but some conditions must still be determined before we can make the final decision.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Since the government has already spent considerable sums in the Montmagny area, is the minister also studying the possibility of building a heavy water plant in Montmagny?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of these expenditures in the Montmagny area. Perhaps I could investigate this matter, but that remains to be seen.

OIL—NATURE OF RESTRICTION BY ARAB STATES ON SHIPMENTS TO CANADA—REASON THEREFOR

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether there has been any information available to the government concerning the embargo on oil which has been imposed in respect of shipment to various countries by the Arab states? I mention particularly the United States, to which reference was made yesterday by Secretary of State, Dr. Kissinger and also by Mr. Porter, the Under Secretary of State. Has that embargo by the Arab states been applied in any way to Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, beyond what I said a few days ago in answer to a similar question I have no new news. Perhaps the answer might be supplemented by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, if he has anything to add.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, at the moment we have had no further indication of the intentions of the various states in this regard except that at least two of the principal exporting states have indicated their refusal to export to Canada by way of the Portland pipeline. Other shipments are being allowed to come to Canada, although there is an indication there will be a reduction in the over-all supply to the world community, a reduction in which we would share.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, will the minister say which Arab states have applied an embargo against Canada, and is the reason for that embargo that which applies to Holland, the United States and the other countries that have been placed in that position because of their suspected support of Israel?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I can say that the position taken by the Arab countries with regard to Canada is different from that taken with regard to Holland and the United States. The position taken with regard to the Portland pipeline is due, of course, to the fact that it is a destination in the United States and the Arab embargo applies to any shipments to that country, whether for consumption there or in transit. The basic position taken with regard to Canada is that we are not in the same category. Shipments will be made to Canadian ports such as Halifax, Saint John or Montreal, but there will be an over-all reduction in production and we will share in that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it clear that so far as the Arab states are concerned the minister has been in touch with them and there will be no reduction in the amount of oil exported to Canada?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, Mr. Speaker, there will be a reduction, as there will be to the world community generally.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But other than that?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): My present information is that there is no total embargo on Canada as there is on the United States.

PETROLEUM—TANKER TRANSPORTATION FROM VANCOUVER TO EASTERN CANADA—PROPOSED PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT PREFERENCE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. Everyone in Canada is concerned about the cost of crude petroleum and its by-products to the consumers and security of supply. Will the Prime Minister state clearly at this time whether it is the policy of his government to prefer the tanker route transportation of crude petroleum from Vancouver through the Panama Canal rather than the installation of an additional pipeline because the problem is not one of supply at the present time in Canada but one of transportation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the two courses have different time spans. The tanker route at this time is meant to try to meet shortages in eastern Canada; the pipeline to Montreal will only be operable in perhaps a couple of years time.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to follow that up with another question, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister said that another two years will elapse before the pipeline is ready. Will he categorically and unequivocally make it clear that the policy of the government now is to go ahead with the project and either motivate industry or find funds in another way to ensure that construction of the pipeline is started at this time?

Mr. Trudeau: I did indicate on September 4, indeed, before the Middle East crisis broke out, that our intention was to seek ways of having this pipeline to ensure security of supply in eastern Canada. Concrete measures to that effect will be announced in the usual way in the House of Commons by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

An hon. Member: Several years too late.

PRICE OF CANADIAN CRUDE OIL AFTER EXPIRATION OF PRESENT PRICE FREEZE—POSSIBILITY OF STATEMENT AND LEGISLATION FOLLOWING MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In the course of discussions he has been having in recent days with representatives of the government of Alberta, did he reach an understanding with them that the price of Canadian crude oil will be raised by $1.50 a barrel after January 31 when the present price freeze expires?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): We have reached no agreement with the government of Alberta on the matter of the crude oil price in the next year. That is one of the questions I would expect to be discussing when we meet tomorrow.

Mr. Douglas: In light of the minister's reply that these matters will be discussed at the meeting which begins tomorrow of energy ministers from across Canada, may I ask the minister if, following that conference, he intends to make a statement to the House on Monday and does he intend at that time or soon thereafter to introduce legislation enunciating the government's oil policy?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think I have already indicated to the House that I will be making a statement on Monday with regard to the emergency interruption of supply situation, and that would comprise any legislative measures that the government thinks, appropriate to deal with that situation. I cannot be certain that the statement will also cover the question of the long-term reconstruction of the Canadian oil market.

GOVERNMENT INTENTION RESPECTING POSSIBLE HEAVY WATER PLANT IN MANITOBA

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the minister's answer to the hon. member for Témiscamingue that no definitive decision has been made regarding the construction of a heavy water plant in Quebec, can the minister inform the House whether a decision has been made concerning the construction of a heavy water plant in Manitoba and what is the projected construction date?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the decision with regard to heavy water plant policy will be announced as a whole and will clearly cover the situation in western Canada as well.

Mr. Epp: My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Defence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: May I ask the minister whether he has a statement to make on whether Manitoba will be the site of a future heavy water plant or, if not, a statement as to his resignation from the cabinet?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that a question asked of a minister other than in his ministerial capacity is out of order.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT POLICY—POSITION OF PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY GAS PIPELINE—TANKER SITUATION ON WEST COAST

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of his statement in Calgary that rapidly changing events in the international energy scene have prompted some rethinking of former federal positions and views on energy matters, will the government be scrapping last week's energy policy and, if so, when will they be giving us the features of the new policy?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think I have dealt with this very adequately in the presence of the hon. gentleman in the committee last week.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bawden: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member resume his seat for a moment. I will recognize him on a supplementary. Hon. members know that there are quite a few members seeking the floor for supplementaries on this subject. Perhaps we should give some thought soon to turning to another subject. For the moment I see the hon. member for Calgary South.

Mr. Bawden: I think the minister owes it to the House to answer questions for hon. members. I should like to ask him if he would reconsider and perhaps answer the question.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I set out the position of the government as recently as last Wednesday, I believe, in the standing committee.

Mr. Bawden: That is a week old.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. gentleman may not have understood, but that will come as no surprise.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Later:]

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister will answer this question. I asked a sensible question which is of interest to the country. I hope he will not again take the opportunity to preface each answer with an insult. In view of the minister's further statement in Calgary that recent events have opened up—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member can ask the question directly without bringing in statements made outside the House. He is recognized for that purpose.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister what fresh areas of discussion have been opened up with the United States? Is the Mackenzie Valley gas pipeline now dead, and will the minister state what the tanker situation is on the west coast? Are we beginning to fight or is the fight over?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the position of the United States, we are anticipating an early meeting at the official level to follow on the meetings with Governor Love when he was in Canada earlier in the autumn. With regard to the tanker question, my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, has, I think, dealt adequately with this in the House in past answers.

[Mr. Speaker.]

POSSIBILITY OF CONSTRUCTION OF NUCLEAR REACTOR IN MANITOBA

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all the applause is on your behalf, not mine.

Some hon. Members: So are we.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Through you, Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Nielsen: Call him on the phone.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): My question is whether or not the Manitoba provincial government has approached the federal government or the office of the minister indicating that there is a possibility—er—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I am so used to watching the opposition I am getting into the same habit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I wish to ask the minister whether an approach has been made by the provincial government of Manitoba indicating that they are prepared to implement the construction of a nuclear generator plant in Manitoba?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, Manitoba officials and the Manitoba minister have indicated their interest in the possibility of a Candu reactor for that province but not until quite a bit later in this decade.

GRAIN

LACK OF RAILWAY BOXCARS FOR MOVEMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I change the topic to another crisis that occurs almost yearly. I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact the Canadian Wheat Board is experiencing extreme difficulty in meeting delivery requirements and has to resort to shuffling contracts and orders because of the failure again of the railroads to provide sufficient boxcars for grain movement, what action has the minister taken to require the railroads to provide increased rolling stock and locomotive power immediately for the movement of grain?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, hon. members know that the railways face a problem in respect of allocating cars in a booming economy with demands at higher than usual levels in almost every area. The railways have come very close to the level of unloading they had anticipated, and we are looking with them at the question of whether they can indeed bring more boxcars into service. There are, of course, some cars which are available but need repairs. This might be expedited. We are looking at other means of trying to improve the situation. It is, of course, a fact that in a peak economy like this one can expect a certain stretching of the rail services just as one can the availability of steel and almost every other product.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the minister gave that kind of answer which leads to the next question. In view of the fact that terminals in Vancouver are less than half full and those at Thunder Bay have only about 30 million bushels of grain in store when their working capacity is double that, can the minister advise whether it is correct that over recent weeks the railways have had fewer cars in grain movement than they did several months ago or at the same time last year?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I believe it is correct to say there are fewer cars in the movement of grain at this particular point in time than there were a year ago because a year ago it was possible for our railways to divert to grain movement cars ordinarily dedicated to the movement of potash. However, because of the tremendous movement of potash from Saskatchewan this year these cars are remaining in that movement.

GOVERNMENT PLANS RESPECTING OBTAINING OF MORE RAILWAY ROLLING STOCK AND LOCOMOTIVES TO MEET NEEDS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, might I direct this supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that in the past ten years Canadian railways have reduced the number of railway cars suitable for the movement of grain and lumber from 88,000 to 48,000, a reduction of 40,000, and also in view of the chronic yearly shortage of equipment to move livestock, potatoes and other bulk commodities, does the government have any immediate program, either by requiring action on the part of the railways or by government action, to order and obtain rolling stock and locomotive power to meet the transportation needs of the country?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I will have to verify some of the figures that have been cited. Notwithstanding that, I must say there was an effort this year to have an increase in all kinds of rail cars. Not only has the traffic increased but at the same time there was a strike that prevented the building of new cars. I will check into the figures and tell the hon. gentleman what we are doing in order to meet the needs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously there are a sufficient number of supplementaries on this subject to keep us going well beyond the question period. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Mackenzie and then the hon. member for Bellechasse.

POSSIBILITY THAT STATEMENT TO BE MADE BY PRIME MINISTER WILL AFFECT STOCK MARKETS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the Prime Minister will be making his statement later in the day when the stock markets are closed, may I ask him whether the statement will contain something that will affect the stock markets of Canada and, if so, whether he has had consultation on this with the Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, I think this highly publicized television statement will affect the stock markets of Canada. I am sure investors in Canada will be pleased to learn that the Liberal government is going to stay in power for a long time yet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether there will be budgetary adjustments as a result of this statement?

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT SALE OF "LE SOLEIL" TO POWER CORPORATION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

As the written press is quite an old medium of information, but always effective, and as it is quite important that newspapers do not become the prey of a monopoly, can the minister tell the House if he has been informed, one way or another, of the possible sale of the daily newspaper Le Soleil of Quebec City to the Power Corporation of Canada, Limited, which already controls many other newspapers? If so, can the minister tell the House if he intends to use his power to prevent the Quebec press from becoming a monopoly?

STUDY OF RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO BY TRANSPORT COMMISSION—LOCAL CONSULTATION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. In light of the fact it has become very apparent this week that the Canadian Transport Commission study of railway passenger service in southwestern Ontario is far different in scope and intent from what was indicated by the minister in response to questions over the last ten months in the House, can the minister tell us if he was ever aware of the terms of reference of the CTC study before it started and, if so—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubt whether it is in order at this time to ask a minister if he was ever aware of a fact or a situation. That is hardly a proper way to put a question. Perhaps the hon. member might rephrase the question.

Mr. Jarvis: In light of the fact that the minister and officials of the CTC have indicated that an important part of this study would be local consultation with the people in the area affected, and in light of the fact it became apparent on Tuesday of this week that no consultation had taken place, would the minister indicate whether he approved the study being conducted and completed without local consultation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is speaking about local consultation. I think it was stated before the standing committee by Mr. Benson that these consultations are going to take place and that the report will likely be ready in a few weeks.

ENERGY

INITIATIVE FOR MEETING BETWEEN FEDERAL AND ALBERTA MINISTERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who has referred to the meeting he had in Calgary with a minister of the government of Alberta. Can the minister tell the House whether the meeting in Alberta was held on the initiative of himself and his department or on the initiative of the government of Alberta?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): At my initiative, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

PROVISION OF RAILWAY CARS TO SHIP BRITISH COLUMBIA LUMBER

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In light of the fact that the lumber industry in central and northern British Columbia is losing $3 million a week and the fact that rookie Senator Ray Perrault announced in Prince George while he was representing the minister there during the opening of an airport terminal that there are a thousand brand new railway cars on the way up to Prince George to alleviate the problem, can the minister tell the House by what mode of transportation these rail cars are moving to Prince George? It has been a month, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY RESPECTING EXTENSION OF SERVICES TO COMMUNITIES OF MORE THAN 500 PEOPLE

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State.

On April 3 of this year, I asked him a question about a complete master plan for the extension of television and radio services in communities of at least 500 inhabitants The minister replied then that he was discussing these projects with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and would make a report to the cabinet.

Can he tell us if these consultations are finished and if he will soon announce the program approved by the cabinet?

[English]

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are working very hard on that at the present time and I hope to be in a position to make an announcement shortly.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JAMES BAY POWER PROJECT—COURT DECISION ALLOWING WORK TO CONTINUE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT FURTHER DAMAGE TO NATIVE PEOPLE'S LIFE STYLE

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Because the temporary injunction of Mr. Justice Malouf upheld the argument of the native people of James Bay that irreparable damage would be caused to their way of life, and in view of the fact the appeal court did not refute this argument in its decision to allow work to continue on the James Bay project, will the minister say what immediate action the government will take to ensure that no further irreparable damage is caused to the life style of these native people who come within federal jurisdiction?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the proceedings are going on. The Indians have announced that they intend to go to the Supreme Court of Canada and we cannot interfere with the courts. We will listen to the judgment of the court. In the meantime, the decision of the court today proved once more that we were right a year ago when we urged the two parties to negotiate a settlement. We are still negotiating, and I hope there will not be too many backseat drivers to interfere.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, that vehicle has not got very far along the road yet. In view of the minister's expressed satisfaction with Mr. Justice Malouf's decision, will the minister undertake to appear at the appeal before the Supreme Court of Canada to support openly the Indian case if the native people request him to do so? Will he give that undertaking?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt that a question asked in those terms can be acceptable procedurally as it is, of course, hypothetical.

Mr. Chrétien: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say to the hon. member that there are no witnesses at those hearings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GARRISON DAM DIVERSION, NORTH DAKOTA—FURTHER ACTION BY CANADIAN GOVERNMENT—CONSIDERATION BY INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of the Environment and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact the diplomatic note from the government of Canada to the government of the United States concerning a moratorium on the construction of a dam and irrigation project in the state of North Dakota has been rejected by the United States government, since the construction continues, can the Prime Minister inform the House, in view of the very serious effects this could have on the rivers in Canada, what further action the government is going to take on this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take notice of the question on behalf of the ministers.

Mr. Knight: In view of the fact the United States irrigation project could pollute the Red River and the Souris River within the jurisdiction of Canada, can the Prime Minister inform the House if the International Joint Commission and the Canadian members thereof have been instructed to indicate clearly Canada's opposition to the breaking of the Boundary Waters Treaty by the United States?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I cannot say. Again, I will have to take note of the question on behalf of the ministers.

AIR CANADA

CHARGES BY AIRLINE EMPLOYEES ASSOCIATION—REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Due to the damaging charges made by the Canadian Airline Employees Association against Air Canada and its operations, will the minister order an independent inquiry to investigate the charges?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to know what charges the hon. member is referring to.

Mr. McKenzie: The document was delivered to the minister's office this morning. In light of the criticism and complaints coming from the public, employees and members of parliament about the whole Air Canada operation, is the minister considering calling for the resignation of Mr. Pratte and his 18 vice-presidents?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBLE REORGANIZATION OF SENIOR MANAGEMENT STRUCTURE—APPOINTMENT OF NEW PRESIDENT

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware of any initiatives currently being undertaken by the chairman of Air Canada to reorganize the senior management structure of the corporation, the results of which would modify the structure of the senior management so that a president would no longer be necessary?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the only thing I can say is that I have had discussions with the chairman of Air Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we should limit supplementary questions. There are just two or three minutes left before the end of the question period. The hon. member may ask a supplementary and then I shall see the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the minister has had discussions with the chairman of Air Canada, is he in a position to announce a replacement for the president when his retirement becomes effective in December of this year?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN COASTGUARD

POSSIBILITY OF TRANSFER OF COLLEGE FROM CAPE BRETON TO ONTARIO—VIEW OF NOVA SCOTIA PREMIER

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Transport. May I thank him for the one year's reprieve he has given respecting the future of the Canadian Coastguard College, which he officially announced this week. In light of the very important statement by Premier Regan in Sydney recently that he is against any move of the Canadian Coastguard College to Ontario where they have no ocean, will the hon. gentleman advise if the premier has conveyed this viewpoint to him, and in what form?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great care to the representation made by the hon. gentleman in the name of the premier of Nova Scotia.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PERCENTAGE OF INCREASE IN PREMIUMS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration following my question of last Tuesday. Is the minister aware that approximately 1,160,000 Canadians will be faced with a 98 per cent increase in their unemployment insurance premiums on January 1, 1974?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am so startled by the arithmetic the hon. member uses on so many different occasions that I will really have to put that through the Belleville computer.

An hon. Member: It doesn't work.

An hon. Member: You would never get it back.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister. Since the minister has not checked it on his computer or any computer, is he aware of the growing hostility to the increase and will he now institute an inquiry to clarify this situation?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

QUEBEC—ALLEGED DELAY IN PROCESSING CLAIMS FOR BENEFITS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. As the backlog for evaluation of claims over one week old is now running between 25,000 and 30,000 in Quebec, can the minister tell the House what immediate action we can expect to solve this deplorable situation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered the hon. member the other day, refuting the premise of the question. Again I ask him to give me specifics, the location and details of claim problems he has, and we will be very glad to deal with them.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question. If the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be recognized for a supplementary and then I will see the hon. member for Algoma and call orders of the day.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, if the minister refuses to accept my statistics or assertion, will he inform the House if he is informed of the backlog in evaluating claims over one week old and, if so, what is the reason and what will be done about them immediately?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I will do more than that. I instructed the chairman, following the hon. member's question the other day, to contact him forthwith to get the specifics. It is very difficult indeed to deal with generalities of this kind.

ENERGY

REQUEST THAT FEASIBILITY OF BUILDING OIL PIPELINE FROM SAULT STE. MARIE TO MONTREAL BE STUDIED

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the advantages of building an oil pipeline through northern Ontario from Sault Ste. Marie to Montreal, will the minister ensure that a full evaluation and feasibility study of this route will be carried out before a decision is made on the location of the Montreal pipeline?

● (1500)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that is one of the considerations that will be before the government in making its decision.

CRIMINAL CODE

ABORTION—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON VERDICT IN MORGENTALER CASE

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

A verdict of not guilty has been delivered recently in an abortion case. When addressing the jury the judge asked whether abortion could be performed at the mother's request, if the attending gynaecologist believes that the pregnancy is or can become dangerous or still if it must be performed to protect the mother's health. The terms "to protect the mother's health" enjoyed a very extensive interpretation during the trial. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether he intends to amend the Criminal Code in that connection?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government would certainly not want to leave a section of the Criminal Code open to interpretation. That is why we are happy to see that an appeal has been lodged in this case, and that the Appeal Court and, eventually, the Supreme Court may have to rule on the final interpretation of this section of the Criminal Code. In addition to this, I can only repeat what the minister and his parliamentary secretary have said, namely that if need be we shall consider the possibility of referring the case to the Supreme Court so that this matter may be settled as soon as possible.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NUMBER OF FOOTBALL PLAYERS APPLYING FOR BENEFITS FOLLOWING GREY CUP GAME

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who is responsible for the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Would the minister agree to alerting officers of the Unemployment Insurance Commission across the country so that they will record the number of football players applying for unemployment insurance benefits after the Grey Cup game?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This might be a good place to call orders of the day.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): They will all be from one team.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am rising in the absence of the official opposition House leader to ask the question he would ask on Thursday. Perhaps these could be taken as his words coming out of my mouth. What is the business for the rest of this week and next week?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, today we will begin the report stage on Bill C-176 and continue it tomorrow. Following that we will take the foreign investment review bill, the Parole Act, in parts, and the Canada Pension Plan Bill No. 1. I should like to discuss tomorrow the business for Monday and Tuesday in order to arrive at a firm decision as to the items to be considered among this assortment of legislation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader whether certain items are on the list for the period between now and Christmas. I refer to the competition act, to which reference was made a day or two ago by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to the amendments to the Canada Assistance Plan which have been agreed upon between the federal government and the provinces, and to the possibility of a petroleum supply allocation act. Will these matters, and a debate on the oil tax be before us between now and Christmas?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated items which I should like to have dealt with next week. In addition, there are a number of items before the standing committees, particularly the bill dealing with election expenses. As well, the Minister of Finance will be giving notice of a bill in the field of federal-provincial fiscal relations, and there probably will be two bills relating to the oil situation. Those bills are those I should like to see completed before we can rise for an adjournment or prorogation. I would only add the additions suggested by my hon. friend if I had some reasonable assurance that the list already on view has some chance of being cleared before that adjournment or prorogation.

Mr. Baker: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I note that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rose as if he were the opposition House leader. I wish to point out that, although the opposition House leader is absent today, the deputy House leader of the only opposition in the House is here today and was on his feet.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point or order. The question I asked was interpreted as a joke. It really was not a joke. A few days ago I had this question on the order paper and the minister indicated that the commission did not keep statistics of that kind. I suggest that is an area which must be investigated.

Mr. Danson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys did not mean to make disparaging remarks against the people of Ontario when he said they did not have an ocean. May I point out to him that we have more international shoreline than any other province, with the possible exception of British Columbia.

Mr. Muir: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, in reply to my good friend I can only say that I can understand why he has never gone farther than being a parliamentary secretary.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PROTECTION OF PRIVACY BILL

CREATION OF OFFENCES RELATED TO INTERCEPTION OF PRIVATE COMMUNICATIONS BY CERTAIN DEVICES

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-176, to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act, as reported, (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members know, a large number of motions appear on the order paper relating to Bill C-176. There will have to be consulations, I am sure, between representatives of the parties as to how these motions might be grouped and how votes might be taken from time to time.

As a preliminary thought and, of course, subject to what hon. members may want to agree on later, I suggest that motions Nos. 1 and 2 be considered separately, and that votes be taken on each of them eventually; that the third item of business in relation to this bill should be motions Nos. 3, 4, 11, 12, 15 and 18, which might be grouped together for debate, subject, of course, to individual votes being taken on each one of them. Because these motions are so complicated and as there is such a close relationship between them, I suggest that they should be grouped as mentioned for purposes of debate. However, it would be helpful for the Chair if consultations were to take place in due course. For the moment, I suggest to hon. members that we might proceed with motion No. 1, in the name of the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey). When that has been disposed of we will go to Motion No. 2. That ought to keep the House busy for some time, at least.

Mr. Lang: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments Your Honour has made about complications in relation to these motions. It would seem to me, however, that there is a certain order of priority which it might be reasonable to consider in relation to these motions. In particular, Motion No. 1, standing in the name of the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey), might logically be decided last by the House, because of its nature and because it might be affected by other developments. Motions Nos. 2 and 3 likewise would not be necessary if, for instance, the group of motions from No. 4 onward in the name of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) were to be successful.

I submit there might be a grouping of a certain number of motions standing in the name of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), beginning with motion No. 4, and subject to his comments, because I, too, have some difficulty in reading the grouping all together. I think the group which might be included in one debate and one vote with which we might start would include motions Nos. 4, 6, 7, 9, 10, 12, 16, 21 and 22. As I perceive it, they all involve the same principle. However, I would appreciate clarification from the hon. member for New Westminster on this point.

[Mr. Muir.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think Your Honour's suggestion would commend itself to most members of this House, namely that the order be Nos. 1 and 2 which bear resemblance one to the other. One deals with the title and the second with the subject matter. From there on, I think we should proceed in the order which Your Honour suggested. I think that would bring about an orderly discussion and debate. Certainly, motion No. 1 should be first, what should this bill be named. It is not like a bill in which the name is approved last because no one is raising any objection to it. If I may say so I feel Your Honour's suggestion was very wise, having regard to all the circumstances.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) was inclined to agree with the suggestion made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), that perhaps his amendment affecting the title might well be left for the last which would mean we would start with motion No. 2. I again seek the guidance of the hon. member.

Mr. Atkey: Your Honour is quite correct with regard to motion No. 1 relating to the title. The title the bill takes is in large measure a reflection of the content of the bill. I think it is in the interest of all hon. members to see how the House is prepared to dispose of the other amendments before I proceed with my submissions with respect to motion No. 1. However, motion No. 2 is quite an independent matter. This point was argued in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

I am quite prepared to proceed with motion No. 2 at the present time, if that is the wish of Your Honour and hon. members. I agree the other grouping of amendments subsequent to motion No. 3, that is motions Nos. 4 through 22, tend to group together, particularly the amendments standing in the name of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt). I think that is a separate debate, unrelated to the issue in motion No. 2. If it is Your Honour's pleasure and the wish of hon. members, I will proceed with motion No. 2 at the present time.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I heartily endorse what the minister suggested in terms of the grouping with the exception of one amendment, that dealing with the removal of the emergency permit. That is a separate issue. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) has proposed a similar amendment. I feel those two could be dealt with at the same time. It would not be necessary to group the emergency permit amendment with the other amendments I have proposed which are basically the pure position, if I could put it that way, with regard to wiretapping under the Criminal Code.

In spite of what the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) has said, I support what the right hon. member said. I do not see why we should delay dealing with the question of the title. In my view, this is the more appropriate title in view of the nature of the bill and the likely outcome of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the difficulties, I suggest we agree with the suggestion of the Minister of Justice and the hon. member for St. Paul's in relation to motion No. 1. The hon. member who has the carriage of the action on motion No. 1, has a responsibility, of course, in this respect. I think it would be in order to start with the hon. member's motion No. 2. We would then go on to motion No. 3 and the grouping suggested either by the Minister of Justice or the hon. member for New Westminster might be looked at a little more closely. My understanding of the grouping suggested by the minister is that motions Nos. 4, 6, 7, 9, 10, 12, 16, 21 and 22 might go together as part of the same debate. The hon. member for New Westminster pointed out that one motion might be left out of this proposed grouping. This might be the subject of discussions outside the House where it might be much easier to reach a decision.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we should not at this moment finalize the subsequent groupings. We can start with motion No. 2. If the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) is prepared to leave motion No. 1 until later, that resolves that issue. I would certainly like to see motions Nos. 3, and 4 in the same debate. I am a little reluctant to agree to eight or 10 motions being put together in one group because there are various issues. Since each member can speak only once on a group of amendments, there might be cases where the mover of several amendments might be wronged in that way. I support Your Honour's suggestion that the actual grouping beyond motion No. 2 be left until there have been some consultations through the usual channels.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their suggestions. We will proceed with motion No. 2 and, unless I am otherwise convinced, motion No. 3 will be dealt with separately as the next item of business. All the others can then be considered.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On that very point, in Your Honour's first grouping you put motions Nos. 3 and 4 together. It seems to me that is a case of two being in the same area.

Mr. Speaker: This will be looked at, as I suggested a moment ago.

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's) moved:

That Bill C-176, to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act, be amended in Clause 2 by striking out lines 1 to 7 inclusive at page 2 and substituting therefor:

"'"offence" means an offence under sections 47 (treason), 51 (intimidating Parliament or legislature), 52 (sabotage), 62 (sedition), 76.1 (hijacking aircraft), 76.2 (endangering safety of aircraft), 76.3 (offensive weapons on aircraft), 78 (breach of duty respecting explosives), 79 (causing injury by explosives with intent), 80 (possessing explosives without lawful excuse), 108 (bribery of judicial officers and legislators), 109 (bribery of public officers), 121 (perjury), 218 (murder), 247 (kidnapping), 303 (robbery), 305 (extortion), 306 (breaking and entering), 338 (fraud), 389 (arson), 421 (a)(b) (attempts, accessories) insofar as they relate to the above offences and 423(1) (a)(b) (conspiracy) insofar as it relates to any of the above offences, or an offence under section 4 (trafficking), and 5 (importing and exporting) of the Narcotic Control Act, and any pattern of other offences created by an Act of the Parliament of Canada for which an offender may be prosecuted by indictment where there are reasonable grounds to believe that such pattern of offences is part of the activities of organized crime, and includes any such offence that is alleged or suspected or that there are reasonable grounds to believe may be committed;"

He said: Mr. Speaker, in all concern about necessary amendments to this bill, both at the committee stage and report stage, we must never forget that this bill contains three important prohibitions which are urgently needed now, regardless of what happens to the amendments. First, there is a provision that, for the first time, makes wiretapping and electronic surveillance a crime. Until this bill is enacted, electronic surveillance is legal in Canada except to the extent that it may violate the various telephone acts of the provinces. Second, this bill would make possession, sale or purchase of bugging devices a crime. Until this bill is enacted, regardless of what happens to the amendments, the possession, sale or purchase of those invidious devices is legal in Canada. Third, the bill would make disclosure of information obtained by unlawful bugging a crime. Until this bill is enacted, such disclosure remains legal in Canada. These are important protections for Canadians. They are needed now.

Speaking for the official opposition, we will not countenance any further delay of this bill. This bill has already had virtually three lives. It was first introduced over two years ago following the excellent report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of March 11, 1970. Obviously, the government has had other priorities. Frankly, it has not moved very quickly on this bill, yet the public concern over actual and potential threats of invasion of their privacy has grown by leaps and bounds. This is a concern felt in Canada, not only because of the implications of Watergate. A growing number of domestic incidents have fightened many Canadians, and I will take a moment or two in which to list some of these incidents.

We saw the shocking report last June and July in which the wiretapping of the office of the Mayor of Montreal was revealed; wiretaps were also placed on a member of the provincial government of Quebec, on a member of the public service commission in that province, and indeed, a member of the organizing committee responsible for the Olympics. There were other responsible public officials who found their privacy had been invaded. More recently, at the end of October, revelations came to light concerning the operations of certain police groups, as yet undetermined and unknown, in the Province of Quebec conducting what has become known as operation 95 directed against the St. Jean Baptiste Society and its members for doing that which is their right in this country, that is to say, expressing their political views. There was the unfortunate incident involving the bugging of the caucus room of one of the parties represented in this House, a matter which was dealt with swiftly and promptly by Your Honour and other members, the requisite apology being exacted from the television network concerned.

We saw also, in a program on that same network, evidence of the bugging of a union headquarters in Toronto. The persons doing the bugging were unseen, unnamed, but nevertheless very real. Then, just this week we find two members of the legal profession in Montreal complaining that their telephones had been tapped. Obviously, the privacy of communications between them and their clients had been violated, their conversations had been overheard and perhaps used, not only against the clients but against the lawyers. Just this morning we heard of yet another instance of telephone tapping in Montreal. This time it affected a book-publishing firm which may have published books deemed unacceptable by some police groups which did not agree with what was being printed or published.

These are shocking revelations, yet I am sure hon. member would agree that what we are reading about in all these newspapers in Canada represents only the tip of the iceberg. Electronic surveillance has been used by the police in Canada at all three levels, federal, provincial and municipal. It is an every-day tool of private investigators. It is used by persons involved in negotiating collective bargaining agreements in an effort to obtain an unfair advantage for one of the parties. It is used by various commercial concerns, even by car dealers and operators of dance studios who find it profitable to invade the privacy of actual or potential customers.

I sincerely hope the dangers of the invasion of privacy are now fully apparent to Canadians. Surveillance of this type can destroy the inner soul of an individual. In my work in my constituency, perhaps because of my association with the issue of wiretapping, I have been visited by many unfortunate victims, people who no longer feel they have any privacy, any anonymity, any solitude as is their right as Canadians in a free society. Rightly or wrongly, they believe they have been victims of a bug or a wiretap, and this has so preoccupied their minds as to render them unwell. I have been shocked by what I have seen.

The amendments before us are not directed to the three prohibitions I have outlined. I think we all agree that these prohibitions are useful and that they should be enacted into law as soon as possible. It is with respect to the exceptions to these provisions that disagreement has arisen. I am thinking, for example, of the range and scope of the powers granted to provincial attorneys general or to their agents, to the Solicitor General or his agent to seek authority by various means to invade the privacy of persons suspected of having committed certain offences. How wide should these powers be? What range of offences should be considered in connection with authorization under these provisions? What conditions should exist for judicial approval? Are there any emergency conditions under which judicial approval would not be required? Whether, indeed—as I am sure the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) will argue—there should be any exceptions to the general prohibitions for which the bill provides. The argument is centred on the question whether evidence obtained from an illegal tap, when the prescribed rules have not been followed, would be allowed to be used by the police in subsequent criminal proceedings. I am sure the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) and others will wish to comment on this particular point, and I shall not go into the subject further at this time.

Addressing myself to the wording of motion No. 2, may I say that on July 17 of this year a similar amendment in my name was put before the standing committee. I want to be honest with hon. members and acknowledge that this amendment was put to the vote and that the result was a tie, the tie being broken by the vote of the chairman, a government supporter. So this is not the first time hon. members who have been associated with the committee will be considering the suggestion contained in motion No. 2. What I was attempting to do then, and what I am attempting to do now, is to provide some form of rationale by which the exception allowed in the case of the attorneys general, the Solicitor General, or their agents, can apply to a particular range of offences in connection with which wire tapping or electronic surveillance might seem particularly appropriate.

This committee was controlled by a majority of supporters of the present government. The report reads:

As a general rule, the Committee recommends that each offence be one which carries with it the possibility of imprisonment upon conviction for a period of ten years or more. The Committee recommends that the criminal acts be named individually in the legislation, and suggests the following series of criminal acts as matters which should be included:

Then, the report lists the offences that I have listed in motion No. 2 and continues:

In addition, these methods of investigation should be employed in the suppression of narcotics trafficking and in the control of syndicated crime.

The list of offences that I have included in motion No. 2 were recommended by the standing committee in the last parliament. In addition, I have added several new offences that were not in existence at the time of that recommendation, those being the offences of hijacking aircraft, and endangering the safety of an aircraft by having offensive weapons aboard an aircraft. I have also added the offence of fraud, which is an important white collar crime in which in many cases wiretapping can perhaps be a useful device of law enforcement.

Then, to deal with the matter of syndicated crime, which was of great concern to the standing committee at the time and, I might add, was of great concern to many members of the standing committee in this parliament, I have added additional wording that was not in the original motion put before the standing committee. This wording reads as follows:

—and any pattern of other offences created by an Act of the Parliament of Canada for which an offender may be prosecuted by indictment where there are reasonable grounds to believe that such pattern of offences is part of the activities of organized crime—

So, Mr. Speaker, in addition to listing the 19 offences and adding to them fraud and the three hijacking or aircraft offences, I have added words that will meet the objects of the committee of the last parliament, and I hope the objects of the members of the committee of this parliament, to cover lesser indictable offences that do not carry the penalty of ten years or more but which nevertheless are part of a pattern of offences for which the use of electronic surveillance is a necessary law enforcement device. I think hon. members will remember in committee the example of bookmaking, which in itself is not a serious offence, yet clearly where it is part of a pattern of alleged or suspected offences it would be the proper object of authorized police electronic surveillance.

I should also indicate that the amendment that is now contained in motion No. 2 is different from the one put in committee in another sense. It is different because it includes the words "offences which are alleged or suspected". When I put the motion in committee, I deleted those words, and I did so advisedly on the recommendation of a number of hon. members on the committee and also on the recommendation of one Ramsay Clark, who was one of the better witnesses appearing before the standing committee in the month of July. As hon. members know, Ramsay Clark was a former attorney general of the United States for a period up to 1968 and had particular views on wiretapping which were very useful to the members of the committee, which was much in his debt for the time, trouble and expense he undertook to come up here and share his thoughts and valuable experience with us.

By leaving in the words "alleged or suspected", I am concerned that the requirement that will trigger an application for authorization by the attorney general or his agent may be too minimal a requirement. Concern was expressed by the minister about the possible removal of these words, and I paid some heed to his concern. Concerns were expressed in the standing committee by Mr. Dagenais of the Montreal police about the fact that the activities of law enforcement officers to meet the serious problem of organized crime in the city of Montreal might be impeded unless the bill contained a particular phraseology permitting them to seek an application before a judge. It was my view, and it still remains my view at the present time, that with the words "alleged or suspected" the difficulties referred to in the evidence of Mr. Dagenais before the standing committee are largely overcome, and that the particular situation that the Montreal police found required the use of electronic surveillance is one in which they can name specific offences in the list, or those that are not on the list but are part of a pattern so long as they are alleged or suspected. I am sure that all hon. members agree that this is not a particularly onerous condition to meet.

Notwithstanding the recommendation of the standing committee of the last parliament, the government has brought in a bill in this parliament that does not pay heed to the recommendations to limit the range of offences. This has made the whole shooting match wide open because the government has used the term "all indictable offences". This includes not only virtually every provision in the Criminal Code but other federal legislation as well, where offences are created and under which there may be a procedure by way of indictment. As an example of the types of offences in regard to which the bill in its present form would allow an application for wiretapping authorization to be made, we have petty theft, income tax evasion, impaired driving, possession of marijuana, theft over and under $50, any of the offences created under the Combines Investigation Act, or any of the offences that would be created by the amendments to the Combines Investigation Act which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) seems so anxious to have placed before the House and enacted.

