Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. No.

2. No.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—DEW LINE SITES

Question No. 2,715—Mr. Bawden:

1. What agency is responsible for operating DEW Line sites and stations in Canada?

2. How many civilian personnel are employed at such DEW Line sites and stations and, of these, how many are Canadians?

3. Does Canada Manpower provide all the hiring services for the above agency?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. DEW Line sites and stations in Canada are operated by RCA through Operation and Maintenance Service Incorporated (OMS) who have an office in Winnipeg. A Canadian Forces officer commands each of the main sites in Canada.

2. As of August 31, 1973, 488 civilian personnel were employed on Canadian DEW Line sites and stations and of these, 478 were Canadian citizens.

3. Canada Manpower is requested by the OMS Industrial Relations Office to provide personnel for each vacancy which occurs. Only when Canada Manpower cannot provide appropriate personnel in a reasonable period of time does OMS attempt to hire personnel by open advertising.

NUCLEAR PROPULSION FOR SHIPS AND LOCOMOTIVES

Question No. 2,721—Mr. Forrestall:

Is the Department of Transport currently undertaking a definitive study on a cost-benefit basis of using nuclear propulsion for ships and locomotives of all classes and, if so (a) what level of funding has been appropriated for such a study (b) what is the status of this study (c) on what date can the results be expected to be made public?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Ministry of Transport is not currently undertaking a definitive study on a cost-benefit basis of using nuclear propulsion for ships and locomotives of all classes. It is, however, the Ministry's intention to commission in the near future a study with respect to nuclear ship propulsion, specifically in connection with the polar icebreaker project, with regard to the possible application of this type of propulsion under present and envisaged future circumstances. Part of the study will involve a review of the findings of previous studies on nuclear ship propulsion carried out for the Ministry and the United States Coast Guard. (a) No specific funding has been appropriated for the new study at this time and funding will not be requested until final estimates of the cost have been determined; (b) a draft request for a proposal for the study is in the final stage for circulation to competent consultants, a list of whom is now being considered; (c) the date upon which the results of the study can be expected to be made public is not known at the present time.

SPECIAL FEATURES OF ACCIDENT AND DEFECT INVESTIGATION DIVISION

Question No. 2,764—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What specific features of the Accident and Defect Investigation Division of the Canadian Surface Transportation Administration exist to guarantee it the ability to make full, impartial and interference-free reports and investigations of those areas over which it has responsibility?

2. Is the government satisfied that such procedures are sufficient to maintain the confidence of the public and the international community with respect to the impartiality and conflict-of-interest-free accident investigation and reporting?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. The purpose of the Accident and Defect Investigation Division of the Canadian Surface Transportation Administration is to evaluate the effectiveness of motor vehicle safety standards, determine the need for new or improved standards, identify possible safety-related defects or deficiencies which may be present in vehicles operating on the road system and obtain information on accident causation and specific data for research purposes. In meeting the above objectives the Accident Investigation personnel involved in these investigations do not direct their efforts to the establishment of responsibility or the making of policy recommendations. The division is supported by nine university teams strategically placed across Canada. It has also complemented its investigations by contracting a technical portion of some investigations of a major nature to independent consultants.

2. Yes.

PURPOSE OF ACCIDENT AND DEFECT INVESTIGATION DIVISION

Question No. 2,765—Mr. Forrestall:

1. For what reason is the Accident and Defect Investigation Division of the Canadian Surface Transportation Administration not separated organizationally from all other agencies and branches of government?

2. Would such separation assure the removal of even the appearance of the possibility of conflict of interest in its reporting and investigating of accidents that may involve criticism of regulatory agencies?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. The purpose of the Accident and Defect Investigation program is not to determine responsibility for individual accidents nor to make administrative or policy recommendations for preventing similar occurrences in future. The provincial governments have established procedures for determining responsibility and causes of motor vehicle accidents. The objectives of the Accident Investigation program are to evaluate the effectiveness of safety standards and to determine the need for additional standards. In addition, the investigations are designed to identify any vehicle defects or deficiencies which may have contributed to the accident which may be present in other vehicles operating on the road system. The investigations also provide information on accident causation and specific data for research purposes. Therefore, separation of Accident and Defect Investigations from this branch would serve no useful purpose.

2. There is no evidence of conflicts of interest in our present Accident and Defect Investigation program. The program best serves its purposes of direct support of standard activities by remaining within the branch and not under an independent quasi-judicial body.

PARLIAMENT HILL—DUTCH ELM DISEASE EXPENDITURES

Question No. 2,774—Mr. Stevens:

To date, what is the total cost expended by the government to save the elm tree on Parliament Hill, which is near the statue of Sir John A. MacDonald, from dutch elm disease (a) what have been the results (b) is it planned to treat the tree further next year?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): In so far as the National Capital Commission is concerned: The elm tree behind the statue of Sir John A. MacDonald is a mature tree approximately 90 years old. It contracted the Dutch Elm Disease in 1966. Since then it has been pruned and sprayed annually to remove the dead wood. Approximately one-third of the tree's crown has been removed. The slow progress of the disease is due to the maturity of the tree. Actual cost for the pruning and spraying of this tree for the past seven years is not available but it is estimated at $250. During 1973, as part of the experimental root injection program, this tree was treated at a cost of $200. (a) Results of treatment prior to 1973 have prolonged the life of the tree for several years. Results of the injection treatment this year will not be known until further analysis has been conducted; (b) pruning and spraying treatment will be continued. Further action to save the tree will be determined after the results of this summer's treatment are known.

CANADIAN INVENTORY OF HISTORIC BUILDINGS

Question No. 2,778—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. By province, how many buildings have been surveyed during the first phase of the Canadian Inventory of Historic Buildings?

2. By province, how many interiors of selected historic buildings are scheduled to be surveyed and recorded in phase two of the program?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. British Columbia, 8,017; Alberta, 8,159; Saskatchewan, 6,731; Manitoba, 2,975; Ontario, 38,579; Quebec, 29,871; New Brunswick, 5,732; Nova Scotia, 7,978; Prince Edward Island, 1,954; Newfoundland, 1,617. These figures are approximate since not all of the data has been processed.

2. At the present time we plan to record between 6,000 and 12,000 building interiors in phase 2 of the CIHB program. This represents roughly 5 to 10 per cent of the structures recorded in phase 1. The final selection of buildings has not yet been made, so we cannot provide the breakdown requested.

Order Paper Questions

MONTREAL AND OTTAWA STOLPORT BUILDINGS

Question No. 2,785—Mr. Reynolds:

Is there a $90,000 difference for the construction of two identical buildings, one at the Montreal STOLport and the other at the Ottawa STOLport and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, conditions at the Montreal STOLport required the provision of suspended floor slabs and underfloor membranes, which resulted in higher costs for the superstructure.

EMPLOYMENT OF MISS MONIQUE COUPAL

Question No. 2,798—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is Miss Monique Coupal employed by the government and (a) if so, in what capacity and at what annual salary (b) if not, on what date did she leave government service and for what reason?

2. (a) What are all positions ever held at any time in the Public Service by Miss Monique Coupal (b) what were the periods of time involved (c) what was the annual salary in each case?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes. (a) Executive Assistant to the Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister; $22,000-$28,000; (b) Not applicable.

2. (a)	(b)	(c)
Assistant Secretary and Legal Adviser—The Royal Commission on the Status of Women	01/09/67—14/12/70	$18,867—$21,442
Legislative Counsel—Office of the President of the Privy Council	22/02/71—18/09/71	$18,867—$21,442
Secretary—CRTC	31/07/71—30/08/73	$19,400—$24,200
Executive Assistant to the Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister	01/09/73—present	$22,000—$28,000

LA MAURICIE NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 2,817—Mr. Howard:

1. (a) What was the projections of costs on a year by year basis over the length of the development period for La Mauricie National Park in its original development plan (b) did these estimates include provision for inflation?

2. What are the actual amounts which have been spent year by year on La Mauricie National Park?

3. Have the estimates of the expenditures needed over the development period been revised and, if so, what are the revised figures?

4. What priority was originally assigned to La Mauricie National Park, in terms of the length of the development period and the level of expenditures, vis-à-vis other parks in the national parks system?

5. Has the priority changed and, if so, in what way?

6. What criteria are employed in assigning priorities?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) The initial conceptual plan envisaged an estimated expenditure of $17 million by 1980; (b) The initial plan did not include a provision for inflation but the most recent revised plan proposes an expenditure of $18.2 million by 1980 and is a projection based on 1973 dollar values.

2.	1970/71	1971/72	1972/73
Capital	$ 203,800	$1,557,700	$2,907,500
O and M	63,300	234,800	283,600
	$ 267,100	$1,792,500	$3,191,100

The above totals include capital expenditures, operating/maintenance costs and special labour intensive winter works programs.

3. Answer contained in question 1 above.

4. All new and developing parks receive equal priority within the National Parks System.

5. The priority has not changed, but the road program in La Mauricie Park has been accelerated in order to meet the objectives envisaged in the 10-year plan for the park.

6. All new parks brought into the parks system receive a high priority to meet our commitments to the provinces as delineated in the federal/provincial agreements pertaining to the handover of provincial lands to the Crown.

"HANSARD" SUBSCRIPTIONS

Question No. 3,004—Mr. Mitges:

How many subscribers of Hansard are there for the current session of the 29th Parliament and what is the number for the Province of Ontario?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Information Canada advises as follows: Subscribers in Canada, 8209; Subscribers in Ontario, 4266.

UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFITS TO PROFESSIONAL ATHLETES

Question No. 3,026—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. For each year 1969 to 1972 and for the first six months of 1973, how many professional athletes (a) hockey players (b) football players (c) baseball players (d) others received benefits from the Unemployment Insurance Commission?

2. For the same years, what was the total amount paid in benefits to each one of these professional groups of athletes?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The Unemployment Insurance Commission does not maintain statistics that would make this kind of information available.

* * *

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

STUDY OF IMPACT OF UNITED STATES DISC CORPORATIONS ON CANADA'S ECONOMY

Question No. 2,419—Mr. Marshall:

Has any department carried out a study of the impact of U.S. DISC corporations on Canada's economy and (a) if so (i) which department(s) carried out the study or studies (ii) what were the terms of reference (iii) what were the conclusions reached (b) if not, for what reason?

Return tabled.

ST. LAWRENCE ISLANDS NATIONAL PARKS—GOVERNMENT-OWNED SNOWMOBILES

Question No. 2,430—Mr. Cossitt:

1. How many government-owned snowmobiles are maintained at St. Lawrence Islands National Parks?

2. On what date, from whom and at what price was each purchased?

3. Were tenders called on each purchase and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so (i) was this by public advertisement or invited tender (ii) what tenders were received in each case?

4. Who looks after maintenance of these snowmobiles and what was the total maintenance cost during the latest 12 months for which figures are available?

5. Are any leased snowmobiles used by the government at this location and, if so, from whom and at what cost?

Return tabled.

ST. LAWRENCE ISLANDS NATIONAL PARKS—GOVERNMENT-OWNED BOATS

Question No. 2,431—Mr. Cossitt:

1. How many government-owned boats are maintained at St. Lawrence Islands National Parks?

2. On what date, from whom and at what price was each purchased?

3. Were tenders called on each purchase and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so (i) was this by public advertisement or invited tender (ii) what tenders were received in each case?

4. Who looks after maintenance of these boats and what was the total maintenance cost during the latest 12 months for which figures are available?

5. Are any leased boats used by the government at this location and, if so, from whom and at what cost?

Return tabled.

ST. LAWRENCE NATIONAL PARKS—GOVERNMENT-OWNED VEHICLES

Question No. 2,432—Mr. Cossitt:

1. How many government-owned vehicles are maintained at St. Lawrence Islands National Parks?

2. On what date, from whom and at what price was each purchased?

3. Were tenders called on each purchase and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so (i) was this by public advertisement or invited tender (ii) what tenders were received in each case?

4. Who looks after maintenance of these vehicles and what was the total maintenance cost during the latest 12 months for which figures are available?

5. Are any leased vehicles used by the government at this location and, if so, from whom and at what cost?

Return tabled.

Oil Supplies

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

ENERGY

OIL SUPPLIES FROM FOREIGN SOURCES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the steps the government proposes taking to meet the continuing interruption of oil supplies from foreign countries and, more particularly, what plans it has for (a) procuring alternative supplies to meet the needs of eastern Canada; (b) organizing public support for reducing the consumption of energy supplies this winter, and (c) instituting a system of oil rationing should this become necessary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has forwarded the notice required by section 2 of Standing Order 26. This has provided the Chair with an opportunity to give the matter the most serious consideration.

There can be little doubt that the proposed motion meets most of the criteria set out in paragraph 16 of Standing Order 26. The subject raised by the hon. member is, as specified in the Standing Order, a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration. It is one which is of interest and concern to all members and one which hon. members would want to debate, I am sure, at a suitable and appropriate moment. The Chair is therefore sympathetic to the proposal of the hon. member that there be a special debate on this matter.

Of course, it might well be suggested that the debate proposed by the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs, to which reference has been made from time to time during the last few days, might afford us an opportunity for the special debate now proposed by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. Hon. members will appreciate, also, that there can be only one debate about a certain subject under the terms of Standing Order 26 during the course of a session. Paragraph 16, subsection (d) reads:

● (1420)

. . . the motion must not revive discussion on a matter which has been discussed in the same session pursuant to the provisions of this Standing Order.

When we are dealing with a developing situation and one which may become of graver concern later, hon. members may well wonder whether the moment has yet come when the one and single emergency debate provided by the Standing Order ought to take place at this particular point in time. With this in mind, I suggest to hon. members that it might be wise if the Chair were allowed to postpone until later this afternoon the very important decision he has to make in response to the motion so as to consult in the meantime with House leaders. These consultations would be of great assistance to the Chair in determining whether the proposed debate should take place today, perhaps later this week, or at some time, in any event, by mutual agreement. I will therefore hold the matter in abeyance. Following discussions after the calling of orders of the day, a statement can be made from the Chair indicating the decision which has been reached.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PRESENT POSITION RESPECTING CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN MIDDLE EAST PEACEKEEPING FORCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to divert a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs about his visit to the United Nations and the documents he tabled today. Is the government of Canada now formally committed to sending a contingent, as originally proposed, to provide logistics support for the United Nations Emergency Force, or is the government simply committed to sending what is described, I think, as a small evaluation force to the area?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the situation, if I may describe it briefly, is this: The Secretary General asked Canada originally to supply the logistics component of the United Nations Emergency Force. It was because of some doubt whether this proposition was wholly acceptable to all members of the Security Council and the parties to the conflict that I went to New York on Friday to discuss with the Secretary General later developments. At that time, or shortly after I arrived, the Security Council held another meeting and put forward the—

Mr. Stanfield: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. With respect, it seems to me the minister is making the kind of statement that he ought to make on motions. We are very grateful for the information, but I suggest that we would be prepared to revert to motions so the minister can make the statement.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be wise at this time to make an extensive statement on the subject; I will be quite happy to answer the hon. gentleman's question more briefly. All we are committed to at the moment, although we have accepted the larger role, is to send an evaluation force to the Middle East in order to determine what our role should be.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs explain, and I am not being facetious, what he means by saying that the government of Canada is committed to the larger role but the only thing it has agreed to do is to send a small evaluation team?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The House will recall that I said, in reply to a question, that until the situation is clarified we do not intend to send any other troops to the Middle East. All that we have agreed to send so far is a small evaluation team.

[Mr. Speaker.]

POSITION OF ARAB COUNTRIES ON SUPPLYING OF OIL TO CANADA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister indicated on Friday, I believe, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would be consulting with the representatives of the Arab oil producing nations at the United Nations with regard to security of oil supplies for Canada. Can the minister advise the House whether, in his meetings with the representatives of the Arab states, he discussed any conditions and received any assurance with regard to an assured supply of petroleum to Canada from the Arab oil producing countries in the event of Canada participating in the United Nations Emergency Force?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any direct relationship between our participation in the United Nations Emergency Force and the attitude of the Arab oil states toward supplying oil to Canada. The discussions that I and our ambassadors have had directly with the representatives of the Arab countries indicate that Canada is not considered to be a country unfriendly to the Arab countries and we have no information that any boycott will be applied against us. As the hon. gentleman knows, the oil countries are reducing their production. It is very difficult for anyone to tell how that will affect deliveries to any country in the world.

OPPORTUNITY FOR DEBATE ON CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN MIDDLE EAST PEACEKEEPING FORCE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, will the minister say whether the commitment he made last week that the approval of parliament will be sought with regard to sending a force in reply to the Secretary General's request still stands and when we may expect that debate?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the commitment still stands. I am ready to call the item immediately, but I believe it would be very much in the interests of the House before the resolution is called that the exact role that Canada will be called upon to play be decided. We now have to consider sharing the logistics component with at least one other country, namely, Poland. It is for this reason that the evaluation team is going to Cairo to try to determine how best to divide these responsibilities.

REASON FOR ALLOCATING AIRBORNE UNIT FOR POSSIBLE SERVICE IN MIDDLE EAST PEACEKEEPING FORCE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for either the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact an evaluation team is now going to Cairo and there has been a review of the role Canada will play, why was it decided to choose the Canadian airborne regiment, Canada's combat alert unit, to fulfil this role which would normally be carried out by a supply unit?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there will be no decision about the use of the Canadian airborne regiment until the evaluation team has made its report to the Secretary General. As the hon. member knows, this regiment has been a standby regiment for peacekeeping for several years.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not for the activity of being a hewer of wood.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Will the minister advise why the unit at this stage of its combat readiness would be used not as a peacekeeping unit but as a supply unit under the logistic arrangements forecast by the Secretary of State for External Affairs? After all, the RCMP can look after a parking lot as well.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian airborne regiment is trained to play more than one role. Although it is a combat regiment, it is also trained in peacekeeping operations. It should be the wish of all of us that it play a role in peacekeeping, rather than in combat.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster on a supplementary and then the hon. member for York South.

TIME OF DEBATE ON CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN MIDDLE EAST PEACEKEEPING FORCE

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the sending of the evaluation team now mean the matter will not be referred to the House in the way indicated until the evaluation report is given to the House?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would prefer that, but I would have no objection if the House insisted on having an earlier debate. I just suggest it would be a more valuable and productive debate if there could be a clarification of our role before that debate takes place.

● (1430)

Mr. Bell: When is the report expected? This is all involved in the motion under Standing Order 26 which was just put forward.

An hon. Member: They are all mixed up.

Mr. Speaker: While the matter is being pondered, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South.

* * *

ENERGY

SUGGESTED MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL FIRST MINISTERS ON POSSIBLE SHORTAGE OF OIL SUPPLIES —PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, before asking my question may I say I cannot agree with the suggestion of the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster that the motion under Standing Order 26 moved earlier has a connection with the matter he raised.

I want to pose a question to the Prime Minister. Has he received and, if so, has he had time to study a telegram from Premier Barrett of British Columbia urging an early meeting of the first ministers of Canada for the purpose of co-ordinating plans with respect to the shortage, or possible shortage, of oil supplies, as well as plans for conservation and distribution, so that there might be a co-ordinated Canadian energy policy in this perhaps critical period? If the right hon. gentleman has had time to study the telegram, does he intend to call such a meeting of first ministers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I did, indeed, receive such a telegram and I am a little puzzled by it. The subject matter is certainly an urgent one and must be studied. However, I am not sure whether Premier Barrett is aware that such a conference has already been called at the ministerial level and that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has set November 23 as the date. I have not communicated with Premier Barrett on this point, although I did have occasion to talk with him on other matters last week. But on this matter I am not clear whether he wants a meeting of first ministers to supersede this meeting at the ministerial level. If so, my advice would be that it would be preferable to stick to the initiative we have taken of calling a ministerial meeting on November 23 to do all the preliminary work and then, as soon as is necessary thereafter, to call a meeting of first ministers, as was our original plan.

OIL SUPPLIES—POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL CORPORATION TO DEAL DIRECTLY WITH VENEZUELA

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I would assume that Premier Barrett's suggestion arises from the attitude taken by the premier of the neighbouring province of Alberta. In any case, may I ask the Prime Minister the following question. It is true it has been asked of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but may I put it to him in this way. In view of reports that there may be some cutback in oil supplies from Venezuela, which could affect Canada, and in view of the attitude taken by the government of Venezuela that it cannot control the distribution of its oil supplies because they are mainly in the hands of Exxon, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the cabinet is coming to a conclusion, or how quickly it may come to a conclusion to set up a national petroleum corporation that would be able to deal directly with the government of Venezuela and ensure some security of oil supplies this winter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am afraid that at this stage I am not able to agree with the assumption with which the hon. member prefaced his first question. I am not in a position to know what the Premier of Alberta will do but I am still operating on the assumption that the Alberta minister responsible for this particular area of policy will be at the meeting on November 23. If he is not, I do not think this should lead us to the conclusion that we cannot meet in the absence of the minister from Alberta. However, it would be much more desirable if the premier did have the minister there.

I am still puzzled about the intent of Premier Barrett's telegram. I hope he is aware that there is a meeting scheduled for November 23; at any rate, I will try to pursue the matter with him. I might add that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is consulting with various provinces on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, particularly at this time with the ministers and premiers of the eastern provinces.

As to the other question asked by the hon. member, I cannot add to what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has said repeatedly. The subject of a national petroleum company is before the cabinet. It has not yet been decided in any final way. We shall let the House know of the government's decision in the usual manner.

EASTERN CANADA OIL SUPPLY SITUATION—SPECIFIC PLANS FOR EXTENSION OF PIPELINE TO MONTREAL

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Having regard to the oil supply situation in eastern Canada, can the minister tell us what specific plans the government has formulated in connection with the Montreal pipeline project which go beyond the general commitment to the project embodied in the announcement of September 4, whether such specific plans were discussed with the premier of Quebec last week, and whether the National Energy Board has been asked to study the project and make a recommendation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The board would deal with that matter in the form of an application, and no application has yet been made. There have been discussions both with Quebec at the official level and with the Interprovincial Pipeline Company with regard to the details of such a pipeline. I cannot say whether or not this matter was discussed last Friday, but it is receiving active attention from the federal agencies concerned as well as other interested parties.

Mr. Balfour: In view of the minister's statement that such a pipeline could deliver 250,000 extra barrels of oil per day to Montreal without any major back-up construction to the wellhead being needed, can the hon. gentleman now be more specific and inform the House whether the government has undertaken any concrete action since September 4 which permitted him to make such a projection?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker. That judgment is based on information from Interprovincial Pipelines.

OIL SUPPLIES—REQUEST FOR EARLY DECISION ON WHETHER NATIONAL CORPORATION TO BE ESTABLISHED TO DEAL DIRECTLY WITH VENEZUELA

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. It seems obvious that it would take some time to set up a national petroleum company or corporation and that it may be necessary to have such an agency in order to obtain sufficient oil supplies from Venezuela for use in eastern Canada this winter. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he and his colleagues can assure the House that they will come to a conclusion on this matter within the next few days in order that eastern Canada will not face a shortage of supplies because of the failure of the government to reach a decision to set up the necessary agency for that purpose?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am afraid I cannot agree with the hon. member's logic. As the minister has said a number of times in the House, the existence of such a company is not the only factor which would determine whether the supplies are sufficient or not. There are a number of other factors involved, including direct relations between the government and the governments of the oil-producing nations.

* * *

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

ACCURACY OF FIGURES IN TWENTY-EIGHTH REPORT ON FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

I should have asked this question last Friday to enable the minister to enlighten the House, but I did not have the opportunity to do so. Did the minister look through the 28th Report on the Farm Improvement Loans Act for the year 1972? If so, would he be willing to say whether the data included in this report date from 1914, as suggested by his parliamentary secretary last Thursday following my intervention?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Those were the figures we were given. If they were not accurate, I will check on them and see that they are rectified.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Is the minister considering taking the necessary steps to better inform his parliamentary secretary?

* * *

[English]

ENERGY

OIL—MOBILIZATION OF TRUCKS AND RAILWAY TANK CARS TO MOVE FUEL TO DEFICIT AREAS IF REQUIRED

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. At the meeting with the provincial resources ministers on November 23, does the minister plan to put forward the work he has done on collecting or mobilizing trucks and railway tank cars to move fuel from surplus areas to deficit areas this winter?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): This question was not originally on the agenda but I would be quite prepared to brief them. We have responded favourably to the suggestion of the premier of Nova Scotia that there might be a meeting of the five eastern provinces on this question. I shall certainly be glad at the November 23 meeting to take the opportunity of giving full information on the present state of supply and any measures to be taken. I should explain that the November 23 meeting is also to prepare for a full scale energy conference for next year and also to deal with the second stage of our mining policy.

• (1440)

OIL SUPPLY—SUGGESTED PROVISION OF ACCELERATED COST WRITE-OFF TO THOSE WHO BUILD LOCAL STORAGE FACILITIES

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I wish to address to the Minister of Finance. In view of the urgency of the situation we face this winter, would the minister consider, after consultations with his colleagues, announcing that he is prepared in his next budget to introduce a two-year rapid acceleration provision for all those who build storage facilities in local communities?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): That is a representation that I will certainly consider, Mr. Speaker.

AVAILABILITY OF VENEZUELAN OIL FOR SALE TO POSSIBLE CANADIAN GOVERNMENT CORPORATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. May I ask the minister whether there is to his knowledge oil available in Venezuela that the appropriate agency in Venezuela would be prepared to enter into a contract for sale thereof this winter to a government sponsored or government owned energy corporation in Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the original discussion was with regard to availability of oil following the end of the concessions in Venezuela whenever that might be. Late last week, I think either on Friday or Saturday, there was an indication that Venezuela might be planning to take its royalty in kind, in which case the Venezuelan agency C.V.P. would have oil available. We are pursuing that particular information but at the moment I cannot indicate whether there is any possibility of a contract in the near future.

OIL—SUGGESTED INTERVENTION OF PRIME MINISTER OR ANOTHER MINISTER IN MEETINGS WITH ALBERTA

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Since the methods followed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in his dealings with the province of Alberta have led to confrontation on two consecutive occasions, will the Prime Minister advise whether the right hon. gentleman plans to intervene personally in this matter by meeting with the premier of Alberta or using other means, or whether he intends to nominate the Minister of Finance or some other intermediary to help end this atmosphere of confrontation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am always ready and delighted to meet with the premier of Alberta on any subject, but on this particular one I must assure the House that the entire government is behind the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hellyer: They are all behind.

Mr. Trudeau: —comma—in support of a policy that is not unfair to the American people and which only has the effect of returning to the treasury, for the time being, a windfall profit that otherwise would have gone not to the people of Alberta but to the multinational corporations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OIL EXPORT TAX—REPRESENTATIONS TO ALBERTA MINISTERS VIS-À-VIS FEDERAL POLICY

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): I am not quite sure, Mr. Speaker, what is meant by the reference to the American people, but I will let it pass as a fault of geography. May I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. May I ask the minister whether the representations made to ministers of the Alberta government a week ago tonight regarding the export tax differed appreciably from the position that the government announced Thursday night? If so, would the minister explain why the policy differed from the representations?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we presented to the Alberta ministers the options that the government faced, which basically were the options whether there should be a staged increase in price to February 1 west of the Ottawa Valley line or some variation of that. These options were presented to the ministers, but because they had refused to sanction any action under the price restraint program we arrived at no agreement.

OIL SUPPLIES—ESTIMATE OF POSSIBLE IMPORT SHORTFALL—POSSIBLE NATIONAL MARKETING MECHANISM

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact the Arab states, particularly Saudi Arabia, have announced a reduction in oil production of 25 per cent for November and an additional 5 per cent in the month of December, and in view of the constant danger that Venezuelan oil may be diverted to the United States, may I ask the minister whether his department has made any estimate of the parameters within which we can anticipate imported oil supplies this winter. Has the minister made any estimate of what the shortfall will be between the 900,000 barrels a day that we normally require and what we are likely to be getting?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Not at the moment, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. gentleman knows, the meeting of the Arab states last weekend confirmed their policy that certain states would be embargoed and also confirmed certain policies regarding reduction in production. How that reduction will affect the supply to each of the recipient countries such as Canada is at the moment still to be determined.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands for a further supplementary, followed by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre, the hon. member for Calgary North and the hon. member for Calgary South.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the minister's statement a few moments ago that the government is pursuing the possibility of dealing with the state oil trading company in Venezuela for any oil that government may take in kind, may I ask the minister what plans he has for marketing such oil in Canada? Does he intend to set up a national marketing mechanism to deal with that oil in order to see that it goes to the areas where it is most needed?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that in the short run a national marketing mechanism would be necessary in the sense that I think the government of Canada, through existing agencies, could undertake the responsibility of acquiring the oil and making it available to various refiners that might be short of feed stock. As for the long run, the best agency for doing this is all bound up, of course, in the decision whether or not we will have a national petroleum corporation.

OIL EXPORT TAX—POSITION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE—DISCUSSION BY PRIME MINISTER WITH PREMIER BARRETT

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Did the Minister of Finance promise at the meeting with Alberta officials that there would be prior consultation before he reversed his field on the export tax on oil?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my intervention in the meeting with my colleague and the Alberta ministers was to examine the position of the export tax and particularly the situation of Syncrude.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will allow a supplementary to the hon. member for Edmonton Centre and then the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance did not answer my question but I will direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In his discussions with Premier Barrett last week did the Prime Minister discuss the Canadian export tax on oil and did the premier approve the measure?

[Mr. Douglas.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That conversation was privileged, Mr. Speaker.

OIL—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING SYNCRUDE DEVELOPMENT—POSSIBLE TAX INCENTIVES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the cabinet leak to the effect that the government intends to nationalize or is considering nationalizing one of the corporate parties to the Syncrude project, is the minister now in a position to encourage or to discourage the immediate development of the Syncrude project to assure supplies of crude petroleum for all Canadian needs now and in the future? That is the question today; we are talking about supply.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to confirm a statement made outside the House, namely, that a Globe and Mail report of a proposal to acquire either Gulf or Shell is totally without foundation.

An hon. Member: Oh yeah?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes. With regard to the Syncrude position, I would point out that it is a rather fundamental matter of taxation policy whether a special change should be made in our taxation law affecting the Syncrude project, and this is a matter that the Department of Finance now has under study.

● (1450)

Mr. Woolliams: In light of the fact the Minister of Finance's department has this under study, what tax incentives will be given to this project to assure a supply of crude petroleum for Canada and at the same time encourage an immediate labour force of more than 10,000?

Mr. Lewis: It's phony; there is no tax incentive.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: What is Lincoln telling you?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There seems to be a private verbal confrontation at the other end of the chamber. If that is now completed, perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply to the hon. member's question.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, both the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and I said to the Alberta ministers that it was in the interests of this country that the Syncrude project go forward. The problem is not only how to reconcile the Syncrude project, or the agreement between the consortium and the province of Alberta, with the existing tax laws, but of developing and announcing guidelines for federal tax resources policy. To that effect we are reviewing our position and, indeed, in light of information supplied to the Alberta ministers they are also reviewing their position. I will be meeting with the Syncrude people later this month.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I did recognize the hon. member for Calgary South a moment ago and I apologize to him. I will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North on a further supplementary question followed by the hon. member for Calgary South. I will then seek the co-operation of hon. members to try to limit the number of supplementary questions in order that we may have as many questioners as possible before the end of the question period.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he considers the surtax of $1.90 an incentive that will stimulate and motivate this project and put it on the map so it will go ahead?

OIL—EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT WITHIN CANADA—TAR SANDS PROJECT

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact the only secure source of oil supply for Canada must come from Canadian oil fields and that Canadian oil reserves at present are down to something in the order of a 12-year life, will the minister say why all of the government's recent policies have aggravated the Canadian energy supply problem and why no consideration has been given to security of future supply by way of stimulating the search for and development of energy reserves in Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will not accuse the hon. gentleman of a conflict of interest in the situation, but I would point out that in July and again in discussions the government has had with the governments of both Alberta and Saskatchewan we have pointed out that substantial funds can and will be made available for the purpose of developing non-conventional sources of oil particularly and, in addition, for the development of other sources of oil and natural gas, and it is our intention to have this development by and for Canadians.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister has made some vague statements about the federal government trying to find ways of directing the $70 million a month that is being creamed from the western provinces into heavy oil development. In view of the fact the National Energy Board projects production from the Alberta tar sands in the amount of some 500,000 barrels a day by 1980, which is an almost impossible target date, will the minister promise that before the end of this year the matter will be concluded so that private enterprise can get on with this job?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be desirable to conclude it as soon as possible, and I look forward to early conversations with the government of Alberta in an attempt to nail this down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member wishes to ask another supplementary question and I will recognize him for that purpose, but I would seek the co-operation of hon. members in making progress. I will recognize the hon. member and then the hon. member for Northwest Territories.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary to the minister is related to the policy he announced last week. Will he indicate whether it is correct that he was overruled on his proposal to the cabinet—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Bawden: —and that the cabinet—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for Northwest Territories.

* * *

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—ALLEGED LETTING OF CONTRACTS BY HIRE NORTH WITHOUT TENDERS

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Is the government aware that the person appointed to head Hire North last year awarded contracts of more than $250,000, without any tenders being called, some to firms in which he himself has an interest, and will the Prime Minister agree to move a motion to refer this matter to an appropriate House committee?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I certainly did not understand the question. I was wondering whether the subject "he" to which the hon. member referred was myself or some other person. I am certainly anxious to look at the question when it appears in Hansard and answer it if possible or ask the hon. member to put it on the order paper.

Mr. Firth: Mr. Speaker, I should like to clarify my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Is the government aware that the person appointed to head Hire North last year awarded contracts of more than $250,000, without any tenders being called, some to firms in which he, the project manager, has an interest, and will the Prime Minister agree to move a motion to refer this matter to an appropriate House Committee?

Mr. Trudeau: I thank the hon. member for having clarified the question so far as it concerns myself. I must confess that I am not aware of the answer nor, indeed, of the subject matter. I will take notice of the question and report to the hon. member at a later time.

Oral Questions

ENERGY

OIL EXPORT TAX—NATURE OF PROJECTS IN WHICH REVENUE TO BE INVESTED

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On Friday last the minister told the House that revenues from the oil export tax would, among other things, be invested in "other projects for the purpose of developing energy resources in Canada". Will he now tell the House whether these projects will be hydroelectric or nuclear? Just what did he have in mind?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, primarily they would be in the hydrocarbon field, but the province of Saskatchewan has indicated a very keen interest in the development of its uranium prospects and may, indeed, elect to have funds applied in that area. We would be very interested in discussing that.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO OPERATIONS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, the heat has been on in respect of more than one subject this weekend. I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he will not reconsider his statement of last Thursday and ask for a public inquiry into the Unemployment Insurance Commission administration budget?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated last Thursday, the administration budget of the Unemployment Insurance Commission was referred to the Estimates Committees earlier this year for study in detail. That administration budget as forecast then, will be met, and it will be reviewable when we go again before the standing committee of the House. Since I have great confidence in the chairman and the Unemployment Insurance Commission, I would not think it would be necessary to review that again except in the ordinary course of events.

* * *

ENERGY

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCEMENTS ON OIL SHARE TRADING—REQUEST FOR STUDY

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the huge profits made in the trading of oil shares last week, in the neighbourhood of $1 million in Imperial Oil shares alone, and in view of the fact this is the third time in two months the government's handling of an energy announcement has caused erratic oil share trading on Canadian and United States markets, resulting in windfall profits to astute traders, has the minister requested that a study be made of the trading in such shares to determine whether this has been the result of leaks or illfounded statements from the government?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, so far this parliament has not given the government the authority to regulate securities; this is primarily a provincial matter. My own department is engaged in developing proposals for a federal role in the area, and I am glad to see what appears to be support from my hon. friend in this regard.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that past handling of energy announcements has created erratic price fluctuations, affording professional traders an opportunity to make fortunes in the trading of oil shares, will the minister assure the House that the manner in which future announcements are conducted will lend itself to more orderly marketing? Specifically, how will he correct such unfortunate mistakes in the handling of government announcements?

● (1500)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I cannot guarantee that the decisions of investors will be fully informed, but I would agree with the hon. gentleman that in general we should try to make announcements at least at a time when there is no trading on the market.

* * *

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN ALLOCATION OF FUNDS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that the number of applications coming in from communities in connection with the Local Initiatives Program and the fact that the allocation of funds which has been announced does not meet even a small portion of projects as well as the fact this will destroy initiative and destroy the objectives of the program, is the minister considering or willing to consider increasing the amount available under this program?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand why that particular aspect is destructive of initiative or the objectives or criteria of LIP. If any further funds are considered, an announcement will be made in the usual manner.

Mr. Marshall: In view of the fact that advisory committees are having difficulties with the number of applications and they will have to turn down the greater portion of them, would the minister look at it from this light and consider increasing the funds?

Mr. Andras: I suppose this represents the outstanding success of the program generally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andras: Incredible though it may be, each year that we have announced it and no matter how much money we have allocated to it, we have only been able to handle one-third of the applications that have been submitted.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ROLE OF CANADIANS IN EVALUATING LOGISTICAL REQUIREMENTS OF MIDDLE EAST PEACEKEEPING FORCE—POSITION OF POLAND

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to the matter of the evaluation team in the Middle East and ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to tell the House whether the evaluation team, consisting of Canadian armed services personnel, has been charged with evaluating the entire logistical requirement of UNEF, that is, determining what will be required by both Canada and Poland, or just that part which Canada will be expected to play in logistics?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have this question put to me because I think it requires clarification. Probably the most difficult and most important job facing the UN Emergency Force is the logistics arrangements, to get the men into the field, organize signals, airlifts and so on. We have been entrusted with the job of evaluating the whole process and therefore, while we hope that we will be joined by some colleagues from Poland, essentially the job will devolve upon Canadian shoulders. With all due deference to the right hon. member for Prince Albert, may I say that I think this is an important function.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is not clear whether Poland is to join in this evaluation process. I wonder if the minister would be able to tell the House what reaction Poland has to the assignment of Canadians to this role?

Mr. Sharp: As the hon. gentleman knows from his own experience, Canada is the most experienced and best equipped group in the world outside of the great powers to undertake this kind of job, and I think it is a great tribute to Canada that the Secretary General called upon us to fulfil this function.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: A great tribute to Canada which the country does not want.

* * *

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

ALLEGATION THAT CONSULTANT MEMBER OF CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY OF THE UNITED STATES—POSSIBLE CONNECTION WITH OTHER DEPARTMENTS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister in a position to report on the case of Michael C. McCracken which I raised last Thursday, and can he at the same time advise the House whether Mr. McCracken has undertaken work in a consulting capacity for any other government department or departments?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, since the Economic Council of Canada reports to the Prime Minister, I have had discussions with him and understand that an inquiry has been undertaken by his office.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

MR. McCRACKEN—DISCLOSURE OF CONNECTION WITH UNITED STATES CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY ON APPLICATION FOR LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration of which I gave him notice. Can the minister advise the House whether or not Mr. McCracken's service with the United States army and the Central Intelligence Agency was shown on his application for landed immigrant status and, if so, was any effort made to determine if and when his connection with the CIA had been terminated?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member sending me notice of his question just before the question period. Traditionally, information contained on personal applications for landed immigrants for permanent residence in Canada is considered to be a matter of confidentiality. However, I can tell my hon. friend from my own information that, as is done in all cases of applications for landed immigrant status, a complete check was done on Mr. McCracken and he was found to meet all immigration requirements.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate who has a supplementary question, then the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway, and then call orders of the day.

APPREHENSION OF ASIANS AT GANDER AIRPORT—POSSIBLE CONNECTION WITH MUNICH BASED OPERATION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is related to the one by the hon. member for Trinity to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Were a number of Asian persons designated as visitors to Canada apprehended at the Gander International Airport over the weekend and again today? Has an investigation taken place, and was there any connection between this particular apprehension and a Munich-based operation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have no information whatsoever as to the latter part of the hon. member's comments. I can tell him that the six persons apprehended at Gander were deemed not to be bona fide non-immigrants. An inquiry was ordered and they were ordered deported on the basis that the evidence presented indicated they were not here genuinely as visitors.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway but the hon. member for Trinity is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Hellyer: My question of privilege is this. Today we have had an assurance from the minister that Mr. McCracken's file was given the usual routine examination and that it was satisfactory in all respects. Yet some of us have been advised privately by a member of the minister's department that in fact information concerning Mr. McCracken's background was not shown on his application and that no attempt was made to have the RCMP do any kind of security screening whatsoever. In view of this, I feel the minister has misled us and I would appreciate it if he would make available Mr. McCracken's file to the appropriate parliamentary committee so that we can examine it and determine the facts.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the hon. member that my information was that Mr. McCracken's application had passed the test of immigration requirements. I have no reason to believe that this is not accurate information. Certainly, I will personally review the file. After reviewing it, if there is any discrepancy whatsoever I will be glad to respond to the hon. member.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since he is not in the House today I would like to defer the question until tomorrow, but perhaps you would like to give my spot to the hon. member for Selkirk.

Mr. Speaker: I would be delighted to recognize him but we have gone beyond the time allocated for oral questions. I will note those hon. members who did not have an opportunity to put their questions and supplementaries—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: —and see that they are given an opportunity for priority tomorrow, if that can be arranged. Orders of the day.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROVISION FOR HOLIDAY ON MONDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1973

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Standing Order 2 (3) indicates certain days on which the House shall not meet. However, there seems to be some uncertainty as to whether the reference in that standing order to Remembrance Day applies this year in view of the fact that Remembrance Day falls on Sunday. There have been some discussions about this and I wonder whether, so that everyone will know where we stand, the government House leader could clear it up by seeking an appropriate House order.

[Mr. Andras.]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, if the Standing Order were to be observed, the House would normally sit on Monday, November 12. But because, in certain cases, hon. members may have made arrangements to be in their ridings and will be travelling to observe Remembrance Day, it would be agreeable to the government if the House order were adopted providing that the House will not sit on Monday, November 12.

Mr. Bell: We agree to this suggestion, especially since it was one of our former members, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, Mr. Gordon Churchill, who fought long and hard to ensure that Remembrance Day be included as one of our holidays.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion made by the President of the Privy Council. Is this agreed and so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As hon. members know, there are a great number of motions to be considered at this point, and in the hours and days ahead. Motion No. 1 is in the name of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I will read that motion in a moment and express a few thoughts.

I might mention that procedurally speaking, from the point of view of the Chair in any event, there does not appear to be anything seriously wrong with motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13, but the Chair has some reservations in relation to motions Nos. 1 and 14.

Perhaps the Chair might read motion No. 1, and then seek the advice of hon. members as to whether it is procedurally acceptable. If the Chair can be convinced that there is no serious or insurmountable procedural difficulty the motion would then be formally put and debated by hon. members. The motion proposed by the Hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) reads as follows:

That Bill C-132, An Act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be amended in Sub-clause 2(1) by changing the period at the end of line 9 at page 2 to a comma and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"and that it is also expedient to establish a means by which established firms that are foreign owned may have an increase in the value of their assets or sales provided they make available to the Canadian public that portion of their total equity which is proportionate to the said growth, such increases in assets or sales to be submitted to the Agency established under this Act at regular five-year intervals, for the preceding five-year period, the equity ratio to be based on average experience of the firm over the preceding twenty years or its time of incorporation in Canada, whichever is shorter, and the first option to purchase equity to be provided to the Canada Development Corporation."

As hon. members will appreciate, there is a suspicion that this is a new proposal. Clause 2 purports to set out the purposes of the bill. It is somewhat in the form of a preamble, and the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville proposes in this motion, by way of an amendment to the bill, an additional purpose, or suggests an additional purpose. This purpose, at least at first sight, appears to be quite beyond the other purposes and the general purport of the bill. This is why the Chair, reviewing the matter and studying this motion closely, has had some reservations, but I would be pleased to hear the views of hon. members in relation to the proposed motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, since you have just indicated that you are prepared to accept as procedurally admissible 12 out of the 14 amendments proposed at this stage, it is a bit hoggish for us to suggest that we want a bit more, but we do regard motion No. 1 as very important, and we hope that Your Honour will reconsider your position on it.

We were aware that you would probably suspect that this is the addition of something that is not in the bill, but it is our view that it is really one of those additions that simply make more clear what we think is implied in this kind of legislation. In other words, if we are going to have a Foreign Investment Review Act, surely there has to be some understanding as to what happens to kinds of corporations that would normally be dealt with under a grandfather clause. That is what the purpose of this motion is, namely, to make it clear how the legislation would apply to corporations that already have certain assets in the country.

We contend that it is not introducing something brand new, something that is not implied in the legislation, but rather that it seeks to clarify a point which is called for but which is not spelled out clearly anywhere in the bill itself.

We feel that with this kind of language in what Your Honour has called the preamble it will help to make the rest of the bill clear. Therefore, because in our view it is that kind of amendment, we hope that Your Honour will see fit to permit its introduction.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this amendment is definitely out of order on the basis of the citations available in Beauchesne and May. I should like to quote citation 406(a) at page 285 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition as follows:

Amendments are out of order if they are

(a) irrelevant to the bill, or beyond its scope, governed by or dependent upon amendments already negatived;

Is this an amendment beyond the scope of the bill? I suggest that a close reading of clause 2(1) of the bill would indicate that this motion proposes a new purpose, so new in fact that there is no provision in the bill to make it effective even if accepted by Your Honour and the House of Commons. It is a new proposition; it is different, and it does violate the principle of the bill which was accepted on second reading and studied in committee.

Relevant quotations can be taken from May as well, but I think the point is crystal clear that this is a new principle which the hon. member is attempting to carry into the existing structure of the bill. It has no relevance to material already in the bill, and therefore should be ruled out of order on those grounds.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, we do not take a hard position on this amendment. It is very innocuous, but we do express the hope that in some way Your Honour will find it possible to allow some latitude for general debate on the various amendments because this bill has been in committee a considerable length of time, and at some point hon. members will want to express their general views about the bill, which has been considerably changed in committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That can be done on third reading.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I am by no means an expert on the rules or procedure, but I do want to reply to a brief comment made by the parliamentary secretary. It has been said that the purpose of the legislation is to review new investment and expansion into other areas. This motion refers to expansion of existing business enterprises.

The parliamentary secretary made the point that even if this amendment were accepted and carried, the bill as it is now written does not contain any provision to carry out the intention of the amendment. I suggest he is wrong on that point because from the wording of the amendment it can be seen that we are talking about expansion in related areas, about an increase in the assets of firms about which we are concerned and which, under the terms of this amendment, would be submitted for the consideration of the agency established under this legislation. That agency would then apply the same rules as are applicable to other firms that come under the bill as presented by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie). In other words, the same rules that are in Bill C-132 and that are applicable to the kinds of firms already mentioned in the bill would come into effect if our grandfather clause is very important if we are going to be serious about foreign ownership in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their guidance in relation to motion No. 1 standing in the name of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. I am afraid that hon. members, while they have sought to help the Chair, have not clearly resolved the difficulty for me. Referring to the first point made by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster

(Mr. Bell), I would think looking at motion No. 2 and those immediately following, these motions might allow some latitude in debate. I am sure the Chair would not want to limit hon. members too closely to the contents of the motion, particularly in view of the fact that motion No. 2 would provide an opportunity for some latitude in debate. I would find it very difficult procedurally to accept motion No. 1 standing in the name of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). It is, in my opinion outside the scope of the bill. Without quoting at length or quoting at all the citations I would refer hon. members to May's 18th edition, page 508, which suggests which matters are acceptable and which ones should be ruled out.

● (1520)

The point made by the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) is well taken when he refers to the fact that even if this clause were put to the House, debated and carried, it would be very difficult to reconcile it with the rest of the bill. There would be nothing that I could see, after studying the bill, that would actually give effect to this new purpose of the bill. There would then be required additional legislation or additional amendments. I suggest that, in itself, is an indication that the proposed motion is beyond the scope of the bill.

This being taken into account, and agreeing with hon. members that there should be no attempt to limit too strictly the scope of the debate when we reach the next motion, I would hope that hon. members would agree with the Chair that we would at this point put the second motion. My suggestion would also be that motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 should be considered at the same time but disposed of separately. If hon. members agree, I believe they are essentially the same matter, so that we will put No. 2, and Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 are before the House for debate; eventually, all motions would be disposed of separately by separate votes.

I would suggest to hon. members, and perhaps to House leaders and representatives of the parties that have moved motions which will call for votes, that it might be a little difficult, if the House is to divide on all such motions, to have them all at the same time. It would be better if these votes could be broken up into maybe two or three voting sessions rather than one lengthy voting session on all of the motions that come to the House for decision.

The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) moves motion No. 2 which reads as follows:

That Bill C-132, An act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be amended in sub-clause 2(2) by striking out lines 38 to 44 at page 2 and lines 1 and 2 at page 3 and substituting the following:

"dustry or industries in Canada;

(e) the compatibility of the acquisition or establishment with national industrial and economic policies; and

(f) the compatibility of the acquisition or establishment with industrial and economic policies enunciated by the government or legislature of a province in which the enterprise is carried on or the new business is proposed to be carried on.".

[Mr. Speaker.]

I assume hon. members would not direct the Chair to put the other four motions to which I referred, that is No. 3 in the name of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), No. 4 in the name of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and Nos. 5 and 6 in the name of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on that point, we certainly do not expect you to put them if it means reading all these motions; that would be almost making a speech. However, since the debate is to range over motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 I think that they should all be on the record at this point so that if anybody reads this Hansard he will know what the debate is all about. I suggest that they be put on the record as if Your Honour had put them.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The motions referred to are as follows:]

No. 3.—That Bill C-132, An Act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be amended in sub-paragraph 5(1)(c)(i) by deleting "$250,000" in line 21 at page 17 and substituting therefor:

"$500,000".

No. 4.—That Bill C-132, An act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be amended in sub-paragraph 5(1)(c)(ii) by deleting "$3,000,000" in line 27 at page 17 and substituting therefor:

"$1,500,000".

No. 5.—That Bill C-132, An Act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be amended by deleting Subclause 7(3), lines 23 to 28 at page 18, and substituting the following:

"(3) The minister shall make available to the agency the services of officers who are representative of each region of Canada, including such officers from within the department of the government of Canada over which he presides as he may designate for the purpose.

(4) In any case where a review or assessment of a proposed or actual investment is likely to affect significantly a province or provinces, a recommendation to the minister thereon shall be submitted by a panel of officers of whom a majority shall be representative of such province or provinces."

No. 6.—That Bill C-132, An act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be amended in Clause 9 by deleting line 32 at page 20 and substituting the following:

"a copy of the notice shall be sent by the agency forthwith by registered mail to the province or provinces likely to be significantly affected by the proposed or actual investment of which the notice relates and".

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay).

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, certainly, there can be no basic disagreement with the proposition that the government of Canada should be making an effort to minimize foreign domination of our economy. The issue of foreign control of Canada's economy is one of the oldest and probably one of the most continuously discussed topics and has been, for the most part, ever since confederation. We are one of the few nations in our peer group of countries which has no policy in this regard.

In the last ten years, a succession of Liberal governments did little to attack the issue actively. In fact, they seemed curiously reluctant even to implement tax and fiscal policies which would allow Canadians to compete on equal terms in their own country with outside interests. To this very day, foreign interests can operate in Canada on more favourable terms than Canadians in some respects. Now, at last, this government has moved and has done so in its usual fashion, typical of its philosophy, that is negatively, excessively bureaucratic and poorly organized.

In our last parliament, an attempt to deal with foreign ownership died on the order paper and now, once more, parliament has the opportunity to come to grips with this issue which touches every Canadian in one way or another. It goes, almost without saying, that for a Confederation like ours, a nation with diverse needs and capabilities, massive in size and rich in geographic differences, a consensus for dealing with foreign investment policy is much more difficult to achieve than for countries with a more unitary outlook, different political system, compact area and advanced state of development. In short, before being excessively critical of this government's present efforts, I want to say in all fairness that I appreciate fully the difficulties inherent in this sort of legislation.

Most of the provinces of Canada have reason to be concerned about the effect of controls on foreign investments, which is one of the primary reasons for the various amendments standing in my name. These concerns, I think it is fair to say, are reflected more vigorously in the poorer provinces because the poorer a province is, paradoxically the more it has to lose by restraining foreign investment capital.

Let us not forget, also, that a major department of government was set up to deal with the problems of poor regions, namely, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Even leaving aside constitutional issues, which are also implicit in this type of legislation, the provincial governments are fearful of the practical consequences of having provincial economies and regional economic development impeded as a result of direction from Ottawa with regard to the investment potential in their provinces by potential investors from the world community. The more fortunate provinces in Canada, and the central region in particular, also have their own particular reasons for concern over foreign investment; but they can afford to be more statesmanlike about the issue since they already have built the sort of economic structure that is the envy of less fortunate provinces in Confederation.

Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick, appearing before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs this summer, speaking on behalf of his government and as a spokesman for the Atlantic area, was very emphatic in his concerns. He said, in part, at that time, and I quote:

> I have been talking interchangeably about New Brunswick and the maritime region in what I have said because the problems that one province has in this region are to be found in the other two.
>
> In the light of this, I had discussions with my colleagues, Premier Campbell of Prince Edward Island and Premier Regan of Nova Scotia, at the time of the maritime premiers meeting in Fredericton last Thursday and Friday. They authorized me to say that they, too, shared my deep concern that this Foreign Investment Review Act would be detrimental to the expansion of industrial development in the whole maritime region.

I asked the premier at that time whether he subscribed to the necessity, to some degree at least, of regulating foreign investment in this country and he replied that he had not been convinced that the government of Canada did not have the power at the present time to control foreign investment if they chose to use it. "I suspect", he said, "what they might lack is policy development". By that I assume he meant a positive proposal of tax and fiscal incentives to promote positively Canadian expansion—and the capability of holding our own in relation to outsiders' interests.

● (1530)

Premier Hatfield also expressed concern that this type of legislation could become an obstacle to the progress of DREE policies and DREE purposes and would exacerbate the long delays in getting a decision from DREE. The former minister in charge of DREE is quoted in the recent past, in reply to a request that DREE grants be restricted to Canadian-owned corporations, as saying, "I do not want to make economic philosophy on the backs of underdeveloped regions". This is a clear indication that he, at least, was keenly aware of the relationship between development vis-à-vis the foreign investment issue.

A view expressed by a spokesman for the government of Ontario was as follows:

> As an underlying theme to the Ontario position, we believe that the primary objective of the proposed review process should not be to restrict foreign investment per se, but to ensure that future investments by foreign corporations make an effective contribution to the achievement of national economic and social objectives.

The position taken by the government of the province of Saskatchewan is contrary to that expressed by Premier Hatfield and an excerpt from their presentation is as follows:

> There seems to be a notion that one reason why foreign investment shouldn't be tampered with, is because it may retard efforts to promote regional development programmes. This is a myth. But even Prime Minister Trudeau was spreading this doctrine for a time.

The Saskatchewan government then goes on to say that it wishes to emphasize that it is not just a case of placing a restriction, or a controlling rein on foreign investment that is needed, but rather the development of a positive policy that can serve as a framework for future Canadian development. While I cannot agree with much of the position put forward by the government of Saskatchewan, I think this latter excerpt from their presentation is one that is reasonable and certainly is one with which all Canadians can identify.

The Atlantic Provinces Economic Council has been actively concerned with the issue of foreign ownership. They believe that the question of foreign investment cannot be regarded in isolation, and should not be looked at as a problem in itself but, rather, should be considered in the context of a new national policy, or as the former federal minister of industry, trade and commerce phrased it, of industrial strategy that takes into account the divergent needs of the various regions of Canada.

It is interesting to put on the record the results of a recent select survey, done by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council which put the following proposition to its membership:

Indicate the importance which should be given by provincial development corporations, in assessing firms:

Ownership within Canada;

Ownership within the Atlantic provinces

Ownership within the province.

To summarize briefly, practically all who replied indicated either directly or by implication that Canadian ownership was important. I wish to indicate emphatically that the people of our underdeveloped regions are not concerned merely about the grave issue of foreign domination of our economy, important though that is. As well, they are concerned about their personal welfare. Their experience in dealing with the federal government has given rise to real concern with respect to the implementation of this type of legislation. They will be concerned unless they are given a maximum chance for input and a consultative function.

However, I want to say again, that this legislation, particularly if the government will be reasonable and consider amendments to modify its approach, is at least a beginning, and to that extent the government is to be commended. Let me quote an old Chinese proverb: "Longest journey begin with one small step"; and another, "A bad beginning sometimes makes a good ending."

There certainly is no doubt that there is a need for a new policy for national development of Canada. A proper policy would help to fill a vacuum which certainly now exists, and this government will have to take a great many positive approaches to stimulate Canadian development to supplement the rather negative, unimaginative and bureaucratic approach exemplified by this legislation.

The position assumed by the government of Quebec with reference to this legislation is interesting indeed. This province has always been very conscientious in protecting provincial prerogatives, while at the same time extremely sensitive in claiming its full rights under Canadian confederation. In the presentation from Quebec it was stated that, while it was not the intention to make the distribution of powers between the two levels of government in economic matters the sole criterion for evaluating Bill C-132, the government of Quebec nevertheless considered that this bill related, to a field of jurisdiction which largely entailed responsibilities which it had, in fact, assumed to date. "Is it not a fact," said the Quebec presentation, "that Quebec's power in the development of natural resources, regional development, transportation and communications, would be directly affected by the proposed legislation?" Quebec, therefore, considered it inopportune for the federal government to give itself jurisdiction by legislation governing foreign investment as such, without formally acknowledging the need to secure the agreement of the provinces concerned.

But even disregarding this question of the timeliness of such federal intervention, the Quebec position went on, it remains that, to be acceptable to Quebec, any bill should explicitly recognize the regional economies and respect provincial jurisdictions. It is with such considerations in mind that some amendments standing in my name will be brought forward. Once more we see manifested the very justifiable concern for provincial consultation and input, as put forward by Quebec, which has always played an active role in this regard.

For example, within their own jurisdiction, consider if you will the concern manifested by provinces over the ownership of land by foreign interests. This is, of course, outside the purview of the legislation we are discussing today. But it is interesting to note that provinces in eastern Canada have already taken steps to control land use by outside interests and are concerned philosophically about this whole question.

For my part, Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to see foreign control of our economy regulated and controlled by a more positive approach. Instead of approaching this matter by the introduction of an act entitled "The Foreign Investment Review Act", the government, to my mind, should approach this matter by introducing legislation which might be called, instead, "The Canadian Development Incentive Act". This would be more in keeping with the aspirations of Canadians in the latter part of the twentieth century and would be better oriented towards world trade patterns. Rather than see us take a negative approach, I would prefer seeing us adopt selective tax policies to favour Canadians and Canadian companies. These would include a more flexible policy of tax credits and capital gains as well as other tax modifications, in order to give Canadians an advantage in their own land and not fetter them in competing with strangers in their midst.

It is shocking to see that, despite attempts to cure the inequities from which Canadians suffer, compared to foreigners, in doing business in their own country, this government refuses to press on with the removal of these paradoxes while at the same time seeking to restrict foreign investment. Surely, one policy must complement the other. There is not much use in locking the door and leaving the window open, or vice versa. I. H. Asper, a noted tax authority as well as a power in the Liberal Party of this country—

An hon. Member: Some power.

Mr. MacKay: An hon. member says, "Some power". Nevertheless, he is a prominent politician, and certainly, he is a very good tax consultant. He pointed out emphatically how a recent federal court decision exposes Canada's paradoxical tax policy towards its people. The effect of the decision was to give, under our existing tax law, much better treatment to associated companies whose only inter-corporate link is with a non-Canadian company, to which the Canadian tax act does not apply.

Mr. Asper comments as follows:

The law is now inequitable. If an American family business structured in this fashion pays approximately half the tax that would be paid by a Canadian family operation set up in the same corporate manner, obviously a change is needed. That change should not take the form of wiping out the beneficial treatment for the United States citizens but rather by extending it to Canadian families.

The reason for proposing that solution to the inequity is that the present tax law already imposed unwarranted and harsh tax discrimination and disadvantages upon Canadian families who are in business together. And that is not in Canada's best long-term social and economic interest.

I think we all agree with that proposition.

Again, in the interests of fairness, I want to point out that some recent tax law changes have had the effect of fostering Canadian ownership. For example, tax legislation requiring that any Canadian-owned private corporation being taxed at the lower rate of 25% on the first $400,000 of profits must retroactively repay the federal government the benefits received from the use of the lower rate if it is subsequently sold to non-residents provides an example of what can be done.

In this regard, I commend the government for having taken that step.

Canada is now in a better position, as are Canadian financial institutions, to invest domestic capital to invest Canadian savings, in the development of our nation.

● (1540)

In the past, and to some extent at present, Canadians have been and are curiously reluctant to invest in the development of their country. To their everlasting and extreme discredit, a succession of Canadian governments have not been providing our people with the proper incentives for this kind of investment.

The position taken by the Toronto Stock Exchange on investment policies is a very sensible one. While furthering the principles implicit in lessening the effects on Canada's economy of foreign investment, the Toronto Stock Exchange makes the following points. They say that our existing financial institutions have emerged as a powerful instrument for collecting Canadian savings and, in recent years, Canadians have shown a willingness to invest in new Canadian issues. They go on to say:

We are confident that with the maturity of our financial institutions, the expanding savings base of Canadians and the increased maturity and liquidity of our capital markets, Canada has reached the threshold of where it can be more selective in the way in which non-resident capital has been permitted to come into our country. Canadians can be much more prudent about the price which they pay for non-resident capital. We do not rule out, however, the desirability of having non-resident capital flowing into our country provided it is on terms which are consistent with the objectives of Canada and its citizens.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the common theme advanced by people having many different ideas and basic philosophies on government and business. The common theme is that there must be an attitude fostered in this country by governments, business and the average Canadian that we, as Canadians, are entitled to the primary benefits of our initiative, our natural resources and our heritage. However, we can find a useful place in the development of our nation for foreign investment capital.

The Toronto Stock Exchange makes a very interesting and pertinent distinction between the types of foreign investment most common. They say it is of vital importance to establish a clear difference between portfolio investment and direct investment. True, portfolio investment is purely passive in relation to the question of control and management. Direct investment is the use of shares for the purpose of control and active involvement in the management of the affairs of the corporation.

Certainly, it should become apparent that we should try as much as possible to reduce the equity investment in proportion to that of passive portfolio type investments when we are looking at the whole issue of the types of foreign investment that should be encouraged. Most of all, it must be apparent that at any time when a province suffers from the effects of Bill C-132 we, as Canadians, in other parts of the nation and the federal government in particular, through its jurisdictional capacity, must make available capital to replace the equivalent of that which has been lost by this policy of advancing a truly Canadian economy. It is not right to expect any one part of Canada to bear more than its fair burden in achieving this very laudable objective.

I have every hope that this government is politically aware, and has a sufficient amount of the milk of human kindness embodied in it for it, although I doubt that when I see how they have been dealing with some of our western provinces. However, I sincerely hope they will keep in mind the absolute necessity of making alternate sources of capital available, if it turns out that the sources of capital from abroad diminish to an alarming extent.

The first motion in my name, and those which will be discussed later, are designed to encourage more input and consultative procedures as far as the provinces are concerned, to deal with this type of legislation. Judging from what has happened in the past, and what is happening at the present time, it is obvious that the provinces have every right to be concerned about the way the central government has been dealing with their economic aspirations.

I will be very interested to hear the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) speak in this debate. As the former Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce mentioned, there is an obvious link between the attempts being made by this government to foster the economic advancement of the poorer regions of this country, in the process of which they spend hundreds of millions of dollars, and the other side of the coin, which is to try to promote the advancement of Canada's economy by placing greater control of it in the hands of Canadians. In doing so, the government would regulate the type of capital that is available for this purpose. The two policies must surely be considered together.

I trust the minister will be flexible in his approach and sympathetic toward the concerns manifested by the provinces. I hope he will not begrudge the provinces the opportunity to have more input, but will make it possible for them to exert greater influence in considering basic matters of policy, which ultimately remains in his hands. I trust the minister will immediately send to the provinces the applications referred to in this act, advising them of people who wish to come into this country to start a business, or who otherwise fall within the purview of this legislation. He should immediately let the provinces know about these so they will not hear about them later and, in a spirit of confrontation, wonder what was done before they were brought into the picture.

If the minister and the government follow this course, I am sure the legislation will be successful. He will then have the co-operation and understanding of all Canadians, something that is absolutely essential if this very important piece of legislation is to work.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the debate at report stage at this time deals with the first six amendments, as announced by you a few minutes ago. Before I get into those amendments, I want to say by way of general comment, that our party supports the bill before us, Bill C-132. We do not say that with any great enthusiasm because we do not think the bill is strong enough. It should be a lot stronger.

There are two or three basic fallacies in the bill before us. One is that it is a very powerful piece of legislation. With regard to those things to which the screening agency applies, it could be very powerful. If the minister in charge and the chairman of that agency are concerned, it can be very effective with regard to takeovers. At the same time, if there is a minister who does not give a darn about foreign investments, there is no mandatory provision in the bill. Almost any takeover could occur.

This legislation can be very tough on one hand and very weak on the other. Frankly speaking, one reason I want to see the bill passed is that when there are foreign takeovers and new investment, we in this party can ask the minister whether it is of significant benefit to Canada. If not, we then have the minister and the government on the spot. This gives us a lever in our campaign with regard to the patriation of the economy in Canada.

● (1550)

The second shortcoming of the bill is that it pertains only to takeovers, new investment and the expansion of an existing firm into a non-related area. It says nothing about the expansion of an existing firm into a related area. The more I look at this, the more I am concerned. Initially, I thought the bill would cover perhaps two-thirds of foreign activity in our country. I no longer think this is so. My reading of the bill suggests that it will only cover 10 or 20 per cent of foreign activity in this country. In others words, between 80 and 90 per cent of foreign expansion will probably go unscreened, even though the legislation might be administered in a tough and competent manner.

The Gray Report contains, on page 478, a table showing the number of takeovers in 1968, which is described as a typical year. In that year, through takeovers, foreign ownership increased by $170 million. This represented 5 per cent of the total increase of foreign ownership in Canada in the year 1968—5 per cent of the over-all foreign expansion in the Canadian economy achieved through takeovers. Dealing with new investment in 1968, the same report stated that only $80 million was attributable to direct new investment from outside our borders. This figure represents roughly 2½ per cent of over-all foreign activity in this country. If we add the takeovers and the new investment, we find that in 1968 they amounted to only 7½ per cent of total foreign activity, and this is in a supposedly normal year. But even if it were 15 or 20 per cent, a great deal of leeway is still being left to other types of foreign expansion.

[Mr. MacKay.]

The third area the minister wants to screen is that which concerns the expansion of existing firms into non-related activities. At first, this sounds a useful measure. It means, for example, that if INCO wants to move the hotel business as well as the nickel business, the project is automatically screened. But how many industries will, in fact, be covered? Take, for example, a company such as ITT. Someone unfamiliar with the operations of this telegraph and telephone corporation may say: If it expands into an unrelated area the proposal will automatically be screened. But my research shows that ITT controls 58 different companies in Canada.

So, what is an unrelated area? The bill defines a company by the products with which it is associated, but ITT is involved with hundreds, maybe thousands of products. So if it wishes to take over, for example, a toilet tissue firm, it could probably find a company within the ambit of its organization which is producing products sufficiently similar to enable it to expand into making toilet tissue without having to submit to screening under the legislation. If this is the case, how much of the total of foreign expansion does the bill actually cover? Take Imperial Oil, the giant of the oil industry in Canada. If it expands into an unrelated area, the proposal is automatically screened. But Imperial Oil is involved through its various subsidiaries in all kinds of industries in this country. For example, it owns a company called Polytwine which manufactures rope. So Imperial Oil could buy a rope company through this subsidiary without the necessity for screening because it would be an expansion into a related area. I should like the minister to comment on some of these points I am raising when he speaks later in the debate.

Take another example, the Gulf Oil Company. If Gulf wished to expand into the toothpaste business, my understanding is that it could do so without being screened because it has a subsidiary company currently engaged in this business and it could expand its activities through the use of that subsidiary. Take Bell Canada. Bell Canada controls Northern Electric and Northern Electric in turn controls Microsystems. If Bell Canada wished to expand in this latter field it could probably do so through its Microsystems subsidiary. All these corporations are integrated backward from the retail level to the raw materials level.

I am concerned that the bill before us would, apparently, result in the screening of only 10 per cent or 20 per cent of the foreign activity in our country. The corporations will be able to get around these provisions in all sorts of ways. This is why earlier today we sought to move what we call a grandfather clause which called for the screening of existing foreign ownership in Canada. We were very reasonable. We said that screening should be post facto—that where an existing company had expanded over a five-year period by, say, 20 per cent, it must make 20 per cent of its common shares available to the Canadian people, with the first option going to the Canadian Development Corporation. To my mind, this would be a significant move, because we would then be reaching existing firms which the bill before us does not reach at all.

Specifically, we are dealing with five or six amendments during the first part of the debate on the report stage. The first is the amendment by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). Basically, he proposes to give the provinces more power and influence over decisions reached by the screening agency. There is considerable merit in this amendment but I believe the bill as currently worded gives sufficient power to the provinces. It already provides that the minister must take into consideration the economic situation of the various provinces, and this is probably as far as we need go toward meeting the object which the amendment seeks to achieve. One fear which arises in my mind is that if the provinces are given too much power, too great an input, the bill could be rendered totally useless.

For example, if the Province of Alberta were given too much influence over decision-making regarding foreign ownership of the oil industry, Ottawa would be hamstrung when it came to the making of decisions affecting the oil industry. Claims have been made by members of the Conservative party, particularly by those from Alberta, that if we were to restrict the inflow of capital into this country we would be restricting growth, and that this, in turn, would mean fewer jobs for Canadians. This assertion does not hold water, because there are more funds flowing out of Canada today than are flowing into the country in terms of investment. I should like to quote from a paper prepared by a well-known Canadian Mel Hurtig on this very topic. Page 38 of this paper reads, in part:

> It is ironic that we should live in a nation which believes it must have foreign capital in order to survive, although during the entire decade of the 1960s foreign firms operating in Canada sent out of Canada in interest, dividends, royalty fees, management fees, etc. over $2 billion more than all the capital they imported.

Other reports state that of all the foreign activity in Canada, all the investment every year, only approximately 6 per cent involves new money coming in from outside; the other 94 per cent is provided from retained earnings, profits kept in Canada and funds borrowed from Canadian banks or financial institutions. So, I do not think much credence can be given to the assertion that Canada needs vast amounts of foreign capital. What is happening is that we are selling out our country and using our own money in the process.

There are a number of other interesting statistics which might well be borne in mind when considering whether foreign investment really helps this country. If we look at United States investments in countries around the globe in 1967 we find that the total figure involved was $19.4 billion. What did this mean to United States entrepreneurs? The inflow to the United States by way of dividends, royalties, management fees and so on amounted to $33.3 billion. In Latin America alone—an area that has been in the news often during the last couple of years—the Americans are by no means the generous, benevolent souls that some people try to make them out to be. They invested $1.7 billion between 1960 and 1967 and got a return on that investment of $8.8 billion. So you can see, Mr. Speaker, they are extracting more through their investments than they are actually putting into the country.

● (1600)

This is why I say that the time has now come—indeed, it has long since passed—when the argument that any tough laws are going to exclude necessary capital is no longer relevant. We do have investment money in this country. We are a net exporter of capital. It is time we had stronger laws so that these Canadian funds are used to develop Canada. We need all kinds of legislative provisions to this end, certainly many more than are contained in the bill before us today. We need a stronger grandfather clause, a sector by sector approach, controls on banks and lending institutions, so that they do not use their money to finance foreign multinational corporations which control our economy and so Canadian funds are not invested abroad.

The third amendment is moved by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), and our party is clearly opposed to it. What he seeks to do is to weaken the intent of the bill. The bill will automatically screen an acquisition if the gross assets of the company or corporation concerned are over $250,000 or if the gross revenues are over $3 million. The hon. member for Crowfoot wants to raise the minimum from $250,000 to $500,000, which would, in effect, exclude literally hundreds of transactions from the screening and review process conducted by the agency to be established.

The fourth amendment is in my own name, and it seeks to do the very opposite. We want to bring down the threshold rate from the $3 million gross revenue figure to $1.5 million. We are doing this for a number of reasons. First of all, it is often the small takeovers that are important in a foreign country assuming prominence in a domestic economy. Very often publishing agencies, consulting firms and some stock brokerage firms have very small assets, but their impact on the economy or on the culture of the country can be very significant. Take, for example, the case of an advertising firm. Perhaps an advertising firm will have quite small assets, but its gross revenue and its impact on the country may be very large. Unless the threshold rate is lowered, as we suggest, from $3 million to $1.5 million gross revenue, we will exclude from the screening process a lot of advertising firms, consulting agencies and so on. Foreign concerns often gain a lot of control in key sectors of the economy by gobbling up one small firm after another.

Then, amendment No. 5 is in the name of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). Again, there are some proposals in the amendment that are creditable. I hope that when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) appoints people to the screening agency he will make sure they reflect the opinions of all regions of the country. In view of the way the amendment is worded, I question what the hon. member means by "representative". Does he mean that the provinces will appoint someone or that the minister will choose someone from a certain region?

In any event, it is the second part of the fifth amendment to which I object. According to my reading of it, if a decision is to be made that affects a certain region, the people making the decision should comprise a majority of members from the region concerned. If this amendment is passed, a decision about the oil industry in Alberta would have to be made by a group the majority of whom came from Alberta. I think the amendment would weaken what the bill is supposed to be trying to do, which is to develop a national policy on foreign ownership in Canada. We do not want to balkanize this country by pitting one region against another as each vies for foreign funds or fights over different policies.

Amendment No. 6, which is also in the name of the hon. member for Central Nova, seeks to provide information to the province when an acquisition is to be screened. I think that is reasonable and that our party may support it. I do not know why the minister cannot support it, and I think he should take another look at it. What the hon. member for Central Nova is trying to do is to ensure that provinces are notified when a particular acquisition is screened, which I think should be the case. The provinces should be provided with the maximum amount of information regarding the activities of the screening agency in their area; I think all hon. members would agree that is necessary.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to hon. members that we try to strengthen the bill as we go along, not weaken it. As I have said, we have enough foreign capital in this country to develop Canada; indeed, we are a net exporter of capital. As the former member for Duvernay often said in this House, through tax incentives to the mining industry and other industries we encourage the development of capital intensive industries to the detriment of processing and manufacturing in Canada. It is in processing and manufacturing industries that the jobs are found, not in the natural resource industries.

One good example of this is the mining industry, or in gas, oil or petroleum refining. Indeed, there are many examples in western Canada, such as in the food and agricultural products industry, where instead of processing products on the Prairies we ship them out to be processed elsewhere. The multinational corporations also have a tremendous impact on the economic policies of this country and of any other country in which they operate. In today's energy crisis we see a company like Standard Oil of New Jersey or Exxon making the decision as to where oil should be supplied, since they control the majority of the oil fields in Venezuela and certain other countries. We also see the huge multinationals making decisions that jeopardize jobs in various regions of this country.

For example, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has often spoken in this House of how decisions of the International Nickel Company affect the economy of his area. Quite often the company cuts back in its plant at Sudbury because it wants to divert funds and expertise to other parts of the world, such as Caledonia, Indonesia and Guatemala, as was the case recently. As a result a number of people were laid off in Sudbury, despite the fact that the International Nickel Company of Canada supplies about 55 per cent of the nickel exported to non-Communist countries and in 1970 made a net profit in Canada of $102 million. In other words, they used some of the profit made in Canada to expand elsewhere, to open new plants in other countries and exploit the people and resources of those countries.

● (1610)

We suggest it is about time we gained control of our economy and firm control of all industry in this country in the fields of natural resources, finance and others involved in the development of this nation. I suggest that we have enough capital to do so. We are now exporting capital and we should stop our banks from selling us out. This can be done in the same way as it was done by Sweden and Mexico, through the adoption of foreign ownership laws. The United States was also for some time, dominated by other countries, but sometime ago their authorities there took steps to assure the control of their own economy, and today they dominate many other countries around the world.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, this bill intrigues me. While I am not too enamoured with it, as I do not think it goes far enough or does enough to satisfy me personally, it did antagonize many Conservative members of the finance committee. I feel if it can antagonize such wealthy bluebloods it should have something for which I can find some support.

The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) suggested this bill would give the federal government the power to screen foreign investments, and as a result could be detrimental to the poorer regions of Canada. Indeed, I have travelled around Canada somewhat in the past 12 years. When I was in the eastern area recently, I found there was no screening of foreign investment and I did not note any improvement in the standard of living of those people there. Indeed, it might be said that most of those provinces have suffered from Conservative administrations during that period of time. I can argue very vociferously that any kind of foreign investment control or screening does not interfere in any way with investment. Let me make it clear before going any further that I do not necessarily accept the view that because one is a Canadian capitalist as opposed to a foreign capitalist he is more acceptable to me. I do not go along with that view.

Having set the record straight for what I am going to say from here on, let me point out that four countries in Latin America, Chile, Columbia, Ecuador and Peru, two years ago approved a common investment guide in respect of foreign capital and technology. This involved very stringent controls on foreign investment in these countries. The Council of the Americas, a very powerful business group, ranted and raved against these restrictions for the very same reasons pointed out by the hon. member for Central Nova, namely that these restrictions would be to the disadvantage of underdeveloped areas. In spite of all these arguments, the United States businessman is still seeking South American resources in a very forceful way, and is exploiting them at reduced profits. A foreign investment in these countries in the areas of mining, as well as oil exploration and extracting, cannot continue for a period exceeding 20 years, when foreign companies no longer own the resources and eventual control must pass to domestic companies.

The very problem we are faced with today in respect of energy has largely resulted because of the fact that the Government of Canada has never moved toward the takeover of our natural resources, or toward Canadian control over them. We have left, to the whim and fancy of foreign producers and international cartels, the job of providing our people with oil. In the field of manufacturing, these Latin American countries have also followed the policy that foreign control enterprises must permit at least 57 per cent capital participation by domestic investors, and until that target is reached all foreign operation must be controlled by national agencies.

One of our problems is that investments taking place in Canada are largely being financed by multinational corporations over which governments have no control. We in Canada have had a difficult time in establishing some kind of control and, indeed, some kind of identity. There is little wonder that we are faced with the situation as it is today. This is a vast country with greatly varying regional differences. We have within our nation many distinct people, cultures and traditions. In our graceful growth from a child of the great British Empire, we have unintentionally become a handmaiden to multinational cartels.

The question facing us today is not necessarily to be posed in a positive manner, but perhaps in a very negative way. Do we, as a nation, still have enough independence to control the economic destiny of Canada? To answer such a question, we must look at several factors: the amount of our economy already owned by foreign investors, particularly those in the United States; what will be the needs of the United States in the future and, recognizing a crisis, will we as a nation be able to respond to that crisis and how will we respond?

Let us look, first of all, at how much of Canada we actually own and how much is owned by foreign interests. In 1948, about 42 per cent of all Canadian manufacturing was owned by non-residents. By 1968, that figure had increased to 58.1 per cent. More than three-quarters of that foreign control is held in the United States, and that proportion is increasing every year. Not coincidentally, the richest and fastest growing sectors of the Canadian economy are controlled by foreign investment, and again in most cases three quarters of that control rests in the hands of our neighbour to the south.

For instance, we own 94 per cent of agriculture, but 99 per cent of our booming petroleum and petroleum products industry is foreign controlled. Primary metals are 55 per cent foreign owned; mining is 67 per cent foreign owned; machinery 72 per cent, chemical products 82 per cent and the list goes on. Here in Canada foreign investment controls 58 per cent of our wholesale trade, 69 per cent of our retail trade, 57 per cent of our credit agencies, 60 per cent of our paper and allied industries, 81 per cent of our public utilities and 71 per cent of our investment companies. In those areas affecting our cultural life the figures are equally ominous, with 95 per cent of our book publishing being taken from Canadian control and 86 per cent of our national pastime, that is NHL hockey, no longer Canadian owned.

In 1968, non-resident corporations accounted for only 3 per cent of all Canadian firms in terms of numbers, but they controlled 27 per cent of all assets, made 35 per cent of all sales and cleared 41 per cent of all profits. I suggest this is because foreign ownership has a stranglehold on our most profitable and potential companies.

Ironically, we are in an extensive way financing our own takeover. As Professor Kari Levitt of McGill University in her book "Silent Surrender" pointed out:

> The acquisition of control by U.S. companies over the commodity-producing sectors of the Canadian economy has largely been financed from corporate savings derived from the sale of Canadian resources, extracted and processed by Canadian labour, or from the sale of products of branch-plant manufacturing businesses to Canadian consumers at tariff protected prices.

In other words, it is not United States money that is being used to expand our economy, it is Canadian money manipulated by the United States. I should like to give an explicit example of such manipulation, and this is by no means an isolated example. It is an example that is revealing of the kind of attitude and action which must be stopped if we are to ever regain our independence.

My story is about a fellow named John Shaheen who is a New York financier. He intended to operate in the eastern part of Canada, in the have-not area. Shaheen, a capitalist in the true sense of the word, developed certain friendships with others of his class, while in the process of building his own personal financial empire. One of those friends was the ex-premier of Newfoundland, Joey Smallwood. Smallwood approached Shaheen with a project to build a huge refinery and later a petrochemical complex at a little town in Newfoundland called Come-By-Chance. The refinery would cost at least $155 million to build, and $30 million of that was borrowed by the province of Newfoundland to lend to Shaheen. The other $125 million was to be put up by a group of British banks and secured by a first mortgage on the property. Shaheen, in the meantime, would put up $10 million and about $3 million in development costs. The federal government is to provide a wharf at a minimum cost of $16 million, to be paid for out of usage fees. Therefore, the province of Newfoundland, hardly a rich province to begin with, has put up more than double the expenditure of Shaheen. But will the refinery be owned by Newfoundland? No indeed. It will be built, managed and owned by a series of Crown corporations, which are in turn run by the Newfoundland Refining Company which is a wholly owned subsidiary of Shaheen Natural Resources.

● (1620)

After all the financial manipulations, Shaheen Natural Resources will have the option to purchase the Crown corporation that owns the refinery for a nominal fee of $1,800. Then, it must pay the province 5 per cent of the net profits until the original $10 million has been paid, after which the refinery will belong outright to the New York company. What is the risk? If the project fails, Shaheen will simply not exercise his option to purchase; if it succeeds, he will own, for a mere original investment of $30 million, a complex worth $155 million, paid for out of its own operating profits and made possible by the aid of our Canadian federal and provincial governments. The federal government would also allow the company to write off 100 per cent of the refinery costs as depreciation any time during the first eight years, or in effect would give them a five or six year tax holiday. That is the kind of socialism to which I am opposed. It is socialism for the elite, and free enterprise would be preferable for the workers.

I have said that such situations are not isolated, and indeed they are not. Who then is at fault? Should we blame John Shaheen, a publicly avowed American money-maker for taking advantage of our gullibility, or should we lay the blame squarely on the shoulders of many of our politicians who, though never campaigning on the issue of Canadian ownership and protection, quietly and behind the scenes not only go along with the sell-out but in fact assist in the financing of that sell-out? Thus far, the Canadian public has, by its silence, agreed to the wholesale take-over of our resources. In many cases, we were owned before we knew it, for the profit makers, Canadian, American or others, know no boundaries and recognize no imaginary lines on the map. They are multinational in scope.

It is interesting to note that the amendments that are before us deal with the matter of letting the provinces have some kind of veto power or they must agree to the take-over or agree to the reasoning process before such a process can apply. I think that certainly would be a backward step. We see, for example, that in many areas the provincial governments have refused to put forward any kind of decisive legislation in the area of foreign ownership. It seems to me that the responsibility is in the federal government's lap to give an example of the kind of legislation which would protect and bring back under the control of Canadian people their interests which are now controlled in the whole field by foreigners. If we cannot decide in this country how our resources are to be distributed, how they are to be used and conserved, it seems to me that we are doomed.

Indeed, just thinking about that brings back to my mind a verse from Julius Caesar, spoken by Brutus, which reads as follows:

There is a tide in the affairs of men
Which taken at the flood leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries.
On such a full sea are we now afloat,
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures.

Indeed, while this bill will not ensure that we will not lose our ventures, I hope that it might be a foot in the door. I hope that one day when our party, the NDP, sits on the government benches over there we will get the kind of legislation that will not permit these foreign capitalists or Canadian capitalists to take advantage of Canadians.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that Bill C-132 is intended to do something about the growing problem of Canadian participation in the ownership and control of industrial and resource development. Unfortunately, it will fall far short of achieving that objective. Rather than addressing itself to the positive measures necessary to enable and encourage Canadians to participate more fully, it is largely negative in character. It is subject to many deficiencies and, in its present form, raises the spectre of continuing confrontation between federal and provincial administrations. Its potential can only be realized if it is accepted for what it is: a temporary dike to stem the tide of foreign take-overs in the short run in order to permit the permanent installations and power generating positive programs necessary to enable Canadians to play a more active, aggressive and effective role in their economy. We must not be complacent. Bill C-132, by giving the appearance that something is being done, must not provide a smokescreen for continued government inaction and inertia on the creative front.

The Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs has subjected the bill to a minute scrutiny.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

To assist it in its work, a number of representative Canadian individuals, corporations and organizations, including several provinces, presented their views. These were most helpful, and I would be negligent if I did not congratulate the witnesses who appeared before us for the high quality of their submissions and the extraordinary amount of thoughtful consideration that they had given to the subject matter and to the technicalities of the bill itself. I will make no attempt to enumerate all of the principal points raised or to comment on them individually. A few reservations were raised with sufficient regularity, however, that a brief discussion might be helpful.

A number of witnesses suggested that the bill provided too much discretionary governmental intrusion into economic processes in the private sector. It was argued that the interference was both unnecessary and detrimental. The extra governmental intrusion in business affairs is self-evident. The suggestion that no action was required, however, was not supported. No evidence was presented to the committee to show that the trend toward foreign take-overs and an increasing level of foreign domination of the Canadian economy would either be abated or reversed on the present basis. This was one of the inherent weaknesses in several submissions where the contention was made that either no problem exists or that to the extent that it exists, it will right itself automatically, and was not supported by factual or statistical evidence.

It was also suggested that the bill is so strongly biased against foreign investment that it would damage Canadian economic prospects. Quite obviously, the extent to which this is true will depend entirely on the willingness and ability of Canadians to fill any void that may be created. Large new capital investments are required in Canada on a scale well in excess of previous experience. To the extent that the necessary savings can be generated in Canada and then funnelled into the necessary development, no detrimental effect will occur. If we are unable to meet the challenge then, of course, our economic prospects will be affected. Interestingly enough, it is in many cases the individuals who are most concerned about the effects of the bill who should be giving the most leadership and taking the aggressive initiative necessary to prove that their fears were unfounded.

● (1630)

It was also suggested that the bill places a particularly onerous burden on small business whose resources are already strained to the limit in reporting to the government. We share this concern. The government can go a long way toward alleviating these fears by printing guidelines which would let small business know exactly where it stands and, to the maximum extent possible, exempt it from routine scrutiny except in those sectors of the economy where failure to do so would be detrimental to the public interest. If the government does not act in this area at the outset, all of the officers of the Industrial Bank and Development agency will wind up being clerks, couriers and corporate babysitters instead of entrepreneurial sparkplugs.

One of the most frequently heard suggestions was that the concept of "significant benefit" should be replaced by a test of "detriment" or "prejudice". A considerable amount of discussion revolved around this point. Experience in other countries, including Australia, was cited. Theoretically the choice of words would make a substantial difference. In practice, however, I doubt very much that this would be the case. I still believe that the policy, personality and outlook of the government and its administrators will be far more important than the choice of words. Some of my friends would find significant benefit in almost any foreign investment. Others would find it difficult to believe that significant benefit to Canada could ever occur, and would so rule. I have no doubt that, in practice, the usual Canadian compromise will prevail. As the ultimate limitation on the interpretation of the act is political it would appear to us that the actual choice of words, in this instance, is not important enough to argue.

It was further suggested that the bill is negative and discriminatory, and that more could be achieved by providing positive incentives to Canadians to invest in Canadian enterprises than by placing obstacles in the path of foreign investment. Strictly speaking, Mr. Speaker, this is quite correct.

The bill is negative and discriminatory. More could be achieved by providing positive incentives to Canadians to invest in Canadian enterprises. But as I stated earlier, Mr. Speaker, until those positive measures are in situ, it may be expedient to have a temporary dike behind which the more positive and permanent structures can be built. The idea that the positive measures are in the long run far more important is enthusiastically and unreservedly supported. I will return to this subject in a few minutes and discuss some of the steps which, in our opinion, should be undertaken at once.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we were told that the bill creates a new area of conflict between the provinces and the federal government. Beyond doubt this is the greatest weakness in the bill and one which must be corrected before it is read a third time.

The Premier of New Brunswick, speaking as a representative of the Atlantic area, was against the bill. He feared that the federal government would make decisions which would not reflect the best interests of the Atlantic provinces and take their needs and aspirations fully into account.

Officials speaking on behalf of the government of Quebec stated their grave reservations about federal intrusion into an area which they had considered primarily provincial in nature. They suggested that the federal government should not be able to veto development plans supported by the province.

The governments of Saskatchewan and Ontario both indicated their general support of the principle of Bill C-132, but expressed reservations about specific provisions. The province of Saskatchewan questioned the discretionary powers of the minister and was concerned that the recommendations will be arbitrary and judgmental. They also were anxious to know how the provinces would be involved in the process of assessment.

Ontario's reservations were similar. They felt that the federal government should provide the province in which the foreign investment is proposed with a copy of the notification and any additional information submitted by the foreign investor, and that the province, in its turn, should have full opportunity to submit its views on proposed investments.

In our opinion these reservations are too serious to be ignored and must be taken into account. It is for this reason that my colleague, the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), has placed a number of amendments on the order paper. Motions Nos. 5 and 6 are of cardinal importance in that they are specifically designed to assist in meeting the objections and concerns of provincial governments.

No. 6 specifically requires that a copy of any notice in respect of an investment significantly affecting a province or provinces be sent forthwith, by registered mail, to the province or provinces. This would go a long way toward the avoidance of misunderstandings and confrontations based on lack of early communication. The provinces will know from the start what is being proposed, and will have time to prepare their submissions and do the investigation necessary to have a full and meaningful input.

The motion listed as No. 5 is the complementary amendment. It requires that the minister, in establishing a panel of officers to work with the Commissioner, will choose people from inside and outside his own department who are representative in every respect of all the regions of Canada. The Commissioner then, in any case where a province or provinces may be significantly affected, will draw from that pool of officers a panel where the majority of members will represent the region significantly affected.

This proposal falls far short of the provincial veto which has been suggested by some as being a prerequisite. While we have come to the conclusion that a provincial veto would make the entire bill inoperative, and therefore cannot be supported if the bill is to be of any significance whatsoever, the requirement to have recommendations to the minister made by people whose hearts and experience reflect the needs and aspirations of the region most directly affected, will guarantee that the feelings of all parts of Canada will be taken into account and not just the so-called Ottawa point of view.

The spokesman for the NDP indicated that this would be going too far in the direction of provincial participation and might lead to balkanization. I would think that that is not a correct interpretation. As a matter of fact, I am surprised that that hon. member did not insist that the recommendation reflect the point of view of the province or provinces concerned. He should realize that this is a recommendation to the minister and not a decision in itself. It is ultimately the minister who recommends to the Governor in Council, and the Governor in Council that takes the decision. If in some instances a recommendation made by a panel of officers representing a specific part of the country represents more the aspect and the points of view of that part of the country, there is no obligation on the minister to accept the recommendation. If he feels so strongly that the national interest is being prejudiced, he can override the recommendation because he has the ultimate responsibility. It seems fundamental that in this process of making recommendations to the minister, the provincial or regional point of view be pre-eminent. In the past this was the point of view that was often neglected.

I cannot overstress the importance that is attached to these two amendments. Certainly, in the present context in Canada, they are absolutely essential. We have witnessed a growing tendency toward confrontation between Ottawa and the provinces. Recent examples involving the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), and his relationship with the province of Alberta in particular, underline the gravity of the situation. Federalism cannot survive this kind of unilateral back-of-the-hand approach on the part of the federal government. It is all the more annoying when it follows by only a few weeks a conference designed to convince the provinces, and the western provinces in particular, that Ottawa really cares about their views and wants to work with them in a co-operative and harmonious way. The provinces do not trust the federal government sufficiently to turn over to it, without reservation, so much arbitrary decision-making power. Those of us from all parts of Canada, but in particular representatives from the Atlantic provinces and the western provinces, have a solemn obligation to ensure that the provincial point of view is heard and that the provincial need is taken fully into account.

● (1640)

I should like to return now to the positive alternative which in the long run is far more significant in meeting the objective than the bill now before us. This was pointed out time and time again by witnesses giving evidence to the committee. It reflects the viewpoint not only of a number of business organizations, some energetic and imaginative individuals such as Messrs. Lee, Frank, Topping, Sinclair and others, but also that of the Canadian Labour Congress which decried the lack of an industrial strategy for Canada. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) may feel that a master blueprint is not the answer, but certainly he should be capable of giving us something more coherent and comprehensive than the ad hocery to which we have become accustomed. Of the seven or eight industries in which he claims we have industrial strategies, his contention is not supported by evidence in more than one or two cases.

The Progressive Conservative Party strongly believes that we must undertake a number of positive initiatives which will take full advantage of the Canadian potential, and give to Canadians individually the maximum range of choice as well as the maximum benefit from their efforts. I would like to repeat, briefly, the five steps that I outlined at the end of my speech on second reading of the bill.

First, Mr. Speaker, we have to get our economy much closer to its potential curve than has been the case in recent months and years. Admittedly, the growth rate this year has increased, but we are now informed that it is not sustainable and that next year we can anticipate a cutback. It is alarming to be told that we are at, or near, our potential yet we still have a ridiculously high level of unemployment in Canada. Rather than attack the root problem, the government is making excuses and trying to change the location of the goal post. Instead of analyzing the situation logically and trying to achieve a level of unemployment of between 3½ per cent and 4 per cent—which by any reasonable standard is still excessive—the government is trying to condition us to get used to levels in excess of 5 per cent. By repeating over and over again that 5 per cent or above unemployment should be considered normal due to structural changes in our economy—whatever that might be—they expect us to believe it. Already they have had some success, and a number of professional economists and editorial writers have absorbed the new conventional wisdom as pronounced by the government and its apologists. This technique, which was so well perfected in another regime in the 1930's, should not go unchallenged. We can do better than that and if the present government is not capable of it, it should resign and let someone else with higher standards have a chance.

Of course, there are shortages of skills in some areas, Mr. Speaker. This is admitted. But there are also hundreds of thousands of people who are unemployed, and in most cases looking for work. The fact that for many of them the jobs being offered do not give sufficient incentive over and above unemployment insurance and welfare, has been verified many times. Even the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) stated this well-known truth in one of his recent speeches. He did not take the next logical step which was to propose that something be done about it. This inertia has reached epidemic proportions amongst his cabinet colleagues.

Two things should be self-evident, Mr. Speaker, If we want to encourage people to leave the ranks of the unemployed and to enter the labour force, there must be an incentive for them to do so. Bluntly stated, that means they must be paid more, after deductions and fringe benefits, for working than they get for not working. Second, if demand is to be maintained at a high level so that jobs will be available for people wanting to work and for new entrants to the labour force, it is absolutely obvious that an incomes policy is necessary to stop the wage-price spiral on the more affluent side of our economy which is pushing costs and prices up well in excess of productivity.

The Canadian Manufacturers Association, in one of its sillier policy pronouncements, has just advised us that wage-price controls would treat the symptoms and not the major causes of inflation. What naïveté! A recent settlement in the construction industry in Calgary provided for a 32 per cent increase in wages, including fringe benefits, over a two-year period. That, Mr. Speaker, is not a symptom of inflation but, along with rising government expenditures and taxes, is a major cause of inflation.

Economic policies devised to reach and maintain our productive potential are fundamental, Mr. Speaker. The additional output does not need to reflect extra tin cans and useless consumption but rather the potential for the solution of our real problems of poverty, slums, pollution control, urban transportation, housing and, in the context of our discussion today, the savings necessary to enable Canadians to participate more fully in the ownership and control of their own industrial resource assets.

Step number two, Mr. Speaker, would be the introduction of tax and other laws designed to encourage Canadians to save in support of Canadian entrepreneurship. We do not have to consume all of our extra production; we can convert an increasing proportion to capital in order to enable us to own a greater share of our productive capacity. Imaginative proposals are required and a number have been made, including one put forward by my leader during the last election campaign. It is most important to small business and would enable friends, relatives, employees and others to participate and support our young and aggressive risktakers. Certainly, to maintain and encourage the development of pools of risk capital, a Progressive Conservative government would take a hard look at our tax laws. While the capital gains tax was long overdue, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret that I have to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted under the terms of the Standing Order appears to have expired. The hon. member can continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hellyer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the capital gains tax was long overdue, the taxation of inflationary increments is confiscation rather than taxation and should not be allowed.

Arrangements should be worked out with the provinces whereby small and medium-sized family businesses could be continued without the necessity of crisis liquidation for purposes of death duties in respect of the shares of a principal shareholder. Many other changes in the tax law would be effected to give Canadians an equal or better opportunity to participate in their own industrial and resource development.

Step number 3 would be a massive increase in the extent of research and development undertaken in Canada. We must learn from our neighbours that modern technology requires massive public investment and cannot be left to chance or to the marketplace alone particularly when many of our industries are owned by foreigners. In 1967, only 18 per cent of research and development spending by Canadian firms was financed from public funds; in the United States, 53 per cent of research and development spending by private firms was government financed while comparable figures for the United Kingdom and France were 35 per cent and 42 per cent respectively.

The areas in which we could usefully increase our energies is legion. One of the most topical, however, is in the energy field. The technology associated with the extraction of oil from the tar sands in Saskatchewan, Alberta and the territories is in its infancy. Vast sums are required to improve techniques. It is not only essential that this money be spent, but also that the results be in the public domain so that Canada is not held at ransom by any single company or group of companies. The techniques for burning low grade coal without the present unacceptable levels of air pollution should be explored. A visit to Hong Kong a couple of years ago convinced me that their technology in this area was ahead of ours.

● (1650)

Then, there is the whole vast area of development of power sources other than the burning of fossil fuels. Much additional research needs to be done to capitalize on present achievement in the field of atomic power. We made an excellent start but now we are not pressing our advantage as vigorously as we should. Nor do we let the world know what we are doing. Comments by visiting members of the European community last week showed an abysmal ignorance of the performance of heavy water moderated atomic reactors. Then, there remains the exploration of other power sources such as tidal, solar, fusion, etc. We have the brains and the incentive to explore the potential in all of these areas. But so far our most characteristic achievement is foot dragging. Few, if any, countries of the world could profit more by a deliberate, calculated program of pure and, equally important from the Canadian standpoint, applied research.

Step number 4 is the development of more flexible financial institutions. Significant progress has been made in recent years but much remains to be done. Not only do we have to encourage Canadians to save enough to meet their own capital requirements, we have to have the channels by which these savings can be directed to those opportunities and areas where they are needed. The reluctance of provincial governments in east and west to endorse this bill is proof positive that they are convinced that Canadian financial institutions are not yet organized in a way that meets their financial requirements. If Bill C-132 is to have any success at all we must have the capability to meet, internally, any capital need which would otherwise have been filled from outside Canada. Until that is the case, dissatisfaction and dissension will persist.

More flexibility is needed at the lower and upper ends of the scale in particular. Small entrepreneurs have great difficulty in obtaining the funds they need. The same is true of the giant ventures involving tens or hundreds of millions of dollars. A really adequate capital market must be able to meet both needs promptly and unequivocally.

Canada desperately needs a Renaissance of entrepreneurship in its business community. Without the vision and initiative that only gifted entrepreneurs can bring to a nation's economy, Canada will remain locked into the secondary roles offered by the head offices of large multinational enterprises. To respond to the entrepreneurial instinct latent in Canada will require a more sensitive and visionary approach by our financial institutions and, above all, a change in policy which will get the government off the backs of the entrepreneurs so that they can swim with their heads above water.

Step number 5, Mr. Speaker, is to combine all of this dynamism into a massive effort to increase Canadian exports. It is disturbing to note that last year we went into deficit with many areas of the world. This is not good enough. We can compete in world markets and we must be encouraged and assisted to do so. The objective would be a sufficient surplus on current account to provide the United States dollars necessary to acquire ownership of major multinational corporations with substantial assets and activities in Canada. Only with ownership and control of one of the major companies in each industry will we be able to provide Canadians with the total range of opportunities they seek and to which they should be entitled.

Mr. Gillespie: We had the largest increase in 20 years, Paul.

Mr. Hellyer: Within a decade, with proper management, we could acquire one of the giants in most areas of significant concern and potential benefit to Canada. Then, with reciprocal arrangements with our neighbours, we could enjoy the advantages of scale and the lower prices that come from international competition, while at the same time being the beneficiaries of the research, development, product development and market expansion that the big companies enjoy. Our scientists, engineers, technicians, market analysts, brokers, financiers, salesmen, advertisers and others would have full scope for the utilization of their talents, without having to move to another country.

This positive Progressive Conservative policy is far more important than the bill now before us. It is designed, not just to keep the situation from deteriorating further, but to do something about it and move in the direction of a real solution involving greater Canadian participation. Can we do it?

Mr. Baker: Not with this government.

Mr. Hellyer: The hon. member is absolutely right. We cannot do it with this government. All that is required, if we are to do it, is a government which believes in Canada and has a vision for the future of this great country—a Progressive Conservative government, led by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield).

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is close to five o'clock. Earlier today a motion for the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 was proposed by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). The Chair indicated at the time that consultations would take place with representatives of the different parties, or the House leaders. This consultation has taken place.

It has been agreed that the motion will be put this evening at eight o'clock, for debate in the course of the evening. There was also discussion at the time as to the possible limitation of the length of the debate and it was agreed, subject, of course, to the order of the House. that the debate might go on from eight o'clock until eleven o'clock this evening. As well, there would probably be an order providing for the suspension or cancellation of the adjournment proceedings.

It was also agreed, I gather, that the first spokesman on behalf of each party in the House is to be given 20 minutes in which to speak, and subsequent participants 15 minutes each. As I said, the motion shall be deemed to have been adopted at eleven o'clock this evening. The motion will be put at eight o'clock.

For the moment, I should like to inquire whether there is agreement from the House as to the time limits which were suggested a moment ago.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, yes, we agree. Without prejudice to any time limitations in future debates, we agree to the time limitations to be imposed on this occasion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Your Honour, you have stated our agreement exactly.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

[Mr. Hellyer.]

[Translation]

Mr. Boisvert: We give our consent, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baker: Five o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED REINSTATEMENT OF RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of taking all necessary steps to reinstate passenger rail service in Southwestern Ontario adequate to the present and anticipated transportation needs of the public.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, this subject has been discussed in this House on previous occasions. The subject matter of rail transportation, particularly service involving passenger transportation in southwestern Ontario, has been debated in this House for many years. I do not know the origins of the issue Your Honour, and I do not know whether the issue first arose because of partisan politics. Nevertheless, I know that in 1973 that issue has become one of equal importance to that of motherhood. Nobody seems to be against rail passenger service in southwestern Ontario; by the same token, nobody, unfortunately, is going to do anything about it.

Since 1968—indeed, before that date—all parties in this House, through their spokesmen, have expressed concern about this passenger service. Two years ago that concern turned to frustration when the recommendations of a standing committee of this House were rejected by the then minister of transport. Let me hasten to add that the recommendations of that standing committee were unanimous. There was no evidence of any partisanship in the report of that committee. I also wish to assure the House that that committee was one of the hardest working and most diligent of committees that this House has ever established. I attended a number of its meetings, although certainly not all. The hon. member who formerly represented my riding in the House has told me of the effort which the committee made in bringing forward that report. What has happened since that report came out has created frustration. For many, that feeling of frustration has turned to a feeling of hopelessness.

I am not the only one in this House who has talked about such feelings of hopelessness. Others have complained about the lack of service. In this regard, may I quote the words of no less a spokesman than the hon.

member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) who, on October 22, when discussing the CNR financing bill, said, as recorded at page 7095 of Hansard:

> I said I was frustrated because I have spoken on this subject on numerous occasions and have listened to others speak on it, but nothing has happened. I also have a feeling of hopelessness, because I am almost totally certain that no matter what the opposition has said in the past or this afternoon and no matter what I say, nothing will happen. The CNR will carry on in its own way, doing exactly as it sees fit. It will not pay one iota of attention to the wishes of the House of Commons. Certainly, this has happened in the past, as far as I can see. The fact is that out feelings, as voiced by the constructive criticism which has been given by members of this House, are shared, in my opinion, by the people of Canada. Those feelings the CNR has completed ignored over the years.
>
> ● (1700)
>
> With respect, I suggest that the members of one side of this House are in the position to do something. Surely, I do not exaggerate when I say that the government has the right, the ability—to do something about this. Canadian National Railways may be a very important segment of the economy of Canada, but if they think they are bigger than the government of Canada or the Parliament of Canada, they have gone too far. I suggest respectfully, and I say this apologetically as I hope members of the opposition will appreciate the position I am in, that the government is obligated, not only to Parliament but to the people of Canada, to move into this field and, especially in extreme situations, to act.

My only comment on that particular part of the hon. member's speech is that I wish I had been the author of those words. Without reservation or qualification, I adopt everything that the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) said on that occasion.

The various individuals, groups and organizations of the area affected must share this feeling of hopelessness and even helplessness. The case for restoration has been made forcefully over the past few years from all segments of society in the area affected, and by a standing committee of this House, unanimously, as well as individual members of all parties. The purpose of my motion, therefore, is not to plead the case for restoration of passenger rail service. In my opinion, the case has been made successfully. My sole purpose is to point out why this situation has been allowed to exist.

I suggest the finger of guilt can be pointed in many directions. May I mention just three groups, the first being the railways. The railways have been guilty of deliberately downgrading their service. As a result of that, they built up enough evidence of disuse to convince the Canadian Transport Commission to approve their application for the elimination of these passenger trains. Since then, in spite of the uproar, the railways have continued to downgrade services, not passenger services because there are none. They have continued to downgrade the railbed. They have ignored their responsibility to adjacent land owners. All of this can be documented. Indeed, such documentation has been sent to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand).

One example I might give is an application for fence repair that was made on June 1 this year by 11 farmers in my constituency. After sending four letters to Mr. Benson of the CTC and correspondence to the railway concerned, I received correspondence confirming that the tender for fence repair has been let and that the fences would be repaired by the end of November. That is six months following the date of requisition. It may be of some comfort to the Minister of Transport to know he can get a fence repaired in six months, but I will point out to him that the climate in my area is of such a nature that we do not need many fences in the winter when our pastures are buried in the snow. We asked for the fence to be fixed in June. It will be fixed in November.

The second group to which I want to point the finger of guilt is the CTC. As hon. members can appreciate from the example I have given, I am not very enamoured with their responses to situations for which they have a responsibility. I feel they deliberately ignore their responsibility on occasion. Dealing with rail passenger service, I accuse them of a number of things. First, I believe they relied on bad evidence when they granted the discontinuance. Second, they allowed themselves to be completely misled by the railways in that particular hearing. Third, it appears they did not make a decision independently of railway pressure. Indeed, one is forced to the conclusion they are almost in collusion with the railway companies of this country. In any event, the most charitable thing that can be said about the CTC is that it has become a comfortable haven for the Hon. J. Edgar Benson.

The third person who must stand accused of this deplorable situation is the Minister of Transport. I examined very carefully the minister's answers to questions in this House since January on the subject of railway passenger service. The attitude exemplified in those answers simply defies logic. First, the minister defied the unanimous recommendation of a standing committee of this House. The great majority of the members of that committee are Liberals. I believe they are sincere, hard working members, as indeed are all members of that committee.

Second, his answers to the many questions in this House during question periods since January attempted to relate this issue to the rapid transit problems in and around the city of Toronto. May I hasten to say that I in no way minimize the problems of that large metropolitan area. I assume they are of a very severe and important nature to the hundreds of thousands of people who must rely on some form of transportation around the city of Toronto. I do not minimize the importance of that. I simply say that rail passenger service in southwestern Ontario, the area which I and members of adjacent constituencies represent, has nothing to do with the rapid transit system in and around the city of Toronto. The smokescreen drawn by the minister in reply to serious questions by many members of this House, not just the party I represent, does not do him or the government he represents justice. It is a great discredit to the people living in and about southwestern Ontario who have no means of public transportation.

Third, the only positive step, and I say this very charitably, is that a study has been ordered. This is not a study by his department or a standing committee of this House. It is not a bilevel or trilevel study. It is not a study whose participants received any local input. The study is by the CTC. I cannot think of anyone less equipped in view of the history of this issue to study passenger service in southwestern Ontario than the CTC which has made a bad decision. They have not done anything to correct it. I assume that through this study they are simply trying to hide that fact.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Guay) is in the chamber. He will remember a group which came to Ottawa. Indeed, the parliamentary secretary was very gracious in receiving them. On that occasion, I suggested somewhat uncharitably that this was just more windowdressing. The parliamentary secretary took great umbrage when I made that suggestion. I do not think he realizes it was born from the frustration, helplessness and hopelessness of the people in my area and the area surrounding.

We heard, before someone managed to keep him quiet, a few words from a member of the CTC who sat in on that meeting. He told us that at that time the study was about two thirds completed. That was months ago and we did not hear anything more about it until last week when it was indicated we might get the results of this study next week or the week after.

My concern is this. Since we first heard about the birth of this study, it has been indicated that local people would be consulted. I presumed the local people would be people in my constituency or surrounding constituencies. This is a very elusive animal, the local people who are to be consulted. I cannot find one in my constituency. I have checked with almost every municipal official, elected or appointed, in my constituency. Not one has talked to the CTC. The CTC has never talked to them. I would hope that when this study is tabled, if it is ever tabled, there will be appended to it the names of those people who were consulted by the CTC in connection with it.

● (1710)

I am by nature an optimist, though at times it is very difficult to remain an optimist, especially when one is dealing with rail transportation in my area. Let me point out one thing—and I do so with considerable reluctance. From the birth of this issue to this very day there has never, to my knowledge, been inserted into the debate one iota of partisan politics. Everyone has been in favour of the improvements we are seeking—everyone, that is, except the railways, the CTC and the minister. The conclusion to which one is inevitably drawn is this: the attitude the minister continues to take, together with the discontinuance of the service, reflects the only way he knows of penalizing the people in this area who have failed to elect Liberal members since 1968, the only exception being the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher)—and it certainly is not his fault that geographically his constituency is isolated by water and by ridings represented by Tory or NDP members. I can well understand why he spoke with such vigor and dedication on October 27. It seems to me that the people who live in this area have been witnessing political patronage in reverse. It amounts to telling them: if you don't send Liberals to Ottawa you will not get passenger trains. It is incredible to me that in this area of non-partisanship the minister should take such an attitude. With reluctance, as I say, this is the only conclusion I can draw.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this motion asks that the government consider the advisability of taking all necessary steps to reinstate rail passenger service in southwestern Ontario adequate to the present and anticipated transportation needs of the public.

The government is in full accord with this motion. However, the motion is not really necessary, because the government is already studying the anticipated transportation needs of southwestern Ontario and is, in fact, considering the advisability of reinstating passenger rail service. Both the minister and the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) have repeatedly expressed concern about this matter. As has been mentioned, the hon. member for Bruce has frequently made representations to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), to the CTC and to myself. I should like to say to the hon. member who has just resumed his seat the information given in our various discussions had nothing to do with politics; we spoke with simple sincerity because we are concerned about the people in his area just as we are concerned about people everywhere in Canada.

An hon. Member: Like the devil, you are!

Mr. Lundrigan: Don't cry!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I am always pleased to hear comments from members of the Official Opposition. But some of them may have noted that their leader has just walked into the House. They do not realize that he came in to listen to me rather than listen to them.

I repeat, the government is very concerned that southwestern Ontario should get the best and most suitable surface transport systems. The immediate question is to determine how this objective can best be achieved. Both the Canadian Transport Commission and the Ontario government are currently in the midst of separate major studies to this end. It may be the case that reinstituting rail passenger service is part, or all, of the solution. It may not. We cannot at this stage prejudge the conclusions which will be reached as a result of these studies.

The Minister of Transport has not simply let this matter rest with the studies currently under way. On June 14 of this year, along with officials of the department, I met with a delegation from southwestern Ontario, as the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis) will recall, and listened to representations on this matter. The consensus of this meeting was that the next Ontario trilevel conference would offer the most appropriate opportunity for the discussion of this question, and that a solution could be found through the co-operation of the three levels of government concerned.

As to the background of this issue, I think it would be very useful if I were to put a few facts on the record. But before doing so, I assure the hon. member, as I have done on several occasions, that as soon as these reports are available, we shall actively pursue this matter. I am not being "political". I am just being sincere, and answering the question he has raised on various occasions. I should like to refer, also, to the Standing Committee which visited the hon. member's area. This visit was made possible because the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner) voted against other members on our side, if you want to put it that way. He took this action because he felt there was a need to do so, and I compliment him. Had it not been for the hon. member for London East, this visit by the committee would never have taken place.

Responsibility for providing travel facilities to the people of Canada is shared by all levels of government though, no doubt, the greatest over-all responsibility rests with the federal government. Historically, the railway system, from the date of its construction through to the 1940's, provided the principal means of intercity transportation in Canada. From the 'fifties onward, with the advent of improved facilities by road and air, the attention of the various levels of government was focussed on the creation of a first-class network of highway and air routes. The redirection of national transportation expenditures came in response to the public preference for the convenience and flexibility of the private automobile and the bus lines, when shorter distances were involved, and for the advantages of airspeed for longer trips. While the public in general benefitted from the changing pattern of passenger services, the impact on the rail passenger system was adverse, leading to a widespread decrease in patronage. Railway deficits increased in the light of competition with highway and air modes which received the major benefits of public financing.

The federal government, recognizing that provision for rail passengers now involved burdens which were not normally assumed by commercial firms, moved to relieve the rail carriers from the financial losses incurred in the operation of passenger trains. In 1967, the National Transportation Act established a mechanism whereby the government could order the continued operation of uneconomic passenger services if those services were judged to be in the public interest. Having done so, it would absorb the bulk of losses associated with each particular operation. The federal government ensured that the broad transportation needs of the public would be considered when a decision was made as to whether an uneconomic passenger service should be continued or not.

The act required the Transport Commission to fully evaluate all available and projected competing modes of travel in each case brought before it so that the need for passenger train service would be judged in the context of the total facilities available to those directly affected. As well, this process was initiated as part of the major aim of federal government policy to ensure that the best allocation of resources in the passenger field was accomplished.

● (1720)

In the case of train service abandonment, specifically in southwestern Ontario, it is useful to recall that all steps prescribed by the Canadian Transport Commission have been followed and there was no other recourse than to abandon this service after exhaustive hearings on the part of the commission.

In its capacity of rationalizing passenger services and protecting the public interest, the railway transport committee of the Canadian Transport Commission carried out a full investigation. No less than six days of public hearings in different cities were held at which no less than 70 government organizations and individuals attended. The purpose of these hearings was to examine the economic viability of, and the public need for, the railway passenger services in southwestern Ontario, commonly referred to as the Bruce peninsula services.

During that hearing it was shown in particular that the lines abandoned since then had incurred losses in the neighbourhood of $600,000 in 1968. It was also proven that alternative public transportation existed in the area and that extensive bus service was available. It was demonstrated that revenue increases between 2.4 to 7.8 times the actual 1968 revenues would have to be obtained to make the services profitable.

Mr. Lundrigan: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I think I have a legitimate point of order when I suggest that it is perhaps wise for the members of the House to recall a fundamental rule of the House in order to preserve this chamber as a debating forum, the purpose for which it was intended. The hon. member is reading a statement prepared by officials of the department or some other section of the government. The hon. member for Fort William has a pile of papers on his desk as well, from which he is ready to read. Even if Your Honour does not accept my point of order, I suggest it is wise for members to remember this is a debating forum, not a place in which to read statements prepared by departmental officials.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The point raised by the hon. member is one that is raised on many occasions and I think is well taken. The Chair appreciates the hon. member's intervention, but I suggest the rules are not strictly applied. They do authorize hon. members to refer to notes, and in special cases, such as budgets or very important political matters, the Chair has a tendency to allow leeway. In view of all these variations in the application of the rules, it is not easy for the Chair to decide on a strict application of the rules. But I think the fact that, on occasion, members do suggest to the Chair that there should be a stricter application of the rules is helpful to the operation of the House.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It so happens, Mr. Speaker, that I did this research myself through our research bureau. Hon. members opposite also have a research bureau. In this instance, I would have accepted nothing less. I suggest the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate is prejudging the conclusion of my speech; I am more favourable to the motion than he thinks. I might also say that the other member who will speak on our side has no departmental notes, and I say that in all truthfulness because he would not accept them. So, the hon. member should not make statements that he cannot substantiate.

Mr. Lundrigan: Since you are a rookie, we will accept that.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The hon. member is known for making rash statements, but half the time he does not know what he is saying.

Mr. Baker: At least he does not read from a text.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I should just like to mention a few other points, Mr. Speaker. If the service had been continued, with the taxpayers paying 80 per cent of the losses incurred by the railway companies, in 1968 the distribution of cost per passenger would have ranged from $2.06 for the passenger, $0.61 for the railway company and $2.44 for the taxpayer for the Canadian National Toronto-Palmerston service. The cost would have ranged from $3.36 for the passenger, $3.92 for the railway company and $15.69 for the taxpayer for the Canadian Pacific Toronto-Owen Sound service.

Other studies have been carried out as we are all aware. A lot of consideration has been given to the cost of improvements and so on. A good number of bus services require improvements in equipment, but their financial positions prevent them from taking action. It does appear that, in that particular district, public intercity transit is not well regarded. A possible answer to this may be the fact that the road network is good and that people prefer the automobile for travelling.

I should like to point out that further action will be taken by the Minister of Transport. In more recent months, as an indication of the very strong concern of the federal government for passenger services in southwestern Ontario, the Minister of Transport asked the president of the Canadian Transport Commission once again to carry out an investigation of the transportation needs of the residents of the area. This the CTC has undertaken and the minister is now awaiting a report on the situation in the area. The minister has already indicated in this House that he will discuss this report at a trilevel meeting with Ontario and the municipalities so that we can solve this problem.

It is useful at this time to recall that the government of Canada is spending tremendous amounts of money to ensure the mobility of the Canadian population, both for its leisure and business travel. It is the policy of this government to ensure adequacy of service to all the population of the country, and no less for people from southwestern Ontario.

Efforts are being exercised in connection with all modes of transport to ensure that Canada is benefiting from all technological advances. At the present time we are sponsoring additional car ferries; we are expanding our airports; we are creating new air services; we are participating in road improvement programs with the provinces; we are funding research in the railway passenger field, and so on. These are tangible efforts made by this government to get at the passenger service problem in Canada and in southwestern Ontario. Items such as increased fuel costs, scarce energy resources, and technological advances such as the LRC and turbo-trains may prove to be significant factors. The future of passenger trains in Canada may soon prove to be more interesting. It is in this context that the people of southwestern Ontario should await the result of the new study undertaken by the Canadian Transport Commission.

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I rise to intervene briefly in this debate to state once again the support of my party for the sentiments and opinion expressed in the motion of the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis), which may I say were also ably expressed not long ago in this House by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher). I am not from southwestern Ontario, unless one feels that metropolitan Toronto falls within that category, but as a sometimes member of the committee on transportation who has received correspondence, particularly in the last few months, about this matter, I welcome the opportunity to say a word or two about it.

• (1730)

It has already been said that this passenger service was discontinued some three years ago, and that last year the standing committee of this House unanimously recommended reinstatement of that service. As has already been mentioned, despite that unanimous recommendation no action was taken by the railways, the Canadian Transport Commission or the government. I should have thought that in the political atmosphere of a year or so ago, a unanimous recommendation of the committee would have carried considerable weight. However, this idea of reinstatement of passenger service in southwestern Ontario seems to be an idea in danger of being smothered by too much agreement.

It is easy to say one is in favour, but it is more difficult to translate that statement into some kind of action. Despite all the protestations of the parliamentary secretary, all the studies that are going on, or may be going on again, the government in fact has not committed itself to the reinstatement of passenger service. It has committed itself to another study. I think that is the important distinction which will not be lost upon the residents of the area and ought not to be lost upon the members of this House.

The government, perhaps understandably, wishes to follow the advice of the transport commission in a matter of this kind. Having done that, I think it is not appropriate for the government to suggest that it agrees with this motion. An agreement by the government must be translated into action, and until such time as action to implement the sentiments of this motion is undertaken by the government, the government cannot be stated to be in agreement with it.

My concern about this issue is not only the concern of one who is interested in the field of transportation and who travels in, even if he does not live there, southwestern Ontario. Mine is also the concern of one who sees a progressive deterioration and abandonment of passenger service generally as a step in the wrong direction. Surely, in face of the looming problems of energy and the destruction of our environment, along with the need to service an increasingly large and mobile population, we must not discontinue passenger service or go along with the abandonment of rail services without counting the cost of alternatives.

It is easy to say it would have cost people two or three cents a year to subsidize the operation of certain lines, but what is it costing the people in terms of alternatives to which they must turn, in terms of alternatives which are not there, or in terms of the destruction of the environment which is a concomitant of increasing highway traffic and pollution arising from the use of buses and cars which in increasing numbers use our highways? The arithmetic employed has been too simplistic, I suggest, in the calculation of passenger and freight rail services in this country. It has been too simplistic and has not counted the cost of alternatives, nor the cost to the future in terms of environmental considerations.

It is trite for me to say, but I think it is perhaps worth reminding ourselves, that this problem is not in any way limited to southwestern Ontario. It is national in scope and concerns western Canada perhaps more immediately and more obviously than other parts of the country. Whether it be commuter rail service or ordinary passenger service, whether it be rail service of any kind, the trend in recent years has been to discontinue and reduce it, or to allow the facilities which support such services to deteriorate so that the service in time becomes more expensive and the case for discontinuing it apparently stronger.

I said I would be brief, and I shall. I urge the government not merely to support the notion of another study—I may say, a study under the particular body which gave approval to the discontinuation in the first place, and therefore not likely to be very objective in its assessment—not merely to give lip service to another study, but to say precisely where it stands. I suggest that the notion of another study is probably made in an effort to buy time or as a delaying tactic.

There must be plenty of data before the government and the Ministry of Transport on the basis of which the government could come to a firm conclusion; and if there is not, I am sure hon. members from the area would be very glad to supply it. I am not impressed by the assurance of the parliamentary secretary. I do not believe the government supports the notion of continuing rail service in those areas. If it does, let it say so in plain, simple English or French.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak for just two or three minutes. I do not want to prevent my colleague, the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae), putting his remarks on the record. I suspect he has documentation from departmental officials that might be of interest. I do not intend to be too hard on the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) who today performed the unusual role of attempting to present the prepared position of his government. I suggest that is understandable. He is beginning to sound as though he has made some growth in his party, particularly when he uses phrases such as "my government", "my policy", "my position", "our firm policy", etc. This is as bureaucratic and old-fashioned an approach as I have heard for some years, as long ago as the days when we had rail passenger service in Newfoundland in the form of old Bullet.

An hon. Member: 1962.

Mr. Lundrigan: In any event, I do not want to criticize the hon. member too severely because his prospects for future prosperity in his party are looking brighter by the day with every intervention he makes from his seat.

Getting back to the issue, I support certain of the arguments put forward by the hon. member who immediately preceded me. He specifically referred to southwestern Ontario and the need for real effort to be made in that part of his province toward the continuation of some kind of rail passenger service. Of course, you could get hon. members from western Ontario and from the Prairies, as well as from other areas of the country where rail lines have been abandoned, to support that argument: this is also true of members from Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and various regions of the province of Quebec.

If the government has done anything since 1968 when I first came here, it has taken an unwritten, unconfirmed and "under the table" pass at rural Canada. It has taken the position that rural Canada should be discouraged in all aspects and that there should be an undermining encouragement toward the urban drift which the world has witnessed in the last half-century. When saying that, I look across at the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) to whom we refer sometimes, when we are kidding him, as the unofficial Tory member because he does represent a lot of conservative attitudes. He has made a strong effort, in terms of textbook arguments, against government policy harmful to rural Canada.

The point I want to touch upon relates to government policy in respect of transportation services. I think we must look at our over-all services, none of which can be related so closely to our economic structure as our transportation system. That is why when we talk about transportation we are not only talking about public services but very much about economic necessity.

● (1740)

A number of years ago the hon. member from my riding—it was called Bonavista-Twillingate in those days—was the Hon. Jack Pickersgill, a good friend of many members of the House of Commons. At that time he was attempting in his own way to create some kind of buffer for the government on matters of transportation. He was the architect and designer of the Canadian Transport Commission.

The commission is one of the most intriguing animals that ever existed in federal government. Today, if you approach Mr. Benson in the CTC, he says you have the wrong man and you must go to the Department of Transport which created the original legislation and has legislative responsibility for transportation. If you go to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), he will tell you frankly, candidly and openly that you have the wrong man, that you must go to the commission because they are a quasi-judicial body, a body which is above the law and they are not in any way subject to the will of parliament in the sense that we can point the finger at them and tell them what to do.

The transportation situation in Canada is criminal, because no one seems to have proper responsibility for it. In times when the Canadian Transport Commission did not exist, one could always go to the Minister of Transport with whatever problems one had or whatever applications came forward for the abandonment of a rail service. The minister had responsibility and he was held accountable to the Parliament of Canada and to the Canadian people. Today, one cannot approach him.

I remember when the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Jamieson) was in charge of transportation. He could squirm away from any transportation issue by saying that it came under the quasi-judicial jurisdiction of the CTC.

This is where we find ourselves today. We have arrived at a point in Canadian parliamentary history where somebody will have to take a close look at whether there is a need to continue the CTC, with its present attitude. Someone will have to take a close look at where the responsibility for transportation matters lies.

I could tell stories for hours about all the problems we have encountered in our own little province in our efforts to work out solutions with this multiheaded animal, the Canadian Transport Commission. It is impossible to reach either the Minister of Transport or the CTC. There were two occasions when I served several small communities, in fact seven small islands off the main coast of Newfoundland. The CTC have the responsibility of providing some kind of transportation link between the islands and the mainland. This is contained in the Terms of Union which were signed back in 1949. A small boat operated between the Change Islands and the mainland. On one occasion they wanted some kind of landing facility so that when the boat went in to dock, there would be a small structure for unloading the one car which the ferry boat could take on a calm day; they wanted a small plank on which they could drive the car. The wharf is owned by an old friend of Jack Pickersgill.

This private wharf may be worth about $1,000. There is a private arrangement whereby the owner gets $1,000 a year to rent this wharf to the CTC. It is a neat little arrangement which Mr. Pickersgill made when he repreesented my riding. The people who use the ferry wanted this little plank on platform built which would cost a few hundred dollars. The government said it was the responsibility of the CTC, and the CTC said it was the responsibility of the Department of Public Works or the Department of Transport. Right now there are 700 people being served by the ferry which has to wait for the water to rise or fall to land the one car which it carries. This is hard to believe.

On another occasion I was looking after the case of a similar operation serving 600 or 700 people on another island, actively employed, hardworking people none of whom were on welfare. Their wharf had deteriorated. Again it is a privately-owned wharf, rented to the CTC through the auspices of Jack Pickersgill. The wharf was in such need of repair that the ferry could not carry any trucks or cars. Normally the ferry can carry two cars or one truck loaded with freight or goods for the community. The island had to go for two months without produce. All that was required was a couple of thousand dollars to repair this private wharf by agreement with the CTC. We worked on this problem during the whole summer. I threatened to raise the matter in the House of Commons if we could not get some guarantee from the CTC that they would make the necessary changes. If they were not going to make them, I was going to challenge their decision on legal grounds or on a constitutional basis.

Those are two small examples of circumstances that do not affect the nation as a whole but are indicative of the thousands of transportation problems that are being swept under the carpet because of the inactivity of the CTC. I do not wish to point the finger at all the members of the CTC. I have dealt with some whose names are unsung but who are determined, honourable and distinguished servants of Canada. They are anxious to help solve some problems, but they are being strangled by the political head which is at the top of the organization or by some direction from the government which does not permit them to make the right kind of decisions.

The simple fact of the matter is that under its present terms of reference the CTC can take no action in transportation except to eliminate services. There is a tremendous amount of indecision in the whole area of transportation. If I were a minister of the Crown responsible for transportation, I would look seriously at the need to restructure the CTC, to eliminate it or to give it new terms of reference and public responsibility. As a member of parliament and as a Canadian, I should like to make sure that the Minister of Transport is accountable for transportation problems in our country. I believe the hon. member who will follow me will take the same attitude.

We have certainly arrived at a situation where somebody must face the reality that exists in transportation. I do not want to criticize individual members of the commission, but there is something wrong in Canada when there is a continuous presentation of motions from individual members—and, God knows, western members have been active almost every day in trying to deal with transportation difficulties. Last week 74 of us members of parliament visited British Columbia. Almost incessantly the argument was thrown at us that the people over there are concerned about lack of direction in transportation. Briefs were presented to us and we heard arguments from all across the province regarding stagnation of the economy due to the downfall of the transportation system.

Without making any generalized comment which might be challenged by the hon. member for St. Boniface and of which he would like to accuse me, let me say that the quality of transportation is declining. Japan has come up with the monorail system which has revolutionized their transportation system. Great Britain, with its dense population and its difficulties in building good transportation systems, has been able to provide a transportation system which would put us to shame. Putting partisan politics aside, one wonders where we are going in Canada. There seems to be nobody with over-all responsibility for transportation. That is why I say it is time for us as members of parliament to introduce motions and bring forward recommendations to re-examine the role of the CTC. It is nothing but a buffer for the government and a body which enables the government to make unpopular decisions, a body which can take the blame and responsibility for them.

● (1750)

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort Williams): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the motion proposed by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis) which asks that rail passenger service be reinstated in areas of southwestern Ontario from which it was removed during the past few years. However, before doing so I would like to speak on a point of personal privilege in reply to the earlier remarks of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan). No departmental officer, or anyone else for that matter, is ever going to put words into my mouth when it comes to speaking about railroad affairs. I come from a great community which is totally dependent on the railroad. I spent 30, 40 or 50 hours with railroaders during the last strike, and I spent last Friday evening with railroaders. I remember the town of Rainy River when dieselization came in, and the tragedy it suffered, as well as many other areas. So nobody is going to tell me what to say about railroads.

Mr. Lundrigan: I didn't mean you.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, when I have occupied as much time on the floor of this House as the hon. member I am sure I will not need notes.

Mr. Lundrigan: We accept you, but pros like Joe we don't.

Mr. McRae: I am speaking about what is involved in this motion partly because I am a frequent visitor to the area concerned and am aware of the feelings of the people about the matter. However, I am also concerned about the discontinuance of passenger service in my own area and throughout the rest of Canada. This is something about which all Canadians must be concerned.

In many respects my views on this subject are not too different from those of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate, but I would like to get to the root of the problem. I do not think the root of the problem is essentially the CTC, although it may be one of the offshoots of the root. I find it hard to believe that the railways of this country are really serious about their role, and especially do I say this about the CPR although it applies also to the CNR. Both railways lack an aggressive approach. Where are our railroads when there is a discussion of rapid transit systems? These are the companies which have the rights of way, the equipment, the money for development and apparently the technology. What sums of money have they put into research and development? Very little, Mr. Speaker.

Trains today are travelling at about the same speed as they were 50 years ago. Except for the diesel engine and a few improvements in bearing-lubricator techniques, nothing has been changed. One has only to look at the dates that rail cars were built, when a freight train is moving past, to realize how old is much of the equipment. A lot of it was built in 1929, 1932 or 1941. Where were the railroads when the controversy over the Pickering airport began? What other sections of industry would pass up the opportunity to suggest a rapid ground transportation system in this area as an alternative to the airport?

Where are the railroads in the present energy scene? We are told that fuel-wise, rail travel is by far the most efficient. In fact, the figures show that as opposed to air travel, per passenger mile we use about a quarter to one-sixth the fuel on a railroad as would be used on an airplane. Would fuel conservation not dictate that we have another good look at passenger rail transportation?

Where were the railroads when the possibility of a unit train system was discussed in lieu of an oil pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley? Only reluctantly and very lately has the CNR shown signs of interest in such a project. And what is $1½ million compared to $40 million to $50 million spent by the aggressive pipeline industry?

It is unfortunate, perhaps even disastrous, that in a nation which requires rail transportation so much we are dependent on railroads which, for various reasons, are not really interested in developing new business. It seems to me that the CPR would be glad to get out of the business and that the CNR is so used to playing second fiddle that it has never thought of an initiative of its own.

I believe that the National Transportation Act and the Railway Act must be seriously amended or, better still, completely revamped to provide the kind of thrust that we expect of our railroads. I would like to go into this question in detail if I had a much longer period of time, but this evening I shall make just one or two short comments. I would like to see these acts amended in order to put control over the railroads back into the hands of parliament and of the government of Canada. I am not happy when I hear the minister reply to questions saying that he will ask the president of one or the other major railway company for co-operation. When the national interest beckons, as it does today in connection with grain movement from the west through Thunder Bay, the minister must have the power to command the railroads to meet the emergency.

It is my understanding that when the railways desire a change, and a change invariably means a change upward in freight rates, they merely have to inform the CTC, and so be it. I repeat that control over the railroads must be given back to the Parliament of Canada. Another change has to do with rail passenger service. It is my understanding that when the railroads want to apply for a subsidy, they must apply for discontinuance of service. In order to achieve this, it is my experience that they deliberately downgrade the service and then, when the volume falls off, they ask for discontinuance.

Just recently the CPR laid off 22 ticket agents and operators in northwestern Ontario and Manitoba. As a matter of fact, the senior clerk in Thunder Bay was laid off on September 30, in contravention of Bill C-217, if not the letter then the spirit of section 16(3)(a), which calls for the arbitrator to give serious attention to adopting a job security plan based on the principle of attrition. Fewer tickets will be sold as a result of this action, and when the volume of usage falls off the railways are free to seek increased subsidies. This is a silly provision. I am in favour of subsidies, but subsidies for providing service. The act should reward the railroads for upgrading service, not for short-changing the public.

When a railroad ceases to operate a service in an area, something goes out of the area. It is time to reappraise the role of the railroads in Canada and to upgrade this role. At a time when fuel shortages dictate a more aggressive rail policy, it is time for the Parliament of Canada to lean heavily on the railroads to force them to play a more aggressive role in providing better service, including passenger service, to the people in southwestern and northwestern Ontario and in the rest of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hour allotted for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. May I remind hon. members that the 40 hours set aside under the terms of the Standing Orders for private members' business are now exhausted. This is being said in conformity with the disposition of paragraph 6 of Standing Order 15. There will be no private members' hour from 5 p.m. to 6 p.m. on Mondays and Tuesdays from now until the end of the current session.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

ENERGY

OIL SUPPLIES FROM FOREIGN SOURCES

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Leave having been granted to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the steps the government proposes taking to meet the continuing interruption of oil supplies from foreign countries, and more particularly, what plans it has for (a) procuring alternative supplies to meet the needs of eastern Canada; (b) organizing public support for reducing the consumption of energy supplies this winter, and (c) instituting a system of oil rationing should this become necessary, the motion is therefore as follows:

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of moving the adjournment of the House is to draw the attention of members of parliament and the Canadian people to the fact that we could face a very serious oil shortage in Canada this winter. I think the worst thing we can do to the Canadian people is to keep issuing Pollyanna statements that all is well when all is not well.

I do not think a series of soporific handouts to the Canadian people will go very well if later this winter we find ourselves in desperate straits for lack of adequate petroleum supplies. Therefore, my colleagues and I feel that this matter should be discussed in parliament in order to draw attention to the situation but, more importantly, in order to give the government an opportunity to tell parliament and the Canadian people what plans it has, and what steps it proposes to take, to deal with a serious crisis should it occur. It has been said that the art of governing is the art of foreseeing, and surely this parliament—and particularly this government—have a responsibility to foresee what eventuality is likely to arise, and to act accordingly.

The threat which faces us is the possibility of a very serious oil shortage this winter. This will affect mainly eastern Canada. As far as the area west of the Ottawa Valley is concerned, that region is supplied with crude oil from western Canada and there should be no serious problem. We produce some two million barrels a day, more than half of which is shipped to the midwestern United States. Also, the consumers west of the Ottawa Valley are protected by the price freeze which was announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on September 4 and which is to continue until the end of January. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) has said that at that time they propose to fix the price on the basis of Montreal.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that if that happens I think the minister will be in trouble with the people of Canada; he will certainly be in trouble as far as this group is concerned. That is not our immediate problem. West of the Ottawa Valley I think there is no danger of an oil shortage, but eastern Canada depends almost entirely on overseas sources for its crude oil supplies. About 25 per cent of that oil comes from the Middle East, and at the present time the indications are that this may be curtailed.

The Arab states have been making various statements. Over the weekend the oil bulletins from Beirut named Canada as one of the countries which would be cut off. Some time today Saudi Arabia announced that Canada is not to be one of the countries against which a total embargo will be enforced, but the same statement pointed out that the Arab states, and Saudi Arabia in particular, proposes to cut their production by 25 per cent in the month of November and an additional 5 per cent in the month of December. If that applies to Canada, as one can only assume from the statement that it does, it will certainly mean a serious curtailment in our supplies from the Middle East.

Many people are under the impression that it is the Americans who are going to suffer most from an embargo, but it should be pointed out that the Americans only depend on the Middle East for 6 per cent of their oil requirements while eastern Canada depends upon the Middle East for 25 per cent of its requirements. Whatever action the Middle East countries take with respect to limiting their exports of oil to Canada, it will have a very serious impact upon supplies in eastern Canada.

• (2010)

Moreover, some of the Arab states have taken the position that any country which ships oil to the United States, a country on which they have placed an entire embargo, will itself be subject to the embargo. As over 50 per cent of our oil goes to the United States, we have no way of knowing what the attitude of the Arab states will be to Canada.

While most of our attention has been focused on the actions of the Arab nations we have overlooked another serious danger. Sixty per cent of our imported oil comes from Venezuela. That field, in the main, is controlled by Exxon. There is a danger that supplies of oil originally destined for Canada may be diverted to the United States if the Middle East nations place a total embargo upon that country.

I am not suggesting for a moment that Exxon would deliberately cut off Canada from supplies of Venezuelan oil. However, I am saying that if the United States were to be in desperate straits this winter, that country might apply pressure on Exxon and ask the company to meet the requirements of the United States first: quantities of oil destined for Canada could be diverted to the United States. None of us wants this to happen. All of us hope that there will not be any shortage of oil in eastern Canada this coming winter. But it would be a mistake if we were to live in a fool's paradise and assume that we will not face any crisis at all this winter. Our purpose in moving the adjournment motion was this: we wanted to find out what are the government's plans and what action the government proposes to take.

It is useless, at this late date, belabouring the government because we may face an oil crisis this winter. I have done my fair share of that. I have pointed out that had the government entered into some long-term planning, and had it constructed the pipeline to Montreal, it might have averted much of the difficulty which we might face this coming winter. Scolding will not solve the problem. Finding fault with the government will not recover the years that the locusts have eaten. What we must do now is try to work together to meet a national crisis.

I think it would be far better if the government were to take the people of Canada into its confidence and tell them frankly what the situation is likely to be, how much oil we will be able to import, what are the parameters of the problem, what is the most oil we can expect to have and what is the least that we can expect. In that way we could make our plans on the basis that we may face a shortage and the government could say how it proposes to meet that situation if and when it arises. I think if the government and parliament are prepared to give leadership to the Canadian people, the Canadian people will respond, as they always have, to any challenge and they will meet the national crisis.

There are a number of things on which the government should speak out and with respect to which it can tell us its plans. This afternoon I asked the minister what is the anticipated shortfall between the 900,000 barrels a day we need in eastern Canada and the quantity that it is anticipated we shall be able to procure from oil producing countries. That ought to be known. I cannot believe that the department is not capable of making assessments as to how much oil we are likely to have. We know how much oil we will need. Further, I think the government ought to tell us, either tonight or as soon as possible, what are the alternate sources from which it hopes to secure oil.

Four oil companies are now moving some 53,000 barrels a day of western crude down the St. Lawrence Seaway. That will help. Has the government any plans for increasing the amount of oil which we can move down the St. Lawrence Seaway? Of course, that will be only a temporary measure until the freeze. What other measures has it in mind? If it is not too late, are steps being taken to give tax considerations to those who are willing to put up storage facilities, as was suggested this afternoon, in order that we may store a larger quantity of oil in the eastern areas?

Further, I think we should know the extent to which the government is actively pursuing the possibility of getting oil directly from the state-owned oil company of Venezuela. The minister himself pointed out that although Exxon will control the field until 1983, the Venezuelan government can take its royalties in kind. If in Canada we set up a national marketing mechanism it might be possible to get supplies of oil from the state-owned oil corporation of Venezuela. If we are to do that, we must move fast. Every industrial country in the world is looking for oil. We ought to know from the minister what success he is having in pursuing this matter.

We ought to know what attempts are being made to secure oil from African countries such as Libya and Nigeria. We get about 21 per cent of our oil from the latter country. These countries have been entering into bilateral arrangements with other countries such as Japan and West Germany. That is the policy they have been following. Has the government any hope of obtaining additional oil from those areas? It seems to me that the government should be looking into such matters, instead of just going from day to day in the hope that the problem will go away.

Second, I have suggested in the motion that we ought to begin appealing to the Canadian people to do whatever things that will help to reduce the consumption of oil, natural gas and other fossil fuels. The provincial governments, municipalities, public organizations of all kinds, service clubs, community organizations and many other groups would all rally behind an appeal if the government were prepared to spell out ways and means by which we could reduce the consumption of oil and natural gas this winter.

We also suggest in our motion that the government should tell us today, or fairly soon, what it proposes to do if the situation becomes so serious that there is insufficient oil to meet the normal demands of eastern Canada. None of us wants to see oil rationing, but if oil rationing becomes necessary we do not want to see oil rationed by the pocketbook: we do not want to see gasoline going only to people who can afford to pay $1 or $1.50 per gallon. If we do face such a serious situation in eastern Canada, then I submit supplies ought to be allocated on the basis of priorities so that we can meet the needs of those who require fuel. I am speaking of hospitals and other necessary institutions, of home heating fuel and of those groups which have a legitimate demand on this country's limited reserves.

● (2020)

I hope the government will be able to tell us tonight what steps it is energetically pursuing to meet a possible crisis. If the crisis does not arise and if there is no shortage this winter, all of us will be extremely happy.

Mr. Woolliams: I bet you will be disappointed.

Mr. Douglas: If we plan for the worst and it does not happen, we will have lost nothing except a little thought and a few plans. However, if we fail to plan for the worst possible contingency, this country will be in serious trouble and the people of Canada will not forgive either the government or this parliament.

The government should tell us tonight what steps it is taking to carry on negotiations with the Arab states; what diplomatic activity is going on to ensure that if possible we will continue to get supplies from the Middle East; what steps it is taking with Exxon, or Exxon and the United States, to ensure that oil from Venezuela will not be diverted from Canada to meet American needs this winter; and what steps it is taking to enter into possible bilateral negotiations with Venezuela, Libya, Nigeria or any other country which has state-owned marketing organizations which are prepared to supply us with oil.

We in this party have been urging the minister for a long time to set up a national petroleum corporation for the purpose of entering into these long-term arrangements and to ensure that oil is earmarked for the Canadian people and equitably distributed to all regions that need it. I am not wedded to any name: if the minister does not want to call it a national petroleum corporation, he can call it any other name. He could call it "Macdonald's Somersault No. 7".

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Macdonald's hamburgers.

Mr. Douglas: Call it whatever you like. The minister said the other day that a national petroleum corporation would not meet our immediate problems. I suggest that he is quite wrong. A national petroleum corporation that could now enter into negotiations with Venezuela and some of the African countries might be the solution to provide us with the extra half million barrels a day that we desperately need if there are not to be a great many hardships experienced in eastern Canada.

In his statement of last Thursday, the minister said, "Although it is recognized that security of supply for priority oil users must be protected, the government is reluctant to interfere at this stage with the normal marketing arrangements in the industry." The normal marketing arrangements in the industry must take second place to the needs of the people in eastern Canada. The minister and the government are eventually going to be compelled to set up a national petroleum corporation. If I may adopt the slogan which the government had some years ago for its winter works program: Why wait for spring, do it now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the debate tonight is part of a recurring debate that has been going on in the House since May 28 and in the committee on energy, mines and resources since February. Most of us in this House who listened to the hon. member who introduced the motion for the subject under discussion can agree with almost everything he said, because at this particular time it is not a matter that can be dealt with satisfactorily by looking at it purely as an opportunity for partisan advantage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Last Thursday evening I said I was deeply disappointed at the evidence I saw in the September 4 statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and the backing-off from that statement last Thursday is pure, unadulterated sham and humbug, trying to pretend to the consumers that he is their friend. It is obvious to even the smallest child who reads that the idea that Canada could turn back the tide, as King Canute tried to do, is silly and fraudulent.

Tonight the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) should be congratulated for bringing the debate back where it should be, namely, to thinking of the needs of the Canadian people. The subject of the debate tonight is the people of eastern Canada. I hope the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands will forgive me, but I would like to add to that the people of British Columbia, because they will be suffering just as much. Their supply situation is as dangerous as that of the people on the east coast, in particular the islanders.

Tonight we are asked to put our views forward about the procuring of alternative sources of oil for eastern Canada and, I hope, British Columbia. I know that under the tone of this debate I should not recall to the minister the many answers I heard him give in this House and in committee when I warned him and asked him to warn the people of Montreal and eastern Canada of their danger. The minister does not have to look up the dates; he must know them. Some of the dates are January 10, 1973; January 11, 1973; January 23, 1973; and March 7, 1973. I could list 20 different references.

The minister will remember my concern about going to Venezuela last spring, going to Nigeria and, if necessary, even to Libya. I recall in the May 28 debate, which I mentioned the other night, putting forward the fact that the Nigerian government, through its intercity sales organization, was offering anybody 100,000 barrels a day on a long-term contract. No action was taken.

Like the hon. member who introduced this motion, I believe it is too late for recrimination. I will simply leave it by reading one of my questions and the answer. This indicates the type of frustration some of us felt. On January 11, 1973, as recorded at page 168 of Hansard, I asked the minister the following question:

> . . . has the minister reached the conclusion that it would be a wise policy to warn the people of Montreal and the marketing district of Montreal that if there is any cut-off in the Portland pipeline to help the Americans out of their emergency the people would have only about 60 days supply?

The minister replied:

> We are confident that there will be adequate supplies not only in the Montreal refinery area but elsewhere in Canada for Canadian consumption.

I then asked the following question:

> Has the minister seen fit to consult with the government of Quebec in order to arrange a rationing plan in case there is such an emergency?

● (2030)

The minister replied that rationing was one of the possibilities, but he did not see any particular danger. I do not want to pound home this fact. The reason I mention it is that I hope he will not take our advice believing in any sense that we are trying to scuttle him as a minister, or scuttle the government as a government. We simply want to let the people of Canada know that when there is a threat to the comfort or safety of citizens in any part of the country, we in this House pull together as Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I gather from reading the press and listening to the electronic media that the minister has made an approach to Venezuela, admittedly four or five months late, and that the Venezuelan government has restated the position that it took five years ago, namely, that it has hydrocarbon products to sell to any country provided that country has established a government agency to act as purchaser. Because of its long experience of the actions of private enterprise corporations which have sold most of its products in the past, it will only deal with a national entity.

That is how I understand the situation. I do not think there is any question in the mind of anyone that if this is the term and condition that Venezuela or any other country wants, we should set up some form of national energy commission to go there and buy the oil.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I do not care what the name of it is, as long as they are satisfied; and I gather from the Venezuelans that they do not care what it is called. They will sell to that entity what oil they have and it can then be made available to the distributive agencies in this country. The main thing I want to say to the minister is this: Do it now. Don't wait for next spring when the cries are being sent up from deficit areas remote from the main supply areas.

That is a simple request. I know that if the minister takes action along these lines, the NDP will support him. I know that every party in this House will support him on the ground that he is making sure we are provided with the oil necessary to meet our needs. Incidentally, on that point, hardly a day passes without news, through the grapevine which is used by those who sell oil around the world, of someone who has spot oil for sale. If the existing corporations prefer to use their own supply sources and are not interested in this spot oil, then maybe this new energy entity would be interested. But do not let these questions divide us. If the minister is having trouble with his colleagues, he has one responsibility to himself and to the people of this country—to resign and tell us why.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I would think that from what has been said in the House tonight the Governor General would know there are enough people in this chamber to form a government to do the very thing I am talking about. Let it be clearly understood that when the people of this country are in danger of physical discomfort this winter—as they are in danger—we pull together.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands raised the question of how much we would be short, and whether we would be short. I do not think he would mind if I said to him that any person who assumes there will be no shortage does not know what he is talking about. There is bound to be a shortage. If 25 per cent of our oil comes from the Middle East, and if we can believe the Arab nations when they say they will cut back supplies by 25 per cent, we face the prospect of losing 50,000 barrels a day as a minimum—more if supplies are reduced by 30 per cent the next month.

I think we should go out and make sure the oil is available. The nations of the OECD made an agreement early last spring to share what oil was available. But we all noticed in February and March that four of the European countries concerned made a deal with Libya. We noticed, too, that the United States went to Venezuela five months ago. That is when we should have been there looking after the people of Canada. I am simply pointing out that once the demand is ascertained, we can meet it if necessary; buy it from offshore sources if possible, and I believe there is a 90 per cent chance that we can. If we cannot, we can still meet it from western Canadian sources, provided we quit this abrasive, confrontation type of politics we have been witnessing.

Believe me, those of us who come from producing areas are not poor Canadians. If a price sacrifice is required from us, tell us what the terms are and we will meet the challenge. But treat us as human beings you can talk to and trust.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I do not want to press that point, because I hope the words which have been written and spoken in the last four or five days by many people will be forgotten as soon as possible and that as Canadians we can sit down together and get this show on the road again. But I do suggest to the minister that when he meets with his colleagues on November 23 he should tell them it must be assumed there will be a shortage in spite of all our efforts—and I do not say there will necessarily be a shortage if certain things are done. But he should be in a position to tell them that an inventory has been taken of all oil-carrying trucks in eastern Canada and in British Columbia, and of all the rail tank cars in Canada, and that plans have been worked out to spot them in the event of shortages this winter. Suppose a seven-day storm hits Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland or any part of Quebec or Ontario. The people affected should know there is something ready to move in from another part of Canada to ensure they do not go cold in their homes.

I should like to say a few words about storage. I happen to know that in many parts of eastern Canada storage tanks which should be full are empty. I should like to see the government speaking to the provincial ministers who have the power to deal with this situation, ascertain where the empty storage exists and see that it is filled before the freeze hits us at Christmas time. I should like to see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) stand up here tomorrow and promise an accelerated write-off, the same as was given to big business, to anyone who will undertake to put up increased storage facilities. After all, the hon. gentleman was quick enough to impose the export tax which directly affected Alberta revenues. If he did this, the extra storage would be put up and it would serve us well not only this winter but next winter too.

Now I should like to say a word about conservation. I have a file here, as thick as anyone would wish to read, setting out all the ways in which energy can be saved. As an example, despite all the innovation made available by the National Research Council, the insulation of our homes is extremely inefficient. We could save 20 per cent on the fuel bill of every home in this country. Likewise, large quantities of gasoline could be saved if we were to change our driving habits. Speeds over 50 miles an hour use up 20 per cent extra fuel. Let us ask the provinces to enforce a 50 miles an hour speed limit on our icy roads this winter. We could take similar steps. For example, last week the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr.

Bell), I think it was, suggested we should turn off the lights in Ottawa government offices and set an example.

● (2040)

I should like to conclude by hoping that tonight's discussion will give the minister the incentive and the encouragement to stand up to his party. Let him tell them that he is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources; that he has an obligation to the people of Canada, and will not let them down. Let him accept some of these suggestions and for once do something.

For ten years questions have been asked on this side of the House about when we are going to have an energy policy. The government has been asked what is their oil policy, what is their gas policy, what is their policy on research into non-renewables and what is the possibility of research into renewables. But departmental officials take the flat stand, and the minister backs them up, that they are only concerned with those things that are non-renewable. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources has jurisdiction over all resources, not just non-renewables.

I know that not 50 years but seven years from now the source of alternative supply will be increasingly the renewable type of resource, at prices of around $4.50 a barrel for oil and 37 cents per thousand cubic feet of gas, prices that are much lower than today's. These renewable resources are available all around us, in the garbage of our cities, the animal waste of our farms, the sawdust and the bark of our forest industry products. These will provide us with renewable resources and with energy at cheaper prices.

However, nothing is being done along this line because of this worship of the fact that traditionally the department has only been responsible for non-renewable resources and its officials would not be caught dead dealing with such a thing as biomass, the Anglo-Saxon for which is "cow manure". I have known cases where civil servants have been asked to do this sort of work, but they say, "This sounds like agriculture so let's turn it over to that department". Then the Department of Agriculture replies, "This sounds like energy; let's turn it over to them". I have even known a case where the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) has studied a certain proposal and said, "It sounds like agriculture to us" and around the circle we go again.

The minister and his colleagues were elected to make decisions and to give instructions occasionally. So for heaven's sake let them make decisions and take them, at least on such an important subject as this, out of the hands of civil servants who do not want to muddy their feet by raising such mundane subjects as garbage, animal waste and bark. These, Mr. Speaker, are some of our many renewable resources.

I think I have made my point. I hope that all members of my party feel the same way as I. When it comes to facing a challenge before our nation on any issue, I hope hon. members opposite will never find the Progressive Conservative Party lacking in positive proposals.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to congratulate the New Democratic Party representatives for having brought up this matter of extreme urgency, especially for the eastern provinces and in particular for the province of Quebec. I know that we shall probably not solve much tonight but at least, Mr. Speaker, we shall have had the satisfaction of hearing the minister, who certainly has something to say about the oil question, and this will probably reassure the population.

I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the situation in Quebec is far from being reassuring. The election fever in Quebec is now over. As soon as it is, the prices of all types of products are increased, and we must think of the crises that always follow elections.

We are still influenced by the fact that for months the governments kept quiet, probably not to affect their electoral campaign; they have said nothing to the people who are really apprehensive at the thought of the coming winter.

I think that now is the time—and for that I wish to congratulate my hon. colleague from the New Democratic Party—to tell the population what could happen this winter. Will the minister call for fuel rationing? No one knows. But I am sure that the minister knows it more than we do. We have only the newspapers to keep informed, and we read again tonight that Japan wants to secure its supplies. I quote:

> It is a well-known fact that some big countries embassies have often a plethora of personnel, which have been accused, more than once, of being pseudo-diplomats, responsible in fact of intelligence work, not to speak of spying.
>
> Unafraid of accusations of this type, Tokyo has announced recently that it will appoint "oil attachés" to its embassies in important countries which are at the same time oil producers and consumers "so as to be aware of what is going on ... of what is afoot on the oil front and thus better secure supplies to Japan in times of crisis." Their first appointments should be made shortly.

In another column headed "President Nixon and Energy", one can read and I quote:

> President Nixon will announce this week new measures to deal with the shortage of energy in the United States which should be much more serious next winter than United States authorities were willing to admit up to now.

In another column the Netherlands, France, Italy and Greece are mentioned. It is an oil rush. And what is happening to us in Canada, one of the countries that will be running after supply? I think it is time for self-examination. However, I would not want to reject all the blame on the federal government. Today, people in Quebec as well as in the Maritimes ask: What is Ottawa going to do, what can it do? I think that by the same token that will be a good lesson to separatists and show them that they often need the central government because successive administrations in Quebec were somewhat at fault. When there was talk of a pipeline, they feared being fed and accommodated by the west. Today we are caught and unfortunately it is a bit late to wake up.

Quebec is ready now but the oil is not there, conflicts worsen and we are faced with a fait accompli. That is why we are still happy to be able to go to the central government so it will try and reassure somewhat the people on the possibility of securing home heating oil for this winter.

If we cannot secure supply in the usual manner from Saudi Arabia or other countries we have other openings because I heard some reassuring words from the minister. Perhaps he knows other sources of supplies. We are happy that he can have such sources, and we hope he will find some.

I am pleased that this debate took place, not to put all the blame on the federal government, because in Quebec as elsewhere we have all something to be blamed for. We have yet to learn that to govern is to foresee and I hope that the minister will try to accommodate us to the best of his ability so that this winter the central government, together with the Quebec authorities, reach some decisions, not to put all their eggs in the same basket but to ensure a supply that will eliminate conflicts.

I think that it is our own country which can provide us with the best protection. In my view, there is nothing like doing your own thing and if all the eastern provinces, including Quebec, can draw from their own gas resources, they ought to stop counting on other sources in order to meet their daily requirements.

● (2050)

[English]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the motion tonight I should like to follow the general framework put forward in the motion itself, speaking first of the question of supplies to meet the needs of eastern Canada; then I will talk about the potential of interruption and about the measures that have been and will be taken during the next 45 days to meet the demands of the eastern Canadian market.

Secondly, I would talk about the measures we would propose if in fact the threatened interruptions, and they are just threatened and not actual at the present time, become a fact. And, thirdly, I will talk about the system of rationing which would be contemplated if, indeed, interruption reaches a certain level and further rationing of supply does become essential.

I propose, then, to talk firstly of the question of interruption of overseas supply to eastern Canada. Probably the best starting point is the communiqué issued by the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries, bearing Cairo dateline of November 4, 1973, which might be useful to have on the record. I quote:

> The Arab oil ministers met at Kuwait for the second time on November 4 and 5, 1973, and studied the way their first decision was implemented and its result. They have made the decision including:
>
> 1. The total reduction of production by every Arab state implementing the decision shall be 25 per cent of the production of the month of September including the quantities deducted as a result of cutting off oil supplies to the U.S. and the Dutch market. After that the reduction will continue in December by 5 per cent of November production. The reduction will not affect the share of which every friendly state has been importing Arab oil exporting countries during the first nine months of the current year.
>
> 2. Algerian energy minister and the Saudi oil minister shall be sent to the Western capitals to explain the Arab viewpoint regarding the oil decision made at the two meetings held by the Arab oil minister.

To summarize the Arab oil position at the present time as disclosed to us by the diplomatic activity of Canadian representatives abroad and by the activities of my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), the Arab countries have basically divided their oil customers into three lists: firstly, the friendly countries in which list they include the United Kingdom, France and certain other countries to whom, as the report indicates, there would be no cutback whatsoever in oil supplies base upon the first three months of the current year; secondly is the neutral list to which Canada has been assigned, countries which are not to be subject to curtailment as are the so-called unfriendly countries on the third list, such as the United States and The Netherlands.

Those on the neutral list will be entitled to an equitable division of the reduced production from the Arab oil areas. How much that reduced oil production will be depends on a number of variables which cannot be determined at the moment, including how large is the amount to be withdrawn from the United States and the Netherlands, how many more countries will be added to the friendly list and therefore will have first claim on the reduced production, and the number of neutral countries.

So at the moment of speaking, the actual amount of reduction cannot be known in the case of any particular country on that neutral list, except that we do know what the so-called unfriendly group of countries, the United States and The Netherlands, can count on for the time being until the disagreement between the Arab countries and Israel is resolved or until such period of time as the Arab states will be cutting off oil supplies to these two countries.

I suppose the first matter to be considered is that while it is difficult, on the basis of that information, to have a full reading of the amount to be affected, we do at least know some dimensions of the Arab oil supply and, therefore, what some dimensions of the 25 per cent cut for November will be. The announced original cutback of 25 per cent for November, to be followed by a further 5 per cent each month to be extended to the end of the current winter, represents on the average about 21 per cent of world exports of crude oil to consuming countries.

Considering our own crude oil and home heating supplies, that is, our home supplies in Canada as of October 1, we anticipate that the loss of home heating fuel in eastern Canada will be something just under 10 per cent of the estimated demand for home heating oil during that period. I think that even before the Arab-Israeli war one could fairly say there had been a breakdown in the private supply system which had hitherto been run by private organizations, that is, by the companies in eastern Canada. Indeed, the government was active during the summer to try to remove the deficiencies of this particular supply system.

I think it is fair to point out that the eastern Canadian market was partially supplied by overseas suppliers, the majority of supply came from refineries in eastern Canada which refined either west of the Ottawa Valley line in refinery centres such as Sarnia and Toronto with western Canadian crude, or east of the Ottawa Valley line refining petroleum which came from overseas. There was, however, very substantial competition in respect of home heating fuel oil, and also in respect of gasoline and other refined products which came into the market from overseas, particularly in the form of gasoline east of the Ottawa Valley line, but in the form of home heating oil both east and west of the Ottawa Valley line.

In consequence, consumers east of the line had the advantage of prices being kept down by competition which for 10 or 12 years existed between independent distributors who were competing with their share of crude being imported, and domestic refineries which refined the product within this country. Because of this competition, however, because of the share of the market that the independents had, the refinery capacity never expanded to meet the full market demand. Of course, in the current year, when the international price of refined products went very much higher than the Canadian refined price, the independents found themselves in a financial squeeze which made it virtually prohibitive for them to buy the product abroad. What are the consequences of this policy?

● (2100)

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Hon. members say "question". For 10 to 12 years the eastern consumer got a break in lower prices. In a speech made in Vancouver, the leader of the NDP (Mr. Lewis) suggested that if he had been in charge of the government, he would have established the pipeline to Montreal. The consequence would have been, if he was to assure a market such as there was in Toronto, that all through that 10 to 12-year period the consumers would have paid a higher price for the refined product.

Mr. Lewis: Not necessarily.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There was a period of time during which the consumer in eastern Canada got a break, and on the whole was happy to get the break.

I will just make one comment about what the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) had to say about the ten long years that he spent warning the government about the threatened interruption and danger to eastern Canada from the structure of the market, from the fact that the pipeline did not go to Montreal. I think it is fair to remind the House that the division of the market east and west of the Ottawa Valley line was introduced by the government of which that hon. gentleman was a member. Indeed, it was introduced by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) who was then minister of trade and commerce. So that whatever danger may exist now, existed in 1961 when that policy was introduced. Apparently the hon. gentleman was not concerned enough about the policy at the time he brought it in, but now he is.

Mr. Gillies: That a specious reasoning; it is spurious.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I do agree with the hon. gentleman that it is of no great avail to look back at past years. In his case he cannot afford to look back at past years because the structure of the market is one upon which he and his colleagues decided. As I have said, the consequence of that market has been that for 10 to 12 years that eastern consumer got a break in lower prices, although the Ontario consumer paid higher prices in order to subsidize the Albertan industry and make its production possible. But with the drying up of the international supply, the eastern Canadian market has been left short of supply in the current year, and we expect that Canadian importers are making every effort to maintain their supplies of overseas oil.

In this connection the House will recall that in 1956, 1957 and 1967 our oil industry was highly successful in assuring a continuity of supply to eastern Canada. However, it must be recalled that the present crisis has more serious dimensions than the crises of past years which were largely crises of transportation rather than a physical curtailment of overseas oil. Efforts to maintain supply include at least one extraordinary purchase arrangement entered into at short notice and high cost.

The companies are, of course, well aware of the importance that the government attaches to their discharging their obligation to the community. Although the oil companies in eastern Canada have been operating essentially at capacity and at maximum middle-distillate yield since May of this year, nevertheless, they are now looking at what further steps might be taken to increase the yield of middle-distillates during the winter at the expense of heavy fuel oils. One of the ways of doing so would be to require the relaxation of certain of the regulations applicable here, and I have in mind in particular environmental regulations with regard to specifications for heavy fuel oil and home heating fuel.

Mr. Fraser: That is a cheap way out.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): One of the principal ways of providing further supplies to the Canadian market is to try to arrange for the further movement of western Canadian crude oil to the Quebec market. Prior to the outbreak of hostilities in the Middle East, Canada was already experiencing the stringency of overseas crude oil supply in terms of very high marginal prices, if not in terms of physical shortage. As a consequence, shipments of western Canadian oil from Ontario to Quebec in September averaged 16,000 barrels a day, and in October they reached the level of about 36,000 barrels a day.

Our best estimate is that between 70,000 and 80,000 barrels a day of western oil is already scheduled to move through the Seaway in November to relieve the supply situation at Montreal, and the Ministry of Transport is chartering tanker space which could contribute another 10,000 barrels a day to this movement in November. At the same time, the proposal is to effectively bring the Ottawa Valley area of eastern Canada onto products supply from Ontario refineries, thus relieving a demand on the Montreal refining complex.

