THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL! WORTH TE imes its Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did. THERE are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgment of the people for any great length of time. One of these is Timoxas' ECLECTRIC OIL, purely a preparation of six of some of the best Oils that are known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power, and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation of this Oil, a chemical change takes place, forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any other combination or proportions of the sami ingredients, or any other ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered. It contains no alcohol or other volatile liquids, consequently loses nothing by exporation. Wherever applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparations nearly all the alcohol is lost in that way, and you get only the small quantity of Oils which they may contain.

Where the grasses waved the greenest.

And the rills like silver threads Wound in gleaming curves of beauty
Through the meadow lily beds;
Where the birds sang soft at even
And the zephyrs lightly strayed
Through the cottage window lattice,
There three happy brothers played.

To that cottage, quaint and quiet, Rushed each boy when school was done; Round the fire-side they gathered As low sank the winter sun. Then at mother's knee each listen For the words of counsel sweet,

Falling from her lips so gentle, Ere black sin with footstep fleet Came to crush beneath his iron hee Each budding promise fair,
And in its place sow deadly seed
To bloom and blossom there,
Where underneath whose baleful shade
All goodness fades and dies,

In withered beauty lies. Oh, golden days of sunny youth,

Oh, mother, pure as heaven!
Oh, precious hopes and boyish dreams
Then to me freely given!
Oh, prayers and tears! Oh, angel face,
Pale, beautiful and sad, Shall I not see thee once again And make thy spirit glad? Oh, home so sweet and humble,

Oh, brothers true and brave, Why was not I in childhood's hour Laid in your silent grave? Where over me the winds might sigh, The daisies bud and bloom And summer birds sing lays of peace,—

TWO SIDES TO A STORY. Shoot like Tell." I said with a laugh.
He pointed his rifle steadily.
here came a flash—I heard a cry—
shall hear it until the day I die.
"It is only that Indian fool," said he. I saw the lake's bright surface break;
I saw the mother one instant stand
Like a blasted pine against the sky;
Once again I heard that cry,
Then she lifted to heaven her hand. No need to hear, for I sow that curse! She flung herself forward—once again The lake's bright surface flashed and broke, And once again my hero spoke. "An Indian fool," he said again. Deed fit for a fiend? Ay, that it was.

I broke with my hero from that hour on,
But I know, and you know, that from West to East,
By men who have sunk to the grade of the beast,
Like deeds to the red man are often done. But blood for blood. God will have it so.
If his mills grind slow they grind full true.
Crimes of a nation were judged that day,
When Custer and his three hundred lay
Stark and dead underneath the blue. For over twenty years I was night watchman i night was all that I required, and during the day I worked in a machine shop, thus carning double-wages.

My wife had died two years after she became my bride, leaving me a precious legacy in the form of a dainty babe, scarcely two weeks old. Had it not been for this tender charge I believe I should have sunk under my affliction, and followed her to the grave, so intense was my grief; but the thought that the tiny infant which lay so quiet in its little cradle, staring about with its great blue eyes, looked to me for support, nerved me up to my duty, and I threw off the lethargy of grief and resumed work. The babe under the best influences which I could procure for her, developed into a healthy, romping school-girl, who loved me devotedly, and amply repaid me by that love for all the sacrifices which I had made for her.

"Thumpfale" in the properation, and the properation, and the properation of the drug, but in vini; my mind seemed perfectly clear, but my body secured as powerless as though it had been dead. I was not deprived of the sense of sight, but I could neither quite open nor close my eyes.

The bath seed to me for a moment, and I have been dead. I was not deprived of the sense of sight, but I could neither quite open nor close my eyes.

The bath seed to my left arm, and drew it over the back of the cough, fastening it to the other leg. With the remaining cord he bound my fight arm to one leg of the couch. Another string he fastened to my left arm, and drew it over the back of the cough, fastening it to the other leg. With the remaining cord he bound my fight arm to one leg of the couch. A nother string he fastened to my left arm, and drew it over the back of the cough, fastening it to the other leg. With the remaining cord he bound my fight arm to one leg of the couch. I was thus firmly secured and absolutely in his power. He then look up his lantern and went down into the cellar.

"Pro mercy sake, Susan, don't say a word until after the company go," and untering this prayer, he back of the cough, fastening it to the other leg. He examined my fastenings closely, and seeing that I was conscious, inquired in a disguised voice if I recognized him.

"Yes, sir," I replied, "you are 'Thumping Joe,' and a half-a-dozen detectives will be on your track half an hour after I am released."

With an oath he grasped the gleaming knife and made a motion as if he would plunge it into my breast; but an equally fiendish scheme had occurred to him, and he desisted from his purpose.

Having rolled half a barrel of gunpowder under my couch and bored a small hole in it with an auger, he drove the barrel of my revolver into the hole, almost up to the hammer. He then took some twine from his pocket and tying one end to the trigger, drew the other through a hole in the ceiling and attached it to a heavy weight, so that it hung about two feet from the floor. He then set the alarm of the clock so that it would go off in about an hour.

He then set the alarm of the clock so that it would go off in the boat an hour.

Having balanced the weight attached to the cord on the edge of a box about four feet high, so that the least pull would cause it to fall off, he attached to end of a fine cord to a hammer or striker of the clock, and the other to a weight, carefully tightening it. By this time I was able to comprehend his weight to fall from the box; that would pull the weight to fall from the box; that would pull the weight to fall from the box; that would pull the weight to fall from the box; that would pull the weight of his plan.

"It is ingenious—terribly ingenious;" I replied.
"I am sorry I shall be obliged to shorten your days," said he, "but 'Necessity knows no law."
"But Joe," said I, "why need you add the crime of murder to the list of your sins? God knows it will be long and black enough without being blood attained."

"I have," answered two of the crowd, and the list in a dropting shape, "there are fifteen of you who are shained."

"I have," answered two of the crowd, and the list in the long was a constant to a heavy weight, so that it would so off in the string shape, "there are fifteen of you who can make oath that you have combed your children shained."

"I have," answered two of the crowd, and the list in the long and black enough without being blood stained."

"If she is young and pretty, there will be no necessity for her starving to death," said he, with a satanic leer. (He had removed the false face).

"O, Joe, spare my life, I pray you!"

"I fold you I could not do it. I must be going; time is precious; good bye." With these words he took up his box of gold, and unlocking the door, went out.
