CRASHED INTO

Disaster Was the Result of a Severe Wind Storm-Engineer and Mail Clerk Badly Injured.

South Bend, Ind., April 25.-Passenger train No. 6, on the Grand Trunk Western, was wrecked at Haskells, Ind., while going at a speed of 50 miles an hour, at 10:20 tonight, crashing into a freight car that had been blown on the main track. The engine completely turned over, and Engineer Robert Melrose was undoubtedly killed and buried in the wreck.

A wrecking train from Battle Creek is rushing to the scene of the accident. Supt. W. C. Brownly was on the wrecked train, but is reported as not being injured. Later reports say that no passengers were killed.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT. Valparaiso, Ind., April 26.-The Grand Trunk passenger train, which left Chicago at 8:15 last night, was wrecked eight miles east of this city, as a result of the windstorm which swept over this section during the night. The engineer, Robert Melrose, was seriously hurt and the fireman and mail clerk were badly bruised. The wind had blown a box car from the siding over on a main track. The passenger locomotive crashed into this obstruction and shot off the rails, followed by the baggage and mail cars, into the ditch. Engineer Melrose was pinned down by the wreckage. It took the other trainmen and the passengers two hours to release him. Then it was found that his injuries required immediate surgical attention. The fireman and mail clerk suffered severe contusions. None of the passengers was Damaging Admission Made by the General Before a Court-Martial.

Manila, April 26.—The trial by court-martial of Gen. Jacob H. Smith on the charge of conduct prejudicial to good order and discipline, has begun. Lloyd Wheaton presided.

Col. Charles A. Woodruff, counsel for the defense, said he desired to simplify the proceedings. He was willing to admit Gen. Smith gave instructions to Major Waller to kill and burn and make a howling wilderness, that he wanted everybody killed capable of bearing arms, and that he did specify all over ten years of age, as the Samar boys of that age were equally as dangerous as their elders.

Capt. Porter and Lieut. Day, both of the marine corps, were the only two pher many years of happiness in the witnesses examined. Their testimony developed nothing new. Major Waller was the only other witness of the prosecution. He was unable to be present on account of sickness, but, it is expected, will be in attendance today. The defense will call several officers of the 9th Infantry.

GOOD FOR CROPS. Chicago, April 25.—A heavy, warm rain, which is general throughout the northwest began falling during night, and reports from various points in this district show no indications of a let-up. Crops generally will be very greatly benefited.

DROPPED DEAD AT A PRAYER-MEETING

Dramatic Scene at a Methodist Gathering in Hyde Park, N. Y.

New York, April 26.-Mrs. Rensslaer Worden, a leading worker in the Methodist Church in the village of Hyde Park, dropped dead at a prayer meeting, says a Poughkeepsie dispatch to

A reception had been planned to welcome the new minister, Dr. Kikel-ham. Mrs. Worden was foremost in arranging the reception, and she was the first to give her testimony in the prayer meeting that preceded it. She spoke fervently of her experience in church work, and just as she ceased, clapped her hand to her heart, gasped for breath, and sank back into the pew, dead.

It was such a dramatic scene that the congregation was almost panic-stricken. Dr. Kikelham addressed the people and restored composure. Then he dismissed the meeting, and the dead woman was carried to her home. OTHER DEATHS.

SON MURDERED SIRE BY PROXY

Criminal's Awful Expedient to Obtain Pardon.

Confederate Took Father's Life and Would Have Robbed Him of His Good Name. When Clinton Dotson was hanged at

Deer Lodge, Mont., recently for the mur-der of his father, who twenty years ago was an evangelist well known in Chi-cago, the last chapter in a story of crime cago, the last chapter in a story of crime as strange as any ever penned by a Poe or a Gaboriau was written, says a Chicago Tribune. He was hanged for a murder done while he was miles away from the scene—while he was in the penitentiary, in fact. And he was in that prison for another murder committed while he was far from the victim, yet on the gallows he confessed—confessed, at least, as most criminals confess, taking a little blame and giving much. Dotson conspired to murder his father that he himself might be freed from the penitentiary. He hired a man to kill old Capt. Dotson and leave beside him what purported to be a confession to the murder for the commission of which the son purported to be a confession to the murder for the commission of which the son was then in prison. The scheme failed, for all its cleverness, and the boy who sang beside his white-haired father in the churches of Chicago went to his death from the gallows.

Young Dotson, while not born in Chicago, spent much of his early life there. His father traveled about the country, a friendly rival of Moody and Sankey, who were then at the height of their career as evangelists, and he was the first to succed them when they left the old Temple. The youngster lived with an aunt, Miss Earle, in Prairie avenue, and his education was in charge of a private tutor.

SANG AT REVIVAL MEETINGS. When Capt. Dotson determined to make his home in the west his son went with him. At times he sang with his father in the school houses where they held their meetings, and prayed by his side, but the western life fascinated him, and but the western life fascinated him, and he soon gave up all pretense and became a garmbler, a hanger-on at mining camps, living by his wits. Soon after Capt, Dotson accumulated a little money, and from that time until his death he made his home in Powell county. Mont. It was in October, 1899, that Michael Culliane, a miner who had had luck in the Thunder Mountain region, reached Helena on his way to his old home in Ireland. It is believed that he had about $20,000 in his possession, though this never Ireland. It is believed that he had about $20,000 in his possession, though this never was proven. One night he was seen in company with young Dotson, John Benson and John Persinger, and the next day his body was found beside a railway track in a little town 30 miles from Helena. He had been shot and robbed, and either taken to the place on a freight train or thrown on the pilot of an engine and carried there.

Dotson, Benson and Persinger were arrested. Young Dotson proved an alibi. He was able to prove that he had been in a gambling place for a few minutes after he was seen with Culliane until nearly noon the next day. He was released, but soon was taken into custody again when the police found that he and his comrades were seen taking Culliane toward the railroad yards. Money proved to have been in Culliane's passession was found upon all the men accused, and they to have been in Culliane's passession was found upon all the men accused, and they were tried. Dotson said his money had been sent him by his father, and, as chance had it, it developed that Capt. Dotson had been in Helena the night the crime was committed. It was young Dotson's alibi that saved him from sharing the gallows with his partners, and he was given a 99-year sentence, for the fury apparently thought that, while he might not have had a hand in the actual killing of the miner, he had planned it.

At first it was believed, though, that the confession was genuine, and that Capt. Dotson had been killed for the purpose of robbery.

But it was a case of "murder will out." McArthur was arrested for some petty offense, and the contract between him and young Dotson brought to light. Then the Englishman told all the details of the crime, and, without a witness, except those who told of the finding of the body of the old evangelist, he was convicted, and later was hanged.

Before he was executed, however, he testified at the trial of Dotson, who was found guilty. Dotson was provided with money and carried his case from one court to another, always with the same result. About the middle of March the supreme court ruled that no new trial should be granted, a few days after the governor of the state refused to commute his sentence, and ten days later Dotson paid the death penalty on the gallows.

This is the secret of my success: I have found the one treatment that strengthens the inside nerves. When an organ is weak, I don't doctor the symptoms; I don't treat the organ at all. Mr. Whitney as a Purist.

Mr. Whitney will detonate in Western Ontario shortly. His speeches in this neighborhood will ring with denunciation of "the machine," and he will repeat his pious appeal to clergymen and all good people to overthrow Ross and enthrone Whitney in the name of righteousness. He has already warned the electors that if they return the lost to all sense of decency and public honor, and the Province will be cast into outer darkness. A victory for the Opposition, however, will prove that conscience still lives, and that political purity will reign, incarnated in Mr.

Mr. Whitney's speeches must add im-Club. It will be remembered that Mr. ber for East York in the Commons, in the Province. After his defeat he he described the Conservative "ma- a special trainer or dealer. chine" in his newspaper, the Toronto

"The public are being aroused at fast to the existence in Toronto of an organized machine of professional corruptionists. They have a nest in the center of the city. They handle the money of corporations; their mission has been to corrupt representatives of the people, and to corrupt the electors; most of all to invade the one thing that ought to be sacred in our politics -the ballot box."

Has Mr. Whitney ever had a word of reproof for the corrupt elements in his own party? Everyone knows of the orgy in South Ontario in 1898, when the Opposition spent over $7,000 to defeat Hon. John Dryden. Wm. Smith, ex-M.P., confessed in court that he spent $1,200 in buying votes for Calder; yet today Mr. Smith is on Mr. Whitney's platform, working for Mr. Whitney's candidate, enjoying Mr. Whitney's confidence, secure from Mr. Whitney's crusade against bribery and corruption. What value can the public place on Mr. Whitney's professions of purity, and what credit for sincerity can he expect? If he were in earnest he would begin his missionary work in his own party. The Liberal party can be relied upon to purge itself; let Its opponents do the same.

Patronize Home Merchants.

There are some people in London who regularly go away to do their shopping. They are not a numerous class, but they are generally pretty well-to-do, and their custom is a large Item. You may find them any day in the big stores of Toronto; before Christmas and Easter especially there an exodus of holiday shoppers from this city. The ladies of London ought to show more local patriotism. Marriage Customs in Uncivilized Countries.

Notice-Mattress and Feather Bed At Present Woman is the Real Wooser, Not Man-Her Unconscious Devices for Winning.

> It is the woman's fault-alwaysbut she never will admit it. Immemorial tradition has made man the wooer and woman the wooed, and, no matter how active and aggressive a man hunter any woman may be, she keeps up the old fiction that she is not the hunter but the quarry.