For this purpose it is proposed that a reversal be arranged in the operations of TransNorthern Pipeline and that option is being actively canvassed with the owners of TransNorthern and the co-operation of the National Energy Board. As a back-up to the Ontario supply, arrangements are also being made with prairie refineries. Some companies are already shipping heating oil by pipeline from the prairie refineries to Ontario as well as catering for some demand in western Ontario, for example, in the Lake of the Woods area which is normally met from Sarnia and Toronto plants.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain asked a question with regard to the availability of tank truck and tank car space. There is indeed a meeting of the transportation companies in the city tomorrow for the purpose of reporting to the government on their assessment of the availability of tank car facilities.

Finally, with regard to further possible movement of crude from Vancouver to eastern Canada, either through the Portland pipeline to Montreal or to the Atlantic area, it is dependent on tanker rates and the possibility exists of moving perhaps up to 50,000 barrels a day spare capacity in the TransMountain pipeline.

With regard to the contingency plans under way, the government has established with the industry, which has had the prime responsibility for the marketing system in Canada, a technical advisory committee on petroleum supply and demand. This committee groups the leading importers of crude oil and petroleum products in eastern Canada and will be meeting this week for the purpose of reporting again on the current status of inventories, on some possibilities within control for the purpose of shifting supplies to short areas from surplus areas, and for the purpose of participating with government in further contingency plans.

I think it is fair to observe at this point that all of these measures can be taken at this point without any damage being done to the current export trade which we have under way to U.S. markets. The crude oil deliveries to Quebec outlined previously can be made without impairing the predetermined volume of our exports to the United States. The Energy Board's established procedure is to take account of domestic needs, including Quebec requirements, prior to licensing monthly exports to the United States. At present this can be achieved without any interruption in that particular program.

Finally, in terms of the emergency situation where a special demand will be put on the western Canadian oil producing capacity, at present, as hon. members know, the industry is operating substantially at its economic capacity. Any significant increase in production, for instance to meet domestic requirements not specifically provided for on a monthly basis, and which could not be supplied out of inventory, would require emergency production measures in Alberta. These measures, involving relaxation of conservation practices such as gas flaring, would require the approval of the Alberta Energy Conservation Board.

• (2110)

Mr. Bawden: You had better phone them.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would point out to the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden) that up to the moment we have not had an interruption in supplies.

The additional production which would be forthcoming is of rather modest proportions, 50,000 to 100,000 barrels per day for a few months, versus the 100,000 to 150,000 barrels per day previously advised; but the figures are not insignificant and they would, of course, depend on the judgment of the Alberta board. If emergency production capability were called upon immediately, there would be pipeline capacity to handle an additional 35,000 barrels per day into Ontario for eastward transportation by vessel.

In addition, the government has been authorized and is currently in the process of supplementing individual corporate purchases with purchases for government account, particularly for distillate heating oil supplies, to cover any interruption that might occur during the coming winter.

I have indicated a number of ways, both domestic and foreign, in which supplies of oil to the eastern Canadian market would be supplemented. Now I would like to make a brief reference to some of the means that could be used in order to control the demand curve, the way in which a voluntary emergency use restraint program would be introduced, one in fact that has been prepared; and, secondly, I wish to indicate plans that are being completed for a mandatory allocation program in case it is required.

First I wish to make reference to the voluntary emergency use restraint program which is available for implementation at such time as there is an interruption. Fuel oil requirements for the heating of federal buildings would be reduced by turning down the thermostats three degrees to five degrees and making certain adjustments in air-conditioning and ventilation equipment. Secondly, fuel oil requirements for the heating of commercial buildings would be reduced by these same measures. The government of Ontario has indicated its wish to co-operate in such a program, and the other provincial governments will be asked to co-operate in the same way.

Fuel oil requirements for homes would be reduced by turning down thermostats three degrees, with the temperature to be kept at the 70-degree level. Fourthly, fuel oil requirements for space heating in industrial buildings would be lowered by similar temperature and ventilation adjustments, but no restrictions are planned at the moment in fuel supply for the manufacturing processes.

An hon. Member: Wear an extra sweater.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. it is becoming a little difficult for the Chair to hear the words of the minister.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If there is full co-operation across Canada in this program, fuel oil requirements could be cut by about 10 per cent. This would be the result of the voluntary program.

The next stage in demand control would be emergency requirement measures to reduce demand by a mandatory allocation program. Should the oil supply fall below 10 per cent of demand, a mandatory allocation program would be introduced. Under this plan, wholesalers of petroleum products will cut back on their deliveries by a percentage equivalent to the supply shortfall. The more essential industries will continue to receive close to their requirements in order to avoid any restrictions on food supplies and other essential goods and services.

A mandatory program is now under preparation but it is not expected to be required. However, if it should be required it will be quickly implemented in order to ensure equity of energy supply throughout the country and the full protection of essential services.

Mr. Stanfield: Is this based on consultation?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Such a program would be employed up to the point at which the supply of oil fell 25 per cent below demand. Only then would it be necessary to institute a formal rationing program. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has said that basically this is unconstitutional.

Mr. Stanfield: I did not, Mr. Speaker. I apologize for interrupting the minister. I asked if that is based on consultation.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Oh, I see. I would point out to the Leader of the Opposition, who has had his mouth open through most of my speech rather than his ears, that we are talking about a program which we do not expect will come into existence but which has been a matter of discussion with, among others, the Alberta Energy Conservation Board.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would think that, unlike the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Stanfield: No, Mr. Speaker, not on a point of order but just to ask if the minister would permit a question.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I will be glad to have a question, but first I will complete my remarks. Before the interruption I was pointing out that such a program would be implemented up to the point at which the supply of oil fell 25 per cent below demand. Only then would it be necessary to institute a formal rationing program.

Within the federal government a special committee has been formed, representative of the relevant departments, for the purpose of planning and effecting such measures if they should be required, and the assistance of the industry has been enlisted through the technical liaison committee. All I can say, again, is that there have not been these interruptions yet, but if the Arab states continue to go forward with their intentions there will be at least some diversion of oil supplies from the Canadian market. On this basis, through the acquisition of supplies, is necessary for government account—and by saying so I do not absolve the industry from taking special measures to acquire supplies—and through transfers from western Canada, either through the Seaway or by tank trucks and tank cars to eastern Canada, and by efforts to restrict demand on unessential services, we would seek to provide for the contingency which we all anticipate this winter. In conclusion, we hope we will have the co-operation of hon. gentlemen on all sides of the House should this become necessary.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the minister indicate what kind of consultative machinery has been established with regard to the hypothetical compulsory rationing system which will only come into effect if it is really necessary, not only with the Alberta people but with the people who may be affected by the rationing? What consultative machinery has been set up, and has the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) been included in this—because at least he may be able to turn out the lights in his own office building even if he cannot do anything with regard to the Arab states?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As I indicated in my remarks, which the hon. gentleman heard, we have already discussed these programs with the minister of energy for the province of Ontario and he has indicated the wish of his government to give support. We have discussed the matter with a number of provincial premiers, and I anticipate I will be meeting the Premier of New Brunswick during the current week and anticipate the possibility of meeting all five eastern premiers at a convenient date in the immediate future.

With regard to further supplies of oil for the eastern Canadian market, as I said, representatives of the Alberta board are participating in this particular committee. So that indeed there have been extensive consultations, and we would hope to have the co-operation of all provinces in putting the programs into effect.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair finds itself in some difficulty. I gave the minister extra time because his speech did provoke numerous sallies, particularly between the front benches, which I thought were in the nature of interruptions. The minister has gone over his time, but if it is the wish of the House that members ask questions, I will recognize the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates), the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse), and the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) on questions.

• (2120)

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, perhaps you could ask again whether the House would permit questions. If I understood correctly, you said it was not agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Somebody on my right said no.

An hon. Member: John Reid said no.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if you would put the question again. I would be delighted to have questions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates).

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak, not to ask a question of the minister.

Mr. Douglas: I have a brief question for the minister, Mr. Speaker. He has dealt mainly with the possible curtailment of supplies of oil from the Middle East, upon which we have depended for about 25 per cent of our imports. He said nothing about security of supply from Venezuela, upon which we depend for about 60 per cent of our imports. Has the minister had any consultation with Exxon, or the government of Venezuela which would indicate that the amount of oil which we usually import from Venezuela will be available this coming winter?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this question with the government of Venezuela. They expressed it as their position that all existing contracts should be honoured in their terms, which in specific terms means that the producing companies in that country would be expected to make the deliveries that they have contracted, wherever that may be, and particularly to Canada. From that government's standpoint it is their intention to see that their contracts are honoured.

It is difficult to nail down the question of whether there would be intervention of the companies, but—I have said it before and I will say it again—we would expect that the companies, Imperial, Shell Canada and Gulf would continue to honour their contracts and their obligations to the Canadian market. In the case of companies like Imperial and Texaco, they control the acquisition and overseas shipment of their particular supplies. They have made this point to us, and we intend to hold them to their obligations to meet the Canadian market.

One aspect has come up, although it has not been confirmed, and that is that Venezuela has in contemplation the possibility of taking their royalty in crude rather than in terms of cash payments. We have a mission in Venezuela which is active at the moment in pursuing that. At the moment we do not anticipate interruptions in our Venezuelan supply, although they will bear careful watching as time goes on.

Mr. Stackhouse: In light of the minister's stress on the hypothetical nature of his rationing proposals, and in light of the rumours in Toronto at the weekend that arrangements for printing of ration coupons, and so on, have been made, would the minister inform the House if any such arrangements have been made?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I cannot specifically say if they have been made or not, as this falls within the responsibility of the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer). However, I think it would be a wise precaution, in view of the fact that it would take some time to prepare this particular system, to take all steps to put it in place just as soon as it would be needed.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, in light of the export tax on crude oil to the United States, and in light of the drastic measures taken by Westcoast Transmission of British Columbia to curtail some of the commitments to the United States, what steps has the minister taken to assure supplies of home heating fuels to consumers in British Columbia this winter, in particular since they have just finished facing a crisis with natural gas?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the British Columbia market is one that will bear careful watching in this regard. We will look at the possibility of increasing the throughout of the Transmission pipeline in order to ensure additional supplies of home heating oil to British Columbia. We anticipate co-operation by both suppliers and users on that line, but there may be a need to supplement present supplies and this is one of the circumstances under consideration now.

Mr. Oberle: Does the minister expect there to be a cut-off of supplies from offshore suppliers of that commodity?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Of home heating oil?

Mr. Oberle: Yes.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I believe the inventories have been down, and very probably for the commercial reasons that they have been down in eastern Canada. In the case of the British Columbia market there is the advantage of a direct pipeline connection to refinery capacity and it is believed that arrangements to supply can be made, but it is a situation that bears careful watching.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, the minister indicated that he has had some consultation with the Ontario government and plans next week to discuss the matter with the Premier of New Brunswick—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): This week.

Mr. Lundrigan: —this week, and some time in the future with the premiers of the other Atlantic provinces. Is he telling the House that he has not to date, bearing in mind the almost imminent problem facing the eastern part of Canada and the Atlantic provinces with respect to supply, apprised the other premiers of the circumstances with respect to supply, or even his officials? I hope he can say that his officials have made detailed indications to the Atlantic premiers on the matter of supply.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. gentleman that there has been no supply interruption as yet. It seems appropriate, in anticipation of a decision by the Arab states, to have such a meeting. Initiative has been taken to see if we can arrange a meeting with either the premiers or the responsible ministers for the purpose of apprising them of the facts of the situation and of the kind of measures which we have in contemplation.

Mr. Lundrigan: Is the minister saying, for the public record, that he has not taken the premiers of the Atlantic provinces into his confidence? He has stood here tonight and told us about the possibility of rationing and about turning thermostats down. Is he saying that he has not told the men who are responsible for over two million Canadians that there will be a supply interruption or a rationing problem?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As I said, Mr. Speaker, and I will repeat it again for the hon. member, the interruption is potential only. I think it is advisable that we should have full discussions, however, and arrangements are now being made for that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), followed by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras), followed by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when we agreed some minutes ago to continue the minister's time for questions to be put to him, Your Honour had named about four questioners and we thought that we were agreeing to a limited question period. But if this goes on there will be no more speakers. We think there should be a cut-off fairly soon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize four questioners, if I may: the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras), the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty), and the fourth as my eye chances.

Mr. Fraser: The minister spoke—

Mr. Fortin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know on what basis hon. members are allowed to ask their questions. How is it that not one member of my party was given the floor, yet I have been rising five or six times until now?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I shall do my best to recognize the hon. member, or one of his associates, as the fourth questioner. The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser).

Mr. Fraser: The minister spoke a moment ago of trying to find extra supplies of Canadian oil for the British Columbia market. In the event that supplies become short in British Columbia this winter, can the minister give us any assurance that the extra supply he contemplates will not be diverted to eastern Canada?

● (2130)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we see an obligation to look after the demands of all Canadians in this particular situation and to make an equitable distribution of excess production available for this purpose.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Dupras: Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell us what will be the time-frame for the construction of the pipeline to Montreal?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would think, Mr. Speaker, that we are talking of an 18-month or two-year period, depending upon the decision. The decision is in process but, of course, an application to the National Energy Board for this will be required.

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the minister. I wonder whether the minister or his officials have been able to work out, barring any unforeseen difficulties between now and next spring, what the cost per gallon of heating oil and gasoline will be next spring in Ontario?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can do that. I think that any prediction one might have made up to this point would have been ruled out by the effect of international actions. As the hon. member knows, the government has frozen the price of these commodities in the west and in Ontario markets but is prepared, for the purpose of supply, to allow cost increases for home heating fuel oil in particular cases. The intention would be to carry that through to January.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) is recognized for a question.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

In the event of a sudden shortage of oil supplies from the Middle-East, can the hon. minister tell the House whether the CNR or CPR have an adequate number of tank cars to supply the eastern provinces, and particularly Quebec, with oil from Alberta? Do they have a sufficient number of tank cars to ensure adequate supplies or at least minimum supplies in the event of a sudden shortage of oil from the Middle East?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as I have just stated, officials of the railway companies and other carriers will meet tomorrow officials from my department and from the Department of Transport to discuss the possible use of means of transport such as those mentioned by the hon. member and to determine to what extent it is possible to supply the eastern Canadian market from western oil reserves. I cannot at this time tell exactly what the possibilities are but a meeting will be held tomorrow and after tomorrow I will have a better notion of the possibilities of this region.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Darmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) and to other hon. members who wished to ask questions. In the immortal words of Mr. Speaker, I hope they will be patient as they may be recognized when the next, perhaps more regular question period comes around. I now call on the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates).

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, there has been a short interlude between the speech made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and the beginning of my speech. Maybe, just maybe, we shall derive some benefit from that interlude, as questioners probably secured more information from the minister's answers than was contained in the minister's speech. Speaking as a member of long standing—

An hon. Member: And good standing.

Mr. Coates: —and good standing, as an hon. member suggests, I am disappointed to note that the high level of debate initiated by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), who was followed by the hon. member for Qu'appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) and then by the spokesman for the Social Credit party, should have deteriorated into the usual nonsensical type of argument that was produced by the minister. Members of the other parties indicated that they were Canadians first and partisan second. They are anxious to find a solution for all Canada and want out of the mess that this government has got us into. They want to do something about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: Now, for the benefit of the minister, I want to talk about the Atlantic provinces.

An hon. Member: He can't take it; he's leaving.

Mr. Coates: The minister is leaving his seat. As often happens with this government, when you talk about the Atlantic provinces the government seems to think that Canada stops at the borders of Quebec and New Brunswick. As Canadians in the Atlantic provinces, we have contributed more and received less than the people of any area of this nation. We have contributed more because we opted for Canada in 1867, and while we have watched others derive greater benefit, we have not given up on Canada. You do not hear cries about separatism from my area of Canada. However, Mr. Speaker, we feel that the government has thrown us to the wolves. It has shown unbelievable lack of foresight in making sure that we have a simple supply of sufficient fuel with which to protect ourselves and our families during the coming winter. No part of Canada faces harsher winters than the Atlantic provinces, and in no part of Canada are there fewer dollars to meet the escalating demands associated with the increasing prices of oil and gas.

One of the things my leader has offered Atlantic Canada and all Canada is the right to the benefits associated with our offshore oil and gas exploration. Yet what has this government given us? Its attitude with respect to our offshore resources has been arrogant and intransigent. Clearly, the government's attitude has affected materially the exploration for these resources. There has been no agreement. It was all right for some provinces to enlarge their territories by pushing north. The Maritimes cannot push their territory in any direction except to the sea. They are told that they cannot have their offshore resources and that they must be shared with the rest of the people of Canada. All too often the people of Atlantic Canada feel government concern stops at the Quebec and New Brunswick border.

Again, during these days when we are debating this critical situation we hear statements concerning the expansion of the pipeline to Montreal. Mr. Speaker, we are part of Canada. If pipeline extensions are required for the protection of the public, those extensions are required for the Atlantic provinces. They should be to the Atlantic provinces. We must tear down the type of Berlin wall the government is trying to erect between Quebec and the Atlantic provinces. Indeed, Quebec has been willing and anxious to join with us in our efforts to secure justice with regard to offshore oil and gas. At the very least, the federal government should make an effort on our behalf, similar to the effort it is making with the province of Quebec, with respect to the development of our resources.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain did not argue with the government. He tried to act as a good Canadian. He ignored the many areas in which he could have been terribly critical with regard to the government's lack of appreciation of problems that the country faces. In looking for a scapegoat, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources referred back to the Diefenbaker administration of 1961 and suggested that the blame for dividing eastern Canada from western Canada in the matter of oil use rests on that administration.

● (2140)

This government is like Rip van Winkle: it has slept and slept and slept. Suddenly it has now awakened to discover there is a crisis afoot because the situation today is not the same as it was in 1961. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain could have taken that and other situations where lack of foresight on the part of this government was glaringly obvious and raked them over the coals. That was not his objective. It was not his reason for speaking tonight. His reason was to try to find for Canadians the most realistic solution to the problems that face this country today. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources refused completely to accept that. All he wanted was to get into a fight with the opposition. At one point he said the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) sat there with his mouth open all through his speech. No wonder his mouth was open; he must have been aghast at what he was hearing from the minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: I feel certain that some Canadians who would not believe it before, can now appreciate why the Premier of Alberta and his government were shocked at the way this government has been acting with regard to the oil and gas crisis that now faces this country.

There are many other areas I would like to cover but I cannot do it in the 15 minutes available to me. However, I want to point out that this government should have been doing something that was initiated by the Diefenbaker government in 1958. That was the development of a national power grid. That concept was kicked off by the then prime minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), in 1958 during a speech in Kitimat. It was followed up by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. When this government took office in 1963, it laid it to rest. It has been buried ever since. That is a vital and important link in producing energy equality in this country today.

This government should have been moving forward with all the energy at its disposal toward harnessing the Bay of Fundy tides. Every member from the maritime provinces, regardless of political affiliation, agreed we should move forward with the development of power from the Fundy tides. What happened? It took over a year to convince the government it should re-examine the 1969 tidal power report which said that although the project was feasible, it was not possible because of the high interest rates.

Between 1969 and the spring of 1971, all members from the maritimes, regardless of party, had to fight with the government in order to get the report re-examined. Where is it now? It has been in the process of being re-examined for 2½ years. We will soon have to set up another committee to find the re-examiners. It just goes on and on. That is a resource that would have made a tremendous difference to the energy supply of the Atlantic provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: If it had been undertaken in 1969, we would be halfway toward the development of one of the great power potentials of this country. It ranks with the South Saskatchewan dam, the Columbia River system, the St. Lawrence Seaway and other great Canadian projects. It would have made a great difference in eliminating regional economic disparity in our area. It would have produced a resource the whole nation could have utilized, and it would have alleviated to a tremendous degree the problems we face today.

I could go on and on but I will just say this. if this government thinks it can solve the crisis we now face by fighting with the other parties in this House of Commons, it has to be out of its mind. The attitude of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has to change drastically, especially if he is now going to meet with the premiers of the other provinces. Are we to get the same kind of reaction from the other premiers that he unfortunately got from the premier of Alberta? I hope not. I hope we do not get the kind of reaction that was indicated here tonight to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands for the type of realistic, sensible Canadian speeches they made with no indication of partisan politics associated with them.

This matter is too important to all the people of Canada to be putting up with partisan politics. The minister had better realize that fact and start meeting with all members of parliament on an equal footing, to try to collect from them the very best he can in order to solve the most serious crisis that has faced this country in a long, long time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with the last speaker about the need not to be too partisan. I cannot quite agree that he carried out his injunction in his own speech. I suggest the debate has already proved valuable. We have had some information this evening in the spirit in which the last speaker suggested. I am not going to castigate the minister for not having all the necessary information at his fingertips.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Lewis: I do not think it is possible. I do not think it would be possible for any member of this House, except some irresponsible catcaller, to have immediately available all the information about the cutback from the Middle East, a possible cutback from Venezuela, what may be available from tankers moving oil from western Canada to eastern Canada, and all the rest. I do not think any reasonable person should ask for statistical data of that sort at this stage. However, I think it is important to have this debate and get from the government at least some indication as to what it is thinking and is preparing to do. What is even more important is to have the Canadian people, particularly in eastern Canada and British Columbia, and indeed throughout the country, alerted to the problems that may face them this winter.

The first point I would underline is there now appears to be agreement among three parties, the other party did not say anything about it, that we need to have some kind of national agency for direct purchase of oil that may be available from Nigeria, Libya or Venezuela, as well as oil that may be available elsewhere. It should be a direct agency of the Canadian government. I suggest that is one of the most certain ways of guaranteeing supply to eastern Canada.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) said that he is in favour of such an agency. I hope he was speaking for all his colleagues, including the 19 Conservative members from Alberta. I assume he spoke for all his colleagues. The idea of a national petroleum corporation would then receive the support of the Conservatives. We have proposed it for many months, so the government can rely on our support. Therefore, there is no reason whatever why the government should delay setting up this essential national agency to protect Canadians, east and west, against the failure of supply of oil products in this country.

• (2150)

Perhaps there were difficulties in cabinet about the idea of a national petroleum corporation. Of course, I do not know, but I would assume there have been some difficulties because the proposal was made by the minister's own department as long ago as last April. Otherwise I cannot for the life of me understand why there should have been this long delay, unless there was a difference of opinion. But the minister can now go back to cabinet and assure the other members of the government that this idea now has the full support of the opposition—

An hon. Member: Oh, yeah!

Mr. Lewis: Apparently not, because the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) says, "Oh, yeah!" So there is not full support on the part of all members in this House.

Mr. Paproski: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I did not say that, and I do not think these innuendoes should be made by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). What I said was that the government had no oil policy.

Mr. Alexander: I heard that.

Mr. Paproski: I do not appreciate what the hon. member for York South has said, and I think he should withdraw that statement.

Mr. Lewis: I thought I heard the hon. member for Edmonton Centre make the kind of interjection which suggested he was not in agreement. I gather from his remarks on his question of privilege that he is in agreement with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

Mr. Paproski: Again, I wish the hon. member would withdraw that statement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: I am not quite sure which statement I am now being asked to withdraw.

Mr. Paproski: Both.

Mr. Lewis: Apparently I am to withdraw both. Well, I cannot. Either the hon. member is in agreement with his hon. friend from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, or he is not. Assuming he is, the government knows that every member of this House is in agreement with the idea of a national petroleum corporation. If this particular gentleman is not in agreement, I still believe the majority of members in this House are in favour of such a necessary national agency to protect Canadians, and I urge the government to lose no time.

I was also disappointed that the minister should have said nothing about the extension of the pipeline. I agree with the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) that the line ought not to stop in Montreal but that it should go further east. I do not take back what I said in Vancouver. I believe the division of Canada into two markets to protect the oil corporations of this country, introduced by a Tory government in 1961, may have given the people of eastern Canada a slight advantage in price for 10 or 12 years but it has now placed them in a position of danger, a position they would never have occupied had Canadian resources as well as offshore resources been available to them.

I do not accept the proposition that the extension of the pipeline would necessarily have meant large increases in the price to eastern Canadians because obviously what was needed, and has been discussed for years, is a reversible line through which western oil could flow to the east and offshore oil, as it is available, go in the other direction during certain periods, averaging the cost and offering the same price to all Canadians—and a lower price than the multinational corporations are presently imposing.

This is why we support the export tax. Members of the Conservative Party keep railing against the minister for having made Premier Lougheed mad at him. Well, if he did so on the issue of the export tax it is a good issue on which to get him mad, in my submission. What would have been the situation had the export tax not been imposed? I made some calculations myself. It would have meant an extra amount of money, in terms of exports of about 1.2 million barrels a day, of around $57 million a month to the multinational corporations, of which the Alberta government—one talks about the Alberta people at the moment, so it is the Alberta government and people—would have got about $13 million.

So $44 million of the $57 million a month would have gone into the pockets, already well filled, of the multinational corporations. In the course of a year, the government of Alberta might have received about $150 million. But the multinational corporations would have got $533 million. Members of the House who are anxious to give this kind of money to the multinational corporations at the expense of the Canadian people are welcome to continue their catcalls and their defence of their corporate friends in the oil industry. My colleagues and I are glad that our proposal for an export tax has been accepted by the government.

I, personally, believe that the Alberta people should receive more than the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) has suggested. There is no reason why they should not get a very much larger part of the $1.90 export tax, the remainder being used in the way the government has indicated to help develop new sources of energy for the people of this country.

Let me conclude by saying this: I am convinced there is no reason for the problems which now face the people of Canada in the area of energy and petroleum resources. Our country has enough oil. Our country has enough natural gas. Our country has enough refining facilities or, if it has not, it should have. Our country has sufficient transportation facilities to meet the needs of all the people from our own Canadian resources, should there be difficulty in getting supplies from elsewhere, or, if it does not, it should have.

An hon. Member: So move them out.

Mr. Lewis: Whoever said that, God save this country and the people of this country if these people protecting the oil companies of western Canada were to get their hands on the levers of power at any time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (2200)

Mr. Lewis: The only reason our country is experiencing such major difficulty this winter is that our oil and petroleum resources have been sold out by consecutive federal and provincial governments, particularly the Social Credit and Tory governments of Alberta, to the multinational corporations without concern for the welfare and future of this country. I think that until through this parliament Canadians regain control of the natural resources of this country and take away the power that the multinational corporations now have, periodic crises are bound to continue in the future.

I warn that this winter is not the only winter of crisis in this area. As consumption and demand increases in this country and throughout the world, we will continue to have serious crises in the future, or will unless we take control of our natural resources for the benefit of Canadians instead of for the benefit of multinational corporations.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I was rather surprised at the remarks of the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) who listened to the minister's speech and then said he had not heard what was said. I am surprised because the question was: What are we going to do in case of emergency? The minister clearly outlined, not in great deal but in generalities, the steps that would be taken and I should like to review those steps very briefly.

The minister indicated that with a 10 per cent cut in supplies, the government would take voluntary measures such as keeping down the use of fuel with the assistance of various agencies, private businesses, home dwellers, and so on. He went into some detail on that matter. He then talked about mandatory allotments in the event of a 25 per cent cut, with the government taking some very strong measures. With any loss of supply greater than that, he spoke of rationing. I thought the whole thing was very clear and I find it difficult to understand why the hon. member did not hear his remarks.

As a member who sat patiently all winter on the parliamentary committee on national resources and public works, I spent a great deal of time discussing the supply situation in the long term. If I recollect the various discussions that we had, it seemed to me there was an unbelievable equanimity on the Tory side in regard to this situation. I kept hearing phrases like "we have unlimited oil", "there is no shortage", "why do we want export quotas?", "all we need is more money for exploration".

Tonight I heard one or two other things as well. I must admit that during the debate on October 25, a week or so ago, I could not find anything put forward by the Tories in terms of policy; I heaad only negative suggestions. But I did hear two new things tonight, one in reference to a matter that had been referred to in the committee, alternate energy forms. I think the hon. member from Saskatchewan mentioned the biomass area. He has been very persistent in discussing alternate areas of supply. Certainly I think that is one that should be examined.

In addition, the hon. member mentioned a marketing board. Perhaps I did not hear him correctly, but as I understood what he said I did not hear him say that this party was in favour of the setting up of a Canadian petroleum corporation. Whether he did say so or not, I do not know; the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) seemed to indicate that he thought he had. I think one of the problems we have is finding out how his party feels on this question. I did hear some very good comments about conservation, and again that is an area about which the hon. member from Saskatchewan is very much concerned.

I suggest the speeches made in the debate on energy on October 25 should be looked at very carefully. I think hon. members will find very few suggestions made by members on the opposition side I would like to ask them several questions. For example, what is their policy in regard to an all-Canadian pipeline? How do they feel about this? What is their policy in regard to a Canadian petroleum corporation? I heard no answer to that question this evening, though I may have missed it. What is their policy on federal government involvement in development of the tar sands? I heard no discussion of that.

[Mr. Lewis.]

It is not my nature to be partisan, Mr. Speaker, so I will now deal with the issues that have been raised and continue in this vein. A question was asked during the question period today about raising more money for energy supply. I wondered all last winter whether there was money to develop additional petroleum supplies, particularly Alberta crude. I think there is a great deal of question about how much oil can be supplied from the western basin if additional money is found.

In this regard I should like to quote Professor Ken North, one of Canada's best known petroleum geologists, a man who is not employed by an oil company. According to Professor North, the CPA--that is, the Canadian Petroleum Association—forecast of reserves for the western Canadian basin is 45 billion barrels. He pointed out that 50 years of exploration, and almost 25 years since the discovery at Leduc, the combination of 250 drilling rigs, 100 to 150 seismic crews and the expenditure of more than $11 billion has discovered a little over a quarter of this quantity. All this money and time spent on discovering just over one-quarter of 45 billion barrels.

I should also like to quote the National Energy Board's review published in December of 1972, which was submitted to the committee in January, 1973. The review states:

> The current remaining reserve level is about eight billion barrels with about five billion barrels having been produced. These 13 billion barrels are considered by many knowledgeable observers to be about 60 to 70 per cent of the ultimate crude reserves to be found and developed in this region outside of the frontier areas.

Whichever way one looks at it, it seems there is a total of between 15 billion to 20 billion barrels, of which we have used up six billion to seven billion barrels, leaving between nine and 12 billion barrels, a 15 years' supply at current production rates, ten years' supply if you have an exponential factor similar to past experience.

Our greatest concern in this area, aside from the situation we are facing this winter, has to be for the tar sands themselves. The tar sands are a massive oil reserve. There are some 65 billion barrels accessible through normal mining methods, and over 300 billion barrels which may become accessible by means not yet developed through in situ technology.

● (2210)

However, to get one billion barrels a day, which would be at least what we will need by 1980 as Alberta crude runs out, would require about $15 billion of investment, the removal of 200 million cubic yards of sand per day, the removal of oil from that sand and the involvement of a whole series of problems that are well explained and developed in a document the Alberta government drew up and which was finally dealt with by the Alberta legislature. Let me read just one passage from this document which was dealt with extensively in the last decade:

> Unfortunately, however, most of the tar sands research appears to have been directed toward bituminum extraction processes, mining methods, or in situ experiments. We are not aware of any research with respect to tailings disposal, reclamation or revegetation. This apparent emphasis on winning the resource is again an indication of the heavy influence of the conventional crude oil industry.

This is not a statement by the Committee for Independent Canada, or from Pollution Probe; it is a statement from a very serious, top-level group composing 41 people in the Alberta government and commissioned by the executive committee to put it together. There is a series of similar statements which refer to what happens to the water table when the oil is removed from the tar sands, and various conservation aspects which have not been developed. This is one important problem that has not yet been faced.

Like many members of my party, I maintain that there must be a much greater federal involvement in the tar sands development. I think this is absolutely essential, for several reasons, the first being that this is perhaps our greatest single resource and it must be developed by Canadians for Canadians. In this respect some suggest that in our industry we do not have Canadian people with the technology or ability to solve these problems. I suggest that is nonsense. This document points out that we have Canadians with the necessary skills. This potential should be developed by Canada, using Canadian technicians, and the only way to do this is through massive federal involvement.

In reference to a national petroleum corporation, I support the idea and I think this is something we are sorely in need of because of its importance. It is important for a number of reasons, one being that it will enable us to develop Canadian ownership in the industry. At the present time we own a very small portion of the industry, depending on the source one looks at, varying from one per cent to seven per cent.

The second important aspect of this whole situation is the monitoring feature. Such a monitoring feature would give the Canadian government the opportunity to see what is happening in the industry and to follow developments. This would also increase the use of our Canadian technicians, which is very important. I think it would also set the pace for Canadian development.

In relation to the acquisition of such a petroleum corporation, several approaches have been suggested. It has been suggested that the government should purchase the existing rights of one of our multinational corporations. This approach has advantages and disadvantages. I think its advantages are that such a corporation is in fact operating and holds leases and so on. One of the disadvantages is that the methods and practices used by the company are company methods and practices and it would be much more difficult for the government to obtain a change in direction. This is a decision that has to be made after viewing all the facts. I am of a mixed mind as to whether we should buy or set up our own corporation.

An hon. Member: Where are you going to get the money?

Mr. McRae: I think there are all kinds of ways of finding the money. One way would be to use a portion of the $1.90 export tax which is not going back to Alberta. One thing that rankles me a little bit is the attitude of members of the press who seem to have the feeling that all moves in this direction are the result of ideas from hon. members in the party to my right on this side, and to the left in some senses.

An hon. Member: It is your left-wing movement.

Mr. McRae: I suggest that hon. members might look at the October 25 debate in order to see that four of the five members on this side who spoke referred to an involvement in the tar sands development; that three of the five were in favour of a national petroleum corporation, and that two were strongly interested in an all-Canadian pipeline, not one that commenced in Toronto or Sarnia but one that commenced in Manitoba using two links from the lakehead through Sault Ste. Marie.

An hon. Member: Where are you going to get the oil at Sault Ste. Marie?

Mr. McRae: I think the oil could be tapped in at Sault Ste. Marie and run back at a future time. I should like to deal with one or two other items, but I see that my time is running out. Let me mention one final point. I feel I should deal with, although I would like to deal with other conservation aspects. I refer to the $1.90 export tax which I think all Canadians must realize—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae), but his time has expired. I should remind hon. members that we will soon be running out of time.

Mr. Lundrigan: Having made two speeches tonight, that should be plenty.

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, if there is any redeeming feature of the crisis facing Canada today it is the impetus it may give this government to implement much needed decisions about energy. The most significant factor in recent times in this country has been the increasingly rapid removal of energy from the realm of economics, from common sense and into the political arena.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bawden: Let me quote from the Toronto Star of several days ago:

> While the gut issues of oil and gas prices could have been predicted several years ago, no one wanted to talk about them and there was little enthusiasm among government officials to come to grips with them then.
>
> But now the cabinet is caught up in the frenzy of fast-changing developments and has to make crucial decisions that affect the consumer industry and public welfare.
>
> It is ill-prepared to make these decisions, yet the world of energy is moving so fast it cannot put them off much longer.

I endorse those comments, Mr. Speaker. On the world energy scene today perhaps the focal and the crisis point is the Middle East. At the present time the Egyptian third army is encircled on the east bank of the Suez Canal. The disposition of this army and the events that take place in the next several weeks will be the biggest factors in energy supply decisions that must be taken in the coming months. Let us hope that this crisis and the difficulties will be settled. I suggest to you that if they are not settled; if the issue of prisoners being returned, and if the whole matter surrounding the Suez Canal does not come to an amicable conclusion, the world this winter, Canada included, will face very cold times.

● (2220)

As for the time-frame, I suggest that even if the prisoner exchanges and the release of the Egyptian third army is accomplished in the near future, we will still face an ongoing crisis for many months. Surely it must be recognized that this problem, which has been a problem for the world for so many years, will not be settled in two months, three months, six months or indeed perhaps a year.

The Arab countries, starting off with a 5 per cent cut in the crude oil supply to the world, increased it to 10 per cent and subsequently named the United States and Holland as countries to which no oil would be shipped. They have some preferred countries on their list, such as Spain and Malaysia, but Canada is not one of them and I suggest that any plan for energy security in Canada in the months ahead must be made on the basis that further cuts can be expected very shortly in the supply of Middle East crude to this country. At present this represents over 30 per cent of our energy imports.

This brings me to the Canadian scene. We have seen in editorials and heard mentioned in the House on a number of occasions tonight comments regarding the security of supply mentioned in the resolution relating to the interruption of supply from foreign sources. I suggest the problem can only be solved by secure supplies which lie beneath the Canadian soil. In other words, what I am saying is that the foremost consideration in this entire problem is the development of secure reserves right here in Canada.

Over a period of many years this government has done much to discourage, and much to create disincentives for those who were willing to develop these reserves to give us the security which we required. I bring your attention first to the fact that it is recognized in this country that our greatest reserves of conventional oil and gas for the future lie in our offshore and frontier areas. In 1961 the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) and a Conservative government put forward regulations applying to all federal lands in offshore areas and the Northwest Territories, with the exception of Indian lands which were under separate jurisdiction. One portion of these regulations related to the mechanics of lease selection.

This land order was revoked on April 15, 1970, and has never been replaced with a new land order. Thus, at this time the industry has no knowledge of how the corridor lands will be treated. In Alberta, such corridor lands are sold back to industry on a competitive bid basis. Theoretically, the balance of the regulations are still in force. However, in early 1970 the government announced that they would be totally revised. This supposed revision has therefore been under way since that time. Meanwhile, the government has declared a moratorium on the issuance of any new permits or on the issuance of leases of old permits, even if those permits have expired. There has not been a federal land sale since late 1969.

I suggest to you, sir, that if this great source of future energy is to be available to Canadians, this government had better get on with the job, and I challenge the minister to give us an answer to the question as to when we will see these regulations, because every time he is asked he says "soon".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bawden: We have heard from the party to our left tonight something about multinational companies, big oil companies, and so forth. For many years that party and Canadians have been asking when they will have the opportunity to invest in Canadian resources on a footing that is equal to that of foreign investors.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bawden: Again this government gives us no answers. The tar sands represent one of the greatest oil reserves in the world, approximately equal to the reserves of the Middle East. But what policies are we getting? Indecision, foot-dragging and vague statements, such as that from the hon. member on the other side when he said that the federal government should have an involvement in the tar sands, that they should go ahead and develop these projects. I suggest that private enterprise and the oil industry which has done the research and is ready to go ahead with the projects should be given the clearance now. I suggest that in the absence of decisions and answers to industry, the first and very important project, the Syncrude project, will not get off the ground. As to Canadian participation, I suggest that a royalty representing 50 per cent of net profits and a great many other innovative features negotiated by the Alberta government gave Canadians a great stake in this resource.

I should like to touch upon a couple of other aspects. If we want reserves of all types of energy in this country, we will have to change the basic attitude of this government, which is one of confrontation. Not only are they engaging in confrontation with the provinces, they are engaging in a confrontation with industry. I suggest that this is getting worse by the week. A long-range energy policy in this country is a policy that lasts for seven days, and the minister must take full responsibility for that.

There is also the whole question of confidence. At present some $5 million a day is being invested in this country in the search for oil and gas. This search, I suggest, can and will only continue in an atmosphere of certainty where the rules are clear and are not changed in midstream.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bawden: I suggest that the lack of confidence that is growing in this industry in fact exists with business all across Canada.

We have had some figures regarding price which concern us greatly. I should like to point out, however, a fact that the minister and I think most members of the House have commented upon; that is, that the price of energy in the future will go up. If we take today's price in Alberta of approximately $4 a barrel, and if we add 5 per cent a year for 25 years, we find that this works out to something like $16 a barrel. I am not sure where the price will go, but it will certainly go up—and fast. This country will have to face the fact that $10 a barrel oil is just around the corner.

May I point out, however, that in 1961 when the consumer price index in Canada is related to natural gas and light Alberta crude and projected through to 1972, the consumer price index has gone from 100 to 139, the natural gas index had gone from 100 to 92, and the light Alberta crude index had gone from 100 to 119. In other words, the figures show a substantially smaller increase for oil and gas in this country than in the consumer price index since 1961.

With regard to oil security for eastern Canada, I would like to challenge the minister to answer the following charge. In June of 1969 the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada met with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his cabinet and set out in detail the problems of energy supply expected in the 1970s. At that time Ottawa was cheerfully subsidizing new eastern refineries to process overseas oil, mainly for American markets, and Alberta oilfields were producing at only half capacity. The Independent Petroleum Association urged corrective measures, including the extension of the Alberta Ontario pipeline to Montreal to give Quebec supply security.

● (2230)

The government refused to face up to the realities we could already foresee for the 1970s, flatly refused extension of the pipeline to Montreal, and told western Canada to peddle its oil surplus wherever it could, and that for eastern Canada the government policy was to supply the Montreal market with cheap foreign oil. Mr. Speaker, had that policy been implemented at that time we would not have the problem we have today, and the government must be reminded of it.

I would like to touch briefly on Canada's relations with the United States as a result of what has been done by the government in recent weeks and recent months. May I remind the government, and the minister in particular, that there was a supply crisis back in 1967 during the Middle East confrontation of that year. Canada and the United States co-operated in easing the crisis, with the United States delivering oil to ease the eastern Canadian pinch, and western Canada supplying more oil to American areas where transport facilities existed.

May I also remind the minister that in World War II when Canada had little developed oil, the United States saved this nation from desperate oil shortages. I would also like to point out that the province of Ontario at the present time is generating one-third of its electrical energy from coal imported from the United States.

The Interprovincial pipeline which crosses the American border to carry oil to eastern Canada, as well as the pipeline from Portland, Maine, which carries crude from foreign sources to Montreal, are subject to a presidential permit. In other words, with a single signature these pipelines could be cut off. I do not suggest that the government of the United States would be so foolish as to take that action. However, I do wish to remind the government that relations with the United States are important. These relations include energy, and Canada would be very vulnerable in the event that that country decided to take retaliatory action.

May I also say that trade is another very important matter, and if such retaliation is to be taken I believe it will be in the area of trade. Indeed the auto pact would be one of the very important matters to this country that would be threatened. May I also say that Canada has a surplus in trade in petroleum of approximately $1 billion a year. If I reflect on the recent trade figures, I would say this country, without the trade surplus resulting from oil and natural gas, would be in great difficulties.

In conclusion, I would say that the policy that this government is following is one of continued consultation—with the NDP. I have heard from speakers to my left that we must have a federal government oil company exploring for oil. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how this party, with their disastrous experience in Saskatchewan, could suggest that such a company would be more efficiently run as a government enterprise than by free enterprise? I would also like to ask hon. members to my left, where would the government find the capital for such—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, when we began this debate hon. members wanted to know the plans of the minister to meet what might become a crisis situation. I think the minister has answered well. He has told us the plans as he foresees them for the present time. There are rather modest measures to achieve a 10 per cent reduction in the consumption of crude oil in this country. These are measures that all Canadians will support and, from what I have heard tonight, all parties here will support.

The only answer to the potential crisis part of the situation, as the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden) said, is peace in the Middle East. But that will not resolve all our problems. We had a problem before the crisis in the Middle East erupted; now all parties realize how vulnerable we are in this country to external forces, particularly when our resources are not within our own control. We also thought that our resources were without limit. We failed to listen to the people who wrote "Limits to Growth." We did not want to believe that. Yet it is happening. Even the major petrochemical companies were caught off guard. I was speaking to the head of one of these companies, a multinational corporation, in New York the other day and he said even they had not foreseen it. This is quite incredible, but it is a fact. Now they find that their contracting sources of supply are not reliable.

This debate and this situation have brought us to a moment of truth in this country, regardless of the Middle East situation. It is now no longer just a group of nationalists, of academics, of some politicians and journalists, and of the almost lone voice of Walter Gordon over the years; it is now businessmen and farmers, barbers, butchers and housewives who are concerned, and I sense in this House and across the country a national consensus that we are not going to let this happen again and that we are going to use our resources for our own best purposes.

There may be some exceptions like the oil potentate from Edmonton, Sheik Peter El Acheed, but there is a determination to use our own resources not only to supply our requirements of crude and fuel oil, but also our requirements for industry, particularly secondary industry. We have been talking tonight basically about crude, and I think that initially we must be thinking about heating oil and natural gas for heat, but there is no reason why we should be exporting the crude if we could be exporting the ethane, the ethylene and the polyethylene.

There are major secondary markets for synthetic fibres and plastics. These are out-reaching industries, oriented to future growth, and there is no reason why we cannot use our resources to upgrade our Canadian industry to a much more sophisticated form. If we are going to export, let us export the product much more downstream where there is more processing involved. In that way we should be able to establish an even more significant petrochemical industry in this country.

It occurs to me that while the mass of these resources is within the province of Alberta, right next door, in the conomic sense, is the so-called have-not province of Saskatchewan. It should not be any great trick, if agreement can be reached, to bring some of that industry into Saskatchewan at least commensurate with its own resources of oil and its share of the tar sands. If we are to keep this country together we will have to co-operate in this way, and that is something I believe the people of Alberta would accept just as people in other parts of Canada would accept it.

The extension of the pipeline, which has been mentioned a few times tonight, is something which is absolutely essential for security of supply. Not only would it give us security of supply but it would give us leverage in future bargaining. We can negotiate when we have an option. At the present time we do not have an option unless we adopt the stance that some people are suggesting, that if the Middle East cuts off oil we should cut off grain. That kind of international blackmail is counterproductive.

I agree with the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), and with the honourable member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), that the people of the country will be behind any government which brings in such measures, even if necessarily they produce uncomfortable results in some respects. We have been loose with our reserves in the past. If it is necessary to cut down heat in our homes and offices and drive at 50 miles an hour, are we going to be mad if our lifeline is being cut off? We have been mad in the past not to consider these the important things.

● (2240)

This is not a time for hysteria; it is a time for determination and common sense. I am sure whatever arrangements the minister makes will be reasonable, because he is a reasonable man and will be backed not only by this House but by this country. We certainly have to back policies which will secure our resources. I am delighted to hear the response to the establishment of a state marketing board. We believe this is essential and something which we will accept. It is proper, correct and needed in this country at this time and in the future.

As far as a national petroleum corporation is concerned, I do not think there is consensus in this House, but I suggest there is consensus in the country. I am not suggesting expropriation here. We have the tools already-there is the Canada Development Corporation, although perhaps it is not the right vehicle, and we have Panarctic Oil. We must go farther downstream, through, and if a company could be purchased on a fair and equitable basis I think we would be building a control mechanism into our marketing lifeline, and this is very important. I say this only if it is a fair purchase and not necessarily going for total ownership. I think it should be controlled, not unlike the Texasgulf deal.

It is essential to maintain the management, people who know what they are doing. I can think of many ways of trying to run an oil industry, but if with it you can get good and dedicated management such as we have in this country, then we should use it; but we must recognize that we do need people from outside this country too. We could use this resource to upgrade our own skills, use them were we have to and get the results we want for our own benefit.

Some people ask where the money is coming from. Well, the export tax is providing a substantial source of income. I suggest that the Athabasca tar sands, which are supplying 300 billion barrels per day—which I understand is roughly equivalent to the Middle East resources—and I believe there is the same amount not recoverable out there, should be developed to the hilt. Maybe we could take a lesson from the Japanese who are very sophisticated in this respect. I think it is possible to arrange a deal for non-equity financing that could be taken out in trade. These countries would be grateful for assured sources of supply, and that is something we should consider.

We must look at the alternatives, Mr. Speaker. Coal has gone out of style, although I think it is coming back fast because we have abundant resources in this country, in Alberta and British Columbia. We should be bullish with our nuclear policy. I hope the scientists will unlock the mysteries of solar energy and those of human and animal waste. These are the alternatives we have, and I think the people of this country have made up their minds that we are not going to be caught off base again, we are not going to be so vulnerable again and submit to the blackmail of oil politics. We have the resources and we use them for our enlightened self-interest.

I spoke to the Centre for InterAmerican Studies in New York last week and tried to explain the Canadian views on these resources as I saw them and as I am expressing them here tonight. Nobody thought this was silly. As a matter of fact, they thought we were silly for not doing it sooner. It simply requires the consensus that we have in this House and across the country. Mr. Speaker, I think with this spirit that I see exemplified here tonight we can go on to much bigger and much better things, and a richer life using our resources intelligently and controlling them in our own best interests; and I think in that we will have the support of all Canadians.

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, there is great concern about the energy crisis in Canada and nowhere is this more evident than in eastern Canada. The irony of the Canadian energy crisis is that it does not stem solely from the problems of supply and demand. Canada has the unique distinction of being one of the only industrialized nations in the world which can claim to be totally self-sufficient in terms of oil and gas. Although western Canada has enough oil reserves to supply eastern Canada, there is at this point no way to transport an adequate volume to the east. Therefore, eastern Canada must import most of its oil from elsewhere. Approximately 25 per cent of Canada's total oil imports which are directed primarily to eastern Canada come from Arab oil producers; about 60 per cent comes from Venezuela.

The restricted flow of Arabian oil and the sharp increase in price of both Arabian and Venezuelan oil raises serious questions about the increase in price of gasoline, home heating oil and oil products and the security of supply of these products. The 56 per cent increase in crude oil tax by the Venezuelan government, coupled with the increases in cost already announced by Arabian countries, causes widespread speculation that gas prices will go up. Some estimates indicate it could go to $1 per gallon by the end of this year. I hope this is unduly pessimistic.

Amid that speculation one fact comes home clearly: Canada has in the Athabasca tar sands in Alberta the largest single deposit of oil in the world. A crash program of scientific engineering and exploration as the means of realizing the immense potential of the tar sands by the most feasible economic method is a matter of urgent national necessity. If these can be developed, Canada will control half of the world supply. We have here a vast potential that has been untapped for decades.

Mr. Speaker, I shall resist the temptation to point to the obvious lack of planning and protection in our national energy "non-policies". Instead, let us be constructive, using the benefit of hindsight, and let us do it now. Another thing that can be done now to alleviate the price increase in motor fuels in Canada is to decrease the 12 per cent tax at the manufacturer's level which is passed on to the consumer. The minister should also act now to stockpile oil reserves for eastern Canada against heating fuel shortage in midwinter.

Another thing that the minister should reconsider is the Bay of Fundy tidal power study and the tremendous potential of the 4,000 megawatts of power that are untapped in the Bay of Fundy. He should look again at our underdeveloped coalfields. I need not remind the government that if the corridor road were built, a direct highway to central Canada would exist and oil transports could carry at least critical supplementary supplies to the Maritimes. I call on the government to expedite their contingency plan to protect Canadians living in eastern Canada from the effects of an oil shortage. I call on the government to expedite the development of the Athabasca tar sands and the vast power potential that exists in the tides of the Bay of Fundy.

In short, Mr. Speaker, I ask the government to give leadership.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, there are only a few minutes left in the debate so I will have to be brief. I feel that the key to any successful campaign to conserve gas and fuel oil in Canada has to obtain the full support of all Canadians in this impending crisis. They must be given all the facts of the situation. I have no doubt that they will respond in the manner in which Canadians have always met a national crisis.

• (2250)

How can full Canadian participation and support be achieved? The people must first be given the facts. Second, there is the need for some detailed organization which can quickly and effectively be set up with the co-operation of the provinces and municipalities throughout our nation. I feel that an immediate meeting of our provincial premiers and ministers is required. This could be followed by meetings in the provinces with municipal governments, which will put the program into effect and, to a large degree, police it. There is no time to lose. Action in this direction must be taken at once.

This crisis should teach us all the real need for energy conservation and the absolute necessity of doing something about it. There must be a public campaign for the conservation of our gas and oil supplies. Car pools can be set up. The one-man, one-car means of transportation should be discouraged. Public transportation should be used by more Canadians. With provincial co-operation, lower speed limits could be enforced. The field of rapid transport in our cities is a longer term proposition, but it should be pushed vigorously by all levels of government. There is also the need for public awareness. People ought to have their vehicles tuned more often in order to save fuel. Last, but not least, we must prepare for the rationing of gas and fuel, unpleasant as that may be.

Other hon. members have pointed out things which could be done, such as the lowering of thermostats, the improvement of home insulation, the wise use of humidifiers, etc. I will not repeat all that. I should like, however, to raise again several key points which have already been raised by other hon. members. First, there is need for a Canadian petroleum corporation. This is of prime importance, particularly in view of the need to secure reasonably safe offshore supplies of oil.

Venezuela has already suggested that we set up a national corporation to deal with its state-owned oil corporation. There is no time to lose, for every country in the world requiring oil will soon be hammering on Venezuela's door for her limited oil supplies. I understand that the minister has already talked with the government of that country. It has suggested that Canada should set up a national petroleum corporation in order to make an oil deal. The government of Venezuela is anxious to sell oil to us through a national corporation and we in Canada are missing the boat if we do not take this opportunity to enter the field and ensure at least a reasonably secure supply of offshore oil which is needed for our eastern markets.

Another point raised in the debate concerns the reversible pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal and Quebec City. My party has been urging the building of this pipeline for several years. Again, I urge the minister to get his department going on this project right away. Surveys must be made. We must make certain that never again will any part of our country be subjected to the possibility of oil shortages, especially as this country is the only industrial country in the world with sufficient supplies of oil for its needs. Actually, we are a net exporter of oil to the tune of some 300,000 barrels per day.

Another point raised by the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden) concerned the development of the tar sands of Alberta and Saskatchewan. I do not take the same position taken by the hon. member for Calgary South. I am convinced that the development of these oil sands, which form one of the greatest deposits of oil remaining in the world, must be carried out under public ownership. That is why my party welcomes the imposition of the $1.90 export tax on oil. The government imposed this tax on oil going to the United States from Canada. It ensures that Canadian oil will be sold for the same price on the Chicago market that other oil is now sold for. The hundreds of millions of dollars that will accrue to the government from this tax source will go back to the provinces to recompense them for any royalties they may lose, inasmuch as there was no increase in price at the wellhead, and the balance could go toward the public development of the tar sands.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harding: These tar sands should be developed under public ownership and with public support. That is what we of the NDP would like to see. We will press for that. We urge the government to adopt that type of policy and to ensure that multinational corporations do not dictate the oil policy of this country and do not dictate our policy with respect to oil reserves or the direction in which Canada must go in the future in the whole field of oil development.

Mr. Prud'homme: The hon. member is a good listener.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being eleven o'clock, pursuant to the order made earlier this day the motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been adopted. The House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow.

At 11 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order made this day.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 6, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

[Translation]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

Fifth report of Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates—Mr. Leblanc (Laurier).

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SOCIAL AFFAIRS

Sixth report of Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs—Mr. Isabelle.

[Editor's Note: For text of above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

HEALTH

TABLING OF FIRST REPORT OF INQUIRY BY NUTRITION CANADA

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I should like to table, in both official languages, the first report of Nutrition Canada national survey.

* * *

[English]

GRAIN

TABLING OF AUDITED STATEMENT OF WHEAT ON HAND AND DETAILS OF FINAL PAYMENTS ON WHEAT, OATS AND BARLEY FOR 1972-73 CROP YEAR

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table two items under Standing Order 41(2). The first is an audited statement for July 31, 1973, of wheat on hand as defined by the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. The second is details of final payments on wheat, oats and barley to western grain producers for the 1972-73 crop year.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON RESULTS OF INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON CONTROL OF POLLUTION FROM SHIPS

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, on October 16 last I outlined in this House the position which Canada was taking at the recent international conference on the elimination of pollution from ships. Now that this large, international gathering in London, England, has completed its work, I would like to report progress. I would like to describe the results of this conference of flag states and coastal states, the main objective of which was to prevent the further deterioration of the world's oceans, seas and shipping lanes.

Oil was the only pollutant mentioned in the 1954 and 1969 conventions. The latest convention, that of 1973, includes toxic and suffocating substances other than oil. It includes white oils as well as black oils. It includes refined petroleum products as well as crude oil and bunker oil.

The new convention also contains important stipulations with regard to vessel construction. Segregated ballast will be required on all new tankers of more than 70,000 tons. The size of individual tanks in oil tankers is also limited so as to reduce the loss of oil from collisions and groundings in the future.

The right of coastal states to take action against a ship in trouble which also posed the threat of pollution to their shores has been expanded. Not only does it now cover dangerous substances other than oil, but it also extends this right to any distance which might reasonably be said to involve a threat or hazard to the territory of the coastal state.

With respect to other jurisdictional aspects of the convention an attempt was made at the conference to limit the right of enforcement of a coastal state to its territorial sea. This attempt was resisted successfully by Canada. The new convention adopts the compromise approach along the lines of the one negotiated at the London Dumping Conference in 1972 and allows a coastal state to enforce the convention "within its jurisdiction" without attempting to define how far that jurisdiction may extend. The convention thus recognizes that the nature and extent of coastal state jurisdiction as well as flag state jurisdiction may be changed as a result of the Law of the Sea Conference. Meanwhile it is open to a state to interpret the convention as permitting it to enforce its provisions in waters under its jurisdiction which, like fisheries closing lines, extend beyond its territorial sea.

The new convention declares that the Mediterranean Sea, Black Sea, Baltic Sea, Red Sea and the gulfs area, including the Sea of Oman, are designated as special areas in which oil discharge is completely prohibited with the exception of very small ships. This is an indication of the world-wide concern about the preservation of water quality in landlocked areas or inland seas where the exchange of water with the outside ocean is restricted by narrow straits.

Pollution from Ships

• (1410)

Mr. Speaker, we won some and lost some. We failed, for example, to get approval of special preventative measures in special areas. The special areas we had in mind were those of exceptional ecological sensitivity whether they be inside, or outside the jurisdiction of the coastal state. We had our Arctic problem in mind. We were encouraged by the fact that a number of important flag states supported us. But the Canadian resolution failed to get the necessary two-thirds majority in the final plenary session of the conference. Needless to say, we will try again, but our next opportunity to deal with special areas is, at least, a few years away.

We also put forward the "port state enforcement concept" for the first time. In this we were strongly supported by the United States. Had it been accepted, violators of the convention could have been prosecuted in the ports of any contracting party regardless of where the offence took place and for up to three years after it occurred.

One of the defects of the 1954 convention is that violations which occur outside of the waters of the coastal state can only be dealt with by the flag state in which the ship is registered. The new convention beefs up the penalties but that is all. As a coastal state, Canada must continue to oppose this flag state regime and will, therefore, continue to press for "port state enforcement" at the Law of the Sea Conference in 1974.

Canada supported a United States proposal for the building of double bottoms in new oil tankers. This requirement was rejected by the conference as was the "sheen" concept which would have made it easier to prosecute ships trailing a thin sheen of oil. Instead of accepting the word of an officer of a coastal state, quantitative measures of loss of oil will still be needed in order to prosecute the ship which is responsible for pollution on the high seas.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I can say that the standards adopted by the latest IMCO conference are good, not excellent. In concept, they apply all around the world. But the conference did not adopt all of the measures which are necessary if they are to be enforced effectively by flag states and coastal states alike. We did not manage to deal with our special Arctic problem either.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment our delegation to the IMCO conference and especially its deputy head, Mr. E. G. Lee. It was very active. Anyone who was there will agree that it was one of the most influential delegations which we have sent abroad in recent years.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the minister I think I should remind the House that in answer to the minister's statement on October 16 it was brought to the attention of the House that certain things which we should have been pursuing at this conference were neglected or omitted. This, of course, may have been because it was impossible to get them on the agenda. I refer to the fact that no matter what arrangements we make with respect to other nations we do need co-operation on international navigation standards. All the safeguards in the world are of no account if vessels are operating under navigational standards that allow collisions.

[Mr. Davis.]

There has been no mention by the minister today, nor was there on October 16, of international arrangements for co-operation in the clean-up of oil. Again I stress that compensation is no comfort to those on shores that are befouled by oil.

I again remind the government that, in order to achieve the other objectives the minister has stated still remain to be achieved, our own moral position must be first rate. I refer to the fact that we have had an inconsistent policy of complaining about oil tankers on the west coast and taking almost no action on the east coast.

On page two of the statement which the minister kindly delivered to me just before the House met he says:

> The right of coastal states to take action against a ship in trouble which also posed the threat of pollution to its shores has been expanded. Not only does it now cover dangerous substances other than oil, but it also extends this right to any distance which might reasonably be said to involve a threat or hazard to the territory of the coastal state.

This is all very well but, as has been demonstrated by recent spills on the west coast, in this country we do not have the equipment nor the trained men to deal adequately with minor spills that are taking place in our own harbours. Acquiring the right to contain spills farther out to sea does us little good if we do not have the men and material to do so. The minister is aware of this problem as he comes from a riding bordering the very harbour that has recently been the subject of two spills. I would ask the minister and other members of the government to take this into account.

The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) referred to this matter on October 16. He said that we must be prepared to take unilateral action in cases where a convention or agreement is lacking. This party endorses the position taken by the hon. member for Skeena on October 16. We have already taken such action, as he pointed out, with respect to the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, an area that is very special to us. The fact that we may not be able to get agreement at this time should not in any way detract from our determination to act unilaterally when our self-interest is at stake.

I notice with a great deal of gratification that the minister said in his statement:

> The new convention declares that the Mediterranean Sea, Black Sea, Baltic Sea, Red Sea and the gulfs area including the Sea of Oman are designated as special areas—

Speaking as one who not many months ago had occasion to be swimming in the Mediterranean at Tel Aviv, I can assure hon. members that this prohibition of oil spills was long overdue. Anyone who swims in those waters will testify to the fact that as you swim you move globules of oil out of the way. That is no exaggeration.

We shall face these problems along our coasts unless we are prepared to take unilateral action if required and to see to it that our efforts in years to come to obtain international co-operation are made with the necessary thrust. I might add that I would have been pleased, as I know other members from the west coast would have been, if the Strait of Juan de Fuca and Puget Sound had been included along with the Mediterranean Sea, the Black Sea and the other waters mentioned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: That area is most important to us as a very special area. We are gratified, of course, when we are reminded that some months ago the government only began to fight to have this area designated as some kind of special area.

Lastly, may I say that the delegates, the government and the committee that worked on this convention deserve credit. They departed with our support and they return with our thanks. Having said that, I would say this to the government, and I do so most seriously. As the minister said, it will be some years before we can achieve, if we can, all that we are aiming at by way of world agreement. However, there are areas on both our coasts where, with the help of our American friends, we can achieve much of what the delegation set out to achieve on a world-wide basis. It will take sharp diplomacy—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bell: We want Macdonald.

Mr. Fraser: It will require great effort on the part of the minister whose name was inadvertently mentioned. He must get out there and continue the fight he started some months ago.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, a practice has been followed fairly carefully by most ministers with respect to the presentation of statements on motions. That practice has been to make copies of such statements available to members of the opposition parties one hour or thereabouts before the House meets so that there may be an opportunity to examine what has been prepared carefully and respond to it. The difficulty in this instance arises from the fact that this statement came to my attention as I entered the chamber. It was delivered upstairs to the office of my leader some five minutes before the House met. I do not think that is an adequate way to deal with important matters.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard: Even though I have been able to give the statement only cursory examination, I do not think the minister should be very proud of it, because it does not accomplish a great deal in terms of pollution control or with regard to the environmental concerns of the people of this land.

• (1420)

I want to say at the outset that I certainly welcome the position taken by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) in endorsing the concept of unilateral action which we have advocated as being most necessary for a long period of time. I would like to hear the leader of his party make that declaration so we would know where the party stands as well as the member for Vancouver South.

What we sought to do at the IMCO conference and what this statement indicates we did do was to subject the position of Canada to the decision of 90 other nations. By participating in this conference and giving up our position and rights we are in effect letting the other nations of the world decide what Canada is going to do to preserve its integrity and its environment and to control pollution. In the whole course of relationships between nations, changes have been made in international law by unilateral decision of one or a number of countries pushing and forcing an issue. Canada has moved away from that course and is willing to go along with what the flag states want to see accomplished, not what is of value to Canada.

In his statement the minister said Canada failed to get approval of special preventative measures in special areas. To clarify that, he said he was talking about the Arctic area of this nation. This means that when the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act was presented to the House four or five years ago the government was just engaging in a windowdressing program and the act is nothing more than a bunch of words on paper. As the minister said, it means nothing. We attempted to get some consideration of the question of Arctic waters when we have laws on the statute books to deal with it and we failed. The minister went on to say that another opportunity to raise this matter is a few years away. I consider this to be another indication of a sellout of the interests of Canada by this government, especially with regard to the question of oil pollution.

It is regrettable that there was no reference in the statement to special waters of concern to us in British Columbia such as the Strait of Juan de Fuca and the Gulf of Georgia. There is no indication of the government's intention with regard to the critical situation that has developed in one instance and may well develop again in connection with the Cherry Point refinery in the state of Washington. This omission indicates that the government does not have any measures to deal with that. The minister said in his statement:

> Canada supported a United States proposal for the building of double bottoms in new oil tankers.

I was surprised to hear that. A week before the minister went to the IMCO conference in London he raked me over the coals because I said Canada was taking a neutral position by not saying anything about double hull vessels, and I draw a distinction between double hull and double bottom vessels. At that time the minister said in no way would he or the government have anything to do with supporting the concept of double hulls for tankers because that would only have value if the tanker ran aground on a soft and not a rocky bottom. A week before the conference the minister was arguing against the necessity of seeing that oil tankers plying the waters of the world were built with double hulls. Now he turns around and says he supported a United States proposal for the building of double bottoms in new oil tankers, indicating that it is probably not double bottoms he is concerned about but double talk.

It seems to me that, in conjunction with the paper which has been referred to the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence with respect to the territorial sea, offshore rights and the continental shelf, we should also refer the minister's statement and the convention which arose out of the IMCO conference recently concluded to that same committee which is currently considering one related aspect of this continuing question, so that it may, hopefully, come up with recommendations that will make sense and be of some value to us, which is more than I can say for the statement we have just heard.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, that we should always be provided with copies of ministers' statements only some four minutes before two o'clock is regrettable. This is readily understandable. We must complete a thorough review or study of the last arguments within seconds if we want to make relevant observations on these statements.

However, the minister's statement shows one thing: we have tried mainly to be good diplomats instead of being statesmen who are able to represent truly the attitude of Canada towards other countries and to make suggestions which may be nationalistic but which would really protect the Canadian coastline.

On page 3, it is stated that seas like the Mediterranean, the Black Sea, the Baltic, the Red Sea and the areas around gulfs, including the Oman Sea, are special areas. And, the ridiculous thing is that the large ships are not allowed to dump or spill oil, but the small ships are allowed to do it. But the damage caused by two or three small ships to equivalent to that caused by one large ship. We then beat about the bush without taking any specific position. I suspect that there may be somewhat acrid discussions between the government of Quebec and that of Ottawa concerning the pollution possibility of the St. Lawrence, for example, especially when no clear position is taken on pollution and that any coastal state has merely the possibility of taking such positions and perhaps prosecuting a boat which will have damaged its coasts.

On the whole, we can surely congratulate those who have shown satisfactory diplomacy, but we cannot congratulate the government for a realistic national attitude about the protection of the environment as well as that of the Canadian coasts.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

ALLEGED CONFLICT OF INTEREST ON PART OF MEMBER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement made by the Minister of Transport that a conflict of interest does exist between the private holdings of Mr. Bill Rathie and his position as a member of the National Harbours Board, I move, under the terms of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

That the Minister of Transport immediately remove Mr. Rathie from his position as a member of the National Harbours Board in view of the conflict of interest between that office and his private holdings, namely, Vancouver Cold Storage Limited.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION FROM SHIPS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to move a motion on an urgent matter related to the statement made today by the Minister of the Environment with respect to the IMCO conference. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett):

That the convention of 1973 relating to the international control of pollution from ships, together with the statement made this day by the Minister of the Environment be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence for concurrent consideration along with the subject matter of the projected Law of the Sea Conference.

● (1430)

If the motion is accepted, I think there should be no debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The motion proposed by the hon. member for Skeena is also submitted under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REFUSAL OF BENEFITS TO CERTAIN RAILWAY WORKERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that many shopcraft employees of the CPR and CNR across Canada who did not participate in the railroad strike were laid off by the railways in July and did not resume employment until the strike ended in early September, in view of the fact that these shopcraft workers were refused benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act and as a result were without income for a period of time, which resulted in great hardship to themselves and their families, and in view of the fact that some two months have elapsed—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to bring to the attention of hon. members that a motion proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 should not be supported by argument. I do not think it is an answer to the difficulty to include the argument in the motion itself. I respectfully suggest to the hon. member that he should submit the motion for the attention of the House so that I may inquire whether there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Taylor):

That this House instruct the officials of the Unemployment Insurance Commission to take immediate steps to deal with the appeals of the workers who have suffered as a result of the inaction of the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

PROPOSED OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—AVAILABILITY OF SUPPLY—APPROVAL BY QUEBEC

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact the National Energy Board has received certain alternative proposals—not applications but proposals—relating to construction of an oil pipeline to Montreal and that any further action on these proposals by Interprovincial is contingent upon a clear statement of policy from the minister on the need for such pipeline as well as a statement of intent to assure an oil supply for the pipeline, would the minister inform the House whether he has made a clear statement as to the need for the pipeline and a clear statement of assurance regarding oil supply for such a pipeline, and if so, for what size of pipeline?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the basic question of whether or not there should be a pipeline, that was indeed determined in principle by the government in September. The critical questions at this point are the financial circumstances under which the pipeline would be constructed by Interprovincial Pipe Line Company, the extent to which for security purposes additional capacity would be built into the line and, therefore, who should bear the cost, and how the line would fit in with the special plans the province of Quebec has in this regard.

My understanding from the board and from my officials is that there have been discussions on these points with the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company, as indeed there have been discussions with the Quebec authorities. I regret that I cannot announce anything more definitive regarding these terms, but my understanding is that negotiations are advancing.

Mr. Stanfield: As one condition for consideration of a pipeline under the National Energy Board Act is availability of oil or gas for the pipeline, has the minister had a report from the National Energy Board regarding availability of oil for such a pipeline and, if so, as to what size, and is the minister prepared to give an assurance of a supply of oil?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, under the National Energy Board Act the board has responsibility with regard to gas and with regard to oil to make certain that no exports shall take place unless they are surplus to Canadian requirements. Obviously the decision with regard to construction of a pipeline into Montreal would add the Montreal market to Canadian requirements, and under those circumstances this would be at the expense of any exports that we might have under way. It is anticipated that over a period of time stretching up to ten years there would be a reduction in the export component, and this would be one of the aspects that would be involved in that consideration. The time span of approximately two years that would precede the actual operation of the pipeline would be notice to United States users that they should make other arrangements for supply once the decision is made to go ahead.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister indicated that one of the outstanding matters was the approval of such a pipeline by the government of Quebec. Can the minister indicate whether approval, not in principle but approval in fact, of this pipeline proceeding is contingent upon the approval of the government of the province of Quebec?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we certainly wish to meet the objectives of the government of Quebec in this regard. There have been official discussions held, but in light of recent electoral events in the province I have not yet had an opportunity to have further discussions with my Quebec counterpart. I look forward to doing so in the near future because I think this is a matter which should be pushed forward with dispatch.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I apologize for asking a further supplementary, but I do so in view of the importance of this subject. What is the policy of the government? Is it the policy of the government to proceed with the construction of the pipeline, or is it the policy of the government to proceed with the construction of the pipeline only if the province of Quebec approves?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, of course the ultimate responsibility for security of supply rests with the government of Canada. Very clearly, if it is necessary for the security of supply to any part of the eastern Canadian market, then ultimately the government of Canada will have to take the decision. But, of course, we would attempt to do so in a fashion that is consistent with the wishes of the Quebec government.

Oral Questions

POSITION OF VOLUNTARY RESTRAINT PROGRAM RESPECTING USE—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES—HOME HEATING OIL SUPPLIES PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have some supplementary questions for the minister arising out of his statement last night. In view of the fact that a voluntary restraint program for the use of energy requires the co-operation of the general public as well as provincial and municipal authorities, and in view of the fact that the implementation of such a program would necessarily take some time, I should like to ask the minister whether he is taking steps to initiate the program now so there will be time to educate the public and to prepare organizational needs instead of waiting until an interruption occurs, at which time it may be too late?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Planning in that direction is going ahead, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, would the minister indicate exactly what steps are being taken to promote this program of voluntary restraint in energy use?

● (1440)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, aside from the remarks I made last night, at the moment there is no publicity program in this regard, but we anticipate that in the relatively early future we will be making recommendations along this line for guidance in respect of energy use in general.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the minister along the same line. Has he raised the issue with all the provinces of Canada or does he plan to deal with it at the energy ministers' conference on November 23? May I also ask him what supplies of home heating oil have already been purchased on government account, where such oil is now being stored, and what plans does the minister have for the distribution of this heating oil purchased on government account?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I cannot refer to any specific contracts at the moment, but my officials and those of the Canadian Commercial Corporation are now involved in this process. I think most of the storage involved will be handled by the Department of National Defence. I regret that I did not catch the first part of the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I asked whether the provincial premiers are being consulted.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have had conversations with some of them and I hope to have conversations with the remainder in eastern Canada. I propose to write to the ministers responsible who will be participating in the November 23 meeting to suggest that this item be added to the agenda for that meeting.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Charlevoix on a supplementary question.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): It is not a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It would perhaps be advisable to allow the hon. member for Charlevoix to ask his question, thus completing the first series and then we will come to the questions relating to the first one asked by the Leader of the Opposition. The hon. member for Charlevoix.

* * *

ENVIRONMENT AFFAIRS

APPLICATION OF INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION ON POLLUTION FROM SHIPS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION ON GREAT LAKES AND OTHER WATERS

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of the Environment related to his statement made today.

The new convention gives the list of the seas where oil spills are absolutely prohibited. Does this convention also provide for the Great Lakes area, or the area referred to a minute ago by the western representatives?

[English]

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this convention essentially applies to foreign owned ships operating outside areas within the jurisdiction of coastal states. Certainly it does not include foreign ships operating in inland waters such as the Great Lakes where Canada, the United States or the two by agreement have absolute authority.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Is the minister in a position to assure the House that the same provisions for ensuring better protection will be applied to internal waters of Canada?

[English]

Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we already have higher standards in respect of waters inside our jurisdiction, and certainly ships operating within those waters are subject to any laws we wish to pass.

* * *

ENERGY

PROPOSED OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—AVAILABILITY OF PIPE—POTENTIAL COST

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and arises from his answers regarding the pipeline extension. Has the minister's department made any examination of the supply of steel or pipe in view of the present steel shortage and the rapidly accelerating price, and what would be the potential cost of such a pipeline extension, if the government even knows where it is to start, at Toronto or some point farther west?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, on the latter point I think it is the view of Interprovincial, concurred in by my officials, that it should start at Sarnia at the end of the major pipeline from western Canada. As to the availability of steel and the question of the current and anticipated cost, these are questions of detail of which I should like to take notice. I will be glad to report to the hon. member in that regard.

[Translation]

PROPOSED OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—DISCUSSION BY PRIME MINISTER WITH QUEBEC PREMIER

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of his recent meeting with the Quebec premier, could the right hon. Prime Minister inform the House about the present state of the discussions on the extension of the pipeline to Montreal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. It is not customary to disclose the content of those bilateral talks I have periodically with the provincial premiers. It is certainly not my intention to refer to those talks today.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary of the right hon. Prime Minister.

Because of oil shortage in the world, has the Quebec premier indicated the need to go on with federal-provincial consultations regarding the building of a superport in Quebec?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be more proper to put this question to the Quebec premier.

I repeat, the federal policy is outlined each day by the federal ministers, but with regard to the Quebec policy, it is better to inquire from the Quebec premier.

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi asked part of the question. Without asking the Prime Minister about the contents of the discussions he had with the premier of the province of Quebec, would he indicate to the House whether the pipeline to Montreal was discussed and whether an understanding was reached between himself and the premier in respect of the construction of that pipeline?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a repetition of the question asked by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi in French.

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps the Prime Minister did not understand my question. I heard the question put by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi in French and I understood it.

An hon. Member: You are lucky.

Mr. Nielsen: I am asking the Prime Minister whether without going into the contents of the discussion between himself and the premier of Quebec, the pipeline extension was discussed and, if so, was there an understanding reached between himself and the premier?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it appears obvious to me that without going into the contents of this conversation I cannot reply to the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

OIL SUPPLY PROBLEM—PRIOR CONSULTATION WITH QUEBEC BEFORE DECISIONS TAKEN

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that concerning these oil problems the government of Canada will soon have to make important decisions, could the Prime Minister assure us at least that any decision taken by the federal government will be preceded by consultations with the Quebec government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Exactly as in the case of Alberta, as the hon. member points out—and I repeat that for the umpteenth time, Mr. Speaker—during the western provinces conference held in July 1973, the federal government requested that the problem of energy be put on the agenda and it was the western provinces that turned down the suggestion.

[English]

ALLEGED INCREASE IN HOME HEATING OIL PRICE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—ASSURANCE OF SUPPLY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources back to the problems of British Columbia.

An hon. Member: Just take him.

Mr. Oberle: In his statement last night he did not make reference to the apparent problem there. I should like to ask him now whether he is aware of any recent price increase in home heating oil resulting from his statement last week and his invitation to price increases?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have not been advised of any increase so far, but I would point out to the hon. member and the companies concerned that any increases are subject to proof on their part that additional costs are necessary in order to secure supplies and thus be passed on to the consumer. So far as I know we have had no application from any British Columbia company.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, does the minister consider that an increase in price will assure continuation of supply of these commodities from offshore sources, or does the minister contemplate any bilateral negotiations with the United States to assure the continuation of a supply of home heating oil to British Columbia?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): One thing is clear, Mr. Speaker, that unless any increased cost can be passed on the independent companies particularly will not buy offshore supplies. As to whether bilateral negotiations will be necessary, I do not think we have reached that point yet but I would be prepared to consider that possibility.

● (1450)

PROPOSED OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—REVISION OF INTERPROVINCIAL EXPANSION PLANS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns the recent permission granted by the cabinet for the extension by Interprovincial Pipe Line. Since there has been a change in government policy regarding the building of a pipeline to Montreal and the expansion that was authorized before will not make any sense if in fact there will be cutbacks in exports to the United States, can the minister say whether he is considering a revision of the decision regarding the expansion of Interprovincial in the United States or whether he intends to hold discussions with Interprovincial and ask them to modify their plans accordingly?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Sir. The throughput would be the same. Whether or not increased exports to the United States were being shipped all the way through to Montreal they would have to pass by the same route and the same volume would be available. So it is not a question of either, or; it would be necessary in either case.

Mr. Saltsman: Looking at the approval, it seems that the increase in the pipeline has been at the entrance to the pipeline rather than at its exist at Sarnia, although there has been an increase there as well. What I am asking is whether the government is reviewing that particular decision to make sure there will not be wastage or insufficient use of the capacity of the Interprovincial pipeline?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): My understanding is that the increased capacity would be needed in any event.

PROPOSED OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—DATE OF GOVERNMENT DECISION AND ACCEPTANCE BY ENERGY BOARD OF APPLICATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the tough and determined attitude the Prime Minister has demonstrated this afternoon with regard to discharging his responsibilities in this connection—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: —can the minister tell us when we may expect a decision with regard to the pipeline, when we may expect that the National Energy Board will be in a position to accept an application?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Just as soon as negotiations on the financial aspects of the project are completed.

[Mr. Oberle.]

[Translation]

OIL—ENCOURAGEMENT BY GOVERNMENT OF EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF KNOWN RESOURCES

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister, in view of the rather general scope of the question.

Regarding the oil crisis, will the government encourage exploration of oil sources or the development of known oil resources in eastern Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In a general way, I will answer yes, Mr. Speaker. Some programs proposed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources can be applied as well in eastern as in western Canada.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Can the right hon. Prime Minister specify, if not today, in the following days, the projects which offer good chances of success whether in exploration of these resources or in their development?

Mr. Trudeau: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member will specify if he is talking of energy in general or of hydrocarbon sources. There are many areas related to this question where we co-operate with the provinces.

* * *

[English]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE IN ATTITUDE OF PREMIER BOURASSA REGARDING AMENDMENTS TO CONSTITUTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister whether in his discussions with Premier Bourassa the latter had changed his views regarding the Victoria charter. I believe, and have said, that Mr. Bourassa was right in the stand that he took. I ask the Prime Minister whether or not there has been any change in the attitude of the premier of Quebec in this regard.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at these bilateral meetings with the premiers of various provinces which I hold periodically we generally agree before their conclusion whether or not we will discuss the content of our conversations publicly. In this particular case we agreed that we would not discuss the content, as is usually the case after my meetings with provincial premiers. In view of the fact the right hon. gentleman supports the Quebec position on the constitution, if he will ask Premier Bourassa the question directly he will probably receive a very satisfactory answer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I suggest to the Prime Minister that in his highly emotional state today smelling salts ought to be made available to him.

HEALTH

DISTRIBUTION OF SPORT PATCHES COPYRIGHTED BY DEPARTMENT BY KELLOGG COMPANY—ALLEGED DECEPTION OF PUBLIC

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact the Department of National Health and Welfare has teamed up with the Kellogg Company of Canada Limited in the promotion of a product that has little or no nutritional value, will the minister tell the House why his department is allowing its name to be used to deceive the public in this way?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am told that the milk you have with your corn flakes has great nutritional value.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): By what authority is the Kellogg Company, in the name of the Department of National Health and Welfare—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway knows the rules and there are no special dispensations for her. Hon. members know that this is not a court of law and that they are not entitled to bring in exhibits in support of their arguments. I hope the hon. member will heed the advice I am giving to her at present and remember the well established rule in this regard.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): I thought the rule had been relaxed a little because an apple was brought in here the other day.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): I should like to ask the minister what authority Kellogg's has in the name of the Department of National Health and Welfare to distribute these Grunion sport patches which are copyrighted by the minister's department?

Mr. Lalonde: An agreement has been reached between Sports Canada and the Kellogg Company—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: —with regard to the distribution of these particular items. If they can entice Canadian youth and the Canadian public in general to exercise more, I will be all the more happy.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

POSSIBILITY OF REOPENING NEGOTIATIONS WITH NURSES RESPECTING SALARIES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. May I ask the hon. gentleman whether or not in light of recent conversations he has had with representatives of federal government nurses and in an attempt to prevent what could develop into a fairly serious situation at some point in the not too distant future, he is not now prepared, under the authority given him within the existing statute, to reopen negotiations between the federal government nurses and the Treasury Board?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is aware that I met with representatives of the association last week following meetings with a number of my colleagues, including my deskmate. We did point out to the representatives of the nurses that the award of the arbitration tribunal was final and binding under the terms of the collective bargaining legislation.

Mr. Fairweather: And grossly unfair.

Mr. Drury: I did indicate to the nurses, however, that the government would be prepared to undertake a study to be conducted jointly by the departments employing nurses, namely, the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Department of National Defence, the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Canadian Penitentiary Service. This study will, in recognition of the evolution of the nursing profession, review the utilization and professional development of nurses, examine the work environment and relationships between employees and management and other features and characteristics of the nursing group in the public service. The president of the association has expressed satisfaction.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the minister kindly resume his seat. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I hesitate to remind the Chair of the rules of the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Forrestall: —but we have had here an example of a minister making a statement that should be made on motions on a serious matter without an opportunity to the opposition to reply.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood.

* * *

● (1500)

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE SALE OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT TO SOUTH AFRICA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact the Ontario government is financing a trade mission to expand sales of Canadian products in South Africa, in view of the fact that three out of the eight companies represented on the mission deal in military products, and in view of the fact that Canada's policy in accordance with the United Nations resolution prohibits the sale of military products to South Africa, will the minister make the necessary inquiries from the Ontario government into this situation and use his good offices to ensure that Canada's policy is observed and, if it is not, see to it that the necessary export licences are refused?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is the first news I have heard of the proposed sale of military equipment to South Africa from Canada. I do not know whether it is true, but I can certainly assure the hon. member that even if they sold it they could not deliver it because all armaments to South Africa are under strict export control and all are prohibited.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

ENERGY

OIL—EFFECT OF EXPORT TAX ON PRODUCTION IN FOSTERTON-DOLLARD FIELD AS WELL AS OTHER AREAS PRODUCING HIGH SULPHUR CRUDE

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is the minister aware of the cutback in production at the Fosterton-Dollard oil fields in southwestern Saskatchewan, exceeding 10,000 barrels of high sulphur crude oil per day? Is it correct that the reason for the cutback is that the increased export tax has priced this oil out of the market?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would have to examine a detailed question like that.

Mr. Balfour: Will the minister also investigate the possibility of other western Canadian production cutbacks of high sulphur crude whose access to market is particularly price sensitive, and advise the House what steps he contemplates to correct the situation?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. gentleman that we feel Canadian oil should get the best possible price in the American market, and under the circumstances the National Energy Board obviously felt that the price stipulated for the month of November was the best price.

* * *

HEALTH

POSSIBLE TOXICITY OF BLOOD IMPORTED FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister aware that imports of blood from the United States, used in Canada for experimental purposes, may carry toxic bacteria leading to hepatitis in technicians and other personnel who handle this element?

[Mr. Brewin.]

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my department has taken cognizance of this news and an investigation is being carried out to ascertain whether contaminated blood has been imported. No definite conclusion has been made as yet but research is continuing.

* * *

[English]

HOUSING

TREFANN COURT—BASIS OF ALLEGED REFUSAL OF LOAN BY CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. It concerns the abrupt turndown of the $500,000 Trefann Court homes project in Toronto yesterday by CMHC president, William Teron. In view of Mr. Teron's comments that any CMHC commitment to this project would have to be conditional on the mortgage being guaranteed by the city of Toronto, a condition which the minister knows the city does not have the power to fulfil, would the minister indicate why CMHC has turned down the project and whether he suspects any pricing irregularities or staffing problems on the part of the Trefann group or city officials?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the premise of the question is correct.

Mr. Atkey: Would the minister indicate whether he has now reversed his prior approval in principle of the Trefann Court homes project, particularly the mortgage approval in principle which he gave last July, and can he say whether his decision was based on the alleged departmental investigation into the financing of housing co-operatives in Ontario, which was started last February and the report on which was promised some time ago but is still being kept under wraps?

Mr. Basford: No, Mr. Speaker. In answer to the substantive part of the question, there were discussions between the corporation and the mayor of Toronto yesterday, and continuing today, with regard to the approval of a loan for this project. I have not been advised as to the outcome of those negotiations, nor has the corporation made a decision on that application.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we have reached the point where I should remind hon. members that we will soon be running out of time and we should try to limit the number of supplementaries.

CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING PROJECTS, TORONTO—DATE OF PRESENTATION OF REPORT ON INQUIRY

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, when can we expect the internal departmental report into co-operative housing in the Toronto area, which the minister promised some time ago?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): That inquiry has reported to me and the report is being examined.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peel South.

Mr. Blenkarn: My question is—

Mr. Hellyer: As a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have recognized the hon. member for Peel South who has already started asking his question.

* * *

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

CHARGES AGAINST MEMBERS WORKING AT MALTON AIRPORT—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Is he aware that perhaps some 90 charges have been made by private individuals against members of the RCMP in connection with their work at Malton Airport, charging members of the force with assault, assault occasioning bodily harm, and grievous bodily harm, and will he investigate the matter?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of those charges but I will be pleased to investigate them.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Is the Minister of Transport aware that the charges mentioned arise as a result of the impossible situation in which the RCMP is placed in trying to enforce the regulations concerning taxis, parking rights, and the soliciting of taxi fares at Toronto International Airport, and will the minister revise those regulations so that the enforcement of regulations can be carried out without giving rise to the problems that have occurred?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Solicitor General should answer that part of the question relating to the RCMP. So far as the other part is concerned, I am going to investigate it.

* * *

HOUSING

CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING PROJECTS, TORONTO—POSITION OF MINISTER ON PUBLICATION OF REPORT AND POSSIBLE CRIMINAL CHARGES

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Will he undertake to table at the earliest possible opportunity the report to which he just referred?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. It was an internal report—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: —something which I have made clear, and it was written as such. It would be grossly unfair to the people involved to publish a report not based on cross-examinable evidence. The report, however, has been referred to the appropriate authorities, including the law enforcement officers of this country, for whatever action they think is appropriate.

Mr. Hellyer: Does the minister mean to inform this House that he did in fact find irregularities, and that it is possible criminal prosecutions will be based on the report?

Mr. Basford: I think it would be improper and unfair for me to answer that in the positive. The report has been received. It has been referred to the law officers of the Crown for whatever action is deemed appropriate by them.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Calgary North rising on a point of order?

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I would like to file a caveat so as to be able to raise a point of privilege at the end of the question period in reference to the answer the minister has just given.

Mr. Speaker: The rules require that a question of privilege be brought up immediately if there is substance for a question of privilege. Perhaps the hon. member for Calgary North might place the matter before the House and I will take that into account before determining the end of the question period.

Mr. Woolliams: My question of privilege is that the minister has now said the report from the internal inquiry is confidential. For months members on this side of the House pressed the minister for a judicial inquiry. His excuse for not granting a judicial inquiry was that he had already set up an internal inquiry into the matter. Now, he is misleading the House today by saying he has had an internal inquiry, the report on which is confidential. He is contradicting everything he said in reference to this project during the last two months.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Further, Mr. Speaker, that kind of answer and that kind of minister is the reason the question period sometimes gets out of hand. If we could get honest, straightforward answers, we would not need so many supplementaries.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to make a ruling on the matter raised by the hon. member for Calgary North. The hon. member may have a grievance or perhaps a point of order. Perhaps he does not agree with the reply given by the minister, but as is well established that cannot be the foundation for a question of privilege. I think this is a matter of debate. The hon. member may be right, the hon. minister may be right, but I do not think we should engage in debate on a question of privilege at this time.

● (1510)

Mr. Basford: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I think I am entitled to react to the statement by the hon. member that I have been misleading the House. This is not correct and the record will show it. I have made it clear from February that I have asked for a report relating to five loans by the corporation. That was an internal report which was submitted to me and to members of the government in order that we might determine the appropriate course of action. That report has been received and the appropriate course of action has been followed, namely, it has been referred to the law officers of the Crown.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member seeks to speak on the question of privilege. I have already ruled that there is no question of privilege. If the hon. member has another question of privilege, the Chair has to hear him, but I would hope that hon. members would try to limit these points of order and questions of privilege which really do not help very much in the conduct of the business of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: My comment, Mr. Speaker, is that perhaps either the minister or the Prime Minister could now clear up this matter to the satisfaction of all members of the House if they would agree to a public inquiry so that the House and the country would know the exact facts rather than being kept in the dark.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Later]

Mr. Atkey: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. Atkey: With regard to a matter that was raised earlier, I should draw to Your Honour's attention a statement made by the Prime Minister on this issue on July 12 last when he said, as reported at page 5539 of Hansard:

> The responsible minister asked as early as last February for a thorough inquiry into this matter. . . . He has reported progress to the House. The position of the government is that if, following this inquiry, there is any reason for there to be a public inquiry, we will hold one. However, for the time being there is nothing of a nature which would incline me to believe we should order a public inquiry at this time.

That statement was made on July 12.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not know what this has to do with either a point of order or a question of privilege. I would point out to hon. members that an attempt should be made to give other hon. members who have questions to ask an opportunity to do so. I really do not think that debates over the accuracy of statements should take place during the question period. I would hope hon. members would keep that in mind.

* * *

GRAIN

OILSEED AND GRAIN DEVELOPMENT CENTRE—STATUS OF PROJECT—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE SITE WILL REMAIN IN SASKATOON

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board and concerns a statement by the minister at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference in Calgary last July. Can the minister advise what the target date is for the opening of the Oilseed and Grain Product Development Centre?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, plans are going forward for the development of the centre. The government offer of $3.6 million and financing for part or all of the operating costs for the first five years was contingent upon the contribution of support by various segments of the industry. This is being sought and obtained, and the development of the centre looks very promising.

Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw): Can the minister advise if discussions have taken place with a view to perhaps changing the site of the centre to eastern Canada, and will he assure the people of Saskatchewan that no change will be made in the location of the centre and that in fact it will be located in Saskatoon?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that certainly is the intention of the government. The offer was made in a firm way to the province of Saskatchewan for siting in Saskatoon if the necessary financing from the industry could be obtained. The initial reaction of the government of Saskatchewan was not totally enthusiastic but that has now changed and I believe there is co-operation. Certainly, I believe that the site will remain in Saskatoon.

* * *

PENSIONS

ALLEGED INADEQUACY OF RAILWAY PENSIONS—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In view of the minister's recognition during the debate on the bill that sent railway employees back to work that the railway pension issue is much broader than the one question that was referred to Dr. Deutsch, is the minister now prepared either to enlarge the terms of reference given to Dr. Deutsch or to appoint another commissioner to go into the whole question of the inadequacy of railway pensions?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the appointment of another commissioner to be necessary or perhaps even desirable. I did indicate that the broader question in terms of setting the benefits, as opposed to the costing that Dr. Deutsch is looking into, might better come about as a result of management and labour coming together to discuss the matter. I have discussed that with my colleague, the Minister of Transport, and I hope to have more to announce later. I might say that this might be dependent upon, or at least related to the findings of Dr. Deutsch on the costing side, and I expect them very shortly.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but the minister is so busy nowadays that I am prepared to accept the fact that he is absent from the House today. With your leave, Mr. Speaker, I shall ask him my question tomorrow.

* * *

[English]

ABORTION

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO CRIMINAL CODE TO TIGHTEN LAW—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In consideration of the concern of many Canadians about the blatant abuse of the Criminal Code by many medical committees on the question of abortion, and in response to the extraordinary representation of the large numbers who came to Parliament Hill from all parts of Canada on the weekend, would the minister advise what the government contemplates doing to see that the interpretation of the law is tightened in order to lessen the inordinate killing of the unborn that has been taking place?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the matter of the enforcement of the criminal law is of serious concern to this parliament, even though the actual handling of law enforcement in the criminal field is for the Attorneys General of the provinces. In the case of the northern areas, where I have responsibility as Attorney General, I have taken steps to ensure that hospital committees are aware of the serious responsibility that parliament imposed upon them in the enactment of the specific provisions of the Criminal Code. I have drawn my approach in this matter to the attention of the provincial Attorneys General in the hope that they will take similar action to ensure that hospital committees undertake with a proper sense of responsibility the obligation imposed upon them by this parliament.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. I am sure he is aware, as is everyone else, that the legislation is not very clearcut on what the regulations are and where the responsibility lies. I wonder if the minister would take it upon himself to introduce in the House amendments to the Criminal Code which would make it clear and specific rather than putting the burden on the medical profession to interpret a very hazy law?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, this problem was the subject of debate at the time parliament enacted the specific law that we now have. The problem is really one of finding adequate legal definitions that do not rely on a certain responsibility on the part of the hon. member and reasonable medical men. The law we now have places the reliance there. As I read the debate, I think the interpretation of the words in the Criminal Code is clear. The question now is really one of sense of responsibility on the part of medical committees to ensure that they do not rely simply on social or economic factors but only approve abortions where there is serious danger to the life or health of the mother.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A number of hon. members are seeking supplementaries on this subject. Perhaps the Chair might be allowed to recognize the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta and then call orders of the day.

* * *

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

ALLEGED CONFLICT OF INTEREST IN CASE OF MR. RATHIE—SUGGESTED RESIGNATION—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact the minister has admitted there is a conflict of interest between the private holdings of Mr. Bill Rathie and his position as a member of the National Harbours Board, will the minister demand that Mr. Rathie give up his position in his private company in order to assure fair representation from him as a member of the National Harbours Board?

● (1520)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the newspaperman who interviewed me yesterday on this is not responsible for the title which appeared in the newspaper. I said exactly the contrary.

Mr. Reynolds: In view of the minister's statement, will the minister conduct an inquiry into the number of applications presented to the National Harbours Board which have been rejected since Mr. Rathie became a member of the board?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think everybody in Vancouver—the National Harbours Board and Vancouver authorities—knew about Mr. Rathie owing these storage facilities in the harbour. If a decision were taken involving allocation to Mr. Rathie, it would have to be ratified by the National Harbours Board, by the Minister of Transport, by Treasury Board and by cabinet.

Mr. Reynolds: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister said that everybody knew about Mr. Rathie's position before he was appointed. The minister did not know when he was asked about it by the press; yet he is the one who appointed him.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think this is the appropriate time of the year, being the late part of this session, to wonder what happened to the recommendations we made respecting the question period. I know that work is being done and the committee is meeting. Yet today we saw that four members had to stand in their places and raise questions of privilege or points of order in an attempt to remind ministers of their responsibility to impart to the House information being sought by members of the opposition. I notice that the Minister of Finance smiles as I make that point. There have been cases in British parliamentary history where ministers have actually been forced to resign because they refused to give information to the House of Commons.

Ministers sit back and do not reply. The Prime Minister is a clear example of this. They are operating a closed shop. The attitude that ministers manifest in the question period is such that you have to dig, and unless you really dig at something frequently you will not get any information.

May I remind hon. members that today there were in excess of 30 members standing at the end of the 40-minute question period with questions on their minds. This is partly owing to the fact that the government is not willing to respond to the questions that are raised. I think this is a very serious matter as this is the only avenue by which we can hold the government accountable to the Canadian people. It is a very serious responsibility, and I think ministers should be reminded of that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: Second, I do not think it is necessary for us to indulge in months or even years of discussion in order to bring some minor changes to the question period. We must extend the time allocated to the question period; this can be done on a daily basis, once a week, or in some other way by which a small amount of time could be added to the question period per day. It is obvious that either the length of the question period will have to change or the attitude of ministers toward the question period.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Bawden: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, as I approached the Parliament Buildings before lunch today I noticed that the centennial flame which has burned for many years was not burning. I was going to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or the Prime Minister or perhaps the Minister of Public Works, whether this is the result of the immediate reaction to the government's program to conserve energy, or the result of a breakdown with regard to gas supplies, and prices, from western Canada.

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, so far as I know it was just owing to the change in the weather.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House resumed, from Monday, November 5, consideration of Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and Motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, according to my recollection, the issues agitating the voters during the last election, in my riding at any rate, were law and order, pollution controls, and foreign investment policy. These are all important issues and the voters were right to have them in the forefront of their minds.

The present government chose to disregard prevailing public opinion with respect to law and order when it introduced Bill C-2. It has done little to take effective measures with regard to pollution control, particularly with respect to tanker routes. Now, we have a foreign take-over bill, as it is called, which is an attempt to control and regulate certain aspects of foreign investment in Canada. What does this offer, Mr. Speaker? Further, in what manner should we accept this offer?

It has been clear to me for a long time that we, in Canada, must do something to secure for Canadians a greater share in the making of decisions which affect the economic activities of this country. Much has been made of the need to obtain a greater share of the equity capital of enterprises operating in this country. Like many other Canadians, it has been my policy to direct my investments along these lines. I have done what little I could, with the excess capital I had for investment, to make sure that what I had was going into the development of Canada through the development of Canadian business and enterprise. If you like, you can call me a nut for insisting on taking this sort of course and not investing in a way that would bring the best economic return. Perhaps I have not been seeking the best economic return. By the same token, you could call several hundred thousand fellow Canadians nuts because we did not calculate in terms of dollars and cents when we put on uniforms some 34 years ago.

By insisting on my investment policy, I have not always gained the maximum return; however, I have always felt, and I still feel, that my return was not really to be calculated in those terms, but, rather, in terms of my helping to promote Canadianism, whether economic or in our political life. The bill before us does nothing to encourage Canadians to follow this practice. Unfortunately, there are some who feel that we must convert economic patriotism, if you like, into a profitable attitude. This aspect of foreign investment deserves much more attention than it is now getting.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), for example, ought to provide financial inducements to Canadian investors, individual and corporate, by which they will invest more frequently and more heavily in Canadian enterprises. The bill before us makes no attempt to deal with this aspect of investment in Canadian enterprise, and I maintain that therein lies one of its major defects.

Having said that and judging from my own experience, I say that assurance of Canadian equity capital, particularly by individuals, in Canadian companies is not an absolute guarantee of effective Canadian control of those companies. How many of those, in this House owning voting shares in Canadian companies, exercise their voting privileges regularly? Let's be honest now. How many exercise them regularly? And how many have ever exercised them? Is it not more often your experience that you proceed by proxy or perhaps even by default?

In saying this I do not belittle the value of the incentives for encouraging Canadians to invest in Canadian enterprise. The operations are Canadian; the proceeds come back to Canadians by way of dividends, share options and so on. It becomes more fully a Canadian operation to the extent that this process is carried on with the involvement of and to the benefit of Canadians.

I suggest, therefore, that one of the things Canadians are looking for at this moment is something this bill does not really provide. We are looking for something which, if my knowledge of parliamentary practice is correct, the opposition cannot supply when the government fails to do so, namely, changes in the income tax law which would encourage Canadians to invest in Canadian enterprises and to make it profitable for them to do so. This is a governmental prerogative. I would say, however, that if my party has any hand in the preparation of the next budget, and I have a sneaking hunch we may very well have, you can bet your bottom dollar that I will be arguing this course on my Minister of Finance. I have some reason to believe he will heed that sort of advice.

• (1530)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): This bill is defective in a lot of other ways. We have a number of amendments on the order paper, many of them directed toward ensuring greater federal-provincial consultation. The present government, I am sure, will protest violently when I come to my next sentence, but in anticipation of that protest I would just like to say that to organize meetings and enter into dialogue is not to be confused with consultation. It is my contention that, and here it comes, the present government has failed abominably in the area of federal-provincial consultation. It held a Western Economic Opportunities Conference, but what was achieved beyond the fact that federal and provincial ministers met face to face? How much provincial concern was absorbed by the federal government? How much of it was stored up for use when the need arose? What assessments were made of the areas of provincial requirements and the need, on occasion, to get on the phone and talk to the minister involved when crises blow up?

We saw an instance last week of a blatant disregard of a legitimate and understandable concern of a provincial government. This was to be found in the statement made here last Thursday on the energy question by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). The Alberta ministers directly responsible in the Alberta government for the provinces' resources, including supplies of energy-producing products, gas and oil, were in Ottawa on the Monday and spent nearly all day with the federal minister. I do not know what they talked about at that day long meeting. I was not there. These discussions were private. However, I would be greatly surprised if the federal minister did not get the following message communicated to him in one form or another, either directly which I think most likely, or indirectly. The message must have been put across. Why else, I feel bound to ask, did the Alberta ministers bother to come to Ottawa?

The message that must have been put across would probably read as follows: "Look, we are heading for trouble as a result of the Middle East oil crisis. For Pete's sake, if you have to do anything on the spur of the moment to deal with that situation as it affects Canada, give one or the other of us a call, talk to us; let us know what it is you have in mind to say or do. Let us consult about it. We have had some experience, after all, in producing and seeing to the distribution of hydrocarbons in the energy field, so don't do anything, we implore you, without first getting a reading from us. We have quite substantial supplies. Maybe between us we can get things worked out with the minimum of dislocation all around." That, I firmly believe, is one of the messages the federal minister ought to have received from the Albertans when they were here on Monday of last week. They may not have put it in those terms, but being reasonable men and staunch upholders of Canadianism, they are certain to have left an impression of that sort.

That meeting, let us remember, was on Monday, October 29. Ten days earlier, in the House, in reply to a question put to him by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and others relating to a federal pricing policy for oil, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had us all believing that his department was thinking in terms of letting the price of crude oil in Canada be determined on the basis of a formula having, as its principal ingredient, the price of offshore oil arriving in Montreal. That formula, we were given to understand, while not the best price available to Albertan oil producers, would meet their requirements and would satisfy Alberta and formed part of the government's energy policy. Within those limits it seemed possible that the Canadian product would be suitably priced, not to everyone's satisfaction, but as a result of the best option open.

This element, we might have thought, would have figured rather prominently in the statement on energy the minister felt obliged to make last Thursday. And what did we find? We had a bombshell dropped on us in the House in the form of an almost 400 per cent increase in the export tax on oil, without any attempt on the minister's part to mention domestic price levels and still less to have any real consultations with Alberta when the crunch came. Little surprise, then, that the Alberta government is aggrieved.

This is what I mean when I say this government refuses to consult the provinces on matters affecting provincial responsibilities. No one can have confidence in the undertakings which have been given during recent debates that the government would consult the province; those undertakings have to be written into the law. It is for this reason that this particular defect in the bill must be remedied by the passage of one of the various amendments put forward by my colleague, the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay).

This government cannot be trusted to administer Bill C-132, as it now stands, should it be passed into law. We have cause for concern because of past experience, and I have gone to great lengths to explain that experience and our misgivings. This government seems determined to antagonize the provinces rather than consult with them on matters over which they have a dominating interest and, in some instances, jurisdiction.

There is another grave defect in this bill. It deals with only two aspects of the investment of foreign capital, the take-over of an existing enterprise, which will be refused by the agency unless it can be shown that the take-over would be likely to result in a substantial benefit to Canada. The determination of "substantial benefit to Canada" is going to be difficult enough to define as the bill was originally drafted. Even taking into account the industrial and economic policies enunciated by the province in which the enterprise is to be carried on, and enlisting provincial collaboration in doing so as suggested in the amendment submitted by my colleague from Central Nova, there will still be no easy way to define "substantial benefit" to everyone's satisfaction, that is as far as take-overs and new investments are concerned.

The second feature of this bill is the attempt to subject new capital to controls like those imposed on take-over bids. Again, we have the problem of defining with any assurance of success "substantial benefit of Canada". There is, however, an additional area which the bill does not touch. It is the one which I think caused a great deal of concern, heartburn and misgiving during the past election. This is one which caused a great deal of heartburn and misgiving during the last election. It is a great oversight and a dangerous loophole which must be plugged, if not by this bill then by some other legislation. It relates to expansion or diversification of existing foreign-financed enterprises. These should be considered very carefully.

● (1540)

A foreign-financed enterprise which is already operating in Canada or which manages to get itself accepted as a new enterprise here may set its sights on a Canadian-owned and operated enterprise already in being. No names, no pack-drill, Mr. Speaker, but one can think of plenty of illustrations. The initial entry into Canada may, indeed, have been obtained for the express purpose of getting into a position to increase the power base in Canada, and not necessarily in the same field of activity; perhaps it is merely to diversify holdings, spread risks—oil into publishing, manufacturing into resource development or even into running a chain of retail stores.

The legislation before us makes no attempt to regulate or control such a form of activity. It is not, therefore, entirely satisfactory. It fails to respond to the increasingly vocal demands one hears in favour of regaining control of our own affairs. It is a start, and that is all—at least it is a start provided some of the defects to which I have referred can be remedied. Otherwise, it is not likely to be a very effective instrument. In fact, even with our amendments, it would be a clumsy one. I commend those amendments to all hon. members none the less, because without them we shall see another bureaucratic monster in our midst.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address the House briefly today on the particular subject before us and on the needs of the Canadian people. I would like to put the matter in the context of our present situation and the challenges which currently face us. Too often, perhaps, we look at these issues in terms of ideology; we consider legislation in terms of situations which existed a decade or even longer ago.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

One of the starting points one might take is that of determining our position with respect to the control of energy in this country, more particularly in the field of oil products. One might ask oneself, what is the basic function of government in this area. Surely, the first charge upon any government of a community, whether it be a municipality, a province or a nation, is to see that the basic needs of the people who live in that community are served—to see that the people have shelter, food and a workable social relationship with each other so that they can live together. These are minimum requirements. A government must conduct its affairs so that this responsibility is discharged.

The energy question is one of the real challenges which face us today. We have left this field to foreign-owned concerns to the extent that some 90 per cent of our resources are controlled by people other than Canadians. The companies concerned are not charged with serving the needs of Canadians. It is true that a National Energy Board has been set up, and that it is charged with ensuring that certain guidelines are observed. But they are minimum guidelines. Other than this, we have left the field to private corporations—multinational corporations for the most part—in the assumption that Canada would be well served.

One watershed was reached, in my opinion, when we decided to build a trans-Canada pipeline. That was the occasion for one of the great debates in this chamber. It was so important that a book was written about it setting out what happened at the time of the debate—the position taken by various parties and individuals and the final outcome. The book set out the roles played. It dealt with the activities of the Murchisons, the great Texas promoters and other oil operators. It also included the role of the late C.D. Howe who was quite properly dubbed minister of everything in the Liberal government of the day. I say this was a watershed, a point of decision in the affairs of this country. Canada decided at that time to leave the oil component of its energy resources in the hands of independent ownership, or private enterprise. It was assumed that by so doing the community would be well served and that consumers would be comfortable and secure. Mr. Speaker, if there is any assumption which has been proven wrong, that one has been proven wrong and it has taken less than 25 years to do so.

The government across the way comes now to the House timidly and hesitantly with a bill which seeks to limit the free rein enjoyed by private enterprise and multinational corporations. It seeks timidly and hesitantly to ensure that the country may be able to protect its own interests and that some government, not necessarily this one but any Canadian government, may be able to take sufficient legislative action as to enable it to control effectively the affairs of the nation and protect the interests of its citizens. The bill before us will not do that. It will not enable the government to control the affairs of the nation effectively. We have reached a point at which we do not exercise effective control, a point at which we find ourselves entirely without a policy which will meet the needs of the times. We are in a position where one level of government quarrels with another over what to do about the resources which are necessary to provide the heat and power this country needs. The tragedy of it all is that neither we nor the province of Alberta any longer owns the essential resources. These resources have been alienated from our control, and this has happened with our consent. If this measure before the House proposes to do anything, its first objective should be no longer to tolerate the alienation of our resources and our power. Although this may be necessary at times in manufacturing, we should not tolerate the basic resources of this country being wrenched from the control of the Canadian people.

● (1550)

Let me give another example. A few years ago we wanted to ship some grain to the People's Republic of China, which since that time we have recognized. However, at the time the People's Republic of China was one of the bad boys of the world as far as the United States was concerned, so the United States declared that none of the United States companies would be allowed to ship Canadian grain to China. I recall that we needed certain equipment to unload the grain boats when they reached Chinese Ports and the U.S. government even sought to prevent us from using that equipment. But the reason we were able to proceed to export the grain we wanted to export was that the Canadian co-operatives happened to own the most important grain forwarding and grain storage company in Canada.

I suspect that the only reason we owned and controlled at that time, as we still do, 75 per cent to 90 per cent of the grain handling facilities in the prairie regions is that they were co-operative facilities. Had they been privately owned, the chances are they would have belonged to the United States corporations or some other foreign country. In this instance the people, through the co-operatives, owned the facilities. The Canadian Wheat Board, which was and is a Crown corporation, was then in operation. This grain was our product; we had the physical facilities to move and market the grain, and we did so. Had we not been in that position we would not have been able to decide our own destiny at that time.

If any member of this House wants to read a very interesting chapter in the history of grain, then I suggest he read about the U.S.S.R. buying over 400 million bushels of U.S. wheat, about one-third of the crop, from private corporations in the United States. This was a purchase subsidized by the U.S. government with the full complicity of the private grain companies in the U.S., a deal that cost the U.S. taxpayers some millions of dollars. The companies involved included Carghill, Dreyfus, Bunge; it reads like a list of the mighty corporations and makes for fascinating reading.

To complete each deal, the company or corporation concerned would contact the U.S. department of agriculture and ask whether the subsidy and guarantees were still in force. When they received confirmation that they were, they proceeded with the sale, committing the U.S. government and people to millions of dollars, to the benefit of a foreign government. If anyone wants an example of the operation, let them read the story of the amber fields of grain, a record of the consciences of the multinational corporations and the consciences of the rich.

This is a mighty nation that I refer to, Mr. Speaker. It is not Canada, a country of some 20 million people; this is the mightiest nation in the world with over 200 million people, sovereign in its own right; a country whose mighty navy roams the seas and whose army calls the shots. The U.S.S.R., with the help of the multinational corporations moved in and took that country to the cleaners. The result was an increase in the price of food and feed grain, and an increase in the cost of production and of food from which this whole continent still suffers. The principal reason for this was that the United States of America had no real control over the movement and sale of its primary foodstuffs; it had no co-ordinated surveillance over its primary sources of food.

In this country we have. Through the co-operative grain companies that we have built, and through the Canadian Wheat Board, we do have a very large measure of control. What I am saying is that the multinational companies which handle grain did the same thing to the United States food supply that they are now doing to our petroleum supply, and to the supply of heating oil that we in this country are going to need this coming winter. There are two developed countries in our world that have adequate supplies of energy. One is the U.S.S.R.; the other is Canada. The minister in charge of energy in this country stood in the House last night and told Canadian citizens they may be cold in the coming winter. He told them to turn down their thermostats and to switch off their lights. Is this a reflection of an organized community? I suggest it is a shame and disgrace to the Canadian people, and is a reflection on those who have controlled the destiny of this nation up to the present time.

● (1600)

What have we in the way of an agency that could go to sources of energy, even outside our own country, perhaps the Middle East or Venezuela, with the authority to say that we are ready to purchase "X" number of barrels of oil, asking for a firm contract? I suggest that we have no such agency. All we have is a joker associated with the refinery at Come By Chance who appears on television, and he did so last night, suggesting that the Canadian government wants us to sell the refinery products to the United States. That individual does nothing more than make suggestions, while men like Shaheen spend $400,000 chartering the Queen Elizabeth to move from a port in the United States to Canada for the purpose of putting on a big party. I should like to know at whose expense that party was thrown. I suggest that, eventually, the expense will be borne by the Canadian taxpayer. I suppose we will be asked to switch off a few lights in order to save energy.

I fully expected the minister across the aisle to rise in his place to say that we have a program which will assure supplies to meet the needs of Canadians. Certainly, we could expect the minister to say that if this program could not be put into effect within three months the government had positive plans to put it into effect within six months or a year. Surely, we should have some indication that the government plans to institute a program under the authority of those responsible for resources in Canada. These resources should be put at the disposal of a Crown corporation or some agency in order to meet the needs of the Canadian people, but that is not the case. We stand in this Chamber debating this bill and talking about whether we will actually have control of our natural resources. We have talked for some time about the establishment of a Canadian policy which would ensure the future destiny and welfare of Canada.

It is time that we abandoned this wavering position, as illustrated by this bill, and got down to fundamentals. I suggest we must do so before it is too late. We must make a move in the direction of Canadian ownership of Canadian resources. We must do so very quickly in order that we obtain the confidence of Canadian people that we will be able to meet the needs of Canadians in the future.

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): I am mindful of the problem of foreign domination of Canadian industry and the problem of achieving economic independence for Canada. These problems deserve serious consideration and a wise and effective legislative response. Canada's economic growth and development has depended greatly on foreign investment and it is an essential element in the future growth of many parts of our country. A national policy defining and clarifying the role of foreign investment in Canada is needed if many important decisions relating to this country's economic life are not to be made outside of Canada by non-Canadians and, if in fact, such decisions are to be in our best interests. Fundamental to any such approach is a clearly stated national policy setting out a long-term economic development strategy designed to preserve the economic and political independence of Canada and which will have adequate regard for our very serious problems of regional disparity.

There is no question that Canadians look forward to playing a growing role in Canadian development and economic management. It is no wonder that Canadians view with concern the fact that over one-half of the corporations operating in our country are non-resident owned, and the extremely high percentage of foreign ownership reflected in manufacturing industries concerned with rubber products, petroleum, chemicals and chemical products, primary metals and electrical products. Of equal concern to Canadians is the fact that foreign investors receive a large portion of the grants under special and incentive programs and continue to use Canadian money to expand foreign ownership in the Canadian economy.

Bill C-132, the foreign investment review bill, now before us, seeking to rectify these problems, is essentially a negative document concerned with control of foreign investment in existing and new industries without at the same time dealing with positive measures to ensure the survival and expansion of Canadian companies. It fails to increase Canadian presence in existing subsidiaries within this country or to provide measures for making Canadian capital available to those individuals and enterprises willing and able to make constructive use of Canadian resources and manpower. Canadian risk capital has not been encouraged to match Canadian opportunities and entrepreneurial talent. It is unfortunate that the government has been unable to grasp this concept.

The bill also fails to establish clear standards of good corporate behaviour for the foreign-owned or controlled enterprise.

[Mr. Gleave.]

The government should act in co-operation with the provinces to establish and define key categories of business, and strategic sectors of the economy, which are to be considered reserved for Canadian ownership, for controlled minor foreign participation, or for Canadian development. Clearly, it is imperative that our federal and provincial governments should meet and discover areas in the structure of our natural resources that should be reserved for development in Canada by Canadians and for Canadians. The amount and degree of foreign investment, if any, in these areas should be determined.

There is, I believe, an area in which provincial governments might be encouraged to protect recreational lands around lakes and streams by holding them in the public domain for the use of all our people.

The government must move positively to provide incentives through the tax system to encourage increased investment by Canadians in Canadian firms. The government should move positively, and in concert with the provinces, to encourage and assist businessmen and schools of business administration to provide more extensive and appropriate programs in order to enlarge the pool of entrepreneurial and managerial talent in Canada. In developing the financial institutions required to match Canadian capital with Canadian opportunity and entrepreneurial talent the government should take positive measures to divert financial assistance to new firms in key sectors of the economy to help them import technology and management contracts.

The province of New Brunswick is still in need of external capital in large amounts to provide jobs and opportunities for Canadians living in that province. Indeed, Canadians in New Brunswick are entitled to the assurance that their capital needs will be met, and will not be unduly delayed or hindered by the operation of the foreign investment review agency set up by this bill. New Brunswick is dependent to a great degree on investment from outside to develop new projects and assist in the expansion of existing firms. New Brunswick agencies have tried to attract investment capital to New Brunswick and, since 1970, of 76 projects producing employment for 3,382 persons, about 50 per cent of the capital invested and 40 per cent of the total jobs created were a direct result of investment from outside the province.

In my opinion, this bill must be improved to ensure that provincial points of view will be adequately protected. Without adequate provincial input, the ponderous considerations of the bureaucrats in the foreign investment review agency may result in costly delays, uncertainty and a diminution in the badly needed investment in New Brunswick. There is little in this bill, or indeed in the government's total program, to illustrate positive programs that are put forward to assure that Canadians will be encouraged to save and invest, and that vehicles will be developed to divert adequate savings to the needs of New Brunswick and other slow growth areas, in a manner that will not be contradictory to the national interest.

In short, the government's foreign investment proposals contribute little to increased Canadian participation and/or Canadian ownership in the Canadian economy. We are faced with a relatively negative bill that has the potential of aggravating the already serious disparities that exist between regions of this country.

• (1610)

Despite the factors set out in the bill which the foreign investment review agency must consider in determining what is in the national interest, the lack of a properly evaluated criterion leaves the agency with outrageously large areas of personal judgment. Some of my colleagues have indicated amendments to strengthen and correct these guidelines, and I am inclined to favour them.

In the administration of this measure, it is imperative that the government recognize that this is essentially a nation of five regions; that our national policies must be flexible enough to give maximum protection to one or two segments without exploiting the others. New Brunswick's bitter experience in monetary, fiscal, energy, transportation and tariff policies is a cause for concern. We in New Brunswick need a comprehensive program to increase Canadian participation in our economy, revisions to the Bank Act and the development of measures to encourage investment of risk capital. This bill alone, without amendments, will not do the job. Even the Canada Development Corporation, if given an expanded role with regional guidelines, can do much to make a positive contribution to the situation, and so too can a requirement that foreign firms make voting shares available to Canadians.

As for New Brunswick, I believe that massive investment is absolutely necessary if we are to progress. I believe that foreign investors should be sought and, provided they become good corporate citizens, be welcomed to our midst as Canadians. A comprehensive approach to national development indicating the acceptable role foreign capital can play is an essential element in the orderly development and growth of Canada. It is in search of this goal that I have attempted to set out some factors to be considered if we are to evoke an effective and comprehensive legislative response.

I have attempted to emphasize the benefits that can accrue to the slower growth regions of Canada with such a positive approach to the problems of economic and political independence while also indicating the hardship that will surely follow from the strictly administered negative approach which now exists in this bill, and which I hope will be expanded and improved by amendments contemplated by my colleagues. The minister can commence the positive approach by giving his assurance that New Brunswick in particular, and all slow growth regions of Canada, will not suffer for want of risk capital because of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. Ed Nelson (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak briefly on the amendments proposed to this bill. It is a matter of record that for a long time our party has been concerned about the growing influence of foreign investment in Canada. It is equally a matter of record that the Canadian people are deeply concerned about the effect of that growing influence on their daily problems, such as the cost of living and problems of this nature. People are worried about where we are heading as a nation. It is the purpose of this bill to provide a screening agency to review, assess and control the extent and influence of foreign investment in Canada. In the words of the bill itself:

> ... the ability of Canadians to maintain effective control over their economic environment is a matter of national concern,

I stress the phrase "a matter of national concern". So far as the extent of foreign investment is concerned, that is a matter of record and I will not expend a great amount of time quoting statistics to indicate the extent of that foreign investment. What I would like to comment upon is the nature of the influence of foreign investment on our country, because it seems to me that an understanding of that influence is basic in considering the amendments that are before us today, and indeed for an understanding of the need for the control of foreign investment in Canada as is laid out in the bill.

The growing influence of multinational corporations is twofold in that it is both economic and political in its effect. It would be a grievous error to conclude that the over extension of foreign investment in Canada endangers our economy only because it deprives Canadians of the ownership of their own industries. It has this effect, of course, with the result that there is a steady drain of Canadian dollars to foreign countries, and in particular to the United States.

Some people are fond of extolling the benefits of foreign investment in our country. They say it brings us jobs, it brings us industries. But the figures tell us that between 1960 and 1969 we lost $2 billion more than we gained through foreign investment, and I cannot for the life of me see how this can be construed to be an advantage. Only last year, dividend interest in foreign owned businesses was exported to the tune of $2.35 billion. In nearly every paper you pick up, there is growing evidence of more and more take-overs of our industries. As early as 1969, which is not too long ago, the Financial Post began an editorial in this fashion:

> Clearly, time is running out as far as Canada's independence is concerned. The sweep of foreign (particularly U.S.) control of industry and resources in Canada is not matched in any other industrial country.

But we cannot separate the economic influence from the inevitable political influence of such corporate giants on the affairs of the nations which they invade. Corporate giants such as ITT are multinational only in the sense that they exist in various nations, but as Professor Papandreou pointed out in a recent article in the Canadian Forum, the term "multinational" obscures the fact that such corporations are basically ethnocentric, that is that they operate essentially from their country of origin and that their influence emanates essentially from their country of origin. An American corporation does not become Canadian by the mere device of tacking "Canadian" in front of its name, as in the case, for example, of Canadian General Electric.

Corporate systems, when they become large enough, become instruments of foreign policy of their base country just as in reverse, the base country uses its influence abroad to further the interests of the corporate system. The activities of ITT in Chile are an example of this mutual co-operation between corporation and state. We are concerned in Canada at this moment with a threatened fuel shortage, and whether we freeze or not this winter lies largely in the hands of foreign-based oil corporations.

The point that I am trying to make, therefore, is that our consideration of the amendments before us should be directed toward strengthening the control of Canadians over the development of their economic resources and to strengthen at the same time their political independence which must, of necessity, be eroded as foreign domination of our economy increases. Make no mistake about it, political influence is the bed partner of economic influence.

The problem of politico-economic domination of our country is of national concern, and that national concern should override regional differences. For this reason, I would oppose any amendment that has the effect of hamstringing the work of the proposed foreign investment review agency. I am thinking in particular of an amendment such as amendment No. 5 in the name of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) which reads:

In any case where a review or assessment of a proposed or actual investment is likely to affect significantly a province or provinces, a recommendation to the minister thereon shall be submitted by a panel of officers of whom a majority shall be representative of such province or provinces.

● (1620)

If we accept the threat of foreign control, political or economic, of huge multinational corporations then we must rise above consideration of regional differences, and thing together as Canadians in order to regain this country for Canadians. Amendments such as the one I have just quoted place the concern of a particular area over the national concern. Such an amendment places a stumbling block in the way of effective action toward the end visualized by the bill itself, because every measure taken will be subject to agreement, in an area where history shows agreement is the exception rather than the rule.

If Bill C-132 is effectively legislated and administered, it may help protect the interests of the Canadian people as a whole. It is a responsibility of this parliament as a whole to ensure that the government does take effective action to give Canadians some measure of control over their own destinies.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, on rising to take part in this debate, I must first mention the title of the bill, which is an act to establish an agency for the control of foreign investment. Very few pieces of legislation come before this House that are more acceptable in concept. Today, everybody in Canada wants to do something about controlling foreign investment, and the power that foreign investment may have over Canadian lives.

I well remember the former bagman for the Liberal party in Alberta, now a member of the other place, Senator Hays, who also became a minister of agriculture, in a speech in Calgary saying that what we should have was economic union with the United States. I abhorred the thought. I wondered what kind of reasoning it was, but somehow it is the reasoning of some very wealthy people in Canada. They want economic union with the United States. I have never been one of them, but after looking at this bill I have some questions to put to the minister. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) is an obliging person. He is always willing to help. But sometimes in his eagerness to help he may harm, and I am a little worried about that in the present case. There may be harmful parts in this legislation. I can support the over-all concept but, as I say, the remarks of the Alberta senator in Calgary were very much against my general train of thought.

[Mr. Nelson.]

The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Nelson) said we must put aside our regional beliefs, and rise above that plateau. Those are strange remarks for one coming from British Columbia. I always thought that the mountains created a natural barrier. Whenever I crossed that barrier I found that the people behind it engaged in individualistic thinking. I think the hon. member's dream is a little pious, a little bit hopeful. All of us are not perfect. All of us have been sent to Ottawa to represent our constituencies and regions. We want to make certain that our constituencies and regions develop, believing that, as they develop, so grows Canada.

I well remember during the last election the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), who is in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, saying the government would do something about Vancouver, that it would spend some money there to develop the port. I only point this out to show how we are all determined to help our own regions. Those in power have a record which shows they help their own regions rather than others. I will go on to prove that record, Mr. Speaker. That is why I support the amendment before us calling for regional representation when hearing the various applications.

I had placed a question on the order paper asking how much money had been spent by the government on the various ports throughout Canada during the last five years. I selected the period of five years because that covers the time since the government took office. In 1967, the federal government spent something like $17 million on the port of Vancouver. Each year from 1967 to 1972 this amount dropped off, until it reached $6 million or $7 million in 1972. I might add that Vancouver is the largest port in Canada. It handles 27 per cent of all tonnage entering and leaving Canada.

I thought it strange that the Minister of Justice should come out to Calgary during the election campaign and say the government would spend more money on the port of Vancouver. But on looking at the answer to my question I found a reason. The next largest port in Canada happens to be Montreal. It handles 17 per cent of the total tonnage entering and leaving Canada. Five years ago $19 million was spent on it, and in 1972 $20 million, showing that expenditures there held level. This indicated that some regional preference was shown.

One can point to different regional pressures that have been brought to bear on the government. Walter Stewart in his book "Divide and Con" has pointed out the regional pressures that develop. In case somebody has not read it, I would quote from page 160 as follows:

A $10.3 million park at Mont Sainte Anne, twenty-five miles north of Quebec City, in Liberal Montmorency riding.

A $16 million national historical park in the heart of Jean Marchand's Quebec City riding . . .

A $30 million eighty-six acre park on the Toronto lakefront . . .

Those are example of regional pressure. I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) exercised some regional pressure with respect to the Toronto project.

A senior citizens' home for Port Hawkesbury, also in Allan MacEachen's riding . . . .

A $30 million dock for Mulgrave, Nova Scotia, which also just happens to be in Allan MacEachen's riding.

There was a little regional pressure there.

The author of this book is not a political person. In fact, I think he says in other books that he is a believer in the NDP philosophy. On page 61 he writes:

. . . my vote goes to Jean Marchand, the Minister, as he then was, of Regional Economic Expansion. Who else would put out a colour brochure listing the $270 million in federal grants pumped into his own area since 1967? Who else would put up a billboard to proclaim the coming of the "Jean Marchand Dam"?

I do not know if that dam has been built yet or not. I just point to these regional pressures that exert themselves in politics. We are all human. I suspect that if the government stays in power those same regional pressures will exert themselves with respect to the application of this bill.

What does the bill really do? Basically, it does three things. It gives the power to block or curtail new foreign money coming into Canada. It gives the power to limit the change of direction of foreign investment already in Canada. For example, I suppose Imperial Oil of Canada would be able to continue to operate in the oil industry here but would not get approval to go into any other line of business. Worst of all, the bill has the power to direct investment within Canada. Perhaps my suspicious mind is at work, but I think it might be said that if this agency is to deal with regional situations an application might be made to start a new factory in Alberta with German or Japanese or any foreign money and the agency might just say "Sorry, we cannot allow any more foreign investment in Alberta. It has too much already and we think it will significantly harm Canada, but you can invest it in some other area." That is where the regional pressures may be exerted.

● (1630)

I think the amendment offered by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), which states that a majority of the panel hearing the application must come from the region to which the application is applied is a sound one. I remember when DREE was established the minister told this House in good faith that he knew of the political pressures and of all the porkbarrelling accusations that could be made, but he said he would try his best to administer the act in a non-partisan way for the good of the country. He tried his best and as Walter Stewart has said, he was able to publish a colourful brochure listing the $270 million in federal grants that had been pumped into his own area since 1967. So, I do not believe his best is good enough, but it was human. I believe that the agency to be set up by this bill would be just as human and as subject to as many pressures. That is why I think the amendment should be supported.

Another area of the bill which gives me concern is the section containing the words "significant benefit to a part of Canada". What particular part, Mr. Speaker? In other words, if the agency questions an application, the applicant must prove that his investment is likely to create significant benefits for Canada. It might well be said that Michelin was a tremendous benefit to the province of Nova Scotia, but it could be argued, too, by another region of Canada that it destroyed the Dunlop Tire Company in the city of Toronto. The words "significant to the benefit of Canada" are not good enough unless there is some regional representation when hearing the application. The wording would make some sense then. There is no doubt in my mind that Michelin would be of significant benefit to the province of Nova Scotia, but they must know that they have to compete with the other industries in Canada. If they want to move into the markets in central Canada, they know that they have to compete. I believe that term denotes that the part of Canada affected will be all right if it has political clout. If it does not have political clout, however, it will have to go begging and it may be heard or it may not. I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that as a member of parliament I should assist the passage of legislation that forces people to go begging. Some criteria should be established for equal treatment and a fair hearing. As the representative of my constituents I can ask no more, but I do ask that and I am sure it is no more than any other member of the House asks.

I would like to go into the question of cost, Mr. Speaker. We are told that the whole purpose of this bill was to stop the sale of Home Oil to Ashland in the United States. If that is so, why play around with the figure of $250,000? I think Home Oil sold for something in the neighbourhood of $30 million, so if the object was to stop the sale of Home Oil it is not necessary to also stop all the little enterprises that may come into this country. By that I mean little, individual investments.

Back in 1909 many of my constituents came to this country as American or Japanese citizens. Indeed, many Japanese citizens were forced to move from Vancouver to my area during the last war. But if they came from the United States or Japan or Holland or Germany, they all became first class Canadian citizens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): They made an investment here. I think the purpose of the foreign investment bill should be to give a board or an agency the right to examine large corporate investments in Canada, not individual investments. A lot of good automotive agencies would not be sold for less than $250,000. There are even a few farms in some of the choice areas of Alberta that could not be bought for $250,000. In my own area, where it is pretty dry, one might be able to get a toe hold for less than that.

Mr. Breau: I do not think so.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): The hon. member says he does not think so. Let us suppose for a moment that he is right. Who are we saving the land for, and if it is the sale of land that we are trying to block, are we not being unconstitutional? The hon. member shakes his head in a negative manner. I say that the federal government has no right to interfere with the sale of property within a province. Property belongs to the province. In no way would this government interfere with the sale of property within the province of Quebec. Let us not fool ourselves about that.

Mr. Breau: It says "business enterprise".

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Well, Mr. Speaker, I keep telling my sons that the ranch I am attempting to run is a business enterprise. I sometimes refer to it as a blotter because it soaks up all the money I make. In any case, it is a business enterprise and many farms are business enterprises. If the bill excludes agricultural lands, then the minister should introduce an amendment to this effect or should say that this bill will not interfere with agricultural land in any way, shape or form. The minister steadfastly examines his papers and does not indicate yea or nay to that because he does not want to reach that conclusion. The minister wants this agency to have the power available if it wishes to use it.

I do not believe in the attitude of the province of Saskatchewan with regard to land, Mr. Speaker. I think it is a curse on the agriculture industry of that province. The idea that the government should be the only purchaser and that all lands would revert to the province means that the farmers and ranchers will become like the serfs of the feudal days—they will be serving the government master; the buildings will decay and the land will become non-productive. I do not believe in that. If the minister is headed in that direction, I think we should be told about it before the bill is passed. If he is, he has bought the NDP's concept of socialism, hook, line and sinker. I would not believe it of him, but we certainly have not been told otherwise.

• (1640)

I read the speech of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). He said that his party was not all that fussy about this bill, as it is not strong enough. He went on to say that the screening agency ought to be more powerful, but as the legislation did not say that it had to be more powerful, he rejected the legislation.

An hon. Member: That's the point.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Yes, that is the point. Now, you can see why so many people have been moving out of Saskatchewan and into Alberta. When I go back to my homeland, I am very disheartened. I see the potential there; but developing it takes capital. Considering the attitude of the government of the province, raising such capital will be difficult.

If this agency is set up, will it be instrumental in blocking deals such as the sale of Home Oil to Ashland in the United States? Or, would it block, for instance, the sale of Denison Mines to interests of the Hudson's Bay Company in the United States. Must it play around with every deal that is worth over $200,000?

An hon. Member: Sure it must.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): An hon. member to my left says, "Sure it must."

An hon. Member: What about Saskatchewan?

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Let me tell hon. members that Saskatchewan contains more mineral wealth than Alberta. We do not have as much petroleum wealth but, certainly, we have more mineral wealth. You will not find copper, potash or uranium in Alberta. Those metals are not there, but they are in Saskatchewan. The province has great potential wealth, yet remains on the list of "have-not" areas of this country. Why? Because governments have not encouraged Canadians to invest a nickel in the development of that area. Actually, Canadians leave Saskatchewan and come to Alberta if they want to invest any money, because they enjoy living in the freer atmosphere of that province.

For the reasons I have outlined, I ask the House to accept the amendment standing in my name, which has been put forward in good faith and which asks the amount of $250,000 as provided for in the bill, be changed to $500,000. Surely, if inflation continues at present rates, $500,000 will not be worth much in a few years.

An hon. Member: It will be enough to buy a garden.

An hon. Member: Soon, that will be the price of a house.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): One hon. member suggests that soon that amount will just about buy a garden and another hon. member suggests that it will only buy a house. According to some predictions, by the year 2000 a house in Toronto will cost $250,000, if present inflation rates continue. For that reason I submit that the amendment standing in my name ought to be accepted.

As well, the minister ought to consider a number of suggestions contained in the five motions to amend the bill which the House is now considering. The bill could operate very successfully for the whole of Canada if it took into account regional needs. As well as considering the amount of money which might be involved in any transaction, the government should say that the bill will not apply to agricultural property. I suppose the government will say that only businesses are to be affected. I suppose some members of the government think that the family farm is not a business. Well, if they do not consider it as a business, not many farms will survive under the present Liberal administration.

A financier went on television in Toronto and said that Canadians have all kinds of money to invest in Canada. Well, Torontonians have not been too generous in investing money north of Highway 401. They have not been too generous with northern Ontario, with the area west of the Lakehead in Ontario or, for that matter, with any area outside the province of Ontario. So, that financier, that Torontonian, who suggested that the people of Toronto and of Canada have lots of money to invest in this country, perhaps is thinking as the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville is thinking. That hon. member suggested that Canadians have lots of money for the development of Canada. That being so, how is it that so much money is leaving Canada? Too much Canadian money is being invested elsewhere. I see the hon. member nodding affirmatively. I would not wish to misrepresent his position. Why is so much money leaving Canada?

Mr. Nystrom: It is foreign owned.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): If we tax Canadian companies more heavily than we tax internationally set up companies, will we not encourage Canadians to invest in international companies, or in internationally set up companies which operate in Canada? Look at the food industries; very few are not internationally set up. Why? They were forced into that arrangement because of our tax measures. Are they better able to operate that way?

Consider our farm machinery companies. Massey-Fergusson, once a Canadian firm, is now an international firm. A whole host of companies which started out as Canadian companies have now become international companies. During the last seven or eight years Massey-Fergusson periodically threatened to move its plants entirely out of Canada, down to Detroit. Why? The company blamed the tax laws of Canada. Last spring the company threatened to move its combine plant from Brantford, Ontario, to Detroit. Why? The reason, again has to do with the tax laws of Canada.

In considering foreign investment within Canada, we must not forget that we must also encourage Canadians to invest in Canada. Consider, as well, what has happened to the oil industry. What has happened in the past will continue to happen under the tyranny of the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). He is not interested so much in the long-term well being of Canada, and the encouragement of investment in the oil industry, as in dominating that significant industry.

Many have commented about wealthy Alberta and about how Alberta sold out its oil resources to the extent that it is now almost wholly foreign controlled. Alberta did not sell out. The federal government in Ottawa forced the Canadian-owned oil industry to leave the province. Why was Home Oil forced to sell out to Consumers Gas of Toronto. What were the considerations respecting the Ashland deal? I submit that the oil company was forced to sell out because of the operation of our Canadian tax laws. It had undertaken exploration for oil around the world and in Canada, and was in financial trouble. The company was badly in the hole. It was necessary to find a buyer who would bail the company out of its deficit position. If our tax laws had been adjusted, it would not have been in that deficit position. If our tax laws had not been designed to be of benefit, as they are, to international oil companies, it is possible that Home Oil would not have been forced to seek a buyer. Putting it simply, moral suasion on the part of the government—I say that because the government had not legal power in the matter—forced Home Oil to sell out to Consumers Gas of Toronto, that company being preferred to an American oil company.

One could argue, of course, as I have heard people from western Canada and other regions argue, that the profits of the Home Oil operation will be reaped in Toronto. They will not be readily reinvested in the oil industry, but will be reinvested in the construction industry of Toronto and southern Ontario. One could argue that if Home Oil had been sold to Ashland of Canada, Ashland of Canada would have ploughed some of its profits back into the oil industry of Alberta. Perhaps we might not be as short of oil as we are today. I do not know. It seems to me that there may be some merit in giving the government some power to control the sales of corporations. Earlier today someone mentioned Canadian General Electric, General Motors, Ford and the other big automotive manufacturers. Maybe we could include Home Oil and Denison Mines. Perhaps the government does need an agency to screen foreign take-overs of large concerns like that.

● (1650)

There are all kinds of small towns in my constituency that would love to have some investment in industry. I have put a few thousand dollars into small industries in my constituency over the past 25 years. I lost money on two of them. Invariably, the trouble was getting finances to cover the value of inventory the industry built up and was not able to sell readily. If the products could have been sold as fast as they were made, the company would have stayed in business. Anyone who knows anything about industry knows it is necessary to build up an inventory. If you make a product that sells in the summer, you must build up an inventory of that product in the winter. The value of inventory will eventually kill a small corporation if it does not receive some capital. The industries in the town to which I am referring went begging to the United States to try to get a little foreign investment. They were not able to and, as a result, the two companies went broke.

I have another concern. Recently one of the biggest industries in my constituency was purchased with Japanese money. The owner went hither and yon looking for Canadian money. He spent months in Toronto and Montreal. He visited the head offices of every major chartered bank in Canada. He came away with a sad reflection. I find it sad because it is becoming a more and more accepted reflection in Canada. The owner told me he was going to sell the controlling interest in his plant to the Japanese. I said that was bad. He told me that, in addition to spending months in Toronto and Montreal, he had received a DREE grant. It took a year or two, but he finally got the money. He had reached the conclusion that eastern Canada was not interested in western Canada. I found that terribly sad. I am not referring to the oil industry, but to what might be called an industrial side of the agricultural complex. He said he had to go to Japan to get the money because eastern Canada was not interested in the west.

Mr. La Salle: That is not true.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Thank you very much. I would rather have heard that from the minister, but I appreciate hearing it from my friend and former colleague, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle). In any event, that is a widely held belief in western Canada today. I think it is a shame. That is why I urge the minister to accept the concept of some kind of regional representation on the panel hearing the application.

I read the briefs that came before the committee. The province of Saskatchewan, because of the NDP philosophy which originates in Toronto with the major unions, does whatever the NDP here wants them to do. That is obvious from their stand on the oil question and on this particular piece of legislation. When representatives of the province of Saskatchewan appeared before the committee, what did they say? They said that this legislation needs a little more provincial input. They said they completely buy the concept of some agency controlling foreign investment, but would like to have a little more regional or provincial input. What did the premier of New Brunswick say? Speaking for the four Atlantic provinces, he said they, too, want some consideration.

This bill will probably pass, maybe tonight; I do not know. However, if it does pass, in spite of the extremities of Canada complaining and asking for a little regional representation, if the minister rides roughshod over them, he is not doing Canada a service. He is being arrogant, like the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), and is not paying attention. We are a confederation of regions, a federation of provinces. A few years ago in this House the common expression among all parties was federal co-operative.

An hon. Member: Co-operative federalism.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): That is another way of saying exactly what I said. I am pleased to hear the hon. member express it. I wish he were a member of the cabinet. I wish some minister would use that expression every other day or at least once a week. It would be very pleasing to the regions of Canada that do not have a political clout if they could get a little more attention.

An hon. Member: Does Lougheed believe in that?

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): The premier of Alberta has said time and again that Canada will not go short of oil if he has anything to do about it. He said Canada will not have to pay a price higher than the world price for oil. He said that Canadians will not necessarily have to pay what Americans will have to pay as a result of their foreign policy. Alberta wants fair and equal treatment with regard to its resources, just as New Brunswick wants for its resources and as Toronto wants for its resources and, I might say, has received.

The oil companies have no control over oil in the province of Alberta. The Alberta government controls the oil. It determines how much comes out of the ground, who takes it out and where it goes, whether it crosses provincial boundaries or stays within Alberta. That is the sole prerogative of the Alberta government. That is a point that must be considered when talking about the oil industry.

While speaking about the oil industry, I wonder what political clout the 17 per cent of the Canadian people had who voted for the party on my left and socialism.

An hon. Member: 20 per cent.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I think it was 17.8 per cent, if my memory is correct. I did not look at the hon. member's figures. He can examine mine. Only 17.8 per cent voted for socialism, yet we are getting it in great gobs.

An hon. Member: Not enough.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): After reading the speech of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, I wondered how much money he has ever tried to raise. I wondered how much money he has invested in some of the small companies around Yorkton. I do not know whether or not he has graduated from university. The last time I asked him, he was still going.

• (1700)

An hon. Member: He pays his taxes.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): He pays his taxes.

An hon. Member: Yes, and you give them away.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I don't. Le us look at the Syncrude project. Let us look at the tar sands. The tar sands of northern Alberta were known 200 years ago, around 1775. The first government study of those tar sands was done in 1875. We are now getting close to 1975, and we are barely getting some of the oil out. The Premier of Alberta has gone to great lengths to encourage the development of this resource. Time and time again he has said the only thing which will bring the Arabs to the negotiating table in a proper frame of mind with regard to the price of oil is the presence of alternative oil resources. Well, there are 15,000 square miles of tar sands in northern Alberta.

The Syncrude project, which involves four oil companies, is to cover eight square miles. It will take them 25 years to complete their operations in this area, and to this end it will be necessary for them to raise $1,200 million in capital. We need another company alongside Syncrude. But taking into account the frame of mind of the present government, dominated as it is by that small block to my left, people who say they want socialism up there to develop the tar sands—

Some hon. Members: Right on!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Might I continue?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): That can only be done by unanimous consent. Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Thank you. I appreciate the generosity of the House.

An hon. Member: Socialist generosity.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I have learned over the years that the only thing socialists are generous with is their time. They like to talk. They are very poor at producing anything, but they certainly like to talk. And it seems that at times they do not mind listening.

I was referring to the gigantic size of the tar sands—15,000 square miles—and the huge capital investment needed to develop a mere eight square miles in 25 years. In developing this eight square miles, the companies hope to produce 125,000 barrels a day. Now, the Montreal market alone needs 500,000 barrels a day, so if we want to become self-sufficient in Canada more Canadian production is needed. Geologists who have studied the tar sands suggest there is enough oil there to supply Canada's needs for some 600 years. Production is only now getting started. In the absence of regional representation on the panel hearing an application, and allowing for the frame of mind of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), following the socialists and adhering to the socialist concept which they advance, I can easily envisage a confrontation taking place in the years ahead.

The premier of Alberta might go to Japan and say to businessmen there: We want another Syncrude development, another project. We will give you a lease on a further eight square miles. Come over with your millions; don't go into Siberia and develop oil for the Russians there, but help us develop our oil in the tar sands. This may well be the line taken. Of course, I do not know whether or not he is thinking along those lines. I am suggesting one situation which may be created by this agency. In the absence of regional representation on the board, the answer to the applicant might be "No", and then the Arabs would have things all their own way for another ten years when it comes to the pricing of world crude. The only thing that will bring the Arabs to the negotiating table in a sensible frame of mind with regard to the price of crude oil is the development of an alternate source of supply. If the co-operation of the federal government is forthcoming, the Province of Alberta has the ability to develop such a source. It is sad to reflect that we have not received such co-operation to date. However, we in Alberta believe in the future. We hope and believe that the Lord will hear, and that Macdonald will hear along with him. We hope, too, that other cabinet ministers will be a little more attentive, and a little more appreciative of regional considerations.

I shall end on this note. The government would be doing a terrible disservice to unity, a terrible disservice to co-operative federalism if it refused to pay heed to the wishes of the provinces on the eastern and western extremities of Canada. In western Canada, the government of Saskatchewan, in spite of the dominance exercised by people to my left, has asked that provision be made for more provincial input. The premiers of the four Atlantic Provinces have asked for regional consideration. The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) has placed an amendment before the House, and I ask all hon. members to give it most careful consideration. There is nothing in it which the government could find offensive. If the minister cannot accept the word "majority" let him put in the word "equal". Let him endorse the concept that the provinces have a view to express, and allow them a means of expressing it.

I shall deal briefly with another part of the amendment, which asks that as soon as an application is made it shall be the duty of the minister who speaks for the agency to notify forthwith the region or the province in which the applicant wishes to invest. This is only sensible. This is only courteous. But we know it has not happened under DREE. All kinds of industries have made application to DREE. Sometimes they have been told: Yes, we can give you so much money, but we are really not anxious to see it invested over there, because the unemployment rate is not high enough; if you invest it somewhere else, we can give you a little more. Pressure, as between regions and provinces, has been exerted under DREE. Under one of the amendments we are debating, the provinces concerned would be notified right away and would know what was happening. Provinces would know when a company was likely to leave their jurisdiction. They might say, as the people of Saskatchewan would say: "Good riddance". But they might, on the other hand, say, as Albertans would say: "Stick here with your investment".

I propose to end by returning to the subject of my own amendment, as seems only reasonable. I know that a large number of companies began with an investment of less than $200,000. Take the Claresholm Airport as an example. Little companies got started, with the help of United States money in two instances, and today the operation is completely owned by Canadians. There was no harm in these small companies getting started in this way. One of them, a huge company now, is completely owned by Canadians. This is an example of an enterprise capable of being started in a small way. I do not think the agency should concern itself with anything less than a million dollars. But I was modest when framing my amendment because I like the government to accept my ideas—and the government has accepted a good many of them. This government has accepted many of my ideas, but the minister has not accepted one. I should like him to accept the proposition that the sum of $250,000, with the terrible inflation that his colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has allowed to arise in Canada, is not a large amount and that it should be increased to at least $500,000.

• (1710)

Having abused the House with this lengthy speech, the House having been generous in allowing me to speak at length, I might advise hon. members that I shall speak again on the other set of amendments. But I wish that the minister would answer the agriculture question, the enlargement question and the regional representation question. It might facilitate passage of the bill.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Veterans Affairs—Discontinuance of Veterans Land Act benefits—Request for Extension—Reason for action; the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth)—Public Service—Possibility of increase in wage offer to Northwest Territories nurses because of working conditions and cost of living—Danger pay; the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger)—Agriculture—Suggested increase in research into protein production—government position.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new business in Canada by certain persons, as reported (with amendments), from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say a few words on Bill C-132.

A lot has been written and a lot has been said in recent days on Parliament Hill about this bill. We have all known for quite some time, Mr. Speaker, that we are faced with great problems and those problems are complex.

We know also, Mr. Speaker, that there are ways of solving those problems, particularly in respect of foreign exports, foreign takeovers of our industries and natural resources.

If foreigners own 50 per cent or perhaps 80 per cent of industries and businesses in Canada they are not to blame; we should censure those Canadian leaders who failed to foresee it, who failed to pass the needed regulations and who failed to adjust the economy to facts and reality so all Canadians could own their own, and own and develop their natural resources.

Our resources, Mr. Speaker, are developed by foreigners and we must ask ourselves why. Do we lack technology in Canada? Do we lack labour?

If we do not lack technology, if we do not lack labour, what do we lack, Mr. Speaker? Surely if we lack technology we could import it. That is what one could call foreign capital. After using that technology and acquiring the required knowledge for the developments we want to bring about, then it would be up to us Canadians to either continue using it, keep it or reject it.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot even develop our technology without financing and if foreigners now own the major part of our resources, our developments, our industries, it is because they made the necessary capital available to those who wanted to develop them.

Here in Canada there was a failure to understand what capital is; there was a lack of readiness to use the organizations available that could create the required capital for developments we have to bring into being.

Foreigners availed themselves of that right and created capital on those same assets, those assets we owned, those assets to be developed. They created capital as the developments became possible. That is what we failed to do.

This is what even now few members tell the House; in this way they would find the mean to develop our natural resources and help our future industries. Mr. Speaker, the government has devised a system to promote industrial development.

We find, Mr. Speaker, that a large number of industries are going bankrupt, in spite of the help they received from governments. Then, where is the problem? Capital is placed at the disposal of industries but they cannot operate; it only extends their lives by a few years and eventually they go under. Why? Because the means placed at the disposal of industries by governments are only a restraint, a way to deprive them even more.

Mr. Speaker, a small enterprise has to go deeper into debt in order to benefit from the advantages placed at its disposal. All members know that: a company that wants to receive a $20,000 government subsidy must invest itself $100,000 which amount it does not have because it has been overtaxed in every possible way by governments. The company does not have the capital required for the developments it would like to achieve. Then the Industrial Development Bank was created to loan money to businesses. In order to grant them a $20,000 subsidy we loan $100,000 at the present usurious interest rate of 10 or 12 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, this is not logical. This is taking an unfair advantage because interest rates are too high. So, a small manufacturer who owes $100,000, $200,000 or $1 million, according to the importance of his business, has to repay enormous amounts which are taxed at 40, 50 and even 60 per cent. The small manufacturers cannot afford those exhorbitant interest rates and the enormous taxes they have to pay. This is why nothing can be developped. Almost everything we try to develop is a failure. Such operation gives rise to the accumulation of enormous debts and those who succeed have to work perhaps 10 to 15 hours a day and through hard work they make profits, they increase prices. A few sometimes succeed in this system but at the expense of others. If one succeeds, it is because others have failed. Indeed, they are prevented from succeeding.

Mr. Speaker, we are seeking solutions to that problem. We blame foreigners because they invest here and control our resources. Now I am convinced that we will never regain the ownership of our resources and our institutions if we do not alter our financing procedure which is outmoded, obsolete and leads any industry or enterprise to ruin.

As long as we won't come to grips with this evil, we will get the same results. And the further we go, even if we pass legislation and regulations to side-step foreign investments, or if we tax part of these investments, the more we will paralyze the economy, the greater will be our disappointments. We will experience an increase in the level of unemployment, privations and strikes. But, where can we find a solution? Solutions are right there at hand. If we want to launch a new enterprise in a logical fashion, it will have to be financed through new credits free of interest. We could launch new enterprises in this manner. We will never achieve anything in a 100 years if we continue to pile up debts, otherwise we will continue to keep Canadians under the yoke, to increase taxes and the number of civil servants, thus bringing about an increase in the cost of living, as it happens at present.

• (1720)

Where are we going with all these gimmicks, all these outmoded wild dreams, Mr. Speaker? Where does it all lead us to? It leads us directly to ruin. We are on the brinkmanship of bankruptcy, we are nearing a revolution.

Mr. Speaker, if foreigners can find capital by coining money, we can do the same. If the United States find that developments are inadequate and they require them, and if these developments are obvious and profitable, they will create new capital and thus enable industry to operate. They will allow access to capital at a much more reasonable interest rate than that charged by the Industrial Development Bank which exploits industries to the extreme.

Mr. Speaker, we must think about this and stop moaning and blaming foreigners. We must confess our own sins because we are the ones who have jeopardized our own development. If development is not progressing as it should, again we are the culprits, not foreigners.

In fact, foreigners cannot benefit from the resources made available by our financial institutions. We are the ones who, within our government, can ask our organizations to issue such or such credit at a small rate of interest or at none whatsoever. No foreigners will come here to do it for us. And failing to do it, we will go on having the disappointments we are now suffering and realizing that we are no longer our masters at home, that everything belongs to foreigners. And if this is so, Mr. Speaker, it would be time to find a solution to such a problem.

This bill will not solve the problem. In spite of our intentions to restrict foreign investments, will we find Canadian capital to fill the gap?

Those are the problems the bill should solve, but it offers no serious remedy. According to the bill, some foreign investments must be controlled and reported. But how will it help the provinces in developing our country?

If there were fewer taxes, if we had a balanced economy, in accordance with facts, Canadians would have more purchasing power and make the industry work appropriately. It would not even need the Industrial Development Bank, nor the chartered banks.

If industry could sell its products to Canadians, we would not need all the agencies we have now. Industries could develop if governments would not saddle them with taxes, if they were not saddled with them all. We are driving all businesses and all industries into bankruptcy because of taxes, heavy taxes, and we will let the taxpayers pay for everything.

We are told that private industry has gone bankrupt. No wonder since it is cut off at source. If we do everything to keep people from getting what they want, it is hard for them to do anything.

We are building all sorts of barriers to stop the Canadians who would like to go further and do something. We shut them in and use all possible means to prevent them from going ahead. We find it sad that all our capital and institutions are in foreign hands.

Once again, we are to blame, Mr. Speaker, and we shall never be able to develop our country, our resources and our institutions if the required capital is not made available to Canadians at reasonable interest rates and if we do not lower taxes. There is no other way that we can own something in Canada. We are now losing more and more ground, businesses and industries, and we are becoming less and less able to develop our natural resources because we do not have the required capital. The government is not trying to make this capital available to Canadian citizens. This is why we are in the hands of foreigners; the situation will worsen until they have a large enough share of Canadian business to take over the entire country. That time is perhaps not too far away.

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in the debate at this time. I welcome the fact that the House is now dealing with the amendments and the report stage of this serious measure, and I hope we are close to a final bill which will facilitate the enactment of a foreign investment review act. I waited to speak until those who wished to propose amendments on behalf of their party had spoken—

An hon. Member: They have not all spoken yet.

Mr. Gillespie: I waited until representatives of all parties had the opportunity to speak, Mr. Speaker. The amendments before us refer to two specific areas, to which I intend to address myself this afternoon, namely provincial or regional concerns and thresholds.

Having regard to the amendments now before us, I should like to say a word or two about two other specific points, and I might indicate that we will have an opportunity on third reading to go into these matters in more detail. There were two specific points raised by speakers opposite, one raised specifically by Conservative members. It was suggested that this bill represented a negative approach to the whole matter of foreign ownership, foreign investment and foreign control in Canada. I would say to those hon. members that they should look at the safeguard, look at it clearly, and ask themselves: Is a safeguard a negative instrument or is it a positive instrument? I am talking about a safeguard to the health of and for the future significant benefit of Canada. I ask all hon. members: Is that a negative issue? Is a safeguard negative or is it positive? I think that a moment's reflection might persuade some hon. members that a safeguard—and this bill is a safeguard—is a positive measure.

• (1730)

The other argument that was raised by some of the speakers from the NDP was that the scope of the bill does not go far enough. This particular argument was reflected in an amendment which was ruled out of order—amendment No. 1. But it seems to me that it might be worth noting that the amendment itself clearly shows the difficulties when you come to this area of trying to screen the expansion of an investment or of a business which is already controlled and operating in Canada in a related area.

The reason I raise this matter is that the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) referred in his remarks to this particular amendment. He has tried to suggest that in some way equity should be offered to the Canadian public as a business expands. But clearly it is not easy to define what an expansion of a business is. I think the hon. member had this difficulty and I think his amendment clearly shows his difficulty, because on the one hand he chose sales and on the other hand he chose assets—but it was not clear as to which of these criterion should be followed.

That is only one of the difficulties when you come to the whole question of screening the expansion of existing businesses in Canada which are foreign-controlled. I have not yet seen, heard or received a proposal which would stand up when it comes to that particular question. I asked on a number of occasions before the committee whether an hon. member would suggest an expansion of a business with the addition of a second shift and, if he was not prepared to accept that as clearly an expansion of a business, why would he not? It might well involve the doubling of the operations of that particular firm. Clearly, at this time, if this country, with the most rapidly growing labour force in the world, were to start interposing itself into the day to day business decisions which involve such things as putting on a second shift, increasing the floor space or replacing a machine with a more productive one because that would help the viability of the firm, it would be counterproductive in terms of the objectives of the people and of their representatives in the House to provide job opportunities for the fastest growing work force in the world.

I mentioned those matters only to indicate the difficulty behind the concept. The difficulty is enormous; and in my view, as I said before the committee, these are not suggestions which have really been thought out by those who identify with that particular way of thinking.

With regard to the specific areas with which we are dealing in these amendments, first is the question of regional interests. Some of the arguments of Progressive Conservative spokesmen sounded as if the provinces had no say at all. It seemed to me, as I listened to one or two, that they had not even read the bill and had not addressed themselves to the fact that when this bill was brought forward it carried a number of important changes from its predecessor. One of those important changes is to be found on page 2 under the criteria for determining significant benefits to Canada.

Mr. Hellyer: As the minister understands it, not as the provinces understand it.

Mr. Gillespie: I should like to read part of this clause because it is a new clause and clearly anticipates the interests, the importance and the concern of the provinces in this process. It provides:

> (e) the compatibility of the acquisition or establishment with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policy objectives enunciated by the government or legislature of any province likely to be significantly affected by the acquisition or establishment.

Clearly, the bill before us recognizes the provincial interest in this area and provides that those objectives must be taken into consideration when judging the significant benefit of the proposal. It would seem to me that we have clearly built in a voice for the provinces—but we have not built in a veto.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: Not even a voice.

Mr. Gillespie: If we were to accept the amendments, particularly amendments Nos. 2, 5 and 6, each concerned with regions or provinces—and in some instances it is not entirely clear which it is that the proposer has in mind—the effect would be to seriously weaken the bill and to undermine and undercut its effectiveness in the application of the bill.

Mr. Blenkarn: In what way?

Mr. Gillespie: This bill is concerned with a national policy, national objectives, but it also provides for the protection of the provincial interests, and particularly—I should like to underline this—for the weaker provinces. The weaker the province, the more that province is exposed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: I think that perhaps Progressive Conservative members opposite have not yet understood or recognized the importance of that point.

The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) referred to regional pressures. He seemed to be suggesting that somehow or other the minister would reflect, whoever that minister might be at any particular time, his own perspective. I should like to assure him and all hon. members opposite that the process of the allowance or disallowance of a proposed takeover or the establishment of a new business is clearly laid out; that the minister will be advised by the officials in the foreign investment review agency, that he will make recommendations, and that the cabinet will decide. So, clearly, if there is concern that the regional interests of Canada will not be reflected at the decision-making point, I hope the hon. member will recognize that the cabinet is the ultimate decision-making body which reflects the regional interests of this great nation.

• (1740)

There was one other point that the hon. member for Crowfoot made. As I listened to him, he seemed to suggest that this bill would in some way provide the government, through the foreign investment review agency, with an instrument for directing investment within Canada. He suggested that this would be a bad thing. Let me assure him that this is simply not true, that the bill itself does not provide, nor does it give to the minister the power to direct investment within Canada. It gives the minister the power to recommend the allowance or disallowance of an investment. It gives the minister and the government the power to bargain for benefits if those benefits are not present in the proposal itself.

Mr. Speaker, I would like now to deal specifically with each of the three amending motions dealing in particular with the question of the provincial interest. I will start with motion No. 2. On first reading it sounds plausible because it restates, or appears to restate, the particular clause I quoted a moment ago, clause 2 (2)(e), with respect to the criterion of significant benefit to Canada. It appears to divide that clause into two paragraphs; in fact, one has to look rather more carefully at it because it does more than that.

It is not just a question of form. It is very certainly an amendment with respect to substance, because this particular amendment talks about "the compatability of the acquisition or establishment with industrial and economic policies enunciated by the government or legislature of a province in which the enterprise is carried on or the new business is proposed to be carried on." That is new language; it is different language from that which appears in the bill itself. The bill now provides for the government to take into account "industrial and economic policy objectives . . . of any province likely to be significantly affected by the acquisition or establishment."

The amendment focuses only on the province in which the enterprise is carried on or in which the new business is proposed to be carried on. Secondly, the amendment would make it appear that provincial industrial and economic policies would have slightly higher priority than they are accorded in the current bill. I would point out that in the current bill provincial policies are referred to in the same paragraph as national policies. In the amendment they are referred to in a separate paragraph, but the distinction here is not great.

In speaking to this proposed amendment, the following points might be made: by abandoning the words "by . . . any province likely to be significantly affected" the amendment can have a perverse effect in two distinct ways. Let us suppose a firm to be acquired has five plants, in five separate provinces in Canada, but has a substantial plant in only one of them and very small ones in the other four. The amendment would not, on the face of it, give government the authority to attach relatively greater weight to the policy of the province in which the large plant is located.

Conversely, it is quite conceivable that a province may be affected in a very substantial way by a takeover or a new investment, even if the firm to be acquired or the investment which is to be made is not within that province. The province may have a very large interest in a takeover or investment because of its position as a consuming province or because there are plants in the province which are competitive with the firm to be taken over or established. Thus, doing away with the words "by . . . any province likely to be significantly affected" is a step backward. It would remove an essential flexibility from the bill, and that would have the effect of seriously undercutting its effectiveness.

I would now like to turn to motions Nos. 5 and 6. Motion No. 5, also in this general area of provincial or regional interests, was moved by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). I would like to read it in order to put it in context. It is to delete subclause 7(3), lines 23 to 28, page 18, and substitute therefor the following:

> The minister shall make available to the agency the services of officers who are representative of each region of Canada, including such officers from within the department of the Government of Canada over which he presides as he may designate for the purpose.
>
> In any case where a review or assessment of a proposed or actual investment is likely to affect significantly a province or provinces, a recommendation to the minister thereon shall be submitted by a panel of officers of whom a majority shall be representative of such province or provinces.

The proposal has two parts. The first is that the minister should supply the agency with the services of officers who are "representative of each region of Canada". This may include officers from within his own department. Secondly, whenever the agency makes a recommendation to the minister concerning a foreign investment, the recommendation shall be made "by a panel of officers of whom a majority shall be representative of such province or provinces" likely to be significantly affected.

The proposed amendment can be criticized from two points of view. It is technically weak, and the policy implications conflict with the intention of the bill. Let me deal first with the technical points. It is not clear what is meant by "region." This is a new concept. It does not enter into the bill, nor is it defined anywhere in the bill itself. So one wonders whether the drafter intended "region" or "province." It is not clear. Nor is it clear what a "representative" would be. This is clearly a new concept not to be found elsewhere in the bill. And the drafter does not suggest any definition of the term "representative" because neither "region" nor "representative" are defined. Similarly, it is not clear what would constitute a "panel of officers." In any event, a federal agency cannot be administered by "representatives" of provinces or regions. This, I suggest, is a naïve concept when considered carefully. It can only be administered by people who are unequivocally employed by the federal government.

This is to be an act of parliament. The governor in council is responsible for the decisions, not some ill-defined group of officers who are employees, who are there to analyse and advise but not to decide. Those are technical points. Now I would like to deal with the policy points. The implication of the proposed amendment is that the legislation should be administered in a way which would reflect regional views almost exclusively. Such a view conflicts with a central purpose of the bill, which is to establish and apply a national foreign investment policy. When provinces compete to attract the investor, this has the effect of reducing the benefits which are potentially available to Canada and to the provinces.

