Neatly Printed Office Stationery A Necessity.

N this 20th century it is just as necessary for a merchant or a professional man to use neat, up-to-date printed stationery as for him to wear stylish clothes and have a respectable place of business. The old saying that clothes do not make the man may be true but in this age a good deal depends on appearances, and the business man who pretends to be such and uses plain stationery does not "cut much ice" with the wholesale houses with which he does business, they too judge by appearances.

Three-quarters of an hour later the parts of the startled his juries.

To be heard at a distance most men lift the pitch of their voice. Smith lowered his an octave or two, and the lowered his an octave or two and the lowered his an oc lowered his an octave or two, and the result was like an earthquake playing

'Stop!" he thundered, "Stop!" In answer one of the flying Crossroaders turned and sent a bullet whistling close to him. The lawyer paused long enough to bow deeply in satirical response; then, flourishing the paper, be roared again: "Stop! A mistake! I have news! Stop, I say! Horner has got them!

To make himself heard over that tempestuous advance was a feat; for him, moreover, whose counsels had so lately been derided, to interest the pursuers at such a moment enough to make them listen—to find the word was a greater, and by the word and by gestures at once vehemently imperious and imploring to stop them was a still greater. But he did it. He had come at just the moment before the moment that would have been too late. They all heard him. They all knew, too, that he was not trying to Bave the Crossroads as a matter of duty, because he had given that up before the mob left Plattville. Indeed, it was a question if at the last he had not tacitly approved, and no one feared indictments for the day's work. It would do no harm to listen to what he had to say. The work could wait. It would "keep" for five minutes. They began to gather around him, excited, flushed, perspiring and smelling of smoke. Hartley Bowlder, won by Lige's desperation and intrepidity, was helping the latter tie up his head. No

"What is it?" they clamored impatiently. "Speak quick!" There was another harmless shot from a fugitive. and then the Crossroaders, divining that the diversion was in their favor, secured themselves in their decrepit fastnesses and held their fire. Meanwhile the flames crackled cheerfully in Plattville ears. He's called Jerry the Teller, and one of my sergeants found him in the freight yard. Knew it was the Teller, because he was stowed away in one of the empty cars that came from Plattville last night. And Slattery-that's his running mate, the one we caught with the coat and hatowned up that they beat their way on that freight. Looks like Slattery-let the Teller do all the fighting. He ain't scratched. We've been at Slattery pretty hard, but he won't open his head, and we hope to get something out of this one. He's delirious, but they say he'll come to before he dies.

'Yes," said Meredith simply, and a Earthly mu oung surgeon presently appeared and led them down a wide corridor and un a narrow hall, and they entered a small, quiet ward. There was a pungent smell of chemicals in the room. The light was low. ind the dimness was imbued with a thick, confused murmur, incoherent whisperings that came from a cot in the corner. It was the only cot in use in the ward, and Meredith was conscious of a terror that made him dread to look at it, to go near it. Beside it a nurse sat silent, and upon it feebly tossed the racked body of him whom Barrett had called Jerry the Teller.

The head was a shapeless bundle, so cloths, and what part of the face was lide was discolored and pigmented with drugs. Stretched under the white at the man looked immensely tall-Horner saw with vague misgiving-al be lay in an odd, inhuman fashas though he had been all broken bees. His attempts to move were tantly soothed by the nurse, and constantly continued such at-1.4s, and one hand, though torn bandaged, was not to be restrained from a wandering, restless movement that Meredith felt to be pathetic. He Slattery wants to know what you did with that man down at Plattville when you got through with him. He can't remember and he thinks there was money left on him. Slattery's head was hurt. He can't remember. He'll go shares with you when he gets it. Slattery's going to stand by you if he can get the money.

The Teller only tried to move his free hand to the shoulder Barrett had shaken.

The Teller swung his arm heavily over the side of the cot, the fingers nev er ceasing their painful twitching. The surgeon leaned down and gently moved the cloths so that the white, scarred lips were free. They moved steadily They seemed to be framing the sem blance of an old ballad that Meredith knew. Meredith gave an exclamation The bandaged hand waved jauntily over the Teller's head. "Ah, men," he said, almost clearly, and tried to lift himself on his arm, "I tell you it's a grand eleven we have this year! There will be little left of anything that stands against them. It's our championship. Did you see Jim Romley ride over his man this afternoon?"