The government's approach is really like using a shotgun when a rifle would do. I think it is unnecessarily wide and is an approach that should be avoided. This shotgun approach ignores the necessity for making the need fit the deed. Not only does it permit the minor offences that are listed to be made the object of an authorized electronic tap, but it would permit snooping into any field in the future in which the government chose to enter under its criminal law through the enactment of new indictable offences.

To conclude my remarks on motion No. 2, let me repeat that the majority of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of the last parliament saw fit to limit the range of offences. The committee was controlled by a majority of the supporters of the present government. The committee split seven to seven this time, and there were a number of members from various parties away from these particular sessions of that committee. I know some of the members of the committee who sit on the other side of the House were concerned that my initial amendment had not dealt with the problem of organized or syndicated crime, but I suggest that the amendment now before the House in motion No. 2 does deal with the problem of organized crime in the words that I have outlined earlier.

The Civil Liberties Association of Canada, which in many respects took an extreme position on the type of wiretapping legislation that we should have in this country, said they would specifically name the range of offences for which wiretaps could be authorized. I had always understood that it was a fundamental principle of criminal law that, wherever possible, in drafting a statute an attempt is made to name specific offences. This is the inclusionary approach to drafting, not the exclusionary approach. It is essential that it be followed here if this bill is to provide a rational and reasonable restriction on government use of electronic snooping.

I implore, indeed I plead with hon. members, particularly those opposite who considered this matter at length on July 17 in the standing committee, to consider the terms of the present draft amendment now before us in Motion No. 2. I am confident that on full reflection of the implications of this draft they will be able to say that this is a reasonable and rational restriction of the power to proceed, through the Attorney General or his agent, the Solicitor General or his agent, before a judge to get authorization to tap. Let us not use a shotgun approach, a wide unnecessary approach, when a more rational approach is available to us in the particular amendment we have before us.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in introducing his motion, the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) ranged far and wide over the field. I suppose that may be permissible in the first speech on this matter, but I hope it will not turn out to be the pattern. We do not know that all the cases he has mentioned dealt with wiretapping by police or whether some criminal organization was involved. In any event, my point is that the very purpose of this bill is to prevent such wiretapping taking place. Under this bill wiretapping will not be permissible either by the police or anybody else in our society unless it falls within the four corners of this legislation. That surely is the important point before us.

I fully appreciate the efforts of the hon. member for St. Paul's to meet the arguments which were advanced in the committee against the amendment he moved at that time, which was unsuccessful. He now recognizes that there does have to be something which takes account of the problems that arise in our society as a result of organized crime. He also recognizes that it is necessary to have a somewhat broader extension than he was proposing at that time.

In effect, what we have before us is not a shotgun approach by the government, it is a careful approach. If it errs, it errs on the side of safety and caution rather than rushing in to adopt what might turn out to be a very arbitrary limitation on the possibilities of legitimate police wiretapping in our society.

I was a member of the justice committee which considered this matter under special reference several years ago. To the best of my recollection I supported the recommendation which was made at that time, and I still support it. This does not mean I am without considerable difficulty in respect of the hon. member's amendment.

The committee said, after urging that the crimes should be named, and I would, by the way, accept that as a very desirable principle:

In addition, these methods of investigation should be employed in the suppression of narcotics trafficking and in the control of syndicated crime.

The committee was not acting as a drafting body at that time; it was presenting a concept of syndicated or organized crime. I would submit that Mr. Atkey, as drafter, has not met the fairly heavy onus of defining for us what "organized crime" means. This is not a light problem. The first question that arises is what precisely is syndicated crime. It is very hard to give a satisfactory answer to this question. Whether our consideration is in terms of the phrase "syndicated or organized crime," the committee used the phrase "syndicated crime", and Mr. Atkey—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. MacGuigan: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. The amendment by the hon. member for St. Paul's refers to the phrase "organized crime" but this does not go any distance toward helping us see what the exact ambit is, or what factors the courts would be expected to apply in deciding whether certain actions fall within "organized crime". Does it depend on the number of persons involved and, if so, what number? Does it depend on the time frame of the activity and, if so, what length? Perhaps it should be a mixture of the number of persons and the time frame, but if so how does one determine the nature of the mixture? Is geography relevant? Are three men running a bookmaking establishment out of an apartment in Hamilton involved in organized crime? If not, would the same three men operating in partnership out of three different cities, say Hamilton, Calgary and Vancouver, fall within the phrase "organized crime"? At what point, for example, does using the mails to defraud, or engaging in a fraudulent manipulation of stock exchange transactions, the nature of which is not included in the list of crime presently, become organized?

I know, of course, that the phrase "organized crime" is in common usage, but it is a colloquial phrase that may be suitable for administrative use by investigative bodies, or suitable in ordinary conversation, but I seriously question whether it is suitable for legislation to be passed by this House. It was with considerations of this kind in mind that, even though the Department of Justice would have had fully in mind the recommendation which the committee made, it was decided that the only workable solution was to define the offence as an indictable offence. In other words, this is the best limitation which it was thought could be put on the definition of an offence. This formula resulted in an elimination of provincial offences and federal summary conviction offences. It was considered that this was the narrowest that the definition could be made and still prove effective in answering the problem.

It will not now, for instance, be possible to get authorization in relation to a person suspected of using his telephone to make indecent or harassing telephone calls, because both offences are punishable on summary conviction.

Mr. Atkey: It is the same under this bill.

Mr. MacGuigan: Yes, that is true, but that was the point I was making.

Continuing with the discussion on the amendment, in addition to the problem with the phrase "organized crime", there also are some problems in respect of the list of specific offences. For example, the amendment includes trafficking in narcotics under the Narcotic Control Act, but not possession for the purpose of trafficking. It does not include the offence of trafficking in speed and other drugs dealt with under the Food and Drugs Act. I have no doubt that these omissions are deliberate, but this is an indication of the fact that the ambit is not as great as many members would wish. No mention is made of counterfeiting.

There is the concept of pattern of offence, but what does this phrase mean? What constitutes a pattern? The use of such phrase in relation to the phrase "organized crime", could be seen as simply piling vagueness upon vagueness. While it is true that the criminal law desirably should be specific in respect of mentioning crimes, it should also be as specific as possible in respect of definition.

I suggest that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for St. Paul's also raises the same problem for, while he criticizes the bill, his amendment contravenes the same rules because it, too, is vague. I believe it is not a solution to the problem which we recognize as well as does the hon. member for St. Paul's.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey). I think the position we take on wiretapping has to a great extent been weak-kneed. I think we should have more courage, although I believe this to be a step in the right direction; the limiting of offences.

It was interesting to hear today on the news that two solicitors in Quebec reported that a wiretap was found in their offices. No one knows where the wiretapping devices came from but both barristers were engaged in the practice of criminal law. This is a very serious thing. With that in mind, I looked at the bill this morning and asked myself whether what we are discussing in this House would prevent that kind of abuse. What I want to show is that if this bill passes in its present form that kind of abuse would not be corrected.

If we look at the existing definition of an offence under the bill we find this:

"offence" means an offence created by an Act of the Parliament of Canada for which an offender may be prosecuted by indictment and includes any such offence that is alleged or suspected . .

Most lawyers pay income tax.

An hon. Member: We all do.

Mr. Leggatt: Some pay more income tax than others.

Mr. Alexander: You are right on there.

Mr. Leggatt: It is not unknown in the history of this country that persons have paid their legal fees over the counter and have not received a receipt. If there is a probability that such a person may be evading income tax payments, under the terms of this legislation authorization could be obtained, and likely would be obtained for a wiretap. If such evidence came to hand, and if there were some reason for suspicion, then if such authorization were obtained that criminal lawyers' line could be tapped and any of his clients who happened to phone that particular criminal lawyer would have their conversations tapped and would be liable to prosecution. In such a situation, the whole question of the matter of privilege between solicitor and client becomes eroded.

I am pleased to see that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) covers this. He has not provided an offence in respect of the Income Tax Act. In fact, the criminal law provides that any violation of a federal statute, when not otherwise specified, is an indictable offence. Therefore, when one considers the question of how much wiretapping the bill as it now stands prevents one finds that it prevents very little. There has been some improvement. The bill will reduce to some extent the use of the wiretap, but there is no question that as the bill presently stands it is an open invitation to just as extensive wiretapping as we now have.

I do not know whether the hon. member for St. Paul's obtained the answers he requested, but it is interesting to note the questions he asked. One of his questions dealt with the number of taps that had been placed during the fiscal year 1972-73 by the RCMP. As I recall the figure, there were 663 taps placed and, as a result of those 663 taps, four prosecutions were developed. Two of those four prosecutions were successful. The percentage rate of success is one-third of one per cent in respect of 663 wiretaps. If one were to take those 663 wiretaps into consideration and imagine the number of people who would use a particular phone in a particular room which contained an electronic device, one would come up with a figure of perhaps 250,000 conversations which were listened to as a result of those taps.

What is even more significant is another question the hon. member for St. Paul's asked. He asked how many of those taps would have been prevented by this bill. The answer was 129. That is why I stand here criticizing this bill. It is entitled "the Protection of Privacy Act". The purpose of the bill is to protect the right to privacy. I submit it simply does not do that. You know, there was a book published a long time ago called "1984" by George Orwell which has been referred to many times. In ten years it will be 1984. It is later than we think. All the devices that were shown in that book are now within the capability of our electronic industry. The subtle oppression that results from the use of wiretapping is very hard to measure but becomes overwhelming.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), a long time ago, introduced, to the delight of civil libertarians all across the country and with congratulations from this party, his own party and from I think the government party, a Bill of Rights. In that Bill of Rights clause 1(d) provided that every person in this country shall have freedom of speech. One way in which we lose freedom of speech is through the fear that we may be listened to. That lack of freedom comes about through the use of self-censorship. One cannot have a frank conversation with someone over the telephone if one is not sure whether or not the telephone is tapped. If you were to ask the people in this chamber, Mr. Speaker, if they believed their conversations had ever been tapped, I think they would probably say yes. That belief may be false, but that is not the point. The point is that when these electronic devices are used they become insidious. This practice infringes not only on the rights of those being overheard but also on the rights of those who may think they are overheard. That is the key to our criticism of the bill.

To return to amendment No. 2, I hope this party will support it. I know I will. I believe it improves the bill substantially. If we allow the police to use this device in respect of a wide range of offences, we may find that they are occasionally successful. We have seen, according to the figures produced by the RCMP, that the rate of success is one-third of one per cent. On balance, we must consider what we lose by means of this electronic toy. We must ask whether these convictions would have occurred in any event. We must ask ourselves what better investigatory means were abandoned and not used, such as the undercover agent, which has been infinitely more successful in respect of the rate of conviction in the drug field.

The situation may become similar to the one related to the use of the motor vehicle. When the motor vehicle was first used by the police, it was very effective in preventing crime. When the motor vehicle first appeared, it was found to be convenient and enabled the police to get around faster. Today, possibly the police would be more efficient if they did not rely so much on the motor vehicle. Perhaps there would be better law enforcement if we could get the police into the communities and out of their cars. This device is wasteful of a police officer's time. It is expensive, inefficient and extremely unsuccessful. A very complete study was made by Dr. Schwartz of New York University. It was found that most of these devices were used in respect of gambling. The reason was not clear but perhaps one reason was that someone wished to make sure that the guy on the beat was getting a pay-off.

● (1600)

In any event, these devices were used for the detection of gambling offences, in vice cases and for all of the consensual types of crime. The success rate was insignificant, but the effect was to erode the cherished possession of privacy each time they were used. People say that you cannot be an absolutist on the subject; you must have some balance. In the case of organized crime, and because of the rising crime rate, we should use every tool at our disposal. People say that if wiretapping is immoral, surely the underworld is immoral and we should be fighting fire with fire. These arguments can be very persuasive.

But there is another proposition that is vital to any civilized society and it is this: the rule of law is founded on the proposition that governments can protect their people without acting unfairly and immorally in any respect. We cannot have a lawful society unless we have respect for the law, respect for those who enforce the law, and respect for the means by which they enforce the law. I have never heard anyone suggest that wiretapping is anything but a dirty business. It is immoral, and to justify it you had better show some results. The sacrifice we are making of our privacy must be justified by the conviction rate. However, the statistics do not support that position.

I ask you, then, to consider the situation. If you examine the statistics and the studies that have been carried out with regard to the use of wiretapping, I think you will come to the conclusion that it should not be used or certainly should be severely limited, as the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) is attempting to do in this amendment. We heard some evidence from the former attorney general of the United States when the committee was dealing with this bill. I do not think there are many people who are as eminent in terms not only of fighting crime but also in understanding the importance of maintaining this balance between civil liberty and crime detection. Incidentally, he was one of the most successful attorneys general in terms of attacking the crime rate in the United States. This is what he said in committee:

> I would be particularly disturbed with the bill that you have before you because I do not find in it any limitation as to the types of crimes in connection with which it can be used. Our first bill in 1961, as I recall, had only about six areas in which wiretapping could be used, and they were obviously serious crimes and they were obviously also crimes in which some reasonable argument of the effectiveness could be made.

Mr. Clark was concerned, I think the members of our party are concerned, and I am hopeful that the proposed amendment will be successful in the House.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, having had the honour of chairing the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in its very interesting proceedings on this important bill and having had to operate under the restraint that is placed upon a chairman and yet being very interested in the subject matter at hand having been a defence counsel, this is a welcome opportunity for me, now that we are out of committee stage, to try to contribute to the debate.

I was pleased to hear the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) say that there is ready agreement on the need for the bill and for a basic prohibition against wiretapping. While the agreement on the second important ingredient was not unanimous, it was clear fairly early in the proceedings that there would be amendments at the report stage. It is always unfortunate, of course, that amendments colour the views of members who propose subsequent amendments at a later stage. However, we must try to pick an order of discussion as best we can.

[Mr. Leggatt.]

Certainly, an important set of amendments in the early stages of the discussion was a series of amendments to eliminate the possibility of police doing any wiretapping at all. That is the second important area of agreement which, as I said, was not unanimous, but it became clear, after agreement on the need for general prohibition, that a total ban, including the police, would not enjoy the support of the majority of members of the House. So, we were early aware that all members of the House wanted a prohibition on wiretapping and that a vast majority of members wanted to ensure that the police would be left with the power to use that electronic weapon in their fight against crime, be it organized or other. The difficulty, of course, brings us to the third area, which is the conditions, restrictions or safeguards under which the police would be entitled to use that power.

The amendment that is before us at present is one of a series of amendments that are designed to cut down on the conditions and restrict the powers of the police in their use of this electronic device. I opposed this kind of amendment. As was mentioned in the speech of the hon. member for St. Paul's, I cast the deciding vote against this type of amendment, although it has been altered somewhat since. I am still opposed to amendments such as the one put forward here for several reasons, the first being that it is a categorical rather than descriptive or generic kind of definition. I am troubled by that because, as this kind of amendment was put forward in the committee, although the proposer of the amendment has tried to be exhaustive in his categories, it was apparent that one or two important categories were not included. I am always fearful of a categorical type of section such as this one listing specific offences because that can cause problems for the police in their day to day work and may not include all the offences. Some came to light in the committee and, I submit, as the bill is put on the statute books it will become increasingly clear that other areas may be left out, with all the best intentions.

That is the basic objection that I have to this kind of categorical definition section. The definition section now in the bill is one which describes in a generic way serious indictable offences, and that is as it should be. I think, for example, that there is nothing in the present amendment that would permit the use of wiretapping by police if they were looking at a professional auto thief, unless they were able to say he was connected with organized crime or he showed a pattern of offences. I will have more to say on the pattern of offences in a moment. It is a difficult term to understand. However, there are problems about gambling, prostitution, a person living off the avails of prostitution and supported wholly by it, problems of customs smuggling or counterfeiting, problems that we see today in the construction industry where there is an investigation by the provincial government of Ontario involving what may not amount to extortion but might involve dishonesty, corruption and breach of trust by a person who holds an office that is not a public office and therefore would not be covered by the definition section. There are problems of mortgage inspectors with private companies who do not hold public office, who might receive some kind of payment which would not amount to extortion, would not amount to bribery but would amount to dishonesty or straight theft. There are these categories that are left out, Mr. Speaker. It is just a basic principle that a definition section which is made to appear like a grocery list is always bound to leave out something important.

In addition to that, a concern that we have in our fight against crime, which is something that I think all hon. members have to take into consideration as well, is the fantastic imagination of criminals today. Indeed, I am sure they are inventing offences that are not even in the Criminal Code. The imagination and cleverness of criminals is something that is not taken into account in this kind of definition section. I like to think of the other safeguards contained in the bill where the police, or the attorneys general as the case may be, or their agents—and here another amendment will be coming forward on whether or not they will be agents—have to make applications to judges for permission for police forces to wiretap. We will be talking about other restrictions on applications to wiretap.

Reference has been made to a generic definition of indictable offences. The hon. member for St. Paul's theorized that indictable offences include minor theft and a number of offences that take place on a day to day basis. He mentioned impaired driving, to reduce the argument to absurdity, but he is totally overlooking the fact that an application must be made to a judge. Is it likely that an attorney general, with a generic definition section such as that contained in the bill, would have the nerve to make an application to a judge to use wiretapping on an impaired driving investigation or a minor theft or common assault or any other offence that you could list if you want to use that side of the argument? Of course, it is not. No attorney general would make that kind of application. Even if he had the temerity to do it, surely no judge would grant an application unless the offence contemplated was of such a serious nature as to warrant that kind of electronic intervention. I think that kind of safeguard makes sense, and with that sort of safeguard in mind, I think it is weakening the quality of the bill to adopt this kind of categorical definition section.

I also ask hon. members to look ahead to the time when we will be dealing with amendments with regard to giving notice to persons who are not charged and to the form of charge that is delivered to a person if an investigation is carried out under this definition section. If the investigators are tied to one of these categories and make their application for permission on the basis of one of the categories contained in the amendment before us and then, in the course of that investigation they uncover facts which lead them to an indictment for something that is a related offence but is not contained here, they could be in great trouble in attempting to come to trial. It could be that the order for a wiretap would be ruled out by virtue of the fact that they did not proceed specifically within these categorized definitions. If that were the case, I think it would place an unnecessary procedural burden on the investigators who might have uncovered a closely related offence to one of these categories, close enough that it would not be in any way unethical for them to carry out the investigation or to proceed with the other indictment but yet, because of these categorical definitions, I could see that they might be in great difficulty in attempting to get that evidence introduced at trial.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, I think that with the safeguards that are built in, and I refer not only to the application by the attorney general to the judge but also to the serious penalties that would be visited upon investigating officers who violated the provisions of this act, such as imprisonment or dismissal, I submit there is absolutely no danger in leaving the police at least this power.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I also note that the definition section which is put forward in the amendment is, in its first part, a list of specific offences in order to get around the alleged evil of the definition in generic terms in this bill. Then, in the last part, the amendment goes back to precisely the same kind of generic terms that are contained in the definition section of the bill. I think what happens is that we have now got the worst of both worlds. We are saddled with the shortcomings of the categorical definition in the first part of the amendment and then, in the second part of the amendment, we are faced with words which are subject to precisely the same complaints the hon. member made about the definition section in the bill.

I submit therefore, that far from improving the definition section in the bill, this amendment weakens it severely and weakens the quality of the bill. That is the reason I voted against it in principle in committee, Your Honour, and the reason I would vote against it in the House.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I considered the amendment introduced by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) and I tried to fit it in Bill C-176, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act.

The proposed amendment seeks to change the definition of the word "offence" contained in the bill and the hon. member for St. Paul's tried to define the cases in which the use of electronic devices could be allowed. He did so very specifically.

Mr. Speaker, in the bill as it stands the word "offence" is defined in a very general way. There is nothing specific and it includes everything. On that I will agree with the hon. member who spoke before me. Mr. Speaker, I think the bill would be weakened if those cases were specified.

I understand what the hon. member for St. Paul's wants to do. He would probably want to limit the effect of the bill while agreeing with the principle of its use but, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that definition should not include the details of all possible cases. A general definition of what is meant by offence would be preferable.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with this problem as it applies to the whole bill. This bill seeks to define clearly the use of electronic listening devices. It seeks to set out very clearly the cases in which a listening device could be used and the offences resulting from the use of such devices in certain cases.

Mr. Speaker, I am particularly concerned about clause 178.15(1), at page 7, and clause 178.13 (1), at page 5. Those two clauses give the political power the authority to intervene in the issuance of a permit with respect to the use of a wiretap. Mr. Speaker, that frightens me. We all know the very clear connections that exist between the judicial power and the political power.

In my opinion, everybody will agree that it is not advisable to have such a link between political and legal circles. However, Mr. Speaker, the problem is extremely serious and I remember that the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) in one of his interventions at the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs specifically raised, in connection with an amendment, the case of two members of the Société Saint-Jean-Baptiste who had been involved in such a problem.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, how anyone acknowledging that the use of a wiretapping device and its principle for the protection of society and an efficient administration of justice are valid can go as far as to allow a political power to use a wiretapping device for political purposes.

Without suggesting that it was done for political purposes, I wish to point out that another case has been recently reported. Someone referred to the case of the Saint-Jean-Baptiste Society and the more recent one of the Quebec Free Press Agency. Bugging could be also used, as was experienced within the scope of the radio and television program for the caucus of the New Democratic Party. The same could happen to those of the Social Credit Party, the Progressive Conservative Party and the Liberal Party.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that this power is dangerous. It is the duty of political authorities to set up legal mechanisms which could really guarantee the protection of society and the safety of individuals instead of putting them in jeopardy, for this is a two-edged sword. This leads me to say that I concur with the principle of using bugging devices in the process of the administration of justice.

As for safeguarding freedom and respect for the human person, I think we must impose limitations; we must be very cautious and provide for some sort of guarantee concerning the use of these devices.

In Quebec, there has been discussion about the adoption of a code of ethics regarding the use of listening devices. It seems to me that we should consider this possibility; I do not pretend this code is either good or bad, but I think it is important to adopt a code of ethics, even at the national level, in order to determine what are the legal and practical possibilities as regards the use of wiretaps.

● (1620)

Mr. Speaker, I would like to close my remarks and come back later to the main principle of this bill. I want to say that the fight against organized crime is, in fact, the main objective of this bill, which intends to give policemen a means of fighting organized crime.

I would like to be ensured beforehand that all other means have been used; furthermore, I do not know if the Quebec police forces as well as others in the rest of Canada have in fact the technical, financial and manpower resources to really fight organized crime efficiently. In many municipalities, in many police forces, equipment as well as personnel and money is lacking to fight efficiently organized crime. And I do not think that the use of wiretaps will improve the fight against this scourge.

[Mr. Fortin.]

It is a means rather that is now being abused right and left and that they want to legalize. In my opinion, wiretaps are a kind of prop or sore which we are trying to regulate legally by saying that they will be used in such or such set circumstances as established by the law. I agree in a way, but we will have to go much further. Everybody knows that, at the industrial level, a lot of spying is done from company to company. Therefore, private industry will have to be protected by assessing very high fines.

Mr. Speaker, concerning the motion of the hon. member for St. Paul's, it is not necessary to provide for all situations in the definition of the word offence, but rather to make a rational use of wiretaps while at the same time retaining and not limiting the powers of the law.

In concluding, I should like to mention one of the fundamental principles contained in this bill at clause 178.11 (2)(a), and I quote:

> a person who has the consent to intercept, express or implied, of the originator of the private communication or of the person intended by the originator thereof to receive it;

In that case, Mr. Speaker, wiretapping is allowed, which seems in complete opposition to the objectives of this bill. I therefore hope that the House will keep an open mind about this bill, as we shall certainly advocate, because we must obviously provide our police forces with means to fight effectively against organized crime; but we do not believe that this will really solve the problem since our prisons in general teach crime and absolutely nothing is done to prevent juvenile deliquency and organized crime.

With this bill, we shall simply be legalizing a situation of which everyone is aware, that is wiretapping, which will not solve the problem. Rather we shall simply be legalizing a situation which everyone finds embarrassing.

I shall therefore continue to insist that this bill should not allow the political authorities to use wiretapping for political purposes. One day, we shall have to segregate completely the judicial and political powers. At that time, it may be possible to hold positive discussions about wiretapping without any fear that it may be used for political ends.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, it is always a delight to listen to the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin). He speaks so eloquently that it makes me sad to see him so often on the wrong side of an argument, as he is this time. I say that with regret. I think he may change.

I am sorry the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) is not present in the chamber, although I understand he is within listening distance. He said he has acted as defence counsel. I only hope that when he practised law in his community he had a better client than the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), who is seeking to introduce some changes with respect to this bill. The best we can say of the Minister of Justice is that he is probably guilty, but can plead extenuating circumstances.

That reminds me of a story. Some years ago I was in Los Angeles and heard a story told by a judge of the superior court. Apparently he was standing outside the court house in Los Angeles, which we see so often on television, and met one of his lawyer friends rushing into court. He said,

"Well, John, are you going to see justice done?" The lawyer said, "Hell, no, I would like to win one for a change."

Mr. Wagner: Really, really.

Mr. Baldwin: I see the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) looks pained.

I listened with interest to the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt). I read the committee reports. The committee was good and did a commendable job. It worked hard on this difficult and complex problem, heard witnesses and, from time to time, divided on some issues. This remarkably good committee was composed of members such as the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey), and other members from our side. The hon. member for New Westminster was a valuable member of that committee.

The hon. member for New Westminster talked about, "Nineteen Eighty-Four" in connection with this bill. I do not know how often he has read the book; I commend frequent readings. Many years ago I had a good friend who was a member of the CCF party. I sent him a copy of the book. He read it once and said he enjoyed it; he read it again and joined the Conservative party, and has been a good member ever since. I recommend to the hon. member for New Westminster that he take another look at the bill, because then we may hear him gently tapping on our door some day.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not the hon. member; he is a strong man.

Mr. Baldwin: I support the recommendations of the hon. member for St. Paul's. I suggest that we add clauses 178.11 and 178.18 to the list of clauses which ought to be considered seriously. These are the two clauses in the bill which provide that illegal wiretapping shall be an indictable offence. We might add these clauses to the list so that they, in turn, can be the subject of wiretapping, so to speak.

Seriously, Mr. Speaker, many people are saying this debate is a lawyer's delight, that lawyers are engaging in this debate, that it involves a complicated legal subject and so on. Some suggest that the rest of the members have fled from the House. I do not think that is the case. If it were true, it would be a sad commentary on this parliament.

This is a serious bill, involving serious principles.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member may laugh, but I think I am correct. I am not talking about any particular amendment when I say this; I am talking about the whole bill. We must be ever vigilant to see that the liberties of the people are not filched from them without their knowledge, silently and stealthily, until some day they wake up and find they have lost a great deal of their liberty. What was done in the name of ideology 30 or 40 years ago will illustrate the truth of what I say. I am not imputing any sinister motives of that sort to anybody.

● (1630)

How frequently, in the name of attempting to provide weapons for those involved in law enforcement agencies, have we taken away rights which are essential for the preservation of things people hold dear? Democracy, liberty and freedom are not that old. Mankind became a walking, thinking animal half a million years ago. However, we have only had these freedoms for 150 years. Now, we have a steady encroachment. We have seen that in this House in the extent to which the rules of this House have been altered to deprive members of the opportunity to discharge their responsibilities to their constituents and the people of this country. We have seen how easily this happens. Although they will not say it publicly, there are members opposite who agree with me. However, I will not go into that.

We must bear in mind that a jurisprudence will grow out of this particular bill. It will not be done quickly and easily. Judges called upon to interpret sections of the act will not be allowed to look at what was said here. They will build up their own jurisprudence. A number of decisions will be made which will have the effect of placing interpretations on this act. It will be brought back to this House within several years because of these interpretations. In sending this forth as our act, let us not be too free with the liberties we are giving away.

I say to members opposite that there should be a clearly defined category of those cases, instances, charges and sections in the Criminal Code for which law enforcement authorities are entitled to secure an authorization to engage in electronic surveillance of private communications as defined in the legislation. The hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) and the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) mentioned things which may be done by the authorities which may involve the use of material gathered by electronic surveillance. One very strong reason for suggesting there should be a clear, well defined list of offences for which authorization to wiretap may be sought is that it will have the effect of limiting the extent to which law enforcement agencies and others may be tempted to go outside the lawful means by which they can engage in electronic surveillance.

We must not kid ourselves. It is utter nonsense for us to stand here and say we have laid down rules and the police will abide by them. I hold no brief for or against the police. They are a very important and useful segment of our society. They have an extremely and important function in the order of our society. However, they are part of an adversary system. There is no doubt in the minds of any of us who have been involved in the practice of law that, being part of the adversary structure, they will from time to time make improper use of the powers granted under this act. One dare not look at the amendment offered by the hon. member for St. Paul's without at the same time, taking into account what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) is seeking to do by some of the amendments he will be offering.

Recently, I have been more interested in this. I have heard it suggested that the only cases where we may envisage an illegal application of the powers granted will be where the police decide for certain reasons they will engage in electronic surveillance and then not do anything about it. However, as I read the bill, together with the amendment which the Minister of Justice will offer at a later stage of this debate which seeks to drag back some of the benefits which were obtained in the course of the committee hearings, it will be possible for police officers, public officers, peace officers and private individuals to engage in electronic surveillance. Granted, it will be illegal, but they will engage in this kind of activity. If the Minister of Justice has his way, the evidence obtained, even though improperly elicited, can be offered in a trial to take place at a later date, not necessarily a trial related to the issue in respect of which the electronic surveillance took place. Such a trial could be in respect of one of the acts referred to in the amendment of the hon. member for St. Paul's, namely sabotage, hijacking, causing injury by explosives and so on.

Assuming the amendment of the hon. member for St. Paul's were not passed, if the electronic surveillance took place in respect of one of those offences and disclosed other facts, if then under the minister's proposal those facts could be used in respect of charges laid with regard to any other matter, whether it be an indictable offence, summary offence or civil action. It could be any civil action as long as it involved a federal statute such as the Income Tax Act, the Excise Tax Act or expropriation proceedings. There would be no limit to the use which could be made of facts and evidence elicited directly or indirectly as a result of electronic surveillance, even though illegally obtained, if the Minister of Justice gets what he is seeking to secure in the amendment he will offer at a later stage.

I say, as strongly as I can, that in considering our position on this amendment, we must take into account that we should do all we can to direct the law enforcement authorities, when exercising the powers granted to them, to use care and discretion. One way of doing that would be to limit the number of offences in respect of which an application can be made for authorization under the act. We will be saying to the law enforcement agencies that this parliament is granting power to make it legal for you to do things which were probably illegal before, but in doing so we fear that it may be improperly used. We fear there may be an abuse or wrongful use of the power we are granting to you. As an indication of our concern, we are enacting a code in respect of what actions and alleged offences you may proceed with at this time. I think that would be a very salutary position for this House to take at the present time.

I would hate to see this legislation go out as presently worded without the amendment offered by my hon. friend from St. Paul's. I say to my hon. friends that when they come to consider how to vote on this amendment they should not fail to take into account the breadth of the authority we are granting by this legislation, and we should use the greatest possible discretion. The limitations which my hon. friend has proposed commend themselves to me, and I hope they commend themselves to sufficient members that when the time comes to divide on the motion the bill can be suitably improved. I think that even the Minister of Justice, in time, will say thanks to the hon. member for St. Paul's for his efforts to make this a better bill.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I am pleased to follow the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I notice that he ended more kindly than he began. That is the fortunate thing about his status in the House of an elder statesman; he is mellowing and cannot sustain an attack throughout the whole of a 15 minute speech. Now, I await his remarks always with great anticipation and some pleasure.

In putting forward this amendment, the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) referred to a matter which is of fundamental importance. The bill before us introduces into law a significant improvement in the protection of the liberty and privacy of Canadians. It does so by creating two offences. In the first place, it makes it an offence to intrude upon the privacy of other persons with a variety of devices known as wiretapping or electronic surveillance. The punishment for such an offence is up to five years imprisonment. This should be borne in mind by hon. members when considering the total approach to this legislation, and our efforts both here and in committee to improve the bill and put forward a measure which is a valuable addition to the law. The bill creates a second offence, punishable by up to two years in prison, for the possession or sale of devices suitable for electronic intrusion or wiretapping. This constitutes the fundamental core of the bill, the part of which hon. members as well as the general public should not lose sight.

A great deal of attention has been focussed upon the fact that the bill does provide a possibility for law enforcement officers to carry out their obligations in maintaining law and order by using these devices in the course of their pursuit of criminals. I hope I do not need to urge upon hon. members that this work should also properly be regarded as an important aspect of our liberty and one which has to be safeguarded—that we should be protected by our law enforcement officers from intrusions upon our liberty in other ways than by wiretapping. There was general agreement in the committee that there should be provision for certain exceptions in the case of law enforcement officers. The problem we are dealing with in considering this aspect of the matter is neither the major thrust of the bill nor the principle that there should be some exceptions in order that law enforcement officers may use such equipment in combatting crime.

The question is this: precisely when should that privilege to use electronic equipment by the police be permitted, and in what circumstances? I suggest to hon. members that the important thing in this regard is that the law be as clear as possible. The hon. member for St. Paul's has sought to meet this requirement by listing certain offences. In this respect there should be no argument. There would be clarity. But from previous discussions in the committee and elsewhere in connection with certain other offences, particularly those committed in the course of organized crime, the difficulty of making a satisfactory list has become apparent.

The hon. member for St. Paul's has added certain words to his list, but unfortunately those words do not contain the clearcut definition which is called for here. He uses words such as "a pattern of other offences which are part of the activities of organized crime". Unfortunately, neither the expression "pattern of offences" nor the expression "organized crime" is capable of precise definition. Thus, if we were to accept the amendment, one with whose spirit many of us agree, we would be leaving unclear the very thing we should be making most clear, namely, when law enforcement officers can or cannot make use of electronic intrusion in their law enforcement work. I say to all hon. members that we owe it to the law enforcement officers to remove all possible elements of doubt in this respect.

If we accepted the definition put forward by the hon. member for St. Paul's, the law enforcement officers would not be sure, and neither would the judge, whether there was a correct application of this clause. This is the major reason I have for urging the rejection of the motion as it stands. On each occasion we went over the list in committee we found that no matter how carefully a list was drawn up, someone else would quickly propose that a further offence be included in it. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) correctly referred to the offence of wiretapping itself as one which properly ought to be included. The hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) and the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) also referred to other offences. Should we, indeed, exclude fraudulent use of the mails or fraudulent manipulation of stocks on the stock exchange from the list? When are these offences part of a pattern of organized crime? Is it when three men do this together frequently in a suitable location, or is it necessary for them to be in different locations working together? That kind of uncertainty would be introduced.

While saying that we can understand and accept the spirit of the amendment, we believe that attempts by ourselves as well as by many other members have failed to define adequately lesser offences when engaged in by members of organized crime, offences that may properly also be the subject of surveillance by electronic means by our law enforcement officers. Having tackled that problem we came back to the conclusion that the definition that was most clear and most likely to cover all that was required was the definition contained in the bill as it now stands, the definition that relates use of these devices specifically to indictable offences. Therefore, I urge the members of this House to consider the advantage of certainty and clarity and to reject this amendment, not because we reject the spirit with which it was put forward, but rather on the basic ground that as the bill is now written it contains a better and clearer definition.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, we have had a very interesting debate, right from the commencement of the bill to the present stage, when we are discussing motion No. 2 which has been moved by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey). The composition of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which discussed this bill was an interesting one. We had the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) who is a former dean of a law school. We had the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) who also is a former dean of a law school. Then, we had the hon. member for St. Paul's who is a professor at a law school. All have taken different approaches.

I find that the Minister of Justice is very competent, yet very rigid in his approach to the bill. The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville is competent but takes a less rigid view with regard to it. The hon. member for St. Paul's is very competent and he takes a flexible view in regard to the philosophy of and approach to the bill. These three members are from the teaching profession.

Then, we had a former minister of justice from Quebec who has had a very full experience in the application of the law and who I would say at the beginning took a rather rigid view. However, in view of certain experiences, more especially the recent experience in Quebec, he has to his credit taken a more flexible view of the bill, something I am very glad to hear. All of the members of the committee, as well as all members of the House, realize that this bill will have a tremendous impact on the liberty and freedom of Canadians. It has been said that the price of liberty is eternal vigilance. It could also be said that the price of freedom is the full protection of the individual in society.

I find myself in a very awkward position with regard to motion No. 2. The hon. member for St. Paul's has taken the catalogue approach. The Minister of Justice has taken the full, all-embracing approach, the wide net approach. I am not happy with either. The former attorney general of the United States, Ramsey Clark, stated that in the first bill put before congress in the United States a very limited number of offences were included in the bill, offences relating to national security, espionage, narcotics, homicide, kidnapping and so forth. As time went on more offences were included. But, more important than that, when the law came to be applied the provisions of the bill were abused.