In certain savage tribes, where marriage is frankly a bargain and salein civilization, of course, women are never bought and sold-and where the girl is given away by her father, in exchange for so many head of cattle, the fiction is still treasured. When the contract has been made, the price delivered, the groom and some of his but the groom is the stronger, of course, and the girl is carried away in the arms of her triumphant lover. mation to beleaguered men.-Montreal After the fight, no doubt, the bereaved | Sun. parent visits his stables, slaps the new cattle on the flanks, and chuckles with pleasure in the knowledge that he has made an excellent trade. In civilized countries the father, after the marriage, is not only minus a daughter, but is considerably out of pocket for expenses, and, in the old countries, for the girl's dowry; while he has nothing to show, in his stables or elsewhere, for the girl or the money. From the father's point of view, therefore, civilization has not improved the wedding customs; but how could any young man hope to marry if he had to pay an adequate price for the girl he loved?

THE REAL WOOER.

Of course the thesis that woman is the real woer will be disputed. She herself does not believe it, and she will not be convinced of its truth. Nevertheless the thesis is true.

Men are expected to believe that, until surprised by a proposal, the innocent young objects of their love never even dreamed of a husband and certainly never tried to catch one. Of course men are aware that every girl, mamoto, in Japan. It is inhabited by even she who vows that she will live and die an old maid, dresses as pretwithin its vertical wall 800 feet high. tily and makes herself as attractive as she can, but men believe that girls would take just as many pains with their clothes and their manners if they dwelt in some convent where no eligible man entered. All the ribbons, the bonnets, the airs and graces, the cosmetics, the toilettes, and the varied charms of women are not traps set for men, not incitements to courtship, not signals to possible husbands, but are merely women's natural striv-

premise. But since the woman does the first attracting, and since the attracting party is the aggressor, she must be the hunter and the man the game, else there is a contradiction in

Some one may retort that the fox hunts the hounds, because, by attracting them, Reynard brings on the chase; but the analogy is defective, for the hounds pursue the fox with hostile purpose, and the fox, when overtaken, does not lay his head on the dog's shoulders and say "yes." Most men are simpletons in the company of girls, and a girl can amost propose to a man without his perceiving that she is leading him toward the altar. There are a thousand glances of the eyes, tones of the voice tosses of the head, curvings of the neck, smiles of the lips, and a myriad other coquetries by which a woman can lodge a subtle stimulant in a man's breast, while he, poor fellow, is quite as ignorant and unconscious of the operation as if he were a patient under ether and she a surgeon ripping open his ventricular cavity and dropping a love potion into his circulatory system. But other women-lynx-eyed in such matters-can perceive the plans of such a bold hussy. Other women see through all the tricks of a woman who is trying to charm a man, but they will not warn him of his danger, for, in the first place, he would not heed the warning; in the second place, he would House, London, Monday April 28, with friends raid the contract house of the deem the warners jealous, and, in the bride's father by night. CHICAGO, April 25.—Rains in the four big surplus wheat and corn states played havoc with the price of grains on the board of trade today, and caused a commotion for a time that resembled a stampede. For the first hour it was nothing but sell, sell. Prices fluctuated so widely and wildly that for a time a panic was feared. Wolverhampton, April 26.-The new exhibition, opened for a press view today, is the most ambitious one in the history of the Midlands. The industrial hall, painted in strong shades of red and green, is a structure of marked originality, with high towers, capped by open lanterns, and the main entrance is decorated with a free stensil treatment in color. It contains, in addition to the Midland and Scottish exhibits, a varied Japanese collection of curios and lacquer, Indian carving and embroidery, and Danish porcelain. Eastern Consolidated Oil Co.

HE price of stock in the Eastern Consolidated Oil Co. will be advanced 40 per cent within 3 days. It is now selling at 25c a share. This remarkable investment proposition has no equal in the financial world today. For six months it has paid rich dividends at the rate of 2 per cent monthly on the investment, and paid them out of the actual sale of oil. Compare this with the record of the oil companies offering their stock to the public from $1.00 to $3.00 a share, and advertising rapid advance in price, but which have never sold a barrel of oil nor paid one dollar in dividends to stockholders, and it is doubtful whether they ever will.

The Eastern Consolidated Oil Co. has paid thousands and thousands of dollars to its stockholders at the rate of 2 per cent monthly, or 24 per cent yearly on their investments. Those who get in their subscriptions now, within the next three days before the rise in price, will find not only that their holdings have increased in actual value on May 1, but that the dividend earning power of their investments has increased in like proportion! What oil company in the world can equal this record?

(Applause.) After dealing at length with the government's policy of building up Ontario, and showing the obstructive policy of the opposition leaders, the premier went on to give the views of the independent press, quoting the following from the Canadian Lumberman: "The system of disposing of pulpwood is, in fact, simply the logical conclusion and corollary of the general policy of encouraging home manufacture, and the government is to be commended for the firmness with which it has adhered to the principle, no less than the foresight and fidelity exhibited in providing against any possible abuse of the privileges granted."

The Canadian Manufacturer says: "Only the blindness of partisan prejudice and the mistaken idea that by opposing everything the government undertakes they can somehow gain po-litical capital could have induced a party which formerly made the de-velopment of home industry the leading plank in their platform to offer the violent and unreasonable objections to this egreement made by Mr. Whitney and his followers."

In concluding, the premier repeated his well-known views on prohibition. The meeting, which is said to have been the largest ever held at Havelock, closed with hearty cheers for the King, Premier Ross and Mr. Ander-

As Dr. Wanata says, if physicians dared to be frank and open, hundreds of them would acknowledge that they constantly prescribe Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in severe cases of female ills, as they know by experience that it can be relied upon to effect a cure.

Women who are troubled with painful or irregular menstruation, backache, bloating (or flatulence), leucorrhœa, falling, inflammation or ulceration of the uterus, ovarian troubles, that "bearing-down" feeling, dizziness, faintness, indigestion, nervous prostration or the blues should take immediate action to ward off the serious consequences, and be restored to perfect health and strength by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and then write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass. for further free advice. No living person has had such a vast and successful experience in treating female ills. She has guided thousands to health. Every suffering woman should ask for and followher advice.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has carried hundreds of women through the periods of child bearing and change of life in perfect comfort and safety.

A medicine that has restored so many women to health and can produce roof of the fact must be regarded with respect. This is the record of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which cannot be equalled by any other medicine the world has ever produced. It is well to remember these facts when some druggist tries to get you to buy something which he says is "just as good." That is impossible, as no other medicine has such a record of cures as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; so do not experiment with untried medicines. REWARD. — We have deposited with the National City Bank of Lynn, $5000, which will be paid to any person who can find that the above testimonial letter is not genuine, or was published before obtaining the writer's special permission.

In the seventh inning of the game at Cincinnati on Saturday with Chicago, there was a long-drawn-out dispute between Capt. Corcoran, Capt. Lowe and Umpire Emslie. A peculiar play brought it about. With Dexter on first, Schaefer struck out, but Bergen dropped the third strike. Schaefer ran for first and Bergen's throw hit him in the back. Dexter took third on the play. Emslie called Schaefer out, as the rules provide that when first is occupied, and three strikes are called, the man is out whether the ball is caught or not. Corcoran urged that Dexter should be sent back to second, while Lowe held that he was entitled to third base. Emslie decided in Corcoran's favor on the ground that Schaefer interfered with the play when he ran to first, which he had no right to do "That play has come up

The opening of the baseball season calls attention to the fact, not generally known, that Cincinnati supplies practically the entire Middle West with baseballs, and that something like 125 people earn a living in the baseball factories of the city.

The process of making baseballs on a wholesale plan is a rather interesting one, consuming in a single season something like 8,000 skins. The scrapings from the shoe factories, of give twhich the "raw" balls are molded, are Pats stored in cellars of about one acre area, and from this material the balls are shaped by hand. According to quality, the ball is bound by a few or several dozen rounds of cord. The raw balls are placed in automatic molds, shaping the ball, and at the

The newly pressed balls are then sorted and allowed to dry out for a period of from three to four weeks, when their weight is reduced to per-haps five ounces. Something like 200 of these twine-bound leather balls can be found in the bins at all times. About 28 varieties of balls are now turned out. Within the last five years the baseball trade in Cincinnati is said to have exactly quadrupled it-

In addition to baseballs, the local factories turn out a considerable number of footballs. The skins for these are cut according to pattern and sewn by machine. The stuffing and lacing is the work of girls. Each ball passes through seven pairs of hands in the course of manufacture, while the boxing gloves, also a Cincinnati product, pass through about forty. The Hospital Concert.