● (1750)

Secondly, the interests of the provinces are already well protected. I have reference to the inclusion of two other areas in the bill, one dealing with the transference of information which provides the essential authority for forwarding information to the provinces. But, Mr. Speaker, we must surely avoid amendments which would balkanize the bill. Provincial interests are safeguarded by several provisions, particularly the requirement to take into account stated provincial policies in clause 2(2)(e), page 2; the requirement for the minister to take into account provincial representations in clause 9(d), page 21; and the fact that the minister has explicit authority in clause 14(2)(b), page 26, to make available to a minister or official of a provincial government information relating to a proposed takeover or new investment which has been submitted by the potential investor.

It cannot be stressed too often that the bill will not block foreign investment which is needed by any particular region. The purpose of the bill is to improve the net benefit to Canada, and the provisions of the bill will provide the government with the authority to negotiate with investors to obtain increased benefits for Canadians. For these reasons I would reject the amendment on both technical and policy grounds.

Let me turn to the other two amendments in this general area proposed by the hon. member for Central Nova. In one, amendment No. 6, he moves that clause 9 be amended by deleting line 32, at page 20, and substituting the following:

"a copy of the notice shall be sent by the agency forthwith by registered mail to the province or provinces likely to be significantly affected by the proposed or actual investment to which the notice relates and"

Mr. Speaker, the effect of accepting this amendment would be to quite drastically change the administration of this bill. I recall that the hon. member said he was concerned about the bureaucratic process involved in administering the bill. I am concerned about it too, Mr. Speaker, because it is a technical and sensitive area. However, the effect of this particular amendment would be to increase enormously the degree of bureaucratic input. It would require the agency to provide all the information with respect to any proposed transaction, and all the information with respect to any takeover or establishment of any new business in all provinces. I think it would be helpful if I were to indicate why I think that might happen. Under the bill, notice under clause 8(1), 8(2) or 8(3) is provided for as follows:

. . . notice in writing to the agency of such proposal in such form and manner and containing such information as is prescribed by the regulations.

It is not simply an indication in writing that a takeover or an investment has taken place. It is, in effect, all the information which the applicant provides. The amendment proposes that the notice and all the information which is part of it, much of which will be confidential to the business, be sent not only to the proposed province of location but it makes mandatory that it be sent to all provinces which are likely to be significantly affected. This could involve virtually all provinces; it would not be clear who would determine whether a province was significantly affected or not. For example, a new tire plant might be considered for an area of the Maritimes. The argument might be that the only other province to be affected would be Nova Scotia—if we think of the Michelin situation—but clearly several provinces might be significantly benefited or affected by such an investment.

Mr. Broadbent: Explain.

Mr. Gillespie: I am sure the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) would agree that, in order to avoid being placed on the defensive, the agency would have to provide the information to virtually all provinces in virtually all cases. This would have a serious effect upon the speed with which applications are handled, and I think it would also have a serious effect upon the confidentiality of the whole process. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the chance of leaks would be greater. It should be remembered that the federal government has the responsibility for this bill, not the provinces. I would say that there would be the problem of confidentiality and the problem of delay. I think that particular amendment, plausible as it may seem at first glance, would seriously weaken the bill and retard its application in the public interest.

In the time remaining to me, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with the other two amendments dealing with thresholds, but perhaps in view of the hour I might call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, before we recessed for the dinner hour we had been dealing with a set of amendments. Three motions, in particular Nos. 2, 5 and 6, deal with an area of provincial or regional concern, although the purport of those amendments is not altogether clear.

I said that after the dinner-hour recess I would be dealing with the other set of amendments which have to do with thresholds with respect to the takeover of Canadian companies. In this regard we should consider two amendments, one of which has been brought forward by the hon. member for Crowfoot, and the other by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). They show that there is not any one magic figure which ought to apply to thresholds; that is to say, there is no magic figure at which the screening process should become operative.

On the one hand, the hon. member for Crowfoot feels that the thresholds in the bill are too low and should be raised. His amendment suggests that the threshold concerning the gross assets of a corporation should be raised from $250,000 to $500,000. On the other hand, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville feels that perhaps thresholds are too high and should be lowered. He suggests that in view of the second test—and there are two with respect to thresholds, one having to do with gross assets and the other with respect to revenues and sales—the figure should be lowered.

The hon. member for Crowfoot says that we should raise the threshold, that we should double the amount of assets which must be considered in connection with the threshold. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville says that we should cut in half the threshold which applies to revenues and sales and in that regard we should reduce it from $3 million to $1.5 million.

The issue we face is clearly this: Is there any right figure? I suggest to hon. members that the threshold, by its very nature, represents an arbitrary figure. It will never satisfy everybody. It will never satisfy all interests. However, we hope that it can be a practical working figure which will satisfy the great bulk of Canadian opinion. On the one hand there is an amendment suggesting that we should raise one of the tests, that we should double the figure, and on the other hand there is an amendment suggesting that we should cut one of the tests in half. The bill clearly stakes out the middle ground which is acceptable to most Canadians.

The hon. member for Crowfoot felt that the threshold was too low, that perhaps too many smaller corporations might be considered under it. He felt that those smaller corporations, in the very nature of things, might not be important. I suggest to him that one of the important aspects of this bill is that it concerns itself with the "comers", the growth industries, the high-technology industries and those small companies that are of concern to the cultural development of Canada. Clearly, if we were to raise to $500,000 the threshold with respect to gross assets, we would remove from the screening process a large number of firms. In my view, and in the government's view, that would not be in the Canadian public interest.

Too often in our history Canadians have developed new and important technology only to find that it slips from our grasp and that other countries obtain the commercial advantages which flow from it. The amendment of the hon. member for Crowfoot is, in my view, such an invitation; it will allow more of this technology to slide across the border—

Mr. Blenkarn: That is pure nonsense, and you know it.

Mr. Gillespie: —or elsewhere. It is apparent that Canadians are upset and anxious because a very high proportion of Canadian book publishing and similar culturally-oriented industries are owned by non-Canadians. We cannot afford to have further takeovers in these areas which are so vital to the development of a Canadian culture and Canadian identity. While the threshold in the bill is admittedly not a high one, there would be serious risks in going to the $500,000 proposal. Therefore, that amendment, in my view, should be defeated.

Turning to the amendment of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, I wish to deal with the two tests. One test concerns gross revenue. The bill speaks of $3 million; the hon. member wishes to reduce that figure to $1.5 million. The other test clearly concerns gross assets. I suggest to him and to his party that the gross assets test will pick up many of the smaller companies about which he is concerned if we leave the figure at the $250,000 level. After all, it is the gross assets that are important, that is to say, the addition of all the figures on the left-hand side of the balance sheet, not the net assets. Anyone who is familiar with balance sheets will know that although the figures on the left-hand side of the balance sheet may total $250,000, the shareholders' equity in the corporation may not be more than $20,000 or $25,000.

Admittedly, we are considering an arbitrary level. I suggest that the level in the bill is a balanced one which meets the test of practicality. It is important from the point of view of the operation of the bill; that is to say, it will assist those who are concerned with the administration of this legislation to administer the test in a sensible and operative way.

Clearly, you must consider many concerns when dealing with thresholds. There is the whole question of multi-products—not just one, but many. We have to balance many things here. I suggest to hon. members that the numbers in the bill are as good as we can get at the moment. They are a balance between the views of the Progressive Conservative Party and those of the New Democratic Party. We should give them a fair test. We should put them to the test. If in the future we find they need to be amended, that will be the task of another parliament.

• (2010)

In conclusion, I think that amendments Nos. 3 and 4 which deal with the question of thresholds should be rejected. For the reasons I gave before the adjournment, the amendments dealing with the weakening of the bill—and that is what it would be if we were to extend the power and jurisdiction to the provinces; in some cases almost providing for administrative complexity, a veto power for the provinces—should be rejected as well.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-132 sets up a mechanism for the control and operation of foreign investment in Canada. We are entering a new phase and a new direction in our investment policy. I hope the minister will see fit to increase the input of the provinces to this investment tribunal. This is the only way there can be some input from the periphery of the country. In his attempt to throw out the amendments, the minister stated that provincial input is not needed, that this is only a tribunal of investment people and bureaucrats who will make recommendations to cabinet, which in turn will decide fairly and honestly whether the investments should be permitted.

The present experience with the Wheat Board is a good example. The Wheat Board is acting contrary to the interests of many provinces. The pricing of feed grains is considerably less per bushel for barley, wheat and oats than on the markets of the world. In other words, instead of an export tax on oil to the United States, the Wheat Board has instituted a selling policy that is a discounting of grain to feeders and a subsidy to the consumer. If the government wants to subsidize the consumer, this should be done in some other way.

I remind the minister that the Manitoba minister of Agriculture is prepared to seek an injunction in the Court of Queen's Bench because the Wheat Board is not selling grain at the maximum price. A feature story in the Gazette states as follows:

> Mr. Uskiw hopes his lawyers will tell him that Manitoba can make a case that the Wheat Board Act instructs the board at all times to sell for a maximum price for the farmer . . .
>
> If Mr. Uskiw cannot make his case stick in Court of Queen's Bench, he may go to the Supreme Court of Canada. On the other hand, if he is given advice not to proceed along these lines at all, he will try another tack that, again, involves constitutional questions covering trade and commerce.

The Canadian Wheat Board was established to pursue a course of action in the interest of the western farmer. I suggest this investment tribunal will be in the same category. After all, the Wheat Board is a selling mechanism for 200,000 permit holders or 800,000 men, women and children. If cabinet can order the Wheat Board to institute policies that are not in the interest of western farmers, they can certainly order any tribunal and direct any investment in a manner that is not conducive to the region affected. I suggest that the Wheat Board would not operate in the same way if it were dealing with the citizens of Ontario and Quebec because those provinces are large enough to have an effect on the actions of this government body.

Canadians, obviously, have ambivalent feelings about foreign investment. Many people now think it fashionable to regard foreign investment as a bad thing even though by any stretch of the imagination internal Canadian savings would not have been nearly enough to have generated the capital necessary to develop our resources to the stage they are now and give our people the high standard of living that we want and to which we are accustomed. It is fashionable to say that if we had not allowed foreign capital to be invested in our country, we would be better off. I remind those people that the standard of living attained in decades gone by would not have been possible without foreign investment. A classic example is the western oil industry. Until the advent of Leduc in 1954, Canada was totally dependent on offshore and American oil. With the discovery of oil in Alberta, the Canadian industrial capacity markedly increased.

Did Canadian money flow into the development of the western Canadian oil fields? Of course not. What money was available was concentrated in Montreal and Toronto in their own investment needs. They did not invest in western oil. One cannot blame them for that. In fact, most of the drilling for western oil was financed by people south of our border. This was not done by large companies but by individuals, the type of people who like to gamble in high-risk investments. I am referring to those people who like to put in $3,000, $4,000 or $5,000 on an investment. If they lost, fine. If they won, the rewards were big. The American tax department favoured these people for losses incurred anywhere in the world. American taxpayers could deduct this from income. The result was that American individuals contributed a great deal to the finding of oil in western Canada, plus a limited amount as a result of the investment of western Canadian money.

At the present time, most of the drilling by Americans in Alberta is being carried out by independent drillers and is financed in much the same way. We in Canada have followed another tack. In the late forties, many people in western Canada invested in western oil. However, the government changed the tax regulations. The investment could not be deducted unless there was a find. The money dried up immediately. Those who would have contributed to the finding of oil in western Canada were pretty well left out. It took 20 years to have this changed whereby there would be some redress or incentive for those who wanted to invest in this high-risk venture.

It is fashionable to blame our oil prices on American companies. The export tax is justified on the basis that it is only taking from American companies, and that is just and honest. However, without American investment in oil it does not seem likely that the western Canadian industry, even at this stage, would be big enough to supply all of western Canada. Perhaps it should be this way, but it would have added immeasurably to our present problems.

● (2020)

Then again, in the October issue of the Labour Gazette, on page 643, we find a small news item stating that Oakville, Ontario, was the city with the highest average income of any Canadian city in 1971. The report adds that Oakville is the site of the Ford Motor Company, a company with a substantial component of U.S. investment. Questions which have been raised in this House suggest that the auto pact is showing signs of not working in Canada's favour, and one gathers from a point made by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) that these corporations are not investing enough money in new plant expansion in Canada.

The government of Manitoba made a great effort to entice a Japanese bicycle factory to establish in Rivers, offering it all sorts of grants and encouragement. I draw attention to the fact that this was an NDP government. Incidentally, the new review board which this bill proposes would likely have torpedoed that venture because it would have conflicted with the interests of bicycle manufacturers in the east.

Canadians have complained bitterly about DISC programs adopted by the United States, but DISC was designed to do the very thing this bill would do, that is, to keep American investment at home. The threat of DISC programs was sufficient to cause the government to allow hasty tax concessions to corporations and companies engaged in manufacturing and processing. This gave the central Canadian heartland a great advantage over the peripheral regions where there is little manufacturing and processing. The cut in corporation tax is a foretaste of what is likely to happen under the measure we are now considering; the central heartland of the country will be favoured by this agency to the detriment of the periphery.

Now, Mr. Speaker, foreign investment is necessary only to the extent that Canadians fail to generate enough capital to meet their own needs. There seems to be ample evidence that from the point of view of savings we are generating sufficient capital domestically to meet our requirements, though, of course, there is a good deal of imbalance in the situation. Canadians have obviously quit saving as individuals; they tend to put their money into large pools and there is considerable evidence that they now own a substantial portion of many large Canadian concerns.

The picture has changed considerably in a decade. It may be somewhat doubtful that Canadians will continue to save, since there is much less reason for them to save as individuals than in the past. The effect of old age security legislation, the Canada Pension Plan and the provision of health and welfare care for citizens over 65 means that people can live in reasonable comfort on relatively lower personal savings. The passage of savings from one generation to the next is very effectively discouraged by the capital gains tax and provincial estate taxes. These two taxes combined, especially when the capital gains tax matures, will effectively absorb a good percentage of personal savings. To the self-employed, savings are becoming progressively less valuable even when capital is required as a basis for a working income. So whether or not Canadian savings maintain their present level remains to be seen.

In any case, assuming that Canadian savings are, indeed, sufficient for capital formation requirements, the very size of this country and its regional divisions means that certain areas have access to a high volume of savings, and others to too little. Nor is it easy to move capital from one area to another even if it should be desirable to do so. As our economy matures, I believe we will find it desirable to invest capital around the world, while capital other than Canadian is invested here. Unless we want to build a little Canada with a wall around it, we shall have to follow a policy of this kind. For example, a western Canadian farmer would not, likely, wish to invest in an iron mine in Labrador; but he might well wish to invest in a grain combine, starting his operations in Texas in midsummer and working north right through until the fall, harvesting crops in Canada. This would have obvious advantages as compared with an investment in a project of which he knows nothing and about which he could probably not care less.

The legislation before us has a further flaw inasmuch as it is almost certain to lead to the creation of a czar-like organization of bureaucrats in Ottawa directing the economy of the nation. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has pointed out that depending on the attitude of the minister or of the officials, the suggested board could become an extremely severe instrument with monopolistic powers or, alternatively, one which exercised scarcely any authority. My own feeling is that, like the tax department, this body will have a profound effect on Canadian business operations.

Mr. Speaker, there is always a danger attached to an Ottawa-based institution. Like imperial Rome, it tends to regard the distant parts of the country as its own preserve to be saved from the misguided ventures in which those who live out in the periphery will indulge in if left to themselves. Under the new policies, the whole executive level of the federal civil service will be drawn from within the Ottawa Valley and we can expect increasing misunderstanding and disinterest in the affairs of those parts of the country farthest removed from Ottawa.

Equally important, in my view, is the fact that pools of capital are now concentrated in very few hands. Perhaps not more than 50 people are really involved in the investment of these huge sums. The rise in the importance of corporate pension funds, mutual funds, insurance funds and registered retirement funds means that the pools of capital available for investment are very large and very concentrated and that their managers exercise enormous control. A brief presented by the Toronto stock exchange indicated that in 1970 corporate pension funds formed one of the largest pools of investment in Canada, totalling over $10 billion in that year; they ranked only behind life insurance as a pool of capital. Personally, I am concerned lest this grouping of capital in very large pools should in the end work to the detriment of Canadians.

The reason I urge the adoption of these amendments, Mr. Speaker, is that action along the lines they suggest would allow for provincial input into decisions affecting foreign takeover applications. The existence of a bureaucratic group in Ottawa, coupled with the concentration of the investment pools in the financial capitals of Montreal and Toronto, would mean, in effect, that people with little knowledge of conditions in the periphery, and indeed little concern for them, could control investment in those areas removed from the centre.

Many of the situations with which the proposed board would be dealing are likely to concern small Canadian companies, perhaps family-owned, faced with succession duties and the imposition of capital gains taxes. Others will involve rundown plants for which a Canadian buyer cannot be found. I do not see that the foreign investment tribunal will affect the provinces of Quebec and Ontario one iota. The tribunal is not likely to act against the interests of either of these provinces because they are too big and too powerful in their own right. But it would certainly be open season as far as the provinces in the west and in the Maritimes are concerned.

Indeed, the federal government has already declared war on the province of Alberta and is carrying on a feud with Manitoba and Saskatchewan in connection with feed grains and wheat. And it could easily become involved in the B.C. lumber question. The amendments go some way toward encouraging citizens who live in western Canada and in the Maritimes to feel that their views will have some effect on the action of the tribunal.

We might also remember that in the western provinces and the Maritimes are situated a great many of the resources whose development and ownership have aroused more controversy than has arisen in connection with developments elsewhere. Indeed, some Canadians seem to be of the opinion that they should not be developed at all, at least not until some time in the future. Ottawa might well take such a view.

I should like to support the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) in his endeavour to have the level raised from $250,000 to $500,000. In this age of inflation we shall hardly have time to turn around before this figure of $250,000 is obviously inapplicable. If, as is estimated, it is costing between $50,000 and $100,000 to provide employment for one worker, then this figure of $250,000 means we are looking at a firm with three or four employees. I think this is one area, if the bill is to find any acceptance in the country, that we should look at very carefully.

● (2030)

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I sat here this afternoon not intending to speak until I listened to several members on my right—and I say "right" in more ways than one—getting to their feet to attack this measure as a proposal that, if it were not going to take us completely down the road to socialism, in a few years at least would move us much more substantially in the direction of Canadian control over our own future than they personally desired.

Mr. Blenkarn: Now, now.

Mr. Broadbent: I hear a few "Now, nows". The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie), who has just taken his seat, said that this bill went too far. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) spoke earlier this afternoon and he said the bill went too far. It seems to me to make sense for a party like our own to contend that the bill is a pittance, a small move in the right direction, so therefore we will support it although it does not go far enough. But what do you say, Mr. Speaker, of a political party that says it will vote for a bill that goes too far? The logic of that boggles the mind; however, I am sure a lot of Conservative members do not have that problem.

Mr. Nystrom: They do not have any mind.

Mr. Broadbent: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you are in a totally impartial position in this debate. I should like to deal specifically with two questions raised by the hon. member for Crowfoot.

An hon. Member: Are you going to talk about the bill at all?

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, I am coming to that. We have just heard another interesting aside from the wit of the Conservative Party, and I hope that he will be joining in the debate later. I want to deal with two matters which I think are of substance and which arise from the comments this afternoon of the hon. member for Crowfoot. In speaking of his own amendment and of other amendments presented by members of that Neanderthal party on my right, having said the bill goes too far but that they will support it he then introduced some amendments that, if anything, could completely vitiate any power that the federal government has to deal with foreign ownership. These amendments want to give the provinces much more control, and my guess is that such control would amount to a veto power over this legislation.

I ask the members of the Conservative Party to think very seriously about the problems particularly of the poorer provinces in this country. Those are among the problems that the federal government has to face in this legislation; not the problems of the big provinces, God forbid. Look at the record of the Tories in Ontario; they have a terrible record but I shall not dwell upon it. The big provinces do not face the same problem of foreign ownership in terms of their own economy, but the small provinces do. The reason is that they are economically weaker and have to generate economic growth and employment, which makes them dependent to a considerable extent on foreign capital. As a result, they tend to outbid each other in their attempts to lure the money of private investors in order to create jobs, and this does permanent harm to the country.

I see some Tories to my right shaking their heads, so let me provide them with a few facts, though I realize that normally facts do not cloud their judgment. Let me begin with the province of which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was once premier. What kind of deal did the people of that province get when the province entered into a deal to build a heavy water plant? That has to be one of the worst deals ever made in Canadian history in terms of benefit to the people of that province. A lot of pressure was put upon the premier at that time. I do not say this because he was a Conservative premier, but because he was premier of a province in this country which had economic problems. He entered into a bad deal that cost the taxpayers of his province a lot of money.

Let me move to another province—Manitoba. Again, the Conservative Party probably will not like this example, but the administration that preceded that of Premier Schreyer, a Conservative administration, entered into a deal with Churchill Forest Industries, a deal that should be an utter disgrace to politicians of any party. The deal was cancelled within a matter of weeks or months after Premier Schreyer took office, yet it cost the province of Manitoba over $100 million.

An hon. Member: What did Polymer cost?

Mr. Broadbent: It was a bad deal made by that province which was under economic pressure to create jobs and went to foreign money markets to wheel and deal.

An hon. Member: Move to Polymer, now.

Mr. Broadbent: The hon. member will have his chance. The people of Manitoba got a bad deal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you would contain the members to my right.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a request which I think should be heeded. He is entitled to the consideration of the House.

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The point I am making is that provinces with problems of growth and economic development have to face that issue, and one of the unfortunate facts of Canadian history is that the poorer provinces have had to outbid each other in their attempts to lure foreign investment. This sort of bill will go some way toward dealing with this question. But if too much authority is given to the provinces, as would be the case if the amendments proposed by the Conservative Party are accepted, we will be doing a serious disservice to the whole issue of foreign ownership in this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) is asking, I think, whether he may put a question to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). Is that agreed?

Mr. Broadbent: Certainly.

Mr. Yewchuk: If Conservative governments are so terrible, would the hon. member explain why it is that the "have" provinces are the ones that have had philosophical Conservative governments for a long time?

Mr. Broadbent: That is a sad state of affairs which would take a fair bit of time to deal with, and on another occasion I would be glad to comply with the hon. member's request for an explanation. I want to go on to cite a couple of other illustrations in the hope that I might convince my friends in the Conservative Party to withdraw their amendments.

An hon. Member: What about Saskatchewan?

Mr. Broadbent: I hear a member ask about Saskatchewan. I will give the House a nice example from Saskatchewan. There was a company by the name of Parsons and Whitmore from south of our border in the State of New York which had reached an agreement with a former premier of Saskatchewan, Mr. Thatcher, in respect of the building of a pulp mill in that province. That project was to be overwhelmingly financed by the people of Saskatchewan. I ask, wo was to be in control of that project and who was to get the profit? At the same time I ask, who was to take the risk? Let me assure hon. members that the profits and the equity in the company were to remain with the foreign concern and the risk was to be taken by the people of Saskatchewan. It has become recent Saskatchewan history, particularly as the result of an election campaign, that it was seen that this deal would not work to the advantage of the people of that province, and after Premier Blakeney formed an NDP government in that province the whole arrangement was cancelled.

● (2040)

I might add that not all the people of Saskatchewan were too happy about the situation because, like other citizens of this country, they like jobs, and at the time of this proposed deal they did not think this was a wise decision. However, since then they have been pleased.

An hon. Member: Tell us about the box factory.

Mr. Broadbent: In answer to that hon. member and those people who come from that province, let me give one final example which occurred just a few weeks ago in Newfoundland. I refer to the Shaheen development in that province which has often been described as one of our economically poorer provinces. There has been an attempt by a misguided federal government to assist that province in economic development. This particular project was directed toward a federal-provincial port service development which would be to the benefit of one privately owned foreign corporation. I should like to ask, who was to receive the benefits of this development, and who was to provide the risk? I suggest the answer to that question is that the taxpayers of Canada and Newfoundland would put up the money. We do not know as yet who would benefit in the long run, but in terms of profits they will all go to the company.

Let me conclude this series of examples by pointing out one essential and logical point. It is important for the federal government to assume a national responsibility in respect of foreign ownership so that we do not leave the provinces of Canada, particularly the poorest, in a position where they have to go out in competition with each other for badly needed jobs, at the taxpayers' expense and to the benefit of private investors.

The conclusion, I would draw from the amendments proposed by those of the Conservative Party, particularly the hon. members from the Atlantic provinces and the west, that they have given very little thought to amendments Nos. 2, 5 and 6. Two of those proposed amendments in particular are bad because they would take away from the federal government the kind of authority required to deal with national interests. As the minister said just before the supper hour, there is ample provision in the proposed regulation for the federal government to consult with those provinces which are to be directly involved, and I suggest to those hon. members that they should read the proposed act.

An hon. Member: You should read it.

Mr. Broadbent: Under the proposed measure, the government must give consideration to provincial concerns which are directly affected by any proposed takeover. I suggest that any further regulation would totally hamstring this legislation, and amendments along this line would lead one to the suspicion that the Conservative Party is not really interested in the passage of this measure. It seems hon. members of that party want merely to give the impression of getting on the nationalist bandwagon, but we will watch how members of that party vote at the appropriate time.

Let me now, in the second part of my remarks, deal with this question of public ownership. I should like to deal with this matter explicitly as it was raised by the hon. member for Crowfoot He accused the federal government of taking over the ideas expressed by members of the NDP. Those were not his exact words, but those certainly were the ideas he expressed and I hope that someone will correct me if I am wrong.

The hon. member for Crowfoot suggested, in respect of oil policy, that the federal Liberal Party was really being guided or influenced by the NDP and that this was something that everyone should consider seriously. I wish this suggestion was entirely true. I wish that the federal Liberal Party was moving in the direction of a socialist party. Had that been the case in the past few years, perhaps there would never have been reason for our party coming into existence. The suggestion was that in some socialistic way we have taken over and that in important areas of the petroleum policy, NDP programs had been adopted by this government. My suggestion is that there is no doubt that this government has followed some suggestions put forward by members of this party, but to say that this party has taken over is ridiculous.

I have listened to hon. members from both sides of the House, and it seems to me that the argument involves the whole issue of the role played by private foreign investors in the development of oil reserves in the province of Alberta. The hon. member for Crowfoot outdid his colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), in his defence of the oil industry and the provincial government. That hon. member seemed to advance the suggestion, if I understood his argument correctly—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I should like the opportunity to hear the contribution of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent).

Mr. Broadbent: The essential point made by the hon. member for Crowfoot in respect of the problem of foreign ownership was that private development is providing fantastic benefits, and I hope that someone will correct me if I am wrong. His argument suggested that future development of our tar sands under the control of foreign international corporations would result in great benefits to the people of the province of Alberta and the people of Canada generally. He suggested that the present government's position in respect of the imposition of export taxes was an iniquitous decision of the worst kind. I think that is what he said. Let me reply briefly to that argument.

It seems to me that the hon. member could not have picked a worse industry in the history of this country to use as an example of one that was providing benefits to the people as the result of private investment. I would ask him what we actually have as a result of private investment in the petroleum industry. The answer is obvious—we have an industry that is 99 per cent foreign-owned. Hundreds of millions of dollars in profits are taken abroad every year as a result of this foreign ownership, and many jobs are not retained in this country for Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Those who do not agree with my argument will have the opportunity to reply. Foreign ownership in this industry results in the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars in profits and the loss of many hundreds of thousands of jobs. Much of our petroleum industry has been owned for many years by investors in the United States, in England and in The Netherlands. Let me point out to hon. members that Supertest, which was one of the few Canadian-owned companies, was taken over by the British Petroleum Company which is owned by foreign investors and controlling interest is held by the government of Great Britain. I should like to ask hon. members who are those who receive the benefits of that operation in Canada?

Another point I should like to make is this. Because of the foreign ownership of these petroleum companies, the research and development done by young scientists is done by young Englishmen, Americans and Dutchmen rather than by young Canadians. I suggest this is a second negative consequence that results from foreign ownership.

A third point I should like to mention is the fact that because of interests owned by people abroad, the benefits of associated activities in the petrochemical and plastics industries are in effect exported from Canada, and particularly from Alberta. It is not the people of Alberta or the people of southern Ontario, where most of the manufacturing in this country takes place, that benefit from this research and development: the people who receive the benefits of secondary or associated industries are not the people of Alberta or the people of Canada, but the people of Great Britain, Holland and the United States.

Let me point out a third negative consequence of private development of the natural resources of Alberta. The hon. member for Crowfoot talked about doing the same thing in respect of the tar sands as we have done for the rest of petroleum development in the province of Alberta. I suggest to him that the time has come to stop future foreign development of our petroleum industry. We must take this development out of the hands of the private sector and we must take it out of the hands, particularly, of the foreign-owned private sector.

● (2050)

I conclude the point by saying that he could not have selected a better industry in this country to condemn his own case than the petroleum industry of Alberta. The policy of this party is that the future development of the tar sands must depend, not exclusively on the federal government—because the control of resources is within provincial jurisdiction—but on joint federal-provincial public control of the tar sands development so that in terms of future profits we will stop their export, we will keep the research in Canada and the secondary industry will then be built up in Canada and for Canadians, not for people who live elsewhere, so that Canadians and not others will get the prime benefits of our natural heritage.

I conclude by saying that the Tory amendments, if accepted, would vitiate a reasonable proposal—not one that we think will be hallowed in the socialist heavens in the years hereafter, but a measure that goes some way in the right direction. Anyone who can conceivably take that Tory position must be someone who really does not care at all about the future of the economic independence of this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) wishes to ask a question. However, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has concluded just within his time limit. It would take the unanimous consent of the House for the hon. member to put his question. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I have just a short, simple question. I should like to quote the hon. member's question of Monday, October 29, directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) regarding the automotive pact and the shift in trade to the American side as against the deficit on the Canadian side. The hon. member said:

> . . . in view of the statistics for the last three years which show that during that period more than 95 per cent of the investment in that industry occurred on the American side of the border and hence is likely the principal cause of this shift in trade, can the minister inform the House what he and his officials have done about getting commitments from the automotive industry to ensure that we get our share of investment on this side of the border?

I should like to ask the hon. member if he can point to one line in this bill which would help to induce the automotive industry to make that extended investment on this side of the border?

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to deal in a serious way with what I assume to be a serious question. The hon. member raised the important question about our party's attitude toward the automotive industry in Canada. If I may answer in the time I have, and I think that I have plenty of time in which to reply, and I intend to take it, it seems that in 1964, instead of entering into the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement it would have made more sense for the federal government of that day—I am not trying to evade the question but will try to deal with it from two or three aspects, because the answer is not a simple one—for us to have created an independently-owned Canadian automotive industry. This was the position of our party. The only way that could have been done would have been to rationalize the industry in Canada, to create, if you like—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I have a question from the hon. member and I wish he would listen to the answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: We would have to do in this country what the Germans did with Volkswagen. I am sure the hon. member knows that until recently the controlling interest in Volkswagen was owned by the government of Germany, just as the government of France controls the Renault corporation. We would have had to do in Canada what was done elsewhere. At that time we would have had to nationalize the industry and, instead of having four or five companies, we would have had to put public capital together with private capital to create one automotive firm that would have been very efficient and that would have enabled us, in my judgment, to compete on the North American market.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Hon. members do not want to listen. We could have created one company on this side of the border that would have been competitive on the North American market and, indeed, competitive on a world basis. Instead, the government decided—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Is that why you drive a Volkswagen, because you who live in Oshawa?

Mr. Broadbent: As usual, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) has his facts wrong.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Do you drive a Toyota? Do you drive a Datsun?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I realize that the question might have presented some difficulty to the hon. member.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): What car do you drive? You represent the auto workers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Maybe some hon. members would desire to take part in the general debate, but if the hon. member would try to come to the point as directly as possible, without drawing about 50 of the other hon. members into a discussion, we may be able to proceed to the next speaker who is the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Some hon. Members: Get on with it.

Mr. Broadbent: A question was put to me that I took seriously. I have plenty of time in my allotted time, and I intend to use it to answer the question. First of all, as usual, the hon. member for Crowfoot has his facts wrong. I do not drive a Toyota. As a matter of fact, I have a Pontiac which was made in the city of Oshawa.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): When did you buy that? When did you sell the Volkswagen? Put the facts on the table. Was it after the 1972 election, or after the 1968 election, or when you ran for the leadership of your party?

Mr. Broadbent: With even greater consistency he continues to sing a series of misfacts. I have never had a Volkswagen or a Toyota.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Don't beat around the bush. Put the facts on the table.

Mr. Broadbent: The hon. member is wrong.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): When did you sell your foreign car?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if hon. members would give Mr. Speaker the luxury of hearing at least some of the reply. I think I have to say that the time of the hon. member has expired.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The extra time was given to him by consent. If I do not hear a reply very shortly, I will turn to the hon. member for Peel South.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is a pretty serious threat.

Mr. Broadbent: May I say with respect, Mr. Speaker, that I am answering the question. If there could be less heckling, much less time would be taken. I want to finish my point about the auto industry. Instead of creating our own industry in 1964, the government decided to create the auto pact which set the minimum conditions so that in terms of foreign investment—as a matter of fact, like no other sector in the Canadian economy—for the first time we said to a foreign investor: In order to perform in Canada, you will have to provide a certain degree of production. We said to them that they would have to provide a certain number of jobs in this country—and that is what the auto pact does.

It seems to me that clearly this is what the bill is all about. It says that if we are going to have foreign investment, certain conditions must be met. The question I put to the minister the other day concerns the degree of benefit that we should be taking as Canadians from a foreign-owned industry. In fact, we have made substantial improvements in terms of jobs and in terms of exports since the auto pact. My party's policy is to improve those benefits. So once again the very question raised by the member of the Conservative Party can be turned around against him. He has picked the wrong industry at the wrong time.

• (2100)

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, we heard an interesting diatribe from the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). To some extent many of us agree that the government has been using DREE programs and other federal assistance programs for the benefit of foreign-owned corporations exploiting our resources. The truth of the matter is that instead of turning his fire on the new government of Canada—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: —he should be turning his fire on the old government for selling out this country to foreign owners. I want to remind the members of the NDP to my left, and the members of the NDP opposite, that it was a Progressive Conservative government under George Drew who said, "No, you won't ship out pulp logs from the province of Ontario." And it was a Conservative government under Ross who said, "You won't ship out the pulp product. Instead you will make it into paper here." It is about time that we in this country processed our resources to the highest degree possible.

Mr. Gillespie: Tell us what the Diefenbaker government did.

Mr. Blenkarn: This is the issue in this bill, and you know it. You haven't done anything about that. Sure, we could have the automobile companies and all the others turned into socialist companies. Sure, we could all go into wearing dark-blue jeans. Those blue jeans of socialism are all they have to offer, and that is all we would get if we had a Crown corporation wasting the taxpayers' money and engaging in ridiculous expense. That is what they talk about as a solution to foreign ownership. I say, let us have foreign ownership and also let us have Canada.

I do not see any reason to address my attention to the members to my left. After all, they are only the rump of the government. We have to address our remarks to the minister and his colleagues. The minister said that this bill will provide safeguards, and he asked: Is this going to be a negative bill or a positive bill? Mr. Speaker, I want you to know that we consider it is a negative bill. We consider it does nothing to promote Canadian ownership. It does nothing to develop Canadian ownership. This is a "thou shalt not" bill. It does not build up Canadians. It does not do anything to create something better. This is a little bill which says that some foreigners cannot come in here and engage in takeovers.

To the extent that it may be necessary that there should be some control over foreign corporations, taking over and grabbing up more and more of our economy, I agree that there should be some regulatory authority. But again let me make it clear that this is a "thou shalt not" bill. It is a negative bill.

Mr. Gillespie: You are really going to leave your party behind you.

Mr. Blenkarn: The minister addressed his remarks to the amendments presented by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). I will deal first with amending motions Nos. 2, 5 and 6. They represent the legitimate concerns of the provincial governments. Those legitimate concerns were expressed before the committee by all of the provinces that appeared, including the provinces that approved this bill.

I want to remind the minister of the representations made by the province of Ontario when presenting its views on the bill. In essence, the province of Ontario said, "Yes, we need some bill controlling foreign ownership, but there must be close consultation between the federal and provincial governments in the review process". That brief from the province of Ontario also stressed:

> The federal government provide the province in which the foreign investment is proposed with a copy of the notification and any additional information submitted by the foreign investor.
>
> The provinces be provided with full opportunity to submit their views on proposed investments.
>
> The federal government inform the provinces of any additional details concerning the criteria which will be used in the review process . . .
>
> It is also evident that the consideration of provincial viewpoints provides for a regional dimension to foreign investment policy in Canada. Ontario recognizes that the administration of the proposed act must be sensitive to diverse provincial viewpoints. However, the wider interventionist role which will be available to the federal government should not be used as an instrument of regional development policy. In our view, the objective of reducing regional disparities should be pursued through programs which have been directly designed for this purpose . . .
>
> It is of serious concern to Ontario that there be clarification of the manner in which the federal government proposes to ascertain the nature and status of provincial policy objectives for the purposes of the review process.

The minister was present. The province of Ontario thoroughly approved a review process, but at the same time it expressed serious concern. I would point out that amendments Nos. 2, 5 and 6 are proposed by a member from another province, one that sometimes is said to be a depressed province that needs additional regional assistance. I wish to point out that we have had a number of speakers in support of the amendments, one being a member representing the province of Alberta, a province that certainly cannot be termed a depressed province.

The problem is that Canada is composed of regions. Canada is a vast nation. It has great scope, and these amendments will allow for recognition of that scope. They do not destroy the quality of the bill. They do not mean a provincial veto, not by any means. They really mean that the government must consult with the provinces on whether foreign investment is to be allowed or rejected or whether foreign takeover is to be allowed or rejected. They provide for consultation with the provinces directly affected. The minister knows that this is the position of his party.

From the experiences this House has witnessed over past weeks, the minister should know how much a province in this country can really trust the federal government. Members of the government of Alberta were in Ottawa a week ago yesterday. They thought they had a deal with the government. The government does not consult through the normal process. Its attitude towards consultation is demonstrated in the issuance of press releases and the making of speeches.

Members of the federal government do not want to talk. They do not want to consult. The course of events in connection with the oil issue over past weeks has demonstrated that the regions of this country really cannot rely on the Ottawa bureaucracy to protect the national interest of Canada. It is only in that vein that we proposed these amendments and in which I recommend them to this House.

● (2110)

This was a very serious issue before the committee, Mr. Speaker. The representatives of the province of Quebec who appeared were also concerned. I suggest to hon. members on the other side, who come from that province, that they should look seriously at these amendments and not be too bound by the whip, but be bound by their consciences for the good of Canada and the good of their regions.

I shall move on to the question of threshold limits at this point, but I may want to come back to the other issues. The hon. member for Crowfoot proposed a capital limit of half a million dollars instead of the $250,000 capital limit suggested in the bill. This House has been in receipt of two bills in this session dealing with increases in the old age pensions, which I suppose were totally brought about by inflation. We have recently dealt on second reading with amendments to the Canada Pension Plan. Some of the most expressed concerns in settling the railway strike this year arose because of the effect of inflation on railway workers.

When this bill was conceived some three years ago, $250,000 may have appeared to be quite realistic. But with the incidence of inflation, the incidence of growth and the fact that this government has increased the money supply in Canada by 50 per cent in the last three years, that cannot now be considered a realistic figure. To suggest a capital limit of $500,000 today is probably to say exactly what was intended by the authors of the bill when it was proposed to the government some years ago. I think the House should look at the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Crowfoot because it makes sense.

I should like to draw to the attention of the minister the suggestions he made in committee when dealing with the bill. At that time he said he did not anticipate the creation of a new, enlarged bureaucracy but that we would make use of existing industrial expertise and administrative services. He also said that his guesstimate was that from 15 to 20 officers, and an equivalent number of support staff, is all that would be required. Fifteen or 20 people with equivalent support staff—possibly a total complement of 40 to 50 people, and possibly not even that number are expected to handle this bill?

Does the minister expect that a staff of that size could look after every takeover involving corporations having only $250,000 in gross assets? I would remind the House of the minister's statement this afternoon when he said that $250,000 in gross assets may mean $5,000, $10,000 or $20,000 in real capital, with the rest in debt capital. Mr. Speaker, it is a pretty small company that has gross assets of $250,000 in this age. Surely we cannot expect 15 or 20 officers and the equivalent number of support staff to review investments to the low threshold level of $250,000—especially in this age of liberal inflation.

Amendment No. 3 was proposed by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). The hon. member has not had much experience in business and he really does not understand that the gross turnover of $3 million proposed in the bill is not very high. His suggestion to reduce that amount to $1.5 million is totally ridiculous. As I have stated already in connection with the capital amount, if the bill were amended to limit gross turnover to $1.5 million, we would have to hire a veritable army to administer it.

Some hon. members who have already spoken tonight have suggested that this party is against the foreign takeover bill. I deny that categorically and would remind you, Sir, that this party has always been the national party of Canada. This party is the party of Macdonald who made this country. This party is the party of Borden who in 1911 held this country together. And in recent history this is the party that stood and laid a flag across a bench in this House and said something about a pipeline that those fellows gave away!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I think it is high time that the party to the left and the party opposite realized that this party is the party for Canada, and this party has always been concerned about Canadians and the development of Canada for Canadians.

Mr. Gillespie: What did they do in 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961 and 1962?

Mr. Blenkarn: We worked on it then, too.

Mr. Gillespie: You had five years and you did nothing.

Mr. Blenkarn: Let us talk about that. I know the minister wants to talk about these things. I thought it would be proper to get into our basic criticism of the bill at this point. Our basic criticism is that this bill does not provide any incentive to Canadians. When the minister was asked about incentives for Canadians to invest in Canada, he was hard pressed for a reply. I take you, Mr. Speaker, to the report at the committee stage of this bill where the minister made a statement and gave four incentives to Canadians to invest in Canada—the only four that are left. He said there is a tax credit for Canadians to invest in companies in Canada. I would remind the minister that before the amendments to the Income Tax Act tax credit did mean something to investors, but this government so emasculated the Income Tax Act in the supposed improvements to it that the tax credit is not worth as much to investors today as it was three or four years ago.

The minister then said that there are great programs like DREE to encourage Canadians to invest in Canada. The incentives that the government fed to Michelin Tire and Gulf Oil were great incentives, Mr. Speaker—but to whom? This is a giveaway government that does not concern itself with the ownership of Canada. It wants to make a big thing out of this bill and let the Toronto Daily Star know that it is doing something for Canadians. The minister says that DREE is a wonderful example of what the government has done.

● (2120)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired. He may, however, continue if he is given unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) may continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members of the House for allowing me to continue. I will try not to bore them or the minister. Let me refer again to what he said in committee. The minister went on to say that for small Canadian companies there is a great big limit. They only need to pay 25 per cent, or half the corporate tax rate, until they earn $50,000 in one year. He neglected to say that under the old Income Tax Act small companies had to pay a low rate of tax on the first $35,000 of earnings. That rate would go on and on, and was designed to allow companies to build up their position. Under the current act, the reduced allowance for small businesses ceases after a business has earned a gross of $400,000 or $50,000 each year for eight years. So when we get down to it, what encouragement has the government given for Canadians to invest?

The government introduced a capital gains tax. It applies to Canadians but does not apply to Americans. Americans can still invest in Canada; they do not pay the Canadian capital gains tax. What did it do about the withholding tax? It said that it would increase it to 25 per cent for foreigners, but it did not renegotiate tax treaties with most favoured nations. As a result, foreigners can come in, take their profits home and only pay 15 per cent.

The government did not follow the Carter commission's recommendations with respect to income tax. It had said that income tax would rise to a maximum of 50 per cent and never go beyond that. It said, as well, that corporate and personal income taxes should be integrated. Those to my left went on and on asking for that. But no, the government did not do that. It made sure that income taxes continued to rise to the 60 per cent level. There was no integration of corporate and personal taxes. Oh, yes, one can see that it is great at holding out incentives—but let us consider a few other things. My leader suggested in the last election, and perhaps the government will implement this, that people who want to buy shares in small businesses should be able to deduct the cost of those shares from income. The government did not support that proposal. Actually, it called the proposal ridiculous. After all, it does not want little people to own businesses in Canada.

There was a further suggestion for an arrangement under which interest on personal loans could be deducted, or applied against business expenses, or the cost of investing in a small business. But this government will not go for that—it will not help Canadians invest in Canada. It was also suggested that banks should be required to give preferred treatment to Canadian borrowers. What is the truth of the matter? How many Canadian corporations are given the prime rate? How many Canadian corporations must go to the government's own agency, the IDB, and pay 12 per cent or 13 per cent for money?

Really, Sir, we are governed by a government that is totally negative. The government does not want to give Canadians a break; it is not interested in building Canada. This government says "thou shalt not"—and that is the total concept behind this bill. We need a total program which will encourage Canadians to be masters of their own house. If Canada is to develop as a nation, it cannot be governed by a government whose only policy is "No."

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I had considered not taking part in this debate until I heard the speech, so-called, of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). In so far as I could follow the thread of his argument, if there was one, he seemed to say that the only government in Canada that can be trusted with respect to the question of foreign ownership or foreign takeover is the national government and that a province, or sovereign provincial government—

An hon. Member: Sovereign?

[Mr. Blenkarn.]

Mr. Baker: —could not or should not act in this area. That is to say, it could not act with respect to the question of foreign takeover or foreign ownership within its own bailiwick. I thought he said that. It would be remarkable if he did not say that, and I would be greatly surprised. Why do I say that? The attitude of the party to my left has been for many years that only the government can decide what is best for the country, that the private sector has nothing to say. That party says that the more centralized power you can have, the better the country is. I do not accept that philosophy. Even if that were true, I would have to look at that philosophy with a jaundiced eye as it comes from the party which has become the lackey of Trudeau liberalism in this country.

If anything could describe the party to my left to a "T", it is this: they have become the stretcher-bearers of incompetence in this country. Further, if the argument put forward by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby is a constitutional argument, then I say his constitutional argument is as fraudulent as a $3 bill.

Mr. Broadbent: That was beautiful. Now speak about my real argument.

Mr. Baker: When I was first elected to this House, I must confess that I did not consider the question of foreign ownership and foreign takeover as being extremely serious. However, having listened to a number of hon. members for whom I have great respect—and that does not include the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie)—I have learned that there really is some difficulty in this country with respect to foreign ownership.

I can read statistics as well as the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, and I can see that there is a problem in Canada. The major industries of this country are to a great extent owned by foreigners. I am convinced that we must make an assault on that problem within the next few years. However, we will not make that assault if we use the tools of negativism. That assault will not be undertaken successfully if we merely say, as the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) suggested, "Thou shalt not do these things".

The government can do certain things. My party says that this is a negative bill because it only attacks one half of the problem. The bill does nothing with respect to the other half of the problem, which involves the question of incentives, the limiting of unemployment, the lessening of the rate of inflation which disturbs people, the creation of new financial institutions, and the implementation of policies which will assist us in our drive to create secondary industry in this country which is Canadian owned. All these things ought to be done. This bill does little to bring these things about. These improvements will not be brought about because the bill does not create the right atmosphere for them. That is our difficulty with this bill.

Mr. Gillies: Tell us about your assault.

● (2130)

Mr. Baker: One matter to which this bill only pays lip service is the whole question of the provinces of this country within confederation. I listened to the hon.

member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) and the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) put their cases for their respective parts of this country. I said to myself at that time that we must recognize the fact of confederation. We must recognize that the provinces within confederation to have a certain jurisdiction and a responsibility to their people to meet their problems in their own way.

Speaking as a member from Ontario, if this bill were to pass in its present form, unamended, I do not believe it would give anything more than lip service or tokenism to the whole question of consultation which has been built up in this country. This country was not built because it had to be built. It came together because people in various regions agreed it would be good to build a nation here. That agreement has to be nurtured like a delicate flower. It cannot be tramped on. We cannot have the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) going through it with a big hoe as he did a few days ago. We cannot have the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) denying, as he did in Edmonton, the discussion of revenue-sharing for municipalities. We cannot have that attitude if this country is to be strong. This country came together, and will stay together and grow because people of good will see some reason to agree there are varied jurisdictions and a necessity for consultation. I wager that if the oil had been in the province of Quebec, there would not have been the onslaught there was in the province of Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: I listened to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) before the dinner break. I tried to find some validity for the reasons he put forward for turning away from the reasonable amendments which we hope the government will adopt in order to breathe some life into the process of consultation.

Mr. Gillespie: Do you want a weak bill or a strong bill?

Mr. Baker: I listened, and I heard nothing—just as I did not hear that interjection. I expected more from the minister. What I heard were the workings of the mind of a technocrat rather than a Canadian public man. I heard the representative of a government that has forgotten everything about consultation except the use of a gunboat. When reviewing the question of foreign investment or co-operation between the federal government and municipalities and the federal government and provincial governments in urban affairs, agriculture and all those things which come under the jurisdiction of varying governments in Canada, the people of Canada will ask this government why there ought not to be that process of consultation, and why the minister said there cannot be any real consultation with respect to this bill. There is an answer to those people who ask that question about the government which they are beginning to doubt more and more.

This government has forgotten the true meaning of confederation. The remedies that should be applied to problems in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick are not the proper remedies to apply in Alberta and British Columbia.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: Ontario and Quebec are different to a great degree from the other parts of Canada. There are peculiar remedies for their situations. That is the purpose of the amendments put forward with regard to consultation. It is to breathe some life into the process of consultation which is as old as this country. I regret the minister's statement that he has neglected to note that simple truth of Canadian federalism. It is to give an expression to that simple truth that these amendments were put forward.

With regard to the limits of the threshold, the minister said the figures are arbitrary. I am sure they are arbitrary. I am sure no study was made. Perhaps no study could have been made as to the acceptable level. If they are arbitrary, we ask the minister to consider, in view of the long period of time the figures have been in existence, changing them in view of what happened with regard to the time that has passed and the inflation that has occurred, as the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) said, largely because of the policies or failure of policies of this government. We believe it would make the bill more workable. The amendments to which this government will be pushed one way or another are with respect to the process of consultation and will continue to give some validity and recognition to the facts of confederation. That is the most important consideration with respect to this bill.

• (2140)

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, the study of Bill C-132 has been very much delayed. Now that the harm has been done, that foreigners have strong control over our business in Canada, it is difficult to make them go back and any such law will never have much utility.

To prevent that the same harm will be done to our national economy in the future, this bill will perhaps stop small foreign firms from setting up in Canada, unless it is to our benefit that they be invited or accepted. However, the existing great corporations will always manage one way or the other to prosper at their normal rate among our Canadian firms.

Small fines of $10,000 will not deter them from continuing their activities.

Bill C-132 contains enough loopholes to let things go on as they are, while allowing us to tell everyone that we now have a legislation protecting Canadian capital and forbidding foreign capital to enter the country unless it is recognized and proven to be of benefit to us.

Mr. Speaker, no need to be very smart to realize that the $10,000 fine could discourage small businesses, but not large ones, from risking their coming here, so that we can consider the legislation to bring further protection to big capital already invested in the country, since it prevents new competition from taking root.

In the long run, the legislation is justifiable in the sense that it will stop foreigners from making new investments, but on the other hand, it will let the capital already invested here expand without any obstacle or penalty.

If we look quickly at the billions of dollars in foreign capital already invested in Canada, can we still state that the legislation brought about by Bill C-132 will stop General Motors from expanding and developing in Canada for the benefit of the present shareholders who for the most part reside in the United States?

The same applies to Ford Motors, Imperial Oil, the Chrysler Corporation, Shell Canada, the International Nickel Company, Gulf Oil, Canadian General Electric and many other companies. They are also true in the case of the International Business Machines Co., IBM, Rothmans Pall Mall of Canada Ltd., Dupont Canada, Ciments Canada Lafarge Ltée, and so on. Again they apply to the following companies for which more than 50 per cent and even up to 100 per cent of the shares are in the hands of foreigners, most of them American citizens: United Carbide Canada Ltd., 75 per cent of which is in foreign hands; Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. of Canada Ltd., 86 per cent, General Foods, 100 per cent, Weldwood of Canada Ltd., 74 per cent, and Continental Can Co. of Canada Ltd., 100 per cent.

As you see, the words "of Canada" added to the name of the mother-company do not make the Canadian branch any less foreign as regards ownership, management and profits. I could go on like that indefinitely but as one seldom has the opportunity to get something off one's chest, I should like to give at least a few more names of companies well known to all of us and whose products we use in our daily life: Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. of Canada, owned by foreigners; Standards Brands Limited; Canadian Johns-Manville Co. Ltd.; Lever Brothers Ltd.; Amoco Canada Petroleum Company Ltd., under the control of Standard Oil of Indiana; Sun Oil Co. Ltd., under the control of Sun Oil Co. Ltd. of Philadelphia; Kodak Canada Ltd.; The Proctor & Gamble Co. of Canada, Limited, etc.

So there you have about fifty of the great companies whose capital is wholly or partially foreign, and they are all taking advantage of our natural resources, of a mostly Canadian labour force, and especially of our customers, our purchasing power and our savings, whenever that suits them, when shares are sold on the market.

Mr. Speaker, those are facts we must accept. In the same way, we have to accept foreign capital, whether we like it or not. It is already done, no matter who was responsible for it. Is that what we want to change through the so-called legislation before us today, Bill C-132? Is it those companies we want to hurt? Do we really want those companies to pay $10,000 fines? Will those firms be affected by this minor legislation that we are throwing in their way? One can very well see that it is mere window dressing for the benefit of those who are yapping against the influx of foreign capital in our corporations. But, if we truly want foreign capital to work for Canadians we should not throw it out nor prevent it from coming to help us because if we really need capital and if we do not know how to produce it we must go right at the source of this capital so necessary for our industrial development and our national economy.

If ever we truly want foreign capital to work in this country for Canadians while ensuring reasonable profits to its owners, even a foreign owner, we shall have better things to do than raising small inconveniences as we are trying to do through Bill C-132.

We will not even need to pass new laws to this effect. We will just have to take a hard look at our tax system which, generally speaking, gives too much protection to corporate capital to the prejudice of income earned through the work of Canadians and even to the prejudice of the purchasing power of Canadians who must pay too much for the goods and services required for their well-being so that corporate profits may be higher whether they stem from Canadian or foreign capital.

Once the government will have decided to render justice to all Canadians whether they be self-employed, unionized or in partnerships, whether they be organized as corporations of any kind, then it will be worthwhile to speak about national economic balance between people, families and corporations and then there will be no question of treating foreign capital differently from Canadian capital because it will always be welcome, will no longer be evil and will be profitable to all Canadians.

Generally speaking, Canadians do not complain about foreign capital which is the basis of our national economy. In fact, the issue is not where it is coming from. The issue is to have capital when you need it. We should not be scared when things go wrong somewhere. Foreign capital is not always to be blamed, neither is our international trade. But we are trying to say that if things are turning out badly it is not our fault. That is the trouble. Nobody wants to take his responsibilities. We refuse to admit that if things go wrong, we too could have contributed to such a state of affairs.

And if we are responsible, it becomes much easier to correct such a situation than to pretend that it is someone else's fault. Instead of always blaming others for our dissatisfaction, let us finally recognize that we have caused it and let us shoulder our responsibilities. Let us correct what is within our reach here, in Parliament. The whole taxation system was under consideration for a great many years and with what results? Under the pretence of levying heavier taxes on large companies, of taxing capital gains, these companies are realizing ever larger profits, accumulating more and more reserves each year; prices never cease to go up everywhere precisely in order to let the companies obtain higher profits and get in more reserves. This is why, despite improved production each year in Canada, our governments run deeper into debt, show ever increasing deficits. People are desparate because of rising prices, but companies are progressing, capitalizing and taking further advantage of the inertia of our government which cares little about the stability of the Canadian economy. It is not important if the capital is supplied by our people or by foreigners; the trouble is not there. But they do not want to see what is wrong. It is the unfair distribution of taxes among individuals and corporations that is wrong; individuals are always Canadian workers, but the capital of corporations may be Canadian or foreign but anyway, this capital is always protected, non-taxable, privileged, encouraged by all kinds of allowed and non taxable reserves.

It is not because the capital is foreign or Canadian that companies are not properly taxed as compared with individuals, but because they are not taxed. Therefore, it would be sufficient to tax them properly, not more than individuals, but equally, that is to say in proportion to their profits.

Besides, Mr. Speaker, are dividends paid on share capital of foreign-owned companies as important as that? Must we really be alarmed about it? Must we think that the cause of our economic ills depends on the share capital of foreign-owned corporations? If we consider the facts, we will see that dividends paid on foreign capital are very small and that we must not hold them responsible for our economic troubles.

If we look at statistics in this country, we see that out of a production of $103 billion in 1972, the year that ended last March, only $874 million were paid to non-residents, whether from the United States or other countries. Therefore, $874 million out of $103 billion, in 1972, do not even represent 1 per cent of our whole production that goes to foreign countries in purchasing power, under the form of dividends paid on share capital of foreign-owned corporations. As you can see, there is nothing alarming about it. Even though we would prevent foreign capital from being invested as share capital in Canadian firms, we would invite foreigners to invest in Canada several millions of dollars in debenture capital at a fixed interest rate guaranteed by our governments.

There is the great source of foreign capital which profit from our natural resources, from manpower, taxation, thanks to a docile and peaceful people.

Here again we have a bill which says nothing about that channel which remains wide open to foreign capital, as debenture capital, through our governments, with a guarantee that all Canadians agree to work and pay taxes in order to meet the interest on this capital borrowed at a rate of 8 or 8½ per cent for 25 years, examples of which have been seen recently when a commitment was made to pay in interest more than twice the amount borrowed, while the principal will still have to be refunded some day if only we will stop paying an interest rate of 8½ per cent.

As we see, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-132 does not play a very effective role in our national economic balance which we are eager to restore among individuals and corporations, if we want to eradicate inflation, unemployment and poverty. It would be high time to take a comprehensive rather than partial view of the economy and its problems merely resorting to insignificant makeshifts which are wasteful and ineffective.

Here is further evidence of the power which we can exercise on Canadian and foreign companies to make them play their role in the national economy for the benefit of the people, whether it is with foreign or Canadian capital. Let me give you further evidence of our power along this line. I did not invent it. Again, all that is needed is to consult Statistics Canada figures to find the companies' important statements of profits which are ever increasing. Furthermore, the taxes they pay are growing less and less every year, which leaves them with a greater margin of undistributed profits.

On the other hand, personal income taxes are increasing six times faster than corporate taxes. This is extraordinary, but that is the way it is. Therefore, this is an opportunity for our responsible ministers to give a significant role to play to our corporations, whether Canadian-owned or foreign-owned, before the whole of our population. Here are the exact figures for the year 1972 compared with those of 1963. Corporate profits rose from $4.9 billion to $10.8 billion, an increase of $6 billion, but taxes only went up from $1.8 billion to $3.7 billion which leaves $5 billion in undistributed profits for 1972 as compared with only $1.7 billion for 1963 after corporations increased their dividends by only $1.272 billion.

● (2150)

As one can see dividends increased by $550 million over a 10-year period but indistributed profits jumped by $3.4 billion over stated profits which shows that companies always serve themselves better than they do their shareholders and even governments on the profits made with workers, consumers and ever-increasing taxes. In that respect let us not go too far. One only has to look at page 1149 of the Canada Year Book for 1972 to see that individuals paid $2 billion in taxes in 1972 and $9 billion in 1973 whereas corporations paid $1 billion in 1962 and $2 billion in 1971. Corporations are always protected at the expense of individuals and it is the policy of this government in all areas.

There lies the cause of discontent of the people with their governments, federalism, the policy of corporate protection at the expense of the people who suffer from inflation, unemployment and poverty while corporations build up profits and capital through an unfair distribution of taxes. It is as simple as that, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to conclude my remarks on more refreshing thoughts for those who participate in the business of this House. It is well known that everybody tries his best but those who make the decisions are caught in a system that they cannot move easily. This is why the status quo is maintained, in spite of the new acts that we adopt. Even these new acts aim at defending the prevailing system, with hardly any semblance of improvements.

But our people are paying more and more taxes and disbursing more money for goods and services which are often rare and ill secured. Yet, it is our function to counterbalance established behaviour patterns and this is what we are doing. Actually, we are doing our best. However, before long, we shall no longer be able to squeeze more juice out of the lemon. Having considered unfairly shared income, let us now turn our attention to equally unfairly shared taxes. We can readily see that all of this is taking place under a capitalistic system which produces well, capitalizes well, but which does not consume quite enough, even where the people complain of hard times, in spite of the increases in pensions and social welfare allowances which have been granted to them. All of this is too little too late, in comparison with the profits which are increasing still more rapidly within larger corporations, on the stock exchange, in large millionaire and billionaire companies while a good many citizens enjoy inflation, unemployment and poverty.

Our natural resources are inexhaustible, our manpower is abundant and our national production is superfluous but we consume only 60 per cent of it per year, for the benefit of companies that accumulate capital at the expense of the people and of the governments, which have deficits. This is a summary of our self made situation which we can correct and which is due to distribution methods that are false or have been made so in the course of our capitalist development.

Mr. Speaker, we are capitalists and we want our capitalistic system to continue to face the present difficulties but something has to change, not in the system itself, but in ratios and percentages; the correction would be quite simple because it would consist only in having the same concern for human beings as for companies. The whole matter is one of distribution of income and taxes drawn from profits and reserves. Honest comfort and abundance in all households, that is what we must achieve.

[English]

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might call it ten o'clock.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton rising on a point of order?

Mr. Baker: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether I might get some confirmation from the acting government House leader, who I assume is the Secretary of State for External Affairs, what the business of the House will be for tomorrow and for the balance of the week.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I understand that we will be continuing with the foreign investment review bill tomorrow. I understand that on Thursday it is planned to have an opposition day, continuing on Friday with the foreign investment review bill, depending on the progress that is made.

Mr. Baker: On the same point of order, might I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. There has been some discussion about the statement that the minister might be making on the resolution with respect to the Middle East. Is he in a position to tell the House when we might expect that, and whether it might be a possibility for this week?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to attempt to answer that question, I have no objection to the resolution being called at any time. I did say to the House, and I still give the same advice, that I think it would be better to wait until the evaluation team that has gone to Cairo reports; I will then be in a better position to tell the extent of the commitment that Canada will be undertaking. I think it would be optimistic to expect that I would want to call it this week.

* * *

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-222, an act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, without any amendment.

[Mr. Allard.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—DISCONTINUANCE OF VETERANS LAND ACT BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION—REASON FOR ACTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I thought I was in second position tonight, but I guess I am first. I have had the chance of glancing up at the press, and since the question that I have put forward is about veterans affairs they can all have a ten-minute sleep.

I again make representation to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) to try to impress upon him the need to reconsider the phasing out of the Veterans Land Act. In my question to him I mentioned the fact that there are 125,000 veterans who are certified at the present and must make application for loan before March, 1974. I understand that this figure is now approaching 140,000 veterans who qualify for certification and must apply before March, 1974.

● (2200)

It is my understanding, also, that the Veterans Land Act administration expects that only 5 per cent of these 140,000 will come forward. From what I can gather, the department's answer to the question as to why so many veterans have not come forward is that this is because many veterans merely made sure they obtained certification before October, 1968, in the event that they might want to apply for loans. This may be so in some cases, but to my mind, judging from the many letters and grievances arriving in my office—and I am sure this is true of other hon. members—the Veterans Land Act, even with the many amendments brought in over the years, has not kept pace with the changing conditions, particularly with the situation which exists at this time.

For example, under part II of the Veterans Land Act it is provided that veterans can borrow up to $18,000. Everyone who has remained here tonight knows it is impossible to build a home for that amount or, for that matter, even to build a basement. I contend that if the act had been amended to meet inflationary costs, many thousands of veterans would now be taking advantage of their qualification.

Furthermore, a more serious restriction is the lot requirement of one-half an acre. In some cases this can be reduced by 20 per cent. Everyone knows that not only veterans but every citizen in Canada who wants to build a house is burdened with the cost of land which denies him the opportunity of acquiring a home for himself and his family. In this respect the government has failed to meet changing conditions, to the detriment of the war veteran.

With regard to the deadline date for certification of October 1, 1968, it is difficult for me to understand the adamant position the department is taking in stating that everyone has had an opportunity to apply before that date. The minister knows there are many veterans who, through circumstances beyond their control, were not knowledgeable of the deadline date and are being denied their rights under the charter. This is true even though the minister states that everyone was aware of the situation.

It is worth while mentioning the answer given by the minister in which he stated that we have no right to deviate from the legislation as it now stands. Nothing, to my mind, is farther from the fact. If I had the time I could relate the literally thousands of amendments brought forth since 1920 when the act was known as the Soldier Settlement Act. The amount of the loans has been amended time and time again because of the increase in costs, and lot requirements have been amended from time to time.

If ever there was a time when it would be sensible to lift the deadline for certification, it is now when the housing crisis which exists in Canada was never more acute. The National Housing Act as it exists, with all its improvements, cannot meet the needs of low-income Canadians. We have the machinery already existing under the Veterans Land Act to fill the needs of many thousands of veteran Canadian citizens to whom the government made a commitment many years ago when the then prime minister of the country said, in 1917, that no Canadian would ever be able to say that the government of the day would not fulfil its obligation to the veterans who served their country.

Now, the government of today is reneging on the commitments it made back in 1917. The government can remove the deadline dates, they can increase the amount of loans, and they can reduce the lot requirements by simple amendments; also, they can remove the restrictions on deadline dates. I am sure the minister would want to do this—but instead he is listening to his cabinet colleagues who are denying the veterans their right. Such action cannot be condoned under any circumstances. I hope the minister will tell me why this is being done.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in considering representations to extend the statutory deadline of March 31, 1974, for qualified veterans to submit loan applications under the Veterans Land Act, it is essential to look at the matter in the perspective of the purpose of the act and its alternative relationship to other rehabilitation measures.

As indicated in previous statements which I have made both in the House and to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, VLA was not designed as a program of urban housing nor as part of a retirement program for persons reaching the end of their productive careers. Its basic purpose was to provide loans for the purchase of agricultural land to be used on a full or part time farming basis by veterans who were interested in this form of rehabilitation program on their return to civilian life following wartime active force service.

It was recognized that many veterans would neither wish nor find it practical to settle under the Veterans Land Act. Two other programs were enacted: university training under the Veterans Rehabilitation Act, and re-establishment credits under the War Service Grants Act. The benefits under all three programs were alternative one to the other. Each veteran had the right to choose whichever plan he considered would best serve his needs and desires. The department's university training program was concluded in the 1950s, and October 31, 1968, was the final date for veterans to use re-establishment credit benefits. As I have mentioned previously in the House, virtually every veteran who writes to me about VLA has used either of the other two alternative benefits.

Having regard for the basic purpose of the Veterans Land Act and its alternative relationship to the other two measures, in 1965 parliament established deadlines to phase out VLA lending operations in a reasonable and orderly manner. By next March, almost 30 years will have elapsed since the end of World War II, and 20 years in the case of the Korean conflict. In the context of a rehabilitation measure to assist veterans to pick up the threads of civilian life following wartime active service, I suggest those genuinely interested in land settlement assistance will have had ample time to find properties suitable for this purpose.

Reference was made to the fact that some 125,000 veterans—I think the hon. member said 140,000—who hold VLA qualification certificates have not applied for VLA benefits. I am satisfied that the vast majority of these veterans simply took the precaution of obtaining such a certificate by the deadline of October 31, 1968. Those with a sincere interest in being established on the land have been settled in the intervening five years or are taking steps to do so before the end of March, 1974.

I have received some representations that March 31, 1974, is premature for qualified veterans still serving in the armed forces. I would like to mention that many such veterans are already established under the act and that others are in the process of doing so. The existing terms of the legislation are sufficiently flexible to accommodate these veterans.

In summary, I believe the terminal dates established by parliament more than eight years ago for the orderly phase out of VLA lending operations were reasonable and realistic at the time and remain so today. By next March approximately 140,000 veterans will have been settled, involving an investment of public funds of more than $1.25 billion. Those are impressive totals, and, I suggest, reflect full attainment of the purposes of this alternative rehabilitation measure as contemplated by the framers of the legislation.

● (2210)

PUBLIC SERVICE—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN WAGE OFFER TO NORTHWEST TERRITORIES NURSES BECAUSE OF WORKING CONDITIONS AND COST OF LIVING—DANGER PAY

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I again wish to raise the matter of pay awards to nurses in Canada's northern territories, which are inadequate almost any way you look at them. I hope the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) will not hesitate to reopen negotiations with this group of people who could have chosen the right to strike as a means of contract dispute settlement, but instead opted for arbitration. Mr.

Speaker, the nurses are dissatisfied and insulted by the award of the arbitration tribunal.

Nurses at our northern hospitals and nursing stations have been offered a 6 per cent increase at a time when the national cost of living has increased by 8.2 per cent. The cost of living in Inuvik is 68 per cent higher than in the prairie provinces, where the basic wage rates for nurses are higher. In Norman Wells the cost of living is 98 per cent higher. I would like to point out to the President of the Treasury Board and those working under him that the isolation post allowance is ridiculously inadequate to cover this gap.

Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to outline some of the extra responsibilities facing northern nurses to which nurses in the south are generally not exposed. Nursing stations in remote northern areas have no physician nearby and the nurses must often assume responsibilities normally handled by doctors. Sometimes they must escort very ill patients from small settlements to hospitals in the larger communities, and sometimes on to Edmonton. These emergency flights are often hazardous, especially in the winter, and as a pilot I know about the fog and icing conditions that occur, the poor landing strips, and so on. Ten per cent danger pay would not seem an unreasonable demand.

A patient's condition has often been known to change in flight, again requiring special responsibility on the part of the nurse. Northern nurses have had to deliver babies and relieve haemorrhaging patients while in flight in a little Cessna 185. They have to put up with unruliness on the part of psychotics who are to be evacuated. These nurses work long hours. They are under 24-hour standby. They are often shortstaffed, and they must sometimes live in a confined environment. Surely increased sick leave and vacation leave are called for.

The nurses of the Canadian north are required to have two years training besides their high school diplomas. Their work requires heavy responsibility and high professional responsibility. They must work with human life. And what basic wage is the government offering them? Four dollars an hour—only 20 cents an hour more than full-time postal clerks. Their basic wage is to be raised 6 per cent to $7,800 per annum. At the same time, registered nurses in British Columbia receive over $8,000 a year. Auxiliary dental assistants, who require less schooling, get over $9,000.

For their 24-hour standby, nurses at the nursing stations get only 1½ days off per month. Hospital nurses are on 24-hour call for emergency cases, for which the compensation is $1.50 for eight hours, which works out to about 19 cents an hour. Nineteen cents an hour, Mr. Speaker! How can this be considered a responsible rate of compensation? Obviously it cannot.

Of course, under these conditions it is little surprise that the nurses, only a small number of whom are hired locally, do not see fit to stay on for any length of time in the north. Only four nurses currently on staff at the Inuvik hospital have more than one year's service there. It ends up costing the government more money to bring in new nurses than it would cost to give them some incentive to stay. This I consider to be a most deplorable situation.

[Mr. Firth.]

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the minister is, of course, concerned to minimize the exposure to hazards of all public servants whether they are employed in the north or at the many locations where there are federal government installations across this country. The government, as employer, has issued many safety standards and guidelines in the last two or three years and the safety of public servants is under constant examination by staff at Treasury Board and, of course, by departments who in the final analysis have the responsiblity for the proper and safe deployment of their staffs.

A number of departments, including the Department of Transport, are jointly studying at this very time new policies affecting travel by public servants in chartered aircraft, particularly with regard to isolated areas. At least one department, which deploys its personnel in isolated areas, has already issued interim guidelines for field operations in the north. The government, as employer, puts its emphasis on the means of reducing to acceptable minimums the hazards to which public servants are exposed.

AGRICULTURE—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN RESEARCH INTO PROTEIN PRODUCTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, on July 20, as recorded in Hansard at page 5833, I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) the following question:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Because of the high cost of protein, and in view of the fact that Canada could rectify this problem and become self-sufficient in protein production, is the minister now prepared to authorize more money for research into high protein crops and the elimination of thiglucoside in rapeseed?

The minister replied as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, we have research programs in this respect. As I said before, I believe, to some hon. members of this House, I think we are doing more in this field than any other country and plan on doing even more.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the only part of the answer I am satisfied with is the part which states "and plan on doing even more". If Canadian agriculture is to go on feeding the millions of people in the world, improved agricultural research programs must be given more attention. The minister has consistently maintained that his department's research programs are second to none in comparison with what other countries are doing. I question the validity of this statement. However, whether or not it is true, what really matters is whether we are concentrating our efforts in the proper directions and making the optimum use of the talent and facilities available to us.

I maintain that the universities of this country have those talents and facilities available and can propel our research efforts in the proper direction. In recent years Canada's universities have been receiving a smaller and smaller percentage of the research funds available for agriculture. It has now reached the point of being ridiculous, for they are receiving only 1 per cent, that is, $600,000 of a $62 million budget, of those moneys allotted for agricultural research in Canada.

Where are all these funds going? Apparently they are being funnelled into that grey area known as the Department of Agriculture research branch, there to be used for some unco-ordinated, nondescript activities, sometimes totally unrelated to the immediate needs of Canadian farmers.

A well known and respected Canadian scientist, Dr. P. D. MacTaggart-Cowan, has stated that it was the policy of the federal Department of Agriculture to monopolize millions of dollars and as a result starve research scientists at universities. It has long been my belief that a university professor can guide and direct as many as 35 research technicians or students toward a specific goal. At the moment most universities are lucky to have one technician for each professional on staff. University research departments are dependent on outside financing in the form of annual grants to maintain their programs. Because of this dependence on annual grants, permanent staff is very difficult to find and to keep. The best people just will not accept positions which offer small salaries and little personal security.

The biggest problem of university research today is permanent staff. As a result of this we have a definite problem of ineffective utilization of professional university people. There is, in spite of the budget, a lack of research funds in western Canada. This is evident not only at CDA research stations but universities as well. Take rapeseed for example: the project at Saskatoon is inadequately funded. In view of the protein shortage experienced this year, we should be pushing ahead at all costs to eliminate glucosinolate in rapeseed. However, I find that the research presently going on is concentrated on the Argentine variety and not the Polish variety which is best suited to the prairie region.

● (2220)

Besides this, I believe there are only six people working on such research. We should be encouraging universities to test new types of soil, climate, etc., for selection reasons. Even considering all this, I find that research in diseases of rapeseed has not yet got off the ground. To my astonishment, I find that the department is taking pride in building new buildings at Charlottetown, Fredericton and now at Lethbridge instead of using existing facilities or improving facilities at universities. I might add that the Alberta government is now stepping into the field in recognizing the problem and is at least guaranteeing the universities of Alberta some technical staff.

Now I shall address myself to protein self-sufficiency. Although I realize that research is being conducted in Ottawa and Winnipeg in regard to Hiproly barley, I suggest that it seems to take the initiative of western hog growers, of the Alberta Hog Marketing Board and of the province of Alberta in order to get research off the ground of any consequence with regard to high protein, high lysin barley. This is so particularly in the province of Alberta, the chief red-meat producing and barley producing province of Canada. And we probably have not begun any research into the use of high protein oats. Groat protein in concentrations of between 23 and 25 per cent has been tested at Iowa State University.

My contention, Sir, is that much more could be done by concentrating research on immediate needs and using university expertise, instead of wasting money on nice buildings and government research hierarchy.

[Translation]

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the minister shares the concern of the hon. member for the cost of proteins and other agricultural inputs.

As regards proteins, I can reassure the House by saying that Canada produces more vegetable proteins than it needs for its livestock.

The hon. member has referred to the need for protein research, and it would be appropriate to mention a few aspects of the present studies. Among the most interesting developments, we can mention those relating to the reproduction of soya beans and of oats and feed wheat with a higher protein value, as well as the permanent research projects supported by the federal government at the University of Manitoba concerning the Faba bean (field-bean).

The department is achieving excellent genetic results concerning glucosilanates in rapeseed, and production of a variety of rapeseed with a low glucosilanate content is expected by 1975. This means simply that we then expect to get into commercial production a variety of rapeseed the oilcake from which will be used much more extensively and with a far greater flexibility than that of varieties now in use. The main restriction in all this research has to do, however, with the reproduction rate.

Through the use of hothouses and other technical means, it is possible to get two crops a year, thus reducing considerably the time required for the development of new varieties. This method has speeded up our discovery of some possibly useful varieties, and by combining these results with reproduction in warmer climates during winter, it was possible to get these useful varieties ready for commercial production in a much shorter period.

The hon. member will no doubt remember the establishment of a $1 million fund for the development of new crops, as well as the granting of an important subsidy for the pilot project concerning a plant for the processing of oil and protein in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for having given me the opportunity of speaking briefly on research concerning feed with a high protein content at the Department of Agriculture.

[English]

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 7, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF SPEAKER OF ONTARIO LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Mr. Speaker: May I be allowed to bring to the attention of hon. members the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a very distinguished visitor and parliamentary colleague, the Honourable Allen E. Reuter, Speaker of the Ontario Legislative Assembly. Mr. Speaker Reuter is in Ottawa to discuss Commonwealth Parliamentary Association matters with his federal colleagues. On behalf of the House of Commons I extend to him a warm, cordial and friendly greeting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A), 1973-74

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting Supplementary Estimates (A) for the financial year ending March 31, 1974, was presented by Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

REFERENCE OF SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A), 1973-74, TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the Supplementary Estimates (A), tabled this day, be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

● (1410)

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

STATEMENT ON STATE OF FUND, NEW CONTRIBUTION RATES AND REORGANIZATION OF ADMINISTRATION

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know, the Unemployment Insurance Act requires the government to review annually the rate of premiums to be paid by employers and employees during the year ahead.

With the completion of tabulation of the T4 returns for 1972, processed by the Department of National Revenue in September, 1973, and analysed by the commission, we now have accurate and complete financial data for last year. For 1972 the insurable earnings base was $42 billion, 36 per cent of this being the wages or salaries of persons covered by unemployment insurance for the first time and paying a preferential rate; the employer-employee contribution, just recently determined, was $691 million. The cost chargeable to the employer-employee account is now known to be $1,104 million. Earned interest is $2.8 million.

Thus there was an operating deficit of $410 million on this account for the calendar year of 1972. The opening cash balance as of January 1, 1972, carried over from the old unemployment insurance fund, was $235.5 million. This was applied against that deficit.

For 1973, we now forecast the total benefit payments at $2,050 million. This, together with administrative costs, interest payments, less overpayments recovered, will bring the total cash flow requirements to $2,201 million. Of this, $932 million will be the government's share, and $1,269 million is chargeable to the employee-employer premium account.

This year the shortfall of charges to the employee-employer premium account over premium revenue is expected to be about $335 million. Adding this figure to the net cash deficit of $174.5 million as of last December 31 will result in a cumulative deficit of about $509.6 million in the employee-employer account by the end of 1973.

Mr. Stanfield: What's half a million?

Mr. Andras: Based upon this analysis, we have recommended and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has approved, these contribution rates for the calendar year 1974: For employees, $1.40 per $100 of insurable earnings; for employers, $1.96 per $100 of insurable earnings.

At the new rates, the employee-employer account can be expected to break even for operations in the calendar year 1974, and could produce some surplus to reduce the cumulative deficit. In 1975 there will be between $100 million and $120 million in new and additional revenue as a result of the disappearance of the preferential rate, which will mean a very substantial reduction in the deficit that year. These new rates are adequate to retire the current deficit at least by the end of 1978, barring unforeseen adverse economic developments.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Don't worry, the Socialists will keep you in power.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Unemployment Insurance

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, when the new act was passed in 1971 it was obvious that the old structure of the Unemployment Insurance Commission would not be adequate to cope with the new universal coverage, the different definitions of eligibility, the range of special benefits, and other changes that made the new program radically different from the outmoded one it replaced.

In an ideal world—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andras: —the desirable, cautious approach would have been to design and set up the new organization and give it a year's dry run before implementing the new act in order to work out the snags and loopholes, and to compile the data necessary for precise calculation of its costs, and the fine tuning of the premiums necessary to pay the portion of these costs shared by employers and employees.

But I need hardly remind hon. members, who I thought would be interested in a full disclosure, that in 1971 in Canada unemployment was at its recent peak. Over the year it averaged 6.4 per cent. To hold back the launching of the new program until all systems had been triple-checked and tested would have been to put administrative tidiness ahead of real human need. The government's choice was to introduce the program on an urgent basis—the new benefit rules went into effect June 27, only five days after passage of the bill—rebuilding the administrative structure and redesigning its operations as it went along. Of course, the high unemployment that made the changeover so urgent added substantially to the problems it entailed.

The problems that did develop fell into two main categories: inadequate service to claimants and inadequate control to protect the program from payment of benefits to persons not entitled to receive them.

While the commission began attacking both problem areas, it was clear that priority had to be given to service. In fairness, control measures could only be fully reinforced after it had been assured that every person entitled to receive benefits was in fact getting them, and getting them on time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure hon. members will appreciate that these interruptions make it difficult for some hon. members, and certainly the Chair, to hear the statement the minister is trying to make at this time on motions.

Mr. Andras: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly the old, mail-order operation of the commission was no longer appropriate. It was in fact a major weakness of the system.

With this in mind, and following many of the recommendations of my predecessor, I laid special stress on more efficient, sensitive and personalized service when I announced in April a major reorganization and decentralization of commission operations and head office. The reorganization, which included the opening of 20 new offices and upgrading some 100 existing offices and satellites, essentially transformed our operations from an assembly line into a network of compact working units in which clients and staff deal mainly face to face. By the end of the year, practically all our 359 working units will be in place in our various locations.

[Mr. Horner (Crowfoot).]

Along with the structural and procedural changes, a comprehensive and successful training program has been completed, involving 100,000 hours for commission personnel, an investment that is paying off in service and in the attitude of our people to clients.

In addition to better service, this whole reorganization is intended equally to prevent the payment of benefits to persons not entitled. Concurrently, over the last year, we have been expanding our benefit control staff greatly. It was 147 a year ago. It is now 369 and will be 424 before the end of the year. Our benefit control investigations have resulted in disqualifications, disentitlements, or both, of 200,000 claimants so far this year and the total is expected to reach a quarter of a million by the end of the year. By contrast, the total for all of 1972 was 65,000.

Benefit control investigation, as such, is only one of several programs followed to ensure that benefits are paid only to those entitled to receive them. I am referring to such measures as the active job search, information concerning job refusals, and our post-audits. Through these, and over all, our disentitlements and disqualifications have increased by close to 50 per cent from 1972 to 1973.

To further ensure that the need for strict control is observed as fully as the need for efficient service, we are now taking several additional steps: First, a stepped-up information program to ensure that claimants are fully informed not only of their rights but also of their obligations, including the obligation to carry on an active job search and to be available for work, as an essential condition of entitlement to regular benefits. Second, to assure balance between service and control, additional insurance officers were appointed to interview personally, at the initial stage of a claim, selected categories of claimants. Among the categories to be interviewed are persons who have left their jobs voluntarily, claimants who have transferred from special maternity or sickness benefits to regular benefits, persons who have their unemployment insurance claims transferred from one part of the country to another, and claimants whose occupational skills are in high demand in their locality. These interviews will begin with an initial monthly target of 60,000 people in December, increasing to 95,000 by March.

● (1420)

Thus, as many as 50 or 60 per cent of our claimants will be directly reminded of their obligations, as well as of their rights, through these interviews. This was not done before. Nor was it practical or possible to do so until the reorganization took place this year.

We shall be maintaining close liaison with Canada Manpower Centres to ensure that the unemployed person receives the promptest possible referral to a job opening and that these referrals are followed up until the claimant has the best possible form of income maintenance—a new job and a regular pay cheque.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andras: All these control requirements will be in place before the end of the year. I am confident they will eliminate most of the remaining misuse of any significance. Because of this administrative vigilance and the effective protection it offers against the kind of abuse Bill C-125 was originally intended to correct, I have decided against proceeding further with that particular bill at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andras: The important review of social security in Canada now going on under the leadership of my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, also makes this the wrong time for a legislative change in a social program as significant as the unemployment insurance program. Nevertheless, we are pressing ahead with the analysis of the many briefs and representations we have received in connection with the legislation, all in the light of the much better data now available and the experience of the first full year's operation of the new act. I have said, and I repeat, that the program is good. But as a result of a year's experience and a better information base we shall be in a much better position now to determine and bring forward the kind of legislative changes that may be beneficial.

In the light of our experience this year, I believe the main specific purpose for which Bill C-125 was introduced, namely, to deal with the situation in which persons voluntarily quit their jobs without cause, can be better achieved by vigilant and selective administrative action rather than by rigid and perhaps punitive changes in the law. However, I must warn that the administrative approach will indeed be vigilant. Anyone who thinks the decision with regard to Bill C-125 is any hint of laxity in control on the part of the Unemployment Insurance Commission is in for a rude awakening.

I am determined—and I hope all hon. members will join me in this determination—that the unemployed who are genuinely doing their best to get work will receive their rightful benefits and our fullest assistance in their efforts to find new jobs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andras: But, Mr. Speaker—and I hope all hon. members will join me in this, too—I am equally determined to protect the integrity of this plan and ensure that those who are not entitled to benefits will not receive them. I am confident we now have the administrative system and the competence to make this determination stick.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I see that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wants to get into the act. I want to let him know that the unemployment insurance bill, C-125, that was brought into the House of Commons was one of the greatest fiascoes with which this House has ever had to contend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Before I go further I do want to be fair to the minister in one regard. I want to thank him for making his statement available. I believe it was submitted around 1.15 p.m., which certainly is an all-time record for this government. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says he has known longer times, but I thank the minister for that anyway.

The fact that the minister has now admitted that disentitlements and disqualifications could reach a quarter of a million by the end of the year certainly shows that in the first instance the act should never have been passed without it having been given a dry run and unless we were quite sure of its administrative tidiness. The minister indicates that he preferred to see those who were in need get assistance. But what he forgot to say was that those who were in need never did get it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: It took the prompting of the opposition through questions, speeches and motions to bring the government to its senses and make it attempt to tidy up the legislation. At that time improvements were made. But what shocks me again is that the minister implied that, because the Minister of National Health and Welfare is now considering certain legislation with respect to social welfare, he cannot bring in any amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. I think this is irresponsible. If the minister believes there should be amendments made to the Unemployment Insurance Act, then what the Minister of National Health and Welfare has to say has nothing to do with the minister trying to improve the commission which at this time is in a mess.

One of the most disastrous things we have done in this House was to remove the $800 million statutory ceiling. This means that members of the opposition and the people of Canada can never tell in what state the unemployment insurance fund is at any particular time unless the minister stands up and makes a statement. Thank goodness that he will be bringing in his estimates soon, at which time we will be able to probe quite deeply and raise very important questions.

I am surprised to note that the minister did not take it upon himself to answer in his statement the several very important questions that were raised by the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis), who in a very critical analysis made some points that should have been answered by the minister. I refer to the $1 billion in connection with overpayments and frauds, the increase in staff from 5,200 to 13,000, the failure of the commission to account publicly for $857 million in emergency funds, the attempt by the UIC to disguise overspending by deleting from its monthly reports statistical information that it used to list giving amounts spent in previous months and years.

I do not know why the minister did not have the courage to answer those questions. They are extremely important and he will have to answer them as soon as his estimates go before the committee.

I am also very surprised that the minister did not bear down on a particular sequence of events which are making a number of people in Canada, particularly members of the opposition, very concerned, especially in regard to the minister's estimates. He has indicated that the plan will cost $2,050 million for the year 1973, but at no time did he tell us what the unemployment rate would be in 1973. I fail to understand how he can give us projections without telling us what the unemployment rate is or will be. This is an extremely important point.

We now find that job vacancies are rising. We find we are suffering from higher unemployment. There are higher benefit and administrative costs within the Unemployment Insurance Commission program. The minister has not attempted to correlate these or to advise the House whether a study is being made in order to show what is the relationship between the high job vacancy rate, rising unemployment and UIC costs. This is a question that has been asked by employers across the country who advise that the disincentive aspects of the act in fact are eroding the free enterprise system. I do not make light of that claim. It seems to me that in many instances, notwithstanding what the minister says, because of the inadequacy of this act people are prepared to take advantage of unemployment insurance when in fact they should be working, although sometimes we cannot blame them.

The minister indicated today that the program will cost more than $2 billion, much more than in 1972. What the minister did not say—I am continually reminded of the actuarial soundness of this plan by his predecessor who has pronounced that time and time again—was that the projected figure for administrative costs in 1971 was $71 million while the actual figure turned out to be $119 million. In 1972 these costs jumped to $122 million and in 1973 to $145 million.

● (1430)

I do not have much confidence as the minister has in the economy which to me is certainly being mismanaged. This act can work only if in fact we have a full employment policy, because without it we are approaching unemployment insurance as an ad hoc measure. We can only reduce the cost if the government will take it upon itself to introduce such a policy. We must have a full employment policy in order to decrease the run on the unemployment insurance fund.

I am also very surprised that the minister did not bring to our attention what is wrong with the illusive advisory committee. This committee was set up by the minister in order to probe allegations of harassment and to look into other related matters in respect of the UIC. I think, and I believe most people think, that this is an extremely important committee. I cannot understand why we have not had a report from the advisory committee to assist us. I say to the minister that he must start demanding rather than asking this committee to do its job. We need the information. We need the report.

I am very surprised also that the minister did not make any reference to holiday pay and severance pay. I understood that in conjunction with Bill C-125 he was going to bring in regulations in this regard. Severance pay was not to be included and only the first two weeks of holiday pay would be taken as income. Is that dead too? I wish the minister had answered that.

What we have now is an increase in the premium which is certainly an unwarranted tax. It is up to $1.40 for employees and I believe it was about $1.19 before. This is an unwarranted tax because of government mismanagement What disturbs me is that this plan was supposed to be actuarially sound, meaning that all the contingencies had been looked into and it was possible for the government to bring out projections as to what it would cost and what the premiums would be. In every instance the government has been wrong. That is why I say the bill, which in the first instance some hon. members thought would be a good one, was a fraud of some significant impact upon the House of Commons and the people of Canada.

● (1440)

There are, of course, some matters on which the minister should be congratulated, particularly the stepped-up information program to ensure that claimants are fully informed. This is needed. I hope that with the further employment of benefit control officers these officers will be given instructions to deal with claimants in a humane and compassionate way. It seems to me that in too many instances benefit control officers are only being used to further the government's cause. I say that with some deliberation, and after some thought, Mr. Speaker. I trust the minister will advise these officers that those in need should not be unduly harassed and that they should get humane treatment. There are still too many people writing personally to me and to my office, saying that after working for 35 years and having paid the premiums they now find it extremely difficult to get their unemployment insurance benefits.

The minister's statement also indicates that an additional measure is close liaison with Canada Manpower Centres. This is a policy which should be adopted in full. Canada Manpower and the UIC should be blended into one, as this is the only way in which a claimant can acquire the necessary services and assistance that he needs.

In the long run the only way we can determine what is happening with respect to unemployment insurance is to have the ability to probe for information from the minister. In this regard I hope that the minister in future will give us a greater opportunity, because of the removal of the ceiling, to get involved with the UIC by asking him questions on the state of the fund.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I say that we accept the minister's statement. We are pleased that he was in a position to give us some answers with respect to the several problems that exist. But we cannot have confidence in the minister as to the cost of the plan because he has not advised us what the unemployment rate will be for the balance of the year, not to mention the inflation rate. Further, we are afraid that if a quarter of a million people have to be disqualified or disentitled there must be something wrong with the act. The program should be tightened up in order to make it more acceptable and in order to see to it that the Canadian people are not paying out money needlessly.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to make clear at the outset that my colleagues and I are in favour of a decent unemployment insurance program and are therefore in favour of the general thrust of the unemployment insurance program that we have now.

I listened to the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), Mr. Speaker, and in almost every sentence he went both ways at the same time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: It is all very well to say that the act was a catastrophe, a disaster, when it was passed and that it should never have been passed. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the government which was responsible for the high unemployment that we had in 1971 would have been doubly responsible, not only for mismanagement of the economy but for complete inhumanity, had it not brought that act into existence and implemented it even though the administration had not been entirely cleared up.

I have made clear on many occasions on behalf of our party that we do not condone, indeed we condemn as does every Canadian, any attempt by any person to misuse this program or any program that is on the statute books of this country, whether it is unemployment insurance, old age pensions or welfare. I would also like to point out that we in this party condemn the abuse by corporations of the various tax allowances to which they are entitled—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —about which certain members of this House are always very silent. I do not know of any scheme provided by men, applicable to men and women, that is not abused by some section of the community. We congratulate the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the minister for having taken steps to tighten up the administration. I also congratulate him for not pursuing Bill C-125. I am in entire agreement with the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) who uttered the following words on October 29, addressed to the government House leader, as recorded at page 7304 of Hansard:

> In view of the continuing difficulties being experienced by those, particularly in the Atlantic provinces, who have truly legitimate claims for unemployment insurance benefits in receiving such benefits, would the leader of the House give us his assurance that Bill C-125 will be cremated without ceremony and not brought back before the House?

My colleagues and I fully agree with the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys. He made that statement because of his experience in his area and because of the human approach he has to the problem of unemployment, which some members of this House do not show.

I want to say to the minister, Mr. Speaker, that he is far too complacent about the way in which his benefit control officers are functioning. The suggestion in his statement that on the whole they are treating the legitimate claimants for unemployment insurance well, and that these legitimate claimants have no reason to complain, is far too complacent a statement. While it is true that the number of complaints we have received in our offices has been lower than it was some months ago, it is still a fact that many of the benefit control officers are acting in an insensitive and bureaucratic way, harassing genuine unemployment insurance claimants, and so far as my colleagues and I are concerned we will not be satisfied until that harassment of legitimate unemployment insurance claimants completely disappears from the operations of the UIC.

I am very worried about the numbers that have been disqualified or disentitled this year, with an expectation that a quarter of a million will have been disqualified by the end of the year. To the extent that those people were abusing the program, my colleagues and I are totally in agreement with tightening up the administration. But to the extent that there have been disqualifications and disentitlements because people could not leave their homes in one community when they were told to go 50 or 60 miles away where there was a job available—and that situation has arisen—and to the extent that people left their homes and went to places where they found jobs were not available—to the extent that this quarter of a million involves some thousands of these cases, as I am sure it does, of people who have been unfairly treated, it is shameful for the commission, and indeed for the minister, to boast about it.

An unemployment insurance program is essential in any community for a redistribution of income, to make sure that people get some rights, even when they are unemployed, and to make sure that they have a means of living. My reading of the act tells me that the maximum benefit has been increased to $107 almost, will go up again to about $113, and that that increased benefit has to be paid for.

We agree with the principle that the proportion of the plan up to 4 per cent, which now has to be paid by employer-employee contributions, should be paid by those contributions. I am not convinced that the 40 cents increase is necessary, or that it might not have been 20 cents or 25 cents, but no doubt that is something a parliamentary committee will go into. But the principle that the increased benefit should be paid for, up to the 4 per cent level, is contained in the act and we accept it.

There are two things we regret. We regret that the government rejected our proposal that the cut-off line should be 3 per cent rather than 4 per cent, because 3 per cent is the line at which most economists consider we have more or less full employment. To have tacked on another percentage point, to be paid for by employers and employees, is something that we consider unfair and unnecessary.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I say to the minister and to the government that the only way to avoid the costs of unemployment insurance, to the extent that we now have them, is to have a full employment policy. The real condemnation of the government is that in the month of October we still had 6.2 per cent, seasonally adjusted, unemployed people in the work force of Canada. The only way to improve the situation is to go for a full employment policy, something which the government has not pursued. We reject, as strongly as I can find words to do it, the anti-welfare, the anti-unemployment insurance backlash for which the Tory party in this parliament is responsible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I would have preferred receiving this statement a few minutes earlier as this would have allowed me to make relevant remarks under the circumstances.

The minister says in his statement that he sees a possibility of making up the deficit in 1978, if of course there are no mistakes such as those which occurred a few months after the passing of the legislation—because the mistakes which occurred at that time greatly distorted the estimates. For several days, we discussed the possibility of replenishing the unemployment insurance fund because the law did not make the necessary allowances.

This statement also mentions the adjustment of premiums for employers and employees. There is now much more effort to improve a system which caused so many delays harmful to the unemployed. Since its implementation, its mechanism completely defied common sense in certain instances. There is no need to go very far to find proof of this when hundreds of unemployed have to wait one, two, and even three months before receiving their unemployment insurance cheques. This happened in my constituency of Kamouraska and I believe that it also happened all through Quebec and probably Canada. Thousands of cases were brought to my attention last winter. Faulty administration of the law caused all types of payments to be made: excessive payments, double payments, reduced payments, and no payments. This makes four different types of payments. This is why I say—and I said it some time ago when I spoke in this House about the unemployment issue—that the law should be amended and made more flexible in its application.

In the present Unemployment Insurance Act—I should like to point this out immediately to the minister, because even though I read his statement quickly, I note that there is no such mention. It is provided that if the unemployed must wait too long, he can while waiting apply for assistance to the Quebec Department of Social Affairs. Is it possible to imagine a more stupid legislation! In such circumstances, they cannot even be paid! The legislation describes all kinds of periods: waiting period, supplementary period, extension period and we could even add without fear of being mistaken, a delay period. In his statement, the minister says that the system will be improved adn that steps will be taken to that effect. I do not blame the officials who administer it, because I had the opportunity to meet several in carrying out my work. Generally, the personnel work well, although some are putting off while others are idle. However in my opinion, the legislation is faulty, since it compels officials to adjust themselves and give stupid answers.

If I had had the time to study this statement a little better, I would have brought forward astounding proof that a bad legislation compels civil servants to pick their brains to give insignificant answers. Then, why not amend such a legislation and make it more flexible?

The minister also mentioned that the number of investigators had been increased in order to avoid frauds. But I would advise the minister to keep a sharp eye on the manner in which these investigators are prepared to discharge their duty.

The main purpose is so easily determined. God knows I met many investigators! Their main objective is to protect the fund and not the unemployed. If one of these investigators has other aims but to protect the fund, tell me his name. It is primarily what the investigator does. With an army of investigators acting this way, it will not be possible to give satisfaction to Canadians.

Once the few improvements to the act have become law, I hope that my colleagues and I will be able to see the results. I do not think that we have good reasons to cheer the minister for his statement as some did earlier. Good intentions will do for the moment but let us wait for the results.

* * *

● (1450)

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to advise the House that tomorrow is to be an allotted day.

* * *

INFORMATION CANADA

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT FOR 1972-73

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I should like to table two copies of the annual report of Information Canada for the year 1972-73 in both official languages.

* * *

FISHERIES

BANK INTEREST RATES ON IMPROVEMENT LOANS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I wish to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Information from the Department of Finance and individual fishermen confirms representations I have made in the House, that chartered banks are ignoring government guaranteed loan programs and are actually deluding fishermen by charging rates of interest in excess of those provided under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter):

That the matter of government guaranteed loans be referred to the Standing Committees on Finance, Fisheries and Forestry and Consumer and Corporate Affairs and that an order be issued to call as witnesses the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the presidents of chartered banks to explain their unlawful practices which affect fishermen and consumers who are Canadian citizens.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

* * *

ENERGY

SUGGESTED STUDY OF POSSIBLE INCREASED USE OF COAL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to move a motion on an urgent and pressing matter arising from the extremely serious situation in regard to the supply and the cost of oil for home heating purposes, particularly in eastern Canada. In view of the need to devise means of substitution and conservation related to this state of affairs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, take all necessary steps to study and evaluate the possible increased utilization of coal as a substitute energy source and the capability of coal producing areas in the nation to provide this alternate energy source taking into account as well the necessary capital investment, length of time involved, as well as other factors, and report back within 30 days to this House or to the appropriate standing committee.

Mr. Speaker: This motion also is proposed under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and requires unanimous consent before it can be put. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

* * *

ABORTION

PROPOSED STUDY OF LAW BY COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 and in view of the concern of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) about an effective definition of terms in the Criminal Code provisions regarding abortion I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Danforth):

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be instructed to examine this matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

Order Paper Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

[Text]

NATIONAL DEFENCE—PROCUREMENT EXPENDITURES

Question No. 2,503—Mr. Bawden:

In 1971-72, what was the total amount spent in each province by (a) the Department of National Defence in procurement (b) the Canadian Armed Forces?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): (a)

Province	Suppliers' Accounts and Miscellaneous Expenses for 1971–72*
Newfoundland	$ 763,017
Prince Edward Island	938,914
Nova Scotia	20,075,198
New Brunswick	8,513,271
Quebec	176,072,900
Ontario	195,831,812
Manitoba	21,815,034
Saskatchewan	1,644,486
Alberta	12,958,616
British Columbia	12,506,528
Yukon	4,032
Northwest Territories	186,638
Outside Canada	83,400,283
	$534,710,729

———

*The major part of these amounts represents accounts paid to suppliers for goods and services, including all capital payments. Also included are postage costs, freight and express, telephone and other communication services, advertising and printing, school tuition fees, medical and health care provided in facilities outside National Defence, public utility services, local labour abroad, Corps of Commissionaire services and payments to other governments and agencies for various facilities, and services provided to the Canadian Forces overseas.

The distribution by province of the amounts included for suppliers' accounts is based on a computer analysis and reflects payments to companies on the basis of the location from which their accounts were sent and to which payments were made. Consequently, in those cases where accounts are billed by the head or regional office of a company, the expenditures are shown as having been made in the province where the head or regional office is located, even if a branch office in another province may have been primarily concerned with the transaction involved. The amounts recorded above are therefore not an accurate indication of the location where goods are manufactured or consumed.

(b)

Province	Estimated DND Expenditures for 1971/72*
Newfoundland	$ 12,867,000
Prince Edward Island	16,583,000
Nova Scotia	236,180,000
New Brunswick	82,314,000
Quebec	376,733,000
Ontario	613,702,000
Manitoba	90,588,000
Saskatchewan	27,891,000
Alberta	135,961,000
British Columbia	160,697,000
Yukon	14,000
Northwest Territories	3,785,000
Outside Canada	175,315,000
	$1,932,630,000

*The total amount of money spent in each province by the Canadian Armed Forces is not available separately from the department's expenditure figures by province. In fiscal year 1971-72 the amounts shown are based on a distribution of all DND budgetary expenditures without adjustments for military payroll deductions, government pension contributions and pension payments from non-budgetary accounts. The totals by province include the financial data provided in (a) above for suppliers' accounts and miscellaneous expenditures.

PERMANENT INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF NAVIGATION CONGRESSES

Question No. 2,520—Mr. Godin:

1. During the conference of the Permanent International Association of Navigation Congresses held in Ottawa July 9 to 18, 1973, did the government organize any exhibition and, if so, how many departments, organizations, institutions and companies took part?

2. What was the cost to each participant?

3. How many guides and hostesses did each exhibitor have and what were their names?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. Seven.

2. Average $3,500 per participant.

3. Ten hostesses, part-time (in shifts), average three persons per display, at any one given time. In total, there were 55 people involved in the staffing of all displays, and these people rotated in shifts to cover the hours during which the displays were open. The names are as follows: Charles Raizenne, Nickloas Evanoff, Peter Bailey, Branda Goudie, Sandra Mongeon, Marvell Sarac, Diane Lapensée, Bonny Smyth, Heather Hope, June Russell, Louise Séguin, Barbara Gleason, Gunilla Hinize, Ed Doucet, Tom Muir, Jacques Auger, Lyle Bennett, Don Williams, Howard Bould, Jim Rose, Lorne Stewart, Frank Ling, Ron Shiels, Mike Jeffries, Larry Slaght, Darby Mills, Doug Gray, John Butt, Mike Hubbard, Barry Murphy, John MacCauley, John Ough, Jack Young, Bob Bowbridge, Ralph Pine, Jim Coke, Ed Murray, RCMP-2, Art Mantel, Alec Maton, Al Hewitt, Dave Johns, Ron Miller, Dave Houston, Don Bilodeau, Laurent Fortier, Marcel Fortin, M. Roberts, J. Gaudreau, F. Elmitt, J. Sech, W. Calladine, D. Vonrichthofen.

[Mr. Richardson.]

*POSITION OF GOVERNMENT RELATING TO CANADIAN COMPANIES WITH BRANCH PLANTS IN RHODESIA

Question No. 2,542—Mr. Fairweather:

1. What position does the government take about the Canadian companies, including Falconbridge Nickel Company Limited and Bata Shoes Limited, having branch plants in Rhodesia which export products from Rhodesia despite Canada's adherence to United Nations sanctions?

2. Will the Minister investigate and report upon the relationship between Falconbridge Nickel Company Limited and the Blanket Mine whose operations are described as "a disgusting example of a Canadian company exploiting black workers"?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows: 1. The Canadian government has received no evidence that Canadian incorporated companies have branch plants in Rhodesia. Our position on this is quite clear. Canadian companies are not permitted to invest in Rhodesia, nor are Rhodesian exports allowed entry into Canada.

2. Our records reveal no evidence that there are direct corporate ties between Falconbridge Nickel Co. Ltd. and Blanket Mines.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—CFB SHEARWATER

Question No. 2,623—Mr. Forrestall:

During the next three years, what are the specific roles assigned to CFB Shearwater?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The primary role of CFB Shearwater is to contribute to Maritime Command's surveillance and control responsibilities by operating helicopters and fixed-wing aircraft from the base and by providing helicopter detachments for helicopter-destroyers. In support of this primary role, CFB Shearwater conducts air and ground training and provides technical and administrative support. Additionally it provides airfield and ship berthing facilities for authorized military and civil aircraft and ships.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—CL-41 TUTOR TRAINERS

Question No. 2,646—Mr. McKinnon:

1. How many CL-41 (Tutor) jet trainers were purchased for use by the Department of National Defence and what was the total cost?

2. Of the total purchased, how many were never in use for either operations or training?

3. How many Tutors are now in use and how many are in storage?

4. How many Tutors have been sold and, if any, to whom?

5. What are the plans for those at present in storage?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. In 1961 a contract was placed for 190 Tutor aircraft. These were purchased by DND at a total cost of $92,010,658. This figure includes cost for engines, spares, ground support equipment, engineering orders and one aircraft systems trainer.

2. None.

3. There are 73 Tutor aircraft in use and 84 in storage.

4. No Tutor aircraft have been sold.

5. It is currently planned to take 25 Tutor aircraft out of storage in the next few months. These will be used in the Forces' pilot training program. The remaining 59 aircraft will be kept in reserve to meet attrition from accidents and to enable rapid expansion of pilot training in the event that the international situation warrants such expansion.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT AND CANADAIR

Question No. 2,695—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

What is the amount in dollars of grants and subsidies made by the government (a) to de Havilland Aircraft of Toronto (b) to Canadair of Montreal during the ten-year period ending either on December 31, 1972 or on March 31, 1973?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned:

	(a) de Havilland	(b) Canadair
Grants	Nil	Nil
Subsidies	Nil	Nil
Contributions	$28,480,535	$58,086,898
Less Repayments (Royalties)	1,264,260	—
Net Contributions	$27,216,275	$58,086,898

In so far as the Department of Manpower and Immigration is concerned: This information is not available for the period prior to April 1, 1967. (a) nil from April 1, 1967 to March 31, 1973; (b) $101,543 paid from April 1, 1967 to March 31, 1973. Under the Canada Manpower Training in Industry Program. In so far as the National Research Council of Canada is concerned: (a) $82,239.35; (b) Nil.

NEGOTIATIONS RELATING TO CANADA-MIDDLE EAST AIR SERVICES

Question No. 2,712—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Have proposals been received from, or on behalf of, Iraqui Airlines for the establishment of direct, regularly scheduled air service between Iraq and Canada and, if so (a) on what dates (b) what was the response to such suggestions?

2. Is it the view of the government that improved commercial air contacts with the Middle East, notably the ore-producing areas thereof, are desirable?

3. From what other airlines based in the Middle East have overtures been received?

4. What has been the response thereto?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission and the Ministry of Transport (for question 2 only) advise as follows: 1. Yes; (a) May 29, 1973; (b) After interdepartmental consultation, a Canadian reply was made on July 16, 1973 advising the Iraqui Embassy that due to a current review of Canadian air policy and requests already received from other countries, a period of time would elapse before Canada would be in a position to negotiate. At the appropriate time we would get in touch with the Iraqui authorities.

2. It is the position of the government that there should be expanded commercial air contacts with various parts of the world, including the Middle East, where traffic warrants regular services by a Canadian airline and such services can be operated on an economic basis, and when satisfactory agreements can be negotiated. At the present time services are operated to Israel, and a first round of negotiations has been held with Lebanon.

3 and 4. Although airlines from time to time make approaches concerning scheduled services, only those requests received from governments are considered official. Taking this into consideration the following Middle East countries have requested negotiations: Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan: a note dated September 5, 1971 was received from the Jordanian Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Canadian Embassy requesting negotiations. The Embassy reply of December 10, 1971 indicated that it appeared that traffic did not warrant a scheduled service but that Canada would continue to review the situation. United Arab Republic: The Minister of the Embassy of the United Arab Republic was informed by External Affairs on August 14, 1970 that Canada would be prepared to enter into negotiations if it were the wish of his government. To date there has been no official response. Lebanon: Following a meeting on August 13, 1970, as with the UAR, the Lebanese Ambassador requested negotiations. The first round of discussions took place on August 19 and 20, 1971 in Ottawa. The CTC is awaiting a mutually acceptable date for resumption of talks. Turkey: A bilateral air agreement with Turkey was signed May 21, 1960 and to date service has not been commenced by either country. Israel: A bilateral air agreement with Israel was signed February 10, 1971 with CP Air and El Al Israel Airlines operating comparable services since March 1971.

PUBLIC WORKS—FINE ARTS PROGRAM

Question No. 2,749—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Does the Department of Public Works have a fine arts purchasing program for its public buildings and, if so (a) on what date was this policy introduced (b) what is its purpose?

2. (a) How many works of art have been purchased since the program was initiated (b) what has been the total cost of these art works?

3. Are contracts for works of art awarded by tender and, if not, how are they commissioned?

4. Are invitations to bid on works of art under the program restricted to Canadian artists?

5. Have Indian and Eskimo artists been requested to submit works of art for approval by the Department of Public Works and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes; (a) January 4, 1965; (b) to provide works of art of the highest quality for government of Canada buildings and to give Canadians a sense of quality in their environment.

2. (a) 133 to date; (b) $2,167,997.

3. No. The department's consulting architects recommend the artform, its location and the artist. The Advisory Committee on Art advises the department on the suitability of the recommendation. Once an artform and artist have been approved, a contract is awarded to the artist, by the department.

4. The Fine Art Program is restricted to artists resident in Canada.

5. Yes.

CBC—DIRECTOR FOR PROVINCE OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 2,843—Mr. Marshall:

1. Is it the intention of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to eliminate the position of Director for the Province of Newfoundland in its Divisional structure and, if not, is the intention of CBC to make a new appointment to replace A. K. Morrow as Director for the Province of Newfoundland?

2. What are the responsibilities of CBC in the Province of Newfoundland insofar as the stations' responsibilities for programming are concerned?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. There is no intention to eliminate the position of CBC Director for the Province of Newfoundland. Mr. A. K. Morrow became Director for the Maritime provinces effective September 1, 1973 and continues as acting director for Newfoundland only until a new director for this region is appointed.

2. The Corporation's programming responsibilities in Newfoundland, as in other regions of Canada, are as outlined in the Broadcasting Act, Part I, Section 2(g) of which includes the statement that the national broadcasting service should serve the special needs of geographic regions and actively contribute to the flow and exchange of cultural and regional information and entertainment.

* * *

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CANADA COUNCIL GRANTS

Question No. 2,220—Mr. Alexander:

In the past five years, how much money has been expended by grants through Canada Council (a) in total (b) by province (c) by categories in provinces (d) in Hamilton and district (Ontario) and in what categories?

Return tabled.

INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Question No. 2,974—Mr. Broadbent:

What were the names of the corporations which received cash grants under the Industrial Research Assistance Program (IRAP) in each of the fiscal years 1972-73 (January 1, 1973 to end) and 1973-74 to date and, in each case, what were the amounts of money committed and paid?

Return tabled.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On July 19, I put on the order paper a number of questions, namely Nos. 2529 to 2538 inclusive, asking for statistical information. These questions are easy to answer. In some cases they could be answered within two or three days and certainly within a week. There is nothing complicated about them and there is really no excuse for not answering them. The fact that they have not been answered means, of course, either that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is indescribably incompetent or that the government by its delay is trying to hide something.

[Mr. Dubé.]

● (1500)

Mr. Bell: Both.

Mr. Hellyer: In either case, Mr. Speaker, we can have no confidence in the accuracy or extent of the internal report in the hands of the minister, especially when he is so reluctant to table it. In the circumstances I feel the House is entitled to have the answers to these questions forthwith. Further, the report in the hands of the minister should be made public so that parliament and the press can decide if a public inquiry is warranted.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, on June 1 I placed on the order paper question No. 2177. That question was rather important to a constituent of mine, one Michael J. Houlton who was a candidate for the Liberal leadership in Ontario. It appears that the government refuses to answer this question because it is embarrassing. In view of the stated political faith of the person involved, possibly the government might now consider answering that question.

Mr. Atkey: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) indicated that the internal departmental inquiry into student co-operative housing and the financing thereof produced an internal report which would not be made public. On July 23 the minister's parliamentary secretary indicated to the House that the findings of the inquiry which had been started in February would be made available to members when they were complete. I feel that I and other members of the House have been misled by the minister, through his parliamentary secretary, and that he should not be allowed to cover up that which has been promised and that which is in the public interest. If he continues his present stand I suggest that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) should immediately take over the matter and launch the public inquiry which was promised on July 12.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, with reference to the points of order raised by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) and the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey), yesterday I raised the question of the report which both those hon. members have been discussing. When I suggested that there was an undertaking that the report would be tabled or given to the House, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) said that I was incorrect.

I wish to put on record the statement made by the parliamentary secretary, as recorded at page 5872 of Hansard for July 23, in which he undertook to make the report public and lay it before the House. On being asked whether this report would be made public, the parliamentary secretary replied:

MR. IAN WATSON (PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO MINISTER OF STATE FOR URBAN AFFAIRS): Mr. Speaker, I understand from remarks by the minister in the House that an inquiry into this matter began toward the end of February. When that inquiry is complete, I presume the minister will make it available to members of the House.

I did not have that answer before me yesterday when I raised this matter. It was uncovered by research. However, the minister said I was incorrect. Possibly the minister had not examined the record to see what the parliamentary secretary had said, but in fact he did, maybe unintentionally, mislead the House. I now ask the minister to table the report, according to the undertaking given by his parliamentary secretary, instead of covering up this matter. There are questions here that should be investigated by a judicial inquiry which should make a report as to what are the crimes involved, what are the charges and who were the people involved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, because of the remarks of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) I think I should make my position very clear. It was stated on July 13. I said that I had asked since February for a report on these matters, and that the report would be referred to the appropriate authorities. The hon. member for Calgary North has referred to remarks made by my parliamentary secretary on July 23. I must inform you, Mr. Speaker, that when my parliamentary secretary said, "I presume the minister will make it available", he at that time was not aware of the nature of the report.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, if I may deal with unanswered written questions, I direct the attention of the House to some questions I placed on the order paper on April 18 dealing with the payment to certain solicitors of certain sums by CMHC. Those questions have not been answered. I feel this is a very serious matter and request that these questions be answered forthwith, in addition to the data processing question which was also placed on the order paper on April 18.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I will see what I can do to provide the answers to the hon. gentleman and to provide a response to the other requests.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I speak to the same point of order which has already been raised by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) and the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). It was I who asked questions on this subject on July 23. I made it perfectly clear in my first question exactly what inquiry was meant. I phrased my question in such a way that there could be no mistake. After the first answer of the parliamentary secretary I repeated the question. I said, as recorded at page 5872 of Hansard:

> In view of the fact five months have elapsed since this mythical inquiry was instituted, will the minister or the government now indicate if they are satisfied that no meaningful inquiry is being made and refer this matter to the Auditor General for a thorough and complete study under sections 62 and 63 of the Financial Administration Act?

The parliamentary secretary replied:

> To repeat my earlier answer, Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that an inquiry was started in February—

The parliamentary secretary knew to which report I was referring.

> —and when the finding is complete, it will be made available to members.

That was a clear and categorical undertaking. We are entitled to ask questions under the pertinent Standing Order. If the government chooses to have a parliamentary secretary reply, that is its privilege, but we are entitled to rely upon an answer given by either a minister or a parliamentary secretary. Otherwise there will be no confidence in this House.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for production of papers No. 228 is agreeable to the government subject to the usual restrictions concerning confidential documents.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that notice of motion No. 228 be deemed to have been agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COPY OF CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO LOCATION OF CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION IN VANCOUVER

Motion No. 228—Mr. Reynolds:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of correspondence to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of Finance regarding the Canada Development Corporation and the proposed location of its headquarters in the City of Vancouver.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions Nos. 252, 256, and 257?

I ask that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

COPY OF MATERIAL RESULTING FROM FIRST MEETING OF VLA SENIOR MANAGEMENT TEAM

Motion No. 252—Mr. Marshall:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all material resulting from the first meeting of the VLA Senior Management team convened by the Director General of the Veterans Land Administration in Ottawa from March 26 to 29 as follows (a) operational plans in the periods before and after the March 31, 1974 deadline for new loan applications (b) further implementation of MBO as the VLA style of management.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the materials requested are internal, departmental documents of a confidential nature and cannot be produced. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, the information contained in the material should be made available to 125,000 war veterans. I would ask that the motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Motions for Papers

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND THE U.S.S.R. RESPECTING WHEAT SALE

Motion No. 256—Mr. Stackhouse:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence between the government and the U.S.S.R. with respect to the wheat sale between the two countries.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, correspondence and other exchanges between the government of Canada and the government of the U.S.S.R. and between the Canadian Wheat Board and Exportkhleb with respect to the sale of wheat are confidential. It would be prejudicial to the interest of Canadian grain producers to make the information in such exchanges public. Therefore I would hope that the hon. member might withdraw his motion.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I think this material is of relevance and value to the people of Canada and I would ask that the motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA RESPECTING WHEAT SALE

Motion No. 257—Mr. Stackhouse:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence between the government and the People's Republic of China with respect to the wheat sale between the two countries.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, correspondence and other exchanges between the government of the People's Republic of China and between the Canadian Wheat Board and the China National Cereals, Oils and Foodstuffs Import and Export Corporation with respect to the sale of wheat are confidential. It would be prejudicial to the interest of Canadian grain producers to make the information in such exchanges public. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Stackhouse: I would ask that the motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

● (1510)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I rose on this question a few days ago. It has to do with two motions, Nos. 241 and 242, calling for a copy of the guest list on August 7 for the reception at the National Arts Centre, and the list of invitees to the dinner given in Calgary by the Prime Minister on July 5. Failure of the government to answer is a contempt of this institution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister smiles and smirks. It is a deliberate contempt of this House. The government has the lists. Two months have gone by and there has been no answer. I know the government will be ashamed when they are produced because the lists indicate the greatest patronage, the greatest accumulation and conglomeration of Grits that this country has ever known.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I may owe the House an explanation on this, particularly the right hon. gentleman. It was brought to my attention a couple of weeks ago that material was being gathered to reply to the motions. I indicated to those who were doing the research that the House, and certainly the right hon. member, would want to have those replies and probably also replies concerning the other receptions and social functions which were hosted for the Queen while she was in Canada twice this year at the invitation of my government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: That is the cause of the delay. I do apologize to the right hon. member. I hope he will be patient. He will be grateful that it took a bit more time because it will permit the people of Canada to see the variety of functions that were held for the Queen. He will realize that only two of those were held at the invitation of the government of Canada. The others were by provincial governments, municipalities, the RCMP and other organizations. I think the right hon. member's curiosity would be satisfied if he could see the total picture. Knowing his interest in the monarchy—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not want to interrupt the right hon. Prime Minister. I am not sure whether he has completed his reply, but if there is an indication that the motions will be accepted I hope we will not have a debate now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to finish, I just want to assure the right hon. member that, being a Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada, which incidentally he is not, I will do my best to get the answers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister says he only found out two weeks ago about these two motions which deal with his own department and himself. They have been on the order paper since September 12. That answer is in keeping with the last observation he made, as I have been an honorary member of the Royal Society of Canada for several years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I ask for the co-operation of both the right hon. Prime Minister and right hon. member for Prince Albert in order that we may go on to the next item of business, oral questions. Perhaps the question of who is and who is not a member of the Royal Society of Canada might be decided on the "late show" either tonight or Friday night.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

USE OF CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION TO PURCHASE OIL—NOTIFICATION TO AND REACTION OF VENEZUELA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might return to more day to day events by directing a question to the Minister of Supply and Services. Is the government now using the Canadian Commercial Corporation as a government agency for purchasing petroleum for the purpose of establishing reserves to reduce the possibility of a shortage this winter?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is possible.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: How much petroleum is the corporation prepared to buy, how much has it bought or has it been instructed to buy, and does this relate to distillates such as home heating oil? How much has the corporation been instructed to acquire?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, this is a subject which is being discussed between the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and my department, and the discussions have not yet reached a stage where it is possible to say how much oil can thus be stored in Canada or to reveal the costs involved or the marketing and delivery conditions.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: I hope somebody will instruct the Minister of Supply and Services as to what he should be doing. I wish to direct a supplementary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who has told us the government has a mission in Venezuela. Has that mission in Venezuela informed the government of Venezuela that the Canadian Commercial Corporation is empowered to act as a Canadian government oil purchasing agency and, if so, has the government of Venezuela indicated that it is prepared to sell crude, if it has any, to this agency?

● (1520)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Canadian diplomatic mission in Venezuela has indeed been in touch with the government of Venezuela in this regard. I mentioned to the House the possibility that Venezuela might take its 16-2/3 per cent royalty in kind. I gather this is something which is in prospect only at the moment. But the interest of the government of Canada in securing additional supplies through government to government arrangements has been made known to the Venezuelan government.

OIL—STOCKPILING OF SUPPLIES—DISTRIBUTION OF PROFITS FROM SALES—NATURE OF POSSIBLE NATIONAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): On the same subject, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether the government has made a decision on the quantity of oil to try to buy and stockpile, at what price, where any surplus or profits would go and how they would distribute it? If this question requires too lengthy a reply, would the minister be prepared to make a statement on this subject since it seems to me an important one?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The authorization is to buy whatever "opportunity oil" may be offered around the world, particularly in the refined products area. A number of contacts are being pursued through the combined efforts of my own department, the National Energy Board and the Canadian Commercial Corporation. I cannot say what the prices will be, except that prices for spot sales are considerably above normal current prices, in the Ontario market in particular. The intention would be to acquire these supplies on government of Canada account, and naturally every effort would be made to recover the government in them.

Mr. Lewis: On several occasions we have asked the minister, and on one or two occasions the Prime Minister, questions with reference to the establishment of a national petroleum corporation. Can the minister inform the House whether he is considering a corporation which would be merely a purchasing or marketing agency or whether he is considering setting up a corporation, such as is needed in our view, which would become involved in the entire field of the oil business, including exploration and production as well as distribution, in order to protect Canadians against the multinational corporations?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I have indicated to the hon. gentleman that this is a matter that is before the government and until a decision has been taken I feel I cannot say anything further to the House.

PROPOSED OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—POSSIBILITY OF PUBLIC OWNERSHIP

Mr. David Lewis (York South): The other day when questions were asked about extending the pipeline from Sarnia eastward at least to Montreal the minister indicated there were some difficulties about financing. I should like to know whether the government has given consideration, as should have been done many years ago in my view, to building this portion of the pipeline under public ownership through a public corporation so that we would not be dependent on the result of negotiations with Interprovincial or any other such outlet?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I believe I said in answer to the Leader of the Opposition yesterday that one of the questions which arises in relation to the pipeline is whether excess capacity should be built in, whether the cost of that capacity should be borne by the general taxpayers and, if so, whether the interests of the general taxpayers should be incorporated in a special corporation for the purpose. This matter has not been finalized. I would make the comment that on the whole, if public funds are to be used in this area, it seems to me they would be more wisely expended as in Panarctic where a substantial capital gain is possible rather than in a purely service industry.

* * *

[Translation]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MINISTER'S POSITION RESPECTING SUPPORT FOR LOCAL INITIATIVES AND OTHER PROJECTS ON RESERVES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

In view of the increasing importance of the Local Initiatives Program, can the minister say if Indian reserves can count on the Department of Indian Affairs instead of taking up part of the funds allocated to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Indians, like all other Canadian citizens, have a right to take advantage of all of this government's good programs.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I do not ask the minister to speak of projects value, but simply whether his department can process important projects submitted for his approval by Indian reserves.

Mr. Chrétien: A number of these projects can be dealt with by my department, but there will always be some that cannot be financed by my department, and I am not against some support from other departments.

* * *

[English]

TRANSPORT

MEASURES TO KEEP RAILWAYS, AIRLINES AND TRUCKS OPERATING THIS WINTER

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Can the minister reveal the government's contingency plans to keep the railroads, airlines and truck transports moving this winter?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I think they are moving and I have not heard they are likely to stop.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: I have a further question to the Minister of Transport, the Père Noël of Quebec. Is it true as outlined in Walter Stewart's book that he has directed $270 million in DREE grants—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—EFFECT OF OIL EXPORT TAX

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. It has been the minister's contention in the past that the greatest part of domestic inflation is international in origin. A corollary to that might have been the minister's statement as to the need for international co-operation in the fight against inflation. Does the minister believe that the $1.90 export tax on crude oil is a positive contribution to the fight against inflation?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has serious doubts as to the form of the hon. member's question. Perhaps the minister might reply, in fairness to him, but it seems to me the question is more in the nature of an argument than an inquiry.

The hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo.

Mr. Beatty: I had merely stood up for a moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I thought the hon. member would recall the undertaking I gave the other day that he would be given a chance. The hon. member for Calgary North.

* * *

HOUSING

STUDENT CO-OPERATIVE PROJECTS—REQUEST THAT INQUIRY REPORT BE TABLED

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. It is related to the undertaking given by his parliamentary secretary as recorded in Hansard at page 5872, part of which I read and part of which the hon. member for Peace River read. Is the minister now prepared to table the report of the inquiry into certain co-operative colleges and the scandal involving the developer, the contractor and the architect?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): The report is a report to me on the granting of those five loans. It has, in accordance with my undertaking of July 13, been referred to the proper authorities which include the Association of Architects of Ontario and, of course, those responsible for law enforcement. If I might say so, Mr. Speaker, it would be grossly unfair to publish a report which is not based on evidence or the cross-examination of witnesses. It would be grossly unfair to the people involved.

Mr. Woolliams: Maybe I can assist the minister. Bearing in mind that the minister has now gone back on his word, would he be prepared to hold a judicial inquiry so that the witnesses in question could be examined and cross-examined in accordance with his wishes and the public could be made aware of the scandal that went on involving not only the colleges but the Trefann Court project in the city of Toronto?

Mr. Basford: Without accepting any of the premises in the question, I repeat that the report has been referred, in accordance with my undertaking, to the proper authorities for whatever action may be deemed appropriate by them.

APPROVAL OF LOAN FOR TREFANN COURT PROJECT, TORONTO

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Since the report is now in the minister's hands, would he answer this question? Has CMHC approved a $412,350 loan to Trefann Court Homes Corporation for the construction of 17 houses in the first phase of a five block urban renewal project in the city of Toronto?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Yes, it has, Mr. Speaker. A loan of $412,000, which is a 100 per cent loan plus a 10 per cent grant, was made so that this phase of the very important Toronto urban renewal scheme the hon. member has mentioned can be carried on. I am pleased that the corporation has made this loan. It is subject to the city of Toronto approving a contingency grant to cover any increase in costs so that if there are any cost increases they will not be passed on to the residents in these houses. Through this method we can provide low-income housing in the centre of Toronto. I think this is a meaningful, worth-while project—

● (1530)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that with the co-operation of all hon. members the Chair be given a chance to recognize some hon. members who have been trying to be recognized for a while. It was brought to the attention of hon. members and the Chair yesterday that when I called orders of the day there were a large number of members who had been trying for a few days to ask questions. I hope hon. members will take that into account, for the moment in any event. Perhaps I should recognize the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

* * *

ENERGY

OIL AND GAS—REDUCTION OF EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES IN EVENT OF SHORTAGE IN CANADA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I do not often do this, but I want to commend the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for the manner in which he has answered questions during the last several days.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is worthy of the best traditions of parliament. Because of that I ask him this question, which arises out of answers that he gave yesterday in respect of the export of oil or gas. Did he intend yesterday to have the House and the country believe that, in the event there was a shortage of oil or gas within Canada that would be serious for consumers, to the extent necessary exports from Canada to the United States would be reduced?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, basically the position that has been taken by the government during the year through the various export control mechanisms we have put in place is that first priority should be given to meeting the requirements of the Canadian market. I might say that while we will make every effort, of course, to meet the requirements of the Canadian market, we do recognize that we have had longstanding commercial relationships with the United States and we will do our best to try to minimize any effect that such redirection might have on the American market.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the right hon. member for a supplementary, then the hon. member for Brant, and I will return eventually to the hon. member for Trinity.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I take it therefore, that, as far as Canadians are concerned, to the limit this government can go it will go, while preserving our trade relationships with the United States, so as to prevent Canadians facing a cold, difficult and dark winter ahead?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The limitation is one of physical facilities rather than the decision as to where the product will be directed.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DESTRUCTION BY FIRE OF FORMPAC CANADA LIMITED—REQUEST THAT WAITING PERIOD FOR BENEFITS BE WAIVED

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that Formpac Canada Limited in Brantford, Ontario, was completely destroyed in a $5 million fire yesterday, throwing out of work approximately 220 workers and office personnel, will the minister waive the two-week waiting period so that employees can receive UIC benefits as quickly as possible?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much whether it is within my authority to do so, as sympathetic as I would be to the conditions caused by this disaster. But I will certainly do everything else in my power to alleviate the situation, including having Manpower and Unemployment Insurance Commission people talk to these workers on an emergency basis.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

AGENDA FOR MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL MINISTERS—COMPOSITION OF GROUP—GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. Has the minister defined the agenda for the important meeting of ministers of communication set for November 26, and what the agenda might be? Has the composition of the group been decided; is it strictly to be government to government, or will there be any parliamentary observers or other observers, such as from the CRTC? Also, has the federal government any specific proposals to present to the meeting, other than the generalities contained in the green paper published last February?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I admit that the number and speed of questions are beyond me and I make my apologies to the hon. member if I do not remember them all.

The meeting will be held on the 29th and 30th of this month. The provinces gave us an agenda in very indefinite terms but I could nevertheless describe it to the hon. member. Each province will state its position once they have outlined the common matters on which they already agreed at their own meetings, then there will be an exchange of views. Provinces prefer not to specify further the agenda although we have pressed for more details.

As for the last question of the hon. member, I sent a letter this morning asking the provincial ministers to explain their views in more detail. The provincial ministers have passed behind closed doors a resolution asking that the federal-provincial meeting be entirely held in public. We are prepared to comply with that but as the secretary of the council of communications ministers committee told me he would admit only the media, I asked him if this included also some observers which we would like ...

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister and I remind the ministers and hon. members who are asking questions that the question period will soon be over.

* * *

[English]

FISHERIES

SPORTS FISHING IN WATERS OFF VANCOUVER ISLAND—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries. This has been a disastrous year for sports fishing in the waters off Vancouver Island, the commercial netting of fish in the Strait of Juan de Fuca being the main reason. Does the minister plan to do anything to help restore sports fishing in that area?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, it has been a very good year for the commercial fisherman. Unfortunately, the runs of species that sports fishermen rely on, namely the cohoe, are down. We have, as the hon. member knows, been building hatcheries and we hope to improve cohoe runs in that way.

Mr. McKinnon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister intend to do anything to curtail the netting of fish before they get to sports fishing grounds?

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Davis: Discussions along those lines are proceeding, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

OIL SPILL ON B.C. COAST—GOVERNMENT INVESTIGATION—CONTINGENCY PLANS TO PROTECT COASTS

Mr. Harry Olaussen (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, my question also is for the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries. In view of increasing oil spills along the British Columbia coast, and in view of the recent one near Powell River in British Columbia two weeks ago which has yet to be investigated by Environment Canada, can the minister advise the House when his department intends to investigate this spill?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, Environment Canada is on the job within minutes after each spill is reported.

Mr. Olaussen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. After the Arrow spill Dr. McTaggart-Cowan recommended that clean-up task forces be located on both coasts. When can British Columbia expect the minister to do something about staffing, facilities and equipment, and to reveal his contingency plans to protect the shorelines and beaches from oil despoliation?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we already have staff on the west coast which is being expanded, but our basic approach is that the polluter or polluting agency bears the cost and provides the men and equipment to contain oil spills and to clean up any oil that gets away.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin on a further supplementary, and immediately after will recognize the hon. member for Charlevoix, the hon. member for Provencher and the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe.

Mr. Olaussen: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister how large is the staff on the west coast that has to deal with these particular oil spills?

* * *

● (1540)

[Translation]

SPORTS

MONTREAL OLYMPIC GAMES, 1976—SALE OF COINS—MEASURES TO AVOID A DEFICIT

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General.

Last night on the CBC there was a report on the Munich Olympic Games one year after that event. Could I ask the Postmaster General, in order to avoid in Montreal deficits such as those incurred in Munich, by what date he intends to bring out the Olympic coins?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the first coins should be on sale in the first week of December.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, may I add that a very charming and attractive Canadian athlete from Saskatoon, Miss Diane Jones, who is helping us with the Olympic coins program, is with us today in the gallery.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PROGRAM FOR 1974—ACTION BY DEPARTMENT TO CO-ORDINATE JOB OPENINGS WITH UNEMPLOYED PERSONS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the minister's statement today regarding the 1974 program for the unemployment insurance fund, would he indicate what steps have been taken and what instructions have been given to officials of his department in order that there be closer co-ordination between job openings and those seeking employment who are now unemployed.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I indicated previously in my statement that this closer co-operation is the objective and that it was being met. I think it would take considerably longer than the question period to elaborate. But I would be glad at the first opportunity to do so and can say now that our best efforts are being committed to that end.

Mr. Epp: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister indicate whether a specific instruction has been issued by him to the officials of his department to give specific job opportunities to those presently receiving UIC benefits?

Mr. Andras: Not in those precise terms, Mr. Speaker. The co-operation and the measures by which co-operation can be effected are constantly being examined and improved. However, the Manpower Department has an over-all obligation to assist all people whether they come off unemployment insurance rolls or from other sources for counselling and job placement, and we must consider that too.

* * *

[Translation]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

QUEBEC—EFFECT OF MEASURES ANNOUNCED BY ENERGY MINISTER ON WORKING PAPER AND NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCE

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

In view of the fact that the departmental working paper published last April suggested among other things that the petrochemical sector in Quebec seemed to offer great economic development potential and the desirability of developing that potential can the minister say whether the recent steps announced by his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, represent a change in the policy contained in the DREE working paper as it affects the province of Quebec in particular, or even affect the negotiations between Quebec and the federal government with respect to the signature of an agreement in respect of the new economic expansion program for the province of Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes, Mr. Speaker. There has in fact been considerable discussion with the government of the province of Quebec and also, of course, interdepartmentally between the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. I think the expressions by all three are consistent, and I see nothing in any of the comments from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources that would in any way detract from the observations in the working paper on DREE.

[Translation]

Mr. Wagner: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell us when the terms of the agreement on the new regional economic expansion program will be disclosed?

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say that the timetable is quite a bit more firm than when the hon. member asked the question before. I would anticipate that the federal draft will be completed by November 25 or 26. If that timetable is achieved, then I will be inviting the province of Quebec to sign early in the month of December or by the middle of the month.

* * *

LABOUR RELATIONS

HALIFAX, N.S.—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT MEDIATE IN DOCK LABOUR DISPUTE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour arising out of events this morning on the Halifax waterfront involving a disagreement between the Maritime Employers Association and the International Longshoremen's Union about the appropriateness of discussing five points in connection with the agreement. I would ask the minister whether he would use his good offices to provide mediation or some other appropriate service leading to an agreement in a port that has never yet had a longshoremen's strike.

● (1550)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the long record of lack of any work stoppage at the port of Halifax. We want to keep that record intact so the answer to the question is yes, we will provide all services necessary.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN POSITION RESPECTING INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON CONSERVATION OF POLAR BEARS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment. It refers to the International Conference on the Conservation of Polar Bears being held in Oslo, Norway, from November 13 to November 15 and the agreement to be signed by the five countries involved, of which Canada is one. Could the minister tell the House if the Canadian position takes into consideration the recommendations and the proposals made to him by the Inuit people of Canada, the people most directly affected by this agreement? Also, will the minister indicate whether Canada will press for a postponement of the signing of the agreement until such time as the representations made by the Inuit people about the sports hunting of polar bears have been agreed to by all signatories?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): The answer to both those questions, Mr. Speaker, is yes.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

CROP LOSSES IN ALBERTA—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT COMPENSATION TO FARMERS AFFECTED

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Have the minister or his officials yet had an opportunity to assess the magnitude and effect of the crop losses caused by adverse weather which has curtailed harvesting operations and resulted in some 5 million acres of grain crops being snowed under in Alberta? Also, can he advise us whether the federal government is considering any form of assistance program such as a cash payment similar to that announced last year under similar circumstances?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the government is having a survey made of the damaged crops. It is working very closely with the Alberta officials. I spoke to the Alberta Minister of Agriculture last Friday and discussed the problems these people were facing. As soon as all the information is compiled and we receive an official request in writing from the province of Alberta, we will consider it.

Mr. Mazankowski: As a supplementary question I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether it is the intention of the government to amend the regulations under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act in order that advance payments may be applied for in respect of a crop that is unharvested.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of the act now, it allows the minister to make advance payments for grain that is unharvested, covered by snow. We did that last year. Of course, we all realize that the whole act is going to be amended. Whether the farmers in this situation can wait that long, because of the higher costs involved and the need for more money this year, remains to be seen.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

RECOMMENDED SALARY INCREASE FOR DEPUTY MINISTERS—REASONS THEREFOR

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. Have the recommendations of the advisory committee which studied the salaries of senior civil servants and recommended a top salary of $60,000 a year for senior deputy ministers been implemented and, if so, what were the reasons for this decision?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think that some time ago an announcement was made relating to the implementation of that report and the adoption of the ranges recommended by the advisory committee for implementation not in a one-year but in a two-year sequence.

* * *

[Translation]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PROPOSED OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—POSSIBLE CONSTRUCTION OF ADDITIONAL REFINERIES

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question to the one asked to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Could the minister tell us whether the pipeline extension to Montreal could result in the establishment of additional refineries in Montreal?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot answer that question in specific terms. However, I think it is fair to say that the provision of a pipeline from Toronto to Montreal would probably considerably enhance the petrochemical projects to which I referred earlier.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS GRANTED TO APPLICANTS BEFORE RCMP CLEARANCE RECEIVED

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It centres around stage B of the recent 60-day amnesty period wherein the RCMP do a security check on the criminal activities of immigrants to this country in their country of origin. Is the minister aware of a confidential directive sent by the department on September 17, or thereabouts, instructing immigration officers to grant landed immigrant status to certain applicants before clearance was received from the RCMP?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there are circumstances in which the stage B performance to which the hon. member referred is not absolutely necessary, and judgment is made in those cases. I do not think the incidence of error is significant. If the hon. member has any specific problems, or names, places or facts to put forward, I would be delighted to investigate them.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, there are many instances of illegal immigrants being granted landed immigrant status and this is in direct contradiction of the statement made by the minister when he announced the 60-day amnesty period. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I would like the minister to clarify his earlier statement, that before they were given landed immigrant status there would be a security check and the results—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): —from the RCMP—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister might be allowed to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Andras: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would be very grateful to the hon. member if he would identify precisely where there was a commitment to do a security check of everybody, and precisely the particular cases that seem to be bothering him, rather than making these general allegations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member might like to ask a further question and the minister will be allowed to reply briefly.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I put this question to the minister. Is he suggesting now that landed immigrant status would be granted to illegal immigrants without an RCMP check?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is not a point of order. I believe the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has a supplementary, following which I will recognize the hon. member for Bruce.

ASIANS REFUSED IMMIGRATION TO CANADA

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I address a brief supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Does he have anything further to report on the Asians who were apprehended at Gander over the weekend and apparently were refused admission as legitimate immigrants to Canada?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to add to the answer I gave the hon. member the other day, although as a result of an indication he gave in his question that there might be some other problems inherent in that decision I have written to him, and I repeat here, that I would be very grateful for any evidence he has. In the meantime I am asking my department to check further. At the moment the indications are that they were not granted entry to Canada on the simple basis that the evidence showed they were not genuine non-immigrant visitors to Canada but rather intended to stay.

* * *

FINANCE

DEFICIT OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND—GOVERNMENT'S NET DEFICIT FOR 1973

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. We have heard this afternoon that the estimated payments for the year 1973 from the unemployment insurance fund are $2,050,000,000, with a substantial gross deficit. Has the minister any estimated figure of the amount of money that will be collected in income tax from payments from this fund which will allow us to calculate the net government deficit for the year 1973?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, for 1973 it would be in the order of $224 million.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for New Westminster, the hon. member for Trinity, and there are other hon. members who are seeking the opportunity to ask questions. I will try to recognize as many as I can.

* * *

ABORTION

THERAPEUTIC ABORTIONS—REQUEST THAT HOSPITALS BE ENCOURAGED TO FORM ABORTION COMMITTEES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the answer given by the Minister of Justice to this House yesterday, that he is now taking steps to encourage a more strict interpretation of those sections of the Criminal Code dealing with hospital committees and therapeutic abortions, and in view of the fact that out of 1,022 hospitals in Canada only 247 have abortion committees, would the minister encourage those hospitals which do not have abortion committees to form committees so they can also have an opportunity of looking at the minister's directive on interpretation of the Criminal Code?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice and myself are of the same mind, as are all members of the cabinet, on this matter.

Oral Questions

HOUSING

TREFANN HOMES CORPORATION, TORONTO—STATUS OF JOHN JORDAN—CMHC LOAN TO CORPORATION

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Is John Jordan still an officer of Trefann Homes Corporation or connected with the project in any way?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that he is only a consultant for the association, but I will determine this. My knowledge is that he was a consultant. I will determine whether he has become an officer.

Mr. Hellyer: Can the minister say if this is the same John Jordan who signed a lease to a private company for the first floor commercial space at Rochdale College for $1 a year for 30 years, as a consequence of which tens of thousands of dollars are siphoned off which otherwise would have been available to repay the principal and interest on the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation mortgage?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I am not able to comment on whether that is the case with respect to the lease and the circumstances as reported by the hon. member.

Mr. Hellyer: Isn't it in your report?

Mr. Basford: I cannot comment whether the man the hon. member is talking about, a consultant for Trefann Homes, is the same man who was involved as an officer with the co-operative colleges at one point.

Mr. Hellyer: I have one final supplementary. Is the minister satisfied with the explanation for the difference of $110,000 between the lowest bidders and the ones he will be financing who are the pre-selected friends of Trefann Homes Corporation?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the loan that has been made to Trefann Homes Limited has been examined very carefully by the officers of the corporation and has been made—

Mr. Hellyer: After you punched them on the head.

Mr. Basford: —subject to the city of Toronto approving a contingency grant. I only hope that hon. members opposite could be of like minds. The hon. member for St. Paul's criticizes me for not approving the loan; the hon. member for Trinity, and other Conservative colleagues of his, for the last few months have done nothing but harass the attempts of Trefann Homes Corporation and nothing but harass a group of people in Toronto.

Mr. Speaker: I was hoping we would have—

Mr. Hellyer: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member if he will be patient for just a moment. I was just saying that I was hoping we could have one question period without getting involved in questions of privilege, but now we are arguing this matter and I will recognize the hon. member for Trinity.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the innuendoes of the minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hellyer: —because what this party has been trying to determine, without the co-operation of the government which obviously is trying to hide the facts and keep them secret from the public, is whether or not the people of Canada are going to get value for public funds expended on this project—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: —whether or not in fact the applicants and the manager of this project are competent people to manage it in the public interest, and whether or not in fact their record, the record of some of them in particular, in previous projects with which they have been associated is such that under no circumstances should they ever again be trusted with public funds raised from the taxpayers of Canada. These are the things we are trying to get at, and frankly I am surprised that the minister would go ahead and adopt the unique procedure, unheard of in the history of the corporation, in asking the corporation of the city of Toronto to guarantee any overrun.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hellyer: It is just unbelievable.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CENTENNIAL OF ALEXANDER MACKENZIE BECOMING PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, before we take up the next item of business I think it would be remiss of me as the member for Sarnia-Lambton if I did not remind the House that 100 years ago today a stonemason from Sarnia, a true Grit, became Prime Minister of Canada. I refer to the Right Hon. Alexander Mackenzie.

Mr. Bell: True Grit? You mean John Wayne.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1600)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House resumed, from Tuesday, November 6, consideration of Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, with regard to Bill C-132, to control foreign ownership in Canada, I followed with much interest the remarks made yesterday evening, especially those of the minister and members of the Conservative Party. Although I listened intently to the members of the Conservative Party, for the life of me I could not figure out their position on this bill. Many said that the bill went too far, and a number of others said it did not go far enough. Over the past month in this House I have noticed that the Conservative Party speaks with many voices and it is hard to understand their position.

I asked a member of the Conservative Party how a new member finds out what that party's position is. He said that their lead-off speaker is the official spokesman for the party and that he voices party policy. With regard to this bill, Mr. Speaker, we have two critics, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), and they do not agree.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): How do you know; neither of us has spoken?

Mr. Symes: The minister looked at our amendments and rejected some very crucial ones. Later I should like to go into his arguments and comment on them, as well as some of the Conservative amendments. We proposed amendments to this bill with a view to strengthening it because we find that it does not go far enough in certain areas. The minister tried to give us the impression last evening that he is concerned about foreign ownership in this country and that he would look at some of our amendments and accept them. Our amendments are based on what is happening in this country with regard to foreign investment.

For years the opinion has been held by many Canadians and many members of this House that foreign investment is a blessing and will always be so. I agree, Mr. Speaker, that in the past as a developing country Canada did need foreign investment, but the position has changed. Look at what foreign investment has done over the years. Although it has provided some jobs for Canadians, it has developed the kind of economy that is now working in the interests of the multinational corporations rather than in the interests of the Canadian economy and the Canadian worker.

When we look at the pattern of foreign investment in this country, we see that it is mainly oriented toward resource industries and exploiting our raw materials for the benefit of another country which will refine and process them. If we become locked into that kind of economic development, not only do we export resources but we export jobs because the job-intensive areas of an economy are where the raw materials are refined and manufactured. That is not what is happening in Canada. As we ship our iron ore, pulp and other minerals out of the country we are exporting both resources and jobs. One has only to consider the oil and energy crisis today to know what that means. We are now locked into the position of a shortage of oil because of a resource-based philosophy of exporting oil via pipeline to the United States rather than having a pipeline that would be reversible and would bring western oil to eastern Canada or vice versa if need be.

Because we depend so much on foreign investment, we have been in the position of having economic decisions made outside the country. In the second reading debate I gave detailed examples of how American corporate laws apply to industries in Canada and how American corporations' policies have caused closure of branch plants in Canada when an industry slackens in the United States in order to protect American workers as opposed to Canadian workers. I do not intend to go into any further detail on that matter.

Mr. Speaker, I think we also need to toughen this bill because of the other disadvantage related to foreign investment. So much of the research and development for subsidiary companies in Canada is done outside this country that our young scientists and engineers are losing jobs. If the branch plants were Canadian-owned, or at least were forced to do some of their research and development in this country, then jobs would be available. In 1970 alone we lost 882 engineers and scientists from Canadian universities; they went to the United States because jobs in research and development were not available with subsidiary companies in Canada. When we look at our trade balance we find that most of the component parts that foreign subsidiaries use in Canada come from other countries; parent companies provide 70 per cent of the components used by their subsidiary companies. This reduces the number of jobs created in Canada for the production of components.

When we look at the other aspect of foreign investment in this country we see that the bill could be strengthened by following some of this party's amendments. Canadian companies have been bought up at the rate of 170 a year, and there are loopholes that will allow this to continue. I shall deal with them in detail, Mr. Speaker, when I deal with the amendments. We now find that because of foreign investment we export more money than we bring in. The old argument for foreign investment was that we needed foreign capital. One has only to look at the statistics to see that between 1960 and 1969 we had a net export of $2 billion. In other words, taking into account the amount of capital that enters the country as opposed to the amount that went out in dividends and profits, we ended up with a deficit of $2 billion. The figures for 1972—these are not net export figures—show that $2.35 billion in dividends went to the United States. Obviously, foreign investment is not the blessing it seems to be.

Another matter that worries me very much, Mr. Speaker, is that the foreign subsidiaries already in this country are expanding at an enormous rate. They are competing with Canadian industry and they are buying up Canadian industry. Where do they get the capital for expansion? I have just pointed out that more money is leaving the country than is coming in. When we look at this question we find that these foreign companies are financing their expansion with Canadian money which they get from Canadian banks, insurance companies and other financial institutions. We have the capital in Canada for our own expansion, but Canadians are not using it; the foreign firms are taking advantage of it. In 1971, 94 per cent of all the capital expansion of these companies was financed in Canada; only 6 per cent of the capital came from outside the country.

We see, then, the state of our economy because of foreign investment and the crucial need to do something to control the economy, to prevent further erosion of our economic independence and also to promote future development of Canadian investment in our country. When we look at the bill we see that it moves in this direction but there are some limitations. One of the major weaknesses is the fact that existing foreign corporations account for more than 80 per cent of foreign investment in this country, so the bill was designed to control the expansion of these companies in related areas. Yet that is where the difficulty arises. How do you define what is a related or an unrelated area of business?

● (1610)

Unfortunately, our first motion to amend the bill was ruled out of order. It seems that the bill, if passed in its present form, will cover only 20 per cent of the growth of foreign investment in this country. Therefore ITT, which has invested in 58 companies, hotels, communications, manufacturing companies and the like, which to a layman appear unrelated to its main business, can claim that these companies which it controls operate in related areas of economic concern. If that definition is accepted, such takeovers will not be covered by the bill.

The same holds true for oil companies. For example, they can claim that the manufacture of plastics, which appears to be unrelated to the oil business, is related to the oil business because the plastics industry depends upon petroleum products for raw materials. That demonstrates the real weakness of the bill. As I say, only about 20 per cent of foreign expansion will be covered. That will be the situation because our amendment was ruled out of order.

The minister and members of the Conservative Party discussed other amendments last night. The minister spoke last night about our motion No. 4 and Conservative motion No. 3 which have to do with the assets of a company and the threshold above which they will be subject to review. The minister rejected both these motions to amend and said that the figure in the bill is adequate. The Conservative amendment sought to increase the amount of the threshold and thereby exempt more businesses from review. I reject that stand. I argue that the House ought to adopt motion No. 4 which has the support of my party. That motion seeks to reduce the $3 million limitation to $1.5 million. It deals, of course, with assets. Our reason for bringing forward the amendment is that a very significant proportion of corporations in Canada have assets of under $1 million. Actually, 81 per cent of all Canadian corporations have assets of under $1 million. So raising the financial threshold would not protect these companies. The bulk of Canadian corporations would still be subject to the actions of foreigners who might compete to buy them up or invest in them.

The same holds true of foreign corporations. Forty-five per cent of foreign corporations operating in this country have assets of under $1 million. Therefore I cannot accept the assurance that the bill as it now stands will protect the bulk of Canadian business from foreign competition and foreign exploitation. This is especially true because our motion No. 4 has not been accepted.

I also wish to discuss motion No. 5 which has been moved by the Conservative Party and deals with provincial consultation and provincial involvement in the screening process. The argument put forward is that there are disadvantaged areas of Canada which want foreign investment and they would not want the federal government prohibiting, controlling or restricting it. Consider the economic development of Canada and the areas of the country that are still poor. For example, what has foreign investment done for the Maritimes? Up to this point there have not been controls; however, foreign investment in such areas has been minimal.

Foreign investment takes place in areas where there are economically viable natural resources or where a manufacturing base already has been established with a market. The Conservative amendment, which seeks to relax controls in certain areas of the country, with a view, no doubt, to encouraging foreign investment, will not work to the advantage of the people in the areas concerned. Foreign investment has not worked to their advantage in the past and I cannot see that it will in the future.

Conservative members should consult the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). She grew up in the Cape Breton area and she will tell them what happens when there is not some control over foreign investment. Provinces compete with one another and try to make the best deal with foreign companies. This happened in the Strait of Canso, in the deal involving the Gulf Corporation. Provincial governments compete with one another; they give all kinds of tax concessions and indulge in all sorts of giveaways to multinational corporations in order to attract them to their area. If there is to be a national economy of benefit to all Canadians there must be a strong national government presence in this area. There must be provincial consultation, agreed—but there must not be a provincial veto power. It is the Canadian economy as a whole with which we are concerned. We must look at it as a whole and not fragment it into parts.

I believe we ought to strengthen the bill in the manner suggested by our amendments. If we do not, we shall see the Canadian economy being eroded in the sense that we shall lose control of our economy and of our ability to decide our own future and provide jobs for Canadians.

This is a most crucial bill. If the minister is really serious about doing something with respect to foreign investment in this country, he should know that he will not accomplish his aim by accepting the bill as it now is. He should re-examine it and accept some of our amendments. I urge all hon. members of the House who really believe in the Canadian economy and in the Canadian ability to move ahead and plan our future to look seriously at our amendments and accept them.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to take part in the debate on the report stage of Bill C-132 let me first put on record the title of the bill. According to the order paper, it is "an act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons".

The amendments which I shall discuss deal with consultation with the provinces and, of course, certain notice to the provinces. I might say that in dealing with the control of our economic environment in Canada the subject is not an easy one to discuss. It is not a matter about which one can be glib. All of us agree that Canadians must control their economic destiny if they are to maintain and sustain their national identity and national sovereignty. I use the phrase "national sovereignty" in the context of our approach to national and international affairs.

How is this to be accomplished? Can we accomplish it and still maintain our standard of living? The answer to these two important questions will differ not only as between parties in this House but as between members who make up the various parties in the House. I have said before in this House that the differences between the men and women in the House stem not so much from differences in party philosophy as from regional differences. For example, members from the Maritimes discuss the problems of the Maritimes and how certain amendments to a bill will affect the Maritimes. I say again that differences in viewpoint stem not so much from party affiliation as from differences in the regions which the various members represent.

Today I wish to discuss a matter pertaining to my home province, Alberta, and to Calgary. The whole economy of Alberta is geared to ranching. That includes farming of all kinds. That industry, really, is our primary industry. Our second most powerful industry is the resource industry which brings about the secondary industries, known as the tertiary industries, all of which depend on the two main industries, farming on the one hand and the resource industry on the other, or energy and food. We in Alberta are fortunate enough to produce both food and energy in large quantities. I shall deal for a few minutes with energy.

● (1620)

I do not believe, and I hope I will be able to prove this before I am through, there is actually a shortage of energy in Canada. We in Alberta have enough crude petroleum and natural gas to supply the needs of Canada this winter and for winters to come. One of the great troubles has been lack of planning, particularly by this government, in the transportation of that energy from its source to urban and other centres. I will have something more to say about that later. When we wrap it up, it may be a case of scarcity on the market but not scarcity at the wellhead.

When dealing with this subject we have to ask ourselves a second question. How do we encourage more Canadian dollars into our two industries, agriculture and the resource industry? These are some of the suggestions that I have. I have said this before in this House but the government has paid very little attention to it in dealing with the question of taxation. First, we should make certain the Canadian tax law that affects agriculture and the resource industry is such that enough dollars will be left in the command and control of people in Alberta and, indeed, the people of all Canada so they can invest in their own industries.

The new tax act places the Canadian investor in Canada at a disadvantage to foreign investors. We hear a lot about United States dollars in Canada. We hear very little about the amount of money that Japan has now invested in Canada. We hear very little about the amount of German money invested in Canada. I am told that Japanese money is coming into the Pacific coast for the hotel industry, and so on. Too often when dealing with this subject we speak about American dollars. It may be because there seems to be a group in Canada that is anti-American. If they can use a club on them, even through this bill, they seem to get great satisfaction.

There appears to be in the House panic and a crisis with regard to the supply of crude petroleum and natural gas. I repeat, there is no shortage. It is a question of transportation. We have interrogated this government since 1968 in reference to a national energy policy, transportation and pipelines, but nothing is done until there is a crisis. When this government, which is now withering on the vine, was elected in 1968 they said they were pragmatists. They are pragmatists. They go from crisis to crisis. If anyone is cold in his bed or living-room this winter, the responsibility will be on the shoulders of the government.

Guaranteeing large Canadian participation in the development and ownership of Canada can only be done by equitable and reasonable tax incentives so that Canadian developers and the resource industry can compete with foreign investors. Let me direct my attention for a few moments to the resource industry in Alberta which is continually under attack by this government and the people who like to kick hell out of the United States because it sounds good on the hustings and is more political than logical and sensible. First, I want to refer to the source of funds for independents. Resource industries, Canadian corporations and Canadians must be given, within Canada, a greater tax advantage and incentive than our foreign competitors. Then Canadians will soon own and control their resource industry and resource development.

I listened to my friends on the left who joined the government. They endorsed the new tax bill. When foreign investors come into this country, they have large depletion allowances and large write-offs. The same does not apply to Canadian investors. I recall a bill that was brought in not too long ago which permitted pipeline companies and other corporations to drill wells, but individuals forming a syndicate in Canada who might want to put their savings into drilling a well cannot get even the same allowances or incentives as Canadian-owned corporations. That kind of tax law is drying up the funds for the development of our resource industries. Because of the high degree of risk inherent in the search for oil and natural gas, funds required by exploration companies cannot be borrowed.

Why, I might ask, have American dollars found their way into the resource industry? You cannot go to the bank and get a mortgage to drill an oil or gas well. Out of every ten wells drilled in the province of Alberta for oil and gas, I am told that nine are dry. Any capital that finds its way into the resource industry is high-risk capital. That is why tax incentives are necessary such as higher depletion allowances and higher write-offs. These will encourage free enterprise—I am not afraid to use that expression—to drill for oil and gas.

If it had not been for American dollars which came into Alberta and brought in Leduc No. 1 and developed the first field, there perhaps would not be any oil and gas industry in Alberta. I do not say that as a complaint. We did not find that the people of eastern Canada, who have the large pools of capital, came forward in the forties and fifties to invest in our resource industry. Therefore we had to rely on foreign investment. That is how foreign investment gained control of the resource industry of Alberta.

I want to compliment a government that was defeated by the Conservative Party, the government of Premier Manning. This is where you can differentiate from Saskatchewan. When the leases were let to developers, that government set up a royalty system which was copied by other provinces, including the province of Saskatchewan when Mr. Douglas was premier, whereby pools of money found their way into the treasuries. Because of those agreements and plans made by our former premier, now a senator, Alberta is the only province without a sales tax. We are proud of that record. We have to take that into consideration when dealing with this bill.

As one who was born in western Canada, I would be very happy if all the dollars in all our resource industries were Canadian. The only way to get Canadian dollars in there is to have an incentive and taxation plan to leave the money with Canadians. Unfortunately, that has not been the plan of this government. In history they will be written up as a giveaway and high tax government. I hear my socialist friends groaning. They ought to groan, because while we are drilling for oil and gas in Alberta and developing our resources, the same drilling rigs left Saskatchewan because of the socialistic philosophy of its government during that period.

Mr. Lalonde: Shame.

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad to hear the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) say "Shame". As a general rule, Canadian independents do not have sufficient internal cash flow to undertake required exploration programs. They must rely on the continued inflow of new risk capital from investors, both Canadian and foreign, either through the form of new equity issues or through drilling fund types of arrangements. It is estimated that in excess of 50 per cent of the funds expended on wildcat drilling in Canada by independents come in the form of new risk capital obtained each year by the independent companies.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

There is a need for consistency of government policies. According to recent technical papers, Canada, at current rates of production, is considered to have undiscovered reserves equivalent to 100 years of supply for oil needs and 250 years of supply for gas needs. In addition, the Alberta tar sands are estimated to contain 250 billion barrels of oil, of which 26.5 billions barrels are recoverable by current processes. As I see it, the government is bound to depend on foreign crude because it has scared off the parties ready to participate in the great Syncrude project or, if it has not, only the integrity of the government of Alberta has saved the situation. Without consultation, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) imposed a surtax, first of 40 cents and then of $1.90.

• (1630)

We know from all the reports on the Syncrude project that the extraction of the oil is an extremely expensive process. The cost of processing and extraction is very high. The move the government has made will, I am sure, hamper the prospects of development. I remind hon. members that we should be considering not only our present needs but Canada's needs in the future. Foresight and vision are required, and these qualities cannot be exercised without capital. On November 5 I directed the following question to the minister:

> In view of the cabinet leak to the effect that the government intends to nationalize or is considering nationalizing one of the corporate parties to the Syncrude project, is the minister now in a position to encourage or to discourage the immediate development of the Syncrude project to assure supplies of crude petroleum for all Canadian needs now and in the future? That is the question today; we are all talking about supply.

To which the minister replied:

> I should like to confirm a statement made outside the House, namely, that a Globe and Mail report of a proposal to acquire either Gulf or Shell is totally without foundation.

At this point an hon. member, not named in the report, interjected "Oh, yeah?" The parties to the Syncrude agreement are Imperial Oil, Canada-Cities Service Limited, Atlantic Richfield and Gulf (Canada) Limited. At the same time, it does seem strange to me that a newspaper as well-known nationally and internationally as the Globe and Mail would print a story unless there was some foundation for it. I believe there is a fight going on in cabinet at the moment over that situation. In such a climate of uncertainty, how can we be assured that a development so important to Canada's future will continue in order that our energy reserves may be maintained? The minister went on to say:

> With regard to the Syncrude position, I would point out that it is a rather fundamental matter of taxation policy whether a special change should be made in our taxation law affecting the Syncrude project, and this is a matter which the Department of Finance now has under study.

Well, I hope it does not keep it under wraps for years like the government's national energy policy. This project cannot wait. It is very well put together. Eventually, 60 per cent of the profits will go to the people of Alberta. And I should like to remind hon. members, especially those from Ontario, that we spend between $100 million and $200 million a year buying from the tertiary industries of Ontario. These huge amounts are spent in the purchase of steel, tubing, facing and all the other equipment required to drill for oil and maintain the wells. We should remember, too, that if it is kept healthy this is an industry which will help solve the problems of unemployment in the future.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) said no tax incentives had been provided in connection with the project. Some hon. members interjected with cries of "oh!" and then the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) answered:

Mr. Speaker, both the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and I said to the Alberta ministers that it was in the interest of this country that the Syncrude project go forward. The problem is not only how to reconcile the Syncrude project, or the agreement between the consortium and the Province of Alberta, with the existing tax laws, but of developing and announcing guidelines for federal tax resources policy. To that effect we are reviewing our position and, indeed, in the light of information supplied to the Alberta ministers, they are also reviewing their position. I will be meeting with the Syncrude people later this month.

The ministers from Alberta were down here. They visited the appropriate ministers of this government. They had hardly got on the plane home and taken off their coats before a new tax of $1.90 was imposed. What effect did that action have on the prospects for development? I see the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) present in the chamber. I understand he will speak later and I hope he will answer some of these questions. The hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden) put it very well, I thought, as reported at page 7515 of Hansard. He said:

In view of the fact that the only secure source of oil supply to Canada must lie in the Canadian oilfields and that Canadian oil reserves at present are down to somewhere in the order of a 12-year life, will the minister say why all the government's recent policies have aggravated the Canadian oil supply problem and why no consideration has been given to security of future supply by way of stimulating the search for and development of energy reserves in Canada?

My comment is this: you can only stimulate the search for more energy and the development of more energy through appropriate tax incentives operating in a proper atmosphere. The minister began his answer by saying he would not accuse the hon. member for Calgary South of a conflict of interest in the situation. I assume he said that because the hon. member for Calgary South was at one time an entrepreneur in one of the drilling companies. I might say, in passing, that 95 per cent of the drilling companies in Alberta are owned by Canadians, financed by Canadians and drilled on behalf of Canadians. The minister went on:

I would point out that in July and again in discussions the government has held with the governments of both Alberta and Saskatchewan we have pointed out that substantial funds can and will be made available for the purpose of developing non-conventional sources of oil particularly and, in addition, for the development of other sources of oil and natural gas, and it is our intention to have this development by and for Canadians.