The committee studied this question and came up with the catalogue approach which the Minister of Justice has rejected. The minister contends that on the basis of clarity of definition and to help the law enforcement officers in this country, we should accept his provision. Both in his provision and in the amendment of the hon. member for St. Paul's there is a matter that is really worrisome to me and I should like to indicate what it is.

In the definition clause of the bill "offence" is defined as follows:

> "offence" means an offence created by an Act of the Parliament of Canada for which an offender may be prosecuted by indictment and includes any such offence that is alleged or suspected or that there are reasonable grounds to believe may be committed;

The definition used by the hon. member for St. Paul's sets forth the catalogue, and he then uses these words again:

> —that is alleged or suspected or that there are reasonable grounds to believe may be committed.

I shall be delighted to continue this debate at eight o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Broadview.

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Hurlburt), Airports—Lethbridge—Suggested extension of runway; the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight), Grain—Provision of cars by railways to transport wheat; the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse), Air Canada—Request that Canadian aerospace industry be considered in purchase of new planes.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I believe there is general agreement on both sides of the House to proceed with private members' public Bill C-228 standing in the name of the hon. member for LaSalle, relating to a change in name of his constituency. Following that, which I think will only take a few minutes, we could proceed to private bill S-7, standing in the name of the hon. member for Welland and entitled an act respecting The National Dental Examining Board of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I take it from the remarks of the hon. member for Algoma that it is the wish of the House to deal with the bill at all stages, in view of his reference to a few minutes. If I am correct in that, I would not have to ask unanimous consent of the House.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

CHANGE IN NAME OF CONSTITUENCY FROM LASALLE TO LASALLE-ÉMARD-CÔTE SAINT-PAUL

Mr. John Campbell (LaSalle) moved that Bill C-228, an act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole House.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the reason for this bill to change the name of my riding from LaSalle to LaSalle-Emard-Côte Saint-Paul is basically that Emard-Côte Saint-Paul forms an integral part of my constituency. Its present name is not indicative of the vastness of the other two municipalities that form part of the riding, and to recognize the citizens there I would ask that the name be changed.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

• (1700)

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Boulanger in the Chair.

On Clause 1—LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to rain on anyone's parade; I would not think of it, but I do want to point out that there is a better way of accomplishing a certain purpose. I want to compliment the Prince Edward Island Redistribution Commission on the fact that, rather than picking names of prominent municipalities within the electoral district, it picked prominent geographical locations such as headlands, mountains, points or rivers and so on. I do not object to the hon. member's bill, as we have a tradition here of accepting these proposals. However, for the sake of the Chair, the printing bureau and anybody else involved, I hope it will be possible as redistributions are carried out again that, rather than having a string of three or four names in the name of the constituency, the commissions will not try to salve every municipality within the area but will settle upon prominent geographic features.

Prince Edward Island was able to do this with names such as Malpeque, Hillsborough and so on. What is the other one?

An hon. Member: Cardigan.

Mr. Fairweather: Yes, Cardigan indeed. I think this is a better way to proceed. This is only a caveat, and I do not want to interfere with the quite proper proposal of the hon. member. I hope, however, we do not extend this practise very much further as it presents a difficulty for everyone having to do with parliament.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave now.

Mr. Campbell moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

THE NATIONAL DENTAL EXAMINING BOARD OF CANADA

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH NAME, EXPAND POWERS AND OBJECTIVES

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland) moved that Bill S-7, respecting The National Dental Examining Board of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is my wish that the House agree today to send Bill S-7 to the committee for further examination and possibly the adoption of certain amendments. It is not necessary to take a lot of time to explain the purpose of the bill, but members of this House should have some information as to the reason the bill was proposed in the first place and passed in the Senate on June 12. There has been some delay because of certain considerations embodied in the amendments we hope will be studied by the committee.

This bill relates to the National Dental Examining Board of Canada, and the original bill contains the request that the National Dental Examining Board be given the right to set uniform examinations for dentists and dental specialists throughout Canada. In addition it asked for the association the privilege of setting examinations for a group or groups of dental auxiliaries.

I should point out that six provinces were unwilling or not ready to accept the provisions of this bill as there had not been enough negotiations with dental bodies or societies. They would not consent at the time the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) brought this to their attention. As a result of further discussion with dental bodies, it was decided they still wanted a bill that would allow the national examining board to set Canada-wide examinations, and reference to auxiliaries has been deleted.

There is a distinct advantage in having uniform examinations for both general practitioners and specialists in the dental field. Heretofore, these examinations have been carried on at the provincial level. This has created certain difficulty in that dentists graduating from a university in one province were compelled to take a second examination when moving to another province. It is the consensus of the profession that this bill be adopted in order to achieve portability.

There is one other factor involved. The association wishes to provide uniform examinations of a high standard. This would be to the advantage of not only the dentists but to the public as well. I think one might find a parallel in what has been taking place in the field of medical examinations. Doctors not only write university examinations in order to obtain a degree, but must also write an examination provided by a licensing board. When I graduated I wrote my university examination. I could have then written the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons examination or alternatively I could write the examination of the Medical Council of Canada. I wrote the examination of the Medical Council of Canada because I did not know in which province I wished to practise. Specialist examinations in respect of doctors for many years have been set by the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of which I am a Fellow, and more recently, in respect of dentists, the Royal College of Dentists has been formed to supervise the requirements in respect of specialist training and licensing. By the common consent of both dentists and dental specialists, the request for a Canadian board was accepted and finally the Dental Examination Board was formed. The para-medical groups have gradually built up. This was a very natural thing because they help doctors carry out their duties. I should like to talk about New Zealand.

New Zealand has recognized these groups, and similar groups in the dental profession, for many years. In New Zealand, there has been a very enlightened state medical and dental program. In the case of the medical people again, the para-medical groups consist of people such as nurses, physiotherapists, laboratory technicians, rehabilitation technologists, optometrists, chiropodists, x-ray technicians and so on. In the case of optometry, there is a separate and independent college. Their field is relegated to providing spectacles. They are not regarded as diagnosticians or eye physicians. The ratio of doctors to para-medical personnel is somewhere in the region of one to one.

In the case of dental auxiliaries there have been very many types of technicians. Such people as denturists received an impetus from the requirements of the armed forces during the Second World War. Others have been gradually developed as helpers to the dental profession and frequently have received training in the dentist's office. Gradually, certain groups developed, such as dental assistants, dental technicians and dental technologists. The ratio of dentists to dental auxiliaries is about one to 0.4, which is about two and one-half times less than in the case of the medical profession. Because medical treatment occurs as a first step in a doctor's office, skilled help is not often required there unless a large treatment clinic has been formed. So, the technical side of medicine, including the above mentioned list, has centred around hospitals. Nurses have their own examining boards as do most other auxiliary groups.

There has been considerable argument in the case of the dentists that the auxiliaries were being used by dentists to increase their professional net income. Particularly in the case of denturists the work is almost purely technical and the professional dental supervision is not required to a great extent. The denturists claim that dentures are too expensive, and if people were allowed to go to them directly the price could be cut in two. This, of course, is debatable. Part of the difficulty has been the system of fees both in medicine and in dentistry, which are set out by the associations for distinct individual procedures.

Before medical insurance was instituted, and before any type of social medicine was brought in, doctors sent out their bill and of course did not expect to get paid by more than 50 per cent to 70 per cent of the patients. With the advent of insurance schemes, the number of bills paid increased to 75 per cent or 80 per cent and with medicare it is now a universal payment. Now, 10 per cent is withheld which means that the doctors receive 90 per cent of their bookings paid in full. This, in turn, has led to high medical professional incomes and naturally has raised a storm of criticism directed at the medical profession. The solution to this problem cannot be made this afternoon, but it is obvious that changes in the delivery of medical care will have to undergo a fundamental alteration. This is apparent both to doctors and citizens alike.

It should be stated here that in most countries hospital care is excellent but the biggest differences one discerns in countries such as the United States, Great Britain or even Russia are in the realm of primary and minor medical treatment. This perhaps is a little aside, but I think perhaps it will serve to give everyone a clear picture. In Britain the general practitioner has been deprofessionalized, if we can use that term, into a prescription or pill dispenser and a filler out of forms. In the United States, there is no universal health insurance apart from those on welfare or over age 65. The cost to a patient for medical care is extremely high. Doctors' incomes are high and this has resulted in a great wave of dissatisfaction and litigation. In Russia, although their hospital standard is fairly good, most of the primary medical care is given by nurses or technicians, and although this is moderately good there is not enough high quality professional supervision.

We have heard a great deal about China and about some of their medical methods. There is no doubt about the beneficial results of diet and exercise. Recently in Canada the Department of National Health and Welfare brought out a report on the state of nutrition in Canada. Nutrition may not in reality be as bad as it sounds in that no comparative studies have been carried out in other countries. On the other hand, there is no doubt that a program of physical fitness and diet would be very beneficial to Canadians. I should like to sound a word of warning about adopting acupuncture as a big step forward. I think it has some useful value, but if we are not careful it could become another type of quack medical treatment or gimmick.

This is not exactly on the subject of this bill but I should like also to warn that physical fitness and diet alone will not prevent disease. They may help a few individuals to live a little longer but it will really remain for scientific knowledge to alleviate the multitude of illnesses which cannot be prevented. It will also be necessary to make sure that medical standards of excellence are continually raised instead of being allowed to deteriorate.

Finally, the main reason for bringing forward the amendments is simply that at least six provinces do not wish to include dental auxiliaries in this act until further study has been made and the wishes of these bodies have been fully explored. However, all provincial and federal dental bodies wish to see a uniform examination board structure so that dental practitioners and specialists can take that board's examinations and practise in any province in Canada. This embodies, of course, the principle of portability. In other words, I should like Bill S-7 to proceed to committee for discussion of the proposed amendments which would separate dental auxiliaries from the dentists so far as control of examinations is concerned. I think it should be recognized that the medical profession and their auxiliaries cannot be separated very widely. The same thing goes for dentists and their auxiliaries. It is my hope that this is one step only in the process of organizing the dental profession properly.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when one thinks of the professions and occupations that are represented in this House, it seems strange that we do not have a dentist. We have a number of members who are quite capable of pulling boners but no one who is able to pull teeth.

Frankly, this is a bill that contains a number of matters about which I do not claim to be knowledgeable, and I confess that one quick look at it, especially after listening to the remarks of the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton), makes me feel that we should not be asked at this point, by any decision that we make, to give the bill full endorsation. However, I have no objection to its being passed so that it can be sent to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders, and I was pleased to hear from the hon. member for Welland that a number of amendments will be considered at that stage.

To begin with, I find an error right in the preamble. I do not want to suggest that their honours in the other place are not alert, but I find in lines 4 and 5 of the preamble in English the following phrase: "and it is expedition to grant the prayer of the petition". When I look at the French version I find, even from what I know of French, that apparently the phrase should be: "and it is expedient to grant the prayer of the petition". However, I am a little surprised that a bill should pass all readings in the other place, come here and still have that error in it.

I am also concerned about the fact that there is no reference in the bill to denturists. Even to mention denturists is to allude to the fact that there is some contention in this area. I should like to know what we are doing with respect to that. I notice that the bill makes frequent reference to provincial provisions, to provincial licensing and to matters of jurisdiction. I note also that the bill, in its main body, has five clauses which seem to make a new piece of legislation. But then clause 5 of the bill amends Chapter 69 of the Statutes of 1952. First, I wondered why there was no reference to the Revised Statutes of 1970, but I suppose Chapter 69 of the Statutes of 1952 was probably a private bill and therefore was not carried forward into the Revised Statutes of Canada for 1972. I am simply underlining the point that it seems to me there are some questions about this bill, and it would be wrong to suggest that if we let it through second reading at this stage we are giving it a final approval.

I understand that when it does get to committee, not only will there be amendments that the sponsors will seek to make but that representatives of the Department of National Health and Welfare will express their concern and may have some amendments to suggest. It is on that basis, namely, that we accept it as a reasonable request that the bill go to committee, that we are prepared that this be done, but I hope the bill will be given in committee a thorough examination and the exhaustive study that we, nonprofessionals that we are, are not in a position to give it here in the House. We all know about dentists; we have been to them and we know what they do to us, so we cannot but wonder what they are asking for in this bill. Perhaps that can be found out in the committee.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to add a couple of thoughts on the bill before us today, Bill S-7, which is being put before the House by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton). First of all, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Welland for bringing this bill forward. It has been on the order paper since early last spring, and I know that he has spent a great deal of time in consultations with the Department of National Health and Welfare, with provincial bodies and with the various groups which are included in this bill, which not only includes the general practitioner dentist but the specialist as well as the dental auxiliaries.

I believe the question raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was about the term "denturist". I believe the term "dental auxiliary" is often used in the same context. I would like to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Welland. He is a distinguished member of the medical profession and a distinguished surgeon. He has carried on a large practice in his home county for many years, so it is most fitting that he should be here promoting the bill which is before us today. Certainly, the ramifications of and the benefits from this bill, provided it is passed and that the national body is established, would be far reaching throughout the country.

The bill, as I mentioned earlier, would provide a national standard for the dental profession, both the general practitioners and the specialists as well as the auxiliaries. As the hon. member for Welland indicated, since the bill was first introduced there has been an exhaustive and extensive consultation between the department and the various groups throughout the country. He indicated also that several of the provinces—I believe six—do not feel it would be wise to have this national dental examining board include dental auxiliaries. Certainly, we do not have to read the daily newspapers extensively to note that there is a considerable debate going on in many of the provincial legislatures on this subject at present. Some provinces have opted for the denturists and those groups to be under the wing of the dental profession, and others for their establishment as a separate body.

In a news release put out by the Department of National Health and Welfare on August 16, 1972, the department endorsed the recommendations of the Wells Committee. I should like to read some excerpts from that release:

National Health and Welfare Minister John Munro today, on the advice of the Dominion Council of Health, which met on April 26 and 27, 1972, endorsed the principles expressed in the Report of the Wells Ad Hoc Committee on Dental Auxiliaries which dealt with matters relating to employment, training and regulation of dental manpower.

He also noted the Council's recommendation that governments examine the report in detail and implement its recommendations in accordance with their respective priorities. These priorities would include consideration of a dental program for children encompassing prevention, education and treatment.

The Ad Hoc Committee was a multi-disciplinary committee of lay and professional persons established in June 1968 under the chairmanship of the Honourable Dalton C. Wells, Chief Justice of Ontario, with the full co-operation of the Canadian Dental Association. Their report contained several recommendations covering such fields as the qualifications of dental assistants, hygienists and technicians, their training, education and experience as well as a full range of more responsible duties to allow them to contribute more effectively to the dental health requirements of this nation.

● (1730)

In the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Dental Auxiliaries, 1970, the Wells committee, several recommendations are made and I shall refer to some of them. For instance:

Recommendation 22: That a Canadian Council on Dental Auxiliaries be established.

Dental Examining Board

Recommendation 23: That the membership of the Canadian Council on Dental Auxiliaries consist of representatives from each of the provincial councils on dental auxiliaries and representatives, including dentists, named by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Recommendation 24: That the Canadian Council on Dental Auxiliaries deal with matters such as national certification and accreditation of educational and training institutions for dental auxiliaries.

The committee report suggested that there be a separate body. I quite agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that some changes will have to be made to the bill in committee and I agree with what the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton) is proposing, that the bill go forward to committee for thorough study. I believe there will be a number of amendments along the lines of not taking in the dental auxiliaries and those groups under this national examining board but leaving that question to be decided at a later date. Whether they would some day come in under this national examining board or, as the Wells committee recommended, they would be a separate body could be decided at a later date.

The bill before us will certainly have many advantages for the professional dentists and the dental specialists, in that once they have completed their training they will be able to take the national board examination. As I understand this, it will qualify them to be licensed in the province in which they plan to practice. This would be a great advantage and would ensure the portability of this professional group. Portability is an important aspect as there is a shortage of professional people in this field. I graduated in veterinary medicine some years ago in the province of Ontario. When I wanted to practise in the province of Saskatchewan, I had to take the provincial board examination there. This is just one more thing that the new graduate from university has to do. A national board examination would entitle the graduate to be licenced to practice in any province.

There are many professional men and women who come to this country from other lands. Under our constitution it is the responsibility of the provincial bodies to license them to practice their profession. It is very difficult for every province to have the complete mechanism necessary for testing these graduates as they come from hundreds of universities all over the world. In the dental profession this one national examining body would become familiar with the various universities, their curriculums, their clinical training programs and the adaptability of their graduates to the Canadian professional scene. An expertise would be developed by the national examining board which would be beneficial in our total health program.

I believe that a great deal of consultation and co-ordination between the various groups went into the preparation of this bill. The departmental officials who worked on the bill and co-operated with the professional associations should be congratulated for their efforts.

Those are all the items I wanted to mention, Mr. Speaker. Changes will be made in the bill in committee, and I am confident that the departmental officials will want to give their assistance. I believe there is general agreement between the various professional groups and the sponsor of the bill, the hon. member for Welland, to make changes in the bill. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre also mentioned two or three items in his remarks which should be considered in committee. I would add my support, Mr. Speaker, so that this bill may move to committee for further study.

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, we have no objection to seeing this bill pass to the committee for further study. The bill was initiated in the other place, and it is good to see the other place doing some work and having something with which to fill their time. Everybody thinks they do not have very much to do, but I recently had a conversation with a senator and he thinks they have far too much to do. It is all a matter of opinion, I suppose.

If this bill will assist in any way to establish more dentists in small towns throughout the country, or make it easier for dentists to be brought from one part of the country to another, I would not want to do anything to stop its passage. We need more dentists in small towns. We know that they generally head for the larger towns and are booked up months ahead.

We would expect the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton), who presented the bill to this House, to make sure that the proper personnel will appear before the committee so they can tell us why the bill should go through and explain any changes that they think should be made to it. I can assure the House that we will have competent people on the committee. With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, we see no reason why this bill should not go to committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The private members' hour having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 o'clock p.m.

At 5:43 the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

PROTECTION OF PRIVACY BILL

CREATION OF OFFENCES RELATED TO INTERCEPTION OF PRIVATE COMMUNICATIONS BY CERTAIN DEVICES

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-176, to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs; and motion No. 2 (Mr. Atkey).

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, just before five o'clock I had been saying that you could approach Bill C-176 in two ways, the catch-all way of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) as set out in the definition section of the bill, or the catalogue way, as suggested by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) in his amendment. He wishes to stipulate offences with respect to which authorization should be given. I point out that part of the definition in the bill is included in the amendment proposed by the hon. member for St. Paul's. Part of clause 2 on page 2 provides:

—"offence" means an offence created by an act of the Parliament of Canada for which an offender may be prosecuted by indictment and includes any such offence that is alleged or suspected or that there are reasonable grounds to believe may be committed—

The last few words of the hon. member's proposed amendment read, "any such offence that is alleged or suspected or that there are reasonable grounds to believe may be committed". Thus, the definition of "offence" in the latter part of the proposed amendment is very close to the definition contained in the bill. It seems to me that both the bill and the amendment are too sweeping in their definitions, and that makes me unhappy. Why do I say that?

Consider the United States approach to this question. They started from a narrow base which included a few offences, those being the more serious offences. Our Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs studied the problem and catalogued the offences which had been covered by the U.S. approach: apparently they considered offences which carried a penalty of ten years imprisonment or more. It was considered that the United States approach was too narrow. Other serious offences were included in later bills which were passed by the U.S. Congress. We have seen what has happened with regard to the application of the U.S. bill. When it was enforced many people experienced severe and serious abuse.

One feature of the motion proposed by the hon. member for St. Paul's gives me particular concern. He wishes the police to obtain authorization for wiretaps when there is evidence of organized crime activity. He suggests that near the end of his amendment. I presume that he included that part in order to gain some support not only from his party but from other parts of the House. I submit that it detracts seriously from the main thrust of his amendment, which would catalogue the more serious offences with respect to which authorization for wiretapping may be given.

May I point out that the spokesman for the Canadian Civil Liberties Association appeared before the committee.

His position as to the conditions in which wiretaps should be allowed was very simple. He suggested a test, namely, that only when there is imminent peril to life or limb should the wiretap be allowed. I almost agree with that approach when I consider the catch-all approach of the minister and the catalogue approach of the hon. member for St. Paul's.

The proposition that authorization for wiretapping should be taken seriously is generally accepted by all members of the House. We have had experience with wiretaps in Canada and the United States. Permit me to refer to a recent report by the American Civil Liberties Union. It is written by Herman Schwartz, professor of law, State University of New York, at Buffalo. He sets out figures and statistics relating to wiretaps. One of his statements is as follows:

The bulk of this wiretapping and bugging is now used for gambling offences, despite the original claims that it was necessary primarily for serious crimes like homicide, kidnapping and espionage: in three years, there has been only one federal device installed for kidnapping and none for either homicide or espionage; gambling installations accounted for about 90 per cent of all the federal installations in 1971.

It can be seen from the American experience that wiretaps have been primarily used for gambling installations. He then sets forth the figures with regard to combined federal and state installations. For six months' periods in 1968, 1969, 1970 and 1971 there were 1,889 orders given with regard to wiretaps. There were 1,839 installations. There were 77,227 people bugged and 1,118,912 conversations overheard. That indicates the pervasiveness of wiretapping in the United States and the number of people it involves.

In Canada, we have had a shorter experience. Evidence that came before the committee indicated that in 1972 the Royal Canadian Mounted Police had 663 installations. From those they obtained only two convictions. That is a conviction rate of one-third of one per cent. In Toronto, there were 294 installations in 1972. Although I do not have a record of the convictions, the number of people tapped and the total conversations overheard, the taps by the RCMP and the Toronto metropolitan police force almost equalled the total orders given in a period of about 3½ years in the United States. This indicates how serious this matter is.

In his presentation this afternoon, the Minister of Justice stated we must have a clear and definite approach so that the law enforcement officers will know what they are about to do and what they should do. If there was one thing that Ramsey Clark brought before the committee, it was the costliness, corruptness and corrosiveness of wiretapping. The costliness in time and money is overwhelming when you have police officers making taps for an extended period of time. The corruptness is evident in the experience across the border. The corrosiveness will be experienced in the relationship between the public and the police in regard to attitudes and morale.

What the government needs is a system of law to protect the safety and freedom of individuals without resorting to unfair and immoral practices. The Minister of Justice must not only protect the law enforcement officers; he has a clear duty to be the protector of the public interest. I have the feeling, whether rightly or wrongly—I hope it is wrongly—that the thrust of the minister's speech and his attitude in the past with regard to this bill and its passing has been that he protects rather strongly the law enforcement officers and puts in a secondary position the protection of the public interest. It is necessary that the Minister of Justice give leadership in this field. If the price of liberty is constant vigilance, the price of freedom is the full protection of the individual.

I do not find it difficult to reject the definition of "offence" that the minister submitted in the bill. However, I find it rather difficult to accept the definition contained in the amendment, for the reasons I have given. I find it far easier to accept the definition set forth by the Canadian Civil Liberties Union. I do not have much choice in this matter. When it comes to a vote, I will have to support the amendment put forward by the hon. member for St. Paul's.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, by a very fortunate coincidence, the second report of the Law Reform Commission of Canada, sent to our offices just the other day, contained an admonition from the very distinguished chairman. In passing, may I say it is one of the most clearly written reports that has come out of commissions or groups reporting to governments and parliament for a long time. I wish that more government reports were written as eloquently and as straightforwardly as this one. The report begins with the following admonition:

"Bad laws", said Burke, "are the worst form of tyranny."

Mr. Justice Hartt goes on to say:

They are a tyranny every freedom-loving nation must fight to prevent.

I would not for one minute presume to suggest that the minister or the government are advancing bad law. However, I do say it is worthwhile that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs has spent a fair amount of time on what I might call a cross-party approach, because vote after vote in that committee contained no party label. I can vouch for that because I was there throughout most of the proceedings.

Surely the mission of the committee has been to improve a bit of draftsmanship. I always wonder why people, ministers or anyone else, feel they must defend to the last what is really a series of words on paper. I think many laws are better after they have gone through the mill of the committee. The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) is here. He will recall one of the prime examples of an extremely bad law was the attempt to deal with young offenders. That law came to our committee so badly drafted that the committee of the last parliament rejected it, as did most of the people in the field who knew anything about it. It was not rejected by any plot on the part of New Democrats or Conservatives. It was rejected by the committee. I thought that was to the credit of the parliamentary committee system. Most of its members, I think, approached the examination of the bill in a desire to improve it, if we could, in the light of the experience many of us have had. In my own party there happen to be three former ministers of justice, each one of whom has held responsibility for law enforcement within the two largest provinces. I hope they were able to add to the effectiveness of the committee's work by reason of their experience.

● (2020)

We cannot be spokesmen for any one of the various groups who appeared before that committee. We are not carrying the brief of the Police Association, neither are we carrying the brief of the Civil Liberties Association, much as I respect the Civil Liberties Association—and I am a member of one such association. If I may say so, we have a larger responsibility. Our brief as MPs can and should differ from the submissions put forward by the various groups who do not have responsibility of office or of enacting and administering particular statutes.

One of the most tragic and outworn slogans of the day is that of "law and order". I am coming to the point at which I resist almost any slogan whether it be "law and order", "the just society", "one Canada" or anything else. I think they represent dangerous simplifications of very complex issues. "Law and order" has been a particularly abused slogan. What we should seek is to give the police of this country a chance really to do something about the maintenance of order and justice within the rule of law. The rule of law in this case involves giving the police a straightforward method they can use. Our amendments are put forward in good faith to this end. We do not find complicated legal procedures outlined in this bill. Police associations across the country should really not find much difficulty in getting the orders they require.

The minister says the bill is a great addition to the law. I reject the word "great". It is a good addition to the law, if passed with some of the amendments we have moved. It will be a good addition to the law, rather late in the history of law enforcement in this country. I believe the law now proposed is substantially better than it was when originally presented and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

I personally get upset when people claim we are being soft on criminals or that we are resisting the well motivated wishes of the police forces of this country to do something about crime, simply because we are taking some time in which to study this law. That does not follow in any way. Max Cohen put it rather well, I thought, in an article which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of June 7 of this year under the heading "Justice in search of itself".

> Law enforcement men and agencies are by nature quite conservative. What shall be the balancing instruments: the liberal politician, private watchdogs from the universities to welfare agencies, varieties of ombudsmen together with the legislature itself, all continually monitoring the operation of a system?
> It is clear that we cannot go on much longer without insisting on a high priority of intelligence and resources to be applied to the classical areas in the administration of justice.

I think if we had spent—here I use the collective "we"—a great deal more money and effort in trying to improve the professional status of the various police forces we would have been much better served. This applies not only to the RCMP, which is under the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General, but also to the city and metropolitan police forces. The police, it seems to me, are really the unsung heroes of the age. We expect so much of them, as Professor Cohen said. We ask them to be nursemaids in cases of the most minor traffic violations, and in the next minute they are supposed to deal with the most sophisticated aspects of syndicated crime.

The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence), the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), and I myself exercised, for various lengths of time, jurisdiction over provincial police or their RCMP equivalent. I for one have never called a policeman a pig, and I never expect to. None of us would, I hope, ever think of doing such a thing. What we seek is to enhance the police whether they be in a village or in the largest metropolitan areas. What we seek in this bill is an instrumentality through which they can by way of an application to a judge operate effectively under the rule of law. I commend the minister for the straightforward way in which application can be made, a simple way in which the police may in certain well-defined circumstances invade otherwise inviolable personal privacy.

I myself welcome the time which has been taken on this measure. The minister speaks of a great addition to the law; I think those were his words. Yes, perhaps he can say that after the bill has been read the third time; but I think the law will be better because of the time spent on it; I think it will be better because of the amendments many members on all sides have proposed and voted upon in committee, without political stripe. I for one am disappointed that there should be demands to circumvent what has been done in a committee which has been notable for a very low partisan quotient. The minister may rue the day when he set out to defeat, by some of the amendments he has proposed, the report of the majority of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

I hope we can agree on amendments which will make some of the proposals advanced by the minister acceptable to the majority of the House. I suggest to him frankly that at the moment, on the record at least, they are not acceptable to the majority of hon. members. As the minister knows, we have tried hard to find some way out of the dilemma. I trust the minister is not too upset by some of the editorials and press reports which have appeared on the subject of this bill. I think it is an extremely healthy sign that on an issue such as this, the proposed invasion of privacy, or protection of privacy—whatever phrase commends itself—there should have been so much outspoken comment one way or the other. I think it is a good thing there is still some sense of outrage in the world.

I for one am not overly alarmed at some of the comments concerning this legislation. I would be particularly upset if there had been no comment about such a serious and, to use the minister's phrase, great addition to the law. As many members who preceded me said, this bill will bring about a fundamental change in the liberty of the subject. No matter what adjective we use, we have to proceed with caution.

I hope that in the days that follow when we are discussing this bill, our approach will be that we are here to improve this legislation substantially. On behalf of the party for whom I am proud to speak, I can say that that has been our objective from the day this bill received second reading and then went to the committee. I will not be at all worried if the minister goes out from this place when the bill receives royal assent and calls it a great addition to the law, or whatever expression he likes to use, because as a result of the time spent debating it and, if I may say so, the amendments the standing committee made, a standing committee whose main objective was to improve the law and not take partisan advantage, it will be a better law.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in reviewing the amendments to this bill, my hon. colleague who has just spoken dealt with the importance of the bill in the general scheme of things. He mentioned this was one piece of legislation, perhaps the only piece of legislation, that we will deal with this session that affects the liberty of the subject and the rights of Canadians to privacy. The bill will affect even communications between Canadians and their members of parliament or their professional advisers in other capacities.

Since this bill is one of the most significant advances made in this branch of the law, it seems to me it is the most important and fundamental piece of legislation with which we, as representatives of the Canadian people, will deal in this session, and indeed it may well be for some sessions to come. This bill will permit the interception of conversations that pass between one subject and another without their knowledge. Certainly they do not have the opportunity of giving their consent to such interceptions, and in this sense the bill is a great leap forward in our criminal law. On the one hand, it makes lawful for the first time that which can only be described as an invasion of privacy. At the same time it gives to law enforcement agencies the right to take advantage of the latest electronic gadgetry in pursuing their work, namely, the protection of the public. So, as I say, certainly it is a great addition to the law.

However, improperly used the practice of wiretapping can be one of the most harmful and fear provoking mechanisms that one can imagine. There is nothing more important to us in days of invasions of our privacy than the maintenance of some element of individuality. Like the hon. member who has just spoken, I believe that the police forces of the country should have at their disposal the most up to date methods for detecting crime. Be that as it may, there is no reason—at least no reason I can think of—for police forces not complying with the law.

A law that will permit this kind of intrusion ought not to be one that the police forces need not comply with. I had the honour to be at one time a Crown counsel in this city. During that period of time I worked with the police force in this city as well as the provincial force, and I hold them in the highest respect. I also hold many others in very high respect. But this respect does not give me the licence to say that police forces can do what they want, that there ought to be no sanction against the actions of police forces, that the end must always justify the means in the matter of police work.

In my respectful judgment, the rights of Canadians about which we are talking are of such importance that it is not too much to ask the respected agencies in our country which are charged with the protection of the public to obtain the consent of a judge before invading the privacy and personal rights which we in this country have and which, I suppose, make us different from those people who live in totalitarian states.

This afternoon the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), when speaking to this particular amendment indicated the extent to which this type of evidence can be used. Not only can it be used in regard to the offence that is being investigated; it can also be used in income tax cases, excise tax cases and in all cases where the Crown in the right of Canada may have an interest.

As the hon. member who has just spoken said, members of parliament have a duty to examine this legislation in light of submissions that are made to them, using their own qualities of reason and their own thoughts about what is right for the community. Members of parliament ought not to come to this House or to committees of the House carrying with them any particular bias or preference in regard to the views of any interested group in the community. I think this has happened in regard to this bill, a bill that creates a new right by creating an offence. It gives for the first time the right recognized in law for the police to interfere with privacy, and for the protection of the public it also creates an offence. I do not believe that police forces or individual groups in the community, because of their position, deserve a special status before the law.

I welcome the legislation as a basic enhancement of the powers of the police which I think the police forces of this country require. I hope those who consider the legislation and its importance will recognize this as an enhancement and an improvement of the powers of the police, and will agree that as we tread for the first time into invasion of the privacy of Canadians we should tread softly and carefully and should not succumb to what a previous speaker referred to as the passion of law and order. We should make sure not to adopt the fallacy that law and order and the maintenance of civil rights should be considered as exclusive of the rights of the public.

When we are dealing with law and order we are dealing with civil rights, not just the apprehension of criminals. We are also dealing with the protection of the public. Perhaps one fallacy that exists when we deal with these matters is that we think in terms of law and order as it applies to someone else. We should think of law and order as it applies to each of us, so that while we are giving the police forces of this country this new power, we should move forward slowly, with consideration of the consequences and with our minds always open in respect of the protection of the public as well as the enhancement of the powers of our police forces and law enforcement agencies.

As I look at the law as presented by the Minister of Justice to this House, I see it as an advancement. But without the amendment with which we are now dealing, and the amendments advanced by members of this and other parties which we will deal with later, it will not be the best law this parliament can produce at this time. It ought to be the object of us all to produce the best law, even if it takes a bit of time; and it ought to be the best in terms of balancing the needed powers of the state and the rights of the subject. In my respectful submission, without the amendments which are before this House to be dealt with during this debate, the law as proposed by the Minister of Justice will not be the best law in both these important areas.

We will have an opportunity to speak on a number of other amendments. However, I think it is important at this time that we consider the extent of the power we will be giving law enforcement agencies. What we ask of them, when granting this power in a free society, is that they in turn observe the law in terms of the protection it provides the citizens of this country. There is nothing in this bill, particularly in the amendments which are proposed, that in any way limits the investigatory powers of the police forces. I suggest it maintains them and at the same time protects the public. We ought not lose sight of either point of view during the consideration of this legislation.

Mrs. Albanie Morin (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief on this particular amendment because I feel we have lost too much time already. What upsets me more and more is the fact that the number of crimes committed in Canada has been increasing steadily in the last few years. Our penitentiaries are bulging at the seams, and plans are being made to construct more and more elaborate penitentiaries; yet legislation is being drawn up and amendments are being introduced to limit more and more the powers of the police forces. Everyone is up in arms because of the Watergate affair, but hon. members must not forget that the Watergate affair was brought on by politicians and not by the police.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mrs. Morin: Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we must ask ourselves what should come first since the crime rate increases in Canada and terrorism—we must not forget—is always creeping in Quebec. Must we first of all prevent crime or invade more and more the people's privacy? What must take precedence? Is it crime prevention or the invasion of privacy?

I find that the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) bears too much on the definition of the word "offence". If I remember well my law studies, it seems to me that when you restrict the definition as he does, this leads to trouble. I would much prefer that the bill remain in its present form and that the definition of the word "offence" remain broad.

[English]

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in considering amending the bill before us I should like to lend my support to those who have already stated we must be cautious in amending any legislation which has the net effect of taking away rights which have literally taken us hundreds of years to secure. The section in the legislation before us dealing with the definition of "offence" is relatively broad, and I feel that the amendment proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey), is wise in that it defines more precisely what we in this House hopefully intend when we move to amend the bill.

I am sympathetic to the problems of the police and, like many members of this House, I am alarmed at any suggestion that we may in fact have organized crime in this country, or that our laws are in any way hampering the police in their investigation and prosecution of those who may be conducting unlawful activities or involved in organized crime. I would stress that there is a delicate balance in these matters which we in this parliament should never ignore. I feel it is very easy to overreact. Certainly the government which is still in office in this country overreacted in one instance. I hope we will never tolerate a similar overreaction which results in the taking away of privileges and rights from people without cause.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (2050)

Mr. Stevens: Of those who say that this limits the legislation before us, I would ask, why do they not want it limited? Have they no concern for the rights of Canadians? If we are trying specifically to assist the police in better ways of bringing to justice those who are involved in organized crime, why do we not support an amendment to the legislation that simply defines that this is exactly what we are trying to do? I urge members of this House to read the amendment proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for St. Paul's. I think he has in a very definitive way spelled out the crimes we will tolerate in respect of this new activity. He specifically stipulates what the crimes must be and states:

—where there are reasonable grounds to believe that such pattern of offences is part of the activities of organized crime—

That, to me, is the main question that is before us when we consider this amendment. We are attempting to give, in a very limited sense—I believe we are rightfully limiting it—a right to our police forces to use certain activities which heretofore have not been welcomed, in the hope that it may assist them in dealing with organized crime. For that reason I do not intend to speak at length: there are many amendments before us. I believe it is important that we limit the rights we are talking about. It is particularly important to limit these rights when dealing with an arrogant government such as we now have in this country.

An hon. Member: Are you afraid of the police?