The Victoria Hospital concert at the Grand Opera House last night was distinctly successful. To the promoters of the concert-the members of the hospital trust and of the ladies' advisory board-it was a gratifying evidence of the willingness of Londoners to assist in a worthy undertaking. The audience, it was plain, enjoyed the concert very much, and expressed their appreciation by generous applause. Neither Mrs. Wyman, Mr. Blachford nor Mr. Blight, the visiting artists, who provided most of the numbers, had appeared in London before, but their excellent reputations had preceded them, and were at once made more secure by another pronounced success. Mrs. Beck was almost as truly a stranger, because, while it was known that she has a beautiful voice, excellently trained, she has sung in public rarely, so that to very many of those present it was a first privilege to hear her, just as with Mrs. Wyman, and the others. Mr. Martin and Mr. Hewlett were the ly given by the Women's Music only ones upon whom the audience did Club of that city: The pro- not look with the expectancy of a new gramme was in charge of Mr. W. Walter Damrosch's adaption of "Danny Deever" was Mr. Blight's best number, although his old Irish ballad, "My Love Nell" was most favorably received by the audience. His voice is a soft, mellow man, it promises well for the future. Mrs. Beck had to respond to the encore which followed her one song, Allitsen's "Song of Thanksgiving." Both Mrs. Beck and Mrs. Wyman received exceedingly handsome boquets of roses. The absence of Chairman McCormick was, unfortunately, caused by an inhim, acknowledging the assistance which the promoters of the concert had received. It seems that everybody who could do anything to make it a success and assure a big balance had done it readily and without charge. For instance, the management of the Opera House had given it freely, the Electric Light Company supplied the light, Mr. Gammage the decorations, and so on down through a long list. The second public meeting in the interests of Mr. Fred W. Daly, the proforthcoming elections to the Local Legislature, was held last night in Trebilcock's Hall, South London. The audience was not numerous, but all

Mr. Daly himself was given a most enthusiastic reception, and his utterances were had been promised that he would be warmly applauded. The chair was oc-cupied by ex-Ald. Wray. REV. C. T. SCOTT. Rev. Cyril T. Scott, pastor of Dundas Center Methodist Church, was the first speaker of the evening. The time had come, he said, for temperance people to obtain proper representation in the Legislative Assembly. The past plebiscite was a great victory for prohibition, yet while the country was shown to be temperance in sentiment by a large majority, only 5 per cent of the members of the legislature were the past few weeks. They were in supporters of temperance. In the past the fight for political power, because the representatives had been chosen by the caucus system, and the people had to vote for one or other of the ness, rather than of great power, and times, and each occasion strengthens machine politicians, though feeling all the while that the candidate did not was time they broke away from a sys-tem which foisted upon the people equal pleasure. Mrs. Wyman's voice is candidates not representative of the best moral influences. The temperance He intended to make it the question question was, after all, the dominant of the hour in London during this elecissue of the day. Every creature was protected by Ontario's laws, except man. There were game laws, fish laws, and laws to prevent the spread of disease in cattle, but there was no law to protect human beings from the cursed influence of the liquor traffic For the sake of a paltry revenue the government dared to tread men's lives and happiness beneath their feet. It was time the best element arose and altered this terrible condition of afbaritone, and as he is still a very young fairs. As to whether prohibition would prohibit, Mr. Scott said that the enforcement of the law would lie in the hands of men sworn to do it to the best of their ability, and the enforcement depended simply upon the back-bone of these officials. If they put invertebrates into office they could not expect to enforce the law. Prodisposition, but the mayor acted for hibitionists did not say they could annihilate the traffic, but they would prohibit it, make it illegal, and then with officials in sympathy with the law element alone who would break a strict | half? In 1890 there were in London 69 prohibitory law. "Remember the election day to keep it holy," was Mr. Scott's epigrammatic conclusion.

MUSIC AND DRAMA Campaign Addresses Delivered minds to no longer vote along party lines. The time was ripe for action and temperance people must take advantage of it. Mr. Johnson urged all to vote for Mr. Daly, because he was a respectable citizen, a man of clean life, competent to represent the city, intellectually, morally and in every way; a prohibitionist from conviction and an independent man, independent hibition candidate for London in the in politics, thought and action. Referring to the local situation, in concluding, Mr. Johnson said he was a member of a deputation who approached the license commissioners the other day to ask for the cutting off of a the speakers were received license in the south of the city. They tion would be cut off, but, if he did not misunderstand the commissioners' words, the deputation had been given the information that the licenseholder given a license in another ward. This Mr. Johnson characterized as an outrageous condition of affairs.

Mr. Fred W. Daly, the candidate, next took the platform. In opening he expressed his confidence of victory, and said he would be bitterly disappointed if he did not get 500 votes more than any other candidate. There had been a very appreciable movement to-wards the temperance party during temperance people had from experi-ence come to the belief that they could get prohibition in no other way. He had been told by a member of the legislature that there was really no other question before the parties today except the temperance question.
The Globe had called it "the question of the hour," and he believed it was. tion. The country was ready for pro-hibition, the people were ready. The only ones who were not ready were the politicians. Mr. Daly said he was going to see to it that the local candidates heard of the temperance question. For himself, he was first, last and all the time a prohibitionist. He would fight his battle along that line. Any who opposed him were opposing a straight out-an-out prohibitionist. He asked his hearers to look into the records of every man who sought their suffrage. He would appeal to the people as the people's candidate. He was going to run the campaign so that the people of London would know a prohibitionist when they saw one, The licenses in Ontario had been reduced from 6,000 to 3,000 in fifteen years, and the number of drunkards had thus probably been cut in half. It was acknowledged that this was a good thing. Why was it not an equally good thing to save the other licenses. Next year these were reduced by 19, and next year by 10, a total of 29. What was the result? In 1890 the number of committals was 1,600. When 19 licenses were cut off it fell to 1,200, and when 10 more were cut off the number was 800. That meant that by the cutting off of 29 licensed places in London the number of committals had been reduced by 800. The reductions came under three heads-drunks, disorcandidates would not be able to ignore

NO REASON FOR ALARM

All the Agitation in England Baseless.

Not a Single Development Since That of April 19.

J. Pierpont Morgan's Statement-The British Taxes on Breadstuffs May Be Modified-Russian Army Restless.

London, April 26 .- J. Pierpont Morgan, jun., said to a press representative yesterday: "There has not been a single development in the shipping trust since the announcement of April All this agitation in England is quite unbased. We cannot transfer ships from the British to the American flag, and, what is more, we have not contemplated it. Some of the serious papers here are certainly making a great fuss; but it all appears to us to be very sensational journalism. We know of no opposition to the combine, and neither know nor particularly care which the trust is based will be submitted to the shareholders of the individual companies concerned. But a good deal has got to be done before that happens."

The statements regarding the intentions of the managers of the Atlantic Shipping Combine vary with each addition of almost every newspaper here, and most of them lack even the semblance of authenticity. But they serve to enhance the general scare which is fully voiced by the startling newspaper posters and headlines. Shipping circles express satisfaction at the announcement of Mr. Arnold-Foster (the secretary of the admiralty) in the House of Commons yesterday, of the appointwhole subject, as affecting the admiralty. Much is made of the fact that the Inman Line steamer City of Paris, New York, April 25.-The following now the American Line steamer Philadelphia, and the City of New York, now the American Line steamer New York, after receiving £26,990 in subsidies, were transferred to the American flag and it is contended that ther such action. THE SPENDTHRIFT MARQUIS. The examination in bankruptcy of the Marquis of Queensbury, which was concluded today, show that he ran through personal property to the value of £266,000 and the Glen Stuart estate of 500 acres. When he succeeded to the marquisate in 1900, he had anticipated his interest in the estate to the extent of £106,232. the marquis lost between £60,000 and £100,000 in speculation on the stock exchange. TAX ON BREADSTUFFS MAY BE MODIFIED. Replying to a deputation representing the millers, exporters of flour and rice, and importers of feeding meals, the chancellor of the exchequer, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, held out hopes of modifications of the new taxes. Regarding wheat flour from imported wheat, the chancellor said there was considerable risk of fraud in allowing its re-exportation. It would be a drawback on the article produced in this country. But he was inclined to meet the wishes of the deputation. The chancellor was also prepared to consider the question of differentiating the

TOLSTOI'S ADVICE. A letter from Tolstoi to Sergt, declaring that soldiers must not betray their duty to God and man, is being widely circulated. The minister of the interior, M. Von Plehwe, has gone south in order to personally investigate the disorders in Southern. Reliable information from Moscow shows that the labor movement there has assumed dangerous forms. There have been many factory fires in Moscow and in the southern provinces, supposedly of incendiary origin, and factories have been placarded with Boxer-like posters, calling on the workmen to rise up against the "foreign devils," ts the foreign managers and foremen are termed. These posters further declare that "cold steel and hot lead are cheap." The English words, "foreign devils," are frequently

Every corner of the Western States is being searched for eggs by agents for Swift & Co., Armour & Co., and a few smaller dealers who have capital enough to be able to compete with these leaders of the provision world. As a result of this competition, prices paid to farmers are rapidly advancing, and every indica-tion points to unprecedented high prices for cold storage eggs next winter.

It marked the dawn of "high-priced which now are so much in vogue that the public has come to reckon the standard of amusements by the scale of prices marked in white letters on a conspicuous spot near the

From that day to this the general tendency of the theater from the manager's point of view has been upward, and the interim has brought about so many shocks like that produced by the first advance of 50 cents that these matters have become merely incidental to theater going, and even old patrons of amusement houses have forgotten that they were ever permitted to oca front row chair for the paltry consideration of one single dollar. SUGGESTED BY EUGENE FIELD.

Stuart Robson, the veteran comedian, whose stage career covers more than half a century, and Wm. H. Crane were the first to play before a $1 50 audience in Chicago. In fact, it was their aggressive enterprise that brought about the first advance of prices, and the idea of charging $1 50 a seat, when first advanced and agitated by them, staggered even the manager of Hooley's Theater, where the two appeared in 'Forbidden Fruit' at the beginning of their twelve years of co-operative starring.

Their first season out Crane and Robson played to a $4,500 house at Hooley's. The highest price charged at that time for a seat was $1, and i was believed by managers houses that this was the limit of the public's toleration. But the two comedians thought differently. They had played an engagement in Denver when Eugene Field was dominating the newspaper field was dominating the newspaper field of that city, and he was so friendly to both Crane and Robson that he prevailed upon them to inaugurate a $1.50 seat in Denver. Both protested because they did not believe it would not be believe it would not be the believe it would not be the state of the state believe it would pay, but Mr. Field agreed to assume the financial reagreed to assume sponsibility of their success, so they fell in with his proposition. The plan was a go, and that is how it happened that the first advance of theater rates was sprung on the Chicago public.