The hon. member for Calgary South went on to ask a further question:

The minister has made some vague statements about the federal government trying to find ways of directing the $70 million a month that is being creamed from the western provinces into heavy oil development. In view of the fact that the National Energy Board projects production from the Alberta tar sands in the amount of some 500,000 barrels a day by 1980, which is an almost impossible target date, will the minister promise that before the end of this year the matter will be concluded so that private enterprise can get on with this job?

This is why there is an energy crisis today. It is because we have a government which believes in high taxation, a government which believes it can handle other people's business better than they can. The other day we asked the minister whether it was his intention to set up a national oil corporation. I think this was two days ago. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said later that the idea was being considered. Are they going to take over some of the companies in Alberta?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. He may, however, continue if there is unanimous consent. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: I thank hon. members. Continuing his answers to questions on November 5, the minister replied:

I think it would be desirable to conclude it as soon as possible and I look forward to early conversations with the government of Alberta in an attempt to nail this down.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta must be frightened to negotiate with the federal government. On the last occasion when the ministers left for the west, no sooner had they done so than the whole plan was changed. I want hon. members to consider this question carefully. If the development had not taken place in Alberta, where would Canada be this winter? It would be depending entirely on supplies of oil from Venezuela and from the Middle East, where the trouble is.

In the past year the government has done everything in its power to discourage the development of the industry. While the potential reserves postulated by the various geologists are large, they will only become a reality as a result of exploration. Only through risk exploration can Canada become assured of a lasting supply.

• (1640)

In undertaking this risk exploration, it must first be recognized that compared to Middle East supplies, or in fact any other reserves worldwide except those of the United States, Canadian oil and gas are high-cost in terms of finding, developing and transportation costs. This is why energy is an expensive item. Some of our wells produce only 100 barrels a day, where the same sized wells in the Near East may produce 10,000 barrels a day. Yet it takes the same capital to sink the same kind of shaft. You are dealing not only with high-risk capital but with high-risk projects.

Secondly, it must be recognized that these risk investments are generally of a fairly long-term nature, in that there is a long lead time before an idea is transformed into reserves and possible return. In settled Canada, it probably takes five to seven years to do the necessary geological and geophysical work and the drilling required to develop a specific play and start selling oil and gas. In the frontier areas the lead time is even longer.

Gas was found at Sable Island in 1967, the year before this government took office. Close to 70 wells were sunk. Six years later this gas is still a considerable way from being produced and transported. Is this foresight? Is this the kind of government thinking and government direction that is going to guarantee us an energy supply? Of course it is not.

Gas was found at Drake Point in the Arctic in July, 1969, and it is unlikely that any gas from there will be marketed before the 1980s, if at all. Day after day I personally, as well as other members from Alberta and western Canada, have asked the Prime Minister and various ministers of energy, mines and resources whether they are negotiating with the United States to build a pipeline down the Mackenzie delta. During the last election it was almost built, with a highway alongside. We have action on the hustings but inaction in parliament.

The industry needs to work in a climate of relatively stable legislative and regulatory conditions. It cannot operate in a legislative vacuum, under conditions where great uncertainties exist, or in circumstances where legislative or regulatory guarantees are unilaterally changed without regard to the guarantee, or where legislative changes are made retroactively, or where legislative changes are quickly made without allowing for a phase-in period to allow industry adjustments.

I do not trust any government—and this is what I worry about in connection with this bill—to be the determining factor regarding where and when money should be invested, particularly in the resource industries where risk money is needed. Here I quarrel with my friends the socialists. They say that we can improve the bill. When they drilled the first well in Alberta, they took a chance. They drilled many wells at Turner Valley and other areas and finally they found oil. After finding one field they took further chances and made other discoveries and went from field to field. In this way you develop your pools of energy.

Has the government the vision to do this with taxpayers' money? That is the thought that I want my good friends to my left to think about when they talk of a national corporation that will be financed with the taxpayers' money. We talked today about CMHC and the fact that the government has been putting its hands in the taxpayers' pockets. Even though there is corruption, you cannot clean it out. Do we want the same thing to happen in the resource industry, particularly when it relies on risk capital?

If Alberta had depended on certain Toronto or Montreal investors, we would have no surplus of oil and gas today in Alberta. Those investors preferred to invest elsewhere. That was their privilege and their right, and they developed one of the greatest industrial triangles anywhere in the world. I am told that the industrial triangle of Ontario is one of the most wealthy areas anywhere in the world. Ontario has built within 100 years a powerful industrial base, and they are to be congratulated for that. I find no fault with them for not coming west and putting their money in our gas and oil wells. But had we not had money from elsewhere, there would not be the gas and oil wells in Alberta today to supply energy to the industries of eastern Canada.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Nesdoly: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Nesdoly: Several minutes ago when the hon. member had permission to speak beyond his time, I yelled out "No," but apparently I was unheard. He has now gone beyond his time by about eight minutes. I think it is time to call a halt.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I did not hear the hon. member say no. If I had, I would have done what I have not had to do with any other participant in this debate; I would have refused to permit the hon. member to continue. The hon. member has been given the right to continue and the Chair assumed that it had the right to extend this courtesy to the hon. member, as it has to others. Having made a mistake, the Chair will do what it has done in other cases where people have been allowed to continue, and that is wait for the end of the hon. member's speech.

Mr. Woolliams: I might say this, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to argue with my good friend who rose, but I must be saying something that bothers him or he would not want to turn off my voice.

We are developing a strong energy base. I say that what makes confederation is to have Ontario and Alberta scratching each other's backs. I hope this government does not try to stimulate an election issue by leaving the impression that instead of scratching each other's backs they are scratching each other's eyes. The energy pool complements the industrial pool. I hope that Canada's nationalism does not boil down to the price of a barrel of crude petroleum.

What do I mean by that? When we could import crude petroleum from the Near East and Venezuela and we had the Ottawa Valley division line, with imported oil coming as far as that and west of the Ottawa Valley being supplied with oil from Alberta and Saskatchewan and other places where resources industries were developed, they did not want a pipeline. Now there is a shortage, they do want a pipeline.

I say on behalf of the people I represent—and I have represented the province of Alberta in this House for 14 years—that they take the position of Canada first for Canadians. We think we are part, and a big part, of Canada and have a great contribution to make to this nation. That is why I support the amendment. We believe that this all-powerful government—it is really a majority government; both parties are together—surely could consult with the provinces and give them sufficient notification. I should not like to hand over our resource industry, financed by high-risk capital, to a government that says, "No, you cannot put money into Alberta; we don't like their premier or their government". I like a society that is governed by laws rather than by people. I am frightened when people make decisions that are made outside the rule of law. This is why I think our amendment should be supported, and I ask the government to take a hard look at it because it is to the government's advantage.

The government put a surtax on our crude petroleum. What would have been the reaction if they had put a surtax on steel in Ontario, or on Ford or General Motors' cars? What would happen if the resources of some other province were taxed, such as the good province of Quebec or the maritime provinces? Why was poor old western Canada picked out? I say this because our resource industry and our wheat and cattle industries have been discriminated against.

● (1650)

I might say that not only Alberta but Saskatchewan also is losing millions of dollars through the tax. I am surprised that the Premier of Saskatchewan has not spoken up about that. Is it because there is some relationship between the party national leader and himself? I do not know.

To be fair to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I must say that he said Ontario did buy our crude when it was more economic to purchase it elsewhere. Ontario did that for years. Everywhere west of the Ottawa Valley really did pay more. That was worked out as the national oil policy. It was introduced by a Conservative government and carried on by the Pearson government and by the present government.

Recent actions by the Canadian government have created uncertainties in the petroleum industry which may erode its ability to attract sufficient capital for the longer range development of oil and gas in Canada. Policies should be developed to provide consultation between the federal government, the provincial government and the petroleum industry, and to establish a political climate conducive to the reinvestment of funds generated from the production of our remaining proven assets of oil and gas, and as encouragement for new investments in the development of oil sands projects, exploration plays and technological research into recovery methods.

As I said, we are reluctant to the turning over of our risk capital to a group who will oppose our interests. Nor do we want to operate in a climate where it is harmful for the country to have U.S. dollars but investment by the Japanese is not questioned. Here I would also mention West Germany and Britain. Just remember that companies like the Ford Company of Canada and General Motors are under the control of the United States, but I never hear our friends in the NDP complain. Maybe the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) does not want to rock the boat in his constituency in that regard.

I am told by the hon. member for Calgary South that the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors is comprised of 187 companies—83 contractor companies, and 104 service, supply and manufacturing companies related to drilling operations. Member companies employ 10,000 taxpaying Canadians, providing an annual payroll in excess of $90 million to employees located throughout Canada. As a direct result of drilling operations in Canada, an annual payroll of $188 million is generated for drilling and service rig crews, employees in manufacturing, service, supply, transportation, construction, and for field consultants. Contractor members of the association are 95 per cent Canadian-owned and operate 341 drilling rigs and 205 service rigs.

Any reduction in exploration or development drilling has an immediate and adverse impact on the number of persons employed in the contracting industry. When drilling rigs are not operating, income is not generated and personnel are laid off. We know that the Syncrude project will give immediate employment to an estimated 10,000 Canadians. That is how important this industry is to Canada. Oil and gas well drilling has been carried out in every province, including the Territories and the Arctic, within the past year, creating jobs in these regions and adding economic benefit to the local, provincial and federal economies.

I am concerned that recent federal policies in respect of the crude oil price freeze and the imposition of an export tax on petroleum have created uncertainties in the Canadian petroleum industry. Today a question was asked by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) as to whether exports to the United States would be cut off in the event that supplies were not enough for Canada. The minister replied that certainly exports would be reduced in such circumstances. I endorse that. I think the industry endorses it. But at the same time, Mr. Speaker, when those decisions are made, either with the provinces or with our neighbour to the south surely consultation is not out of the question. Surely we are neighbourly enough to go to the United States and say, "We are having our troubles." Negotiations could then take place in an atmosphere of good will on both sides of the border.

While I am vitally concerned with the maintenance of a viable drilling industry and the retention of our highly skilled Canadian labour force, I am also deeply concerned that the application of the recent policies will severely limit the discovery of additional hydrocarbon reserves, to the long-term detriment of all Canadians. I would hope that the minister or the Prime Minister would sit down and consult with the provinces before making any long-term decisions. They announced a pipeline. Quebec said no. Surely they should have first gone to Quebec and talked it over. The government has a national responsibility to supply energy across the country, but it also has a national responsibility to keep confederation together.

Our proposed amendments will tidy up a very bad bill, a bill which will cause the drying up of risk capital, capital that is necessary for the economic health of the provinces, of my province in particular, and of other provinces which depend on it for the energy they use in the manufacture of goods and the provision of services.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, this has been such a wide-ranging debate that it would be quite impossible to touch on all the matters that have been commented on by hon. members, even if I were to get the extra allocation of time which we so generously gave to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) to wind up. But looking at the clock I find his wind-up was a heck of a sight longer than his pitch.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: I propose to spend the majority of my time dealing with those aspects of this bill which relate to my special responsibilities in the field of regional economic expansion. But I cannot resist commenting on the speech of the hon. member for Calgary North, which for one reason alone I suggest is historic in this chamber. He is the only man I ever heard who sang "O Canada" to the tune of "God Bless America."

When the hon. member gets an opportunity tomorrow to look at his speech in Hansard, I suspect he will find it is a remarkable mixture of non sequitors, clichés, a fair amount of patriotism and a lot of dangling participles, because he has the habit, which we are getting accustomed to now from a certain group of members of this House, of saying, "We would dearly love to have everything under Canadian control and owned by Canadians" while the damning thing we never hear is the great big, capital letter "But," because in the rest of their speech they go on to say why this cannot be done and why it is impossible to do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: I must say, too, that when the hon. member's remarks are transcribed for history they will lose all credibility when the reader comes to the line which says of a minister of the Crown who, after all, is entitled to some respect, even from the Official Opposition, that his word is not to be taken because in fact a rumour to the contrary appeared in the Globe and Mail.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: Therefore we have government by rumour, presumably, or by any other kind of speculation. The hon. member certainly illustrates how weak are the bases of many of his arguments when he says the minister is not to be believed because the Globe and Mail says it is not true. I call attention to the fact that that newspaper did not go that far in assuming they were omnipotent and omniscient in that regard. In fact, I will send the hon. gentleman a large package of clippings of items which have appeared in the Globe and Mail, and which appear every day under the heading "Our mistake."

Lest I fall victim to the temptation to try to respond in detail to what was essentially a legitimate but of course special pleading on the hon. member's behalf in regard to the oil industry, I return to my first theme. I feel my responsibility is to talk about what is a legitimate problem in all of the underdeveloped regions of Canada with regard to this whole question of investment of a foreign nature or non-Canadian nature.

● (1700)

I have read with considerable interest the comments made not only before the parliamentary committee but also those of some of the premiers of the Atlantic provinces—I believe they were all aligned on these things—and those of certain of the other so-called have-not provinces who expressed some fears and concerns about the possibility, or at least the threat or the danger that a more positive national policy with regard to control and ownership might be harmful to their developmental efforts.

As someone who comes from one of those have-not regions of the country and who has spent a great many years involved in various forms of developmental activity, I appreciate this concern. I have no hesitation in saying that it is important in those have-not regions of the country that legitimate developments are not hampered by a failure of Canadian capital and Canadian initiative. I would rather put it in that context than say it would be important that these fail because there is no foreign investment. I should like to develop that point as I go along, Mr. Speaker, but before I do let me point out to people who are so very much concerned about the threat of foreign ownership in the underdeveloped parts of the country that even in these have-not areas it has been a mixed blessing to have such a heavy emphasis on foreign control and investment in industry.

In the region that I know best, the Atlantic provinces, the whole area—all four provinces—are littered, quite literally, with the remnants of foreign-controlled industries that milked the region for whatever they could get out of it and then departed and left us to clean up the mess.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: I have merely to point to the iron mines of Belle Isle or to Devco Corporation which was established in Cape Breton when a foreign-controlled organization abruptly decided to withdraw. I could give many other examples throughout Atlantic Canada of this danger that has existed all along, of the domination of the economy of the Atlantic provinces and other have-not regions by foreign-controlled corporations. To those who would say, in what has now become something of a cliché, that we have to embrace developers and entrepreneurs from wherever they come in the world simply because they hold out some hope of development of our resources, I say that they ought to qualify that against this history.

There is another reason why even in the have-not areas of this country it is not always wise for us to welcome every foreign investor who comes along.

Mr. Woolliams: Like Joey Smallwood.

Mr. Jamieson: My hon. friend from Calgary North says, "Like Joey Smallwood." Well, I do not use it in the same context as he, but I would say that the Newfoundland experience in the first 20 years of confederation shows that in your enthusiasm for development you can frequently be too generous in the concessions that are made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: I repeat, therefore, that the whole question of development has to be measured in terms of what the trade-offs are, because you could wind up making enormous concessions with insignificant benefits to the people of the region or of Canada as a whole.

The third reason this whole question of open-handedly accepting foreign investment ought to be examined is the fact that experience shows that it sometimes leads, particularly in the have-not regions, to excess interprovincial or interregional competition. This, of course, reflects on the second reason that I gave, which is that in those kinds of circumstances the promoter can play one against the other. The only winner in the long run, in many instances, is the promoter. The ultimate loser is probably the public purse which comes in and tidies up after the cream has been skimmed by those people who have no further interest in Canada or Canadians.

There is another reason why this question needs to be examined with a degree of caution. As long as we have this almost total dependence upon foreign investment in the have-not regions of the country, there is the danger, and frequently the reality, of a somewhat less than total development of the resource. The reason for this is that the international or foreign company is usually concerned with getting the basic raw material from Canada. We can see across this country, whether it be northern Ontario, Atlantic Canada, Quebec or British Columbia it does not matter, outside of the built-up regions that once foreign investment comes in the resource is usually taken out in the most raw state possible for transportation and is upgraded at some other point where the jobs are created. We can see that not only in the mining industry but also, in my own province, in the fishing industry where the basic thrust of what might be described as an international interest is to get the raw material and process it elsewhere.

We have very short memories, Mr. Speaker, if we do not recall that as recently as three or four years ago there were two or three large international corporations that were hailed when they moved into the Atlantic provinces in the fish processing business. But they disappeared from the scene the instant the price went down to the point where it was not profitable for them, at precisely that moment, to keep going. That reminds me of the Newfoundland fish merchant, Mr. Speaker, who during the depression went into his bank and asked his banker, "What do you know about the fish business?" The banker replied that he knew nothing, to which the merchant responded, throwing his keys on the desk, "You had better start learning, because you are in it."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: Time after time foreign companies have come in at the height of a market or a demand and then provincial governments, or in some instances the federal government have found themselves caught with that expression, "You had better start learning, because you are in it." We ought to differentiate between sound foreign or international investment and those problem areas which are inevitable unless we keep a close eye out for them and unless we have an alternative.

Mr. Speaker, I have made what I hope will be recognized as jesting remarks with regard to the hon. member for Calgary North, but there is one thing about which he is absolutely right; that is, we can join hands from the Atlantic provinces to the west and say that the biggest failing, in terms of Canadian control of the Canadian economy, over the past 50 years or so has been the lack of initiative and entrepreneurship and the timidity of a great deal of Canadian capital.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: This has been one of our real errors, Mr. Speaker. It is all very well to spar back and forth in adversary debate and to talk about government policies and what they might or might not have done to maintain control of the Canadian economy. But the facts speak for themselves; the evidence is there, that indeed in what might be described as the perimeters of the country, the parts away from the heartland, there has been a woeful lack of enterprise and a woeful lack of guts on the part of well-heeled Canadian investors to do something to develop other regions of the country.

My hon. friend from Calgary North spoke of some of the things that did not happen in the west or would not have happened in the west because of the failure of Canadian investors. We can point to the Atlantic provinces or Quebec in the same way. The whole fishing industry had its genesis or growth through the interests of various foreign operators. Many of the Canadians to whom I have spoken personally on many occasions, who simply could not get themselves excited about the prospects, now that prices are about four times what they were three or four years ago are falling all over themselves to get into the business. The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot blame any resident, any premier or any leader in any backward part of this country for saying that he is going to get capital wherever he can lay his hands on it. What he is really saying is, "I cannot get it from Canadian sources." So it is important that we find techniques and means by which we can induce the private sector to put money in, and perhaps we could include public moneys as well, as a means to offset this negative attitude toward the regions to which I have referred.

● (1710)

In summary on this point, I say that it is not merely a question of saying that we do not like an overdose, as it were, of foreign investment; I think I have shown that there are dangers in that. There is no point in making that kind of case unless you point out the other flaw, which is this: Canadians, by and large, until fairly recently at least, have not been prepared to invest as they should in their own country. Lest, by the way, that is taken as a criticism wholly and solely of what might be described as the financial establishment of central Canada, let me say that within the have-not regions of this country there is every bit as much of this chicken-hearted approach to investment in Canada as there is in the big financial centres.

There are in this day and age a lot of people in the have-not regions of this country who are making good incomes, by which I mean profit incomes, from those regions. However, time and time again, as the record shows, their investments flow back to the centre. So instead of building up the have-not regions of this country, what happens? A man makes his pile, say in the Atlantic provinces, and then decides to get into something lucrative and he invests in a venture in the good old province of Ontario. That is something for us to consider. Therefore I say it is not merely a question of criticizing lack of entrepreneurship on the part of those who might be described as the well established; we must also consider the lack of entrepreneurship of those in the regions.

Another point which worries me considerably about the present state of affairs—and we hope to be able to correct this through the policies of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion—is this: speaking in terms of regional development, whether it be undertaken by foreign investors or by Canadian investors, by established companies or by new companies, I say that it is absolutely essential that the provinces themselves and the federal government, to the extent of its involvement, are satisfied that enterprises undertaken are sound and that they have a degree of viability that gives them at least a reasonable chance of success.

A few moments ago I spoke about the areas of deprivation being strewn with the failures of certain economic undertakings. Those failures have arisen because a good, hard look was not taken at each and every case and no one determined adequately whether the project could safely be put in hand with a reasonable chance of success. As long as you depend either on foreign entrepreneurship, which almost inevitably is going to be opportunist by the very nature of things, and there is nothing wrong with that, or on domestic entrepreneurship, there will be a need for us to do what we are now trying to do, work with the provinces in order to establish what are the major developmental opportunities in each of those regions and which of those opportunities has a reasonable chance for growth and development.

If I may speak in terms of the bill, let me say that the concerns which have been expressed about the concept of our working with the provinces are, in my judgment, the best assurances that can be given that this measure is not going to work against the interests of the have-not or less developed areas of the country. I point out to hon. members and to you, Mr. Speaker, that the entire regional economic expansion program, as we visualize it now, will be implemented on the basis of an agreement with the provinces. Furthermore, no enterprise will be undertaken under this plan unless it is the subject of a further federal-provincial agreement of a subordinate nature.

The implications of this are, first, that it is a commitment on our part to reinforce provincial priorities; that is, how a province uses its resources or, in the general scheme of things, how those resources are to be developed is something that the province will need to decide in the first instance. Second, once we have identified a major developmental opportunity on which we are prepared to work, the very fact that the federal and provincial governments agree on that and sign an agreement to that effect will, of course, be as strong an assurance as you can get that that enterprise is going to be acceptable within the criteria set down in this bill.

As I am not aware of many, if any, provincial undertakings that have not involved in one way or another some type of federal involvement, some type of federal financial contribution, it seems to be axiomatic that the more major developmental opportunities of any significance that are covered by this bill will be ones in which the federal government will have not only a strong commitment but will require a considerable amount of federal contribution.

The hon. member for Calgary North referred to Alberta. What he said sounded familiar, as I have had the same sort of experience with other provinces as well. There is no reluctance so far as the federal government is concerned to discuss these matters with the provinces. Furthermore, it seems to me that 99 times out of 100 the shoe is on the other foot. I have never yet heard any member get up in this House and say he was deeply upset because some province had moved unilaterally. Yet I can say to hon. members that it has been my experience, and I am sure this is true of many of my colleagues, to hear on the radio or television, or read in newspapers even as reliable as the Globe and Mail that a province has taken a significant initiative involving the federal government but has not bothered to advise us that it was even contemplating such a step.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: Let us remember, therefore, that this is a two-way street. Furthermore, let me say this. I doubt very much if there is an exception to this well established rule involving federal-provincial relations. Let a province start out on its own on that project and, regardless of its feelings about wanting to act alone, or regardless of its feelings of wanting to wrap the whole thing up in a provincial package, within a few months that province will be here knocking on the door of some federal department. This applies, for instance, to Alberta with its oil development, to Quebec with its steel development, to Nova Scotia with regard to its development of deep water ports and to Newfoundland with regard to its fisheries plan. Say what you like, I think it can be recognized that the provinces recognize the necessity of doing these things in some federal context.

We, for our part, are glad that this is so because it seems to me that without some kind of overview which only the federal government, only the federal parliament, can provide not only will Canada become a balkanized country but there will be so many economic distortions in the total scheme of things that only the federal government will be able to extricate all kinds of subsidiary provincial undertakings, wherever they may be, from their difficulties. The provinces may not be able to extricate such undertakings for themselves, naturally. So the underpinning to my own approach to regional economic expansion and development is that this must be done in total concert with the provinces, but not with their imposing measures that would be harmful to our objectives. We are really saying to them, "Tell us what you want and we will try to put a federal input into it, in our attempt to make it successful."

An hon. Member: It will not work.

Mr. Jamieson: An hon. member says that it will not work. I say to you that if it will not work, confederation is in a heck of a sight more trouble than I think it is. This has to be made to work. I am very pleased with the co-operation we have had from provinces with regard to general development agreements and the identification of major developmental opportunities. I repeat, because I think this is essential to the concerns which have been expressed, that by working with us through these agreements in order to develop the various economic prospects in the regions of Canada, the provinces are given strong assurance that provincial interests and provincial rights will be taken into account.

I am not suggesting, of course, that this is the whole answer. I am not saying that regional economic development will solve all the economic and all other difficulties in this country; that would be naïve and would be flying in the face of history. However, I do not think there is the slightest doubt that we can get a great deal more Canadian investment into the underdeveloped parts of this country. This will not necessarily be done through tax policies and the like, although these have their place, or through transportation policies. We have been tinkering with these for 50 years.

● (1720)

The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) is mumbling something. We have now put it at the stage where we have 50 per cent of the freight rates, for instance, on manufactured goods coming out of Atlantic Canada. If we put it at 100 per cent, it would not be the total solution to the problem unless we did other things as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: Therefore, while these one-dimensional solutions may be appealing in the long run and may be great things on the stump in an election, they nevertheless ignore the fact that if we are going to get development in the perimeters of this country, the slow growth regions—and that constitutes by far the bulk of our geography—and if we are going to ensure there is a greater Canadian input into this kind of development, we must take a multi-dimensional approach. That, I believe, is what members will see the Department of Regional Economic Expansion doing. I believe it is in complete concert with the bill now before the House.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the minister a short but serious question. I was impressed with some of the minister's comments about the underdeveloped areas of this country. In view of the fact Canadian banks and financial institutions lend half of their money to foreigners either in Canada or outside the country, and 38 per cent of our Canadian mutual funds are invested in the United States, I wonder whether the minister, to achieve some of his ends, would recommend foreign exchange controls or some mandatory investment controls, so that the banks and financial institutions would be required to invest more of their money in Canada and perhaps more in the areas which really need it. I would like to hear the minister's comments on this suggestion.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious I cannot answer all of the implications of that question in short order. I can say this. If our federal system permits it in some way or another, I believe we have to find some means to make capital more available. For the past several months we have been carrying on a study to discover whether in fact it is true there is a shortage of capital from the lending institutions in the slow growth regions. At the moment we are getting some rather conflicting stories.

Mr. Hellyer: Surely you do not need a study to know there is a shortage.

Mr. Jamieson: I think if I had said that off the top of my head, the hon. member would have asked how I could say something like that without having a study. In trying to answer the hon. member and not take up the time of the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly), all I can say is that this is a matter about which we are certainly very concerned. We are trying to find techniques to get at some of the things he mentioned. I will be glad to talk to the hon. member about this later.

Mr. Symes: Would the minister permit a further question?

Mr. Jamieson: I do not mind, if your colleague does not.

Mr. Symes: The minister pointed out that as far as his department is concerned, the province would set the priority and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion would work with the province in fulfilling that priority. If in a province such as Ontario, the provincial government set a priority such as the Toronto centre region plan which discriminates against regions such as northern Ontario, would the federal government take the initiative in doing the kinds of things which would give us the kind of development our people deserve?

Mr. Jamieson: Until I see evidence that that is so, I think the question is hypothetical. My negotiations are still going on with Ontario. I can say that I see no indication at the moment that they have a lack of interest in northern Ontario. There are, of course, some projects which we can undertake unilaterally under the incentives development act and things of this kind. There are others purely within provincial jurisdiction.

Without a specific example I could not say whether we could move on this or not. My opinion is we would not be able to do that. Nevertheless, there are tools that we have for encouraging industry and the like. If it was our conviction there were good programs and they did not conflict with provincial autonomy or the constitutional rights of the provinces, we would go ahead. We could not, for example, build roads in northern Ontario unless there was some agreement with the province of Ontario.

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate some of the comments made by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson). I hope his department will see fit to be a little more generous with Saskatchewan and the other have-not prairie province, Manitoba. I am getting a bit sick and tired of Saskatchewan being referred to as the poor socialist province, and all the rest. I will have more to say about that later.

I also hope that all of Saskatchewan will come under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and qualify for grants, particularly the small cities and towns which do not qualify at the present time. In this way we could start to build up Canadian equality and maybe gradually overcome some of the effects the multinational corporations have on us. I also hope that in the future this department will not hand out money too readily to foreign-owned corporations.

I listened with interest, and sometimes impatience to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) who represents Imperial Oil interests. He made an interesting speech. It was the Alberta lobby at work. I do not blame him. Yesterday the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) praised the Conservative government of Ontario. He took a swipe at Saskatchewan. I wish to quote from an article entitled "Foreign-ownership Rule Broken?" which appeared in the May 5 edition of the Financial Post:

> Effective control of another sizeable financial institution has passed out of Canada—right under the noses of Ontario Premier William Davis and his cabinet.

It's Ontario Trust Co., the tenth largest trust company in Canada. While by no means a giant in the industry, Ontario Trust nevertheless has assets of $141 million and is an important trust and loan company in Ontario, where it does most of its business.

The article goes on to state who acquired it, who has the controlling interest, and so on. It further states:

Yet six months after control of Ontario Trust has left Canada, the Ontario government has done nothing about it, even though the change clearly violates the intention of its Loan and Trust Corporation Act . . .

One reason for Davis' lack of action, some observers surmise, may be the apparently friendly associations he and his cabinet have with the Ontario Trust group:

FP has learned that legal business generated by Ontario Trust is referred to Davis, Webb, Hollinrake, the Brampton law firm in which Davis was a partner.

It elaborates much more, but I think that is enough to indicate the gist of the article. What I am trying to say is this: very often governments and people in high places have deliberately sold Canada out to foreign interests.

● (1730)

A number of speakers have talked about the inefficiency of Saskatchewan's socialism. I want to remind those hon. members who have been taking potshots at socialism in our province that we own more of our province than is the case with most of the other provinces. For example, we have no natural gas problem in Saskatchewan right now because our gas resources and our distribution system are provincially owned. It has been that way for 20 years. If other provinces had adopted similar long-term plans, perhaps we would not be faced with the prospect of a fuel crisis in Canada today. We set up an auto insurance plan and used the money which flowed from it to build schools and hospitals and to help local industries, instead of exporting those funds to Winnipeg or Toronto or New York. The plan was successful and other provinces are now in the process of copying it. I believe hon. members should be reminded of this once in a while.

Several months ago there was a danger that one of the meat packing plants in Saskatchewan would pass into United States' hands. The Saskatchewan government bought a 45 per cent interest in it.

An hon. Member: You got sucked into it.

Mr. Nesdoly: An hon. member says we got sucked into it. I would point out to him that after we followed through with this plan two other Canadian companies indicated an interest in setting up packing plants in the province because we had indicated we were not interested in exporting our beef to Winnipeg and elsewhere. A lot of people say we got sucked into things, but time is proving us right. Someone mentioned the box factory, a socialist enterprise which was a complete flop. But the type of government we had in Saskatchewan between 1944 and 1964 was experimenting, and not all its experiments were successful. Some of them were flops. But over-all, the Crown corporations of Saskatchewan have earned more than they have ever lost, and they operate for the benefit of the people.

We have been accused by some hon. members to my right of not possessing much business experience, and the conclusion they draw is that we should not be talking about the corporations. Heaven help our country if we leave the destiny of the nation strictly to businessmen and presidents of corporations. A multinational corporation is not guided by philosophical considerations or love of country. Such corporations have sold Canada down the river on more than one occasion. They have no pride in our country, no national purpose or vision. Yet this is what we need. We need a sense of direction, a sense of destiny in this country. We need a national purpose, and I think the Canadian people have lost it because we are so split up into regions and ideologies.

Multinational corporations are inhuman. They are formless figures which can break the law with impunity as, apparently, Ontario Trust did when it sold out to a foreign corporation with the help of the government of Ontario. Multinational corporations are very often beyond the laws of any nation. They know no national boundaries. They operate quite often in areas where labour is cheap, pay taxes where taxes are low, and sell when the price is right. They are able to switch their huge assets and resources from one country to another, thereby frustrating government policies and even altering the value of currency. Multinational corporations have to accept a great deal of responsibility for the inflation we face in this country as well as for some of the unemployment.

Multinational corporations have blamed labour for many things. I am not saying labour is all saint and no devil; it is a mixture of both. However, one can understand the concern which is expressed when wages received by labour increase by 7 or 8 per cent, and this is denounced as an inflationary trend, whereas salaries paid to executives in 1972 went up by 8.4 per cent—and 8.4 per cent on $100,000 represents a great deal of money, in addition to bonuses. That is one way of rewarding executives. They fly them to Hawaii and see that they get extra bonuses. In 1972 their bonuses were up by 34.2 per cent. This is something people in Canada do not often think about.

Several days ago mention was made on one of the networks of the Columbia River sell-out. I do not know when that happened, but I believe both Conservative and Liberal governments were involved. It was stated that the people who were negotiating this sell-out of the Columbia River were people involved with Canadian Pacific and Cominco. They were negotiating because it helped their own self-interests. They were not interested in Canada but in the welfare of Canadian Pacific and Cominco.

Crown corporations have come in for a lot of criticism in the course of this debate, but I believe that if properly run they can be of great benefit to the country, especially when no conflict of interest arises among the people who control them. Very often, however, conflicts of interest have arisen affecting the directors of Crown corporations. One example which comes to my mind is that of Eldorado Nuclear. I know that the directors of Eldorado Nuclear are also involved in some private companies. When Eldorado Nuclear left Great Bear Lake, it left behind equipment which I am told was worth over $1 million. They sold it to a private company for $150,000. Not only that, Eldorado Nuclear was sitting on top of a rich silver mine and did not even know it. Even more suspicious is the fact that after Eldorado moved to the Lake Athabasca area, within several years some of the key figures resigned and joined the Echo Bay mines group and went back to the Great Bear region and became involved with this silver mine. So it is not only a question of conflict between Canadian corporations and foreign corporations. We have to be very careful, when we set up Canadian-run agencies, that there are no conflicts involving those who control these government-run agencies vis-à-vis private corporations whether Canadian-owned or American-owned.

I intend to support this bill. It is unfortunate that the government did not see fit to extend the screening process to apply to the expansion of existing foreign-owned companies. We tried to get this done, but it appears we have lost that battle. We shall wait for another day. I feel confident that some day we shall win this fight. Many nations are concerned about the whole question of foreign domination of their economies. Sweden, only 60 years ago, was controlled to the extent of 60 per cent by German and British companies. Yet I understand the government of that country has taken steps which have gradually brought back the whole of the Swedish economy into the hands of the Swedish people. It took 40 to 50 years, but they are there now.

● (1740)

We are not saying as a political party, as New Democrats, that we will be able to do this overnight, as it were, in a matter of two or three years. It will probably be a 50-year process. But as I said in one of my speeches earlier this year, we will wait patiently. Even the United States is getting a little concerned about the multinational corporation and foreign investment in the United States today. An interesting article appeared in the Financial Post for September 22, 1973, the headline of which is "Dark U.S. threats about foreigners buying up firms". The article reads:

> Incredible as it may sound to the rest of the world, the U.S. is beginning to talk about restricting foreign investment in its own country.
>
> In what must rank as one of the great reversals of modern times, some U.S. Congressmen are suggesting that Canadian, Japanese and other foreigners should not be allowed unchecked freedom to enter the U.S., take over U.S. companies, and run them in their own way.
>
> The example of the Canada Development Corp. takeover bid for a major interest in Texasgulf Inc., is being cited as the very kind of investment which poses potential dangers to U.S. jobs and contains other economic or political dangers.
>
> One bill has already been introduced in Congress that would virtually prevent any foreigner from gaining control of any U.S. firm.

It seems to me we have been talking about this matter for the last 15 to 20 years, yet the United States, which apparently had not been plagued with this problem hitherto, is further advanced than we are and prepared to take more drastic measures than we are.

> Other less extreme bills, which would nevertheless restrict and control the growth of foreign investment in the U.S. are being considered, FP was told.

I was born and raised in a have-not province. I suppose my own personal philosophy of life has been partly tempered by poverty in my younger days, though I must say that I am fairly comfortably off now. But we hear a lot of talk about welfare funds, unemployment insurance funds and everything else. As an individual and citizen of this country, I have never received a handout from any government, any province or any other person in this country, and I am proud of it. However, I am always willing to pay a few extra bucks in taxes and to give a few dollars here and there if somebody needs it, and I do not begrudge it at all. That has always been my philosophy. Canadians are selling out their own country. And worse, they are very often financing their own sell-out. If we do not reverse the trend soon, we are not going to have a Canada and my children are not going to have a Canada that we all love so dearly.

I should like to quote several paragraphs of a report of remarks made by the president of the Committee for an Independent Canada, a chap by the name of Hurtig. I was rather impressed with his ideas. I think there are some former Liberals and Conservatives in this group; it is a sort of an all-party committee. It is a pressure group, the one pressure group I listen to with interest. Some months ago he spoke to a group of teachers in the province of Saskatchewan and cited the following percentages of foreign ownership and control in Canada. Undoubtedly the House has heard these figures before. Manufacturing, 60 per cent foreign-owned; mining, 60 per cent; petroleum refining, 99.9 per cent foreign-owned—I ask my hon. friend from Calgary North to write that figure; the oil and gas industry, 83 per cent; primary metal smelting and refining, 87 per cent; the automobile industry, 97 per cent; rubber industry, 90 per cent; chemical industry, 78 per cent; the computer industry, 90 per cent; and the aircraft and aircraft parts industries, 92 per cent.

According to Mr. Hurtig, these statistics prove that Canada has a branch plant economy. With that assumption he developed the following syllogism:

> A branch plant economy produces a branch plant society, which produces branch plant social values, which produce branch plant culture, which produces branch plant mentality.

This is what we have in Canada today, a branch plant mentality. Our news media, radio stations and television stations have the mentality of a branch plant. Our approach to investment has a branch plant mentality about it. Our people have no faith in their own country as a result of this branch plant mentality. It is time we took stock of our resources and made up our minds that we are going to get Canada back in the hands of Canadians. It could be done if we put our will to it.

Several years ago the government of Saskatchewan introduced legislation to prohibit foreign ownership of Saskatchewan land. There was a real outcry about it and the legislation was withdrawn, but I hope they will be bringing the bill back again. It is not only a question of foreign ownership of Saskatchewan land, but even Toronto and Vancouver ownership of our land bothers us. In one area of Saskatchewan, 50 sections of prime farmland is owned by Ontario interests. All of the profit derived from that farmland goes back to Ontario—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret interrupting the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree to the hon. member continuing his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nesdoly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On two previous occasions in the House I was not permitted to complete my remarks, so I appreciate this very much. This is a "first" for me.

Hurtig went on to say that it is not too late to do something about it, but time is running out. Unless we very soon turn our country around, and in a dramatic manner, the future of our country is in danger, he said. He claimed that in the decade from 1961 to 1971, foreigners had bought up Canada to the tune of $21 billion but only 19 per cent of that money was foreign money; 81 per cent of the amount was borrowed from Canadian sources. The article continues:

> During the Trudeau years, said Hurtig, American firms sent back to the U.S.A. over $8 billion more than the entire amount of capital brought into Canada.

I believe reference to this was made earlier in our discussion. The article continues:

> The sale of Ryerson Press was a specific example of Canadians financing their own sell-out, he said. The 140-year old Canadian company was sold to a U.S. firm for $2 million borrowed from a Canadian bank.

I feel the question asked by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) about Canadian financial institutions financing our own sell-out is very pertinent at this time.

I should like to thank the House very much for giving me extra time so I could conclude my remarks. An hon. member has sent me over a poem, but I do not think I will read it. I understand parliament is supposed to recess some time in December and there will be a new session after January 1. I hope the New Democratic Party amendments are supported by all sides of the House. We are going to oppose the Conservative Party amendments because they would weaken the bill. I also sincerely hope that as a measure of good faith in the Canadian people—this is a very important matter for them; they feel Canada must regain its own independence—this bill will pass before the House recesses.

● (1750)

Mr. Charles E. Haliburton (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us is one which I am sure all Canadians can endorse for its general principle, that is, preserving Canada for Canadians.

Perhaps I should call it six o'clock since we are so close to the hour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): This could only be done with unanimous consent. Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the hon. member. Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, November 8, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. REYNOLDS—DISPATCHING OF CERTAIN MAIL BY HOUSE OF COMMONS POST OFFICE AS THIRD CLASS

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, of which I have given you notice, regarding the Post Office and a letter received by me on October 27 from the Postmaster General with regard to the mailing to my riding of some 5,000 pieces of mail. This mail took approximately four to five weeks to reach my constituents, which has caused me severe embarrassment.

I wrote to the Postmaster General, explained the matter to him and asked for an explanation as all these envelopes left my office franked and were delivered to the Post Office. His answer was that he understood the envelopes were all of brown Manilla, approximately 6 by 9 in size, and would have been processed and dispatched by the House of Commons Post Office as third class mail. I was quite concerned about this because I was under the impression that all mail of Members of Parliament that is franked leaves the House of Commons as first class mail.

As you know, Sir, I wrote to you and asked if this was so. Today I received a letter from you saying that this is so, that franked mail leaves the House as first class mail and only the mail of householders may be set aside as third class mail. This has disturbed me greatly and caused me embarrassment. I know that other hon. members have also been caused embarrassment.

If Your Honour agrees with me that I have a question of privilege, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections and Privileges.

I do so in order that the Postmaster General can be given a set of guidelines as to how mail is to leave the House of Commons and so that mail that leaves this House will be treated at least on the same basis as that of other citizens of Canada. When a letter is posted before eleven o'clock it is supposed to be delivered the next day.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has given the Chair the notice required under the Standing Order, so that I have had an opportunity to consider the difficulty to which the hon. member has alluded. I assure him that I am very sorry and regret very much that he has been put to this considerable and very real embarrassment. On behalf of the staff of the House, myself and all those who may be responsible in some way for the difficulty, I apologize to the hon. member.

At the same time, my understanding from the subsequent inquiries I have made is that it has been the practice to forward by third class mail bulk mail including, more particularly, brown envelopes when they come to the post office in the thousands. It has been the practice of the Postmaster in our Post Office and his staff to consider these as third class mail unless there is a specific request by members. I was not aware of this regulation, and I feel that hon. members are entitled to have the matter looked into. It may well be, because of the large volume of mail that goes out for the purpose of serving members adequately, that the practice followed until now is one which should be followed, and if that be the case, we should certainly make sure that all hon. members are made aware of it.

I regret very much, as I said, the embarrassment caused to the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta. I will look into the matter further, if the hon. member will allow me to do so, and try to advise all hon. members as to the procedures which are followed at present and which might be improved on the basis of advice and counsel from hon. members.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSING

STUDENT CO-OPERATIVE PROJECTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) that a departmental study of student co-operative housing in Ontario has been referred to law enforcement officers, and in view of the minister's refusal to table this report, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That the Prime Minister be requested to appoint a public inquiry into this matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

ENERGY

RESTORATION OF DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME TO CONSERVE USE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43 I wish to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing national interest. Having in mind the North American need for energy conservation and the necessity, if this is to be achieved, of federal leadership and, further, the reported consideration now being given by the United States to such a step, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight):

That the appropriate department of the government give immediate consideration to encouraging the re-establishment of daylight saving time in order to conserve the use of electrical energy by means of shortening the period of the day when lighting is required.

Mr. Speaker: This motion also requires the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

* * *

● (1410)

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

COVERAGE OF QUEBEC ELECTION CAMPAIGN—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss an extremely important matter for the safeguard of Canadian unity.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That the estimates of the CBC be referred to the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates to enable hon. members who still believe in confederation to ask questions to the directors of the corporation concerning their frankly PQ attitude during the last provincial electoral campaign in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[English]

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

DISMISSAL OF EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, POLICY PLANNING DIVISION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. This motion arises out of the recent dismissal of Mr. Walter Rudnicki, Executive Director of the Policy Planning Division of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Since it has been suggested that Mr. Rudnicki was dismissed simply for carrying out his duties, specifically by consulting with native peoples concerning native housing, it is essential that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) give a full explanation of the circumstances justifying the dismissal of such a senior person working on such an important matter. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert):

That this House instruct the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to make a statement on motions at the earliest possible occasion which will provide a full explanation for the dismissal of Mr. Rudnicki.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

* * *

BROADCASTING

NORTHLAND CABLE TELEVISION APPLICATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of very serious and pressing necessity. This situation results from an application by Northland Cable Television to the Canadian Radio-Television Commission for cable rights in Sudbury and the fact that Northland Cable Television is owned by Cambrian Broadcast, which is now owned by Multiple Access of Montreal, which is in turn owned by the CEMP Investments Limited, which is owned by four Bronfman Children, three of whom are non-resident in Canada, that is Edgar Bronfman, Minda Bronfman and Phyllis Bronfman. I therefore move—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was just going to suggest to the hon. member that perhaps he had reached the point where the motion ought to be put.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is what I am about to do, Mr. Speaker. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That this House instructs the Minister of Communications to inform the CRTC of a possible breach of CRTC regulations with respect to Canadian residence and citizenship requirements.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST PEACEKEEPING FORCE—ALLEGED PARTICIPATION OF POLISH FORCES WITH EGYPTIANS IN WAR—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Can he give the House the assurance that, before allowing our forces to serve along a Polish contingent, he will make sure that soldiers of the Polish armed forces did not fight side by side with the Egyptians during the recent conflict?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there has been some problem about Poland's participation in the peacekeeping force. This is the first time I have heard that the objection would relate to any such charge. I do know, however, that Israel has expressed some reluctance to accept as members of the force those states which do not have diplomatic representation with both sides in this conflict. However, while I was in New York the United States withdrew its opposition to Poland and it was on that basis that the Secretary General proceeded.

[Translation]

Mr. Wagner: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Will the hon. minister seek information from the Israel and UAR governments to ascertain whether Polish fighters took part in the last Middle East war and, if so, can he assure the House that Canada will refuse to be part of an impartial peacekeeping force with a group which actively engaged in this war?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: While Canada would, of course, be prepared to accept an invitation to undertake a task of this kind, I think it would be more appropriate for the Secretary General of the United Nations, who has responsibility under the Security Council for the membership of the force, to make the necessary inquiries. I do not think it would be for Canada, unless we have objection to being a member of that force, not to agree to participate.

MIDDLE EAST PEACEKEEPING FORCE—REPORTED PROPOSAL TO CONFINE CANADIAN ELEMENT TO ISRAELI SIDE OF CEASEFIRE LINE AND POLES TO EGYPTIAN SIDE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, will the minister assure the House that the government will resist a proposal—I admit I have only seen it as a proposal—that the Canadian component of UNEF be confined to the Israeli side of the so-called ceasefire line and that the Polish component be confined to the Egyptian side, an arrangement which would surely compromise the effectiveness of the peace-keeping role, be it logistical or otherwise?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): When this idea was first put to me in New York I expressed the gravest misgivings about it. I do not think it is a practical proposition, and I agree with the hon. member that it is most undesirable from the point of view of setting up a sound international force.

* * *

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

ALLEGED CONFLICT OF INTEREST ON PART OF DEPUTY MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question or two for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I appreciate that he was not the minister in charge of this department in May, 1970, when his present deputy was first appointed, but is the minister aware that for about a year after his appointment Mr. Austin had interests in M.N.S. Investments, later acquired by St. Maurice Capital Corporation whose name was changed to Commerce Capital Corporation, and that these interests included mining and exploration ventures? Has the minister discussed with his deputy this question of his interests in related areas?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions with my deputy in this regard. He advises me that his purchase of shares in M.N.S. Investments was simultaneous with the merger of that company with another one, so that he was not in fact a shareholder for a year in M.N.S. Investments. The corporate merger resulting from this was a company called Commerce Capital Corporation Limited, and I am advised that its line of business was and is not in the area of resource development but in the area of financial services. The rest of Mr. Austin's assets, I am advised, were deposited in a frozen trust at the time he took on his job as a public servant. He advises me with respect to his investment in Commerce Capital Corporation that the company has not been operating in any sphere to which his departmental responsibilities relate.

Mr. Lewis: I should like to ask the minister whether in his discussions with Mr. Austin he was made aware that Commerce Capital Corporation is interlocked with Power Corporation which does have interests in the energy field, notably its control of Northern and Central Gas Limited. If this item has not been brought to his attention, would the minister look into it further?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I must say I did not know that Commerce Capital Corporation was interlocked, if indeed it is, with Power Corporation, but I will undertake to inquire further in that regard and report.

INQUIRY AS TO REFERRAL OF GREEN PAPER RELATING TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT TO COMMITTEE AND STATEMENT ON PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): In the absence of the President of the Privy Council I would like to address this question to the Prime Minister. On July 17 the President of the Privy Council made a statement and filed a green paper with respect to conflict of interest as it affects members of this House and senators, and on July 18 the Prime Minister made a further statement with respect to members of his cabinet. I should like to ask the Prime Minister, first, when the green paper relating to Members of Parliament of both Houses will be referred to the appropriate committee of the House as the President of the Privy Council undertook to do and, second, when, if ever, may we expect a statement regarding conflict of interest in regard to senior public servants?

● (1420)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first question, I reiterate the undertaking made by the President of the Privy Council, which was quite clear and supported, I believe, by the House, that this paper would be referred to a committee. I believe the appropriate committee would be the committee which is at present looking at the bill on election expenses. We are anxious to have that bill come out of committee, not only to have it before the House but in order to be able to refer the paper of the President of the Privy Council to that committee.

In reply to the second question, I know that work has gone forward and the general guidelines have already been accepted by me. I shall have to verify when the statement will be made public; I am informed it might be before Christmas.

* * *

[Translation]

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF BALANCED BUDGET IN LIGHT OF INCREASED EXPENDITURES

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Finance.

In view of the fact that government expenditures will exceed $1 billion this year, can the minister tell the House whether the revenue of the government will be sufficient to balance the budget without increasing taxes.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I think that would constitute a fascinating prediction, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary. Can the minister tell us where he will find the additional revenue required to balance his budget?

[Mr. Lewis.]

Could he also say whether he is counting on inflationary measures to find the required capital or whether he will be satisfied with another deficit?

Mr. Speaker: This debate may perhaps be continued when the minister tables the budget.

* * *

[English]

ENERGY

POSSIBLE CHARTERING OF TANKERS TO MOVE OIL FROM WEST COAST TO EASTERN CANADA—RESTORATION TO SERVICE OF TORONTO-MONTREAL PRODUCTS PIPELINE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to question the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as to what success he is having with regard to some of the means he indicated last week he was exploring to move additional oil into Quebec and/or the Atlantic provinces. With particular reference to his statement that the Trans Mountain pipeline can carry an additional 50,000 barrels a day, has the minister succeeded, either directly or indirectly, in chartering additional tankers with a view to moving any such oil from the west into areas of possible shortage? If so, how much capacity has been chartered?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is referring to my statement on Monday night. I would have to check to see what success there has been, either in my ministry or the Department of Transport, in making that kind of charter arrangement.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the minister whether he has made arrangements to load any such tankers from the Trans Mountain pipeline at Cherry Point in the state of Washington, which I understand is the only point in the pipeline that can be used for loading ships? I ask this question particularly in view of the fight that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is conducting to keep shipments of oil out of those waters.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I will check that question as well.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I can do better on this one, or perhaps the minister can.

Mr. Baldwin: He has no energy left.

Mr. Stanfield: My question is with regard to the hopes the minister expressed about moving some petroleum products through the petroleum products line running between Toronto and Montreal. What plans has the minister made to put back into operation the approximately 50 miles of that products pipeline that are completely out of service and unusable? Can the minister indicate to the House what plans he has afoot to be able to use that pipeline for the purpose he indicated?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the questions that my officials have had under discussion with the pipeline companies.

ALLEGED ARAB UNDERTAKING TO SUPPLY QUEBEC WITH UNLIMITED QUANTITIES OF OIL FOR PROPOSED REFINERY AT RIVIÈRE-DU-LOUP

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Can he advise the House if during the course of his discussions with Premier Bourassa the premier mentioned to him the Arab undertaking to supply to Quebec, at Rivière-du-Loup and the proposed refinery there, unlimited quantities of oil on the undertaking that they not be made available to other parts of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I will have to repeat to the House for the third or fourth time that these conversations I have with the premiers of the various provinces are, by agreement between us, to be held in confidence by each participant. The premier, of course, is free to make public his views on any of the subjects we discussed, but I am not in a position to reveal what Premier Bourassa told me in any part of that conversation.

Mr. Hellyer: Would the Prime Minister be good enough to give us the view of the Government of Canada in respect of this proposal, which would have the effect of driving such an obvious wedge in the relationships between Quebec and the rest of the country?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the rumour on which the question is founded ever became anything like a real prospect, probably we would have to decide our policy position on it, but at this stage it is more than a hypothetical question; it is purely a rumour.

CHARTERING OF TANKERS TO TRANSFER WESTERN CRUDE OIL TO EASTERN CANADA—MOVEMENT BY RAILWAYS AND TRUCKS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding the transfer of western crude to eastern Canada to meet the situation there this winter. First, may I ask whether the cabinet has authorized the chartering of tankers for this purpose or is that still awaiting cabinet decision? Second, what is the outcome of the meeting which officials of the Department of Transport and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources have had with the railroads and the trucking firms regarding what amount of tank cars and trucks would be available to move oil products into eastern Canada this winter?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the Department of Transport does have the authority to enter into charter contracts. I cannot, unfortunately, give the details of any possible charters or, indeed, a full analysis yet of the discussions with the land carriers.

Mr. Douglas: I hope the minister will make such a report.

POSSIBILITY OF PURCHASING VENEZUELAN OIL TAKEN BY THAT COUNTRY IN LIEU OF ROYALTIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I also ask the minister about his statement on Monday night that there is a mission from his department now in Caracas discussing with the Venezuelan government the possibility of purchasing oil which it would take in lieu of royalties from the oil companies operating in that area?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in answer to a question from the Leader of the Opposition yesterday in that regard I said it is our diplomatic mission in Venezuela which is making the contact. As I said, to the moment the Venezuelans have not decided whether to take their sixteen and two thirds per cent royalties in kind or not. That is apparently a question for the government there. In answer to the previous question I said I did not have a report on the meeting with the land carriers.

PROPOSALS FOR MOVING OIL FROM WEST TO EASTERN CANADA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that when the minister spoke on Monday night he obviously had not checked out the business of shipping oil by tanker from the west coast, or using this products pipeline, has he checked out in any way any of the other proposals he put before the House that evening with regard to the movement of oil into areas of shortage?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I was speaking on the basis of the advice I had received from my officials and from the National Energy Board, and I have no reason at the moment to believe that their qualified advice in this regard should not be taken.

POSSIBLE DEVELOPMENT OF COAL PRODUCTION IN CUMBERLAND COUNTY, NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources a supplementary question. Among the alternate forms of energy development he suggested are coal developments in Nova Scotia, and more particularly the 40 million tons of coal that are in reserve under the ground at Springhill in Cumberland County. Would the minister indicate just exactly what the government has done, is doing or plans to do regarding the possible development of this coal field?

● (1430)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have had some discussions with the premier of Nova Scotia regarding the possibility of reactivating the Cumberland coal belt. I believe the government of that province has this under more active consideration. It being a provincial resource, I think they may be reflecting again on the possibility of developing it.

LOWER CHURCHILL FALLS, NEWFOUNDLAND—POSSIBLE DEVELOPMENT AS ALTERNATE POWER SOURCE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. It is in line with the question of the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North regarding alternate sources of power. I wonder if the minister has had any discussions with the province of Newfoundland on the development of the lower Churchill Falls which could be an alternate source of power?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have. While we were requested at the time to preserve the confidentiality of those discussions, some news reports have been published since which I think indicate the general trend of those discussions. My colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and I are continuing our negotiations with Newfoundland.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

FOOD PRICES, MERCHANDISING IRREGULARITIES AND GASOLINE RETAILING—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INQUIRIES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It is now just about a month since the minister undertook in the House to report on the investigation which is being conducted by his department under the Combines Investigation Act into the 159 retail merchandising irregularities reported to him by the Food Prices Review Board. Is the minister now in a position to tell us if and when charges will be laid?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my information is that the officials are completing their work on these files and I should be in a position to report to my hon. friend more substantially very shortly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: I should like to ask the following question by way of a supplementary. In September the minister undertook to cause an investigation under the Combines Investigation Act to be made into the food industry in Canada, and again on October 30 the minister undertook to investigate the effect of the increases in energy costs on the cost of food production in Canada, and again in February of this year—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not believe the hon. member is on a point of order, and he should ask his question as quickly as possible.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. McGrath: I am coming to my question, Mr. Speaker. In February the minister undertook to look into gas retailing practices in Canada. May I ask the minister if he is now in a position to tell the House just exactly how these investigations stand at the moment, and is he in a position to report on any of them?

Mr. Gray: I will have to check exactly what was said in this regard—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: I want to say with respect to the third point that this investigation is being carried on within the ambit of the inquiry into the petroleum industry. Under the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act, it is not possible to give detailed comments until the inquiry is terminated either by going to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission or to the courts, or else the report has been terminated, and so stated by the director.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has statutory responsibilities to this House under the act. The act states as follows:

> The duties, powers and functions of the minister extend to and include all matters over which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction, not by law assigned to any other department, branch or agency of the government of Canada, relating to
>
> (a) consumer affairs;

Section 6 reads as follows:

> In exercising his powers and carrying out his duties and functions in relation to consumer affairs under this act, the Minister shall
>
> (a) initiate, recommend or undertake programs designed to promote the interests of the Canadian consumer;

This minister has abdicated his statutory responsibilities by refusing to answer questions in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: The record is full of undertakings by the minister to cause investigations to be undertaken into various aspects of food retailing and merchandising in Canada, and they stand on the record merely as empty undertakings. The minister hides behind a totally useless, totally ineffective Food Prices Review Board. He should resign.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure you and all hon. members that when I give undertakings I carry them out.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: The Leader of the Opposition has found that out with respect to the handling of the report on monitoring of the budget. I have to carry out these undertakings within the requirements of the laws passed by parliament, such as the Combines Investigation Act. I can certainly show the House pieces of evidence, such as the bill I tabled the other day to implement the first stage of the competition policy that my efforts for the consumers have far exceeded the empty and meaningless volume of words uttered by my hon. friend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that we have again embarked on a series of points of order and questions of privilege which take up so much of the time of the question period. I would hope we could go on to the next questioner. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate now rises—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member is not rising on a point of order but on a supplementary to the first question. He will be recognized for this, and I will see the hon. member for Winnipeg North immediately after.

ALLEGED EXCESSIVE INTEREST CHARGES BY BANKS ON GOVERNMENT GUARANTEED LOANS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INQUIRY

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary along the lines—

An hon. Member: Same old story.

Mr. Lundrigan: —of ministerial investigations into consumer price increases. On the 24th of October the minister indicated—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am just wondering whether the hon. member is arguing the same point of order or rising on a supplementary question. Perhaps I should have allowed him to go ahead, but the beginning of his question gave me the impression he was on the same point of order. I was obviously wrong. The hon. member may ask his question.

Mr. Lundrigan: On October 24, when a member of this chamber asked the minister to inquire into a charge that the banks were charging in excess of the legally permissible interest rates on a number of government loan programs, the minister indicated he was making an inquiry. Can he tell us what happened to that inquiry in view of the fact he has indicated he accepts and assumes his responsibilities?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As the first step I was in touch with my colleague, the Minister of Finance—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Did he whisper in your ear?

Mr. Gray: —who has asked the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe to provide us with information on which he based his question. I do not know whether my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, has received it yet, but it certainly has not been provided to me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do hope we can go on to the next question. The hon. member rises on a supplementary question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will not be doing the House any good or helping the situation by shouting as they are doing now. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has the floor. He will be recognized on a supplementary, and eventually I hope to be able to recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, we could have had two or three questions in that much time. Can the minister tell the House why it is that since he made his undertaking on October 24 the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe who raised the question has not received—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member. The hon. member for Lotbinière rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lotbinière has the floor on a point of order, and I will hear the hon. member's point of order afterwards.

• (1440)

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. I want you to know that we, of the Social Credit Party of Canada, are beginning to be most impatient because of the waste of time by the Progressive Conservative party during the oral question period—

Some hon. Members: What is your problem?

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, our problem is the following: there are too many Progressive Conservative members and not enough true members on the other side of the House.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I ask for the co-operation of hon. members. We have had a point of order and the Chair is entitled to hear the views of hon. members on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Lotbinière.

[Translation]

The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I feel that you—

An hon. Member: In French!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I feel that you have always granted a fair amount of attention to the Creditiste members during the oral question period, and I suggest to my good Creditiste friends that there are more Progressive Conservative than Creditiste members in this House.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we might now consider that the point of order has been made, debated and concluded and return to the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate who was attempting to ask a supplementary question. He will be recognized for that purpose, after which I will go to the hon. member for Winnipeg North. But time flies.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, it is a very serious question. In an effort to ascertain if the minister is assuming his responsibilities as he is charged to do by the Parliament of Canada and the people, can he explain to the House why it is that since his undertaking on the 24th there have been two reports by the Department of Finance to the member from the province who raised the question and there has been no report at all from his department that he has carried out the inquiry in question and he has not carried out his undertaking and has not made any report to the member?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, in a desperate attempt to score a few political points my hon. friend has forgotten that this parliament has given the jurisdiction over several guaranteed loan programs, including the fisheries improvement loan program, to the Minister of Finance. Therefore I think most people would agree that the effective way to carry out an inquiry into this matter would be to work in co-operation with the Minister of Finance, and that is exactly what I am doing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we are being somewhat unfair to other hon. members by continuing this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I would hope that hon. members might allow the Chair at this point to recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a point of order and I must hear him.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, we are more concerned about being fair to the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a point of order he should indicate quickly what it is. He has a responsibility, he says, to many people. I have a responsibility to hon. members and to this House and I am prepared to discharge it. I will hear the hon. member and then make a ruling.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, the minister just said that he has no responsibility and that the inquiry is being carried on by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Gray: I did not say that.

Mr. Lundrigan: On October 24 the question raised was that consumers were being forced to pay higher interest rates for loans under several government improvement loan programs that are legitimate under the law and therefore this was adding to the cost of living and to the burden of a great number of people across the country. In Hansard at page 7186 for that day, the minister said that he would make an answer. Today he stands up and says that he has no responsibility—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please resume his seat. I seek the co-operation of hon. members who obviously are impatient to the point that they want to leave the House. I invite them to remain and I will try to recognize them. The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

* * *

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—CRITERIA FOR ALLOCATION OF GRANTS TO CONSTITUENCIES—REQUEST FOR LIST

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Within the next few days will he be tabling a list of the amounts of LIP grants allocated to each constituency? Can he also explain briefly the formula used to arrive at the varying amounts allocated to different constituencies?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are now in the process of advising each constituency advisory group, and/or the member, of the allocation for the constituency. I will ask the indulgence of the House and try to explain the formula. Interprovincially, it is based on absolute numbers of unemployed in the province versus the total amount of unemployment in the country with provision for registration of Indian people on reserves who do not show up in the labour force survey. Within the province itself it is addressed as equitably as possible to high pockets of unemployment, although every constituency has a basic allocation. I can elaborate if the hon. member wishes or tell him in private conversation, whichever he prefers.

Mr. Orlikow: Can the minister explain the reasoning which led to the fact that the constituency of Winnipeg South, which has the highest per capita income of any constituency in Manitoba, is getting three to four times the amount in LIP grants as the constituency of Selkirk or my own constituency which have much poorer people?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

I recognize the hon. member for Shefford.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister—

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the minister is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I was rising to try to answer the question. The per capita income of a given constituency is not necessarily the basic criteria because, as I explained a minute ago, it is basically addressed to pockets of high unemployment—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Andras: —but there are many unemployed—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North is rising on his own point of order.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, because of the noise I did not hear the last part of the minister's answer. Is the minister trying to tell the members of this House that there is more unemployment and more need in Winnipeg South than in any other constituency?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member and the hon. minister that that is debate. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Shefford.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Shefford, but the hon. member for Saint-Boniface is raising a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask, through you, a question of the minister in charge of the Local Initiatives Program. How come then that—

Some hon. Members: Order!

An hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a point of order—that the program for Manitoba last year—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. parliamentary secretary resume his seat? The hon. member sought the floor on a point of order.

An hon. Member: Go see the P.M.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If hon. members will be patient, there are only five minutes left before the end of the question period. That is obviously not a point of order. The hon. member was trying to ask a supplementary question. I have already recognized the hon. member for Shefford so maybe he should be given an opportunity to ask his question.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the opposition can get up on points of order and questions of privilege and make speeches, surely I have the right to represent the people who elected me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member sought and was given the floor on a point of order and then proceeded to ask a question. I think it was perhaps too obvious to the Chair that it was a question and not a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): My question is addressed through you, Mr. Speaker, and through nobody else. It refers to the Local Initiatives Program. Out of a total program of $7,859,962 last year for the province of Manitoba with its 13 constituencies, how come the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre got over $2 million and I only got $125,000?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1450)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will recall that a while ago I was hoping that the members of the party to my extreme right might be given a chance to ask one question at least. I am still trying to do this. I would hope hon. members would permit me to let them complete one question. We will then return in the last few minutes to all the points of order and questions of privilege that appear to interest hon. members this afternoon.

* * *

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ROLE OF CORPORATION IN QUEBEC ELECTION—INQUIRY AS TO ANALYSIS BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

From regional offices and other available sources of information, can the Prime Minister say whether a study of the Quebec vote results has been undertaken and whether the role of the CBC in the election campaign has been considered?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rondeau: I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Has the right hon. Prime Minister still in his possession the "key" he once thought of using to close down the CBC, and when will he use it?

* * *

[English]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

POSITION OF ADVISORY COUNCIL—APPOINTMENT OF NEW MEMBERS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the minister's remarks a moment ago about being anxious to help the consumer during these difficult days of rising costs, would he explain to the House why he let the Consumer Advisory Council, which was set up in 1968 with very great representation from the present Minister of State for Urban Affairs and the present Minister of Finance, expire as of June 30, and why he has not taken action either to replace that body or to provide a more important and more useful body?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first, the basic work of the council is going on. This work is put out under contract to academics and researchers across the country. These contracts were issued by the council itself. I hope to be in a position to make an announcement about new appointments to the council before too much more time goes by.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I find it very difficult, as do other hon. members, to understand how a board can continue to exist after it has expired. The board, which was made up of 24 members, expired at the end of June. The minister has not yet indicated for what reason he allowed it to expire and why he believes that it is more useful to have a board that is not operating than to have one that is operating.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I was talking about the basic research work of the board which is carried out by academics across the country under contracts that were issued by the board before the terms of its members expired. I hope to have an announcement to make about new appointments before too much more time goes by.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a question of privilege. I believe the hon. member for Fraser Valley West has a supplementary. I will recognize him in a short while.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I regret having to raise a question of privilege on another matter involving the minister, but it seems that the minister acts in disobeyance of legislation passed by this House. Section 7 of the act stipulates or suggests that the Governor in Council may establish a consumer advisory council to advise or assist the minister. The minister now seems to feel that matters related to his department are so unimportant that he can let this particular group expire without giving a proper explanation to the House or to the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is obviously debate between the hon. member and the minister. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Fraser Valley West and then the hon. member for Crowfoot.

* * *

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—METHOD FOR DETERMINING POCKETS OF UNEMPLOYMENT—BASIS OF GRANTS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to a previous question directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration concerning LIP grants and the reply he gave to the hon. member for Winnipeg North. Since Statistics Canada does not provide a riding by riding breakdown of unemployment figures, how does the minister arrive at those various pockets of unemployment of which he spoke? Does he intend to provide the House with the basis for these grants, since they vary between adjacent ridings from almost $12 per capita in Vancouver Centre to $1 per capita in Vancouver South and $2 per capita in Vancouver Kingsway?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that the varying opinions about the acceptability of the allocations from all sides of the House indicate that I am approaching this with a considerable degree of neutrality.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andras: And in the process, as one of my colleagues suggests, I am probably being unfair to everyone. The hon. member is quite right with regard to unemployment statistics. The labour force survey does not go into the infinite detail of constituencies or manpower centres. We do use information with regard to the registration and traffic flow through our manpower centres. We adjust this and superimpose it in a particular case over the constituency's geographical area. We are doing this to the best of our ability. I believe that the allocations, basically, are as fair as it is possible to make them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West has a further supplementary. He will be recognized, as will the hon. member for Crowfoot and the hon. member for Témiscamingue, and then we will have to call orders of the day.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, the minister has revealed that basically what he has used for input in determining these grants is the crystal ball neutrality method. Will he provide members of the House with the precise formula on which these grants are based?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, very sadly, there is no precise formula based on statistical evidence. I have said quite candidly that we use the best evidence we can get, which is the accumulation of unemployed people registered at manpower centres.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether the minister feels that he ought to continue his reply. It is very difficult to hear what he is attempting to say, in any event. It might be easier if the Chair were to recognize the hon. member for Crowfoot.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO WHY RETAIL BEEF PRICE TO BE SO MUCH GREATER THAN INCREASE TO PRODUCER

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, possibly I should apologize to you, sir. I want to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I assure you and the House that my question will be easy and that he will have no difficulty answering it. Recently the government imposed a three cent surtax on live beef entering Canada, and this caused the price to the farmer to go up by 1½ cents per pound. However, retailers have been saying that beef will cost the consumer an extra 12 cents a pound. In light of that, would the minister turn loose the peerless Plumptre posse and try to ascertain why that 12 cents a pound increase is necessary?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his very constructive question. Perhaps his colleagues could learn from it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: I will be happy to see that the question is brought to the attention of the body in question.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): A quick supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has what he calls a quick supplementary question, we will judge after he has asked his question. Then the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I did not really hear the minister's answer. He flattered me by saying that my question was very constructive, but his answer was less than constructive. I did not hear anything constructive in his answer at all. There is some concern about our food distribution system. Knowing that the part of Canada he represents is close to Detroit, where there are Mafia connections, may I ask the minister whether he has looked into the possibility of the Mafia of the United States being involved in our food distribution industry?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I asked a simple question and I should get a simple answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that a question asked in those terms is hardly in order, and I do not think the minister should be allowed to answer.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the minister himself said my question was very constructive. Why can he not answer all my questions?

An hon. Member: He answered the first one.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): It was the easiest question I could ask. If you cannot answer a simple question, how can you answer the difficult ones?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

● (1500)

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGED INCORRECT NEWS REPORT CONCERNING ALLOWANCE TO MEMBERS FOR CONSTITUENCY SECRETARIATS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): If the frogs could stop croaking and chattering, I could ask my question.

Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. Last evening, on the CBC network, an "intelligent" announcer of the national news service said that federal representatives had voted themselves a monthly $700 tax free allowance, whereas in fact these increases will be used to pay a secretary in each riding, as is already the case in Quebec—a fact that nobody mentioned.

I ask the Prime Minister whether the government will eventually intervene in the unspeakable conduct of some individuals of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly ensure that this remark is brought to the attention of the CBC president and I shall tell him that I agree with the hon. member, namely that many employees of this corporation do their job very badly, when they do not reflect crass ignorance.

* * *

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the acting government House leader to confirm the business for tomorrow and indicate what the House leader has in mind for the first of the week.

Mr. Faulkner: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton asked a question; perhaps the minister could answer it. I believe the hon. member for Témiscamingue has a supplementary question. With the consent of the House, he may be able to ask it in a moment, since the oral question period is expired. For the time being, it would be easier to allow the minister to answer the question asked by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

[English]

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, I can respond as follows. As the hon. member knows, today is an allotted day. Tomorrow we will continue with the report stage of Bill C-132 and carry that through, if it is not completed tomorrow, to next week and then deal with the third reading stage until that is completed. Following that, we will take up the report stage and third reading of the two Canada Pension Plan amendment bills, C-190 and C-224.

The hon. member interjected a remark about the discussion of the Middle East situation. That is a subject for discussion now among the various political parties. I think there will be an announcement on that tomorrow. Following the Canada Pension Plan amendment bills, we will deal with second reading of Bill S-4.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister or the Minister of National Health and Welfare wherein lies the reason for the delay in having Bill C-211 on family allowances, which passed second reading here, brought before the standing committee for urgent attention?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I said in the House at the end of the debate on second reading, I have a number of amendments to move in committee. I expect to have them at hand at the end of the week and I hope it will be possible to call an emergency meeting next week and conclude the consideration of the bill during the week, so that it may be brought back to the House as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the business announced for tomorrow, perhaps it might be noted there is an understanding among the House leaders that if any recorded votes are requested tomorrow afternoon on report stage amendments to the foreign investment bill, the taking of those votes will be deferred at least until Tuesday night.

Mr. Faulkner: That is my understanding, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGED INCORRECT NEWS REPORT CONCERNING ALLOWANCE TO MEMBERS FOR CONSTITUENCY SECRETARIATS—REQUEST FOR CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary to the Prime Minister.

Is it possible to ask the CBC to apologize as soon as possible to the Canadian people for having given it inaccurate information on the air last night?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge the CBC president has seriously endeavoured in the last few years to make sure that his branches and services are qualified and, inasmuch as I can see, he has always agreed to have the corporation correct its mistakes whenever possible and in the way indicated by the hon. member. I shall not fail, therefore, to draw Mr. Picard's attention to the hon. member's proposal.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saint-Boniface is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to your attention and to that of hon. members that today is the eighth anniversary of the first election of the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is the best spectacle of apple polishing I have ever seen in this House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

● (1510)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO ENCOURAGE PROVINCIAL CONSULTATION TO REDRAFT THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain) moved:

That this House deplores the fact that the government is maintaining the unity of the country through fear, autocracy and oligarchy, and has failed to do anything to encourage the provinces to get together in order to amend or redraft the Canadian constitution, thus protecting the country against national difficulties by meeting the basic aspirations of each province.

He said: It is quite an honour for me today to put forward this serious and realistic motion on behalf of the Social Credit Party of Canada, a motion urging all hon. members to ponder over the constitutional situation in our country, in order to try and find adequate solutions which would favour both the autonomy and development of all regions of Canada.

The surprise, or rather the state of shock, which resulted from the last provincial elections in Quebec should not cause us to delude ourselves into believing that there are no problems any more, the greater majority of Quebecers having chosen the status quo, that is, the federalist option. On the contrary, the analysis of the results show that the people of Quebec, because of the fear and panic systematically nourished by Liberal governments both in Ottawa and Quebec City since 1968, have been unable to make a political choice based on the platforms of the various parties, but rather have indicated their unwillingness to decide the future of their province in an election. The Liberal strategy was pushed so far that the point was reached where the Quebec voter might fear independence more than the mob which might explain perhaps the decision to adjourn the sittings of the commission of inquiry into organized crime during the election campaign.

I must confess, Mr. Speaker, that other political parties in that province unconsciously or otherwise played the Liberal game. They involuntarily pushed part of their own supporters in that Liberal wave that nearly destroyed democracy in Quebec. I do not think that they will become again that shield, that screen, that unconscious instrument that suits those who vindicate an outdated status quo and keep the unity of this nation going through fear, autocracy and oligarchy. The Liberal government of Canada, the quiet owner of constitutional truth, seems to do away with the opinion of opposition parties. That results in a one-way dialogue between federalists and independentists. We have a government that establishes through feelings, fear and false security an authoritarian and dictatorial regime in that area.

At the time of the first colonial conferences which resulted in the BNA Act four provinces decided to form a confederation of autonomous states based on the historic circumstances at that time. The intentions of those commonly known of the Fathers of Confederation were certainly not I think those that are attributed to them at times today. Yet, it must be recognized that the federal government is only the creature of the provinces, and if 106 years later the provinces now numbering ten decide to amend or rewrite that constitution they of course have the priority and they alone may determine jointly the changes that are necessary for the benefit of all the provinces in general or each and everyone of them in particular.

The part played by the federal Parliament is therefore becoming more that of a motivator, observer and conciliator. This is obviously a far cry from that assumed by preceding governments—especially that of the present government with its arrogant paternalism—which have always refused to let the provinces have their autonomy or amend the constitution, thus compelling an impressive number of Quebecers to resort to extreme solutions.

They have forgotten that the Fathers of Confederation had wanted to make the country strong, to have a kind of common market in a position to resist the ravenous and insatiable appetite of the American ogre. It was imperative for that that French Canada remain itself, thus staying by its own originality the attacks of American imperialism and making Canada what it is.

We must therefore recognize, Mr. Speaker, that we are now before a fait accompli. Canadian confederation has bit by bit developed into a centralizing and unitary Canadian state.

● (1520)

As a consequence of all kinds of events,—economic crises, wars, and so on—the spirit of the Constitution itself has been distorted. Of course, this Constitution has become outmoded, inadequate, and is at the root of many a dispute. All across Canada, and particularly in Quebec, people are expecting changes. The need for a reform is a priority.

The government could reply that they have made a great effort, while they have found nothing better at the height of the constitutional storm than to offer, or rather to try and impose upon the provinces, in 1971, the famous Victoria Charter that all the political parties represented in the Quebec National Assembly rejected unanimously.

By its action the government has turned a national issue into a matter of political partisanship. In Quebec, if one choses to be a federalist one must indiscriminately be a Liberal. Anyone who feels strongly about the development of Quebec is called a separatist.

I remember that on several occasions, when I was sitting on the other side of the House, the Liberal members never failed to call me a separatist as soon as my observations were in favour of Quebec.

They believe that it is sentimental nationalism to struggle for the emancipation and self achievement of one's fellow citizens. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that the most sentimental are not on the side we think they are.

I find my Liberal colleagues are fond of great epic battles against separatism and they are satisfied with that because they believe that Quebecers will never give away this beautiful and great Canada which belongs to them. You believe that as long as you never cross the Ottawa River. I think they count on people's emotions. They rely on that fear of separatism and they stand on their position.

Mr. Speaker, that is the best way to exasperate progressive people in this country.

We should obviously not minimize the importance of this element since the analysis of the recent election in Quebec has shown that more than 35 per cent of the French Canadians in Quebec voted for the Parti Québécois in spite of the devastating majority gathered by the liberal steamroller.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time that we should say whatever has to be said. Truth has been hidden too long. Let us open our hearts and minds to sincere and friendly discussion. We should no longer fear to face the problems as they really are. Canada is an adult country which can, in all honesty, let every province decide whichever amendments should be made to the Constitution, or whether it should be entirely revamped.

The federal government should be sufficiently conscientious, if not magnanimous, to admit that its excessive centralization policy has been wrong and that it should give back to the provinces the prerogatives which they demand.

As concerns our constitutional future, Mr. Speaker, many personalities have already mentioned various alternatives. At one of the federal-provincial conferences, the former premier of British Columbia spoke of a Confederation of five regions instead of ten.

The now Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) is known to hold the same opinion. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has often alluded to this subject. You will certainly remember his statement of November 29, 1970, in which he said:

"A referendum might be necessary because more and more the federal government is heading towards ultimate confrontation with the separatist movement" . . .

This proves again how this government seems to favour and consider separatism as politically valuable.

To support my argument I would like to quote from an editorial by Jean Pellerin published in La Presse of Montreal on Tuesday November 6, 1973. Even though I do not agree with all the points raised in the editorial, I think this quotation should back up today's motion. I quote:

Canada has been considering as desirable the repatriation of its constitution and the adoption of a Canadian formula of amendment for such a long time, could it be that the time for taking this historic decision is drawing near?

In Canada, it is difficult to have everyone in agreement. The Canadian opinion is divided on several points but people do agree at least, and almost to a man, on the necessity of repatriating the constitution some day.

Agreement also exists in Quebec. The election of October 29 indicated that most people in this province do not trust separatism. But, nonetheless, this majority is not satisfied with our current constitution. On the contrary, people want a major reform. Aware of their cultural peculiarities, they want Quebec to enjoy the widest possible sovereignty but in view of the economic advantages inherent in the federal ties, they agree to dispense with an impossible absolute sovereignty and negotiate a sovereignty that would be adjusted to the common welfare of this country.

One could also quote a good deal of statements along the same lines, that would show that although in apparent stability, Canada is near the breaking point. Therefore we must come back as soon as possible to concrete autonomy principles. This party has always contended and still contends that there can be neither progress nor development without complete respect for the individual, for the human being. What is true for the individual is equally true for a community. Respect for provincial autonomy is necessary and even essential.

It is with the greatest ease that we can point that out since this party has never known any dissension in that respect. Wherever one meets Creditistes in Canada, one can observe that mutual respect for the individual character of each province. The Creditistes are a big family where everybody feels at home, no matter where they come from; they earnestly hope that the government will at last give the example of a policy based on Social Credit economic principles. One can even believe that all Creditistes would be very happy to help and support an independentist government in any province, if Major Douglas' philosophy were implemented.

We know, Mr. Speaker, that the eventual part to be played by the Banque du Québec in an independent Quebec could be substantially the same as the one the Social Credit Party of Canada would like to be played by the Bank of Canada. This is neither an ultimatum nor a threat; it is a bare fact. To shut oneself in an outmoded and backward status quo is to show a blatant lack of maturity.

● (1530)

Let me also add to my argument the conclusion which the Chamber of Commerce of the province of Quebec came to as regards the reform of the constitution—and which is recorded in the January 1969 issue of its publication, and I quote:

"The form of federalism that we have known will have to be changed: (a) the constitution of Canada will have to be amended or redrafted in order to define clearly the responsibilities of each government level, to enable each to levy taxes to meet these responsibilities and to include a mechanism designed to efficiently prevent abuses of jurisdiction; (b) the tax policy of the federal government and that of the provinces will be developed only after consultation which will have to be of an official and permanent nature; (c) monetary and tariff policies of the federal government will have to be set up through consultation with the provinces and these consultations will also be of an official and permanent nature; (d) the Bank of Canada should facilitate the financing of provinces and through the latter, that of municipalities and school boards. 4.—French Canadians must be convinced that their development depends essentially on their dynamism in every field of the economic and social life. 5.—English Canadians will have to show by concrete measures that they totally accept French Canadians as partners and will not prevent them in any way from acceeding to management positions, in both the public and the private sectors of the economy as well as the administration of this country. It is rather a matter of attitude being shown in everyday's measures that are taken at both government and business levels and related to purchasing, professional services, promotion, advertising and other policies."

Finally the last recommendation of the Chamber of Commerce reads as follows:

"6.—The Chamber of Commerce and other organizations should carry on their studies, in order to enlighten further and constantly the people of Canada on the economic impact of the constitutional structure of our country."

Mr. Speaker, I will dwell particularly on subsections "c" and "d" of the above-mentioned paragraph 1 where it is stated:

The monetary and tariff policies of the federal government should be established in co-operation with the provinces and those consultations should also be of an official and permanent nature: the Bank of Canada should facilitate the financing of provinces and through the latter, the financing of municipalities and school boards."

I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that we can accuse the Chambers of Commerce of being in favour of social credit, although this attitude is awfully in agreement with what we have been trying for years to make Canadians understand. The basis of the true liberty that Canadians want is this essential material security that can only arise from a logical, scientific and adequate economic system, that is social credit. I think that is the direction that all new attempts to remodel the constitution should take.

It is obvious that we all want unity in this country but it must be the outcome of respect for the independence of the component parts of Canada. Our role in this House is not to show the provinces that we are the masters, but to urge them to be themselves by helping them to better fulfil their commitments.

We can state that there would not be any national problems in Canada if no one had stirred, through all sorts of means, French-speaking Canadians against English-speaking Canadians, or brought about such circumstances that there seemed to be racist animosity. Yet, if there is a man in the world who cannot be accused of racism, it is the French Canadian. For centuries, he has learned to live with other ethnic groups and never or almost never showed racist feelings. Of course, he feels that noble pride arising from a sound nationalism. Our English-speaking friends can certainly not blame him for it since it is because of him that Canada is what it is, that is a distinct entity from the United States.

The more the French Canadian will remain himself, the more his fellow countrymen throughout the country will benefit from it.

Quebecers or French Canadians do appreciate their English-speaking fellow countrymen and all new Canadians; only the Liberal government political action tends, purposely or not, to maintain a pernicious animosity in opposing federalists against separatists.

We have too many serious and urgent problems to settle to keep diluting them in a constitutional dead-end. Let our ethnic differences rather be useful for our mutual enrichment. We cannot however consider that it is only a matter of bread and butter; feelings have their place in every society as an individual cannot live and be happy if he never feels anything.

This minor problem set by the constitutional limits can become—and maybe is already—a major problem, because of the injustices which the French Canadians have suffered for too many years. Acts of contrition and to admission of these facts are not sufficient. In addition to filling these gaps, we must further the real emancipation and the complete development of Canada. Thus, we will objectively and positively consider all the solutions which could make us achieve the end we are seeking. These constitutional matters should therefore be debated and solved without partisanship.

These words may sound tinged with bitterness, Mr. Speaker, following the results of the October 29 election in the province of Quebec. I would answer that it is my duty to mention these circumstances to let the Canadian people know all the consequences of this new situation of democracy in my province.

Let me quote once again from a leading article by Jean-Claude Leclerc published in the November 2, 1973 issue of Le Devoir.

> But worse than the distorsion which has victimized both the PQ and the CP is the absence of any sound opposition since 1970 and the continuation of a democratic deficiency; that is what should retain our attention today. After four years of complete freedom, Robert Bourassa's Liberals were due for a sound opposition to challenge them. Nothing of the sort happened. Instead, there will be less parliamentary opposition than ever to do it.
>
> The Premier's modesty, the firm resolve indicated by some ministers not to take advantage of the situation may comfort those who are satisfied with words and promises in place of action and evidence. During their first mandate, no Liberal member, no minister could stop being hounded by scavengers and friends of the regime for contracts and jobs. After October 29, the pack will simply be bigger and will have grown bolder by the strength of the victory. That is the first conclusion to be drawn from the Liberal landslide. Unchallenged by any strong opposition, this government will sink faster and deeper into the "sea of power". Independence being more frightening than the underworld, there is good reason to think that neither the next election nor the one after will give us the means to control this government.

This situation could very well be disastrous if a good many of those who advocate independence lose faith in the value of democracy. But I will not labour the point.

Before I conclude, I would like the House to realize that the goal of our motion is constructive and realistic. It is clear that we cannot solve our problems if we are to count exclusively on the fear of separatism like the liberal governments of Quebec and Ottawa do. It was high time that this should be said, particularly in this House, so that all of us will be objective and realistic enough to discuss these questions.

May the discussion on this motion be of some benefit to all my fellow citizens of Quebec and Canada.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I read the motion of the hon. member for Champlain very carefully (Mr. Matte), and also listened with great attention to his speech in which he urged the parties to co-operate and foster good feeling.

Upon reading what he said about the reopening of the constitutional debate, I think that he should have chosen words better suited to feelings of understanding instead of terms such as "fear", "autocracy", "oligarchy", in respect of present federal-provincial relations. The government of the province of Quebec did not try to squash the opposition and to reduce it to silence, it is the people of the province of Quebec who decided. They have understood that Liberals have always been in Quebec as well as elsewhere in Canada the spokesmen of one policy: a strong Quebec in an united Canada. We always stood behind that philosophy in Quebec as well as in any part of Canada.

When they speak about national unity, the Liberals never try to create discord among Canadians.

Some hon. Members: What about Alberta?

Mr. Chrétien: I went myself quite often to Alberta where I talked about the Canadian unity. I spoke in French in Edmonton and Calgary and I must say that I talk about Alberta with a particular interest because I am half Albertan on my mother's side. Nobody in the cabinet has more interest in Alberta than I have because I have 25 cousins there.

All across Canada we always spoke only about one thing: the importance of having a clear and unique policy throughout the country. I hear the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) say in this House that a party is accused of being separatist if it recommends a Creditist policy inside a province. This is why the people did not vote for the Creditists at the last election in the province of Quebec. It was because of a consistent ambiguity in the creditist views. We Liberals have had the same stand from the day of Mackenzie to those of St-Laurent, Pearson, King, Laurier and the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau); we always preached the respect of every Canadian's right and particularly the linguistic rights of the French Canadians. The hon. member said that the constitutional discussion should resume. We agree with that.

But he should let the provinces take action in this field. He should remember that in 1967 Ontario premier John Robarts and Quebec premier Daniel Johnson decided to hold a provincial conference as the one proposed by the hon. member. At the end of the first conference held in Toronto, the provincial premiers asked the federal government to go back with them to the table and try to give a thrust to the constitutional debate.

After numerous discussions, we almost reached an agreement but in Victoria, at the last minute, Quebec decided not to go along. However, if the Quebec premier has any new suggestion to make, the Prime Minister said it, we will not insist on holding a new constitutional conference but we will be pleased to answer the call because we believe that some basic things must be changed in Canada such as, for instance, the inclusion in the constitution of the Bill of Rights, in order to guarantee linguistic equality and the other rights of citizens.

We Liberals believe that it is abnormal to have to go to London in order to get the constitution amended and that it would be desirable to have an entirely Canadian constitution which could be amended by the provinces or the Canadian government.

Those are known policies and if the Quebec government and the other provincial governments want to resume the constitutional debate, we are prepared to participate.

An hon. Member: Then, resume it now!

Mr. Chrétien: No, because if we do so, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) and his colleague the hon. member for Champlain, would blame us for imposing our will on the provinces but we are prepared to meet their initiatives.

It was my pleasure to note during the election campaign that when premier Bourassa, who had no policy between two stools as the creditists and the Union nationale, was speaking about viable federalism and a strong Quebec within confederation his platform included resuming the constitutional debate.

If the Quebec premier wants to resume talks on this matter the prime minister of Canada will gladly meet his initiative but we have no intention of imposing our views on any provincial government whatsoever.

However, we should be aware of the fact that the protection of the rights of French Canadians and even of the province of Quebec does not consist in always meeting the provincial representations. The federal government has a role to play as we can see today. In fact, in the debate on energy in Canada, for instance, the federal government has a role to play. In my opinion, it is essential for the Canadian government to take the necessary steps to protect all Canadians against crisis such as the energy crisis.

I am convinced that all Canadians agree on the fact that electricity, oil and other natural resources must be shared by all Canadians first and foremost. If we find we have enough, we can allow exports to other countries.

This does not only apply to Alberta oil, but also to the hydroelectrical resources that Quebec can produce, as well as to the development possibilities of Northern Canada, which first of all should benefit all Canadians.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

And now that we are in the hands of the Arab States and other countries as regards energy, I would find it scandalous if the Canadian government who is responsible did not take the necessary means to ensure that in case of a more serious crisis in Canada, Alberta oil is used in Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime provinces, because we are all of us Canadians. This is why there is a Confederation. As the federal government, we must discharge our responsibilities in such matters.

• (1550)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Quebec has refused the pipeline.

Mr. Chrétien: No, it is wrong to say that Quebec has refused it. As a matter of fact, after the federal government announced in August that it intended to build a pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal, the provincial government issued a press release a few days ago in which it recognized that it could be essential that such a pipeline be built so that Quebec may have security of supply. And it is in the national interest that we are thinking of carrying out this project, because we would be accused of gross negligence if during the winter, in two or three years from now, for reasons of international politics, none of the countries like Venezuela or the Middle East countries wanted to move oil to Quebec or the Maritime provinces.

And if in the event of such a crisis, we had not built a pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal, we would be accused of not having fulfilled our natural obligations. However, discussions are presently going on with the Quebec government and I know for a fact that the Quebec government understands that it is the role of the federal government to make sure that Canadian energy serves all Canadians first. And I am convinced that if in the constitutional discussions or disagreements there may be between the provincial and the federal governments, being a good Canadian means always saying yes to all provincial governments, a time will come when this country will no longer exist.

What makes me a little impatient is that some people say they want a strong and united Canada and use all their energy to destroy this country. When I hear in the House of Commons of Canada a member state that if a province proposes a Créditiste program and that Créditiste program is related to a separatist program, he will side with them, I say he is a separatist and I will say so in all of the provinces in Canada. The Créditiste theory might be good, but I think that associating separatism with creditism is the sort of mixture that led to the rejection of creditism by Quebec voters in the last election.

We want the province to be strong within Confederation in areas that come under its jurisdiction. We have on several occasions taken clearcut action that displeased many people in Canada. For example, for years now, we have been under pressure exerted by some provinces to have more direct federal government intervention in the field of education. We always said that we must respect the provinces' jurisdiction in such matters, because we believe that education is something essential in Quebec, in order to enable the French-speaking Canadians of that province to free themselves. We have undertaken discussions in a number of areas where we clearly determined certain fields of jurisdiction. For instance, family allowances. This is a problem that has been negotiated to the satisfaction of Quebec as well as that of the federal government and the other provinces. Today, we have set up an improved system of family allowances, without infringing on any provincial prerogatives.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that if the hon. member wants to contribute to improving federal-provincial relations, he should be a little more objective and stop trying to solve the problem by answering yes whenever a province asks for something. We do not intend to force the provinces to do anything in any particular area and we never will. We remain open to dialogue, and whenever the government of Quebec or any other province wants to try, together with all Canadians, to give us a new constitution or improve some clauses of the present Canadian Constitution, we will be pleased to consider it. I suggest that it is not for the federal government to take the initiative at this time. We must do what we always did, namely respond to initiatives taken by the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to come back to the statement of the hon. member for Champlain—that shocked me a little: he says that in Quebec, independence is feared more than the underworld. During the last election, this matter was not raised and I suggest that it is very unfair to the provincial government to say that they put on the shelf the inquiry on organized crime during the election campaign.

Everybody knows that it was an inquiry carried out by the courts that decided themselves that it was irrelevant to hold this public debate during an electoral campaign.

And the premier of the province of Quebec stated clearly that he had never interfered and that it is quite indecent to suggest that he might have interfered in this matter.

If the people of the province of Quebec have massively voted for the Liberal party and Premier Bourassa, it is because the latter has done what we are doing throughout Canada; he said that the Liberal party favours a united Canada that respects provinces, that federalism had to bring about advantages, that it might help poor provinces thanks to the revenues coming from wealthy provinces, for the richest provinces have often become wealthy because they have had other provinces as captive markets.

As for me, I would rather be in the position of Ontario which must pay without receiving any equalization payment, than in the position of Quebec, which receives equalization payments.

I believe each province considering the geographical features or exceptional economic developments due to the federation, have the responsibility of helping the provinces that have less. And such has been our policy for a long time, as far as family allowances are concerned, for instance. We did not want to give the whole jurisdiction to provincial governments, because with a system under which family allowances, payments of all kinds made to individuals would be the strict responsibility of the provinces, it might happen that in time the poorest provinces would be the ones to pay.

It could be that with a direct tax transfer today, the provinces could provide the same kind of service, but we know, for instance, that one point in corporate taxes brings twice as much in dollars to Ontario than to Quebec. Everytime a corporate tax point is given back to the provinces, Quebec loses. In the long range, Quebec is the loser because twice as much money goes into the coffers of the Ontario government as in those of the Quebec government. And with a system like that, should payments to individuals be administered by the provinces only, the situation would be such that in 10 or 15 years from now, for instance, family allowances in Newfoundland, instead of being $20, would perhaps be $10 and in Ontario, instead of being $20, they would be $40.

Now that is not the distributive justice that should exist in a confederation such as ours. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I believe the French Canadians in the province of Quebec, last week, understood all these things.

If we really insist on raising the problem of independence, let's do it. The Liberals did not ask for this problem. It was rather a political party of the province of Quebec that keeps on preaching this thesis, while we, the Liberals, in opposition to some Creditiste members, we are not sitting on the fence with regard to independence: we are against independence.

We shall keep on fighting independence because we have the firm conviction that French Canadians can play a part at the national level, in Canada. We are not inhibited to the point where we must keep to ourselves. On the contrary, we believe that people from Quebec can be useful to all Canadians.

I am privileged to be in charge of a department which has very few contacts with the province of Quebec, but it is my profound conviction that I play a useful part not only for Quebecers but for all Canadians and this is what the federal government and Canada mean for all Quebecers.

● (1600)

I do not think that being a Quebecer should necessarily mean staying alone in one's back yard with one's own little things. One must have enough self-confidence to take up challenges greater than the province of Quebec. At a time when all European countries are setting up a large common market, at a time when countries throughout the world are trying to regroup in a new union—countries of the third world held an extremely important conference in Algeria a couple of weeks ago to try and regroup too—we in Quebec would be going completely against history in trying to have our little country of our own, with our own national anthem and our own flag. There is more than that to the life of a nation. I think that the important thing for us is to make sure that French Canadians can fulfill themselves not only in Quebec but everywhere in Canada.

I heard on television a few days ago that our fellow countrymen in New Brunswick were celebrating the 10th anniversay of the University of Moncton. I will point out to the hon. member for Champlain that those people are yet better French Canadians than anyone of us from the province of Quebec because they found it much more difficult to keep their French language. I refuse to go along with anybody ready to let down the million and a half French Canadians living outside Quebec. I have a lot more respect for those who lived and fought for their language like the French Canadians in Cornwall, the Ottawa area, or the Maritime provinces, than for us from Shawinigan, Grand-Mère, or anywhere else in the province of Quebec, where it was relatively easy to do. And I am not prepared to let them down tomorrow.

I believe that as an ethnic group we have made considerable progress in Canada and we must go on being excellent Canadians. It is not impossible to be a French Canadian or a Quebecer and a good Canadian at the same time. Mr. Speaker, when I hear the honourable member for Champlain talking about independence and politics—

Mr. Rondeau: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. minister but the hon. member for Shefford rises on a point of order.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. minister concludes his remarks, even though his time has almost expired, I wish to ask him a question.

Mr. Speaker: This is obviously not a point of order, but if the hon. minister wishes to answer a question, he may do it.

Mr. Chrétien: In any event, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to go on very long. I think I have clearly stated that the Quebec population made its choice. It decided by itself and it was not the federal government, because we, the federal Liberals, have showed more respect for Quebecers than did the federal Creditist members. Since we were accused in 1970 of having influenced the result of the vote, we did not interfere in the last provincial elections. Yet, the Liberal party won 102 seats out of 110. Obviously within two weeks, some intellectuals particularly in the province of Quebec will demonstrate that René Levesque did effectively win the election and that Mr. Bourassa lost his deposit. Mr. Speaker, the people made their choice. Every party got the same opportunity in every district. But as one of the parties offered a clear choice that met the very aspirations of French Canadians—that is to say the policy of a party which had faith in a strong Quebec in a united Canada—the people voted for that; they did not vote for the Creditist party because of the Creditist or separatist ambiguities advocated by the hon. member for Champlain. That was so obvious that the hon. member with his usual ambiguities went to his constituency to try and explain theories which are neither fish nor flesh. The Creditist candidates have lost their deposit in the ridings of Portneuf and Laviolette and even the party president lost his in Champlain.

The Quebec voters have shown good judgment during the last election. A majority of French Canadians have voted for the Liberal party much more than for the Parti Québécois even though, in my opinion, all those who voted for the Parti Québécois are not necessarily separatists. I think the vote was quite clear even though some problems still exist. I am convinced that the Bourassa government will try to make some progress in many areas and that they are considering resuming the constitutional debate; we shall be open to their views because we sincerely believe that the Canadian constitution should be repatriated as soon as possible. In my opinion, we should find a formula of amendment meeting the aspirations of all the provinces and, at the same time, include the Canadian Bill of Rights in the Canadian constitution.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

We can congratulate ourselves for the outcome of the Quebec election and we can now undertake a serious debate which will settle many problems in Canada. In the near future, if the provinces so desire, we will be able to repatriate the constitution back to Canada and draft another one which will guarantee equality to all Canadians and, as we have been wishing for generations, to the French Canadians safety and promotion of the French language not only in Quebec but throughout Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Is the minister willing to answer a question from the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau)?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rondeau: My question is this: Does the minister feel that, whenever a French-speaking Canadian from the province of Quebec criticizes this Liberal government, this necessarily means that he is a separatist?

Mr. Chrétien: To this, Mr. Speaker, I shall answer that any member of this House has the right to criticize the policy of the federal government. He has every right to do so, but he should deal with real problems and stop telling fairy tales. He should talk about the problems of concern to the Canadian people, such as the energy crisis and social security, but Creditiste independentism is nothing but hogwash.

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I am greatly tempted to follow the example of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) and to take advantage of this important debate to delight in a useless attack on individuals and to forget the real issue, that is national solidarity and the way to achieve it. I do not intend to yield to temptation.

We owe it to ourselves today as always, in response to the motion moved by my Creditiste colleague,—and precisely on account of the very nature of this motion,—to show maturity, true responsibility, faced with the challenge of national solidarity, and to do so in a tone as airily and as serene as that of the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte).

Mr. Speaker, this Canada of ours, this Canada built by our forefathers whose merits have not always been recognized at the time of their retirement, basically, Canada is wanted by all Canadians from Quebec as well as elsewhere.

[English]

I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I welcome this debate. I consider myself privileged to speak on behalf of my leader and my colleagues of the Official Opposition. My travels throughout this great country of ours, undertaken at the request of my colleagues, have enabled me to grasp the true meaning and overwhelming impact of our Canadian indentity. Whether in Vancouver, Montreal, Cranbrook, Madoc, Saint-Hyacinthe, Edmonton, Dunnville, or Hinton, I have sensed the desire and unanimous will of all citizens of this country to join forces in an endeavour to build, rather than to destroy. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I shall prefer a positive approach in the course of this debate.

● (1610)

[Translation]

Certainly I am talking here of our own country and not of the present style given to the federal-provincial relations and not of the way the national unity objective is coloured at the present time.

It is true that this debate must allow us to document as much as possible our critics against this government, but it should also give rise in this House and among the population to proper considerations on the national solidarity theme.

It is advisable to reopen the federal-provincial relations record more especially as we are right after an election in Quebec the results and stakes of which are known. All this is particularly advisable more especially as we are facing today the whole energy issue, in Quebec as well in Alberta, and the wranglings if prolonged unduly could undermine the very foundations of Canadian unity.

First, Mr. Speaker, I deplore, because I fear their consequences, the very style and direction which inspire the present federal government, and sometimes even the Quebec government, in federal-provincial relations and consequently with their legal creations, the municipalities.

The Liberal governments now in office in Ottawa as well as in Quebec City, being deeply divided concerning the objective of a new constitution and therefore without any common direction, tend to fall into piecemeal consultation without any general plan.

This lack of direction leads us into feverish activism. In April 1973, seven separate federal-provincial conferences have been held and, tell me, what results did we get?

The present rate of these conferences is more impressive than the results that they are willing to communicate to us are or are likely to be fruitful.

We must—and this constitutes another important aspect of the problem—denounce the secrecy which, before, during and after, too often surrounds bilateral meetings or even federal-provincial conferences. With the help of the media, let the government therefore function in the open, let it not be afraid of enlightening the population, let it not fear especially to have the media play their part.

I regretted this afternoon, as many other hon. members, that the Prime Minister of Canada, in a change of mood, used certain scornful words about employees, civil servants, and said of them—and I am quoting the Prime Minister of Canada, a man who has championed personal liberties—"do their job very badly when they do not reflect crass ignorance".

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that such a general attack, without any differentiation, any subtle distinction, looks quite like an unfair discrimination towards employees in general. If he had had the guts of giving names, of pointing out at some people in particular, instead of casting all the blame on a whole group of citizens, he would have been much more honest.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, these employees do not deserve to be tried on their motives, or to be convicted without trial. Whenever one is concerned with other people's rights, one does not speak this way.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) may have some problems. It is not the fault of the Canada Broadcasting Corporation or the employees who are here, in the gallery or elsewhere, if the Prime Minister is in trouble. It is not the fault of employees if the Prime Minister's prestige is falling. It is not the fault of the CBC if polls prove to be unfavourable to the Prime Minister. It is not the fault of the CBC if his ministers are unable to solve the great problems of this country. It is not the fault of the CBC if the Prime Minister's allies, his left wing, are now reviewing their support. In my opinion, before condemning in an unfair way men and women, we should act with a lucid mind and not give away to panic.

Mr. Speaker, the public is aware of today's problems thanks to the information media. That is why more and more Canadians, in Quebec as elsewhere, are wondering about the nature and form of short term solutions brought to the problems facing our country.

Whether we refer to the hard problem of the rising cost of living, to the humiliating plague of unemployment or event to the record of communications or of energy, too often the elements of the problems are coldly, brutally related to matters of federal and provincial jurisdiction. This is a legitimate and understandable withdrawal or reaction, but out of context because there is no sufficient and objective reference to the national importance of a problem. No consideration is being given to the needs and total priorities of a particular region. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, some ministers over-estimate their strength in Quebec and taking an indecent advantage, as regards Canadian unity, of prejudice in their favour and of an overrated reputation, they allow themselves to become arrogant. It is time to put a stop to this.

In my opinion, by their silence and their slips of the tongue, they unconsciously betray the spirit, if not the letter, of our Constitution, work against Canadian solidarity, and distort the identity of each of the five regions of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I agree with the spirit, if not with the letter, of the motion before us today. In this House, on September 10, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) commented on the so-called anti-inflationary plan announced on September 4, in the following words:

"—the Minister of Energy himself and the Prime Minister—have given Quebec a half hour's notice of the reversal and change of the federal energy policy, and as far as we know, have not advised at all either Alberta or the other provinces concerned." There was no previous consultation, despite what they may suggest, which indicates not only this government's indifference and disdain for the interest of the provinces, as I have said, but it also indicates that this decision was made, as has become the custom of those gentlemen opposite, off-the-cuff and in an atmosphere of political expediency . . .

But the country ought not to be distracted by this spectacular example of federalism by fiat. We ought to observe the massive, total arrogance but above all we must continue to focus upon the substantive issue.

● (1620)

How do we, in the official opposition, react once the problem has been defined in order to better meet the challenge of Canadian solidarity? Surely if people may be tempted to say that this federal government takes advantage of crises in this country to usurp provincial jurisdictions, we—and it should be the same for all—want merely a realignment of views of the opposing forces in Canada. The two founding races in this country must become again partners in the pursuit of the same objective. Provincial governments must feel involved in the designing of solutions to national problems.

I am persuaded there is enough room in our system for two levels of government, that could both be active and strong and cooperating loyally and effectively. That concept has been lacking for too long and I believe it is the real basis of federalism.

Let us consider for instance the health field. A few years ago, the Liberal government succeeded in thrusting upon the provinces its views and priorities concerning medical services. And as the costs of these programs have reached prohibitive proportions, the government seems to be seeking an easy way out.

These are programs, the principles and methods of which the government designed itself, programs to which it compelled the provinces to comply with after having spoken highly of their merits, and now, it declares that their value is not proportional to their cost. Moreover, not only does the government acknowledge today to be dissatisfied with those programs, but it has the nerve to try to limit its financial responsibilities while compelling the provinces to meet theirs. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I do not imagine that a provincial government which is aware of its responsibilities towards its electors can accept that. This is the reason why we must seriously consider the possible alternatives. One of those, as the leader of my party said in Montreal on April 15, 1973, would be the following:

> The federal government must withdraw from shared cost health programs and it must do it by remitting to provinces a larger part of the tax revenues and obviously ensuring an appropriate equalization in this sharing.

Mr. Speaker, I admit that this is not a perfect solution, but it would be more advisable than what this government intends to do. Moreover, it would be an obvious acknowledgement of the right of the provinces to set up their own priorities in an essential area without any federal interference.

If we should adopt this solution of decentralization, we should, of course, ensure that the advantages of the program are transferable from one province to another.

We should also do what is necessary in a context of equalization in order to stimulate consistency in the quality of present services.

One thing is certain anyway: if the government stays in power, the provinces will lose. They will have to maintain the present standards whereas the federal government will limit its financial contribution. I feel this is absolutely unacceptable.

[Mr. Wagner.]

If we are to offer medical care throughout the country according to specific standards, the co-operation of both levels of government is absolutely necessary.

A Progressive Conservative government would not withdraw from the programs leaving the provinces to their fate and it would insist on having its own version of the national standards complied with.

A Progressive Conservative government would proceed to a real consultation to determine the extent to which the federal government should stay involved. This decision would be taken in a collegial fashion. The time when the decisions were taken unilaterally by Ottawa, the time when this arrogant attitude was displayed—the "take it or leave it" attitude—would be long gone. And inasmuch as the federal government would stay involved, it would pay a full and fair share of those programs.

It is in this collegial spirit that we have advocated during the last electoral campaign, the immediate convening, after our taking office, of a federal-provincial conference on the priorities for tomorrow with a view to determine the most urgent problems, to discuss the short-term and long-term solutions and to determine the guidelines of a national economic strategy.

In brief, we want to take another approach to the whole question of joint programs and federal subsidies. And this new approach would apply to regional development as well as social security. As all my colleagues, I would like to see more flexibility, consultation and co-operation in the relations between both levels of government. We will try as much as possible to let the municipalities, provinces and areas determine their own priorities and assume their own decisions. We will show that the central government can act as a catalyst.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. Unless he obtains the unanimous consent, he cannot carry on.

Is the House ready to let the hon. member complete his remarks? He needs only a few seconds.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): There is apparently not unanimous consent. I will ask the question again. Is there unanimous consent to let the hon. member complete his comments?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Wagner: I thank you, Mr. Speaker and I also thank all my colleagues. I will try not to impose upon your kindness.

We will therefore see, Mr. Speaker, that the central government becomes a catalyst of understanding and a factor of unity within confederation.

For the moment, we prefer to stress the urgency of holding a national conference of priorities instead of an early reopening of the Victoria file. It seems to me necessary to move along those lines. The present or future constitution, repatriated or not, is only, with all due respect to the constitutionalists, a kind of instrument to enlighten the government of our country.

First of all, faced with modern problems such as the supply of resources and the quality of the individual and collective life, and facing the future, we must identify the priorities of each partner in our political system, and then, secondly, proceed with the required juridictional and fiscal sharing. Such a process will prepare the minds to a new Victoria, more assured this time of a real success. If other and faster methods to amend the constitution were found, I, for one, would be most interested.

Mr. Speaker, whatever may be the new approach to federal-provincial relations we must, of course, concern ourselves with the question of the official languages in this country, with the easier access for French-speaking people to the federal public service and with federal services provided in both official languages. All that is part and parcel of the national community of interests. However, such a community of interests would be really and fully achieved only to the extent that we find solutions to the economical and social problems in each of the five major areas in this country. The real Canadian challenge consists in being able to reconcile social and economic interests at the regional level and as this motion points out, "to meet the basic aspirations of each province".

And here, Mr. Speaker, I should like to give the following warning: one must not see more than there really is in the last result of the elections in Quebec. If, on the one hand, we must again rejoice at the victory of the federalist philosophy over separatism, on the other hand, one must not forget that the Parti Québécois increased the number of its supporters to 30 per cent in the vote. And most of all, one must understand that the victory of the federalist option in Quebec does not mean in any way that there are no more problems between Ottawa and Quebec. Let us not bury our head in the sand.

I suggest that as early as the day after October 29, a new chapter of Canadian history opened in Quebec and throughout this country.

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I notice that I am the first person to intervene in this debate who is not from the Province of Quebec. I quite understand the reason. This is a subject of very special interest in the Province of Quebec. I hope my intervention is symbolic of the fact that it is also of considerable interest, or, if it is not, it should be, to Canadians from other provinces.

● (1630)

We do not adopt the language of the resolution which has been presented to us, but we do say that the presentation of this resolution performs, in our view, a useful service. It is proper that, from time to time, this House should turn its attention not only to the broad problems of Canadian unity but to the questions arising under our constitution which are unsettled and which require solution in the interest of unity in Canada.

Others in this debate have spoken of the recent election in Quebec. I do not propose to make any political or partisan comments, but I think I speak for people who believe in the federal system throughout Canada when I say that we welcomed its result, not from a partisan point of view but because it demonstrated that, at the present time at least, the option for separatism was not being chosen by the people of Quebec. But I should like to underline that this election is no basis for complacency. The constitutional issue is one that cannot be allowed to drift or be allowed to be ignored by the people of Canada; I believe the constitution of Canada needs changes made to it, and needs careful consideration at the present time.

One of the most disappointing parts of my experience in this House was being a member of a committee of which one of the co-chairman was the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) and comprised of representatives of all parties in this House and the Senate. This committee travelled throughout Canada, listened to innumerable briefs from learned people, and prepared a report which represented a general consensus of people in all regions of Canada. The committee made 104 proposals in its report, yet the government of the day has seen fit, as far as I can make out, completely to ignore that report. It has done nothing about any of the recommendations that were made. Although the report was a weighty one it has disappeared, just as a very weighty rock might disappear into the ocean, without trace. The report caused scarcely a ripple. I consider this disappointing and I hope the situation will be remedied. The report I refer to represented a useful consensus. We did not all agree about everything, but at least we demonstrated that when people of good will from across Canada sit down to tackle problems, they can reach a high level of agreement and arrive at a basis for the renewal of our constitution.

The report contained one proposal that I think we ignore at our peril. The report states that Canada needs a new and modern constitution which would eliminate much of what is obsolete and inadequate in the present British North America Act. I acknowledge that it is well known that constitutional matters sometimes appear technical and difficult, partly because they are often discussed by constitutional lawyers, such as myself, who are somewhat versed in the legal phraseology of the constitution and its ramifications. Nevertheless, it remains true that the basic and fundamental rights of the people of this country rest upon the constitution. The unity of this country rests upon the constitution. The constitution impinges upon the lives of our people at every level, and if we do not have an intelligent, modern, flexible constitution which is capable of dealing with the problems of the country, we will fail to meet the challenges that lie ahead.

One aspect of the constitution in which we in this party are interested, and have been for very many years, is the question of fundamental and basic rights. We think that these should be entrenched in our constitution. We have long argued that this is fundamental to a free society such as Canada's should be. We have been reminded of the importance of this by a recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Lavell case in which the majority of that court gave a decision which seemed to indicate that our present Bill of Rights passed by this parliament is totally inadequate to protect large sections of this community against discrimination, such as discrimination against sex. There are many women in this country who are demanding, and I say justly demanding, that we entrench a clear-cut protection against discrimination on the ground of sex in our constitution. The same applies equally to discrimination on the ground of religion, race or other areas where discrimination is frequent. We want to see these basic freedoms entrenched in the constitution.

There is no better time to set about this. I, and all members of the House, know that for a good many years there has been a series of federal-provincial constitutional conferences which have failed to produce an effective result. One of the reasons for this was that at least four of the provinces in western Canada were represented by governments that can politely be called small "c" conservative. They were opposed to any change in this field and presented an obstacle to proposals such as the entrenchment of the Bill of Rights in the constitution.

As a result of the fortunes of elections, those four governments—I refer to the governments of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba—have been replaced by governments ready to take a more flexible, may I say more basically Canadian, attitude toward this question. The election in Quebec is now out of the way and Quebec seems to have opted for federalism. I do not think it has opted for a status quo federalism; I think it has opted for federalism that is ready to change, to advance and to accommodate itself in light of present circumstances.

Furthermore, we think that the consitution should recognize the special position of the native people of this country. We agree also that actual constitutional changes in this field should await full consultation with organizations of native people when they have completed their present research. This is one aspect with regard to which there are recommendations in the report of the joint committee to which I have referred.

I should like to say a little more about that committee report because I think it deserves much more attention than it has had. The most essential constitutional question in any confederation is the division of powers as between the federal and provincial legislatures. We accept the basic proposal in the report that the powers of the provincial legislature should be enlarged in all areas touching upon social and cultural policy. The powers of the federal parliament should be clarified and enlarged in regard to important economic policies that affect Canada as a whole.

Perhaps this is not the right place to go into them in detail, but the report refers to income support measures. We think this is an ingenious solution to this particular problem. We recognize the fact that at the present time, so far as we understand it, in the field of welfare the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has been pursuing a course of very close and fruitful collaboration with the various provincial governments. We think that is an excellent thing. It underlines the advisability of solving jurisdictional difficulties at the present time.

● (1640)

There is a subject mentioned in the report in which I am particularly interested, and about which I am concerned. That is the problem of air and water pollution. Once again we run into a field where the constitutional confusion is tremendous. When the British North America Act was written people did not live in the sort of society where air and water pollution were of serious dimension. But we do, and yet we are hampered in our efforts to clear up our environment and provide a better quality of life by the confusion that exists as to jurisdiction. The report to which I refer recommends that if national standards are to be set there should be an over-all, paramount federal power. It says that the importance of the contribution of the provinces with respect to air and water pollution cannot be denied, but stresses that the overriding and paramount power to clear up pollution, which so often extends beyond provincial boundaries, should be clearly vested in the federal authority.

[Mr. Brewin.]

I do not think it would be helpful at this stage if I were to go into details about other things in this report. Many of them are important to the people of Canada, and the people of Canada will suffer if we neglect to deal with these things when we have the opportunity to do so. I do, however, want to refer to the battle against inflation. In this particular regard we found the report very inadequate. It said:

> In cases of national emergency, as defined by the Parliament of Canada, the Provinces should delegate to the Federal Parliament all additional powers necessary to control prices, wages and other forms of income, including rent, dividends and profits, to implement its prime responsibility for full employment and balanced economic growth.

Everybody in this House knows that the question of control of wages, prices and other forms of income, profits and so on, is of vital importance in the battle against inflation. Yet anybody who has taken the trouble to look at the facts will know there is immense confusion as to who it is has jurisdiction to deal with this matter.

I know that the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) spent much time lecturing and talking to people about some of the confusion that exists. The case books are full of cases dealing with this problem and what emerges is still confusion, so that no one knows who is responsible for dealing with many of these matters. While we do not seek greater centralization of powers, if we are to have an effective battle against inflation we must recognize that where it is necessary to deal with important matters which effect the economy at the national level, then this power should be clarified in the constitution. Who can deny that the inflationary spiral has important economic effects at the national level?

There are other challenges facing Canada at the present time. One of the challenges with which we are all familiar, because we hear so much about it every day and will continue to hear about it for some time into the future, is the energy crisis. We in this party want to make it clear that while we recognize the provinces have interests and concerns in natural resources,—they have the proprietary rights in natural resources—yet when a crisis hits the whole national economy there is a federal responsibility to take action in that field. We support what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) said the other day, that it is the parliament and government of Canada that must act responsibly in dealing with a situation that affects the well-being of all Canadians, and which of course has implications beyond the boundaries of Canada.

I conclude, therefore, by reiterating that the introduction of this subject by this motion in our opinion is a healthy and worthwhile thing, and I urge the federal government not to waste the opportunity that exists at the present time to deal with and solve some of these problems. The sort of lackadaisical, laissez faire attitude of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), although he is an expert in constitutional affairs, is not good enough. These problems ought to be dealt with. They may be difficult. They may not arouse great popular enthusiasm in some parts of the country, but if they are ignored they may rise to plague us in the future and make government in Canada less helpful to the people than it should be.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Before recognizing the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan)—National Defence—Inquiry as to decision on replacement for Argus aircraft; the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight)—Air Transport—Bilateral agreement on routes with United States—Possible renegotiation on one route for Saskatchewan; the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse)—Airports—Pickering—Competence of board of inquiry to study need and location.

● (1650)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO ENCOURAGE PROVINCIAL CONSULTATION TO REDRAFT THE CONSTITUTION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Matte.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, at first sight, I thought the motion of my colleague, the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), was perhaps not presented at an appropriate time.

But having heard the hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) as well as the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), I believe this motion comes in the nick of time and shows an objective approach. My colleague did not try to rouse members one against another, he was very constructive when he said that it was about time Canada should give provinces, through a constitution adjusted to needs, a greater autonomy, more facilities for self-determination and to determine by themselves their cultural, economic and political destiny.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Champlain did not insult anybody. He stated facts, real situations, things we live through and I was surprized to hear the hon. minister make a clear election speech, in a style that has been outmoded for at least 25 years, a pure and simple political speech. First, he said exactly the opposite of what his leader said on the day following the famous October 29 election in Quebec. He said people had voted Liberal, that the Liberal party was the greatest party.

His leader said, on the evening of election day, that Quebecers had voted for Canada and against separation. Here, Mr. Speaker, I would very much like to make a comparison between separatism and provincial independence. There is one difference. Seceding from a country is not like being part of that country and being oneself, free of all kinds of control. Seceding from a country is completely different from remaining part of it and being oneself.

I think the motion of the hon. member for Champlain is clear and specific enough but, as usual, some people will say that maybe Creditistes are separatists. I believe we have shown in this House that we are Canadians, but we want to be first class Canadians and to be respected throughout Canada.

My colleague suggests in his motion that the provinces should be given more freedom. What are the provinces asking for? We hear in this House spokesmen for the various provinces of Canada. I hear the member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) speaking day in and day out about Newfoundland. I am sure that people in Peace River do not know much about Newfoundland, but the people of that province are aware of the situation there. They tell us of their problems, and say: Give us this, or give us that. All the provinces are in the same position. It is the same in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. What do the members of parliament from the west talk about? Of the wheat in Saskatchewan and the oil in Alberta. In Manitoba and Saskatchewan, people talk about agriculture. In Ontario, they talk about industry.

An hon. Member: In Quebec, about unemployment!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, in Quebec, about unemployment.

An hon. Member: It is our first and best industry.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, from 1946 to 1973, I have sat in this House and heard about the repatriation of the constitution. In 1973, people are still talking about it. It seems that some have gone to London, like the former Solicitor General, now Minister of Supplies and Services (Mr. Goyer), to go and find the constitution; but he has not found it.

An hon. Member: Maybe he is still looking for it.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): When he came back, he told us: We cannot amend it, we do not have it. But everyone talks about this famous constitution. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said a while ago: The federal government is ready to have discussions with the provinces, it was because of Quebec that there was no agreement on the constitution in Victoria, it was because the Liberal government in Quebec did not agree with the Liberal government in Ottawa. But why did it refuse Ottawa's suggestions? The provinces are not asking Ottawa to suggest or order anything, they are saying: Leave us to discuss our problems and for your part, simply act as referees and respect our identity. It is as simple as that. And how can we do this? Surely not by penalizing rich provinces to help the poorer provinces. That, Mr. Speaker, is socialism at the national level. It is taking away from the haves to give to the have-nots, when natural resources, national production, are sufficient to meet the needs of all provinces without penalizing some citizens.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development says that the Creditiste solution may perhaps be a good one. During election campaigns, he says all kinds of things against our solutions. He speaks of the problems of provinces, of national unity, and of the October 29 vote. It was a vote of fear, a jittery vote, because during four weeks the whole population was being frightened.

It resulted in the disappearance of the Union Nationale, they had cold feet. We came close ourselves to being swept away, because some people were afraid. The Parti Québécois lost a seat, even though it increased its percentage of the popular vote. On election night, I heard the member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) on TV—he likes to go on TV the member for Saint-Hyacinthe—saying that the one who has lost his election is Caouette in the Province of Quebec. What kind of invention is that! It was surely not the Union Nationale and the Progressive Conservatives who won any ground in the province of Quebec in the last election. Out of 17 members, not one is left.

● (1700)

The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) says—

An hon. Member: When you are not there, you cannot lose!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): No. When they are not there, they cannot loose, that is clear. This is precisely what they did, they have lost 17 members, they have no more left. Therefore they can lose no more. And what is worse they say: Caouette has lost the election. The election in Quebec has been lost by the separatists. However, as the hon. member for Champlain stated when introducing his motion, it is at the same time a warning to the federal government that it should give more freedom to the provinces because Mr. Bourassa cannot have more than 102 members. There is only one way to go after such a victory—down.

An hon. Member: When they fall we pick them up!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): When they start to fall we shall pick them up.

An hon. Member: We shall not prevent them from falling.

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Let us seriously consider the number of Quebec members in the federal Parliament: there are 74 while in Quebec there are 110 provincial members. This amounts to 184 members from the province of Quebec. Out of this amount, Creditists account for 17: 15 in Ottawa and 2 in Quebec; the Progressive Conservatives have 2 members here and not one in Quebec. I would like the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe to hear me clearly.

Some hon. Members: How many Creditists did you have elected in Ontario?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): None. The Tory strength in Ontario adds up to zero.

Six PQ members were elected. We have an independent here.

An hon. Member: Who is that?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle).

So we are 26 Quebecers in the opposition of which 17 are Creditists. And I heard the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe say on television: We are the official opposition. The official opposition from the province of Quebec in Ottawa is the Social Credit Party of Canada.

An hon. Member: He thinks he is the opposition!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): On top of that, we are consistent with ourselves, we do not try and lie to the people, we tell them exactly what we think.

Mr. Speaker, I said a while ago that the warning issued to the Liberal party, the central government, is a serious one. In 1970 there was trouble caused by the FLQ, by all sorts of organizations which wanted and still want Quebec to withdraw from confederation. They are even prepared to resort to violence and that violence is not totally extinct. The threats of violence are not totally extinct.

Time will tell, there is still time to save the Canadian ship; nobody more than I wishes to remain a Canadian in the full sense of the word, but in my province I would like the government to have more latitude, just as much as I want the same latitude for any other province in Canada, to allow them to make decisions. That is why we ask, even at the risk of becoming the laughing-stock of everybody, that the Bank of Canada be used in the provinces' interests and set branches in all Canadian provinces, for the purpose of serving them and making financially possible what is already physically possible in each of them. Only then would disappear the risk of destruction which looms over the Canadian confederation, because the provinces would be autonomous and free without being separated.

For that matter, Mr. Speaker, all human beings, hon. members included, want to be independent. Everyone dreams about his independence. We do not want anybody to tell us what we have to do. Provinces and even municipal boards want more freedom, as well as school boards. Mr. Speaker, when are we free, when are we a little independent? When we have a purchasing power. Then we have the permission to choose, to refuse, to decide. It is said that money does not create happiness. No, but it helps a little.

All provinces complain about a lack of financial resources; even Ontario complainseabout it although it is the richest province in Canada. The province of Quebec lacks financial means. It meets with federal authorities. The latter make us sing all day long the song of the lack of money. Mr. Speaker, independence exists for each and every province and each of them would be much more interested in building up Canada as we want it, namely a united, strong and free Canada. Beside, Canadian independence does exist. We can hear hon. members of the New Democratic Party especially continuously speak against American imperialism, say that we are ruled by the Americans who control our natural resources. That is true! Ottawa does not do anything about it. In the province of Quebec, the Bay James development project is now under way, and who is financing it? The Americans. With what? With American dollars. In wheelbarrows? No. With some figures written down on a promisory note. Why do they not use the Bank of Canada to arrive at figures based on the same wealth that give the value to the monetary system?

Mr. Speaker, during the election, we heard about the famous P.Q. budget, for an amount of $11 billion dollars. When we referred to the guaranteed annual income, it was a real scandal. A television debate was held on Year 1 of separatism and on a budget prepared by Mr. Parizeau, a guy who I think advised two or three premiers of the province of Quebec, and he led the whole gang to defeat because he had no good advice to give. Mr. Speaker, we heard of this project and I already hear the Liberal answer: Your dollar will only be worth 50c. Mr. Loubier says: I think that it will only be worth 30c. They frightened people with that.

What gives money its value? The will of the Prime Minister or the capacity of people to produce in their country or in their province? And what is preventing this? I do not believe in the separatist argument that a Bank of Quebec should be set up, separate from the rest of Canada. Not at all. We produce in Quebec about 30 per cent of what we consume, everybody knows it. However, what is preventing us from using the Bank of Canada to help all provinces, including Quebec? You would then see, during all future federal-provincial or provincial conferences, that no one would complain about the lack of money. They would rather speak of the mutual development of natural resources, which would be much more logical than the stupidities that we are now witnessing during federal-provincial conferences.

Mr. Speaker, American imperialism is not enough. Soviet imperialism is coming. The New Democratic Party does not talk as much about it. That is not known, but it is another kind of imperialism.

• (1710)

When the Soviets impose their administration, their decisions on other countries, including Cuba—at a certain moment it was on Chile, today it is on other countries—we do not hear the NDP protest against it. No, it is normal. It is called the revolution set to save human beings. As for those who oppose it, we are told that they take to repression. Then, the NDP oppose repression and are in favour of revolution. In China, it is the same thing: the Chinese who were all considered as bandits by Canadians ten years ago are now considered as saints in frock coat. What can we do? It works now.

Mr. Speaker, we do not want American imperialism. We want co-operation between countries. We want an independent Canada. We do not want to lose our Canadian identity. In Quebec, we do not want to lose identity as Quebecers either. We don't want the British Columbia people to lose their identity and it is rather amusing to find they don't want to be dictated to by Ontario. The same applies to the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and the Maritimes. Mr. Speaker, those are the provinces that should incite not political speeches like the one delivered by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but positive action. If we want to save Canada, the time is now, tomorrow will be too late. And it is not in blood that we should do so but through reasoning, the good will to remain free people in a country respected by the whole world.

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, like many members, I had the opportunity to read the motion of the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte). It makes us think a great deal. I find it somewhat surprising that a few days after the Quebec election that took place on October 29, people would criticize that election. They want to challenge the result. They want to say that people were afraid.

I say to this House, as I lived through what went on in Quebec, as I was involved in the election campaign, that Quebecers are not timid people. If the Creditistes want us to believe in this House that Quebecers are fearful people, I say it is the opposite. Quebecers have common sense. They were offered certain very clear political options, some others that were indistinct and others thouroughly nebulous. The Liberal party said: What did Mr. Bourassa's team offer during all that election campaign? Profitable federalism. He showed throughout Quebec what profitable federalism meant. Figures were given in support of that. They did not present a Year 1 budget in which a good deal of things were forgotten. A billion dollars was forgotten and they did not know how to get it back. One can recall the television debate, where Mr. Parizeau tried to defend his budget.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, what was offered to the Quebec people? Physical security. As the hon. member for Champlain said a while ago: What do people look for in a system? They look for physical security. I should like to add that they also look for social security. They also seek political security. But they seek above all—and that is what the Quebec Liberal party and their leader Mr. Bourassa offered the Quebec people—order and justice.

Referring to the October events, we saw a minister of justice who asserted himself, who assumed his responsibilities and who restored order in Quebec.

Another thing, Mr. Speaker, in connection with the first-year budget of the Parti Québécois. The federal government was blamed during the entire electoral campaign for having imposed the war measures.

In the "National expenses" item, mention is made that in an independent Quebec, 8,000 soldiers would be maintained. Why 8,000 soldiers? Merely to protect our territory. To my knowledge, Canada has been existing for 100 years, and there has never been any militia to protect Canada from the United States. But we were strong and respected. Why do Messrs. Lévesque and Parizeau not tell Canadians that once they are separated, invasion will come?

Second, why a militia of 8,000 men? Simply, they answer, in order to meet a few cases of national emergency. Well, in October 1970, we had a case of national emergency. They themselves even provide for votes to that effect in their own budget.

So, Mr. Speaker, we see what the Parti Québécois has to offer. But what can Social Credit offer us? At a certain time, it favours independence or supports an independentist government, but subject to the condition that they change the monetary system. They also suggest a plebiscite, but I think that the best one that we could have has been given by the people of Quebec last October 29, by saying "no" to the PQ, separation, independence and yes to a profitable federalism.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, even though Mr. Bourassa was reelected premier of Quebec with 102 seats, there are still going to be problems in the province of Quebec. During the last provincial campaign, the Parti Québécois tried to persuade us of the contrary, suggesting that once independence is achieved, there would be no problems any more in the province of Quebec.

No intellectually honest man would dare make such a statement. As I have stated on many occasions during the provincial elections, I feel that even with a very strong Liberal government, there will still be squabbles with the federal government. What is federalism? It is a dialogue. But before a dialogue can take place, there must be problems. The Trudeau, Pearson and St-Laurent administrations have caused problems over the years because they even refused to dialogue with the provinces to help them solve the problems confronting Quebec and the rest of Canada. But if they still want to speculate on the voting result of October 29 last, I think this is not honest. That vote was not one for the past but for youth, for the future and to enable us to keep on growing freely within all the scope of the word "free". I would certainly put into question the coming into power of a Péquiste government in Quebec because we would then cease to be free.

But we are really living this freedom and, in my opinion, as a Canadian, as a Quebecer I am going on living it. If we compare the economic point of view of federalism with that of separatism what was done during that election campaign, what have the Péquistes done?

They went across the province of Quebec with their Year One budget. They forgot so many facts that they were forced to plan little regional programs. They have established one for my own area. But they forgot merchant marine, the assistance to shipbuilding, and they forgot also the question of a direct link which will cost between $200 and $300 million, and the merchant marine, about $1 billion.

They forgot that in our region. Those people were in such deep trouble by the end of the election campaign that they had even thought of the Progressive Conservative party for Quebec, during the last campaign. Mr. Wagner himself, the member for Saint-Hyacinthe, came in our area and told us: If I forgot to promise you anything, to tell you something, I promise you anyway.

[Mr. Guay (Lévis).]

That is not the way to act in politics, Mr. Speaker, but we must be honest, and the Liberal party in Quebec made really honest and sensible proposals to the Quebec people, and they gave it an answer.

In conclusion, I would like to quote an article on the economy. This quotation is from Le Soleil, April 7, 1964: What do economists think of separatism?

> Even in the most favorable circumstances, they generally agree that it would bring about a decrease in our standing of living. Thus, an economist like André Raynauld, director of the Economic Science Department at the University of Montreal thinks that the standard of living in Quebec, which is presently 28 per cent lower than that of Ontario, would fall to 50 per cent for an indefinite period.
>
> On the other hand, Gérard Filion who is not properly speaking an economist but who is actively involved in the present economic life of Quebec as director of the General Investment Corporation, said two weeks ago in Rimouski that the major obstacle to the separation of Quebec is the decrease in the standard of living. According to him, separation would cause secondary industry to slow down considerably. Referring to two cases of immediate concern to him, the director of this public organization pointed out that the Forano and the Volcano industries, taken over by the G.I.C., would see their turnover reduced by half if Quebec separated. He also gave the example of the Quebec furniture market, 30 per cent of which is aimed at the Canadian market, which would be severely affected. At the same time, the director of the G.I.C. said that with its steel industry, the province of Quebec would exceed the economic prosperity of Ontario. This is probably nothing more than an unproved statement. Yet it was made by someone who is intimately involved in the every day realities of the Quebec economy.

I should like also to mention the editorial of Claude Ryan in Le Devoir of Friday, October 26, 1973. This editorial which is entitled "The Choice of October 29, Today's Option" reads as follows:

> The tendency today is towards the establishment of larger social, economic, and even political entities. To abandon the kind of experience that is Canada, it would require imperious and urgent reasons. These reasons cannot be found as yet in Quebec, at least they have not reached a level or a degree capable of gaining approval.
>
> Canadian federalism has been often criticized. There was reason to deplore its difficult adaptation to the Quebec situation, but one should not hasten to infer from that that it is no longer possible for the Quebec community to develop within the federal system.

He concludes his editorial by referring to the silent majority, and I quote:

> —they prefer for the time being that Quebec keeps on seeking its way in Canadian federalism. This preference is the result of some sound realism. We shall see tomorrow how it will express itself through Monday's voting.

Well, this vote was definitely confirmed before the population of all the provinces of Canada—because they were concerned—and before all the premiers. They were all wondering about the result of the vote and, as I said earlier, the people in Quebec answered: We vote not for an adventure, not for some vague promise, but for a realistic system. This is my opinion, Mr. Speaker, and I will keep on defending it in this House.

● (1720)

[English]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to speak about the Quebec election, except in one sense. However, we have had an interesting afternoon hearing about it. I will just refer in two sentences to the speech of the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). I wondered if within the ranks of the Social Credit Party there were those who were classified by any of the rest of my colleagues as being separatists.

I do not want to be pretentious when I say this, but my colleagues and I have had reason to doubt the thrust of the Social Credit Party. However, we have had no reason to doubt their loyalty to this country. I would have thought that separatism would have been the last adjective they would use, including the hon. member for Témiscamingue. He mentioned the futile search some years ago in the halls of Westminster for the constitution of Canada. That was a light-hearted reference. The document, of course, is there in the statutes.

It is not a bad idea to remind ourselves it is an acute embarrassment to our colleagues in the British parliament, and successive British governments, that we in Canada have not yet been able to make the constitutional arrangements so that we can patriate the constitution and find an amending formula that is acceptable. I might say in passing that surely there are many things we want to charge the British government with from time to time, but we could never mount a successful argument that it is they who are resisting the wish to patriate the constitution. When some of our colleagues from European parliaments were here last week, a British member of parliament, Mr. Kirk, said to me, for Heaven's sake when are you people going to find a way to get the document or statute back to Canada? I did not have time to wander through 105 years history, but after a little time we perhaps understood each other better on this issue.

A wise and distinguished Canadian, Robertson Davies, said recently that Canadians are suffering from linguistic inflation. I want it to be clearly understood that has nothing to do with the official languages. Although I wish my facility in French were better, I suspect that Robertson Davies charge would also apply to the French language. If so, I grieve for them. However, he was referring to the English language and the fact that nowadays a good many people lard or load their language with slogans, adjectives and adverbs and in a way have expectations of people about governments almost impossible to fulfil.

I hope the cabinet will not think I have gone soft on them or anything, but I am struck by the fact that almost any government of almost any political stripe is having a difficult time today in fulfilling the expectations of people. I suspect one of the reasons is that many of us, and I suppose we should all say, "mea culpa" or take the blame, are guilty of linguistic inflation. Robertson Davies went on to say:

> Language in Canada today is being broken down and rubbed away by people who care nothing for words . . . They have debased the coinage of language to the point where we have a dangerous condition of linguistic inflation in which thought is clouded and feeling degraded.

I just make the plea, without discussing the arrangement of constitution-making, that we should try not to be trapped by Robertson Davies' phrase "linguistic inflation". It is a difficult subject that is almost trite to us.

The notice of motion, I say with great respect to the mover, is in a way an example of linguistic inflation. Despite what one's views may be about constitutional evolution in Canada, I do not think reform is helped by the extravagant wording of the motion. My party believes the stars are now in the right position to begin again the consulting process in preparation for the day we all look forward to, the day that we patriate the constitution with an amending formula flexible enough to meet the demands of the future of all the country and yet sufficiently sensitive so as to give no cause for alarm to any of the groups of peoples who make up this country.

When talking about this motion, as far as I am concerned, it would be quite wrong for me to attempt an analysis of the results of the Quebec election and the mandate given to the Liberal government there. All I want to say is that surely it is not an overstatement to state that the premier and government can now speak with the authority that 102 seats gives them in the National Assembly. I am not discussing whether 102 seats is a good or a bad thing. That is for others to discuss or we might discuss it on another occasion. All I am saying is that nobody can say the premier or government of Quebec approaches constitutional amendment with lack of confidence from the people. I think this is a significant change.

I am going to try a paradox because I believe it is not such a bad thing in 1973 that the government of Canada faces constitutional evolution in a minority position. I suspect this situation should be a bit chastening to a government, one which will demand less of what I might call confrontation politics and more consultation politics. It is another paradox about our country that we seem to enjoy an international reputation as peacemakers. Although there is some difficulty about the arrangements, they really are not the fault of Canada. However, we seem to have a terrible time trying to arrange our affairs domestically in a suitable manner.

I am troubled by those who see the future of this country decided by simple slogans like "One Canada". "One Canada" is a copout by people who really do not want to think of the constitutional arrangements. Then, there are those, and I regret to say it, who glory in our divisions. They surely are the traitors in our times. There are also those who pander to bigots. All I can say is that the cup from which they drink contains poison.

I was glad to hear the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) mention the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitution. I do not have very much time, but I want to reflect on one or two of the recommendations. I very much hope that some of the recommendations the members of the committee were able to make will not only be useful, and that is not a strong enough word, but will be incorporated in the new constitution of Canada. I have taken the time to underline a couple of them. For instance, recommendation No. 2 reads:

● (1730)

> A new Canadian constitution should be based on functional considerations which would lead to greater decentralization of governmental powers in all areas touching culture and social policy and to greater centralization of powers which have important economic effects at the national level. Functional considerations also require greater decentralization in many areas of governmental administration.

Unfortunately for the country, I have never tried to bore the House with fiscal or monetary theories. I am not informed on this subject. But perhaps the fact that I am not makes it possible for me to say this: I have never understood how a federal government, the national government of the country, could possibly execute useful fiscal and monetary policies when ten provincial governments and many of their agencies, and large agencies at that—I think of Quebec Hydro, Ontario Hydro and others—are able to go to the financial marketplaces of the world without even a bow in the direction of the federal government and make arrangements which obviously could have adverse effects on national policy. This is the kind of thing which recommendation No. 2 would, I hope, seek to prevent.

Then we come to the recommendation about our native peoples. Here we find another of the paradoxes of Canada because we, that is, all of us in our representative capacity, are on a collision course. What we are dealing with is question involving two basic rights, rights which as far as I can see cannot be reconciled at this stage in history. I am thinking now of the Bedard and Lavell case before the Supreme Court of Canada. I do not wish to bore the House by attempting an analysis of the judgment in that case. The problem is that the legitimate aspirations of the women of Canada to have their status at least delineated and dealt with in an entrenched declaration of human rights, or an entrenched bill of rights, is in collision with a recommendation we have made that no constitutional changes affecting native people should be made until such time as their own organizations have completed their research into questions of treaty and aboriginal rights in Canada.

We are all getting a good deal of mail on this subject—letters containing legitimate complaints that we are not moving quickly enough as a government or as a parliament in this field of human rights. Yet the dilemma arises directly when we consider the entrenchment of those rights before our native people have had time to advise the government and the parliament as to the nature of their aspirations. I am raising this matter because, as one interested in this conflict, I do not see how the two ministers concerned can resolve it. Both sides are right. Madame Bedard and Madame Lavell are right. Of course they are right. But the native people of Canada are right as well. While looking to the two ministers to reconcile these points of view, it will do us no harm to raise the issue and talk about it dispassionately.

The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) mentioned the recommendation of the special committee on regional disparities. We were not able to put into a fundamental form the rights of people in certain parts of Canada to enjoy equality of opportunity, and so on, but this should not confuse or discourage people. The difficulty we faced was this: we did not feel it was responsible to give citizens a right of action against the government because they might not enjoy each and every right, in the economic sense, that their neighbours enjoyed. But I am certain it is equally important in our thinking about constitution-making that men and women taking home pay cheques 40 per cent below those which people in provinces such as Ontario and British Columbia are receiving—60 cents as compared with a dollar—have rights in the economic field just as strong as those of our citizens who properly and wisely treasure their linguistic and cultural inheritance.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

There are many other points made in the report of the special committee. There were, in fact, more than 100 recommendations. I, too, welcome this debate because it gives us a chance to take out the report which was tabled in 1972, dust it off if need be, and remind parliament that within its covers are a good many recommendations which if adopted would have a positive effect upon federal arrangements.

Lastly, I would refer hon. members to an interesting statement in an editorial in the August issue of the Journal of Canadian Studies. The article was discussing a review which Mr. Claude Ryan made of some of the writings of André Laurendeau. I shall not bore the House with the whole thing, but if I read the editorial describing the review correctly, the point is that it is no longer right or legitimate or fair—here I am chiding English Canadians, so I am on safe ground, I hope—for English Canadians to carry on defining their culture, as the editorial says, in terms of biculturalism, as has been fashionable in certain circles of English Canada, as an excuse for English Canada failing to develop a culture of its own.

Anyone who has listened to the ongoing Canadian debate during the last decade has heard this sort of talk—"We need this special relationship with our French-speaking brothers and sisters because it is the way in which we can be different from the Americans." I think this demeans both sides of this partnership. It is no longer fair and sensible for English Canadians to "cop out" on their side from a federal arrangement which all of us should consider as a very special and treasured possession.

● (1740)

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the only solution put forward by the federal government to the constitutional problem resides in the Victoria charter, this lure for the province of Quebec, which is besides rejected by all the people of Quebec.

The last provincial election in Quebec, which took place on October 29, places us in front of a clear and precise fact, an unequivocal situation and it places the rest of Canada in front of a hard fact: one person out of three in Quebec wants the independence of the province and the proportion goes up to 35 per cent when we consider only the vote of French Canadians.

In the face of such a situation, Canada does not have the leisure to look arrogantly at what happens in the province of Quebec. Canada must have a firm attitude and show all possible objectivity during the coming months. It must not poke up the fire nor provoke violence by reiterating its excessively arrogant and provocative positions. The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) must not forget that

Her Majesty Elizabeth II is still the Queen of Canada and that he is not on the throne.

If it claims to have reached maturity, Canada cannot shut its eyes on the problems which are raised and understood by a very large portion of Quebec. The issue in Quebec is much more a constitutional problem than one of independence.

I say very coolly that there are a lot more independentists and separatists without the province of Quebec than there are within. I consider that the attitude of English-speaking Canadians towards French-speaking Canadians is much more separatist than that of Quebecers militating within the Parti Québécois. When one sees that French Canadians with equal qualifications earn less then English Canadians, that bilingual French Canadians with equal—and sometimes higher qualifications because they are bilingual—earn less than English Canadians, then I ask, who are the separatists in Canada?

All political parties in the province of Quebec strongly advocated a constitutional reform, and even the Quebec Liberal party—probably to build up political capital—because how can you want the provincial Liberal Party, which is continuously towed by the federal Liberal Party, to have any concern for the French-Canadian nation when its line of thoughts and action are dictated by Mother Superior in Ottawa?

That has always been its main concern no matter what the situation people faced and are still facing. All political parties in Quebec as the federal Liberal Party, the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party demanded on several occasions in the last several years a constitutional revision to allow the province of Quebec to fulfill itself in an environment of peace and prosperity. The federal government would always find a clever and hypocritical way of holding back and extending that situation from one federal-provincial conference to another. The federal government has always managed to create hopes and illusions.

The time has come to take our responsibilities and allow the provinces to take theirs. And since confederation was created by the provinces it is up to them to review it.

When in 1864, and finally in 1867, the Fathers of Confederation agreed to create a confederate system so as to meet more adequately the needs of each province they did not need a centralist federal government such as the current one to reach an agreement.

Since the advent of confederation 106 years have gone by; the needs have changed, the country has become bigger, additional provinces have joined to enrich it with their participation. But today's needs are not those of 1867. Each Canadian province has different needs which are often difficult to understand from one province to the other. We note regretfully that British Columbia finds it hard to understand the Newfoundland attitude as does Prince Edward Island with Manitoba or Alberta.

It is well-known that the French-Canadian nation does not understand confederation and federal government as the other provinces do. They do not have the same feelings because the other provinces have progressively been led to believe that the only important, powerful and reliable government is the federal government.

This is understandable since the federal government has always been composed of a majority of English-speaking people and mainly administered by English-speaking people. Outside Quebec the French-speaking reality does not exist.

• (1750)

If you visit western Canada and linguistic problems and bilingualism are brought up, the Ukrainian will say that for him the first language is English and the second, Ukrainian, the German will say that English is the first language and German the second, and the Polish will also tell you that English is the first language and Polish the second. If you try to make them believe the second official language of Canada is French, they will be stunned and will take you for some lunatic or day dreamer.

Mr. Speaker, in 1867 the provinces united to create out of nothing a confederal state. And their discussions resulted in a federal government. The federal government was created by the provinces.

Unfortunately, today we are often witnessing an inversion of values within a family, and now children are dictating the behaviour to their parents. Children determine premises in all discussions with their parents; the federal government thrusts its views on the provinces, the federal government dictates work methods to the provinces as if it had created them and they belonged to it.

It is not unusual for the federal government to interfere with the provinces through constitutional conferences. If the provinces got together in 1867 to create the federal government, they do not need it to amend it according their needs. The provinces must dictate to the federal government what they want to get from it. Unfortunately, because of current practices, we are witnessing a conflict between the federal government and the provinces. We find that the baby is now a teenager, but it has not come yet to maturity, and that perhaps it will never achieve it.

The right hon. Prime Minister himself (Mr. Trudeau) said this at the Victoria Conference, and I quote:

> Our presence here also shows that the work so boldly started in the Atlantic city of Charlottetown in 1864 is still unfinished.

And it is the right hon. Prime Minister who says that the discussions on Confederation started in 1864 are still unfinished. I think the Prime Minister should wait until those discussions are over before poking his nose where he should not. At this Victoria Conference, the Prime Minister also said, and I quote:

> The other English colonies who proclaimed their independence much later learned from our experience; they took their place in the world as full-fledged nations able to implement and amend, if they wished, their own constitution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when a country is unable to amend its own constitution, it is because it is not a sovereign country but a colony. Mr. Speaker, if we want to be independent on the international level, no longer depend on the British Empire to draw up our own policies, we do not need to review our constitution but rather to draw up a constitution after agreeing with the provinces. What we need is not to amend a constitution that nobody wants, but to bring together the premiers of all provinces, in order to create a federal state that will give satisfaction to all the constituent elements.

What we need is a constitution where there will be no mention of the word province, but rather of the word state, where our political independence will be proclaimed. It must be noted that if people talk about independence in the province of Quebec, on the political level, Canada still does not have her independence. One only has to see, at the opening of each session, the representative of the Queen of England authorizing us to speak to know that Canada's independence does not exist. And if one of the ten constituent provinces of Confederation talks about political independence, that province is certainly not to be blamed for its initiative and it is certainly not us, in the federal Parliament, who have to teach it a lesson.

Mr. Speaker, the provinces, except Quebec, do not care much about the constitution. At the Victoria Conference, for instance, the Premier of British Columbia was heard to state, and I quote:

—the provision of jobs is the most urgent need confronting this Conference and the nation today. The preservation of our natural environment and pollution control are also matters of high priority, and particularly important is the provision of a healthy moral environment in which our young people can grow to maturity.

He also stated that the constitution was not the priority problem that our country had to face and that if such was the situation in February 1968 when the constitutional review was undertaken, this was no more so than in June 1971, in view of the economic recession and rise in unemployment over that relatively short period.

As for the Premier of Nova Scotia, he deals with constitutional review in so far as offshore mining rights are concerned. Obviously, he is not interested in the linguistic problem since, outside Quebec, there is no language problem because everything is done in English.

Mr. Speaker, at the Victoria conference, the Prime Minister of Canada assumed the chairmanship of the conference. The proposal of the federal government was, in my opinion, a fantastic deceit and trickery on Quebec.

Fortunately, the people read his hand and the province of Quebec did not pass under the yolk. Indeed, at the present time, without any amendment to the constitution, Quebec can withdraw any time from confederation, while according to the shrewd proposals of the Prime Minister, Quebec could not dissociate itself from the Confederation Act.

When we read the Victoria agreement, we realize that to amend the constitution, the majority must include in the first place each province whose population before the passage of that proclamation, according to any general census at least 25 per cent of the Canadian people, which means Quebec and Ontario.

The majority must also include at least two of the Atlantic provinces, at least two western provinces, provided the consenting provinces represent jointly, following the last general census preceeding the adoption of this proclamation, at least 50 per cent of the population of all western provinces.

This means that Ontario is in a position to veto any modification requested by Quebec and that British Columbia can also do the same; this is the stumbling block.

[Mr. Boisvert.]

If you refer to article 20 of that same Victoria charter, you will find precisely what Canada is made of. You can read that Canada consists of ten provinces, one of which being Quebec, in addition to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, which means that if Quebec ever decides to leave confederation, it would need—which is not necessary today—to amend article 20, the agreement of a minimum of six provinces including Ontario or of a minimum of seven provinces if British Columbia disagreed. Therefore, this means that Quebec can now leave confederation and, with the Victoria charter, it would be caught in it.

How is it possible for previously independent States to give up their independence for a mess of pottage. What do the other provinces put in the balance? Mr. Speaker, since there are only two minutes left, I would like to inform you that it is six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I might tell the hon. member that he has about three minutes left. Perhaps he might use the last two minutes of his time.

Mr. Boisvert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The nine other provinces should take their role seriously before it is too late. The provinces will have to get together, without the federal government, to labour over a constitution which we do not have at the present time, trumpet forth the independence of Canada, and grant once and for all to all Canadians the right to speak their own languages, share in the country's prosperity and be treated as equals.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, the other nine provinces will have to take their roles seriously before it is too late. Those nine provinces will have to withdraw themselves alone, without the federal government, and they will have to arrange a constitution that we do not have presently, one that will proclaim the independence of Canada and will allow all Canadians to express themselves freely in their language, to participate in the prosperity of the country, so they will all be treated on the same level now and forever. In other words, and in practice, so that Ste. Scholastique and Pickering will be treated on the same level.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I will recognize the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) at eight o'clock. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of this debate we heard an impassioned plea for a non-partisan approach to constitutional reform from the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) who, I regret to say, is not in the House at the moment. However, the words both of the motion he moved and of his speech belied his stated intention. I am willing to give the hon. member the benefit of the doubt with respect to his intentions. His intentions may have been in the clouds of objectivity, but his feet remained mired in the mud of partisanship.

I think it is no exaggeration to say that the hon. member has cheapened the whole constitutional debate by accusing the Canadian government of maintaining unity through fear, autocracy and oligarchy. It is not the Government of Canada which has created the problem of separatism and the fear of separatism; it is the activity of a political party in the province of Quebec which has dedicated itself to the destruction of this country. I would like to hear the hon. member denounce them with the same fervour with which he has attacked the Government of Canada this afternoon.

I am ashamed to have to say that this hon. member not only did not denounce separatism, but said he would support it if along with it there would be a Social Credit government. I was ashamed, as a member of this House, to hear this statement. Not only was it offensive to members of this House; it was also highly irrelevant to the political debate.

We all know, including the hon. member, that the inhabitants of a province are free to vote as they wish. The Social Credit party has even succeeded in gaining office in one of the provinces of Canada. The Social Credit party does not need independence to come to power and, as the hon. member well knows, the independence which the separatist party in Quebec promises would not bring the Social Credit party to power. I was especially embarrassed at that moment for the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), the leader of the party, who has gone across this whole country and taken a stand highly in favour of our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: That hon. member proclaimed his devotion to Canada again in his speech this afternoon. He need not have done so, because no one in the House is unaware of the fact that he is an ardent federalist. But obviously he was embarrassed by the words of his colleague because he spent his whole speech trying to reinterpret what the hon. member for Champlain had said. Skilful debater that he is, he changed the whole context of the notion of independence to try to show that individual freedom and independence of action by provinces are possible and even necessary within a federal structure. He spoke of independence within a truly united Canada. We would all agree with that, of course, Mr. Speaker. He made his point well.

Obviously, there are independent fields of action provided to the provinces even now by section 92 of the British North America Act. It was not this relative kind of independence that the hon. member for Champlain had in mind, but this was undoubtedly the best recovery possible which his leader could make, in the circumstances, after the hon. member's fumble.

The hon. member for Témiscamingue would also have been disturbed if he had been here to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Boisvert). Admittedly, that hon. member did a good job of refuting one of the points of his colleague, the hon. member for Champlain, who had said in his motion that the federal government had failed to do anything to encourage the provinces to get together in order to amend or redraft the Canadian Constitution. The hon. member for Drummond argued that the federal government had no role at all in constitutional reform and therefore, of course, had no business in trying to provide leadership. The provinces, he said, are states which can leave the country at will, at any time and, as befits such entities, it is their prerogative to set the pace of such negotiations and tell the federal government what they want.

The hon. member for Drummond went on to attack the formula for constitutional amendment agreed on at Victoria, on the ground that it would limit Quebec in a way that it is not presently limited; that whereas now it has the unilateral right to secede from this country if it should so wish, it would lose this right if the Victoria accord came into effect. There are many of us who have criticisms of the amending formula which was agreed to at Victoria. I, personally, would hope that with a more sober government in British Columbia, even that province would not wish to press the excessive claims which it had embodied in the earlier version of the formula, and that it would now be possible to reach a formula in which the role and the position of the western provinces was the same as that of the Atlantic provinces and in which the requirement for agreement was merely for any two provinces, without putting in the protective clause for British Columbia.

But the attack of the hon. member for Drummond on the formula was based on what I might call a "funny" constitutional theory which really has no basis in reality at all. In fact, the law is that the reform of our constitution or any changes have to be made by the British Parliament on an address by both Houses of the Canadian Parliament. That is very well known, Mr. Speaker, and it hardly needs repetition in this place. There is really no role legally for any province in constitutional amendments.

● (2010)

The practice which has tended to evolve is that the provinces be consulted, one might say, by indulgence of the federal government. It may be that at some time the federal government will want to depart from that practice; for example, if it is not possible to get agreement from the provinces in any other way, or if one province should be especially obstinate about agreeing on a new constitutional practice. For the moment, however, the practice is that all provinces are consulted and there is nothing which would allow a single province, Quebec or any other, to have a unilateral right to do what it wishes. However, I hope our solidarity with the people of Quebec does not rest on constitutional formulas but, rather, on a shared past and a shared future.

In the circumstances, perhaps we should be tolerant of the hon. members to our right. I suspect that what we are encountering from that party in this debate is really sour grapes as a result of the Quebec election. I believe it is worth pausing for a moment to reflect on that election and the results of it from the viewpoint of our theory of representation. Even some ardent federalists have been calling the results excessive and not representative of the views of the Quebec people. We hear talk of proportional representation being a better system.

Of course, the form of voting which the people of Quebec wish to use is for them to decide, but since the theory is also common to this House I hope I may be permitted to say that the theory of representation on which this House proceeds is that our people live in communities and that these communities deserve representation. They deserve the constant type of representation which they get from having a single member of parliament who will speak for their interests and will represent them in their ordinary problems as well as in the great matters of state. This, of course, is not possible under proportional representation.

The Quebec election showed us that in every part of Quebec and indeed in almost every community in that province the people stood for Canada, and not separation from Canada. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this is a very important point for them to have established and it is indeed a true reflection of what the people of Quebec feel and want.

The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) made the point in his remarks that the government has seen fit to ignore the recommendations of the Special Committee on the Constitution of Canada, of which that hon. gentleman was a member and I had the honour to be chairman from this House. In general, I find myself in considerable sympathy with his position and even with many of his remarks today, but I do not believe I can allow to pass his view that the government has seen fit to ignore the recommendations of that committee. That is not what has happened at all. Let us look at some examples.

The bilingualism policy is possibly not the best example because it has other sources as well, but the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) has been proceeding with a bilingualism policy which is in accord with the recommendations of the special committee. In the area of multiculturalism, the policy put forward by the government and which is being administered by the Minister of State responsible for multiculturalism (Mr. Haidasz) is entirely the policy which was recommended by that committee. It is true that in this case the government's policy was announced first, but only after the committee had held extensive hearings across the country at which these views had been presented and at which members of the committee had made their views known, and only after our recommendations had been prepared and imparted to the party caucuses. At that stage, our recommendations were common currency and I think we can feel that the government policy which was adopted before the final recommendation was a reflection of those recommendations.

Perhaps in no area has there been so much implementation of recommendations as in the area of housing. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) has instituted trilevel conferences, and has generally encouraged greater consultation at the municipal level. As far as the larger cities in the country are concerned, the federal government has been endeavouring to set up permanent trilevel bodies for consultation. The neighbourhood rehabilitation program is full of consultation procedures with the provinces and the local neighbourhoods.

In his budget last spring, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) presented a broader equalization formula which for the first time would include what happened at the municipal level: a tax base including the municipal level in the equalization formula is something which the committee was urging.

The broadcasting policy which the government put forward, while not one which is entirely acceptable to the provinces at the present time, is one which reflects greater sharing by the provinces, and it was advocated by the special joint committee. Perhaps, above all, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), whom I am pleased to see in the House, has been following one of the most important recommendations of the committee, that of allowing the provinces to share in the mechanism by which family allowances are granted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the committee recommended that this should be the pattern established by the constitution for demographic grants in general. The minister has been blazing this new trail in his negotiations with the provinces in regard to family allowances. The legislation which is in the process of receiving final approval from the House will allow the provinces to vary the amount paid, so that while a certain minimum payment must be made across the country, a province will be able to vary, according to certain criteria, the amount of money which it pays to its citizens. A province can therefore have a population policy which is based on the feelings of the people in that particular province.

Far from being ignored, Mr. Speaker, the recommendations of the special joint committee are the everyday stuff of federal policy. At the federal level, we might say that this has been one of the most implemented reports in Canadian history. Naturally, the federal government cannot change the constitution on its own; so if this is where one is looking for implementation, it obviously has not yet been possible to do it at this level.

I do not need to detail for members of this House the reasons for the delay, but obviously the federal government has not been responsible for the breakdown of the Victoria negotiations or the constitutional impasse which followed. The federal government has remained constantly open to further negotiations with the provinces. Several times the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has urged the province of Quebec to present new proposals since it was the province primarily responsible for the failure to gain unanimous acceptance of the earlier proposals.

I agree with the hon. member for Greenwood and the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) on the necessity of proceeding with these constitutional negotiations as quickly as possible, but obviously this is not something which is subject to the control of this House or even subject to the control of the federal government. It depends upon the broader political winds in the country. We can here express our hope and desire that these negotiations should take place as soon as possible, that they should be as full as possible and that the federal government should provide the kind of leadership which the report of the special joint committee suggested.

I think it is important to note, lest we get a false emphasis, that constitutional reform is not a one-way street. The special joint committee, it is true, put greater stress on decentralization and especially on what we call the cultural imperative for Quebec. I would read to hon. members a few sentences from the committee report as follows:

> We acknowledge a cultural imperative for Quebec; it must have sufficient control over its collective life to ensure the preservation and development of French Canadian culture. Put another way, the constitution must guarantee the preservation of the collective personality of French Quebec. In the expansion of provincial powers which we propose, Quebec would gain new powers to achieve these ends.

● (2020)

That was one of the most important objectives of the committee's work, Mr. Speaker. I believe the primary thrust of the committee's recommendation was one of decentralization. We also point out in our report that there must be changes the other way, that the provinces must also allow the federal government greater latitude. This is important in economic areas. The hon. member for Greenwood spoke about these things this afternoon. I agree with the points he made and there is no need to emphasize them further.

In order to present a balanced point of view, I wish to read some further words of the committee's report as follows:

> We have spoken of the need for an increase in both centralization and decentralization, depending on functional considerations. In our view greater decentralization in areas of culture and social policy would benefit all the provinces . . .
>
> On the other hand, greater centralization is necessary in the regulation of the economy.

I hope the time for constitutional reform is at hand. I know the federal government is prepared to lead the way. If I may express my personal hope, it is that the federal government will attempt to consummate these changes in one single package deal. I have always felt, personally, that we are more likely to arrive at a satisfactory result if, instead of bartering on a power-by-power basis and trying to do a few things, we sit down, on the basis of the Victoria charter, to do all the work at once so that there can be complete bargaining and a complete exchange of views and concessions from one side to the other. In other words, this exchange should not be a one-way exchange but should be a two-way exchange, as the committee suggested. It seems to me that this would be the most fruitful way for us to work on constitutional reform at present.

However it is done, I know that members of this House will want to express to the government their feelings, and I think they will say that it is time for our constitution to be reformed or to be revised. It should be changed in such a way that the people of Canada will be able to feel that the constitution responds to their needs of the moment and that they can feel more truly Canadian than has been the case under existing mechanisms.

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to applaud the initiative of the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) in introducing the motion we are debating. Many members who have spoken before me in this debate have made specific reference to constitutional discussions which have been before us and which have been of concern for some time. I do not intend to repeat what they said or to speak particularly about the direct method of repatriation in a discussing the constitution. I want, instead, to turn my attention tonight and the attention of the House to that atmosphere of co-operation which is necessary before there can be an amendment of the constitution and which is necessary, indeed, before the constitution can be made to work.

I was interested in hearing the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) indicate this afternoon that a debate on this topic is usually a debate which is of special interest to members of this House from the province of Quebec, because in that province there is a special interest in constitutional matters. Sir, it used to be that members of this House from Alberta were able to more or less take a spectator's seat in those discussions on federal-provincial relations. That is not the case tonight.

It is natural that I should view and enter this debate against the context of the current deep dispute about energy matters between Alberta and Ottawa. No Albertan could escape that context because, sir, there is an anger in Alberta now that exceeds in intensity anything in my memory or in the memory of older men than I. It is not anger that other people would want to use our oil, our resources. We want them to. Moreover, we want Canadian consumers to have a better price and better access to our resources than nationals of other countries. The Premier of Alberta has made that clear. Instead, sir, the anger in Alberta is about the methods this government has used to implement a policy which, while it is important to every region of Canada, is most important to Alberta because it affects not only our price of fuel and our prospects of warmth but our capacity to grow and to industrialize.

This is not the place to debate the merits of particular federal proposals regarding energy. Those have been debated on other occasions in this House, and will be again. The debate inspired by this motion concerns, not the merits of a particular case but the methods by which our federal system works. In many ways, this is the most appropriate forum for a review of the Alberta situation, because whatever disagreement might exist about the merits of the actions proposed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), what inflames Alberta opinion most is the method by which these decisions, of vital importance to Alberta, were imposed—clearly without consultation and, one must assume, without consideration of the impact the measures will have upon Alberta's capacity to grow.

Whatever disagreement there might be about the things the minister of energy has done, the anger in Alberta today is about the way he has done these things. And the concern for Canada is that the method he has applied here—the method of a bull in a china shop—is a warning of the way in which other provinces might be treated on other issues by other ministers at other times. That warning, sir, is more profound because, while the minister of energy has a special talent for provocation, the style of confrontation which he has adopted toward Alberta is a style which before the last election was becoming a trademark of this government and which apparently now is being renewed.

Sir, no Canadian should need reminding of the diversity of our country. That diversity is the reason we have a federal system where provinces and the national government distribute most powers and share others. This federal system was not imposed upon Canada. It grew out of our nature and is the only system which can hope to unite a diverse country and yet allow its individual parts to find their own identity and strength. By the very nature of our country, we are bound to have interests which conflict. That means that a particular obligation lies upon our politicians to try to unite differences, not excite differences. And if that is an obligation upon those of us who sit on the backbenches of parliament, it is an obligation with a particular weight for those who occupy ministerial offices. Yet in this dispute with Alberta that is precisely the obligation which the minister of energy has affronted and ignored.