Mr. Stevens: Yes, I am.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am against the use of bugging devices and all types of wiretapping in any circumstances, and I believe that we could protect the liberty and security of the citizens by avoiding these methods.

I am opposed to wiretapping for two main reasons, first on moral grounds and second, for reasons of ineffectiveness.

As regards the moral grounds, Mr. Speaker, I believe that nobody has ever claimed that wiretapping is not in itself an immoral and degrading act. And if we want people to respect the law, the first thing to do is to make it a moral law with high ideals rather that stating that the end justifies the means.

On this point, I was influenced by the statement made by the former Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Ramsey Clark, before the committee on justice and legal affairs, who knew from his experience in the John Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson administrations, the results of a law somewhat similar to the legislation now before us, and even harsher in some respects.

Many of those who spoke in favour of this bill said that they wanted to help the police. On this point, Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote what Mr. Clark, who was in charge of security in the United States, told us. He said, and I quote:

[English]

I think it hurts the police in many ways: I think it makes them defensive; I think it makes the public more hostile and suspicious of them, and of their performance, and of what they are doing; I think it makes them justify things that do not need to be justified; it isolates them. I think it also corrupts.

[Translation]

To those who argue that we are going to help the police, I say, Mr. Speaker, that this legislation will have just the opposite effect.

As for immorality, remember the first case brought before the Supreme Court of the United States, namely the Olmstead case . . .

[English]

—in which Oliver Wendell Holmes described wiretapping as a dirty business . . . It is far more than a dirty business: it tinkers with the foundations for individual integrity.

How else are the people going to know what is going on? Finally, what happens? Everybody thinks he is tapped and bugged. He really does.

[Translation]

And right here in parliament, Mr. Speaker, nothing in the law could prevent someone from phoning an hon. member and registering his conversation. I would like to quote from Mr. Ramsey Clark's testimony previously cited in parliament, in which he stated:

[English]

I come further because of my great concern about government lawlessness, the excessive use of force, violence, treachery and secrecy, and because I believe your fortunate country has a high opportunity and, with that, a high obligation to show the world that we can act fairly with safety.

[Translation]

Obviously, some may not be convinced of the immorality of wiretapping but, Mr. Speaker, I think, that in such a field human dignity and integrity require that we should refrain from resorting to such procedures, especially when the evidence shows that they are inefficient.

In the United States, in spite of stricter legislation than the bill introduced today, the scandals are of common knowledge and I do not refer to what is going on here, since the legislation was almost non-existent, but abuses at home as abroad are entirely unfortunate.

Consider, Mr. Speaker, that in recent months an aide of the president of the United States admitted that he used wiretapping to register a conversation with the attorney general of the United States. We know also that the advocate of non-violence, Martin Luther King, was also the victim of such procedure. We are also acquainted with several other scandals. I think, Mr. Speaker, that we come to the conclusion that this is a really degrading method.

When Mr. Ramsey Clark, as attorney general of the United States, prohibited the use of that procedure, the statistics have shown that the arrests and convictions of criminals, especially in organized crime, had tripled during those years. And I could quote some examples.

● (2100)

[English]

When you look at the report in the administrative office of the United States courts for 1972 you will find places like California where no wiretaps were applied for. It is a pretty big place.

It has almost the same population as Canada.

There is a lot of activity out there. There is pretty effective crime control and crime fighting. It is every bit as effective, or more so, than New York city. You find Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania—whole places that have had a lot of organized crime but no wiretapping. And they can be effective. You find almost two-thirds of all the wiretapping in two states, New York and New Jersey. It is a matter of habit, and it is a very unfortunate habit. I do not think you will find more effective organized criminal activity than in the New York city area.

Where wiretapping is very common.

[Translation]

I said earlier that during all the years he was in charge of security, the attorney general of the United States had not allowed the use of those methods, and the number of charges increased. He mentioned cases where a staff of more than 30 policemen was needed to tap a single person. He explained how several American cities, by making the same human efforts in professionalizing their police force, had obtained far quicker results and at a much lower cost.

So much for the immorality and inefficiency of that practice. I could also mention the numerous scandals that arose. For example, in the Ellsberg case in the United States, it took two years before someone admitted in court that the accused had been submitted to wiretapping. That, among other things made the state lose its case.

And as Mr. Ramsay Clark said:

[English]

You will find, I think, as we have, that wiretapping is always associated with scandals.

[Translation]

And he shared his experience with us. He stated that in his opinion much better results had been obtained with these police forces on which both money and efforts had been spent to give their members a professional training and this, without jeopardizing in any way the individuals' dignity and integrity.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the reasons why I am against wiretapping. I feel that the amendment introduced by the opposition is a step in the right direction, because the bill in its present form appears to me to be much too wide in scope in respect of crimes known as indictable offences which may entail electronic wiretapping; on the other hand, I am absolutely against any bugging in all other areas, especially as regards domestic matters.

That is the way I see it, Mr. Speaker. I feel that, taking into account the experience of the United States where a law such as this existed, scandals multiplied. And when I think of the United States where, according to the evidence we have heard, only the attorney general of the United States:

[English]

Only the Attorney General of the United States is authorized to sign a wiretapping operation, while in Canada it might be someone with a special authorization, whether from the Minister of Justice of Canada or the Attorney General of any province. I think this is too many people. I just want to remind the House that Edgar J. Hoover, the former chief of the FBI, during most of his career never took the responsibility of signing a wiretap; he always asked the Attorney General himself to do it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, considering the fact that our population is ten times smaller than that of the United States, where problems related to crime are much more important, I suggest that the passage of an even wider legislation than the American one seems to be a nonsense. I believe that the causes of crime are well known, especially social inequities, and its remedies are complex. It is not through such methods that we will solve the problem. The comparison between the advantages and disadvantages shows that in order to achieve security in this country and maintain our citizens' freedom, we should spend more money on our police forces' training rather than resort to a system under which our citizens will never be sure that they are not bugged, and, on the other hand, policemen themselves will be suspected by their fellow-citizens.

Those are the reasons why, Mr. Speaker, as I said at the outset of my remarks, I am in conscience opposed to any form of electronic surveillance.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Fairweather: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) has asked that motion No. 3, standing in his name, wait until tomorrow. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), and the spokesman for the NDP, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), were kind enough to agree to this. Presumably, then, the right hon. gentleman could proceed after orders of the day tomorrow. We might, therefore, stand motion No. 2 and start on the next block of amendments. Is that agreeable?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Did the hon. member ask that motion No. 3 be stood, or should we put motion No. 2 and then proceed to motion No. 5?

Mr. Fairweather: Perhaps it could be stood. The mover had to be away tonight at a speaking engagement. Surely we can vote on these amendments in a block.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will listen to whatever the House tells the Chair to listen to. There does not seem to be disagreement about this.

Mr. Lang: As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the procedure would be that the question would be put, and if there were a division it would be postponed to a time to be set later, so there would be no question of having the division now. My understanding is that we would then proceed to the next group, that is to say, omit the amendment in the name of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and move on to the one in the name of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), continue with that and then go back to the one standing in the name of the hon. member for Prince Albert.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. McKinley: Can we move on to the next group and stand amendment No. 3? I understand the agreement was that beginning with government orders tomorrow, we would start with amendment No. 3.

Mr. Baker: The situation as explained by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McKinley) is as I understand it. There is to be no doubt, as I understand the agreement, that the right hon. member for Prince Albert will start immediately after orders of the day tomorrow with his amendment, and that the debate on his amendment will continue, regardless of what happens tonight, until that matter is completed. If we start on another amendment tonight, then that amendment will be suspended until the motion standing in the name of the right hon. gentleman is completed. That is my understanding of the agreement. If there has not been an agreement in this respect, then we will continue: we are prepared to deal with the amendment that is before the House, standing in the name of the hon. member for St. Paul's.

● (2110)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps the Chair should state what it understands has been understood. If I am wrong I will no doubt be corrected, as has sometimes happened. The debate on motion No. 2 is completed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I complete my understanding of what I understand, and then no doubt hon. members will correct me. The debate on motion No. 2 has been completed, as I understand it.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The proceedings on motion No. 2 have been suspended for the time being; the proceedings on motion No. 3 will not proceed tonight, but immediately after orders of the day tomorrow. At that time motion No. 3, standing in the name of the right hon. member for Prince Albert, will be called. Then it is suggested that we now proceed to a group of motions in the name of the hon. member for New Westminster, namely, Nos. 5, 6, 9, 10, 14, 15 and 21, which would take us through the rest of the evening. Am I correct in this understanding?

Mr. Leggatt: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for New Westminster rises on a point of order.

Mr. Leggatt: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the amendments you dealt with before you came to the package of amendments that I have submitted deal with the emergency permit section of the bill. Now there are three amendments on the order paper dealing with the emergency permits, Nos. 3, 4 and 12. I would ask that if we are going to stand Nos. 3 and 4, we stand No. 12 as well. All that package dealing with the question of emergency permits should surely be dealt with at the same time. There may be some minor differences between the amendments, but I think they are very minor. I believe the business of the House would be expedited if you took the whole package and dealt with them tomorrow, grouping No. 12 with Nos. 3 and 4.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), on the same point of order.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I would be concerned, without studying the point, whether motion No. 12 ought to be dealt with in a block if we are saying it ought to be dealt with, in terms of a vote, with items Nos. 3 and 4. If we are going to do that, I would certainly want it clearly understood that we would not necessarily agree. I see the hon. member for New Westminster agrees with that. Subject to that, Mr. Speaker, I do not see any difficulty in dealing with this matter. However, I must file this caveat: if some difficulty did develop on this point, I should like the opportunity to deal with the matter later in continuing with this point of order. But I really do not see any difficulty.

Mr. Woolliams: As I understand the agreement—and we are not trying to delay matters—it is that these first two amendments stand. There is one point in amendment No. 2 that concerns me. There is just one section of murder mentioned. That may be influenced by another bill just finished in the other place. I do not know whether that is the concern of the minister. I would ask that motions Nos. 1 and 2 be stood. If tomorrow we come back and speak on these matters, we are not trying to delay things. If the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) will co-operate with our party and the other parties in this regard, I think you will see us move along very quickly on this bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before the minister takes part in the point of order, it is the feeling of my colleagues and the Chair that motions Nos. 3 and 4 should be dealt with separately simply because there were objections earlier today to dealing with them together. If that were the wish of the House and nobody pressed us to make a decision otherwise, I think motion No. 12 would be called in due course; I do not think that the hon. member for New Westminster need have any fears in that regard.

If we were to take the course proposed, whether understood or misunderstood by the Chair, we would leave motion No. 2 open to be completed, No. 3 would be stood, No. 4 would be stood and then we could proceed with the package that I understand the hon. member for New Westminster is agreeable to, namely, the seven motions in his name. That would leave us free to go to No. 3 tomorrow after orders of the day, when the right hon. member for Prince Albert can present his motion. We would then go back and complete No. 2 and carry on in logical sequence from there.

Mr. Baker: Is that an order of the House, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, hon. members have talked about agreements. I should make it clear that the only agreement I know anything about is that if we complete motion No. 2, then in the ordinary course—I expect we would, since hon. members said they wanted to move along—we would not proceed with No. 3 because of a certain understanding about it not being desirable to bring it forward tonight. I do not see the particular point in standing No. 2 in an incomplete state at this time; but I have no objection to agreeing, if it is agreeable to the hon. member for New Westminster, to interrupt his motion and return to No. 3 in the middle of that debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the point I was going to make is parallel to what the Minister of Justice has said. If we have completed the debate on No. 2, why do we need to stand it? It is completely agreed that any vote on it would be deferred. Could we not now call for the yeas and nays, and however it goes, five members probably will stand, and the vote on No. 2 will be deferred. Then we would proceed to the motions proposed by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unless there are members who still wish to speak on No. 2, it seems to me that this is the best way of proceeding. Of course, the votes are deferred until such time as Mr. Speaker calls them, or until the House leaders get together and suggest something that is agreeable to all members. But certainly that vote would not be taken tonight. If that is agreeable, I would put No. 2 and then we could go on to the package of seven motions in the name of the hon. member for New Westminister.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I would like No. 2 to be stood. Maybe I am the only one, but there is a technical point that I notice here. I am not prepared to speak on it tonight, but I should like to have the opportunity tomorrow. Surely I could do that. It could be stood and we could go on to the other package, and then the agreement with reference to the motion of the right hon. member for Prince Albert could be put into effect.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This would require the unanimous consent of the House. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has requested, regarding motion No. 2, that he be permitted to reserve his right to speak, or perhaps not to speak on it, until another occasion. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stanbury: Another filibuster.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then motions Nos. 3 and 4 are stood, with the agreement of the House, and it is also understood that No. 3 will be called immediately after orders of the day and routine proceedings are completed tomorrow. Is this also understood?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4 stood.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now proceed to the package in the name of the hon. member for New Westminster, motions Nos. 5, 6, 9, 10, 14, 15 and 21. It is the understanding of the Chair that the hon. member for New Westminster is agreeable that these be put together for the purpose of debate at report stage, and I gather nobody is opposed to this suggestion.

The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) moves motions Nos. 5, 6, 9, 10, 14, 15 and 21 as follows:

No. 5. That Bill C-176, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act, be amended in clause 2 by deleting the words "or an agent specially designated in writing for the purpose of this section" in lines 37 to 39 at page 3.

No. 6. That Bill C-176, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act, be amended in clause 2 by deleting lines 30 to 47 inclusive at page 3 and lines 1 to 37 inclusive at page 4.

No. 9. That Bill C-176, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act, be amended in clause 2 by deleting lines 38 to 46 inclusive at page 4, lines 1 to 46 inclusive at page 5 and lines 1 to 21 inclusive at page 6.

No. 10. That Bill C-176, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act, be amended in clause 2 by deleting lines 22 to 46 inclusive at page 6 and lines 1 to 7 inclusive at page 7.

No. 14. That Bill C-176, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act, be amended in clause 2 by deleting lines 1 to 8 inclusive at page 11.

No. 15. That Bill C-176, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act, be amended in clause 2 by deleting lines 18 to 39 inclusive at page 11 and lines 1 to 7 inclusive at page 12.

No. 21. That Bill C-176, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act be amended in clause 4 by deleting lines 5 to 8 inclusive at page 20.

● (2120)

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I will embark upon a brief explanation because I think that will suffice in showing what I had in mind in proposing these amendments. The present bill provides authorization for police to wiretap for purposes of the Official Secrets Act, the Criminal Code and for all indictable offences. The effect of the seven amendments standing in my name is this: they seek to remove authority for the police to wiretap for purposes of the Criminal Code. They would allow the provisions of the Official Secrets Act to prevail and if these amendments pass wiretapping for those purposes will still be permissible.

Let me explain first why I have excepted the Official Secrets Act. I listened carefully to the evidence Ramsey Clark gave before the committee. I think there is a rationale for considering the security of the state. For example, compare the state of international law with the state of law within a nation. It is important for the relationship between the police force and the population to be established: it is vital and important for the population to respect the police, respect the methods the police use and respect the laws which the police enforce. In international law we are in a different ball game. International law is at a very primitive level. Therefore, where the security of the state is concerned, I feel a legitimate exception can be made for the use of what I consider an immoral device for electronic surveillance.

Having said that, I wish to address a few remarks through you, Mr. Speaker, to the charming hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). She made a short address, a very interesting one, in which she told us why we need this bill. She said that we must really get down to the business of law and order, of apprehending criminals, and we must not throw roadblocks in the way of the police. That, I take it, was the substance of her remarks.

That is the rationale used by every totalitarian state in the world. If we are to have that kind of state, that kind of system, I will move out of the country. I hope the charming hon. member will consider most carefully the question of law and order from both sides. She must consider that respect for law and order will increase only if laws are worth respecting, and that in a society such as ours which depends on consensus the devices used to enforce law and order should be ones we can honour and respect and should not be ones of which we are ashamed.

Someone has said that mine is a purist position. I do not think it is. I think it really asks both sides of this question to be examined. When you have examined it carefully, I think you will come down on the side of a complete ban on wiretapping except in those cases noted. I speak for myself on this issue and not for the caucus of my party, which has other ideas on this subject.

This afternoon the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) suggested that in future I might tap on the door of the Conservative Party in view of the approach I have taken to the civil libertarian issue. I must say I have always respected the Conservative Party on issues like this. More than once—this afternoon and this evening—I have heard Conservative members express concern for the rights of individuals. They do not want to see us turn into a monolithic state which does not allow freedom of speech, freedom of privacy or freedom of personality. I have great sympathy for the views of my friends to my right. It is when we come to economic issues that we part company; we are far apart on economic issues.

Mr. Knight: Especially on what the oil companies are doing.

Mr. Leggatt: A monolithic state which robs the individual of freedom is a state made up of large, multinational corporations. That is why I have been so disappointed in hearing members to my right defend large, multinational oil companies.

The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) mentioned the proceedings in committee and pointed out that the minister cannot have it both ways on this bill. When the minister first brought forward, this bill I am sure many in the civil liberties field congratulated him because they thought the bill provided protection of privacy. These protections are necessary and important. But the minister cannot have it both ways. When the bill was before the committee the minister suggested we were throwing roadblocks in the way. He told committee members we were unnecessarily delaying a good bill and that we needed this legislation.

I noticed, however, that after passing amendments which the Conservative Party had presented, the Mininster of Justice (Mr. Lang) suddenly found that we needed to look at the bill more closely: he intended to bring together the attorneys general from all across Canada to look at the bill. He cannot have it both ways. That committee was not partisan. I echo the remarks of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal on this point. It was a good committee and because of its work I think we will wind up with a stronger bill.

Let me say this about the motions the House is presently considering. If they do not pass this time, it is certain that somebody else will come forward at some time in the future, say in ten years, and present similar amendments. Why do I say that? Considering the direction the world is taking and nations generally are taking, we will need to ban these kinds of electronic surveillance devices; I mean, ban them in the hands of private citizens and ban them in the hands of those who work for the public.

Mrs. Morin: Don't say that in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Gilbert: After the FLQ episode, it should be said.

Mr. Leggatt: There was a report this morning from Quebec that two more lawyers have been bugged, wiretapped.

Mrs. Morin: Not by the police.

Mr. Leggatt: We do not know that, madam. I say that through you, of course, Mr. Speaker. It is interesting to note that if the bill were passed as it now is, without motion No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey), what happened in Quebec would be perfectly legal. As I pointed out this afternoon, it is usually easy to find reasons for accusing a lawyer of wrongdoing and it is quite easy to obtain authorization. For example, the Income Tax Act could be used as a device to gain permission to bug.

If I may return to the amendments before the House, they would bar the use of this immoral device in connection with the Criminal Code, except in cases already noted. You must understand the pervasiveness of the device and how widely it can be used. The report from the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), which I read, indicates that in 1972-73 there were 663 taps, resulting in four prosecutions, two of them successful. That is a success rate of one-third of one per cent.

The trouble with the electronic device is, first of all, that it does not do what the police want it to do. Not only does it not increase the efficiency of the police or increase their ability to convict; quite often the use of the device will inhibit the prosecution. Evidence obtained through its use may be ruled as inadmissible and, if that kind of evidence is relied on, a good case could go down the drain. We have to ask ourselves whether these two convictions would have occurred if other good police devices had been used. I submit the traditional ways of obtaining evidence, such as getting out of the car, walking around and talking to people, are the kinds of police activity that work. To give them these new electronic toys, hide them in closets and let them stay there for 18 hours interfering with the privacy of thousands of citizens while a person is under suspicion, is so pervasive and erosive of the right of freedom of speech that on balance we cannot afford to use this kind of device in a civilized society.

I predict that if we continue to use this immoral device we will have reports in the future and someone will stand up in this House in five years' time and again attempt to ban it. I hope he is successful. I hope the time will come when we realize we have an obligation and a duty not only to our citizens but to citizens of other countries to take the leadership in this field.

Many members have quoted Ramsey Clark. I wish to quote what he said about the use of wiretap when he appeared before our committee. He was one of the most successful attorneys general of the United States. His attack on organized crime was as successful as any. He is not some bleeding-heart liberal who is not willing to use the practical devices available, where they are moral devices, in order to reduce or prevent crime. He said:

> I come not to give advice but to express my impressions of the experience of your neighbour to the south. I come because I desperately hope to see from nations in this world the new moral leadership that if founded on the proposition that governments can protect their people without acting unfairly or immorally themselves in any respect. I believe that. I do not believe the rule of law can be an effective means of social change otherwise. I do not believe it can have the respect of the people otherwise and I have not seen a society or a people who believe that wiretapping is moral. It is inherently immoral and therefore to justify it you have to say the end thoughts justify these means.
> I come further because of my great concern about government lawlessness, the excessive use of force, violence, treachery and secrecy, and because I believe your fortunate country has a high opportunity and, with that, a high obligation to show the world that we can act fairly with safety.

I submit that is a very statesman like approach to law enforcement. The hon. member Fundy-Royal mentioned the cliché of law and order. In fact, the advocates of law and order in the United States have found themselves on the wrong side of the law all the time. I sometimes wonder how legitimate was their concern when they found it so easy to violate laws that applied to them.

We have to ask ourselves whether these devices increase or enhance the success of prosecutions. There is no doubt in my mind that they do not. It is wasteful of a police officer's time, inordinately expensive, thoroughly inefficient and extremely unsuccessful. To embark upon this device and avoid very real changes to improve efficiency in the use of our police forces in this country—I have great respect for our police forces—is to reduce respect for law and order, to reduce respect for the police and thereby to increase the likelihood of further acts of crime.

Mrs. Morin: You should be a policeman for 15 days.

Mr. Leggatt: I will end my remarks on that note. I think there are a number of police officers in this country who agree with this approach, although I am sure it is not the majority opinion.

An hon. Member: That's for sure.

Mr. Leggatt: I think on any fair examination of what you are going to get and what you are not going to get, you will be very sorry.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) has once again put before us the proposal he put before the House in earlier debate, and in committee. It is a proposal to remove entirely the possibility of law enforcement officers who are attempting to enforce the law against organized and serious crime in this country using wiretapping or other electronic surveillance that is necessary for their investigative procedures. I find it strange that the hon. member can in this way ignore the important provisions that are contained in this bill to protect our citizens and their liberty and to ensure that proper criminal investigation can take place on our behalf by the police. We should not forget that is what law enforcement is all about: it is activity by the police on our behalf in an attempt to discover and root out organized crime and other serious criminal activity.

Earlier in the day we noted the important moves this bill makes in creating new offences in order to protect privacy, making it unlawful without proper permission to use electronic intrusion to invade the privacy of anyone. Even more important is the general outline of the possession and sale of electronic surveillance devices. The hon. member for New Westminster neglected to observe the careful safeguards and provisions contained in the bill to ensure that electronic surveillance, even in the hands of law enforcement officers, is a rare and last resort device.

I was somewhat amused to hear the hon. member express his concern that the police might be bogged down by the use or availability of this electronic equipment. He indicated he was concerned they might use these devices instead of other things and other methods which in his view are much more effective in police work. I found it rather amusing to hear him show his concern in this way, concern that our police do not know their business as well as the hon. member seems to know it.

The hon. member also ignored the fact that the bill provides the narrow cases in which these devices should be used. It provides that an application to use these devices must be made in a way which holds an attorney general, an elected officer provincially, or the solicitor general, an elected federal officer, responsible for deciding upon any application. It involves an application to a judge. It involves putting before the judge the facts in relation to which an electronic intrusion or wiretapping is needed. It must be shown to the judge that other investigative procedures have been tried and have failed, that other investigative procedures are not likely to succeed, and that the urgency of the matter is such as to make it impracticable to carry out the investigation using other investigative procedures.

This is an indication that other investigative measures are to be used in preference to electronic surveillance even though from an expert police point of view electronic surveillance might be the equal of the other methods. It is only when other approaches are not adequate or would fail that electronic surveillance can be resorted to. Then again, the hon. member seems to overlook the safeguard which is provided by requiring the most comprehensive set of records to be kept by attorneys general concerning the use of this equipment—the number of times permission is granted, the circumstances and the consequences.

I find it strange that the hon. member should lack the respect he usually seems to show for political processes, when considering this extremely important form of protection against undue use of electronic equipment for surveillance. But then, he would have none of it at all even in circumstances where it has been approved by a judge to whom it has been demonstrated that other methods would not succeed. He would prevent the police from using this equipment. He would prevent them from using it in a case, for example, where an extortion gang had kidnapped a person or persons and was making demands, and where it might be possible, as a result of information known to the police, to find out the location of the persons in question but only through the use of devices of the modern age.

Mr. Nielsen: They would do it anyway.

Mr. Lang: He would bar them from using it, or have them use it in an unlawful fashion, if I take the words of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) as I heard them. But most strange to me, perhaps, was the way he could say, quoting Ramsey Clark, that electronic supervision or surveillance was not really very effective. The experience of Mr. Clark and of the hon. member may be alike, but none of it was in police work. The whole point of our making it a very serious offence to use wiretapping or electronic eavesdropping equipment, the whole point of our making it a serious offence for ordinary citizens to possess such equipment is that so many citizens are finding it intriguing and useful to invade the privacy of others.

I do not understand how it could be said at the same time that it would not be useful or that it would simply impose a burden upon the law enforcement officers. To me, that is strange logic. We wish to remove this equipment from the hands of ordinary citizens, and by making its possession a serious offence we have a real chance of doing so. By taking this approach, by making possession of an offence it is much more likely we shall be able to deter citizens generally from using this equipment; a penalty attached merely to use would probably not be nearly as effective.

But who is it we shall not deter from using this equipment? It is those elements in our society which it is most difficult for our law enforcement officers to combat—the most organized and effective elements of the criminal underworld, those who are engaged in the most serious of crimes. Such elements as these would not be deterred from using surveillance equipment when it suited their needs. It would be small comfort for us to have outlawed these devices and then to find that the organized element in crime continued to use them while the police were prevented from doing so, even though they would otherwise be much better able to rout out that particular offence as well as other serious criminal offences committed by such groups. Even so, under the present bill it must be demonstrated before a judge that other investigative methods are inadequate or have failed. Only in these circumstances is it permissible to turn to these additional devices.

Many of us in this House are aware of the need to safeguard our liberties in every way, of the need to encourage the highest of standards in our law enforcement officers. We do not accomplish this by making all law easy for them to carry out. I can think of the changes in the bail law, for example. An accused person is considered innocent until proven guilty. We felt it desirable to make it possible for such a person to be at large more readily and not to be imprisoned simply because he might be poor and unable to find cash or a bondsman to get him out of custody. We took action along these lines even though we knew that doing so would add somewhat to the difficulties of law enforcement officers. But we should respect the fact that most of these officers are upholders of the tradition of Canadian law and will do their best in every way to enforce the law.

I think it is wrong for individual members of the House or for members of the public to generalize on the basis of a single incident, or a few incidents, and go on to question the police forces as a whole. What we want to do here is to make the work of the police in enforcing the law more effective by allowing, in very carefully controlled circumstances, the use of wiretapping and electronic devices. I think it is vital, therefore, that we oppose the amendment put forward by the hon. member for New Westminster and make it possible, with all the careful controls which have been inserted in the bill, for the police to use electronic equipment in their enforcement work when it is really necessary for them to fall back on such a choice.

[Translation]

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, just like several members of this House, and particularly Liberal members, I agree with the minister and I am opposed to these proposed amendments.

An overall review of this bill reveals that it stems from the duty the state has to protect its secrets, its information, its institutions and its policy against spying, indiscretion, subversion and illegal intrusion. On the other hand, we can dispute the efficiency of the organization and structures established by the state to fulfill its responsibilities in an area where fundamental liberties of the individual can be at stake.

In all countries, security practices include a set of measures. There is a series of measures on the classification, care, handling and transmission of documents and materials to be protected. Some technical devices come into play and here some concern was expressed on the infringement of the state and of the individuals and organizations on what we agree to call the right to privacy. The problem is vast and includes for instance the wiretapping of telephone conversations and the use of wiretapping devices, cameras with telephoto lenses as well as some other very sophisticated equipment used by the police and other organizations to detect offences or get information.

One question seems to raise some concern: It is the use of certain technical investigation procedures to collect information. Of course, the security measures involving personnel for instance, are the basis of any efficient security system. However, normal legal procedures may sometimes lead to injustice and the same thing applies to security procedures. This is why whatever arrangements are made to protect the rights of the individual his most important right, which is the right to fair treatment, finally depends on the existence of a policy.

Through this bill we want to define this policy. This is the question I ask hon. members tonight: Should we once and for all define a policy on wiretapping? Many people seem to hesitate and yet a fair amount of time has been used by a number of hon. members since the biginning of this debate to suggest that this practice is being enormously abused. Thousands of electronic wiretapping cases are mentioned but if you consider the statistics you wonder where is the abuser. They say that thousands of people will be spied upon to find only maybe one criminal. The statistics supplied by the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) for 1971-72 show that about 663 wiretappings have occurred.

I wonder why this debate is allowed to drag on since it seems that each member has at heart the protection of privacy and also the country's security requirements. If I had to give another title to the bill I would call it: Protection of privacy and security requirements in Canada. This is what the bill is all about. Through this bill we have attempted to create offences as regards the use, interruption and monitoring of private conversations as well as possession and sale of wiretapping devices.

Even though we may disagree, I think that the general feeling in the House is that enough has been said. For the third time within three years we are dealing with this bill. We had another chance to do that in March 1970 and in June 1971, and for eight or nine months we have been considering this bill in the House. Many members participated in the debate. We have moved amendments in the Standing Committee of Justice and Legal Affairs.

As a Canadian representing voters in the province of Quebec, I ask once and for all that we put an end to this debate and say: Yes, what we want is to protect the individual. We also want order within our country. A moment ago, I heard some members say that it was immoral to provide the tools that police officers need to fight against organized crime and drug traffic.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to have better evidence, for then it is also immoral for a police officer to carry a handgun to kill an individual. It is immoral to kill someone with a handgun. I say that we must give policemen the necessary tools to carry out the fight against crime.

That is what people expect from us. It is time that we reassured them, that we endured order in this country and I do not see why all hon. members could not agree unanimously on that. Perhaps the law will not be perfect but at least it will be a start, a step toward the instauration of order and security for the government and every individual in this country.

We want this great country to be beautiful but yet we must consider that people today are looking at us and saying: What are you waiting for to act? It is urgent. We see the abuses indulged in at present in the province of Quebec, especially in Montreal, as well as in many other places.

We want to regulate all those things, we want through most effective legislation to protect the public, and that is the purpose of our mandate to sit in this House. That is what is expected of us today and I, for one, make it a duty in conscience. We should act as responsible men in this House and make decisions rather than mere speeches.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIRPORTS—LETHBRIDGE—SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF RUNWAY

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, on July 10 I addressed a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) asking whether he would give immediate consideration to the Laborde Simat report which recommends that runway 05-23 at the Lethbridge airport be lengthened to 13,000 feet, considering that southern Alberta is rapidly becoming the largest livestock feeding and processing area in Canada, exporting breeding cattle and dressed beef to the Pacific rim countries and Europe.

In this year, 1.4 million pounds of beef were exported to the Pacific rim countries. Of the 1.4 million pounds, 943,000 pounds came from Alberta. That represents 66 per cent of all beef exported from Canada. Yet in 1972 only 81,000 pounds were exported to the rim countries, with all of it coming from Alberta. If you take these figures you will find, Mr. Speaker, that from 1972 to 1973 exports of beef from Alberta to the rim countries increased by approximately 862,000 pounds. That is astonishing increase, and even more astonishing when you consider that that is only one year's exports.

In a report written for the then minister of agriculture, Mr. Olson, entitled "Canadian Agriculture in the Seventies", the report states on page 60 that through research government must attempt to anticipate international trade developments before they occur. The task force has also observed that there is insufficient forward-looking. Yet on July 30 the deputy minister of transport stated:

Many of the conclusions are based on propositions which however well founded in theory are still hypothetical.

So here you have one department saying there is not sufficient forward-looking, and another department saying, "Sorry; we cannot help you because you are looking forward." I would suggest that the deputy minister take the suggestion of the Department of Agriculture and look forward. If he were to do that, maybe our other transportation problems could be straightened out. He also states that the Calgary airport, with its updated facilities, will cater to cargo needs allied to the Lethbridge region for some years to come. This statement does not take cognizance of the government of Alberta developing markets in the Pacific rim countries for protein and, in particular, beef products. The Calgary airport cannot possibly serve the needs of the southern Alberta cattle industry, considering it would require surface transportation hauls which would reduce the shelf-life of the product. Last year, packing plants in the city of Lethbridge slaughtered 29 per cent of all cattle slaughtered in Alberta and 11.5 per cent of all cattle slaughtered in Canada. The whole problem of marketing in relation to the flow of animals from pasture through the feedlots to the packing houses would be hindered.

The facilities of the Calgary airport will not assist the growth and development of southern Alberta. I thought it was the policy of the Government of Canada to assist the decentralization of growth from larger metropolitan centres to communities the size of Lethbridge which show a potential for growth. At the now famous Western Economic Opportunities Conference held in Calgary, the federal government stated it was anxious to see air transportation developed still further. Then on the other hand it states, "No, this study is purely hypothetical." I might add that it is not. This type of double-dealing cannot but do its share of damage to the people's sense of faith and trust in the political system.

With Japan desiring to increase the nutritional levels of its people and to stimulate domestic beef production, this will no doubt create a growing demand for products from southern Alberta. The long distances involved and problems such as perishability and weight loss in the shipment of cattle will create real opportunities for airlifting produce to world markets. Thus, airlifting facilities right in the heart of the livestock industry will reduce the per unit cost of the air movement of goods and a whole new range of lower value goods will be transported by air.

The largest aircraft that runway 05-23 can accommodate at present under full payload is the Boeing 737, which has only short to medium range flying capability. This runway cannot handle the bigger long range aircraft required to serve distant markets such as Pacific rim countries. The federal government is in the process of building a $1.5 million agricultural research station near Lethbridge. It has spent millions of dollars in DREE grants for processing industries. This government and the provincial government have spent tens of millions of dollars on new irrigation methods in southern Alberta. The investments of Canadians and Albertans cannot be maximized unless there are proper means of transportation and facilities which will make these investments pay off.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), the Minister of Transport, and the Deputy Minister of Transport all say we need more proof, more evidence and more documented facts before they will do anything for the Lethbridge airport. If this is the case, there is no need for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. This department does not sit back and wait for things to happen. Instead, it goes out and develops trade. It hunts down trade when it knows it has a product to sell. When the LIP program was established, the government knew there was unemployment so it set aside millions of dollars and said, "If you want to work, we will help you."

I will give the federal government credit, Mr. Speaker, for having the foresight to see the potential for growth in the Lethbridge constituency. They realized that the largest cattle feeding operations in Canada are located in the Lethbridge constituency. They realized that Lethbridge could be a real boom district, with the right investment. With the investments of the federal government and the province of Alberta, Lethbridge is on its way to fantastic expansion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Guay).

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): I am very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to hear the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Hurlburt) mention some of the things—

Mr. Hurlburt: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member should know there is no point of order.

Mr. Hurlburt: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I noticed that we had gone three minutes past the hour when I rose to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The point of order can be raised tomorrow, but the Clerk has given notice of the time to the Chair.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to hear the hon. member for Lethbridge mention some of the actions taken by the federal government in his area, particularly in Lethbridge and the surrounding area. These are some of the benefits; but there are many more which I could mention if I had time. However, speaking on the question proper, the Laborde Simat report, which was prepared for the industrial development department of the city of Lethbridge, reached the ministry on July 13. It is under study within the ministry and further discussions will undoubtedly take place between city officials and the regional administrator for air in Edmonton, and possibly with headquarters officers here in Ottawa.

The city's interest in improving all facilities at Lethbridge is appreciated, and a cordial and effective communication relationship exists at both the regional and the headquarters' levels of the ministry with the city. Already there has been considerable progress in arrangements affecting future development of the commercial area of Lethbridge airport and the ministry is discussing with the city improvements to the terminal as a result of the city being selected as host for the 1975 Canada winter games.

I can only say that at the moment the ministry has not made plans for the runway extension proposed. Should economic studies and forecasts support such an action, we would proceed consistent with national priorities and available funds in future years.

GRAIN—PROVISION OF CARS BY RAILWAYS TO TRANSPORT WHEAT

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, in the prairie region, and in respect of western grain producers, one of the most elementary things in supplying them with stability of income is the continuity of the export of their grain into international markets. This fall, the problem in terms of the transportation of that grain has been the most serious it has been for decades. Last January I raised the matter of boxcars for the movement of wheat. That was almost ten months ago. Now we are in exactly the same position; in fact, we are in a worse position.

What are some of the facts outlining that position as of today? Ten years ago, cars suitable for grain movement and similar commodities numbered 88,000. Today, the number of cars suitable for the movement of grain and similar commodities, such as lumber, is 48,000. We have, in a decade, a drop of 40,000 cars which are capable of moving grain. At the port of Vancouver, one of the most important terminal delivery points for the export market, there are between 400 and 500 cars a day for the movement of grain. That is operating at 50 per cent capacity. In terms of employment, at this terminal at least 50 per cent of the men are laid off.