When Crane and Robson came back to Chicago for their second appearance they sprung their $1.50 proposi-tion at Hooley's. The management was skeptical. "Why, it won't pay," it was said.

Philosophy of Fatalism Proved By Everyday Incidents.

One Man Killed by Kicking a Cat; Another Falls 300 Feet and Lives.

Just how slight an accident is necessary to kill a man; just how much of shock and pain can be withstood under other circumstances; and stranger than either of these, the peculiarities of accidents and escapes from such of those as would and escapes from such of those as would seem fatal beyond a chance—all these may be found day after day in the modern metropolitan newspaper. Behind these stories may be found proof of the philosophy of fatalism, that "a man will not die till his time comes."

For when one man is killed through trying to kick a cat off his front porch, and another falls 300 feet down the shaft of a mine and sustains only a broken leg, the old philosophical "cause-and-effect" reasoning gets a hard blow.

Within a week both of these extremes have been under the list of casualties in the newspapers. It was Henry Bush, of Quincy, who kicked at the cat. The animal was strange, and as he passed out

Quincy, who kicked at the cat. The animal was strange, and as he passed out the front way he concluded to "lift" the trespasser. Kicking, he missed the animal, lost his balance, fell three feet to the ground, and broke his neck. Contrasting so strangely with this was the experience of Andrew Michaliquo, a miner at Hibernia, N. J. The miner had just stepped from the cage when he lost his balance, fell back into the shaft, which, having no obstructions, allowed the body to rebound from side to side as it fell. A broken leg and a scratched face was the sum of the man's hurts. when he thus describes the approach of ONE MAN TALKED HIMSELF TO

Suddenly speech and memory came back to him, and he seemed to be in a fair way to recovery. He was in a hospital, under strict surveillance, and the orders were that he should not talk. The nurses could not prevent it, however, and day and night he kept mumbling to himself. After nearly eighty hours of this he succumbed, a victim to garrulousness. nearly eighty hours of this he succumbed, a victim to garrulousness.

the Distance to Dawson.

United States Engineers Have a Plan British Men of Letters and Statesmento Connect Kuskokwim and Yukon Rivers.

A Washington newspaper correspondent gion of Alaska by a much shorter route than the Yukon River now affords seems a possibility of the non-distant future. The government will soon be called upon to consider an engineering plan for the utilization of the Talbiksak Rivera tributary of the Yukon, to connect the latter with the Kuskokwim, a river which ranks next to the Yukon in the matter of size.
At present over 100 steamers run regularly on the Yukon, carrying passengers and freight to and from the gold district.

Engineers have recently gone over the ground and reported favorably on a The Kuskokwim can be navigated by steamers for a distance of 600 miles from its mouth, and because of its greater freedom from obstructing islands, and the fact of its having a slower current, it is more favorable for ships than the Yukon. The thing is to make a connecting route between both rivers by means of the Oknakluk Lake and T libiksak River, and in order to do this a portage now existing between the two latter bodies of water must be cut through. Near the northerly bend in the course of the Yukon, the Talbiksak has its mouth. Here steamers winter, en route to the gold regions, waiting for the ice to break, as the ice here does not ob-struct navigation as it does at St, Michaels, by lying on the bars long af-Talbiksak River mouth means that a steamer doing so can go on up to Dawson and get back before the season opens proved route starts from the village of Kalchagamut. There a slow stream de-bouches into the Kuskokwim, navigated northwesterly for some three miles. This stream at its mouth is 70 feet wide, increasing within the first mile to 100 feet, but narrowing by degrees to between 30 and 40 feet. It varies very little in depth from the average of 7 to 12 feet above the mouth—having at that point a depth of 30 feet. The banks are usually about ve feet high.

For the passage of boats, portage is necessary at certain points, in order to reach a pond 150 feet in length; after which portage is again resorted to over a high bank of earth. From thence boats are pushed or pulled for 1,000 feet of a narrow water channel until another lake 500 feet wide is reached. Having crossed this lake, the boats are shoved through shallow, reedy water to a stream which runs northwest and with a serentine course—having between 200 and 00 bends. The stream is 30 feet wide and averages about seven feet in depth. Further up it narrows at points to even ten feet, but again widens later. It is bound alternately by banks and swamps.

At a certain junction the main stream is reached, and the boats navigate this eacterly for some twenty miles until an easterly for some twenty miles until another lake is reached, from which another stream flows into Lake Oknakluk, two and a half miles in length and usual ly four feet deep, with level beaches.

Doubly Blest

If he alone had been concerned he would not have hesitated a minute; he would have scorned to possess himself of a fortune, however large, at the expense of his truth and his honor. But for the sake of the beautiful, sensitive woman, who had devoted the best years of her life to him, was it not his acuty? Would it not be best to yield? Ought he not to shield her?

Laura saw his hesitation; she could easily read what was passing in his mind, and her heart leaped with a wiid, glad hope. MODE DE LA COMPTION D "Max you wrong me," Laura said, rising and confronting him with a quiet rising and confronting him with a quiet dignity that impressed him, notwithstanding his aversion for her. "Let me set myself right with you if I can," she went on, as if it cost her an effort to speak at all. "Of course I knew this before I came to America; I knew, the first time I met you, that this day of reckoning for my father's wrongdoing must come sooner or later. But you and received the right hand the ring upon her left, "I may keep this as my guerdon, neither she nor anyone save you and me, need ever know the truth."

She was very beautiful as she pleaded your mother were kind to me on my way to this country; you took me into your home and made me feel welcome, though a stranger in a strange land, and I began to grow very fond of you both. I put off telling you my story, because of this until—let me say it, and do not let that gleam of storm come into your eyes, Max; have patience and pity for a few mome's—until at last I began to say to myself that perhaps you need never know that the fortune you believed On the one hand lay position, fortune, and his mother's peace of mind; on the other, poverty, the scorn of the world, and shame and humiliation for the loved never know that the fortune you believed to be yours, was rightfully another's—that your mother had never been a legal wife. Oh. Max, I thought that if kind fate would decree that—I might some day become—daughter to Mrs. Remington, all that which legally belonged to me might still remain hers and—yours, and the miserable story of her wrongs and the miserable story of her wrongs need never be revealed to cause her one pang of sorrow. You can never knowno, Max Remington, you can never even dream the joy I experienced when I believed that this hope was to be realized; when you asked me to be your wife and I believed that my wretched secret would remain forever mine, that all the difficulties I had dreaded more than I can express, would be smoothed from my path, and I should not need to pain my kind friend nor rob you of your fortune. Knowing all this now, you can perhaps understand something know she must endure when she learns how she has been made the victim of a great wrong; but I cannot sin willfully; I cannot perjure myself before God and man; I will not wrong you in the way you suggest, for I know that only misery for us all would result from such a deed; you yourself would recognize your mistels when it was too late to remedy your fortune. Knowing all this now, you can perhaps understand something of my wretchedness when you so rudely shattered my hopes by telling me that you had 'made a mistake'—that it was not I whom you wished to make your wife, but—Agnes Walton. I am a proud woman, Max Remington, and it aroused a slumbering demon within me when I realised how I had surrendered myself to you confessing the most sacred feelto you, confessing the most sacred feelings of my heart, and then have you turn from me in cold scorn and tell me you had 'made a mistake."

Laura paused for a moment here, and buried her flushed face in her handkerchief as if overcome with shame and despair by those harrowing memories.

"I confess," she presently resumed, as with an apparent effort she seemed to brace herself to make a clean breast of with an apparent effort she seemed to brace herself to make a clean breast of everything, once for all, "I was so bitter—so angry that for a time the thought of revenge was uppermost in my mind; I was too wretched to reason either calmiy or judiciously; you had made me calmiy or judiciously; you had made me suffer as woman had never suffered be-fore, you had humiliated me as woman was never humiliated before, and without waiting to consider the consequences But, Max, I am very sorry now that I did so. Mrs. Remington is innocent of all wrong. I love her, and I would gladly save her from all this pain and despair over her ignominious failure to gladly save her from all this pain and shame; but you can understand that my claim must be established in some way. I am a poor girl; I have no friends or fortune rightly belongs to me, but I cannot gain possession of it except by proving myself to be the legitimate heir of Maxwell D. Remington. Don't you see?"

"Yes, I see." Max gravely repeated, while his faith in the gtrl's integrity was more than half restored. She had laid the case before him in a way to make him feel that he was really

Max was naturally too noble and honorable to suspect a woman of being false and treacherous, when she appeared true, and, in Laura's present mood, in the face of the cunning statement of facts which she had just laid before him, his sympathies were aroused and he mentally admitted that fate had used her

"Yes, I see," he said, again, with an accent of self-reproach, "and I hope that you will pardon me for whatever I may have said or done to pain you."

Laura looked up with quivering lips, a magnetic gleam in her dark eyes.

"Yes—that was my thought," his mother replied, thoughtfully, "and yet—"

"We will not argue the subject," he said, with pale lips, for he was bitterly disappointed, though he realized the right of the matter; it shall be given up to Laura, and I will find the means elsewhere to make you comfortable."

"It is rather hard on you, Max, after all your self-denial," Mrs. Remington said, regretfully. "But I feel that it would be only honest to give it up."

"Hard on me! I wonder if it is not going to be hard on you also? Do you not think you are going to miss all this?" he asked, looking wistfully around the luxurious room.