I want to review for this House the sad record of what has happened, in the name of consultation, on this export tax. But first let me try to make this House understand the particular importance of this question to Alberta. What we are worried about here is not simply revenue, although of course that is important. What we are worried about, as well, is the sense—and we have the sense—that control of resources means control of the future of the province of Alberta. It is very much less a matter of price than it is a matter of future.

We have primarily relied, in the province of Alberta, on primary production, on agriculture. We have the opportunity to industrialize and we have begun to industrialize. But we are working with certain regional disadvantages. Freight rates are one, population distribution is another, market distribution is yet another, the habit of investors to invest in central Canada is another. We have one strong card—petroleum. It provides us with the opportunity to develop petrochemical industries and jobs. Sir, this opportunity would help us to turn the corner and become a strong, industrialized province which would contribute to the industrial strength of the whole of Canada. However, we have no reason for confidence that this goal will be accomplished by Ottawa directing policy, and we have no reason for confidence after looking back at the history of tariffs, at the present discrimination in transportation and at a variety of other matters.

What I should like to do tonight is try to convey a state of mind which it would be folly for other parts of Canada to ignore, just as it would have been folly for other parts of Canada to ignore the state of mind that began manifesting itself in Quebec in the early 1960s. This House should remember that the export tax was one of two barrels which hit Alberta in early September. The other was the prospect that Syncrude might be denied the kind of tax treatment which other oil producers in Alberta would receive and that Syncrude consequently might well be held up. Moreover, sir, the export tax seemed to be a device aimed particularly at Alberta and at Alberta's major resources and not applied, as it might have been, to the resources of other provinces. It was a particular attack on a particular province.

● (2030)

In September, energy ministers of the Alberta and Canadian governments were in Ottawa at a meeting which had been arranged some time previously. The apparent attitude on both sides was conciliatory. The first item on the agenda was the need for close and continuing consultation. The ministers discussed that first item and agreed to maintain close contact and consult one another thoroughly. The federal minister of energy made the point that in this field events develop quickly and that consultation could not be considered as constituting a right to veto. Naturally, that position was accepted by the representatives of Alberta.

The discussion progressed to other items on the agenda. Then some time between 11 a.m. and noon the federal minister of energy announced that the National Energy Board would be imposing an export tax of about 40 cents and that the announcement would be made publicly later that day. Alberta ministers had no warning that was coming and no opportunity to make comments or suggestions which would materially affect the decision.

Scant minutes after affirming the need for consultation, the federal minister presented Alberta with a fait accompli. That was not consultation. That was mere advice. Any province, treated that way on a matter of such vital interest to its future, would have responded in anger. Indeed, any federal government which enshrined the habit of treating provinces that way would face a breakdown in all of its relations with all of the provinces of Canada. That was the first export tax, the 40-cent tax.

The second act in this charade of consultation began on Monday, October 29—again in Ottawa. Four senior ministers of the government of Alberta came to Ottawa to meet with the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). They were briefed by officials of the Department of External Affairs on developments in the Middle East. They had general discussions concerning plans Ottawa might have for a pipeline to Montreal. They discussed the possibility of staging-in price increases.

On the export tax, the Alberta ministers took the position that since they disagreed with the idea of the tax, they saw no immediate point in discussing how its proceeds might be distributed. It is clear there was no discussion at all of any prospect of an immediate rise in that export tax, and certainly not any discussion of a proposal to more than quadruple the amount. Indeed, the federal minister of energy said that events might develop that would mean an export tax might not have to be imposed. The federal minister indicated to his provincial colleagues that, in his view, the export tax proposal "was not written in stone". The ministers then repaired to a joint press conference at which the provincial minister of intergovernmental affairs went out of his way to make clear Alberta's interest in adopting a "Canada first" position.

Four senior Alberta ministers left those meetings agreed on three clear impressions. Their first impression was that serious consideration was being given to the staging-in of increases. The second impression was that there was now a genuine commitment to consultation on the part of the federal ministers. The third impression was that if there was to be any change at all in the export tax, the change would be in the direction of removing the tax. It is conceivable that one of these ministers might have been wrong, but it is surely stretching credulity to suggest that all four ministers were wrong on all three impressions.

Four days later, on Thursday, November 1—a week ago today—the federal minister of energy rose in his place to announce that the export tax had been more than quadrupled. Alberta officials were advised a matter of hours before the public announcement. Again it was advice, not consultation. However, this second case was worse than the first. In the first case, the export tax had come out of the blue. In the second case, it came four days after a meeting in which Alberta ministers believed they received a message that the export tax might go down, or it might go out, but at which no indication at all was given that the tax might go up so exorbitantly.

There might be some members of this House who do not like Albertans. I do not say that there are, but that there might be. That really does not matter because these tactics could be applied to any province, not just Alberta; and on any matter, not just petroleum. I hope that members of this House and of the public generally, no matter how preoccupied they might be about the price of fuel or the extent of foreign ownership of any other extraneous question, will remember that we are dealing here with a method of the application of federal power that could be imposed as arbitrarily upon any province or any interest as it has been upon Alberta.

It is interesting, for example, to conjecture what the response would have been had federal involvement in the financing of higher education been approached in the early 1960s in the spirit which marked the federal imposition this fall of an export tax upon petroleum produced primarily in one province.

I said at the beginning that the purpose of a federal system, and particularly the federal government, must be to unite differences, not inflame them. The reason that is important is that it is easy, in Canada, to inflame differences among regions. Particularly when emotional questions are involved, as emotional questions are involved here, it would be relatively easy to unite most of Canada against one part of Canada. However, that would be a destructive unity which would lead inexorably to the disintegration of the nation.

I utter that caution not simply to my colleagues in this House but also to the press gallery. One problem inherent in our system is the natural tendency of the national press to take Ottawa's view in a dispute with the provinces. That is not due to prejudgment so much as to the fact that journalists are locked in here in day to day contact with one side in a national dispute. I believe it has been harmful to Alberta that this disagreement broke out at roughly the same time that a general election was in progress in Quebec, which meant that several journalists from that province, who have reason to know that Ottawa is not always even-handed in its dealings with the province, were preoccupied at home and thus did not have the opportunity to visit the province and the people of Alberta to learn Alberta's side of this story.

The real tragedy flowing from the methods of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is that it has created an atmosphere of confrontation on a question where federal-provincial co-operation could have prevailed. Alberta wants to co-operate with other provinces and other Canadians to ensure supply and arrange a better price for Canadian consumers. The premier and his ministers have made that clear. They have been calling for some time for a national federal-provincial conference to work out the priorities and the policies that Canada and the provinces might follow to meet the challenges raised by energy questions. However, co-operation is a two-way street. Ottawa must demonstrate a willingness to work with Alberta. That would have been much easier two months ago, before the actions of the minister of energy gave Alberta ample cause to distrust that minister and anyone acting in his name. But it is not impossible to achieve now.

The language of this motion deplores the tactics of confrontation and fear which have marked the approach of this government to federal-provincial relations. Of course we deplore that approach, but we must do more than deplore. We have to turn the practices of this government around and insist, as a parliament, upon an atmosphere of co-operation with the provinces instead of the present atmosphere of confrontation.

It might be more amusing to have the luxury of a full-scale feud between a province and the central government, but that is very literally and clearly a luxury we cannot afford. Not only is there the danger that this atmosphere of confrontation might prolong disagreement about national energy policy; there is also the very real danger that this tactic, if practised continually by the federal government, will lead to a reaction in some regions that will make national unity very difficult to maintain.

However important laws might be in Canada, the thing that finally unites this country is the will to work together. If the federal government indicates by its actions that it would sooner fight than agree, that attitude will become contagious. I hope that the government as a whole, and the minister of energy in particular, will recognize that the leadership they are supposed to offer is leadership in the direction of co-operation, not confrontation.

● (2040)

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the debate brought up today by my colleague, the hon. member for Champlain, (Mr. Matte) in introducing this motion, has surely roused the attention of several hon. members who spoke on behalf of their parties, but we noticed there was more emotion than anything else. The Constitution of a country, Mr. Speaker, is a guideline which will be respected if the citizens are happy to live under such a Constitution. Otherwise, it will not be respected. This is about what has been happening, for at least a couple of decades, and we see more and more among the population as the years go by that this Constitution is less and less respected bacause there is a struggle between a centralizing party, the federal party, and the provinces which want to keep their autonomy.

There is competition between those two levels of government, that are seeking to reach the electors by all possible means to flatter the electors with social legislation, legislation on public works, legislation of all kinds in order to reach directly the elector.

That is why, especially during the two World Wars and on the occasion of certain troubles, we saw the federal Liberal party, because after all that was the party in power during those circumstances, use such crises to centralize in Ottawa, in collusion with certain provincial governments, powers that had before been reserved to provinces. We saw for instance at the beginning of the 1939 war, the federal government of the time resort to all possible means at its disposal to defeat in Quebec a government that was not a centralizing government, a government that was jealous of its autonomy and they had it replaced by a Liberal party government with a leader who was not too popular, who was not too strong a defender of Quebec's autonomy. So the government took advantage of that opportunity as well as of the war effort to bring to Ottawa a great number of laws that up to that time had been reserved to provinces according to the constitution and it is being said that the provinces agreed to accept such centralization.

Mr. Speaker, an agreement of that kind is precisely the one that prompts citizens to ask themselves questions and to tend more and more to ignore a constitution that bullies them instead of protecting them. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) said at the beginning of his remarks, this afternoon, that since the early days of Confederation, the Liberal party has always acted in the same way in matters of federalism and that is obvious. He does not need to tell us.

As a matter of fact, the Liberal party has been the most centralizing party in Canada and in reply to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, since he referred to the provincial election, I may say that the Quebeckers' vote during the last general election was not a vote of approval of the Canadian constitution, but rather a vote against adventure with a party with a strong socialist tendency, the Parti québécois. Just a few minutes ago, the Parliamentary Secretary and member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), who was chairman of the Special Joint Committee on Constitution, also made some remarks on the motion moved by the hon. member for Champlain. He said that it is not the Liberal party which has caused division in this country. Members on the government side recognize therefore that there is some division. But it is mostly in Quebec and because of a certain political party that this exists.

I will reply to the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville that what, among other things, gives strength to the separatist party in Quebec is indeed the centralization of the federal government since Confederation, especially on the occasion of both World Wars and other troubled periods. So, Mr. Speaker, in order to find a fair solution to contitutional problems, whether or not it is admitted certain procedures aiming at the reform of the Constitution are being delayed to amend it, repatriate it, make it more acceptable to Canadians.

● (2050)

The solution which may be given to this problem can only be found by groups of men not dominated by a political doctrine. Ever since the question of the reform of the constitution has been raised, the federal Liberal party has used every conceivable means to dominate the debates and have their own views accepted. Therefore, no wonder each constitutional meeting held both in Ottawa or in Victoria or in any place always fizzled out or has been postponed. An agreement was never reached because a group wanted to dominate all the others.

[Mr. Laprise.]

The provinces also have a right to be heard. The federal government exists thanks to the provinces. The provinces were not born from federalism but the federal government was born from the provinces and more and more we feel the need for readjusting the constitution to our current needs because they are different from those which existed one hundred years back. For instance, at the beginning of confederation the problem of municipalities were minor ones but over the last few years with people concentrating in the urban centres those problems have considerably aggravated. I have also been a member of the committee on the constitution which held many meetings in Ottawa, which travelled throughout the country to hear people, listen to individuals criticizing the present constitution, offering solutions, and telling us what they hoped to see in the new constitution or in an amended constitution. Everywhere we have met municipal officials who told us how difficult it was for them to administer their municipality because they have a heavier load to carry and because they are increasingly deprived of the means to support this load.

In a recent commercial letter of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, giving recent statistics for 1972, with a retrospective of the last ten years, it is said that in 1963, municipal revenues in Canada totalled $2,286 million. These revenues increased yearly to reach $5,022 million in 1972. However, municipal government expenses were, in 1963, $2,373 million and have increased yearly to reach $7,165 million in 1972, which is a deficit of $2,143 million in 1972. It means therefore that municipalities, provinces and the federal government must compete on the debenture markets, with stronger governments, to obtain the funds required to balance their budgets. Municipalities, like the provinces and the federal government, are over-indebted, which compels them also to assign too great a part of their budget to debt interest so that the problems, or at least a large part of the problems, that the municipalities face are mainly at the level of the interests they must pay each year to their creditors.

Well, Mr. Speaker, during the sittings of the constitutional committee municipalities asked for increased taxation powers mainly to be able to meet their obligations and that is becoming a struggle, no longer between two parties—the provinces and the federal government—but between three parties—the municipalities, the provinces and the federal government—to have increased access to the incomes of individuals in order to be able to tax them so as to balance their budgets and meet their obligations.

So, Mr. Speaker, in any constitutional reform or amendment those demands on the part of municipalities should be taken into consideration, and not only simply to give them increased taxation powers. They need it, it is true, but in the present system there is no other way out besides the one offered by the Social Credit. And the Liberal Party which has been in power since 1963 lent a deaf ear to the demands and suggestions made by the Creditists in that area. And we are told that the Creditist doctrine or policy on economic matters is no good. But is the present economic policy of the Liberal Party any good?

Mr. Prud'homme: Not all.

Mr. Laprise: Not all, of course, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion just said, and if the economic policy of the Liberal party were sound, the federal government, the provinces and the municipalities as well as the individuals would not be so deep in debt as they are now.

Therefore, this shows that if the Social Credit is not effective, the Liberal party is far from being so itself.

At the committee meetings, a professor of political science and a candidate for the Toronto mayoralty, Mr. Stephen Clarkson, said the following, and I quote:

> The municipal government only has a limited power of taxation on real property which constitutes a regressive tax base. We have great problems which are not of our making: immigration, for example, that from the Maritimes. We cannot cope with them and the power is so much centralized in Queen's Park and bureaucracy is so extensive that we cannot accomplish what we feel ought to be done. Therefore, another level of government, should not be created.

For him, such is not the problem, because he feels that everything is centralized in the municipal field, in provincial capitals, and precisely many other municipal representatives have asked that municipalities be recognized as a level of government and as having their say in all essential budgetary measures taken by higher levels of government to balance their budget.

● (2100)

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, all we are asking in the motion of my colleague from Champlain is that the federal government urge the provinces to get together in order to amend or redraft the Canadian constitution, and the constitution must exist for the provinces. Therefore, they must have the right to draft this constitution.

Thus, the provinces that have no control over others will be able to draft the necessary sections in order to protect the country against national disturbances by fulfilling the basic aspirations of each province. It is something that the federal government cannot do, because by dictating the sections that must be included in a new constitution, it will seek to have accepted sections which protect the central government of the country, and in protecting itself in this way, it would be difficult to fulfil the basic aspirations of the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, we do not wish, through this motion, to destroy something worthwhile, but we ask the federal government to urge the provinces to meet in order to obtain results, find out what they want and, under the constitution, obtain satisfactory results so that there may exist in every one of the ten provinces a climate of peace in which Canadians from coast to coast will be able and willing to abide by the constitution.

It is in this spirit that this motion was introduced and should be examined while seeking the solutions that all Canadians want.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to take a few minutes in order to participate in this debate on the motion moved today by a member of the Social Credit Party of Canada.

I must admit that I was surprised when I read the motion now before us. I heard recently the comments of this sagacious and shrewd politician, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) who had predicted the election of a minority government in Quebec following the recent campaign, adding that the party that would suffer the most from this result would be the Créditiste party. I shall not make any comments on the second judgement of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe as compared to his first, because I am in no position to conclude that his judgement on the second point is as valid or as poor as on the first. But I must regretfully note that this Créditiste motion is not one that could improve the situation of the Social Credit Party of Canada.

I am really surprised at this motion, which reads as follows:

> That this House deplores the fact that the government is maintaining the unity of the country through fear, autocracy and oligarchy, and has failed to do anything to encourage the provinces to get together in order to amend or redraft the Canadian constitution, thus protecting the country against national difficulties by meeting the basic aspirations of each province.

And all that in a single sentence. I must confess that after reading this motion over again, I wondered what country it was all about, and what situation it was referring to. It talks about fear, autocracy and oligarchy. I really wonder, looking at my provincial colleagues with whom I had to work during those last years, and looking at the premiers of the various provinces, who are those timid and fearing premiers, those provincial premiers who would be living in daily fear of this federal government, ready to crush them, and which would prevent them from expressing their views on any subject and taking position on matters which come under their own jurisdiction.

There is an old saying that you can die from laughter. I am glad that saying is not entirely accurate, because I fear that there would not be many Creditist members left in this House today.

This motion, Mr. Speaker, also complains that the federal government has failed to do anything to encourage the provinces to get together. Since when do the provinces need the federal government to get together? Frankly, the motion seems incredibly naïve, and I would even fear that the provinces would take offence if the federal government were to interfere and try to persuade them, as is suggested here, or to force them to get together in order to amend or redraft the Canadian Constitution.

Surely neither the Constitution nor Canadian politics prevent the provinces from meeting, and indeed they have done so. Let us remember the conference organized under the sponsorship of Mr. Robarts in Toronto, which was called Conference on the Confederation of Tomorrow, and to which the federal government had sent observers. That conference was attended by provincial representations and was convened by the provincial governments. Nothing had prevented them from using this same procedure if they had so wished. The provinces have shown sufficient wisdom and knowledge to realize that if a serious review of the Canadian Constitution was wanted, this could only be done effectively if the provinces would cooperate and act in consultation with the federal government. The result of this conference in Toronto simply was a recommendation that, in cooperation with the federal government, a review of the constitution be undertaken and this is what was done in the following years.

The fact that such a motion is put and the way it is drafted surely indicate a lack of knowledge of federal-provincial relations and a lack of respect for provincial autonomy and for the true power of the provinces in running their own business.

But I would not want to spend my time in a detailed analysis of this motion and demonstrating its inherent weaknesses. I would rather like to say a few words on what really happens in the area of federal-provincial relations.

I often hear people talk about the lack of consultation, in or outside this House, because the federal government reportedly would take unilateral decisions and so on. I think it is important to underline once again, and to repeat it constantly, that consultations do not give any right of veto and that the federal government is the government responsible for the national interest in the areas under its jurisdiction. Even if the federal government has everything to gain by regular and frequent consultations with provincial governments when there is a decision of national interest to take which is under its jurisdiction, the federal government must finally take the decision, even if this decision is not welcomed by all the provinces of Canada.

In a similar way, this is also true in the case of the provinces. I think it is their interest to consult with the federal government in many areas for which they are responsible and they should do it more often. I have no hesitation in saying that the federal government consults with the provinces a hundred times more in the areas under its jurisdiction than do the provinces in the areas under their own jurisdiction.

● (2110)

However this having been said, we often consult the provinces and I will give some details on that particular subject in a few minutes. However, once again, when a discussion takes place, it rests with the federal government to take decisions in matters under its jurisdiction and if any province is not satisfied with such decisions, it is unfortunate but just the same some government must be responsible for the national interest.

When the media, the opposition, the members of the government or provincial politicians then intervene and deplore the fact that the federal government acts unilaterally and without consultation, as they often suggest, I maintain once again that they are mistaken. There has been some consultation, but the government has assumed its responsibility for which it must answer to the House and to the Canadian people, but not to the provincial governments.

When I heard the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) this afternoon say that a conservative federal government would proceed through consultation and on a collegial basis, I believe he was introducing a concept of federal-provincial collegial government in matters of federal-provincial relations. Well, in this country, a federal government that would suggest a form of collegial government with the provinces would be deluding the people and moreover ruin the constitution.

There have been consultations. I shall refer to the first year of the progressive conservative government during the last 20 or 30 years. In 1957, at the ministerial level, five meetings took place with the provinces. At the official level, for a whole year there were 59, thus making a total of 64.

This means that in 1967, that is 10 years later, we had 14 meetings at the ministerial level and 105 at the official level for a total of 119. Three years later, in 1970, there were 18 meetings at the ministerial level, one and a half per month on the average, and 200 at the official level, for a total of 220, between the federal and provincial governments.

There has been a steady increase which keeps on. Not one day goes by that a meeting between the federal government and the provinces is not held in this country. Whether it be at the senior official or minister level, whether they be bilateral or multilateral meetings, or whether visits in the provinces or by provincial representatives to Ottawa.

Even more important, over recent years and even quite recently, this consultation process has been extended through the initiative of the federal government in the area of tripartite meetings to which municipalities were invited to participate.

We know also that recently a very successful conference, a three-level meeting took place in Edmonton in which the minister responsible for urban affairs took part.

That is what really happened and what is always going on without any startling statements, without getting in the headlines. But what we will find in the headlines will be the story of the conference or meeting resulting in deep disagreement. We rarely hear about the current meetings where the federal and provincial governments make progress and come to an agreement.

It is unfortunate that there is a tendency to feature exclusively stumbling blocks, difficulties and points of disagreement. This is what is happening in the field of federal-provincial relations. However I could talk more in detail about my own departments. For instance, we undertook this year with the provinces a review of social security and this has already brought about three meetings of welfare ministers and several meetings of senior officials.

Before these meetings, the federal government submitted a working paper that received the unanimous endorsement of the provinces. We had regular meetings once more with the provinces and ministers and to date we have obtained unanimous assent on all points which have been discussed. This will not necessarily go on because there will certainly be some disagreements either among the provinces themselves, between the federal government and the provinces or some of them. This is only natural and we would be wrong to be shocked. To imagine that the motion presented by the Creditist party to convene a meeting of the provinces where they would reach an agreement which would be impossible if the federal government were present is nothing but a dream and a complete lack of understanding of the way in which this country operates.

In the area of energy which has been mentioned before, I only need to mention the example of the relationship between Alberta and Ontario, two governments of the same party, which were prepared to go before the courts to settle their dispute concerning energy. We know what happened in the field of feed grains and about the so-called "Chicken war", in Canada. The federal government was not directly involved; there was direct confrontation between the provinces of Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes and once more, the federal government had nothing to do with it.

The provinces, therefore should meet together and reach an agreement that the federal government would only endorse. Once more, this means living in a world that does not exist and that is not Canada as it exists at the present time.

I referred to social security. I will deal with another matter on which no agreement was reached to date, that of health. For three years, discussions have been held at senior officials level with provinces, to come to a new financing formula in the area of health, a formula designed to secure larger flexibility in the administration of health services, for provinces in particular. That formula was changed several times during the discussions, and was finally presented to health and finance ministers during a conference that was held last year in Ottawa.

Finally, no agreement was reached on the formula that was proposed and during the premiers' conference, a new formula was proposed, considered by the provinces, but was finally rejected. There is nothing to be ashamed of. Many provinces had expressed an interest for such or such aspect, and the fact that they finally preferred the present system to another does not authorize them to conclude that there is autocracy or oligarchy—whatever the name they choose to call it—on the part of the federal government; but it is not fear, as stated in the motion, which encouraged the provinces to reject the federal proposal. In fact, they decided that it was not in their interest to accept the proposed formula. A while ago, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe indicated that his party would propose a transfer of resources, together with a transfer of tax power, while taking equalization payments into account. I urge him to take cognizance of the proposal which the federal government, through its Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), made in the spring at the last meeting of provincial premiers. He will then realize that he did not invent the moon, for this very proposal has already been made to and refused by the premiers. They deemed it unsatisfactory on the financial level, which is nothing new.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to use more of the House's time. I merely wish to emphasize again that the area of federal provincial relations is extremely complex—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) would like to ask a question but he can only do so with the minister's consent.

Mr. Lalonde: The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The minister has the floor.

Mr. Stevens: What are you afraid of?

Mr. Lalonde: I am not afraid. I have the floor. You can have all the time you want afterwards, if you want to ask questions.

Mr. Stevens: Chicken!

Mr. Lalonde: We are used to seeing you take enough time of the House. Mr. Speaker, I would like to come back to what I was saying before I was interrupted.

● (2120)

[Translation]

Above all, we must realize that the federal system is a difficult one, which always involves a certain amount of tension. The day when federalism in Canada is without tension, we will have to question seriously the existence of this country and the federal system as it now exists, as this will mean either that the federal government has disappeared or that the provinces have been completely taken over by the federal government.

The federal system is a political mechanism which operates through creative tension. As in human life, there is no progress without some tension, and whenever there are federal and provincial politicians who defend vigorously the interests of their constituents and deal seriously with the areas for which they are responsible, there will inevitably be some frictions. The important thing is that these frictions are reduced to the minimum, that break-ups and split-ups are avoided and particularly that there are consultations and discussions.

Once again, under the Canadian Constitution the powers of each level of government are defined and in the areas under their respective jurisdictions, the governments concerned must take their responsibilities and decide, in the last analysis, after consultations, what they consider to be in the interest of their citizens; this is what our government did not hesitate to do—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to have to interrupt the hon. minister but his time is over.

Let me remind the House at this time that there are about 40 minutes left before the House adjourns. The hon. members for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland), for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) and perhaps also another hon. member want to take the floor. I would have liked, with the consent of hon. members concerned, that all be given the opportunity to be recognized for ten or twelve minutes before 10 o'clock. The Chair has a special responsibility towards the minority represented by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), and I hope that the hon. members for Selkirk and Grenville-Carleton will take this into consideration. For the time being, I recognize the hon. member for Selkirk.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, in order to comply with your wish and in a spirit of co-operation, in view of the fact that we have initiated this debate, it would be proper to enable our colleagues to be recognized, and we could agree to a period of ten minutes for each, if the House agrees.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will have any trouble at all in adhering to that gentlemen's agreement.

An hon. Member: Because you have not much to say.

Mr. Rowland: I have a lot to say, but I shall not say it all tonight. As a point of departure I should like to take the concluding remarks of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). These were to the effect that one of the manifestations of a healthy federal system is the existence of tensions within that system. He said that as soon as the tensions and problems cease to exist, it means that the federal system has in effect died either by the absorption, total and complete, of the provinces by the national government or the virtual total destruction and rendering ineffective of the federal government by the provinces. The minister put it much more elegantly and eloquently, but I think that is an accurate summary of his remarks.

I think what characterizes federal-provincial relations to me is not autocracy and oligarchy, as suggested by the motion, so much as confusion. I think the minister would be one of the first to admit, even taking his view as the point of departure, that tensions will always exist within a federal state and that they are signs of vitality within the federal state; they are signs of experimentation and signs of attempts to adapt to new situations and changes in values. Therefore, it is desirable that we restructure our constitution to some extent with the end in view of removing to the extent possible the occasions for confusion in relations between the provinces and the federal government. It is necessary to reduce the confusion and ambiguities in the constitution so as to remove some of the causes of frustration and anger, as opposed to tension, that we heard expressed by hon. members from Alberta and Quebec who spoke this evening.

It is not so important to me that the constitution accurately define whether this country is to move toward centralization or decentralization, because I think if the constitution is going to serve the needs of the country it has to be able to move either way as the needs and locus of power in the country and values of the country change.

One of the ways to accomplish that objective is to alter our division of powers. At the moment, the division of power is in three lists. There is a list of exclusive federal powers and a list of exclusive provincial powers. Both of these sections have items which are not particularly well defined. There is also a very short list of three or four areas of concurrent jurisdiction. It would seem to me that we could overcome a good deal of the difficulty that we encounter in this country in permitting regions to adapt their relationships to the federal government in a manner which will enable the government to meet the needs of the people, by modifying our allocation of powers so that we, in effect, have four lists of powers. There would be a rather short list of exclusive federal powers such as defence, international affairs, monetary policy, customs tariffs, and that sort of thing; then a rather short list of exclusive provincial powers, and a fairly extensive list of concurrent powers in which the paramountcy of federal or provincial power would be indicated in each case. There would also be another list where powers could be delegated from one level to another on the basis of bilateral agreement.

I feel this would meet the needs and shifts of balance of power in the country. There are times when a country needs stronger central direction and others when it is better decentralized. I think that such a normal political process has to be accommodated in the constitution. The delegation of powers from the federal government to the provinces, or vice versa, on a bilateral basis would accommodate that process and reduce the causes of frustration that presently exist as opposed to what are normal healthy tensions.

My point in rising tonight was not to suggest specific changes to the current constitution of Canada. My colleague the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), and also the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), during the course of debate suggested some areas which require change. They made specific suggestions and argued them very cogently, urging the government to proceed with them. I do not want to repeat their arguments and I do not want to refer to the specific areas that I think need change. What I really want to do tonight, Mr. Speaker, is to argue very strongly that now is a most propitious time to get on with the job of attempting to reach some kind of agreement on the kind of constitution we want—to bring it to Canada, to have it repatriated, and to complete the process which was begun a long time ago of modifying our constitution and deciding upon an amendment formula.

I do not think it is good enough for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to say that he is willing to embark upon this adventure when the provinces indicate to him that they want to undertake the exercise once again. As the minister who just spoke so properly pointed out, we are here as a national parliament to look after the national interests of Canada. The government is there to look after national interests. I think it is in the national interest that we complete this exercise.

Even if there is some reluctance on the part of the provinces at the moment, or a simple lack of interest, it is up to the federal government to provide the leadership necessary to get the process under way. I think now is a propitious time. There is a desire on the part of the people of Canada to have the constitution repatriated. This desire became obvious when, as a member of the joint Senate and House of Commons Committee on the Constitution, I travelled about the country and saw the interest generated by the committee in what might have been considered a dry, academic subject. This apparent desire to do something about the constitution is manifest in the fact that such a large measure of agreement was possible at Victoria in 1971 when the provinces and the federal government met. I would like to see the exercise completed.

What argues most strongly that we should try to complete this exercise at this point is that we are now, despite the current outrage of the representatives from Alberta, and despite the almost universal disquiet on the part of those representing Quebec about the results of the election there, in a period of relative stability. One of the things which I suggest to hon. members has contributed to our failure to complete the exercise of redrafting our constitution, to the extent it needs reform, and deciding on the amendment formula and bringing it to Canada, is the fact that the exercise has normally been pursued during periods of crisis, rapid change, shifts in value or of the locus of power in this country.

● (2130)

These are times when the tolerance of ambiguity on the part of governments is vastly reduced. At such times, if they are to change the constitution they want every "i" dotted and every "t" crossed. Because the country is in the process of change, a government is not willing to take a chance on the possibility of an error being absolved and corrected by the unwritten part of our constitution, which is really the most important part. Governments are not willing to take that chance because they think there might be something unalterable in the written part of the constitution. That is how governments think in critical periods when they are most afraid to take risks.

At this point in time the country is relatively stable. Perhaps there will be a willingness to take that kind of risk on the part of participating governments. Perhaps it is really worth while pursuing that idea now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret interrupting the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate. I, along with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), read the motion with great interest. I suggest that the minister, being a Queen's Counsel of the bar of the province of Quebec, has perhaps taken a somewhat legalistic approach to this issue which the Social Credit party has brought to the attention of the House.

I do not intend to become involved in what I consider to be a little confrontation within this chamber with respect to events of a week or so ago in one of the provinces of Canada. I merely say to the minister that perhaps the motion before the House expresses an attitude to something that is essential to confederation. By implication it deals, I submit, with the relationship between the federal government and all the provinces of Canada. It expresses an attitude that this debate shows has been developing in the country. That attitude is that this government, for better or worse, whether with malice aforethought or without, has tended to shake the foundations of the belief that it is truly interested in the federal system. One important element of this system involves consultation.

The hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) spoke eloquently about the problems of Alberta and the feelings of the people of that province. Let us talk about the people of Alberta. I suppose that if we substituted for oil any commodity of concern to other provinces of Canada—let us say we were talking about something of concern to the province of Ontario, Quebec, Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or any other region—we would find, if the people of the province had been treated as the people of Alberta have been treated, that they would react in exactly the same way as the people of Alberta have reacted. It is to that feeling that the motion of the Creditistes is directed. In that sense, our embarking upon this debate is healthy for us.

We are considering in the House the entire question of foreign ownership. The members of my party, in their discussions on the matter, have not forgotten that an essential ingredient is leadership by the federal government. They have attempted to pay more than lip service to the idea that there must be provincial consultation. That matter is not one of mere tokenism. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) said, as the government has said, that this is not going to happen under the legislation to which I have just alluded.

A few weeks ago in Edmonton there was a conference on northern affairs and the question of revenue sharing arose. In the result, some provinces were in favour of the concept—the province of Ontario and others—and some were against it. There was an issue that could be discussed. Yet how did the government react? The minister responsible for urban affairs turned thumbs down on the idea, or used the federal veto, to use the words of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, with respect to any discussion on revenue sharing as between the provinces and the federal government. The government even turned down any discussion on the subject. This attitude is creeping into many areas, and we are in danger of losing sight of what has traditionally been and remains an essential part of our federalism, that is, consultation.

According to what I read about the attitude of the provinces and what I hear from public men in the provinces, the provinces do not want the veto, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare suggested the other day. They want realistic consultation between provincial governments, which are responsible to the people in the provinces, and the national government which is responsible to the whole country. I suppose the message we can derive from this debate is that we must treat confederation as a delicate flower. It is delicate and, like a flower, must be gently treated. You must not hack at it with a hoe or a shovel. Our confederation must be handled with gentle and understanding hands.

I think we should look at this matter in the context of federal-provincial conferences. Some have been successful, others unsuccessful. The successful conferences have been those in which the parties felt there was a reasonable attitude of co-operation. The principals at the conference, the provinces and the federal government, accepted the need for co-operation. They felt that their own interests would not be overlooked or treated lightly.

The conferences that have been unsuccessful, and there have been many, have been those in which there was conflict and confrontation, invited perhaps for political purposes. In any event, one or more of the principals felt threatened at such conferences. We must not forget that our people want co-operation when these discussions go on.

Further, there has been some discussion in this country as to what form provincial power should take. What is the place of the provinces in relation to the national government? I think it is true to say that all members of this House, regardless of party affiliation, think there is a duty on the Government of Canada to treat the provinces of Canada as essential partners in the development of national policy, which may involve social policy, resource policy, transportation policy or economic policy. I believe that attitude is demonstrated by the motion we are discussing.

Further, there are growing doubts throughout this country—not just in Quebec and Alberta but in Ontario as well—as to whether the federal government is permitting the provinces of Canada to assume their full responsibilities as essential partners in this country, whether in discussions involving regional development programs or any other matter. I think it is important for us not to forget that co-operation is at the root of our federalism and that the provinces originally were meant to be essential partners with the national government in any matter affecting this country.

● (2140)

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part briefly in this debate on the motion put forward by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte). When we speak of the Canadian constitution, we almost have to review the history of Canada, and since time is rather short, I will attempt to confine my remarks to a few minutes.

I listened attentively to the speech by the hon. member for Champlain, which included some very true remarks. I also listened with great interest to the speech by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). I was pleased to see the increasing number of meetings with the province and I must admit most sincerely and humbly that considering the steps taken by his department to consult with the provinces, there has really been some progress. However, after a hundred years, it is still surprising to see that some provinces are not yet satisfied. I think the present federal government and the ones that came before had as their goal the satisfaction of all provinces.

There is concern about this consultation and I feel that much attention is paid to it. In fact, numerous comments have been made about the importance of preliminary consultations with the provinces whatever the level and legislation to be amended.

It is my opinion that we will never pay too much attention to this question and that we will never insist too much on having the minister responsible or the government take measures so that the provinces will be consulted as much as possible.

There were also references to the reasons that seemed unacceptable to certain provinces. Mention was made of Alberta and Quebec. I think that certain provinces are not altogether happy with the present system. There have been reasons for this and I believe it is fair to discuss them. There was even criticism of the last provincial election campaign in Quebec.

Now I believe that if one is surprised to learn today that 30 per cent of the Quebeckers do not believe in federalism anymore, I think one must recall that Mr. Gérard Filion spoke 30 years ago about economical separatism and that was due to the eastern policy on feed grain. I hasten to mention the fact in order to show those who are trying to understand that it is surely not Quebec that invented separatism, considering the fact that the province of Quebec lost $300 million on account of that feed grain policy that has been discriminatory for 30 years. But it seems to me that the government is now trying to correct that injustice. I know it is hard for the minister to do it for he is very busy and hard-pressed by western organizations. As a matter of fact, I believe he wants at last to do justice to all Canadian producers.

I think that unrest was due to a certain lack of consultation and to certain intrusions on the part of the federal government into provincial administration. But for this purpose I must refer to the two administrations that governed Canada.

Therefore, when referring to this problem, one realizes today that in Quebec, a great number of people are losing faith in federalism and often wonder why. But one can be delighted by the result of the provincial election.

As far as the economic stability of the province of Quebec is concerned, the answer was clear and it will enable Quebec to avoid this kind of slackening that takes place when a government is beaten, whether blue or red. There is always some slackening when we speak of changing a system. But in the circumstances, I am delighted by the specific answer that many citizens of Quebec and of Canada were anxiously waiting for.

We had well defined options, on both sides. Although the Parti Québécois had submitted an option that was debated and debatable, it did so clearly and the people made their decision. But I urge hon. members not to forget the high proportion of French-speaking people who reject today the present system, because it might be dangerous to rejoice blindly when one considers that almost 38 per cent against 46 per cent of the voters rejected this system. I wish to have those figures recorded in Hansard in order to make my English-speaking colleagues—my French-speaking colleagues already know that and I hope that they will be ready to ask the federal government to better understand the claims of the Quebec government—aware of the problem, of the situation and present circumstances in Quebec. Now, the answer was for Quebec to remain within confederation. For my part, I have never recommended the separation of Quebec, on the contrary, but it is my duty as a Quebec member to uphold my interests, as it is the duty of Newfoundland or Alberta members to uphold theirs.

● (2150)

When those suggestions can be made objectively, I think that we shall have a better chance of reaching our common goal. While for many people in Quebec, and even in Canada, the answer was clear, I hope that with the power it has received, the newly elected government will be more demanding as regards some of the powers it needs. There is often talk in Quebec about additional powers as concerns immigration. The Laurendeau-Dunton Commission and the Committee on the Constitution have recognized, as we all know, that Quebec is the nucleus of the French-

Canadian nation, and that it holds a special place in Canada because of its largely French-speaking population.

I believe that those admissions, those works, those studies, must be followed by concrete action. I hope that the federal government will consider this. In my opinion, the government of Quebec must be more demanding and negotiate like responsible people. Then, I hope that the majority of my colleagues in this House will understand the importance of the discussions which are going on in Canada and that we shall reach agreements which will be acceptable to all the provinces.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes I have left I would like to thank very much my hon. colleague for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) for his cooperation. I wanted to express certain views following the comments made, among other speakers, by the minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and also the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien).

Mr. Speaker. the motion introduced today by my colleague, the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), is essentially practical and is obviously aimed at—the hon. member for Champlain said so openly, and so did the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) and the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Boisvert)—bringing our federal colleagues for whom Quebec is a problem or an obscure province, for whom the problems might be unsolvable or remote, to reflect with us upon two things. First, on the implications for all Canadians, those at least who still believe in Canada, of the election results of October 29. I think we would be hypocrits burying our heads in the sand if we refused to get together on this as we all say that we are genuine Canadians.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this motion was to urge the federal government in particular to revise its position on the need of a new constitution for Canada and to begin with the close cooperation of the provinces.

We did not say today that nothing had been done. We simply said that the fact that 30 per cent of independentists voiced their choice unequivocally in the Quebec election means that there is really a problem and that the provinces are also faced with the oil problem, the natural resources problem and the health problem. It is obvious that no matter what the system is there will always be problems. Mr. Speaker, the present situation and the point we have reached show not only that our constitution is not a Canadian constitution, but that Canadians themselves cannot be properly served by this constitution.

What I really meant to say is this: Listening to the hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, one gets the impression that whoever is not a member of the Liberal party today is not a true federalist and Canadian. If you are not a Liberal, you are a trouble maker; if, in addition to this you come from the province of Quebec you are dangerous.

Some Quebecers keep on fighting because we cannot all think "liberal". In Quebec, there is a political reality which says that there are so many independentists and so many creditists. Contrary to common belief the Social Credit Party has not disappeared from the provincial scene; there are still over 10 per cent creditists.

I know Parliament and as my other colleagues I prefer my seat here to that of Premier Bourassa in Quebec. Moreover, this lack of opposition indicates that our parliamentary system is completely obsolete and that the number of members elected as a function of the voters is not proportional and unfair. Finally, it is growingly impossible in Quebec to express one's opinions because the Liberal steam-roller, the only federalist party, that of the only true Canadians, is crushing everything along its path.

I have newspaper articles about the Saint-Jean-Baptiste manifestation of June 24, 1968 in Montreal. If you read those articles and if you connect them with other incidents when the separatists or certain hot heads, I should say stupid heads, as Chartrand and others would say, used a group of disatisfied people to raise violence in the province, if you connect those incidents with the October crisis of 1970, who is responsible? Nobody knows.

If you consider the sluggishness of Quebec justice inquiry into organized crime you can smell the rottenness of our political world, combined finally with the polarization of voters during the last provincial election in Quebec you wonder whether this discord is not purely and simply generated by the Liberal party or by high finance. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether these dissent movements, this encouragement to separatism or if the importance given to separatism is not entirely and mainly the making of federal Liberal members served by provincial members. Mr. Speaker, in order to get such an unmistakable polarization of the vote, I am entitled to ask that question.

Mr. Speaker, I talk with several of my colleagues behind the curtain. We are true Canadians and we believe in Canada. We have the right to ask questions. I shall ask that question to my colleagues: In 1973, out of a total of 110 members, there are 102 Liberal, 6 Pequists and 2 Creditists. In three years from now—

Mr. Prud'homme: There are too many.

Mr. Fortin: I invite my colleague to be serious. He may find out that there are quite a number in his own riding.

Mr. Speaker, in two, three or five years, at the next provincial election—what will happen? We hear more and more about a third political strength which would be federalist. The value of the men or of the ideas involved does not really matter. Our colleagues of all parties including some observers say more and more that the important thing is not the value of such a party, but the fact that it should be federalist. Would this serve the interests of the country? No, Mr. Speaker. It would once more serve the interests of the Liberals. What will happen? The Liberals cannot gain anything more without losing something first. It might be a gain for the people of Quebec but—

Mr. Speaker, everybody had hoped that this election would mark the end of separatism. Let us be honest. Everybody was thinking: In this election, we have to stop the Parti québecois. Because of separatism, it became a priority. This caused the polarization of the vote. For whom will the young people aged 14 to 18 be voting? For whom will those unsatisfied with the regime be voting, because this time the people of Quebec have been made to forget their actual social, individual and financial problems. They have been made to forget their day to day problems, their inadequate salaries or their poverty within a rich province, in order to fight the threat of independence.

● (2200)

But what will happen in three or four years? Will there be the same vote polarization? Will there be a different division of the vote? Will the separatist movement take on strength? I think that these are serious times; it is too easy to do like the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) and say that the Creditistes are separatists. When the minister says that we are separatists, he pretends that this is convenient for him. But at other times, Mr. Speaker, he is among those who say that the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) is truly a great Canadian.

Mr. Speaker, personally, as a Canadian, I am fed up—

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would say to the hon. member that I did not say that the Creditiste members were separatists, but one of his colleagues said this afternoon that he would vote for a separatist Creditiste party, and I called him a separatist. I will not retract myself, and if the hon. member has the same opinion, I will bestow the same epithet on him.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker,—

[English]

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there a question of privilege? Surely all these remarks are on record; there is no need for them to be rehashed again. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With all due respect, I should like to question this procedure. When I had the floor, I was interrupted and aware of parliamentary practice, I readily accepted because a question of privilege always has priority and in order that the Minister may be able to express his views.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you rise and you call it ten o'clock. It seems to me, that if I had not been interrupted, I could have completed my remarks before ten o'clock. It seems to me that I should be given the same privilege that was given to other members and be allowed to complete my remarks. I find it improper—

I shall make good use of it, Mr. Speaker, and say that we are happy to have had the opportunity to move this motion today because it allowed us to judge the attitude of our federal colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that from now on, this House will really deal with the problems of the Canadian people and of the Canadian provinces so that they may express themselves. It is high time, Mr. Speaker—I think it should be kept in mind—for us to stop dividing into political parties in this House and to start cooperating with one another to become true Canadians instead of saying that since I am Liberal, I am a true Canadian and that the tories or the others are not.

Mr. Speaker, if the Liberals want to build Canada alone, they can always try, but so far we have seen that going it alone is a failure. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we have the right and the possibility to cooperate in the building of Canada because we strongly believe in it.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. member for his co-operation. It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 58, proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—INQUIRY AS TO DECISION ON REPLACEMENT FOR ARGUS AIRCRAFT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this adjournment debate on a replacement for the Argus. I want to be kind to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson), who I think is sincerely trying to come to a decision on this question. However, there have been other sincere ministers of defence during the past five years—which some Canadians think have been five years too long—of the Trudeau government. There have been four different ministers of defence during these five years, and I am afraid that in a constructive but rather critical way one could say that a review of the parliamentary returns to questions raised about replacing the Argus shows a rather sad catalogue of confusion and uncertainty in Department of National Defence planning.

With four ministers in five years, is it any wonder that those who served, and who served well, in the armed services are themselves confused about the role they are supposed to play in defence policy? I intend to review, in the short time available to me, those parliamentary returns which began when the issue of the Argus was first raised. I am talking about five squadrons, involving 32 aircraft which have been in use really since 1958. They have been operating almost on a daily basis somewhere in the skies over Canada, except when grounded for weather reasons or sometimes because of mechanical breakdown, for 15 years. Even though it is a different mode of transportation, how many of us are using a 15-year old car with the same confidence as when we first purchased it? The airframes were first designed for 10,000 air hours. Because of procrastination and indecision, the airframe lifespan was revised to 19,000 hours. Some of the aircraft are beginning to approach this extended airframe life.

I do not have time tonight to debate defence policy in all its aspects, but to set the record straight it was on March 17, 1969, as reported at page 6681 of Hansard, when the first recorded question that I have been able to find dealing with the Argus was asked by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall). He asked:

Is the DND presently giving active consideration to the question of a follow-on replacement aircraft for the Argus presently in use by Maritime Command?

The Hon. Léo Cadieux, then minister of defence, replied, "Yes". On May 7, 1969, as reported at page 8419 of Hansard, in reply to a written question from the same member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, the parliamentary secretary to the minister replied:

No decision will be made until phase II of the defence review has been completed.

On June 26, 1970, as reported at page 8643, the Hon. Léo Cadieux, replying to the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean), said:

We have conducted an evaluation of prototypes of new aircraft that could eventually replace the Argus aircraft, if the government so authorizes DND ... it will be later than October when these studies are completed ... There are many considerations involved. The fundamental decision is as to whether we will make a replacement at this time ... The decision will not be a decision of the Minister of National Defence, it will be a decision by the government, and no doubt all the relevant factors pertaining to it will be considered.

Then on September 29, 1971, as reported at page 8279, the new minister of defence, the now Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), replying to a question from the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland), said this:

I should remind the hon. member that as well as the option of replacing the Argus, there is the option of refitting it for future use.

Then on March 28, 1972, as reported at page 1211 of Hansard, the next minister of national defence, the Hon. E. J. Benson, in replying to a question from me, said:

If my hon. friend would look at what I have said with regard to the Argus and Tracker aircraft, he would understand that the question of their replacement is presently being studied and a report is expected in the very near future.

Then on June 16, 1972, as reported at page 3205, I asked this question:

When will there be a decision on the Argus replacement?

Mr. Benson replied:

The matter is being studied, Mr. Speaker.

On February 5, 1973, as recorded at page 946 of Hansard, the present Minister of National Defence, in reply to a question from myself, said:

The government has decided to replace the Argus but we have not yet made a decision as to the type of aircraft to be ordered. We have sent out letters to five airplane manufacturers inviting them to make proposals against our specifications and we have requested that these proposals be in our hands by March 21 ... We will also be looking at the regional aspects and, hopefully, this major purchase will bring industrial benefit to all regions of Canada.

Then on October 17 of this year, as recorded at pages 6955 and 6956 of Hansard, again in a reply to a question from me, the Minister of National Defence said:

We will be entering the contract definition phase in the near future. I expect to make a recommendation to cabinet within the next two or three weeks.

I do not have the time now to review all those answers, Mr. Speaker. However, it has been 55 months and 22 days—more than four and a half years—since the first question was asked in this House about the status of the aircraft. Also, the minister well knows, from reviewing the file, that questions were also asked in committee before that of a fifth minister of national defence who is now the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) sitting on this side of the House. In all that time there still has not been a decision.

Mr. Speaker, I fully appreciate the complexity of the decision. However, in closing—because my time is just about finished, according to the rules governing this proceeding—I say that there must be a decision so that the contract specifications can go to the main bidders, if it is confined to that, and so that the people of Canada, and especially the servicemen of Canada who are vitally involved in this project, can be informed and will have some reassurance about their future prospects. Further procrastination cannot be allowed to play with the lives of the men who are flying the Argus aircraft—and we will be reaching that stage very soon.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) has given a very excellent summary of the discussions and thinking that have gone into our attempt to resolve this really most important question of the purchase of long-range patrol aircraft. I think it would be right to say that no member across the floor has demonstrated more interest in this subject than that hon. member. This is partly because CFB Greenwood is in his riding. I would like to think it is also a matter of very real importance to Canada and to our whole posture in national defence. This is probably the biggest single purchase that will ever be made by National Defence; therefore, if it has involved a great deal of thinking and consideration, I believe it is justified.

I think the House knows that the purchase of long-range patrol aircraft not only will be the biggest single purchase we have ever made, but perhaps from an operational point of view the most important that we have made. The selection of the appropriate aircraft to perform long-range surveillance and patrol duties is of importance not just to my department but to the taxpayers of Canada. It is also important to our NATO partners, and particularly to the aerospace and the electronic industry of Canada.

As the hon. member and the House are aware, we have received proposals from four aircraft manufacturing companies—Hawker Siddeley, Douglas, Boeing and Lockheed. Further, as I have said, a special project management team within the Department of National Defence has conducted intensive evaluations of these proposals. We are now at the stage where we would like to enter what is called the contract definition phase. I indicated to the House on October 17 that I was planning to make a recommendation to cabinet concerning which of these four companies, which two or more, were to enter the contract definition phase.

Adjournment Debate

● (2010)

I think the hon. member is interested in the timing. I would say to him that the reason for the delay has been primarily the fact that the cabinet agenda has had matters of priority that are higher than this particular consideration. That has been the reason for the immediate delay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight).

AIR TRANSPORT—BILATERAL AGREEMENT ON ROUTES WITH UNITED STATES—POSSIBLE RENEGOTIATION OF ONE ROUTE FOR SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, on October 30 I raised a question with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) related to the fact that in recent bilateral air agreements between the Government of Canada and the U.S.A. there were no air routes for the province of Saskatchewan. Because of that situation I asked whether the Minister of Transport was considering bringing into the negotiations, before the agreement is finally signed, the question of providing the province of Saskatchewan with an air route out of Regina or Saskatoon into the American market. That is the topic which I wish to pursue.

An analysis of the latest bilateral proposal reveals that the province of Saskatchewan was not included in the proposed route configurations. This is the result of unilateral decision-making on the part of the federal government. The federal government has had every opportunity to learn at first hand the need for direct air access to the United States. Top representatives of the Ministry of Transport and Air Canada were in attendance at the provincial transportation conference held in Saskatoon on March 22, 1973, when the Premier of Saskatchewan stated:

> Historically, Saskatchewan governments have supported Air Canada as the sole regional and transcontinental air carrier. We opposed Air Canada divesting itself of its regional role as we felt, I think, that if you have a monopoly in a province, you have certain responsibilities to maintain adequate levels of service.
>
> Because Saskatchewan is the only province in the west with only one class I carrier, with no north-south jet service and with no international connections, who can blame us if we feel disadvantaged and if we demand adequate air service. Well we don't feel a bit backward in this regard and I can advise Mr. Baldwin he will hear all about it tomorrow.

A wide-ranging discussion which followed on international air transportation made little impression on the former Air Canada president, the director general of civil aviation and the executive director of the air transport committee, all of whom were in attendance and participated in the discussion.

Saskatchewan has not and, if the recent bilateral proposal is ratified, will not have a direct air route to the United States for some time. Saskatchewan requirements for direct air connections with the United States have been pointed out to federal authorities on several occasions in the past. The province's requirements for a U.S. air connection are, in order of priority: first, a direct route to Minneapolis from Regina; second, a direct route to Denver and access to the southwestern United States from Regina or Saskatoon. It is felt that a direct routing to Minneapolis and Chicago is required because of the needs of business, agriculture, farm implement dealers and educational institutions, and also because of the two-way flow of tourist traffic. More specifically, direct air freight and air express service is clearly needed.

[Mr. Richardson.]

An analysis of the origin and destination statistics from Vancouver, Calgary and Regina to Minneapolis, from which centres there is no direct air contact, reveal the following: the statistics show that in 1972, 9,325 passengers travelled between these points and Minneapolis. Of these, 3,500 originated in or were destined to Vancouver and would certainly have travelled via Seattle.

Calgary passengers have the option of travelling south by Western Airlines or travelling to Winnipeg and connecting with North West Orient Airlines. Similarly, in 1972 the statistics indicate that 21,000 people travelled between Toronto and Minneapolis although there is no direct connection. The direct route of Vancouver to Calgary which would pick up Edmonton traffic, Regina, which would pick up Saskatoon traffic, and Minneapolis—Toronto showed a total passenger movement in 1972 of 30,280, all handled by American airlines as there are no direct Canadian connections. If Winnipeg-Minneapolis is included, 12,520 passengers can be added to this figure, for a total of 43,000 passengers.

Saskatchewan recommended to the Minister of Transport that every effort be made to negotiate a route by a Canadian carrier, namely, Vancouver, Calgary, Regina, Minneapolis, Toronto. Such a route would give Toronto direct access to Minneapolis by a Canadian carrier, a direct route from Regina to Minneapolis—a most urgent need at this time—a one-stop flight from Calgary, and would result in a diversion of much of the traffic now being handled from Vancouver via Seattle. It is considered that this route effectively rebuts the claims of the officials of the Ministry of Transport that a Regina-Minneapolis link is uneconomic and will probably be uneconomic into the 1980s.

Mr. Speaker, if the government were to follow this line, they would find that with a growth factor of 8 per cent—which is below the national average—the figures over the next six years would show the viability of Saskatchewan's proposal to be most impressive. Saskatchewan wonders why such a route configuration was never considered by the Department of Transport, Air Canada or the negotiating team.

Second in importance to a Minneapolis connection is one to Denver. Mr. Speaker, I would follow that up if I had the time to do so. May I conclude by saying that Saskatchewan is of the opinion that the proposed Vancouver or Calgary, Regina, Minneapolis, Toronto routing is clearly feasible, and that if this routing cannot be negotiated into the current bilateral proposal there should at least be provision made in the agreement for consideration of this routing before the next round of formal bilateral route negotiation.

This is the position of the government of the province of Saskatchewan respecting a direct route on a north-south basis. It is supported by the people of Saskatchewan, the mayor of Regina, the city of Regina, the Regina Chamber of Commerce, the Saskatchewan Motor Club world travel department, Kramer Tractor Limited, the manager of John Deere Limited, the president of Roll-O-Flex (1970) Limited, the general manager of Western Canadian Agribition Association, the city of Yorkton, the Saskatoon Mining Association and the Prince Albert Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on a personal basis, I believe the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) could add my name to the others, for the record. Speaking on behalf of the department, the study presented by the Attorney General of Saskatchewan on October 19 dealing with the need for direct air service between Saskatchewan and the United States contains some very useful information on the feasibility of establishing a Vancouver or Calgary, Regina, Minneapolis, Toronto route, particularly by 1978, or as a second priority a north-south route linking Regina or Saskatoon to Denver.

Apart from the question of public interest, any new route would require the support of an airline willing to operate it before the government could put forward a formal proposal for negotiations. The problem here is how soon would traffic between Regina and Minneapolis or Denver develop to a point where direct air service would be justified from the airline's standpoint? As the minister indicated earlier, it would be difficult at this time to relate or hold up the entire route agreement on the question only of a transborder route between Saskatchewan and a U.S. point. In any event, negotiations at the next round of bilateral talks will certainly take the interests of Saskatchewan into full consideration.

In the meantime, we might take advantage of the provisions of a 1966 exchange of notes between Canada and the U.S. relating to local and regional air services. Under these provisions, if a Canadian or U.S. carrier is interested in operating a local or regional-type route such as Regina-Minot or Regina-Great Falls, arrangements could be made by aeronautical authorities without renegotiating the whole route agreement.

AIRPORTS—PICKERING—COMPETENCE OF BOARD OF INQUIRY TO STUDY NEED AND LOCATION

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, it is imperative that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) enlarge the terms of reference for the board of examiners that is to study the proposed Pickering airport. On June 22 I asked the minister whether he was directing the proposed board to study the question of airport need. He replied that the board had been constituted in order to allow interested parties to make representations and appear before it. That is the point I seek to make tonight. The board is fundamentally a passive body, when it should be an active, initiating body.

● (2220)

As recently as October 25, according to a news release which I have in my hand, the terms of reference of that board were revised. Fundamentally, the character of the board remained the same as before. It is still, basically, a passive organization rather than an active one. It is fundamentally an organization for receiving opinions rather than seeking them. That might be justified in some circumstances but not in those surrounding the proposal regarding Pickering airport. I say that because of the public controversy which this proposal has stimulated.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was in Scarborough in March, 1972, he told a large audience of electors that if 51 per cent of the people in the area affected by this airport were opposed to its construction, the government would not force it upon them. He did not say how he would find out that 51 per cent were opposed; nevertheless, he made that commitment. According to a newspaper survey taken by a Toronto daily last spring, 56 per cent of the Toronto people interviewed do not want this airport. Only 26 per cent of those interviewed spoke in favour of it.

As there is such evident opposition to this airport, it is absolutely mandatory on the part of the government to instruct, authorize and finance this board in such a way that it will seek to deal more actively with the fundamental questions that concern the people of the area. It should ask, namely: Does the public want Pickering airport? Should the airport be built at this particular location?

Let me give one further reason why it is absolutely necessary for a board of examination to do this work. Citizens groups should not do it for them. A recent study of the land to be used for this proposed airport shows that it is almost all prime agricultural soil. At a time of world food shortages it is surely unconscionable to take out of production land that should be used to grow food. In the study by two members of the Department of Land Resource Science, University of Guelph, the following claim is made:

> Agricultural land is the world's most valuable resource . . .
>
> To lose the best land is to lose the capacity to feed and trade . . .
>
> In the years from 1951 to 1966 the farm population in southern Ontario and the number of farms declined by 26.3 and 24 per cent respectively.

Surely, in light of that trend, it is incumbent on the government to reverse direction and not, as it proposes, to pave over still more prime farmland. While such a decision might have been excusable a few years ago, it cannot be excusable any longer. We are living in a time of nutritional crisis, and it is a time for the government to act. Here, surely, is an opportunity for action. The government should instruct and fund the board of examination to authorize studies on all aspects of the basic question, which is: Should this land be diverted from food production to air transportation?

According to the report referred to, "Pickering township is capable of supporting a productive agricultural industry on a continuing basis." If that is so, and scientific opinion so concludes, the government cannot rightly take this land out of food production unless there are overwhelming reasons to justify it. That alone should require the board of examination to take the initiative instead of waiting for citizens to do its work.

In Chicago, O'Hare Airport handles seven times the traffic which Malton handles, yet O'Hare officials say that no expansion is planned until 1990 despite that airport being about the same size as Malton: it has about the same number of acres. Can we justify taking over farmland when it is clear that Malton could get us by for another 20 years? At a time when fuel shortages are causing some airlines to reduce flights, should we plan an airport expansion program as though there is no fuel crisis, no possibility that there will be a fall-off in airline use, and do so at the price of removing 17,000 acres from food production?

As we are faced by the challenge that confronts us at a time of world food shortage and the fact that we are in danger of interfering with prime agricultural land, the government is under the absolute obligation to further enlarge the terms of reference of this board so that it may carry out adequate studies. It should initiate, fund and conclude these studies in such a way that the public will be satisfied that if an airport is to be built it is absolutely the only option open to the government. Otherwise, the government cannot justly go ahead with its proposal.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows as well as I what the inquiry will do, but I will answer his question. On June 22 when the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse) put his original question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), his concern was that the airport inquiry commission would not have the power to study need and location.

Since that date the commissioners have been appointed and the terms of reference they have been given specifically relate to need and location, among other factors, allowing them the very broadest terms of reference. I very seldom read anything into the record on the "late show", but to put the record straight I would like to read the pertinent parts of the terms of reference. The commissioners will:

—receive and record new evidence, if available, and, if available and adduced, to report on such new evidence in response to the following questions:

(a) respecting need,

(i) is there any new evidence as to what is the expected maximum passenger traffic volume in the domestic, transborder and international air traffic markets for the year 1980 and what are the best estimates of rates of growth beyond 1980, and

(ii) is there any new evidence that Toronto International Airport, Malton, can be expanded or reconfigured, within present boundaries, to meet all reasonable needs, having regard to runway capacity, ground access, terminal capacity and the number of people affected by disturbance from flight operations for the period up to 1980, 1990 and 2000;

(b) respecting location, is there any new evidence to prove that the site near Pickering, Ontario is not suitable for the new international airport for the central Ontario market having regard to

(i) disturbance from flight operations,

(ii) passenger convenience,

(iii) regional economic effect,

(iv) total environmental effect, positive and negative, and

(v) facilities required, including related infrastructures such as roads, railways, guideways and helicopter facilities, and

(c) generally, is there any new evidence of any relevant factor that has not been considered by the Government of Canada, such, for example, as established facts on technology or travel habits, that may appear to affect any decision of the Government of Canada taken to date.

This is what the board has been given to study. I am sure all members have a copy of the authority given to the board. The commission is headed by Mr. Justice Hugh F. Gibson, of the Federal Court of Canada. These are not just fly-by-night fellows who have been appointed. Members are former metro Toronto planning commissioner Murray V. Jones, president of Murray V. Jones and Associates Ltd., and Dr. Howard Petch, vice-president (academic) of the University of Waterloo and former member of the Science Council of Canada. This is a distinguished group of men whose integrity and independence are beyond challenge.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:32 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 9, 1973

The House met at 11 a.m.

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. ALEXANDER—INCORRECT ATTRIBUTION BY "GLOBE AND MAIL" OF CERTAIN STATEMENTS TO MINISTER OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which I think will be of interest to all members of the House. I am sure that after I have related the facts Your Honour will find in my favour.

The Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) made a statement on November 7 dealing with the Unemployment Insurance Act and it was duly reported in the Globe and Mail on Thursday, November 8. One never likes to question the Globe and Mail, but apparently statements which should have been attributed to me have been attributed to the minister.

I suggest that the statements are of some significance and I would not want to embarrass the minister. In the article, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is reported to have said:

> I should like to say that one of the most disastrous things we have done in this House is to remove the $800-million statutory ceiling because this means that the members of the opposition and the people of Canada can never tell in what state the Unemployment Insurance Fund is at any particular time unless the minister stands up and makes a statement.

But that is not all. I questioned the disincentive aspects of the bill. In that regard the statement is reported to have been made by the minister:

> This is a question which has been asked by employers across this country who advise that the disincentive aspects of the bill, in fact, are eroding the free enterprise system.

There is a further statement of some consequence that I think would be embarrassing to the minister. I indicated that because of government mismanagement the minister had found it necessary to increase the employee contribution to $1.40. The following statement is also attributed to the minister:

> This is an unwarranted tax because of government mismanagement.

Finally, there is this last and most important statement. I reviewed the entire matter and, keeping in mind the lack of significant projections as to the cost of the scheme and the amount of the benefits, I concluded with this statement which is also attributed to the minister:

> In every instance the government is wrong and that is why I say this bill which, in the first instance the members of this House thought would be a good bill, is a fraud of some significant proportions upon the House of Commons and the people of Canada.

I think this is a matter of some significance. I know I speak on behalf of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration when I say that this is certainly a question of privilege. Through Your Honour's good offices, perhaps the Globe and Mail could be instructed to make another run at the matter in order to show the true facts. I am sure the minister may have some misgivings about the work of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, but I do not think he has the gall or the nerve to stand up and make the statements I did.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister will, of course, be recognized, even though I am not sure whether the hon. member's question of privilege is raised with tongue in cheek. Whether it is or not, I remind hon. members there is a requirement that notice ought to be given to the Chair. It seems to me hon. members have a tendency to disregard the provisions of the Standing Order which insist that notice ought to be given in advance of questions of privilege or of motions under Standing Order 26. I would hope all hon. members will keep that in mind. It is helpful to the Chair. Having said that, I appreciate the way the matter was brought before the House by the hon. member and I have no hesitation in allowing the minister to comment.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it will be no surprise when I say that this is one of the rare occasions I would join with the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), but for slightly different reasons. I totally disassociate myself and my name from those remarks of the member. Although we do not often agree, I find myself very much in parallel with the hon. member's thinking, but for slightly different reasons.

● (1110)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

REMEMBRANCE DAY

TRIBUTE BY MINISTER OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind hon. members that the day after tomorrow is Remembrance Day. It will mark the fifty-fifth anniversary of the ceasefire in the first world war.

It is the day our country officially observes as the day of remembrance for those Canadian men and women who gave their lives in the defence of freedom. In two world wars and the Korean campaign nearly 115,000 Canadians made the supreme sacrifice. This Sunday, at 11 a.m., that sacrifice will be remembered not only in Ottawa but all across Canada and in many other parts of the world. Our allies also keep November 11 a sacred day to pay tribute to those who laid down their lives so that we and our children can live a serene and rewarding life.

There are many vacant chairs in Canadian homes today which belonged to fathers, husbands and sons who never came home from the wars. There are also many chairs which are filled by those who bear physical evidence of the scars and wounds of battle. These, also, we remember. Not just on November 11, but all through the year. The memorials we have erected to the fallen, both at home and abroad, pay dignified and worthy tribute to those whose names they commemorate. We are proud of them just as we are proud of the ways in which the people of this country have always acknowledged the debt which is owed to those who survived.

I feel that Canada, in her remembrance of both the living and the dead, has respected and honoured those who served in as fine a way as any country in the world. I feel we have caught the torch which was thrown to us in the immortal words of John McCrae. Let us for ever hold it high.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party I am happy to endorse the statement just made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs. As a matter of fact, as Your Honour will recall, I spoke to you this morning to indicate that I intended to rise to make a motion on this subject. I therefore heartily endorse the minister's statement.

I hope the ceremonies on the fifty-fifth anniversary of the ending of the first world war will remind the government that there are still some inequities in the veterans legislation. I know that the 52 members of the House of Commons who are war veterans realize this and will dedicate themselves to fulfilling the obligations that successive prime ministers have undertaken to the veterans of Canada.

I might take this opportunity to call the attention of the House to the fact that we still have among us a member of the House of Commons who is also a veteran of the first world war in the person of the distinguished right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to associate the New Democratic Party with the remarks made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs concerning Remembrance Day. Those who will march in the parades to be held across Canada on November 11 will be remembering intimately their comrades who died in the service of their country, those who suffered in that service, all those who took part in wars which they and the country believed were necessary for the survival of our democratic system and our nation.

There are many young people today who will watch these parades with some interest and little knowledge. I hope that Remembrance Day will direct the attention of those Canadians who have no knowledge of the wars to the efforts that Canada can well make by playing an independent role in the world and trying to fulfil the obligations that those who fought and died for Canada in two great wars were trying to accomplish. We can do this effectively and efficiently by remaining independent and maintaining a peacekeeping role throughout the world, thus eliminating the suffering, loss and grief caused those who gave so much in two world wars and in Korea.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, like our colleagues in this House, we are very happy to join the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) and all the people of Canada in paying tribute next Monday to those who died for their country.

If Canada still enjoys the total freedom that many other countries do not have, perhaps we owe it to those who are no longer among us or who gave their health and their limbs in the two previous world wars.

In the name of my colleagues and the Canadian population, I should like to thank those who gave us yesterday the freedom which we enjoy today.

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT ON DEPLOYMENT OF CANADIAN LOGISTICS CONTINGENT IN MIDDLE EAST PEACEKEEPING FORCE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on November 1 I informed the House that it was my intention to meet with the Secretary General of the United Nations in New York the following day to discuss with him the composition of the emergency force for service in the Middle East. My discussions with the Secretary General were useful and served to clarify some of the outstanding issues.

The same evening agreement was reached in the Security Council authorizing the Secretary General to consult with potential contributors, including Canada and Poland who were to provide contingents which would have particular responsibility for the provision of logistic support. On November 5 following my return from the United Nations I tabled in the House the text of the Security Council agreement along with the texts of notes exchanged between the Secretary General and our ambassador to the United Nations.

Our ambassador has since been holding discussions with the Secretary General, at Mr. Waldheim's request, concerning the organization and composition of the logistics element of the United Nations Emergency Force. Polish representatives have also participated in these more detailed discussions. Meanwhile, evaluation teams were dispatched to Cairo to assess the requirement on the ground.

In the light of the discussions to date, I wish to inform the House that agreement has been reached on the first phase of the deployment of the Canadian contingent. A signals unit which will provide communications for the United Nations Emergency Force will begin its departure from Canada within the next few days. We understand the Poles will be dispatching an engineer unit as the first element in their contribution. In the meantime, the Secretary General is awaiting the final reports of the evaluation teams and continuing his discussions with Canadian and Polish representatives to determine the next stages of the logistics deployment. These discussions have, of course, even greater urgency than heretofore in light of the news that progress has been made in securing a truce and in initiating negotiations which we all hope will lead to a permanent settlement.

As Canada will shortly be dispatching a signals unit to the Middle East, I propose to bring forward in the House on Tuesday, November 13, the resolution seeking the approval of parliament for the government's decision to participate in the UNEF.

● (1120)

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the minister indicates that the government is preparing to go ahead with a contingent for the peace force in the Middle East. We say bon voyage and best wishes to the signals unit about to leave Canada within the next few days.

The encouraging developments this week in the Middle East make it difficult for any responsible observer to suggest any posture on our part that could in any way add an extra dimension of difficulty to the situation. However, there remain some fundamental questions as to why our government pursued participation so vehemently and why the minister felt it necessary to ensure that Canada was part of the peace force. Surely our nation's foreign policies are not so fragile as to require the biannual injections of peace force participation in order to stay healthy.

My colleagues and I will have more specific matters to raise with reference not only to our participation in the Middle East peacekeeping force but on the entire question of peace force use and our role within peace forces when the resolution is brought forward for debate on Tuesday. That Canada should respond to international requests for assistance is beyond question; that Canada should insist on participating in every international peace force is truly open to question.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I hope that next Tuesday's debate will be a real one and not only a series of monologues like in the past.

If the minister really wants the agreement of this House, I hope he will give us all the necessary data and inform us of the position of the government and of its policy as regards a peacekeeping force. This is the only way that we shall have a useful debate; otherwise, it would be only a useless exercise.

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we have made it clear in the past that decisions such as the decision to participate in peacekeeping operations are of such importance that they should be referred to parliament for approval. We therefore welcome the proposed debate on the resolution next Tuesday.

At a time when the Congress of the United States is seeking to assert control of the legislative branch over major international decisions, we in Canada should make it crystal clear that although the initial decision and the negotiation of details rest with the government, the ultimate decision on major issues of foreign policy must be retained by parliament representing the people as a whole. This is essential to the working of parliamentary democracy.

We will leave comment on the decision to participate in the peacekeeping force in support of logistics services and the details of that contribution to the debate when our position can be more fully explained. Suffice it to say that in our view the more hopeful developments in the last few hours in the Middle East would have been impossible without the existence of the United Nations and the willingness of nations to make a contribution to peacekeeping forces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, naturally we approve any attempt to restore peace wherever need be. However, we are especially pleased to see that the government will permit the House to debate this matter so that its policy may really reflect the opinion of the whole Canadian population relating to the part that our country must play in the race, if such an expression may be used, towards peace in the world and in the Middle East in particular.

* * *

[English]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

LAND ACT REGULATIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITION OF SMALL HOLDINGS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, Sunday being Armistice Day, I hope the House will agree to a motion which I should like to present under the terms of Standing Order 43. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall):

That this House requests that the Minister of Veterans Affairs give urgent consideration to the amending of the Veterans Land Act regulations to permit veterans to acquire small holdings, even if the main purpose of most of the older veterans now applying for loans under the Veterans Land Act is to meet their housing requirements, it being the view of this House that entitlement to a piece of this land ought to be the right of any veteran.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I believe there is unanimous consent. Therefore I will put the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSFER OF VETERANS HOSPITALS TO OTHER AUTHORITIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to present a motion under Standing Order 43. As the Manitoba government has stated this week that it wants no part of the Deer Lodge Military Hospital transfer due to internal problems and a poor federal government financial settlement, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Frank):

That the many representations made by veterans protesting handover of veterans hospitals to provincial and/or municipal authorities be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs for investigation.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not, and the motion cannot be put.

* * *

[Translation]

LABOUR RELATIONS

LAY-OFF OF WORKERS AT DAVIE SHIPBUILDING LAUZON—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a most urgent and pressing matter.

Seconded by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau), I move:

That a special committee of the House be set up to study the serious problem of the many layoffs at Lauzon because of a steel supply shortage and to make necessary recommendations in order to correct the situation and mostly to prevent it from growing worse.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

[Mr. Speaker.]

• (1130)

[English]

INDUSTRY

LACK OF NEWSPRINT SUPPLIES FOR WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that many weekly newspapers in eastern Ontario, some over 100 years old, are being threatened with extinction because of the fact that the pulp and paper industry, and the distributors and suppliers of newsprint, are refusing to supply this basic necessity to the papers concerned, thus creating a situation in which one of the fundamental natural laws of the land, enshrined in the Canadian Bill of Rights, Part I, section 1(f), being "freedom of the press," is put in jeopardy in that there will be no press, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the government not grant any export licences to producers of newsprint, nor allow the selling of Canadian-made newsprint to foreign markets, until supplies of newsprint are guaranteed to all Canadian newspapers, weekly or otherwise, and any other Canadian customers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

* * *

MANPOWER

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS UNDER LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, in light of what appear to be scandalous inequities in the constituency allocation of funds for local initiatives projects, I ask leave of the House, under Standing Order 43, to move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose):

That the subject of the funds allocated to constituencies for local initiatives projects and the criteria employed in making such allocations be immediately referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration for study and report not later than December 2, 1973.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

ALLEGED DELAY IN ADJUDICATION OF PENSION APPLICATIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 regarding a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the plight of some war veterans. I ask unanimous consent to move, seconded by the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling):

That the many representations made by veterans showing grievance against the delays in adjudication of pension applications be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs for investigation.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

PAY OF NURSES IN VETERANS HOSPITALS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Ellwood Madill (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask unanimous consent to move, seconded by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall):

That the many representations made by federal nurses employed in veterans hospitals protesting the arbitral award of the government with regard to pay matters be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

* * *

TRANSPORT

SAINT JOHN-DIGBY FERRY SERVICE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Charles E. Haliburton (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek unanimous consent under Standing Order 43 to present a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), in spite of an undertaking to this House two weeks ago, has so far been unable to give any statement to the House assuring the House and the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick of the continued operation of the Bay of Fundy ferry service I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell):

That this House instruct the government to enter into an arrangement with CPR to assure the continued operation of that service, made on a twice daily sailing for another six months, and initiate a study by the proper authorities to determine most appropriate means for assuring continued permanent service.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CANADIAN PACIFIC SHOPCRAFT WORKERS—CANADIAN NATIONAL DOCKWORKERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion. In view of the lengthy delays of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in disposing of the appeals of the CPR shopcraft workers at Moose Jaw and CNR dockworkers at North Sydney, Nova Scotia, and the hardships suffered by these people, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir):

That the question of the rights of the shopcraft and dockworkers to receive unemployment insurance benefits be referred to the Standing Committee on Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

INDUSTRY

LACK OF NEWSPRINT SUPPLIES FOR WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 26 I ask leave to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the withholding by Canadian manufacturers and distributors of newsprint, the diverting of newsprint to foreign markets, and the failure to guarantee the supply of newsprint by the papermaking and paper distributing companies in Canada to the weekly newspapers of eastern Ontario, thereby constituting a danger to the freedom of the press in that there will be no press in this vital area.

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member knows, he has given the Chair short notice under the terms of Standing Order 26(2) which stipulates that a member is required to give at least two hours notice by written statement prior to the opening of a sitting of the matter proposed to be discussed and, further, that if the urgent matter is not then known, the member shall give his written statement to Mr. Speaker as soon as practicable but before the opening of the sitting.

The hon. member did give me notice before the opening of the sitting and I am prepared to look at the matter when I have a moment to do so.

I think the hon. member knows the difficulty of the Chair in relation to the granting of leave to put a motion under Standing Order 26. Many aspects of the matter have to be taken into account according to the provisions of the Standing Order. The matter will be looked into within the next hour or so and a decision will be given from the Chair later, either at one o'clock or at two o'clock.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

DISMISSAL OF EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, POLICY PLANNING DIVISION—EFFECT ON CONSULTATION WITH MÉTIS AND NON-STATUS INDIANS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the fact the minister personally gave an undertaking on September 12 to the Native Council of Canada that he and his officials would consult with them fully, and on a continuing basis, in the development of a housing policy for Métis and non-status Indians, can the minister explain how he intends this policy of consultation to succeed when a senior official of CMHC, Walter Rudnicki, is summarily dismissed from his position because he did exactly what the minister promised, that is, honoured the minister's commitment to allow the native people of Canada a meaningful—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will agree with the Chair, I am sure, that a question asked in those terms is really argument, but the minister would perhaps want to reply to that part of the hon. member's question which is not argument and the hon. member could then ask a supplementary or supplementaries.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, many of the premises of the question are not correct. In reply to the principal part of the question about consultation with the Native Council, Métis groups and non-status Indian groups, there have been many consultations, and there will continue to be consultation, on the development of policies and the implementation of programs. I have, for example, an appointment this afternoon with one of those groups for the purpose of discussing housing policy in light of the problem of the native people.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister since the Minister of State has not explained the dismissal of Mr. Rudnicki. In view of the fact the Prime Minister wrote to the Native Council of Canada on February 4, 1973, assuring them that the government and its agencies would listen to the advice of the Native Council on policies and programs intended for them and "further to consult with the native people for whom the programs are designed and indeed to involve them in the implementation of these programs," can the Prime Minister say how this involvement in consultation is to take place when an official, who in good faith proceeded to involve the native people, is dismissed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the principle of consultation is as I wrote to the Native Council, and as repeated by the minister a moment ago. On the matter of the dismissal, I think the hon. member had better direct her questions to the minister responsible for that general area.

● (1140)

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a final supplementary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. What steps has the minister undertaken to ensure that the new housing policy for Métis and non-status Indians will not be endangered by recent events in his department?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I am working with the Native Council, to use the existing new terms of the Housing Act most effectively and am considering and have asked my policy advisers to consider amendments and changes that can make housing policy more responsive to the particular needs of the native people, which are really twofold. First, incomes are extremely low and, second, housing is located in rural and hinterland areas. I hope to be able to produce policies for their consideration very soon.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister consulted with the Minister of State for Urban Affairs about the firing of Mr. Rudnicki? If so, can the Prime Minister inform the House whether the basis for his dismissal was a breach of cabinet secrecy?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot recollect that we discussed this matter. I repeat, the question should be addressed directly to the minister rather than skirting around it as the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands has done.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Can the minister inform the House why Mr. Rudnicki was fired from his job?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that matters relating to personnel, including appointments, discipline and dismissals, are not the responsibility of the minister but are the responsibility, clearly, of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: Clearly, the responsibility and control rest with the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It was, accordingly, the president who investigated the events that preceded Mr. Rudnicki's dismissal and who came to the conclusion that all the circumstances did in fact require the action that he took in the discharge of his responsibility for the administration of the corporation.

Mr. Alexander: Let's have an investigation.

Mr. Basford: The person involved has approached me and I asked the president to review the circumstances, which he has done. The president confirms his decision.

I am reluctant to go into details on matters of individual personnel, for two reasons. First, the person involved, as I understand it, is considering, as is his obvious right, legal action. He is also considering employment elsewhere, which I understand informally he has obtained. I do not want to say anything that would prejudice the rights of the parties to any lawsuit or the right of Mr. Rudnicki to further employment.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I have a supplementary question Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's expression of sympathy for meeting the needs of the native people in the field of housing, why will he permit the president of Central Mortgage and Housing, who has never demonstrated anything except an ability to make money, to fire the one person in Central Mortgage and Housing who had the confidence of the native people?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, neither premise of the question is correct.

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister say that he will talk to his ministers about inconsistencies in their dealings with their staff, whereby Mr. Rudnicki is fired because of close relationships with the people he is dealing with and Mr. Austin is less detrimentally affected although he has close relationships with the people with whom he deals?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question, I think it should be clear to the House and anyone who is not grossly prejudiced in this matter that the firing was not based on the fact that Mr. Rudnicki knew the Indian people and had good relations with them. He was fired after a series of events which are perfectly well known.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the real reason? The Prime Minister knows. This is a cover-up.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Does the dismissal of Mr. Rudnicki imply that the government does not accept the policy formulations of the planning unit of CMHC?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the government has not had the opportunity of considering those policy proposals, so I am unable to answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are three or four members seeking supplementaries on this important matter. I will recognize the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka and attempt to complete the first round of questioning, after which we will return to this matter and hear all the supplementaries that hon. members may want to ask.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, may I direct another supplementary to the same minister. Will future policy formulations of the planning unit of CMHC be discussed in Cabinet without an opportunity for other discussion?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the policy proposals will be put to my colleagues by me and will be considered by them.

* * *

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ALLOCATION OF FUNDS—GRANT CRITERIA—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of apparent inequities in the allocation of LIP funds to constituencies, would he be prepared to ask the House for a reference to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration of the matter of the allocation by constituency of funds for LIP projects and the criteria which have been employed in making those allocations, and would he agree to appear before the committee and provide that committee with a list of the allocations made?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will take note of the representation. I note also that the question of allocations and the criteria is on the order paper, and I will be addressing myself to that. The supplementary estimates of the department will shortly be before a committee, and I certainly anticipate that this question will be dealt with. I will welcome the opportunity to put it on the table before the committee at that time.

Mr. Rowland: Can the minister assure us if he makes an appearance before the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee during consideration of the supplementary estimates of his department, that the figures, constituency by constituency, of the amounts of money and the criteria will be made available to the members of the committee and that his officials will be there to defend their position?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, that would be my intention. I point out that the expenditures under last year's Local Initiatives Program were made available in response to a question on the order paper, and that is what I would intend.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—STATISTICS USED TO ESTABLISH GRANT CRITERIA

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Since he admitted to the House yesterday that labour force survey figures were an inadequate basis for LIP grants and allocations and told us that, instead, they were based on an accumulation of data at Canada Manpower Centres, and since I have discovered that job applications at these centres bear little or no direct relationship to the various riding allocations and their sizes, would he tell us, when you rule out these two crucial yardsticks, what kind of base figures and statistics were used?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not rule out those yardsticks. In fact, I believe that their elaboration is probably much better done in the way the hon. member who asked the preceding question proposed, namely, before the committee. I will be glad to give details there on how the formula is applied.

Mr. Rose: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it would be very difficult for us to do what the minister suggests because we still have neither the figures nor the formula from last year.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—POSSIBLE PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS TO REMOVE ALLEGED INEQUITIES IN SOME CONSTITUENCIES

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister confirm whether extra funds have been set aside from the public treasury to iron out the inequities in a number of constituencies?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise of the question about inequities. As to the main substance of the question, no such decision has been taken. If and when it is taken, it will be announced in the normal manner.

* * *

● (1150)

[Translation]

COMMUNICATIONS

MEETING WITH QUEBEC MINISTER TO DISCUSS CABLEVISION PROBLEM—FEDERAL POSITION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Communications.

Can he say whether, since November 1, the Quebec government has formally asked for a meeting with him to consider the problem of cable television and does the minister intend to revise the federal government position on this?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question following other ones which had been put to me on the same subject. Everything hangs now on the position that the provincial ministers and the federal Department of Communications will take at the conference to be held on November 29 and 30 next.

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST PEACEKEEPING FORCE—COMPOSITION AND NUMBER OF PERSONNEL IN CANADIAN CONTINGENT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question arising out of the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. First, how many men are going to be sent from Canada for the peacekeeping force? Second, inasmuch as the No. 1 combat paratroop unit stationed in Edmonton was originally put on the alert, has it been decided that they will not be sent, nor will any actual combat troops be sent as part of the force?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might answer the question in the reverse order. It was never the intention that combat troops would be sent. We were asked by the Secretary General on behalf of the Security Council to supply the logistics component. We are not yet certain how many will be involved because, as I said in my opening statement today, the results of the evaluation have not yet been fully assessed. The Secretary General has asked us in the meantime to send one signals unit.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How many men would that be?

Mr. Sharp: We are not quite certain how many that will involve. Perhaps my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, can answer that question better than I.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the core of the Canadian contingent will be supplied by the No. 1 Canadian Signals Regiment from Kingston. Initially, an advance party of 100 will be leaving, but we expect that over the next few days that could build up to over 400 from the signals corps.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Secretary of State for External Affairs stated it was not intended to send combat troops. Why was it that the No. 1 combat paratroop unit in Edmonton was asked to be on the alert preparatory to being called upon to serve as members of this peacekeeping force?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I have explained to the House before that the No. 1 airborne regiment in Edmonton is trained not only for combat but also for a peacekeeping role. The logistics role is one of very great importance. Communications are important to the success of any military mission, and so is transportation. I think that even armchair generals like the right hon. member and myself should know that much about a military mission.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Certainly the hon. gentleman has identified himself well.

Mr. Trudeau: You are an honorary armchair general.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister assure the House and the country that in making up the logistics requirement for the Canadian group going to the Middle East the helicopter and other air-sea rescue strength of Canada's armed forces at Comox and elsewhere will not be reduced?

Mr. Richardson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have given that assurance before, and at the present time there is no requirement for Canadian aircraft.

* * *

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

DISMISSAL OF EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, POLICY PLANNING DIVISION—POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): My question is supplementary to the first line of questioning to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Was the minister satisfied with the recommendation of the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation with regard to the firing of Mr. Rudnicki who had 18 years service or did the minister undertake to look into the matter personally before any decision was made to fire Mr. Rudnicki?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the president's action was not a recommendation, it was a decision of which I was informed, of course. With regard to the purpose of the question, do I support the action of the president, the answer is obviously yes.

Mr. Baker: In view of the answer the minister has just given, is he now prepared to apply the same standards regarding possible conflict of interest to Mr. Teron as he is apparently applying to Mr. Rudnicki?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Can the Minister of State for Urban Affairs assure the House he did not know anything about the incident for which Mr. Rudnicki was fired until after he had been fired by the president of CMHC?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the president informed me beforehand, as any good president would do.

Mr. Fraser: In order that the House may be informed as to just what happened, will the minister advise whether there was any discussion between the president of CMHC and himself from the time of the incident to the time of the firing and whether that discussion was by communication, verbal or in writing, direct or indirect?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, obviously I communicate with the president of CMHC almost daily about the whole range of activities of the corporation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fraser: That was not the question. A supplementary—

Mr. Baker: You are covering up something.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver South can ask a supplementary.

Mr. Fraser: Obviously members opposite do not want the truth to come out. My question was quite plain and the minister knows perfectly well what the question was. Was the minister consulted about this firing before it took place?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I just answered that question. I told the House I was informed.

* * *

TRANSPORT

PROVISION OF RAILWAY CARS TO MOVE GRAIN TO MEET COMMITMENTS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the concern expressed by the chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board within the past two days that we probably will not be able to meet our commitments because of congestion in the country elevator system and the lack of supplies at Thunder Bay and Vancouver—indeed, Thunder Bay is at an all-time low—what action is being taken to correct this situation? Has the minister been in consultation with the man or the minister in charge of the Wheat Board?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not been in consultation with the man in charge of the Wheat Board but with the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. I know a meeting was held with the railways a few weeks ago. I, personally, have a commitment from CNR and CPR that they will meet their commitment. If they do not, that means I was misled.

Mr. Gleave: In his discussions with CNR and CPR with regard to this problem, did the minister make inquiries with regard to the amount of Canadian rolling stock or boxcars that are in the United States and did he receive any assurance by the railroads that they would try to get some of that rolling stock back into Canada to move Canadian goods?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, many weeks and many months before the hon. member put the question in the House, CNR, CPR and the Department of Transport were worrying about this problem. I think that the cars now in the United States do not constitute a real problem. The time within which they are returned has been shortened considerably. The situation is improving. I think each railway has about 11,000 cars for use in the transport of grain and they are sure they can meet their commitment.

Oral Questions

● (1200)

POSSIBILITY OF PURCHASE BY GOVERNMENT OF ADDITIONAL HOPPER CARS TO MOVE GRAIN

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): May I ask the Minister of Transport whether any consideration has been given to the purchase by the federal government of additional hopper cars, as was done last year, particularly since the Wheat Board has made such a recommendation and since there is a chronic shortage every year, not necessarily arise because of the strike this year?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I think all those negotiations have been carried on by the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, and it would be preferable to address the question to him when he is here.

Mr. Mazankowski: I asked the minister a simple question, whether the government was considering the purchase of additional rolling stock as was done last year. It requires a simple answer, yes or no.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): And I gave the hon. member a very simple answer, that he should put his question to the Minister of Justice.

* * *

INDUSTRY

LACK OF NEWSPRINT SUPPLIES FOR WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS—SUGGESTED EXPORT CONTROLS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact Canadian manufacturers and distributors of newsprint have refused to supply the weekly newspapers of eastern and other parts of Ontario with newsprint, will the minister guarantee that the government will not grant any export licences or allow the sale of any Canadian-made newsprint to foreign markets until supplies are assured to all Canadian newspapers, weekly or otherwise?

An hon. Member: Is that your attitude to oil?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The hon. member's question reflects the serious shortage of newsprint on a world-wide basis. My department has been meeting with publishers who have run into difficulties and with representatives of the industry, and in a number of cases we have been successful in arranging supplies for those who are out of newsprint.

Mr. Dick: I asked the minister whether his department would guarantee that publishers in Canada will be able to get newsprint before we export newsprint abroad.

Mr. Gillespie: There is no intention of placing export controls on newsprint.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE VISIT BY PRIME MINISTER TO EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY—REASON FOR DELAY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to put to the Prime Minister. Now that the right hon. gentleman has visited both Russia and China, is it his intention very soon to visit the countries of the European Economic Community as the leaders of all other important industrial nations have done in the past few months? If so, does he expect to announce plans for such a visit within the very near future?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I take this to be a representation, for which I warmly thank the hon. member.

Mr. Hees: As the Prime Minister knows, it is not a representation; it is a question seeking an answer on a very important subject. Now, I will ask him a supplementary. Is the reason for the unaccountable delay on the part of the Prime Minister in arranging such an important visit the fact he has been unable to obtain an invitation from France to visit that country and he is unable to make the trip unless he is first able to obtain such an invitation?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: That is not the way I heard it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: It is interesting to find once in a while that members on the other side are still alive, even if it is only a matter of making noise.

* * *

ENERGY

PURCHASE OF HOME HEATING OIL BY CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Supply and Services who indicated a few days ago that discussions were going on in connection with the Canadian Commercial Corporation purchasing home heating oil offshore. Can the minister tell the House whether the corporation is, in fact, seeking to purchase home heating oil, how much the corporation has been instructed to purchase and how much it has purchased to date?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, negotiations are continuing between a Toronto dealer and my department, and not the Canadian Commercial Corporation, and we hope to complete today the purchase of approximately 40 million gallons of distilled oil. We expect that the schedule of delivery may be flexible enough to enable us to offset about 10 per cent of the fuel shortage that we anticipate for this winter.

SHIPBUILDING

POSSIBILITY OF NEW CONTRACTS FOR DAVIE SHIPBUILDING TO PREVENT UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Considering the number of layoffs occurring at the Davie Shipbuilding Limited at Lauzon, can the minister inform the House whether new contracts are going to be allocated to this firm to reassure the workers about their future?

If so, what kind of federal assistance will be granted and to whom?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): A short while ago I announced the extension of the shipbuilding subsidy program for Canadian shipbuilding. I believe this has been very successful. More than that, the Export Development Corporation has become increasingly active in this field and today it is signing an agreement with the Cunard Steamship Company Limited for the purchase of two 39,000-ton product carriers with a total value of $35 million. The Export Development Corporation will be financing 80 per cent of that purchase.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

ENERGY

POSSIBLE DEVELOPMENT OF COAL PRODUCTION IN EASTERN CANADA—REVISION OF SUBSIDY ARRANGEMENTS WITH CARRIERS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Speaker. Is the hon. gentleman actively assessing measures in conjunction with the provinces for the revitalization and revival of the eastern Canadian coal industry as an important supplementary energy source? I noted yesterday that in answer to a question by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North the minister suggested that coal was a provincial resource. I should like to ask him whether there are many resources that are not provincial?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): We have discussed this matter with the Nova Scotia authorities. We have indicated to them that any initiative that might be taken with regard to bringing into production again what have been, historically, high-cost coalfields lies, of course, at the provincial level.

Mr. MacKay: I have a supplementary on the same topic to the Minister of Transport. Bearing in mind the energy crisis and higher fuel costs, is the minister considering a revision of existing subsidy arrangements with carriers across the nation? Further, is he considering the granting of subsidies with respect to the possible supplying to central Canadian markets of eastern and western coal, provided he is satisfied that the CNR and CPR are now delivering coal at reasonable rates?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): All those questions are under study in various departments, including the Department of Transport.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a supplementary for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I would ask the minister whether he is aware that the Cape Breton coalfields are a federal resource and not a provincial one?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The question was asked with regard to the Cumberland County fields.

* * *

TRANSPORT

RATES FOR CARRYING COAL—REQUEST FOR STUDY BY CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a supplementary to the Minister of Transport arising out of reports that the railways have tabled a schedule of rates for carrying coal from the west to Ontario, which a study carried out by the Ontario government shows to be about 50 per cent higher than they should be. Will the minister take steps to make certain that the information placed before the Canadian Transport Commission by the railways is made public and that the CTC undertakes its own study immediately of the cost of transportation of coal from western to central Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I will surely look into that. The hon. member will, no doubt, recall what I said in the House as far as freight rates are concerned, and I will see if the action taken by the railways conforms to the statement I made. We made a commitment in the west to the effect that the provinces would be informed as to all details of railway rate structures, and I hope that one of the provinces will ask for this information.

Mr. MacKay: On a point of order—

• (1210)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are only a few minutes left before the end of the question period. The hon. member for Central Nova wishes to raise a point of order. I will return to the hon. member for York South, then the hon. member for Bellechasse, and we will try to go on from there.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief, and I ask for your guidance in this matter. In view of all the undertakings made in the last few months by the Minister of Transport to look into a whole multitude of matters, I wonder whether there is a provision in the rules for a whole day to be set aside so the minister can make a report on these various issues.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I understood from the minister's answer that action to make available the facts upon which the railways are basing their freight rates has to wait until some province asks for the information. I should like to ask the minister whether he will see to it that the CTC undertakes its own study of the basis on which the railways are now trying, if the Ontario study is correct, to make quite unjustified profits out of the rather difficult situation in which Canada finds itself?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I will surely ask for all the pertinent information.

* * *

[Translation]

ENERGY

SECOND NUCLEAR POWER PLANT ANNOUNCED BY QUEBEC HYDRO—CONSTRUCTION OF ADDITIONAL HEAVY WATER PLANT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Since Quebec Hydro has announced the construction of a second nuclear station and since the first one has been slowing down due to some difficulties in obtaining heavy water, can the minister tell the House if he will soon announce the decision of the government concerning the construction of another heavy water plant?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have not taken any final decision on that matter, but the announcement will soon be made as mentioned by the hon. member.

* * *

[English]

INDUSTRY

NEWSPRINT—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF SUPPLIES FOR WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS—SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO ALLOCATION AND PRICING POLICIES OF MILLS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton. It is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and is a little complex. In light of the fact that most weekly newspaper operators use letter press and most of those operating in Ontario use offset and require sheeted newsprint, and also in light of the fact that the mills have put all the people engaged on conversion of rolled newsprint and sheeted newsprint on last year's allocations generally, what particular steps is the minister taking to make sure that vast numbers of weekly newspapers in Ontario are not forced to cease publication in the near future?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, my department has been in consultation with all of the parties involved.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I will address to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs since I am not having much luck with the other minister. Is the minister's department looking at the question of the allocation of newsprint and also at the pricing policy of mills?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it would be possible for the combines branch of the department to look into these questions only if they appear to pertain to possible breaches of the act. I would be very happy to have the director's attention drawn to any evidence that might indicate such breaches.

* * *

AIR CANADA

POSSIBLE CURTAILMENT OF FLIGHTS TO EASTERN CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I wonder whether the hon. gentleman could advise if, as a result of a possible fuel shortage, Air Canada has any plans to make drastic cutbacks in the number of flights servicing the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I asked for a report on this a couple of days ago, and they said that at the moment they do not envisage any curtailment of service.

Mr. Muir: In view of the fact that service to the Atlantic provinces at the best of times is not good, would the minister further suggest to the president of Air Canada that if there have to be any cutbacks they should be in trans-Atlantic flights, not in domestic flights to the Atlantic provinces?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think we should protect, as we have up to now, Canadian citizens first before giving service to others.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

JOINT USE OF POLES BY TELEPHONE AND CABLE TELEVISION COMPANIES—REASON FOR DELAY IN DECISION BY CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications and would have been supplementary to an earlier one, but I will try to ask it in any event. Since the Quebec telephone companies this week appeared before the Régie des Services Publics of the province of Quebec upon the same issue that was considered by the Canadian Transport Commission last February regarding joint use of telephone poles by telephone companies and cable television companies and there still has not been a decision, would the minister check with the chairman of the CTC to see whether he is still alive, well and functioning and find out the reason for the unconscionable delay, or has he been instructed not to bring forward a decision until the constitutional conference at the end of the month or until the Régie des Services Publics brings forward its decision?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have already made that check and the reason for the delay in the decision is that it is one which is not easy to make. I have had an indication from the CTC that it will be out around the fifteenth of this month.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED NEED FOR INCREASE IN CEILING ON HOUSE CONSTRUCTION UNDER VETERANS LAND ACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact the $18,000 ceiling for house construction under Part II of the Veterans Land Act will little more than lay the foundations for a house, will the minister bring forth amendments to raise the ceiling under the Veterans Land Act?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I will take that under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

FINANCE

CONTROL OF FOREIGN OWNERSHIP OF BANKS AS WELL AS FLOW OF FUNDS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact the minister said recently that he was considering strengthening the foreign ownership regulations pertaining to Canadian banks after it was revealed that the Chase Manhattan Bank and Bank of America were now active in Canada, and in light of the fact that Bank of America has now purchased a 20 per cent interest in Montreal Trust, which is connected with the Power Corporation, can the minister say whether or not he has now decided to tighten the foreign ownership regulations pertaining to banks and financial institutions?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are, of course, looking at this question as we move toward a revision of the Bank Act. The particular transaction which the hon. gentleman mentions relates to the purchase of shares of a provincially incorporated company over which, at the moment, we have no control.

Mr. Crouse: I have a related question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have just about reached the end of the question period. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville will be recognized for a supplementary, followed by the hon. member for Fort William.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief supplementary. In view of the fact that a large bulk, perhaps up to 50 per cent, of funds lent by Canadian banks go to foreign corporations either within or outside of this country, can the minister say whether or not he is considering any investment controls to keep a larger share of these funds available for Canadians?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think the flow of funds goes both ways. The assets and liabilities held by Canadian banks abroad, which amount to about one-quarter of their holdings, also result in a wider money market in Canada.

* * *

TRANSPORT

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY—ABSENCE OF PAVED SHOULDERS IN NORTHERN ONTARIO PORTION

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the section of the trans-Canada highway through northern Ontario is probably the only section of this national highway that does not have paved shoulders, and in view of the fact the absence of such paved shoulders increased greatly the hazards to drivers, will the federal government take the initiative to bring the trans-Canada highway up to uniform standards through northern Ontario?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the agreement under which the trans-Canada highway was built has now expired. We know that this problem exists and it is being studied by my department in conjunction with the roads department of Ontario. We hope it will be possible to find ways and means of upgrading the highway.

* * *

● (1220)

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT'S INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO MEASURES TO CONTROL INFLATION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my related question to the Minister of Finance refers to statements made by the Secretary General of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development in Toronto to the effect that continued inflation was bringing the free market nations to the point of no return, to the point where their social fabrics could no longer bear the strain. I should like to ask the minister if he shares this opinion and, if so, what steps he plans to take to end the present trend of printing fiat money which can only lead to increasing inflation and the ultimate collapse of our present monetary system?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has reservations about the form of the question. The hon. member is inviting the minister to express an opinion and to make a statement which ought to be made on motions. I recognize the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

ARBITRATION AWARD TO NURSES—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Ellwood Madill (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Has the Professional Institute of the Public Service resolved the remuneration situation for nursing staffs across Canada in our veterans hospitals and, if not, why not?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the answer is that the final award by an arbitral tribunal is being carried out.

ARBITRATION OF SALARIES OF CLERICAL STAFF—GOVERNMENT POSITION IN LIGHT OF SALARIES RECOMMENDED FOR MANAGERIAL LEVELS

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that the executive advisory council made up of the heads of corporations in Canada recommended at least a 20 per cent increase in the upper echelon or managerial levels of the civil service, and in view of the fact that arbitration is coming about for the clerical staff and the government's most recent offer is in the area of 7 per cent, would the minister inform the House if the government intends to send the report of the advisory council to the arbitration board to use the evidence the council presented in deciding on the salaries of the people in the lower echelons?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the arbitral tribunals have at their disposal a very competent pay research bureau financed jointly by the employees and the government.

Mr. Knight: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have reached the end of the question period. I apologize to the hon. member but there are a number of members seeking supplementaries and I stretched a point in allowing the hon. member for Assiniboia to ask his first question. I have no alternative at this point, five minutes later, but to call orders of the day.

Mr. Rowland: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, during the course of his answer to me this morning the Minister of Manpower and Immigration indicated that he had given information respecting the allocation of LIP funds by constituencies under the program in the past year, in response to an order paper question. That order paper question is mine. It was placed on the order paper on February 28 and it has not been answered. In light of that, I think the very least the minister could do is to see that his answer appears on the next occasion that order paper questions are dealt with in the House.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, it simply was my understanding that the information had been given. If I am out of date I will certainly correct that, but it was my impression that it had been done.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House resumed, from Wednesday, November 7, consideration of Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6.

Mr. Charles E. Haliburton (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be recognized at this stage of the proceedings. I am only sorry that I was not recognized a minute or two ago for a question that I felt was very important to my constituents.

As I began to say on Wednesday in this debate, the bill before us has an underlying objective which all Canadians can support. That objective is the encouragement of Canadians to own Canada, to take up the challenges of developing our own research, to develop in all parts of the country the managerial skills, the research and development facilities and all the domestic infrastructure necessary to enable this country, its people and its commerce to stand on their own feet and be truly Canadian.

In the past, foreign investment has been welcomed and we owe a major proportion of our high state of development and our high standard of living to that fact. Our situation is very similar to that of Australia where the Prime Minister, in a speech to the House of Representatives in that country, said the following:

> Overseas capital has played a vital role in Australia's development. It has added considerably to the resources available for our growth. It has brought with it valuable technological know-how and access to overseas markets. It has created new industries. Australia is a large nation and a prosperous one as a result. The inflow of capital has been associated with increasing overseas ownership and control of industry in Australia. This has been one cost of the increased growth which has come from welcoming overseas capital.

Our experience parallels that very closely. A great deal of foreign investment has entered Canada because the total climate here has been hospitable to it. For precisely the same reason, domestic Canadian investment has also been substantial.

Let us look at what the government is proposing to do in our situation now, with a limited push or a substantial push from the NDP. This country has had a dynamic growth, a growth encouraged by stable government, a satisfactory physical climate and a business climate which has encouraged entrepreneurship. In that regard, the President of Noranda Mines Limited made a speech on October 31, 1973 which I believe is significant. It conveys the attitude that our business community is developing toward the Canadian government. He said:

> The reason why Canada has received such a large share of the world's exploration effort—

He was referring to the mining industry.

> —has been our hospitable climate towards mining which has led the industry to accept a lower rate of return here than in many other parts of the world. For example, a U.S. government study indicates that average annual earnings on U.S. investment in Canadian mining returned less than 10 per cent from 1954-67 compared with 25 per cent in Latin America. However, we are losing this relative advantage.
>
> Attitudes and proposed legislation with respect to foreign ownership have reduced the amount of non-Canadian capital directed to exploration here, and this trend will likely accelerate. The long period of uncertainty regarding federal taxation policy had an inhibiting effect on the level of exploration activity while the subsequent legislation removing most of the previous incentives has lengthened the odds against finding a commercial orebody. In addition, current attitudes towards mining in certain provinces have had a severe impact on the level of exploration in large and highly prospective areas of the country.

He goes on to say that industry is facing a number of serious operating problems. He cites labour as being a problem; he cites the heavy capital and operating costs, costs of environmental controls and the incredible inflation which is taking place in construction costs. Those things, Mr. Speaker, are eroding the confidence of not only foreign investors but domestic investors in the future of the Canadian economy. What I understand him to mean is that any company interested in making money for its shareholders, as of course it must be, is no longer looking at Canada. He goes on to say that mining companies are looking at developing nations which are now establishing—and I wish the House would pay attention to this—clear-cut rules for foreign capital. While other nations, competitors of ours for international investment and for Canadian investment, are establishing clear-cut rules, our Canadian government is proposing the fuzziest possible type of legislation.

Whatever became of the idea of calling a spade a spade? Why is it not possible to define some industrial sectors which shall remain under Canadian control? Why can we not say that we welcome foreign investment in designated areas compatible with a generally outlined national industrial strategy? Why can we not develop national industrial rules based on regional and national needs with a voluntary input, a strategy which would enable the government to set out some form of guidelines and firm guidelines that would provide some permanence for both foreign and domestic investors?

● (1230)

This bill does not do that. This bill is not constructive. This bill provides for regulations and control. It intends to rationalize the Canadian industry. It confirms this government's determination to keep on tinkering with what is left of our free market economy until it is totally destroyed. Furthermore, this bill is a measure to provide the executive branch of government with a power to be wielded in a discriminatory, damaging, uncertain and arbitrary manner. It is further evidence to the people of this country, and to the business community, that this government has one firm, unswerving and continuing policy, that is its total devotion to ad hocery. Our party, and specifically my colleague the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), has made amendments to this act which would provide an assurance of input from provincial authorities. Those amendments go some distance toward removing some of the grosser uncertainties. At least a potential investor might be assured that a plan approved by the province had some reasonable chance of avoiding the consequences of the minister's regal whim.

I ask members in considering this bill to consider that we are not a unitary state, that we have regional aspirations, that investment capital does not flow from the financial capitals of this country to the hinterland, as it might. We have differing regional interests within the national framework. In this context, it is not proper to ask provincial governments to forsake their own responsibilities for property and civil rights.

The Canadian Bar Association made a submission to the government with regard to this bill. I do not have the original submission, but I have a quotation from the Financial Post, from an editorial including this paragraph:

> Indeed, Ottawa is on shaky constitutional grounds on its provisions to restrict sales made to foreigners. As the Bar's brief says, "the right to dispose of one's property is ordinarily within the provincial jurisdiction of the Property and Civil Rights power as enumerated in section 92 of the BNA Act.

There is that consideration which, I believe, adds some uncertainty to the whole impact of this act.

Then, we come to the subject of "significant benefit". The interpretation of the provisions of the bill and of the words "significant benefit" will vary greatly depending on the eye of the beholder. Coming from a region that is one of the have-nots, it will be difficult to convince myself that this government, hived as it is in central Canada, propped up as it is by the NDP which gathers its support from central Canada, can exercise that detached and objective judgment which would be required to administer this power, this power which means development or no development, progress or stagnation in different regions of this country.

Even if the minister is totally fair, totally unbiased, the biggest fault will still remain— the total lack of guidelines. Business is still left to guess whether or not it is safe to move. Uncertainly will be their greatest hurdle. Can we trust this coalition government to make objective decisions in any event? Can we trust them to be fair?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Haliburton: These spokesmen say we cannot. I would remind the NDP that it was the Liberal party in power that established policies whereby foreign investment in this country has reached $60 billion. It has, after all, been in power for the past 75 years with three short breathing spaces. Now, they have had a conversion. They want to buy Canadian.

Furthermore, they say they will be happy to consult, even though the legislation does not require it, with the provinces in these matters. But I ask you: where was consultation over offshore oil rights off the Atlantic coast?

Where was consultation with regard to the development of the tar sands? Where was consultation when it was decided by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) to terminate certain fisheries off the Atlantic coast, and where was consultation when the export tax was imposed on crude oil? No, they will not be consulting; they are the government of confrontation.

I was interested in listening to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) on Wednesday. He said we can trust the government. He said that they are more reliable than the provincial governments which are blindly clamouring for industries based on foreign capital. He seemed to feel that foreign investment was tainted in some way, that is unless it was invested in his riding. He comes from an area of Canada where, in all probability, growth will continue by virtue of its own momentum. He complained recently about the failure of the federal government to demand that U.S. companies invest more money in the Canadian auto industry in Ontario. I suspect he might also be favourably disposed to increased tire manufacturing in his area under foreign ownership. But he says no to foreign investment in the Maritimes. If it is a Michelin tire plant or a Volvo automobile plant, where does he stand on that?

As I said a moment ago, significant benefit is all in the eye of the beholder. It is not of any significant benefit to Canada to have the NDP continue to prop up this government in view of the discretionary power given to the minister in this bill and that may well be the cause of the poorer provinces of this country losing industrial opportunity. It is not of any significant benefit to Canada, I submit, to have the Atlantic area continue perpetually to rely on central Canadian manufacturers for its manufactured goods. That may well be the price we pay if this bill passes in its present form.

Speaking of significant benefit a little further, this provision seems to be putting the wagon before the horse. Why should the onus, in determining whether or not it is of significant benefit, be on the investor? Why should he, in effect, be required to enter into the Canadian scene, to orient himself to Canadian commercial and social values to such an extent that he can judge the proposal to be made in terms of whether or not it would be of significant benefit to Canada? Rather, the onus should be on the controlling authority, the onus should be shifted to the government, to the minister, as it is in Australia where a similar type of judgment is made by an independent authority. In Australia, however, having been judged by the independent authority, the investment will be rejected only if it is determined to be against the national interest. It seems that we have the emphasis the other way round.

The adoption of the amendments proposed would go some distance toward removing the most obvious deficiencies in this bill. Providing for a provincial input in itself would ensure some objectivity and give some assurance to the investor as to the considerations to be applied to his application.

There are other actions which the government should be initiating. First, we should consider tax changes to encourage Canadians to invest at home by giving them a competitive edge on foreigners and foreign corporations doing business in Canada; second, tax changes that would make it more profitable for Canadians to invest in Canada than to invest in the same business in another country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Haliburton: Third, consideration should be given to rebating capital gains tax when gain is realized from the sale of a business or an industry to another Canadian; fourth, positive encouragement of small business enterprises by utilising tax delay measures similar to the retirement pension programs; fifth, positive encouragement of research and development in this country, possibly by a system of tax exempt profits based on equivalents spent on research or perhaps mining and oil exploration. Sixth, and most important, this government should be taking steps to assure investors, both domestic and foreign, that Canada's laws will not be changed daily, weekly or annually so that any potential investor will know on a long term basis what regulatory controls and tax laws his corporation or business will need to face. Investors should be assured that changes will be taking place in a gradual manner rather than suddenly, overnight.

• (1240)

I conclude as I began by saying that the underlying philosophy of this bill is one which I can happily support, and which I believe most Canadians can support. The methods provided in the bill leave much to be desired. Substantial improvements will be affected by adoption of the amendments proposed by my colleagues from Central Nova, but further changes in other government policies will be required if this measure is to achieve the desired effect.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any doubt in the minds of most members of my party why we, at times, support the Liberal government, particularly in view of the speech to which we just listened. Much has been said with respect to Bill C-132 at report stage, and so I do not wish to take up too much more time at this point in the debate. However, there are a few aspects with respect to foreign ownership and domination of our economy to which I would like to address myself today.

With your indulgence I would like to reflect briefly on some of the historical aspects of foreign domination by drawing a parallel between the great era of industrial development in the United States following the war between the states, and the inflow of foreign, mainly U.S. capital, into Canada in the last two decades.

At the end of the civil war in the United States, businessmen welcomed foreign capital from Europe, and of course for excellent reasons. They needed money in order to build railways, canals, factories and so on. But, Mr. Speaker, they were very careful to make sure that the capital they sought, and indeed got, was bond capital. This meant while foreign capital poured in, the American tycoons had completed control over how the money was to be spent, and foreign investors had no equity voting privileges whatsoever. This, of course, was a real coup for the Yankee robber barons of that period.

Contrast this with the deplorable situation that has been allowed to develop in Canada in the last 20 years, where almost all foreign investment has been in equity voting capital, and where foreign investors simply moved in and, to a great extent, took over our economy. This is why today most of our natural resource industries, and a substantial proportion of manufacturing and food processing industries, are foreign controlled or owned outright. As we all know, Mr. Speaker, the foreign investors are not to blame. They saw a good thing and took full advantage of it. We needed that capital 20 or 30 years ago, but surely the time has come when we must put a stop to any further foreign economic domination, especially when we are now dealing with huge multinational corporations whose power and influence in the world are greater than many nations themselves.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, if we do not now exercise control and restraint over the multinationals, they will soon control us. In some countries this has already happened. I can recall the statements made by the President of Mexico when he spoke to us in this House about a year and a half ago. He called upon Canada to co-operate with Mexico in restraining the fantastic powers of the multinationals, and it was my interpretation that he was referring to those based in the United States because of that country's close proximity to both Mexico and Canada.

I can also recall the number of members from all parties who applauded the Mexican President's remarks with respect to multinationals. So, Mr. Speaker, it is almost too late to regain control of our economy. In the available time left we must make every effort to repatriate our economy so that we will achieve control over our economic and political destiny, bearing in mind that we must co-operate in good faith with other national economies in the interests of greater human development and world peace. This is why my party supports Bill C-132 in principle, although we recognize some very glaring weaknesses in it. In my opinion, the bill is really not tough enough.

Before getting into the specifics of the weaknesses I would like to explode the myth, so common among most Liberals and Conservatives, that we must have foreign investment in order to develop our economy. This might have been true a couple of generations ago, although the inflow should have been bond capital, as I suggested earlier. The fact is that during the 1960's there was a net outflow, in terms of investment, from Canada. During that decade foreign firms operating in Canada sent out of Canada in interest, dividends, royalty fees, management fees and so on over $2 billion more than all the capital they imported. Of all foreign investment every year, only 6 per cent came from foreign countries and 94 per cent came from retained earnings, profits kept in Canada, and funds borrowed from Canadian banks and other financial institutions. In short, Mr. Speaker, we are in the embarrassing situation where we are selling out our own country with our own earned capital.

Contrast this situation with that of Japan. A broken and beaten nation in 1945, Japan struggled with its economy—and U.S. aid—until it has become one of the major manufacturing and trading nations in the world. And while it accepted foreign investment it made it abundantly clear from the beginning that it would be master of its own economic destiny by demanding control over its investment capital, no matter from where it came. And also by contrast, Japan in 1945 was the defeated enemy. Canada and the United States have been friendly neighbours—economically speaking I fear too friendly, but again it is our fault, not theirs. The profits made in our country should not flow out of it through the ominous channels of the multinational corporations. This capital should stay in Canada to develop the private and public sectors of our economy.

Before we quickly condemn the public sector of our economy, let us not forget that our economic development and history have not been the same as those in the United States. In many respects we could not have developed our economy in the 19th century without government aid and intervention. Many capitalists are quick to say, look at the great CPR. What they fail to say is, look at how much public funding was involved in this great enterprise. If you look at tax concessions and give-away land deals, you will see that the success of the CPR was due mainly to government intervention.

Let us look at the present, and at this bill. Let us also look at the reasons for this bill, at long last, being introduced as a much stronger bill that its predecessor which was brought in by the Liberals when they were riding roughshod, with majority government. I can recall the election of 1962 when the Chamber of Commerce published a booklet entitled "People's Capitalism." The Canadian Labour Congress was quick to point out in that election that people's capitalism referred to about 6 per cent of the Canadian public. The other 94 per cent of Canadians were not involved in any way with investment in stocks and private bonds.

From this came an exposé on foreign domination of the Canadian economy. All during the 1960's the NDP was the only party that was warning the Canadian public of the consequences of Liberal continentalism, which really meant the big sell-out to powerful multinational corporations to the south. Let me remind this House that a substantial percentage of Americans are opposed to the multinationals as well. The old war cry went up from the Liberals, great and small, that continentalism meant more money coming into Canada, which in turn meant more jobs for Canadians. It was an argument that bought votes, and when it comes to buying votes with the taxpayers' money, the Liberals are absolute geniuses.

But now the chickens are coming home to roost. As long as most Canadians were willing to swallow the Liberal line, nobody in that camp had the guts to tell it as it really was. Oh, there was Walter Gordon and more recently Eric Kierans, but the Liberal party really did not take either seriously—until, of course, last October. Now we have a tougher bill on foreign economic expansion, but a lot is still to be desired. It is very interesting, Mr. Speaker, that a public opinion poll conducted not very long ago indicated that 58 per cent of Canadians favoured the nationalization of our resource industries. I would like to suggest, Sir, that their real motivation was a fear that unless the government stepped in, all our non-renewable resources would be eventually used up, not in Canada's interest but in the interest of foreign corporations and their stock holders.

● (1250)

Bill C-132 has three basic weaknesses, in my opinion. In the first place the proposed legislation is very powerful in that it gives the minister and the chairman of the screening board too much authority to be vested in only two persons. If a minister is genuinely concerned about the harm that continued foreign control of our economy would do, his delegated power could and would, in my opinion, be used wisely to stop further foreign domination. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, if the minister then in office doesn't care about foreign investment, the screening agency would be useless. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that these discretionary powers should be vested in an autonomous body of economic experts, well out of the hands of a politician who happens temporarily to be a minister of the Crown.

Second, the bill pertains only to takeovers, new investment and expansion of an existing firm into a non-related area. It says nothing about the expansion of an existing firm into a related area. This is a very important point, Mr. Speaker, because most of the huge foreign corporations we have in Canada can expand easily into related fields since they control so many other companies. For example, ITT controls 58 different companies in Canada. I am quite sure, Mr. Speaker, that if ITT wanted to expand into a non-related field, it could do so through one of its subsidiaries in a related field without having to be screened.

I am also concerned that this bill, because of the confusion that will arise from defining what is related and what is not related, will affect only between 10 and 20 per cent of foreign economic and financial activity in Canada. In other words, as much as 80 or 90 per cent of foreign expansion will probably go unscreened. This loophole should be plugged, so that a company like Gulf Oil cannot expand into the toothpaste business because one of its subsidiaries already manufactures this product.

I am also concerned about one of the amendments now under discussion, specifically one introduced by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), which would give the provinces a powerful voice in the screening process. In this bill we are talking about Canada and foreign economic control, not about one or two of our provinces. I can sympathize with a member who might represent a region or a province where investment capital is badly needed. Surely, it is the role of the federal government to see to it that industry locates in economically slow-growth areas. That is the responsibility of the federal government. I stress that. Let us not Balkanize our country any more than it already is. Let us use Canadian money to develop and expand the economies of slow-growth areas.

In my short speech, Mr. Speaker, I have tried to point out the need to tighten this bill and to impress upon hon. members the need to regain control of our economy. that does not mean that we must try to buy back all industries which are presently foreign owned. I am proposing forward looking policies, so that from now on we will continue to put more and more Canadian capital into Canadian investment and Canadian enterprise.

An hon. Member: You sound like a Conservative.

[Mr. Blackburn.]

Mr. Blackburn: There is little time left, as I said earlier. Let us not forget that we are not legislating in our own self-interest but in the interest of future generations, as some of those people might like to be referred to as Canadians.

I am concerned about the cultural invasion from the United States, as evidenced by our text books, magazines and some of our journals. I think something ought to be done, particularly for our young people. I am not so much concerned about those of us who are already tarnished, soiled intellectually or biased. I certainly wish to see greater emphasis placed on measures to prevent the proliferation in this country of American-owned magazines, journals, textbooks, and so on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blackburn: I am not anti-American when I say this. I am merely saying that it is time we started looking after our own culture and producing our own text books.

I am not a chauvinist or a flag waver, but I do have respect for my country. All I ask is that we put our house in order, and a heck of a good way to start is by regaining control of our own economy. At long last the Liberal government has opened its eyes. Let us make sure this is not just another rip-off.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for St. Catharines.

Mr. Morgan: Mr. Speaker, in view of the hour, I wonder if I might be permitted to declare it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Accordingly, I do leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

INDUSTRY

LACK OF NEWSPRINT SUPPLIES FOR WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS—RULING MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Morgan), I wish to make the following point.

Earlier today, a question was raised with Mr. Speaker by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick). He proposed a motion under Standing Order 26 to adjourn the House to discuss the very important and urgent matter relating to the supply of newsprint to weekly newspapers. It was indicated to the hon. member that the proposed motion would be considered and that a decision would be given later this day.

The hon. member also raised the same matter of great concern by question, and brought it forth under Standing Order 43. The topic did lead, as I am now advised, to discussions among the various parties with a view to finding a method of holding a debate under the terms of some other standing order. I believe that the hon. member is satisfied that such arrangements are being attempted. Accordingly, the subject matter of his motion will not be considered further today.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6.

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, this is a very memorable day, two days before Remembrance Day, for a member of this House to be able to speak on the so-called foreign takeover bill. I firmly believe this affects our beloved country for which so many thousands of our native sons, brothers, fathers, husbands and other relatives died. They wanted to do something to enable Canada to become a nation, so that we could have something here which we could call our own. We have this bill before us, and I think it is a very appropriate time to be able to make a few comments on it.

In 1968, many thousands of Canadians were convinced that with the election of the Liberal government which sits across the aisle, something would be done. There was promise of fortune and fame. Expectations were high. Unfortunately, they let us down. The members of the New Democratic Party are beginning to learn now. Like slithering rats, if I may use that expression, they are leaving the sinking ship. If I may change the analogy, they are like vultures soaring over the carcass of this government that once was. They are now spiralling and soaring because the flesh is flimsy.

I am a rooky. I stand here in the back-most bench. I remember being on the hustings during the election campaign, which was not much more than a year ago. I had very interesting discussions and debates with members opposite and members to my left. Everyone was vying with suggestions as to what should be done to make Canada belong to Canadians again. So, it was with high expectation that I looked forward to the introduction of Bill C-132. But I must confess that when I read that bill disappointment overhwelmed me. My hopes were dashed like a drowned dog. The bill means nothing but high bureaucracy. It is a piece of ad hocery such as the government has always practised when it does not know what to do. I cannot understand why they should not know better because I do not think they are really fools. They are either fools or they lack imagination, and they can let the shoe fit them as they will.

• (1410)

When we speak of foreign takeovers we are concerned basically with United States foreign corporations presently located in Canada who use their retained profits to buy out Canadian industry. Yet we are dealing in this bill with only about 20 per cent of foreign takeovers; 80 per cent are already allowed for under the provisions of the Income Tax Act. The government will not change those provisions. It sits back and wonders why things are going wrong. Surely, they have enough sense to realise that once you permit a foreign corporation to use its surpluses to buy out more and more Canadian business—

An hon. Member: What is your policy?

Mr. Morgan: I will come to that. Hold on, Buster! They have enacted tax laws which give a break to United States corporations, family corporations, with the result that they are required to pay less income tax than Canadian corporations in the same circumstances. What happens? Of course, Canadian businessmen will sell out to Americans because the Americans can make a better profit and are able to pay a better price. In a negative approach, the kind it so often takes, the government proposes to set up a body of bureaucrats to screen takeover applicants. Isn't that jolly?

But does this give the Canadian people any incentive to invest in their beloved country? I think we have one of the best records for savings per capita of any nation in the industrialized world. But what does the government do to bring out these savings? Where is the incentive? An hon. member asked what I would do. I would change the legislation as it pertains to retained surpluses so that foreign corporations could no longer use those surpluses to buy out Canadian corporations. That is one positive step I would take.

Then, I would give the Canadian people economic incentives to use the savings they have accumulated—give them some Yankee initiative. We could learn a lot from our Yankee friends. They are risking their money. We have more money in our insurance policies and in our savings banks than any country in the western world on a per capita basis. But this government, and the governments which have preceded it, have done nothing to encourage the people to take a chance on Canada. The financial and tax policies of the government do not encourage them to do so. And surely this is the direction in which we ought to be moving, not toward a negative bureaucracy.

I will offer one or two suggestions for hon. members to consider. I might add that I am not pretending to state party policy but just speaking off the top of my head. Why not say to a United States corporation which has a subsidiary in Canada in the extractive industry: If you intend to operate in Canada, set up your corporation on the basis of public subscription as far as shares are concerned—not a wholly-owned subsidiary, but a public corporation in which Dan Jones and Tim Buck can buy shares. Having brought about a situation in which anyone could buy shares in the corporation, you would then say to the directors: This year you process 10 per cent of your production in Canada and next year you will process 15 per cent. Keep raising the required level. In this way we could build up the secondary industries we so badly need, and those industries would be owned by the Canadian people.

About a year and a half ago the government decided to cut corporation taxes from 49 per cent to 40 per cent. This so-called fiscal policy was designed to deal with the unemployment situation. It has not worked worth a tinker's damn. Yet it should not be difficult. You say to a Canadian corporation: Increase your exports by X factor and we will give you a discount on your income tax accordingly. Doesn't this make sense? Of course, it does. This will encourage people to invest their money in Canada and surely that is the object of the exercise. You would say to a corporation: Increase the employment you provide by a factor of X and we shall cut down your income tax by Y. This would help solve unemployment and the whole of Canada would reap the benefit.

Let me give an example of what the government has done to encourage investment in Canada by Canadian companies. In doing so I should refer to that famous little body known as the Industrial Development Bank. Hon. members talk about $250,000. The average size of a loan made by the Industrial Development Bank in 1972 was $45,000. No takeovers there. In no way would the IDB help Canadians. The Yankee comes up here, goes to our bank and he gets all the money he needs. You know that, Mr. Speaker. But what do the banks say when a Canadian comes in? The answer is, no. Do hon. members realise that 16 per cent of the applicants for loans from the IDB in 1972 did not get a dime? Or that every loan in excess of $100,000 had an interest rate attached to it of more than 10 per cent, though the prime rate charged by the banks in 1972 was 6 per cent? Is this government policy? Is this the way to encourage Canadians to develop and invest in our country? I say it is shameful.

● (1420)

Mr. Foster: Keep it positive.

Mr. Morgan: I will keep it positive. I do not know where the economic policies of this government come from. It must either be from the grave or they have not been born yet.

I have one further brief comment, Mr. Speaker. My colleagues from Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) and South Western Nova (Mr. Haliburton) have covered very explicitly and learnedly the problem of the provincial governments to which we have made reference. I support their amendments. I think they are utterly necessary. A judge once said to me: "Trevor, you know where the ivory tower is", and he pointed to his head. We have five basic economic units in this country and, let us face it, Mr. Speaker, no one sitting up in the ivory tower we have here understands the problems of the Maritimes, Saskatchewan and B.C. all at the same time. These people are not gods.

Therefore, let us have a rotating committee if necessary comprised of people who know the problems of a given area. We are now faced with an energy crisis because the government failed to consult. My colleague for South Western Nova mentioned other problems that have arisen as a result of the failure of the government to consult with the provinces. If we believe in federalism, then let us make it work. But it will not work unless this government has the courage, perhaps with some embarrassment, to take its hat in hand and go to the provinces and say: "All right, maybe we were a bit high-handed and have done things that are wrong, but we believe in this federalism bit; let us get together and do the thing properly". That is the attitude the government should take. With a revolving committee examining the problems of an area we will not reach any hidebound or rigid opinions; instead, there will be a flow of personnel going back and forth who represent the various regions of Canada.

The minister said that this would amount to a veto. That is nonsense. It will simply be a case of people consulting one another eyeball to eyeball, and they stay there till somebody winks. This is what is necessary. Certainly, the government's DREE program cannot exist in the present atmosphere. The Maritimes are depressed and need capital, but Canadians are not supplying it. How are the Maritimes going to exist without it? The government must recognize these problems. What may be good for Ontario and Quebec—and I come from Ontario—may not be good for the Maritimes. I say put people from the Atlantic provinces on this committee because they will know how to deal with maritime problems.

In summary, I say the bill is negative. It is a do nothing, too little, too late measure—a cliché, I know, but nevertheless true. The government must realize that not too much time is left on our side, which is why it must be positive. We want positive programs, not negative bureaucracy. Lastly, I say let us have that consultation which is necessary with the provinces and regions so that federalism will mean something to us all.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, may I first of all indicate my support for this measure. I think it is a much improved bill over the one presented to the previous parliament. Nevertheless, it is a bill with some very great defects, and I regret that the government has not given any indication of willingness to accept the amendments that we have put forward.

Although it can be remedied through political action, I nevertheless want to point out that in its legislative form the bill has a major defect in that it does not deal with reinvestment and the further expansion of foreign ownership in this country. For instance, there is nothing in the present bill to limit the ability of the multinational oil companies to expand their operations. This, to me, is one of the most serious problems facing the country. Admittedly, many of the problems associated with ownership can be dealt with in a political way without legislation. We have had ample evidence that, if the government is prodded sufficiently by the public or by the concerned citizens on this side of the House, then it is able to act. This happened in the case of uranium. Long before this bill, it took action against the oil industry. So, the only hope is that politically some action will be taken.

The oil industry shows the vicious effect that foreign ownership can have on the Canadian economy. I want to add one rider. I am not one who believes that power automatically goes with ownership. In my view, power is political. It is this House of Commons that possesses the power rather than the multinational oil companies. When the House of Commons or the government want to take action, action can be taken.

Nevertheless, if an indictment can be made out against foreign ownership, it is in the oil industry. We might ask ourselves, for instance, would Canada be in the mess it is in today, would it be talking about curtailing energy supplies east of the Ottawa Valley, had the industry been in Canadian hands rather than in foreign hands? I think the answer is a resounding no. We would not have been in the mess we are in today but for the fact that our oil industry is dominated by the multinational corporations.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Saltsman: I realize, Mr. Speaker, that this calls for an explanation and I shall be very pleased to give one. Let me go back a little and recall that there are two major segments that comprise the oil industry. I should not say two major segments; there is a major segment and a minor segment. The foreign-owned corporations hold about 91 per cent of the assets in the oil and gas industries. The Canadian independents hold the remainder, with the exception of a small percentage that is held under public ownership. The policies of these two groups were diametrically opposed.

● (1430)

The national oil policy of 1961 was written for the benefit not only of Canadian independent oil producers but for the benefit of multinational corporations. The evidence is very clear from the Conservative government of that day that the purpose of the national oil policy of that time, and one which continues to the present, was to assure that the multinationals could manouevre the market to suit their own best interest. To the multinationals, it makes no difference where the money comes from as long as they make the profit. Therefore, we negotiated a deal whereby the multinationals would ship to their subsidiaries in the United States in return for which we would import through subsidiaries in the Quebec area and all eastern Canada, from the same companies. In other words, we would allow the internationals to allocate their reserves where they pleased.

The argument was that it was much cheaper but what was the consequence, Mr. Speaker? The consequence was that a pipeline to Montreal was not built. The multinationals argued that they would rationalize the market internationally. They would ship and refine where they pleased. That was supposed to have been in the best interests of Canada and that was their policy when it came to the development of the oil and gas industry of Canada.

Many of these transactions were not at arms length. The government of British Columbia is still trying to overcome the bad deal made by Westcoast Transmission for gas sales to the United States which many times were made below cost. The sales were made to a subsidiary in the United States or a company that the multinationals were associated with in the United States. They simply allocated the market in this way.

We might ask if things would have been any different if it had not been for foreign ownership. Let us look at the view of the Canadian producers. I was unhappily reminded of this when I attended a meeting recently in Banff where there were some representatives of the Canadian Independent Oil Producers Association. They told me that they had heard our party is now pushing for the Montreal pipeline. We have always pushed for that, Mr. Speaker, but they have just become aware of it. What they were really saying was, "where were you when we needed you". Well, we were there but at that time they were not paying too much attention to us. Rather, the independent oil producers were directing their energies to both the Liberal and Conservative parties in order to persuade them to build the pipeline to Montreal. They needed it because they did not have access to the American market.

Year after year they made their proposals to every member of parliament promoting the building of the Montreal pipeline saying that one day we would be in trouble on the east coast and would need the pipeline. When the oilwells of Alberta were prorated, when they overbuilt and overproduced and the Americans would not take our oil, production was cut back to 35 per cent or 40 per cent but the independents were cut back to 15 per cent or 20 per cent of production so for economic reasons a pipeline had to be built to supply the Canadian market because no other market was available. Unlike the multinationals, the independents could not play games around the world, therefore they had to depend on the Canadian market.

I am not saying for one moment that a Canadian capitalist is that much better than an American capitalist. I have been a socialist much too long to take that view, Mr. Speaker. What I am suggesting is that in this particular case the interests of the capitalists, as I think history will show, coincided with the national interest because they only had one market and they had to worry about that market. They were not diverted by what was happening in Venezuela or the Middle East because they just had this one arena in which to operate.

There is no doubt in my mind, Mr. Speaker, that were it not for foreign ownership Canada would not be facing any kind of crisis in terms of supply. The people of Quebec would not be asking themselves whether there is going to be sufficient fuel oil this winter to keep them warm. They would not be running around the world trying to buy tanker cargoes in order that there be some continuity of supply.

We have suffered enormously, but the question must be asked, did we have the money and could we have done it? Of course, we could have done it. At no time, from the figures I have been able to see, has the investment in the oil industry exceeded 4 per cent of the gross national product. Surely, a country that saves almost 25 per cent of its gross national product is in a position to develop these industries. The technology is quite simple. As a matter of fact, virtually all the work in oil development exploration is done by Canadian companies. There is an hon. member in this House who is engaged in drilling operations. The oil company simply acts as the entrepreneur. The technology is available internationally and often the majors themselves bring in specialists. The refineries are designed by specialists who would work equally as well for the Canadian government or entrepreneur as for anyone else.

Then, we may talk about a risk. What sort of risk is involved when there is a market for the product and when you know the product is in the ground? Certainly, you may dig some dry holes but there is no risk. Certainly, if an independent operator can only dig four or five holes and they turn out badly, he is in trouble but the operator who is prepared to keep on digging is eventually going to recoup. I do not know of an instance where a major has gone broke, Mr. Speaker. I know of some independents who have, but you would have to look a long time to find any major oil company that has gone broke because of too many dry holes.

I think we have a clear indication, Mr. Speaker, of the harmful effects, the damaging effects of foreign ownership in the energy industry. That is in the past. Perhaps if there had been foreign ownership 30 or 40 years ago when this business was starting we might not have been any wiser—we might have it permitted it to proceed. But the important thing is not what happened in the past, although it could serve as an illustration of what might happen in the future; it simply means that under no circumstances should there be any expansion in the area of energy by anyone except Canadians. The multinationals must be kept completely out of any further development of our energy resources. This is particularly pertinent because of the tar sands which are now ready for development. We in this party—and I think there are many people across the country not of this party who share the view—think that these tar sands should be developed not only by Canadian ownership but by Canadian public entrepreneurship and that nothing else will serve the national interest but that.

Any provincial-righter who may follow me may comment that the resources belong to the provinces. Of course they are physically in the provinces, and the provinces have a major claim on them, but there is nothing in the suggestion of public ownership that would exclude the provinces from participation. Surely, the federal government and the provinces together should be involved in the planning and development of energy sources in the future.

I should like to point out another reason why I think the multinational oil companies should not be permitted any expansion in the field of energy. Whatever these companies may have paid in the way of provincial royalties up to this point, they have paid virtually nothing in federal taxes—perhaps 2 per cent or 3 per cent. However, for all practical purposes, they have paid almost nothing compared to the manufacturing industries or even the mining industry. Until now the oil companies have taken the position that they have not really taken any money out of the industry; all these years they have been ploughing back earnings and developing the industry, and now they are just reaching the point where their sales are exceeding their expenditures.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

• (1440)

While these oil companies are telling us this, they also neglect to tell us that they have 10 billion barrels of oil underground which, even at the controlled government price, is worth $40 billion, that is $40 billion of clear profit they they are ready to extract. They desperately need to go into high capital expenditures in order to avoid paying government taxes. They have reached the point where all the shenanigans will not do them any good and they will have to start paying tax. Nothing is more horrible to a multinational company than the prospect of paying taxes. So now they are coming to the Canadian government and saying we must give them special concessions to go into the tar sands. They say they will develop the tar sands because the incompetent Canadians will never be able to do it by themselves. They need the tar sands even more than we need the tar sands. They have to find some way of increasing their capital cost, of increasing the development and expenditure costs in order to cut down on their tax liabilities.

I do not think these multinational oil companies should be permitted to do that because, as I said earlier, they have really damaged the national economy in the most profound way and they are using it as a way of avoiding the payment of taxes. I think we have every reason to be suspicious and concern about foreign ownership in this particular case. I have been concerned about foreign ownership throughout this debate and over the last number of years. The difficulty with the debate is that foreign ownership was debated almost entirely on moral grounds, on so-called nationalistic grounds, on what I call Walter Gordon grounds. I think Walter Gordon is a great man, but in this sense he proved himself to be too great a moralist because the approach he took was that if we get rid of foreign ownership we will be somewhat poorer for it. He accepted the idea that foreign ownership made us richer, when in fact it is not true at all.

Foreign ownership and foreign investment have made us poorer. Walter Gordon took that argument as a point of departure and said to Canadians: Look, it will reduce our standard of living, but surely it is worth it in order to recover our manhood. He put it on that basis. This reminds me of the thinking of some of the old CCF'ers. I wonder how we missed out on Walter Gordon. He has a marvellous mind, but this was a faulty premise and one he never should have adopted. Unfortunately, Canadians came to believe it. They have been taking the attitude: we acknowledge that if we clamp down on foreign ownership we will become poorer; nevertheless, it is worth it because we want to be an independent nation, we want to find our own way, we want to express our manhood or womanhood, as the case may be. But in fact we have lost out both ways. We lost our independence and our economy has suffered as a result of foreign ownership.

Unfortunately, the time available to me today does not permit me to speak about other industries under foreign ownership. I believe I could make quite a good case to show that whatever industries foreign ownership has touched, those industries have been lucky to have survived. Without foreign ownership, this country would have been infinitely better off, both materially and spiritually. We could have accommodated Walter Gordon and people like myself. Today my point is to make the argument that if we are going to have a national policy on energy that will serve the interests of this country, foreign ownership must be excluded.

I would like to read an excerpt from a report prepared by the research and development department of the Canadian National railroad in September 1962. It is entitled: "Some Implications of Marketing Canadian Crude Oil in Montreal". This refers to what I said earlier about the desire of independent oil producers to build a pipeline to Montreal. All kinds of studies were carried out around that time to see how feasible the building of that pipeline would be. In the chapter of this report entitled "Political Implications" at page 20 what emerges is that the pipeline was not built because of political blackmail from the multinational corporations and from the countries with which they were associated. I would like to quote directly from this report. It reads:

> Reaction to the pipeline, and to the resulting exclusion of Venezuelan and Middle East oil from the Quebec market by means of controls on imports, might be expected from many quarters: from the exporting countries which supply Canada; from the international oil companies, largely owned and controlled in the U.S.; from U.S. independent producers; from the U.S. federal government; and from such international organizations as the OAS and GATT.

One wonders, today when those east of the Ottawa Valley line are facing what might be a hard winter, where GATT is to help us out and where the international oil companies are to help us out. They are not around. These were the groups that apparently counselled that if Canada were to build the pipeline to Montreal and attempt to make itself self sufficient in energy, then international repercussions and censure would follow. I do not think that the CNR is a terribly radical organization, and it is not worthwhile going beyond the paragraph that I quoted because the rest of it merely confirms, enhances and enlarges upon what I have said.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate on Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, one knows from the outset that basically this debate has gone on in this country for the 100 years that this country has established itself north of the 49th parallel. The debate on foreign ownership, Canadian independence and Canadian identity is as old as this country. But this does not make the debate any less relevant. The problem in this debate, and its relevancy, is the bill under discussion, and I wonder about it because we are all nationalistic. There is not a thought in this bill, however, with which any member on any side of the House can disagree. We all want to be Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: I agree with the parliamentary secretary to the minister and I echo him en français or en anglais.

An hon. Member: Bravo.

Mr. Nowlan: We can all preach, sermonize and philosophize about being Canadian and we all try to preempt members in other parties with regard to what party is the most Canadian. However, I do not want to indulge in that type of rhetoric here this afternoon at the end of a busy week by suggesting that it was the Conservative party around 100 years ago, which, through consultation and co-operation with some elements of this land mass north of the 49th parallel, developed and defined this country which is now known as Canada. This was not accomplished through confrontation, or gimmickery, or floss—and basically this bill is floss. I wonder if one day the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) will be so against foreign ownership that he will want the International Nickel Company to close down its smelters in Sudbury, putting him out of a job and leaving his constituents without anything in their pocketbooks. That is the type of shallow hypocrisy that comes from those to my left, those who preach pan-Canadianism. Just think of how Canadians sometimes are deluded by the CBC or by some of the PR management consultants working for the government.

● (1450)

Where Bill C-132 is on the side of all the angels is in its principle of trying to do something for Canada. But where we differ from time to time, depending on were we sit, is whether this bill is really going to do the things which obviously the minister thinks and hopes it will do. But before I come to the bill itself, Mr. Speaker, before we get caught up in the rhetoric of nationalism, and "Are you a good Canuck"? may I ask who the heck has been in charge of this country for the last 50 years but the Liberal party, except for 11 beautifull breathing years when this party formed the government.

The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), who is one of the more imaginative, respectable, venerable, and now perhaps retiring members of this House, speaks so knowledgeably about oil and gas when talking of the energy problems facing the country. I can understand his propensity for gas, although I do not always agree with him on oil. He speaks sincerely about the problems facing this country in the energy field during the coming cold winter. And then we hear the platitudes from across the way about nationalism.

This parliament will be terminated when those who sold their philosophical soul for a mess of political pottage finally wake up to the realization that they are on a dead-end street. Who is going to vote for the NDP in the next election? We all know that NDP meant in the days of Mr. Coldwell and Mr. Douglas. It meant New Democratic Party, and before that the Commonwealth Co-operative Federation. Today NDP stands for "No Damned Principle." That is what it means, and the NDP are on a dead-end street, because in the next election Canadians will have a choice between either the government or opposition parties.

I do not stand here today and say that the opposition has all the answers or has that connection with the Divine that makes it infallible. We do not, but we can rest easy that the next general election will not be polluted with the charade of a party masquerading under the name NDP when that party has no damned principles. Some 39 of the last 50 years have been years of Liberal rule, not the classical rule of the old Liberals like the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), not the classical rule of the Liberal party of Mr. St. Laurent and other great Liberals who contributed much to this land. Today the President of the Treasury Board may be the last Grit about whom one can draw an analogy with the movie titled "True Grit." The present Liberal party does not have policies. It is built on sandstone. I think it was the man from Toronto, Blake, who founded the Liberal party, who coined the name Grit. He said, "We are as strong as grit." The present Liberal party stands on swamp, supported by the NDP.

Mr. Hellyer: Supported by swamp gas.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I know you wish me to speak on the bill, and I am coming to that, but I just wish to define the atmosphere in which we are debating Bill C-132. Was it Saul or Paul who took that journey on the road to Damascus?

Mr. Hellyer: Saul.

Mr. Nowlan: Thanks very much. Anyway the Middle East is very much to the fore these days, but never has there been such a conversion on that road to Damascus as has happened to the party opposite, the sandstone Grits. They finally realize there is a problem about the ownership of Canada, after having sold our birthright for economic pottage, for a few dollars from below the border and across the seas. Now, they try to pretend that this bill will solve the fundamental problem of foreign ownership.

How can we have a bill defining guidelines on economic nationalism when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) has stood in his place many times and refused to define something called a "Canadian industrial strategy"? How can you have a bill on economic nationalism which avoids and almost eliminates any consultation with the provinces that make up the flesh of this skeleton known as Canada? In all seriousness, this is a fundamental flaw, Mr. Speaker.

Now, I come to the other fundamental flaw. There is something in this bill called a foreign review takeover agency. I am glad the hon. member for Nickel Belt understands what it is. I tell him he could be confronted with some speeches of his old leader, who was a great leader. The present leader is like a chameleon; he changes according to the colour of the day. In the old days when the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan The Islands (Mr. Douglas) talked about Tweedle-Dum and Tweedle-Dee he made some sense, but now we have Tweedle-Dum over here and Ho-Hum over there. That is the main problem.

But returning to the bill, which I know you want me to do, Mr. Speaker, and to the amendments, I would have thought the bill came from the hand of the President of the Treasury Board rather than from the hand of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce because it is so managerial, so bureaucratic in scope that one finds it almost impossible to imagine what could conceivably happen.

I say this because not too many years ago in an earlier debate which the President of the Treasury Board will remember—I think he was a deputy minister at that time—there was great controversy over a definition in the Customs Tariff Act which gave some discretion to the minister of national revenue or the minister of finance in interpreting something called "class or kind." I will attempt to educate the hon. member for Nickel Belt on this, if possible. In the discussion on class or kind, members of the then opposition, led by the four horsemen, Pickersgill, Chevrier, Mr. Pearson and the present government leader in the senate, Senator Martin, for day after day castigated the government and criticized and complained about the arbitrary, discretionary power that was to be given to the then minister of national revenue in interpreting the meaning of "class or kind", as applied to goods entering Canada: he could decide whether those goods or products were of a class or kind made in Canada. That was an arbitrary discretion to be exercised by the minister.

● (1500)

Under the act, the minister could exact tariffs which would prevent certain goods entering this country and thereby help industry in Canada to grow. That is what the government of the day wanted. The opposition complained that the then minister of national revenue in the government led by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was to be given dictatorial powers. The minister was to decide matters for which there were no guidelines, no rules and no regulations. He would interpret these things according to the functioning of his digestion or his indigestion, as the case may be, and make interpretations with regard to class or kind.

What those members said in 1961, more than ten years ago, about the discretion of the minister could be said with even more conviction today. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce does not need to take the advice of the foreign takeover advisory council. The minister has power to decide if foreign capital coming to this country will be of significant benefit to Canada, and he can decide this without guidelines, terms of reference, rules or regulations, according to his indigestion, good humour or, hopefully, good sense. He must make the decision.

There is a place in Nova Scotia called Point Tupper which has delivered to it oil from offshore. That is the only place where we can now get oil, the offshore mineral rights question not having been finally settled. Quebec wants to define what is an oil superport. Unless some protection is built into the act, as suggested in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) and other amendments which the House will consider, and unless the provinces are given the opportunity to provide meaningful input and engage in consultative procedures and processes, it is possible that the sort of deep water port contemplated at Point Tupper will be built elsewhere. Unless we are able to provide some meaningful and substantive input with respect to consultations with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce as to what foreign capital will be of significant benefit to Canada, it is possible that such deep water ports may be developed in other parts of Canada. I hear that especially Ontario and Quebec want a deep water port.

You and I know, Mr. Speaker, that a political battle is being waged right now on where the next nuclear heavy water plant is to be developed in Canada.

Mr. Béchard: Tell us what happened in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) wants me to talk about the heavy water plant in Nova Scotia. He knows as well as I do and as well as the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) that the plant went to Nova Scotia after a great deal of competition from other provinces, including Saskatchewan. Ontario got into the act. The plant only went to Nova Scotia because the federal government of the day helped to subsidize the plant and because the government has also spent millions of dollars to try to resurrect it. That is the story, and it is a sad story. It confirms my belief in the free entreprise system.

My friends to my left talk about a national petroleum company which would buy oil and gas, refine it, put it into the pipeline and see that it gets into my gasoline tank or furnace. I say that the longer I am in Ottawa, in the geographic as well as the political sense, and close to government, the less confident I am in the ability of the government to solve problems which the people of Canada could solve for themselves if given the leeway. That is one reason why I am concerned about this bill. Other speakers have said that the bill will lead to the establishment of more bureaucracy, that it will be negative, that it will depend upon the interpretation of one man. We on this side of the House, unlike those echoes to my left—

Mr. Rodriguez: Watch it.

Mr. Nowlan: —say that incentives will do more to help us build up the Canadian economy than the kind of patchwork bill we are considering. These incentives do not come out of thin air; they do not come in the abstract. Today we are dealing with a foreign takeover bill. We tried to deal with a similar bill in the last session. Before that we dealt with the tax reform bill, the bill that was supposed to usher in the millenium for Canadian taxpayers, individual and corporate.

What have we learned from this government which has been in office for about ten years? The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) stood in the House the other day and tried to polish his apple because he had not got the LIP grant he should have had a couple of years ago for his constituency. He spoke about an anniversary. He and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) were of the same class of 1965. Well, I too am of the class of 1965, but unfortunately I have been a retarded pupil.

Mr. Rodriguez: But a pupil who is not shy in coming forward.

Mr. Nowlan: I am almost as retarded as the hon. member for Nickel Belt. Seriously, I have been a retarded pupil inasmuch as I have not moved as quickly as the Prime Minister. I say that the Prime Minister would have done a better job for Canada if he and other members of the class of 1965 had spent a little more time in opposition and a little time with the people he represents, whether in his individual riding or across the country. In that way he could have developed a perception respecting the problems of this country which has nothing to do with textbooks, theory or philosophy: it involves the human element about which he has not yet learned and which you cannot feed into a computer. Before my time runs out—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. He may continue only if he has the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nowlan: Obviously, this is Friday afternoon generosity. I do not intend to expand my remarks further and go into any detailed dissection of the bill. I merely say that no good will come of this bill until the government decides to bring in an industrial strategy and take part in meaningful consultations with the provinces. After all, a country is made up of many parts, just as a man is. I am a man of many parts; I have legs, arms, and so on. We are a people of many parts and we make up the political life of this land. Canada is only as strong as the provinces which make up the parts.

I have very great respect for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce as a person, but as a minister he is just learning. I notice that the government whip has said something. He is becoming more of a "whipper". He knows a good deal about the machinations of members, because in this House he is a man of experience. The minister, too, is gaining experience, I suggest to the minister that he has much to learn about trade and commerce, and we shall only make progress if we include the provinces in a consultative role. We are not reassured by the examples of consultation which have taken place with respect to taxes, with respect to oil and gas policies, feed grains policies and social policies. We are not that simple even though certain people may think we are.

● (1510)

We are the ones who in the last election said that one of our first items of priority when we obtained power—and we have only been thwarted in one way—would be to have a federal-provincial conference to try to define for the people of Canada the national priorities. That type of consultative role would have helped.

I am a little involved in communications policy because my leader said that this is perhaps one area where one could be challenged. I know I am getting away somewhat from the bill, but I want to say that whether it is on energy or some other area, the word "communications" connotes conversation and consultation. The Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) is not in the chamber, so I will not say anything about him personally. However, I will say something about him as a minister. Three years ago in a Speech from the Throne the government said it would define and develop a communications policy. For three years there has been a tax against the province of Quebec because in February, 1971, their minister, Mr. L'Allier tried to find a communications role for that province.

The second province that got into the act was Ontario. The Ontario minister of transportation and communications, Mr. Carton, defined where he felt Ontario should fit into the national policy. He was followed by the Alberta minister. Then the new government—and they deserve full credit in British Columbia, where I practised law for six years—appointed Mr. Strachan as minister of communications and he is attempting to find a policy.

In this area, where there should be the greatest consultation and communication, there has been a physical vacuum: there is a fundamental, metaphysical and physical vacuum in any policy between the federal and provincial governments. After being urged by the provincial ministers of communications and some ministers on his side, the federal Minister of Communications is finally going to get the provinces together for a conference. Again, that is not the type of consultative role that we think the provinces should play in this country. The strength of this country depends on, and is defined by, how loud the provincial consultative voice can be heard.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the hon. member who has just spoken permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. That is not a point of order. The hon. member should rise for the purpose of asking a question. Does the hon. member agree to accept a question?

Mr. Nowlan: I will accept any question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I remind the hon. member that the hon. member who just finished speaking went beyond his time. Is it agreed that the hon. member may ask a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rodriguez: In view of the bitterness with which the hon. member attacked this bill, would he inform the House how he intends to vote when it comes to a vote?

Mr. Nowlan: That is an easy question. I can sympathize with an easy question from an easy mind. I am going to see how my friends vote on the amendments that are laid before this House. Those amendments will give some protection and help allay some of the concern that I and other members feel about this bill. It depends on the vote on those amendments. I hope the hon. member for Nickel Belt will join me, because if he and I can vote together on the amendments, he and I will vote together on the bill.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Annapolis Royal—

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know the parliamentary secretary did not mean to misguide or misdirect my constituency. While Annapolis Royal used to be part of my constituency—which happens to be the cradle of Canada, because in 1604 that is where western civilization began on this continent—now, because of a nefarious redistribution by the government, no longer is Annapolis Royal in my constituency. The name of my constituency is Annapolis Valley.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I hope that intervention will not be taken off my time. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) spoke about direct competition between this side of the chamber and his side without the intervention of the New Democratic Party. The hon. member and I sometimes get involved in competitions which would be unwise to mention in this House.

An hon. Member: Go ahead.

Mr. Breau: Well, not that one, but I will mention another one very close to the hon. member's heart. I am very proud of this. When the University of Moncton hockey team meets Acadia, they beat them all the time. That is the kind of competition in which the hon. member and I can in some way get involved. While he and I do not meet on the hustings, we do meet at hockey games.

It seems in this debate that the Conservative Party is trying to satisfy, or answer an element of that party which does not want any control over foreign investment in this country.

Mr. Baker: Don't be silly.

Mr. Breau: The Premier of New Brunswick is an influential member of the Conservative Party. I have read a few things the premier has said. It is to try to satisfy that type of concern that the amendments are now before the House. When he appeared before the committee, the Premier of New Brunswick said the following about the government of New Brunswick. I am glad he did not say the "people" of New Brunswick, because I happen to be one of them and I do not agree with what he said. I quote:

> We see no need for it in our region of Canada and we believe that it would prove to be harmful to our attempts to attract and to accelerate industrial development . . .
>
> How can you propose an effective national policy when it has no positive application in parts of the nation?

I underline the words "no positive application". While most of the speakers from the Conservative Party did not say this, they are trying, by bringing in amendments, to satisfy that element in their party and trying to justify voting this bill. They know the problems Canada has with foreign investment. As a matter of fact, the problems of foreign investment are as bad in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland as they are in central Canada.

The need for foreign investment control is just as important in New Brunswick, including my constituency which has as high a rate of unemployment as can be found in this country, as in central Canada. I firmly believe there is a need for my province, my country and the federal government to have some mechanism of control, review and assessment of any foreign takeover or foreign interest which wants to start a new establishment.

Mr. Hellyer: How about a little provincial input, a little co-operation, some communication?

Mr. Breau: I will come to that. The hon. member was an assiduous member of the committee. He knows of the amendments brought forward by the minister and moved by me in committee to deal with consultative problems with the provinces. To say that the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) are needed to oblige the government to take into consideration the views of the provinces is not to state the facts fairly. The hon. member knows that in many places in the bill the minister has an obligation to consult with the provinces.

An hon. Member: There is no obligation.

Mr. Breau: Will you just wait for a moment? First, there is the legislative requirement in clause 2 which provides that in assessing whether the takeover of a new establishment is of significant benefit, the enunciated economic and industrial policies of the provinces shall be taken into consideration.

● (1520)

Mr. Hellyer: As the minister interprets it.

Mr. Breau: No. That is an obligation. Read it carefully.

Mr. Alexander: No, it is not.

Mr. Breau: The hon. member for Central Nova proposes that a notice should be sent to the province concerned so that it may be aware that an application is to be made. Most of the hon. members who support this amendment are from the maritime provinces. Those members, the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) in particular, know very well that the province is bound to know about any project which has any real significance. First of all, if resource development were involved, a permit would be necessary.

Mr. Hellyer: Not for a takeover.

Mr. Breau: In some cases, yes. I can tell the hon. member that in New Brunswick the situation is this: permits are given to companies and if those companies are taken over, renewed approval is required from the department of natural resources. Most of the provinces have similar arrangements, I believe. Then, again, there are services to be provided—sewer, electricity, water, and so on. Some of these companies are looking for tax agreements, others must make arrangements in connection with labour training. I could go on. I might mention, also, that the notice for which the amendment calls does not merely mean notice by telegram. It covers all information pertaining to the application, because "notice" as defined in clause 8 means the whole file.

The hon. member for Annapolis Valley says he is concerned about the growing amount of bureaucracy, that he is concerned lest the administration of this bill be too bureaucratic. I wonder whether he has read amendment No. 6 which he is supporting. If he has, one wonders whether he has read clause 8 where the word "notice" is defined. The bill provides:

> ... shall give notice in writing to the agency of such proposal in such form and manner and containing such information as is prescribed by the regulations.

This means the whole file. The hon. member says he is concerned about bureaucracy. Well, I am concerned about it too, and it is for that reason I oppose the amendment. I do not want another layer of civil servants to take a file to be reopened after it has been assessed here. It may be that in some cases the whole file should be turned over and, indeed, the bill provides that if the minister believes the information should be given to the province concerned, it can be made available. I will refer hon. members to the precise clause, clause 14(2)(b). It says that any information ...

> ... for any purpose relating to the administration of this act, be communicated to a minister of the Crown in right of any province or to an officer or employee of Her Majesty in right thereof.

Sure the file can be turned over, but for the hon. member to support amendment No. 6, when he complains about bureaucracy, is self-defeating: he wishes to impose further bureaucracy.

Mr. Hellyer: You send a copy. The minister of health sends out a million copies of every speech he makes; so does the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Breau: Well, if you send out information you must wait for a response and it will mean another layer of bureaucracy. Remember, it was not I who brought up this question of bureaucracy; it was the hon. member for Annapolis Valley, the hon. member for Central Nova and, I believe, the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Haliburton).

The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) said he would like to be shown a place in the bill which imposes an obligation to speak with the provinces and listen to their views. I shall be glad to oblige him. Certain amendments were brought forward in committee, not by the opposition but by members on this side, after listening to representations from some of the provinces. We felt we should go maybe half way toward meeting their requests.

I said a while ago, and no one seemed to disagree, that a province was bound to know about any project of real significance. If hon. members will read clauses 8, 9, 10 and 11 they will understand the process whereby the agency receives an application. In clause 9, provision is made for review and assessment by the minister. Clause 9 says, on page 20, that the minister shall review (a) the information contained in the notice, (b) any other information submitted to him, (c) any written undertakings, and (d) any representations submitted to him by a province that is likely to be significantly affected by the proposed or actual investment. This means there is an obligation to consider any representation by a province.

Mr. Fraser: If the province hears about it.

Mr. Breau: I said only a few moments ago that a province is bound to hear. Can the hon. member tell me how it could be otherwise? The applicant would be bound to go to the province for some kind of service—light, power, roads, water or sewer—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Fraser: Yes, on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The parliamentary secretary has asked me a question. I do not know whether he wants an answer now. I follow him, and I think I shall probably deal with it in the course of my speech.

Mr. Breau: I would hope so. It says in clause 9 that any representations have to be considered. I agree this does not necessarily mean consultation. But there is no way in which consultation can be defined in a statute. Let us turn to clause 11 on pages 21 and 22. It is provided here that the minister must refer these matters to the governor in council. Incidentally, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley complained that a lot of discretion was being left to the minister and said he thought this was dangerous. I wonder whether he had read clauses 8 to 12 which make it plain that it is not the minister who decides but the governor in council, the cabinet. The minister does not make a decision, as in some other instances.

I have no reason to believe the hon. member was overly concerned about the Regional Development Incentives Act, for example in connection with which the minister, not the cabinet, makes the decisions. Moreover, there is nothing in that act which guarantees that the minister responsible for DREE will come from the Maritimes. He could very well come from central Canada. He could even come from Hamilton West.

Mr. Alexander: Hear, hear!

● (1530)

Mr. Breau: Perhaps one of these days the minister for DREE will come from Hamilton West. There is nothing in the Regional Development Incentives Act to provide that the minister does not have discretion. The minister has complete discretion, something the hon. member for Annapolis Valley did not mention. Here it is not a case of the minister's discretion, but rather the cabinet's discretion; and surely the cabinet will have before it representations from across the country. If there are any particular problems in one part of the country, then the minister will have to convince the governor in council.

Supposing it is not enough to provide in clause 9 that the minister has to review and assess representations made by the provinces. If the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce does not want to go and speak to the provinces, then at least they can communicate with him by sending him a registered letter, or by coming up to Ottawa and speaking with him. Ministers are always free to speak to provincial ministers.

Mr. Alexander: Are you kidding?

Mr. Breau: Of course they are. Let me refer to subsection (2) of clause 11 on page 22 of the bill. At the end of subsection (2) it says:

> . . . and any representations submitted by a province that is likely to be significantly affected by the proposed or actual investment to which the notice relates.

That subsection provides that if the minister is convinced he can go ahead, he must take with him to cabinet any representation made to him by a province. The hon. member is a lawyer and surely he can read and understand that. He asked where was the obligation, and I tell him that there is the obligation.

Mr. Alexander: We will figure it out later.

Mr. Breau: Please do, because that is the obligation under the act. Hon. members say the amendment by the hon. member for Central Nova must be accepted in order to have consultation. That is nonsense; it is not true at all.

[Mr. Breau.]

I have mentioned that in the bill there are three places where—

Mr. Epp: There is an option.

Mr. Breau: Can the hon. member read?

Mr. Epp: Yes.

Mr. Breau: Has he read page 22?

Mr. Epp: I have.

Mr. Breau: Read clause 11 (2) and tell me whether there is an option there. It provides that the minister must take to cabinet any representations received from a province. There is another problem with the amendment of the hon. member for Central Nova. In establishing whether there is any significant benefit, he submits we should only consider the policies of the province where the business concerned is carried on. As a maritimer, I hope my colleagues from the Maritimes on the other side of the House will agree with me when I say I cannot accept that. I submit we must retain in the bill the wording "a province that is likely to be significantly affected". It could be the case that the business carried on in one province affects another province significantly.

We all know what is Premier Hatfield's view of this bill. He has categorically stated that he sees no need for foreign investment controls. That is what he has said in his briefs and in his speeches. I often disagree with him, and I disagree with him especially about that. I have had occasion to speak to industrialists who want to set up businesses in my constituency. They approach me as a member of parliament from the area and ask me for help, for contacts in the region, and for help at the government level in the form of a grant or loan. We have received some very good government programs.

When I speak to these people, I go beyond the criteria that are set out in this bill. In my constituency there is a large amount of unemployment and poverty. I ask them about the degree and significance of participation by Canadians in business enterprise, about the effect of acquisition on productivity and industrial activity, about the effect of competition and compatible policies. I have had people from Germany and Japan representing certain interests who have asked me for help, and I have said I would help them so long as they obtained supervisory personnel who were bilingual and from the area. That is not mentioned in the act, and these people do not run away, as Premier Hatfield said they would, because they do not want to do this. They say "Sure, we will meet those criteria". If they do not meet them, then they can bloody well stay home. If they want to come to my constituency but do not respect the criteria in this bill and other conditions—I see you are getting impatient, Mr. Speaker. Has my time expired?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I was about to tell the hon. member that his time has expired. If he wishes to continue, he can do so with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Alexander: Take just three minutes.

Mr. Breau: I just want to say that if people from Japan, the United States or Europe do not like this bill, as Premier Hatfield has suggested, then as far as my province is concerned they can bloody well stay home, and I will repeat that for as long as I live.

An hon. Member: What did you say?

Mr. Breau: They can bloody well stay home.

Mr. Alexander: Watch your language.

Mr. Breau: Any industry that comes into my constituency should respect the policy of the province and, even beyond that, policy at the regional or constituency level. For example, roughly 90 per cent of my constituents are Acadian and French-speaking, and 15 per cent of those are unilingual French. Most industrialists from Japan and the United States transact business in the English language. Their technological backgrounds are English. If these people are not willing to train the people of my riding in their own language so that they can understand this technology and not just be janitors, then we do not want them.

Mr. Epp: That is what provincial consultation is all about.