There are ten ships presently loading, and there are at least seven more waiting. At Thunder Bay, which has the capacity to handle 60 million bushels, we have 30 million bushels on hand. Some people might say we have 41 million bushels on hand, but actually we have in fact 11 million bushels of screenings and other commodities not related to the export market.

In the country elevator system we have stocks on hand to the point where the Saskatchewan elevator system is 73 per cent full, which means that hundreds of country elevators across Saskatchewan are entirely plugged. The CN is 1,500 cars a week ahead of the CPR in the movement of grain; and for that I commend the CN. But what is happening is that the CN and the CP are using the present situation and the strike which took place months ago as an excuse to blackmail this government into supplying them with more hopper cars, as they did before.

What the government must do is to move in the direction of taking over the CPR and developing one national transportation system. One of their immediate actions should be to stop the CPR from scrapping Nos. 22 and 24 grain cars, cars that they are scrapping for metal at the plant in Regina. I understand they have been scrapping hundreds of them. Another thing that the government might attempt to do is establish a national boxcar allocater under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Transport Commission. He would have power to instruct the railways to supply an adequate number of cars as required under the National Transportation Act, in order to move our commodities into position for the export market—and not only the export market but the domestic market, in terms of feed grains for eastern Canada.

Hon. members from Quebec have been complaining that they are not assured of sufficient supplies for the winter. That could be the case because of the problem created by the railways and also the problem created by the minister's feed grain policy in allowing the country elevators to become plugged, instead of using the quota system. I could say more about this but I will argue it some other day. I say to the minister that I am pleased to see he is here to respond to what is an extremely serious situation. We all have to do what we possibly can in the House of Commons to alleviate the situation, and I look forward to hearing his suggestions tonight to try to solve the problem before the dead of winter sets in.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying that figures do not lie. But certainly it is true that figures can be used in a misleading way. The figures to which the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) referred when he spoke of the numbers of cars having gone from 88,000 to 48,000 are, of course, basically accurate in terms of the available boxcars but they ignore the fundamental fact which he should take into account if he wishes to make a full argument, namely, that many other cars of a specialized nature have been put to service to replace the boxcars which were used in the old days, the hopper cars and the specialized cars now in place. The point is that the grain car fleet is deteriorating; that is one of the reasons we put into the Prairies 2,000 hopper cars for the great benefit of the prairie grain farmer.

The hon. member for Assiniboia and his colleagues do a great disservice to the grain industry and to farmers generally when they criticize us for having put those 2,000 cars in place. They seem to ignore the fact that at present we have requests from the Canadian Wheat Board, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and many other organizations to do again what we did before. The hon. member should ask himself: If he were to direct cars into the grain movement, from which of his colleagues in the House, or from which other members in the House would he get them? Is he going to take them from the lumber movement in British Columbia, where one of his colleagues is frequently screaming about cars; or from the potash movement? The fact is there are more cars in the potash movement today than there were a year ago.

The economy is booming and there is pressure on our railway situation. This is compounded by the fact that our boxcar fleet is deteriorating. That is one of the reasons we bought hopper cars and studied the transportation system. The fact is that there is a large number of cars in the grain movement; and we have been careful to urge the railways to put in more. There is no point in suggesting, in this connection, that we do something about nationalizing the CPR. The problem is the same on the CNR. Both are trying to move the grain. Stocks are a little low at Vancouver and Thunder Bay, but in both places they have gone up since the strike ended. We will not let up in our efforts but will continue, as we have in the past, to do everything in our power to make the transportation system work better for every individual farmer.

AIR CANADA—REQUEST THAT CANADIAN AEROSPACE INDUSTRY BE CONSIDERED IN PURCHASE OF NEW PLANES

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, on October 31 I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) a question, and I am very glad to have the chance to debate it tonight with his very distinguished parliamentary secretary. The question was about Air Canada's plans to purchase aircraft which involve much less Canadian content, in terms of materials and labour, than the Douglas aircraft it has been using. I appreciate the opportunity to discuss this matter further because of the imperative need to give priority to Canadian-based members of the aircraft industry.

If the industry is to survive in this country, opportunities for contracts must go first to companies creating jobs for Canadians and contributing to Canada's growth. An example is the Douglas Aircraft Company of Canada. It employs 5,200 people in the metro Toronto area, and twice since 1965 has had as many as 7,200 on its strength. Its weekly payroll in Toronto is $1 million. Since 1965, the Canadian-made material it exported exceeded what it imported by $258 million. Every DC-9 that is purchased in Canada includes $400,000 worth of Canadian goods. Every DC-10 includes $1.2 million worth. Of the total material required for a DC-9, a substantial amount is manufactured in Toronto. It includes wings, tail sections, sections of fuselage, and floors. The company uses 1,100 Canadian suppliers from Nova Scotia to British Columbia, all of them creating jobs for their fellow citizens and adding vitality to our free enterprise economy.

The point at issue is not that the government or any Crown corporation such as Air Canada has an obligation to this, or any other company. The point is that the government and its Crown corporations have an obligation to Canadian workers and suppliers. They have an obligation to keep the aircraft industry viable as a Canadian enterprise. They are not fulfilling that obligation now. Instead, they are giving contracts to companies which have few Canadian employees and which purchase very small quantities of Canadian goods. At a time when the government is preaching economic nationalism, it is practising economic continentalism. In its legislation it says "Canada first"; in its contracts it says "Canada maybe".

I am not saying the government and its Crown corporations should not be free to purchase the aircraft they believe meet their needs best. But I do claim they should insist that companies meet a minimum standard of Canadian content in materials and labour. That minimum should be either directly included in the product itself or some other equivalent.

In Australia, all offshore purchases must guarantee there is a 30 per cent Australian content either in the product itself or in some offsetting equivalent. When is the Canadian government going to demand something like that? When is it going to protect the interests of its own people as it should? In his answer on October 31, the minister said:

> Whatever type of aircraft Air Canada is going to buy we shall see there is some economic benefit to Canada.

If that is true, let him show us in terms of jobs and materials. There is now a real danger that a major employer in the Toronto area will be affected and numbers of workers deprived of their jobs. This affects not only the company concerned but all the suppliers and providers of services which are related to that company.

● (2220)

How will this be of benefit to Canada? Saying that work has been provided elsewhere does not answer the question. Toronto people are Canadians too, which is sometimes forgotten in this House, and they have every right to have their economic future safeguarded. It is one thing for an agency like the CRTC to suggest that there should be 50 per cent Canadian content on certain radio and television programs. Do we not need the same kind of policy to apply to industry so far as we would be able to carry it out?

I suggest that we must give priority consideration to those industries which are creating jobs for Canadians. They do, after all, ultimately supply the dollars with which we buy goods. At a time when unemployment remains high, when in the aircraft industry there is a gathering together of highly trained, highly skilled people who work in a technologically sophisticated enterprise which is very competitive, nearly always on the edge of difficulty, indeed on the edge of disaster, it is fundamentally necessary for the government to give priority consideration to any company which will provide a significantly large number of jobs for Canadians.

I hope, therefore, that due consideration will be given to the impact of purchasing policies on aircraft producers across this country. I plead for some recognition to be given to aircraft producers in the Toronto area, employing as they do 5,200 people and providing work for the employees of 1,100 suppliers. That is a consideration which ought to be taken seriously. I certainly hope the government will use its good offices in making sure that every consideration is given to these companies.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the assurance in the answer of the minister which was given to the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse) on October 1 of this year has not changed. The selection of aircraft by a large commercial carrier is a very complex process. In addition to meeting regulatory standards which assure safety of operation, the aircraft characteristics must match the airline's route structure and market. Distances between stops on a route, average and peak numbers of passengers estimated, annual utilization, maintenance cycles, and ground facilities required and available are some of the many elements which must be considered in the determination of the profitability of a particular aircraft for an airline.

Air Canada's primary role is to provide an efficient and economic air service, and the airline therefore selects aircraft that best satisfy this role. Air Canada selected the L-1011 in preference to the DC-10 because after an exhaustive comparison of the two aircraft Air Canada determined that the L-1011 was much superior in meeting the requirements of its routes and markets. I might add that negotiation of a substantial offset package with Lockheed as a result of the L-1011 purchase will result in much work to Canadian industry at various points in the country.

As has been evident in recent months, the demand for air travel is increasing and Air Canada must add to its fleet if it is to provide the public with the service to which it is entitled. Air Canada has placed proposals before the government which are under consideration. These proposals and their implications for the Canadian aerospace industry will be given very careful consideration. I am keenly aware of the concern, particularly in the Toronto area where so much of the Canadian aerospace industry is located, and I can assure the House that every effort possible will be made to sustain employment levels through this program and other programs which the government is considering.

TABLING OF EXCHANGE OF NOTES RESPECTING AUGMENTING OF CANADIAN CONTINGENT IN MIDDLE EAST PEACEKEEPING FORCE

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table an exchange of notes that took place a few moments ago in New York between the Secretary General of the United Nations and the Canadian Ambassador to the United Nations by which the government of Canada has agreed to augment its contingent to the United Nations Emergency Force.

AIR TRANSPORT

STATEMENT ON INTERNATIONAL AND DOMESTIC POLICY

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am tabling today the policies and principles approved by the government which will govern the international operations of Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines, and which clarify a number of other issues relating to international air policy.

At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress that as a country we have to get our fair share of the international market, but at the same time we must ensure that an adequate domestic service is provided for the Canadian public.

In examining this new policy statement, I believe it important that the House should recall the history of air policy in Canada. The development of air policy is a continuing process in which the government must establish guidelines for all domestic services as well as for international operations. The objectives of air policy must be threefold. The first task is to ensure safe, efficient and convenient air services to meet the travelling needs of Canadians; the second is to contribute to the economic and social well-being of the country, and the third is to ensure that air transportation services are reasonably balanced to create an adequate atmosphere in which the airline industry of Canada can continue to develop in an efficient and profitable manner without imposing undue burdens on the taxpayer at large.

[Translation]

Prior to the statements of policy made in 1964, 1965, 1966 and 1967 on international and domestic operations, air policy had largely developed as a result of initiatives of Air Canada and the commercial decisions of other carriers, notably Canadian Pacific Airlines.

In 1965, the Minister of Transport announced guidelines for international air policy and indicated those geographic areas which would be allocated to Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines respectively. They did not take into account all parts of the world which might eventually be served, nor was it at that time possible to make a clear cut geographic distribution without disturbing the pattern of existing services which had been developed by both airlines.

In 1966 a policy to recognize the special role of five regional carriers with defined spheres of interest was announced and was later defined more precisely by my predecessor, Mr. Jamieson, in 1969. This policy remains basically unchanged. It has permitted the orderly growth of five regional carriers, and has at the same time permitted them a wide measure of freedom in operating international charter services. The government does not wish to encourage regional carriers to expect the type of growth which would make them directly competitive with the two major carriers. Such a development could only lead to a breakdown in the existing pattern of viable growth, and the risk of the emergence of undesirable, highly subsidized operations. A number of routes were transferred from mainline to regional carriers in accordance with this policy.

[English]

In 1967 a transcontinental policy was developed for domestic air services which confirmed that both Air Canada and Canadian Pacific would operate transcontinental services but based on a formula which maintained the pre-eminence of Air Canada. This was based on the assumption that Air Canada's major role was to serve the needs of the Canadian public and that it could be called upon from time to time to undertake certain services in the public interest which would not necessarily be justified on purely commercial grounds.

In addition, of course, the government expects Air Canada to perform a special role as a model corporation in such fields as decentralization, bilingualism, and labour and technological change. This transcontinental policy is basically to be retained, although I have asked for a report on the feasibility of relaxing certain restrictions in CP operations which now oblige them to originate and terminate all flights in Vancouver and Montreal.

In terms of profitability, long-haul domestic services and certain international operations have proven to be the profitable underpinnings of both airlines. The importance of international routes can change substantially with the travelling habits of Canadians or sometimes through factors beyond the control of either the Canadian government or the carriers.

In announcing adjustments to the international air policy today, we are endeavouring to create a framework which will permit both airlines to engage in reasonably long-range planning. It also permits the government to undertake a methodical negotiation of new bilateral agreements or the renegotiation of some existing ones.

A significant development in the new air policy is the recognition that an increasing number of Canadian cities must now be regarded as international gateways. The statement of principles indicates in greater detail how this policy will work, but is based essentially on the progressive changes in the needs of the travelling public and for the movement of freight.

Although the international travel market can be subject to new pressures such as the rapidly growing charter operations, I am confident that the policy stated today provides a framework in which both airlines can develop their international operations on a healthy and profitable basis. While Air Canada remains the pre-eminent carrier, both in terms of its very significant domestic role as well as its international role, there is room for a substantial expansion of the second, privately-owned airline. As a principle, no route that has been developed has to be taken away from either airline and there is room for the rational expansion of both.

● (1110)

Another fundamental principle is the stated desire of the government that the two airlines should co-operate as fully as possible to ensure that Canadian interests are not damaged by separate arrangements which favour foreign airlines. Guidelines are needed, and I am asking the Canadian Transport Commission to review the level of co-operation and to report to me regularly. If the guidelines are not followed, the government will feel free to take necessary steps to correct the situation including the withdrawal, if necessary, of rights conferred under the existing policy.

[Translation]

Today's announcement is the first of three announcements which will complete the over-all review of air policy. If a new agreement can be reached with the United States it will provide Canadians with significantly better service to the United States.

Finally, it is my intention to announce in the future a new policy for third level carriers whose importance and whose scope of operation is increasing rapidly. Related to this policy will be an announcement of a new air policy with respect to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories which is being developed jointly by the Ministry and the Canadian Transport Commission in consultation with the Territorial Governments and other interests in the North. We have discussed with the provinces at regional conferences how their views may be best taken into account.

Hon. members will thus see that while international air policy must be based on practical and well defined guidelines, it must also be related closely to continental air policy and to domestic air policy, including both the mainline services and the regional services.

Hon. members will also realize that decisions on the implementation of these policies are more urgent than ever, and I am expecting all departments and agencies to be even more responsive and prompt in their role in regulating and administering the government's policies. Other measures to strengthen the Government's organizational capacity to deal with air policy and bilateral negotiations will also be taken.

The implementation of our new international air policies can of course be seriously affected by current fuel shortages and we are discussing solutions with other countries.

[English]

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to thank the minister for providing our party with an advance copy of the statement he has just made. I must say I welcome the statement to the extent that it represents a first step in the filling of the policy void in the important area of air transport policy, a void which has been detrimental not only to the air transport industry but to the economy of the country as a whole.

For a year, now, the absence of a government decision respecting landing rights to serve the city of Milan has caused intense frustration to Canadian airlines; a buoyant market was within reach but they were deprived of the opportunity to take advantage of it because of government inaction.

I cannot expect that the regional air carriers will be overjoyed by the announcement which the minister has made as far as it affects them, since it represents nothing more than the maintenance of the status quo. I would have expected some clarification with respect to the role they might play in connection with Ottawa's proposed air route agreement with the United States. It must be pointed out that while U.S. carriers are being granted concessions to operate into Canada the same does not apply to equally valuable transport routes for Canadian regional carriers. We must also recognize the growing need and demand for improved services in the Prairie and Atlantic regions. Certainly we should examine closely the interconnection of routes involving the various regions and services which can be provided by regional carriers.

With regard to the minister's announcement respecting transcontinental air policy, while this policy has basically been retained the minister indicated that a review will take place in regard to the origin and termination of all Canadian Pacific flights at Vancouver or Montreal. I hope the minister will reconsider this policy and broaden the review to include an over-all analysis and study of the 75 per cent/25 per cent formula in the allocation of domestic routes in Canada, with 75 per cent being allocated to Air Canada and 25 per cent to CP Air.

It must be pointed out here that the growth of the transcontinental air industry is predicated upon the growth of Air Canada, as is the frequency and the quality of service. The minister indicated in his statement that there is certainly room for growth of the private air line but in effect contradicts that by restricting the growth of CP Air under the 75 per cent/25 per cent formula. As I say,

I think the minister would do well to broaden the terms of reference of this review or feasibility study to include study of this formula.

I also expected a statement to be forthcoming this morning in connection with the policy announcement that was made in regard to the current status of Air Canada. I expected the minister to comment on the current power play going on at the senior management level of Air Canada, the departure of a number of vice-presidents and, indeed, the departure of the president. The minister might have enlightened us on the future senior management structure of the organization, which I understand is being placed under review. In addition, he might also have indicated the ways and means in which, as a result of his discussions with Mr. Pratte to which he referred in the House yesterday, the government and indeed the management of Air Canada would see fit to take steps to improve morale within the organization, the need for which is apparent to every person who uses the facilities of Air Canada.

We on this side of the House contend there is a genuine lack of leadership in the operations of Air Canada. We think the government should take heed of this and look into the matter immediately—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: —if, as the minister has suggested, the role of Air Canada is to be pre-eminent. The minister might also have elaborated upon, or cleared the air with respect to, the chairman's suggestion that competition in the airline industry is bad and that good service and profitable operations cannot be achieved in unison.

All of these matters are of concern to the Canadian people. They are of concern to those who in the past have supported Air Canada and those who continue to support the role of Air Canada but are desirous of supporting it only if Air Canada does a little housecleaning and makes up its mind whether it is going to be an airline serving the needs of Canadian passengers or an operation which is going to diversify into the aerospace and allied industries. We should point out here and now that Air Canada must soon recognize that its prime concern in Canada is to serve the travelling needs of Canadians.

• (1120)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Second, I believe the time has come when it must recognize that its employees must be treated as people and not as machines. Certainly we can do a lot to rectify the low morale in the corporation if this fundamental principle is taken into consideration.

The minister said in his statement:

> In addition, of course, the government expects Air Canada to perform a special role as a model corporation in such fields as decentralization, bilingualism, and labour and technological change.

As for decentralization, I would ask the minister to talk to the people in Winnipeg about this and explain it to them. Having regard to labour, the minister should talk to the employees of Air Canada. In respect of technological change, if the minister is referring to Comstock International—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member to remind him that the provisions of the Standing Order state that comments made in response to ministerial statements ought to be brief. I appreciate the importance of the matter but I hope the hon. member will give some thought to coming to the end of his statement.

Mr. Mazankowski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have almost completed my statement, but I should say to you and the House that the minister's statement is of grave importance to Canada and was rather lengthy. In order to cover all the areas touched upon in the statement I find I must deal with the various points relative to the matters presented. Nevertheless, I am almost finished.

I suggest there is very little in the statement that is new in regard to policy. The only new thing of importance today is the designation of landing rights at Milan for Canadian Pacific Airlines and the designation of Yugoslavia for Air Canada, which we have long awaited.

The minister pointed out that the success of the airline industry is dependent upon co-operation and it will only be developed and strengthened through such co-operation. I believe it is fair to say that the growth of the airline industry and its success in Canada has been achieved through co-operation. I only hope that in the future we can count on the co-operation of the government because the future growth of the industry is dependent upon government policy. It is my hope that the minister will be making further announcements in respect of his three-part policy in the very near future.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I too want to thank the minister for kindly sending a copy of his statement to this party an hour or more in advance of the House sitting, but I am afraid that is about all for which I can thank him.

I offered to make bets with the minister as long as two or three years ago on where some of these routes would go and I know now why he did not call me on them.

The New Democratic Party still believes that because of Canada's geography, its thinly scattered population and the overriding fact that transportation is an essential public service, this industry should be a public utility and publicly owned. The Canadian Pacific Railway system in our opinion has no business in this entire scheme of things, but we will have to leave that until another day when we have an NDP government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, in view of the noises I hear to my right and the noises I heard from the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) as to the glories of private enterprise airlines, I should like to ask the hon. member and the minister where private enterprise and the Canadian Pacific were in the 1930's when the people of Canada, through their own air service, built up the airline system of this country. As soon as Air Canada became viable and profitable, private enterprise decided it wanted some of the gravy. Ever since then private carriers, in particular Canadian Pacific, have been handed lucrative routes developed by Air Canada and new routes that should have gone to Air Canada. It seems to me that the thrust of the minister's statement is: If there is a route that will not make a profit or only a marginal profit, give it to Air Canada, but if it is a lead-pipe cinch it will be lucrative be sure CP Air or one of those friendly regional carriers gets it.

Air Canada has been allowed to develop only at a rate that ensures that its so-called pre-eminence is steadily decreased. For example, in the recent agreement signed with the United States, Air Canada did not receive the consideration it should have. The other thing the minister should be reminded about in regard to the agreement with the United States is that Saskatchewan was left out completely. It was given no routes. Manitoba made representations to the government and to the minister at the economic conference in Calgary for routes serving Winnipeg-Minneapolis, Winnipeg-Denver and Winnipeg-Grand Falls. None of these can be in effect before 1976 and there is no guarantee there.

I will make another little bet now, if anybody would like to call me on it, that if and when routes are awarded out of Manitoba to the central and north central United States they will go to TransAir. If anybody would care to call me on that bet I will be glad to take it. This airline was handed a lucrative Air Canada route to Toronto in order to subsidize it indirectly so it would serve the people of Brandon, Dauphin and Yorkton. No sooner had it got the route than it quit going to Yorkton. Now an application has been made to quit going to Dauphin and Brandon. That is your private enterprise regional carrier, Mr. Speaker.

The minister talks about decentralization. The ears of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) perked up and he even grinned. Air Canada—head office in Montreal; overhaul base, Montreal; major computer centre, Montreal. At the moment there are minor computer centres in Winnipeg and Toronto and the one at Winnipeg is to disappear. Compare that with four of the major airlines in the United States. American Airlines—head office, New York; major overhaul base, Tulsa, Oklahoma; major computer centre, Tulsa, Oklahoma. United Air Lines—head office, Chicago—

Some hon. Members: Private enterprise!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is having a difficult time. I think the House owes it to the hon. member to give him an opportunity to make his statement without interruption.

Mr. Benjamin: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, United Air Lines—head office, Chicago; major overhaul base, San Francisco; major computer centre, Denver, and other computer centres in Chicago and San Francisco. The minister talks about Air Canada serving as a model for decentralization. I suspect that even the Air Canada finance group at Winnipeg will be slated to disappear once the computer operation is further enlarged at Montreal. I will make a little bet with the minister on that, too. Air Canada can and should be setting an example for the private airlines I just mentioned but has been prevented from doing so by the policies of the government. Anything that will enhance the prestige of private enterprise, particularly Canadian Pacific, has met with approval.

May I briefly mention the international routes about which the minister spoke. He reminds me of the Pope in the Middle Ages who divided up the world between Spain and Portugal. There is no real change in the thrust or objective which is to provide more of the best to Canadian Pacific. The division has been made in such a way as to provide CP Air with most of the new areas that will afford the largest growth in international traffic. Air Canada gets Yugoslavia. Very good; I am glad. But CP Air gets the countries from which there has been massive immigration to Canada—Portugal, Spain, Italy and Greece.

• (1130)

An hon. Member: And they pay taxes on every flight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Air Canada is to get northern Europe, but the minister says CP Air will keep Amsterdam. Why? We do not know what the rationale is. Air Canada is to have all of Africa except Morocco and a few other north African countries. I will make another bet with the minister that eventually CP Air will get Egypt and Libya as well. Israel could not get them but CP Air will.

The entire thrust of the statement of the minister is an extension of the bad policy that has been carried on since the early 1950s. The NDP will continue to propose fundamental changes in air policy and the way in which it serves the people of this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, what surprises me about the policy statements of the Minister of Transport (Mr. March) and as indeed those of the other ministers is that they always in substance express wishes, but their application never does stand up to the statement. This morning once again wishes have been expressed when it was stated that transport must first ensure adequate domestic service to the Canadian people.

In my opinion, the Minister of Transport knows as well as I do, especially as regards transport between Quebec City and Ottawa, all the difficulties incurred on that flight. We have to fight to obtain direct flights and the Minister of Transport, who travels as often as I do, is yet unaware of the ineffectiveness of his policy statements on transport.

Further on, the minister states three important points of that policy. First, to ensure safe, efficient and convenient air services. Once more one can realize the problems confronting small domestic airlines almost everywhere. We do not mind speaking about international airlines but we often forget to implement the guidelines mentioned in the minister's speech which are aimed at providing efficient service to Canadians.

Second, the problem is to contribute to the economic and social growth of our country, a contribution which unfortunately comes in late in most cases.

Third, the program is to see to it that the various air transportation services are reasonably balanced so as, and I now quote the minister's own words:

—to create an adequate atmosphere in which the airline industry of Canada can continue to develop—

But when the minister is requested to enlarge an airport or to create a new service in a particular region, and I would offer my own constituency as an example, when the tourist industry is to be developed and the Minister of Transport is requested to take the first steps for an airport expansion, he contents himself with political speeches and in fact nothing is done for the development of a region. This applies to all regions of Canada.

Further on, we are again told by the minister, and I wonder what the NDP had to complain about this morning in this field—

An hon. Member: They are always complaining!

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): And I will say as my hon. friend did, they always complain. The NDP members are telling us about nationalization whereas all the examples they give us are private companies. There again I would emphasize that, according to the minister's speech, the government does not want small companies to hope they will progress or grow and compete with the two major companies. If this isn't state control as advocated by the New Democratic Party, I wonder what the minister means by that.

Yet we speak of highly subsidized routes. Let me give one more example, which should satisfy the New Democratic Party. Each year, we grant subsidies to Air Canada for a rotten service within Canada. I emphasize that it is a national company.

This government also expects Air Canda to be a leader in the area of bilingualism and there again how many times did we have to rise in this House precisely to point out to the minister that his statements of principles or policies are far from being actually implemented in airports as well as on aircraft, even by air hostesses.

He went on to say that agreements must be reached with the United States to ensure security, adequate service to Canadians going to the United States but how many times will we have to repeat to the minister that if we want to bring Americans to Canada, mainly to develop the tourist industry, there should also be agreements favouring Canadian airline companies.

In a last gasp in his statement of good wishes the minister said that perhaps because of the shortage in fuel we may have problems with those air carriers. Once again, practical suggestions were made to the minister but no action was taken. I remember quite well, not too long ago, at the very beginning of the discussions on the oil crisis, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) suggested to the Minister of Transport that he inform Air Canada with respect to its Montreal-Rouyn flight making a stop at Val-d'Or, then returning to Rouyn for another stop and coming back to Val-d'Or for a further stop before returning to Montreal, to eliminate the second stop at Val-d'Or thus making a saving of fuel for Air Canada and all of Canada. But once again in spite of the policy statements valid suggestions are not yet implemented.

As a rule, Mr. Speaker, it is again evident that the government is content, as usual, to make statements of principles but is never ready to put into practice what it has said. The Minister of Transport has made an effort this morning, unlike his colleagues, in making available copy of his declaration before the House met. I hope that for once, he will go further than his colleagues in putting into practice this morning's statement.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

AGREEMENT BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND JAMES BAY DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I rise to seek leave of the House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the fact that an agreement exists between the government of Canada and the James Bay Development Corporation whereby the James Bay Development Corporation has the power of veto over joint Canada-Corporation activities in the area of environmental studies and whereunder the government of Canada has agreed to limit its activity and expenditures in such studies even though they are in the national interest. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That the agreement dated November 24, 1972, between Her Majesty in right of Canada and the James Bay Development Corporation be referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development for examination and report.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY GRADE CROSSING FUND—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I also rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of the commitment made by both the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and the Minister of Transport in October, 1972, to double federal grants under the railway grade crossing fund and to provide funds to move railroads out of core urban areas, and in view of the government's failure to present any legislation to the House to that effect for over a year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Nelson):

That this House immediately double the current federal share available under the federal railway grade crossing fund and forthwith provide funds to assist in relocation of rail lines in core urban areas.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not. The motion cannot be put.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

AGREEMENT BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND JAMES BAY DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise again under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. Inasmuch as the agreement between the government of Canada and the James Bay Development Corporation of November 24, 1972, constitutes a declaration that the government sides with the James Bay Development Corporation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That this House disapproves of the government action in making an agreement with the James Bay Development Corporation that has effectively prevented it from publicly taking a stand on behalf of the Indian people in their struggle with that corporation.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member appreciates that a motion put in those terms, with that kind of preamble, is hardly in order. I have indicated to hon. members on numerous occasions that, in view of the fact there is no debate on these motions under Standing Order 43, members should try not to introduce argument in the preamble to motions. However, I will ask whether there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME OF MINISTERIAL STATEMENT ON ENERGY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources proposes to make a statement in the House on Monday. I have had some consultations and I understand it might be possible to agree to a House order that we revert to motions at five o'clock on Monday for the purpose of hearing the statement and the replies, and that, if it is regarded as desirable, we could split the question period as we did on the last occasion. I will urge the minister, and I am sure he will agree, that copies of the statement be placed in the hands of opposition spokesmen at a reasonable period before five o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Mr. Bell: We agree.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We agree, Mr. Speaker, and we hope the minister will have something to say.

Mr. Speaker: It is my understanding, therefore, there is agreement that there will be an order that on Monday next the House will revert to motions at five o'clock in the afternoon, and that there be a 20-minute question period earlier in the day and a 20-minute supplementary question period after the minister's statement under the terms of Standing Order 43.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

CHANGE OF NAME OF CONSTITUENCY FROM OTTAWA EAST TO OTTAWA-VANIER

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-00, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to change the name of my constituency to Ottawa-Vanier. As you know, the whole city of Vanier lies within my constituency. Vanier has been named after a great Canadian, a former governor general and I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, to introduce this bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ENERGY

ALLOCATION OF OIL AT WHOLESALE LEVEL THIS WINTER—EXTENT OF APPLICATION—REPRESENTATIONS TO SAUDI ARABIA AND ABU DHABI

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister arising out of his statement last evening that unless the supply picture improves very considerably there will be allocation of oil at the wholesale level in the country this winter. I rise not to raise the question of whether this constituted a policy statement that should have been made in the House but simply to ask the Prime Minister whether it is envisaged that this allocation at the wholesale level will apply to the whole of Canada or simply to certain regions of the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I made the statement in fairly general terms for two reasons. The first is that I did not want to be overly specific by presenting policy announcements which more properly would be made in the House. The second is that these very matters are being discussed in Toronto today by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with his provincial counterparts, and we would not want to make a specific announcement until he has spoken to the provinces and we hear their response.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, of course I am always delighted to see the leader of any party get a lot of applause, but I would like to see what the right hon. gentleman's followers would do for him if he really did something.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister having indicated to the country last night that there would be allocations at the wholesale level, I would like to ask him in the House of Commons, where it is appropriate that such a statement be made, in what regions of the country does he anticipate the necessity of resorting to wholesale allocation of oil?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member reads the answer I just gave to the same question which he is repeating, he will find the answer there. I indicated that this problem of regions was being discussed in Toronto by the minister, and we do not want to make a formal decision on that until we have given the provincial governments a chance to react to our proposals.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but wonder why the Prime Minister made a statement like this on a national network if he did not wish to go further until there was consultation with the provinces. Let me ask my right hon. friend this question. In view of the indication by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that the supply of oil may fall off by as much as 30 per cent in the Montreal area following the freeze-up, which I assume is related to the possibility of oil from Saudi Arabia and Abu Dhabi being cut off to the Portland-Montreal line, what steps is he taking personally, in view of the importance of this, to make certain that the governments of those two countries appreciate that this oil comes directly from Portland, Maine, to Canada and that there is no possibility of leakage into the United States? What measures is he taking, in view of the importance of this to the people of Quebec, to ascertain that those two countries take the same position as other Arabia countries seem to be taking at the present time in permitting deliveries through the pipeline to Montreal?

● (1150)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that through the Department of External Affairs and the minister they are well informed of our position.

METHOD OF ALLOCATING OIL AT WHOLESALE LEVEL THIS WINTER—POSSIBLE LEGISLATION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister some questions arising out of the policies he announced last night.

Mr. Nielsen: What policies?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will inform the House and the people of Canada on Monday about the machinery for the allocation of petroleum products at the wholesale level? Will there be legislation covering that suggestion in the near future?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that depends very much on the results of his talks with the provincial ministers in Toronto these days, and the question of legislation follows, obviously, from the results of those talks.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in order to clarify the situation, am I to understand from the present answer of the Prime Minister that his statement last night to the effect that there would be allocation at the wholesale level was not a firm statement, that the decision has not yet been taken and depends on the conference with the provincial ministers, or is it the form of the allocation about which he is now talking?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the decision has been taken that allocation at the wholesale level is necessary. There are various ways of doing it and there are various regions to which it might apply. It is this mechanism which we are discussing with the provinces and which will be the object of the announcement of the minister next week.

MECHANISM TO CONTROL OIL PRICES AFTER EXPIRATION OF FREEZE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister a question on a second subject. He said something to the effect that the price freeze in its present form—I think those were his words—would be lifted on January 31 but the government would not allow Canadian prices to go quite as high as world prices of oil. He used the term "world prices". May I ask the Prime Minister whether legislation is ready and, if so, what kind of mechanism is intended, and to what level is the price to be allowed to rise after January 31?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I may correct the misunderstanding, what I did say is that we would not permit the price to rise to world levels no matter how high prices went. The minister has said this before. The sky is not the limit as far as we are concerned, and this is what I indicated last night. So far as the other part of the question is concerned the answer is yes, we will have to introduce legislation, certainly before the year's end, to indicate the way in which these prices will be determined.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will return to the hon. member for York South and others for supplementaries but for the moment we will hear the supplementary question of the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Oral Questions

[Translation]

QUEBEC—NECESSITY FOR RESTRICTIONS ON USE OF OIL—NEED FOR MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Quebec Premier Bourassa stated only a week ago that there would be no oil or energy shortage in Quebec. Therefore, why did the Prime Minister bring up the scarecrow of voluntary restrictions to scare the population last night, and what was the purpose of such action?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that there is a difference between what the government of Quebec said and what the hon. member says.

About a week ago, I had the opportunity to talk with Mr. Bourassa and I can assure the hon. member that the Quebec premier does not want to promise to the population of Quebec that there will be enough oil next winter. Maybe the hon. member is referring to a statement made much earlier by another minister before he knew all the facts. I should like to add, Mr. Speaker, that the Toronto meeting is precisely aimed at acquainting the provincial ministers, including those from Quebec, with all the facts, with the present situation and with the comments of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) about the Portland pipeline, all of which Quebec will have to know before it can promise its population that it has nothing to worry about next winter.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Last night, the right hon. Prime Minister said that we have sufficient oil supplies and that there will be no shortage in that regard, but that transportation, the pipeline, etc., were the most important problems at the present time. Then, last night, during the CBC television news, we saw that a Greek tanker, with oil on board from Vancouver, will use the Panama Canal on its way to Montreal or Portland. Did the right hon. Prime Minister realize then the importance for Canada to possess its own merchant marine for the transportation of our goods in Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will refer to the statement made by the Minister of Transport, he will realize which direction the government is taking concerning a merchant marine. He will find that it is also important to have a pipeline, for the distance is shorter from Toronto-Sarnia to Montreal through a pipeline than from the west coast to Portland via the Panama Canal.

METHOD OF CONTROLLING OIL PRICES AFTER FREEZE LIFTED—POSITION OF PROPOSED PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister two questions arising out of the statement he made last night and what he has said today. I should like something to be clarified. Will the price freeze on petroleum products be lifted at the end of January, as set out by himself and the minister? The Prime Minister said that the price would not be identical with the world price. What mechanism has the government in mind, or what alternative measures does it have to control prices for the protection of the consumer? If he cannot tell us today, when will the wraps come off this unknown policy?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I just answered a similar question by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. I indicated that on Monday we will be giving part of the answer to that, but I think the rest of the answer will come when we introduce legislation relative to the question of the export tax and the pricing of oil.

Mr. Woolliams: I have a further question, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Prime Minister dealt with the Montreal pipeline and said it had been announced. We have had various announcements about this pipeline. As the pipeline is important to ensure supply, how far has the pipeline project gone? Who is going to build it? When is the project going to commence, and is the government assured of enough steel so that the project can go ahead?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the pipeline was announced on September 4. Following that announcement the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have been putting together the answers to the questions asked by the hon. member and they will be announced in the House in the usual way.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North, but there are so many members seeking supplementaries on this subject that I think perhaps we should try to limit them.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, it would seem that this is an unknown policy. Nobody knows the policy. It is something like Alice in Wonderland. When will the wraps come off this project so that the people of Canada will know instead of having to listen to the kind of drivel to which they listened last night?

INQUIRY AS TO DECISION ON WHETHER NATIONAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION IS TO BE ESTABLISHED

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. As the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicated to the committee and to the House that he would be making an announcement before the end of this month on the government's position with regard to a national petroleum corporation, does the Prime Minister's statement last night mean that there will not be an announcement this month?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not understand whether the member said that the minister had said he would announce this on Monday. If that is what the member understood—

Mr. Nielsen: This month.

Mr. Trudeau: Certainly there will be an announcement on that question some time soon.