"Yes, dear of course," she answered, but still smiling, for she would not let him see how much she would miss and mourn her beautiful home. "for I have always been accustomed to luxury; but I ought to be thankful that life has been so pleasant to me for so many years. I ought to be thankful that life has been so pleasant to me for so many years. Misfortune comes to many people, and it seems that my turn has come at last. I am not going to make myself miserable over it, however; if there is any bright side I am going to find it, and I believe, as long as you and I can have each other, life cannot be very dark. If it were not for the stigma of my husband's wrong-doing, I think I could be comparatively happy in relinquishing our home and wealth." she concluded, bravely, though a snasm of pain contracted her in this softened mood. The act touched her.

"And even that," she said, trying to speak hopefully, though her tone was not quite steady, "is nothing that I am in the least responsible for, so I shall try to bear it patiently, no matter what the world may say. I cannot understand it; the whole thing seems utterly incomprehensible to me, for I believed Mr. Remington to be the soul of honor, and, during the two years that I fondly imagined myself to be his beloved and lawful wife, until he lost his mind, he was above reproach, and I looked up to him as a true Christian gentleman."

"It is very strange," Max said, with a sigh, yet in his heart he believed that affection had bilinded her to the man's faults, for the proofs which Laura had produced to establish her position were incontestable.

At Mrs. Remington's request, Max went immediately to confer with Mr. Field, and to voluntarily relinquish all right and to voluntarily relinquish all right and title to the property in their possession—giving up all bonds, deeds, bank stock and also their beautiful home, with all it contained, only stipulating that they might remain for a week or two longer, until they could arrange for a residence elsewhere.

Max also asked, as a favor, that all matters of a disagreeable nature, per-

"No, indeed, Max; I wouldn't run away from it for anything," the beautiful woman replied, her courage rising as her troubles deepened. "I have done nothing that should compel me to hide, and I shall remain quietly here and face it out. Besides, dear, this elegant furniture would be very much out of mind pitying while the scorned the inprincipled woman whom he had just eft, and realizing that he must acquaint his mother with the sad condition of their affairs as early as possible.

"You will find it very lonely without your plano; there is all your beautiful china that you have taken such pride in collecting: have taken such pride in collecting; your plate; these fine pictures and statuary that we selected together in Europe—Oh, it is too bad!"

"I have been saving it ever since I entered college," the young man replied. YOUNG MEN IN BUSINESS

In every line of business there are young fellows who lazy along trying to turn in at every gate where there. Some men deal in facts, and call seems to be a little shade, and sulking and balking whenever you say "get up" to them. They are the men who are always howling that Bill Smith was promoted because he had a pull over his employers, and that they are being held down because the manager is jealous of them.

When a fellow brags that he has pull, he is a liar or his employer's a fool. And when a fellow whines that he's being held down, the truth is, as a general thing, that his boss can't hold him up. He just picks a nice, soft spot, stretches out flat on his and yells that some heartless brute has knocked him down and is sitting on his chest.

A good man is as full of bounce as a cat with a small boy and a buil terrier after him. When he's thrown to the dog from the second story window he makes up his mind while he's sailing through the air to land right, and when the dog jumps for the spot where he hits he isn't there, but in the top of the tree across the street. Bill Jones a liar. They get knocked down. Some men deal in subterfuges, and they say that Bill Jones' mother's maiden name was Sapphira, and that anyone who believes in the Darwinian theory should pity rather than blame her son. They get disliked. But your tactful man says that since Baron Munchausen no one has been so full of funny reminiscences as Bill Jones; and when that comes back to Bill he is half tickled to death, because man gets the trade. There are two kinds of information— one to which everybody's entitled, and that is taught at school; and one which nobody ought to know except yourself, and that is what you think of Bill Jones. Of course, where you feel a man is not square, you will be armed to meet him, but never on his own ground. Make him be honest with you if you can, but don't let him make you dishonest with him.

When you make a mistake don't make a second one-keep it to yourself. eggs is at the nest. A mistake sprouts a lie when you cover it up, and one lie breeds enough distrust to choke out the prettiest crop of confidence that a fellow ever cultivated. Some salesmen think that selling is like eating-to satisfy an existing appetite; but a good salesman is like a good cook—he can create an appetite

I don't care how good old methods are, new ones are better, even if they're only just as good. That's not so Irish as it sounds. Doing the same thing in the same way year after year is like eating a pigeon a day for thirty days. About the middle of the month a fellow begins to long for a broiled crow or a slice of cold dog.

The Only Rational Method for the Cure of Disease.

We Cannot Go Far Astray If We Ad here Closely to Nature's Means and Methods - Success Rewards Such

Treatment. Rest, as an opportunity for rebuilding and recuperating worn out and T. Wadsworth is expected to locate tired parts of the body, is a fundamental principle of Nature.

If our legs are tired standing or walking, we sit or ride, resting these so as to give Nature the opportunity to remove worn out and waste tissues and replace it by new and healthy. If our brain is tired and gives evidence of it, we cease its operations, until Nature has completed her work of restoration, when we may proceed. Constant and continued use tires any organ of the body. There should be intervals of rest after every prolonged effort. We think of this, and practice it in relation to almost every organ except the Stomach. The Stomach gets tired too, and very tired, yet we seldom recognize its appeal for rest, and the consequent opportunity for Nature's restoration, until it is too late.

After Dyspepsia, Heartburn, Sour Stomach, Bloating, Headache or Palpitation of the Heart begins to oppress us severely, we stop and think. All these symptoms have been brought about by our failure to rest the Stomach. But how can one rest the Stomach, and at the same time furnish the body with the needed nutrition? Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets this question. Two of these dainty Digestive Tablets taken immediately after each meal, will digest the food, all of it, with little or no assistance from the Stomach thus giving it the needed rest, while the body receives its regular and satisfactory nutrition. Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets are compounded for this special purpose of resting the Stomach. They go about the treatment and cure of Stomach troubles in Nature's way. It is the only way. That is why they have had such remarkable suc-

Last Sunday morning, speaking of the supreme power of the strength and force of a single individual, he referred, in passing to the life work of Mr. Cecil Rhodes. "We have seen this," he said, "in the life of that great politician and statesman who has just passed away. Doubtless he made mistakes-the difference between his mistakes and ours is that ours are petty in correspondence with our petty lives. Certainly he had faults-the difference between his faults and ours is that are the narrow faults of our narrow characters. But what man of any imagination can remember his mistakes or faults, as he considers his sistant pianists, Misses Banghart and services to the empire, for which pire, through his labors, he died!" TIDINESS

ONE'S CONSCIENCE IS THE SAFEST GUIDE

Honesty Should Come First; After That Anything You Can Get.

In days gone by, before the new wo man appeared upon the scene of action, girls were rigidly taught the good, old-fashioned way of tidiness. "Neatness" hardly expresses my meaning as well as does the quaint old-time word. To be "tidy," Webster tells doesn't know that the higher criticism has hurt the baron's reputation. That "is to be arranged in good order; neat; kept in proper and becoming neatness." Nowadays girls are neat to a certain extent and in a certain way. They bathe freely and wear clean clothes; but are they tidy? Frequently they are not. The hair is often loose and prone to tumble down, and their gloves are sometimes ripped at the finger tips, and one or two buttons are lacking from their boots. The stock collar is often fastened on with an ordinary white pin that is very obvious, and the veil has occasionally Own up. The time to sort out rotten a hole over the nose or chin. Our gir is charming, but is she as careful as she ought to be? The other day I was making a morning call at a friend's house, and there met another caller, a woman who made an agreeable impression was not elaborately dressed, her black tailor-made gown fitted her well, and there was not a spot or speck of dust on it. I knew that it had been brushed carefully before she had left her room. Her linen collar and cuffs were snowy white, and did not twist or shift from their proper places; her gloves did not wrinkle, and buttoned smoothly over the wrist; her shoes were like the rest of her attire—dainty, and her bonnet rested firmly and straight on her soft brown hair, that, while wavy and fluffy, was neatly dressed, and so securely pinned that I fancy a high wind would not have caused it to come down. In speaking of this woman afterwards to a man who knew her, I said:

"There is something about her appearance that charms me. What is the secret?" "I will tell you," he said. "She is a well-groomed woman. There are never any rough or loose ends about her." You mean that she is tidy," I said to him. "You call it 'tidy.' I say 'well-groomed.' We both mean the same thing." However one may express it-in sporting terms or with the old-fashioned word—is the condition not well worth striving for?-Harper's Bazar.

MILK RECORDS FOR DAIRYMEN

The Importance of the Dairy Cow to the Farmer.

Milk Records and Their Uses-Their Importance in Facilitating the Sale of Cows.

Mr. G. W. Hodson, Canadian live stock commissioner, writes as follows: 'As a means of converting the raw products of the farm into more saleable forms, the good dairy cow is without a peer. The good beefing animal will pay very little more than market prices for food fed from birth to shambles. The sheep, with her fleece and her lambs gives only a very modest profit on food consumed. The pig and the hen, if wisely fed, do much better than either of the above, but it is very seldom that the returns from either of them go beyond one dollar and fifty cents for one dollar's worth of food consumed. The dairy cow, however, frequently goes as high as two dollars worth of product for one dollar worth of food, and many a cow has been known to give two dollars and fifty cents worth of products for one dollars worth of food consumed. Most herds fall short of such a high return. The reasons may be summarized as improper or insuflack of breed! and lack of judgment ficient feeding Every dairy herd and manager should average over fifty dollars worth of products per cow per year. If your herd is not giving you such a return you are not doing it justice. Possibly, every individual in the herd is not a number one dairy cow, but do you know which are really doing good work and the relative merits of the different cows?