Mr. Breau: The hon. member left his seat for a moment when I was explaining, and I am sure he does not want me to explain all over again what is the obligation set out in the bill to consult with the provinces. If hon. members examine other legislation passed by this parliament, they will find nowhere greater obligations than those contained in this bill.

Premier Hatfield bragged about how beautiful was the DREE program and how his province would be able to create a lot of jobs. There is nothing in RDIA which provides that the minister should turn his file over to the provinces. There is nothing in that act to provide that the minister should even consult with the provinces. But hon. members know that if a province tells the federal government that it is concerned about a DREE application or an application made to the foreign investment review agency, then the federal government will listen to that province. As I say, there is an obligation under this act that the minister, when he goes to cabinet, shall append to his recommendation any representations made to him by a province. One cannot go further than that.

Mr. Alexander: Would you vote for it?

Mr. Breau: I never vote for things on a hypothetical basis—only when I see them. If the amendment were to say that, it would be a horse of a different colour, but it does not. The amendment asks for the whole of the information to be turned over to the provinces. To me that would be overly bureaucratic and would slow down the process. As I think Premier Hatfield said at the federal-provincial conference, it would help the process to become overly bureaucratic and pompous, or something like that. In any case, what members of the Conservative Party are asking for would make this bill overly bureaucratic and would slow down the process. We are attempting to do a whole review in 60 days, and then the application is automatically accepted unless we need more information.

● (1540)

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservative Party, having an element within its ranks that does not want anything done about foreign investment control, has put forward these amendments to say to Premier Hatfield and others, "We are concerned about your problem and we are going to put things on the order paper to hold up debate on the bill. We cannot oppose the bill as a national party." None of them has suggested that, Mr. Speaker; they have all said it is needed. Their party and individual members from the Maritimes know there is a need for this bill.

Mr. Gillespie: But they are trying to weaken it.

Mr. Breau: Yes, they are trying to weaken it to let this element of their party believe they would have it otherwise. We did consult with the provinces on this bill, Mr. Speaker. We have an obligation to consult. Perhaps Premier Hatfield and a few other people are afraid to intervene, afraid to be tough with foreign companies. If this is against their political philosophy, I will respect the Conservatives for voting against this bill. But to try to sit on the fence on both sides of the issue, that I cannot accept.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I recognize that it is Friday afternoon, and of course that always makes debate a little more spirited in this chamber and perhaps accounts for some of the looseness in the debate to which we have been listening. I found it interesting that the parliamentary secretary made a fervent and fiery speech about the fact that if anybody from a foreign clime goes to his constituency, to la belle province or to his area, he is going to make sure that it benefits the local people. I would just ask the parliamentary secretary if he would make some inquiries over the weekend about how many bilingual helicopter pilots are operating in James Bay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member, by "la belle province" means New Brunswick, I accept that; but I am not from Quebec.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member. However, still he might be interested in finding out in la belle province just who is flying those helicopters at James Bay. The hon. member has said there are obligations under this bill for the federal government to consult with the provinces. An obligation is either moral or legal. Moral obligations come and go and vary depending on the circumstances or mood of the person who has the obligation.

In his speech the minister said there are obligations to consult the provinces. There is not a single legal obligation to consult with a single person in the government of any province under this bill. With great respect to my friend who preceded me and made a very fervent plea that such was the case, I should like to ask him to read the bill again and see if he can find any section that compels any member of the government or the tribunal to consult with anybody in a province. He says that the provincial governments' announced economic policy must be taken into account. What is the announced economic policy? Supposing somebody says they do not have one: how do you take that into account? The sections that my hon. friend referred to do not, under any circumstances, impose an obligation.

Mr. Breau: Clause 11, page 22.

Mr. Fraser: I am going to look at clause 11. But let us go back a little first. Let us take the first clause that my hon. friend referred to. Clause 9 (d) reads as follows:

> any representation submitted to him by a province that is likely to be significantly affected by the proposed or actual investment to which the notice relates . . .

Now, Mr. Speaker, how does representation get to the federal government under that section? It does not get there unless somehow, as the minister admitted, somebody hears about it, some application comes through, something happens. All hon. members know that these applications will probably be made in confidence between two or three parties, or whoever is involved, and they will not be preceded by a plethora of notice by governmental agencies whether municipal, provincial or federal before the application goes in. That is how things work.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Fraser: Not yet. There is no compulsion upon the federal government to give notice to any province. I do not like the amount of foreign investment in this country. I do not mind the investment but I do not like the control, and if control results from the investment I do not like it. I have been living in a world where I have dealt with foreign control corporations and I know the pressures that exist. I am saying that there is nothing in this bill about consulting the provinces.

Take the other sections; they are all the same. I address these remarks to my hon. friend who made a very good speech and who is sincere. I think the minister is outside the chamber for the moment, but he was here and I appreciate that. Let me give some examples. Mr. Speaker, I see that the minister has joined our side for a few minutes.

Mr. Gillespie: I beat a hasty retreat.

Mr. Fraser: Obviously, the minister feels that he is mediating between myself and the parliamentary secretary; but perhaps it is not necessary. I am flattered that the minister would personally intervene. Let us go through the examples of why one might say it does not automatically follow that the federal government is going to consult. Where was the consideration for the provinces in Mr. Gordon's budget of a few years ago? That was torn to pieces by the government.

An hon. Member: By the opposition, too.

Mr. Fraser: Yes, and the opposition. But where was the consultation beforehand, after the interest in the white paper? Many members of this House were here then and backed that colossal sham that was perpetrated on the Canadian people. We now have a tax bill that the government called a reform—but nobody without a battery of lawyers can understand it. Where was the consultation when British Columbia was having problems with offshore resources? We now have a lawsuit on our hands. What has happened to meaningful consultation as far as east coast resources are concerned? What has happened to meaningful consultation between the federal government and the province on west coast tanker routes? Where has been the consultation in this incredible confrontation between the federal government and Alberta? Where is the assurance that there will be consultation?

● (1550)

I will give another example. When British Columbia put in a bid for the winter Olympic games and it was finally decided how much money the federal government would grant British Columbia, what happened? There was a refusal to meet with the provincial government, and a unilateral announcement about so many dollars being granted for the purpose. What about the ports in British Columbia? How many members have already forgotten the great problems of five years ago over Roberts Bank port because there could not be any meaningful consultation with British Columbia, and the provincial government had to go ahead on its own?

Mr. Breau: Who was the minister of transport then?

Mr. Bell: Jack Pickersgill.

Mr. Fraser: When you talk about how easy it is for the provincial government to deal with the federal government, let me remind you of the headlines not long ago regarding what Premier Barrett said on the port problem, namely, that he will not talk to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) any more. So much for consultation! As he said, there was no meaningful consultation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fraser: I want to turn now to something which all hon. members should know about, because if you have forgotten history let me tell you that this is something that is again happening right now, this afternoon, in this country and it illustrates the problem we are discussing. Some of you have already heard of Triton Industries, which is a small company in my province. Let me tell you what is happening to Triton Industries this afternoon and why it bears on this discussion. Consider what happened to the federal-provincial consultations. In 1971, Triton Industries developed a radio of considerable value to RCMP, air-sea rescue, fishing boats, etc. In April of 1971 it was advised by the Department of Transport that Triton would be placed on a suppliers' list and would be considered when this type of equipment was required.

In May of 1971 they had developed this particular radio and it was being used commercially on the west coast. By November, 1971, Triton was appraised by Sperry Rand that a large coastguard tender had been released for bid. Triton did not receive a tender from the federal government and the contract for the supply of equipment was given to an American-controlled corporation in the province of Ontario. In January of 1972 Triton was advised by the Department of Supply and Services that it was not on the list, that something had gone wrong.

Subsequent to that, a large government grant was given to the Ontario firm to develop this radio and the result was that the radio, which has only been developed now, some time later, was taken away from them. The chance to sell it and operate it was taken away completely from this west coast company because one arm of government did not know what the other was doing.

I do not blame anyone for that in a sinister sense, but if all hon. members would just take a look at that example they would realize that one cannot ever assume that people will act in the most efficient way. I am not talking about people acting in bad faith; I am just talking about human nature. Things are forgotten, things do not get done. This afternoon that company is hours away from going to American financing to bail it out. At present a message has been finally sent in desperation—the Triton people were down here to talk to the government a week or so ago, but nothing has happened—to Premier Barrett of my province saying that if they cannot get some help from the province by 4 p.m. today they will discharge at least 50 per cent of their equity control to American-controlled interests. Why is that? Because this country does not look after its own people in incentive programs or consultative programs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: This is a classic example of what we are doing to our own people. I do not know how many examples of this sort of action exist across this country, but this matter is concrete and it is right in front of us this afternoon. That is why we say yes, we have to control our economy and our destiny. We recognize that for too long we have been prepared to sell out and take the easy road. All hon. members realize that. There is not a member on the government side or on this side who would disagree with me on this; and the public also agree.

When I say there is a defect in the act, do not tell me or my party that that is because I am in favour of the Americans taking over a company a mile or two below the southern boundary of my riding. That does not make any sense, and it is not so, as hon. members know. But we do have a problem here. All that these amendments require is that the federal government have the obligation to send a notice to the provincial governments when an application comes in.

This bill involves bureaucracy anyway, and I do not know how one can get around it until we get some experience. However, it is not difficult to bundle up a copy of an application and send it off. Second, it is not very difficult to devise a method whereby there would be representation on these particular boards when the decision involves a region or a province. You can quibble about the words but it is very hard to quibble about the principle.

The government has the capacity to bring in these amendments, and they are important amendments. I do not want to sit here any longer hearing people debate whether Alberta will secede, whether Quebec will secede or whether British Columbia will secede. This is foolishness and it is not in our interest. The tragedy is that it does not need to take place. I have been a lawyer and I know perfectly well that in the world of real affairs it is necessary that obligations be made mandatory.

There is one more thing that I wish to say before I conclude, and I ask the indulgence of the House to let me finish my argument in this way. It is all very well for the minister or for government members to tell us what this bill really means. I will give two examples to show that you cannot be sure, no matter how much good faith you have, that what is said will be done. A few years ago, when the expropriation bill was before the committee of the House, the then minister of justice when dealing with a certain section said that the rules of natural justice would apply, in spite of the fact that many members of the committee were worried about whether they would apply in favour of persons whose property was being expropriated at the time. That is what the minister said; you can find it in the committee report. However, a few months ago, the Exchequer Court of Canada decided that in such cases the rules of natural justice do not apply.

There is another instance of this. A few years ago, the Minister of the Environment, when talking about whether or not the James Bay project could possibly proceed before environmental studies were completed—you will find this in Hansard—said it was their understanding and the understanding of the province of Quebec that the project would not proceed until the studies had been completed. These are two examples. They demonstrate that we should not draw up legislation on the basis of pious hopes. Let us put in sound working principles and let us recognize the weaknesses we all have and the capacity for error which exists in any administrative system. Let us shore-up the bill. The principle of what I am saying is sound and sensible. It will help this country, not hinder it.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could have the agreement of the House to ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Breau: The hon. member is right when he says there is no legal obligation to send notice of an application to the province. But of course he will agree that if a province makes representations, then there is an obligation not only to consider them but for the minister to take them to cabinet. That is clear. If an applicant believes that the province would support him and the federal government might not, can the hon. member tell me why in the world that applicant would not just telephone the premier of the province and ask him to make representations on his behalf to the minister?

● (1600)

Mr. Fraser: I am pleased that the parliamentary secretary has asked me this perfectly valid question. The answer is this. First of all, we have no assurance that without some kind of prearrangement with the provinces they will have any mechanism by which to deal with this. You can say that this will make it more bureaucratic, but it does not take that much more bureaucracy. If a company puts in an application and if we had the amendments we have asked for, it would know that the province will act, not in its favour but in the public interest, which is the way the province would have to act.

However, if the company has to go to the province itself and browbeat, push, cajole or twist arms to get the province to move, the province will have a built-in reluctance to become involved in that because it will ask: Why should we be supporting one company against another? At that time you have removed the province from the position of acting in the public interest as the result of provisions in this bill, and you get the province in the position of taking sides in applications.

If you make it mandatory that notice be given to the province, the province can then act completely on its own and can make its own decision without necessarily talking to the company. It can decide that this is in the interest of the province, that they have strong views on it, or that they have nothing to say on it at all. But if no notice goes to the province, they cannot act on it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the parties in the usual way, and I would like to announce that we will be dealing with the Middle East resolution all day Wednesday, after routine proceedings.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with regard to today's private members' hour. I believe it has been agreed that the notice of motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) would be discussed. It has also been agreed by those involved that consideration of that notice of motion would terminate at five minutes before five o'clock, and that the five remaining minutes would be used for the purpose of sending the subject matter of private member's Bill C-143, standing in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), to committee without debate, except perhaps for a few words of appreciation from the hon. member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house has heard the suggestion made by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McKinley) regarding agreement about our procedure during the next hour, namely, that we proceed until five minutes to five o'clock with the notice of motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche). At that point, presumably, the debate will come to an end—one cannot foretell with what result—and the remainder of the time will be spent in discharging the order respecting the public bill moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), Bill C-143, and transmitting the subject matter of that bill to one of the committees of the House. This would have to be done by unanimous agreement of the House. I think it is also understood that other notices of motions and other bills would retain their priority. Is all this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Fraser.]

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider developing an integrated approach to social and economic policy development in Canada through the creation of an economic and social council to establish a more beneficial relationship between the social interests and the business interest in the community in order to help all our institutions be more responsive toward the interests and aspirations of the individual citizen.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion I am proposing to the House would provide a way to increase livability in Canada. I am asking that the government provide a structure for social planning through a social council of Canada in the same way that it provides a structure for economic planning through the Economic Council of Canada; and, further, that it integrate economic and social planning in the interest of the total human being.

My motion is aimed at improving the quality of life in Canada not in a vague, motherhood spirit but in a concrete proposal. The social council I envisage would help us to analyse and improve our progress in those areas that are regarded internationally as social indicators of the quality of life. These are: health, individual development through learning, employment and quality of working life, leisure, command over goods and services, physical environment, personal safety and the administration of justice, and social opportunity and equality.

Just as the government is aided in setting economic policy by the thinking and by the excellent reports of the Economic Council of Canada, so it would be helped by the social thinking of the council I propose. Social policy traditionally takes a back seat to economic policy. But the upheavals in modern society demand that we revise and upgrade our way of making social policy.

Since we have long suffered from the compartmentalization of man, I suggest that the economic and social proposals of the two equal bodies be linked, such as by the issuance of a joint annual report, so that the government receives integrated proposals designed for people. Such comprehensive planning is a vital first step if we are to protect human values in a society already dominated by the computer and soon to be challenged by the genetic engineers.

Let me state briefly why we must bring this new dimension of planning into government. In the development of Canada so far, the accent has been on building and growth. Our success has been measured in the production of goods and services. There has been an assumption that the emphasis on quantity would improve the quality of our life. I am not necessarily critical of this assumption; the material development of Canada has required concentration on the GNP. But the conditions of modern society have changed dramatically in the past few years as a result of the technological and cultural explosions. The intense problems of future shock have hit Canadians. Change used to be gradual but now it is rapid and escalating, allowing us very little time to adapt. The world is changing faster than we can cope with it.

Technology has brought many benefits—communications and transportation are just two examples— but it has also been a chief source of the anxiety and spreading frustration that characterize modern life. The acquisition of more goods has not by itself made us a happier people.

Our economy must grow at 7 per cent a year to maintain progress, as we have traditionally defined that word. This growth rate demands escalating consumer consumption. Thus, increasing numbers of people feel caught up in the faster-turning wheels of progress with no sense of purpose other than growth itself. We have to ask ourselves in this parliament a fundamental question: Is bigger, better? That question deserves the attention of parliament. It deserves much more attention than we have been giving it, for if bigger is better, why are five million Canadians still living below the poverty line? Why has crime increased? Why are alcohol, drug and suicide rates up? Why is there more pollution of water and air? Why is there more labour strife? Why are we congesting in urban areas, leaving vast areas of Canada empty?

These basic questions reveal why the assumptions and patterns of the institutions in our society need re-examination. It is critical that this re-examination take place now because as a result of technology we are entering a new period of our history, a period in which we have acquired the power to shape our own future for better or for worse. We must either control it for the better or it will control us for the worse.

Consider what is happening in our world. We have manned satellites riding the gravitational fences of our planet. We have put men on the moon. We have communications satellites to let us see by live television what is happening on the other side of the world, and sensory devices in orbit to detect and map biological and mineral resources concealed from the human eye. We are entering the bioengineering age in which we can manipulate the nature and structure of living things. Indeed, as Lord Ritchie-Calder of the Centre for the Study of Democratic Institutions maintains: "The whim of the present generation can determine the character of remote posterity." This is more than spare-part surgery or organ transplants; we can tamper with the genetic code and thus produce deviations whose consequences may be unpredictable and irreversible.

● (1610)

I have used this example only to illustrate my contention that we have entered a profoundly new period in our history. It is in these changed circumstances that government policies must be made. Government controls the economy and thus influences the framework of society within which people live their lives. The size and extension of government today makes it a dominant influence on the direction of society. William Dyson, executive director of the Vanier Institute of the Family, puts his finger on our dilemma as follows:

> The issue is not that Canada has insufficient wealth ... The central problem is people, not dollars: people being increasingly excluded from access to our riches, while a few others here and abroad, are increasingly favoured. Even worse, it is the exclusion of these people—who grow in number and now include businessmen, scientists and engineers—exclusion from work, from status, from identity, from meaningful living.

Despite the enormous and, in some cases, threatening advances of technology, government policy-making and forecasting is still lamentably weak. It is not necessary to reject economic growth to recognize that we have produced wantonly and without recognizing the social impact of our affluence. It is not necessary to dismiss material comfort to recognize other values that are essential to the human and humane qualities of men. Government cannot escape its obligation to take a broad, long view. It must strive to combine economic development and personal well-being. Affluence makes sense only if it leads to increased social justice and personal fulfilment. In this way, economic growth may become a means to the end of an enhanced quality of life.

There are growing voices in Canada today calling for this new emphasis on integrated social planning. Foremost is the Canadian Council on Social Development, the closest body we now have to the model I propose. The council is a private organization drawing its support from the federal government, the ten provincial governments, the 70 largest municipalities and many businesses. Its central objective is social policy development. It does a fine job, but because of its non-governmental status and limited resources it is a poor cousin to the prestigious Economic Council of Canada. The federal government has put $3,474,000 into this year's Economic Council budget. The Canadian Council on Social Development has to scrape up its $820,000 annual budget of which $275,000 is contributed by the federal government.

I want to emphasize that keeping social policy as a residual aspect of economic policy is old-fashioned thinking and has led to the chaotic situation in Canada today in which government at all levels spends $6 billion a year on welfare and yet has not significantly alleviated poverty. Our reluctance to put social policy on the same level as economic policy fails to recognize that social policies can be dynamic, lead to incentive and thus, to tax reductions.

A practical benefit of linking economic and social interests is seen in minimum wages, for increasing minimum wages is essential to social advancement. Thus, people are given money for work done, not subsidized for work not done. Instead of collecting extra tax dollars for so many welfare plans, the government could reduce taxes so as to offset increased costs due to higher minimum wages. An increase in minimum wages actually costs the country less because it cuts down on welfare costs. We would then be paying people, not governments. Accordingly, the executive director of the Canadian Council on Social Development, Reuben Baetz, is himself a proponent of an integrated approach to social and economic policy development. Mr. Baetz says:

> Canada desperately needs an independent organization active in the formation and promotion of sound social policies. Such an organization must have enough financial support to operate with a high degree of professional competence. It must take into account the needs, resources and attitudes of individual citizens and their organizations in development of policy proposals, but it must avoid becoming the mouthpiece of one or more special interests. It must speak courageously of values and desirable social objectives, but remember that resources are not unlimited ... It must remain non-partisan in politics but skilled in the dynamics and work of the political arena, for that is where all public social policy is finally decided.

Such a model should be created by the federal government in co-operation with the provincial governments. Ad hoc consultations between federal and provincial ministers, while useful, are not good enough because they are dependent on political timing and good will. A permanent structure is needed. Perhaps the Canadian Council on Social Development could provide the nucleus for the model I propose. In any event, this new body should collaborate closely with the Economic Council in the development of social indicators that provide hard data on the quality of life issues.

The Economic Council has also shown increasing interest in the social and institutional aspects of economic development. In its eighth annual report the council noted:

> ... In our increasingly complex, interdependent society, short range and ad hoc responses to the problems of growth and change seem increasingly inappropriate in many instances.

Several departments of the federal government now look upon social indicators as a necessary instrument of public policy, but their work is fragmented. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion, for example, is developing indicators to measure the problems of social adjustment created by regional economic development. The Department of Labour is conducting research on indicators of job satisfaction. The Science Council of Canada and Environment Canada are both interested in social indicators of the environment. The Department of Health and Welfare's working papers on social security in Canada, focusing on the best method of achieving security of income for all Canadians, are useful as an indication of one important factor contributing to quality of life.

Statistics Canada is currently working on a report of salient trends in Canadian society including population, health, education, income and expenditure, welfare and social security, labour force and employment, leisure arts and culture, justice, housing, environment and urban statistics, participation, opportunity, accessibility and social mobility. This information will provide the basis for judging our "livability index". But we need more than statistical tools to tell us about the quality of our society. A social council is needed to encourage and to integrate such research into proposals for public policy.

Data gathering and analysis would be futile without a corresponding ability in parliament to evaluate proposals. So I come finally to how parliament itself will respond to the information and analyses presented to it. I believe there is an essential role for parliament in judging how the values of our society are being affected by change. In this light, human values need to be reaffirmed. We are not without human concern in our institutions, but we express it in the wrong way. We add on humanizing factors to public policy rather than developing policy that starts from the base of the human being, his rights and dignity. Our social security policies in pensions and unemployment insurance allocations are a prime example of this "adding on" humanization. We create a system which generates casualties and then add on another huge system to compensate the casualties. We must instead make our society conform to our own long-range human needs.

[Mr. Roche.]

● (1620)

To take another example, our environmental dilemma is but a symptom of a much deeper problem facing us. No one decided to dehumanize life with crowding, traffic jams, noise and squalor. No one decided that air pollution and dying waterways should be the price of unlimited growth. No one decided these things, but neither were they accidents. They are what we have done because we have assumed, unconsciously, that we had the right, indeed the obligation, to do them.

We must begin to see ourselves no long as conquerors, exploiters or plunderers of our planet, but as stewards or trustees of its generous but not unlimited resources, of its resilient but not indestructible systems that support all life. As Maurice Stong, executive director of the UN environment program, explains:

> We must begin to see that even if we win the fight against pollution, what will that gain us if three decades from now at least half of humanity will still endure a life of intermittent work, permanent undernourishment, poor health, poor housing and, at present standards, relatively growing illiteracy and lack of skills? Will that be an environment that is human or endurable?

Not only the quality of life in Canada, but global stability demand a reassertion of human dignity to ensure the survival and well-being of the whole human community. A commitment to true humanism does not demand uniformity in our individual or community lives. However, it provides the framework for man's search for beauty and truth, for moral and spiritual growth, and it is in this search that we achieve our highest levels of humanity.

To summarize, we are in an age in which we are transforming our lives and our world. We have done so hitherto on the basis of incomplete knowledge and narrow ambition, principally economic. We must broaden our knowledge and our values to recognize and to enhance the whole man and mankind. To do so we need better social data and analysis to be provided by a social council of Canada.

We must ask ourselves in parliament how we can truly help growing numbers of Canadians who are vulnerable to the economic system and dependent on government programs to gain greater control over their own lives and destiny. Upgrading social policy is the route to a more human society.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I was very much impressed with the speech of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche). I could not agree with him more that we as a nation, and perhaps as a whole western European society if we consider ourselves as such, have in the past generation or so been far too concerned about economic growth and not nearly enough about the effects it has on people.

This is not the gist of my speech, because I planned to go into something quite different, but I am particularly concerned about the notion of growth versus the environment. One member earlier gave the example of James Bay. We have to learn how to internalize some of these external costs such as environment and social costs when we get into massive growth schemes. James Bay has to be one of them. The cost in terms of environment, disrupting the Indian people, and so on, has not been internalized. That must be done.

I agree with the hon. member that there is a real gap between economic and social planning. This parliament and this government is slowly moving toward a position of greater integration. The key factor in this kind of integration is perhaps the impact on spending for social services, health, welfare, unemployment, family allowances, old age pensions, veterans pensions, disability pensions, the Canada Pension Plan, and so on. There is a whole raft of related welfare services which account for approximately two-thirds of federal government spending. The impact of very heavy spending in this area on the part of the federal government, as well as provincial and municipal governments, is certainly immense in terms of the over-all economic affairs of Canada. It involves a cause and effect relationship that deserves some consideration.

Basically, social needs in an economic sense can be divided into two areas. First, the needs of all citizens, whether they are partaking actively in the economic life of the nation in the sense of being breadwinners and not dependent on the state. These social needs include education, health services and some allowances such as family allowance. In many ways, the more affluent in our society receive a greater share of this kind of welfare than do the poor. Education is a good example. In many ways, it is the affluent who are the welfare bums in the sense that children from affluent families spend many more years receiving expensive education in universities where the staff-pupil relationship is very low and equipment is very expensive. In many ways, the affluent in our society benefit more from the state in terms of welfare than the poor.

The second group of welfare recipients are the needy. These people are dependent because they do not receive an adequate income and must have assistance from the state. This group includes welfare recipients, people on unemployment insurance, people with disabilities, and so on. They are unable to function on their own.

These are the two main groups of welfare recipients in our society. Unfortunately, the latter group seems to come off much worse than the former. Even in areas like health services the latter group does not avail itself. There are many reasons for this. It is possibly because they cannot get babysitters and this sort of thing. A report by the single-parent mothers indicates that these people do not or are not able to avail themselves of health services even though they may be free. Possibly there are also some social reasons.

Planning for social assistance to the second group also has a significant impact on our economy. In a rapid-growth type of society we are very dependent on an affective demand for goods and services. In addition to the supply and humanitarian demands, assistance to this group plays a very significant role in stimulating our economy. Since such groups are not likely to be involved in savings, a steady cash flow is very necessary, especially at times when there may not be very happy consequences with regard to savings and investment.

● (1630)

I can offer an admirable example of the integration of social and economic forces in our national life by referring for a moment to the LIP program. This is not a program which has a massive impact on our society but it is interesting because of the interaction between social and economic forces. It was designed originally for two purposes, to create jobs and the stimulation of the economy. I would refer to the OFY program in the same category. A third factor has been introduced by the nature of the projects themselves and the scheme has become heavily involved in social service programs. Projects were started as means of creating jobs and ended up as social services and meeting social needs which had been present all along.

The government is concerned about this interrelationship between the social planning side of our national life and the economic side. Serious discussions are going on in the area of finding employment, on the one hand, and the need for compiling inventories of community work so that should unemployment increase, these tasks can be undertaken. Economic necessities affecting social policy, decisions concerning the lowering of pensionable age, and so on, have obvious repercussions on social policy. For example, it seems to me that one of the ways in which we might increase the number of jobs available would be to lower the retirement age.

There are three bodies which deal with planning in Canada in this field, that is, economic and social planning. I have mentioned one, the Economic Council of Canada, and I shall mention another, the Institute for Research on Public Policy. I should also mention the Canadian Council for Social Development, a group which is functioning extremely well though it could function a great deal better if it were possessed of adequate funds. I believe there is much to be said for these groups all getting together to develop integrated policies.

I should like to deal in the few minutes left to me with a subject which concerns me a great deal, that is to say, the whole notion of adversary procedure, an extremely important notion and one which has become better received in the last six months or so, particularly on the Ottawa scene. I am concerned that very often in policy-making there should be massive economic forces aligned against extremely weak social forces. Perhaps this is one of the difficulties which the social council faces—it does not possess the political or economic strength to do the things it needs to do.

Then, again, parliamentary or regulatory bodies tend to be awed by prestigious information; if information is expensively put together we tend to be much more impressed by it than by material put out on behalf of groups which barely have sufficient funds to get them to Ottawa. Nevertheless, it is these groups which often have a great deal to say about the needs of individuals and communities in the social policy field. Perhaps parliamentarians and others concerned should make funds more readily available for such groups to present their cases, particularly where they affect social needs.

One or two examples come immediately to my mind; for instance, groups concerned in an adversary way about decisions to go ahead with pipeline development. Something must be done to ensure a better balance between the various elements in our society, those which have massive economic power and those which are calling attention to pressing social needs.

May I say, in conclusion, that I support the intention behind this motion. I believe the development of a single body to co-ordinate planning in the areas of social and economic affairs is badly needed in this country.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, all too often very worth-while ideas are put forward during private members' hour in the form of resolutions and bills, and all too frequently they are rejected by the government. Such an idea is expressed in the resolution put forward today by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche). It is, as the cliché goes, an idea whose time has come. All it really does is call upon the government to give consideration to the advisability of setting up a social council of Canada. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona certainly put forward eloquently and sincerely some sound arguments to support his case that there is a need to set up such a council.

I believe the motion should commend itself to the government. All too often we as parliamentarians either on the government side or in the opposition vote public funds to carry out projects in various parts of the country without paying any regard to the social consequences of what we are doing. For example, there is the trend toward vacating the family farm and the movement of people toward the urban centres of Canada. We do not really know in any great depth what are the social consequences of the move toward urbanization in Canada, but we do know to a certain extent what impact it has had upon the rural population who suddenly find themselves placed in an urban milieu.

● (1640)

The obvious example that comes to mind is the resettlement program that was carried on in the province of Newfoundland. This was a program conceived—ill-conceived, in my view—by bureaucrats and technocrats who, in putting together a regional development program for the province of Newfoundland, came to the conclusion that there were too many villages in the province, that there were too many settlements or outports as they are called.

This prompted a decision to reduce the number of settlements in the province and to move the people there into what were called receiving centres. In other words, certain areas of the province were designated for resettlement and other areas for receiving centres or growth centres. People from five or half a dozen small outports would be resettled into a larger community within the area. In the process they were forced to abandon their homes, their fishing premises, their small gardens, schools and churches, all of the things that were familiar to them, the infrastructure that they had built up through the years and which had been passed on from generation to generation.

This move was made without any regard for its social impact. As a result, we saw the very sad spectacle of hardy fisherfolk being placed in these reception centres which gradually became welfare ghettoes. These people lost their small gardens, their little churches and schools and public centres, and as a result lost their sense of being, their sense of belonging and sense of pride. The psychological consequence of this was that they suddenly lost their initiative or urge to work and became wards of the state.

[Mr. McRae.]

In many cases, they had no choice. They had left their villages, their fishing premises and their traditional fishing grounds, and the places they were sent to were designed, not to provide them with work but as places where welfare and social assistance could be conveniently administered. In my view, it was for the convenience of bureaucrats that this ill-conceived resettlement scheme was carried on.

I am pleased to say it has now been stopped because of the consequences which became apparent after the program was well under way. All these pitfalls could have been avoided if there had been the proper approach made and the kind of study conducted that could be conducted by a social council of Canada. That is about the best example I could give, Mr. Speaker, for supporting the very excellent idea that has been put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

The hon. member on the other side who just resumed his seat referred to some statistics released by Statistics Canada relating to the low incomes of single-parent families in Canada—the working mothers of this country. This leads me to another question which sooner or later will have to be faced up to, and that is the need to recognize that in this country there are single-parent families that should be given some degree of equality of opportunity. In order to provide them with this equality of opportunity and to provide these women with at least a reasonable return for their labours, we should consider establishing a federal day-care centre program. This, in my view, is long overdue. Such a program could be very conveniently worked out with the provinces and I am sure all provinces would be receptive to the idea.

A social council of Canada would be able to provide us with the necessary information as to exactly how much is involved in such a program and what are the benefits that would flow from a program of this kind. I have one day-care centre in my own city which was started as a consequence of the Local Initiatives Program. Most of the children in that day-care centre are from families which are on social welfare and which take advantage of the day-care centre to enable the parents to enter the work force and supplement their welfare payments. A great number of the children come from homes where the father has deserted the family and the mother has had to go out to help supplement her welfare payments in order to keep the family going.

The fact that this one day-care centre in a city of 100,000 people had to be started under the Local Initiatives Program points up, to my mind, the fact that here is where we as legislators are falling behind in keeping pace with the need for social development in this country. Social development, as the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona said, and said so eloquently and sincerely, should go hand in hand with and be complementary to the economic development of this country; because to my mind to have one without the other is to invite disastrous consequences.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, when I first had the opportunity of looking over the motion proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) I said to myself, "This strikes me as being an excellent idea". As is my habit, I then began to examine the resolution to see whether any of its components already existed in Canadian society today. As I began to think about his resolution, it became clearer and clearer to me that what he was really seeking to do was to create an institution known as the House of Commons. Because in point of fact, the role which the hon. member has outlined for his proposed new body is exactly the role which the House of Commons fulfils. It is this body which is the co-ordinator, and ultimately the final law-giver, in dealing with the kind of problems the hon. member suggested might be looked after by another institution or organization. For what is the House of Commons if it is not a body that deals with economic and social problems?

Mr. Yewchuk: This House has not been doing it.

Mr. Reid: If the House of Commons has not been doing it, then I suggest to the hon. member that all he need do is to look at the speed with which the House of Commons has been dealing during the last week with the foreign investment review bill. The house has been dealing at the report stage with the government's proposal to deal with a matter that has been identified as one of too much American takeover of Canadian industry. The government has proposed legislation, the House of Commons has that legislation and for the last five days we have desperately been trying to break through the log jam of speeches that have come forward. It is not that the House of Commons is not seized of Canadian problems; it is that the House of Commons very often has not agreed upon a solution to those problems.

● (1650)

I did not criticize in general the opposition for taking the stand it has on the foreign investment review act. All I suggest is that it is their right, under the rules of the House of Commons, to delay that piece of legislation as long as they wish; but they cannot criticize the institution or the government for not providing solutions and criticize the government for not allowing it to come to a decision. It is the opposition that determines when a matter comes to a decision under the rules we now have in this House of Commons.

Mr. Roche: Would the parliamentary secretary accept a question?

Mr. Reid: Of course.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, in response to the motion which I put forward the parliamentary secretary suggested that the House of Commons is doing the very work that a social council of Canada would do in my view, and therefore in his judgment it is not needed. Would he say that the work of the Economic Council of Canada is not needed because the House of Commons is doing its work, and therefore bodies such as that should be disbanded?

Mr. Reid: If I may make my position clear, Mr. Speaker, I would disband almost all of these so-called institutions that surround us. I do not really believe that a proliferation of organizations of that nature, or a proliferation of government departments is getting us anywhere in dealing with the problems that face us today. It is my opinion that we should cut away the underbrush that surrounds so many of these organizations and institutions that grow up one with the other and do not contribute very much to the good of Canadian society.

This House of Commons has the responsibility for taking decisions on these items. We are here as freely elected representatives of the people, and we have the responsibility to bring attention to matters in a way which allows a decision to be taken. The problems and difficulties experienced by organizations like the Social Welfare Council, the Economic Council of Canada and the countless other councils that interpose themselves between the will of the House of Commons and the potential solution of problems make our position very difficult.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The debate on the notice of motion presented by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona has just concluded, pursuant to the agreement reached unanimously earlier in this hour.

We will now proceed to the next order of business. It was agreed that Bill C-143 would be called under public bills and that the motion would be presented by the Chair.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

BROADCASTING ACT

MEASURE TO LAY SPECIFIC EMPHASIS ON PROVISION OF EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the order for second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts of Bill C-143, to amend the Broadcasting Act, be discharged, that the said bill be withdrawn and the subject matter of the said bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my thanks to government members for allowing Bill C-143 to come forward at this time. I also wish to express my appreciation to the New Democratic Party and the Social Credit party for their co-operation in this matter. Canadian school boards, school trustees and teachers' associations will also be most grateful that the House has allowed this private members' bill to be moved up and its subject matter transferred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, where it is hoped that this question will receive full consideration at the earliest possible time.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is now five o'clock and the hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired. This House stands adjourned until Tuesday, November 13, 1973, pursuant to special order made Monday, November 5, 1973, the hour for resumption being 2 p.m.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 13, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERIES OF PROVINCIAL PARLIAMENTARIANS

Mr. Speaker: May I be allowed to bring to the attention of hon. members the presence in the Speaker's gallery and the Senate gallery of a very distinguished group of fellow parliamentarians from all parts of Canada. These parliamentary colleagues have come to Ottawa to attend during the week the first seminar on parliamentary procedure and practice organized by the Canadian branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. The participants include the Speakers from British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland and they are representative of the provincial legislative assemblies and the legislative councils of the two territories.

On behalf of hon. members I extend a very warm welcome to our distinguished visitors and fellow parliamentarians, and express the wish that their attendance at this seminar will be useful for them and for us and also for the institution of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

GRAIN

MOVEMENT TO EXPORT MARKETS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under Standing Order 43. This matter is of urgent and pressing necessity and has to do with the delivery hold-up in getting western grain off the farms and into the export markets. As a result, Canada's export trade commitments to foreign buyers are endangered while some grain farmers may suffer financial losses because they are prevented from delivering their grain for sale at present higher prices. With consent I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Horner):

That this House recommends that the subject matter of this motion be forthwith referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture and that the appropriate officials of the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Pacific Railways, the Wheat Board and the Canada Grains Commission appear before the committee and that, as soon as possible after investigation, the committee report its findings and recommendations to this House.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

* * *

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ALLOCATION OF FUNDS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact local initiatives projects applications are now in the process of being approved, and in view of the fact there are widespread complaints concerning the allocation of funds for such projects per constituency, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave):

That the House of Commons instruct the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration to immediately review the allocation of funds to the constituencies and the criteria used for disbursement of these funds.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

* * *

TRANSPORT

PROVISION OF RAILWAY CARS TO SHIP BRITISH COLUMBIA LUMBER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a question of urgent and pressing necessity, namely the continuing shortage of boxcars for the loading and trans-shipment of lumber from British Columbia. Therefore I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House expresses the opinion that the Canadian National Railways should forthwith take steps to meet the request of the British Columbia Railway for railway cars to be used to load and ship lumber for sawmills served by the British Columbia Railway in order that the economy and people should no longer be disadvantaged by the inability of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED GRANTING OF LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS WITHOUT RCMP CLEARANCE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, that immigration officers across the country are granting landed immigrant status to certain applicants before clearance by the RCMP under Stage B of the 60-day amnesty period. I move, seconded by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek):

That the granting of landed immigrant status to certain applicants without clearance by the RCMP be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration and that an order be issued to call as witness the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to explain to the committee why the Stage B directive is not necessary in all cases.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

* * *

● (1410)

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PARTICIPATION BY CANADIAN CONTINGENT IN MIDDLE EAST PEACEKEEPING FORCE

On the order: Government Notices of Motions: October 31, 1973—The Secretary of State for External Affairs:

That it be resolved by the . . . House of Commons:

That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the Government's decision that Canadian Forces participate in the United Nations Emergency Force in the Middle East, and that this House do approve the same.

And that a Message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that this House has adopted a resolution approving of the participation of Canadian Forces in the United Nations Emergency Force in the Middle East, and requesting Their Honours to unite with this House in the approval of the same by filling up the blanks in the resolution with the words "Senate and".

Mr. Speaker: This notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under Government Orders at the next sitting of the House, pursuant to subsection (2) of Standing Order 21.

[Mr. Howard.]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE, UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COSTS AND ECONOMIC ACTIVITY—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION—ACTION TO REDUCE LABOUR SHORTAGE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Since the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate is high and we have recently been told by the appropriate minister that unemployment insurance costs will continue to run over $2 billion a year, yet the Minister of Finance says the economy is running at or near capacity, can he give us any reason for this situation and, specifically, has his department identified any disincentives to employment or any particular reason for these anomalies?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, an analysis of the labour force statistics in current terms is being undertaken by the Economic Council of Canada. The current state of the economy is, as the hon. gentleman has said and I have said on several occasions, at or near capacity. Any limitation on growth at the moment is not caused by want on the demand side but by restriction on the supply side. The increase in the strength of the economy indicated by the statistics to which the hon. gentleman has referred I think derives from the fact that the October year over year growth in employment is 487,000 new jobs or 5.8 per cent.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question, but I should like to make it very clear to the minister that I was simply referring to his statement that the economy is operating at or near full employment; I was not expressing that opinion myself.

An hon. Member: Full capacity.

Mr. Stanfield: Full capacity.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Tell us what you think.

An hon. Member: Go back to sleep, Joe.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the minister's indication that one of the things holding back further growth of the economy at the present time is a lack of both skilled and unskilled labour—he said this a few days ago—can he tell us anything his department is doing about this? He has referred to a study being done by the Economic Council of Canada, but is the minister or any branch of the government to his knowledge doing anything to reduce this problem resulting from a shortage particularly of unskilled labour?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, has already indicated to the House that particularly in respect of young workers, both men and women, the problem is matching the available labour supply to the jobs available for both skilled and unskilled labour, and he intends to accelerate the efforts of his department in that respect.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CONSISTENCY OF COST FORECAST AND UNEMPLOYMENT RATE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Specifically, is the rate of unemployment indicated today for October consistent with the minister's forecast of unemployment insurance costs for the year 1973, and will he advise the House what rate of unemployment for November and December would be consistent with the forecast of costs he presented to the House last week?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the forecast of costs of unemployment insurance benefit pay-out for 1973 was made on the basis of 10 months of experience and on the assumption that the economy would be performing in the last two months of the year generally at the same rate it had been up to that time.

POSITION OF 1973 ADMINISTRATIVE BUDGET AND COMPUTER INSTALLATION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. On November 1 the minister indicated in answer to questions by myself and by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley that the administrative budget for 1973 will be met and that the computer installation is complete, indicating that there are no further additions under way. Having had time to investigate and consider his answer, does the minister still stand by those statements?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my firm expectation is that the administrative budget of the Unemployment Insurance Commission as forecast earlier this year and as approved in the estimates will be met. In so far as computer installation is concerned, I believe I answered a question with regard to the possibility of further major installations and said they were constantly upgrading and improving that operation but that I did not anticipate major installations of the nature that were innovated a year or two ago.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I ask for your indulgence. I am not sure whether I have a supplementary, a point of order or a point of privilege. I am aware from documents I have in my possession that not only is the administrative budget for 1973 in very serious trouble but that major computer installations are even now being installed in both Ontario and Quebec. I want to know how we can get an honest answer from the minister, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the minister is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Andras: As is customary, Mr. Speaker, with references to documents, I wonder whether the hon. member would be prepared to table the documents he has referred to as being in his possession.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member now rises on a question of privilege. I think this might be a good occasion at the beginning of the question period to remind hon. members that if we continue on the road on which we started last week and spend most of the question period on points of order and questions of privilege it is the members themselves who suffer. I would hope we could solve our problems without resorting to points of order or questions of privilege. It seems to me that essentially this is a question of debate between the minister and the hon. member. Perhaps they might have an opportunity to debate the point on another occasion rather than during the question period.

* * *

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN FUNDS

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is not about computers but about people. In view of the fact the unemployment rate is running in the neighbourhood of 5.8 per cent as projected today, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he can inform the House, since the amount of money allocated for local initiatives programs is half of what it was last year, if consideration is being given by his department to an increase in the total allocation of funds available so as to ensure that some of these unemployed people will have work this winter?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I note, first, that the unemployment rate has considerably improved over the position at this time last year. I also believe I have answered the question on two or three occasions recently by saying that if such a decision is made it will be announced in the normal manner in the House.

* * *

ENERGY

OIL EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POLICY IN LIGHT OF STATEMENTS BY MINISTER AND SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. I should like to ask if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was stating government policy in his comment made to the press as reported on November 6 that "Canada would cut off the export of refined petroleum products to the United States if Arab countries made it a condition for continuing crude oil shipments". May I ask the Prime Minister also if the Secretary of State for External Affairs was stating government policy when he said, according to today's press reports, that "there has been no cabinet decision to freeze consignments refined at Come-by-Chance, Newfoundland, and pre-sold to the United States". Can the Prime Minister tell us whether these two statements represent government policy, or what is government policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was referring to a particular case in a particular circumstance. The Secretary of State for External Affairs was referring to the general government policy which is one that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: What is it?

Mr. Hees: This is doubletalk de luxe.

Mr. Trudeau: If I get a second question I will answer it, Mr. Speaker.

● (1420)

Mr. Douglas: I hesitate having to use my second question to get an answer to my first question. I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he would care to reconcile these two apparently divergent points of view and tell us what the government's policy is with respect to oil which is being presold to the United States and refined in Canadian refineries such as at Come-By-Chance, Newfoundland?

Mr. Trudeau: The general policy is that we will not—

An hon. Member: Make up your mind what you want.

An hon. Member: The right hand does not know what the left hand is doing.

Mr. Hees: Get back to square one.

An hon. Member: Start again.

Mr. Trudeau: —alter our foreign policy or our good relationships with the Americans under any pressure from outside.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Why are all your members laughing?

An hon. Member: We are looking at you.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure hon. members are enjoying themselves at present. Perhaps I should not interrupt at this point but allow hon. members to continue to enjoy themselves. However, it seems to me we are not making as much progress as we would have if we were not quite as noisy as we have been during the last few minutes.

AVAILABILITY OF PRODUCTS REFINED AT COME-BY-CHANCE TO MEET POSSIBLE OIL SHORTAGE IN EASTERN CANADA

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could try pumping another well that I hope it will be less dry. I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

An hon. Member: Another dry well.

Mr. Douglas: I should like to ask him whether any of the petroleum products refined at Come-By-Chance, Newfoundland, would be available this winter to meet the needs of the Atlantic provinces in the event there is an oil shortage in eastern Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I would remind the hon. gentleman that the refinery is not yet in operation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald: If it does go into operation this winter, it will be covered by the export control regime we now have in effect with regard to refined products.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands for one supplementary, the hon. member for Calgary North, and then attempt to complete the first round of questioning by recognizing the hon. member for Shefford.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR TRANSPORTING TO QUEBEC OIL OFFERED BY ALBERTA

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the offer by Mr. Getty, the Alberta Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, to make available to the province of Quebec 100,000 barrels of oil a day, may I ask the minister what arrangements have been made for delivering that quantity of oil to Quebec? Have any tankers been chartered to move oil from Vancouver to eastern Canada, and what capacity will there be in the Trans Mountain pipeline in view of the minister's statement on November 5 that it has a 50,000 barrel spare capacity while Mr. Getty says there is no spare capacity? How does the government propose to deliver these 100,000 barrels a day?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): During the period of time navigation will be open it is anticipated that up to 100,000 barrels a day can be achieved through the Interprovincial Pipeline system and by Great Lakes shipping. At the moment the achieved level is around 55,000 barrels. There is some hope this can be increased subject to the availability of loading facilities. My information from the National Energy Board is that there will be an excess capacity of between 35,000 and 55,000 barrels per day through the Trans Mountain pipeline system for shipment via the Panama Canal to the Portland pipeline or to Atlantic ports, and that a number of companies which are in the position of using feed stock in the Atlantic market are now considering the international charter market for the purpose of obtaining the necessary tankerage for moving it around.

TAR SANDS OIL AND SYNCRUDE PROJECT—POSSIBILITY OF TAKEOVER BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT UNDER BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources a question arising from a news story which has broken just this afternoon. Is consideration being given by the federal government to taking over the Syncrude project and the tar sands under the provisions of section 92(10)(c) of the British North America Act?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Sir.

Mr. Woolliams: Then I ask the Prime Minister; he has heard my question to the minister. Is any consideration being given to using section (92(10)(c) to take over either the Syncrude project or the tar sands in Alberta and declaring it to be for the good of all Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The question has just been answered, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT WITH PERSONS WHOSE LANDS EXPROPRIATED

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Public Works, or of the hon. Minister of Transport. I understand that they both received a very warm welcome in Sainte-Scholastique last week.

Has the government reached a decision regarding Sainte-Scholastique expropriated owners? Has an agreement been reached with each of them and is the government planning to make final offers to them?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, nearly 90 per cent of the Mirabel expropriated owners have accepted the government offers. During the weekend, the Minister of Transport and myself proposed five very generous adjustments. They involved an additional $3,000 for removal expenses to all those who have had to move, the interests from 1969, the notary charges for the purchase of new properties, an indemnity to those who lost preferential interest rates and an additional indemnity of 10 per cent for those who had to move within 90 days. These adjustments are very generous and were not stipulated by the previous legislation.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary. The minister has just said that 90 per cent of the expropriated owners have accepted the government offers. In view of what was offered to them last week, does this mean that this additional $3,000 will be paid to 90 per cent of those who were expropriated?

Mr. Dubé: Yes, Mr. Speaker, providing they were owners and resided in their homes.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Then it is not over.

Mr. Grafftey: It has just begun.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, it has just begun.

* * *

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Since regional unemployment in the Atlantic region has risen 1 per cent as of the October 20 statistics, and since the New Brunswick rate on a seasonally adjusted basis has risen from 7.4 per cent to 10.2 per cent, and the Newfoundland rate has risen from 12.1 per cent to 13.6 per cent, does the Minister of Finance plan to introduce any specific measures to alleviate this serious situation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the winter capital works projects and the LIP projects introduced by my colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, are directed toward the higher unemployment areas. I should draw the attention of the House to the fact that on a seasonally adjusted basis employment in the Atlantic provinces during the first ten months of this year was up 6.5 per cent over the same period last year, which is higher than in any other area of the country.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman wishes to quote figures we might take a look at the New Brunswick figures as a basis for a further question.

• (1430)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be recognized for his supplementary question, of course, but the hon. member appreciates that the purpose of a question is to seek information, not to convey information to the House. The hon. member is recognized for a supplementary.

Mr. McCain: Since this is to be a partisan situation, Mr. Speaker, by all hands on your right, would the minister state why it has been the policy of the government to reduce the allocation for LIP projects in the Atlantic area in view of increasing unemployment?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, that is not so in relation to the total allocation across the country.

Oral Questions

FISHERIES

RESPONSE TO MINISTER'S REQUEST THAT RUSSIANS CEASE HERRING FISHERY OFF GEORGES BANK

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. Last month the minister indicated in a release that he was asking Russia to stop fishing for herring off Georges Bank. Has the minister had a reply and, if so, what was it?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the Russian fishing vessels in question immediately departed and we have not seen them since. I am still awaiting an official reply from the Soviet government.

Mr. McCain: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte rises on a point of order.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, last week a representative of the department in charge of LIP was in my office to advise me that the allocation for the constituency had been cut by almost 50 per cent. In view of this, I should like to ask the minister what possible justification there is for his remark in respect of the Atlantic region?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will, I am sure, agree that this may be argument or debate but it is hardly a point of order. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe on a supplementary.

PROGRAM FOR DEVELOPMENT OF CAPLIN RESOURCES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Minister of Fisheries. In another release the minister indicated that he is spending $2.3 million on the development of caplin. In view of the fact that the Norwegians are overexploiting the caplin resources on the Grand Banks, what action is the minister going to take to make sure that the money spent on the program to develop caplin will not be lost and of no use?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the caplin resources, like the other fisheries resources in the North Atlantic, will be managed by the 16 nations who are members of the International North Atlantic Fisheries Commission. The caplin is not overexploited and Canada expects to take advantage of the opportunity.

POSSIBLE USE OF NAVY VESSELS TO PROTECT FISHERY WITHIN TERRITORIAL WATERS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. Because of the great need to protect the fishing rights of our fishermen within our territorial waters and the proven inability of our aircraft to do this job in a satisfactory manner, is the minister considering or will he consider the use of our naval destroyer escorts to carry out this task because of their ability to do the job?

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we are not giving consideration to the use of warships in our fishing fleets. I think the hon. member will know that fisheries protection is the responsibility of the Department of the Environment and Fisheries. We support them with aircraft, as the hon. member has indicated, but we know of no situation or emergency that requires the use or even the presence of warships with the fishing fleets.

Mr. Hees: Because of the fact that foreign fishing fleets are invading our territorial waters in large numbers every day and obviously—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is argument. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for St. John's West on a supplementary question, after which I will see the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASED SURVEILLANCE IN LIGHT OF PRESENCE OF FOREIGN SHIPS CLOSE TO NORTHEAST COAST OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Fisheries. Has the minister caused an investigation to be undertaken into the presence of a large number of foreign ships fishing very close to the northeast coast of Newfoundland, and does he intend to step up surveillance with respect to those ships fishing within the 12-mile limit?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the answer to both questions is yes.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I indicated a moment ago that perhaps we should go next to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. I will return to the hon. member for St. John's West later.

* * *

GRAIN

COMMITMENT BY RAILWAYS TO PROVIDE CARS FOR MOVEMENT

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the serious problem existing with regard to the movement of grain I should like to ask the minister whether he has been able to obtain any commitment from Canadian National Railways or the Canadian Pacific Railway to initiate a crash program for grain movement so they can catch up on the 75 million bushel shortfall which now exists in the transportation of grain, according to one of the commissioners of the Canadian Wheat Board, Mr. Esdale?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, first of all I think I should make it clear that any reference to a shortfall of that magnitude is a comparison of our exports this year with our new record of exports last year. We do not anticipate during the course of this year to export as much grain as last year. The railways have discussed with the Canadian Wheat Board and ourselves the question of the number of cars they can put into the movement. We have been carefully watching their adherence to that commitment. It is a matter of concern, but so is the movement of all products of Canada because of the booming economy.

Mr. Gleave: A year ago, at the time the purchase was made of some 2,000 hopper cars, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board assured the House that the two railroads had given a guarantee that they would maintain their usual number of boxcars and keep in service for the movement of grain the amount of rolling stock which was customary. Since they have failed to live up to this commitment, can the minister tell the House what discussions he is going to undertake so that they will live up to it?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the specific understanding which was contained at the time of the purchase of the hopper cars was that the removal of equipment from the fleet would not change in its speed; there would be no acceleration in the movement. That is an aspect of the discussion we are having with the railways, drawing their attention to the fact that they have a commitment to the movement of grain. They recognize this of course and are trying to meet it with the cars they have available while at the same time trying to move in an adequate fashion unusually large amounts of potash in hopper cars normally available for grain, large quantities of lumber and so on, with almost every product you could mention.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question. I directed a question to the Minister of Transport on this matter last week and he informed me as follows: "I, personally, have a commitment from CNR and CPR that they will meet their commitment. If they did not, that means I was misled." Has the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board also been misled?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

[Translation]

ENERGY

QUEBEC—MEASURES TO DEAL WITH OIL SHORTAGE—DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTER

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

At his meeting next Thursday with the Quebec Minister of Natural Resources will he be making his colleague some realistic proposals concerning the general problem of energy and more particularly the eventual oil crisis in Quebec?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think that the member is mistaken about such a meeting. I will meet my Quebec counterpart on November 23 and federal officials will meet officials of every province next Thursday, but there has been no meeting with my counterpart since September.

We are obviously prepared, through officials as well as ministers, to send to provincial authorities the report concerning oil supplies, international as well as Canadian, and also to discuss measures aimed at keeping our supply.

* * *

[English]

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

DISMISSAL OF EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, POLICY PLANNING DIVISION—INQUIRY AS TO MINISTERIAL DIRECTIVE RESPECTING ULTIMATUM TO NATIVE COUNCIL PRESIDENT

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs I should like to ask the Prime Minister if Mr. Teron, the new president or CMHC, acted under a directive from the minister or any other member of the cabinet when he issued an ultimatum to the president of the Native Council of Canada not to get involved in the Walter Rudnicki affair or else?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Acting Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, acting for my colleague who is away on government business, I must say that I have no knowledge of such an instruction by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to the Native Council. I doubt very much that such an instruction was issued because I know that the minister in particular is keen about consultation and has carried on many consultations with Mr. Belcourt and others of the native people.

● (1440)

Mr. Oberle: It appears that Mr. Teron, who is a new man in the corporation, has acted on his own. In light of the seriousness of the result of his action, is the Prime Minister considering launching a parliamentary investigation into this very serious matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a committee of parliament will have the opportunity to ask questions of Mr. Teron when he appears before it.

* * *

ENERGY

OIL—INQUIRY AS TO INSTITUTION OF COURT ACTION BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AGAINST ALBERTA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It is authoritatively reported in the press that the government of Canada is taking action against the government of Alberta in respect of the Alberta government's Canada first oil policy. Is action being taken, and on what constitutional principle, allegedly thwarted or altered by the government of Alberta, is the Canadian government proceeding?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that question is obviously a sweeping one in terms of legal opinion. I know of no action having been commenced. Naturally, the federal government in relation to any aspect of trade and commerce is always extremely conscious of its responsibility to ensure that this nation remains a one-market nation and not a divided nation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is an admirable principle, but it does not answer the question. Is the government of Canada through the Department of Justice today having consideration given to the drafting of an action against the government of Alberta? A simple yes or no will be sufficient without the superfluous words the minister has just used.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the right hon. member is talking about.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That answer is either contempt of the House or a revelation of the ignorance of the minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East and then the hon. member for St. John's East who has a supplementary to a previous question.

* * *

SHIPPING

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO IMPLEMENT DARLING REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the great importance to the people of Atlantic Canada, will the minister enlighten the House with regard to his intentions respecting legislation to implement some of the basic provisions of the Darling report? Pursuant to the minister's announcement he would go ahead with implementation of that report, can he now tell us when we may expect legislation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I announced that a new bill will be introduced in the House, a new maritime code. The Darling report will be translated into that legislation.

Mr. Forrestall: I am sure we are all aware the minister will at some point present legislation. However, can he now indicate some timetable such as this session, next session or the next parliament?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I will consult with the government House leader who will have to consult with the other House leaders. Following that, I will give an answer.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

FISHERIES

PROTEST TO SOVIET UNION AGAINST IGNORING OF QUOTAS—ADDITIONAL SURVEILLANCE AIRCRAFT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact the Russians seem to be ignoring their ICNAF quotas with impunity, has the minister made any formal protest to the Soviet Union? Second, has he requested from his colleague, the Minister of National Defence, extra surveillance aircraft?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, we made a vehement protest to the Soviet Union. Soviet vessels do not move about with impunity. Recently the U.S.S.R. agreed to inspection of all its vessels, not only above deck but below deck, whenever we approach them.

Mr. McGrath: What steps is the minister taking to enforce the ICNAF quota system in view of the evidence that the Soviet Union is ignoring it in our fishing area?

Mr. Davis: As the hon. member knows, we are building new vessels. Also, all other nations fishing in the North Atlantic have similar powers to our own. They can board vessels of other nations and report the results.

METHOD USED TO DETERMINE NUMBER OF FOREIGN VESSELS FISHING OFF NORTHEAST COAST OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Fisheries what capability was used in the past few days to determine the number of fishing vessels that were fishing off the northeast coast of Newfoundland? In view of the fact the local people reported 40 vessels, eight factory ships and one supply ship and a southbound CNR boat had to alter its course and take shelter because of the presence of those ships, and yet the department reports sighting only two vessels, what capability was used to make this observation?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, we co-ordinate counts. A count is made not only by our protective officers on service vessels but by military aircraft flying for Canada and other nations.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will be recognized for a supplementary and then the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Lundrigan: Is the minister prepared to table in the House evidence to substantiate the use of the aircraft, the number of hours flown and the number of boats used, the number of man-hours and the like so that we can have some understanding of what type of intensive investigation was carried out? We will then be able to figure out who is telling lies. Is the minister telling lies or the people? We believe the people.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have had difficulty before and I hope we do not get involved in the same difficulty again.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

MEMBERS OF THE SENATE—REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION OR DECLARATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the many corporate directorships held by members of the other place include directorships in a number of oil companies with which the government is having to deal in a special way because of the current crisis, companies which the government might even have to take over, will the Prime Minister seek to find ways in which to expedite either the enacting of legislation or the declaration of government policy in this important field of conflict of interest?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with respect, it seems to me that the member is several months late. We enunciated our policy several months ago. We presented it in the form of a paper to the House. We indicated this would be dealt with by a standing committee of the House as soon as it had dealt with the problem of election expenses. We are waiting on that committee to study this matter. The government's recommendations are clear. They affect not only the House of Commons but the other place. We are waiting for the action of the members of this House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the fact the answer the Prime Minister has now given is the same answer that was given last week, namely, that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections is occupied with another piece of legislation, would it not be possible to refer the appropriate documents or papers to another standing committee so that the House of Commons can express itself on this matter right away rather than after something serious develops?

Mr. Trudeau: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the government has no objection to that. The House leaders of the various parties should discuss this possibility. It is a matter of giving priority to this over other work which may be in front of members of the House. We have no objection if such an arrangement can be worked out among the House leaders of the various parties. I repeat, the government has come forward with its suggestions and we are attendant now upon the will of the House.

ALLEGATION THAT JUSTICE DEPARTMENT LAWYER ACTING AS PAID OFFICER OF CROWN CORPORATION

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I wish to direct a supplementary question on the subject of conflict of interest to the Minister of Justice. Does the minister consider it proper for a lawyer employed by the Department of Justice to act at the same time in the capacity of a paid officer of a Crown corporation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into the specific case to which the hon. member is referring.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister is always looking into things and coming up with the wrong answers. The minister knows the situation full well. Does he consider it proper that a lawyer employed by the Department of Justice should act at the same time as a paid officer of a Crown corporation?

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate he is repeating the question he asked in the first instance.

* * *

GRAIN

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALLEVIATE SHORTAGE OF RAILWAY CARS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. It has to do with the slow movement of grain referred to by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. Specifically, what is the minister's department, together with the Department of Transport, doing to alleviate the shortage of cars for grain transportation in western Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Both the Minister of Transport and officials working with the grains group have been in touch with the railroads a number of times in recent days and weeks to emphasize to them the importance of moving grain, particularly in this immediate period, and to urge them to examine the priority attached to this movement compared to the requirements of other movements which might be more readily postponed. The result has been some specific commitments by the railways as to the number of cars they would assign to the movement—still not as many as we would have liked. We are now watching very closely to see whether this stated commitment is, indeed, being fulfilled by the railways.

Mr. Murta: In view of the fact that in 1963 the two railroads combined had somewhere in the neighbourhood of 88,000 cars available for general purpose transportation, including grain, and that in 1973 the number is down to approximately 48,000 cars, what is being done other than these general statements? Is consideration being given at the present time by the government to building more rolling stock or urging the railways to build more rolling stock for the purpose of transporting grain?

Mr. Lang: The over-all deterioration of the boxcar fleet, which is so carefully documented in the study done for the grains group and for the Canada Grains Council in the report on the state of the industry, indicates a clear need for additional equipment, preferably of a specialized kind such as we purchased last year in the form of 2,000 hopper cars. We are now holding discussions with both the industry and the railroads about the way in which this need should be met; there are some necessary moves to be made by the industry relating to the manner in which these cars should be handled in the interest of efficiency, and by the railroads respecting the upgrading of trackage. This has to be taken into consideration as well as the actual decision concerning the ordering and purchase of additional cars.

Mr. Norval Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the minister who manipulates the Canadian Wheat Board.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask his question in a straightforward manner. I hope he will not mind my bringing it to his attention that when a question is asked in this way he risks not having it answered at all and perhaps risks not having the opportunity to ask the question at all.

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I apologize for placing an interpretation on the responsibility of the minister who answers for the Wheat Board. As most of the grain which is moving on the Prairies is moving by truck—this may well be by the minister's design—is the minister aware that ships are waiting at Vancouver and Thunder Bay to be loaded with grain and that our position as a supplier of grain to the world is in serious danger?

Mr. Lang: The only comment I have about the grain moving by trucks is that a lot of it moves by truck on its way into the elevator system. Last week about 30 million bushels left the elevators. In fact, the volume of grain at Thunder Bay and at Vancouver is slowly but gradually increasing. There are one, two, three or four ships waiting in Vancouver according to the daily reports I receive. The turnaround at the Lakehead is improving. This is simply another way of saying that as a result of the shortage of cars grain is delayed in reaching the terminals, and we are directing—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

POST OFFICE

INCREASE IN RURAL MAIL CARRIERS' COMPENSATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. In view of increased costs incurred by rural mail carriers as a result of increases in the price of gasoline and other items, and bearing in mind the minister's reply to the question I asked on October 30, can the hon. gentleman now say when action will be taken by his department to compensate the rural mail carriers for these additional costs?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, an amount to cover increased costs incurred by rural mail carriers has been submitted for approval by the House in supplementary estimates. As soon as this has been accepted, I will then be in a position to give details, on motions, concerning a new formula which from now on will apply to all rural carriers in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre rising on a point of order?

Mr. Benjamin: No, Mr. Speaker. I was hoping to ask a supplementary to the previous question.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously we have not been able to settle the very important question which was raised by a number of hon. members and about which the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre wishes to ask a supplementary. Perhaps we might resume the debate tomorrow. I will, of course, remember tomorrow that the hon. member was waiting for an opportunity to ask a supplementary. I will recognize the hon. member for Dauphin before calling orders of the day.

* * *

ENERGY

OIL EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the minister's statement that Canadian oil supplies to the United States would not be cut off in the present situation, has the government made any official commitment as to the minimum amount of crude oil which may be exported during this winter season?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The hon. member did not quote what I said. I said that oil supplies to the United States would not be reduced in order to appease the Arabs.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Ellis: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. A while ago Your Honour recognized the Minister of Manpower and Immigration on a question of privilege. I merely wish to have it on record that I am quite prepared to table any documents in my possession at a public inquiry.

An hon. Member: Why don't you?

Mr. Drury: Contempt of parliament!

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been endeavouring for a week to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, of which I have given him notice. It has life and death implications and perhaps the Chair would be willing to allow me to put the question.

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member knows, the Chair has no objection whatsoever, but I wonder whether this life and death question might not wait until tomorrow. However, I certainly would not wish to take such a responsibility upon my shoulders. The hon. member will have to examine his conscience on that score, and if he still wishes to ask a question after the question period has ended I have no objection. The hon. member is recognized for that purpose.

* * *

HEALTH

AVAILABILITY OF DRUG, ISOPRENALINE, WITHOUT PRESCRIPTION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the drug Isoprenaline, used in the treatment of asthma and regarded by medical authorities as a cause of death through heart failure, available without prescription in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I think, indeed, that the answer may have to wait until tomorrow until I have checked all the facts. In the meantime, I suggest that people suffering from asthma should abstain from this drug for a day.

Mr. Knight: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It arises from the fact that both the Minister of Agriculture and his parliamentary secretary have gone to Rome for a month. Would the government House leader tell us which minister will be responsible for their duties?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the Acting Minister of Agriculture is the gallant Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, perhaps it would save time tomorrow if I were to give the hon. member for Brandon-Souris his answer today. I have just noticed that it is in my briefing book. On July 19, 1973, manufacturers of the product were advised of our intent to recommend that it be available only on prescription. Steps in this connection are under way and I expect that regulations to this effect will be passed very soon.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House resumed, from Friday, November 9, consideration of Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, as reported, (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6.

● (1500)

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in what I think ought to be one of the most important debates that has ever occurred in this House of Commons, namely the debate on Bill C-132. During the few moments at my disposal I do not propose to discuss some of the items examined so eloquently by other members of my party, such as the fact that the bill is entirely negative, that the bill is for the first time, as far as I know, introducing legislation where to a high degree we are to be governed in this country by men instead of by law, or the fact that there is no positive introduction of measures to encourage ownership by Canadians of the resources of this country. Rather I want to direct the attention of the House for a few moments to the general nature of the bill, particularly to the importance of the amendments introduced by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay).

The fact of the matter is that this bill, cannot be given proper consideration because we must consider it outside the framework of any definition on the part of the government of what economic policy this country is going to follow in the future, indeed even outside the framework of a policy for the present time. This makes an assessment of the bill almost impossible.

I am not suggesting that the bill should be debated in terms of the traditional goals of economic policymaking we know so well, namely the goal of full employment, relative price stability, less regional disparity of income and more equitable distribution of income among all Canadians.

The question raised, but not examined by the legislation, a question that is so important, is what direction are we going to take in our general philosophy with respect to economic policymaking in the Canadian economy? I was distressed to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) say in response to a question today that the economy is now operating at close to its full capacity, and this at the same time as we have a 5.8 per cent unemployment rate in this nation; indeed, in some parts of the country the rate is 10 per cent. I do not know whether or not the Minister of Finance suggests that the structure of the Canadian economy has changed so much that we must now accept the proposition that if we are to have the economy operating at the government's definition of full capacity we shall have to accept an unemployment rate of 5½ per cent or some figure of this sort, a totally unacceptable rate. It seems to have escaped the notice of the minister that this is the highest unemployment rate of any industrialized country in the world at the present time. However, it does illustrate the need to examine whether the foundations of current economic policymaking are appropriate. Where is this country going to go during the next quarter of a century? Do we have to have high unemployment, inflation, regional disparities as a continuous situation?

During the course of this century we have had two basic patterns of development in Canada. First, until world war II we had the triangular trade pattern with which we are all familiar. We shipped our raw materials and other products to the British Empire and used our surplus exchange to buy manufactured goods from the United States. Then, after world war II there was a basic shift in philosophy concerning the management of the Canadian economy, and our policy moved to what I would call in shorthand terms "continentalism". This continentalism was not unusual given the fact that we are so close to the United States, and that there were changes in the rest of the world which made it difficult for the Canadian economy to develop through dependence on Imperial preferences. Moreover, we needed capital to develop the economy.

During this "continentalist" period there has been growth in the Canadian economy, but it has been very uneven and erratic. We have had high unemployment and deep recessions during much of the period, and we are now experiencing a rapid increase in the rate of inflation, one of the most rapid rates of any country in the world. Has our performance been the result of this basic philosophy? The question is worth examining because one result of our policy of continentalism has been that our policymaking has been inextricably linked to policymaking in the United States. Indeed, one could argue that we in this country today are not able to have an independent economic policy.

The degree of inter-relationship with the United States at the present time is clear to all. When that country had a balance of payments crisis and introduced measures to solve it, their decision to devalue caused a devaluation of the Canadian dollar which contributed to the high rate of inflation in this country. When the United States decided to introduce an interest equalization tax, what was our response? To rush down to Washington to try to be exempted from that interest equalization tax. When the DISC program was introduced in the United States, what was our response? To rush down to Washington to see whether we could be exempted from that. The reason I mention these examples is to indicate that the net result of the policy we have followed since the end of world war II has culminated in the result that we are now restricted in making decisions respecting economic policymaking in this country which are independent of decisions that are made in the United States.

I suggest that the debate that we have had on this issue in the last week or so should really revolve around this fundamental question: Are we going to have a change in our attitude toward continentalism? We have now reached a period in the history of Canada when we have to assess this question very carefully and effectively, because the premises on which Canada entered into this kind of policymaking have changed. When the Canadian government decided after world war II that this was the policy in the best interests of the country, the decision was based on the assumption that the U.S. dollar would be a strong currency on international exchanges, that the United States economy would remain strong in the world throughout the 20th century, and that there would be continuing surplus of raw materials throughout the world.

These assumptions may no longer be valid, Mr. Speaker. The United States dollar is no longer a strong world currency. Indeed, it is a currency that has enormous problems associated with it. The U.S. economy has had an endless amount of trouble. So as far as Canada is concerned, basing economic policy on what is done in the United States may not necessarily lead to the best development of the Canadian economy in the future.

The difficulty about this bill is that it does not provide any indication of what the government's position is on this issue. It does not indicate whether or not the government realizes that the net result of the policy that we have followed for the last 25 years may have caused us to lose a great deal of sovereignty in the field of economic policymaking something which is fundamental to any country that wants to pursue its own goals and to develop its own destiny.

The bill does not deal with investments in unrelated enterprises or with the problem of using retained earnings for investment in other enterprises in the Canadian economy. In fact, the bill deals only with new capital investment, something which I am sure the minister will agree has been anything but significant during the last two or three years. In many ways the bill is, in a sense—and I use the word with care—a somewhat fraudulent piece of legislation because it implies that it is dealing with a problem with which it does not deal at all. It does not deal with the question of the takeover of firms by existing subsidiaries operating in the Canadian economy at the present time which has been the major cause of the increase in foreign investment in Canada today.

Mr. Gillespie: It does not do what?

Mr. Gillies: It does not look at the problem of the takeover of firms by existing subsidiaries in related areas and the use of retained earnings in this country today.

● (1510)

Mr. Gillespie: Have you read the bill?

Mr. Gillies: Yes, very carefully.

Mr. Gillespie: You will find that all takeovers are covered.

Mr. Gillies: Not in related areas.

Mr. Gillespie: They are in later. You will see it is with related areas too, and you will find that in the bill if you read it. You just have not read the bill.

Mr. Gillies: I certainly have. Similarly, it is hard to assess the intention of the framers of the bill because the bill is not placed in the framework of some type of industrial strategy for the nation as a whole. Is the reason for the bill to strengthen the industrial sector so there will be more employment brought about in manufacturing? If the bill is designed to increase manufacturing employment in Canada, and if that is what it is designed to do, how will it accomplish this? If it is designed to bring about more independence in economic policy making in Canada, in formulation of tax policy and monetary policy as well as exchange rate policy, the bill will have no effect.

This bill will do absolutely nothing about the fundamental problems in the Canadian economy or the critical question of economic sovereignty in Canada at the present time. To suggest that it will is misleading. This bill does not tell us anything about the basic belief of this government as to how the Canadian economy must be developed in the rest of the century. It is simply another ad hoc measure, because it is not set within the framework of an industrial strategy for Canada.

One cannot be astonished that many provinces are upset over a bill which is so vague that they cannot be sure of its intentions. That is why the amendment brought forward by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) is so important.

Mr. Gillespie: Which one?

Mr. Gillies: The amendment calling for consultation with the provinces as put forward by the hon. member for Central Nova should seriously be considered by the minister.

Mr. Gillespie: He has put forward several.

Mr. Gillies: Let me say why it is so important and so worthy of consideration. The amendment provides the minister with a great opportunity to make a major breakthrough in economic policy-making for better operation of the economy. The fact is that we have not been able to reduce substantially regional disparities in Canada. If one looks at the statistics he will see that even with the large operations under DREE our regional disparities are great. Surely, it cannot be surprising that people in the Atlantic provinces, and some of the other areas, are distressed at a bill of this kind. The nature of this bill suggests that one of the important things for them, namely new investment, may well be limited.

Given the unemployment rates in these areas, an unemployment rate today in the Atlantic provinces of approximately 10 per cent, how can the minister tolerate such a situation? How can he tolerate the highest unemployment rate of any industrial country in the world? How can the minister bring in a piece of legislation when the people of these areas are so concerned about this bill they are afraid it will make their problems even worse? The amendment which was introduced provides an opportunity to bring the provinces into the making of decisions which affect them so much?

One has to admit that broad-gauged economic policy making in Canada, using a broad brush in fiscal and monetary policy, has not solved our regional problem. So what we should be talking about in terms of economic policy making, is the whole question of how we are going to bring in and use the input of the provinces in developing national economic policy.

I am suggesting to the minister that, by accepting this amendment, he has a tremendous opportunity to make a first step in a positive direction. There is no question that in the future we will have to change the way in which monetary policy operates, that we will have to interrelate the making of fiscal policies by the provincial and federal governments, if we are going to achieve Canada's potential. We have to consider such issues because the way we have been doing things in the past has not worked.

We cannot ask a part of Canada to live with 10 per cent unemployment. This is immoral, it is improper and certainly an ineffective use of our resources. We must try to do something different, and I am pleading with the minister to take a hard, long look at this possibility. If he can develop, through the use of this bill, a vehicle by which we can really create input by the slow-growth provinces in the development and formulation of policy so that we really have federalism working, and the provinces feel they have an input which is being considered by the federal government in the development of policy, then we will have moved a considerable degree in the direction of the way in which economic policy must be made in Canada in the future. Our methods in the past have not worked. Surely, what we want to do now is find a new mechanism for solving regional problems, and the minister has a vehicle if he accepts the amendment. It is not my suggestion that provinces opt out. It is not in any way weakening the bill. In fact, I suggest the amendment is making it stronger, and is making it more effective.

What the bill does now in terms of the over-all problem of foreign investment in Canada is not very significant. By accepting this amendment this minister will have the opportunity of working out administrative procedures and setting a whole new direction in economic policy making in this country which will effectively relate the work of the central government with the work of the provinces, and this is essential if we are to find solutions to the economic problems of the nation.

I see my time is nearly up, Mr. Speaker, but we must recognize that the Canadian economy has been operating far below its potential. There are probably many reasons for this that one can put forth, including the truncation of our manufacturing segment because of a high degree of foreign ownership and the fact it has been developed in such a way that Canadian firms are not involved to the degree they might be in research, development and so forth. These reasons have all been brought up in the debate. But surely another reason Canada's economy is operating below potential is that we are not organized or structured to make effective policy.

I want to leave this one suggestion with the minister, and I make it with the greatest respect and with all the emphasis I can. By accepting the amendment and bringing the provinces into the discussions in an effective fashion he can lay a foundation which can be a guide for the development of other economic policy in Canada in the future. If we fail to adopt that course, we will not do anything about the question of foreign investment and we will have discontented provinces. The bill will have missed a great opportunity. I really urge the minister to accept the amendment. He must want it. He cannot possibly be content with the way things have happened in the past. I do not think we should miss the opportunity provided by the amendment of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) to provide provincial participation. I say through you, Mr. Speaker, to the minister that this would be really a start, a new direction, in economic policy making in this country which must come because the past broad gauged policies have not worked. Now is the time for a new start in economic policy making.

• (1520)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Foreign Investment Review Act

[Translation]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak after the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) whom I want to congratulate for taking a somewhat belated interest in the passing of this bill, but he does seem to show some knowledge of it.

[English]

I should like to indicate that the hon. member, indeed, is not contemplating the bill in its full force and effect, because surely most of the points he brought to the attention of the minister have been brought to the minister's attention on previous occasions by members of his own party even before the preparation of this particular legislation. I suggest that the aims the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) is seeking would be best given effect by the provisions in the bill as it stands. I would refer to clause 2, subclause (2)(e) which contains an express provision for discussion of the items that are given importance by the provinces. This subclause reads as follows:

> In assessing, for the purposes of this Act, whether any acquisition of control of a Canadian business enterprise or the establishment of any new business in Canada is or is likely to be of significant benefit to Canada, the factors to be taken into account are as follows:

Then, they are enumerated. Paragraph (e) reads as follows:

> the compatibility of the acquisition or establishment with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policy objectives enunciated by the government or legislature of any province likely to be significantly affected by the acquisition or establishment.

There is no doubt that of the five considerations that are to be taken into account by the minister and by the cabinet one of the five—and there are only five—is the question of policy suggestions enunciated by the provinces. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that these provisions will be effective but that proposals contained in the amendment would bring about the development of an auction system regarding foreign investment in Canada. Surely Nova Scotia, the province from which the mover of the amendment comes, is interested in new investment regardless of its origin. Surely, Nova Scotia government would be approached by the applicant or potential investor in order determine whether or not that particular province would support an application to the federal government and what its specific contribution would be relating to that particular investment.

In this way we would avoid the necessity of every province in the Maritimes having to be advised of this particular potential investment which cause them to start saying, "me first". One province would offer better terms than another and so on. The investor would be placed in the position where his intentions were no longer confidential. He would be involved in the political arena at the outset in respect of which province would get that investment. I believe this is where the real danger lies. The applicant would not benefit from the advice of one area in which he wished to place his investment; indeed, he would be faced with competition between several areas.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I suggest that the amendment is quite explicit in some respects and very vague in others. It reads in part as follows:

> A copy of the notice—

That includes the whole kit and kaboodle.

> —shall be sent by the Agency forthwith by registered mail to the province or provinces likely to be significantly affected . . .

I repeat "significantly". Mr. Speaker, we know the nature of investment in Canada and the nature of the corporate entities in Canada. I defy any member here to indicate an interest which is likely to be purchased by a foreign investor which is not operative in the majority of the provinces of Canada. If someone is interested in purchasing that particular interest, the government would have to notify each province which would be significantly affected by that purchase. I suggest to the hon. member for Don Valley, through you, Mr. Speaker, that by advising each and every province we would find ourselves involved in a multi-faceted discussion and auction between these various provinces. That is the point which creates the greatest difficulty for me in the proposal made in this particular amendment.

The other matter which gives me some concern is that there some areas of Canada which need the protection of the federal government in respect of the provincial government.

An hon. Member: Like Alberta.

Mr. Blais: Alberta has its own government and I am sure it will protect the interests of all Albertans. My problem, however, is that I come from an area of Canada which is indeed a disadvantaged area, and one which does not receive the protection of the Ontario government. I suggest that if the Ontario government, which has manifested its intention to strictly limit foreign investment, should consider it necessary to restrict foreign investment in respect of the southern portion of the province, the same restriction would apply to the northern part of the province. Undoubtedly, such a restriction would be detrimental to my area which is very concerned about the need for additional investment. If there should be further investment in that part of the province, I suggest it would come primarily from outside our national boundaries.

Mr. Hurlburt: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lethbridge rises on a point of order.

Mr. Hurlburt: Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw to the attention of the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) that I object to his use of the word "auction" which he has used twice during his comments this afternoon. I take offence because the auction method of selling goods goes back to Biblical days. I wish he would use some other term, because this is the manner in which a deal is consummated in front of God and is a method in which there is no chance of any underhanded bargaining.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who just intervened knows something about the auction. I congratulate him for protecting that particular mode of sale. I respect the auctioneering process. Although it is as he states a God-like process, I suggest that in this particular instance it would not work. I regret the aspersions I may have cast. I merely suggest that the auction system, although valid, does not apply in a situation or in a confederation where we wish to nurture co-operation between individual provinces. It is important that individual provinces recognize each other's rights, and also recognize the right of the central government to protect the interests of the whole Confederation rather than only one section.

As I was saying, we still need the protection of the federal government for certain areas of Canada which have been neglected by their provincial governments. I suggest that the bill in its present form will protect northern Ontario, and we will find that the practices of the past will not apply if some company should wish to locate in that area.

● (1530)

I feel it is very difficult to comprehend the attitude taken by the Conservative party in this instance. They have been chastising the government, and the thrust of their contributions has been that the government should not protect its jurisdictional responsibilities. Evidently they support the position of the province of Alberta in the matter of supplying energy to the whole of Canada. They espouse the attitude taken by that particular province in confronting the federal government. Their position is that there should be a confrontation between the provinces which might want to have investment within their own boundaries and the federal government which is attempting to make a just distribution of industry throughout Canada. They take issue with that idea and say the federal government should not consider what the provinces want and should not protect its jurisdictional responsibilities, but rather should throw the ball into the provincial park so that the provinces can confront each other and confront the federal government in attempting to arrive at a decision.

I find it very difficult to understand why a federal party such as the Conservative party should support the idea of the decentralization of the federal power to such an extent. I find it most unjustifiable, especially when about two months ago they were saying that the federal government should impose wage and price controls, knowing that this would necessitate consultation with the provinces because the federal government does not have jurisdiction to impose wage and price controls without the consent of the provinces. No mention was ever made of any consultation with the provinces on that subject.

Again, with reference to the energy situation, when the Conservative party was espousing a national energy policy and telling the government that it does not have a national energy policy, which they wanted forthwith, no indication was made of any necessity for consultation with the provinces. They did not consider, of course, that there was a national energy policy. Perhaps it was not satisfactory to the opposition, but it was there. Therefore, we have a considerable amount of difficulty in accepting the sincerity of the opposition. The Progressive Conservative party is now indicating that there should be confrontation with reference to foreign ownership at the time when there is some indication that they do not favour the limitation of foreign investment in Canada. We see quite clearly from the speeches of members of that party that they are not really interested in the control of foreign ownership. I am suggesting that they are using this amendment to create some sort of dissension within the House so that the bill might be defeated.

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, today, in discussing the foreign investment review bill, I want to talk about love and hate, fact and fiction, common sense and foolishness. During the past week or so in this House all these factors have come into play. If I may be a little partisan for a moment, perhaps I should say that the love, the facts and the common sense in relation to foreign investment in Canada have been displayed by members of the Progressive Conservative party—the only political party in Canada with elected members from all ten provinces—and the negative aspects I have mentioned have come from either the members across the floor or to my extreme left.

As my good friend from Crowfoot, Alberta, mentioned a day or so ago, Canadian ownership in business and industry is like motherhood; it is desired and it is respected. In a perfectly balanced world, if Canada had a much larger population, if geographical factors had been different, perhaps even if history had been different, foreign ownership in Canada might not be the controversial subject it is today. Then again, perhaps if geography had been different, if history had been different, if our population had been much larger, perhaps Canada would not be the great and marvellous country it is today. You cannot have everything, Mr. Speaker. You can try to have the best of both worlds, but you do not always get it. Actually, I think Canada has come closer than any other country to having the best of both worlds, and I think that with a little common sense we just might achieve it.

I say "common sense" because I recognize that, rightly or wrongly, foreign ownership in Canada has become both a controversial and a pressing subject. The New Democrats to my left, the party in Canada which is not happy unless it is kicking our closest neighbour south of the border, favour the ending of all foreign investment in Canada right now. Well, if we did that, many other countries would be very happy because it would mean that the United States would have to look elsewhere to invest its money. With investment you get jobs, lots of jobs. Most countries want to increase employment. They hate to see their citizens out of work. So, they welcome more foreign investment.

Some people in Canada still welcome foreign investment. In fact, Nova Scotia premier Gerald Regan, a Liberal, becomes upset when we talk about restricting investment in this country. He has good reason to be. The Maritimes are a have-not group of provinces with high unemployment rates, and Premier Regan knows he cannot say no to investment that will give more jobs to the residents of his province. Even though I am not a Liberal, I would like to see Mr. Regan in this House of Commons now giving his views on foreign investment. It might interest the government and it might interest the New Democrats who have failed to elect even one federal member of parliament from the Maritimes. They do not have even one from an area which, with its economic problems, you would think would be a natural hunting ground for them.

Now, I have mentioned the foolishness of a small but highly vocal group which says: Let us end all foreign investment, let us throw out all the Yanks. That is foolishness, and I am sure that the premiers of Manitoba, British Columbia and Saskatchewan—all NDP premiers who have gone to the United States and spoken about the need for investment in their provinces—know how foolish it is to want to turn away that money and to let investors and jobs go elsewhere.

What I think is needed when it comes to discussing foreign investment and guidelines for foreign investment is common sense. I understand that 100 years or more ago there were people in the United States who worried about British investment in their country. Time has shown them to have been wrong. I guess it has also shown them that without that initial amount of foreign investment, the U.S. economy could never have expanded at the rate it has.

I think perhaps if we imagined a Canada in which not one U.S. cent, one English pound or one West German mark had been invested over the past 100 years, we would see that we would have a pretty sad country. Canadians did not have the money. We needed outside help, and we got it. We took that help for 100 years. Now, we start to say, "Go away; we don't want you any more." That is a strange attitude, Mr. Speaker. It is a strange attitude because if a foreign corporation wants to build an industry in one country, and that country says no, then it will simply build the plant in another country that says, "Yes, we need the jobs you can give us. We need them for our young people. We need your industry because it will contribute to our tax base and perhaps even build up our export trade."

● (1540)

I realize there are some problems with foreign investment. I realize that profits from some foreign-owned industries, not only U.S. but Japanese, British and West German, flow out of this country at an alarming rate. And so I think we have to have some regulations, some guidelines, and some rules, but not rules so tough that no one will locate here. Let us have some common sense. In fact, I think we have some common sense in the bill before the House. I will be interested to see it go through the committee stage and get some input from outside, some refining. But I do not think the bill as such, or the government as such, is tackling the problem in a realistic way. It seems to me that instead of restricting, instead of taking negative attitudes, we should encourage and take positive measures to deal with our foreign ownership problem. We should try to have the best of two worlds.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe we are in a position to turn down employment creating opportunities. At the same time, I realize that a country on the move has to guide its own destiny. I think we can have the jobs and also guide our own destiny if we approach the matter properly. Suppose that foreign investment in this country continued to grow at the rate that it has over the past decade or so, but that Canadian investment and ownership grew at a rate perhaps 5 per cent to 10 per cent higher than of investment by United States investors. It seems to me that in this case, as U.S. and other foreign investment continued to grow, because Canadian investment and ownership would be growing at a rate 5 per cent to 10 per cent higher, then in a certain period of time Canadian ownership in the various industries would match foreign ownership. Then, if we could maintain the relative rates of growth, it would far surpass outside ownership. We would still get the foreign investment, still get the new jobs for our young people, but as Canadian ownership grew at a greater clip, the actual percentage of foreign ownership would slowly fall. And I stress slowly. We would have the best of two worlds. We would still get the investment and the jobs, but over a period of time we would gain the upper hand. I repeat that we would have the best of two worlds.

[Mr. Hurlburt.]

How can this be done? The weapon, if I can call it that, seems to me to be taxation. We should change our taxation policies so that they offer more incentives to Canadians—just enough to give Canadian businessmen and entrepreneurs an edge without scaring away outside investors. This certainly is not the case now. In the oil and gas industry, for instance, foreign investors putting their money into high-risk oil and gas exploration in Canada get more incentives and more taxation writeoffs than Canadians receive. It is a strange situation. And I note that the NDP, which only managed to gather some 17 per cent of the vote in the 1972 federal election and elected only 31 out of 264 members, but which is now the power behind the throne, views with alarm foreign domination of the Canadian oil and gas industry.

Why doesn't it do something about it? Why doesn't the NDP force the Liberal government to give Canadians the same taxation advantages that Canada gives to foreign investors? Because, as usual, the NDP can't see the forest for the trees, and competition scares the NDP. It does not feel it is equal to the task so it avoids the fight, and avoids innovation. The NDP and, I am afraid the Liberal government, avoid giving Canadian businessmen and entrepreneurs the encouragement and inventives they need to give them that little spurt which will put Canadians ahead just enough to control their own destiny without scaring off anyone else.

I remember that during the 1972 election campaign our leader proposed a revolutionary plan that would allow Canadians to invest up to $5,000 a year in a small Canadian-owned business and, at the same time, get an equivalent amount of deferred income for tax purposes. It was quite a plan. It was designed to allow the average Canadian, whether he had $500 or $5,000 to invest each year, to put it in a small Canadian-owned business and so help it expand. The government, under the Progressive Conservatives, would then allow him to defer paying income tax on that investment until he sold out his holding. That is what I call one positive step to increase Canadian ownership in this country, a positive not a negative step, a method by which more, not fewer, jobs would be created, and a measure, I might note, that would give more Canadian wage earners the opportunity to enjoy the fruits of the free enterprise system.

Is that idea lost, Mr. Speaker? I do not think so. I do not think so because I believe that sooner or later, perhaps sooner than most people realize, the Progressive Conservatives will form a government in this country and will institute such realistic and advanced ideas. We have to, Mr. Speaker, because if we do not we are going to be in a terrible mess.

I was reading in the Financial Post on the weekend, the issue dated November 10, about a small Canadian-owned manufacturing company, Husky Manufacturing and Tools Works Ltd., of Bolton, Ontario. This company wanted to expand its manufacturing operation. What did it find? If found that every major cost and tax involved in the expansion would be higher in Canada than if the company located in the United States. It seems that after the company president, Robert Schad, looked into the matter, he found that his company's after-tax profits from a new manufacturing plant located south of the border rather than in Ontario would be more than double. The figures showed that the Canadian operations would yield an estimated pre-tax profit of $1.2 million, whereas his company would make a profit of almost $2.3 million before tax if the new plant were located just a couple of hundred miles away. So, we have a case of good-bye profits, good-bye jobs. We even force our own entrepreneurs and businessmen to expand their operations outside the country. It seems to me, looking at this particular case, that something is very, very wrong. Common sense tells me that. Let us give our own people the encouragement and incentives they need to invest in Canada. Let us give them all the help they need, because new jobs are too important to throw across the border.

A month or so ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who incidentally has alienated the entire province of Alberta and almost all of western Canada and the Maritimes with his strange attitudes and policies, went tripping off to Red China. My comment on that meeting would have been simple. His time would have been better spent in Washington. I cannot help but wonder why the Prime Minister was not trying to make Canadians better liked closer to home. I would have thought there was a more important job to do fixing up relations with our closest neighbour and biggest trading partner, the United States. I submit that instead of visiting Communist China the Prime Minister should have been in Washington, London, Japan and Europe patching up relationships which his government has destroyed. Ask the average Canadian who is his closest friend, and he is not likely to say Red China. He can see things clearer closer to home. It is a pity the right hon. Prime Minister cannot.

So, Mr. Speaker, let us stop kicking our neighbours. Let us stop ignoring our friends. Let us stop creating animosity with those who want to be our friends, and with our own Canadian businessmen. Let us help them create new industries. Let us help them create new jobs. Let us give them the encouragement and incentives they need to make Canadian-owned industries grow, without scaring off people outside our borders who want to invest in our future. I ask the House, where would we be today if we were not rich in resources, and no one wanted to invest in Canada? Let us thank God we have the resources, we have the people wanting to invest in our future. Now, all we need is the same quality to guide these investments that the Canadian businessman exercises in his own day to day operation—common sense. Let us be rational. Let us be fair. Let us be realistic. Let us help Canada grow, not hamper it.

● (1550)

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, I really did not intend to participate at this stage of the debate until I listened to some of my friends across the way. They made me wonder if they really want the bill, particularly the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Hurlburt). He spoke about things that are not about to happen, such as the possibility of a Progressive Conservative government! What caught my ear and caused me to rise was his reference to the article which appeared in the Financial Post about Husky Manufacturing and Tool Works Limited. Mr. Schad is an entrepreneur. I knew him when he came to this country, a toolmaker from Baden-Baden, Germany. As a matter of fact, I knew his wife before he did but nothing can be read into that!

One should understand the nature of this operation, Mr. Speaker. It is a brilliant operation and Mr. Schad has done a brilliant job. The success which he has enjoyed has been largely the result of his own ingenuity and energy, and I think it is presumptious to say that Canada has made it so difficult for him to operate here that he would be better off if he were to go to the United States. I spoke to him last week about these same tax considerations. Of course, these considerations include DISC and we do not approve of that; it is not in keeping with the international atmosphere that should exist. I do not think we should just lie down to the United States dictates in this respect. We should not forget that many of these companies were built up largely with research and development funds supplied by the government of Canada, and with a great deal of assistance in displaying at exhibitions in Japan, Germany, the United States and other countries.

I think the case that Mr. Schad makes has some merit, but I do not think it is a classic example of the factors that should be considered in deciding our foreign investment policy. One of the interesting facets of our relationship with the United States is that it is taken so much for granted. The fact is that our trade continues to grow and the manufacturing segment of our exports to the United States continues to increase. We do some $30 billion per year of trade with the United States, so I would hardly think that relations with them are being destroyed. Visits to China, the Soviet Union, Asia and other areas of the world where we will find future markets are not counter-productive nor mutually exhaustive. Someone had to take the initiative in establishing the contacts and that was done very well by our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who was followed by leaders of nations greater in size than ours.

When this bill was studied in committee, Mr. Speaker, some members of the Conservative Party talked like nationalists. They know very well that the majority of Canadians support this bill, so while they talked like nationalists they amended like continentalists. I cannot help but feel that their amendments are designed to emasculate the bill.

Mr. Hellyer: On the contrary, to strengthen it.

Mr. Danson: To strengthen it by further prescribing procedures that must be followed is a rather negative approach, I think. The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) is trying to make this a debate on industrial strategy and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) talks about Toronto tunnelvision. Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the people from Toronto are in the best position to speak about this. They, and the people of southern Ontario, are well aware of the consequences of foreign investment in an unrestricted fashion. The hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Hurlburt) has suggested that we are going to scare foreign investment away. Mr. Speaker, that is not the intention of the bill; it is the nature and quality of investment that is important.

Mr. Hurlburt: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) keeps referring to me and to my statement about scaring foreign investment away. I would like him to know that I am speaking from 25 years practical experience. The only reason I am here fighting this bill is because of this government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not really a point of order but rather a point of debate.

Mr. Danson: It is an interesting point of debate, Mr. Speaker. I speak from experience of doing business with many countries in the world, but mostly in the United States and Canada, as well as having a company in the United States.

The point is when you have a rule that the investment be of significant benefit to Canada, you can make a much better deal. You have a bargaining strength there that has a special value because the government has an opportunity to show potential investors how much greater the benefit to Canada will be if they invest in a different way. If there is no such agency investors go wherever they want, of course. If we are able to consult with the provinces, as a screening agency must, the benefits to other parts of Canada can be shown. Those of us from the so-called golden horseshoe are well aware that growth for its own sake is not the answer to everything. Votes are not won in that area by telling people how much bigger the area is to become and how the population is to be increased. If you want to win their votes you tell them how they can enjoy the good life in Edmonton or other places! The fact is that we deal from day to day with the dimensions of investment in matters over which we have very little control. Here we are trying to give the federal government an instrument to encourage investment in the best interests of Canada. But, Mr. Speaker, if I read the amendment correctly, it would give the provinces the power of veto in some cases, and I think this would be extremely unwise.

The industrial strategy to which the hon. member for Don Valley referred does not come by divine revelation, not like tax reform; it comes about by a series of policies in key areas. I suggest that these policies are developing at a rate at which they can be absorbed and discussed with a degree of intelligence in committee and in the House. That could not be done if you tried to impose some master plan from above. Think of what this government has done under regional economic expansion. Of course, it is not perfect but it is the first significant move of any government in our history. This bill will help improve and strengthen regional expansion and will expand research and development programs. The growth of the Industrial Development Bank, and the restructuring which is about to take place, will be of tremendous value. The establishment of the Canada Development Corporation is another important factor. These are the things that are the matrix of industrial strategy.

As I said, I was constrained to enter this debate because I found my hon. friends opposite straddling the fence, trying to show the nationalist people that they are nationalists but at the same time showing their other friends that they really do not mean it. They do not want this measure to be effective. They do not want to see things changed. That is traditional. That is what we expect. Effectively, the amendment would give veto power to the provinces in many cases and emasculate the bill. The federal government should be in the position to act in the over-all interests of the entire country.

● (1600)

The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) referred to auctions. I do not want to get into an auction with the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Hurlburt). The fact remains that the provinces, particularly those which are not industrialized, perhaps in anxiety or over anxiety, might make or accept deals which are less favourable. In a recent private arrangement that I had, I found that by simply quoting from the intent of the bill, and some of the amendments to the corporation act, I could make a much more realistic arrangement, and one which certainly was in the best interests of Canada.

I was in New York a week or two ago where I met the head of a multinational corporation. I discussed the arrangements which they accepted, not anxiously but without reluctance, in other countries of the world. I was absolutely astounded. This company does business in virtually every country of the world. Whatever rules there are, they go along with them. They say they cannot afford to do otherwise because if they do not, their competitors will.

What we are proposing is certainly mild compared to countries less buoyant and with less stable governments. We are particularly favoured with a stable government. The opportunities, skills, educational level and resources that exist in this country count very much when investments are made here. If we have some restrictions and provide guidelines in some cases and incentives in others, we can develop greater industry. This will be of great value to Canada and all Canadians. What is important is the nature and quality of these investments and the distribution of them. I do not accept the fact that we should be ungrateful for all the investment we have had in the past. It has been good. However, we are seeing what effect it can have on us.

Many of our major decisions have been distorted by the decision-making location of multinational corporations. We must keep in mind that a lot of these decisions are made by Canadians who are employed by these companies. They think in a head office context which ultimately is not really in our best interest. We must have this opportunity to review these decisions. One example of this is the current oil situation. Had the major oil companies been Canadian owned, the decisions would have been much different. It is true the investment for exploration and development came from multinational corporations. To say we would not have had this industry without that initial foreign investment is a bit of conjecture. I am sure other investors would have been found. However, if we had had regulations, rules and some guidelines for these companies to follow when they started in this country, we would not be boxed in as we are now. This is the time to do something. We cannot do it any sooner.

This is reasonable and fair legislation. It must go through to give us some degree of control over our own destiny. It is going to be of particular value to those parts of the country which in the past have been less favoured economically and, speaking selfishly as a Torontonian, in our best interests because we will see the rest of Canada flourish as well. We flourish only to the extent the rest of Canada flourishes. This is of real importance in the long run. One of our greatest problems in this country is economic disparity. This bill, certainly in concert with regional economic legislation and incentives, will do more for regional economic expansion, bringing industry to parts of Canada that do not have active industry, than anything else we have done.

If we fool around with this bill too much and put too many hedges in it, we will be in danger of limiting its food effects considerably. We must give the screening agency the opportunity to work, to consult with the provinces and work with them. This is an essential part of their job. It is an essential part of the bill. Amendments must not restrict their freedom to operate. If we are going to have a bill and a policy for which the provinces in the long run will thank us, the people who elect us will thank us and, perhaps even more important, our children will thank us.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have known the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) since he first came to this House. Perhaps I have a more retentive memory of the speeches he made when he was a new man in this House. He tried to win his spurs on the finance committee. At that time he made speeches on changes to the Canada Corporations Act, the changes made when the Liberal majority swung over to taking a more realistic view of the white paper on taxation. The hon. member should blush after making us listen to what was downright arrant nonsense this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danson: Did you say Arab nonsense?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would not suggest the hon. member would use any Arab thinking. However, the points that he made demonstrate an attitude and a frame of mind which suggest that we poor individuals who live in the boondocks, in other words outside of metro Toronto, need the big brotherism of enlightened people like the hon. member for York North who suddenly has discovered that what is good for them is necessarily good for the rest of the country. I must say that Saul on the road to Damascus was no newer convert than the hon. member who just finished speaking.

I would say that it is great to be told by a member from a constituency like York North that what this country requires is some central reviewing agency which will tell any part of the country whether or not it should have an expansion of industry or a new investment with a modicum of foreign investment. We are to be told, not consulted. This amendment talks about consultation.

The hon. member for York North dared to talk about the oil industry. As a result of the tunnel vision prevalent in the area from which he comes he thinks that if the oil had been developed in a different way, we would not have the problems of today. Let him talk to his financial friends in Toronto. For example, would they have approved or even thought of a pipeline into Montreal three years ago when offshore crude was much cheaper to produce than domestic crude? Is it suggested that the Energy Conservation Board of the Province of Alberta knows not of what it speaks or that all the experience it has collected since 1947 is not worth one tittle by comparison with the newly acquired, unproven judgment of an agency making a recommendation without consultation? There is no word about consultation in this bill. All it says is that the minister, when making his recommendation to the Governor in Council, shall at the same time submit any representations which may have been made by the provinces. In fact, the bill does not require that a notice of an application be sent to a province which has not, in the language of the measure, stated its economic policies. I know this bill, and perhaps that is more than can be said for some of the other hon. members who have sought to support it on this question of consultation.

● (1610)

I want to make it clear that when it comes to the question of being Canadian, I defy anyone on the other side of the House to show that any of us on this side who may be critical of this measure are any less Canadian than they. But they have wrapped around themselves a toga of nationalism and virtue which ill becomes them because of the manner in which they have acted in the past. They remind me of one of my opponents in the last election. He had a Winnebago caravan with half a dozen Canadian flags on the back of it and, on the sides, the famous Liberal slogan "I care". What humbug! What hypocricy! What pretentiousness! Many of the speeches in support of this bill fall into the same category. Of course, we are all concerned.

Does the hon. member for York North pretend that no account is to be taken of decisions of the Alberta Energy Conservation Board, formerly the Energy and Gas Conservation Board, with regard to the quantities of oil to be exported from that province to the rest of Canada, or to the United States? Does he mean that those two bodies have been guilty of faulty judgment, judgment which could have been corrected by some old-fashioned Canadian company based in Toronto or Montreal? Did he not attend the committee hearings at the time the tax bill was under discussion and listen to representatives from New Brunswick and Nova Scotia saying that the fear among businessmen in those areas was not so much of a takeover by a Boston corporation as by a Toronto or Montreal corporation? It was the central Canada investors they feared, rather than the outsiders. This is all documented, and the hon. member for North York knows it, because he participated in those hearings.

Mr. Danson: But it was not true.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Does the hon. member suggest the witnesses from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were lying? Because if they were making incorrect statements consciously, they were uttering falsehoods. Has the hon. member read the brief from Quebec with regard to this bill? Hon. members opposite sat here the other day and sought to draw about them garments of righteousness and honour because the administration in Quebec had secured a victory. This same administration has stated in a brief which can be found at the back of the proceedings before the Finance Committee considering this bill, that there must be prior consultation.

Mr. Breau: They ask for a veto. That is what they ask for. Parallel power.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They said consultation.

Mr. Breau: Parallel power.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I gather that in some parts they went further. But because a couple of commas have been misplaced, because they have gone further in one part than I would agree to—

An hon. Member: Oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I do not ask for a provincial veto over this bill but I do ask for consultation. I do not mean the kind of consultation the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources evidently considers appropriate. He gave Alberta ministers a copy of a declaration by the National Energy Board two hours before its publication and then had the gall to say that the government of Alberta had been consulted before publication of the decision. The claim was totally false, almost to the point of being mendacious were it not for the obscurity of a definition of the word "consultation".

What my colleagues and I are seeking is this: if notice is received of a pending investment of a nature which would be subject to the terms of this bill, a copy of that notice should go immediately to the province concerned. At the moment there is no such requirement. Does the hon. member for York North suggest that in the event, for example, of an application in connection with a joint venture, say, Canadian and foreign companies, in connection with the development of the tar sands, which are a wholly Albertan resource, a decision should be made on that application by a screening agency here in Ottawa totally unrelated to any input of information or opinion form the Province of Alberta, although that province has a body of expertise in this field which cannot be matched by the federal government? The bill provides that there is that power.

● (1620)

Does the hon. gentleman suggest for one moment, since he is at least on the fringes, well exposed to the investment field, that there will be sufficient confidence to venture an investment not of $1 million, not $5 million but $1,000 million at today's prices for a 1,000 barrel a day oil well and refining complex? Or does he suggest that the province of British Columbia, having entered into an agreement for the development of, say, a copper-zinc refinery on the basis of a mixture of domestic and foreign capital, and having been satisfied that the project was wanted for the development of the resources of B.C. by the people of the province, should have that decision reviewed by a board appointed by the federal government under an act that requires that there be no consultation with the province of British Columbia?

I am amazed at the members of the New Democratic Party accepting this kind of bill.

Mr. Rodriguez: You are always amazed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie—

Mr. Rodriguez: Nickel Belt.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Nickel Belt; I apologize to the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie. Having seen him perform in committee, only one course is open, and that is under his personal ukase. Everything must go as he says; nobody else is right.

Mr. Rodriguez: Not a Tory anyway.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): With him and you on the same committee, it must have been quite a show.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The only thing we missed were these gentle, empty offerings of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Let me refer to the brief of the province of Ontario. Although it approved the principle of the bill, in its brief it said this:

> The government of Ontario places strong emphasis on the development of close consultation between the federal government and the provinces in the review process. Neither section 2(2)(e) nor section 14(2)(b)—

Nor, may I say in parenthesis, section 11(2) or section 9.

> —provide assurance of consultation, although the establishment of a consultative process has been indicated by the federal minister.

The minister's indication has been not that there will be consultation but rather a permissive, informative process. There is no consultation provided for in this bill. The Ontario government brief continues:

> It is therefore important that the proposed arrangements for consultation be clarified. In particular, we urge that the federal government provide the province in which the foreign investment is proposed with a copy of the notification and any additional information submitted by the foreign investor; the provinces be provided with full opportunity to submit their views on proposed investments; the federal government inform the provinces of any additional details concerning the criteria which will be used in the review process.
>
> In addition, Ontario attaches importance to continuing consultation with the provinces with respect to subsequent policy review and future policy development.

The DREE program of the federal government is not the only one that must apply. Many of the provinces have an industrial development program, whether it has to do with native peoples or is a decentralization of industry from major cities into rural areas. But the hon. member for York North stated that it will be this agency and the recommendation made to the Governor in Council that will determine the nature of any investment.

Mr. Breau: The provinces are informed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I defy the parliamentary secretary to tell me where in this bill it is provided that a copy of the notice concerning the investment shall be sent to the provinces.

Mr. Breau: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No. Therefore, there is no obligation to have consultations. I am not saying that a province must consent, otherwise there would be an absolute veto. What I am saying is that the provinces must be consulted, and there is nothing about consultation in this bill. Information given after the event is not consultation. This is what I call this administration's tunnelvision with regard to consultation. You tell them what you think and they must conform.

Mr. Breau: There is consultation every day with the provinces.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But it is not provided for in this bill.

Mr. Breau: It is not provided for in any act.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member says that it is not provided for in any act. Of course it is. It is provided for in many acts.

Mr. Breau: Which ones?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There is provision that the minister, after discussion or consultation with the provinces, may do a certain thing. That is provided for all along. Or there is a general agreement reached by the federal government and the provinces that they are talking about a certain thing. This is why I contend this point is one of the chief weaknesses of this bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Edmonton West but the time allotted to him has expired. He could, however, continue if there was unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Another two or three minutes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I thank hon. members. My throat will not last as long as their ears, so I shall only be about one minute. However, in all earnestness I must come back to my point. I say that needless confrontation now exists between the people of this country and the province of Alberta in regard to oil development in that province. Any assertion that the development of the resources of that province are going to be interfered with will certainly put Canada on a terribly rough course. The danger of confrontation between the federal government and the provinces will be rife. Although I have not argued this here, I suggest there are many people who maintain there is a very serious constitutional question about the propriety of the action that is being taken by the government under this legislation. I am not the only one to say that. Many of the provinces have said there is no constitutional difficulty, just as the province of Quebec has, in its brief. I am not going to suggest, as the parliamentary secretary is saying, that we should dismiss the Quebec brief and dismiss the view of the Quebec government in this regard.

● (1630)

Mr. Breau: I did not say that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In his previous remarks he said they wanted the right of veto, parallel development and this and that. He said that their brief was far and away from being acceptable. That is fine if the parliamentary secretary, coming from New Brunswick, wants to say the views of the government of the province of Quebec should not be accepted, but let us put it on the record.

Mr. Breau: I did not say that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I should like the hon. member to say whether he is prepared to accept the reservation as to consultation. I am talking about the amendment regarding consultation. Let us look at the views expressed by the various provinces. I think this amendment hits at one of the weakest parts of the bill if it is to be made to function as a useful tool with a view to achieving some of the hoped for benefits asked for by that government in its proposal.

Let me suggest that we will have some real quarrels over the first decision under this bill, and we will really have some trouble. We will see another situation such as that created in respect of the development and marketing of oil in the province of Alberta. I think that could have been avoided if there had been proper consultation, and I think we could avoid a lot more trouble in the future if the government will amend the act in the appropriate way.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is my background before I arrived at this House which makes me view Bill C-132 with a great deal of doubt. Throughout the years I spent in the provincial legislature of New Brunswick it seemed as though federal policy made one incursion after another into the rights of the provinces. To me, this bill is equal to any in its imposition of federal government position upon the provincial domain.

While this principle may apply in an important way to that area of Canada which is well developed, where income is above average, where employment opportunities, as has been shown by the figures released on October 20, would very well indicate that the unemployment problem there is by no means as serious as it is in the periphery of Canada, particularly in the provinces of New Brunswick and Newfoundland, and while these areas from Quebec City to Windsor may be able to withstand a lot of unemployment, particularly if investment control is imposed by Ottawa, I submit that there has to be some discretionary power and some provincial input in order that we shall not find ourselves even worse off than at present in under-developed areas of Canada.

It is with this in mind that I fully support all those amendments which pertain to input by the provinces and guidelines by the provinces regarding investment within their domain. I am not one who is absolutely against the control of foreign investment in Canada. I recognize fully that it is necessary for Canada to have a policy, but this particular policy, as introduced to the House of Commons by the government on your right, Sir, is such that once again it is a patchwork policy which applies only to certain portions of Canada. It bodes very serious hardships for other areas if it is not administered in a very lenient fashion, indeed.

It is never good that a government should be vested with the power by its own legislation to create policy at the whim and pleasure of the government of the day and apply it in locations which it may choose for one reason or another. It is quite possible that reason could pertain to the politics of the government of the day. I say this with no particular accusation against those on your right; I say it as it applies to all governments. There is an inclination by governments to be a little more lenient in areas where the people have been much more favourably impressed by their policies and candidates.

It is with this in mind that I do not like enabling legislation by this or any other government, but suggest that legislation should spell out in detail the policy the government has in mind rather than enabling it to create regulations, to make decisions ad hoc in respect of a particular situation and adjust policy under it on a momentary basis. This is the primary danger of this bill and it is in this field that it infringes mostly on provincial rights.

I think the bill overlooks the relationship of the economy of Canada to the economies of the various regions of Canada. Again, I am going to cite the example I feel is basically the best example. The net income which the agriculture industry of Canada may experience from time to time reflects itself upon the total income of Canada by virtue of the demands of the agricultural community as it expands its plant and spends its money for improvement in its operations and thus makes demands upon the national income in an expansive sort of way. What applies to agriculture, which is today a small percentage of our total economy, will apply equally to developments on the periphery as well as developments in the centre.

If it is possible to create a financial climate in which development will take place in the Atlantic area, as an example, it will most certainly be reflected in a very important way in the more highly industrialized areas of the rest of Canada. It seems to me that the policy of the government should be that where it is possible investment shall be directed to those areas of Canada where the economic structure is the weakest. I do not say this should happen on the basis of, let us do something for New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Saskatchewan and so forth, but rather that there are products and commodities which lend themselves to economic production outside the basically industrialized areas of Canada.

Perhaps the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) epitomized best the feeling I have when he expressed himself as feeling there might be cause for resignation from Cabinet if heavy water was not produced in his province. It was amazing that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Dubé) from New Brunswick did not join him in chorus because certainly heavy water is a commodity on which transportation costs have very little influence in respect of the total cost at the point of use. It is, therefore, a product which could and should be developed by Canada in areas where economic expansion is required. This is a case for the development of a national economic policy, not for the development of a patchwork quilt, and not for the allocation of a heavy water plant to an area of Canada which is already more industrialized than many others. It is in this field that the government could play an important part.

It has recently been announced that there are no additional plans for a heavy water plant in New Brunswick. This takes away the economic base and employment opportunity, as well as a tax base, for both Canada and New Brunswick which would be most favourable in that area. It would provide for energy requirements which, in turn, would create further employment and perhaps further subsidiary development around the heavy water plant. It was with deep regret that I read the news report this morning that it has been pretty well finalized that New Brunswick shall not receive the initial allocation of a heavy water plant.

● (1640)

Let me repeat that it is not my feeling that we should be without a policy in respect of Canadian ownership of Canadian resources and Canadian industry. I feel very strongly on this, and have felt that way for a good many years. Perhaps in my initial year at college during the study of economics it became a matter of some serious concern to me that the flow of cash from Canada in respect of dividends, interest charges and so on as a result of our dependence upon foreign currencies for our civic, provincial and federal development as well as our industrial development was draining away Canadian opportunity. This is no new, snap decision that there should be a national policy for us to obtain owernship or our own community.

However, it is my opinion that this cannot be done with drastic enabling legislation of this type, a type which enables the government to make a decision on a political basis rather than on the basis of the economic necessities of the area concerned. It is very interesting to note that virtually the whole of the first part of the last issue of the Financial Post carries several items to indicate that Canada has not created a climate in which Canadian money is particularly interested in development and expansion within our borders. It pointed out three specific additional cost factors for one concern, which exceeded the cost factors in respect of this plant if it were to expand outside our border. The first of the additional costs was the sales tax. The second was the very substantial differential between the income tax structure in Canada and the income tax structure in the United States. The third was the fact that the Government of Canada has not to date been able to negotiate a trade situation in which our products could go to the United States without duties which prohibit their production in Canada.

It is important that we develop the economic climate in Canada whereby Canadian money will reinvest in Canada rather than seek opportunity abroad in more attractive economic climates. We have heard several companies in Canada criticized because of their increased charges to the consumers for goods and services. Among these companies, for instance, is the Bell system. I have no quarrel with the Bell system and do not wish to interfere with those who oppose its rates. But it is significant that in the first three-quarters of this year that system has had a tax demand of $33 million higher than the tax demand of one year ago and that this tax demand comes from all levels of government, municipal, provincial and federal. The accumulated increase to date is $33 million for a single corporation in Canada. It is no wonder that subscribers scream when there are applications for rate increases, but if the taxes are to be increased at this rate then I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, there is little recourse to industry but to ask the consumers of these various goods and services to pay more.

This is not the fault of the producer, the service industries or the manufacturers. It is caused by the lack of an economic policy in Canada which would recognize for Canada the need of an internationally competitive economic climate which we lack. It seems to me that the bulk of those who have spoken in strong support of this bill are those who come from the industrialized areas of Canada. Those of us who have the misfortune to live in areas of Canada which are not industrial, those of us who live in the area of Canada where unemployment went up by 2.8 per cent in the last month, those of us who have seen the unemployment rolls increased by 7,000 within one province, those of us in another province who have watched unemployment rise by 1.5 per cent in the last month's statistics are the people who are concerned about the fact that we are about to control investment without any suggestion that there should be special consideration, special input and special participation by the areas which need this.

Let me quote from page 7638 of Hansard from the remarks of the Minister responsible for DREE. He said:

The implication of this are—

He is referring to the economic expansion program, the control and so on.

—first, that it is a commitment on our part to reinforce provincial priorities;

If it is the intention of the government to reinforce provincial priorities, then it should incorporate them in one of the amendments in respect of provincial participation in the decision-making process. Let us go on.

... that is, how a province uses its resources or, in the general scheme of things, how those resources are to be developed is something that the province will need to decide in the first instance. Second, once we have identified a major developmental opportunity on which we are prepared—

Please note that word "prepared".

—to work, the very fact that the federal and provincial governments agree on that and sign an agreement to that effect will, of course, be as strong an assurance as you can get that that enterprise is going to be acceptable within the criteria set down in this bill.

The real problem is that the government of Canada shall make the final decision in respect of priorities within the boundaries of a province concerning what is developed, how it is developed and where the money will come from. This is made very clear by the minister's remarks. Let us take another look. In respect of the provinces and regions of Canada, as recorded again at page 7638, he said:

... the provinces are given strong assurance that provincial interests and provincial rights will be taken into account.

If these assurances are, in fact, acceptable to the provinces, then I say incorporate them in an amended bill so that the provinces will in fact see that they have an element of authority in the decision-making process in respect of their own economic development. I might add that the minister took unto himself the opportunity to deny statements he made in the past in respect of the rights of his own province, a province of comparable economic development. There is the implication in his speech that he is very unhappy with the premier of his own province in respect of development in that province. It is implied that he is critical of his political patron who put him where he is today, and it is very doubtful if that political patron were able to speak out in his own defence that this gentleman would be returned to this House of Commons. In his remarks he certainly has abdicated the position which any member from the Atlantic area should take in support of the requirements of that area.

He went on to imply in his speech again that the provinces would come to the lap of the federal government because of the goodies the federal government had to deliver. There is the suggestion that only if the provinces comply with the wishes of the federal government will they have their wishes met in respect of development. This bill puts in the hands of the government of Canada discriminatory powers. It must be recognized that in the Atlantic area, if there is a takeover by a Canadian firm, the process of the removal of employment and earning opportunities begins forthwith. The accounting, the invoicing, the high salaried individuals associated with a firm taken over in the Atlantic area by a central Canadian firm creates additional job opportunities in the high salaried class in that area which I mentioned from Windsor to Quebec city and withdraws from the Atlantic area the executive opportunity which the business would present, very often under foreign management.

● (1650)

It is significant, I think, that the bulk of the industries which have been taken over by Canadian capital have, as a result of these policies, contracted employment opportunities rather than expanded them. It is dangerous for a business to be taken over in any area, but its hope for expansion in the Atlantic area is amplified when the source of funds does not come from central Canadian industry. This is not a condemnation of central Canadian industry; it is merely a recognition of the economic facts of life, such as, that you should have centralized administration, you should expand as best you can within sight of your head office, and you should get the economic structure of your firm as centralized as possible to exercice mass economies for national distribution. This practice has been followed.

The prime example that we can cite, of course, is the takeover by a Canadian firm some years ago of a soap factory in the town of St. Stephen in my constituency. They took away every single job that was in that industry to central Canada and left the town holding the bag. We can go to the same town where a Canadian operated branch closed. It is Milltown, adjacent to St. Stephen and now incorporated with it. The Canadian corporation in the textile industry was closed down. We can also take a look at the town of Marysville where a similar occurrence took place. These companies closed down after a takeover with central Canadian money; they closed their doors and several hundred jobs were lost to the province.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. He can continue with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCain: Nobody wanted to start at three minutes to five, any more than I did. However, I will not take much more of your time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There is no private members' hour.

Mr. McCain: The business world in Canada has found, for instance, as I have mentioned earlier, that no competitive situation is created in Canada when interest rates are as high as they are and when taxes are as high as they are, for Canadian money spent in this country. The outflow of Canadian currency to foreign fields is something which should be discouraged by government policy and not by government regulation. It should be encouraged by our efforts to negotiate a reasonable tariff structure with many of our world partners. It should be created by an analysis of our income tax structure in Canada, our depreciation structure versus that offered in the competitive field in the world market.

If this bill gave any indication whatsoever that the government of Canada, as it is today, had a program for the development of opportunities for Canadian taxpayers to buy shares or for the creation of an atmosphere in which the international world would be prepared to sell its shares to Canadian participants, this would be a step in the right direction. But no such program has been suggested. The speeches in support of this bill have not been in condemnation of those who have spent money on Canadian development. However, they have in no way encouraged further development. It is quite proper to say that the red tape which has existed in the Ottawa structure has made it most discouraging for any individual to try to undertake such a development, with the assistance of DREE or any other department of government.

It is significant to note that several applicants who were desirous of spending money in Canada for development of Canadian industry decided that this bill was the last blow to their application and, as a result, tens of millions of dollars of potential investment, some in secondary industry, some in the processing industry, have been withdrawn from the Atlantic area. They are not interested in investing in Canada. These instances did not involve processing or manufacturing which exploit our natural resources only but rather relate to secondary manufacturing.

I will not impose upon the privilege extended to me. Let me only say that I deplore the fact that the government has chosen not to assist New Brunswick in the opportunity it had for a heavy water plant. I deplore the fact that it has not recognized and taken advantage of the opportunity to scatter some items of high cost—low weight high value items—throughout Canada so that we could develop them. It is then, and only then, that an act such as this can be productive in Canada for our ownership and at the same time for development. In no way can the Atlantic area share or look forward to sharing equal opportunity in employment or standards of living at its present rate of development. There is great fear and mistrust in respect of the way in which this bill may be administered, and in respect of the potential opportunity which may develop, if judgment is not made with great discretion and in recognition of the employment and development requirements of our area.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth)—Northern Affairs—Northwest Territories—Alleged letting of contracts by Hire North without tenders; the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker)—Public Service—Alleged rug-ranking system of promoting secretaries—Request for substitution of point rating system and tabling of relative Treasury Board minutes.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6.

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, a stranger who reads the many speeches made today on Bill C-132 might be pardoned were he to wonder just which party in the House was sponsoring this legislation—surely not the junior partners in this unholy alliance of unhappy bedfellows. The NDP has done nothing but criticize the bill. They say it is too weak; it will not do the job, but it is better than nothing. The Liberals have been distinguished mainly by their silence. Until today, I believe only three Liberals rose to speak on this bill, although they have been somewhat more vocal this afternoon. However, they all have one thing in common. They continually and consistently accuse the Official Opposition of being opposed to any control of foreign investment, which is a deliberate distortion of the facts. Why do they adopt these tactics? It reminds me very very much of the old debating ploy in school circles. When you had a very weak argument which you could not support with facts, the usual tactic was to confuse the issue and ridicule the stand taken by your opponent. This debating ploy seldom worked in school circles, and I suggest it will not fool anyone in this debate.

● (1700)

On the other hand, the position of the Official Opposition has been stated over and over again. It was stated very clearly by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), in whose name stand two of the amendments on which I wish to speak later. It was stated most eloquently again this afternoon by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies). Certainly, we want to retain control over our natural resources. Certainly, we recognize the political implications of foreign economic domination. After all this is the party of Macdonald, and we were the first proponents of economic nationalism. We still believe in economic nationalism but in its proper perspective. It is fine to encourage Canadian ownership, but only if it is done within the framework of a broad national industrial policy. But in encouraging economic nationalism let us be very careful that we do not drive away foreign capital from those areas of the country which still need massive infusions of capital, unless we make sure that we replace that foreign capital with Canadian capital, or with some other form of capital investment.

Recently, I read a paper put out by the C.D. Howe Research Institute, prepared by Dr. David Springate, dealing with regional incentives and private investment, in which he gave an assessment of regional incentives offered by DREE. I think it is appropriate at this time to quote briefly from Dr. Springate's paper. It outlines our position very well. It outlines what should be Canada's national industrial policy. He refers to the fact the RDIA program has two subsidiary goals, and then writes:

> The final goal is that of encouraging international investment in Canada. The pursuit of this objective confronts two opposing constraints and trends. One is the country's apparent need for such investment. The other is a growing sense of economic nationalism.
>
> Canada traditionally has been a heavy user of foreign capital in the form of both portfolio investment and, more significantly for our purposes, direct investment. The familiar arguments relating to capital need and the extent of foreign ownership will not be repeated here. It is enough to state that one implication of a situation where over half a country's manufacturing capacity is foreign owned is that attraction of foreign investment must continue to take place if a steady expansion in the economy and in the number of jobs is to occur. If foreign owners do not find Canada an attractive place in which to invest (or re-invest), they can withdraw funds and invest elsewhere. Given Canada's need for economic expansion and job creation, the possibility of reduced foreign investment is a prospect that many Canadians find undesirable.

Dr. Springate is not the only one to state this point of view. It was stated clearly by the Premier of Quebec back in January, 1972, when he said in effect that we absolutely need foreign investment. He added:

> Since we don't have any alternative, at least in the short term, we can't have too restrictive a (national) policy on foreign investment.

This is an attitude that is quite prevalent among the less fortunate and less developed regions of the country. Officials of DREE were quoted by Dr. Springate in his paper.

> In the presence of such an emotional issue, DREE has proceeded with this aim of attracting foreign investment to Canada. "We just keep a low profile in trying to attract multinational firms," said one official of the department who is active in investment promotion.

The premiers of the four Atlantic provinces have stated publicly that their provinces still require foreign investment if they are to make progress and reach the levels attained by the rest of Canada. Many of the witnesses appearing before the committee studying this bill made the same point.

But the point that stood out in my mind after reading the committee evidence and other articles is the fact that not only are many people in these various areas afraid that the government will legislate foreign capital out of the country but are also worried about this bill, because its implications are so uncertain. The bill is so badly written that many people fear foreign investors will not even take initial steps to invest here because they do not know the ground rules that will be applied under the provisions of this bill. This is the danger that I see. This is the danger that my party has stressed. The regulations may be so uncertain, and give so much discretionary authority to the federal government that they will discourage foreign investment in those areas of the country where it is still needed, and yet there is nothing in the bill to encourage Canadians to move in and take up the slack.

This is why two amendments have been proposed by my colleague from Central Nova, because if the effort to regulate foreign control is to succeed without destroying our whole national industrial policy, there must be consultation, realistic consultation, true consultation between the federal government and the provinces. At this stage of the game when so many people agree that foreign capital is still essential to the development of the country, we should be careful not to do anything that will discourage such investment from coming in, unless we can guarantee that it will be replaced from other sources.

My hon. friends in the NDP say, "There is no need to worry if you drive out U.S. or other foreign capital. There is lots of money here in Canada to take up the slack." They point to the fact that there was an outflow of capital from Canada last year. They say it is a simple matter to replace what is cut off by using available Canadian funds. Many hon. members of this House realize it is not as simple as that. Traditionally Canadians do not invest in Canada unless they are given some encouragement. Certainly, the present government has done nothing to encourage Canadians to invest in their own country.

I have said that not too many members on the government side of the House spoke, but there was one speech from there that did make sense. In fact, if one did not know who made it one could almost take it as a criticism of this bill. It underlined many of the things that we on this side of the House have been saying. I refer to the speech that my colleague from Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) has already quoted from, the speech made one day last week by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) who, if not one of the better ministers, is certainly a minister who has intimate knowledge of the problems of the regionally depressed areas of the country.

Mr. Hellyer: He is at least one of the most eloquent.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): I will agree with that, and the most sensible. Here is the minister who has been given the task of making DREE work, who has continually told us of the problems he has met in the interference and inconsistencies offered by other government programs, which destroy the efforts of DREE. He has talked about government interference in regional problems, and certainly he is one minister who recognizes the problems. Like my colleague, I should like to quote a remark made by the minister. When we talk about this business of Canadian capital, and say we do not need to worry about foreign capital because Canadian capital will replace it. At page 7637 of the Hansard report of that same speech, still speaking of the need for foreign capital in the Atlantic region, the minister said:

● (1710)

> . . . the biggest failing, in terms of Canadian control of the Canadian economy, over the past 50 years or so has been the lack of initiative and entrepreneurship and the timidity of a great deal of Canadian capital.

He went on to talk about the fact that Canadians did not take the opportunity to invest in the Atlantic region, and so it was left to foreign capital to come in and develop the fishing, lumber and mining industries. In fact, practically all the development that took place in the four provinces was due to the initiative of foreign capital. The minister spoke of the pitfalls that occur when foreign capital gets control of the resources. He referred to several big fish plants that had closed and someone mentioned Devco and several other enterprises.

This happens, of course, but I would also point out to the House something that the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) referred to; that the record of the Canadian corporations is no better in this respect. Canadian corporations, too, have moved in and bought small locally owned plants and then, within two or three years when the operation was not viable, have moved out. I could name a dozen instances, Mr. Speaker, and my colleague the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) referred to a plant which was taken over a few years ago by a Canadian corporation and which now is just a warehouse. This happens all the time, so it is not just the foreign corporations that are at fault. It does not matter whether the money is international or Canadian, naturally the investors are going to make their decisions on an economic basis, and if they have to close the plant they do so. The argument that international corporations have no heart and do not consider the interest of the regions is not valid; it applies regardless of the ownership of capital.

If one read that speech without realizing that the minister had made it, one would almost think he was attacking the principles of the bill. He mentioned all the things that should happen, and the fact that it is very important that there be meaningful co-operation between the provinces and the federal government as well as with the industry in the area, but he also admits that many of the problems are due to the fact that there has not been consultation and co-operation between the governments involved. Industries have been established or assisted when it has been obvious that they could not succeed. Had there been local consultation the grants would not have been recommended.

All through his speech the minister pointed out the dangers of attempting to restrict foreign capital unless something can be done to encourage Canadian capital to take up the slack. While our postulations are the same, Mr. Speaker, our conclusions are the opposite. The minister takes the position that these departments have been set up and, therefore, in some cases when foreign capital begins to investigate the possibility of establishing in an area they have to go to the federal government for some type of assistance. He says, therefore, that there are plenty of safeguards in his department to ensure provincial input and provincial co-operation. This is only partly true, Mr. Speaker. The type of consultation and co-operation that the minister mentions usually comes after many months of negotiation when the program is pretty well set up. At that time the company or the province usually comes to the federal government. That is not the type of meaningful co-operation that is needed if we are to establish viable ownership in these areas.

What we are talking about, and what the premiers of the provinces are talking about, is prior consultation and prior knowledge of what is going on. We have heard apologists for the bill on the government side say that this is provided in the bill. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in the bill to establish prior consultation. The only stipulation in the bill, and it appears more than once, is that the minister "may" consult the provinces; after proceedings have gone so far he may hear provincial representations. How can representations be made on something about which you have no knowledge? If you do not know that there is an application, how can you make representations? This may be the government's definition of co-operation, and possibly that is why we have seen the confrontation between this government and Alberta or Quebec or various other provinces. We on this side do not consider it to be either consultation or co-operation.

In order to meet all the requirements of the foreign ownership program which the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion outlined so eloquently, there must be prior meaningful consultation and co-operation between the federal government and the provincial governments involved. That is why my colleague has introduced this amendment; that is why I say that this bill can be immeasurably strengthened by the government showing good faith. Let them show they really mean to follow a policy of consultation and co-operation by adopting these amendments and making the bill workable.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, perhaps at this late hour, it would be worth while to pause in this debate and review historically why the ownership of our industry is in its present state. Let us hear what some of the people in the business community are saying about Bill C-132 and ask why this legislation is before this parliament at this time.

It is obvious to anyone remotely connected with business that a great deal of rationalization is afoot in certain nations and groups of nations. Many tariff walls are falling, a few are being raised. Considerable scientific research and industrial research is being carried out on a joint or on a multinational basis. Coupled with this, we have an alignment, or perhaps we should call it a realignment, of several European states into a common market with other smaller nations who are classed as associated states. Canada is not part of this alignment. In fact, it is a matter of embarrassment to this government that the European Economic Community has not responded in kind to the overtures made to it by this government.

The November 7 issue of the Montreal Gazette featured an editorial entitled "The Euro-Canadian Doldrums". It tells of the "brushoff" Canada has received from the European Economic Community. While Canada has appointed a senior ambassador to the EEC, that community has not established parallel representation in Ottawa. It is obvious to trading groups that specific spheres of influence in our industry are going to establish trade patterns that will last for many years. Many people in industry and many people throughout this country are asking where Canada fits into this picture. More pointedly, where does our industry fit into this picture?

• (1720)

From the turn of the century to 1973, all we have really done, in so far as industry ownership is concerned, is to have the largest percentage of ownership change from British to American. This is an historical fact. Bill C-132 will do little to change that course, but it is a first step, albeit a weak and faltering one, to attempt to change the thrust of the ownership of Canadian industry. Many people are concerned that we may be left out of industrial alignments or trading alignments and our trading position will be considered secondary to that of the United States. Their concern is justified, but this bill is not going to change that possibility.

There is a wave of nationalism in Canada at present. Much of it is well founded. We should have national aspirations and goals, but they should be realistic and attainable. We should be realistic enough in our outlook to be sure our national zeal does not move us into a position of isolation. If we move in that direction, then we will surely be left out of the market groups and trading blocs that are being formed.

It is proper at this point to note our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been quick to accept invitations to visit Russia and China and had one scheduled for Chile until that country had some internal problems. However, we could not convince the Prime Minister to travel to Washington to talk trade with the Americans, or to Britain to discuss our falling trade balances with that country. He apparently cannot get an invitation to Europe to visit the EEC.

The thrust of Bill C-132 has caused much concern to segments of Canadian business. Let us hear what some of them have to say. The Calgary Chamber of Commerce says it is for the bill, with reservations, but points out that the bill deals with property and civil rights which are provincial matters. The Canadian Bankers Association is against the bill. They state that provisions of the Bank Act already limit foreign participation. I have yet to hear the Canadian Bankers Association or any Canadian bank come forward with a suggestion or recommendation to government as to what it could do to help develop Canadian business.

I have numerous letters from small and medium sized business complaining about the rates of interest charged by our banks. We have not heard from them how they will deal with government loans to small business, farmers and fishermen. They say they cannot make a profit at the rates set by government. But what about the large sums of money the government leaves on deposit in the various banks in Canada? Let the Canadian Bankers Association tell us the rate of interest they pay the government for the average of those deposits. Maybe we could play one off against the other.

The Canadian Bar Association sees problems with ministerial discretion, as do several others who submitted briefs. All agree it should be limited. They also see an infringement on the rights of Canadians to dispose of their business holdings as they see fit. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce is for the bill with reservations. Like many others who submitted briefs, they comment on the intrusion of government into the economic process of the private sector. They further contend that the bill is strongly biased against foreign investment and they state it creates a conflict between the provincial and federal governments.

The Canadian Chemical Producers Association are against the bill and state it is negative and discriminatory. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture is for the bill with reservations, but feels the bill is not specific enough regarding its effect on farm industry. The Canadian Manufacturers Association is against the bill saying, among other things, that it will have a detrimental effect on small business in Canada.

We received something like 50 or 60 submissions. The minister of finance of the province of Saskatchewan expressed his approval of the actions proposed in Bill C-132 in so far as they represent a step forward in dealing with problems of foreign ownership. He questioned the discretionary powers of the minister. In spite of the criteria set out in the legislation for making assessments, recommendations will still be arbitrary and judgemental. This is of concern to Saskatchewan.

George Wimpey Canada Limited, a large building and engineering contractor, is for the bill with some amendments. They say that the definition of "Canadian business" is general and would include land acquisitions which would result in classification as "non-eligible". That the concept of "unrelated business" requires clarification. That is the thrust of many of the briefs presented. The companies do not feel the language is clearcut.

W. Darcy McKeough said the province of Ontario is generally for the bill with reservations. He said this bill is only considered as a first step. More effective control of foreign investment should follow within a specified time period. A more detailed list of factors should be considered in the review process, including cultural criteria. The federal government should provide the province in which the foreign investment is proposed with a copy of the notification and any additional information submitted by the foreign investor. There were many submissions by business and provinces along this line. Mr. McKeough concluded by saying the bill should provide a statutory right of appeal to the courts in the case of any rulings or decisions under it, including the minister's rulings.

Richard Hatfield, the premier of New Brunswick, is against the bill. He feels it would be harmful to New Brunswick's attempts to attract and to accelerate industrial developments. National policy on foreign investments is of varying applicability to regions. It would adversely affect the Maritimes. For example, the New Brunswick Development Corporation helped launch 76 projects since 1970, for which half the total investment came from foreign sources. Previous speakers expanded on that view of Mr. Hatfield. It is very valid and we should listen to it.

Investment Dealers' Association of Canada are for the bill with reservations. They say there is a lack of provision for a formal summary procedure for determining whether a transaction is, in fact, an acquisition of control. The Mining Association of Canada is against the bill. They say that provincial and federal governments, with present legislation, have enough power to safeguard the ownership and control of Canada's mineral resources. Monarch Construction Limited, a firm similar to Wimpey, is against the bill but agrees with the principle. Their major objection is that having to submit bids on land to clearance by review agency would reduce Monarch's competitive position because of the delay factor.

Reichhold Chemicals Limited of Weston, Ontario, a 60 per cent Canadian held corporation, say there are more effective ways to control economic environment than by stifling foreign investment. In other words, they are saying what I said previously that we should encourage more investment in Canada by Canadians. Stelco, one of the largest Canadian corporations, is for the bill, with reservations. It says the regulations and prohibitions should be restricted to cases where there would be a clear injury to society, and should not unnecessarily interfere with freedom of action by individuals. It says the onus should be on the Crown to prove all aspects of its case, including whether the legislation applies to any particular person.

● (1730)

The Toronto Stock Exchange is for the bill, with reservations. It states that foreign portfolio investors who do not represent any threat to Canadian control are not able to ascertain quickly, in present circumstances, whether they are free to invest. Foreign investment should not be entirely discouraged. So the submissions go on. There are some 50 or 60 of them and a similar thread runs through them all. What Bill C-132 lacks, in my view, is supporting legislation or government policy to create and foster growth of small and medium sized businesses in Canada.

There has been some talk about the reorganization of the Industrial Development Bank, but what is required are amendments to the Bank Act and to the Income Tax Act which will create an atmosphere in which business can grow and develop and look outward beyond our shores into Europe and Asia. We need a government in office which will come to grips with our trading partners to the south and improve relations with them to the point at which we can attain the special status we have always enjoyed.

The success of Bill C-132 will not be determined by the bill itself. The measure before us is a weak, ineffective, faltering first step. But success will come if the appropriate supporting legislation is brought forth. It will come when the government realizes that regardless of the trade opportunities available to us in Russia and China, we shall always be tied to the United States in economic matters. I do not find this to be any great problem. I am aware that some of the people in the New Democratic Party are so anti-American they would build a Berlin wall on our borders; I know they cannot share my view. But most Canadian businessmen believe they can compete in the United States market on equal terms, and they say to us: Don't legislate us into a corner.

The success of the bill depends on whether or not the federal government is able to see the provincial point of view. As long as the provinces must go outside Canada to get loans at reasonable rates of interest, and as long as they must sell the bulk of their bonds and debentures outside the country, we shall not find a financial atmosphere in Canada which is conducive to the development and realization of industrial aspirations.

The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), whose constituency is the farthest east of any member of the New Democratic Party, has expressed his view by—

Mr. Alexander: Blowing his tongue.

An hon. Member: Spell it.

Mr. Kempling: The position taken by the NDP in this area, as in many others, is very interesting. They represent the views of four provinces out of ten in Canada. They represent the views of 17 per cent of the people.

Mr. Broadbent: The sensible portion.

Mr. Kempling: They have no representation in this chamber east of Oshawa. What a great record! The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) talks about tunnel-vision. These guys are all in the tunnel at the same time. They hold and represent a very narrow view. I have been provoked into saying this by the comment of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

An hon. Member: Comment?

Mr. Kempling: I would recommend that while driving his foreign car—

Mr. Broadbent: Retract.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Broadbent: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the hon. member who is speaking would not wish to leave on the record his gross mistake in suggesting that I drive a foreign car. He knows very well that I have a car assembled in Oshawa by the fine, hard working people in my community.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kempling: I could be mistaken. I thought the car he was driving was assembled in the United States. That is why I called it a foreign-built car. I cannot find fault with nationals of other countries who see a void in Canadian legislation and take advantage of it. By putting a few logjams in the way we shall certainly not alter the ownership pattern of Canadian industry. This will only be done when the government is prepared to come to grips with the total issue of trade, industrial development and adequate financial facilities so as to give Canadians an incentive to reach out into the world and thus provide the fullest possible employment in all parts of the country.

Mr. Alexander: That is so right.

Mr. Kempling: The success of this bill will depend upon how well the government handles inflation. One of the most perplexing difficulties facing industry at the present time is the increasing cost of some of the materials they use, coupled with shortgages of materials in certain sectors. The success of the bill will depend, too, upon whether or not the government can reach agreement with the provinces on tax-sharing arrangements. Each province has its development programs affecting industry and natural resources. We see the federal government trading off one part of the country against another, while at the same time talking about federalism. This is hardly the way to encourage agreement on industrial development.

Thus, as hon. members will appreciate, there are many factors outside this bill which will determine its successful operation, or the reverse. I am not convinced that hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches are capable of bringing forth the necessary supporting legislation to create the right atmosphere. It is a dismal picture when one contemplates the government's lack of direction in trade matters, particularly when they must depend upon the NDP for support. The NDP, with its well known anti-American stand, is hardly the party to encourage legislation which is broad, mature and outward-looking in temper and thrust.

Nevertheless, we will pass this bill along the third reading, with the reservations I have noted. I say again, as I have before, that if the government is not up to the task before it, it should, in the interest of Canada, step aside and let those who see the picture more clearly come to grips with the problem.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to present my views on foreign investment specifically as it relates to areas which have been designated by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion as areas eligible for special government programs for the encouragement of industry, specifically manufacturing and processing operations. I wish, also, to explain why I believe the amendments presented by my colleagues are essential for the strengthening of Bill C-132. I firmly believe that any legislation can be improved, and I suggest the amendments presented by my hon. friends are designed to do exactly this; in other words, to strengthen the legislation and make it more meaningful.

● (1740)

For the last decade at least, many Canadians, I would think especially those who are somewhat younger than the average age of members of this House of Commons, have been concerned with having a distinct Canadian nationality and with the very attributes of what Canadian nationalism should really be. A distinct facet of this search has been the question of, to what extent should we have foreign investment in this country and to what extent should we control foreign investment? By "foreign investment" I mean the type of foreign investment for which we are looking, be it from American, German, Japanese or other sources.

While the question of buying Canada back, or making Canada uniquely Canadian, whatever these clichés mean, has a lot of appeal today, not only to Canadians generally but especially to younger Canadians, in coming to grips with the matter I think it behooves all members to examine the central question, and in doing so not to go overboard on one side of the question, as members are so often in the habit of doing, and say that in order to create a unique Canadianism we are going to control foreign investment right down the line. In taking this approach, often we do not look to the end of the road and examine the damaging effects on the economy and on job creation in Canada. Therefore, we must have some form of balance between these two positions.

Since the days of confederation the CPR has been a prime example of foreign investment that has been used for the development of Canada. While this investment brought much benefit to Canada, it was often regarded by many people, especially those in western Canada, as a controlling factor in the development of the western Canadian economy rather than an encouragement to new growth. Although new growth was developed, it was always felt that the capital generated by that particular company often went out of the area in which it was most needed.

Mr. Peters: So did the resources.

Mr. Epp: In creating the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the government recognized the fact that foreign or non-Canadian investment to create manufacturing and processing industries in regionally depressed areas can be of great benefit. During some questions which I asked the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) in the committee a while ago an exchange developed in regard to where the best record of DREE has been when the investment picture is looked at.

At that time I criticized the department for what I said was investing money in industries where very often I felt market research had been limited. Investments had been made in companies 40 miles away from where the same type of company had gone broke. I had examples of this in my own riding. The minister indicated that he felt that up to the moment DREE's best success record had been where DREE had gotten together with established companies, be they Canadian or foreign-owned, which were willing to invest in regionally economically depressed areas jointly with DREE, and often with local investors, in order to create new industries. I think the track record of DREE is much better in the area of joint development with existing companies than it has been in cases where funds are provided to people who might just have had a dream at best.

While I personally accept the proposition that we want a truly Canadian identity, and with it investment on a controlled basis in Canada, those of us who come from regionally depressed areas are not anti foreign investment. We need that investment. But in saying that, we are also saying we would like to see incentives given, through a system of tax credits, to Canadians to invest in the expansion of Canadian industry within those regionally depressed areas.

We all know that the largest amount of foreign investment in Canada has gone into our resource industries. Nowhere are we more aware of this than in western Canada. It finds expression in the petroleum industry, in the gas industry and in the mining industry. We are all familiar with the fact that 99 per cent of the petroleum industry is foreign-owned.

Mr. Peters: And look at the disaster we have had.

Mr. Epp: I will get to the disaster in a minute.

Mr. MacKay: They are living disasters.

Mr. Epp: If a Canadian identity is to be developed, and if control of foreign investment is the way to do it, then I submit to the government that it should strengthen Bill C-132 in such a way that the aspirations of the regionally depressed areas are not thwarted as they attempt to engender investment that will create jobs and develop resource industries. I make that submission to the government in the hope that it will review once again its stance on consultation. Consultation can take place at any time, but consultation in a crisis situation, which comes about only after the crisis has developed and the premier of the province rears up and defies the federal government, is not the type of thing that we are looking for.

I find it very interesting that my NDP colleagues to my left feel that foreign investment can best be controlled by nationalization. They feel that this is the panacea. Nationalize everything, they say, and this will solve all our problems. Let me point out to those hon. friends to my left that the province of Manitoba has a socialist premier, even though some people question whether he is a socialist. When asked whether he was a socialist, he said, "Yes, I am a socialist, but firstly I am a pragmatist". His pragmatic approach to government led him to go to such foreign capitalist areas as New York City to find out whether or not capital could actually be obtained by the province of Manitoba for the development of the Manitoban economy, and I would say he was somewhat successful.

Let me also point out that the government of Manitoba has a tremendous record of failure in its Manitoba Development Corporation. I should like to give an example of this. That corporation helped to build the Lord Selkirk II, a ship plying Lake Winnipeg that has been used for many conferences held by the NDP government in Manitoba. It has a strange reputation, Mr. Speaker. It has the only bar in Manitoba which is losing money. So I question whether nationalization is really the panacea it is said to be.

Seriously, what bothers me most about the NDP approach is that they seem to be willing to expand our energy resources to buy back Canada, whatever that means. Rather, let us use the investment capital that we can generate as Canadians to develop new industries. Let us use that capital to develop our resource industries.

Mr. Knight: You just do not like our methods, that is all.

Mr. Epp: No, I do not. I submit to the government that we should use this Canadian money to develop our resources in order to provide more labour-intensive industrial areas.

• (1750)

An hon. Member: That's a socialist approach.

Mr. Epp: I do not think it is a socialist approach. It is a common sense approach, without nationalization. It is rather interesting to hear that the NDP somewhat agrees with one plank in an economic policy that has already come full circle. I point out that fundamentally this is nationalism, and I am in no way a proponent of this policy because I have seen its failure in areas even within Manitoba.

An hon. Member: We are just glad to know that Manitoba people always agree.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak specifically about the amendments proposed, and clearly give my views to the government as to why they are essential to the strengthening of Bill C-132. As I have already pointed out, there are certain merits to this bill and there is a desire to have some control over foreign investment. This desire is not unique in Canada. Every western industrialized nation has some form of control over foreign investment. This is nothing out of the ordinary. But what we must keep in mind is that Canada is a federalist state having ten provinces and a central government, and in no way in respect of future economic development should the central government unilaterally declare this is the way things are to be done, because this affects the provincial governments and the economic lifeblood of each.

It is staggering to the imagination that the federal government would be willing to pass a bill in which it has the option to consult. At some future time the government may say it intends to consult with a province, but there might be an industry which is willing to come to Manitoba to invest, thus creating jobs, and it would be up to the federal government to decide whether that would be good for Manitoba. Surely the Manitoba government, representing the people of that province, should have some voice as to whether such an industry should locate there.

This matter of consultation has become abundantly clear to us. Within recent days, with the energy crisis, the federal government, in what I would call a very naked political approach to the problem, has come out with a policy—supposedly to be changed whenever it is politically expedient—which, in its hope, will ease this crisis. Producing provinces have always had the right to a return on the resources which exist in the province. The federal government now simply goes ahead without consultation, and in fact with confrontation, and says it is going to establish an energy policy without even asking the provinces whether they agree. Surely the least the government could do when it comes to foreign investment is to avoid this type of confrontation.

It is the very nature of a federalist system to consult. This is not a legislative union, this is a federalist state. I submit that Bill C-132, without the amendments proposed by my colleagues, is a bill which is much weaker and will lead to very serious confrontation between the provinces and the federal government if this government is willing to exercise the jurisdiction it will receive through passage of the bill.

I would like to see foreign and Canadian investment encouraged in Canada. Western Canada needs foreign investment, we need better tax credit programs and incentives which will encourage confidence on the part of holders of small portfolios to invest in Canadian industry. This is essential.

A Science Council study pointed out that Canada has one of the lowest percentages of workers employed in the manufacturing sector of any industrialized country. If we are to approach anywhere near full employment, let us not say that foreign investment is to be discouraged. We should not cut it back, because certain areas in Canada require foreign investment while in other areas perhaps it has gone far enough. In this area we must take into account growth factors, how far growth should be allowed and how fast it should be allowed. But because of regional differences, our growth factors are not similar or parallel. Some of our areas need the foreign investment which I am afraid Bill C-132 would thwart.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, in summarizing some of the thoughts I expressed prior to the six o'clock recess, I should like to refer to three points. The first is that nationalization of industries is not the manner by which Canadian content or the amount of Canadian investment in industries in Canada should be increased. The answer is not suggested so often by members of the New Democratic Party. I categorically reject it.

Second, whatever foreign review we might engage in so far as foreign investment is concerned, let us not make the review in such a manner that it becomes a disincentive for foreign investment, especially in depressed areas and areas of regional economic disparity where foreign investment is desperately needed. Third, as Canadian leaders we should encourage Canadian investment in Canadian industry, especially in manufacturing and secondary processing, in order that a balance might again be established between foreign investment and Canadian ownership.

I feel one method by which we could obtain this balance would be by offering incentives through which we could encourage employee participation in the ownership of companies. A number of industrialized countries have been successful in this type of approach. Second, we should make incentives available, especially for small businesses. We should encourage greater investment in such businesses so that jobs are created. Tax credits should be granted so that more people would be willing to invest risk capital, especially in smaller Canadian businesses.

In many areas of western Canada, to a great degree jobs are created by small industries. If we could provide benefits through tax incentives for companies to invest in Canada, not only would we have a broader balance but we would create the jobs which are desperately needed. A change should be brought about in succession duties so that when death occurs the beneficiaries of a small business are not forced to sell out very often to a foreign-financed company because of the ready availability of cash. Rather, some kind of tax credit should be provided whereby succession duties will not be so prohibitive as to force beneficiaries to sell Canadian companies.

Mr. Joe Hueglin (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, all persons seeking public office have reason for so doing. The lack of effective action by the present government in protecting and developing Canadian control of our economic destiny was one of the three prime concerns which motivated my quest for this office.

During the years from 1968 to 1972 there were three takeover attempts which the government was called upon to deal with in the energy field. Each was a matter of "significant benefit" to Canada. Each was dealt with separately. Dennison Mines was refused permission to sell. Home Oil was placed in a situation of remaining Canadian. However, the third, Supertest Petroleum, was allowed to fall under foreign ownership and control.

I have no argument with the first two decisions. The third, however, is of great concern because the outlets of Supertest are spread throughout my section of Canada. It was the slogan of Supertest that it was an "all-Canadian company". Indeed, these words still remain on some gas stations though the company is clearly no longer all-Canadian. Clearly, it could have remained so since it was a profitable Canadian-owned company, and a home with a Canadian- owned firm could surely have been found if there had been concern by the government that this be done.

It is true that the terms of this bill set up a system other than that which existed under the government's arbitrary decision-making, but clearly the government's will will continue to play a part in decision-making since law is always open to varied interpretations. I suggest it was public pressure that saved Home Oil, not government direction. I suggest it was lack of public pressure that saw Supertest slip away.

Under this bill there is no definite, positive direction; there is merely a more formalized screening that would not necessarily save those Canadian companies that remain from being absorbed. This is an indictment of the government, an indictment which proves that it still has no firm commitment to anything that will in substance assist us in controlling our own destiny but, rather, a commitment to pass into law a bill which can be used as window-dressing in an effort to convince Canadian voters that action is being taken.

Style, not substance, has been the technique of this government in its five years of life—style in holding conferences and ignoring the promises made, style in appointing commissions and never forcing them to report, style in hurriedly implementing programs and then having moneys wasted on jerry-built schemes. The Canadian people need more than style, they want more than style, and they deserve more than style.

Perhaps the most unfortunate aspect of the bill is that when it becomes law people will perceive that something has been done, when in fact it has not, and the pressure for real and meaningful steps to be taken will abate for a time. The pressure will abate and this will make the job all the more difficult in the future. That there is a real concern by Canadians, and a real need to develop and implement positive programs, cannot be doubted.

Fifteen years of dealing daily with the youth of our country—as a student at university and as a teacher of history in the high schools of Ontario—has convinced me that there is an ever-growing concern in this respect. This concern has not been allayed during these years, nor will it be allayed by this bill.

There is, in fact, a real danger that the polarization represented by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on the one hand and the New Democratic Party on the other will leave those of us who believe in positive, responsible government action at a disadvantage. The Prime Minister time and time again has compared government action in Canada to the Cuban revolution. He has held up the spectre of radically decreased living standards if steps are taken to control the effects of foreign investment. He gives only two alternatives: do nothing, or suffer greatly. We have done nothing, and we have suffered greatly in any case through unemployment and inflation running unabated at high levels.

● (2010)

If my information coming from the Niagara peninsula is correct, the shortages which are occurring in Bell Canada cable, in hydro cable, in insulation, brick and aluminum siding, will bring the construction industry to a halt. We are short of even such things as tires and anti-freeze at the distribution level. If such shortages, some of which apparently have lasted since last June, are not corrected we will suffer greatly again, not because of lack of effective control of foreign investment but because of general economic mismanagement. The Prime Minister's gross distortion of the choices that face Canada, and his inaction, have spurred the NDP to hold out the need for state intervention on a massive scale as the only means and as the dogmatic truth.

Our youth are responsible citizens, and they are desirous of seeing Canada controlled by Canadians. But because the loud trumpet notes carry farthest, the responsible middle ground is often lost to their ears. In years gone by I have attempted to seek the opinion of the youth in my area. I have participated in the deliberations of the Young Progressive Conservative Association of Ontario as it surveyed the opinion of our youth in the wider area. The conclusions reached by these soundings have been that the young people want the government to provide leadership, that they are willing to accept sacrifice and to play whatever role they can in bringing about the desired result.

The onus that falls upon us as members of parliament is to provide constructive leadership. The present government has not done this. The NDP is blatantly emotional and anti-American in its mouthings, and thus cannot be constructive. Therefore, the burden must fall upon the Conservative Party to provide the constructive Canadianism that our youth seek and that our country so badly needs. I will have more to say about this later.

Is there a need for expanded Canadian ownership and control and for positive measures to assist in bringing these about? In my experience, there is no doubt at all that there is. Last week, acquaintances of mine from Denmark arrived in Canada after a week's visit in the United States. They came to look for products that could be purchased in Canada and merchandised in Denmark and, through their connections, in six other countries in Europe both within and without the European Common Market.

To their satisfaction—and these are men with buying experience in all parts of the world—certain of our products were of a higher quality than those produced in the United States and were capable of competing successfully in European markets. When they asked about these Canadian-produced goods, when they talked about exporting, they were told there would have to be consultation with home offices to see if these Canadian firms could export. How will this bill remedy such a situation? Surely it cannot and will not—and Canadian jobs based on export will not develop.

In Niagara Falls, as well, orders went to U.S. plants when work was slack in a Canadian company because of management decisions, even though the Canadian plant was more efficient. This firm has since changed ownership and aggressive Canadian control has led to expansion of the work force and of the plant. There is also a foreign-owned but Canadian-operated firm which could be Canadian-owned if money were available for the management to buy it out. It has the potential to penetrate the U.S. market if it could obtain capital to expand the production of its excellent product.

Case after case can be cited where Canadian interests are not best served, and this bill does nothing to correct that situation. Case after case can be cited where Canadian-owned or operated firms are unable to expand because capital sources are not available to them on terms they are capable of handling. It is certain that unless positive steps are taken, this bill will solve none of the problems I have mentioned and in fact may cause harm by preventing expansion unless other capital sources are available. Also, it may create a false sense of security which can lead to our economy coming even more under foreign domination.

At this point may I state that it is control, more than ownership, that concerns me. Ownership implies a reasonable return for investment. This is right and just for anyone who believes in capitalism, in someone other than the state undertaking business enterprises. It is the direction that a business takes that is the real concern. If it is, as in some cases, a direction that maximizes output for sale in Canada and abroad—with attendant increases in Canadian labour and resource input—then it is a fair bargain. If it is a direction which seeks raw materials from Canada and components from other Canadian-based operations, then it is a fair bargain. But if it is a direction restricting competition to the Canadian market, regardless of ability to compete, and if it is a direction maximizing the use of foreign-produced goods, then it is not a fair bargain and action must be taken. The bill before us provides no steps in this direction.

Is the state the only mechanism through which we can regain Canadian control? Must there be massive state intervention and nationalization before something can be done? Is outright socialism the only way? Personally, I believe there is a better way. But no other way has been tried, so the socialists can point to continuing failure and beat their drums of nationalization. Perhaps the socialists are right. Perhaps Canadians are not capable of reaching out to control their own destiny with government assistance. But this is questionable, because Canadians have never been asked or given the opportunity by this government to share in obtaining this control. It may be that Canadians are not willing or capable of doing so. It may be that only the government can change the direction in which we are proceeding. But I do not believe so and I will bend every effort to see that Canadians are given a chance to participate before the heavy and inefficient hand of state ownership comes to this country.

Lest our socialist friends jump to the conclusion that I am a classical Liberal calling for no action by the state, or a complete "free enterpriser" unwilling to see the government intervene in the economy, may I make these points of clarification. The first duty of a government, in my view, is to assess the needs of its people; the second is to set objectives to satisfy these needs; the third is to assist and encourage private citizens in their striving to reach these objectives.

Clearly, the need of the Canadian people is to control their own destiny. The objective is to make this country as productive as possible and to provide all of us with a good and continually improving life. The means, just as clearly, must be to have the government provide whatever assistance is needed for Canadians to increase their productivity and to control our economy if it is agreed that Canadians will work more for themselves than will foreigners. The role of the state is not to provide for the well-being of individuals, but to produce circumstances whereby they can best provide for themselves—where through their energy and initiative a better life can be developed.

The government of the day has not set down clearly defined objectives. Indeed, through its various ministers it has tried at one time or another to grasp all sides of the spectrum. The government has not provided the means whereby individuals can, acting alone or together with state agencies, participate in maintaining or regaining control of our economic destiny on any regular basis. The positive steps that have been taken, such as interest being written off, have come only after provincial initiative has made it necessary to act. True, the CDC has been established with the promise of participation, but without the substance of involvement. Indeed, the use of tax laws to provide incentive has been suggested, but not adopted as yet. The designating of key sector in the economy has been suggested, but not followed up. The provision of low interest capital equal to foreign loans has been suggested, but not acted upon.

Surely these and other alternatives could be brought into effect by a government concerned about setting positive directions and assisting with positive programs. We are a people who, through our history, have had confidence in our government, as witnessed by lack of civil strife compared with other states. We are a people who have been provided with leadership and assistance from governments in the past. Today we are a people who will respond to constructive Canadianism. I wonder how much further we would be on the path of grasping firmly the reigns of our own destiny if some of the positive programs put forward by the PC party had been implemented years ago?

● (2020)

Opportunities for Youth and LIP grants do not provide permanent jobs. If the money spent on these programs had been put into capital assistance, jobs would have been provided. The advertising moneys spent on telling our senior citizens that they would get $2.88 more, displaying flower-pots and saying, "It is up to us," and encouraging us to use a zip code have long gone, with no real lasting effect although they totalled hundreds of thousands of dollars. How much greater and longer lasting would have been the results of these advertising campaigns if they had been aimed at encouraging Canadians to participate in an effective Canadian Development Corporation, or advertised the fact that Canadian entrepreneurs would be assisted in their efforts to share in directing Canada's economy for the benefit of Canadians?

Instead today we are faced with the reality of a bill that will do little but which I am certain, come the next election, will be called a great leap forward by every Liberal candidate in the land. Fortunately, the Canadian people have had enough of style and subterfuge and will recognize the substance of the Conservative policies and the opportunities that these will present to them when implemented. Among them will be a policy of encouraging the incentive that exists in our people, marshalling our resources to the task of obtaining as much independence as possible in economic decision-making.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with much attention to a number of hon. members who have spoken on these amendments. I am surprised at the lack of sympathy for the federal system shown by some of my colleagues and their lack of appreciation of the obligations which must be met by the federal government in designing a program covering foreign investment and implementing it in the national interest.

I have heard much comment from some of my colleagues in the House on the amount of influence they feel the provinces should have in deciding the degree of permissible foreign control. I am in complete disagreement with those who believe that the provinces should decide, separately in their own interests, what should be the interest and obligation of the federal government. Later on I intend to move an amending motion that I am sure will add to the position taken by some of my colleagues in this House. If they want all the provinces to make this decision simply because they have friends in certain provinces, it seems to me to be a grave oversight to omit the executive councils of the territories that are not yet provinces but which possess great potential in terms of natural resources.

I have always believed that a Canadian in one part of Canada should be equal to a Canadian in another part of Canada. For a long time I have lived in northern Ontario, an area rich in resources but where this has not been a fact. This is an area which has supported southern Ontario, in particular Toronto and Montreal, and the financial institutions of the country. It did so initially at a time when other parts of the country were producing very little to contribute to national income and national productivity. And in that area we have never received our fair share from either the federal government or the provincial government.

I suggest that some hon. members of this House should look at some of the disadvantaged areas of Canada. They should look at the Maritimes which have contributed a great deal of industrial input to Canadian society over the years. The Maritimes have provided the resource base for other sectors of Canada. Some of that contribution came to my area because maritimers also came there to help develop our resources.

The people of Great Britain did not bring about the industrial revolution there all on their own. Certainly initiative was shown in the invention of the cotton-jenny and in developments in the mining industry at the beginning of the industrial age. But one of the main contributions came in the form of capital supplied from Switzerland, by the people of Germany, by Dutch people, as well as by some of the landed gentry in Britain. That sparked the industrial revolution and produced a great nation that eventually was able to establish the Commonwealth of Nations which in turn has really been responsible for the development of half the world as we know it today.

Years later, when the industrial revolution began in the United States, again capital was needed. This has always been the case and always will be the case. Capital came from countries such as Switzerland, Holland and Great Britain, but it was supplied to the United States in the form of loans. It took 100 years to develop the industrial revolution in England. It took probably 30 to 40 years to do the same in the United States. Both were financed with imported capital, but in both cases that imported capital represented borrowings by the particular country or by the particular industries in that country.

In Canada, our industrial revolution was late in starting. We are one of the richest natural resource countries in the world, and our development was begun by the use of our pioneering spirit in conjunction with the use of outside capital. But the difference between our industrial revolution and those of Great Britain and the United States is that in Canada we sold our resources to other countries. We sold our resources to the people who had the capital. The people who came in did not lend Canadians capital; instead, they bought the resources.

At present, a great controversy is taking place in my area. In it we have probably the highest hill in Ontario. It is about 1700 feet high. In effect, it is a resource that cannot be duplicated anywhere else in Ontario. At present, the provincial Conservative government is talking about spending $82 million in my area. I certainly have no objection to that if it will do anything for the people of Timiskaming.