TAR SANDS OIL—POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT INVESTMENT IN DEVELOPMENT—EXPLORATION INCENTIVES TO PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister clarify his position with regard to the oil sands? He indicated he wants to see rapid development. Is it the position of the government that they want to become directly involved by way of direct investment in this development? Second, what incentives to exploration—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that they should ask only one question at a time. I think it complicates matters to ask a series of questions. I suggest the hon. member might ask the first question and the second as a supplementary.

Mr. Yewchuk: Is the government planning direct investment in the Alberta oil sands?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government is determined to see that those oil sands are brought into full production for the benefit of the Canadian people. The form this will take will be discussed this weekend after the meeting with the provincial ministers. The federal minister intends to spend some time with the Alberta minister discussing this very question.

Mr. Yewchuk: My supplementary question pertains to encouragement of exploration. The Prime Minister did not make any reference to this in his statement last night. Can he clarify what incentives to exploration by private enterprise his policy will include?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if I did not make any reference to that last night it was because I did not want to make the program any longer. The hon. member and the industry know there are already incentives being given to the industry for exploration in the form of depletion allowances.

OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—REASONS FOR DELAY OF DECISION TO BEGIN CONSTRUCTION—DEADLINE FOR DECISION BY INTERPROVINCIAL PIPE LINE COMPANY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question regarding extension of the oil pipeline to Montreal to which he committed the government on September 4. In view of the fact the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has repeatedly said that no decision has been reached because of some problems in financing the construction of this pipeline, will the Prime Minister state whether these financial problems have been settled? If not, what is the nature of these problems that are preventing a decision to begin the construction of the pipeline, which must be done within the next two years if the problems of eastern Canada are to be resolved?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the conclusion of the question. That is why I said we had enough information to enable me to say it would be terminated by the end of 1975. As to the other part of the question, we are determined that the pipeline will be built, whether it be with private or public financing or a combination of both.

Mr. Douglas: What deadline has the Prime Minister set for Interprovincial Pipe Line Company to make a decision and can he assure the House that, if Interprovincial Pipe Line Company is not prepared to proceed by that deadline, the government will undertake the construction itself inasmuch as the whole inter-provincial pipeline ought to be brought under public ownership in view of the present situation?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think I just indicated the answer to that. We are determined that it be built. If the private sector, either completely or in part, does not see reasons for building it, we will make sure it is built with public funds. I hope the House of Commons will co-operate and set a deadline so there will not be the kind of filibuster that will prevent the pipeline going through on time.

SOCIAL SECURITY

APPOINTMENT OF FORMER QUEBEC MINISTER AS ADVISER TO MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Mrs. Albanie Morin (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Could he tell the House if Quebec ex-Minister of Social Affairs Claude Castonguay has been approached with a view to retaining his services as special adviser to the department?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to confirm that Mr. Claude Castonguay has agreed to act as adviser to the planning group charged with the task of reviewing the Canadian social security plan. I am quite happy, as are all my provincial colleagues to be able to rely on the great ability and experience of Mr. Castonguay.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I do so hesitantly because I do not want to appear ungallant to the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin).

Some hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Nielsen: That last question was clearly a put-up job and an abuse of the question period that has already been cut in half because of the non-policy, grumbling and bumbling of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

[Translation]

Mrs. Morin: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Louis-Hébert is rising on a question of privilege.

Mrs. Morin: Mr. Speaker, I challenge the comments of the hon. member for Yukon. I think it was my duty to ask that question because the Quebec ex-Minister of Social Affairs was also representing the Louis-Hébert constituency. Besides, it had already been suggested that he might act as adviser to the Department of National Health and Welfare and I simply wanted to clear up the matter. The minister did not draft my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member for Témiscamingue wish to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Would the minister have in his department a position of assistant adviser for Mr. Yvon Dupuis, for instance?

BILATERAL AGREEMENT ON ROUTES TO UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON REQUESTS OF PRINCE ALBERT, SASKATOON AND REGINA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the amount of cheering on the other side indicates that none of them listened to the Prime Minister last night or they would not be cheering. My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It has to do with the announcement he made this morning. What consideration was given to the request of the cities of Prince Albert, Saskatoon and Regina, supported by the government of Saskatchewan, that the province of Saskatchewan should have a route into the United States?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the statement I made this morning was aimed at defining a new international policy, excluding the United States. We are negotiating with the United States for a bilateral agreement. This is where this problem should be solved, if it is possible to solve it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wish to ask the minister this question. In view of the situation in Saskatchewan where there are no routes into the north except by private plane, in consequence of which employees of mining corporations, prospectors and the like have to go into northern Saskatchewan by way of Alberta or Manitoba, could the minister secure the support of the Minister of Justice so that Saskatchewan will not be discriminated against and get justice?

REGIONAL CARRIER POLICY—REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Transport. In view of the disappointing statement he made this morning to the House with respect to the 1966 regional air carrier policy, which the minister says he intends to continue and which is obviously inadequate, will the hon. gentleman reconsider the whole regional air carrier policy, taking into account the active interest, participation and opinions of the provincial governments?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): This is what we are doing in concert with the provincial governments in the west, following the Western Economic Opportunities Conference. We are in constant consultation concerning air services in the northern part of the provinces and all regional services, too. This is something we are already doing.

WELFARE

METHOD OF FULFILLING PRIME MINISTER'S PROMISE OF FUEL COST ASSISTANCE TO NEEDY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister also prompted by his television performance last night which pre-empted a full-length show called "The Man Who Ran Away".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macquarrie: It refers to his assurance that needy Canadians would have enough money to pay for higher priced winter fuels. Can the right hon. gentleman advise us how this aid is to be given, whether by way of new legislation, greater federal generosity under the Canada Assistance Plan, or how?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I indicated in my statement that this was the direction agreed on between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and myself, and he will be able to announce in due course the way in which this will be done.

FUEL COST ASSISTANCE TO NEEDY—REQUEST THAT PROVINCES BE INFORMED OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S WILLINGNESS TO PAY

Mr. Ed Nelson (Burnaby-Seymour): My question is supplementary, Mr. Speaker. It is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It arises from the Prime Minister's statement: "I have asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare to make sure that payments to people in need are sufficient to meet winter fuel costs." Will the minister undertake to inform his provincial counterparts of his concern about this matter and tell them that the federal government is willing to pay extra fuel costs resulting from the current round of increases in petroleum prices?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am getting in touch with my provincial colleagues. As a matter of fact, a telegram is being sent to them this morning on this subject.

AIR CANADA

ROLE AS MODEL CORPORATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON PERFORMANCE

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport arising out of his statement this morning that the government expects Air Canada to perform a special role as a model corporation. Is the minister satisfied with the performance of Air Canada in discharging this obligation and, if not, can he advise the House in what areas—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member asks whether the minister will indicate whether he is satisfied. The hon. member is really inviting an expression of opinion on the part of the minister and a question in those terms is not in order.

Mr. Mazankowski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the question was directed to the minister to ascertain the performance of Air Canada in carrying out this obligation referred to in the statement made this morning. I simply want to ask the minister whether this role of the corporation is being performed by it in accordance with government policy under which it is stated that Air Canada should perform a very special role as a model corporation. I am simply asking the minister whether this is being done by Air Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I still have serious doubts whether the question is in order. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply briefly, after which I will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West.

INDUSTRY

STEEL—POSSIBLE SHORTAGE OF PIPE FOR CONSTRUCTION OF PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the commitment in principle to extend the pipeline to Montreal or farther east, has the ministry taken the appropriate steps to ascertain that there is sufficient steel available to carry out this undertaking, bearing in mind the very tight supply situation in Canada as far as steel is concerned and the inability of the industry to bring in new steel production before 1976?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The hon. member is quite right. There is a potential shortage of steel. But this is only one of a number of matters which are presently under discussion with the principals involved. Clearly, if there is not sufficient steel the project might have to be delayed. But there are other alternatives.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MANPOWER

EXTENT OF CAMPAIGN TO CREATE EMPLOYMENT THIS WINTER

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Following his statement on the launching of a crash campaign to create jobs this winter, could the minister tell us why this campaign applies to only seven urban centres?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I believe, with respect, that is a misinterpretation of what I said last night before the committee. I announced that manpower counselling facilities would be enhanced in seven major centres, and that other measures, the introduction of job banks, job information centres, are proceeding and being completed in 19 centres, and that we will proceed in all Canada Manpower Centres across the country with a final date in mind of early in 1975.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question.

Would not the minister rather think that the best crash campaign would still be one that would aim at tripling votes for the LIP?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is more in the way of a representation than a question.

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION PROMISED BY MINISTER'S PREDECESSOR

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport arising from his statement this morning. Will the minister tell us whether he has any present intention of implementing the three major pieces of legislation promised by his predecessor on March 14, 1972, in a major speech in the House, including legislation to divorce Air Canada from the CNR?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): This is something we are still looking into.

Mr. MacKay: Bearing in mind the minister's indication this morning that he will be making policy announcements in the near future, will he undertake to cover this point at that time?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This is surely something we shall consider.

REQUEST FOR STATISTICS ON WHICH DIVISION OF ROUTES BETWEEN AIR CANADA AND CANADIAN PACIFIC MADE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question also arises from the statement the Minister of Transport made this morning. In view of the fears that Canadian Pacific has been assigned regions of the world which have the largest potential for traffic growth in the coming years, would the minister be prepared to provide members of the House with the statistics and other information to which he had access in projecting the potential growth in traffic in those areas?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman's premise is wrong. If he reads the statement of principles which was made in the House he will find that this division of the world relies on the principle that Air Canada is pre-eminent. He says the share of the market enjoyed by CP is much larger than that enjoyed by Air Canada. I think he did not look carefully enough into the division, because when Pakistan and India are added hon. members will see what kind of market that means.

Mr. Benjamin: That is not quite what I said, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister this: On the basis of his desire to have a rational division of the world between Canada's two major air carriers, would he be good enough to explain, since Air Canada is being assigned northern Europe, the rationale for the continued allocation of Amsterdam to CP Air?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The only rationale is that it was already there. It had been allocated before.

FUEL COST ASSISTANCE TO NEEDY—BASIS OF PAYMENTS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare related to a previous question about the steps the minister is going to take to provide additional funds to poor people. On what criteria and conditions will these payments be assessed?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answer is very simple. Under the law the provinces have the freedom to set the levels of social assistance. What I will be discussing with my colleagues is that in setting up the levels of social assistance, they take into account the rising cost of fuel.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ADDITIONAL CANADIAN PERSONNEL FOR UNITED NATIONS PEACEKEEPING FORCE—NUMBERS AND SOURCE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence and relates to the letters he tabled earlier today. How many men are involved in the eight units and staff that will be making a contribution to the United Nations peace force, and from where are the personnel going to be drawn?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in the exchange of notes I tabled earlier Canada agreed to supply additional personnel to work with the United Nations Emergency Force. There will be approximately 600 in addition to the 480 personnel who are already there. Therefore, during the next few days our contingent will be growing to more than a thousand. These personnel will come from all regions of Canada and from many bases in Canada, not from any one unit.

DISPUTE WITH WIRE SERVICE GUILD—POSSIBLE ATTEMPT TO BLOCK TELEVISING OF GREY CUP GAME—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State in regard to the dispute between the CBC and the Canadian Wire Service Guild. Is the minister aware of the latest development in this regard in that the union stated today that its members might walk off their jobs during the weekend in an attempt to knock the Grey Cup football game off both Canadian television networks? Will he give the House an assurance that he will see to it that the personnel of his department and those of the Minister of Labour will use all their resources in order that talks are resumed so that this eventuality will not take place? Would he kindly give us that assurance?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member well knows, I am not prepared to give that assurance because I am not in a position to give that assurance. I am as concerned as he is about the implications. I have had discussions with the Minister of Labour and I shall be talking to him later about this matter.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the fact that, as I understand it, talks between the parties to the dispute have been discontinued, can the minister advise what immediate steps he has recommended in order to get the parties back to the bargaining table? Can the minister answer that question?

Mr. Faulkner: Of course I can, Mr. Speaker, but I am not prepared to.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

Mr. Alexander: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton West is rising on a point of order, following which I will recognize the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to let the minister know that I think that is a stupid and irresponsible statement to make.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

POSSIBLE PURCHASE OF HOPPER CARS—ACTION TO SECURE RETURN OF CARS FROM UNITED STATES—NUMBER OF CARS PROVIDED BY RAILWAYS UNDER COMMITMENT

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of reports that the government is considering the purchase of more hopper cars and rolling stock for the railroads, can the minister tell the House whether he has received any commitment or assurance from the railroads that they will be able to secure the return of some of the thousands of Canadian boxcars which, according to the president of the CNR, are currently being held and used in the United States?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the exact situation on hopper cars is that requests have been made to us to consider additional hopper cars. This, of course, involves the question of the obligations of both the government and the railways in this matter. There are always reasons why a certain number of Canadian cars are in the United States. I understand that, particularly in the case of lumber, some warehousing is going on in railway cars, but I am sure that the railways as well as the government are very interested in getting them back.

Mr. Gleave: What I asked the minister was whether he had had any assurance from or discussions with the railways in regard to this question. Of course, there is not much use our proceeding if we are going to lose our transportation facilities at the other end. Might I ask the minister whether the railroads have lived up to their commitment under the previous agreement when we purchased boxcars? Have the railways lived up to their commitment at that time to maintain the percentage of rolling stock that they would make available for the movement of grain?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the exact commitment under the agreement is not to allow an acceleration of the manner in which boxcars were being removed from the movement of this product. I have not had a chance to assess in detail how close they are to that exact level, but we will be watching that. They are very close to the commitments they made in discussions with the Canadian Wheat Board in regard to the number of cars they could put into the grain movement, though, of course, the number is not sufficient to satisfy the present need.

ENERGY

EXTENSION OF OIL PIPELINE TO MONTREAL—REASON FOR NOT ACTING EARLIER

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that in 1969 the Prime Minister and his cabinet turned down a strong plea from the Independent Petroleum Association to build a pipeline to Montreal, and as recently as January 29 of this year flatly turned down a proposal from the Alberta government that such a pipeline should be built, would the Prime Minister say whether the government accepts responsibility for these tragic mistakes, and why did the government wait until September 4 before taking action?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that is debate or argument, not a question, and therefore is not in order.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there were some allegations made which perhaps should be answered.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not want to prevent the Prime Minister from replying to the question, but I would suggest to hon. members that perhaps there is not much to be gained by debating a question which clearly is out of order. I prefer to recognize the hon. member for Vaudreuil.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF SUPPLY OF CAPITAL FOR DEVELOPMENT OF CANADIAN RESOURCES

Mr. H. T. Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Noting that the Toronto-Dominion Bank has lent $375 million to Mexico to develop oil wells, can the minister assure us that he will take any measures necessary to guarantee an adequate supply of Canadian capital for resource development in this country?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman should not underestimate the fertility of our own capital markets.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have run short of time but I will recognize the hon. member for Victoria.

ENERGY

EXTENSION OF OIL PIPELINE TO MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENT ON SEPTEMBER 4

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister stated last night and again today that the decision to construct a pipeline was announced on September 4. In Hansard he is reported as saying that "the government will also hold early consultations with provinces and industry on the extension of pipeline facilities." The vagueness of his statement in Hansard has apparently deceived both the Minister of Energy and myself. Can the Prime Minister inform me whether a secondary or clarifying statement was made on September 4, and if so, where was it made?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check what other words were used following those in regard to the pipeline. It is true that at that time I made a statement in the words quoted, but since that time, as I indicated last night on television, I have had many discussions with my colleagues and with industry and the private sector. We are going ahead with that decision. I agree that those words were perhaps not uttered at that time with the knowledge we have since acquired in regard to ways of going about this.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair might be allowed to recognize briefly the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre before calling orders of the day.

COAL—POSSIBLE OPENING OF NEW MINES IN CAPE BRETON—SUGGESTIONS TO CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could return to the comments of the Prime Minister last night and direct this question to him as he made reference at that time to coal, among other sources of energy. Would the Prime Minister advise whether the government has given any specific advice or made any suggestions to the Cape Breton Development Corporation regarding further research and investigation into the possibility and feasibility of new coal mine openings in the Cape Breton area which, as the right hon. gentleman knows, is a matter that comes directly within the purview of the Cape Breton Development Corporation?

● (1230)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to take that question as notice and discuss it with the minister responsible for the Cape Breton Development Corporation and with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and hope to get a reply.

WELFARE

ASSISTANCE TO NEEDY ON FUEL COSTS—SUGGESTION FEDERAL GOVERNMENT PAY 100 PER CENT OF INCREASED COST

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the peripatetic Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Now that he has walked back to his seat, perhaps I can put the question to him. When the minister discusses with the provinces the federal government's willingness to help Canadians meet the increasing costs of heating their homes this winter, and presumably this is under the Canada Assistance Plan, will he offer to pay out of federal funds more than the 50 per cent provided under the Canada Assistance Plan, preferably 75 per cent or even 100 per cent?

[Mr. McKinnon.]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): That is not my intention, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have a very urgent and important question for the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that the Chair has no objection to allowing a member to ask a question or a minister to reply even after the question period has expired. There has been an extension of a few minutes and there are obviously a number of members who are still anxious to ask what I am sure are important and urgent questions. I would hope the hon. member could obtain the information he is seeking by some other means.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PROTECTION OF PRIVACY BILL

CREATION OF OFFENCES RELATED TO INTERCEPTION OF PRIVATE COMMUNICATIONS BY CERTAIN DEVICES

The House resumed, from Thursday, November 22, consideration of Bill C-176, to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee of Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My understanding of the situation in relation to motions in respect of Bill C-176 is that motion No. 1 was allowed to stand; motion No. 2 was debated and allowed to stand but the debate is to be completed after we have considered motion No. 3, and that motion Nos. 3 and 4 were allowed to stand yesterday on the understanding that motion No. 3 would be debated as the first item today when government orders were called. I would, therefore, call motion No. 3.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert) moved:

That Bill C-176, An Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act, be amended in Clause 2:

(a) by deleting lines 33 and 34 inclusive at page 2 and substituting therefor:

"authorization or any person"

(b) by deleting lines 8 to 44 inclusive at page 7, lines 1 to 39 inclusive at page 8, lines 1 to 13 inclusive at page 9, lines 23 to 28 inclusive at page 11, lines 13 to 34 inclusive at page 17, and lines 29 to 32 inclusive at page 18.

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I begin by thanking the members of this House who arranged, when this item was called last evening, to have it put over until today. I appreciate what has been done and I want to thank all hon. members who made this possible. Today I am going to discuss in a general way a matter I have dealt with on previous occasions, and in particular on May 8. I emphasize that date because since then a major portion of the revelations in the Watergate investigation has shown the tremendous dangers which are inherent in anything along the line of wiretapping and taping.

To begin, with I should say that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) has apparently not read with care or attention, or probably not all, the speech made by the former Minister of Justice on September 2, 1969. It is a remarkable piece of work and indicates the amount of attention the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), as Minister of Justice, gave to this very serious problem. In the course of his remarks he said, among other things:

The new cybernetics of an increasingly urbanized technetronic environment will surround us. Science and technology will spawn new forms of electronic surveillance, psychological surveillance and data surveillance. Already scientists are experimenting with brainwave analysis to join the more conventional forms of psychological surveillance such as personality testing and polygraphing. National data banks, commercial reporting agencies, computerized transactions and the like are making us the greatest data-gathering, privacy-invading society ever known. Indeed, data-generating techniques may well remember what we have chosen to forget.

That is the essence, if you understood what has been said up to the present time. These modern expressions are somewhat difficult unless you have a dictionary with you. He went on to state:

The orbit of privacy will be an ever shrinking one; yet the need for privacy will be more paramount than ever. The law must ensure that the right to privacy remains sacrosanct.

I pass that on to the present Minister of Justice from one who is an experienced parliamentarian and has never endeavoured to force his own ideas on the House of Commons, regardless of the arguments advanced in this institution. He then went on to say:

—there is another side to the right to privacy which has not received the prominence it deserves but whose dimensions cannot be ignored. There is a tendency in governments to refuse information to its citizens under the guise of privacy which is disguised as the public interest.

That is an amazing prophesy of what has actually happened today. Secrecy is sometimes legitimized as the state's right to privacy, but it may well be a denial of the public right to know. I do not know how this might be summed up more succinctly than it was in that speech. What has happened here is that the minister has not trusted the committee, and in view of the way the system of committees has been set up that will not work.

Mr. Lang: The committee left in this section.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the hon. gentleman wants to interrupt he can stand up, and I will listen with the attention I normally give him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The committee system would not be effective because committees would become dominated by the minister, and would be permitted to do that which the government wanted done. The minister did not succeed in the committee because there were outstanding representatives on that committee who would not be pushed around by him. Amendments were made and the minister now comes before the House and asks that those amendments be further amended in accordance with his wishes. That is the first step along the road to the complete domination of a committee by a minister who refuses to listen to arguments, even from members of his own party on that committee. He determines the course he will follow and then, with a determination that would be highly considered in other courses of action, he proceeds to endeavour, having not been able to intimidate the committee, to bring about in this House of Commons a series of amendments.

● (1240)

I made clear on second reading that through the years I had been totally opposed to wiretapping and that I believed there must be some control. In Canada there has been none. I looked on this legislation when it was introduced as a step in the direction of preventing injustices that exist today through unlawful wiretapping. Now, we know something of how dangerous it is since the revelations of Watergate. I want to point out at this moment that, despite all the wiretapping done at Watergate and despite the tapes still available that have not been lost in transit or in consequence of indifferent reproduction, that none of the convictions that have been registered had anything to do with wiretapping. This is a very important consequence. The tapes neither helped nor hindered in the pursuit of the Watergate case. The tapes had never been heard of when the seven original Watergate defendants were convicted or pleaded guilty to bugging the Democratic National Headquarters. Neither the public nor the prosecutors knew the recordings existed when two former ministers, John Mitchell and Maurice Stans were indicted for perjury. No court had ever listened to a taped conversation when John W. Dean pleaded guilty to a charge of conspiracy. The tapes were not a factor whatsoever in the results that had been attained there.

That is a matter of great importance. It has always been the same through history, that when anyone decides to do something that is unjust there is always the explanation that it is for the benefit of the people. The minister has simply embraced that argument. I am not comparing the two, but the tragic irony of the French Revolution was that it was said to be for the good of humanity or the general good. The prosecutions that are taking place in the U.S.S.R., in the Ukraine and in other freedom-loving countries under the domination of the U.S.S.R. are explained by the U.S.S.R. in these words, "for the good, the general good". That type of humanitarian mentality has always been a jumping off place for those who would bring about injustice.

I said when I spoke on May 8 I was prepared to support the bill provided that sections were removed which have to do with temporary and emergency occasions. That to me completely destroys the entire bill. It places in the hands of an individual, an agent, the right to wiretap for 36 hours without the order of a judge. To me, there is nothing more dangerous to freedom within our country than that particular item. Why not leave the matter with the judges? There are 600 judges available. The minister said they might not be available at the moment. Will the agent be available; will the Attorney General of the particular province in which the alleged offence is being committed be available; will the Solicitor General be available? No. The fact remains, that however assiduous they are in the discharge of their duties they will not be present, if not in all the cases certainly in many of them. So we get down to the position—it is of that I intend to speak today—where so far as the administration of justice is concerned the section that will be used, as has been said by a number of members, will be the one to provide for the appointment of an agent.

Sir, I have been concerned about the way this government has acted on matters connected with freedom in this land. When Joe Drybones won his case in the Yukon on the Bill of Rights, who was it that appealed? It was the Department of Justice and its counsel who was instructed to oppose the Bill of Rights to the limit and have a declaration of the Supreme Court of Canada that it was in no way more than a grandiloquent declaration of freedom. Oh, how they love the Bill of Rights, but when they had an opportunity not to appeal the case of that Indian who had been successful under the Bill of Rights who was it that appealed? The Department of Justice. The same thing happened in respect of the Lavell case of which I shall speak on another occasion. What is the idea in this? Tell me where else such a provision exists? Where else can agents be appointed who have the right to take away many civil rights for 36 hours. Who are these agents to be—incognito? Will they be chosen as a result of consultation with the police? How will they be named? Will they be named in advance? How does the minister expect the agent will be available if 600 judges all across this country will not be available?

To me that explanation is simply hairsplitting on the part of the minister. Suppose a difficulty arises suddenly and action is necessary in an emergency, for example, in the province of Saskatchewan? How do they get in touch with the Attorney General of Saskatchewan to name an agent? Why is the minister so certain that that agent, if named in advance will be available? I am amazed that one incognito would be available but 600 judges would not be available. But the minister pushes ahead. He has what I describe in the kindest of good feelings, a bullheaded astigmatism. He just simply decides it will be done, and now he is trying to intimidate the committee. He is trying to have a second bite at the cherry because the cherries they produced to him were not the ones he wanted.

Mr. Lang: The committee did not agree with you.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That type of interruption indicates that the hon. gentleman has not had many cases in his life in the courts. As I have said, the minister does not trust committees. I shall not go further into that except to say that if committees are to be effective they should not be made a pet's plaything, no matter how you spell "pet". Backbenchers should have the opportunity to strike for views they believe to be right. I think that this committee has been one that deserves the commendation of the House of Commons, not the unbridled condemnation that the minister apparently will pile on it because he did not get what he wanted. I sometimes think that if he had had a little more experience at the Bar, he would not be so certain that he is right in everything when he tries to push these things through.

I ask him this question, because I know he will be anxious to answer it. In the last year the government of Canada has been spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on available buildings and rooms for the accommodation of visitors to Canada. Some $750,000 were spent over the year for rooms for the visiting members of the Commonwealth. Why were those rooms not used the other day in this exhibition of cabinet movability? Was there any danger that they were being bugged? Was that the reason they were not used? The cabinet members went out into the country, to that place known as O'Brien's Castle, at a cost of $260,000. The place had not been used for the last couple of years. It is far removed from the spying eyes of those who might see the cabinet in action—I mean moving in the direction of action.

What happened? It was just like a great callithumpian parade. All the ministers were off to the country to this hideout. Thousands of dollars were spent to renovate the place. There were secret servicemen and mounted police around to guard the secrecy of this cabinet meeting. Was the minister afraid of bugging? There is no danger of bugging out there because no one ever knew that the place would be used, even by the cabinet. But this indicates that the government is very concerned that there is danger that someone may be bugging the two cabinet rooms. You do not have to worry about that. But I would like the minister to explain this pilgrimage. Off to the country—away they go with mounted police, outriders, secret service. Why all these precautions? I will repeat, was the government afraid that it was being bugged? I do not know what you call those people who do bugging, but were they afraid of such people?

Mr. Nielsen: They were all inside the cabinet.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now, I come back to this: why does the minister want this? What is the purpose of pretending that this is a bill to control privacy, when as a matter of fact, it is a licence to an unknown agent to practice the very converse of privacy. What is the purpose of it? An agent must be specially designated in writing for the purposes of the section. When he gets this designation, how long does it exist? Will the agent simply go ahead at the end of 36 hours and get another extension? This is the most dangerous provision that has ever been incorporated in the law of this country; it is dangerous to freedom.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: What were the explanations? The explanation is that there is an emergency. The reason is that this government wants to be in a position where it can do as it pleases. So far as I am concerned, I will oppose this bill to the limit, unless the minister withdraws this portion thereof. There are other amendments on which members will have their views, but it is unbelievable that any minister could produce this thing which is of the essence of tyranny and capable of being used to destroy political opponents or others with whom the government is in disagreement.

That is what happened at Watergate. My 20 minutes are up, Mr. Speaker, but I want the minister to know that this thing must end. After the experience of Watergate we do not want to give to the government of this country, to the Attorney General or to the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) the power to do that which is destructive of the essence of freedom.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I thought I was allowed only 20 minutes, but having concluded may I just say that I will have some more to say later on when we reach third reading. May I emphasize once more that there will be no pussyfooting about this. The minister is not going to push this through the way he did the LIFT program which lost the western farmers hundreds of millions of dollars.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair. The House will resume at two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, I enter this debate as a layman, although it seems to me it is one that suits lawyers better, and it is particularly difficult following the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) who has made a major part of his career the defence of human rights and individual rights.

My instincts oppose wiretapping in any form—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danson: And in this way my instincts would support the amendments of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt). I consider the whole question of privacy of the individual to be of the utmost importance to us, particularly in this highly technological world were, with electronic surveillance, the opportunities for wiretapping become greater and more insidious. The whole question of the invasion of an individual's privacy is insidious, and wiretapping is a particularly insidious type of intrusion that can grow. We did not seem to take this very seriously in years past, but as we have seen what happened in other nations, and the possibilities in our own nation, we are now taking it very seriously indeed. We have genuine reason for concern, and the experience of our friends to the south has highlighted this concern, and shows how cancerous the whole process can be.

Some of us have been to other nations where it has been a way of life for many years, and we know the discomfort it can cause. The sheer discomfort of knowing that you cannot talk in privacy with your friends, even with your own wife, and to feel you cannot express your views freely and openly, is overwhelming. But I think we should not forget that the main intent of this bill is to make wiretapping, electronic surveillance, illegal for the first time. It is the first time this parliament has come to grips with this problem. There are some exceptions allowed by the bill, and I think it is the exceptions that worry us most of all. If these are unchecked and not scrutinized very thoroughly, I think we would have further reason for concern.

The most encouraging part of this debate and the proceedings in committee has been the scrutiny to which the bill itself has been put because of the concern of members in all parties. We well realize that in a society where organized crime and crimes of violence are increasing, the police deserve the utmost legitimate support that we can provide them. I think we are fortunate in this country to have the quality of policemen and police forces that we have. They do some very dirty jobs on our behalf, some very dangerous jobs, and in our striving for the protection of individual human rights we have not made their job easier. But I think it is important that we have stood on these principles, and I am sure the forces have adapted to them.

Yet there still remain opportunities and temptations for abuse, not because police are inhuman, but indeed because they are very human. Like you and I they have wives and families, concerns and consciences, but at the same time I think we should not be naïve and fool ourselves, because there are exceptions, and these exceptions are those which we must guard against. They can, and indeed have, endangered the respect which most of us have for our policemen and police forces. What I find discouraging is that while the vast majority of law officers do not engage in practices which are not within the law, or within the spirit of the law, I am disturbed by the fact that some practices of this type are overlooked by the colleagues of police officers, by men of the highest calibre, who would not engage in such practices themselves. In addition, they are winked at by lawyers who go along with them in courts because they have to get along with the police. Indeed, the judges themselves know about such practices, and so do many politicians. We must make certain that our laws are so framed that the public is protected against these abuses which do take place.

I am particularly concerned about the admissibility of evidence obtained by illegal means. I am not sure that my interpretation is correct, but it seems to me incongruous that illegally acquired information could be admissible in a court. It is even more curious that if a police officer obtained information illegally himself, used it in court, and the prosecution was successful in having a defendant convicted and sent to jail, the policeman in turn may be found guilty of the illegal acquisition of information and be liable to a fine of up to $5,000 and five years in jail. In the end, he might find himself in the same cell as the fellow he had prosecuted. Those would be a most uncomfortable five years.

This sort of thing makes a mockery of the law, and that is what we are trying to avoid here. I particularly welcome the requirement for control by the attorney general of each province, or his agent, and I think these agency slips should not be given out quite as freely as the authorizations we give to check the returns at polls during an election campaign. I further welcome the requirement for an ultimate authority, for a decision by a judge. The 36-hour provision is one which disturbs many of us; I know it disturbs particularly the right hon. gentleman for Prince Albert. This seems to be a reasonable provision which will give the officers of the law an opportunity to do their job. They know full well that, first, they must obtain approval from the Attorney General or his agent and, after that, obtain approval from a judge. That will be a reasonable check on the process.

● (1410)

The provision regarding admissibility of direct evidence obtained from legally sanctioned wiretaps is one which I find difficult to accept. I hope the minister will rectify this provision before we complete consideration of the bill. I do not like using distasteful measures in our society, even to achieve ends which may be highly desirable; so, it is with some reluctance that I support the measure before the House and speak against the amendment before the House at this time.

I am prepared to accept reasonable exceptions, well controlled and properly spelled out, which will achieve the broader goals and realistic concerns we all have. We want to allow the police to do their job with efficiency, fairness and compassion, provided at all times they work within the law. They should be required to do their duty with sensitivity, sincerity and a high degree of balance.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, in his foreword to La loi et l'ordre dans la démocratie canadienne, Mr. Wilfrid Bovey stated the following, and I quote:

> Crime is a constant threat to individual freedom. The citizen of a democracy cannot use this freedom when criminals are allowed to throw obstacles in his way. This is why, as the task of our armed forces is to protect our freedom against threats from without, that of the police is to protect it against threats from within.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, the legislator wants to give our police forces all possible means to control crime, especially organized crime.

I remember reading once that our police forces were vying with criminals in an organization race or a research contest, the latter to devise ways of committing crimes, the former to find means of controlling criminals.

A similar situation can be found, for example, between the world's two super-powers, the United States and the Soviet Union, both vying for the lead in the arms race. Each of them would try to develop the most sophisticated weapons to defeat the other in a conflict. The same can be said of police forces as regards criminals. However, it happens frequently that funds made available to police for crime prevention research are much less than the monies used by criminals to contrive ways of evading our laws to reach their ends.

I think therefore that we must praise each new piece of legislation introduced to help police fight crime in a more effective way. There are however limits to be respected.

Let me quote from Charles Reith's The Police Idea:

> Our world's basic problem is to find a way to give authorities the power to make sure that their laws are adhered to, without which, as history has largely demonstrated, failure is often inevitable.

However, until now, at least until recent years, our police forces, while doing an effective and heroic job in the circumstances, have had to face very well established criminal organizations often well protected, in high places sometimes.

I believe that our police forces want as many means as possible to detect and combat crime and criminals.

On June 26, 1973, in Sherbrooke, a meeting was held between police forces and Quebec Justice Minister Choquette. At that time, Mr. Choquette said that last year, the police were able to detect 80 per cent of all major crimes, make 658 arrests and lay 1,353 charges thanks to wiretapping.

Mr. Speaker, these figures speak for themselves and we may well wonder if the police could have had such brilliant results without wiretapping.

The purpose of this bill is to prevent the use of bugging devices by anyone, but it includes a few exceptions in the case of authorizations given by some people in authority. We must give our police forces the right to use wiretapping devices to fight crime.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that the purpose of the amendment moved by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) is to restrict to as few people as possible the authority to grant permits for the use of wiretapping devices. I am in favour of this amendment because the greater the number of people allowed to grant such permits, the bigger the risk of seeing wiretapping used for other ends.

I think it is the wish of members of the House and all other Canadians that only our police forces be allowed to wiretap, for the specific purpose of fighting crime. We must do everything we can to avoid that electronic espionage be available to any political or economic system whatever. Such is not the purpose. The objective is to prevent as much as possible too many persons from having the authority to issue these permits.

And as the right hon. member from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) suggested at noon today, I think that judges—there are enough of them in Canada and they are readily available—should be the only ones with the power to issue these permits, thereby preventing the possibility of these permits being issued to political figures. This does not mean that I do not trust the Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Allmand) or his provincial counterparts, far from it; but we are aware that temptation is sometimes strong and that people change. Therefore, we must take the necessary steps to prevent abuses, and I feel that is exactly the purpose of the amendment introduced by the hon. member for New Westminster and I intend to support it.

● (1420)

[English]

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief. As I understand it, the present motion, moved by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), is for the removal of the emergency provisions. Later in the set of motions I have a similar amendment. I was most interested in the remarks made last night by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). In his comments, the minister referred to the point I made that relying on these techniques or methods of surveillance the police may avoid other investigative procedures and, therefore, we are not necessarily improving the quality of police performance.

Knowing the minister's vast experience as a law professor and a person very knowledgeable in these matters, I took his advice and had another look at the bill. I wanted to find those things that were going to protect us from general surveillance or abuses of the use of wiretapping. I looked at clause 178.13(1). That provides that a judge must be satisfied that, and I quote:

other investigative procedures have been tried and have failed;

It does not say all other investigative procedures. It is entirely feasible that if someone walks up to a front door, knocks and asks if Joe Blow is in, then is told no, he can say that other procedures have failed and request a wiretap. There is enough room in most of the provisions of this bill which attempt to protect us for the police to easily avoid them. I am not saying they would do that deliberately. However, I do say that in an emergency situation the police, for honest reasons, will attempt to use the provisions of this bill. In the process of so doing, they will of necessity violate privacy in an unnecessary way.

I have made the point before that the restriction in this bill is minimal. The report from the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) was that of the 663 wiretaps by the RCMP in 1972-73, only 129 came within the provisions of the bill. This would result in a reduction of only about 24 per cent.

I went through the bill a little further. I thought there may be some protection in the person and place provision. This is under the clause "application for authorization". The police have to set down certain provisions before they can get permission to use it. One is to state the identity of the person. This is in clause 178.12(c). If they do not know the identity of the person, they must identify the place they are going to tap. If you do not know where the place is, you cannot state where you are going to tap. The last part of that provision gives the police the right to general surveillance.