IMPORTANCE OF RECORDS. In order to know your cows you must keep a daily record of the milk yielded by each cow. We would like to see you do this. We are willing to help you do it. During the past year a number of dairy farmers, at our suggestion, made an effort along this line. The results were most satisfactory. In our possession are many farmers' letters, emphasizing the importance and value of such records, both as a guide in selecting cows and as an effective means of directly improving the actual herd. The extra outlay required is very small. We would supply you with record forms for a time at least. The keeping of such records takes about one half minute per cow per day. The outlay for a balance would be from fifty cents to five dollars. The increased flow of milk due to keeping such record where ten cows are kept would pay for the balance in a week. Keeping milking records induces a spirit of interest and competition among milkers, and, in the mind of the milker, among the cows milked by the same milker. Rapid, clean and careful milking will raise the average return from

If you ever sell cows, the ability to give an accurate milk record will generally speaking raise a cow's value and facilitate the sale. Especially is kind, his heart swells with admiration, condition neither baby nor baby's this true if she is a pure bred. Further, and he conceives forthwith the cruel mother can obtain restful sleep. To the breeder of pure bred stock of any of the milking breeds, Jersey, Guernsey, Ayrshire, Shorthorn Canadian, or milking in the best of health. I can now go strains, the daily milk record should be quite as important as the breeding record. We venture the assumption that in a very few years every breed putting forward any claims as a dairy the house, for they will save baby breed will be making a specialty of milk records.

The reasons are obvious. The Holstein men have made a move ment in the right direction with their advanced registry; the Guernsey breeders are working along similar lines. It would thus seem to be a good thing for some breeds, and we are sure it would be the most important step for improvement that you ever made, do you decide to introduce it. EXPERIMENTS WITH A GAS JET.

How the Flame May Be Made to Dance, Sing or Play Music.

With a Pinhole Burner You Can Provide Amusement For Yourself and Friends.

If you were to say that you could make common gas dance, talk, sing songs and play music, you might be laughed at, and yet the ordinary lighting gas can be made to do all these things. If you like, you can perform these and more tricks with gas, and you will need very simple apparatus. You require a pinhole burner. This you can make yourself if you have a blow pipe, but if not you can get it made easily and at a small cost. To make it, get a piece of glass tubing and heat it in the flame, then draw out the heated part until you have a tube as small as a pin. Break it off at its smallest part and you have a pinhole burner.

Get a piece of rubber piping, which you must attach to an ordinary gas let, the other end to the thick end of the glass tube. When the gas is forced through and lighted it will burn in a long, thin flame.

If the room is quite free from draughts and all present are silent the flame will be steady, but if a watch is held near, it will wabble and flare back and forth, keeping axact time with the ticking of the watch. If you will call out in a loud voice it will leap to one tide as though you had frightenes it, and if you keep up a conversation in a loud voice it will dance about as though in excitement.

To make a gas jet speak, or to cause It to transmit sounds like a telephone, you must surround the pinhole burner with a tin tube having a small hole in one end, through which the burner pro-tests a little way. The bottom of the jects a little way. The bottom of the tin tube must be made to connect with a speaking tube, which may be in another room or on another floor.

Speak into the tube, no matter how far away from the gas burner, and the sound has to escape through the hole through which the burner projects and is, therefore, forced against the base of the gas flame, which is always more sensitive. The flame will take up the wave sounds and magnify them so that the words can be heard all over a very large room, and if you attach a dried. phonograph trumpet to the burner the sounds will be still more increased in strength and loudness.

To prove that it is really the gas that does the talking, turn off the gas and instantly the sounds cease, though the person at the other end of the speaking tube continues his conversation.

If you force the gas through a square of wire mesh, very fine and raised above the burner, by holding a lighted growth. The same may be said of close match above the wire gauze the gas cropping, yet this is commendable in will burn only above it making a conjugation of childhood, since it renders cleanliness will burn only above it, making a conical flame. This, having a larger base than from an ordinary burner, is very sensitive.

If you sing on a level with this flame it will dance in perfect time and you can make it perform all sorts of antics by changing from whistling to singing, or from a funeral march to a two-step.

The comb plays a minor part in hairdressing, but requires equal care in its selection. It should have widely spaced, comb cannot be approved at any time, as it subjects the large, strong hairs to pulling and injury by splitting or crack-

RAISING OF FROGS A QUEER INDUSTRY

United States Will Consume All the Frogs Canada Can Preduce.

Frog farming as an industry is assuming large proportions in many parts of Canada, says the New York Sun. Not only are large shipments of frogs' legs made from this country to the United States, but there is a growing demand for the luxury in many of the large centers of the Dominion. One of the most successful frog farms is in Ontario. Last year it produced 5,000 pounds of dressed frogs' legs and 7,000 living frogs for scientific purposes and for stocking other waters.

The deputy commissioner of fisheries for Ontario reports that in the past year a number of applications were made to the government for leases of lands suitable for this industry. No niture, a great deal of discomfort may licenses were, however, granted, as it was found that the territory concerned was already being farmed by a number of people.

It is safe to assume that in the very stocked with frogs. All that is necessary for this purpose is to place a few paired breeders in the water. Natural food is almost always present in sufficient amount for successful growth.

The species considered here to be most profitable, on account of its size, is the eastern bullfrog, Rana Catesbiana, which reaches a length of more than eight inches. It begins to breed at the end of three years, is very productive and reaches a marketable size in four or five years. Only the hind legs are marketed, and they average half a pound a pair in weight. They are worth 50 cents a pound, at times, to the producer, and American dealers take as many as Canada can supply.

In this age of advanced views on matrimonial entanglements and obligations it is refreshing to read of the curious marriage customs of the gentle savages of the Hopi tribe, in Arizona. And when the Hopi maid just able to drag yourself around, but has selected the youth of her choice totally incapable of exertion or hard she goes to his house as a suitor for his hand, and testifies both to her devotion and her industry by grinding corn beneath his roof until he is sufficently impressed with her qualities to yield and name the day. AVOID TRIALS

A Holiday for the Migratory American.

Anglo-Saxons Are Nomads-How to Lessen Confusion-Labeling Fur-

The American householder likes to nove! There are so many evidences n favor of this theory that it is a nere waste of time and valuable ink and paper to enter into an exhaustive consideration of the subject.

To the migratory American moving day is the brightest star in the holiday ealendar. Of course the mover debates the statement and attempts to pose as a very moving martyr, but he ever ends his year of tenancy as a rover, and thus supplies the strongest proof that could be urged against him.

For months before the great day in street cars, at theaters and even in churches one hears disjointed, subdued feminine conversations such as these: 'Rooms and bath"; "range an old rattletrap"; "roof in such a condition!" 'landlord a horrible old curmudgeon! Variations on this plaint prevail until after the moving saturnalia is over. Then for a few months friends of the movers hear detailed accounts of the perfidious and inhuman conduct of moving men, servants, plumbers, house painters, paper hangers and such other adjuncts to entrance upon a new tenancy as harrow the feminine soul. The remarks are always brought to a climax with the solemn assertion that never—no, never—again shall that particular sufferer transfer his household goods and gods to another neighborgood. Just as surely, however, she will be found among the next spring's list of nervous house hunters.

ANGLO-SAXONS ARE NOMADS. There is no particular reason why mericans should be ashamed of their roving tendencies. Anglo-Saxons are nomads by instinct, and so long as an unpaid rent score is not the curse that disquiets them their hankering for new scenes and new associations is a healthy one, for are we not told by M. D.'s who minister to the mental welfare of the illy balanced American public that change of scene is a refreshment for the mind diseased?

Moreover, in this day of specialists and experts it is claimed that the lapors of moving day may he much modified. With this household problem, it is said, doctoresses of domestic economy have wrestled both in thought and in substance and have come out more than victors. According to the scientific theory, one ought to prepare to al of the vans. VIGOR OF YOUTH RESTORED IN A NIGHT.

HOW DOES IT CURE? How simple that is to me! I have studied and developed upon it for years, and I will explain it to you as simply as I can. Your weakness is like the running down of the steam in the engine. There is not enough power in the nerves to make the physical body go. Nerve power is electricity. Electricity runs your body just as it runs an electric car, when there is enough power. If the power is short the car won't run. Neither will your body. Now, when you have overtaxed Nature, when you have been dissipating too freely, you have drained away the reserve vitality and caused injury to the nerves and glands which retain the vital force, so that you are now subject to a constant drain of this power. You are losing it fast. You have never regained what you originally lost, and never will until drain is stopped. I can stop it, and cure. My Belt pours electricity into your impoverished nerves for hours every night. They drink it up gladly, absorb it and retain it. They expand and develop under its influence. They get strong and the drain is stopped: they grow is size and power daily, your step becomes quicker, and you look into the glass and see a MAN; you are CURED? RESTORED! CAUTION! If you value your health, do not accept an imitation of my Belt. There are many on the market. Old style, blistering scorchers, whose only merit is their ability to burn and scar the flesh, are being offered with a cheap imitation of my Cushion Electrode. But it is a sham. Don't accept it. The best is none too good when you want your health, your vigor; so avoid imitations. The cushion electrode is my special invention. Without it all electric belts blister and burn holes in the flesh and can do no good. I take the other belts in trade.

missioner, writes as follows: Everyone is familiar with the history export bacon trade in Canada during the past ten or twelve years. In 1890 our export of bacon, lard, hams, pork, etc., amounted to less than 8,000,000 pounds. In 1900 it had risen to about 136,000,000 pounds. The Province of but the time has come when we may expect to see a change in this respect. from which the finest Wiltshire bacon is made, and in these districts hogs are put on the market at as low a cost per pound as in any section in Canada. had frequent requests from other pro-vinces for information regarding the CO-OPERATIVE PACKING FAC-

TORIES, such as have recently been put up at several points in Ontario. The practhe Danish farmers, who are becoming more and more interested in improving the quality and shape of the pig, as through this medium alone they have succeeded in placing their bacon and pork in a foremost position, both for quality and shapeliness of sides, on the London market, while the fact of these co-operative factories being established all over Denmark, shows to what a success they have

There are several points, however, that should always be observed, in connection with the establishment of these pork-packing industries on the co-operative plan. In the first place, they should be installed as nearly as possible along the Danish lines, with only farmers as stockholders, and each should be allowed to invest in the company. In the next place, it is absolutely necessary that the individual subscriber shall have faith in his own company. The practice of farmers subscribing stock in these movements and then selling their hoss to the highest bidder, often to firms competwrong, and entirely different from the "modus operandi" in Denmark. The success of Canadian co-operative factories is absolutely regulated and controlled by the loyalty of the farmer, who has, as yet, scarcely realized the importance of operating along truly co-operative lines. Still another necessary feature is that all proxies should be concentrated in the hands of a council of not more than seven, preferably five of the very best men among them, brainy, practical business men, who are not likely to be led away by fads, or driven from wise business principles by factious opposition. AN EXPERIENCED CURER.