As the voice grew clearer the sheriff stepped forward, but Tom Meredith, with a loud cry of grief, threw him-self on his knees beside the cot and seized the wandering fingers in his own. "John!" he cried. "John, is it you?" The voice went on rapidly, not heeding him, "Ah, you needn't howl! Well, laugh away, you Indians! If it hadn't been for this ankle-but it seems to be my chest that's hurt-and side-not that it matters, you know. The sophomore's just as good or better. It's only my egotism. The following is from a recent tion he a-ke-l me last night. issue of the Portland Evening

A fairer September day never dawned than that which graced the bridal of Miss Mary Elliott Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Elliott Smith of Stevens Avenue and Mr. Albert Elward McCallum of Douglastown, N. B., who were married at 4 o'clock this afternoon at Trinity Church. The pretty Little Liver Pills. little church was beautifully decorated with green and gold and was lled by the friends of the bride, ch one having been invited to the ceremony by the bride herself. Miss Marguerite Ogden was at the organ, giving a choice programme before the ceremony and connecting the wedding marches with a soft interlude. To make himself heard over that tempestuous advance was a feat; for him, moreover, whose counsels had so lately been derided, to interest the pursuers at such a moment enough to make them listen- to find the word was a greater, and by the word and by gestures at once vehemently imperious and imploring to stop them was a still greater. But he did it. He had come at just the moment before the moment that would have been too late. They all heard him. They all knew, too, that he was not trying to save the Crossroads as a matter of duty, because he had given that up be fore the mob left Plattville. Indeed, it was a question if at the last he had not tacitly approved, and no one feared indictments for the day's work. would do no harm to listen to what he had to say. The work could wait. It would "keep" for five minutes. They began to gather around him, excited, flushed, perspiring and smelling of Hartley Bowlder, won by Lige's desperation and intrepidity, was helping the latter tie up his head. No one e'se was hurt.

"What is it?" they clamored impatiently. "Speak quick!" There was another harmless shot from a fugitive, and then the Crossroaders, divining that the diversion was in their favor. secured themselves in their decrepit fastnesses and held their fire. Mean-while the flames crackled cheerfully in Plattville ears. No matter what the prosecutor had to say, at least the Skillett saloon and homestead were gone, and Bob Skillett and one other would

To be heard at a distance most men lift the pitch of their voice. Smith lowered his an octave or two, and the result was like an earthquake playing an organ in a catacomb.

"Stop." he thundered. "Stop." In answer one of the flying Crossroaders turned and sent a bulket whisting close to him. The lawyer paused long enough to bow doubly in satisfied.

young surgeon presently appeared and led them down a wide corridor and up a narrow hall, and they entered a all, quiet ward.

There was a pungent smell of chemicals in the room. The light was low. and the dimness was imbued with a confused murmur, incoherent whisperings that came from a cot in the corner. It was the only cot in use in the ward, and Meredith was conscious of a terror that made him dread to look at it, to go near it. Beside it a nurse sat silent, and upon it feebly tossed the racked body of him whom Barrett had called Jerry the Teller.

The head was a shapeless bundle, so rw. hed it was with bandages and cloths, and what part of the face was visible was discolored and pigmented with drugs. A PORTLAND WEDDING.

The following is from a recent tion he a-ked me last night. issue of the Portland Evening Express:--

A fairer September day never dawned than that which graced the bridal of Miss Mary Elliott Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Elliott Smith of Stevens Avenue and Mr. Albert Elward McCallum of Douglastown, N. B., who were married at 4 o'clock this afternoon at Trinity Church. The pretty little church was beautifully decorated with green and gold and was filled by the friends of the bride, each one having been invited to the ceremony by the bride herself. Miss Marguerite Ogden was at the organ, giving a choice programme before the ceremony and connecting the wedding marches with a soft interlude. An innovation as charming as unusual was the substitution of girl ushers for the black coated and carnation decorated usher, such a familiar feature of wedging procession. Miss Edith