In the city of Vancouver, there is obviously a thriving heroine trade. If the police do not know who is involved or where it is happening, they can say they suspect a particular apartment block and make an application for wiretapping the whole block. I realize the decision is in the hands of the judge, but the possibility is there.

At the minister's suggestion, I looked further at the bill in order to see how broad the protection is and how it protects civil liberties. I looked at the emergency clause which many of us would like to see removed. According to that clause, and I hope the minister will correct me if I am wrong, where an emergency situation arises and it is inconvenient or impractical to get a judge, the agent who is authorized to do this can authorize the tap without court approval. The police officer can come back before the 36 hours are up, and thereupon the attorney general may do a number of things. He may direct an application for an authorization to intercept. In other words, he can approve something that has already happened or he can approve the permit or revoke the permit. This is what I want to emphasize.

The clause provides that the Solicitor General or attorney general can revoke the permit that is given for emergency purposes. Let us assume that a tap that has not received court approval has been going on for 20 hours. The attorney general can at that time revoke the permit. However, any evidence that is obtained from the wiretap is legal and admissible. If I am wrong, I will be happy to be corrected. That seems to be the plain meaning of the clause which I re-read at the suggestion of the minister. I say the emergency permit clause has enough holes in it now.

I support entirely the position taken by the right hon. member that it is a completely unnecessary provision. In his address, he pointed out that there are approximately 600 judges available. In terms of getting that kind of approval, it would be practical to have a judge authorized to receive a telephone call in an emergency situation to approve the tap by telephone. The authorization does not have to be in writing. It could be done by telephone and subsequently confirmed in writing.

From a practical point of view, there is no reason why we need the emergency clause. I do not think it is beyond the mind of man to permit a judge to approve an emergency wiretap. However, in his remarkably inflexible way, the minister continues to insist on this provision. He pointed out that the committee, although very narrowly, decided to leave in this provision. I hope the House will have another look at these emergency provisions because they are unnecessary to the working of the bill. They can certainly lead to the kind of severe abuse all of us worry about in the operation of this immoral device.

I very much appreciated the remarks of the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) who indicated he intends to support the amendment. I am glad to see there are some small "l" liberals left in the House. It is interesting to note that back in the 14th century the English had a law which prevented this. This is not a new problem. The only difference is that we now have the electronic equipment to make it such a pervasive and overwhelming one. I should like to read into the record a paragraph from Blackstone's Commentaries:

Eavesdroppers or such as listen under walls or windows to harken after discourse and thereupon to form slanderous and mischievous tales are a common nuisance and presentable at the court or are indictable at the sentence and punishable by fine and finding sureties for their good behaviour.

They were really ahead of us. I might say that British Columbia has a privacy act which deals only with the civil area. I welcome the provisions of this bill dealing with civil privacy. I think they are vital and necessary. But I do urge the minister not to be inflexible with regard to the amendments the committee brought forward. The committee system must work in a minority parliament. The minister cannot continue to conduct his office as if he were immune to the criticisms and suggestions of the opposition. Many of them are practical. Many will improve the bill. The attempt to bring back the amendments the minister lost certainly hints of arrogance.

These amendments are connected. As these things are examined—and here I mention the "person and place" amendment—we reach the position all of us are trying to avoid, that is, the use of this device by the police for the purpose of general surveillance rather than to obtain evidence about a specific offence. The rule of law is founded on the proposition that governments can protect their people without acting unfairly or immorally themselves in any way. We shall not bring about a lawful society until people have respect for the law, respect for those who enforce the law, and, most important, respect for the means by which they enforce the law.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I must begin by saying I find it a little strange to hear a couple of speakers talk about inflexibility and the position of a minister when a bill comes back to the House. Other members have spoken about the flexibility of the way in which this bill has generally been handled. The bill, as it developed, followed very largely the outlines of the recommendations of the parliamentary committee, a committee which was not divided but which was mainly in agreement.

I found it amusing that, while the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) is proposing an amendment on a subject which the committee decided to include in the bill, he and the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) should accuse me of being wrong in proposing any amendment at all to the work of the committee. I take it the position is that in the House we can discuss these matters in a final way amid a full gathering of all members. I do not challenge the right of the hon. member for Prince Albert to seek to reverse the decision of the committee, a committee in a minority government, which sustained the emergency power in the bill, nor do I question the propriety of his doing so.

The emergency power provision represents a very small area of the bill's operation. I should like to emphasize what a small area it covers, bearing in mind the tone of voice which alone among hon. members of this House the right hon. member for Prince Albert can achieve. That made it look monumental. The fact is that in this area of emergency permits we have in play two extremely important forms of protection in relation to the use of wiretapping devices. There is the full political responsibility of the Attorney General who must himself, or by a person specially designated for the purpose of the section, authorize the use of an electronic device in case of an emergency. In addition, the person authorized by the Attorney General must be satisfied that the other provisions related to wiretapping are complied with, namely, that other investigative procedures would be unlikely to succeed, that others had failed, and that the urgency of the situation required this kind of procedure to be used. He must be satisfied about all those things. In addition, he has to be satisfied that there is not sufficient time for an application to be made to a judge to obtain authorization, the normal method by which law enforcement officers may obtain authorization under the bill.

I find it difficult to understand how some members can come down so hard against relying on the authority of the Attorney General in this instance while arguing, at the same time, that a judge should not be involved in the process. On second reading of this bill, members in both the New Democratic Party and the Conservative Party took such a position. I think the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) was consistent. Here, the full responsibility of the Attorney General is involved in the issue of these emergency permits. They are valid for 36 hours only and they are designed to be used in a situation where the nature of an emergency will not allow for a judge being approached in time. In addition to authorizing the application, the Attorney General is obliged to report on what he has done. If hon. members will look at the reporting provisions, they will find they are very full indeed. The reports must be made public, disclosing to public view and political debate what has been done.

In the case of emergency permits—the hon. member for New Westminster seems to have missed this point—the Attorney General must indicate that the permit was either followed by an application or that he revoked it. The act provides that the agent who authorized such a permit must promptly report to the Attorney General so that further action can be taken by him with regard to it. He has to say whether he has revoked that permit and, obviously, this will provide an opportunity for political questioning about the use made of any such permits which may have been revoked. If an application is made, the Attorney General must indicate whether he approved or did not approve of the issue of an emergency permit. Again, the exact nature of the use of the permit can be made the subject of political debate. We have been concerned about caring for the circumstances which would arise in case of abuse, although it must be recognized that the fundamental responsibility for good operation in this area will depend upon the integrity and attitude of the responsible elected person and the way in which our elective process holds them responsible for their action. That is recognized, throughout, in the bill before us.

Why are these provisions needed? The right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert asked that question. He asked it on second reading. In the committee, a number of examples were cited of the situations we can envisage in which permits of this kind might be needed. I referred to an actual case which was brought to our attention by the police. A known counterfeiter had boarded an aircraft travelling between two eastern cities 50 minutes apart. The police had 50 minutes in order to prepare for his arrival in such a way that they might obtain evidence of what they suspected to be conspiracy in connection with that counterfeiting. They had 50 minutes, because the aircraft was due to arrive at the other city at two o'clock in the morning. It would be difficult even to get the necessary detection equipment in place in time.

I can refer to another situation which was not indicated to the committee but reported to us by the police. A known drug trafficker was on board an aircraft. At its arrival at destination a police dog verified the presence of marijuana in the luggage of the trafficker. To obtain evidence of conspiracy rather than simply possession, it was necessary to follow the suspect to a meeting place. The installation of a device in the luggage was necessary for monitoring the conspiratorial conversation. The air line crew was able to hold the luggage only for a few brief moments, in which time the installation was completed.

That indicates the kind of situation contemplated. A person designated for this emergency purpose by an attorney general might be in a position where a warrant or an application to a judge at two o'clock in the morning could not be completed in time to handle such a matter. For example, it might be the head investigative officer in a drug squad who would have authority in certain circumstances to accomplish this kind of detection.

Hon. members may say that it is not so important that one or two persons involved in drug crimes get away undetected. Once again I put to them the proposition that we ought to help our law enforcement officers and give them equipment they can use to detect crime on our behalf, rather than tie their hands in cases where we do not have to do so essentially for our very liberties. It seems to me that the responsibility of the officers and of the attorney general in this operation is a complete answer to the question whether we ought to have this extension in the area of emergency permits.

I repeat that this is a relatively small area operationally in the bill. It is a minor area but one where the investigative officers feel that in certain significant cases of crime, drug trafficking to which I have referred being one example, they may be impeded in bringing to justice persons who have come to their attention if they cannot obtain a permit to use this kind of device. Please let us all remember, Mr. Speaker, that persons involved in the worst of organized crime will themselves put no equipment out of reach. They will use all equipment available to detect even the use of electronic devices to which the police on occasion may resort.

The bill has been written in an attempt to protect in every way against the misuse of its provisions. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) said that if a permit were taken out to meet an emergency situation and then never followed up in its application, he foresaw that evidence obtained might none the less be used as evidence. For the purpose of that provision of the bill, any evidence obtained under a permit which is revoked is treated as unlawful, so I suggest that contingency is covered in the bill.

We have endeavoured in every way to provide similar protection. I therefore appeal to the individual members of this House, as I did the members of the committee, to look at the balance between protection and privacy, which is the fundamental thrust of the major offences in the bill, and the need for legitimate use by our law enforcement officers of electronic equipment in carrying out their job on our behalf. It is not their job alone; they are doing their job on our behalf, apprehending persons involved in serious crime and bringing them to justice.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, before commencing my remarks, last evening there was before the House motion No. 2 which was stood at my request. I should like to say a few words about that and then discuss the amendment moved by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). So, with your leave, I will speak to the one amendment which was moved yesterday in regard to which I filed a caveat which was agreed to by the Deputy Speaker. This is why I thought I would bring it to Your Honour's attention since you were not in the chair at the time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member is asking the House to allow him to speak on the other amendment which stood over with consent. I do not know why the hon. member wishes to speak to two amendments at the same time, but if hon. members have no objection the hon. member may do so. I would not want this to be taken as an opportunity for other members to take advantage of this permission and speak to all amendments while they are debating one of the many amendments.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually I am not going ahead of the game but addressing myself only to the motion stood. I appreciate your generosity.

First of all, I should like to endorse what the right hon. member for Prince Albert said in regard to his amendment dealing with the question of emergency. There has to be a happy balance between the protection of privacy and the administration of law. I want to be fair to all sides of the House, so let me say that whether we belong to the legal profession or to some other profession we would all want to see a happy balance struck in this regard.

I do not want to be offensive in any way to the minister, but I hope he will be very flexible at this stage. I was not on the standing committee in this session, though I was when it had a similar bill before it before the last election and therefore have a pretty good knowledge as to what was attempted at that time. Some of the compromises made by this committee were similar to those made by the other committee.

When the bill first came before the committee in its original form, the Solicitor General or the attorneys general of the provinces were given the right to grant permission. I, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) and others, took the view that permission should be granted by a judge to protect the privacy of the citizen. The former minister of justice, now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), who presented that bill, finally introduced that particular phrase when the bill went back to committee, but I was glad to see the change made to the effect that consent of a judge is required.

I hope the minister will accept the amendment moved by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. He has had wide experience in the practice of law as a counsel in the great councils of this country. He is well aware of the problems of the Crown in obtaining evidence, as well as the problems of the defence. Obviously, he has given an amendment of this substance a lot of thought and weighed the question of civil right to privacy against the administration of law. I hope all members of the House will be in accord with this amendment because it would ensure privacy.

Someone said there were 600 judges available, but there are times when it is difficult to find a judge. Indeed, I have had that experience myself. I agree with the right hon. member that even if an agent were appointed, the Minister of Justice or an attorney general cannot always be located. If the amendment is accepted, many of the other amendments may prove to be more academic than they appear to be at the moment. If the amendment were accepted, I would think there was very wide protection. Whoever applies for an order to bug one's telephone has to swear certain things in an affidavit as prescribed by a certain formula. If the order is granted, the judge would have weighed the question of privacy against some criminal activity and the urgency to investigate that activity.

It would be well for all members of the House to read John M. Carroll's book "The Third Listener". Mr. John M. Carroll is an associate professor of computer sciences at the University of Western Ontario, London, Canada, so this is a book written by a Canadian. I should like to quote from page 14 in order to preface what I intend to say, which I think is really what was being said by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey). This is a very succinct paragraph in which he refers to bugging somebody's telephone with an electronic device, taping somebody's conversation from either a telephone or a radio, or perhaps just in someone's office. The book is, as I said, The Third Listener, and the third listener may be a number of people or one person. In this paragraph the author asks this question:

● (1450)

Why does The Third Listener want to know what you're saying, where you're going, whom you're talking to? You'll find out when he blackmails you, or sues you, or arrests you, or ruins your business, or has you fired, or simply steals your secrets to gratify an ugly lust for prying.

That is the criterion when we are talking about privacy, and I think he has put it very well. Let me also refer to a paragraph at page 46 of this book before I go into the matter with which I am specifically concerned. A question has been raised as to the difficulty of obtaining a court order, and the author deals with this beginning at page 45 as follows:

HOT WIRES, COLD LEADS. Even when there's no great hurry, getting a court order is a bother, involving a showing of probable cause to believe that the wiretap or bug will produce information about a crime. And, although law enforcers will argue this point by the hour, the fact is that very few taps or bugs produce firm evidence or hot leads. For police officers to go to court time after time for wiretap permission and then never turn up any valuable information is embarrassing after a while. It's far easier for them to pool their own money and buy their own private equipment,—

The writer suggests that this is what we are about to stop. What the committee members, the hon. member for St. Paul's and the right hon. member for Prince Albert have tried to do is weigh very carefully the balance between the rule of law to protect our privacy and the rule of law which grants the police the right, under certain circumstances, to wiretap, providing a certain formula is followed and certain criteria are established.

Let me say a few words about Motion No. 2. I gave this some thought last evening but was not prepared at that time to debate it. I should like to be even better prepared than I am at the moment as a complex legal problem is involved which I wish to discuss. What the hon. member for St. Paul's is endeavouring to do is to say, if we are going to give the right to violate the civil right of privacy we should only give that right in respect of a serious indictable offence. The hon. member is, therefore, seeking to change the definition. I should like to put this on record because it is an important but technical matter. I refer to page 2 of the bill, which deals with Section 178.1, where it reads:

"offence" means an offence created by an Act of the Parliament of Canada for which an offender may be prosecuted by indictment and includes any such offence that is alleged or suspected or that there are reasonable grounds to believe may be committed;

That is the definition in the bill, so we know it means any offence created by an act of parliament. This would include the Criminal Code of Canada, the Excise Tax Act, the Income Tax Act or various other acts; in fact, any act of parliament in which there is an offence set out. Thus the definition of "offence" in this bill is wide enough that wiretapping under these circumstances covers all Federal laws. The hon. member for St. Paul's feels that is going too far, and I agree with him.

Let me discuss very briefly one other point. It is very difficult to set out all the offences the hon. member would like to cover, especially when we are considering this section by section. Let me refer to a few problems another member mentioned last evening in the same context. I hope that after examining a few of the problems I intend to raise the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) will accept the principle of the amendment and turn this matter over to the legal officers of the Department of Justice. They have great experience in drafting legislation. I do not think any one of us, as a member, has the expertise to draft this type of legislation. Perhaps those officers could make sure that the amended bill has that degree of purity that no loopholes are left which you could drive a truck through.

Let me deal with the crime of murder as I think this is one section in the Code that will cause us some trouble. This involves a very difficult legal problem. I would refer to page 180 of the Criminal Code, Section 218 under the heading "Punishment for Capital Murder". It reads:

(1) Every one who commits capital murder is guilty of an indictable offence and shall be sentenced to death.

(2) Every one who commits non-capital murder is guilty of an indictable offence and shall be sentenced to imprisonment for life.

(3) Notwithstanding subsection (1), a person who appears to the court to have been under the age of eighteen years at the time he committed a capital murder shall not be sentenced to death upon conviction therefor but shall be sentenced to imprisonment for life.

This is one of the crimes listed in the amendment by the hon. member for St. Paul's. Let me refer in this context to two sections of the code. As hon. members are aware Section 212 was Section 201 and Section 202 is now Section 213. This makes it very difficult when one does his research because he must change the numbers.

We are aware that under Sections 212 and 213, to which I will refer, the rule of law is that whatever the charge of murder, capital or non-capital, within that charge there is always the offence of manslaughter, but when a charge is laid under Section 213 it is much more difficult for a jury to bring in a verdict of manslaughter than under old Section 201, and I will deal with that in a moment.

As I see the amendment, and this is just an example, what the hon. member for St. Paul's had in mind, evidence legally obtained by wiretap, and accepted on a charge laid under either one of these sections, might result in a conviction for manslaughter. In view of the present provisions of the bill it may turn out that such evidence would be excluded before the court of appeal.

My concern is that in the event of a verdict of manslaughter, which carries a life sentence, the evidence would certainly be accepted, and there are other offences which appear to fall within this category. One can readily see the difficulty involved in listing these offences. Let me refer to the two pertinent parts of the Code. Section 212 reads:

> 212. Culpable homicide is murder
>
> (a) where the person who causes the death of a human being
> (i) means to cause his death, or
>
> (ii) means to cause him bodily harm that he knows is likely to cause his death, and is reckless whether death ensues or not;

● (1500)

> (b) where a person, meaning to cause death to a human being or meaning to cause him bodily harm that he knows is likely to cause his death, and being reckless whether death ensues or not, by accident or mistake causes death to another human being, notwithstanding that he does not mean to cause death or bodily harm to that human being—

There is a very difficult formula or criterion under section 212. Section 213 contains an entirely different definition. I want to emphasize that I am dealing with both sections. Under the other it is a question of knowledge or that death ensues. There are some learned cases on this subject. Section 213 of the Code, at page 168, states:

> Culpable homicide is murder where a person causes the death of a human being while committing or attempting to commit treason or an offence mentioned in section 52, piracy, escape or rescue from prison or lawful custody, resisting lawful arrest, rape, indecent assault, forcible abduction, robbery, burglary or arson.

A number of offences are listed. But there is a serious difficulty here. Let us take robbery with violence. Two people go into a bank to rob it. They are armed to the teeth. In the act of robbing the bank and in the act of their violence they shoot somebody or use a weapon by which someone is killed. There are cases in the Supreme Court of Canada which state that once you prove that, that is murder per se. But under the other section the finding of manslaughter is always open.

It is interesting to examine the Trinneer case in which the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert and Davie Fulton were engaged. The Supreme Court of Canada ruled, in spite of that section, that in a charge of murder manslaughter is always an included offence. Where there is an included offence of manslaughter and you do not list the section which covers or mentions manslaughter, it is possible that after the evidence went in and you obtained a conviction for murder, and then appeared before the appeal court, it would be noted that manslaughter was available and the court might have to declare that evidence inadmissible because of the definition. That is a possible interpretation.

If we are to legislate, let us at least clarify the situation as much as possible. I dealt with this question. In this case there were 13 young men involved. I did not take the trial but I took the appeal. It was alleged that the 13 young men went out to assault, with weapons such as crowbars, tire wrenches, and so on, another group of about the same number. They were cyclists. They were charged under the tougher section 213, under which basically there would be murder proceedings. All 13 were convicted. The court of appeal took the position that it had to be murder or nothing. I alleged that that was wrong. The case referred to by me was that of Regina v. Trinneer, 11 C.R. (1970) at pages 116 and 117. This decision can be distinguished, as the charge was under section 202, which is now section 213, with section 21(2) being applied, whereas Emkeit et al, the group to which I referred, were charged under section 201, now section 212, and section 21(2). The chief justice now retired, Cartwright, said this:

> At the risk of repetition, it is my opinion that on the true construction of sections 202 and 21(2) as applied to the circumstances of this case... It was not necessary for the Crown to establish that the respondent knew or ought to have known that it was probable that Mrs. Vollet's death would ensue.

In brief, the accused can and may be found guilty of murder when sections 202 and 21(2) are applied, whether the Crown establishes that the accused knew or ought to have known or not; whereas when sections 201 and 21(a) are involved, in order to get a verdict of murder the main ingredient, that is, knowledge must be proven to obtain a verdict of murder, otherwise the verdict may be manslaughter or nothing. What I am saying is that I think we must be very careful to include the crime of manslaughter.

There are other anomalies which might be mentioned. In the definition of "offence" it states that "offence" means offences under certain sections. This is followed by the enumeration of specific sections in the Criminal Code including section 247, immediately after which appears the word "Kidnapping".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but if he wishes to continue his remarks he would need the unanimous consent of the House because his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, a number of these offences are names in the definition clause in the motion moved by my good and respected friend from St. Paul's. I might give the minister the example of the Narcotics Act where there is the intent to traffic, or the act of trafficking. In both cases there is a penalty of life imprisonment. There could be some ambiguity here. What the hon. member for St. Paul's is trying to do—and I hope the minister considers this in good faith—is to confine public officers or police officers when wiretapping so they will be able to do so after obtaining an order from a judge with all the formulae and criteria laid down where the offence is a serious one.

I would ask the Minister of Justice to consider what the hon. member for St. Paul's is trying to do. He is trying to improve the bill by adding a few words in order to avoid ambiguity. I discussed earlier the ambiguity in respect of the definition of murder under the Code and murder with the possible finding of manslaughter, one being ordinary murder where it is easy for a jury or a judge to find manslaughter. Whether one appears as defence counsel or as Crown counsel, one becomes involved in great difficulty when there is ambiguity. Not only is the private citizen being charged involved in an expense, but there is also an expense to the court. Also, the ambiguity creates anxiety for both counsel and the court.

There are several other cases to which I could refer the minister but I do not wish to take time to place them on the record now. There are several other sections which concern me which might not be included in a definition of "offence". I would hope that this section could be streamlined or rewritten so that it would contain no ambiguity. I believe the hon. member is trying to narrow it down. There may be a simpler way to do it. Perhaps the Minister of Justice, through his officials, who have had more experience, certainly, than I have may be able to come up with a formula to do what the hon. member is trying to do, that is, ensure that there is no ambiguity and that justice not only will be done but will appear to be done.

● (1510)

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I rise first of all on a point of order. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) reverted to motion No. 2, and I am not sure whether that is the end of the debate on that motion so far as the official opposition is concerned. They might want to call the question. As I understood it, the vote was to be deferred.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Perhaps I should intervene at this time to inform the hon. member of the situation. I do not know whether he was in the House at the time, but unanimous consent was given to the hon. member for Calgary North to allow him to deal with the two amendments. The Chair was very cautious at the time and indicated to hon. members that this should not be considered as permission to everyone to enter into the debate on both amendments at the same time.

I do not know why the hon. member was asking for this permission, but he received it with the consent of the House. I would hope, however, that hon. members would now come back to the debate on motion No. 3, which is to be followed by the debate on motion No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey).

Mr. Cullen: I was in the House last night and had the impression that the hon. member for Calgary North was the last speaker. That is why I thought there might be consensus to winding up the debate on the motion. However, I do not wish to speak on that particular motion. I heard the "no" from the deputy House leader and the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), so I will now proceed to the amendment of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

First, I might say—this has been reiterated over and over again in the House—that there is really no objection to this bill and that which it seeks to do. Last night when the hon. member for St. Paul's was introducing his motion he carefully catalogued all the reasons, or a good number of them, for our needing a bill of this nature, particularly at this time as highlighted by the unfortunate experience of our good friends to the south. In addition to the cataloguing that the hon. member did then, just this morning I received a communication from a lady in my riding who says in her letter:

> Having had wiretapping and bugging done to us, I know what it means.

She goes on to explain the circumstances. Her husband was involved in a car accident. The case that was made against him turned out to be as the result of private conversations they had had in their living room; that was the only place where the particular evidence had been discussed. She was satisfied that they had probably been investigated by a private investigator, that their home had been bugged and their private conversations listened to. This is the tragic part of it. She writes:

> You don't know what it means that they lived your private life with you. This is more than three years ago we found out that this was done, and I still have nightmares. If we want to talk something confidential, we walk the street, for I don't trust anything any more.

This is the kind of impact that wiretapping or bugging has on individual citizens in this country, and we know that it is taking place. So I welcomed it when the minister indicated that he would be bringing in a bill to control this kind of abuse of our civil liberties.

Having said that, I should now like to turn to the kinds of problems that have been raised by the hon. member for St. Paul's, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), and today the right hon. member for Prince Albert in the amendment that he is suggesting. I must say, as one who is more than a little concerned about the invasion of privacy, that this is an area that has caused me to do some soul-searching to decide what position I would take with regard to these amendments.

I resented the implication by the right hon. member for Prince Albert that pressure had been brought to bear, or that we had an overbearing Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), because in point of fact the position taken by the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) yesterday was indicative of the fact that the Minister of Justice does not take an overbearing or inflexible position, that he recognizes that the hon. member for Matane as a matter of conscience, felt it was necessary to take the position that he took on the amendments introduced by the hon. member for New Westminster.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister is just stubborn.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Cullen: I listened with as much courtesy as I could muster to the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), and I think he could extend the same courtesy to me. If he has something to say, he might rise and say it because it is difficult for me to make a speech and to answer his questions at the same time. The hon. member has the respect of all members of the House, and if he has something to say I would be happy to sit down and listen to him.

First of all, dealing with the decision that has to be made and the one we are debating at this time in the amendment that has been moved by the right hon. member for Prince Albert, I understand his reason in bringing in this particular motion. It is something that I have considered very carefully. Although I did not serve on the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, I read all the evidence very carefully, not only the evidence of the former attorney general of the United States but also the evidence of the police. It seems to me that we concentrate too much on this particular section which gives emergency powers to the police. I think the right hon. member has used hyperbole and ridicule to try to downgrade the necessity for having this section in the bill.

Personally, I think there are enough safeguards. I also feel that it will seldom be used. The minister has indicated two examples, although I suspect he could have given others. But I think what is significant is that there are not many occasions when that power would be used. If we find through experience that it is being abused, then it will be a very simple matter to bring in the amendment of the right hon. member for Prince Albert. But I think it would be premature to do so at this time. It seems to me that by taking away this weapon from the police we are putting handcuffs on the policeman rather than on the criminal.

We have heard it said that it is immoral to wiretap. I agree with that; I think it is immoral. I also think it is immoral for a person to hit another person; yet we know that our police do that in self-defence or when they must use their fists possibly in the interest of protecting another person. It is immoral to use a billy, yet sometimes policemen are called upon to do so. I think it is immoral to carry a gun with the knowledge that at some time it might be necessary to use it. I think it is immoral to speed on a city street, but sometimes a policeman has to do this.

What we have to recognize is that there are situations in which a policeman finds himself when he has to do something that is immoral but which is in the interest of the general public. If we take this emergency weapon away from him, we are saying to him that this is just the first step in a series of steps that will make it much easier for the criminal element to operate in our community. I say this with the following caveat: if our experience shows that attorneys general across the country report that this particular section is being abused, it will be a very simple matter to bring in an amendment to have the law changed.

Mr. Alexander: It will be too late then.

Mr. Cullen: It would be interesting to know the position of those who are in favour of this section if the Minister of Justice had gone along with this amendment contrary to all the attorneys general across the country, because the information I have is that they are in favour of it. They see the need for it; they see the need to give this weapon to the police. As I said before, it concerns me that this emergency power is there, but I can see the need for it. However, if it is abused, then I suggest it will be a simple matter to delete it from the law.

How many times is it going to be used? That is the criterion on which it can be decided whether this power is abused by the police. Second, what are the safeguards? I think the Minister of Justice has carefully catalogued all the procedures that must be gone through before this particular emergency section can be used.

With the spotlight of publicity on the attorney general of a province, who has to get up in a provincial legislature and defend the fact that he allowed the police to use this emergency power, I have the feeling that it will be used very little and there will be little room for abuse by the people who will use it, if in fact it should ever be necessary. The right hon. gentleman, with all his skill and ability, endeavours to kill the bill as a whole by saying that if this particular clause is in it, then it defeats the whole purpose of the bill. I say it does not. The protection is there, but this emergency power is necessary.

What we have discovered is that there is difficulty in drafting the kind of bill that will give the general public the protection we feel it must have. The hon. member for St. Paul's has found that out. With all due respect, after listening to the hon. member for Calgary North I say that if this amendment is carried, and spokesmen for the NDP seem to indicate they will support it, then it will become a defence counsel's dream. It will not be necessary to know the facts but just to argue in law that this clause cannot be made to work.

The hon. member talked about patterns and organized crime and, as he indicated, there is a big enough loophole through which to drive a truck. After this kind of legislation is drafted it is very easy to hold it up to ridicule, as the right hon. member for Prince Albert has done. There is difficulty in drafting anything, Mr. Speaker. I remember that on one occasion I was going to send my son to camp, and a letter came to me from the camp officials spelling out all the things campers could not do and all the restrictions that were placed upon them. I thought the letter could have been better drafted and that possibly my son should not go to that camp because of the number of restrictions.

In this instance we have the draftsmen attempting to do something very difficult, knowing the result is susceptible to the kind of criticism offered by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. With these comments, and the caveat I have filed on my own behalf and on behalf of all hon. members, I conclude that if the clause is abused then the amendment introduced by the right hon. member for Prince Albert would probably be passed by the House; but it is premature to do it at this time.

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, at the risk of incurring your wrath I want to take a few minutes to refer to the points raised by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). I agree with his suggestion that perhaps the Minister of Justice and the law officers of the Crown might, within the confines of the principle which I have attempted to put forward in motion No. 2, consider the list of offences; and I would certainly be amenable to an amendment of that list if it were found to be advisable to expand it, or indeed to restrict it, to cover some of the problems raised by the hon. member for Calgary North. So I would indicate, for the purpose of the record, my agreement to that particular approach which I believe to be a responsible one.

With respect to motion No. 3 standing in the name of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), I think we have to look very closely at the words of the clause to the extent that powers are given to agents designated by the Attorneys General or by the Solicitor General, and examine the scope of those powers and the extremes of those powers as they may be exercised within the definition of the words of the subclause.

The hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) has suggested, notwithstanding some difficulties which he has acknowledged, that we would be wise to proceed with the clause and if, as a result of the reporting clauses, the annual reports of the Attorneys General and the Solicitor

General disclosed gross abuses, then of course we could come back and amend the clause to correct the abuses which had occurred.

There are two problems with that approach. The first is that when you are dealing with such a fundamental principle of individual rights, particularly the protection of privacy, sometimes there is too great a price to be paid in saying, "Let us try it. If it does not work, we can come back and correct it." Perhaps the onus should be the other way—let us protect individual rights first, and if there are abuses the other way, we can then correct those. But more important, as I read the words of the proposed new section 178.15, I am concerned that the reports of the Attorneys General and the Solicitor General, made after the event, may not even disclose some of the actions taken by so-called agents under this section, because as I read it the agents who are designated may grant an emergency permit.

There is a requirement that the person granting that permit must forthwith report the full details to the Attorney General or to the Solicitor General. But what does the term "forthwith" really mean? Would it be compliance if the agent reported next day to the Attorney General that he had granted an emergency permit? Indeed, as may be the case, could the agent grant the emergency permit, the tap go on that evening, and it be taken off next morning by virtue of a revocation not by the Attorney General but by the agent himself? And if he were to revoke it after allowing it to be put on for 12 hours, 21 hours, or 35 hours, who would ever know, Mr. Speaker? Is there any guarantee other than the honesty of the particular agent; and there may be hundreds in each province so named by the Attorneys General? Who would ever know that the emergency permit had even been granted? Would that ever find its way into the report of the Attorney General? I have my suspicions, and for that reason alone I am skeptical of the approach suggested by the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton.

There is one other problem with proposed new section 178.15. We have all talked in terms of the emergency permit being a maximum 36-hour permit. As I read proposed new subsection (3)(b), the time limit is either for 36 hours or, "if, within that time an application for authorization to intercept private communications in the circumstances to which the permit relates is made, until that application is finally disposed of." Take this sequence of events. The agent gives an emergency permit. That lasts for, say, 20 hours. Then, through the agent, an application for authorization is made to a judge. Then that application is adjourned. It may be adjourned for 24 hours, it may be adjourned for 48 hours. Or is it possible that under the terms of this legislation it could be adjourned for two weeks?

It seems to me that under the words in (3)(b) the emergency permit could continue in existence in perpetuity as long as the application for full authorization to the judge is subject to continual adjournments. That is a danger the draftsmen may not have seen when they put this legislation together, but it is yet another difficulty which has incurred the wrath and the scorn of the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert.

[Mr. Atkey.]

We must seriously ask the question: Do we really need the emergency permits at all? The section providing for a regular authorization provides that the application to a judge need only be ex parte. There is no question of notice to the other side. Of course, the application must be made in writing, but there is nothing to prevent the Attorney General or his agent telephoning the judge and following that conversation up with something in writing. Such document might take the form of a telegram. A written copy could be delivered to the judge.

● (1530)

Certain requirements are set out in the bill; however, if one examines them closely one will find that, as in section 178.12, they are not that onerous. One has to show what is the type of private communication which is proposed to be intercepted. Usually that involves the telephone. One has to show the name and address of the person whose communications it is believed, on reasonable and probable grounds, may assist in the investigation of an offence. If the address is not known, a general description of the place will do; a general description of the manner of interception proposed to be used is all that is necessary. That requirement is not onerous and it could be followed in all cases instead of merely in some cases.

Some members raised the argument about the difficulty of getting to a judge. The right hon. member for Prince Albert told us that under this legislation there will be in excess of 600 judges in Canada who will be permitted to grant authorization. One of the wise amendments put forward and accepted by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in the previous parliament was one which changed the definition of the term "judge", so that the term would include superior court judges as well as county court judges. That included; in Quebec, all general sessions judges or provincial judges as they are sometimes called.

The amendment would mean that in Ontario, my province, we would have available some 32 supreme court judges, some 105 county or district court judges, and ten judges of the Court of Appeal. In Quebec there are, I understand, in excess of 100 provincial court or sessions judges and at present 91 superior court judges. There are close to 200 judges in Quebec alone.

We may have a particular notion about the duties, obligations and responsibilities of a judge. We may think that the dignity of a judge's office requires him to perform his duties only from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. The office of judge is an office of dignity and tradition. Those of us who have had experience with the bar of our provinces know there are many precedents to show that a judge has signed emergency types of orders at odd hours of the day and night and in odd locations.

Speaking of my province, I know of cases in which judges have signed injunction orders on the docks of their summer resorts on a Saturday afternoon, or have signed search warrant orders at two o'clock in the morning. I have known of injunction applications signed at four o'clock Sunday morning. Judges know full well that when they accept their responsibilities they are not to be judges from nine to five, five days a week; they are to be judges 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Judges, like any professional group in society, are able to organize their affairs under some sort of roster system, so that a duty judge would be available at odd hours to perform the sort of task which this legislation contemplates. In the normal course, authorization could be granted at odd hours. In our system in Canada there is at least one county or district court judge within easy travelling or communication distance from virtually any part of Canada, and it would not be hard to obtain the sort of legal authorization for wiretapping which this bill contemplates.

Some concern has also been expressed about the emergency 36-hour permit section. Members of the opposition in this House have spoken about it, as well as persons who have had a great deal of experience with the law, with wiretapping and with law enforcement as carried out by the police. In this connection it is interesting to note that on June 8, 1972, the bar association of the province of Quebec expressed concern about this particular section. Indeed, so strongly felt was that concern that the bâtonnier of Quebec bar, Mr. Jean Moisan, sent an emergency telegram to the chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I want to read part of that telegram, which expresses his views and those of members of the Quebec bar whom he represented. The communication is in telegraph form. I will read the English version, in part, as follows:

—request the removal of clause 178.15. Recommend prior authorization by a judge in all cases.

That, I believe, was an official communication from the Quebec bar association and should be treated with a great deal of seriousness, particularly in view of what has happened in the province in the last year. The concern expressed by the Quebec bar association reflects on the sort of invidious activities which are being carried on by private investigators and police in that province through the use of wiretaps and other means of electronic surveillance. The expression of such concern is not uncoincidental with such activities.

One of the difficulties we shall encounter with the emergency permit section was alluded to this morning by the right hon. gentleman. It will be difficult to determine who is an "agent." The bill provides that an agent is a person so designated by the Attorney General of a province or the Solicitor General of Canada. There is no limitation as to number, as to quality, as to competence or as to location. In other words, the section is wide open. Every police officer, every chief of police, every customs officer, every excise tax officer and every combines investigator could possibly be named as an agent for the purpose of granting an emergency permit under this bill.

You might say that no responsible Attorney General, no responsible Solicitor General, would ever give such wide scope to what is contemplated by the term "agent" in this bill. The only protection provided in this bill was provided by the committee. The opposition moved an amendment under which agents who are named by the Attorney General or the Solicitor General have to be identified and named in the annual reports of the Attorneys General or the Solicitor General. Although this gives us some protection, because at some point we will know who these people are who will be capable of granting an emergency permit or seeking authorization from a judge, it will be after the event, Mr. Speaker, perhaps after the horse has gone and the barn door has been closed—and that may be too late.