It is of the first importance that behind the business management of the concern there shall be a thoroughly practical and experienced curer, who will send forward only uniform goods of the highest quality, that will when ably produced, and the establishment | tested on the British market, grade with the best Irish and Danish bacon. To turn out this class of goods particular attention must be given to the sort of pig grown, and the method of feeding the same. To produce the highest grade of Wiltshire sides, the During the past year or two I have packers require a long, deep, smooth

The pig should be on the outside. The pig should be healthy, vigorous and a good feeder, weighing, when ready for market, from 175 to 200 pounds. It is generally conceded that Yorkshires produce the greatest proportion of pigs of this type, with the Tamworths next. The thick, fat, American or lard breeds are not wanted by packers.

CLASS OF FOOD. Pigs should be fed good, wholesome and carefully selected food-skimmed milk, potatoes, roots, green food, barley, peas, etc., in a properly balanced ration without any undue stuffing.
If the farmers do not intend to observe the farmers do not intend observe these conditions they had better leave the business entirely alone, as otherwise they are only retarding the efforts of other Canadians who are striving to place our bacon on the market in the highest possible condition in competition with deal of money has been lost during the past year on hogs, the English market not justifying prices paid in Canfor a whole year ranging in price from $6 50 to $7 50. Such a condition of affairs was never before known in ing against their own company, is all the trade. The farmers have, however, received the benefit, and the packing companies have suffered, largely because they have been climbing over one another to get pigs irrespective of cost, doing no culling and taking undesirable breeds, just as quickly as they would the best. This sort of thing will right itself in course of time, but not before the packing houses lose a lot of money.

CAPITAL REQUIRED.

A co-operative packing factory should not be started until a capital of at least $250,000 had been subscribed, which will be sufficient to insure a killing capacity of two or three filed past the grave, each man dropping thousand per week. Small plants are a few flowers upon it. objectionable because the refrigerating system costs very little less, and the management and expenses are the same, minimum production always being the most expensive. Such a factory cannot be put up for less than $100,000 to $125,000. Farmers holding stock in such a company should deliver their hogs at the factory, take an advance of 60 to 80 per cent, have them slaughtered, cured, branded with the name of the factory, sent forward and realized on through the medium of a first-class English agency. Eastern Canada has for some time shown a good deal of interest in the of co-operative packingsubject houses, but so far as I am aware, Manitoba, the Northwest Territories and British Columbia have not given it much consideration. Possibly the information above given may prove of value to the people of the west as well as the east. Any community interestcommittee to visit and carefully inspect the operations of a working factory, such as the Farmers' Co-Operative Packing Company, Limited, of Brantford, Ont. They will find Mr. Joseph Statford both able and willing to give the fullest information in regard to the co-operative movement in all its phases

Finally they locked the chest. An old corporal who had served in the regular army was already engaged in drawing the bullets from some carridges. VAGARIES OF A MIGHTY STREAM

How the Mississippi River's Inroads Are Resisted.

A Few Slender Piles of Wood Accomplish What Massive Stone Walls Fail to Do.

In this region (Illinois and Iowa) the river is bordered with busy cities-Dubuque, Keokuk, Quincy, Davenport, Rock Island, Moline-thriving railway towns, full of factories, colleges, fine residences, and all on high ground. Seen from the river they present the finest views of themselves, something the cities of the flat country farther down never do, says John Swain, writing in Ainslie's Magazine about the Mississippi River.

It is a swift river that rushes past these cities. At low water, which is usually in summer and fall, the current drops to three miles an hour or less. But at high water, when it stands 30 or 40 feet higher on its banks, it sweeps along at nine miles an hour with irresistible impetus.

Imagine what that means in a big river-nine miles an hour. We are so used to railway trains that run 60 or ridge, load!" ordered the corporal. Three | 70 miles an hour that it does not seem volleys crashed, causing a flutter in the an overwhelming speed. But consider that when a railway train is once checked its power is gone. Interfere with the progress of the Mississippi denly he burst into tears and wailed, and the river piles up against the obstruction, sweeps around it, over it, stronger about it. The power waxes picturesque and profane witticisms until it sweeps away the fret. Imagine when the bullets sang like angry hor- the force with which drifting logs and rafts are swept against bridge piers. Think of the solidity needed in the foundations to stand against years of such shocks. Think of the pits dug in banks against which that current impinges, and the helplessness of a disabled steamer caught in a snaggy bend in such a flood.

Yet such is the contrariety of this mighty stream that while it will overthrow the strongest obstacle to course that can be built, it will yield to the slightest. One could hardly find a more striking illustration of the power of slight things than the sharp contrast between the behavior of the river against a powerful check and against a slight one. For years government en-gineers struggled to direct the river with massive stone dikes. When the river could not overthrow one of these it dug under it, and so wrecked it. Money without end was spent on dikes. There was a mighty one below Gold Dust landing in Tennessee. It stood longer than most of them; but in a flood the river at last conquered and swept it away.

How, then, can the river be directed? Simply by a few sticks, set in the sand. A row of piling, sometimes with a few brush hurdles, accomplishes it. The river sweeps through, eddies behind it, dropping sand and building up a bar. Nowadays traveling down the river through stretches that once were broad change.

That capacity of the Mississippi for something awful. Government engin- cians everywhere. From today, let your can walk-four miles an hour-all slid-Compound and its mighty power to country toward the sea. Year in, year out, that endless line of earth goes on. It would take a force of more than 50,-000 men, working in eight-hour shifts, to throw the dirt into the stream, supposing the river bed were rigid and an inexhaustible supply of dirt on the bank. It would make 25,000,000 wagon loads every year. But here-what are Gulf, at Baton Rouge, at Port Hudson—there is nothing about the level of the high-water river except the artificial levees. These are in places miles back great earthern banks sometimes 30 feet high or more, sodded and free from trees, which protect the wonderfully fertile region behind them. And all this level country which the river overflows and fertilizes is constantly increased by this river of dirt which the Mississippi brings down from the inner region, gathered all the way from the Rockies to the Alleghenies. Sometimes the river starts to eat away this land that it has made. In a single summer, if it will, it eats away half a mile of it out of some bend. It cuts it out sometimes an acre at a bite, and takes with it forests, houses, levees and all else. The river is not a uniformity moving stream. One side or the middle moves swiftly, the other parts are still or sluggish. Sometimes even these run up stream. Cheerfulness depends upon illusions, upon not too rigorously determining to see all truth in life. Even superstition feeds cheerfulness, and should not be shunned like fanaticism, which kills it. Cheerfulness depends upon having beliefs, belief in friendship, be-lief in all that helps to make living beautiful, and the saddest experience in life is to be deceived and thereby lose a belief or an illusion.

Children are happy and cheerful because, as long as they are full of illusions, of beliefs and of confidence. There ought to be a society for the prevention of deceiving and disillusioning children.

When we are told in the Gospel of St. Matthew, that "except we become as little children we shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven," I am disposed to thus interpret the verse-"Except as we become as little children, confident, believing, and un-conscious of malice, easily amused and full of illusions, we shall not be happy in this world."

The world is getting too learned, but what do men learn? Practically nothing but what leads them to be well equipped and trained for the race after money. There is no item in the curriculum of studies at schools and colleges to teach them how to be happy No doubt money may help to mak people happy. It would be a means to an end, but not an end, Make money that you may possess it; but never aim at making too much, for fear it should possess you. Money cannot buy everything. cannot buy health, life or love.

Dont take life too seriously. Never resist impulses of generosity they will make you cheerful and healthy. They will give color to your cheeks and pre-vent your flesh in old age from turning into yellow, dried-up parchment. Come home with your pockets full of presents for the children. Let them put their hands to the bottom of those pockets. You will be repaid, amply repaid, by their holding out their little round faces to thank you in anticipa-tion of what they know you have got

He decided to try them, and with what results we will allow him to relate in his own words: "I was ailing with a terrible pain across my back and kidneys. It commenced gradually getting worse, so that I was obliged to stop work. I tried plasters, pills and linaments, until I was almost ashamed to enter a drug store, and they all failed. I came across a man who had been using Dr. Pitcher's Backache Kidney Tablets and he advised me to try them, and

Dr. Pitcher's Backache Kidney Tablets are the formula of Dr. Zina Pitcher, formerly Professor of Materia Medica and Genito-Urinary Diseases. Michigan College of Medicine, Detroit, Mich., which he used with wonderful success for many years in the treatment of kidney, bladder and urinary troubles.