● (2030)

What are we talking about really, Mr. Speaker? We are again talking about selling our resources—selling a piece of land to Holiday Inns and a number of other American companies. Tourists will come to the area for $100 a day or $200 a day and take advantage of whatever resources are there. We will have bellboys and waiters, but certainly we will not have cooks because for $100 a day they will want cooks from Paris. But we will have sold our resources, and $20 million or $30 million of that amount will have come from the people of Ontario.

It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is time we made a decision. We are God-blessed with resources, but we are certainly not God-blessed with the ability to develop them. We sell everything that is not nailed down, and we are willing to sell some things that are nailed down as well. I have heard some of my colleagues in the Conservative Party speak today about the desire of the provinces to have an input. Provinces be damned!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peters: They want the development for their own benefit. That also goes for the provinces with NDP governments in western Canada. In my opinion we have developed an attitude in this country that is not to our advantage. We hear about separatism in Quebec. What is the difference between separatism in Quebec and separatism in northern Ontario where we give away the resources, whether they be iron, gold, silver or the tourist industry? There is no difference, Mr. Speaker, as long as we are willing to give resources away.

We may talk about separatism because of linguistic differences or because a province is willing to give away its resources, but it is all the same. I think my colleagues in the Conservative Party had better look at some of the resources that they are going to defend on behalf of the provincial governments. One of the Conservative governments owns most of the oil potential in Canada at the present time, and I live in a province with a Conservative government that needs the major portion of that oil.

Mr. Kempling: Now you know how lucky you are.

Mr. Peters: I will not know that until I know how much electricity and oil I am going to get this winter. That is true of all Canadians. One of our major problems is the oil industry, which is 99 per cent foreign-controlled. I think it is a disgrace to allow one of our major resources to be controlled 99 per cent by American interests. We have been willing to sell these resources, Mr. Speaker. I do not suggest that we buy them back, but I do suggest that they are still Canadian resources which belong to the Canadian people. Every member of parliament is going to find it very difficult to persuade a constituent who complains that he does not have enough oil for his furnace that it is all right for most of it to go south of the border. I suggest that it is time we controlled our economy and our destiny.

I was shocked to learn recently that our troops were not acceptable as members of the peacekeeping force in the Middle East. It turned out that we were acceptable in the end because, as a member of the NATO forces, we were balanced by Poland as a member of the Warsaw Pact. If we are to maintain our reputation in matters like peacekeeping, it seems to me we must establish control at home. We are no poorer than countries such as Mexico and others which have decided it may be necessary to tighten the belt. It may be necessary to establish our Canadian independence and our ability to play a role as an independent nation industrially, commercially, philosophically, and politically if necessary.

If my colleagues believe that the provinces have a role, I am not sure what it should be, but they should have some input into the question of federal control of the Canadian economy. The provinces should not have a veto. If my colleagues in the Conservative Party believe in the veto, then it should also be extended to the territories of Canada which have uncontrolled resources. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett):

That motion numbered 2 be amended by inserting in line 7 thereof, following the words "a province" the words, "or a territorial council".

I move this motion, Mr. Speaker, because I believe that what is fair to the ten provinces is also fair for the territories which have not yet been raped but obviously will be raped if we do not provide a national philosophy that will give full play to the development of Canada rather than to the development of veto power.

This is an important bill, but it is a lousy bill. The Liberal Party never had a philosophy that would take them far enough toward solving a problem. This bill is part of a solution. If anybody asks why we did not support the Conservative Party and so call an election right away, it was the fear that the Conservatives would form the government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Don't worry about a thing.

An hon. Member: Just give us a chance.

Mr. Peters: Judging by the wording of the clauses that it is sought to amend, Mr. Speaker, we would have no one Canada; we would have ten states. That would "make it" for Alberta because they have the oil to sell, and it would "make it" for Ontario because they have to buy the oil and they also have other resources.

An hon. Member: What about British Columbia?

Mr. Peters: British Columbia would have its own inclination, under a Conservative government, and the Maritimes would have theirs. They might even establish northern Ontario as a separate province, and then we could fight more effectively for our needs. I was elected to this House as a Canadian.

• (2040)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Right on.

Mr. Peters: I believe that most of the amendments introduced by the Conservative Party are divisive. I understand the Liberal Party will be supported by the Conservatives on this bill. Therefore, I suggest that they do something about the bill, strengthen it as much as possible, so that we can develop a strong, independent nation. In that way we will no longer be the nominee of the United Nations for a peacekeeping force. Canadians are independent enough in industrial development, resource development and international relations to be looked upon by the rest of the world not as an industrial satellite of the United States but as people willing to spend money to develop our resources and make whatever sacrifices are necessary.

I move this amendment in the hope that my proposal for unity will be accepted by the Liberals and Conservatives so that those people in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon will be able to play an equal role with the provinces in dividing the spoils of Canada.

Mr. Alexander: I wonder if the hon. member would allow a question.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before listening to the point of order, may I ask the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) who is seconding his motion. Is it the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett)?

Mr. Peters: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should not have risen on a point of order. I really want to ask the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) whether he will accept a question.

Mr. Peters: Go ahead.

Mr. MacKay: First, may I say that I think the hon. member's amendment is very useful. However, I want to ask the hon. member whether, when doing his research for this amendment, he formed the opinion that the definition section includes in the definition of a province the same purpose in so far as a territory is concerned. Other than that, I think it is a good amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before the hon. member answers I would ask the indulgence of the House. The hon. member's time has expired. Therefore, it would require unanimous consent for the question to be put and answered. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to believe that the hon. member is probably right in regard to the definition. However, the fact remains that the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) and the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) have both stated on a number of occasions that because of the territorial status the Councils representing the Yukon and the Northwest Territories are not clear as to identity; they are still dominated to some degree by decisions made by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and other federal government agencies.

I point out to the hon. member that in the case of PanArctic and one of the known resources in the Northwest Territories, the federal government entered into that agreement not as a participant in the area, because of the Northwest Territories Council, but as their right under the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. This was not at the request of the Council, but independently. For this reason, by adding this wording to the clause we will be establishing something that at the moment is not very clear. I am referring to the boundaries of the authority of the Northwest Territories Council and the Yukon Council in making decisions that sometimes have a countereffect regarding the wishes of the federal government.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe you caught my eye before the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) sat down. I was up like a flash—but things happen. I wonder if I could have the same consent in order to clarify a position that the hon. member has put before us. It is for the edification of all members.

I am trying to rationalize the position which the hon. member took. He said in no uncertain terms, in fact almost vehemently, that he was against the motion placed on the order paper by the Conservative Party. Then something strange happened. He brought in a motion. This is where I became a little confused. His motion does not try to wipe out or to reduce the Conservative motion, but extends the motion of the Conservative Party. This is where I find some difficulty in trying to rationalize the hon. member's argument.

If the hon. member is against something so violently, how can he move an amendment which enlarges upon that which he is so violently against? If he could help me on that I would possibly give his motion further consideration. That is my confusion and that is my question.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for confusing the hon. member. I belong to a minority party and therefore do not have the say. I cannot prejudge the vote that will take place on this motion, for several reasons. However, I am not sure whether they will support the government's bill. However, I am not sure whether they will support it with or without this amendment. That is important. The government may vote for this amendment. Coming from a minority area of a very large and wealthy province, we do not have many of the advantages of the rest of the province.

An hon. Member: Thanks to Bill Davis.

Mr. Peters: Thanks to Bill Davis and his predecessors. I do not know what the outcome of this vote will be. if it passes, I, as a member of parliament representing a minority resource area in a large province, would be remiss if I did not ensure that the people of the Northwest Territories had the same kind of control that is being asked for the ten provinces.

• (2050)

I may say to the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) that I certainly do not want this to happen to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, since the members from those areas are not here I feel obliged to protect their interests as far as I can. I hope sincerely that everyone will vote for the amendment because I certainly believe they can all do so. Whether or not they all vote to support the motion is another story.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the Chair should reserve the right to make a ruling on a future occasion should an amendment of this nature be proposed at the report stage. However, the matter has not been raised by way of a point of order this evening and I do not intend to raise it myself except by way of entering a caveat.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I wish to seek guidance on precisely the point of order to which you have alluded. It seems to me this is an important point and one which needs clarification, and I would very much welcome a ruling as to whether or not the amendment is in order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In that case, the Chair will be grateful to hear the views of hon. members. I did reserve judgment, but the minister has raised the matter fairly and squarely. It is a moot question and one for the Chair to determine. Perhaps I can look to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for assistance; he is always a source of sustenance and guidance in these matters.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend and affectionate colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), tells me I may say publicly that I did not encourage him to make this amendment. That is putting it mildly.

Mr. Alexander: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Now that he has done so and now that the minister has called upon the Chair to make a ruling, it looks as though I shall have to say something.

Mr. Gillespie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thought I was already speaking on the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All members who wish to do so will have an opportunity to say something on the point of order, but at the moment the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has the floor.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Whatever any of us might think of the purpose of the amendment, it is clear from our Standing Orders that the amendment as it reads is in order. I draw Your Honour's attention to Standing Order 75(8) which reads as follows:

When the order of the day for the consideration of a report stage is called, any amendment of which notice has been given in accordance with section 5 of this order, shall be open to debate and amendment.

So there you are, Mr. Speaker. Notice of the motion being debated was properly filed under Standing Order 75(5). Therefore, it is before us and it is open to amendment. Your Honour would not be obliged to accept the amendment if it were completely removed from the subject matter of the question being debated; it has to be relevant to what we are discussing. But whatever my own views might be about the tactic followed, since we are discussing a motion which calls for reference to the ten provinces it is perfectly proper to move that there be reference to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories as well. It appears to me, therefore, that you and the House are stuck with this amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Maybe stuck, but I shall recognize the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) who may unstick us.

Mr. Gillespie: The last thing I would wish to do would be to make Your Honour's job more difficult or to complicate an already complicated situation. I would have no objection to the Chair reserving its opinion on this issue, if that were Your Honour's wish. However, it seems to me that if the amendment is allowed we should be given an opportunity to debate it on its merits. I am afraid that this provision, if accepted, would weaken the bill and I wish to serve notice that I would wish to argue the merits of the case in that light.

Mr. Peters: If the minister wishes to argue the merits of the case, he should do so during the debate and not on a point of order.

Mr. Baker: I, too, have read the rule to which my neighbour and very distinguished constituent, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), has referred and I believe it embodies the extension of a reasonable principle. For such an amendment to be out of order it must involve something completely new, and it is clear to me, as I hope it will be clear to Your Honour, that it involves nothing more than the extension of a principle already implicit in the motion under discussion. It does not depart from the spirit of that motion.

I agree with the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) that the minister ought not to seek to debate it on a point of order. He is taking a narrow view—so narrow that he can look down the neck of a milk bottle with both eyes at the same time. I am very pleased to support, with more enthusiasm than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has shown, the amendment moved by his hon. friend, the hon. member from Timiskaming.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the amendment is clearly in order, and I suggest to the minister that he will have a chance to express his views in the debate which will follow.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for having allowed my to express my opinion concerning Bill C-132.

As we all know, this bill provides for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must apologize to the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin). I gather the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) rises on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I beg the indulgence of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin).

● (2100)

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I beg the indulgence of the hon. member for Lotbinière and I also ask the indulgence of the House. I endeavoured to get Beauchesne's but it was not easy to get it from the library quickly. In considering the admissibility of this subamendment, I suggest reference must be had to citation 406 of Beauchesne's. I refer specifically to the section that says that amendments are out of order if they are irrelevant to the bill and—I stress this point—beyond its scope.

Mr. Baker: The ruling has been made. This is not a court of appeal.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen). He was on his feet when the debate on the point of order was begun, and I apologize to him. I cannot see that the point raised by the hon. member really changes the opinion of the Chair. To me, the amendment proffered by the hon. member for Timiskaming is by way of detail, adding something to a matter already before the House, rather than being something that is entirely new or different. However, I do regret that I did not give the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton his moment in the sun on this particular point. The hon. member for Lotbinière.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, the House of Commons is studying Bill C-132, entitled an Act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons.

Since the beginning of this debate, Mr. Speaker, Progressive Conservatives and New Democrats have proposed a number of amendments which I have read without seeing how they can really change the spirit of this bill. Generally speaking, they seem to simply play around in this bill which, itself, solves nothing much. This may be a harsh judgment, but let me read the very beginning of this bill.

PURPOSE OF ACT

2. (1) This Act is enacted by the Parliament of Canada in recognition by Parliament that the extent to which control of Canadian industry, trade and commerce has become acquired by persons other than Canadians and the effect thereof on the ability of Canadians to maintain effective control over their economic environment is a matter of national concern, and that it is therefore expedient to establish a means by which measures may be taken under the authority of Parliament to ensure that, in so far as is practicable after the enactment of this Act . . .

Mr. Speaker, if you read the preambule of this legislation you find that as far as possible the government will try to implement Bill C-132 to achieve a certain degree of control over foreign corporations or foreign investment in Canada.

But such a control can be implemented financially only. I remember a report that was tabled in the House, a report which had been prepared for the Privy Council Office and was entitled "Foreign Ownership and the Structure of Canadian industry", Report of the Task Force on the Structure of Canadian Industry.

A Crown minister was the sponsor of this study and under the responsibility of the then President of the Privy Council this task force carried out this study and took rather radical positions requesting the government to take energetic measures. Of course, the government did not agree with the conclusions of this study. Later on, further studies were prepared with a view to demonstrating to parliamentarians and Canadians in general that Canada did not belong to us anymore or only a very small part of it.

I will quote only one excerpt from this study. It is taken from page 87 and I quote:

35. An alternative means of Canadian participation in the profits of direct investment firms is minority Canadian ownership. The extent of such participation by Canadians is at present relatively limited, reflecting the strong preference of foreign corporations for operating abroad through wholly-owned subsidiaries.

Those are statistics which rebut anything the minister responsible for this legislation told us as well as the spokesmen for the Progressive Conservative and the NDP parties.

● (2110)

For 375 of the largest non-financial Canadian corporate complexes in Canada (for a detailed discussion of these and other data on this topic, . . .), 162 or 43 per cent are private companies with no publicly traded shares, and about 75 per cent of these private companies are controlled by non-residents. It has been estimated that approximately 18 per cent of the total corporate taxable income in Canada in 1965 was earned by about 130 of the largest private corporations, most of which were foreign-owned.

Mr. Speaker, that is one problem. The second is the approach to or the participation of Canadian provinces in the protection of our economy and the ensurance of a steady development of our economy in the interest of, by and for all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, one finds that once more such is not the case. At federal-provincial meetings, we witness lengthy discussions that end up in smoke or lead to practically nothing or big statements of intent. But in the end, Mr. Speaker, what tools are available to the provinces to really protect their own regional or local economy in the Canadian or North American context so the Canadian entity will be preserved? I must say, Mr. Speaker, that those means are more means in principle than effective financial means.

[Mr. Fortin.]

How did foreigners chiefly acquire control over our economy? With money. And what will be the way for all Canadians to regain the economy of their country? Again, with money.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the James Bay development project, or the need for nuclear, electrical or petrochemical energy in Quebec and other provinces, what means are available to the provinces or to the federal government to provide for the protection of the Canadian control over such projects or such new essential and vital developments?

What do our governments do, whether they are Progressive Conservative or Liberal, provincial or federal? Once they have prepared a plan, once they have given it sufficient publicity to sell the idea to the public and do some window-dressing, then, Mr. Speaker, the little procession begins: the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister, officials, the Minister of Natural Ressources, the Minister of Energy, the ambassador and all the others are going where? They are not asking the Canadian people to get in, in order to develop the country. They go abroad. They go to the United States, to other countries. On the pretence that they will create employment—poppycock again on the part of this government—they go to France where they try to convince the Michelin or Renault companies to settle in Canada to create employment in this country. Those firms are granted subsidies and the first thing we know, Mr. Speaker, is that it does not work, for all kinds of reasons.

I do not wish to weigh the situation to know whether they should be granted a subsidy or not, but I want to say that every time there is a desire to create employment, economic or financial, gigantic or fantastic projects, like James Bay, Hydro-Québec or Ontario-Hydro projects or any other similar venture, they go begging, they negotiate with American people or foreigners, but especially with Americans. Then, they invite and help them invest in our own country. In return, the Prime Minister, the minister, or the government representative, whether on the federal or provincial level, may come forward, under the cover of a press conference with cocktails and all, rise and state in the faces of Canadians or Quebecers: "I am happy to announce that foreigners trust in the future of Quebec, in the future of Canada, and that thanks to that trust, we shall be able, from such or such date, to proceed with the development of the James Bay project or some other project".

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a shame. I have nothing against foreigners eager to come and invest in our country; I suggest however that if foreigners trust in our future and see in our province or country a potential for economic development, if they have found resources worthy of being developed in a profitable way for Canadians, if they trust in the economy of Canada, why is it then that Canadians, and Quebecers in particular, should not have also the opportunity and the same trust to invest in our own country?

Mr. Speaker, I will give you just one concrete example on this subject. We know that under the new tax system implemented by this government, the savings of Canadians are taxable. The worker, the farmer or the day labourer cannot invest several hundred thousand dollars but they could invest in Canadian businesses not only their work, the fruits of their labour but also their small savings. Even if he is poor, if he has plenty of guts the average citizen could invest but he cannot because the tax legislation discourages his willingness to save money. To invest he has to save money first.

Mr. Speaker, when the time comes to complete his income tax return, the average citizen receives from his bank a note telling him he has to pay taxes on his savings. Mr. Speaker, this system is all wrong. Then the government will tell us, referring to political principles in order to obtain votes, that it defends an economic nationalism policy and that it presented a bill that is honest and well-intentioned; it will tell us that it wants to give back Canada to Canadians through Bill C-132 or any other inquiry or brief.

Mr. Speaker, how far will Bill C-132 go? It will create another gizmo of civil servants which will be called the Foreign Investment Review Agency and will provide for the appointment of a commissioner. This bill also states, Mr. Speaker, that we shall pay the expenses of the large corporation representatives that we shall call before us.

Mr. Speaker, this indicates the intention of the government. Even if I read it in the newspapers or even if they repeated here ten or twenty times that this government is well intentioned in wishing to control Canadian business instead of nationalizing it as the New Democratic Party would want it, or to "play" with their profit as the Conservatives would want, I would not believe it. But if the government were well intentioned, Mr. Speaker, it would begin by allowing the provinces the financial possibility of ensuring the development of their own resources through financial means belonging to Canadians and Quebecers, that is the use of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, if the Canadian government and the provinces trust American funds invested in our country and guaranteed by our values, I do not see why this same government, if it is really Canadian, if it is really elected to serve the interests of Canadians, would not use the Bank of Canada to invest in our own resources, since it is the same mortgage. Mr. Speaker, the government could then prove that it believes in Canada and I have no doubt that Canadians would follow its example.

I do not want to hear that Canadians do not control anything or that they are not interested in their country when their own government never gives them a good example and when it is crawling in front of foreign businesses, in front of foreign capital to develop our country.

Mr. Speaker, it is easy to preach in favour of Canadian unity. The other day, I heard a rather interesting remark. The Conservatives in western Canada say that the Liberal Party is a French-Canadian party and consequently that it is not a good party. Therefore they invite these people to vote Conservative.

At the same time, Liberals in eastern Canada say to the people that the Progressive Conservative party is an English-speaking party and, therefore, they should vote Liberal, for it is not a "representative" party.

• (2120)

Finally, both these so-called great national parties attempt to build up their political prestige, for this is what counts in the end, in order to prevent the division of the country.

However, the price for national unity is to be paid financially. We have here a Minister of Finance, as in each provincial legislature. If these people are honest and not puppets of high finance, but are there to serve the interests of the Canadian people, for which they have been elected, they will stop to think instead of flippantly rejecting solutions enabling the government and the Canadian people to regain control over the economy.

Mr. Speaker, I believe—and I think that the other hon. members of my party agree—in private enterprise and in individual initiative.

We are against economic nationalism whereby we must nationalize to be at home. We feel, Mr. Speaker, that in the system of free enterprise, the human being finds his strength, his vigour and his wish to better himself. We firmly believe that if a person is to live decently in free enterprise, earn his living and support his family, he must have the ambition to better himself.

It is the same for a country. If we want the provinces to wish to improve themselves and to grow together in this confederation, the federal government, which is here to harmonize relations, must provide them with the financial means necessary for their development, for instance by creating subsidiaries of the Bank of Canada in each province.

Mr. Speaker, this solution is rediculed, but it remains that the abject position of our Prime Minister when dealing with foreigners to develop James Bay is much sadder.

Mr. Speaker, I would have something else to say about that. Even if we believe in private enterprise, it does not mean that we are idiots. It is essential that private enterprise be supported. This government, through its own measures, had made private entreprise practically dependent on a new kind of social welfare.

We have been left with the impression that the government is responsible for the creation of employment, but this is an entirely wrong concept. The government alone could not create a single job. It was private enterprise that created those jobs in this country.

A problem that this bill tries to deal with is the control over investments in this country so that companies should be Canadian. But what steps can the government take in this regard? All it thought about was to create an agency.

Mr. Speaker, when I said at the outset of my comments that unless it is materially possible to have statistics available and to know who controls such and such company, we shall awaken in five or ten years with another so-called Gordon or Watkins report or another Bill C-132 and we will be no better for it. On the contrary, foreign capital will have continued to pour into our country.

If Canada is to develop, Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of doing what some members would like, that is send foreigners back to their country. There is so much room in Canada to develop and live. Those people have a right to live in our country. But, Mr. Speaker, if the government really is Canadian, if it is not paid by foreigners, let it make use of the present financial means to develop our country without going to war against foreigners.

Mr. Speaker, this is exactly the same thing as when we say that English-speaking people are to blame when separatism is mentioned and when things are going bad in Quebec. In the Social Credit party, we say that the English-speaking people are not to blame, but that Quebecers are because they never gave themselves real representatives to lead them.

Let us stop saying that the English or the foreigners are to blame if we do not live suitably in Canada. It is our fault if we fail to give ourselves a truly Canadian government and if we keep on having governments paid, elected and controlled by high finance.

Would this government, which was elected by finance, be able through a bill to control its investments? This is totally ridiculous, Mr. Speaker. They are bluffing in an attempt to silence the nationalists who believe in Canada and, at the same time, leaders keep on currying favours with large companies. What is the difference between Progressive Conservatives and Liberals? Absolutely none: both are courting the same corporations and the same corporations contribute to replenish the electoral funds of these two parties. They in turns come into power without changing the situation at all.

Mr. Speaker, the NDP claims that the only way to solve the problem is to nationalize companies so as to make them companies of the state in order to see what is going to happen. They still believe in the CBC and in all these gimmicks. As for us, though small in number, we are sincere and we are Canadians. We believe in free enterprise, in the value of the person and his right to develop in free enterprise.

We are Canadians and we say that neither the English, nor the French Canadians nor the Americans are to be held responsible because Canada does not belong to Canadians any more; those responsible are the political maneuverers who get elected through finance, stay there with a title and serve financiers. As long as we have to bear with such politicians, the House waste its time on tame bills and Canada will still be sold to foreigners for a mess of pottage.

[English]

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak to the subamendment offered by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) with regard to motion No. 2 which is before us. When motion No. 2 in its original form was first debated, I made it clear that I thought the amendment would do nothing to strengthen the bill and that in fact it would have the effect of weakening the bill.

I should like briefly to review two points. The first is that as the bill now stands, it provides for the government to take into account provincial industrial and economic policies in respect of any province likely to be significantly affected. The amendment standing on the order paper, not the subamendment, focuses only on provinces in which the enterprise or the business is carried on or proposed to be carried on. The subamendment offered this evening is limited in exactly the same way. It would limit consideration with regard to provinces or territories only to those provinces or territories in which the enterprise is carried on or in which the new business is proposed to be carried on.

Clearly, this would have the effect of narrowing the intent of the bill. It would have the effect of making it more inflexible than would the present wording. It would exclude, as I have mentioned already, provinces which were significantly affected. It would include only those provinces in which the enterprise is carried on or in which the proposed enterprise is to be carried on. Provinces significantly affected by the enterprise would be excluded from any consideration. That is the first point.

I should like to give an example of how this might work. For instance, it is quite conceivable that a province might be affected in a very substantial way by the existence of a new investment to be made or a new firm to be acquired in a province. One might visualize—I believe I used this example before—the case of a major tire manufacturing operation. A tire manufacturing operation which might be located, let us say, in Quebec could affect a major tire factory operating in the Maritimes. This could have an effect not only on the neighbouring province or provinces, but the new or proposed investment could equally have an effect upon existing tire manufacturing firms in other provinces including, for example, Ontario.

The subamendment offered to the original amendment would exclude any consideration of those provinces which would be significantly affected, because it limits the consideration to the province in which the enterprise, takeover or proposed investment would be carried on. A province may have a very large interest in a takeover or investment because of its position as a consuming province, or because of plants in that province that would be in a competitive position with the firm to be taken over or established.

I submit that the first amendment, No. 2, would weaken the bill because it introduces this degree of inflexibility, and I submit that the subamendment offered this evening does nothing to strengthen the first amendment offered. I would argue that flexibility is an essential element in the operation of the bill and that its removal would have a serious effect on the effectiveness of the bill.

I would hope that on reflection the House would decide to reject the subamendment offered this evening because it does nothing to strengthen an amendment which already, in my view, would weaken the effectiveness of the bill.

Mr. Baker: That is a fatuous argument.

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I wish to say I share the objective of this bill, which is to realize the ambition of a growing number of Canadians at last to live our own life. But we cannot achieve this objective unless to a much larger degree than Bill C-132 proposes we repatriate our economy and replace our branch plant status, a status which a generation ago replaced the old colonial way of life but replaced it with something not much better.

One of the tragedies of Canadian history has been the way in which Canadians have never been just Canadians. We began as a colony of France and so some of us were French Canadians. Then we became a colony of Britain and some of us were British Canadians. A generation ago, at the end of World War II, we became increasingly a subsidiary of the United States economically, culturally and in our life style, and so we became American Canadians. But at last there is a significant movement across this country to become a true nation of our own and to be simply Canadian Canadians.

We cannot achieve this objective, however, unless we can demythologize the kind of myths that almost lulled our people to sleep. One example has been the myth that foreign investment equals capital inflow, that we must have great capital investment so that necessary foreign capital will come into this country. The reality is that according to a report of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, two-thirds of the money used in the transactions of foreign-owned companies comes from Canadian banks rather than from sources outside the country. For example, McGraw-Hill bought the Ryerson Publishing Company for $2 million with a Canadian bank loan; ITT bought AIMCO with a Canadian bank loan; the Export Development Corporation gives most of its loans to eight corporations, five of which are foreign-owned.

● (2130)

The second myth we must demythologize is that foreign investment means jobs, that we must have more and more foreign investment so that Canadians can gain employment. But we are now realizing that foreign investment can mean unemployment through foreign-dominated companies and unions often giving priority to production in other countries. We know, also, that it can mean a concentration in the development of natural resource industries and a lower priority to secondary industries where most of the jobs are to be found. It is a tragic fact that of all the industrialized countries of the world, Canada has the smallest percentage of its investment in secondary manufacturing.

The third myth that we must demythologize is that Canadians need foreign management and foreign technology in order to develop their industry. I think there was a certain validity in this claim at one time, a validity in that at one time Canadian companies required the kind of expertise and know-how that had to be imported, just as at one time I think it was necessary for the Canadian labour movement to have international unions for precisely the same reason. But we have moved beyond that need, I hope, in both instances, both in terms of industrial and commercial management and in terms of the direction of our union movement. Given the opportunity, surely this country now has the mental equipment and the practical experience to develop its own resources and to manage its own affairs.

It seems to me that we should be able to go beyond the limitations of Bill C-132, we should be able to demythologize the notions that have so gripped the thinking of many Canadians throughout this country and have too long made us accept a branch plant mentality. If we look at the Toronto Star of January 12, 1973, we find that 68 per cent of the people of this country, according to the survey published in that newspaper, believed that the government's foreign ownership policy was inadequate or very inadequate. Two-thirds of the people surveyed were dissatisfied with the kind of direction they were receiving from this government, the direction presented in the legislation we are debating tonight.

According to the International Review of March, 1973, in reply to the question, "Is foreign ownership good or bad?", we find that those who believe it is bad rose from just 33 per cent in 1969 to 47 per cent in 1972; that is, just a third of the Canadians surveyed four years ago were discontented with foreign investment, but now the fraction is almost one-half. Se we have to be conscious of the fact that a growing number of Canadians want the goal which is surely the objective of this bill, but an objective that is realized only to a very limited degree by this legislation. I would hope that we would all see Bill C-132 as simply the beginning, the first step down a road that we hope will lead us to an objective which surely we should all share and support, the kind of objective that Canadians have now delayed too long in seeking.

For those reasons, it is possible for all of us to support the principle and the objective of this bill; but there are some points upon which I think criticism needs to be directed against it. The first of these is the assumption of the government that you can achieve this goal by passing a law which generally approves Canadian ownership, when what we need is not just legislation along this line but an economic policy that will give some assistance to Canadian business and industry striving to uphold Canadian ownership. It would be much more inspiring to parliament and to the public if this legislation could be accompanied by that kind of economic policy.

Tonight I would like to ask that the attention of the House be directed toward the need of Canadian business for much more assistance than it is now receiving from this government. I refer in particular to small business, the kind of business that generates jobs, the kind of business that is surely the backbone of the Canadian economy. The sad fact is that Canadian small business is now suffering as never before. According to the Toronto Star of February 13, 1973, 2,848 businesses that could be described as small businesses went into bankruptcy in the previous year. It was the worst record since 1942.

The reasons so many small businesses, those companies that have assets under $1 million, are having such a difficult time are such facts of life in Canada today as the exorbitant taxation imposed on business by the government, the unfair and unreasonable interference with business by the government, the shortage of capital under which so many small businesses suffer. For example, the small business loans administration of this country reports that under the Small Businesses Loans Act, in 1972 only $28,328,126 were advanced in such loans compared with $25,582,269 in 1961. There has been almost no advance in ten years in actual dollars, let alone in purchasing power.

The fact is that this government is simply not getting behind small businesses in Canada. No wonder so many of them found it impossible to survive. I stress this point for this reason, that it is not enough for us as legislators simply to say that business shall be Canadian. What we must do is to initiate and support policies that will make it more and more possible for Canadians to go into business and to stay in business. It is so often a sad fact that a businessman today finds it too attractive to sell out, faced as he is by the many problems of keeping a company going: there are the problems of taxation, government interference, shortage of capital, labour difficulties, and the like. It is often much easier simply to look in the mirror one morning and say, "Why should I go on this way?" It is easier to pick up the telephone, call New York, Chicago or Detroit and say, "If you still want this business, come and get it." What we need, therefore, is to bring about an economic policy that will make Canada a much more attractive country in which to do business; and the great failure of this government is not simply in initiating inadequate legislation but, much more seriously, in bringing about inadequate policies.

Much has been said in this debate on the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). In the interests of federalism there has been a denigration of the rights of the provinces to participate in the repatriation of our economy, to have some voice in the decisions that are made, decisions affecting their lives. I find it very interesting that so many members, particularly those to my left, who have been so articulate in speaking about participatory democracy and the rights of individuals to participate in decisions that affect them, in this instance turn away from that principle and seem to be opposed to the provinces having some say in that which affects them.

● (2140)

I have been particularly intrigued by the reasoning of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), who spoke with his usual power in criticism of this amendment, speaking in favour of federalism—I must say a federalism without precedent in the history of Canada, that is, a federalism that would ignore the rights of the provinces—but then going on to move his curious subamendment that would give the same rights to territories. It would seem that he reasoned that what was wrong for ten should suddenly be right for 12, and that something which was to be rejected when applied to the provinces should be accepted if applied to provinces plus territories. We welcome the subamendment and I would hope that, if it passes, its mover would be prepared to support the amendment as modified by it.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) has criticized the subamendment and the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Central Nova on the grounds that they do not do justice to the needs and desires of all provinces concerned. It would seem to me, on reading the amendment as proposed, that there is nothing in it which would prevent the federal government from consulting with any province and eliciting from any provincial government a report on how a proposed takeover would affect its economy and its life.

The amendment requires that the province in which a business is being carried on shall be consulted. It requires that the compatability with that province be considered. But it certainly does not prevent the federal government from carrying on consultation with any other province. It seems to me that the intention of this amendment is not in any way to minimize the leadership of the federal government but, rather, to assert what is a basic principle of Canadian confederation, that the federal government and the provincial governments shall work together.

[Mr. Stackhouse.]

We look at Bill C-132 with some gratitude in so far as we all recognize the need for the Canadian Parliament to enact legislation that will put us on the road toward the repatriation of our economy. We can regret that it does not go further. We can regret that there is an inadequate economic policy accompanying it, making its objective that much more unrealizable. But we can still support it, I think perhaps because of the philosophy expressed in a certain saloon sign in the Klondike many years ago which said, "Don't shoot the piano player—he's doing the best he can." Neither should we shoot down this bill, in so far as it is going to achieve something and the minister, we think, is doing the best he can. Maybe he is doing the best he can in that this is the best bill he can get through his own caucus and cabinet, and we welcome it to that extent and support it to that extent.

But I want to say, in closing, that I would hope and earnestly plead that this legislation be not the last step this parliament is asked to take. May it be but the first, not the last step that we will take down the road we hope will lead us to an objective that a growing number of Canadians seek. And if we are to follow that road, surely the government must be prepared to give leadership—greater leadership than it has given in the past. In this regard, the government has been content simply to follow public opinion rather than to give it direction. Its record to a great extent has been an acceptance of the willingness to have this country sold out.

Our memories go back to the 1956 pipeline debate when we recognized the attitude of the Liberal government of that time putting resources into the hands of foreign investors, resources that certainly should have had Canadian ownership and control. Perhaps at one time this might have been justified. I would have to admit that probably nobody is innocent enough to be justified in throwing the first stone. But we cannot justify it any longer. No party, no government can justify continuing Canada in the direction it has been going since the end of the Second World War. Therefore I would hope that Bill C-132 would be supported generally, at least as a symbol of the way in which Canadian parliamentarians and the Canadian government are going to turn this trend around and to move in another direction.

So very frequently it has been the case that our leaders in government have wanted to say to the people, "Tell us where you want to go and let us lead you there." But we would hope that for once the government would be willing to point this country in the direction it should follow; that for once we could at least gain a fraction of the kind of faith, conviction and vision that made the founding of this country possible.

Just the other night I read this statement by A. R. M. Lower, an historian who surely should be respected by members on the other side of this House, commenting on historic developments just a few years after the beginning of confederation: "Confederation was kept alive only by the faith of its founders and the vision they had of a country yet to be developed." I think that across this country tonight there are millions of Canadians, especially young people, who have that kind of faith and that kind of vision and who are looking to us to give them that kind of leadership.

Just a century ago Thomas D'Arcy McGee could speak of a new nationality. At the end of 100 years and more of confederation we can see that a new nationality has come into being. Yet it has not taken the full form that all of us could wish it might take. What we are seeking is a new sense of that nationality, a new awareness that we are neither colony nor subsidiary nor branch plant, but a nation whose people are masters of their fate and captains of their soul. And to achieve that we can look forward to a time when in the economy, as in the political and cultural life of this country, we will truly be living our own life.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the subject of foreign ownership has been foremost in the minds of Canadians for the past several years, although in most people's minds, encouraged by the members of the NDP, it is American ownership rather than foreign ownership that concerns them. This concept is, of course, wrong and as Canadians we should be concerned about the inflow of any capital into our country whether it be from the United States of America, Germany, Britain, France, Japan or other country.

● (2150)

There is no question that foreign investment in our country has been increasing at a fairly rapid rate over the years. It is the effect that foreign investment has on our economy that is of concern to the public. We cannot really blame the foreign investors; we must blame ourselves. When the minister of finance for the province of Saskatchewan appeared before the Standing Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on June 19, he said that foreign investors operating in Canada have until now simply operated by the rules of the game, and there is no reason why they should operate differently in the absence of adequate guidelines and controls by Canada.

As the problem is a national one, it is the responsibility of the federal government to enact the legislation necessary to minimize the effect of foreign ownership on our economy, and I emphasize the word "minimize". There is no question that foreign investment is necessary if Canada is to continue to develop as an industrial nation, but I believe it is the responsibility of parliament, as was said by a spokesman for the government of Ontario, "to ensure that future investments by foreign corporations make an effective contribution to the achievement of national economic and social objectives."

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I was disappointed with this bill. All it does is allow a group of bureaucrats in Ottawa to make decisions with respect to foreign investment which affect every region and province of Canada, and this without consultation or input by the region or province. This bill is another example of the arrogance of the government in presenting legislation which affects every region and province in the dominion, without first having met with the provinces and come to a consensus. It is a bill which is politically motivated, a vote-catcher, because the subject of foreign ownership is on the lips of almost every concerned Canadian today.

That Canada is a country made up of economic and physical regions is a fact of life and has been since confederation. Every region, in fact every province, has its own problems and there is a great deal of regional disparity. Because of this we have a program such as DREE and, of course, we have equalization payments which are worked out every year to help the have-not provinces. Industrial development has been concentrated in central Canada over the years because the wealth of the country has been siphoned into the financial circles of Toronto and Montreal, there to be utilized in industrial development in the area immediately surrounding the cities.

It is granted that industry tends to concentrate where the markets are, in the areas of greatest density of population; but inequities in freight rates over the years, particularly between central Canada and the west, have tended to discourage industrial development even of a secondary nature. Only in recent years has there been any move toward developing industry on the Prairies, and this has primarily been due to foreign capital. As I said, Mr. Speaker, foreign capital is necessary, but there must be some means of controlling its use in a way that will effectively benefit Canada. I am very disappointed with this bill, and one of the reasons for that disappointment is lack of participation by the provinces or regions concerned in the decision-making.

When I attended the Western Economic Opportunities Conference in Calgary in July as an observer, I was told that the conference was the first occasion on which some of our top civil servants had visited western Canada and that they were amazed to find such a large and attractive city as Calgary out on the Prairies. I do not know how true that statement was, but it concerned me a great deal. What concerns me even more is that, if it is true, it is this type of person or possibly persons without any intimate knowledge of the economic and social needs of the area who will be sitting on the screening agency making recommendations on whether foreign capital should be allowed to come into the Prairies. The analogy applies equally to the Maritimes.

Notwithstanding what the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) said, Mr. Speaker, each province must have input with respect to applications by individuals or corporations who plan on making an investment in that province or region. In addition, a majority of the persons in the agency considering the application must represent the province or region where the applicant intends making the investment. Without this type of input and representation, the province will be at the mercy of Ottawa—and I feel that will tend to further the alienation which appears to be building between the outlying regions and central Canada.

We in this party believe in one Canada. In order to keep going ahead, it is important that major pieces of legislation such as this bill be acceptable to all provinces.

I see it is ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—ALLEGED LETTING OF CONTRACTS BY HIRE NORTH WITHOUT TENDERS

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I rise again on this occasion to bring up the matter of apparent conflict of interest in the awarding of contracts for the Hire North program in the Northwest Territories. I very much like the concept of this program under which northern natives are hired to clear land for the Mackenzie Highway right-of-way and are trained to operate heavy equipment. This program, funded by the government of Canada and carried out by the government of the Northwest Territories, has provided native people with some of the direct economic benefit of the highway construction and with training and experience which may prove useful in future projects.

This program also has its dark side and it is of this side which, unfortunately, I feel I must speak tonight. It appears that the man hired to supervise and manage this project, Mr. Rudy Steiner, has awarded contracts of substantial value to firms, in which there is evidence to indicate he has an interest, without calling tenders. I have demanded that an appropriate committee of the House investigate this matter, and I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on Monday, November 5, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), whether he would agree to refer it. The Prime Minister answered that he had not understood my question and that he would read it when it appeared in Hansard. Mr. Speaker, I have submitted written questions on this matter because I want to see what information the government has in its possession, that it can treat this affair so flippantly.

I have information in my possession which warrants serious investigation, as do many thousands of newspaper readers across the country. I should like at this juncture to commend the reporters of the Edmonton Journal who have pursued this matter and who have delved a little more deeply into it than many reporters in this country are prone to delve. Let me share some of this information with the House. As the election approached last fall, the government was anxious to push ahead with land clearing for the Mackenzie highway. The Hire North program was to be a vehicle for this, and someone had to be found to manage the project who could get things done in a hurry. Accordingly, senior territorial officials approached Mr. Steiner who had a reputation for getting things done with a minimum of bureaucratic delay. He did away with a lot of bureaucratic delay all right; before he had even signed his own employment contract he had committed the government to expenses in excess of half a million dollars.

[Mr. Neil.]

• (2200)

He was also responsible for awarding contracts in the amount of $227,110 without tender calls, and $46,700 with questionable tender calls, to two companies—Great Bear Industries Ltd. and Homes North. It was alleged that these were the only companies that could provide the equipment required in these contracts. But there are others who would like to have had a crack at them. Mr. Steiner co-signed a loan for Great Bear from the Canadian Acceptance Corporation on August 31, 1972, just two days after the firm was legally incorporated as a Northwest Territories company. This company received $124,560 in contracts.

Mr. Steiner was also at the time a director of Berg Insurance Agencies Ltd., of which Homes North is a division. Homes North received $154,920 in contracts, all without tenders. A number of contracts were also awarded to Cross Arctic Transport Ltd., of which Mr. Steiner is a director and major shareholder. At least he got the job done with a minimum of bureaucratic delay.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development knew about this, because he received a letter dated October 12, 1972, from Mr. André Carrell, office manager of Hire North at Fort Simpson, who felt he could not remain silent. His letter was sent back north to Stuart Hodgson, commissioner of the Northwest Territories, who asked deputy commissioner John Parker to investigate. Mr. Carrell, incidentally, is no longer employed in the Northwest Territories. In spite of these and other irregularities, of which the minister and top territorial officials are aware, Mr. Steiner is back on the job with Hire North.

I repeat my demand to the government, Mr. Speaker, that this matter be submitted to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts or to whatever committee is deemed appropriate. I am not after anyone's head and I do not wish to delay the Hire North project: I hope it is clear that this is not my intention. What is important, though, is that the people of the north be protected from this phony frontierism, from this disregard for the fundamental rules of fairness and honesty in awarding contracts. I respectfully await the response of the government.

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few points in response to the hon. member. I assure him the government has nothing to hide in this regard. At some later point I would be happy to discuss this matter with the hon. member very fully, as would the minister at an appropriate time before the committee.

When this subject was first raised in the fall of 1972, it was investigated by the deputy commissioner of the Northwest Territories. The report supplied by the commissioner indicated the following points. First, although Mr. Steiner was a director of Berg Insurance, a parent of Homes North which company rented portable homes to Hire North, he had no financial interest in the company. He later resigned his directorship. Second, there appeared to be no connection between Mr. Steiner and Great Bear Industries Ltd. and no evidence of impropriety in Mr. Steiner's dealings with any of the companies supplying goods or equipment to the Hire North project.

Third, Mr. Steiner was authorized by the Northwest Territories government to rent portable camp buildings and other pieces of mobile equipment. Since companies normally supplying portable camp buildings could not meet the requirement in time, a purchase was negotiated. The total amount involved in these arrangements for portable camp buildings and mobile equipment amounted to $219,100. After the initial camps and equipment had been assembled late in August and early September, 1972, all further equipment required has been obtained through tendering procedures.

PUBLIC SERVICE—ALLEGED RUG-RANKING SYSTEM OF PROMOTING SECRETARIES—REQUEST FOR SUBSTITUTION OF POINT RATING SYSTEM AND TABLING OF RELATIVE TREASURY BOARD MINUTES

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on July 23, 1973, as recorded at page 5870 of Hansard, I directed a question to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) with regard to a problem that has been rampant in the Public Service of Canada, namely, the practice of what is commonly called rug-ranking. I asked the minister whether he would consider replacing that unfair and discriminatory practice with a system which would provide for promotion by way of merit for secretaries in the public service. I asked this question particularly in view of the fact that other professional groups in the public service have enjoyed such assistance for more than a decade.

In his answer, the minister did not respond to the question put to him. I think what he said could properly be described as an impressive defence of the status quo. The purpose of the question was to secure recognition of the duties actually performed by secretaries in the public service. I want to point out that secretarial work was not always considered to be women's work. Despite opposition to women in the labour force, many women continued to seek and find employment in government service and elsewhere almost a century ago. In 1885, only 23 of more than 4,000 civil servants were women and one-third of these were third-class clerks—the lowest level—in the Post Office Department. But times have changed and women now make up an important part of the public service.

In 1970, the Royal Commission on the Status of Women made a special recommendation to the federal government with regard to the ST occupational group. In the chapter headed "Women in the Canadian economy," the commission stated that the present system of classifying STs, referred to as rug-ranking, seriously infringed on the rights of individuals to equitable treatment and placed secretaries in a position in which their pay was dependent on the pay received by others. The Royal Commission on the Status of Women echoed some earlier findings in a study made for the Public Service Commission. It went on to say:

> The career structure of STs looks more like a steeple than a pyramid. This is attributable to rug-ranking which not only curtails opportunities for STs but means that lower level officers whose work requires a very good secretary either cannot get one, or, should they succeed in getting an exceptional stenographer, cannot treat her fairly, or increase the chances of her staying by rewarding her adequately. This form of linking of the fate of secretaries to the fate of their bosses has another interesting "hooker" in it; a woman of ST-6 level or higher may well find herself in a state of suspended animation should the boss leave the public service since the incoming boss will be inclined to promote his own secretary.

Lately, with full implementation of the Public Service Commission's bilingualism program and the realization that bilingual secretaries' quotas which once seemed safely far away are already looming on the horizon, the ST classification system has acquired still another "hooker". A number of recommendations have been made, and in my view they should be taken up by the government. First, with respect to the language question, there ought to be a standard testing system uniformly administered. A second language training course for secretaries should be developed and instituted by the language bureau. Increased access to French language training in all aspects, reading, writing and comprehension should be made possible.

These are not the end of the recommendations which have been made on the matter. I commend this brief to the government. With respect to the revision of the ST classification standard, may I say that approximately 15,000 employees are classified as STs in the administrative support category of the public service. The STs have the specialized skills of typing, working with dictaphones or taking shorthand dictation and transcribing it. Many of them have the added and demonstrated ability to perform as executive assistants to management executives. If the present system of rug-ranking is not curtailed, these latter abilities will not be allowed to flower.

A further recommendation which I pass on to the government is that as an alternative to rug-ranking, a point rating system be developed, that there be an immediate revaluation of the ST group and of ST positions, and that a full examination of promotion, training, career development and mobility opportunities be made. Another recommendation is as follows:

● (2210)

> That the administrative and attitude barriers be removed that prevent STs from entering competitions for other categories.

The objective of the Public Service of Canada and all of those who perform services on behalf of the people of Canada for the Government of Canada and those of us that work in this chamber ought to be that the best and fairest system possible be applied; that a person be permitted to advance on his or her own merits. With respect to those in the ST categories, that facility and avenue is sadly lacking. I hope that as a result of this debate and the questions which preceded it, the government will take a long, serious and hard look at the problem of those who are caught in this dilemma.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have heard the representations of the hon. member. Some of the questions to which he has referred are already being studied by the Public Service Commission. I shall be happy to refer his arguments to the public service commissioners and to the Treasury Board authorities.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.14 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 14, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. LUNDRIGAN—REQUEST FOR CHANGING OF WORD USED BY MEMBER IN REFERRING TO NEWFOUNDLAND JUDGE IN MAY 18 DEBATE

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a question of privilege which relates to my verbal disability. If Your Honour and the House will bear with me for a moment I should like to ask the House to consider an amendment to Hansard. On May 18 of the present year a statement was attributed to me in the debate on the redistribution of seats in Canada. I was referring to a judge of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland who was in charge of the Newfoundland boundaries commission, and I used the term, "notorious" judge. Then I was reminded by an hon. member that the word should be "noteworthy", and I made the correction as found in Hansard.

I was somewhat surprised when on July 16 I received a two-page reprimand from His Honour, with supporting documentation from other distinguished gentlemen of the court of Newfoundland, asking that I be a little more careful with my language and that I recognize the meaning of a particular word. I replied to the distinguished gentleman on August 8, and I should like to quote one brief paragraph from that letter:

> I know my choice of words, although laterly corrected, would prick the sensitivity of one of Newfoundland's elder statesmen and gentlemen. I can assure you that my language choice was purely a form of verbal "subrogation" which is frequently associated with outport Newfoundlanders, especially those of us who speak off the cuff rather than the premeditation of the brain.

I thought, Mr. Speaker, that that would have resolved the problem and would set the record straight. Thus I was a bit surprised today to receive in the mail a letter from His Honour, who has now retired, which says, in essence, that he could not rest if the record were not permanently corrected. Therefore I wonder whether the House would consent to have the permanent record corrected to read "noble" or "noteworthy" judge, or some such word as that, which would convey the respect and honour that should be associated with a man who has now retired from such an eminent position. Perhaps I could also apologize for my language in that respect.

While I am at it, though it was not on the official record may I say I used exactly the same word in 1967 during my first speaking engagement to an eminent body of educators in introducing Sister Nolasco, who is now dean of graduate studies at Carleton University.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure what conclusion should be drawn from the hon. member's intervention. Perhaps it would be possible to accede to the request made by the hon. member, and I certainly appreciate the point he has made. Since he gave me notice of his question of privilege I have made inquiries as to the possibility of having the record corrected. I am told that the official edition of Hansard is under print, but I think certain arrangements might be made, even at this late date, to give effect to the hon. member's suggestion and to ensure that a more appropriate description of the honourable judge's contribution to his province and to Canada's national life is inscribed in the permanent record. I will do this, of course, with the consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

Eighth and ninth reports of Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs—Mr. Jerome.

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

Third report of Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts—Mr. Stewart (Cochrane).

[Editor's note: For text of above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

FISHERIES

STATEMENT ON FLEET EXPANSION IN ATLANTIC COAST INDUSTRY, SUBSIDIES AND LICENSING

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know, there has been a three-month freeze on subsidies for new fishing vessels on the Atlantic coast. It was introduced in August in order to slow down a boom in fishing vessel construction which was unprecedented. With the continuing depletion of a number of our more important fish stocks, we are in danger of over-capitalizing a fleet which is already large and which should be tailored to future needs rather than expanded on all fronts.

Fisheries

● (1410)

During our recent three-month moratorium we have discussed the twin questions of federal subsidies and additional licensing with representatives of the fishermen, the fishing companies and the provincial authorities. While new vessels are needed, especially in the offshore trawler fleet, it is generally agreed that the number of new entrants into the industry should be controlled. More attention should be given to catching species of fish which have not previously been taken in large numbers by Canadians and a determined effort made to take up our international quota for cod in northern areas. Less effort should be directed toward the harvesting of traditional species some of which are over-exploited at the present time.

As a result of these consultations, we have decided to lift the freeze on subsidies. The accent from now on will be on modernization. Replacements and conversions of existing vessels will be encouraged. Grants will also be given for new vessels to be used in areas where the resource is plentiful. The customary 35 per cent subsidy will not be paid, however, in fisheries where it is agreed that we have too much catching capacity. This is true of lobsters, scallops, herring, salmon and snow crab.

A word with respect to licensing, Mr. Speaker. All fishermen presently in the industry will be protected. New entrants will be encouraged as long as they do not add, unnecessarily, to the over-all pressure on fish. To do this, we need to know who are bona fide fishermen and who are not. We need this licensing data in order to upgrade the fishery. We need it in order to develop a sound system of catch insurance as well.

Accordingly and effective immediately: (a) All commercial fishing vessels, traps and other catching units will be registered by the Fisheries and Marine Service; (b) all vessels, skippers and operators will be licensed; (c) only Canadian citizens and landed immigrants will be eligible; (d) all craft, skippers, crews and other operators which have a history in the industry will continue, automatically, to have the right to fish; (e) new entrants will be limited, in the case of lobsters, scallops, salmon, herring and snow crab fisheries to replacements. As hon. members know most of these fleets are already limited in size; (f) new vessel registrations in the groundfish fishery will be encouraged for underexploited species and areas. As for those that are fully exploited the moratorium on new vessel registrations will be continued for a nine-month period. This time is required for further consultations with fishermen, companies and the provinces as to the future of the industry; (g) special committees will be set up in our principal fishing areas in order to advise the government as to the manner in which this program should be administered; and local fishermen and local company representatives will have a voice in the management of the fishery in this way.

Registration of vessels and the issuance of operators' licences will begin early in the new year, and will start with large vessels and the fleets which are already limited in size.

I hope this statement comes across as being optimistic in tone, Mr. Speaker. We have negotiated new and larger quotas in the North Atlantic fishery. Canadians can also take many species of fish which they have not harvested in the past. So, while we have too many boats chasing too few fish in some areas, we can redirect our efforts and expand our activity in others.

We must increase our over-all capacity and if we do this wisely we will increase the income of our east coast fishermen substantially in the years ahead. The industry agrees with this approach because it is sound from a conservation point of view. It will also increase the average income of our fishermen in eastern Quebec, the Maritimes and Newfoundland.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Official Opposition may I say that we listened with considerable interest to the lengthy statement made today by the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries (Mr. Davis) concerning the government's Atlantic fishing vessel licensing program and subsidies policy.

I wish to thank him for the courtesy he has shown to this side of the House by giving us a copy of his remarks at least an hour before delivering them, a policy which I would commend to other ministers of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: When the minister announced the start of a thorough review and assessment of the Atlantic fishing fleet development program on August 13 he indicated that the review would lead to the introduction of new licensing and vessel construction subsidy policies, and at that time he stated that an immediate three-month freeze would be placed on construction subsidies available under the fishing vessel assistance regulations. That type of unilateral action as contained in the minister's statement, along with his statement today, has of course been the hallmark of the present minister. He will go down in history for his acts of confrontation rather than his acts of consultation on the fisheries.

The present government's policies have been dictatorial, coercive, abrasive and contradictory. On the one hand, this minister has asked the fishermen to go out and catch more fish. On the other hand, he has made it extremely difficult for the industry to expand, thereby creating problems for our fishermen, our processors and shore workers who would otherwise gain from increased catches. When I sit in on fishermen's meetings and discuss their problems with them it immediately becomes evident that they are concerned and worried about the regulations emanating from Ottawa and the degree of control presently exercised over their operations and industry by the present Minister of Fisheries and his staff.

The vessel inspection report put out by the minister at the beginning of the 90-day freeze is a classic example of what can happen when he and his staff confront rather than consult the fishermen. The fisheries officers along the coast have valiantly tried to carry out bureaucratic Ottawa's dictates but they have found it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to secure the signature of the captains or owners after inspecting the inshore or offshore fleet. Under this situation I wonder on what grounds the minister has today based his statement concerning the licensing of ships, operators and crews. The captains and owners refuse to sign the forms because they have no confidence in this minister or in this government. This is understandable since, long after the minister announced his freeze on ship construction subsidies due to a lack of funds, the government made vast amounts available on some dubious and questionable make-work projects while at the same time they preferred to spend more than $2 billion on unemployment benefits, some of which would have stimulated the shipbuilding industry in Atlantic Canada.

When the industry is allotted catch quotas through the efforts of government certainly there has to be a partnership between industry and government to plan for the most efficient fishing effort and, undesirable though it may be, licensing may be the only answer. But the average fisherman today, especially the inshore fisherman, seriously questions the quota allotted to him and he asks, for example, why he is prevented from catching herring on Georges Bank next year beyond 25,000 tons while Russia is allocated 342,500 tons. This summer, while the minister was talking about a 200-mile controlled limit on our continental shelf, our fishermen were denied the right to fish for herring in the Bay of Fundy.

In his freeze on construction subsidies we on this side cannot help but wonder why the minister penalized the growth of the Atlantic lobster and the Pacific salmon fleets which are already licensed. Now he wants to further control and manage these fisheries by demanding that the fishermen obtain entry permits before they can go fishing. He has added scallop, herring and snow crab to the list of controlled fisheries and these existing fishermen will still not receive construction subsidies.

We welcome the minister's statement that subsidies at the current level will be provided for replacement vessels, conversion of existing vessels to increase productivity, and for new vessels designed to fish unexploited stocks. However, as the minister is well aware, the quantity of unexploited stocks in the North Atlantic is definitely limited and his moratorium or freeze on new vessel registrations for an additional nine months will definitely be harmful to the over-all expansion of our fishing industry. This action makes a mockery of the minister's statement that our stand at the upcoming Law of the Sea Conference is to give Canadians a larger share of the harvest from fisheries resources off our coast.

● (1420)

Finally—and it was a long statement by the minister—we on this side share the fishermen's concern over the minister's statement of August 13 that vessels already fishing, or for which firm commitments have been made, will be granted licences providing they meet existing regulations. All the special committees representing all the fishing interests, including provincial representation, will not upgrade more than half of the existing fleet to meet the new regulations. In our view, too strict an application of this particular clause could well work a hardship on our existing inshore and offshore fleets. If it is the government's intention to enforce the new regulations strictly before licences are issued, then the government should be prepared to pay an improvement construction grant, in the same manner that assistance is provided shore-based industries, in order to enable the fishermen to upgrade their boats and equipment in compliance with the new regulations.

Obviously the intent of this new policy is to encourage diversification through multipurpose vessels, but we are concerned about the overlapping authority granted to inshore and offshore licensing committees which is bound to be confusing when applied to multipurpose vessels. We also believe that the new fee structure will restrict young progressive fishermen from entering into new areas of opportunity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: In conclusion—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think I have to interrupt the hon. member at this point. The hon. member did refer to the fact that the statement made by the minister was long. However, the Standing Order does not refer to the length of statements made by ministers but requires that statements made by spokesmen for parties in opposition commenting on ministerial statements should be brief. Perhaps the Standing Order should be changed, but the position now is that the requirement of brevity applies. I appreciate the fact that the hon. member just said "in conclusion", but I thought this was a good opportunity for the Chair to remind all hon. members of the requirement of the Standing Order.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one more brief comment to make.

The minister's statement indicates that he still remains totally unaware of the heritage which is ours and that he is not prepared to create the national and international climate which is necessary for the profitable operation of our fleet and our packing and processing industry which means so much to the economy of Atlantic Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I join the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) in thanking the minister for having made available a copy of his statement far enough in advance of delivery for us at least to examine it in a preliminary way. The twin subjects of the vessel construction subsidy and the plans for the licensing of fishermen and fishing vessels constitute the nuts and bolts of the whole fabric of the involvement of the individual fisherman in making a living. Therefore I am sure all hon. members will appreciate the importance of the statement the minister has made today which, as I read it, introduces some rather drastic innovations in past practices on the Atlantic coast of Canada. As I read the statement I find that it introduces in many ways a system parallel to that which fishermen on the Pacific coast have enjoyed, or perhaps I should say endured, for a good many years. In that respect perhaps it does not represent any drastic departure from the over-all policy of the Department of Fisheries.

Only time and a much more extensive analysis than one can make at this point will determine whether or not the minister's proposals are adequate and feasible in the circumstances of the Atlantic coast fishing stocks and our arrangements under ICNAF. They may be the subject of extended consideration by the fisheries committee in due course.

The principal point on which I would like to comment is the reference in the minister's statement to the fact that consultations were held during the three months freeze with the industry, with fishermen and with provincial governments, and the later reference to the fact that local consultative committees are to be established. In the view of those with some awareness of the outlook of the fishermen this is the key point that should be commented upon in connection with the statement rather than engaging in an attempt to analyse all the details of the specific proposals.

I suggest to the House—and this is in agreement in part with the remarks made by the hon. member for South Shore—that as long as parliament continues to allow a Fisheries Act to stand on the statute books which gives absolute discretion to the minister in the matter of leases and licences to fish, then for just so long will we be engaged in debate on whether consultation has been meaningful or meaningless. The fact is that under the law the minister does not have to consult with his cabinet colleagues, does not have to consult with members of the House, does not have to consult with the fishermen. All too often the fishermen themselves, and some of us in this House, feel that the minister, while going through certain motions, does in fact act in a very dictatorial and at times inscrutable manner when making decisions.

This is the principal question that should be raised at this point. It is certainly the point of view from which Atlantic coast fishermen should examine the new proposals with respect to the licensing of fishermen and boats. I am sure they will do so in relation to the real question of the proper conservation and utilization of the fishing resources of Canada.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DETENTION OF CERTAIN PEOPLE BY SPANISH GOVERNMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. In view of the recent arrest and detention by the government of Spain of 113 leading professionals, academics and workers who represent the democratic forces in all sections of the community, and in view of the open intervention of the Archbishop of Barcelona on their behalf, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Neale):

That this House deplore the actions of the Spanish government in denying its citizens their democratic rights to freedom of association as embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion is proposed under Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Barnett.]

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DISCUSSION OF DECLARATION ISSUED BY EUROPEAN AND CANADIAN PARLIAMENTARIANS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 and in the interest of this country, I request the unanimous consent of the House in order to move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), the following motion:

That the content of the joint statement issued at the end of the meeting between delegations of the European and Canadian parliaments in Ottawa, November 1, 1973, be discussed in this House at a time set with the common agreement of all parties.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member for Labelle. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such unanimous consent?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Labelle. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 the motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order that may facilitate matters, instead of passing this motion we might agree to have this debate on Friday during private members' hour. If that were generally acceptable I would certainly concur in the motion.

Mr. Speaker: I understand there have been consultations and discussions with respect to this proposal. Is this agreed and so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

• (1430)

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LICENCES FOR 1974 BRITISH COLUMBIA HERRING ROE FISHERY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That in the opinion of this House the Minister of Fisheries should immediately clarify and define the "special consideration" to be given to Indian applications for licenses in the 1974 British Columbia herring roe fishery; and in the event of the failure of the minister to do this within the next week, the subject matter of Indian license applications be referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development for urgent consideration and report.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

[Text]

CAPITAL PROGRAM TO RAISE PRODUCTION AND IMPROVE QUALITY OF SALTFISH

Question No. 2,233—Mr. Marshall:

Under the $2,100,000 capital program budget designated by the Department of the Environment to raise production and improve the quality of saltfish, where will the new facilities be located in the Province of Newfoundland?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Under the Canadian Saltfish Corporation's $2.1 million capital program budget which is being funded by loans, equipment and facilities will be placed according to needs and circumstances, after consultation with agents and/or fishermen. Investments this year have been mostly for moveable equipment and this will be used where it appears to be most effective as the season develops.

OFY—PROVINCIAL FINANCIAL ALLOCATIONS

Question No. 2,260—Mr. Marshall:

1. Under the 1973 OFY Program, what amounts of money were allocated to each province and how many jobs were created in each province?

2. What specific criteria were used to determine the allocation of OFY moneys to each province?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. Under the OFY Program in 1973, funds were not allocated by province but according to regions and subregions. From those statistics, we are able to provide an approximate breakdown of amounts paid and the number of jobs created, by province.

Province	Project Grants	No. of project participants
Newfoundland	$1,457,765	1,921
Prince Edward Island	385,496	372
Nova Scotia	1,638,540	2,123
New Brunswick	1,388,525	1,628
Quebec	12,745,865	11,523
Ontario	9,020,339	9,445
Manitoba	1,534,148	1,834
Saskatchewan	1,348,615	1,622
Alberta	1,764,781	2,055
Northwest Territories	294,970	435
British Columbia and Yukon	3,512,919	3,709
National	403,055	282

2. The allocation of moneys to each region and subregion was based on the following factors: student population of the age group 14-25, student unemployment rates (secondary and post-secondary levels), regional disparities. Certain revisions of regional and subregional allocations were subsequently made, according to the number and quality of applications submitted to OFY.

AIR CANADA FINANCE BRANCH STRIKE, WINNIPEG

Question No. 2,460—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Since May 24, how many (a) supervisory personnel (b) unorganized personnel have been transported to Winnipeg from Montreal to carry out the duties of employees of the Air Canada Finance Branch in Winnipeg?

2. What is the cost to the airline in lieu of lost revenue passenger seats for this exercise?

3. What living accommodation and expense allowance is being provided for by Air Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1, 2 and 3. The labour matter referred to has now been resolved and a collective agreement signed. The information requested by the questions is considered to be of a proprietary nature.

RETURN OF T-4 SLIPS FOR THE TAXATION YEAR 1972

Question No. 2,614—Mr. Forrestall:

1. How many T-4 slips were returned to the government for the taxation year 1972 because the persons for whom such forms were intended could not be located or did not exist?

2. (a) What was done with these slips (b) under what specific authority was any action taken?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): In so far as the Department of National Revenue is concerned: 1. There is no record available of the number of 1972 T-4 slips returned because the persons for whom such forms were intended could not be located.

2. (a) The T-4 and T-4A returns are prepared by individual employers and the employees' copies mailed directly to the employee by the employer. In circumstances where such forms are returned to the employer by the Post Office as undeliverable, there is no requirement for the employer to take further action to locate and deliver the T-4. Some employers will hold the forms until specific requests are received from employees, while in other cases the forms may be directed to the department. In those cases, forms are related to the taxpayer's file if one exists and held in the event that a request is received from the employee. (b) There is no specific authority. The requirements for the preparation and delivery of forms T-4 are given in Part 2 of the Income Tax Regulations. Section 200(1) states who shall complete a T-4 return, Section 205 sets out the date by which the return is to be filed, and Sections 209(1) and 209(2) contain the requirement to provide copies to employees and the method by which the copies are to be delivered. Having complied with the above requirements, the employer has fulfilled his responsibility to the employee. It is the employee's responsibility to ensure that the employer has his last known address or to present himself at the employer's place of business to personally pick up his copies of the T-4.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT TRAVEL BUREAU—TOURISM PROMOTION

Question No. 2,642—Mr. Forrestall:

1. How many letters have been sent, by month, to residents of countries other than Canada by the Canadian Government Travel Bureau since its inception?

2. For each of the above months, what percentage of those letters were sent promoting (a) Nova Scotia (b) Prince Edward Island (c) New Brunswick (d) Newfoundland (e) Quebec (f) Ontario (g) Alberta (h) Manitoba (i) Saskatchewan (j) British Columbia?

3. What is the policy of the Canadian Government Travel Bureau with respect to the promotion of the various provinces with some degree of equality in its letters sent to persons resident outside of Canada?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Records are not available, by month, of the approximate total of 73,000,000 letters sent to countries other than Canada by the Canadian Government Travel Bureau since it was established in 1934.

2. It is not possible to give the percentage of letters that promoted a particular province. The objective of the Bureau is to promote all parts of Canada. Most of the letters cover more than one province, and some letters are aimed at special groups, such as those interested, for example, in golf, skiing or fishing.

3. Apart from letters replying to specific questions from inquirers, the policy of the Canadian Government Travel Bureau is to use its direct mail program to promote all parts of Canada. Samples of letters sent out in quantity are sent, at regular intervals, to each province and territory, and observations are welcomed from provincial and territorial government travel authorities about the content and balance of coverage. Currently, letters are weighted approximately as follows: Atlantic Canada, 15 per cent; Quebec, 25 per cent; Ontario, 25 per cent; Midwest, 15 per cent; West, 20 per cent. Inquiries about specific regions are either answered from Ottawa using literature from the provinces and territories or referred to them for information to supplement CGTB literature already sent. In addition to CGTB direct mail programs to promote all of Canada, on occasion direct mail promoting travel to the Atlantic provinces is given additional emphasis as part of the special Atlantic Provinces Travel Advertising Campaign established as an economic incentive measure in 1957 and still continued (at $350,000 a year).

LIP PROGRAM

Question No. 2,681—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Of the 264 Members of the House of Commons, how many replied and how many did not reply by September 7, 1973, as requested by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, to his letter of August 23, 1973 on the subject of this year's LIP Program?

[Mr. Stanbury.]

2. Of those who replied, how many (a) agreed (b) did not agree to a Constituency Advisory Group as outlined by the Minister in his letter?

3. For what reason did the Minister permit the announcement of the creation of Constituency Advisory Groups by means of a press advertisement before he was aware as to whether or not his suggestion was acceptable to Members of Parliament?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): As of September 7, 1973: 1. (a) 107; (b) 157.

2. (a) 82; (b) 25.

3. The purpose of the press statement published in various newspapers was to acquaint the public with the new LIP program and its principal characteristics including the fact that a member of parliament might decide to recommend the appointment of a Constituency Advisory Group. It was not intended in any way to suggest, by this wording, that an M.P. would or would not decide to recommend the appointment of such a group in his or her own constituency. At the time the advertisement was published, the minister had already received replies from many M.P.s indicating their acceptance to approval of the CAG. concept.

PROVINCIAL CITIZENS' RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS CONFERENCE GRANT

Question No. 2,752—Mr. Hellyer:

1. Was the grant of $500 to the Provincial Citizens' Rights and Freedoms Conference, St. John's, Newfoundland, made after the Conference had been held?

2. On what date was the cheque for $500 forwarded?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. A grant of $4,500 was made to the Provincial Citizens' Rights and Freedoms Conference of Newfoundland-Labrador in January 1973, for a two day conference that was held on March 2 and 3. The conference sponsors incurred an unexpected additional cost in holding an Inuit workshop at which Inuit people from northern Labrador were involved. The committee asked for and received an additional $500 from the Department of the Secretary of State to cover this deficit.

2. The cheque for $500 was forwarded on May 18, 1973.

AIR ACCIDENT INVESTIGATION

Question No. 2,763—Mr. Forrestall:

In what proportion of the accidents involving significant property damage and/or serious or more grievous injury to occupants to aircraft has the investigation been partially or otherwise concerned with procedures of the other agencies of government that are charged with a regulatory function, in the past two years?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence and Transport as follows: None.

OBJECTIVE TESTS FOR REHABILITATION TRAINING PROGRAMS

Question No. 2,786—Mr. Hellyer:

1. What objective tests are given before the Department of Manpower and Immigration authorizes rehabilitation training programs?

2. Are objective tests given in all cases?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Tests authorized for use within Canada Manpower Centres include: (a) General Aptitude Test Battery: This test battery measures nine aptitudes found to be important for successful performance in a wide variety of occupations. (b) Non-verbal Test of G: This is a non-verbal test designed for use with persons who have low level reading skills. It measures one's ability to understand instructions and underlying principles, the ability to reason and make judgments. It is closely related to doing well in school. (c) Kuder Preference Record Test: This measures one's interests as they relate to the world of work. (d) Achievement tests for clerical, stenographic and typing ability.

2. No.

SHIPBUILDING—CANADIAN DESIGN AND ENGINEERING AS A CONDITION OF FEDERAL SUBSIDY

Question No. 2,790—Mr. Forrestall:

Will government give consideration to providing Canadian design and Canadian engineering as a condition of federal subsidy in the construction of ships and marine vessels and (a) if so, at what point in time could such provision be expected (b) if not (i) what are the reasons for not encouraging Canadian design and engineering firms (ii) was the increase in Canadian shipbuilding and construction that can be expected with the implementation of the Darling report taken into account?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The government is considering strengthening requirements for Canadian content including Canadian design and Canadian engineering with respect to shipbuilding subsidies. (a) These additional requirements will be implemented as soon as they are approved; (b)(i) not applicable; (b)(ii) The Darling report has been taken into account.

CONSTRUCTION OF MARINE VESSELS IN EXCESS OF 25,000 TONS

Question No. 2,791—Mr. Forrestall:

1. In each of the past five years, for how many new marine vessels in excess of 25,000 tons that were eligible for federal subsidies in construction, was construction actually started in Canada?

2. What percentage of such vessels were (a) products of Canadian engineering and naval design firms (b) products of foreign non-Canadian engineering and naval design firms?

3. What is the policy with regard to granting federal shipbuilding subsidies to construct ships that are not the product of Canadian engineering and naval design firms?

4. What steps has the government taken to encourage the development and growth of Canadian engineering and naval design firms?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Three new vessels in excess of 25,000 gross registered tons (G.R.T.) were started in the last five years. These were all of the same design for the same owner. Two were started in 1971; one was started in 1972.

2. These vessels were designed by non-Canadian naval architects.

3. Subsidies are granted to construct ships designed by non-Canadian naval architects provided it can be demonstrated that there is sufficient reason for this decision.

4. Canadian shipowners and shipbuilders are encouraged to use Canadian engineering and design firms and the government uses Canadian firms as a matter of policy.

TARIFF ITEM 18030-1

Question No. 2,793—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What are the requirements of Tariff Item number 18030-1?

2. What dollar amounts have been collected for the past fifteen years under this heading for items related specifically to the shipbuilding industry, by year?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): In so far as National Revenue is concerned: 1. Tariff Item 18030-1: Plans and drawings, related specifications, any substitute therefor, reproductions of the foregoing, n.o.p.; maps and charts, n.o.p. British preferential tariff, 12½ per cent. Most-favoured-nation tariff, 17½ per cent. General tariff, 27½ per cent.

2. Plans and drawings of ships and items relating to the shipbuilding industry are not classified under tariff item 18030-1. Rather, they are accorded duty free entry under tariff item 18025-1. Accordingly no duty was collected on these items during the past fifteen years.

EMPLOYMENT OF MISS LUCIE DION

Question No. 2,799—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is Miss Lucie Dion employed by the government and, if so (a) in what capacity (b) what are her specific duties (c) what is her annual salary?

2. (a) What previous positions has she held in the Public Service (b) what were the periods of time involved (c) what were the annual salaries in every case?

3. Did Miss Lucie Dion attend the National Meeting of the Liberal Party of Canada held in Ottawa in September 1973 and, if so, was she a representative from the electoral district of Brome-Missisquoi?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. (a) Personal staff, Minister of Transport. (Section 37(1) Public Service Employment Act); (b) Special Assistant; (c) $15,000-$17,500.

2. (a) (i) Assistant Secretary Canadian Radio-Television Commission; (ii) Correspondence secretary office of the Secretary of State. (b) (i) 1 Aug. 1971-14 May 1973; (ii) 1 June 1969-1 May 1970. (c) (i) scale $15,737-$17,883; (ii) scale $6,294-$7,402.

3. Miss Dion attended the National Liberal Convention in September 1973 as an observer.

Order Paper Questions

*DIFFICULTIES EXPERIENCED BY CARVERS AT BAKER LAKE, NORTHWEST TERRITORIES, IN OBTAINING SOAPSTONE

Question No. 2,808—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Is the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development aware of the difficulties experienced for several years by carvers at Baker Lake, Northwest Territories, in obtaining soapstone for carving and, if so, can the Minister indicate if the difficulties have now been cleared up?

2. Is it true that the soapstone located near Baker Lake is available to all the local carvers without charge and without any obligation on their part to sell their carvings to any particular dealer?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 is yes, the minister is aware of difficulties encountered in the past due to a shortage of soapstone in the area, but with assistance from the Northwest Territories government these difficulties have been cleared up. The answer to part 2 is that the commissioner of the Northwest Territories is making soapstone available to all local carvers without charge. Not only is it available at the quarry but it is also stockpiled in the community. The carvers are under no obligation to deal with any particular dealer.

UNDERCLOTHING SUPPLIERS TO BRITISH COLUMBIA PENITENTIARY

Question No. 2,821—Mr. Howard:

1. What is the name of each manufacturer of underclothing that is purchased for inmates in the British Columbia Penitentiary?

2. Upon what date did each such manufacturer commence supplying said underclothing?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1 and 2:

Manufacturer	Date	Item
	Summer Underclothing
Reliable Wholesale Vancouver	10 April 1972	Shorts
Nova Scotia Textiles	12 March 1973	Shorts
Stanfield Ltd.	9 April 1973	Shorts and T-Shirts
Stanfield Ltd.	19 April 1973	Shorts and T-Shirts
Stanfield Ltd.	20 June 1973	T-Shirts
	Winter Underclothing
Regent Knitting Ltd.	3 October 1972	Shirts and Drawers
Regent Knitting Ltd.	20 November 1972	Shirts and Drawers
Regent Knitting Ltd.	1 December 1972	Drawers
Nova Scotia Textiles	10 September 1973	Shirts and Drawers

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

NATIONAL DEFENCE—EXPENDITURES IN CONSTITUENCY OF GREY-SIMCOE

Question No. 2,823—Mr. Mitges:

What was the breakdown for dollar expenditure by the Department of National Defence in each fiscal year 1965 to the present, inclusive, in the electoral district of Grey-Simcoe?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The Department of National Defence records and accounting system are not maintained in such a way that expenditures by electoral district can be determined.

CONSTRUCTION OF RIDEAU CANAL SYSTEM HEADQUARTERS, SMITHS FALLS, ONTARIO

Question No. 2,845—Mr. Cossitt:

1. On what date does the government intent to proceed with construction of a new Rideau Canal System headquarters at Smiths Falls, Ontario, as originally announced in April, 1965 and which it stated it still proposes to construct in answer to Question No. 2,606?

2. What is the anticipated date that tenders will be called and for what reason has no action been taken since April, 1965?

3. Have architectural plans been completed for such headquarters and, if so (a) on what date (b) by whom (c) does the government have any estimated cost of this project?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. In the 1975-76 fiscal year.

2. Tender call for the project is scheduled for 1975-76 fiscal year. No action has been taken since April 1965 because funds were required for projects of higher priority.

3. Final architectural plans for the project have not been completed. It is not possible to give an estimate of cost at this time.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO VENTURE CARPET OF CANADA LTD., MONTREAL, QUEBEC

Question No. 2,981—Mr. Boisvert:

1. What was the grant made to Venture Carpet of Canada Ltd., Montreal, Quebec by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and/or by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion?

2. What are its (a) gross (b) net profits?

3. What are the assets of that company?

4. What investments were made during the past twelve months?

5. In comparison with the net profits, what salaries are being paid?

6. What is the government's evaluation of the company's prospects?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1 to 6, not applicable. In so far as Regional Economic Expansion is concerned: 1. An incentive grant offer made by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion under the provisions of the Regional Development Incentives Act was accepted by Venture Carpet of Canada Ltd. The estimated amount of the incentive grant was $658,600.

2 to 5. In accordance with existing departmental policy, information about individual applications and case file documentation containing commercial information that has been provided to the department on a confidential basis cannot be made public.

6. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion considers the company's prospects to be favourable.

COURSES TAKEN UNDER PROVISIONS OF THE ADULT OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING ACT—CONSTITUENCY OF GREY-SIMCOE

Question No. 3,003—Mr. Mitges:

1. How many adults took courses under the provisions of the Adult Occupational Training Act in the constituency of Grey-Simcoe in the years 1971 and 1972?

2. How many adults took courses under the provision of the Adult Occupational Training Act in each province in the year 1972?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. 1970-71 fiscal year: 297; 1971-72 fiscal year: 304.

2. 1971-72 fiscal year: Newfoundland, 10,642; Prince Edward Island, 5,121; Nova Scotia, 12,495; New Brunswick, 13,996; Atlantic, 42,254; Quebec, 126,124; Ontario, 70,617; Manitoba, 10,306; Saskatchewan, 7,743; Alberta, 17,593; Northwest Territories, 480; Prairie, 36,122; British Columbia, 32,230; Yukon Territory, 805; Pacific, 33,035; Canada, 308,152.

NUMBER OF PERSONS ADMITTED TO PENITENTIARIES, 1972, WHO HAD PREVIOUS INCARCERATIONS

Question No. 3,006—Mr. Mitges:

What was the number of (a) males (b) females admitted to each Canadian penitentiary for the year 1972 who had previously been committed to a penitentiary or other adult correctional institution?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): (a) Her Majesty's Prison, Newfoundland, 2; Carleton Community Correctional Centre, Halifax, 2; Springhill Medium Security Institution, 35; Springhill Minimum Security Institution, 1; Dorchester Penitentiary, 77; Dorchester Penitentiary Farm Annex, 19; Blue Mountain Correctional Camp, Kings Co. New Brunswick, 1; Parr Town Community Correctional Centre, Saint John, New Brunswick, 2; St-Hubert Community Correctional Centre, Montreal, 4; St-Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, Ville de Laval, Quebec, 10; Laval Maximum Security Institution, Ville de Laval, Quebec, 16; Laval Minimum Security Institution, Ville de Laval, Quebec, 13; Regional Medical Centre (Quebec), Ville de Laval, Quebec, 14; Federal Training Centre, Ville de Laval, Quebec, 31; Leclerc Institution, Ville de Laval, Quebec, 46; Archambault Maximum Security Institution, Ste-Anne des Plaines, Quebec, 43; Archambault Minimum Security Institution, Ste-Anne des Plaines, Quebec, 16; Regional Reception Centre (Quebec), Ste-Anne des Plaines, Quebec, 7; Cowansville Institution, 41; Montgomery Community Correctional Centre, Toronto, 4; Kingston Penitentiary, 4; Regional Medical Centre, (Ontario), Kingston, 12; Regional Reception Centre (Ontario), Kingston, 17; Millhaven Maximum Security Institution, 45; Millhaven Minimum Security Institution, 9; Collins Bay Institution, 53; Collins Bay Institution, Farm Annex, 7; Landry Crossing Correctional Camp, Petawawa, Ontario, 18; Beaver Creek Correctional Camp, Gravenhurst, Ontario, 15; Joyceville Institution, 77; Joyceville Institution, Farm Annex, 16; Warkworth Institution, Campbellford, Ontario, 11; Osborne Community Correctional Centre, Winnipeg, 9; Stony Mountain Institution, 75; Stony Mountain Institution, Farm Annex, 26; Saskatchewan Penitentiary, Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, 67; Saskatchewan Penitentiary Farm Annex, 11; Oskana Community Correctional Centre, Regina, 2; Drumheller Institution, 32; Scarboro Community Correctional Centre, Calgary, 4; Grierson Community Correctional Centre, Edmonton, 10; West Georgia Community Correctional Centre, Vancouver, 2; British Columbia Penitentiary, 73; William Head Institution, 14; Matsqui Institution, 36; Regional Medical Centre (Western) Abbotsford, British Columbia, 13; Mountain Prison, Agassiz, 22; Agassiz Correctional Camp, 14; Total, 1078; (b) Regional Medical Centre (Ontario), Kingston, 1; Prison for Women, Kingston, 4; Total, 5.

GREEN GABLES GOLF COURSE, P.E.I.

Question No. 3,017—Mr. MacLean:

1. Is the Green Gables Golf Course in the Prince Edward Island National Park being redesigned and partially relocated?

2. Was more land purchased to accommodate this change and, if so (a) what was the amount purchased (b) what was the total cost?

3. Was any opinion or advice sought from any Prince Edward Island residents, organizations or government as to the desirability of this change and, if so, from whom?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes. This is part of an over-all scheme to protect the erosion of dunes at Cavendish Beach and to improve visitor services in the area.

2. Yes (a) 204.71 acres; (b) $159,000.

3. Yes. Parks Canada officials reviewed the plans for the area with representatives of the provincial government.

STATISTICS CANADA—COST OF SENDING COMPUTER SYSTEMS EXPERTS TO VIENNA

Question No. 3,031—Mr. Knight:

What was the cost involved by Statistics Canada in sending ten of its computer systems experts to Vienna, Austria, recently to deal with other governments on the merits of establishing an agency such as Statistics Canada?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Nil. Statistics Canada has never sent a group of computer systems experts to Vienna, Austria, for the purpose of dealing with other governments on the merits of establishing an agency such as Statistics Canada.

PROGRAM FOR UPGRADING OF DEPARTMENTAL OFFICERS

Question No. 3,032—Mr. Knight:

1. What is the Department of Manpower and Immigration program for the upgrading of a number of departmental officers into higher income brackets and new positions for the period January 1, 1973 to October 1, 1973?

Order Paper Questions

2. How many new jobs of Deputy Director have been created and how many of these jobs have been filled?

3. What is the role of Mr. Allan Duckett in implementing this promotion scheme in the Information Services Division?

4. What is the exact number of Information Services Division employees and what are their salary ranges?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. There is no special program for the upgrading of departmental officers. However, during the period in question, 214 positions were reclassified upward on the basis of increased duties and responsibilities.

2. None.

3. As Director, Information Services Branch, Mr. Duckett's involvement has been with the implementation of a new IS Standard developed by the Treasury Board.

4. Sixty-four employees: 16 at $14,762 to $16,778; 15 at $12,009 to $13,648; 6 at $6,707 to $7,372; 5 at $5,486 to $6,028; 3 at $19,900 to $22,900; 3 at $6,676 to $7,338; 2 at $17,920 to $20,364; 2 at $10,646 to $11,894; 2 at $9,348 to $11,133; 2 at $7,496 to $8,238; 1 at $23,500 to $30,000; 1 at $16,567 to $18,511; 1 at $11,236 to $12,767; 1 at $8,569 to $9,415; 1 at $8,108 to $11,932; 1 at $7,460 to $8,200; 1 at $6,420 to $9,720; 1 at $6,233 to $6,849.

CANADA PENSION FUND

Question No. 3,033—Mr. Olaussen:

1. How much money is there in the Canada Pension Fund at present?

2. How much would the annual contributions from all contributors be?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. As of September 31, 1973, $6.4 billion.

2. In 1972 (calendar year), $869.3 million. In 1973, as of September 1973, $826.6 million (after nine months). Estimate for full calendar year, 1973, $942.6 million.

BILINGUALISM PROMOTION GRANT TO BRITISH COLUMBIA DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

Question No. 3,034—Mr. Olaussen:

What is the total amount of the grant that the government is giving to the British Columbia Department of Education to promote bilingualism in schools?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Under the federal-provincial Program on bilingualism in education, the federal government has contributed the following amounts to British Columbia: January 1, 1970 to March 31, 1971: $883,558. Fiscal year 1971-1972: $1,018,744. Fiscal year 1972-1973: $819,857. Total, $2,722,159.

SALE OF CANADIAN WHEAT TO U.S.S.R.

Question No. 3,040—Mr. Stackhouse:

1. How much of the selling price of Canada's sale of wheat to the U.S.S.R. is to be paid (a) in currency (b) in Russian goods?

2. How much of the selling price of Canada's sale of wheat to the People's Republic of China is to be paid (a) in currency (b) in Chinese products?

[Mr. Knight.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister Responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board): 1. (a) 100 per cent; (b) nil.

2. (a) 100 per cent in £ sterling; terms 25 per cent cash, balance in 18 months; (b) nil.

TAX EXEMPTIONS TO CPR

Question No. 3,055—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. Does the CPR subsidiary Marathon Realty or any other agency of CPR benefit presently from any exemptions from (a) local (b) provincial (c) federal taxation, other levies or regulations in consequence of original grants of land to the original CPR by the government?

2. If there are present exemptions, what is the nature of each such exemption from (a) local (b) provincial (c) federal tax, levy or regulations?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): In so far as the Department of National Revenue, Taxation, is concerned: The secrecy provisions contained in the Income Tax Act do not allow the department to comment on the tax affairs of either personal or corporate taxpayers.

FEDERAL ELECTION—VOTING BY CANADIANS SERVING WITH INTERNATIONAL PEACEKEEPING ORGANIZATIONS

Question No. 3,119—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What steps has the government prepared to ensure that all Canadians serving with international peacekeeping organizations will have ballots and the right to exercise their votes in the next federal election, including members of the Canadian Armed Forces, Department of External Affairs and those seconded to other agencies?

2. How many Canadians serving with such international organizations were eligible to vote in the last federal election and how many of these did in fact exercise their franchises?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. The Special Voting Rules (Schedule II to the Canada Elections Act) already contain provisions for the establishing of voting places outside Canada at a federal general election to take the votes of employees of the Public Service of Canada (Public Service electors) residing outside Canada by reason of their departmental duties and the votes of members of the Canadian Forces (Canadian Forces electors) on full-time service. The rules also provide for the taking of the votes of eligible dependants (dependant electors) of the aforementioned electors when residing outside Canada with the elector. The rules require voting places to be established by a head of post or Commanding Officer, as appropriate. No additional or special provisions are required in the Canada Elections Act or the rules to take the votes of Public Service or Canadian Forces electors, and their eligible dependants, serving outside Canada with international peacekeeping organizations.

2. Statistics are not maintained respecting the exact location or precise duties of Canadian Forces or Public Service electors employed outside Canada nor in respect of dependant electors. However, there were approximately 1826 Public Service electors, 8970 Canadian Forces electors and 14,556 dependant electors outside Canada at the last federal election who were eligible to vote under the Special Voting Rules. Since in many cases voting places outside Canada were administered through the Edmonton and Ottawa voting territory headquarters and the balloting outside Canada was merged with the balloting in voting places established in Canadian Forces units in Canada, statistics are not available as to the number of electors outside Canada who actually cast their ballots.

SPECIAL FUNCTIONS HELD FOR HER MAJESTY, THE QUEEN, AND HRH, THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH DURING SUMMER VISIT

Question No. 3,130—Mr. Fleming:

1. What social functions were held for Her Majesty the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh on the occasion of their two visits to Canada this summer (a) who was the host at these functions (b) how many guests were in attendance?

2. Were all political parties in the House of Commons represented at the dinner given by the Prime Minister on August 1 at 24 Sussex Drive for Her Majesty the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. The following social functions were held for Her Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh on the occasion of their two visits to Canada this summer:

(a) By the Houses of Parliament:

Date	Function	Host	Attendance
August 1	Reception	Speaker of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Commons	300

(b) By the Government of Canada

Date	Function	Host	Attendance
July 4	Luncheon	Commissioner of the RCMP	200
July 5	State Dinner	Prime Minister	270
August 1	Reception	Prime Minister	1300
August 1	Dinner	Prime Minister	22

(c) By provincial and municipal governments and others

As these functions as well as the guest lists were the responsibility of the provinces and municipalities concerned, the number of guests in attendance can only be estimated.

Date	Function	Host	Attendance
June 26	Civic Luncheon	Mayor and Council of the Corporation of the City of Toronto	1850
June 26	Provincial Dinner	Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario	1400
June 27	Civic Dinner	Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Kingston	600
June 28	Civic Luncheon	Mayor and Council of the Corporation of the City of London	600
June 28	Civic Dinner	Mayor and Council of the Town of Niagara-on-the-Lake	200
June 30	Dinner	Lieutenant-Governor of Prince Edward Island	20
July 1	Civic Luncheon	Mayor of the Town of Montague	150
July 1	Garden Party	Lientenant Governor of Prince Edward Island	2000
July 1	Provincial Dinner	Premier of Prince Edward Island	200
July 2	Luncheon	President of Acadian Village	150
July 2	Dinner	Chairman of Prince Edward Island 1973 Centennial Commission	200

Date	Function	Host	Attendance
July 3	Dinner	Lieutenant-Governor of Saskatchewan	150
July 4	Dinner	Premier of Saskatchewan and Mayor of the City of Regina	400
July 5	Civic Luncheon	Mayor and Council of the City of Calgary	170
August 1	Civic Luncheon	Mayor and Council of the Corporation of the City of Ottawa	150
August 2	Reception for His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh	Royal Canadian Regiment	500

2. Representatives from all political parties in the House of Commons were invited. Mr. and Mrs. Réal Caouette were unable to attend. Other political representatives were the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker and Mrs. Diefenbaker, the Hon. Robert Stanfield and Mrs. Stanfield, and Mr. David Lewis and Mrs. Lewis.

* * *

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

GOVERNMENT INFORMATION OFFICES

Question No. 801—Mr. Coates:

1. What is the total work force of all government information offices, by department, at the present time and what is the cost of each departmental information operation?

2. What is the total work force of Information Canada and what is the amount in dollars, of salaries and wages for the work force of Information Canada?

3. What was the budget of Information Canada in each of the years of its operation and what is its estimated budget for 1973-74?

4. Have special surveys been carried out by Information Canada with the public of Canada and, if so (a) how many studies of this type were carried out (b) what was the purpose of each (c) who headed each study (d) how many persons from Information Canada were involved and how many persons outside Information Canada were involved and what were the names of the persons outside Information Canada (e) what special responsibilities did they assume (f) what did they receive in payment for their contributions as well as expenses in each instance?

5. Have any of the studies carried out by Information Canada been made available to the public and (a) if so, which studies (b) if not, for what reason?

Return tabled.

DAY CARE CENTRES

Question No. 2,379—Mr. McGrath:

1. During the past fiscal year, how much money did each province receive for day-care and other women's services?

2. What are the criteria for the allocation of such funds?

3. Does the government encourage the use of this program by the provinces to provide day-care centres?

Return tabled.

Orders for Returns

PUBLIC SERVICE—CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP

Question No. 2,411—Mr. Stackhouse:

How many employees of the government lack Canadian citizenship and, of these, how many (a) are landed immigrants (b) hold American citizenship (c) are employed by the Treasury Board?

Return tabled.

POLLUTION

Question No. 2,492—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. For each year 1971 to 1973 inclusive, how many projects under the Opportunities for Youth Program were involved in (a) studying pollution and its effects and what happened to the results of such studies (b) cleaning up the environment?

2. By provinces and territories, how many (a) lakes (b) rivers (c) streams (d) water in camp sites have been declared polluted by the government for the periods 1951 to 1960 and 1961 to 1972 inclusive?

3. For the same periods, how many of these, by provinces and territories, has the government succeeded in cleaning up?

4. To date, how many municipalities, by provinces, received financial assistance from the government for the purposes of (a) improving (b) installing sewage treatment systems?

5. For each of the past five years, how often has the government, at the ministerial level, met with (a) provincial ministers responsible for Municipal Affairs (b) representatives of municipalities in their efforts to (i) dispose of their solid wastes (ii) improve their present methods of sewage treatment systems?

6. Is the government giving consideration to (a) controlling (b) monitoring (c) funding of municipal sewage projects within a national urban policy and (i) if not, for what reasons (ii) if so, which provinces and municipalities have been consulted to date?

7. Has the government any data available which would show (a) the amount of paper and paper products it disposed of in the Ottawa-Hull area (b) how much it cost the Ottawa-Carleton municipality to pick up and dispose of these wastes for the years 1968, 1969, 1970, 1971 and 1972 inclusive?

8. If these data are not available, does the government intend providing them before 1975 and, if not, for what reasons?

Return tabled.

PURCHASE OF SPECIAL LICENCE PLATES

Question No. 2,634—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Which departments, agencies or branches of government have purchased special licence plates from the Ontario government, after paying the additional $25 fee to have special, customized letter and number designation?

2. For each instance, what is the special number?

3. Under what statutory authority was this money expended?

4. Did the Prime Minister authorize his choice of CAN 001?

Return tabled.

PROXY VOTING

Question No. 2,635—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What specific plans does the government have to provide mariners in the employ of the government with the appropriate forms for proxy voting in the next federal election?

2. What plans does the government have to ensure that these forms are returned to those who are to exercise such proxy votes in time for their validation?

3. How many verbal or written complaints were received on this matter from September 1 to October 30, 1972?

Return tabled.

[Mr. McGrath.]

ANTI-SMOKING ADVERTISING—MONEYS SPENT

Question No. 2,678—Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway):

How much money, in each of the past ten fiscal years, has the government spent on (a) anti-smoking efforts such as the production of public service spot announcements for the media, urging people not to smoke, etc. (b) research into tobacco cultivation, specifically involving the development of higher yielding strains per acre, lower nicotine content, etc. (c) trade missions and any other activities designed to cultivate export markets for Canada's tobacco growers?

Return tabled.

RESEARCH PROJECTS IN PROVINCE OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 2,755—Mr. Marshall:

Is the Department of the Environment either in the process of carrying out, or planning to carry out any research projects in the Province of Newfoundland and (a) if so, what are the projects (b) if not, for what reasons?

Return tabled.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I should like to draw the attention of the parliamentary secretary to question No. 2179 which has been on the order paper since June 1. Notwithstanding the membership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the Royal Society and his recent visits to the Queen, the subtle erosion of Royal symbols is still continuing, including the removal of the Royal portrait from federal public buildings.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was recognized for the purpose of raising a point of order, not to make allegations or a speech. I suggest he should indicate what the point of order is and the Chair will make a ruling.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw to the attention of the parliamentary secretary certain questions that I have on the order paper which have stood unanswered for some length of time. I should like to refer first of all to question No. 2596 which asks for certain details of the round the world trip made by the Minister of National Defence a few months ago. Surely there is no legitimate excuse for slowness in revealing cost figures, names and accompanying passengers, etc.

Since July 4, question No. 2453 asking for details of government grants to Canada-Monde World headed by Mr. Jacques Hébert, a fact which I trust has no connection with the delay in reply, has stood unanswered.

I should also like to draw attention to the following unanswered questions for which I think answers are overdue: No. 2597, two and a half months unanswered, requesting details of a person reported on the government payroll who allegedly faced a dozen charges of FLQ terrorist activity; Nos. 2598 to 2601 inclusive, requesting information on the amount of public moneys expended by the government at Harrington Lake and also at the Prime Minister's official Ottawa residence over a certain period of time; finally, No. 2797 concerning a LIP project given some half million dollars and then reported to have undergone investigation and possible closing by the RCMP.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that I feel these are legitimate questions which I have asked as a member of parliament and to which I am entitled to have answers. By delaying answers to questions, perhaps in the hope that they will die on the order paper, this government is showing contempt of parliament, for which this government is certainly most famous.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can let that last statement go unchallenged. I should like to point out to Your Honour that more questions have been placed on the order paper in this parliament than ever before and more questions have been answered already in this parliament than ever before, 83.9 per cent as of today. I want to inform hon. members that I am attempting to find out the cost of answering these questions and on some of the more absurd ones I intend to make the cost figures available.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East. Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member but the hon. member for Rocky Mountain rises on a point of order.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order raised by the parliamentary secretary, I wonder if at the same time he is preparing those costs he would present to the House the total government expenditure on public relations and other propaganda materials designed to put across misleading information.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN COST OF HOME HEATING OIL, CLOTHING AND HOUSING

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 26 I ask leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration.

This matter is specific because it concerns the federal sales tax; it is important because it affects the well-being of every man, woman and child in Canada; and it requires urgent consideration because the cost of gasoline and home heating oil, the cost of clothing and the cost of housing are and have been—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows what the rule is in relation to Standing Order 26. I have been in communication with the hon. member before he moved this motion. I have reminded him, through the table, of what the requirements are and have indicated to him that the notice he gave to the Chair, in the terms it was suggested to the Chair, could not be received as it was out of order. If the hon. member insists on using that form, certainly the Chair cannot hear him.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I thought that I had emasculated my motion to the point where it would be acceptable to the Chair but if Your Honour will permit me I will rephrase my motion in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 26 and move to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the consumer price index released today showing an increase in the cost of home heating, the cost of shelter and cost of clothing, and the fact that the federal government collects sales tax on all of these items. Therefore, if my motion is acceptable I would move that this matter should be discussed immediately in the House.

● (1440)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has given the notice required under Standing Order 26. I certainly do not want to go into further details about the form of the motion, but I appeal to hon. members to respect the terms of the Standing Order and also the long established practice that under Standing Order 26 members only indicate briefly what the subject matter is, without argument, debate or discussion. I thank the hon. member who says he has changed his motion. In any event, since he has given me this notice I have had an opportunity to give the matter serious thought.

The hon. member and the House will realize that the decision which has to be made by the Chair is strictly procedural, whether the motion proposed meets the requirements of Standing Order 26. Although there is an element of urgency in the fact it refers to statistics that have just been released, it seems to me that the general matter proposed for discussion by the hon. member has been taken up and referred to over a long period of weeks, indeed, months, in the House. I am sure I am right when I suggest that there will be opportunities within a reasonable time for the hon. member and other interested hon. members to discuss this very important matter. I would think that, in the circumstances, the Chair would not be justified in suggesting that the debate which has been proposed for today should be set aside for the purpose of discussing the matter suggested by the hon. member for St. John's East.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 241 and 242 are acceptable to the government.

Motions for Papers

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that motions Nos. 241 and 242 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COPY OF GUEST LIST FOR THE PRIME MINISTER'S RECEPTION IN HONOUR OF HER MAJESTY AND THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH IN OTTAWA

Motion No. 241—Mr. Diefenbaker:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the guest list for the Prime Minister's Reception on August 7, 1973, at the National Arts Centre in honour of Her Majesty the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh.

Motion agreed to.

COPY OF GUEST LIST FOR THE PRIME MINISTER'S RECEPTION IN HONOUR OF HER MAJESTY AND THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH IN CALGARY

Motion No. 242—Mr. Diefenbaker:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the list of names of all invitees to the Dinner given in Calgary on July 5, 1973, by the Prime Minister and Government of Canada, in honour of Her Majesty the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might have permission to table the returns to the foregoing motions?

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions stand?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen those returns, but the other day there was a suggestion by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that there were other returns concerning those who were invited by the provinces and the like and that they would be tabled. I immediately point out that if these returns include any of that stuff, they cannot have any place on the record. All that can be provided, under the rules and the decisions of parliament, are answers to the questions asked.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I want to reassure the right hon. gentleman. The reply will be in the form of a tabling in response to his motions and there will be nothing added to the requests in his motions. However, knowing his interest in all things concerning the monarchy, I ensured that a question would be asked on the order paper about those other events where the Queen was so graciously entertained in Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am deeply grateful for the suggestion concerning the monarchy. I would have thought that the Prime Minister would ask parliament today to send a message of congratulations to Captain Phillips and his lady.

[Mr. Reid.]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to inform the right hon. gentleman of the message and the gift that have been sent to the couple.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But not by parliament.

Mr. Trudeau: If the right hon. member wants to catch up with the times, he can do so on this occasion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether we are serving much purpose by pursuing this battle royal between the two right hon. gentlemen. However, if the right hon. member for Prince Albert wishes to rise on a further point of order I will hear him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I referred to parliament. The Prime Minister apparently thinks that the cabinet today is parliament. It is not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that the party to which the right hon. gentleman belongs introduced a series of spurious motions today. If they had put their heart where their mouth is they would have introduced a motion to the effect he suggests.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Oral questions.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, unless my memory is very wrong, I think a member of the opposition did introduce such a motion a few days ago and the usual no came from the other side.

Mr. Bell: Were you up at five o'clock this morning?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I assume that was not a question.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

SUGGESTED ABSORPTION BY GOVERNMENT OF EXPECTED INCREASE IN PRICE OF HOME HEATING OIL PRODUCED FROM IMPORTED CRUDE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, although it would be appropriate for the Minister of Finance if he were present. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has indicated that the government is prepared to grant increases in the prices of petroleum products produced from imported crude and that further applications for increases have been received. I would ask the minister whether the government would be prepared to absorb these requested increases, or increases the government might authorize, with respect to home heating oil at least as long as the government maintains the voluntary freeze on Canadian crude oil?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the government's preference has been to apply the very considerable sums involved from the public treasury in order to make certain, by offshore purchases, that there will be home heating oil available for Canadians this winter. The financial resources have been applied to the priority of making sure of supply rather than reducing the price.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the very substantial increase in the revenue the government receives from the 12 per cent sales tax on gasoline and the very substantial increase in revenue the government has already derived from the very significant increases in gasoline prices this year and will derive from anticipated increases, is the government not in a position, as a result of these increased revenues from the sales tax on gasoline, to do what the minister says was done with regard to assuring supplies and also provide the relief I am suggesting with respect to the increased price of home heating oil, which will hit so heavily many Canadians on low incomes?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that to roll heating oil prices back to their October level would cost $65 million, to roll them back to the November level would cost $42 million, and that the increased revenue from the excise tax on gasoline will yield only $12 million up to the end of March.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, with respect, I was not asking about a roll-back. I was asking the minister whether the government was prepared to absorb the anticipated increases. That is the question I am asking the minister. Is the government prepared to absorb the further increases for which application has been made rather than allow ordinary Canadians, many of them on very low incomes, to face this disastrous situation?

● (1450)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): My understanding was that the hon. gentleman was proposing that there should be a subsidy with regard to prices on November 1. If he is not saying that, it will, of course, depend on the amount of the increase, but the increase, which took place on November 1 would have meant an increased expenditure of about $42 million had the hon. gentleman's suggestion been accepted. The same principle would undoubtedly apply to any future increases.

[Translation]

OIL—MEETING WITH NEW QUEBEC MINISTER

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière wishes to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has stated that he would meet for a round of discussions with the new Quebec Minister of Natural Resources as soon as he is appointed.

The new appointee now being known, can the minister advise the House whether he has contacted him and, if so, when such meeting took place and, finally, whether he discussed with his provincial counterpart the oil problem as a whole and the immediate supply for the coming winter?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I stated yesterday to a colleague of the hon. member, officials of all provinces, Quebec included, will meet tomorrow with my deputy minister and other federal officials to discuss the situation in connection with a possible energy crisis next winter. I am looking forward to meeting my Quebec counterparts on the 23rd during the sittings of the federal-provincial conference, and discuss with him a number of problems related to the energy crisis and, especially, the shortage situation for the coming winter.

* * *

[English]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN HOUSING AND CLOTHING COSTS—REQUEST THAT SALES TAX BE REMOVED—FOOD COST

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the consumer price index released today shows the highest month to month increase since 1962 and in view of the fact that housing and clothing account for the most substantial increases, may I ask the Prime Minister whether, in order to bring some relief to Canadians, he is prepared to consider removing the 12 per cent sales tax from these two items?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not today, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: I can assure the Prime Minister that my question was not more spurious than my motion. This is a very serious matter affecting many Canadians across the country. I should like to redirect my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who has great statutory responsibility here. In light of the latest advice given to the Canadian people by Mrs. Plumptre that food costs will continue to rise as a result of the energy crisis, may I ask the minister what recommendations he is now prepared to make to his colleagues in the cabinet to bring some relief to consumers in this country.

Hon. Herb. Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): It is important to note that the rate of increase in the cost of living index shows a moderation compared with the preceding month and that the food index fell by .3 per cent from September to October, demonstrating that the policies of the government, in the elaboration of which I have been collaborating, are exercising a positive effect.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF VOLUNTARY PRICE FREEZE ON CANADIAN CRUDE OIL BEYOND NEXT JANUARY

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arising from earlier answers. Bearing in mind that if the price freeze is not extended past January the price of gasoline will increase by between 10 and 12 cents a gallon, and bearing in mind the fact that the oil companies have increased their prices by 37 per cent this year alone, will the minister reconsider his decision and extend the freeze past January?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No such decision has been taken by the government at this time.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GOVERNMENT INTENTION RESPECTING MINIMUM WAGE INCREASE IN LIGHT OF COST OF LIVING

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In light of the increase in the consumer price index and in view of the fact that several provinces, including Ontario, British Columbia, Alberta, Quebec and Saskatchewan will shortly either be catching up with the federal minimum wage limit or passing it, can the minister tell us what specific recommendations he has, if any, with respect to revising the federal minimum wage, since action in this direction would certainly assist those on the lower end of the economic ladder?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): As I indicated, we are watching this situation very closely. I have indicated to the House on earlier occasions that the question of the minimum wage is under consideration, and as soon as I am in a position to make an announcement I shall do so in the House. I hope it will not be too long delayed.

Mr. Alexander: Now that the provinces have seen fit to take action in this important area, can the minister advise the House what is holding up a decision by the federal government? What is the hold-up?

Mr. Munro: As the hon. member may be aware, the social policy statement by my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, was made only recently and we are endeavouring to relate all our social policies in an integrated way. A number of initiatives of tangible benefit to Canadians have been taken in terms of family allowances and so on, and the relationship to the minimum wage is spelled out there. We are studying these implications so that they can be taken into account in terms of the over-all integrated social policy.

* * *

HOUSING

ACTION BY GOVERNMENT TO LOWER MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES AND INCREASE SUPPLY OF HOUSES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the principal reason for the increase in the consumer price index according to the figures released today is the increase in the cost of housing, can the Prime Minister tell us whether the government intends to begin to move in some direction so as to bring down mortgage interest rates?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In this area of housing, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has brought a full program before parliament. We hope hon. members can get on with enacting it.

Mr. Broadbent: Having received that glorious non-answer I will turn to the Minister of State responsible for housing. Bearing in mind the forecast made by an independent consultant, Frank Clayton, who formerly worked in the government department responsible for housing, that partly because of high interest rates family housing starts next year will drop by 15 per cent, and in view of the fact that CMHC itself forecasts a continued rise in family formation, may I ask what steps the minister's department is taking now to increase the supply of housing next year?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the year 1973 has been a record year in terms of new home construction. We predict there will be as much lending activity in 1974 as this year and our estimate is that we shall exceed 250,000 units in 1974, which is our medium-term housing objective.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING SOCIAL HOUSING EMPHASIS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I will try a third time, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House whether the reported abolition of CMHC's policy planning division following the firing of Mr. Walter Rudnicki and the destruction of the intent of the co-operative housing legislation as a result of CMHC's decision-making in the last couple of months means that the government is abandoning the social housing emphasis which was contained in the legislation passed by the House last spring?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, it categorically does not. I have spent the last two days at a conference on Canadian housing rehabilitation arranged by the Canadian Council of Social Development. Those two days were spent working out precisely how we could get Bill C-135 operating. There was a strong desire at the conference that provinces and municipalities should fully support my efforts to implement Bill C-135.

In reply to the specific part of the question asked by the hon. member, may I say he obviously missed an announcement I made a week ago Saturday that we were in the course of reorganizing within Central Mortgage and Housing to establish regional co-operative program officers to assist the co-operative movement in the various regions to implement the new provisions parliament has made available so as to ensure that co-operative housing will play an important part in the social program of this country.

● (1500)

[Translation]

NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC ON AGREEMENT RESPECTING RENOVATION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Following the adoption of Bill C-133 on housing and urban renewal, municipalities are anxious to take advantage of the new legislation. Can the minister inform the House of the status of negotiations for an agreement on this with Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am seeking agreements with all of the provinces. I have one with the province of Alberta as to the implementation of the neighbourhood improvement, repair and rehabilitation sections of the act. We are having discussions with the province of Quebec and others to get agreements of that kind so that the program can be used by the municipalities within the province of Quebec and others. Within the course of the next two of three weeks I will meet with every provincial minister of housing to try to make sure that those agreements are obtained at least by the end of this year at the very latest.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POSSIBLE SPECIAL PROGRAMS FOR ATLANTIC PROVINCES—MEETINGS WITH PREMIERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister and is related to the special effects of the discomfort index, that is, the combination of high inflation and high unemployment, in slow growth regions, particularly the Atlantic provinces. Can the Prime Minister indicate whether he has issued any special instructions to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to meet directly with the premiers of the Atlantic provinces in terms of mapping out some special programs, particularly in light of rising energy costs which will certainly set back any regional development programs in that area?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the minister meets with the premiers on a regular basis. I know he saw some of them quite recently, and I myself had some such meetings two weeks ago.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Prime Minister did not hear my question. I asked him whether or not any special instructions or special mandate had been given to the minister in view of the deteriorating situation, not only with regard to the rising cost of energy but also regarding other federal government programs either in the local initiatives field or in the co-ordination of monetary policy, about which very serious questions can be raised at the present time.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the hon. member did not hear my answer. I indicated that meetings had taken place.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I can well understand that the Prime Minister may not be able to answer the question, but this afternoon not only the Prime Minister but the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs have continued a practice that I would very much appreciate your Honour dealing with. I refer to the practice, when questions are raised, of ministers refusing to reply. It is a well known fact of procedure in the House during the question period that ministers are not required to answer questions that are put, but it is also a well known fact that they are not required to give answers to questions that are not put.

* * *

ENERGY

OIL—ALLEGED REFUSAL OF TRANSIT IN BOND TO STATES OF NEW YORK AND MICHIGAN—AUTHORITY FOR ACTION

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the minister instituted an inquiry into statements made today by representatives of the states of New York and Michigan that the transit of oil in bond across Canada to these states has been refused, this order having been issued by the National Energy Board?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I had not seen that allegation but I appreciate the hon. member bringing it to my attention and I will investigate it.

Mr. Hales: When the minister answers the question will he also advise the House under what authority this action was taken?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): In general, Mr. Speaker, the board acts under the National Energy Board Act and the regulations that give it export control over not only crude but also certain refined products.

Oral Question Period

[Translation]

SOCIAL SECURITY

QUEBEC—LOSS OF BENEFIT OF OLD AGE PENSION INCREASES

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In view of the very recent increase--

An hon. Member: Turn around and ask him.

Mr. Béchard: In view of the recent increase in lodging costs of homes for elderly people in the province of Quebec, does the minister intend to protest vigorously to his Quebec counterpart against this bad habit of depriving elderly persons from the benefits of higher old age pensions each time the federal government tries to help this element of society?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will bring the observations of the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine to the attention of my Quebec colleague, and of my other provincial colleagues, who are I think in the same situation.

* * *

HOUSING

PROVISION OF FUNDS FOR OLD PEOPLE'S HOMES

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Could the hon. minister at the same time protest also against the fact that the construction of each new home is always financed with provincial funds, never federal ones?

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I realize that I involuntarily created a false impression earlier through a question directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and I should like to ask this question again, in order to clear up any doubt.

Could the minister send a protest note to the government of Quebec which would have people believe that projects for the building of homes for the aged are being financed almost exclusively by the provincial government, when everybody knows that these projects are, for a large part, financed by the federal government?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I welcome this question with much sympathy and I shall certainly put it before my Quebec counterparts at the next opportunity.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

[English]

STATISTICS CANADA

ALLEGED DELAY IN PUBLICATION OF AUGUST AVERAGE WEEKLY EARNINGS FIGURES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce perhaps I could put my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the release of figures today by Statistics Canada showing that the cost of living index is up 8.7 per cent in Canada in the past 12 months, a total of 30 per cent now under the Trudeau government, and since it is very important to workers in this country to see whether their earnings are at least keeping up with inflation, would the Prime Minister inform the House whether he is aware that Statistics Canada has delayed publication of the August average weekly earnings figures which were scheduled for release on October 26 and, if so, why is such delay being tolerated?

Hon. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to get an answer to the hon. member's question.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, may I again put a question to the Prime Minister which is supplementary to my earlier question. Since wages in Canada are down by approximately $3 per week in terms of inflation, would the Prime Minister require Statistics Canada to produce their average weekly earnings figures forthwith so that the Canadian public can judge for themselves what impact inflation is having on wages, especially inflation accelerated by government action?

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I will bring that question to the attention of the minister.

* * *

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT COMPEL FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS TO ALLOCATE PART OF INVESTMENTS TO MORTGAGES AT FIXED INTEREST RATE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of a recent article in the Financial Post by Professor James Poapst, who was one of the authors of the government's residential mortgage financing bill, in which he stated that the said bill would have no effect on reducing interest rates, is the minister now prepared to introduce legislation which will compel federally chartered institutions to allocate a proportion of their annual investments to housing at a fixed interest rate of 6 per cent and, if not, why not?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, but we are proceeding with the passage through the committee and the House of the residential mortgage financing bill. We are also proceeding, as hon. members will have noticed, with the implementation of the assisted home ownership program, which is a program of assistance to people of low income to enable them to purchase homes. This program is meeting with a great deal of success across Canada and, under it, money is lent at an interest rate of 6 per cent to 8 per cent.

Mr. Gilbert: In view of the fact that mortgage interest rates constitute a high component in the recent cost of living increase, what steps does the minister intend taking to prevent further increases in mortgage rates which are reflected in the increased cost of housing and increased rents?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, in terms of housing policy rather than financial policy, for which I do not answer, we are persisting as vigorously as we can with the implementation of Bill C-135.

* * *

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE AT HALIFAX DOCKS—REQUEST FOR MEDIATOR—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister taken any action with respect to the request for a mediator in the dispute that is tying up the Halifax waterfront?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the Leader of the Opposition that I have today appointed Art Gibbons, director of mediation and conciliation in my department, who I think the Leader of the Opposition will agree is one of the most experienced mediators in Canada, to mediate this dispute. He will be on the scene very shortly. In the meantime he is contacting the parties to get them together to see whether the dispute cannot be resolved.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

PRINCE ALBERT—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON RIOT—NEED FOR MEASURES TO PREVENT FURTHER OUTBREAKS—POSSIBLE INCREASE IN STAFF

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. I say to him at once that I do not place any blame on him for this but rather on his predecessor. What is the present situation concerning the apparent revolt which took place in Prince Albert penitentiary, and why were the terms of the prisoners accepted? At the same time, would he say what can be done to meet an incipiently dangerous situation there where, in consequence of overcrowding, there is not only the possibility of further outbreaks but a perilous position for those who are wardens?

● (1510)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, on the morning of November 11 three inmates overpowered three guards in the yard at the Prince Albert Penitentiary and held those guards as hostages. They made four demands, one of which was that two of the men be transferred to the British Columbia penitentiary. The other demands were that no reprisal or action be taken against them and that they be given certain medication. The director of the penitentiary responded to the demand for the transfer of the men to the British Columbia penitentiary but did not accept the request that no action be taken against them. As a matter of fact, criminal action will be taken against them for the offence. Further the doctor at the penitentiary did no see fit to provide them with the medication they requested; he simply said they did not need it. I am advised that the two men in question are still awaiting transfer to the British Columbia penitentiary, and that the delay has been caused by a lack of a proper flight to take them there. Other than that, the penitentiary is in fact back to normal.

To alleviate the overcrowding problem we are presently negotiating with the province of Alberta to take over the Bowden Institute in the constituency of Red Deer. We are also constructing a new medium security institution at Mission, British Columbia, which we hope will further relieve the overcrowding problem.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, will the minister say whether, in view of the situation that has existed for some time at the Saskatchewan penitentiary, extra guards will be placed there, as I am told they are very much understaffed?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, we have requested extra guards not only for the Prince Albert Penitentiary but for several other penitentiaries, and permission has been granted by the government to seek people for these positions. We are now looking for people to fill them. I might say that the shortage of staff, not only of guards, has been caused by the somewhat abnormal increase in population in the west.

Mr. Peters: You mean the penitentiary population.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF ONTARIO FIRMS TO PAY INCREASED PREMIUMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, and at this time the absence of his parliamentary secretary, I suppose I will have to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Is he aware that a number of Ontario industries have indicated they intend to refuse to pay the 40 per cent increase in unemployment insurance premiums announced last week, and what steps will the government take in this regard?

An hon. Member: They must obey the law.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to take notice of that question and supply an answer to the hon. member on behalf of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who is out of the House on government business.

* * *

[Translation]

ENERGY

MINISTER'S POSITION ON PROPOSED REFINERY IN QUEBEC TO PROCESS SAUDI ARABIAN OIL

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

In view of the fact that he has been aware for some time of the negotiations between Quebec and Saudi Arabia concerning a joint project for the building of refineries in Quebec, could he tell the House whether his department favours the implementation of such a project?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have indeed been told about these talks, but they have failed to bring about any agreement. In our opinion, it is quite all right for public or private interests in Quebec to make arrangements with foreign commercial interests, I should, however, point out that in view of the present possibility of a stoppage as concerns oil shipments from Saudi Arabia, such measures would not offer the same security as arrangements with interests in Canada or in other countries.

[English]

OIL—USE OF CHERRY POINT BY UNITED STATES TANKERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He started his anti-pollution fight in respect of the Strait of Juan de Fuca last summer and since then we seem to have lost both the sound and the picture. Would he tell us whether he is having any more success with the United States than he is with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in fighting tanker use of Cherry Point?

Some hon. Members: Answer!

Mr. Speaker: While someone is considering the question the Chair will recognize the hon. member for New Westminster.

* * *

HOUSING

ASSISTED HOME OWNERSHIP PROGRAM—REQUEST THAT BENEFITS BE ADVERTISED

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the concern he has just expressed about the AHOP program and social housing, in view of the fact many people believe this program is not being promoted properly among low-income families in order that the free enterprise market will not be disturbed, and in view of the fact that many low-income families are buying houses from the free enterprise sector which they cannot afford, will the minister advise the House what steps he intends to take to make the benefits of this program known to low-income families? In particular, will he recommend that regional housing authorities advertise the benefits of this program in the real estate classified section of newspapers in competition with the private sector?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): The answer to the question is yes, Mr. Speaker, within the limits of my budget. I think the hon. member may have not followed correctly one of my answers about the concern I have expressed with regard to implementing the neighbourhood improvement program and the repair and rehabilitation program, in respect of which we require provincial agreement. To use the hon. member's words, in promoting the program we have been running advertisements in weekly and daily newspapers across Canada directed toward the application of this program. I know that in my own city and in his area these advertisements have resulted in a thousand phone calls a day from those interested in the program. We will be holding seminars across Canada with CMHC to do precisely—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. minister would like to return to motions. The hon. member will be recognized for a supplementary and then the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the purpose of directing the minister back to the specific question. Will he recommend to the regional housing authorities that they advertise in the real estate classified sections of the newspapers the benefits of this program in competition with the private sector?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I believe that advertising in other places than the want ads is a more effective way to advertise, but I will be happy to take advice on that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

ENERGY

FUNDY TIDAL POWER—STATUS OF RE-EXAMINATION OF REPORT

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is he in a position today to inform the House as to the exact status of the re-examination of the 1969 Fundy tidal power program board report, which has been under way now for some two years or more by his officials and officials of the governments of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for notice of his question. I am advised that I will have a report on this tomorrow morning and I regret to have to ask the hon. member to pose the question again tomorrow when I will try to answer in more detail.

* * *

HEALTH

RECREATION CANADA—JUSTIFICATION FOR ADVERTISING PROGRAM

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could he explain to the House why Recreation Canada in its massive "Participation" television advertising program, at great cost to the Canadian taxpayer, I might add, has failed to follow up the need for physical fitness with any kind of positive programs for the Canadian people, or does the minister feel that merely letting us know we are physically unfit is sufficient justification for this costly program?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question asked in such terms should obviously not be allowed.

* * *

[Translation]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

USE OF REPORT TABLED LAST YEAR IN FUTURE NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC ON CONSTITUTION

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the constitution, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Does the government, during its constitutional negotiations with the provinces and especially Quebec, intend to use the report tabled last session, after over a year of work, and which contains many important recommendations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I entirely agree with the hon. member that the report contains indeed very useful recommendations as a result of the extremely important work performed, but the hon. member's question remains hypothetical. There is no constitutional discussion with Quebec. As for us, we do not expect any, but if Quebec would like to reopen the file, the report mentioned by the hon. member would surely be quite helpful.

* * *

● (1520)

[English]

ENERGY

POSSIBLE OPENING OF NEW COAL MINES IN CAPE BRETON—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, may I pose my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of the energy crisis and the unfortunate possibility of it worsening, may I ask the hon. gentleman if he would consider meeting with Mr. Tom Kent, president of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, to explore with Mr. Kent and the board of that corporation the possibility of new coal mine openings in Cape Breton since, as the minister knows, the jurisdiction comes under the central government?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider that suggestion.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FLOODING OF SKAGIT RIVER VALLEY—ALLEGED FAILURE TO DELIVER TEXT OF RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY HOUSE TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the resolution passed unanimously by the House on November 2 required that the text of the resolution which dealt with Skagit Valley flooding in British Columbia be delivered forthwith to certain governments of the United States, and in view of the fact word has been received by me today that this resolution has not been delivered to those governments, can the Prime Minister tell the House when the government plans to deliver the text of this resolution as required by unanimous vote of the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire into the question of who looks after such matters.

* * *

HOUSING

SUGGESTED ABOLITION OF 11 PER CENT TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS TO REDUCE COST

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to previous questions concerning housing and is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the cost of shelter continues to increase to a point where now, for large numbers of Canadians, it has become an impossible dream to own a house, is the Prime Minister prepared to abolish or perhaps reduce the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials to help alleviate this situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for the representation which is indeed an original one.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, my question was quite clear. I am asking the Prime Minister whether he is prepared to take the necessary action to eliminate or reduce the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials to help Canadians obtain housing.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the answer was clear. The hon. member should know that I do not announce tax changes during the question period.

Mr. Lundrigan: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This is impossible. We have had today at least a dozen occasions when the Prime Minister has answered in this way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: Nobody worries if an hon. member does not answer a question or perhaps does not have the information, but when the Prime Minister stands up and shows contempt for questions such as have been raised by my colleague I think the Parliament of Canada has some responsibility to put those boys in their place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, with great deference to you, could the House request or suggest that you rule on this point of order and, if it is not a point of order, indicate that it is completely out of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour.

Mr. Lundrigan: Perhaps you would like to rule on his statement as well.

An hon. Member: God help Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour.

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO IMPLEMENT SEWAGE TREATMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Ed Nelson (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order please. There are just a few minutes left before the end of the question period and perhaps we should try to have two or three more questions. The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour has the floor.

Mr. Nelson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try again. My question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the critical shortage of serviced lots, when does the minister expect to introduce legislation to implement the policy announced at the Edmonton tri-level conference dealing with a sewage treatment program, and can the minister assure the House that he will attempt to convince his colleague, the Minister of Finance, of the seriousness of his concern regarding this program?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would anticipate introducing it after the new year following consultation with the provinces which, in Edmonton, I undertook to have with them. I hope to have this consultation with them during the next month or five weeks. In the meantime, the changes in the land assembly provisions which were made in the National Housing Act are there, and we are anxious to use them as quickly as possible. The administrative changes I announced at Edmonton are being implemented.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary South and then call orders of the day.

* * *

ENERGY

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION—EFFECT ON SHORT-TERM SUPPLY SITUATION—DATE OF LIFTING CRUDE OIL PRICE FREEZE

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. This weekend the minister made a big point of the fact that the principal reason for a national petroleum company was to provide security of petroleum supply to Canada. Will the minister say whether such a company could have any near term effect on supply and what else the government is doing to ensure future supplies which is not being done already?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I set out at some length the arrangements we have made in the near term to secure supply. Of course, if a national petroleum corporation as such were to become government policy it would be directed to the longer term to secure over a period of time a greater assurance of supply than has been available under the private system.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary South and then the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour who also has a supplementary before calling orders of the day.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, would the minister say if the government is irrevocably committed to lifting the crude oil price freeze on January 30?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, that is the policy as announced.

* * *

HOUSING

SEWAGE TREATMENT PROGRAM—EFFECT ON AVAILABILITY OF SERVICED LOTS

Mr. Ed Nelson (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Will the minister be in a position to inform the House of the number of serviced lots in the next five years that will be available resulting from the changes in the sewage treatment program?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question ought to be placed on the order paper. Instead of that supplementary the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Simcoe North.

* * *

HEALTH

NEED FOR INCREASED PERSONNEL TRAINED IN GERIATRICS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question. In view of the problem of the growing number of older people in Canada, a national health problem, with their increasing infirmities and sickness requiring increased medical skills in this field, I should like to ask the minister what steps are being taken through the health resources fund or other means to increase training in this field?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, about 25 per cent of the voluntary hospitalized cases in Canada are people in the aged group. The number of people specializing in geriatrics in Ontario, for instance, can be counted almost on one hand. The problem of the proper training of professional people is a matter under provincial responsibility, but I am discussing the matter with my colleagues.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

• (1530)

Mr. Jelinek: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I say with all due respect that earlier in the question period I rose to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare that was of importance to all Canadians as physical fitness affects us all. This is obviously noticeable in viewing the massive television advertising program in which the government has been engaged. I should like to ask the minister, who was ready to rise to answer my question earlier, if he would rise now and confirm that the budget for "Participaction"—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that, even if the minister wanted to reply to the question, it was asked in such terms that it was not acceptable procedurally. Hon. members have a responsibility to ask questions in such a way as to conform to the well established norms. I think I have been lenient enough in allowing questions, and it is only when a question is clearly out of order that I suggest to hon. members that it cannot be accepted. Perhaps tomorrow the hon. member might rephrase his question.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order. The hon. member has the facts all wrong. "Participaction" is a private organization which receives a subsidy from the federal government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to both the minister and the hon. member that they are engaging in a debate, and that perhaps the question might be accepted without preamble tomorrow.

Middle East Peacekeeping Force

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising out of the difficulties we have encountered in the House during the question period. I wonder if the government does not owe the House an explanation as to why, with unemployment, problems of inflation and the ever-increasing cost of living—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member resume his seat. The hon. member attempts by way of a point of order to ask a question. That is an abuse of the rules.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PARTICIPATION BY CANADIAN CONTINGENT IN MIDDLE EAST PEACEKEEPING FORCE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved:

That it be resolved by the . . . House of Commons:

That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the Government's decision that Canadian Forces participate in the United Nations Emergency Force in the Middle East, and that this House do approve the same.

And that a Message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that this House has adopted a resolution approving of the participation of Canadian Forces in the United Nations Emergency Force in the Middle East, and requesting Their Honours to unite with this House in the approval of the same by filling up the blanks in the resolution with the words "Senate and" . . .

[English]

He said: Mr. Speaker, an uneasy ceasefire now prevails in the Middle Eastern battlefield which for 15 days, from October 6 to October 22, and again until October 26, witnessed the most furious and bloody fighting in that beleaguered area in modern times. The most sophisticated and destructive equipment was unleashed in the Sinai desert and the Golan plateau. The biggest tank battles since world war II raged on the ground, while dozens of aircraft were struck down from the skies every day, and in the surrounding waters several naval encounters took place near the harbours of the eastern Mediterranean. Peaceful navigation and trade were interrupted to the point where even some of the government's of that oil rich region were forced to ration gasoline. Casualties mounted rapidly, and even now we are uncertain as to their extent, although the total must be unbearably high, especially in relation to the results achieved.

The mounting fury of the fight was possibly the only reason why it so abruptly ceased. The great powers who were supplying arms in increasing quantity to each side fortunately realized that they were being drawn into a dangerous confrontation, with the Soviet Union talking of unilateral intervention on the scene, while the United States placed its own forces on an increased state of alert. It was at this crucial stage that the United Nations Security Council agreed to the establishment and dispatch of an emergency force to supervise a ceasefire and separate efforts to prevent a recurrence of the fighting.

Given the circumstances as I have just recalled them, there could be no doubt in anyone's mind that never had an emergency measure of this nature been so evidently and urgently necessary. While Canada did not seek participation in the emergency force, we were determined that once we were invited it would be a success, and I am sure this is a point of view that would be supported by all parties in the House. We were asked at an early stage by the Secretary General of the United Nations to contribute in a vitally important role. Just two and a half hours ago the Secretary General of the United Nations was on the telephone to me urging the importance of Canada's participation and urging our participation in certain of these vital functions upon which the whole of UNEF depends.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: After due consideration, the government decided to accept the request and communicated this decision to parliament. In accordance with the practice followed in the past when a Canadian contingent has been contributed to a peacekeeping force, as opposed to the sending of peace observers, we are asking parliament to approve the government's decision. Leaders of all parties represented here indicated, in response to my announcement of October 30, that they supported a Canadian contribution to peacekeeping under the United Nations in the Middle East if it appeared there was a useful role for us to play. Spokesmen for all parties took the same view as I did, that no one could say no to such a request.

The concept of peacekeeping or peace observation forces under the United Nations, which owes so much of its development to a great Canadian, our former prime minister and a member of this House, the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: —is firmly supported by this government, as it has been by previous Canadian governments of all political stripes. We did not, however, accept the call to join a new UNEF without careful consideration. Experience over the years, some of it rather disappointing, has led us to look for certain criteria that, in our judgment, should be met if a peacekeeping operation is to be effective and if Canadian participation in it is to be worthwhile. We have no illusions that in this imperfect world the criteria for an ideal peacekeeping operation will ever be met in full. These criteria must, however, be constantly reiterated and promoted if peacekeeping is to be made a more effective instrument rather than a source of disillusionment to a world community hungry for peace.

The criteria Canada seeks to apply when considering participation in a peacekeeping operation include certain points of a political nature, as well as others of a more technical kind. A fundamental point is the existence of a threat to international peace and security. There is no doubt of that in this case. Ideally, peacekeeping should be directly linked to agreement on a political settlement among the parties to the conflict. At least there should be reasonable expectations that the parties will negotiate a settlement. The peacekeeping force must be responsible to a political authority and preferably that authority should be the United Nations. The sponsoring authority should receive reports and have adequate power to supervise the mandate of the force. The parties to the conflict must accept the peacekeeping force and Canadian participation in it must be acceptable to all concerned. Further considerations are that the peacekeeping force must have a clear mandate, including such things as freedom of movement, and that there must be an agreed and equitable method of financing the operation.

● (1540)

Some of these criteria were not met when we participated in the International Commission in Viet Nam, or in Cyprus in 1964, or in the UNEF of 1956. After our departure from Viet Nam, I made it clear that certain features of the operation made it impossible for the commission to operate effectively. One major impediment was the absence of a political authority to which it could report.

The United Nations may not be the only possible sponsoring body, but we have not yet found better auspices under which to work at peacekeeping. It is therefore a matter of satisfaction that in the Middle Eastern situation the emergency force should be put under the authority of the UN. To be precise, it is under the command of the United Nations, vested in the Secretary General, and under the authority of the Security Council.

In 1964, the House debated the dispatch of a Canadian contingent to Cyprus under great pressure of time and in circumstances which did not allow for the application of rigorous conditions. The island was on the brink of civil war with intervention threatened from neighbouring countries, and peacekeeping troops had to be sent as quickly as possible. For nine years, the United Nations force in Cyprus has kept conflict from breaking out and it must therefore be counted, to that extent, as a success. It has not, however, led to a settlement of the underlying problems. The absence of a direct link between a peacekeeping force and a negotiated settlement is a weakness, perhaps an unavoidable one, in the Cyprus situation.

Another weakness of the Cyprus peacekeeping operation is the absence of equitable financial arrangements. This time we are determined that the treatment accorded Canada should be equitable to that accorded to other contributing countries. The Secretary General has stated that his preliminary estimates of the United Nations own direct costs for UNEF, based upon past experience and practice, are $30 million for the six month period authorized by the Security Council. These costs are to be considered expenses of the United Nations organization and are to be borne by the members of the United Nations as apportioned by the General Assembly, presumably in about the same proportions as each country's share in the United Nations annual budget. Canada's share of that budget is currently 3.08 per cent. I might point out to the House that even if we did not participate in this peacekeeping operation we would of course still pay our share of the peacekeeping costs.

It is worth recalling that Canadians have been participating for many years in the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in the Middle East, and that UNTSO continues to exist and to perform a useful role on the ceasefire lines. Our previous experience in the Middle East in 1956, which was the first major United Nations venture in peacekeeping, is naturally very much in our minds at this time. Sadly, we seem to be back where we were 17 years ago. In fact the request to Canada to participate in the 1973 UNEF is due in great part to the fact that we have special skills and experience, not only in peacekeeping generally but in peacekeeping in the Middle East, and in the role that is now assigned to our contingent. I would remind the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) that this was the role that was assigned to us at that particular time.

The original request from the Secretary General for Canadian participation on October 27 was in terms of Canada supplying the logistic component of the force. That role has been assigned to us precisely because of the effective way in which Canada discharged it from 1956 to 1967, and the skills that our troops demonstrated in doing their jobs. Two aspects of our previous experience are relevant to the new task assigned to Canada in the same area. First, the way in which UNEF had to terminate its peacekeeping function in 1967 and evacuate the Middle East gave rise to a great deal of discussion, both at the United Nations and in Canada. From that unhappy episode certain lessons have been drawn.

There is no point in participating in a peacekeeping operation unless our participation is acceptable to all, and especially to the sovereign state upon whose soil the force is to be deployed. I can assure the House that we did not accept this task until the Secretary General had given us formal assurance that the presence of a Canadian contingent would be acceptable to all parties, and especially to Egypt, since UNEF will be deployed on Egyptian territory. In addition, I confirmed the Egyptian agreement personally with the Foreign Minister of Egypt when I met him a few days ago in Washington.

Part of the difficulty encountered with the original UNEF in 1956 was that it did not come under the authority of the Security Council and did not have the unqualified backing of the great powers. Nor was the mandate of the force so clearly set out and accepted by the parties concerned. The first UNEF in the Middle East was a brilliant improvisation that brought the international community back from the edge of disaster but could not ensure peace. This time the superpowers jointly proposed a peacekeeping force, and all members of the Security Council, except China, approved.

The Secretary General in his report to the Security Council on October 26, 1973, set out as essential conditions that the force must have at all times the full confidence and backing of the Security Council, and that it must operate with the full co-operation of the parties concerned. This report was approved by the Security Council and we felt more assured that the 1973 UNEF was to be on a sounder basis than that of 1956. It is on that basis that we acceded to the Secretary General's request of October 27 and accepted our assignment on the force.

Subsequently, an argument developed in the Security Council about having representation in UNEF of various geographical and political groupings. We can understand the desirability of having representation of various geographical areas in a UN force. However, Canada does not view its participation in UNEF in terms of political representation but in terms of performing an essential function. When I have been asked from time to time shouldn't there be a representative of the Warsaw Pact as well as a representative of NATO, of which Canada is a member, I have said that we do not consider ourselves as acting in the capacity of representing anyone but the international community as a whole.

In any event, the Security Council decided that the logistic role should be shared between Canada and Poland. I have made it clear that there is no objection on our part to working with Poland, provided a clear and practical division of responsibilities can be worked out. Our concern is with the efficient operation of the logistics component. It is unfortunate that the debate in the Security Council delayed the dispatch of logistical support units by a full week and threw some confusion on the Canadian role in UNEF. Following the Security Council's agreement of November authorizing the Secretary General to consult with potential contributors, including Canada and Poland, our ambassador to the United Nations continued discussions with officials from the UN secretariat and Poland on the organization and composition of the logistics element.

At the same time, at the request of the Secretary General evaluation teams were dispatched to Cairo to assess the requirements on the ground. As a result of these discussions the Secretary General requested, and we agreed, that as the first phase in the deployment of a Canadian contingent Canada would provide a signals unit to provide communications for the force. Poland will be dispatching an engineer unit as the first element in its contribution.

The Secretary General is continuing his discussions with both Canada and Poland to determine the next phase of the logistics deployment, and in particular the allocation of functions between the two countries. In these discussions we have sought to consider in a constructive manner proposals put forward by the Secretary General, while having in mind the need to ensure that Canada will be able to provide a useful and effective contribution to the operation of the force. At the moment the government is giving active consideration to a proposal from the Secretary General that Canada provide an air unit. A request has been made to Poland to provide a field hospital unit. In addition, the Secretary General has made suggestions regarding the division of responsibilities between Canada and Poland with respect to the remaining logistic functions. The discussions have been complex and time-consuming, but I am hopeful that we may be in a position to announce shortly the details of the composition of the remainder of the Canadian contingent.

● (1550)

While these negotiations continue, the advance party of the Canadian signals unit arrived in Cairo on November 10. The deployment of this unit should be completed shortly and will number over 400 persons. This unit is being dispatched according to the schedule determined by the Secretary General. He wanted the advance party of the unit on the ground as soon as possible because of the urgent requirement for an effective communications system within UNEF.

Another point demonstrated by the history of UNEF from 1956 to 1967 is that a peacekeeping force of this kind should be recognized by all parties as a temporary necessity, to help avoid a renewal of fighting while the parties to the conflict take up the fundamental problem which has led them to fight each other in the first place. It is precisely because the parties involved never made any progress toward a peaceful settlement in the ten years following 1956 that ultimately UNEF had to depart without any other prospect than renewed warfare. With this in mind, I stressed on October 22, that while we warmly welcomed the call for a ceasefire, it was vitally important in our view that the ceasefire should lead quickly to negotiations on the basic problems of the Middle East.

There is now a renewed opportunity for the parties involved to employ the respite that UNEF provides to tackle their basic differences. The principles of a just and lasting settlement have been set out since 1967 in Security Council Resolution 242 but until now no progress has been made in implementing that resolution and no negotiations based on its principles have taken place. Resolution 338 of October 22, 1973 which is the basis for the present ceasefire, also deals with the problem of a peaceful settlement. It calls for an immediate beginning to the implementation of Resolution 242 in all its parts and for the beginning of negotiation between the parties under appropriate auspices.

Mr. Speaker, UNEF is not charged with the basic problems involved in a Middle East settlement. Its tasks are limited to supervising the implementation of the ceasefire, the return of the parties to their October 22 positions and the use of its best efforts to prevent a recurrence of fighting. These will be the tests of UNEF and they will be acid tests. Should the parties to the recent conflict fail to comply with the Security Council resolutions and not allow UNEF to operate effectively, the gleam of hope that the ceasefire and Resolution 338 offer will be threatened with quick extinction. Let us pray that the parties involved will therefore quickly agree to comply with these first steps on the road toward peace.

There is no question that Canadians are desirous of a lasting peace and a lasting settlement in the Middle East and, while it may not be the task of UNEF to promote this settlement, it is still the responsibility of every member of the United Nations to do what it can to help bring about this peace and this settlement. In my statement of October 16 I emphasized that > parties to the conflict would first have to agree on the basis of a settlement and terms of reference for such a force for Canada to accept participation in peacekeeping.

Both the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) stressed that our participation could only be undertaken with the consent of the immediate parties involved, and I have dwelt on our efforts to ensure this. I would add that the consent of the parties must be not only to accept the members of the peacekeeping force but also to facilitate its work by complying with the resolution which gave it birth. By their compliance with the Security Council resolutions, the parties will make our task worth while.

There is encouragement in the fact that for the first time in some 20 years Israeli and Egyptian generals have met and signed an agreement on some urgent problems of the ceasefire situation. The governments of Egypt and of Israel displayed wisdom in accepting these arrangements, and I am sure that I speak for all the House when I say that the United States Secretary of State, Mr. Kissinger, deserves high commendation for the effectiveness of his good offices.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: We can only hope that these immediate arrangements will lead to further discussions and further agreement.

As I have said, the framework for peace exists in the resolutions adopted by the Security Council. The problem in our view has never been so much one of interpretation as of implementation of these resolutions. I further indicated in the House last week, in reply to a question, that in our view such provisions of Resolution 242—which we can read in either English or French since we are a bilingual country—as those calling for the withdrawal of Israeli forces from occupied territories and the establishment of secure and recognized boundaries for all states in the region, had to be taken together. Naturally, such matters as the drawing of boundaries may prove to be a long task, but is it beyond imagination to devise means of starting the implementation of the various provisions simultaneously?

The so-called Rogers Plan in 1970 provided for partial implementation of Resolution 242, by a simultaneous reopening of the Suez Canal to navigation and a withdrawal by Israeli forces from the east bank of the canal. While that plan failed, the idea of balance is still a valid one. In fact, the whole basis of Resolution 242 is a balance of obligations and commitments. The problem of Palestinian refugees is one of the items in that balance. The resolution affirms the necessity "for achieving a just settlement of the refugee problem" and this problem should be at least broached simultaneously with the other matters I have mentioned. Canada has not forgotten these refugees. We are the third largest contributor to the United Nations agency which looks after their needs and we have just increased by $550,000 our contribution for the current year.

The main thing now is quickly to get around to negotiating "under appropriate auspices" as Security Council Resolution 338 has it. To us, it would seem that the United Nations offers appropriate auspices. Others have mentioned the great powers, or some of them. We would hope that they would exert their influence to stimulate the parties to begin negotiations. To the Canadian government, any auspices would seem appropriate that provide a means whereby talks can begin on the essential aspects of the problem.

For more than 25 years, the United Nations has played the role of mediator, peacekeeper and truce supervisor in the Middle East. We cannot yet be sure that peace is any closer now than in 1948, 1956 or 1967. Once more, the parties in conflict are calling upon the United Nations to step in and give them time, time that can be used to negotiate for peace or to prepare for war. The Canadian government, in accepting to contribute its part to the UN peace effort, is not taking on this commitment in a spirit of blind optimism. We have had too long an experience in this field, the United Nations has had too long an experience in trying to find a peaceful settlement in the Middle East for anyone to be afflicted with that particular defect. We consider that we have a responsibility to the world community and to all the people of the Middle East to do what we can to give them another chance to achieve a peaceful settlement when the fighting has stopped. That is the purpose of UNEF, and the reason for our participating in it. In putting forward this resolution, therefore, I am asking the House to agree that Canada should do its international duty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, a serious debate like this one has little use for the exclamations of some back-benchers who wish to turn it into a farce. We think—and I mention in particular the member for Lévis (Mr. Guay)—

Mr. Guay (Lévis): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

If these remarks are considered frivolous, then I do not consider them to be more serious on TV because I have quoted the exact words said last week by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), who called us the firemen of the world. I do not think that this expression is better chosen for him than it is for me.

Mr. Wagner: When I see that my friends on the opposite side start to protest and to shout, I surely hit the mark, and I can assure the House that it is only a beginning.

Mr. Speaker, to speak in a calmer tone than that of the hon. member for Lévis, who will surely find a way to intervene in the debate if his colleagues allow him, I wish to mention that we were particularly moved, from the very first words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), to hear the message he had just received, at the beginning of the debate, from the United Nations Secretary General. However, Mr. Speaker, I wish our legitimate interest in Canada were demonstrated not only at the opening of a debate aimed at getting the consensus of all parties on a resolution representing an unilateral decision of the government but also that this interest were demonstrated in many other ways and particularly during the debates before Canada was invited to contribute to the peace force.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that Parliament is once more—and it is becoming a habit—presented with a fait accompli. This House is invited not to give advice or contribute to a decision, but to approve a decision of the government. The present government has been unable to learn its lesson during the Viet Nam crisis. And if on October 30—as I recognize the quotation from my previous speech used by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp)—we have, based on the available data, accepted that Canada contribute to the peace effort in the Middle East.

Since November 1, the day when the Secretary of State for External Affairs made this House aware of new and apparently sudden problems concerning the Canadian contribution to the United Nations intervention in the Middle East, since that day we have been waiting for a debate that would have allowed Parliament to go beyond what we were asking of the Secretary of State for External Affairs on October 30 and like on March 13, 1964 during the Cyprus conflict under the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, and to participate in the decision before troops are sent on the scene of the cease-fire. But once again, we are sorry to see that the government did not wish it to be so and if we rejoiced last Sunday upon hearing about the agreement concluded between Israel and the UAR, we deplored—and still do—the government's attitude regarding the rights and prerogatives of a minority Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, let it be clear that we are in favour of a just, strong and permanent settlement in the Middle East. Neither do we refuse any more than any other Canadian the sacrifices which must be made in pursuing this ideal of peace and whatever form our contribution takes, we want it to be accomplished with generosity and we know that it will be so. However, in expressing our support for the peace-seeking efforts of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, we must none the less play the role we have as the Official Opposition in Parliament.

● (1600)

I am sure that not a single field of government activity should escape Parliament's criticism, not even that majestic and noble field which is the Department of External Affairs. And that is why, Mr. Speaker, it is our intention today to say clearly to the government what we think of its behaviour during these last weeks and it is our intention to go beyond the narrow setting of an incident to question the government and heckle it, if need be, so that it will give us a definition of an overall policy as concerns Canada's participation in those peace missions.

We have absolutely no doubt as to the experience, efficiency, motivation or fair-mindedness of our Canadian troops among the international peace contingents, but we seriously question—and we make no bones about it—the methods used by this government, its approach in its participation to emergency forces here and there in the world.

After the 1967 eviction in the Middle East and the rather sad experience in 1973 in Viet Nam, it is only legitimate and wise, considering the eagerness and unilateralism of this government, to urge it, as we wish to do, to define its course in that field.

[English]

The resolution, Mr. Speaker, which the House is called upon today to approve has both obvious and implicit elements which evoke, I am sure, varying reactions from all members of this House. The suggestion that Canada should respond to a call from the United Nations, and do so in both an energetic and efficient manner, when what is at stake may be the shaky calm which is necessary as a prerequisite to serious negotiations between the Arabs and Israelis, is surely something that few Canadians would care to oppose. The suggestion that the government has the legal right, or the legalistic right, to make a commitment and then seek parliamentary approval, while objectionable in the context of this minority House, lacks neither precedent nor historical model.

However, Mr. Speaker, there is more to this resolution than meets the eye. For, whether parliamentarians like it or not, blanket approval of this resolution, without raising some clear and concise questions, will also imply approval of the way in which the minister proceeded, the role of the Soviet Union and Egypt in determining our role, and the entire thrust of the government's mad scurrying about to ensure that Canada would participate. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I are not prepared to give this government that sort of blank cheque.

● (1610)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: If, as most Canadians justifiably believe, we have a certain expertise in the area of peacekeeping, if, as history shows, our troops have been able on repeated occasions to remain cool, efficient and consistently competent in the most delicate and tense of situations, this quality and ability is something of immense value to the world. Its value stands on its own merit and record. Those in the community of nations who chose not to recognize it, for ideological or other reasons, pay tribute only to their own narrowmindedness and parochialism. But I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, and I doubt whether the minister truly believes, that the hard international currency of good will which our peacekeeping ability provides is served by artificially inflating that currency or tossing it about.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, Canada should be prepared to serve when asked. Canada has no business begging to serve.

Mr. Sharp: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: We have the responsibility of considering exactly what has happened to the tone and colour of our participation in the UN force over in the Middle East. Are we now there as the surrogate of western interests, necessitating the involvement, objectionable to many, of Polish troops in that effort? Are we truly an internationalized participant or are our forces and their expertise now being used purely as an element of balance? While no one doubts the importance of such a role, would the issue of balance have arisen if Canada had not insisted? Did the minister serve Canada, its international standing and the reputation of our peacekeeping operation, by dragging us through a process of inspection and approval on the part of the Soviets and the Egyptians?

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I believe we have right to know exactly what the minister did when he was in New York. Was he responding to an invitation—or was he generating one? None can deny that the involvement of Canadians in the communications and logistics role will be a great boon to the efficiency and success of the UN operation in the Middle East. None can doubt that our men will perform with the same concern for excellence and professionalism as characterizes their general comportment and sense of duty. Those qualities are not in doubt here. The actions and motivations of the government are.

[Mr. Wagner.]

Mr. Speaker, one would have thought that the relative success of our military operations within the UN, as compared with those on the ICCS, would have indicated the perils of a situation wherein Canada becomes a counterweight as opposed to an internationalized participant. While we do, of course, appreciate that once a balance and counterbalance situation has been established we have a duty to see our commitments through, one would have thought that even this government would have been able to glean from the Viet Nam situation that such situations are to be avoided where possible. Present evidence indicates that they chose not only not to avoid it, but to seek it out.

Mr. Sharp: Not true!

Mr. Wagner: I could not but help get the impression when I saw the minister rushing down to New York that notwithstanding his protestations his vigour and panic were in the interest of saving a foreign policy in need of review and tightening up, rather than of more altruistic purposes. I could not help but feel that while the Canadian people could very easily have stood a refusal, or even the lack of an invitation just this once, the minister and the cabinet could not. I don't mind saying that the role of international fireman becomes just a little hackneyed when the fireman lets it be known he really wouldn't mind an invitation to the next or present fire, thank you very much.

While the direct implications of the motion limit the parliamentary options, my party takes the view that there is a responsibility on the government's part to initiate a fundamental review of the direction of our foreign policy and the nature of our international posture in years to come. If we are unacceptable to some, because of our alliances, then we have to decide with whom we choose to seek favour. If our record of international peacekeeping and UN participation is not acceptable to some, this should not imply that we allow our international role to be dictated by those who raise the objections. Surely, the many men and women who have given many hours, days and months in international peacekeeping service to this nation deserve more support and faith from the minister than that!

We are faced with a delicate calm in the Middle East, a calm that may, indeed, be the promise of more solid and long-lasting peace arrangements in years to come. It is clear that Canada, now involved in the operation over there, can or should do nothing to upset or even disturb that calm. The bind which men of good will find in opposing this resolution does not extend to our general lack of faith in the minister's general activities. A larger concern for peace in the Middle East only displaces our concern on that score for the time being.

● (1620)

My colleagues will support the resolution—

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Ha!

Mr. Wagner: —simply because . . . I hear a laugh from the member on the other side. He did not wait for the end of my sentence.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): I am still laughing.

Mr. Wagner: Members opposite jump to conclusions as usual, which is a very sad state of affairs. We will support this resolution simply because to do otherwise would contribute to disturbing the shaky Mid-East calm already established. However, on the principle of the future and appropriate role for our peacekeeping capacity, we are resolute in our refusal to accept any of the weird and extended flirtations of the minister in this situation as either noteworthy or notable precedent. For while this may be the way the minister chooses to operate, this is not the most appropriate fashion to best use and deploy our peacekeeping role within the realm of international politics.

Canada has progressed beyond the surrogate role, and has done so despite existing alliances and commitments to the west. Previous governments have been able to maintain that balance without threatening our international posture and reputation. This government has not. I know views are often expressed to the effect that, whatever a government's weaknesses and inefficiencies—and this government has plenty of those—the managing of external affairs and international relations can usually be kept outside partisan considerations. I regret to say, Mr. Speaker, that the minister's bungling indicates that, no matter how you look at it, the cancerous decay infecting this government's domestic incompetence is indeed spreading.

[Translation]

Happily, Mr. Speaker, we shall soon be able to give back to the country and to this government an image and prestige, on an international level,—

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Petty politics.

Mr. Wagner: —an image and prestige that it is now unfortunately losing because of what the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) calls the "petty politics" of the members of this government.

[English]

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it will come as no surprise if I announce at the beginning of my remarks that we in the New Democratic Party intend to support this motion. However, there are a few additional remarks I feel obliged to make before I take my seat.

I suppose I am fortunate in that on many occasions my sense of frustration at the procedures pursued in this august chamber is balanced by my sense of the ridiculous. Otherwise, the utter futility of many of the pseudo-events here would tip me into a suicidal depression. Here we are engaged in a debate to decide whether or not we should send troops to participate in a Mid-East peacekeeping force after the commitment to do so has been made and when a substantial portion of the troops involved is already on its way.

I realize that the minister had the right to assume, on the basis of statements made in this House by party spokesmen, that there was agreement in principle to undertaking the enterprise. I also realize that, once the difficulties at the United Nations had been sorted out, the government was in good faith obliged to react with all possible speed. I suppose I could take comfort in the fact that today's debate maintains the form if not the substance of the obligation, established by custom but obligation none the less, for the government to consult parliament before sending troops abroad on active service, but I do not.

Why could not this House have organized itself to respond more quickly to the situation? We could have discussed the matter Friday afternoon, Friday evening, Saturday, Monday or even yesterday. It would have put us out a bit, but then so are the men going over there and their families being put out a bit, to put it mildly. It is not my intention to sound holier than thou in saying this. I am part of this House and as responsible for its actions as anybody else. But all too often we react more like the denizens of some musty retired gentlemen's club than like people charged with looking after the interests of this nation.

I want to give vent to a bit more spleen on a more peripheral issue before I get down to cases. I think it is unfortunate in the extreme that circumstances conspired to oblige the minister, or to make him feel obliged, to dash off to New York and Washington and back again at a time when Canada's acceptability as a participant in the peacekeeping force was in question. I accept the minister's word that he was requested to do so by the Secretary General of the United Nations. I also accept his word that he was not preaching for a call. Further, I believe that the minister would have preferred to have expressed our willingness to participate and then allow the Security Council to accept or reject us. Instead, he did end up looking as though he was overly anxious to participate.

What forced our country into an undignified posture, I believe, was the childish attitude of the two superpowers who insisted upon injecting further elements of east-west confrontation into the Middle East situation, striking more sparks around what is generally acknowledged to be a powder keg. It is my understanding that the United States objected to the inclusion of a Warsaw pact nation in the force, while the Soviet Union insisted upon a "geographical", for which read "ideological", balance. I think it is about time that the two super-powers stopped playing their silly little games, allowing themselves the luxury of ego trips, and began soberly discharging their responsibilities to the world which their power has imposed upon them.

Their latest little game has succeeded in confirming the opinion of all who were inclined to think that Canada is the American's cat's paw that we are just that. I can support such a minor blow to my pride, but it does not endear either the Soviet Union or the United States to me. But that is a minor consideration and one which can be forgiven. Nevertheless, I think it is important to note that the squabbling and nattering that accompanied the creation of the force should provide solid evidence to those nations that believe in the settlement of disputes through negotiation and through the application of such law as applies, rather than through the use of force majeure, that new efforts should be made immediately to create a standing United Nations force which is provided for in the charter.

To return to the role of the superpowers, I was saying that I could forgive them the fact that they, through their little games, had caused my country some not inconsiderable embarrassment. But what cannot be forgiven is the two superpowers' total lack of responsibility in their approach to the Middle East following the six day war of 1967. Rather than urging their client states to begin the negotiations which were called for in resolution 242, rather than attempting to clear away some of the considerations which prevented negotiations, they encouraged their respective friends in their intransigence. One could not fault either of the two had they tried and failed. The problem is so complex as to seem to defy solution. But they did not try. On the contrary, they supplied arms to the two sides at an ever-increasing rate, and in so doing made the current outbreak of fighting almost inevitable.

● (1630)

Not only that, during the fighting they engaged in posturing and provocation which ended with the United States going to a Stage 3 alert, an alert which places the nuclear forces of its Strategic Air Command at an advanced state of readiness. Now, that is madness. They should be told so in no uncertain terms and reminded of their responsibility to attempt to secure a lasting peace from this truce, shaky as it is. I do not know how much good such representations would do because neither of the two nations shows much disposition to listen to all we lesser mortals when they have the bit in their teeth, but it is our world too and most of us would like to go on living in it. It is that face which makes my party believe Canada has no choice but to accept the invitation to participate in the peacekeeping force, however uncertain its prospects for success may appear to be, and I am pleased to note that the recent exchanges between Egypt and Israel provide a small ray of hope in an otherwise gloomy picture.

The Middle East situation has within it the potential to be to a third world conflict what the Balkans were to the first. That is not a prediction, Mr. Speaker. I am not that pessimistic, but it is, I think, an acknowledgement of the facts. If our presence, and, that of the other nations involved in UNEF, provides even the slightest prospect for an improvement in the situation then it is in the interest of the world and in our own self-interest that we go. It is also our responsibility because we are part of the world community which gave birth to the current situation, and as such we have an obligation to do what we can to assist in the resolution of the problem.

I would hope that the respite from major fighting which the presence of the peacekeeping force may provide will be utilized by all participants in the dispute, and their not so silent partners, to seek ways and means of effectively pursuing the instructions of the Security Council resolution of October 22. I think the world community must seize the same opportunity to acquaint the belligerents and their allies that the situation cannot be allowed to go on festering, that the dangers to world peace are too great to allow it to do so and that any party to the dispute which seems to be devoting less than 100 per cent effort to achieving a solution will be extremely unpopular, indeed. Too much is at stake.

I am not unaware of the difficulties involved in unravelling the Gordion knot that is Middle East politics. I am not unaware of the emotions, the fears, the hatreds and the sense of resolve of all those engaged. It is very easy for me here in Canada to stand in my place and yell: "Do something", but it still needs to be said. It is our world too, as I said before. It is our world, but at this moment it is their blood, and I know I speak for everyone here when I express, with all the sincerity I can muster, my sympathy for those who have lost loved ones and to those who have been wounded, and when I express also the hope that this time all will find peace and justice and security: The two million Palestinian refugees who have been denied their homeland, the Israelis who have, after 2,000 years of hope, rebuilt their national state and now must constantly guard against its loss, the Egyptians, the Jordanians and the Syrians who suffer the indignity of seeing foreign troops on their soil.

Like other parties in this House, my party has no pat formula to offer for the resolution of the conflict. I can only say on behalf of my colleagues that we stand ready to support the government on any reasonable steps it takes to discharge Canada's responsibilities as a member of the world community in respect of the Middle East.

In relation to the actual contribution we are making to the peacekeeping force, I would like to suggest to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson), who I understand will be speaking later, that it would be of interest to all of us to learn precisely what numbers are being attached to UNEF, what units they represent, what precise roles they will be fulfilling and what major equipment they will employ. We would also be interested to know if any significant numbers of troops have been withdrawn from our NATO brigade or from our own contingent in Cyprus in order to fulfill our commitments. I have some fear that the effectiveness of our forces remaining in Canada and elsewhere in the world might be compromised because our armed forces are now spread so thin, and so many of those sent to UNEF will of necessity be technical support troops of which we do not have a surplus. That remark was not made by way of suggesting we should not have accepted a role in UNEF but by way of suggesting that the Minister of Defence had better soon undertake an examination of the composition of our forces, and the number of roles assigned to them, in order to decide whether or not the two are compatible.

I think at this point it would be appropriate to say a special word of thanks to our troops in Cyprus, who are currently stretched extremely thin and working exceptionally long hours in order to fill in for the troops of other nations which have been transferred from Cyprus to Egypt. They are doing Canada proud. I hope the minister is concerning himself about arranging for the force to be brought back up to strength.

To our troops now in the Middle East, those now on their way and those soon to be sent, we in the New Democratic Party have every confidence that they will acquit themselves with their customary excellence, in a manner which will bring honour to their country.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that it is the view of my party that the government has acted entirely correctly in accepting the invitation of the Secretary General of the United Nations to contribute a contingent to UNEF. This responsibility which Canada has undertaken is not, as some would have us believe, a romantic gesture of nobility. It is a sober contribution to a desperate attempt to put an end to the fighting in the Middle East and toward world peace. It is an important contribution in an attempt to build up an accepted mechanism for dealing with armed conflict. It is an acceptance of our responsibilities as a member of the world community and a concrete expression of our commitment to the concept of collective security under the UN. Our self-interest, if nothing else, dictates that we take every opportunity proffered which has some prospect of strengthening the UN.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, last Sunday all Canada celebrated Armistice Day, the anniversary of the signature of the treaty which put an end to the Second World War.

Everyone celebrates Armistice Day. It is a civic holiday, but as soon as it is over, we come back to the House of Commons to talk about another conflict which could even turn into another world war since the United Nations are concerned with it, as are the United States and the USSR in one way or another.

Being a pacific country in North America, Canada must also concern itself with this conflict, either by siding with one of the parties concerned or by remaining neutral as a peacemaking agent.

In fact, a contingent of Canadian soldiers is already in the field; they act as observers and members of the UN forces. We have reached a point where all countries of the world, in addition to administering their own internal affairs, have to complicate their parliamentary and governmental proceedings with the Middle East crisis which seems to us to be the focal point of the attention of every country in the world, in that small countries with only three or four million people put in action the economic and military super powers of the whole world.

In 1948, the United Nations provided a measure of stability to this area by providing Israel with fixed borders, thereby giving rise to the Palestinian refugee problem. These refugees, who then numbered about 1,500,000 sought asylum in the small neighbouring Arab countries. Some of them have dug roots there and started a new life, but a great many are still looking for employment and a suitable occupation. Abandoned, without any sort of known organization or leadership, they are faced with continuing discontent among all these displaced persons, the innocent victims of decisions aimed at giving a land to a people who have been wandering for over 2,000 years and trying to settle in all countries of the world, unable on its own to organize itself.

● (1640)

If Israel now has a population of about three million, mainly thanks to the "importation" of money and citizens from many countries of the world, and following the donation or occupation of territories with the support of Great Britain and of the United Nations, we should not forget that the former residents of those territories, mostly Arabs, have had to leave their dwellings either on their own free will or because they were driven out by new occupants. They were expatriated and dissiminated near the borders either in Jordan, in Lebanon, in Syria or in the UAR. Those who have been able to adapt are living fairly well but almost 500,000 are still in refuge camps at the mercy of the charity of the United Nations, of the Arab countries or of other nations.

Most of those refugees are people who were too old to start all over again after such a displacement. The same inconveniences may be found in those mass displacements in the case of forced expropriation in our own country when it comes to expropriate thousands of farmers and other citizens conveniently settled on their lands or in their village; the oldest are those who find it most difficult to start again from scratch.

Obviously those refugees living in the Arab countries or in the neighbourhood of Israel are frustrated and are a source of discord but this indicates at least that Israel should be satisfied with the 1948 boundaries and not repeatedly seek to expand its territory which was not freely given by the natives but forcefully granted by agreements concluded by foreign nations, major countries or the United Nations. Those 500,000 Palestinian refugees alone are a hard problem to settle in the midst of a climate of discord.

It is therefore important that Israel be content with the boundaries granted willingly or not in 1948, leave the neighbouring countries at peace and refrain from any attempt at enlarging their territory so that Arab states not be tempted to push Israelis behind boundaries established in 1948.

In 1967, international diplomacy tried to resolve this problem by introducing Security Council Resolution No. 242 which called for the withdrawal of Israel forces back to their boundaries as established in 1948.

In 1967, the famous Six Day war broke out, the Israelis tried to enlarge their territory at the expense of neighbour Arab countries, a territory that had been occupied by Arabs for more than 2,000 years. As years go by, through diplomatic exchanges or takeovers by mere movements of people, utter confusion still shrouds the boundaries of these small countries where one can see Egypt reach friendly agreements with the USSR or Israel with the United States.

And now these two super powers, at the same time as the United Nations, are trying to effect a settlement between small countries that are unable to reconcile their differences themselves. Therefore, this is a tiny nest of dissent right in the middle of Asia, Africa and Europe that threatens to involve the United States and the Soviet Union. Eventually, this small piece of land, where only about 15 million people are living, might give rise to world war III.