It will be of interest to quote from a brief submitted by the Montreal Urban Community Police Department. This brief, which did not find its way onto the record, was nevertheless distributed to members of the committee. It sets out the sort of procedures followed now for the control and conservation of information gathered by electronic surveillance. It speaks of the present practices of the Montreal police and of practices as the Montreal police would like to see them in the future. In part, the brief says:

Any request for a project must be accepted by the assistant chief inspector of each division involved before being submitted to one of the two inspectors who control the use of wiretaps and the routing of the information intercepted. These two inspectors report directly to the Director of the Montreal Urban Community Police.

In addition to them, two captains and a detective-lieutenant have access to this information, along with the carefully selected operators.

● (1540)

There is a system in existence in Montreal. It is not as wide open as I suggest could possibly exist under the terms of this bill. However, it is certainly much more wide open than I would like to see in terms of an Attorney General in his province carefully naming highly qualified, honest, carefully selected agents who would have rather large powers under this bill.

The solution to the dilemma of the term "agent" is to cut down the powers which they can exercise. As the right hon. member for Prince Albert pointed out, the most dangerous power they could exercise would be to grant an emergency permit. An emergency permit could conceivably go beyond the 36 hours if accompanied by an application for authorization to a judge which was adjourned sine die or in perpetuity, whatever the case may be.

The Minister of Justice attempted to point out there is some inconsistency in the position taken by a number of members in the justice committee and on second reading in this House. In particular he referred to a number of us, and I include myself, who spoke rather strongly about whether there should be judicial authorization as the primary controlling mechanism for legalized wiretapping under this bill. I admit I was one who suggested the ultimate responsibility for wiretapping should be with the politically elected person, that is, the Solicitor General or the Attorney General. However, I made it very clear that that was the Solicitor General personally or the Attorney General personally, and certainly not his agents as this bill would permit under the emergency clause.

I listened to the arguments on second reading and in committee. I was able to accept the position of the majority of the members of the committee that perhaps judicial authorization, on balance, was the best form of safeguard that we have. Having accepted that, I do not think you can have it both ways. Once having accepted judicial authorization as the ultimate controlling device, you have to go with it 100 per cent. You cannot say we will have a judge in some instances and in other instances we will have the attorney general as the controlling mechanism. It has to be one or the other. Under this bill, with the existence of clause 178.15 there is a split responsibility which makes a mockery of the general principle which is intended.

I urge all members to consider the necessity, or lack thereof, of retaining section 178.15 in the bill. To use the argument advanced by the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton, if the police find themselves unduly hampered in their activities, unable to find a judge when they need one and unable to act quickly under the normal sections under which one gets an authorization, let the Minister of Justice come back to parliament with the evidence and an amendment, and we will consider it then. Until that time we must not deprive the people of Canada of the fundamental protection which they deserve, the fundamental protection of a judicial authorization which is the controlling and principal mechanism of this bill.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the discussion which has taken place today on these amendments, it is a little difficult at this stage to know to which amendment one ought to direct his remarks. We have been discussing several amendments this afternoon. I am afraid too many members have chosen to emulate the unfortunate example of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) who, in introducing his amendment this morning, ranged over not only the whole of this bill and its amendments but also, unfortunately, over the whole history of civil liberties and the Bill of Rights. I say "unfortunately" because of the selective character of the references which he used.

Let us turn to one of the problems which he raised, namely the serious accusation that the minister and the government generally are trying to bulldoze the committees. What are the facts in this case? The facts are that on most committees, and certainly on this committee, the largest single group of members is composed of members of the official opposition. This is because members of the government party have to use one of their number for chairman. He votes only in the case of a tie. As hon. members know, the chairmen also try to be impartial in all these matters in committee. In this case, the form of the bill before us was carried not only with the support of government members but members of the official opposition.

Let me just recall the statements which several of those members made in committee. On September 18, the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence), formerly the attorney general for the province of Ontario, had this to say at page 22:

> Just to agree with the minister for a change... there is no question that there are occasions when there have to be emergency measures taken by law enforcement agencies in a matter such as this.

On page 24 of the same day's hearings, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) said:

> It seems to me that there should be, and I know there will be, occasions where emergency permits will have to be sought.

The hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) has confessed his own ambiguity on this question. I do not recall how he voted on this in committee, but the fact is this form of bill was carried at committee stage only with the support of many members of the official opposition.

Mr. Atkey: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member has referred to me confessing my own ambiguity on the question. I do not know where he finds that reference or how he makes that assertion. I find his comment infringes my privileges and it is a misstatement of my position. The hon. member knows that I voted in favour of the amendment in committee.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, obviously that is no question of privilege. Whether the hon. member has been ambiguous is a question of interpretation. I am talking about the various positions he has advanced on this point. The point I was making is that this kind of accusation by the right hon. member for Prince Albert is sheer hypocrisy. He suggested the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) has no right to attempt to overrule what the committee has done in one case, and then he himself, with respect to this very amendment, is proposing to amend what a majority of the committee—a majority which included members of his own party—recommended.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: Unfortunately, this is not the end of the hypocrisy of the right hon. member for Prince Albert. He is guilty of double hypocrisy. We know that in discussing the cases under the Canadian Bill of Rights he waxed eloquent on the Drybones case and made some comments about the role of the Minister of Justice with respect to that. I noticed that he did not say anything about the Lavell case. He said he would deal with that on another occasion. Many members will be interested in that "other occasion" because it was that case which revealed the apparent bankruptcy of the Bill of Rights which the right hon. member for Prince Albert passed into law in this House some years ago.

Not only is the Bill of Rights inadequate with respect to the provinces but, as the Lavell case shows, it does not even apply to federal legislation so as to allow the courts to strike down such legislation. It is because of these deficiencies that this government for the past number of years has consistently been trying to persuade the provinces to agree there should be a constitutional Bill of Rights. Perhaps there are not enough provincial Liberal governments! The right hon. member for Prince Albert is guilty of twofold hypocrisy in coming before us to speak on this bill. Those who live in glass houses should not throw stones. The glass of his house has been shattered today by his own stones.

● (1550)

The basic question in this case is whether we ought to recognize emergency cases and whether there should be a mechanism to deal with them. Many members of the House, in all parties, if one takes into account all the statements which have been made on this bill, have admitted that such situations arise and that a provision such as this is necessary. That is the basic question with which we are confronted. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) has persuasively argued that in the absence of a provision of this type the police forces of the country would be on occasions hamstrung in their attempts to deal with criminal elements. That is essentially the case to be made on behalf of the bill in its present form.

The amendment goes much too far. Argument might be advanced as to whether permits should be issued by an agent or not, but should not go as far as the right hon. gentleman has proposed. The arguments he puts forward are nothing but a sham and hypocrisy. There can be no other course but for the House to support the bill as it stands before us.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to remain silent and enjoy the debate this afternoon until an attack was made on the life's work of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) by a lawyer whose acquaintanceship with the practise of law, as compared with the right hon. member for Prince Albert and his experience of the courts, can only be called scant. It is interesting that with respect to the services of the right hon. gentleman to the people of Canada, the criticism of that service and the criticism of the things he has done in the name of justice should be made by a member of the bar who, if I may put it frankly, in terms of service is not worthy of being a pimple on the neck of the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. MacGuigan: I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member is missing the point. I am not relying on my own opinion to attack the right hon. member for Prince Albert. I am saying that the Supreme Court of Canada has made this judgment on his life's work.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I should like to remind hon. members that we are debating motion No. 3. If the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) wishes to speak on that, the Chair will be pleased to hear him.

Mr. Baker: If I may say so, and I will leave the matter at this point, I think it is important that everyone should remember that this attack was made on the right hon. member for Prince Albert while he was not in the chamber.

An hon. Member: He walked out.

Mr. MacGuigan: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, when I began speaking the right hon. gentleman was in the House. As I was speaking, he walked out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It is getting close to four o'clock, and no doubt hon. members are anxious to proceed to the private members' hour. However, I think we should remain in order and resume consideration of motion No. 3.

Mr. Baker: I am coming to that. The fact that the right hon. gentleman left the House may be some indication of the quality of the speech made by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan). I think it is important we should not allow the spirit of the amendment we are discussing today to be submerged by the catcalls, by the personal attack and, indeed, the personal vendetta—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: —being carried on by members of the House who sit opposite, behind a Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) who stands against the principles set forth in the amendment put forward by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. The principle is sound. Perhaps I may state it simply so that even some members on the other side can understand, if they refuse to read.

No person, no organization, no police force, no agency, public or private, shall have the right, in the event of an emergency whether real or imagined, to interfere with the privacy of any citizen unless that interference is sanctioned by the courts and under due process of law. If there is anything wrong with the principle which has been advanced by my right hon. friend, then there are many men and women in the country and in this House who cannot agree with those who find it is wrong in the seventies to live by the rule of law.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it four o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, there is a question regarding House business which was left undefined. Is it the intention of the government to go ahead with this measure, which seems to be taking on a long-term aspect, or switch back to some other piece of legislation on Monday?

Mr. Lang: There have been some discussions, Mr. Speaker. We propose to continue with the Foreign Investment Review Act on Monday in the hope of completing third reading that day, and then continue with the measure presently before the House. We plan to proceed with the protection of privacy bill on Tuesday in any case.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED NATIONAL RECREATION POLICY

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin) moved:

That in the opinion of this House the government should give consideration to the sponsorship and financing of a national recreation policy, in conjunction with the provinces and municipalities, to the allocation of responsibilities for recreational programming, to the determination of land use and to the encouragement of all aspects of recreational development by local citizens under permanent, federally-assisted programs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am encouraged to see so many members in the House this afternoon. Perhaps this is an indication of the way in which hon. members approach the subject of recreation, deeming it to be one of great importance, and perhaps they will join with me in seeking to determine a national recreation policy.

● (1600)

This country is presently in the throes of a national energy crisis, a crisis that did not appear out of nowhere as the government would like us to believe. Had we had a national energy policy some years ago, we would not now face an energy crisis because our plans would have been made a long time ago. The provision and maintenance of recreation requires the same sort of planning. Recreation needs a long-term plan which the federal government should have initiated some time ago. The federal government should establish, in consultation with provincial governments, municipalities, civic officials, and so on, a conference—which we might call a multilevel conference since we have heard of such things as trilevel conferences—to determine ways and means of arriving at a national recreation policy.

I am not exaggerating when I say that the problem of providing recreational facilities in this country has now reached crisis proportions. We as legislators are helping to thrust Canadians into a society of leisure. We are looking forward to 35 or 30-hour work weeks, to working just three or four days in the week. This is why we must be prepared for the dramatic change that this will bring in our lifestyles.

At the local level, whether it be village, town, city or county, the biggest recreational headache is the financing of recreational and leisure projects. The federal government does make available through Recreation Canada grants to various native groups and to other national agencies and associations. However, I have found it virtually impossible to obtain federal grants for my constituents for the purpose of subsidizing the capital cost of a recreational centre, arena or gymnasium in our community. No money is available to them through LIP or OFY, because they find their applications for grants are too capital-oriented and not labour-oriented. This is why, more often than not, applications are rejected. These people are looking for a grant to finance a capital project. In case they are unable to realize the required amount of capital, they want a long-term loan or grant of some sort to help them construct roofs, walls and to buy ice-making equipment.

Having talked to a number of recreation directors in Canada, I find they look for two things. Firstly, they would like a long-term loan at low interest. Secondly, they would like a grant, not simply for capital structures but also to cover the first one or two years' operating expenses. One of the biggest problems when a project gets off the ground is finding money for operating expenses for the first two years until sufficient recreational programs are established to provide the necessary revenue.

I am fortunate to come from a province that is somewhat enlightened now it has a new administration, the Lougheed administration. The province has recognized this problem and is now making available certain capital works programs and grants to communities which would otherwise go without such arenas. However, I have found that they have had to make application to the Department of Agriculture. I recall working very hard this winter for the town of Spruce Grove which wanted to build an arena and swimming pool, but the only way they could get a long-term loan was to go through the ag society of the Department of Agriculture. In return they have to put on an agricultural fair once a year. They are willing to do this and will do so, but it does not seem fair that they have to go to the Department of Agriculture for a loan to build recreational facilities.

I should also like to point out that in 1971 the federal government provided the provinces with $7.4 billion for education costs. In 1972-73 this figure increased to $8.8 billion. If these funds are used for capital construction of school buildings, surely the federal government should stipulate that the gymnasium be a multipurpose structure. My community of Spruce Grove adopted this policy, and it is a very revolutionary type of project that I hope will be used all across Canada. The townspeople constructed a community hall in the school itself. The school gymnasium is used for recreational purposes and at the same time is a town hall complex. The building is a school from six in the morning until six in the evening, and then from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. it becomes a community building and is used by the townspeople for recreational purposes, dances and what have you. In this way we will not have facilities standing empty all across Canada. I think this is a very important improvement and I hope that in some way this kind of stipulation can be made when granting a loan.

Not included in these selected few are the poor people or the near poor. For them, enforced idleness or meaningless work at low wages or low returns is not recreation. The affluence of contemporary Canadian society may be slowly spreading to more and more Canadians, but it still appears that from 20 per cent to 30 per cent of Canadians find recreation a distant concept. They may have idle time or they may not; but for millions, after providing for food and shelter and for the maintenance of their health there is not enough disposable income to give them even basic satisfaction, let alone any hint of leisure.

I was talking to a recreation director in Nova Scotia, in the town of Yarmouth, who said that they had found the only way to get the poor people in that community into some recreational activity was by personal intervention. But there was only one recreation director in the whole area, and it was virtually impossible for him to establish some kind of personal rapport with the people and encourage them in some recreational activity. I suspect that, again, financing is required to bring more recreation directors to the areas where poor people live.

To my mind, one of the best ways to encourage, not just the poor but all Canadians to make the optimum use of their leisure time is to create a feeling of pride in our outstanding athletes and international competitors. Pride in these athletes will most certainly create an incentive for individuals themselves to become involved. In the past we have been plagued by generally poor standards of performance in international competition. I can think offhand of only two or three athletes, such as Bruce Kidd and a few very good skaters, who have reach world fame in the athletics field. One of the major causes of the problem has been lack of good coaching in this country. John Hudson, one of Canada's few outstanding coaches, recently stated:

There is no question that we have many excellent coaches in some sports, but there are usually, at the most, only one or two international-calibre coaches in any one sport. To show significant improvement in the standard of coaching in Canada, we must have an infusion of knowledge and experience into our system. Where do we get it and how? There are many arguments for and against importing coaches. In my opinion we have little choice but to import coaches if we want to turn our system around and start showing some results.

● (1610)

Foreign coaches can provide several immediate benefits which would take us many years to build into our system, and even then it would be difficult without outside help. Most foreign coaches have superior knowledge because they have an education system designed to teach coaches—

That is the important point; they have an education system which is designed to teach their coaches. He goes on to say:

—we have a few scattered courses, but no over-all system at present. In Europe, for example, it is possible to study for a PhD. in sport coaching.

In Canada, our attitude toward athletics in the educational process is simply not adequate. Simon Fraser University stands as the only post-secondary institution in this country which offers athletic scholarships. Many hundreds of our best athletes annually make the trek south to United States universities. These are not aspiring athletes necessarily, but aspiring scholars as well. Because of our inane attitude here in Canada, we have many students going to the United States who never return.

There is a program which has just been started at a few progressive universities in this country which gives people a bachelor's degree in recreation administration. But there are only three universities involved in the program—the University of Alberta, Simon Fraser and Waterloo. Even in respect of this program the administrations must fight for money because this is not a faculty in itself but part of another faculty. This is an area in which I think the federal government should give some encouragement to award either athletic scholarships or to encourage recreational programs in our universities.

Our lack of planning in the past, and perhaps our lack of planning in the future—I hope that will not be the case—puts serious restrictions on the full enjoyment of our leisure time even for the most affluent members of Canadian society. Let me give a few examples. First, space reservations for recreation are generally inadequate for our present population and there is bound to be a serious shortage of space in the more heavily populated regions of Canada. Second, there is no effective, co-ordinated joint federal-provincial regional planning to ensure a concerted and systematic attempt to remedy these problems. Third, it is reasonable to expect that by 1980 the average work time will be 10 per cent less than now—and we have not accepted that possibility. Fourth, in the early 1960s the urban area available for public recreational use such as parks, golf courses, swimming pools and playgrounds ranged below 10 per cent. Looking ahead to the 1980s, it appears that in spite of increased numbers of residences and the possibility of higher population densities in our cities, the land use ratio will be altered little, if at all.

Finally, there is the old problem of a government caught within a jungle of legal and administrative machinery of great complexity, and this is worsened by lack of national appreciation of the real need for a federal recreation policy. The shortage of adequate parks and recreational resources within urban areas continues to be a serious concern to most urban municipalities. The planner lacks an adequate system with which to justify the acquisition, preservation and retention of recreational areas in face of the pressures from the diverse urban forces seeking and competing for open space. The best use for land is too often dependent upon economics and not on the intangible values of space for the sake of space.

Lands for recreational use are in ever-increasing demand. Probably the best indicator is the tremendous increase shown in all forms of outdoor recreation in the past seven or eight years, along with the great increase in attendance at national and provincial parks. Statistics indicate that in 1952 there were 2.5 million visitors to our parks. In 1962 the figure had more than doubled, to 7.5 million; and the latest figures for 1974 indicate more than 14 million visitors.

The BNA Act gives control of natural resources, hence land, to the provincial governments. At both the provincial and federal levels, legislation has tended to promote a split between park and recreation, thereby interrupting acceptance of the similarities existing among programs, services, planning and development. During the debate on Bill S-4 many members, including myself, made reference to national parks for recreation, or national recreational parks. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) said in his speech:

I had hoped that long before now there might have been an attempt to implement a definite policy in respect of recreational parks.

I think this is important. This is the way the federal and provincial governments could organize recreational parks close to urban centres, with recreational directors, in order that people could get out and find some breathing space, rather than having to fly to another country or drive hundreds of miles to a national park.

The goals and objectives of leisure and recreation go far beyond the interest and authority of the federal government's Recreation Canada program. Participation in any effective program of recreation will include not only the National Council on Fitness and Amateur Sport and other offices of the Department of National Health and Welfare, but also such agencies as the Canada Council, the CBC, the National Film Board and government departments such as the Department of the Secretary of State, the Department of Urban Affairs, and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

I am convinced that at the administration level much of the frustration, the lack of direction and the inability to obtain adequate tax dollars for recreational programs and physical fitness development are linked directly to a serious lack of understanding of the role and function of leisure time and recreation. For a start, I would propose two very inexpensive projects. The first would be that all government departments simply "think recreation". If an attitude of this type were adopted, I am sure we would all be surprised at the number of beneficial changes that would result from small and inexpensive measures. Secondly, I would like to see a recreation co-ordinator appointed to advise and direct a government "think recreation" program. He could consult with the provinces, municipalities, towns and cities in order to co-ordinate recreational programs. Perhaps we should even have a ministry responsible for such things as culture, youth and recreation.

The federal government should make available opportunities for the satisfying use of free time. It should provide and protect environmental resources and sponsor research programs to provide an integrated data bank to assist in planning, and provide trained personnel for leadership. If the federal government were to provide the active resources necessary, then we would be well on our way toward satisfying the leisure requirements of this country. I must emphasize that this could become a crisis situation in the future, and I hope we will immediately get on with such a policy.

● (1620)

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why I was chosen to speak on recreation, because I have had very much since becoming a member of parliament. We must realize that there are many kinds of recreation. There are also many opinions about recreation. I was just telling a brother member and colleague that I thought when we had duty days we should make sure there are plenty of cribbage boards in the lobbies. I am sure the quality of the speeches in the House would improve—certainly it will after I have completed this one.

A recreational policy for the whole of Canada is a very huge project. In fact, the whole question of recreation possibly could be defined into so many aspects that I do not see how in the world a national policy could really be stated. In my opinion, things like petroleum, forests and railways, and so on, are fairly definable. We can outline the objectives and possibilities in respect of them. In the case of recreation, however, except to say generally that everybody should have recreation of some kind it is almost impossible to group the different kinds of desirable recreation, let alone undesirable recreation, in one big basket or bag.

As hon. members know, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has been a great advocate of physical fitness. The Government of Canada, through several departments, has backed projects such as Sports Canada and Recreation Canada. I could give a list of dozens of things that are being done. The objective of the fitness and amateur sport branch is to encourage, develop and promote fitness and amateur sport. Grants are given to national agencies and associations so that they may offer programs and leadership training.

Through this program, assistance is given to the province. There are leadership training clinics and skill development classes. The branch assisted the Indian organization. It brought a group down to Hamilton a year or two ago for a big hockey gathering. There is a fitness program in Canada. Sport Participation in Canada is a private, non-profit organization which attempts to motivate Canadians to perhaps more physical activity. I have more, similar information here but I do not intend to bore hon. members with a list of things that are going on.

From the standpoint of national and international competition, we realize that our athletes are under some handicap in getting into a position where they can compete successfully in worldwide competition. This is the reason we encourage and support functions like the Canada Games and the summer and winter games. It is the government's policy to support organizations so they can take part in these games. I think this is the only way in which we can develop athletes of a calibre comparable to athletes of other countries. This also applies to the Olympic games. We have had world champion skaters. We have on the opposition benches a well known competitor who was a world champion in figure skating. I think also of the Magnussen girl from the west who carried the laurels of Canada to first place in world competition. We have a few of this type. I remember that some years ago we were so proud of a girl from Fonthill, near Welland—Marlene Stewart, who was a golf champion.

An hon. Member: Don't forget the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek).

Mr. Railton: I mentioned him, but had forgotten his riding. We cannot forget when our national hockey group defeated the Russians. There is no doubt, when one looks at the Russians, that they are a wonderful group of skaters, stickhandlers, bodycheckers and are very well trained. Had it not been, I suppose, for the old fashioned chauvinistic spirit that the Canadians achieved, they might have been beaten. We do not need to kid ourselves that it was because of the superior athletic condition of our team. It was because of their spirit. That is one thing I think may still survive a little better in a democracy: people do not regard a hockey game, even if it is a championship game, as a science or a job but as a means of doing something for the people they represent.

I am being diverted by a sign which is exhibited in the House, I believe rather illegally, which attempts to get my support for a certain team from west of the Ottawa line on Sunday. I can only say I have put my money on Ottawa.

To return to the subject of physical fitness, what is being done in respect of the Canada games and Canadian athletes, and what is being done in trying to coach teams in various sports in order to help us in the Olympic games, is a small part of the total over-all Canadian policy in respect of physical fitness. It is the feeling of the government, and I support it, that most Canadians are overweight. I shall not say how much. We have certain nutritional deficiencies. We have improper diets. In most of the improper diets the big thing is that there are too many calories and not sufficient vitamins and special trace elements, and so on. However, there has not been a worldwide, comparative study done and therefore I would venture to say that most Canadians, in spite of some of the deficiencies mentioned, are about as healthy as people in the rest of the world. An attempt to maintain a proper weight level will improve an individual's health. While we are on that subject I should like to point out that this is not the only way in which people can remain healthy. We must remember that we cannot make everybody healthy just because they have the proper exercise and diet. This is only a small part of the total health expenditure we are making. We must maintain our ability to treat disease, because most diseases are not amenable to prevention by this means.

On the other side of the coin, we come to the matter of recreation itself. As I said before, I think recreation should be spontaneous. It is almost like charity: it should begin at home. I think that recreation should not only be physical recreation or outdoor recreation but should also include the mind and the emotions. I am not so sure that lack of physical exercise has been as important a component in the mortality of Canadians as has emotional illness due to lack of sensible recreation. I think that most people work too hard, probably drink too hard, and play too hard. Everything they do is with a strong drive; many people never know how to relax.

I am sure there is more heart disease and gastrointestinal disease, such as ulcers, caused by emotional disturbances—this twentieth century syndrome—than by lack of exercise. I can think of people like my grandparents, who both lived to be 85 or 90 and yet they had no set way of exercising. They were farmers and they worked until they could not work any more. But they rather enjoyed it and they had a lot of fun in between their chores. I think it is important that recreation of an emotional nature go hand in hand with recreation of a physical nature. I am not too sure that all the joggers are still jogging.

On the other hand, I think it is important to realize what was brought out by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger). It is by no means something we should throw aside. The value of land management and of our parks, municipal, provincial and federal, cannot be exaggerated. In my city of Welland we are pretty proud of the fact that we have 17 municipal parks. One is known as the Rose City simply because there are some people who are very fond of gardens. Parks should not only have swings, pools and baseball diamonds: I think they should contain, also, a great many quiet and beautiful walks and gardens with flowers and shrubs, because we need the beauty for our souls as much as we need physical exercise.

We have plans also, if we ever get our government to come to a proper conclusion for the city of Welland, to border the three miles on the north side and the three miles on the south side of the old canal with parks and recreational areas. It will probably be one of the most fortunate cities in Canada if this is done, because it had to go through the disruption and misery of a huge construction project when the bypass was built. It took from 1966 until the present year to complete it. Please forgive me for that reference to my own riding, Mr. Speaker. However, what is important about parks is that Canada has a great many of them and they are being used all the time. I will never forget the great recreational and physical enjoyment—I say that with tongue in cheek—of going through Algonquin park with my family many years ago, carrying two waterlogged canoes and a great deal of equipment. I am sure this was for my benefit, but if I had had heart disease I am sure it would have got me then.

The other point I should like to make about parks is that although they are wonderful for canoeists and for people who like outdoor recreation, in fact they are being used by a great many Canadians. The hon. member for Wetaskiwin told us how many people are using the parks; the figure is in the millions. But let us not forget that apart from the 30 per cent of Canadians who use them, there are 200 million people from south of the border who use these parks and are glad to use them because both in our summers and in our winters they can be used for recreation by the Americans as well as by our own people.

The reasons put forward by the hon. member who put forward the motion for the desirability of parks were very good; however, the only thing I would question is the practicability of creating a national policy to cover recreation. I do not see how we can help using all the departments of the government for everything from agriculture to urban affairs—but is there any way in the world in which we can separate all the aspects of this motion and put them under one ministry? It would be much too chaotic if we did so.

That is all I have to say, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to add that it was very good of the sponsor to bring in this motion. It makes us all think. However, I do not think that a national parks policy for recreation is practical at the present time.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in my view the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) has placed before the House a good idea. With reference to some of the things just said by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton), I think I could point out that the mover of this motion does not ask that we be programmed to death, that we all find our recreational outlets in the same way. But having in mind the increased importance of what we do with our leisure time and the importance of our resources being made available to meet the need of people of all ages, I think a motion such as this should be passed.

I am the third speaker, and with some reservations on the part of the second speaker we all seem in agreement with the motion before us. So why do we have to indulge in this Friday afternoon recreation of talking the motion out? Why do we not just admit that it is a good idea and that the House would like to express itself in favour of the motion, and let it pass.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Filibuster.

Mr. Cullen: It is always a pleasure to follow the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I remember that in the last parliament we had many good debates during private members' hour. I think the presence of the hon. member lends a certain amount of prestige to this hour, which I feel is an important hour in the week. Where we do not share the same point of view is that the hon. member in every other debate seems to be quite prepared to talk on and on and have the debate well and fully heard, yet each time he comes into private members' hour we find him trying to limit the time of debate before members who want to speak on important motions have had an opportunity to rise and put their views on the record.

I might say to the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) that I heard him on the radio this morning, and I am sorry I did not have the opportunity to cross-examine him on some of the views he was presenting. I think he was carried away by the fact that he was on the radio at 7.30 in the morning. The fact that I was up at that hour may be significant, too.

Mr. Yewchuk: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Cullen: With all respect, the hon. member is not in his own seat. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, the motion presented by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) is an important one. But, like all of us who present motions and bills during private members' hour, he has failed to pinpoint precisely what he wants, to indicate what it would cost the taxpayers and how the money would be distributed if a national recreation policy were implemented.

To defend such a motion it would be necessay to know precisely what the hon. member has in mind and what kind of money he is recommending should be spent. If we went back to our constituents and said, "Yes, I was for that motion. I supported it in private members' hour and I will support it in committee; but I don't really know what it is going to cost," that would be an irresponsible attitude on our part. When presenting such motions hon. members should give some idea of the avenues they are travelling.

Mr. Yewchuk: What is the wiretapping bill going to cost? You are supporting it.

Mr. Cullen: Yes, I am supporting it. The hon. member may be now in his seat, although that is difficult to know. I say the privacy of the individual should be protected, but there should be emergency provisions. Apparently, this member of the Conservative Party does not seem to think the motion presently before us is an important one when he attempts to sidetrack me like this. I say it is important and should be considered.

Had the hon. member for Wetaskiwin built his motion around one particular point, university athletic scholarships, then we would have a better idea of what he intended. I remember some of my high school colleagues who may have been somewaht mediocre students, just able to get through Latin and English grammar, yet who were whizzes on the football field, the basketball court or in swimming matches. They had no other encouragement than that of trying to make the school team. But when they finished high school they really had no chance to make their living in football because there were no scholarships for that; thus they were denied expert training. Any who wanted to continue in athletics had to go south of the border. I commend Simon Fraser University if it is providing athletic scholarships.

This is an area where the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) should get together with provincial ministers of education and look into the possibility of funding such college scholarships. They would know how many colleges there are in the country and could decide on the criteria for athletes to attend them and receive scholarships.

The hon. member for Wetaskiwin also spoke about importing coaches. I do not know why we seem to be loath to do that. The Canadian Legion showed the way some years ago when it brought an internationally respected coach to Canada from Great Britain to coach Canadian teams and assist Canadian athletes to develop. It was just one more indication of the kind of service provided by the Legion that all too often is forgotten. People sometimes think of legionnaires getting together to talk about the war, and do not realize that the Legion is giving leadership on a national basis to develop athletes and improve our showing in international competition. I salute the Legion for that. And the Legion does not simply focus on the national scene. I notice in many leagues the names of teams such as "The Legion" or "The Legionnaires," and we all know where the money to support them originates.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre struck a nerve when he indicated that he did not want to see us programmed to death. This is not unlike going to a summer resort, where you swim when you want to, rest when you want to and read when you want to; but the resort has an athletics director who insists that you go for a swim before breakfast, that you have a run after breakfast, who tells you what you should eat for your meal and in effect tells you how you should be enjoying yourself on a holiday that you yourself selected long before you met him.

I do not want to speak at length because I know there are others who wish to speak on this important motion. But once again I say to the hon. member who sponsored it that I would have been much happier if he had confined himself to a particular area and indicated whether he thought funding should be made available for athletic scholarships and the importation of coaches, or for the establishment of recreational centres in large or small communities, or whether he feels more money should be made available to Sports Canada. There are many such areas in which the federal government is participating at the present time. As a result of the study which he must have made before presenting this motion, the hon. member should have said in which areas he felt the federal government was not going far enough or where he felt some program could be dropped.

Sarnia produces some pretty fair baseball players, Mr. Speaker. This may be because it is close to an international border and local teams compete against Americans who are probably the best baseball players in the world, ahead of the Japanese and the Canadians. As a result, Sarnia produced a team that won two national championships. In this area, the federal government did not make money directly available to the Sarnia team or the Kitchener team, but it did say to the national organization, "We will make 'X' number of dollars available to you and you will spend that money as you see fit, either to send the team from Sarnia to where the championships are held or in some other manner. You will decide whether the money is to be divided among senior and junior competitors." This is the only fair way in which the federal government can become involved in that kind of program.

Mr. Speaker, I see there are members on the edge of their seat anxious to participate in this debate; therefore I will conclude my remarks at this point.

Mr. Judd Buchanan (London West): Mr. Speaker, I am glad my colleague noted the anxiety with which I was sitting on the edge of my seat. To discuss a national recreation policy such as the one proposed by the hon.

member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) it is necessary to define "recreation" with some precision, or to qualify it in some way, for example as outdoor recreation. Even that qualified expression is capable of covering snowmobiling to wilderness hiking, active team sports to passive enjoyment of the countryside, urban playgrounds to wilderness parks.

Policies exist for federal involvement in many areas of outdoor recreation, but the diverse and often divergent needs of many of the activities which comprise recreation are not amenable to a single policy statement. Recreation does not result in a service whose goals can be specified, except perhaps in the level of personal satisfaction to each participant. All levels of government have a range of responsibilities in the field of recreation. These responsibilities have been developed in tune with the growth in demand for recreation of all kinds during recent years. Many of them are exercised autonomously by municipal and provincial governments without any involvement of the next senior level of government. These responsibilities and powers and their autonomy must be respected in the development of any federal policy.

● (1650)

In order to meet this primary requirement, a comprehensive policy would probably emerge as being so general as to be without a great deal of value. Recreational programming and the determination of land use are very clearly areas of provincial responsibility. Although several federal departments have developed excellent working relationships with the provinces for recreational activities, there is no evidence that such basic matters as these would be willingly modified by the provinces in the interests of a national policy.

The federal government has a number of policies and programs which apply to specific aspects of recreation and which have been tailored to meet the special needs of each activity. Not only are some of these programs federally assisted but many of them are federally administered. National parks, canals, small craft harbours, historic sites, some wildlife refuges and interpretation centres are among this group.

There are two components to recreation—the allocation of space and resources and the participation in recreational activities as part of our social structure. Assuming that participation will follow Parkinson's law and expand to make maximum use of land made available, the real interest of government is one of space and programs to ensure wise and skilled use of the space by a trained or at least an understanding public. In Canada, the consideration is complicated in the case of those recreational activities which attract tourism. The vast market of 200 million mobile citizens of the United States places powerful demands on Canadian resources. In 1973, slightly more than 30 per cent of the visitors to Canada's national parks were not Canadian residents. This larger market may well contribute tourist dollars to Canada but they also make the resources of a system serving 22 million Canadians distinctly scarce.

The implication of the hon. member's motion, that there is a void where there should be a policy, is only valid if we consider the whole unwieldy package of recreation. There are a number of policies and agencies of the Government of Canada which have jurisdiction over parts of the proposal. The total of these, properly co-ordinated to have recreation recognized as an integral component of our total land use allocation and social and cultural plans, has the potential for creating a comprehensive response to the variety of recreational demands than a national recreational philosophy requires.

I would like to review the involvement of several federal departments in the development of recreational policies.

Mr. Atkey: You are against progress.

Mr. Buchanan: Never. In each department, the thrust is to develop policies which can be used to handle specific issues and involvement of the federal government while giving full recognition to the autonomous roles of both provincial and municipal governments. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Marchand) pointed out in this House when speaking on second reading of Bill S-4 on November 2, 1973, that the philosophy of the National Parks Act is that of conservation and recreation. Conservation takes priority, as it must if Canada is to have special places to recreate.

A co-operative relationship with the provinces has developed to serve Canada's parks' responsibilities. Last year a new dimension was added to those responsibilities when the government approved the byways and special places program which provides for a number of new federal initiatives in the protection of our natural and cultural heritage while providing a whole new series of themes which will serve recreational needs. The introduction of national marine parks, national landmarks, national wild rivers, national historic land routes, national historic waterways and scenic and historic parkways provides a diversity of federal involvement and offers an encouragement to other levels of government to consider the advantages of an integrated, Canada-wide parks network. In announcing this new direction, the minister laid special stress on the need to develop these initiatives with the provinces as part of a truly Canadian parks system. The department is now preparing to enter discussions with all the provinces to explore the potential of the program.

To an increasing degree, Parks Canada is extending its traditional concerns. Its newly assumed responsibilities for the historic canals has led it into negotiations with Ontario to find a means of co-ordinating federal, provincial and municipal programs to develop the tremendous asset of the Rideau and Trent-Severn waterways so that it meets the many and varied needs of a population searching for more recreational opportunities. As a result of a co-ordinated program of development in the Halifax-Dartmouth waterfront area, several islands which are federally-owned but surplus to current federal needs are to be used for recreational development of benefit to that region.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

Mr. Paproski: Question.

Mr. Buchanan: Appropriate ways are being sought to provide recreational activity in urban population areas.

Mr. Paproski: The government is against health and recreation and has no ideas or policies on the subject.

Mr. Buchanan: Here the byways and special places program may go some of the way to increase the Parks Canada involvement—perhaps by the assumption of responsibility in areas which relieve provincial agencies of high priority programs in rural areas, and give them the opportunity to redirect priorities to the urban centres.

Mr. Bell: You are against the high cost of loving.

Mr. Buchanan: Against the high cost of loving, that is correct. But the Parks Canada activity is concerned primarily with the provisions of outdoor recreation space and is by no means the only federal program involved. At least four other departments have programs directly relating to the supply or use of recreational open space. Their programs are co-ordinated by interdepartmental committees, and consultation is active. Because of the nature of land and the nature of recreation, each program needs its own policies and its own means of implementing them.

The Department of the Environment has in the "Canada Land Inventory" classified much of Canada's land mass for its recreational capability. This inventory is widely used for recreational land assessment by both federal and provincial agencies. The department has a component directly related to recreation and open space research with particular concern for the environmental impact of recreational activities. Its fisheries service has a great deal of impact on recreational fishing.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The time provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock Monday afternoon.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.