It is really surprising that the situation has come to that point. How come these small countries are strong enough to involve all the great powers of the world? This is a mystery that is difficult to explain. But we find ourselves in this really important situation, and we can no longer close our eyes to it. We have seen quite recently Mr. Kissinger propose that an Israeli-Arab peace conference be held around December 9 or 10 in Geneva, but he stated that even though "peace negotiations are positive, a very serious problem will continue to exist, in particular for Israel, as regards the maintenance of its own security."

Mr. Kissinger explained that it is always difficult to determine the boundaries of these countries, for they differ from those established at the time of the truce. And he added: "What we must avoid above all is that each and every crisis should become a conflict between super-powers."

Things being what they are, Mr. Speaker, what can Canada do? I think we should participate in the activities of the United Nations, like we already do, and participate in the peacekeeping force and co-operate with such benevolent groups as the Red Cross and help the wounded and the prisoners; we should try to bring about peace and understanding between all parties through peace negotiation, a task we have to accomplish as part of the world community and of the United Nations.

Canada's participation in the peacekeeping force of the United Nations should not aim only at fruitful negotiations between belligerents. It must always strive toward the establishment of lasting peace in Middle East and in all the other parts of the world.

May I add that the basic causes of this endless war between Israel and Arab countries goes back to the formation of the state of Israel in 1948; as it is hardly conceivable that the United Nations contingent will be able to settle this conflict now, after 25 years of struggles, discussions, hate and cultivated ambitions, let us hope that we will at least have contributed to dampen violence until better feelings and intelligent arguments make their pacific work in the settlement of this conflict, which could so easily degenerate into a world conflict.

If the countries concerned cannot reach an agreement it is obvious that Canada cannot claim to act under authority. The UN Security Council is the only one that can serve as an impartial referee with some apparent international authority in the present circumstances. All indications allow us to hope that the United Nations will have before too long a military force capable of ensuring peace across the world in the absence of mere persuasion or balance between the armed forces of different countries.

But there is still a long way to go before we reach that objective and that distance must be crossed not only at the international level but also and specially at the level of citizens and families in every country of the world where they must learn to live with all their neighbours as brothers, friends, human beings.

I would like to say in passing, Mr. Speaker, that it is equally regrettable that we are always faced with faits accomplis when we discuss situations as complex as this one.

I would then ask the government to consult all members of the opposition from now on rather than taking on its own decisions that could have so important consequences.

● (1650)

[English]

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the minister responsible for the Canadian armed forces, I welcome this opportunity to participate in the discussion of the resolution that is before the House. At the outset, I wish to confirm and, in fact, to emphasize my personal conviction that the government's decision to accept the invitation of the United Nations to participate in a newly formed peacekeeping endeavour in the Middle East is a decision that is consistent with our belief as Canadians in doing all we can to help to bring about peace in the world. It is a decision that is consistent with our history and with our commitment to accept the role of international peacekeeping under the United Nations.

In speaking to the resolution, I would like to divide what I have to say into two parts. I would like to speak about what we are going to do and about why we should do it. In the first part, in speaking in detail about what we are going to do, I hope I may be answering at least in part the questions raised by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland), and when I speak about why we should be there, I hope I will answer the central question raised this afternoon by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner).

I would like to begin by emphasizing that in my belief what the Canadian armed forces have been asked to do is to undertake a most vital role, to play a most essential part, in the United Nations Emergency Force. I am certain that all of us realize that no military operation of any kind can be effective without good communications. In fact, no military operation of any kind can even begin to function without being linked by good communications in the field. As I stated in the House last week, all of us, even if we are not military people, should know that much about a military mission.

Therefore, I hope that in this continuing discussion of the resolution we will not hear more about the insignificance or about the unimportance of the role that Canada has been asked to play, because exactly the opposite is the case. It is because of their experience, because of their capability, and because of their training that the Canadian forces have been asked by the United Nations to undertake these important duties—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richardson: —of providing a communications system for the whole emergency force, a force that is expected to number some 7,000 officers and men.

To meet this United Nations request, we are building a contingent around the 1st Canadian Signals Regiment. Also, as my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), said earlier in the debate, we are still discussing with the United Nations the possibility of sending additional personnel to carry out other duties in the support and logistics field, including the possible provision of a small air transport unit. But I wish now to speak specifically about what we have so far agreed to do, and to answer specifically the questions raised by the hon. member for Selkirk.

The 1st Canadian Signals Regiment, which is stationed in Kingston, will be augmented by administrative personnel and other experienced communications personnel from many of our units across Canada. Altogether, the Canadian Signals Unit and its administrative support personnel, will number 481 officers and men. There will, in fact, be 46 officers and 435 other personnel.

Our signals unit will, of course, take its own communications equipment to the Middle East. Most of this equipment, which consists of radios, telephone equipment and a teletype capability, is mobile and is regularly installed and carried inside communications vehicles. For this reason, more than 100 Canadian vehicles will be transported to the Middle East. These are made up approximately of 30 jeeps, 44 three-quarter ton trucks and 32 two and a half ton trucks, most of them, as I have said, containing communications equipment. In addition, there will be some 40 trailers of which 16 are jeep trailers, 17 are three-quarter ton trailers, and 7 are one and a half ton trailers. We are also taking 4 fork lift trucks and one large tow truck.

In addition to this somewhat sophisticated and extremely useful communications equipment, we will be taking other supplies that will enable the Canadian contingent to be totally self sufficient for at least the first 30 days of their stay in the Middle East. To achieve this self-sufficiency in the field, our personnel are taking 30 days rations, field kitchens, a central cooking unit and water purification equipment. They will also have enough tents to enable the whole contingent to live and work under canvas. They will also have with them their own electrical generating units and batteries. Altogether we will be moving some 200 tons of equipment, and that is not including the vehicles.

Our personnel, together with the various items of equipment and supplies that I have just enumerated, will be transported to the Middle East by aircraft from Canada's Air Transport Command. Most of the personnel will be carried in our Boeing 707 aircraft and most of the equipment will be moved in Hercules aircraft. For this airlift we will be using two Boeing 707's and 15 C-130 Hercules aircraft. During the first 10 days we plan in total seven round trips for the Boeings and 41 round trips for the Hercules fleet. The flying time for a Boeing from Trenton to Cairo is 12 hours—that is flying time, not total elapsed time—and 18 hours for a Hercules. Our first flights began on Saturday, November 10 and we expect to have the Canadian contingent in place and operating next Monday, the 19th of this month.

Having outlined in some detail what the Canadian forces are going to do, I now wish to say why I believe the Canadian forces must undertake this important responsibility. In saying why we should participate in this peacekeeping endeavour I will try to answer directly a central question that was placed before this House just a short while ago by the hon. member for Saint Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner). The reason we must answer this call is to me compelling and obvious. We are today sending troops to the Middle East for no less a reason than that under United Nations guidance, in the search for a peaceful world, mankind is in fact struggling to enter a new era.

● (1700)

We all know that throughout recorded history men in uniform have left their homelands for only one purpose. That purpose was to fight. But for the past two decades, and really since the United Nations peacekeeping force went to the Middle East in 1956, a new and nobler role for men in military uniform has been slowly, and painfully, but surely taking shape. Men in uniform now leave their homelands not to fight but to prevent fighting. The fact that peacekeeping operations under the United Nations have not been successful everywhere takes nothing away from the nobility of the peacekeeping concept. We realize that it may take 100 years, 200 years, or longer until the peacekeeping forces of the world outnumber the potentially aggressive military forces of the world. But however long it takes, the peacekeeping concept in which Canada has given leadership, and on which Canadians are embarked again today, provides the best, ultimate hope for mankind, the best prospect for finally achieving peace throughout the world.

Because we are only at the dawn of a new era we should not be discouraged by the failures of peacekeeping. We should be grateful for the examples, such as Cyprus, where the peacekeeping concept has worked. Above all, we should keep our sights on the long-term hope for mankind that peacekeeping makes possible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, apart from what some may consider these idealistic reasons for Canada's participation in a peacekeeping role under the United Nations, there is a much more practical reason why we should participate. That reason, simply stated, is that because of the experience and the training of our men we are extremely well qualified to do the job. This afternoon I was pleased to hear from all sides of the House confirmation of the capability of the Canadian Armed Forces in this respect. Perhaps some hon. members may not realize that starting with the Chief of the Defence Staff, General Dextraze, many of the officers who are today planning Canada's participation in the Middle East have themselves taken part in peacekeeping operations around the world, including the Middle East itself.

Some 29 years ago General Dextraze, as a Lieutenant-Colonel, served under the United Nations in Korea. Ten years ago, as a Brigadier General, he was the first Canadian officer named as Chief of Staff of all the United Nations peacekeeping forces in the Congo. In this respect I am certain that the House will also be interested to know, and in fact be re-assured to know, that the officer we have selected to command the Canadian contingent in this most recent peacekeeping endeavour, Brigadier General Nicholson, was himself, as a major, stationed in the Sinai Peninsula 17 years ago in 1956.

I mention only these two officers by name to indicate in part the depth of our experience, but hundreds, and in fact thousands, of personnel in the Canadian Armed Forces have taken part in peacekeeping operations around the world. And now, Mr. Speaker, once again personnel from the Canadian Armed Forces are leaving Canada, not to fight but to prevent fighting. They are leaving for the Middle East, taking with them their experience and their dedication. They go in peace. Above all, they go with our best hopes for the success of their mission, a mission that is bound to be unforgettable and meaningful to each one of them as an individual, a mission that I believe is of importance to Canada, and a mission that can be of lasting significance to the achievement of peace in the world.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, none of us need to be convinced by the minister of the contributions that Canadians can make in a peacekeeping corps. That, however, is not the issue that we face. As I listened to him I sent out for the latest issue of "International Perspective," published by External Affairs, the September/October issue. I would suggest that with the strong feelings he has on the subject he should start to convince not us but those who write for the magazine issued by him.

Let me just read a few items. It says:

> ... even if a West-East accord on the operational aspects of ... peacekeeping could be hammered out, there would still be another obstacle to overcome, one that has newly arisen with the entry into the United Nations of the People's Republic of China. It might have been foreseen. That Peking has shown itself indifferent toward, if not hostile to, peacekeeping by the United Nations should certainly have caused no surprise.

Then it says:

> It has been said that "UN peacekeeping is dead."

I repeat that this is issued by the minister's own department, under that department's signature.

> This may be too pessimistic an outlook. In human affairs, there can be no absolute assessments. Still, it would perhaps be fair to say that paralysis has set in for UN peacekeeping and that, to save it, a heroic cure would have to be found.

That is what it says.

Mr. Sharp: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I did not interrupt the hon. gentleman. He can have his say afterwards.

Mr. Sharp: May I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Diefenbaker: There cannot be any point of order raised at this time. This is simply the old game, when any matter such as this is raised as a subject of debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I am sure the right hon. member will appreciate the fact that the minister can raise a point of order.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to interrupt the right hon. gentleman, but I do so merely for the purpose of clarifying something. The magazine "International Perspectives" contains contributions from many writers. I wonder if he could say whom he is quoting. That is all I want to know.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am surprised the minister does not know. I am always prepared to give information when it is needed, and certainly there is no department that needs it more that the Department of External Affairs under the hon. gentleman. This is an article, "International Peacekeeping: Does It have Any Future?" by John Gellner.

Mr. Sharp: Oh, I see. That is fine.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof. He is one of those who have always been regarded as being in the closest relationship with the Department of External Affairs.

● (1710)

Having said that, there is no need to try to convince me of the benefits of peacekeeping. I do not know whether there is any other member of the House who was in the United Nations Assembly when the United Nations was set up in San Francisco in 1945. I was there in a humble capacity as adviser on External Affairs to the Conservative representative on the Canadian delegation, the late Gordon Graydon, M.P. I saw there the assembled countries of the free world dedicated, all of them, to the determination that there should never again be war. Molotov was there, but he did not share that view. Out of the United Nations discussions came the determination to set up an international force, representative not only of the small powers but also the greater powers. It did not work out that way. The great powers refused or neglected to give any support to an international peacekeeping force which had been the dream of all political scientists and international lawyers from the days of Grotius down to the present.

When I spoke in this House in November 1945, I said I believed that out of the United Nations would come a new dedication to peace on the part of all mankind. I pointed out that there were only two species in all of God's creation that made war; one was man and the other was the ant. However, a revised version was produced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he was in China recently. He apparently was not able to read his notes because he spoke at length to Mao, that military expert, about the two species— man and rats. That was his contribution to Mao on the subject of military determination and military action.

In 1956, I raised in this House the question of having a peacekeeping force in the Middle East. The same difficulty was developing then as has developed recently when the U.S.S.R.—which will be visited in the next few days by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp)—set out to cause trouble and bring about war in the Middle East. They are still doing it. I raised the question that we should endeavour to set up, within the aegis of the United Nations, a peacekeeping force. That was on the last day of January, 1956. In answering me, the late Mr. Pearson said he felt that would be impossible as there were no territorial limitations or boundaries that could be policed. The situation today is almost identical with that to which he referred.

Lest anyone has the idea I am not referring to a suggestion that I made I am going to refer the House to a Hansard for 1956-1957 at page 57 and 58. At that time Mr. Pearson was secretary of state for external affairs and the exchange between us went, in part, as follows when he said:

> Then on January 31, 1956, the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) brought up in this House the question of an international police force and it was a very pertinent question.
>
> MR. DIEFENBAKER: Just for the Israeli-Arab situation.
>
> MR. PEARSON: Yes, he was limiting the value of this force at this time to a particular situation on the Israeli-Egyptian border.

A little later he said that he had met with various representatives of the United Nations. The Hon. Earl Rowe interrupted him with a question.

> MR. ROWE: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?
>
> MR. PEARSON: Yes.
>
> MR. ROWE: In view of the fact, as our representative, did the minister not bring it before the United Nations for consideration?
>
> MR. PEARSON: That is just what I was coming to, Mr. Speaker. I have been looking up the record in the last day or two in order to see what we had been able to do in this matter. We did follow it up.

I made the suggestion, Mr. Speaker. At that time, there was an exchange of views but parliament was not as uncertain then as is the parliament of today. I say that we face one of the most serious threats to peace that has been faced since 1945 and yet how many members are in this House, how many members of cabinet—four! The Prime Minister is absent at a time when parliament is being asked to support the action decided upon by the government, as was its responsibility. However, even before parliament makes a decision, some forces are abroad. The remainder of the force will complete their journey to the Middle East on Monday next.

Mr. Pearson continued as follows:

We followed it up with the governments most particularly concerned, namely the Israel government, the British government, the French government and the United States government and with the Secretary General of the United Nations and again with General Burns, the truce commissioner.

MR. DIEFENBAKER: What date was that?

MR. PEARSON: This began in February and went on for the next two or three months.

Finally, he said there could be no arrangement arrived at because there was no agreement in this regard. Again, he most fairly dealt with the same situation when he spoke in the House in November, 1956, but I am not going to place that on the record now. There is no necessity to prove to this party the need for a peacekeeping force, Mr. Speaker, because the original presentation was made by a member of this party in the month of January, 1956 and culminated in Mr. Pearson bringing before the United Nations in the month of August, 1956 the general plan that had been worked out for the setting up of a peacekeeping force.

I wonder how it is, Mr. Speaker, that we find, as a result of the activities of the government in the last few weeks, the Canadian people on bended knee, through their representative, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, asking to be permitted to become a member of the peacekeeping force in view of the unusual success, to which the minister referred, that Canada had attained internationally over the years. He did not mention that, while my government was in office, we sent forces to the Congo or that undue haste, without the necessary consideration of the facts in advance, will bring about expense for the Canadian people, such as has been incurred in Cyprus.

● (1720)

When we first went to Cyprus it was said that our force would need to remain there for three months, and it was possible that there might be some extension. We have been there not three months but nine years. And who has been paying the piper? It has not been the United Nations. Canada is the only nation which has picked up the bill. No wonder Canada is allowed to maintain her forces there. The taxpayers of Canada have paid $22 million for a duty which was the responsibility of the United Nations. The costs should have been borne not only by Canada but by all the nations making up the United Nations. They did not do this. France and the U.S.S.R. are not paying their share and Canada, because it pays the bill, is able to keep its forces on Cyprus. That shows that you must approach these problems with great care and attention.

What about Viet Nam? Were we not over with the Poles and with the Indian representatives? I went over there to see the situation for myself. Never, ever, anywhere was there a Canadian Forces group as emasculated as that group which went there for the purpose of looking after the peace. Why were they emasculated? The Poles, no matter what Canada decided and endeavoured to advance, said, "No." Now, in 1973 the United Nations, as a result of our pressing and our saying, "Please take us," has finally decided, "We will take you, provided the Poles participate as well." I do not understand that. Apparently, the U.S.S.R. once more is using a country under its domination in order to cause difficulty in the possible settlement of the frightful problems facing the Middle East.

Speaking of the Polish, let me refer to a telegram which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) received within the last couple of days from the National Polish Congress of Canada. To what are they objecting? It reads:

The Congress deplores the fact that Poles were used because it is very much against the interest of Poles. This is a typical example of the use of small nations by super powers. We hope public influence will prevent other such occurrences. Some of the pilots who flew for Egypt flew for the Communist side in North Vietnam.

The government cannot say that it has no information in this regard, because the Polish Congress communicated with the government. The telegram continues:

As an explanation as to wy Polish pilots did not refuse to go: Many officers refused to participate in the invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968 and a special prison was set up in the city of Torun. The prison was overflowing with service men who refused to participate in the invasion. These men were finished, thrown out of the army. At the risk of completely breaking their lives and careers they could not refuse.

The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) had that information. He brought it before the House last week in the form of a question. No answer was given then, and no answer has been given so far.

Further, I have in my hand a copy of a telegram which was sent to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe by the Canadian Polish Congress. He did not present this himself. It reads:

We were pleased to learn that you have recently raised in Parliament recent newspaper reports alleging the use of Polish pilots in the Middle East. These reports have given us deep concern and dismay. The blatant use of Polish airmen against their will and against the best interests of the Polish nation which has no interests in the Arab-Israeli conflict but save indeed a deep desire for world peace, serves only to expose the role of the USSR in furthering its imperialist policies at the expense of its captive satelites. As Canadians we protest this abuse of captive peoples by the super powers to further their political ends. We urge that this matter be further investigated by the Canadian government . . .

The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe raised the matter alluded to on November 8. An answer has not been provided so far. Further particulars about the matter were given in the Toronto Sun of November 8, 1973, in an article written by Mr. Lubor Zink. I do not always agree with him. Let me say this about him, however: he has one of the most magnificent war records of any person here who is either a member of this House or in the press gallery. In his article he points out this fact: there has not been any answer on this subject because the U.S.S.R., in trying to press forward its aims and bring about what it has sought to achieve by its machinations for the last 75 years, would use Polish airmen in whatever numbers were available for the Egyptian forces. I mentioned the lack of interest displayed by this House in this subject. I have spoken in the House on many occasions over the years. I was here in the darkest days of war, and today I am greatly concerned over the situation in the Middle East.

In 1956, the U.S.S.R. was in the background, trying to gain control of the oil resources of the Middle East. They are there today. Some years ago, when I was Colonel Nasser's guest, every consideration was shown to me. I went to the Aswan Dam while it was under construction. It was a hot day; I stayed in the air conditioned car while my wife went to the complex. I noticed a number of people who looked as if they were Slavic. Two days before then Colonel Nasser had told me, "There are only 200 Russians in my country." I asked the governor at the site how many Russians there were in the country: he replied, "There are about 2,000". I asked him the composition of this number, and he said that there were so many engineers, so many technicians, and so many others. Next morning he called me and said, "I made a mistake; there are just 200." Everywhere there was the domination of the U.S.S.R. over Egypt.

Where are we today? The Middle East war, launched without notice on the holiest day in the Jewish calendar, Yom Kippur, is viewed with deep fears by many people. That outbreak of war, it is thought, possibly will envelope other nations, and eventually a large portion of the world. There is an armistice today, a ceasefire. It is not a very certain one. Already, in the last 24 hours, disturbing events have taken place. Soldiers participating in the work of the peacekeeping force have been interfered with, not by guns, but physically. There is a powder keg there, the danger of which affects every one of us. The U.S.S.R. has dreamed for generations, from the days of Disraeli and Gladstone, of building a hegemony over the Middle East.

● (1730)

How serious is the situation? While the U.S.S.R. says it believes in peace, it has in the last three years increased its army by one million men to 3,200,000, suggesting at the same time that the NATO nations should reduce their forces. And what about the navy? The largest navy in the world today is the navy of the Soviet Union. And where is it? It has travelled through the Black Sea, through the Dardanelles. The world's largest navy is in the Mediterranean. What is it doing there? Why are Soviet ships going back and forth as they have been doing in the last two or three weeks?

The Winnipeg Free Press—that is a paper which the minister reads with the care all of us do; and he has a personal interest, also—says, and it has not been denied, because Brigadier Malone is one of those people who do not allow statements to be made when they are without foundation—

> Soviet forces are now fully established in Egypt with at least one brigade of Soviet airborne troops barring the way to Cairo and another Soviet brigade barring the road to Damascus.

The minister is going to the U.S.S.R. tomorrow, and I wish him all the best. It would be interesting to get their explanation as to the reason they have two airborne regiments in a war in which they say they have no interest. In addition, in the last few weeks, between October 1 and the end of October, 215,000 tons of war material was shipped down the Black Sea into the Middle East area. Furthermore, it is unheard of for tanks to be driven aboard ships with their fuels tanks and ammunition chambers ready filled. Yet this has taken place at the South Russian port of Nikolayev.

Mr. Speaker, too many people in our nation and in the western world, anxious for peace, are permitting themselves to be lulled today by a detente which we practice but which the U.S.S.R. does not practice. I remember Sir Anthony Eden, one of the greatest statesmen Britain produced. When one looks back to 1956, one begins to wonder about the action of, the United States in holding him back. Had he been successful, along with the French and Jewish troops, many of the events which are occurring today would not have taken place.

It has been a terrible war for the Jewish people. It has been a terrible war for the Arabs, too, but their population is almost 20 times that of Israel which means that sooner or later, unless peace is attained, attrition will destroy Israel. All she asks is that she be recognised as a nation. But for the last several years, from 1948 on, the Arab nations have refused. I endeavoured to discuss this matter with Colonel Nasser. He looked at me as if to say: Where is Israel? The attitude of the Arabs is this: if you don't mention a thing, it is not there. They never mentioned it, not one of them, though they knew full well I was going to Israel immediately afterward.

The latest figures released in connection with the 17-day war indicate that some 1,800 of those killed were in the Israeli army. Let me give hon. members an idea of what that means in terms of population. It would mean that 16,000 Canadians were killed. It would mean 108,000 men as far as the United States is concerned. That is how serious the position is. I suggest to the minister that when he gets over there to Moscow, instead of saying "Here's to you!", and "Here's to me!" he should tell them the time has come for them to realise that their conduct in the Middle East is detrimental to world peace.

What is the purpose behind the Soviet moves? Oil. We are all going to suffer because the Arab nations have struck at the industrial jugular of the western world and Japan by reducing the amount of oil they would ordinarily ship. How many people realise how powerful these Arab nations are? I went to the trouble to look up the production figures and, if the House will permit me, I shall place them on record. There is King Faisal of Saudi Arabia. I remember meeting him in San Francisco in 1945. He is king of a country which today produces 355 million tons of oil a year. The Amir Sabah as-Salim of Kuwait disposes of 137 million tons a year; the Shah of Iran, 289 million tons; Colonel Ghadafi of Libya, 109 million tons; President Boumedienne of Algeria, 51 million tons. Then, there is Shaikh Zaid of Abu Dhabi who caused the minister such difficulty when the hon. gentleman heard he had decided against sending any oil to Canada—that was the first time we had heard he existed! This country, Mr. Speaker, turns out 64 million tons of oil a year.

Here are some other rulers whose countries are rich in oil: Shaikh Khalifa of Qatar, 28 million tons; Sultan Qaboos of Oman, 14 million tons; Shaikh Rashid of Dubai, 11 million tons. The total, Mr. Speaker, comes to 1,148 million tons of oil a year. And the U.S.S.R. is in there. That is what it wants. Unless there is a change in the attitude of the Arab nations, an attitude which presently constitutes almost a fatal thrust at the western world and Japan, the consequences are not hard to foresee.

What are the Arab nations using this power for? Blackmail. Any nation which does not fall into line with their views goes on the black list. While the Secretary of State for External Affairs, with the optimism which characterizes him at all times, has not told us the full facts in this connection. I think Canada will not receive more thanks from the Arab nations after the force goes over there than it did before the force arrived. Who is going to win the war in the Middle East? Who has won it? Not the combatants but the U.S.S.R. It has achieved that grasping control that it has been looking for for generations. When the minister talks to members of the Politburo next week, I hope he makes it very clear that Canada understands exactly what is taking place.

● (1740)

I do not read press dispatches often, Mr. Speaker, but I do recommend for reading an article entitled "Five minutes to midnight" by Joseph Alsop which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on November 8 last. He says:

> One source of apprehension, it appears, is the tone the Kremlin has been taking with the U.S. government. Another source—and one by no means to be underrated—is the way the Soviet press has begun to talk about the Watergate horror as crippling to the President.

The article continues:

> ... the Soviets are already making conditional preparations to intervene with their own troops. In Egypt, for example, there is considerable evidence of the new presence of Soviet-made Scuds."

They are tanks. The article says they are still coming in.

This, Mr. Speaker, is how serious this matter is. No one need suggest to me that we do not have to have proved to us that a peacekeeping force is needed there. But with the Russians continuing to foment trouble and to throttle the western world industrially, that peacekeeping force has a responsibility that all of us can contemplate in face of a danger that I hope is not as overwhelming as it appears to be.

Egypt now says it will open the Suez canal. That is part of the aim of the U.S.S.R. Drew Middleton has stated that the reopening and improvement of the Suez canal, already under discussion in Cairo, would strengthen the Soviet Union's strategic position in the Persian Gulf and in the Indian Ocean. The only nation standing against this is Iran. Iran, the dominant military power in the Persian Gulf, is seriously concerned over the prospect of stronger Soviet forces in that area if the canal opens, says Drew Middleton.

I mention these things, without having a prepared speech, because I feel so aroused that the Canadian people do not realize today what is happening. They do not realize it in the United States because, after all, all they can say as far as Watergate is concerned is that no one has yet been drowned in Watergate. But other than that, what is happening in Washington has been to give to the U.S.S.R. the new hope and expectation of what it can get away with; it no longer fears the United States because it believes it is divided.

What about this force that is being sent, Mr. Speaker? The minister spoke with pride of Canada's reputation, and there is no disagreement with that. But I suggest to the minister that there must have been an awful lot of soul searching, because the government of Canada advised the number one combat force of paratroopers in Edmonton to get ready. Then, when I raised the question in the House, I attempted to move a motion under Standing Order 43 to this effect:

> That this House views with concern the indecorous haste exhibited by the Canadian government in its anxiety to secure consent of objecting nations within the United Nations to having Canadians in the peacekeeping force for service in the Middle East, whereby without regard to the magnificent record of Canadians in two world wars Canada's No. 1 combat alert unit is to be placed in a secondary position in the peacekeeping force being given a responsibility—

—and I then used this phrase—

> —analogous to that of hewers of wood and drawers of water—

Then, the government backed up and did the proper thing. It decided to mobilize the Signals from Kingston. I see the minister smile, as if that were one of his contributions. But let me say this to him. The government turned a complete somersault.

Mr. Sharp: That was part of the logistics.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Of course, there is nothing so unusual about the government turning a somersault because they are usually walking backwards. The Signals people were asked to winterize and they winterized within the last ten days. Then, they got the word that winterization was not in keeping with the kind of climate in which they were going to serve under the new plans of the government, and they had to end their winterization and repaint their equipment white as well as put on the letters "UN".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret that the time of the right hon. member has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the House has been very considerate and I have tried, with whatever capacity I have, to warn this government and the people of Canada that detente is only effective when both sides indulge in it. But when one side accepts it and implements it but the all-powerful U.S.S.R. gives it lip service, then it is as dangerous today as it was in the dark days of 1938 when I heard Churchill warn the British people, and they laughed at him, as when Eden gave the same warning and left the government. Today, we are in one of the most serious positions that the western world has been in during my lifetime.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges-C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, I was most interested in listening to the hon. member who has just spoken, because he is well experienced in both the external and domestic affairs of this country.

A year ago, now, I had the pleasure and the honour to accept an invitation from the government of Israel to visit that country, and before I go any further, I want you to know that I was impressed by how hard the Israelis are working so that their country will become a great country.

Unfortunately, in the last few months, war has erupted between Israel and the Arab countries, especially, the UAR and Syria. For our part, we, in the Canadian government, are not happy about this situation but we are among those who try to find a solution to the Middle East problem.

Today, it can be said that a modus vivendi has come about between the Arab and Israeli forces.

● (1750)

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this modus vivendi will finally lead to a lasting peace in that part of the world. As a result of that difficult situation, Mr. Speaker, Canada, which is 6,000 miles from the Middle East, has despatched its soldiers. Why are they there? Not because they agree! We must consider several facts, Mr. Speaker. We have to ask ourselves if the Canadians who are over there agree with the Canadian position.

I think they do, because the members of our armed forces are anxious to restore peace. We are pleased to note that Canadians agree on that issue. How many Canadians endorse that principle? I have often spoken with my constituents, Mr. Speaker, and I don't know that many who would be interested in leaving tomorrow morning for the Middle East, Cyprus or Viet Nam. Dedicated people are needed for that, Mr. Speaker.

And are we dedicated? It is extremely important to bear that in mind. That dedication I think that we, the members of parliament, and the people of Canada must keep it alive. This is part, I would suggest, of the great Canadian dedication.

Today, Canadians are in the Middle East. Mr. Speaker, and I have talked about it to many people, we must show a lot of respect for those who agree to leave for the Middle East.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, November 15, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ADDITIONAL FUNDS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent to move a motion.

In view of the fact that the funds allotted to local initiative projects are totally inadequate as a result of the many projects submitted in all constituencies, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard):

That the minister in charge examine the possibility of granting $100 million in additional funds to meet adequately the needs of the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt very much whether the motion moved by the hon. member is in order since it calls for spending additional public funds. However, to prevent a debate on a point of procedure, I shall ask the House whether there is unanimous consent.

The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

* * *

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

COURT DECISION ON NATIVE PEOPLE'S RIGHTS IN RELATION TO JAMES BAY POWER PROJECT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity relating to the delightful decision rendered today by the Quebec Superior Court in the injunction proceedings with respect to the James Bay project. I thought that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) would have been the first on his feet on this matter. In any event, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth):

This House looks upon the Quebec Superior Court decision in the proceedings relating to the James Bay project as being a landmark in the fight to recognize and respect aboriginal rights of the native people both in Quebec and the rest of Canada from which there must be no retreat and urges upon the government of Canada the necessity of now taking immediate and deliberative action to advance the interests of the native peoples in the James Bay area.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

* * *

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

STE SCHOLASTIQUE—SUGGESTED EXAMINATION OF EXPROPRIATION PROBLEMS BY PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss an urgent matter.

Seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), I move:

That a parliamentary committee be set up to consider the Sainte-Scholastique expropriation problem as a whole, such as criteria underlying expropriation payments made under the old 1906 expropriation legislation, but following the spirit of the new legislation according to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), while expropriations at Pickering are carried out under the new 1970 legislation.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House under Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent; the hon. member's motion cannot be put.

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

HANDLING AND CARE OF ANIMALS BY AIRLINES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of importance relating to the transportation, handling and care of large numbers of animals and pets by airlines every year. Having regard to the many abuses to which these animals are exposed and the high mortality rate, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

● (1410)

That the matter of animals and pets in transit be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications with a specific order to investigate the lack of adequate facilities at our airports for these animals.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

APPLICATION OF ARCTIC WATERS POLLUTION PREVENTION ACT TO PACIFIC COAST—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Harry Olaussen (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of the House under Standing Order 43 to move a motion in a case of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the possibility of Canada leasing or otherwise acquiring oil tankers to move crude oil out of the port of Vancouver through the Strait of Juan de Fuca to eastern Canada. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard):

That the government should immediately take steps to have the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act apply to the Pacific coast especially so that oil tankers which may be needed to carry Canadian oil from the port of Vancouver to eastern Canada be required to meet the stringent standards set out in that act.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[Translation]

ENERGY

SUGGESTED REVERSION TO DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME TO SAVE ENERGY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the present energy crisis and the fact that following a special study of the situation, American specialists have advised the American government to return to Daylight Saving Time to save their energy resources as much as possible, and that a bill aimed at saving thousands of oil and fuel barrels will be introduced before Congress shortly, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the Canadian government discuss the possibility of developing or implementing within a month some regulations or a bill aimed at using Daylight Saving Time throughout the year.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

* * *

HOUSING

SUGGESTED INTEREST CEILING ON INTEREST RATES ON CMHC LOANS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43.

In view of the increase in construction costs and of the present 11 per cent tax on building materials, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That this House consider the possibility of imposing a ceiling on the interest rates on loans of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity; the motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INITIATE DETAILED NEGOTIATIONS WITH JAMES BAY INDIANS ON RIGHTS IN LIGHT OF COURT DECISION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In light of the decision by Mr. Justice Malouf upholding the rights of the native people of the James Bay area, will the government now assume its constitutional authority and itself institute thorough and detailed negotiations with the Indians of the area about settlement of their rights so that never again can the way of life of these people be endangered by a third party?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the hon. member was rising to congratulate the government because we financed the Indians in that case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I would like the hon. member to recognize also that our judgment was very good when we said that the Indians were able to defend themselves. I would not substitute myself for them and be paternalistic, as she would have been.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Now that the minister has had his licks, I wonder whether he would return to the question period and answer the hon. member's question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, but after five years, four months and ten days in this job I thought I could have a few moments of satisfaction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: In reply to the question may I say that I have said many times in the last year and a half that this problem could not be solved in the courts, that it can be solved through negotiation. I have discussed it with the Quebec government about a dozen times and also with the Indians. I hope that the decision of the court will bring the parties back to the table. I will be there to help in reaching a final solution any time they want me there, and I hope the solution will be acceptable to both parties.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): I am not quite sure, Mr. Speaker, how the minister can accuse me of being paternalistic.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Touché.

Mr. Hees: Withdraw.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Will the minister give an assurance to the House that the government will not take any action in relation to its powers over fisheries, navigable waters, the environment, migratory birds and, most important, its powers over Indians and the lands reserved for Indians, without full discussion and with the consent of the native people whose lives are so vitally affected?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we have proven our action in that regard. I had the pleasure this week of discussing the whole situation with the Indians of Quebec who came to my office. We discussed the two possibilities, either they win or they lose, and in both cases I told them that I want to be with them as I have been all the time. On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I used the term "paternalistic" because I did not want to be accused by the hon. member of being a male chauvinist.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the minister please now answer the question whether or not he will give an assurance to the House under the acts I mentioned?

Mr. Chrétien: The position of the federal government on all those aspects is well known to the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Oberle: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Prince George-Peace River rises on a point of order.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the minister has just informed the House that on many occasions he has said in the House of Commons and in committee that he wants to negotiate with the natives of Quebec and the Quebec government. What he has said in fact in the House of Commons and in committee many times is that the matter is in court, that he will abide by the decision of the court, and that there is no need for negotiations now.

Mr. Speaker: That may be a very interesting point of debate. The minister wishes to reply and there may be others who will want to reply. I am sure hon. members do not want to get into a debate at this point. The minister rises on the point of order, and of course I will hear him.

● (1420)

Mr. Chrétien: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, if hon. members will check the record they will see that the hon. member is wrong.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena.

Oral Questions

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INITIATE NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCE OF QUEBEC ON BEHALF OF JAMES BAY INDIANS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question. By way of introduction may I say that if one checks the record of the minister's statements one will find him on both sides of everything all the time. I now ask him a very clear question to which he has not replied yet anywhere that I know of. Will he take the initiative on behalf of the Indians of the province of Quebec and negotiate on their behalf with the Quebec government in accordance with his constitutional responsibility?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to talk to the Indians and if they want me to be paternalistic I will be, but I will take their advice. The Indians of Quebec have proven today, and over recent months, that they themselves can do good work and negotiate for themselves. However, I will be available any time they want me to be with them to advise them. I have very good relationships with them and I will be with them any time they ask for me, but I do not intend to impose myself upon them because I do not consider them to be kids, as the hon. member does.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for Skeena in a moment, but the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands rises on a point of order.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister has said that the Indians have asked him to be paternalistic.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): They have never asked him to be paternalistic.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): They have asked him to assume his constitutional responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all possible respect to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, I suggest that again this is debate. Perhaps we might try to continue with questions and answers.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, we all know the minister has to grasp at almost anything to make a point because his case is not good. I ask the hon. gentleman, why did he reject the pleas for help earlier?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have never refused to help the Indian people on this matter. I have discussed it with the Quebec government before the trial and during the trial, trying to get them—

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question asked by the hon. member was debate. It is based on an allegation which the minister attempts to refute. In any event, all this is debate and we should now try to continue with the question period.

Mr. Howard: On a point of order, and with all due respect, Mr. Speaker, it was not a point of debate; it was a point of fact.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ECONOMIC COUNCIL REPORT—POSSIBILITY OF ACTION TO REDISTRIBUTE TAX BURDEN, REMOVE CORPORATE TAX CONCESSIONS AND RAISE RATES

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising out of the latest report of the Economic Council of Canada. In view of the report's corroboration of the fact that our present income tax structure forces middle and lower income Canadians to finance the great bulk of social security and other transfer payments, and since I am sure the minister will agree that these valuable schemes should not be discouraged, can he indicate what steps the government is contemplating to redistribute the tax burden in a significant way through the tax structure?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that question, of course, has budgetary implications which could only be met on the proper occasion.

Mr. Grier: In view of the evidence adduced from corporate profit reports in recent months, is consideration being given to the removal of corporate tax concessions granted earlier this year, and is the minister contemplating an increase in tax rates for corporations and upper income Canadians?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would direct the same type of answer to that question except to say that, as a result of the additional cash flow given to manufacturers and processors this year, capital investment intentions expanding productive capacity and providing more jobs are running 20 per cent over those of last year.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be recognized for a last supplementary, followed by the hon. member for Compton.

POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION TO ROLL BACK PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister of Finance for that reply which is precisely the same as the one he gave to a question I asked two weeks ago. May I direct a final supplementary to the Prime Minister and ask whether in view of the assurances—I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I seem to be having some difficulty in engaging the attention of the front benches. I direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the assurances he has given in the House that the government would intervene to protect Canadian consumers, is the government currently considering legislation to enable it to intervene on a selective basis to roll back price increases where they are, in the opinion of the government, unjustified?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the position of the government is still the same as I indicated earlier in October—in September, sorry.

An hon. Member: A sitting position.

* * *

[Translation]

ENERGY

DEVELOPMENT OF QUEBEC OIL RESOURCES IN LIGHT OF PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Considering the unprecedented oil price increase and the trouble caused to the eastern provinces, is the minister considering tapping Quebec oil resources?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there are at present exploration programs undertaken in Quebec by private enterprises as well as by SOQUIP. For the time being, I think the results are not very encouraging but we wish success to the participants, we hope their efforts will be successful and that they will find a source of crude oil in Quebec, over and above those of the maritime coast.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, will the minister take the necessary steps to determine the potentialities and help find new resources and make possible the tapping of those that already exist in Quebec?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker, through the officials of my department, we informed the Quebec government and all those who are involved in geological potentialities in Quebec. It is up to the province of Quebec to promote these programs.

* * *

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ECONOMIC COUNCIL REPORT—POSITION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE ON RECOMMENDATION ON ANNUAL RATE OF INCREASE IN TRANSFER PAYMENTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Does he accept the recommendation of the Economic Council of Canada in its report that the annual rate of increase in government transfer payments between 1973 and 1976, including unemployment insurance, should be limited to 11 per cent? I hope the minister does not tell me he has not read the report yet.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact I just received the report yesterday as did every other member.

An hon. Member: What is your answer?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): My answer is that I would want to read the report carefully and analyse the question.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL REPORT—CONCERN EXPRESSED ABOUT GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESULTING IN HIGHER PERSONAL TAXATION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the concern the Economic Council of Canada has expressed that the trend of increases in government expenditures that they have foreseen will result in higher personal taxation of the middle and lower income groups, may I ask the Minister of Finance what measures he proposes to take to meet that concern?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the conclusion of the Economic Council of Canada necessarily follows from its premise. As to what budgetary results might follow, that action would be announced by the government at the appropriate time.

Mr. Stanfield: Does the minister not feel that he should concern himself seriously about some of these concerns of the Economic Council of Canada? Does he accept the view of the council that an increase in personal income tax is in fact inflationary under current conditions because it tends to encourage individuals to maintain the same take-home pay after taxation? What measures does the minister intend to take in the highly inflationary era in which we are now living in Canada to ensure that the inflation resulting from the increases in taxation which the Economic Council says the minister's policies will bring about will not erode the value of the transfer payments that are being made?

● (1430)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of sense in what the council says, if it is directing itself to governments, federal, provincial and municipal, about reconciling priorities and exercising some restraint on the expenditure side. As to what budgetary consequences follow, I agree with the hon. gentleman to a certain extent and with the council that a tax increase has an inflationary component, I suppose, in strict economic theory and also takes money out of the demand stream and would have the opposite effect. It depends on whether you are looking at the psychological effect of taxation or at the strict economic viewpoint.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, will the minister tell the House on which side of that question he is?

Oral Questions

ECONOMIC COUNCIL REPORT—POSSIBILITY OF REPLACEMENT OF INCOME TAX INDEXING BY TAX CREDIT SYSTEM

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the concern raised in the Economic Council report yesterday about inflation and the fact that the minister's tax indexing policy is both inflationary and regressive, can the minister say whether he is considering scrapping the income tax indexing system in order to replace it with a tax credit system which would provide low and middle income earners with a much greater tax break?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, relatively, the greatest beneficiaries of the indexing system are the middle class income earners.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will note that there are perhaps ten members, without exaggeration, seeking supplementaries on this subject. I am not sure whether we should have that many. For the moment I will recognize the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, and then the hon. member for Central Nova.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL REPORT—PERFORMANCE GOALS—INFLATION RATE—MINISTER'S ASSESSMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I ask one final supplementary. I would ask the minister for his assessment of some of the recommendations about performance goals in the council's report and, specifically, whether he is abandoning 3 per cent inflation as a rate in this country? Can he tell the people what rate of inflation they can expect in the years to come?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that target was the target of the Economic Council of Canada and I think the report indicates that its targets are targets and not forecasts. They are targets that are subject to revision. Indeed, the Economic Council itself revised several of those targets. As for the latter part of the question, I would not want the hon. gentleman to confuse my target with a forecast.

* * *

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

SUGGESTED MORE EFFICIENT USE OF DEPARTMENTAL STAFFS INSTEAD OF HIRING OUTSIDE CONSULTANTS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. In light of the fact the government paid some $638 million in 1972 and 1973 for outside consultants, will the Prime Minister instruct his ministers to use their staffs more efficiently and reduce the inflationary effects? Perhaps we could do without some of these luxuries.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question was more in the nature of a representation.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ECONOMIC COUNCIL RECOMMENDATION CONCERNING TRANSFER PAYMENTS—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE IMPROVEMENTS IN SOCIAL BENEFITS NOT RULED OUT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct to the Minister of Finance a supplementary question arising out of the report of the Economic Council of Canada. In view of the fact that recipients of transfer payments and various social benefits are the victims rather the creators of inflation, will the government make it clear that it rejects any suggestion that there should not be further improvements in social benefits?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I said when I proposed the indexing of old age pensions to begin with, and this has since been followed in other areas of transfer payments, that I did not intend to fight inflation on the backs of those on fixed incomes or on lower income scale.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL RECOMMENDATION THAT COMMITTEE OF HOUSE BE ESTABLISHED TO CONSIDER POLICY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister prepared to implement recommendation No. 4 on page 73 of the Economic Council's report wherein the council, recognizing the failure of the government to develop new initiatives with respect to economic policy, recommends that a committee of the House of Commons be set up for that purpose?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there are already standing committees of the House of Commons, and the Minister of Finance is before one or other of them frequently.

* * *

[Translation]

GRAIN

FEED GRAIN—ASSURANCE OF SUFFICIENT SUPPLY OF BARLEY AND OATS TO PRODUCERS

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board?

Can he assure this House and, especially the producers in the east and in British Columbia that there is a sufficient stock of grain available more specifically barley and oats for the winter months?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I can assure hon. members that the Canadian Wheat Board is making every effort to put the necessary feed grains for domestic use into place. Specifically, in the case of oats a great deal has been and is being moved into Thunder Bay and is being moved from there to the domestic market. At the same time, the current domestic price situation will mean that a certain amount of corn will be purchased and moved for eastern feeding purposes. If the total movement during the season while the lakes are open is not adequate for domestic purposes, consideration is being given to adding to the movement by rail in order that domestic needs are met.

* * *

ENERGY

PURCHASES OF OIL DISTILLATES BY CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services. Can the minister tell the House what specific spot purchases of middle distillates the Canadian Commercial Corporation has made to date on the international market, and what other purchases it is negotiating?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, we have bought some 40 million gallons of heating fuel and we are continuing to explore the market to see if we could make new purchases.

[English]

INQUIRY AS TO PRICE OF HEATING OIL PURCHASED BY CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION AND PAYMENT OF COMMISSION

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What price is the government paying for this oil through the Canadian Commercial Corporation, is it paying a commission, what commission is being paid, and to whom?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, we have negotiated some terms for establishing the price. It will be set up on delivery and I am therefore unable to say exactly what it will be. I do not want to impede eventual negotiations with other companies for the purchase of fuel by disclosing the price today. As for the commission, it was paid to Toronto dealers and once again, I am not in position to disclose its amount in order also not to interfere with eventual negotiations.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary South, followed by the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, may I ask if the minister is in a position to say to whom he has given this blank cheque?

[Translation]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TIMING OF COURT DECISION AFFECTING RIGHTS OF JAMES BAY INDIANS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

He stated earlier that he was right in the imbroglio now existing between the Quebec government and James Bay Indians. Does the minister know why Mr. Justice Arthur Malouf gave his ruling 15 days after the Quebec provincial elections instead of 15 days before, so as not to play politics as he is doing now?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that it is out of order and against parliamentary traditions to criticize as he just did a judge of one of the Canadian courts.

[English]

I believe that a few members wish to ask supplementaries to previous questions. I will start with the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North, and then another hon. member.

* * *

ENERGY

FUNDY TIDAL POWER—STATUS OF RE-EXAMINATION OF REPORT

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, may I follow up the question I put yesterday to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can the minister provide us with any information on the longer term possibilities for tidal energy in Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Sir. I find that the joint study group and the programming board which has been restudying the possibility of tidal power in the Bay of Fundy had commissioned a number of expert reports on certain relevant questions. It is anticipated these reports will be received by January, 1974, and that recommendations will then be going forward to the board on whether further work should be done on the project and whether further studies are required. The preliminary indication is, as the hon. member may have anticipated, that while fossil fuels have become less competitive with the project, nuclear power has become more so.

* * *

● (1440)

GRAIN

PROVISION OF SUFFICIENT RAILWAY CARS TO ENSURE TERMINAL OPERATION AT CAPACITY AT THUNDER BAY

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I have a question for the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, Mr. Speaker. It arises from a statement by a commissioner of the Wheat Board that lake ships were diverted from Thunder Bay to Duluth on Lake Superior to pick up grain because grain was not available at Thunder Bay, and his further statement that if they could get the boxcars they could do the job. Has the minister yet received any firm assurance from the major railways that they will make sufficient boxcars available to ensure that Thunder Bay will work at capacity for the remainder of the season?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the assurances were not in those terms. The railways indicated the number of cars they would be dedicating to the movement of grain between the present time and the close of the navigation season. We are watching very closely to see whether they are in fact making that number of cars available.

Mr. Gleave: In view of the very serious situation which affects not only feed supplies for eastern Canada but also our export markets, is the minister prepared to take the House into his confidence and tell us what commitment the railways actually made?

Mr. Lang: I would be glad to give the House the figures as to the precise number of cars each railroad has agreed to put into grain movement. I am sure I can have those figures available almost immediately.

* * *

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT RATES ON COAL—PROVISION OF INFORMATION TO WESTERN PROVINCES

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The hon. gentleman said on Friday last, as reported in Hansard, page 7701, that he hoped one of the provinces would ask about details of railway rate structures. Since the minister himself received such a request from ministers of the four western provinces on October 1, and since he himself transmitted that request to the Canadian Transport Commission, may I ask when those provinces may expect to receive the information concerning freight rates on western coal which might serve Ontario markets?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): At the western economic opportunities conference the commitment we made was to have the Canadian Transport Commission and the railway companies give the information at the request of the provinces. The provinces have made a number of specific requests and information with respect to them will be forwarded. There is nothing I know of which concerns coal. These are not general requests. They are specific requests for specific types of information.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): I would ask the minister to check his recollection to determine whether in fact two of those specific requests did not relate directly to coal. Are his officials presently making inquiries into the suggestion made by Ontario that the proposed freight rates on Alberta coal are inflated far above actual costs and, if so, will he advise the House as to the results of that inquiry since they may have important implications in the area of fuel use in Ontario?

[Mr. Gleave.]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think the hon. member has mixed all kinds of problems together. On October 1, no increase was asked by either the CPR or the CNR with respect to the transportation of coal. This came later, and this is why the request of October 1 could not relate to the request made later. As far as the latest request is concerned, I think we shall have to wait until the provinces ask specifically for this kind of information before we get an answer.

REQUEST THAT NATIONAL DEFENCE AIRCRAFT BE MADE AVAILABLE TO SHIP OKANAGAN APPLES TO EASTERN CANADA

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Defence. Bearing in mind that this is National Apple Week and in view of the serious situation in which Okanagan apple growers find themselves because of the inability of the railway companies to supply cars to move their fruit to eastern Canada, will the minister make available a Hercules or other suitable aircraft to move this fruit into eastern Canada.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): I explained to the House yesterday the heavy task that our Hercules and Boeings are engaged in at the present time, flying our personnel to the Middle East, and I do not think we would accede to that request.

* * *

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

STE SCHOLASTIQUE—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL OF EXPROPRIATION QUESTION TO COMMITTEE OF HOUSE

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Public Works.

Despite other offers made recently by the government and because of the dissatisfaction expressed by the people expropriated from Ste Scholastique, does the minister intend to implement the suggestion I made over a month ago to the leader of the government that a parliamentary committee be given the task of considering and solving the Ste Scholastique issue?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Publics Works): Mr. Speaker, last Friday we announced to the expropriated people in Ste Scholastique five very generous and non-compulsory measures which were not provided in the law. We hope that those people will have an opportunity to consider our proposals in coolness and serenity and I believe that this should definitely solve the problem.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, will the minister agree that a standing committee should sit to consider that issue?

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, it is not up to me to decide what the standing committees should study or who should establish them. I have no objection but I think it is important to satisfy the people concerned and that is what we are trying to do.

[English]

GRAIN

PROVISION OF SUFFICIENT RAILWAY CARS—REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE FOR FREIGHT CONTROLLER

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and concerns the freight car situation to which allusion has been made by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. There is an apparent disregard by the railway companies of the reasonable demand of western farmers that a reasonable provision of freight cars be made available to them. This has been denied them because of the kinds of freight that pay the railway companies higher and faster returns. Bearing in mind the serious situation that has developed in consequence of the railway companies treating requests for cars with supercilious contempt, will the minister consider bringing in legislation immediately to provide for a freight controller with mandatory power to direct the railway companies to supply what in his opinion, after consultation with the Wheat Board, is the necessary number of cars, so that the present situation on the Prairies may thereby be remedied?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): We are not considering that, Mr. Speaker. The government has held discussions with the railroads so that we could be satisfied that everything is being done to move the maximum amount of grain. The right hon. gentleman will appreciate that colleagues of his from other parts of the country understand the need for additional cars for the movement of lumber and of apples, for the movement of potash, which is very important, and the movement of fruit. I can assure the right hon. gentleman that the railways are not acting in a supercilious way but are attempting to move the maximum amount of traffic. While not as much grain is moving to Thunder Bay and Vancouver as we would like, the amount in store at Thunder Bay has been gradually creeping up and the volume on hand in Vancouver has risen from very low levels to some 10 or 11 million bushels, which does indicate that some progress is being made.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister expresses, apparently, qualified satisfaction with the way in which the railway companies are acting. He does not represent the view of western Canada in taking this stand. I am asking him whether he will give consideration to providing for the appointment of a freight controller to make the necessary allotments which should be made to ensure a fair deal for western agriculture, something it is not receiving today?

● (1450)

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I answered that question, which the right hon. gentleman has repeated, by saying no. However, let me make it even more clear to the right hon. gentleman that if there were any indication that the railways were not being fair as between products and, in particular, that they were being unfair to grain, I would urge that some such step be taken. However, as long as it would mean taking boxcars away from the fruit and lumber movement, and since there would not necessarily be any net advantage in that, the question really is whether the railways are doing the best possible job they can in moving—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lang: —the maximum amount of product, and are they being fair.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON CONSTITUENCY ALLOCATION OF GRANTS AND CRITERIA USED

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question and possibly a supplementary for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Since the minister is not here perhaps I can direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Since it is virtually impossible for a member of parliament to reconcile the LIP grant allocations with the job vacancy figures published by Canada Manpower Centres, is the minister prepared to reveal, when he appears before the miscellaneous estimates committee later this month, a detailed riding by riding analysis and the formula upon which these allocations are based?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that as usual the minister will be prepared to answer as fully as possible all questions asked him by the committee.

Mr. Rose: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member may ask a supplementary, following which the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how it would be possible for the minister to give us details for ridings that do not have a Canada Manpower Centre, but in view of the unexplainable anomalies, and the dark suspicions arising therefrom, in the allocation of the 1973-74 LIP grants, are the minister and his officials now considering an improved formula for next year; and what can the minister tell the House now about this matter, or what is he prepared to tell us about it?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I will take that as notice for the appropriate time.

* * *

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

DISMISSAL OF EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, POLICY PLANNING DIVISION—REASON APPEAL PROCEDURE ESTABLISHED BY FORMER PRIME MINISTER PEARSON NOT FOLLOWED

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in asking my question of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs who is in charge of housing I should like to make reference to a commitment that a former Prime Minister made to the civil service and official agents of the government, namely, the commitment that a procedure would be followed that would allow for an appeal in the event of dismissal of a senior official of the government or its agencies. Would the minister tell the House today why this procedure that was established in 1963 by the then Prime Minister, the late Lester Pearson, was not followed during the firing of Walter Rudnicki, a senior official of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Because the circumstances to which Mr. Pearson's statement and those procedures referred were not the circumstances of the subject case.

DISMISSAL OF EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, POLICY PLANNING DIVISION—ORIGIN OF DECISION—REQUEST FOR REVIEW

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact the president of CMHC is new to his position and therefore unfamiliar with the mysteries of government procedures, would the minister inform the House whether the order to fire Mr. Rudnicki came from the Clerk of the Privy Council or from the minister himself?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I made it very clear to the House that decisions on personnel matters within CMHC are made by the president.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have just about come to the end of the question period. I will allow a supplementary from the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, and then the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

Mr. Dinsdale: I take it from the minister's remarks he is saying that the firing was undertaken entirely on the initiative of Mr. Teron. If so, in view of the inexperience of the CMHC president and the vital importance of Mr. Rudnicki's experience to the success of the housing program for Canada's native people, would the minister now review the dismissal with a view to reinstating Mr. Rudnicki?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered that question two or three times already.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the question that still remains with respect to the propriety of the Rudnicki matter, would the minister be prepared to undertake to the House to consult with the chairman of the miscellaneous estimates committee so that when the minister appears before the committee, as he will in a week or so, he will bring with him Mr. Teron, Mr. Belcourt, Mr. Rudnicki and the Clerk of the Privy Council in order that this matter can be looked into fully by the committee?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Oberle.]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister answered that question the other day by saying that there are procedures within the House for such an examination.

* * *

MANPOWER

ACTION BY MINISTER IN LIGHT OF EMPLOYEES' OPINION RESPECTING NEW SYSTEMS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that a survey by the association representing Canada Manpower employees indicates that a majority of these employees feel that the new systems introduced during the past two years do not help the members in the discharge of their duties, what steps has the minister taken in response to these disturbing revelations?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice.

* * *

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

STE SCHOLASTIQUE—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL OF QUESTION TO COMMITTEE OF HOUSE

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Will the right hon. Prime Minister be announcing very soon, as mentioned in the motion introduced today under Standing Order 43, the creation of a parliamentary committee to look into the settlement of claims by those expropriated at Ste Scholastique and the difference in allowances with those paid at Pickering, as requested by the people expropriated at Ste Scholastique for a long time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I did not get the first part of the question but I think it should rather be put to the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, since the right hon. Prime Minister did not understand the first part of my question and that it does not come under the jurisdiction of the other two ministers can he say, to set the record straight for the people expropriated at Ste Scholastique and Pickering, if he is in favour of creating a parliamentary committee to deal with that imbroglio?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not see the point of the question and the alleged discrimination. As far as I can see that is certainly the wish of this government and I think the parties in both cases were treated on an equal basis.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I believe that at the end of the question period yesterday the Chair indicated to the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley that he would have an opportunity today to rephrase the question he asked yesterday. He will be recognized for that purpose since I have noticed that he has been seeking the floor. Then the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster before calling orders of the day.

* * *

HEALTH

PARTICIPACTION ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN—FAMILY PHYSICAL FITNESS PROGRAMS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Notwithstanding the fact that Participaction is a private organization set up financially by the minister's department as a non-profit organization receiving federal subsidies for its operations, can the minister advise the House why his department has failed to follow up the massive and, I might add, very effective campaign with any family physical fitness programs for the Canadian people?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the hon. member made the effort to verify the facts and to correct the allegation he made yesterday in this House. I am also glad to see that Sport Participaction made an excellent job in getting from the private sector a contribution of more than $8 for each dollar in subsidies obtained from the public sector. If the hon. member wants to make the effort to examine all the activities of my department in the area of sport and physical fitness, he will realize that we made enormous progress during the last few years.

* * *

[English]

ENERGY

INQUIRY AS TO STATEMENT ON GUIDELINES FOR CONSERVATION THIS WINTER

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources when we can expect his statement on the guidelines regarding conservation of energy for the coming winter from both the Ottawa and the national standpoint, since most other countries have already taken action?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there is a meeting with the provinces today to discuss this program in general terms. After I have received a report of that meeting I shall be in a better position to report to the House.

Middle East Peacekeeping Force

• (1500)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader about the business for the coming week, keeping in mind that there may be an option for tomorrow?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we will continue with the debate on the Middle East resolution this afternoon, to be followed by the foreign review investment bill, followed by second reading of the National Parks Act and then the report stage of the privacy or wiretapping bill. My hon. friend suggested we might vary that order, and I will be happy to discuss that with my colleagues later in the day or early tomorrow morning.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader whether it is the intention of the government to proceed with the amendments to the Combines Investigation Act and, if so, when?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it is not my present intention to call second reading of that bill during this session with the expectation that the session might conclude by Christmastime. If it is extended beyond that I may change that intention.

Mr. MacKay: On the same matter, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the government House leader is doing this intentionally, but I should like to bring to his attention that this is the second time he has called this bill "the foreign review investment act", and it should be the Foreign Investment Review Act.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PARTICIPATION BY CANADIAN CONTINGENT IN MIDDLE EAST PEACEKEEPING FORCE

The House resumed, from Wednesday, November 14, consideration of the motion of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp):

That it be resolved by the..... House of Commons:

That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the Government's decision that Canadian Forces participate in the United Nations Emergency Force in the Middle East, and that this House do approve the same.

And that a Message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that this House has adopted a resolution approving of the participation of Canadian Forces in the United Nations Emergency Force in the Middle East, and requesting Their Honours to unite with this House in the approval of the same by filling up the blanks in the resolution with the words "Senate and".

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House makes it possible for hon. members to examine the projected employment of Canadian troops in the area of the Arab-Israeli war. It also gives us a chance to assess Canadian participation in other peacekeeping operations in which Canadians have been and are taking part, so that we may learn and benefit from these past and present experiences, and thus make sure our troops are used in the most effective manner.

First of all, I believe that the proposal to send Canadian troops to the Middle East to take part in this present operation is a sound one, and that the experiences we have gained by taking part in other such operations will make it possible for our troops to do a good job in this important assignment. I and other members of the House have just recently returned from a visit to Cyprus where the Canadian delegation enroute to the NATO conference at Ankara were able to inspect the peacekeeping operations being carried out on that island. I think all of us who were there, and who had a chance to look over these operations, were very much impressed by the way our personnel in that force are carrying out their duties. I think we were all very proud to be associated with them.

I also formed the very definite opinion that Colonel Beattie, the deputy-commander of the United Nations operations in Cyprus, has a very great knowledge of what is needed to carry out a peacekeeping operation. He has been to Egypt several times to give advice on peacekeeping operations, and I think he is fully qualified to be in charge of this operation carried out by Canada.

The kind of operation which is being carried out at the present time in the area of the Arab-Israeli war, like the one in Cyprus, is that of keeping two combatants apart after a ceasefire has been arranged following bitter fighting. Important though this kind of work is, I believe, and I think we would all agree, that it is not nearly as important as keeping potential combatants from beginning hostilities in the first place. In order that we may study how we might be able to do more of this kind of important work in the future, I suggest we take a look at the operation which has been going on for a number of years to see whether improvements can be made.

As we all know, 25 years ago 14 nations of the western world joined together in a collective security pact known as NATO, which is by far the largest and most important peacekeeping operation the world has ever known. Each country pledged forces in keeping with their population and national income. Canada's contribution was a combined air and armoured unit comprised of 10,000 men. This was our contribution toward keeping the world free from devastation by a third world war. The purpose of this alliance was to convince the members of the Warsaw Pact that aggressive action would be more costly than rewarding. Largely because of the nuclear capability of the United States, a major conflict has been avoided so far.

However, at the recently concluded NATO conference in Ankara two very disturbing facts were brought to light. The first was that at the present rate of progress the Russians are expected to equal the United States capability in producing nuclear weapons in from two to three years. This projected standoff in nuclear armament will, of course, increase the importance of the conventional weapons being used by the two opposing forces in Europe.

The second bit of knowledge that came to light was that the capability of the conventional weapons used by the communist forces is being improved at a considerably faster pace than that of the weapons being used by NATO forces. Outstanding examples of this are the SAM missiles, which are unequalled by anything on the NATO side. The second example is the Russian T 62 tank, which is the standard equipment of the communist armoured forces, and is unequalled in performance by anything except the West German Leopard, a tank which has very great speed, manoeuverability, and rate of fire. This tank can move at a rate of speed of 45 miles per hour, it is very manoeuverable and can fire at full speed. It has a rate of fire somewhat similar to that of a machine gun. It is a really remarkable piece of mechanism.

When talking with delegates from other NATO countries at this conference, and with the Secretary General, it became obvious that the Russians have used the Arab-Israeli war as a testing ground for their new weapons in exactly the same manner as the Russians and Germans used the Spanish civil war to test their new weapons in the 1930's. I think it is a well-known fact today that if the Arab fighting men and generalship had been even close or equal to that of the Israelis, with the superior equipment supplied to the Arabs by the Russians, they would have been able to win a quick victory, within two or three days at the most. In light of these facts I think we should take a look at our own country's performance in NATO forces.

Five years ago, the Canadian government unilaterally cut the strength of our contribution in half. Since then the government has allowed our tanks, which are used by our armoured force, to become worn out and obsolete. I visited the force last spring. I saw our equipment. The men who operate the equipment are absolutely first class. The equipment they have, to use, especially the tanks, is worn out, obsolete and literally held together by baling wire simply because they cannot get spare parts. It is obvious that the Russian T 62 tanks would destroy our tanks in very short order, with the obvious disastrous effects this would bring about and the high and unnecessary loss of Canadian lives.

● (1510)

It is obvious also that if our allies had followed the example of Canada in carrying out their NATO obligations, the greatly weakened NATO force would a long time ago have invited the Russians to engage, in some other area, in the kind of action which they promoted against Israel, and probably on a far larger scale. If there is any doubt in our minds concerning the intentions of the Russians these days, let us not forget how they moved their tanks into Hungary and Czechoslovakia. Such action undoubtedly would involve Canada and the rest of the world in a third world war.

In case there are any members in the House who have any misconceptions about the attitude of the Russians toward us, and if any of us think their attitude has softened toward the west and that they want peacefully to co-exist with us in a world of order and progress, I would ask members to listen for a few minutes to what Dr. J. M. Luns, the Secretary General of NATO, a man whose job it is to be in close touch with communist attitudes and actions, had to say at the recent NATO conference at Ankara about the situation brought about by the Arab-Israeli war. Dr. Luns said the following:

Statesmen had been speaking of a movement from a period of confrontation to a period of negotiation. There was an increasing tendency to refer to detente, not as something which we were hoping and working to bring about, but as something which was already with us; or if not actually with us, only just around the corner.

But Soviet behaviour when war broke out once more in the Middle East, raised all over again the old doubts and uncertainties about Soviet intentions, and about the genuineness of Soviet interest in a policy of detente.

I am reminded of the situation at the time that Soviet forces invaded Czechoslovakia. That, too, came as a shock at a time when East/West relations were showing signs of improvement. It seems a long time ago now. But, in fact, it was only five years. In our wishing and our hoping for a more secure and stable and peaceful world, how quickly we put aside and forget disappointments and shocking events! How ready we are to believe that things have changed for the better! Psychologists tell us that we are all inclined to remember what is agreeable and to forget what is disagreeable. This seems to go for nations as much as for individuals.

It was this behaviour, this fuelling and stoking of the flames of war, which caused us such deep concern; which provoked people into asking whether improved East/West relations could survive or had any meaning. Since then there have been some encouraging signs. There have been Dr. Kissinger's discussions with Mr. Brezhnev which led to agreement on the text of a ceasefire resolution.

Nevertheless you may well argue that the Soviet response was unduly slow in coming; that there may have been in it a certain opportunism in the light of events on the battlefield, and one could maintain that Soviet behaviour lends force to the argument that for the Soviet leadership detente is a tactic and no more. Those who hold this view argue that the purpose of detente, in Soviet eyes, is to provide the time and means needed for the Soviet Union to solve its immediate internal problems and remedy its weaknesses, for example in the management of the economy, in agriculture, in the field of technology. And once this is done, the Soviet leadership will set out once again, from a position of yet greater strength, on an old course aimed at widening Soviet influence and domination throughout the world but especially throughout Western Europe.

Mr. Speaker, those words of Dr. Luns outline the situation which exists in Europe which has been very much sharpened and brought to light by Soviet activity in promoting and supplying the Arab forces in this latest conflict. This analysis was made by a man of tremendous intelligence and respect in Europe, a man whose job it is to analyze communist intentions very accurately indeed. That is the situation in Europe which was described to those of us who were delegates to the latest NATO conference at Ankara by our fellow delegates from the other countries of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. This is the opinion of men from countries whose borders join the Warsaw Pact countries who daily can see the armed might of the communist forces across their frontier and watch them grow steadily in numbers and in combat ability.

So, in conclusion, I think it is obvious that if this country is to play its full part in by far the most important peacekeeping operation in the world today we must not forget this point. We talk very proudly of the peacekeeping operations in which we are involved, but we must not forget this operation, by far the most important, in which we are engaged today and which is aimed at preventing the beginning of a third world war. If we are to play our full part in this important operation we must immediately do two things. First, we must restore our NATO force to the numbers which we as a country solemnly and willingly pledged to NATO some 25 years ago, pledges that have been maintained by allies but not by us. Second, we must arm that force with the most modern armament that is available. To do less would be to do a disservice to our country, and would be an act of criminal negligence against the men that we ask to fight for us on the front line of Europe if a conflict should ever occur.

● (1520)

If we continue to act as we have, we will be acting in a way to invite aggressive action that, in my view and in the view of those attending the NATO conference in Ankara and I believe all thinking people in the world today, will eventually involve this country and the rest of the world in a third world war.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe that in this discussion of the resolution concerning Canadian participation in the United Nations Emergency Force for the Middle East it is essential that we maintain our perspective on events. The pure tempo of events, the intensity of the conflict and the rapid escalation in the levels of confrontation experienced following the resumption of warfare in the Middle East on October 6, can destroy that perspective.

The warning signals for a potential conflict that would spill out of the Middle East into a possibly larger arena were becoming increasingly evident. It was essential that a mechanism be brought into play that could immediately diminish the developing confrontation and, at the same time, assist in halting the fighting on the battlefield. The United Nations Organization, with the Security Council, provided the required mechanism.

One does not have to be a historian to have a practical perspective on the events of this century. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) drew our attention to events in the Balkan states which eventually culminated in world war I. He also implied a possible parallel with the events of the past few weeks in the Middle East and the potential for a third world conflict. I share his concern and could not agree more with his theme.

Following world war I, an effort was made through the League of Nations to establish an organization through which future conflicts could be avoided. It did not prove to be successful. Why? The League of Nations foundered through lack of support of member nations in periods of crisis. It did not have any peacekeeping mechanisms within its structure, and I think these are two very important factors that should be considered when comparing the League of Nations and the United Nations.

Individual nations pursued isolationist policies in whole or in part during the unsettled history of the League of Nations. Isolationist policies have not contributed to world peace in past history. As a matter of fact, I believe that such policies contribute, either directly or indirectly, to world conflict. Negligence, in the assumption of responsibilities by member nations resulted in the effective collapse of the League of Nations. At this time I would like to quote a paragraph from "The Geneva Racket, 1920-1939" by Robert Dell which reads as follows:

From the first the League was inevitably dominated by England and France, and was predominantly a European institution, although ten of its thirty-one original members and seven of the thirteen States invited to accede to the covenant were European States. Of the four great powers with permanent seats on the Council three were European and, in the absence of the United States, Japan was the only power outside Europe that could be called a great power. China has the largest population of any country in the world and the population of Brazil is just about the same as those of France and Italy but a great power in the diplomatic sense of the term is a power with great military strength and this will continue to be the case so long as the world is ruled by power-politics.

I think it is important to point out at this time that Canada, as a middle power in the world, has shown leadership and therefore has made the peacekeeping purposes and the multipurposes leading to peace, as the role given to it by the United Nations, practical and workable in modern day history. I think that is something of which this parliament can well be proud.

World war II followed in wake of the collapse of the League of Nations. Between 1931 and 1936 Japan invaded Manchuria. In spite of the efforts by the League of Nations and its members, Japan rejected any efforts on the part of the League to settle the war. This, in itself, weakened the League. Then, between 1936 and the outbreak of world war II the following events took place as outlined in the Encyclopedia Britannica. After 1936:

... Hitler has denounced the Locarno pact (March 1936). A few months later Italy and Germany formed what was known as the Rome-Berlin axis, soon joined by Japan. All three were violently hostile to the League; among its members, only those which, like France, the U.S.S.R. or Czechoslovakia, were looking everywhere for possible support against German aggression continued to affirm their belief in collective security. While in Washington congress was passing the successive Neutrality acts, the majority of League members were declaring that they no longer considered themselves bound by the obligations of the covenant.

Although in this last period of its history the organs of the League continued to meet as before and performed some useful tasks, the main international problems were, as in the first period, dealt with outside Geneva. In the swift succession of crises—the Spanish civil war, Japan's invasion of China, the annexations of Austria, Czechoslovakia and Albania—reference to the League was either a mere formality or else omitted. When World War II broke out in Sept. 1939, no appeal of any sort was made to Geneva. Yet, in Dec. 1939 Finland did appeal for help against Soviet aggression, and the assembly decided to organize such help for Finland as it could, while the council declared the exclusion of the U.S.S.R. from the League.

No further meetings of the council or assembly took place during the war. Thanks to U.S. and Canadian hospitality, the economic and social work of the League was continued on a limited scale; but its political activity was at an end.

I use that quotation to demonstrate the fact that Canada, within the ambit of its power, at no time let down the League of Nations. Therefore, Canada is one nation that cannot be accused of causing the demise of the League of Nations. In our modern day, using the present instance in the Middle East as yet another example, Canada since the founding of the United Nations cannot be accused of letting down that organization at any stage in its history.

● (1530)

World War II followed in the wake of the collapse of the League of Nations. The toll in human lives, the human suffering and misery, the physical destruction that resulted could not continue to be tolerated by mankind. It was this realization that led to the creation of the United Nations. In the interval between the collapse of the League of Nations and the creation of the United Nations, mankind had learned that there was a requirement for a peacekeeping mechanism to be built into this new structure. What has been the result?

Many times the United Nations has been called upon to perform a peacekeeping or peace supervisory function of one form or another. Some critics say that these have not always been successful. How does one measure success? Previous explosive situations have either been defused or the level of resultant conflict contained. The potentials for world conflict have been nullified. This, to me, is success. As a Canadian I am proud that Canada has met its responsibilities as a member of the United Nations. This we have done by responding to the requests of the United Nations to make our contribution to peacekeeping activities.

Since 1948 Canadian military personnel have seen United Nations duty in Palestine, Kashmir, Korea, Egypt, the Congo, Cyprus, Lebanon, West Irian, Yemen, India and Pakistan, as well as similar but non-UN duty in Laos, Cambodia and of course, Viet Nam. They have acted in many roles; in combat, as observers, as peacekeepers, policemen, arbitrators, investigators, to name a few, and from time to time they have acted as the support element for international forces. Hon. members will agree that all these roles have been carried out with distinction. They have brought credit to Canada, but more importantly in the present context they have brought a depth of experience to the Canadian forces that cannot be matched.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I think hon. members will be interested in some comparisons between the eighth report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence respecting United Nations peacekeeping and the current activities. The report was tabled in this House on June 5, 1970.

In respect to numbers of support troops in relation to active ground forces the report, in its recommendation concerning a stand-by military force, recommended that such a force could be made up in groups of 5,000—3,000 to be active ground forces and 2,000 men in transportation and logistic support. The figures we have been working with lately suggest a lower ratio of support troops, and this indicates that our contingent will have its work cut out for it.

Under its recommendation concerning Canadian policy the report says in part:

Since the demand for Canadian troops may not be as active infantry, continued emphasis should be placed on the development of transportation, communications and military movement expertise. While special instruction and information on the UN and the problems of peacekeeping would be useful for reserve forces, the sub-committee has concluded that the normal professional training and discipline of Canada's regular forces account for the effectiveness they have shown in past operations. It is our special administrative and technical skills, our linguistic capability and our peacekeeping experience which will be most called for in future peacekeeping situations.

These words would seem to have particular significance today.

Finally, with respect to that report, in the same section dealing with Canadian policy we find this paragraph:

The work of peacekeeping is not glamourous. It is costly. It is frustrating. It does not inspire gratitude. It does not directly assist narrow Canadian national interests. But is is an essential service—and one for which Canada has special qualification, because of her experience, because of her reputation for fairness, and because of her technical skills.

Those words speak for themselves.

A short extract from a recent editorial in the Ottawa Journal states the problem in a very realistic way:

There is much more to fielding a multinational force than the relatively simple part of providing so many soldiers and their arms to stand guard. The mechanics of command, control and support are specialized and complex. They demand a capability which Canada, perhaps more than any of the lesser powers, is able to provide. Since speed is of the essence, Canadian professionalism and experience might well be considered essential—at least at the start.

While all peacekeeping roles demand hard work, tolerance and understanding, those who have studied the subject usually agree that the logistics support of UN peacekeeping forces presents the most difficult and complex problems. While the scope of the problems differs with the area, it is always more difficult to operate away from home. Compound this with the problems of providing food, water, air and ground transport, communications, maintenance facilities and administration for a multinational group with greatly differing equipment, weapons, vehicles, clothing and even differing national diets, many speaking different languages and all demanding the best of support. Place this force in a hostile climate away from existing logistics systems, and away from normal base facilities, and one begins to appreciate the problem.

The Secretary General has asked Canada, along with Poland, to share in the logistic support of the UNEF. Canada specifically has been asked to provide the communications element, and may be requested to provide an airlift capability. Poland has been requested to provide engineering support and possibly medical support. Still to be determined by the United Nations is who will be requested to provide transport, movement control, supply and maintenance support.

Canada joins with Sweden, Ireland, Austria, Finland, Poland, Panama, Peru, Indonesia, Nepal, Ghana and two other nations yet to be named for the purpose of meeting, at the request of the United Nations, their responsibilities in contributing to the cessation of hostilities in the Middle East. We can do no less.

● (1540)

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, no responsible Canadian could really oppose Canada's participation in UNEF at this point of time. Once again, the hopes and aspirations of many Canadians have been raised to a high level of expectation that we may perform the military role for which by temperament, modern tradition and size we are well suited. That is the role of peacekeeping.

I can remember as a teenager just entering high school in 1956, and beginning to read about and follow international politics, how proud I was as a young Canadian when our troops went off to the Middle East as part of the plan of the late Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson which he had placed before and had accepted by the United Nations. I can remember vividly the following summer attending a boy scout world jamboree in England and meeting young Israeli and Egyptian boy scouts who spoke glowingly of the efforts of Canadian soldiers who were playing a major role in preserving what they hoped would be a permanent peace in their part of the world. Little did I think then that this peace would be brutally shattered by the cruel events of June 1967 or of October 1973. Little did I foresee that our troops would be so unceremoniously expelled by Egypt on 24 hours notice in 1967, or that in 1973 we should have to beg for the right to participate again on a peacekeeping force and be accepted only as the quid pro quo for the involvement of Poland—a representative of the Warsaw Pact whose participation is clearly inimical to Israel.

As the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) pointed out yesterday, we on this side of the House have a particular and important role to play as members of the official opposition. While we all want to achieve a just, strong and permanent settlement in the Middle East and wish to provide every ounce of support we can for our Canadian troops who have been or will be dispatched, it is our responsibility, indeed our duty, to comment on the political activities of this government. We have an obligation to comment particularly on the means which were utilized to get us into the present peacekeeping framework, and the implications of that framework as it affects Canada's future in the international community and as it affects the delicate balance and maintenance of peace between the main protagonists in the dispute.

First, let me commend the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) for clearly setting forth yesterday the criteria that Canada seeks to apply when considering participation in a peacekeeping operation. I note that one of the criteria stipulates that "the parties to the conflict must accept the peacekeeping force and Canadian participation in it must be acceptable to all concerned." The minister went on yesterday to assure the House that Canada did not accept its present task until the Secretary General had given formal assurance that the presence of a Canadian contingent would be acceptable to all parties, and especially to Egypt since UNEF will be deployed on Egyptian territory. The minister yesterday stated further that he had confirmed the Egyptian agreement personally with the foreign minister of Egypt when he met him in Washington.

To all this I can only say that I hope he is right. The bitter memories of 1967 still loom large. We remember when General Nasser brought down the whole operation like a crumbling deck of cards, expelled our troops and closed the Gulf of Aqaba, all within 24 hours. I had occasion last December to visit Sharem-el-Sheick and some of the neighbouring areas where Canadian troops were deployed, and to see the remains of some of the large guns used to close the gulf, which are left today as grim reminders of the speed with which a peacekeeping operation can be closed down and booted out.

Are the assurances that we have from the Egyptians today any more valid or complete than those given in 1956? In practical terms, is the mandate of UNEF today any more sound than the mandate given 17 years ago? Indeed, is it legitimate for Canadians to ask whether the creation of the protective umbrella of UNEF in the Middle East is really worth all the trouble if, the moment it starts to rain, one of the parties makes us take it away?

Quite apart from all this, Mr. Speaker, let us look at some of the implied conditions under which we came to be part of the current UNEF force. We allowed our participation to be bargained by the Soviets like a wild card in a poker game. Having unashamedly sought out, and then been granted, the right to participate in this UNEF, we suddenly found ourselves cast in the role of an advocate of NATO and the U.S., to be traded-off against the participation of Poland representing the Warsaw Pact.

Consider the implications of that, being traded-off against Poland in the context of a peacekeeping force in the Middle East. Poland, a country that does not even have diplomatic relations with Isreal; a country that has openly supported the blatantly pro-Arab policies of the Soviet Union almost to the extent of being even more bellicose than the Soviets; a country in which a wave of anti-Semitism following the six-day war saw most Jews purged from all senior positions in government and industry, and eventually driven out of the country; a country where the human ovens of the concentration camps during the holocaust of World War II may have burned the brightest, even brighter than in Germany.

Consider the implications of Polish peacekeeping troops which may be deployed on Israeli soil. This is the country against which Canada was traded-off in UNEF. Does this allow us to continue calling ourselves neutral peacekeepers? Can we maintain the integrity of our supposedly neutral stance and our history of fairmindedness or have we been thrust into the role of advocate for one of the big power blocs, a counter balancing surrogate to satisfy the diplomatic manoeuvring of Egypt, the very country which kicked us out in 1967?

Is this the price that Canada must pay merely for saying that Israel has the right to exist behind secure and recognized boundaries, a fundamental provision of UN Resolution 242?

Mr. Speaker, we must never lose sight of the main goals of a peacekeeper in today's world. It is not to be part of a peacekeeping force within an assigned role to say who is right or wrong. Surely, the only role is to say what is right or wrong. I know that our well-trained and disciplined forces being sent to the Middle East will recognize the distinction, but I fear that the government may have allowed Canada, in the eyes of the world community, to be pushed into an advocate's role which blurs the distinction. In short, our position may have been compromised.

Of course, the Egyptians have not hesitated to thrust us into the advocate's position. One only need recall the story of Patrick Scott, the Toronto Star correspondent, who two weeks ago reported that an Egyptian government spokesman had said that Egypt would veto the inclusion of Canadian troops in UNEF because Canada was "pro-Zionist". Scott was later invited to leave Egypt and his press accreditation was revoked for "diplomatically embarrassing" the Egyptian government. But clearly there was sufficient evidence and subsequent stories in the Egyptian Gazette to substantiate the statement. Indeed, the Egyptian Gazette which rigidly echoes every nuance of Egyptian government policy, made it clear that Cairo had regarded the Canadian government as pro-Israeli. Again, this indicates the surrogate position in which the Egyptians would have us serve in the Middle East, a position to which our government has succumbed.

Mr. Speaker, I am not as optimistic about the possible success of this UNEF force as I was in 1956. Perhaps I am older now and less idealistic. It is more likely, however, that conditions have changed. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) spoke yesterday of the dangers of the unprecedented military build-up by the U.S.S.R. in the Middle East and he was right. Of course, Egypt is a client state of the Soviet now, more than it has ever been.

● (1550)

The right hon. gentleman was also right yesterday when he asserted that oil and the economic power that goes with it were what prompted, in the main, Soviet moves. Fortunately for Canada, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been more unyielding in the face of Arab attempts to use oil to threaten Canada and its supplying of oil to the United States. The Secretary of State for External Affairs rightly said on Tuesday in this House that oil supplies to the United States would not be reduced in order to appease the Arabs.

I was also pleased to see the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) taking the same line on Tuesday, as did the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) yesterday in New York. One can only hope that their colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) might by now have got the message and abandoned his earlier position which, potentially, was an unwarranted capitulation to Arab demands. We wish the Secretary of State for External Affairs had been a little more astute when he went down to the United Nations almost two weeks ago and allowed our position in UNEF to be compromised by virtue of our trade-off with Poland.

The recent war in the Middle East has been a terrible war. Thousands of lives have been lost. Israel lost 1,800 of her citizens out of a population of just over 3 million. This was a terrible price for any small, isolated nation to pay. We hope that, either through the assistance of UNEF or through direct bilateral negotiations between the parties themselves, a just, lasting and permanent peace will come about, so that the residents of that part of the world may live the full kind of life to which they and others in the world are entitled.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Lefebvre) rises on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Lefebvre: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with the other parties and I think there will be general agreement to have three more members speak in this debate, one from the NDP, one from the Liberal Party and one from the Conservative Party. Each speech is to last not more than 20 minutes. After that, we shall go to private members' hour at five o'clock, at which time the current debate will be finalized.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, we agree to that arrangement.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Hon. members have heard the suggestion made by the hon. member for Pontiac. The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) was not in the House when his colleagues agreed that there should be only three other participants in this debate: one from the New Democratic Party, one from the Liberal Party and one from the Progressive Conservative Party. Perhaps the hon. member for Témiscamingue has a comment on this subject?

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. T. Lefebvre (Pontiac): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would allow me, I should say that I had discussed this with the hon. members of his party but unfortunately he was not in the House at that moment and his colleagues did not know that their leader wanted to speak. I apologize for this.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like my name to be added to the list of those who want to speak. I will not abuse the time of the House, however, I would simply like to say a few words.

[English]

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, in that case, possibly we could arrange for the hon. member for Témiscamingue to be added to those who are to speak, and for each member to speak for 15 instead of 20 minutes.

Mr. Lefebvre: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Do hon. members agree that this debate will conclude after one speaker from each party has spoken for not more than 15 minutes?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, my party has not agreed to limit itself to any particular length of time. So far as I am concerned, I can probably bring myself within the desired limit. Perhaps if I need an extra minute or two I can ask for the indulgence of the House.

Mr. Lefebvre: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): There is no difficulty about that arrangement.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) has set out very clearly the views of New Democratic Party members on the resolution we are discussing, and I entirely accept his statement. There are three or four points which I wish to underline. One is that I share with the hon. member for Selkirk the view that it would have been much better to have had this resolution passed before troops were actually committed to the operation. To ask us to approve at this stage, as the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) said in this debate yesterday, is asking us to approve a fait accompli. I do not believe this is a matter of form; it is a matter of substance.

In my view it is of the utmost importance for the health and survival of parliamentary democracy that major decisions in international affairs should be submitted to Parliament for its approval before they have been decided upon by the government or, at least, before they are put into execution by the government. However, there may be circumstances in which that is impossible. Yet I cannot see any good reason why that could not have been done in the present case. The failure to do so has robbed this debate of any particular significance.

It is true that, when speaking for my party earlier, I indicated support for the proposal to send a Canadian contingent to the peacekeeping forces in the Middle East at the request of the Secretary General of the United Nations, as did spokesmen for the Conservative Party. I must say that I feel the government has taken parliamentary supremacy far too lightly in this instance and, indeed, in other instances.

The second point I want to make is this: we are approving the contribution which Canada is called upon to make, not because of any pressure from any of the great powers, least of all as the cat's paw of any particular great power. The request for Canadian participation has come from the Secretary General of the United Nations, acting in compliance with the almost unanimous resolution of the Security Council. My recollection is that the last relevant resolution dealing with the composition of the new international force was initiated by the so-called non-aligned nations of the Security Council. In these circumstances, I suggest it is ridiculous to say we are trying to please any one or other of the great powers. It would also be stupid to suggest that without the concurrence of the great powers such a force could achieve its purpose. If that concurrence involves some sort of geographic or ideological balance, that fact must be taken into account by the Secretary General. That is one of the facts of life which, indeed, have to be considered if the force is to be able to do the job hoped of it.

I do not think Canada should accept this role in any spirit of lightheartedness or vain glory. It is indeed a strenuous obligation. Although we acknowledge, as, indeed, it is widely acknowledged by people who know about these things, that Canada's experience and expertise in these fields are unrivaled, we cannot put forward any exclusive claim to participation in peacekeeping operations. I am fully satisfied, however, that in the present case the Secretary General of the United Nations, acting on behalf of the world community, is the person who has in fact requested, and indeed urged, our assistance. For this reason, I believe we cannot decline.

The last point I want to make is that it is in the essential interests of Canada that we do take part. A day or two ago I heard a sneering academic on the radio saying that Canada's self-interest should be our only guide and that Canada has no real interest in the Middle East. I entirely disagree. Canada is in a peculiar position as far as defence is concerned. We are part of the North American continent, which we share with a superpower. The likelihood of direct attack on Canada is almost nil. But we have been involved in the past and will be involved again if there is any world war. Our major interest in international affairs therefore is to maintain stability, which prevents the outbreak of any war and halts the spread of wars, if they do break out, before they escalate into world conflict.

Middle East Peacekeeping Force

● (1600)

There is no part of the world where the danger of a local conflict expanding into a world conflict is more apparent than in the Middle East where the great powers have confronted each other for many years and where their prestige is at stake. The answer to the Middle East conflict, as has been said in this debate and elsewhere, is negotiation between the parties, preferably under the auspices of the United Nations. Negotiations, however, are not possible without a ceasefire. They cannot take place while the conflict rages. For this reason, a ceasefire is essential to negotiations for a lasting peace.

On the other hand, a ceasefire requires the interposition of a neutral force to supervise the ceasefire. No one can guarantee that the UN force in this case will be able to maintain a ceasefire. There are innumerable difficulties, and impassioned fears have been aroused on both sides, but it is clear that without a peacekeeping force the probability of successful negotiation is virtually nil.

The contribution that Canada is asked to make along with the other participating nations is therefore a contribution to world stability and a direct contribution to the security and welfare of Canada. Even if one accepts the proposition that national self-interest is the basic motive for international policies, a proposition about which I confess some doubt, then that self-interest must be enlightened, and the enlightened self-interest of Canada dictates that we do our best to contribute to the stabilization of existing conflicts particularly one such as has arisen in the Middle East.

As far as I am concerned, I do not wish my support of Canada's participation in this peacekeeping force at the request of the United Nations to be negative, half-hearted or conditional. If the UN is seen to be indispensable, if peacekeeping forces are shown to be useful, I am willing to confess that I am enough of an idealist that I would rejoice in this. It seems to me the cynics have had their day and I do not question that they have had plenty of material to be cynical about both in connection with the UN and in connection with its peacekeeping operations. Nevertheless, it seems to me that the development of the UN and peacekeeping is essential to world survival.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I was born in that part of the world which has been torn apart by war and sufferings for the last 20 years, more precisely in Haïfa, Palestinia, I am obviously even more afflicted than many of my fellow Canadians by the extremely distressing situation which prevails in that part of the world.

Today I will only reply to certain accusations made yesterday by the spokesman for the Official Opposition about the government's behaviour over the last few days. First, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) blames the government for its delay in consulting Parliament and, in other words, for suggesting that this was a fait accompli. He also blamed the government for showing untimely eagerness to participate in the UN forces and, to use his own terms, "Canada has no business begging to serve".

[Mr. Brewin.]

I think that those criticisms are obviously contradictory. How can anyone believe in our eagerness to participate when the debate during which the House is to approve a resolution on this question has been differed? On the contrary, if this debate has been postponed it is obviously because the government was not prepared to send troops at a time when it still could see uncertainty prevailing in the UN about the nature and amount of Canadian troops to be dispatched to the Near East. It is not so much the government's eagerness as the understandable haste of the Secretary General of the United Nations to send emergency forces which urged the Canadian government to reach a quick decision. It is not Canada's inacceptability but rather difficulties raised by other suggestions which have delayed by a week the dispatching of Canadian troops.

Even today we have no notion as to how many troops this task will require as it has not been completely defined yet. That is why the government should wisely wait and see exactly what Canada wants before asking for the opinion of Parliament. In a certain sense the opposite reproach could still be accepted; it could be said that the debate is somewhat premature since it is not yet known exactly what duties the Canadian contingent will have.

If discussion is still initiated in Parliament it is precisely because the government wanted to take the first opportunity, namely the sending of the Signal Corps, and surely it cannot be said that the government showed contempt for Parliament. On the contrary, it can be said that it is the lot of those who wanted to disregard the facts in their charges.

Of course, there are many precedents of government management, and I could quote several to refresh the memory of those who forgot about them. For example, in 1950, the Right Hon. Louis St-Laurent stated, as reported at page 494 of Hansard for 1950, and I quote:

> The intention of the government is that if any other service should be required of this special force, which of course is not being created solely because of the Korean incident, if any police action, for instance, that has a warlike character should be required of it, elsewhere than Korea, the government of course would have to make its decision, but it would immediately call parliament, make that decision known and leave it to parliament to approve or disapprove of it.

The Hon. Howard Charles Green, who later became Secretary of State for External Affairs, asked him:

> May I ask the Prime Minister whether there will be a resolution authorizing the sending of troops to Korea?

And the Prime Minister replied:

> No, sir; that would be something which has never been done. The government announces to parliament what its policy is, and asks parliament for the ways and means to carry it out... If parliament does not authorize the ways and means to carry out the policy, it cannot be carried out. If parliament, on the other hand, on any motion of non-confidence, expresses its disapproval of the conduct of the government, of course the government resigns and some other group forms a government to carry out the will of the Canadian people as expressed by their representatives in parliament.

And in 1956 the first peacekeeping intervention in the Middle East took place. Parliament was not sitting at that time and it was called to discuss that matter on November 26, 1956. The order in council had already been made by the government on November 20. Prime Minister St. Laurent then restated the view expressed during the Korean conflict and I would like to quote comments he added to explain the position of the government.

[English]

"That has always been the constitutional requirement and the constitutional practice that the government has to take the responsibility of making a decision and then put itself in the hands of parliament so that parliament may determine whether it will provide the funds to implement that decision or whether it will refuse to provide the funds and get another government to carry out the policies that parliament wants to have carried out. This has always been the position and this will always be the position so long as this party has the responsibility for public affairs in this country.

● (1610)

[Translation]

I would like to refer now to the Congo, in 1960, when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was Prime Minister. In inviting Parliament to debate two draft resolutions, he referred first of all to the 1956 precedent, that I already mentioned, as recorded on page 7328 of Hansard of the same year.

Those are the two resolutions upon which action is now invited and the approval of parliament asked. The constitutional position in this regard was set forth by the former prime minister, Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, on November 20, 1956, when an order in council was passed which authorized the maintenance on active service of not more than 2,500 officers and men as part or in immediate support of the United Nations emergency forces in the Middle East.

Asserting his support since 1946 to the idea of Canada's contribution, the then Prime Minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert, insisted on paying tribute to Canadian officers who had already gone to the Congo. This means that Parliament was discussing this matter while the decision was already under development. I quote from the former Prime Minister speech:

What have we done? What has been Canada's contribution? I simply outline it for the record without going into particulars. Following the initial request the government authorized the secondment of five Canadian officers who volunteered from the United Nations truce supervisory organization in Palestine. Three of the five are now in Leopoldville. When it was reported that there was the risk of a food shortage the government decided to provide pork and dried powdered milk to which reference has already been made. Then there was request for signals and logistic support for the United Nations Congo force. On receiving that request, Canadian and United Nations authorities consulted as to the precise needs to be met in the Congo.

On July 28 Canada authorized provision for the United Nations force in the Congo of up to 500 Canadian armed force personnel including a signals detachment numbering some 200, as well as a small Canadian headquarters detachment. Arrangements for sending the selected personnel to the Congo are going forward, and parliament is now being asked to approve the action in this regard.

It is to be noted that they already talked about logistic and signals support. The then Prime Minister did not consider that it was all about water carriers and wood hewers! Let me quote finally the conclusion that he was expecting—quite rightly, I suggest—from Parliament on such an occasion:

I trust that the house will give unanimous acceptance to the course we have followed, for it represents a major step forward to that day when, wherever difficulties may arise anywhere in the world, as I stated in March, 1945, the nations comprising the United Nations will all make available to an international force whatever is requisite to assure peace.

These were precedents and I might also quote that of Cyprus, in 1964, which is not different.

As regards the "precendent" of Indochina, I suggest that it would be quite ridiculous to refer to it since it was not the same thing from the point of view of authority, function, or nature; they were only observers and not regular forces; the decision taking process was quite different. As a matter of fact, when observers are sent away, the government simply informs Parliament of its decision and does not put forward any resolution. Therefore, this does not constitute a precendent. It is easy to accuse others when one does not know what he is talking about.

The second reproach of hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) was to blame this government for their indecent hurry to contribute to the United Nations forces.

In the first place, how could one imagine that the government which had withdrawn its observers from Indochina, because it found their role ineffective in spite of their merits, was going to rush into another adventure? How could one believe that the minister, who reaffirmed on September 25 last at the General Assembly of the United Nations in New York that Canada hoped that from now on its contribution to peacekeeping operations would be governed by some criteria would suddenly alter his course? Finally, how can it be suggested that this government needs the stimulus of these operations to back up its foreign policy when it is explicitly based on strictly Canadian objectives since 1970?

However, Mr. Speaker, one thing should be specified: Canada did not ask to contribute to that UN force, but the Secretary General of the United Nations did. Documents are available to prove it. I tabled them myself in the House of Commons around November 2.

The invitation letter of the Secretary General is dated October 27. Indeed, the request was made on October 26, but Canada waited for the letter. The government even waited for another letter confirming that Canada was acceptable to all parties before taking a decision and announcing a debate on the resolution.

If the Secretary of State for External Affairs had to go to New York later, it was not to make sure of Canada's acceptability, as the hon. member suggested quite wrongly, but for other reasons. Canada had already been accepted. What are these reasons? First of all, the Secretary General has, for the first time since the United Nations have been created, the tremendous task of organizing an emergency force with the agreement of the Security Council. Previous forces were constituted like the first one, in 1956, by the General Assembly with the active support of some countries.

All those who feel strongly about the support of the United Nations and the action of the Secretary General in this very difficult task will surely avoid making fun of the Canadian government's assistance which is meant to help this emergency force to be in a position to work steadily. Moreover, other governments are perhaps less willing than ours to contribute to peacekeeping. Among the major powers, some seek above all to get well out of it. To a certain extent, this is what happened in New York, as the composition of the force has been reconsidered while this is perhaps a matter or regional representation but without any political ground.

Who then has insisted on the urgency of sending just the same some vanguard elements? Obviously, the Secretary General since he was bent on having this emergency force prepared quickly before any resumption of hostilities due to the absence of any mediator. After all, an emergency force, as indicated by the words, is not a parade troop, they are, like the firemen that have been given as an example, a complement that is sent immediately before the fire can even start again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has now expired.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I notice that they have no doubt started to save energy, because two clocks indicate that it is now 6.20.

Mr. Lefebvre: This one is working.

● (1620)

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Indeed it shows the exact time.

Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the remarks of the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) regarding the resolution under study. In fact, the hon. member knows the history of Middle East since he is one of its sons and became Canadian. He answered the comments made yesterday by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner).

Mr. Speaker, the resolution before us reads as follows:

That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the Government's decision that Canadian Forces participate in the United Nations Emergency Force in the Middle East, and that this House do approve the same.

I think that such a resolution should have been submitted ten days ago after we had asked ourselves if we were ready to send Canadian forces to maintain peace in the Middle East. In doing so we should have recognized the existence of Parliament. We are asked to approve this decision when our troops are already on the spot. We are told: It was urgent to send our troops to the Middle East. And the hon. member just told us that the part our troops will play there is not known yet. Will they act as supervisors? Will they act as police officers? What part will they play? We do not know. Nothing would have prevented us from studying a resolution giving to the government the right to send troops to maintain peace on request by the United Nations. In those circumstances, there would have been no need for the government to ask us to approve its actions after the event. Our soldiers are already on the spot. Every day more of them are leaving for the Middle East while we are trying to decide whether or not the government should be allowed to send the troops.

Mr. Speaker, this is taking the bull not by the horns but by the tail and it goes against common sense. According to me, the government should not any more submit resolutions after the event.

I do not think that one single member here objects to Canada playing a peacekeeping role in any conflict whatsoever, not the role of motivator but that of a true peacemaker. In such circumstances, we cannot deny approval of the resolution because the Canadian Armed Forces are participating in the emergency force to maintain peace in the Middle East. We could have discussed this 15 days ago. If we had not been asked to take part, we would not have done so and the government would have been free and would have had the authority to do so, with the approval of Parliament, and it would have sent these peacekeeping forces if the need had arisen, at the request of the United Nations.

Will peace be restored there? We do not know, but we certainly wish it. The parties are still there, with the Arabs on one side and the Jews on the other. Each one defends his own position. The Arabs have a history, traditions, they require that their rights be respected. On the other side, the Jews are in the same situation. I feel that the most serious problems have come about since the United Nations started interfering in the affairs of these countries. Before that, the two nations managed more or less to get along together at least better than now. With the years, the problem becomes greater and more complex. On one hand, we are assaulted from all sides, as Members of Parliament, by Arab or Egyptian organizations and on the other, by Israeli organizations which are urging us to take side.

Mr. Speaker, they are those who should make up their minds, try to compromise and understand one another since there are human beings involved and there is room for understanding and agreement between human beings of good will whose sole preoccupation is not the domination of others. In this respect, it is the Canadian Armed Forces or diplomatic corps which can intervene to encourage these nations to understand one another and dialogue with one another, for there are people of good will on both sides. I should not like to see either Arabs or Israelis being trampled on. However, the other countries involved should stop fostering differences.

At the present time, oil is being used as a means to exert pressure on the nations which are in need of it. It has become an economic war. People are trying to make profits, but at what cost? At the cost of human lives. This is unacceptable and this is where I think Canada can play a significant role. It is useless to watch each side and wait for attacks.

Canada could invite both parties involved to do everything possible to try and dialogue in order to find grounds for agreement. Thus, Canada would gain the respect of all nations while giving people in the Middle East a chance to live comfortably in peace, and not in the type of bloody violence which we witnessed a few days ago.

Mr. Speaker, we shall support the action taken by the government, but we suggest that in future it give notice of its intention to the Parliament of Canada and ask for the authority to take part in peacekeeping operations, not only in the Middle East, but throughout the world.

[English]

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is with some concern I rise to speak today on Canada's participation in the Middle East truce force. My concern arises from the situation which has resulted from the Liberal government's policies, both diplomatic and military.

Before considering the area of defence policy, let us examine the actions of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). Unless one believes that the summum bonum of Canadian foreign policy is to have Canadian participation in UN forces on every occasion, the minister's actions appear ill-considered. His statements trumpeting, or perhaps pleading, Canada's availability even before the decision to form a UN force had been taken belie his assertions that we were not preaching for a call. Perhaps the call which the Secretary of State for External Affairs longed for was one not from New York or the mid-east, but rather from Oslo. Unfortunately, the Cabinet no longer possesses a man with the unique abilities of the Secretary of State for External Affairs' illustrious predecessor.

The present situation reminds one of the quotation that when history repeats itself, the first time it is as heroics, the second time it is as comedy. I am sure the quotation is familiar to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). In his determination to have Canada included in the peacekeeping force the minister seems to have accepted, without any objection, the implicit Russian identification of Canada as a surrogate of the United States, a surrogate which had to be balanced by the inclusion of a Warsaw Pact country.

In past operations which began by being structured from the assumption that Canada was some sort of an American stand-in whose lack of objectivity was to be taken for granted, and who had to be balanced by another country with the opposite bias, our experiences have been highly unproductive. The truth is that Canadian troops are not American lackies; when they have participated in peacekeeping operations it has been with impartiality and judiciousness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: It will always be that way, too.

Mr. McKinnon: However, in operations such as the two Viet Nam control commissions, where major power politics were structured into the commission from the outset, the unvarying experience has been of frustration. This frustration has had two sources: First, the politicking within the commission has hamstrung the Canadians from carrying out the task which they were placed there to complete; second, the government's seeming acceptance of the view that Canada's forces are not objective is insulting to the men who have proved under many conditions that they are, in fact, objective and that they can be among the most effective troops upon which the UN can call.

• (1630)

Being equated with troops from Poland, whose bias and selective blindness the Canadian troops have seen, is demeaning, not only for the troops but for Canada as a whole. In his meek acquiescence to the Russian charges that Canada's presence needed to be balanced by a Polish presence, the Secretary of State not only lends credence to false suggestions that Canadian troops cannot be neutral observers and denigrates Canadian independence in the world's eyes, he also confirms any suspicions which the Arabs might have about our supposed lack of neutrality. At the precise time when Canada is beginning to feel the icy fingers of the energy crisis, and at the moment when the Arab states are beginning to use their new-found power to withhold oil from their enemies, we are presented with the spectacle of a member of the cabinet implicitly confirming that Canada is so pro-Israeli that her troops cannot be neutral in the peacekeeping force and that they have to be balanced with communist pro-Arab troops. I wonder if the minister believes that this is the way to safeguard Canada's supply of oil from the mid-East.

Mr. Sharp: A speech like this will not help.

Mr. McKinnon: While on the subject of oil supplies, let us look at what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) was doing during this time. While one half of our dynamic duo was busy confirming Arab suspicions about Canada, the other half was, without consultation, slapping a large excise tax on exports of crude oil to the United States, hardly an action to draw favourable responses from the country upon which eastern Canada relies for a large part of her oil needs. All we need now is to have some other minister of the Crown infuriate the Venezuelans and the picture will be complete. The government seems to be doing its level best to anger the countries upon which we depend for oil. The Secretary of State has placed us as the pro-Israel, ergo anti-Arab, component of the UN force, while the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has done his best to convince the Americans that we are a lot of blue-eyed Arabs gouging them on oil prices.

Let us now consider the part being played by National Defence—

Mr. Sharp: Let us get down to some facts now.

Mr. McKinnon: —and try to solve the riddle of why Canada is not sending a service battalion to give logistical support, its explicitly defined role, but instead is sending other troops. The following, from a Canadian military pamphlet convinces me that the troops to be sent should have been based upon a service battalion.

In each service battalion there is a logistics operations centre which is the nerve centre of the battalion through which is exercised many of the functions of command, of control and co-ordination of administrative support for the brigade group—a group I might add, somewhat comparable to the UN force to be deployed. It must be prepared to operate continuously and to perform the following functions:

A) Control of radio, teletype and voice nets;

B) Consolidation of all units' demands;

C) Organization of pick-up and delivery of all supplies and services

D) Planning and co-ordination of all administration support.

If these roles sound familiar it is because they are exactly what is needed in the present situation. Reading further about the role of the service battalion, we encounter this:

They—

The service battalions.

—are to provide:

1) Transportation
2) Supply of stores and equipment
3) Technical maintenance and repairs
4) Military police
5) Comptroller and finance
6) Postal
10) Bath and Laundry facilities, and
11) Recovery and backloading of salvage

The truth of the matter is, I suspect, that none of our service battalions are available. They are not available because they have, like almost all of our forces, been over-committed and under-manned. They are in mobile command but are not mobile because of their having been committed to camp and base administrative support.

I suspect that, due to government penny-pinching over the years, these service units are required for static roles and it is deceit to imply that they are combat ready land forces, as claimed in "Defence 1971" or that they are highly mobile, as claimed in "Defence 1972". To support this thesis, I wish now to review the actions that brought our forces to this state.

Canadian troops are very capable peacekeepers: whatever tasks they are given they perform well. This is because they are capable, technically knowledgeable, well-trained and well-led. They carry out the very high tradition which has been established throughout two world wars plus their numerous peacekeeping roles. I am sure that as our Signal Regiment has been ordered to carry out the roles of a service battalion, it will do its very best to do so. I am particularly pleased to pay these compliments because their high performance has been achieved under the most execrable governmental leadership imaginable.

The armed forces of this country have been reduced and reduced. Their strength in troops has dwindled in ten years of Liberal government from 123,000 to 81,000. At the same time their civilian strength dropped from 43,000 to 32,000. I prepared a graph to show this diminution over the ten years of Liberal rule, and then extrapolated the graph to show what our forces will be in the future. If the ten-year trend continues, by 1990 there will be more civilians than troops in the department and three years later, in 1993, the last serviceman will be released. For what comfort the Canadian public may draw from it, the projection shows that there will still be 10,000 civilians administering the then non-existent forces.

The low esteem in which the present government holds the Department of National Defence is clearly demonstrated by the rapid changes in ministers. From September 23, 1970 to December 1, 1972, the department suffered under five different ministers—five ministers in 27 months. New math has an expression for zero, it is called a place-holder and this is what the defence portfolio has become, a place-holder.

Now, while these ministers were each spending their brief sojourn in defence, their policies were as one might expect, almost non-existent. I have searched diligently, Mr. Speaker, trying to find any coherent defence policy enunciated by any of these five hon. gentlemen. Regrettably, I found it particularly unfruitful to search in Han- sard. Defence ministers appear to wait with great patience for Parliament to recess or adjourn before making any kind of statement. The present minister is carrying on this unworthy tradition, as witness his press release of October 10—I suppose it should be called an off-white paper.

[Mr. McKinnon.]

In the press releases that the ministers use to delineate their non-policies, two promises appear to be constant over the years. First, there will be a reduction of troops and, second, new equipment will be bought with the money saved. They have always fulfilled the first promise, and always broken the second. Shortly after the minister issued his recent off-white paper, the Financial Post of October 20 summed up the current situation rather well:

> The truth is, of course, that the defence spending freezes of recent years have all but wrecked Canada's aspirations to military efficiency. By scraping around, and laying off people, defence officials have somehow managed to pay their bills every year. But the capital budget has dried up to the point where Canadian troops are having to use obsolete equipment and face nightmare maintenance problems with such basic items as trucks. This made mockery of the Canadian armed forces and the men and women serving in them.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the decrease in the forces' strength is never accompanied by a proportional decrease in their commitments. The roles and tasks of the forces have become so numerous that "Defence 1972" has finally given up trying to list them in priority for units and has instead prepared a two-page graph with tasks across the top, units along the sides and you simply note how many X's there are. Indeed, one gets the impression that the roles were chosen by the public relations men to include every possible demand which Canada might make on a military establishment—each one, however, expressed in sufficiently vague terms as to confound any attempt at analysis—and that all the squares were X'd save only those where no possible connection could even be imagined.

Nowhere is there evidence that a logical progression was ever made from Canada's military priorities, through the organization of the troops required to satisfy these needs, to the equipment and training necessary. Instead there appears to be a grab-bag of vague objectives crossed with a military establishment to which the present government has given no clear direction. An air of fuzziness and even futility is the inevitable result.

Speaking of "Defence 72", I hope all hon. members have managed to skim through it; that is what it is designed for, to be skimmed through. It has 76 pictures which makes it particularly interesting for people who cannot read. The following comment by a learned military critic, who is able to read, best describes it:

> The reports are excellent, but their excellence is in the most skillful avoidance of giving precise or specific information when it does not suit the intended image to do so. It is not that the reports are inaccurate in the strictest sense of the word, but that the inferences and omission of facts creates a very effective screen of the basic equipment deficiencies.

To get back to the forces, and the bad faith which they have been subjected to, perhaps a few examples by services might best illustrate my general thesis. In the sea element, euphemistically referred to as the navy everywhere else in the English-speaking world, we have the following situation: Ten years ago the seaborne complement was 60 per cent of the total navy force; now it is 50.5 per cent. From 1963-64 to 1973-74 the reduction in the shore complement was 1,000; the reduction in the seaborne complement was 4,750.

● (1640)

In comparing the Canadian Navy with other navies of the middle powers, one is immediately struck by the very large concentration on anti-submarine operations. Our ships have been designed almost exclusively for this role, and I do not wish for a minute to denigrate their capability in that role. However, I am somewhat concerned that new submarine launched missiles designed to bring down helicopters may, to some extent, nullify our efforts in this area. That, of course, is not the only concern that may be expressed. We have arrived at a very sophisticated and expensive anti-submarine destroyer group just when our role or priorities for the navy may well be changing. The Minister of the Environment and Fisheries (Mr. Davis) is hoping to obtain fishing and mineral rights for us to at least 200 miles out from our shores. This will occasion a tremendous need for armed patrol vessels, and a 4,500 ton DDH 280 would probably qualify as the least suitable vessel imaginable for the job. This is the situation coupled with the opinion that Canadian anti-submarine warfare capability has been overtaken by technology—new submarines can fire their missiles long before they can be found and sunk.

There is one final point which I would like to make before I leave the DDH 280. It is not easy to determine their cost. I hope to have an answer soon to my question on the order paper on that subject. I estimate that it is over $75 million, and I note that the United Kingdom commissioned a type 82 cruiser on March 31 last at an over-all cost of 27 million pounds, which is less than each of our destroyers cost.

Looking through Janes, I kept coming back to page 38 where Australia's fast transport ex-aircraft carrier is illustrated. It is of the Majestic class, the same as the ill fated Bonaventure. The Australian carrier was converted to a fast military transport in 1962 and can operate Wessex anti-submarine helicopters as well. Frankly, it seems to be an ideal ship to transport and provide a base for peacekeeping forces, which is our main role it seems to me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret that I must interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has now expired.

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think there is general agreement on this side to let the hon. member continue, in accordance with the previous agreement that he would in fact be the last speaker. If there are a few minutes left before five o'clock, perhaps the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) could be allowed a few minutes to make some comments. Perhaps the hon. member would leave him some time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree to this suggestion?

Mr. McKinnon: I did not hear the first part of that suggestion, Mr. Speaker. Do I have a few more minutes?

Middle East Peacekeeping Force

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The House has agreed to let the hon. member complete his remarks, and if there is some time left before five o'clock, the hon. member for Sudbury would like to have a few minutes at his disposal.

Mr. McKinnon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the suggestion of the hon. member.

I should like now to say a few words regarding the air element of the armed forces which seems to have been given the wrong plane or the wrong role rather consistently. The CF-5 is a plane much better suited for the distances involved in Europe and third world countries than for North American roles and ranges. As stated by Colin Gray the plane:

> ... has been given a range of missions of varying degrees of implausibility.

The next plane to come along was the much more expensive CF-104. The following was reported in "The Round Table" of July 1972:

> CF-104 tactical aircraft are now being refitted from a strike-reconnaissance to a conventional attack role. It should be added that the CF-104 is singularly unsuited for this new role. The aircraft is very difficult to maintain in the field, it cannot carry much conventional payload and it lacks defensive capability. The $1 billion spent by Canada on its 238 CF-104s, a programme designed solely to provide a nuclear strike capability stands as a monument to cost-ineffectiveness.

I will skip over some of the comments which I wished to make, in keeping with your generosity in letting me have a few extra minutes, but I would like to say a few words about the land forces, or the army to the uninitiated. One hardly knows whether to start with the age of their trucks, the age of their tanks, or the fact that at present they have no anti-aircraft weapons at all. It is very difficult to get reliable or sensible information from the department. A most intriguing example of this difficulty can be found in Hansard of January 21, 1970 at page 2647 when the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) is reported to have put the following question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson):

> His department announced yesterday that it had authorized the mass production of MBT-70 supertanks, each of which will cost about $600,000. Would the minister tell the House how Canada will use these tanks?
>
> MR. SPEAKER: Order. The question could be put on the order paper.

But it was not, and it disappeared from sight.

Another example is to be found in a Reuter's release which reads as follows:

> Canadian defence minister E. J. Benson—

You know how long it has been since he has been around;

> —announced last night that Canada expects to sign a $40 million contract with Britain in the next week or two for more than 100 Scorpion light tanks.

These mythical tanks are to replace the Centurion, a venerable tank introduced into the British army in 1945, 28 years ago. We have vehicles in the Classic Car Museum in Victoria that are younger than those tanks, and many of the troops now serving in them were not even born when these tanks were given to the Canadian army.

There has been a succession of short-term ministers, each cutting the strength of the forces, increasing the tasks—multitasking is the "in" phrase—and promising, always promising, capital expenditures on equipment. Now, our present minister has issued his proclamation of a new era. There is to be an increase of 7 per cent per annum for each year of the next five years. The deception, of course, is that the defence budget is divided between capital and operating costs. The ratio between capital and operating determines whether the force is avoiding obsolescence or not. To avoid obsolescence requires an annual share of the budget for capital costs that should be in the neighbourhood of 30 per cent of the budget. In fact, the last time that Canada spent over 16 per cent of the defence budget on capital expenditures was in 1963-64.

Now, with the operating expenditure usually taking 85 per cent to 90 per cent of the budget—remembering that operating costs rose by 11.2 per cent last year and that the inflation rate is now 8.2 per cent per annum—a raise of 7 per cent in the total budget means a decrease, not an increase in capital expenditures. It is simply more of the same fraud that has been perpetuated each year, first on the personnel in the forces, and second, on the Canadian people.

I support the idea of Canada doing what it can do to bring peace to the Middle East. I know that our troops, as always, will conduct their affairs in a highly competent and professional manner. I hope that my remarks today may in some small way move the government to change its ways and give these troops the support they have so richly earned.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have this opportunity, brief as it is, to get a few remarks on the record, and I am delighted as well to conclude this debate with something on the positive side. I was surprised at the negative tone of the last speech from the opposite side of the House. I think that that kind of speech does more harm, about which the hon. member was worried in his speech, than it does good. It is precisely the problem that we face. There is too much of the negative attitude.

I am anxious to get a few remarks on the record because, recently, I had the honour of being a member of the delegation which visited Cyprus and Turkey for the general assembly of NATO. It was an all party delegation. In the course of my remarks, had I more time, I would have liked to spend some time on the NATO conference and our role in NATO in a peacekeeping effort, but more appropriate to this debate is the role that our forces have been playing on the island of Cyprus in the UN contingent there. This is exactly related to the possibility of our doing something meaningful in the Middle East.

The population of Cyprus numbers about 600,000 people, about 120,000 Turkish Cypriots and about 480,000 Greek Cypriots, who are literally in armed confrontation with one another all over the island. There are enclaves where the Turks live in walled cities, separated from the Greek Cypriots by walls that were built centuries ago. Let me give you a more graphic picture. There is a green line that separates the Turks from the Greeks on this island of 600,000 people. This line goes the length of the island, and right through the city of Nicosia, where a few feet apart armed patrols of each side face each other ready to fire. For every ten of these posts the United Nations force has one of its own, and still manages to keep the peace. Canadian forces have been there since the United Nations first undertook that job. Our contingent plays a key role and commands tremendous respect, so much so that it has been estimated, by persons involved in the work undertaken by other countries contributing to the UN force, that if the Canadian contingent had to be replaced, other countries would be required to supply several times their number simply because of the high degree of training and dedication of the members of the Canadian force.

● (1650)

This is an incredibly difficult job, yet it is being done. It is difficult in one respect because there is a temptation to say that, during the years the United Nations contingent has been there, there has been no progress, no hope of progress, and that it has incurred a tremendously high cost. There is the temptation to say that it is not our business to be there, that we should depart and let the parties go to it themselves. On the other hand, we must realize from the experiment in Cyprus, which is a living laboratory of peacekeeping operations, that its success can be measured in the avoidance of open war and savage conflict. In those terms we have made tremendous progress. And there is hope for the future, because it may be possible for future generations of those people, who hate each other so deeply, who have deep seated prejudices, to find a more enlightened approach to living with one another. That is our investment in Cyprus.

When the cost is mentioned, Mr. Speaker, in actual fact the cost may be zero because the forces we are contributing would have to be trained anyway. If we had them in our own country they would probably be doing something much less meaningful. Our contribution demonstrates above all that we do have a commitment to peace, and that we believe in peace. When we learn, in addition, that our forces are not only playing a leading role but command respect throughout the world, then we know we have learned our lessons in Cyprus well, and are willing to continue to learn. We rotate our contingent there every six months.

As a result, when we send a team of logistics experts to the Middle East, we know that we are really sending experts. When our forces are able to move for Cyprus to Egypt at 24 hours notice we can conclude, with some considerable pride, that no matter how hopeless the situation may seem in the Middle East, no matter how great and technical are the logistics problems, no matter how deep seated the prejudices and the hatred, and no matter how difficult external influences may make the situation, the fact is that we in Canada can demonstrate to the rest of the world, from our experience in Cyprus, that we do believe the peace can be kept there as well as in other parts of the world.

Our reputation as one of the most ably trained and dedicated peacekeeping forces in the world, is a reputation Canadians should prize. When we are explaining to the Canadian people the rationale for having armed forces at all, I cannot think of a rationale I would be more proud to place before the Canadian people than the fact that we are in this business not to make war but to prevent it. For that reason I welcome the role we are asked to undertake, and I commend our forces for the role they are undertaking in Cyprus. I welcome the opportunity to go from there to another corner of the world where we can make our experience available. Mr. Speaker, we really are ready to go to any corner of the world to help keep the peace.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is the understanding of the Chair that the speech by the hon. member who has just taken his seat concludes this debate. I will now put the motion.

Motion (Mr. Sharp) agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before we proceed to private members' business at five o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Transport—Prevention of Abridgement of Prince Edward Islands' right to ferry link with mainland—Possibility of government operation of service; the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Criminal Code—Request that abortion be removed; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Air Canada—Construction of new computer centre at Dorval—Effect on Winnipeg centre.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR COPY OF EVALUATION REPORT OF INDUSTRIAL DESIGN ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest evaluation report of the Industrial Design Assistance Program (IDAP).

He said: Mr. Speaker, for the past five years a number of us have been trying to obtain evaluation studies from the government concerning the spending of hundreds of millions of dollars of the public's money, and in fully consistent fashion for the past five years the government has been denying members of parliament, and therefore the people of the country, access to serious and relevant information that has been accumulated in evaluating a variety of programs that provide assistance to the private sector. For example, since 1965 the alphabet soup programs, PAIT, IRDIA, IDAP, PEP and GAAP have received from the public treasury, that is to say, from the taxpayers of Canada, $1,315,600,000. This has been paid in outright grants, in the main to the private sector.

An hon. Member: A very active government.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, very active in giving away the people's money to the corporations. That is exactly the issue, and I want to state the problem as clearly as I can.

The NDP has not taken the position that under no circumstances should grants be made to the private sector for research and development. It is normally held that where financial assistance is provided there should be some direct return if a successful commercial product results, or if other benefit occurs to the company concerned. We believe that when programs like IDAP, the Industrial Design Assistance Program, provide money to corporations, the least that could be done is to provide members of parliament with an evaluation of the progress made, on an annual basis. I do not know of any other legislature that is so systematic in keeping from its members the opportunity to pass judgment on spending programs.

● (1700)

The United States, for all its faults, is a governmental system. We are seeing some of those faults right now of course, but its system has left Canadian members of parliament in the dark ages. No member of the House of Representatives or member of the United States Senate would tolerate the restrictions imposed on members of parliament when they try to find out the efficacy of government spending. Members of the U.S. House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate have virtually unlimited access to studies that have been done to evaluate government spending programs, whether they be programs of the kind under discussion now of providing assistance to the corporate sector or other programs. They have set up all kinds of investigative committees that enable them to conduct their own inquiries independent of the executive branch. In this country we are totally dependent on whether the government of the day deems it politically expedient to reveal such information.

Each year we are called upon to vote in the estimates hundreds of millions of dollars, in a state of total ignorance. We just do not know if the programs are working. We do not know if PAIT, IRDIA, or IDAP are providing the benefits that they are supposed to provide to the Canadian Public. Each year since I have been a member of this House, I have asked in a committee of the House of Commons for a systematic evaluation of the various programs. I asked the former minister of industry, trade and commerce, Mr. Pepin, and I have asked the present minister, but I have never received them. Last spring, I raised these questions again and the minister followed the bad example of his predecessor by not providing any information at all.

I would refer hon. members to the reports of the Standing Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs particularly issues No. 9 and No. 14, respectively dated April 10, 1973, and May 8, 1973. Anyone who wants to take pride in the democratic political procedures in Canada would be ashamed of the testimony. It discloses a total attempt to obscure rather than make clear the results of those spending programs.

The question at stake is what guarantee we have that the moneys provided to IDAP, IRDIA or PAIT are used to the benefit of the public. How do we know that the companies getting the benefits had not already planned to undertake the particular research and development without government assistance? That is the crucial question, Mr. Speaker, and there are a number of ways of studying it. It has been done elsewhere but this government either does not want to do it or, having done it, does not want to reveal the results.

The problem can be put in a more concrete way. For example, if I own a company and, because of internal studies, am planning to expand a certain product during the next three years because my own studies show a growing market for it, then if I have any entrepreneurial talent I will go ahead. Now, if I were aware that the federal government would provide $1 million or $2 million or several hundred thousand dollars for research and development of that product, I would be mad if I did not take advantage of that benefit at the expense of the taxpayer. The point is that the moneys in this instance would not be spent in the way that was intended. It is intended that the money should be used as an incentive for a company to expand in a direction that it would not have done otherwise.

There are a lot of economists now who say that such government spending is a total waste precisely because competent businessmen in the private sector would have already made plans to expand in a certain direction even without financial assistance from the government, but they will obviously take advantage of this welfare assistance now provided by the state. It is that kind of study that we need. We have to be shown that there is a direct causal relationship between the federal government and businessmen in this area. The onus of proof is on the government to show that there is a specific action and not just express the pious hope that there is. If it cannot be established, then the program should be cancelled.

Mr. Breau: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Broadbent: At the conclusion of my remarks. One aspect of the question that has come up, not only from this minister but other ministers who have refused to reveal such studies, is that confidentiality would be a problem; that somehow some companies would gain at the expense of the particular companies that have received assistance or made known that they received the assistance and under what circumstances. That is a red herring, Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no need, in the kind of study I am asking for, to give the names of the companies involved in it. It can be shown that X, Y or Z companies engage in certain activities and received grants. They do not have to be named. It is a well known practice in social science to conceal names if some relevant information would be revealed in a public study that could be of direct benefit to competitors. An essential point is that a study of the firms receiving hundreds of millions of dollars could be presented with the names left out so that nothing would be lost to them as individual companies.

Similarly it has been suggested that in some cases military security is involved. That is a red herring, too. It is interesting that one of the few studies that has been released to the public was done on military industrial research and development. If there was a concern for security, one would have thought it would not have been made available.

In summing up, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I have no expectation of moving this docile, secretive government on this issue but I repeat, hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent—$150 million last year and the same the year before—well over $1 billion has been spent in this area since 1965. I think the government has a fundamental obligation to the people of Canada, and to members of parliament, to reveal studies such as those we are concerned about at present, so that we may have some idea of the facts when we are called to vote, year in, year out, the money that is to be spent on these programs.

• (1710)

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) with great interest, particularly when he referred to alphabet soup programs and suggested we are probably spending too much on them. I suggest we are not spending enough. I think these programs are excellent. They are not fully appreciated. I do not expect the NDP to appreciate them, as much of this money goes to the private sector. On the other hand, if NDP suggestions were adopted, what is now the private sector would become the public sector and, oh boy, you would really see money going down the drain.

The program known as IDAP is rather interesting, although not too well known. It has to do with industrial design assistance.

Mr. Broadbent: Why is the government afraid to disclose certain information about it?

Mr. Danson: The government provides incentives for those who are interested in research, development and engineering. Not enough incentives are put into design. Most of the money spent in programs such as these goes to corporations, who happen to be the people who conduct business in this country. In some cases, corporations must contribute as well; in the present case, they contribute 50 per cent. That is, the corporations must contribute 50 per cent towards any design and construction process, and IDAP provides the other 50 per cent.

The question of secrecy disturbs many of us. I agree that there should be as much disclosure as possible. Of course, some caution must be exercised in dealings involving commercial agreements and intelligence. Certainly, we are entitled to any information which would not infringe on these areas.

The matter being discussed concerns me, inasmuch as design in this country simply is not good enough. I do not think government or business has paid enough attention to design. This becomes evident when one compares our situation with that of countries of comparable economic size, such as the Scandinavian countries. The Scandinavian countries have always been very conscious of design. Their designs have always been imaginative. I have seen their products and have not seen anything superior to the way they design and manufacture various products.

Also, good design helps those countries to sell. I have had some experience in this regard, having dealt with the National Design Council in the private sector and seen the work which can be done with rather limited resources to encourage industry to think more in terms of good design. Good design involves basically engineering and better manufacturing methods. I had one experience in this regard many years ago when I was sales manager of a plastics manufacturing company.

A man came to me with a magic lantern. I had not seen one since I was a little boy. It was made of tin. I was fascinated by it. This thing was selling for around $4 at that time; then you could still get something for $4. I took it back to my office and examined it. The man wanted to duplicate it in the conventional material being used at that time, which was polystyrene. I took it to another designer friend of mine, who felt he could do many things with the lantern. The result was a product which was exceptionally well designed and which could be manufactured for much less cost than the original products. Sufficient research had been done into the material which was to be used, in this case one of the phenols, known as Bakelite. The lantern sold very well—I am going back 20 years—and sold in large volumes around the world. It could be manufactured for less than half the price of the old tin product. It was of much better design, much more functional, much less expensive and of much higher quality. That shows what you can do with good design.

Canadian manufacturers do not give design sufficient priority. We are prone to copy. Perhaps that is the difference between the Scandinavians and ourselves. We tend to go to the United States and do our design by shopping at Macy's, so to speak. In other words, a manufacturer goes down to the States, picks up a variety of things, and produces them in Canada. This is regrettable because that does not develop our export markets. I agree with the hon. member; our private sector should be developing designs. We should be doing everything in our power to encourage this.

I think that the alphabet soup programs to which the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby referred offer great opportunities for developing industry in this country. They can lead to good design and innovation. The government of Canada is responsible for many such programs. During the life of the last Parliament we tried to put these programs together in one package. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce was responsible for many of them; other departments were responsible for others. The department developed what is known as the businessman's guide to government. Several thousand copies were circulated across this country. When business associations want to meet, they sometimes ask for copies of the publication. It is a pity that more people do not know about it. It refers to good government programs.

I have before me a copy of what might be termed as the businessman's guide to the federal government. I will be pleased to table it and, if there is unanimous consent, to have it appended to Hansard.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member cannot table anything. He is speaking only as a private member.

Mr. Danson: Well, I can try.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. This particular period, the private members' hour, is always a time of great stress for the Chair. I said on a previous occasion that I wondered whether the hon. member presenting a motion was really having his day in court in arguing as to why a certain order of the House should issue for certain information. It seems that hon. members talk about almost anything vaguely associated with the subject matter of the motion but do not talk about the main issue itself. I think I should be a little more stern.

The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has asked the House to decide whether or not an order of the House shall issue for a copy of the latest evaluation report of the Industrial Design Assistance Programme (IDAP). Speaking on that topic, the hon. member certainly presented his case. He did it clearly within the rules of the House. He was relevant. With great respect to the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson), I suggest he is talking about a variety of things which sometimes come reasonably close, but never close enough to enable the Chair to relax, to the main matter. That has made the Chair uneasy, rather than easy. I ask the hon. member to look at the motion and to deal with the point at issue.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I take your admonition to heart but assume you will allow me the same latitude you allowed the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby who spoke of a whole range of programs. He wondered about their value. I was only responding, I thought, to the hon. member and was dealing, I thought, with questions raised in connection with the report to which he referred.

The hon. member suggested that this was a sort of corporate welfare program. I do not think it is. I do not suggest for a moment that there are not such cases. Having had experience with the department, before and after entering Parliament, I can say that there are strict criteria and that these programs are carefully monitored and handled. I should like to see a proper approach taken to them. At present we are concerned particularly about industrial design. I should like to see the government show greater leadership in this regard than it has done in the past.

I wrote a paper on design when I first came here. I was so incensed at bad design. I said that there ought to be minimum standards of design. I do not like the prospect of some sort of jury monitoring the creative crafts, but I am appalled at the shabbiness of the designs we have had to tolerate around here right from architecture to letterheads, and I should like to see something done about it.

● (1720)

This program, as far as I can see it, is an excellent one and one which should be expanded. The point the hon. member is making is a good one. Programs such as these must be evaluated and reported upon and then given adequate publicity because the publicity resulting from an intelligent evaluation can spur others on to using them intelligently. I am delighted at this opportunity, which the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has provided, because I have never had an opportunity to speak in this House about the inadequacy of attention paid to design by the government itself. For example, when we changed the PA system in this chamber, little attention was paid to the design. We have these little metal boxes in front of us, efficient, no doubt, but really quite ugly. I feel something equally efficient but something more attractive could have been installed.

Canadian industry, too, has been deficient in this respect with some notable exceptions. The motion has merit and should be taken seriously by the government. The greater the publicity given to these programs the better, because the growth of our exports is related to this type of activity. I believe this is the subject which deserves far more attention than it has so far received, because not only would an advance in this direction make the economy more prosperous but it would lead to our becoming far more conscious with living with ugliness; it would also make us appreciate how much more pleasant it is to live in surroundings that are harmoniously and aesthetically pleasing.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question? It is a simple one. Is he for or against the motion?

Mr. Danson: That is a very good question. I do not make up my mind until I have heard the debate. I am sure that is the object of the debate. I understand there are some worthwhile interventions forthcoming which will help me reach a final opinion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does the hon. member not find it uncomfortable sitting on the fence?

Mr. Bell: He has been doing it for years.

An hon. Member: He is a Liberal, isn't he?

Mr. H. T. Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I am glad of the opportunity to say something on this motion.

An hon. Member: Are you for it?

Mr. Herbert: In principle I shall be for it. Maybe, first of all, we should review the machinery we already have to see whether we need to look any further. I am happy to speak on industrial design assistance program—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is not what is before us.

Mr. Herbert: —and recall what it has done in order that we may better estimate the need for any improvement.

This program has received an enthusiastic response since its inception. It evolved in response to requests from industry, and the primary object is to improve the competitive position of Canadian secondary industry and to expand sales in foreign markets by upgrading the design quality of Canadian products. The second objective of the program is to create in Canada an environment which will attract and retain skilled industrial design talent, initiate new Canadian designs and develop product ideas. IDAP provides assistance on a cost shared basis in support of 50 per cent of the approved cost of a design product, excluding capital costs. Projects cover the design of such diverse items as an X-ray unit, a tea kettle, a relocatable school, an automatic skate sharpener, a tent trailer and office furniture.

The first comprehensive report and evaluation of the program covers the period from its inauguration on August 17, 1970, to March 31, 1973. Over this period, 64 projects were approved for support involving an estimated total cost of $2.87 million. The IDAP commitment amounts to $1.439 million, of which $885,000 was actually paid out. The program was recommended by the National Design Council and developed by the office of design in consultation with others in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The IDAP program received treasury board approval on December 18, 1969. Departmental news releases about the program were issued on February 17 and August 17, 1970.

The first application under the program was received by the department on August 20, 1970, and the first meeting of the IDAP Advisory Committee was held on December 17, 1970. The specific aims of the program are to improve the design quality of Canadian products and to create an economic environment in Canada which will advance the level of industrial design capability in the nation.

Projects approved for support conform to the program's selection criteria and are the subject of a formal agreement between the department and the company which ensures that if the project is successful exploitation of the results will be pursued and will contribute in an optimum way toward achievement of the objectives I have mentioned.

Assistance under the program is available to companies incorporated in Canada, to groups of companies organized as consortia, and to trade associations to the extent that they can satisfy the requirements of the program. The fundamental requirements for IDAP support are that a new or improved product will result from the IDAP project, that the project carries with it good prospects for profitable follow-on production and sales from a Canadian manufacturing base, and that the applicant company is prepared to make a substantial contribution to the development cost. The department's contribution to a project is normally 50 per cent of the approved cost.

● (1730)

The program's project selection criteria require objective appraisal of the merits of the development proposal and of the capabilities of the applicant company. Development proposals are appraised for innovation and for technical feasibility within time and cost constraints. The commercial aspects are appraised with respect to the needs, characteristics and size of the market, the growth of the market, tariff and non-tariff barriers to market access, the nature of competition in the market and realistic market penetration. The capabilities of applicant companies are evaluated as to organization, facilities for follow-on exploitation and financial resources. With regard to organization, the technical, marketing and management capabilities and the corporate characteristics are of special interest.

Title to patents, designs, technical data and materials resulting from a project vests in, and remains the property of, the applicants. However, applicants must undertake not to transfer technical data or inventions, methods or processes resulting from the project to anyone for the purpose of producing or manufacturing outside Canada products identical to, or substantially the same as, the products resulting from the project without the consent of the minister. In addition to these general requirements, the following specific requirements must be met by every IDAP application. Financial support by IDAP is limited to projects concerned with the design of durable products—not throw-aways—which are produced in quantity by industrial processes and which have significant sensitivity to the physical and psychological needs of the user.

The following is a guide to the types of projects that are eligible for support by IDAP. They include office, institutional and home furniture; medical and scientific instruments; recreational and industrial vehicles; toys, games, sports equipments; craft items which are functional, such as dinnerware, ashtrays, etc.; farm and industrial machinery and implements; boats and marine products; functional clothing for sports and industry, such as fire protection suits, life jackets, etc.; household appliances and data processing and communications equipment.

IDAP does not support the design of items which are materials, such as upholstery fabrics, wall-panelling, hardwood flooring, etc.; items generally identified as components, such as gears, axles, relays, casters, etc.; items generally associated with engineering, such as submersible pumps, distribution transformers, etc.; items generally associated with architecture, such as girders, buildings, structural assemblies, etc.; items predominantly graphic, such as record-jackets, point-of-purchase packaging, books, etc.; fashion items, such as clothing, costume jewellery, etc.; or individual traditional handcrafted items of a decorative, non-functional nature such as paintings, sculptures, etc.

The product or products to be designed must be innovative. This is defined for IDAP as the practical implementation of industrial design to provide new or improved products, offering a significant advancement in form and/or function, from the user's point of view. Because design innovation is relative, its significance must be evaluated with respect to the design of similar products currently in development or already available on the market. Projects which propose design innovations based only on cost reduction or ease of manufacture are not eligible, although these factors have important additive value. Projects related to annual model changeovers, without substantial design innovation, are not eligible.

The costs for industrial designer services, whether supplied by staff or consultant designers, must be not less than 25 per cent of the total eligible costs for the project. An IDAP project must be an expansion of the design program of the company or companies making the application. The design expansion may be measured in either of two ways: as an increase in the applicant's normal budget affecting industrial design manpower, or as an expansion by the applicant into a new or highly innovative product area. Thus, an applicant company planning little or no expansion in industrial design manpower can qualify if it proposes to enter into manufacture of a totally new product line, or if it proposes to develop an exceptionally innovative product in an existing product line.

The industrial design services required for an IDAP project must be directed by a person qualified in the field of industrial design who is included in the record of designers maintained by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, or who has the qualifications that would permit his registration in the record of designers. To qualify for work on an IDAP project, an industrial designer must either have graduated in a course of industrial design from an accredited university and have had not less than two years' practical and applicable industrial design experience, which experience must be documented in a professional portfolio covering products which have actually been designed and marketed, or he must have graduated from an accredited university in a related design discipline, such as architecture or engineering, and have had not less than two years' practical and applicable industrial design experience.

This experience must have been sufficient to provide an ability to solve the types of problems normally encountered in industrial design and which relate to environmental and human factors, the integration of aesthetics with function and form, a knowledge of materials and manufacturing processes for a wide variety of markets; and this experience must be documented. Or in lieu of formal design training at the university level, an industrial designer must have had substantial practical and applicable industrial design experience of not less than five years which will have been sufficient to provide an ability to solve the types of problems normally encountered in industrial design, as I have enumerated.

Up to March 31, 1973, 64 projects had been approved. Up to that same date, 33 projects had been completed. In the year 1970-71, 11 projects were approved for a total IDAP commitment of some $226,000. In the year 1971-72, 27 projects were approved for a total commitment of $629,000; and in the year 1972-73, 26 projects were approved for a total commitment of $571,000 in that fiscal year.

One measure of the success of the IDAP program is the increase in industrial design expertise in Canada and the participation of that discipline in the program. An industrial designer was used for the first time by the applicant company in the great majority of the approved projects. Indications are that many of these companies will continue to utilize this new-found technology, and already there are proposals in hand for companies who want to obtain a second IDAP grant. Some industrial design houses have been particularly skilful in promoting the value of the program and have used it to good advantage. While most design houses have been involved in only one project to date, others have managed as many as eight.

The largest grant to date is $55,300, the smallest is $4,000, and the average grant to date is about $22,000. Allowable costs under the program include salary, wages and other operational and administrative costs for staff industrial design and associated technical personnel. Also included—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to disturb the peace that you seem to be enjoying up on your plateau, but I am wondering whether Your Honour sees any relationship between the speech now being made and the motion before us which asks that an order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest evaluation report on the industrial design assistance program, IDAP.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am among the most trusting of human beings and I was hoping and anticipating; but I really have not seen very much relationship between the speech being made and the motion that has been presented.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, may I speak to the point of order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Breau) on the point of order.

● (1740)

Mr. Breau: I respect your position and your decision, Mr. Speaker, but I submit it is very difficult, after one has put forward his motion and stated his position, to respond without in some way giving information about the program. This is particularly so when the hon. member asking for the information has suggested that we have not divulged it. In order to justify our position, I suggest we must explain the nature of the program.

An hon. Member: In no way.

Mr. Broadbent: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I entirely agree with and respect your earlier intervention in the discussion, suggesting that members of this House have to relate their remarks to the subject before us. It is abundantly clear that government members use this hour to talk-out a serious motion without giving reasons for or against disclosure. I attempted deliberately to relate my comments to the subject matter of my motion. Now we have various government members simply getting to their feet and blabbering about the program, when the issue is, should the government or should it not reveal the study on the efficacy of this program.

An hon. Member: That's right on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As I said during a debate that took place a month or so ago on a similar motion when the same type of problem was encountered, it is helpful to have some understanding of what the document itself is concerned with. However, I think it is going a bit far for the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), who is making a very good presentation in respect of the work carried out under this program, to do so without referring to the merits of the issue, namely, whether the evaluation report should be presented to the House. I think that is the sole issue.

Since hon. members are getting a great deal of information now from research staffs and the like, I would hope those staffs would bear in mind that what is being asked for is not an over-all debate on the program but whether, members having become aware of certain facts, the report should be presented to the House or whether in the wisdom of the government it should not. I am as interested as other members in the industrial design assistance program. However, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) has come before us and asked that a specific order of the House do issue, and I think that is the point to which the hon. member should address himself.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, with due deference to the Chair, I do not see how we can make an assessment on whether we should have what is called for in the motion unless we have an appreciation of what is already in existence. I have been trying to explain what we already have, in order that we might make a just assessment as to whether we require further information. I have spoken about the size of grants, the number of grants, and so on, with the object of pointing out that possibly we already have enough information in our hands and that any more is unnecessary. I am not suggesting that is necessarily so, but I am pointing out that we do have a tremendous amount of information available to us at this time. I have come to some conclusions concerning this program.

An hon. Member: We don't want conclusions.

Mr. Gilbert: Stay with the motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is out of order.

Mr. Herbert: I have reached some conclusions, based on the information we have today, about whether we need further information.

Mr. Gilbert: Stay with the motion.

Mr. Baker: There is nothing like a conclusion to make a member speechless.

Mr. Herbert: I am giving it deep thought.

An hon. Member: Time is going down the drain while a lot of clocks are ticking.

Mr. Herbert: I have come to the conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that IDAP provides an excellent incentive to industry to develop new and better products in sectors where industrial design is a prime consideration. There is a need for increased attention to the monitoring of approved projects. This is possibly the point referred to by the hon. member in presenting his motion. There is also a certain need for better marketing knowledge on the part of all persons concerned with the program, including industry management, departmental officers and industrial designers.

The impact and success of the program could be improved possibly in two ways. It could be improved with an increase in liaison activity between the office of design and the line branches, and by an increase in promotional activity by the various provincial governments, regional offices of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and professional and business associations. From the information available to me and, I assume, therefore available to the hon. member who moved the motion, I have no real problem at the moment in assessing the success of the program. It is fine in principle to talk about evaluation reports, but at the moment I do not know whether such are produced on a periodic basis by the department. However, perhaps the parliamentary secretary could enlighten us on that point.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the motion of the hon. member is very simple in that it asks that an order of this House do issue for the production of an evaluation report with regard to IDAP. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) was very clear, cogent, precise and persuasive in his argument about the necessity to produce the evaluation report in order that members of this House, and perhaps members of a committee, could study it and decide whether the program should be continued, dropped or cut back. So far we have heard members of the Liberal Party speaking in great detail about the virtues of the program without discussing whether the evaluation report should be produced. The hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson), who is a businessman of some success, spent a great deal of time speaking about the program and how great it was. Can you imagine the situation where that hon. member, having decided his factory should do some research and development on a product, having called in his comptroller and other executives to assess the desirability of developing the product and having set aside the money to do so, finding out three months later that no evaluation study had been carried out in regard to the efficacy of the product? We have here a government program, and in order to assess its efficacy we should have access to the evaluation study. It would be nonsense and a sheer waste of money not to evaluate the research done on a particular project. As members of parliament, we have a responsibility to see how moneys are spent in respect of IDAP.

The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby says the government has an evaluation report. We should like to study it in order to decide whether the program is effective. If it is not, we would propose measures to end it. For the hon. member for York North to suggest that members of the NDP would stop grants to private firms is sheer nonsense. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby said we would gladly give this money, but we feel we have a responsibility in this regard.

An hon. Member: He said it was a waste.

Mr. Gilbert: He said we have a responsibility to see that this money is properly spent. It would certainly be a waste if members could not study the evaluation report. The question arises as to why the government should attempt to hide the report. Is it disappointed with the results of the program? I recall that when I was a member of the committee on finance, the president of Electrohome appeared on behalf of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and spoke about television sets in Canada. He said there were nine companies which manufactured television sets—seven United States companies and two Canadian companies.

● (1750)

The Canadian companies are Clairtone and Electrohome. Here we have Canadian firms competing with Unites States firms in the production of television sets. Where is the research and development conducted in respect of the seven United States firms? Is it in Canada? No. All the Canadian firms do is assemble the television sets. We have two Canadian firms competing with seven United States firms in the television industry.

We have here a program under which we could make use of the research and development programs of these various companies and thereby give an opportunity to young Canadian research men and engineers to develop Canadian products. We have IDAP which accommodates such research and development. Surely we should be able to evaluate any study that results from any moneys we give. For the government to shelter behind some of the excuses it has given, to the effect that confidentiality or secrecy may be affected, is pure nonsense. This is really demeaning to members of this House who would like to know the effects of this program.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Breau) will get up and say he supports this program and sees the necessity of all members of parliament studying the evaluation report so we might determine whether the program should be continued. I hope that hon. member will not shelter behind the weak excuse he will probably give, because that would not be worthy of him. There are only five minutes remaining in this discussion, and I shall sit down in order to give the parliamentary secretary an opportunity to say he supports the program and supports the issuance of the evaluation report.

My colleague, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, said that our United States friends can look in depth in and full detail into the programs they sponsor; this makes me feel ashamed that we in Canada should deny such information not only to members of parliament but to Canadians at large. I would hope that at one minute to six when the vote is taken, the vote will be favourable.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate because I believe it is an important subject. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) have argued that there should be an order of the House for the issuance of an evaluation report so we may evaluate the usefulness of these programs. In support of their argument they say the government has refused—I believe "denied" was the word used by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby—members of parliament access to information with regard to these programs.

If that is the only reason, there is absolutely no reason to have these reports, because on May 8, 1973, before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) when defending the estimates of his department for the year gave quite an elaborate report on the estimates as well as of the programs.

It is very difficult to understand the attitude of members of the New Democratic Party. So far as I can see, they really do not want the evaluation report published in order to evaluate the program or to find out whether it is working. I say this because when listening to the hon. member it was obvious that he believes this program is a waste of money. The problem in respect of the NDP is that because of their political philosophy they believe anything the government does in the private sector is bad.

Mr. Broadbent: Did you listen to the argument?

Mr. Breau: Let me continue.

Mr. Broadbent: It is obvious that you were not listening.

Mr. Breau: I was. I also listened to the hon. member as the time the departmental estimates were before the committee. It seems to me they are looking for information to further their political aims and bring in distortions. They say the matter of commercial confidentiality is not important. The minister tabled before the committee and explained in detail as objectively as he could, not on a selective basis because it was difficult without divulging confidential matters, the sales to actual expenditure ratio and the projected sales to projected expenditure ratio.

What else could the hon. member want, unless it is information to be used in an election campaign in order to show there is a corporate rip-off? The hon. member wants the evaluation, but on a subjective basis. He does not want to make a study on an objective basis. What that party wants is information as to the names of the companies in order to pursue a political debate. If they wish to do that, I think they should do so without these evaluation reports.

Evaluation is carried on within the government on an ongoing basis. It is done constantly, for the benefit of the government and of particular departments. I am directly opposed to this motion. I do not believe it is necessary. The minister gave all the information he could without divulging commercially confidential matters. If this information were divulged publicly, the validity of the program would be denied. If the members of the NDP do not believe in research or doing anything in the private sector, I disagree with that position and think we should continue to help the private sector in respect of research and development.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[Mr. Breau.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House resumed, from Tuesday, November 13, consideration of Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue some of the remarks I was making last Tuesday evening at ten o'clock when the adjournment debate was called. As an hon. member has said in this debate, the bill which we are discussing is a negative piece of legislation. It accomplishes three things: it gives Ottawa, by means of a screening agency, the right to restrict the influx of foreign capital to establish a new industry; it gives the same agency the power to restrict the use of foreign capital already in Canada; and it restricts the foreign takeover of an already existing industry.

This government has once again failed to get to the root of the problem. It has submitted a piece of ad hoc legislation. It has failed to come up with a positive long-term policy to encourage Canadian participation in new and existing industries. Until such time as we can encourage large-scale Canadian investment, we will require foreign capital, and a great deal of it, unless we are content to stand still and mark time.

What kind of long-term policy should we have? In this respect I can do no better than quote from the statement made by Mr. Darcy McKeough, parliamentary assistant to the Premier of Ontario, when he appeared before the Standing Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on Tuesday, June 19, 1973. He said:

> The government of Canada must approach foreign investment positively. Its actions must be co-ordinated with and supported by federal action in tariffs, trade, taxation, competition, energy and resources policy. Each of these actions should be strongly directed toward Canadian industrial development needs, recognizing not only our basic economic goals of employment and income growth, but also the kind of lifestyle we as Canadians seek to achieve.

He also stated, and here I am paraphrasing, that Canadians should be more prominent on boards of directors of subsidiary firms in Canada; there should be increased Canadian equity participation in all Canadian-based enterprises; we should encourage portfolio rather than equity investment, and clear guidelines should be applied to the performance of foreign industry and unions in Canada.

● (2010)

I agree with these statements in their entirety. I believe that the present bill, because of its uncertainty and negative approach, has driven away or delayed the investment of foreign capital in certain areas following its introduction in this House.

I was interested to read an article which appeared in the October 8 issue of the Financial Times of Canada, at page 11, about a new recycling plant being built by MacMillan Bloedel in the Oakland, California, area. It will be owned 15 per cent by the workers employed there. Under the plan, and I will not go into in detail, not only do the employees become shareholders but the corporation is provided with capital that is paid off with pre-tax dollars. Of course, United States tax laws are different from ours.

I would suggest that we must examine our tax laws and perhaps redraft them in such a manner that they will encourage Canadian corporations to utilize such a scheme and allow the workers to receive a portion of the profits. Schemes such as these, and tax laws which will allow tax credits to individuals who purchase shares in certain designated corporations, will go a long way toward substituting Canadian ownership for foreign ownership.

It is up to the government to develop a positive policy and present it to parliament as expeditiously as possible. Until such time as it does, we can only look forward to a continued feeling of foreign domination and further regional disparity.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) asked to be recognized. I recognize the hon. member.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely thank the hon. member who was ready to speak on Bill C-132 and the related amendments. I thank you for recognizing me at this time.

Bill C-132 deals with foreign investment in Canada, a question which has for a number of years interested the whole population, especially economists, whether they are partial or not to these investments. I will mention only one of them, Jacques Parizeau, from Montreal. According to him, foreign investments are not helping Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we have known for many years that our neighbours to the south have contributed significantly to the development of our natural resources, when we could have dealt with it ourselves. Today, Quebec Superior Court Justice Malouf ordered that work in the James Bay area be suspended because the provincial government has supposedly encroached upon the rights of Quebec Indians.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the James Bay development is essential, not for political reasons, but to develop—

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): To produce electricity!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): —yes, to produce electricity, but mostly to develop the province and consequently the natural resources of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, up to now the James Bay development projet has been financed by loans from the United States. I am not in agreement on this with the present Quebec premier, Mr. Bourassa. Recently, he borrowed $100 million from the United States at an interest rate of 10 per cent repayable within 25 years. This means that during that 25 year-period, we will have paid $250 million in interest alone and we will still be owing the $100 million.

Mr. Speaker, when the Quebec premier came back from the United States he did not return with wheelbarrows full of American dollars. No. He came back with a promissory note under which the Quebec government undertakes to pay to American financiers $100 million bearing interest at 10 per cent for 25 years. The note is signed by Mr. Robert Bourassa and endorsed by the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, should the James Bay project not have proved profitable, Mr. Bourassa would have failed to get even two bits from the Americans. But because they saw there an electrical energy potential that might perhaps be useful to them in five or ten years from now, they said: Robert, go ahead, we are going to finance you. How? With figures we call bank credits, borrowed most of the time here in Canada, from our Canadian bankers. But to whose advantage? To the advantage of the American lenders who finance the James Bay project.

Mr. Speaker, I said and I repeated it for the last five years at least that those figures could easily have been written by the governor of the Bank of Canada, in Ottawa, if only the Quebec premier had taken the trouble to apply to that bank, which is our chief financial institution. We could thus have said: We are the owners of the James Bay development. Today, we have to say: We are the servants of some American financiers who now control 100 per cent of the James Bay development. The first contracts for building roads to that area were awarded to Americans from Cleveland and everything else is in keeping with that.

Mr. Speaker, why would Canada, the province of Quebec or some other province have to ask the American people permission to develop our natural ressources? So long as we keep on saying: Let us go get American, German, French, Spanish or Soviet capital to develop our natural resources, how can ws say that we are masters in our own house? We could so easily say it with the control of the Bank of Canadas' operations.

● (2020)

Even though some may think that the Creditists are dreaming in colour those who are dreaming about the United States are making even sillier dreams than the Creditists who are suggesting a logical solution to the problems currently facing us.

Bill C-132, whose purpose is to ensure our control over foreign investment in Canada, contains nothing new. We can control them without this bill. I wish to state that I am not opposed to the Americans, Germans, Hungarians or Bulgarians investing in Canada and establishing manufacturing industries or developing our resources. We are not opposed to it. However, standards should exist. We should have some regulations which would permit us to tell foreign companies: Reinvest your profits in Canada where you are doing business. Do not run away with our resources. Do not run away with the product of Canadian economic growth. Stay here to develop still further our country and provinces.

Shortly we shall be confronting our neighbours to the South about oil. The Alberta people are saying: We want to control our resources and not to be told by Ottawa what we should do with the Americans. In this connection, I support the government of Alberta which says: Listen. Our natural resources belong to us. I supported premier Bennett during the discussion and fight over the Columbia River in British Columbia. This fight lasted for seven years under a Progressive Conservative Prime Minister as well as under a Liberal Prime Minister. The premier of British Columbia won his point after seven years of work.

Today, Alberta says and rightly so: We are owners of our natural resources. In the Maritime as well as the western provinces, they say: We are the owners of our fisheries. Quebec says: We are the owners of our hydroelectric resources inasmuch as we do not borrow from the Americans nor sell them these resources.

Mr. Speaker, I am far from thinking of telling the Americans to stay home, not to invest in Canada, in either Quebec or Ontario. It is important, however, that these people who are now using credit generated by our Canadian banks at least leave their profits in Canada in order to achieve the economic development of this country, to control unemployment, to fill in present economic, social and political gaps.

Mr. Speaker, the Creditists cannot work miracles and neither can Bill C-132. This legislation merely aims at letting foreigners know that they may invest here but without taking over our economy and companies, nor the operation of our natural resources. We are saying to these companies: Come to this country, but the control over our natural resources is ours, the Bank of Canada is ours. We are using it and you, from the outside, will have to abide by our laws, standards, and logical criteria in this country so that Canada remains the property of its people.

[English]

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am very anxious to put my thoughts on record on the question of foreign investment in Canada and Bill C-132, the government's answer to the problem. I say "problem," Mr. Speaker, because we have been told over and over again that there is a serious problem with respect to foreign investment in Canada.

Before I get into the matter of the bill itself I should like to dwell for a moment or two on this "problem." I feel there must be one because so many people have said so much about it for so long a time. But just what is that problem? I had hoped the government would identify it when they set out to offer a cure. Before I decide whether to accept the cure or reject it, I want to know what the problem is—and, Mr. Speaker, I do not mean that catch phrase of the NDP, "economic nationalism". As recently as last Sunday night, on CBC television the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) made another call for his version of democratic socialism in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): I am reminded that many of the countries behind the iron curtain label themselves as democratic socialists. When I hear these two words from the mouth of the leader of the NDP I worry about the implications of economic nationalism in the Canadian way of life. I cannot help feeling that if there is a problem with respect to foreign investment in Canada, the true nature of it is quite different from what the average Canadian is led to believe.

If there is some danger that Canada is to be taken over by some group of foreigners, or if there is some danger that our Canadian identity is being threatened by outsiders, I want to know about it. I want to know just where the danger lies and I want to know the extent of the danger. I want it expressed in terms that the average citizen of our country can understand, because it is their interest that we are discussing here.

In the past, Mr. Speaker, I have heard people say that their Canadian identity was being threatened by foreign takeovers of business and industry in our country. I do not know just how this threat will materialize, but I cannot become too worried about it. I know what I am, and I am not about to let the investment of any amount of foreign capital in Alberta or Nova Scotia affect my identity. To those who complain that their identity is in any kind of jeopardy from foreign investment, I say their Canadian identity must be very fragile indeed.

My concern goes much deeper than that, Mr. Speaker, I am not concerned about the plight of the individual who is drawing a weekly salary and benefits from a firm that was established with foreign capital. I reserve my concern for the individual in this country who is not drawing salary at all and who has little or no hope of drawing one. I venture to say that the majority of the half-million unemployed in this country would not give a thought to who built the factory if they were offered a job in it. I would also suggest that those employed in the so-called foreign-owned industries would fight to keep their jobs.

● (2030)

One aspect of this bill which concerns me most, apart from the fact that the problem of foreign investment has not been clearly defined, is the manner in which the bill has been presented. On March 30 of this year, as recorded in Hansard the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) made the point that the federal government had not consulted the provincial governments on the question of foreign investment.

Mr. Alexander: Or on anything else.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): In my view, there is no other way that a federal government could draft legislation to deal with a problem that has different implications for different regions of the country. As recorded on page 2783 of Hansard for March 30, the hon. member for Trinity said:

> —it is a matter of regret to the Conservative Party that a bill of this importance to various regions of Canada should be introduced without prior consultation with the provinces.

It does not surprise me that the federal government should attempt to push legislation through this House in this manner, Mr. Speaker. I do not think anyone in this House is surprised that the government would try to push through a bill that has such far-reaching implications to the various provinces without consulting the provincial governments. It is fairly obvious that the federal government has deliberately avoided consultation and that it is not just an oversight. There must be some good reason why the government neglected to seek the views and advice of provincial leaders in this matter. This leads me to believe that this bill is designed to satisfy the NDP economic nationalists: it is a ploy to reward the NDP for past favours and to ensure that those favours will continue for as long as the government chooses to hang on.

When I say that, I would like someone to identify the problem of foreign investment for me and to make some kind of assessment of what the probable effect is on our country. This does not indicate lack of concern, Mr. Speaker—quite the contrary. I am interested enough to want to know whether it is in fact good or bad for our country. I want to know why it is bad, as so many people have maintained, and I want to know what the alternatives are to foreign investment.

I am puzzled by the lack of hard information as to the actual effects and I am puzzled by the fact that the per capita investment in the U.S. by Canadians is greater than the per capita investment in Canada by Americans. My figures are not completely up to date, Mr. Speaker, but a year or so ago it was estimated that total U.S. investment in Canada amounted to about $50 billion. Canadian investment in the U.S. was estimated to be about half that figure, or $25 billion. This works out to a per capita investment in Canada of $161 per American. The per capita investment in the U.S. by Canadians is something like $581. There has been some talk about trying to repatriate most, if not all, of that hefty Canadian investment in U.S. securities, but in my view this is a pipe dream. There is no way that an investor can be lured away from a blue chip investment to the uncertainty of investing in Canadian industry, resources or anything else, without a great deal more security than exists today.

In fairness to ourselves and in fairness to the Canadians we are representing in this debate, if we are to recognize what the real problems are it must be recognized that Canadians invested heavily in the United States because the investment climate in that country was better. Investments which have attracted Canadian funds across the border have been secure investments which at the same time offered a good return and have not been placed in jeopardy from time to time by erratic and unreasonable tax laws. It must be admitted that where a person has a choice, no one is going to put his or her money in a risk venture when high yield, secure investment opportunities are offered elsewhere.

This does not mean that Canadians who invested in the U.S. and elsewhere were not good Canadians. It means, simply, that they were good business people. It means they were concerned about their investments and were not prepared to invest their savings in high-risk ventures involving resource exploration and development. Nor were they prepared to risk their capital in industry, knowing that the money market tended to be erratic and uncertain.

There is even less incentive for Canadians to invest in Canadian-based industries or ventures, Mr. Speaker. The so-called tax reforms of a year or two ago have frightened even the hardiest investors and sent many of them scurrying abroad again looking for investment opportunities. If it were so easy to get Canadians to invest in Canada, we would not be debating this bill, or at least it would be a far different bill from the one we are debating. I think it is obvious to anyone here or elsewhere that you do not just say to a person, "Be a good Canadian and invest your money in this Canadian industry or Canadian resource exploration venture." You have to talk about security of investment, you have to talk about yield, and you have to satisfy investors that their investment is not going to be eroded or wiped out by irresponsible government action.

Let us look at the other side of the coin—American investors looking for investment possibilities in Canada. First of all, it was they who took on the uncertain, high-risk ventures which opened up our north and gave impetus to our heavy industry, especially our resource industries. However, they had something going for them besides an adventuresome spirit and lots of capital. They had a government behind them which encouraged them to find minerals and to build industries to process and market them. They were allowed to keep a reasonable share for themselves—and in addition to tax incentives there were other incentives.

Let us not delude ourselves by ignoring the truths in the matter we are trying to resolve. A false premise will produce a false solution, and it is for that reason that I want to keep the government completely honest while we discuss the matter of foreign investment. Is there a real problem? If there is, what is it? Why is it a problem? Who is being adversely affected?

I believe we have to go back to the statement of the hon. member for Trinity earlier this year to find the answer to those questions, Mr. Speaker. We must go back to square one, consult the provinces and determine which, if any, of the provinces feel there is a serious problem with respect to foreign investment. I cannot accept the view that we are going to lose our identity if we do not throw a few investors out of our country. So I am not satisfied that what we are discussing is purely a federal matter which can be settled by isolating the question and excluding all of those who are really concerned, in a dollars and cents way, about the question of investment both foreign and domestic.

Nova Scotia and New Brunswick would give a far different answer to such a question than would British Columbia or Alberta. If we do not ask them, we are never likely to know for sure what they want. If domestic investment capital and domestic investors were readily available to the have-not provinces, I do not think they would care what we do about foreign investment. But we know all too well that there has not been a rush, on the part of domestic investors, to the Maritimes or to the prairies. Why should there be, Mr. Speaker, when they can find opportunities for investment in other countries where the investments are more secure and where governments are more understanding?

● (2040)

I was appalled at the thinking of the government when the question of foreign investment was capturing the public imagination a couple of years ago, thanks to the economic nationalists, hon. members to my left in the NDP and assorted other personal interest groups. Someone must have thought this talk would result in a great rush on the part of Canadians to buy up everything in sight and that we would suddenly find new millionaires springing up overnight all over Canada. The government could not wait to introduce a capital gains tax. In my view, if Canadians had felt the urge to invest in Canada, then this move frightened most, if not all of them, out of the market.

I am sure some hon. members may wonder why I have not set out to debate this bill clause by clause, Mr. Speaker. But I just cannot see the wisdom of trying to leave the impression that I can improve on a bill that I disagree with so completely. As I said before, this is not a federal problem. What we should be doing is finding an answer at the highest level to a regional problem; and I ask my colleagues, how can we hope to find a solution when we don't know the problem, if indeed there is one? Why can we not ask the provinces what they want, what they need, and seek their suggestions as to what we might do at this level? I believe they would also tell us what they do not need, and at the top of the list would be federal legislation which ignores the regional character of the Canadian economy.

I am not an expert and I would go a long way to avoid leaving that impression with anyone. But I am convinced that we are able to deal with foreign investors in the same way as we deal with Canadians, through existing Canadian laws. If there are loopholes, let us by all means plug them; but let us not chase will-o'-the-wisps in the name of Canadian nationalism or in any other name. Everyone in Canada, whether Canadian born, foreign born, or even a visitor, is subject to the same laws and I cannot bring myself to support new laws unless there is a demonstrated need for them. We may, in fact, need foreign investment controls and regulations, but let us not rush them into being until they have been proven to be required.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I will take this opportunity of making a few comments on Bill C-132 which still is very important. I must say I have had the possibility of giving some opinions a few months ago on what is termed a legislation on foreign investment.

Having heard all the statements, it is obvious that we are looking for mechanisms or a legislation aiming at a take-over by Canadians of their industry and economy. I also feel that it is important to stress all the services that foreign investments or investors have brought into the country. I think that it is important not to reject these investments lightly. On the contrary, I think that we have the responsibility of establishing some mechanisms and to find a certain motivation for Canadians as regards the necessary investments for the expansion of our industries.