They had christened him Lancelot | George, but he was always called Pat. a tiny fluffy kitten. He developed from a crowing, gurgling baby, with a shock of golden-brown curls, which bobbed over his blue eyes quite fascinating, into a sturdy little chap in ridiculous sailor suits.

At four years of age he had contracted a quaint habit of considering the world in general from a point of view of his own, and as his world held but two persons of any importancethat lovely being known as mummie, that splendid specimen of humanity who was always to be mentioned in his with his eyes fixed on Mrs. Carew's with his eyes fixed on Mrs. Carew's prayers as daddy, and who at times condescended to turn into a horse or any other animal demanded by Pat-he fell into the trick of regarding them and their actions with the minutest at-

It had begun when he was seated at breakfast, absorbed, so they thought, with his bread and milk, and she looked up from her letters to find a pair of solemn blue eyes fixed on her "Go on, darling!" she said, stirring the milk in his bowl with his spoon. "Eat it all up, Pat!" Pat waved a milky spoon towards that end of the table where a crisp newspaper effectually concealed the master of the house from view. "Talk to Pat!" was his command. "Talk bof t'geder!" "Daddy wants to read, Pat! Mummie will talk to you if you will eat all your breakfast, like a good boy." Pat shook a curly head, unappeased. "Daddy an' mummie bot talk!" he insistsed, and waited, spoon suspended in mid-air, the result of this command. The newspaper at the other end of the table quivered. Finally is was low-

"Now, then, old chap, fire away! We'll go round the garden on the cycle as soon as you've finished the contents of that bowl. So hurry up!" Pat's blue eyes lingered for an instant on the face of that splendid specimen of humanity who, in his idea, was able to do anything in the world; then they went back to the sunny head bent low over her letters. It was very funny, he could not understand it at all; but they never talked to him together, they seemed to do nothing together. Did he come into the nursery for ten minutes before dinner, she went out of the room; did she run round the velvet lawns in pursuit of Pat's flying form, he became absorbed in some object at a distance. It was very funny! Pat returned to his bread-and-milk, all unconscious of the fact that he had taken his trial-trip in peace-making. It had been going on forma long time now-so long that she said to herself sometimes, with a sharp pain in her heart, things could never come right. And yet how easily they had gone wrong! seemed powerless in the matter. They were both young. They had braved the pitying scorn of the world in general, and married within a very short time of their meeting. And the smiles of Fate had lighted on them from the very first. Success, happiness had been given to them in full measure, pressed down, and running over; then came the rift within the lute, the chance word which stabbed sharper than a knife, the air of indifference assumed to hide a wounded heart, and estrangement. It was a common enough story, after given you. all: and upon this state of affairs Pat looked with his sweet blue eyes, and pondered many things in his loving

There was an eloquent pause, during which some one came up and joined Mrs. Carew, dropping into the vacant lovely flushed face, and in the babel of tongues round them it was impossible to hear what they were talking about.

That was the day before Christmas eve, and Jim Carew had gone off retruning the next day. Pat had watched him driving away in the dog cart, and had waved a small hand from the nursery window, with a shout of "I'll take care of mummie!'

He remembered that now. What had they said—those two pretty ladies talk-ing by the fire? That he—that was, daddy-ought to take care of mummie Well, he couldn't when he was away, and, of course the proper person to do it was Pat.

There were goblins and burglarswicked men who might come in the night and steal those pretty shining jewels which mummie wore in the evening. They might even steal her. Pat sat up in bed with frightened eyes at the thought. Nurse had gone down to her supper. The house where the nursery wing was seemed very quiet. Only in the distance he could hear someone singing in the drawing-room. Presently that stopped. He heard nurse oming up to bed. Then the lamp which shone through the chink of the door was put out, and everything was very dark and quiet.

A clock struck eleven, and as its slow strokes died away into silence, a small white figure crept out of the nurser; and pattered down the warmly carpeted passage, through the green-baize door, along to mummie's room.

Pat pushed the door open cautiously, and thrust in his curly head. The fire was burning faintly, the lamps were still alight, but-the room was empty. There was a faint perfume of violets in the room. Pat peeped about, but in vain. Mummie was not there. So on he went downstairs, his white nightgown trailing round his pink toes; there was a murmur of voices from the smoking-room-no, she would not be there. He paused for a moment in consideration, and he did not hear the sharp sound of horses' feet on the hard gravel outside-he was thinking with all his

A SCHOOLBOY'S DAYS OF 2,000 YEARS AGO

The Routine of a Roman Schoolboy as Told by Himself.

Something quite new, in the form of an exercise book, for building Greek scholars, has made its appearance in Germany. Into this Greek Reader have been packed all sorts of delightful and almost unknown specimens of the literature of ancient Greece, such as fables, fairy tales, stories, etc., adapted for young people. There are also examples of the work done by the pupils of the Graeco-Roman schools some wenty centuries ago. The following, for instance, is the account of his daily routine work by a Roman schoolboy. He wries: "I wake up before sunrise, leave my bed, sit down with my straps and shoes and put on my shoes. Then water for washing is brought to me. I wash first my hands, then my face, take off my night-cap, put on my un-dergarment, anoint and comb my hair, arrange my neck-cloth, put on a white upper garment, and a wrapper. Then leave my bed-room, together with my tutor and my maid, salute my father and mother, and leave the house.' STORY OF A WOLF IN SHEEP'S CLOTHING

A Canadian Farmer's Experiment and Its Results.

A settler on the Upper Mattawa River, who caught a wolf last winter had read that ships were sometimes cleared of rats by fastening a bell around the neck of one of them. And a bright idea occurred to him that in a similar manner he might clear the adjacent woods of wolves. He fastened a bell on the wolf's neck and released him. After the snow had pretty well gone, he allowed his little flock of sheep to exercise their lambs in the fields near the house. His children were with their father looking at the gambols of the lambs, when the sheep were noticed to prick up their ears as if intently listening. Then, with bleating the whole flock raced to the

Wondering at the vagaries of the ren came to him with the news that the sheep had returned, but had left one of the lambs behind them. How frequently at this season of the year you hear the expression "I'm feeling a little out of sorts." That's the Spring feeling. The long winter months, with close in-door confinement, have left you feeling tired and jaded. The appetite is poor; there is a feeling of "laziness" in the morning; perhaps occasional headaches, or may be twinges of rheumatism. The weather is changeable and you take cold easily. You are not sick, but you do feel dull, languid and run down. What you need to put you right---to brighten you up---is a tonic, and the world over there is no tonic that can equal

These pills have a larger sale than any other medicine in the world, simply because no other medicine has made so many tired and despondent people feel bright, active and strong. Neighbors tell each other of the benefits they have derived from this medicine---the greatest of all recommendations.

Mr. Robert Lee, New Westminster, B.C., writes:- Before I began using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills my blood was in a very impure state, and as a result pimples, which were very itchy, broke out on my body. To make my condition even worse I was attacked with rheumatism in the knee joints, which at times gave me great pain. I tried several medicines but they did not help me, and then my wife insisted that I should try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I am now very glad that I followed her advice, for after using a half dozen boxes I was fully cured, and not only had the rheumatism disappeared, but also the pimples that had been such a source of annoyance. You may be sure I am grateful for what the pills have done for me, and always speak a good word for them when opportunity offers."

SOUND JUDGMENT.

A Tendency Among Men to Overrate Their and to decide whether it was his duty Own Importance.

Some can decide, almost intuitively, upon the character of the first person they have met. So of a book: they can turn it over, read part of a page here, a sentence of two in another place, and decide, unhesitatingly, upon its merits. When a prejudice has once entered your mind against a man or an author, it is hard to eradicate it. It warps the judgment, and makes you partial. If this habit be indulged, the mind soon becomes habituated to act from prejudice rather than judgment. 'A perfectly just and sound mind is a rare and invaluable gift. But it is still much more unusual to see such a mind unbiased in all its actions. God has given this soundness of mind but to few, and a very small number of those few escape the bias of some predilection, perhaps habitually operating; and none, at all times, are perfectly free. I once saw this subject forcibly illustrated. A watchmaker told me that a gentleman had put an excellent watch into his hands, that went irregularly. It was as perfect a piece of work as was ever made. He took it to pieces put it together again, twenty times. No manner of defect was to be discovered, and yet the watch went intolerably. At last it struck him that possibly the balance wheel might have been near a magnet; on applying a neegle to it he found his suspicions true; here was all the mischief. The steel works in the other part of the watch had a perpetual influence on its motions; and the watch went as well as possible with a new wheel. If the soundest mind be magnitized by any

As to judging of your own character, do not forget that every man is almost in his circumstances, to adopt it. He took a large sheet of paper, and began abstinence ought not to prevail. The He felt pretty sure that he might safely take that side of the question. But to make it perfectly sure, he began to set down on another page the arguments on the other side. They soon began to grow and grow, till he was astonished at their number and weight. They quickly outnumbered their opponents; and it did not at first strike his attention that he had several put down against entire abstinence which belonged to the other side. These were shifted and altered, till at last, with one dash of the pen, he blotted out the few that remained; and though he has now forgotten the steps of the process, yet from that hour to this he has never had a doubt on the question. This is what I mean by cultivating soundness of judgment. process may be slower than to jump to had forsaken their orisons to play the conclusions, but it is much more satis- fashionable game, which has invaded factory, and will give you the habit of country villages with unprecedented weighing and judging correctly.— fury. Ping-pong has now become a factor in ecclesiastical polity. It has secured for itself the denunciation of the bishop of Manchester, and has deprived the British army now fighting in South Africa of a weekly modicum of prayer. Judging by the result of Otis Skinweek, the people of this city have no use for the highest and best in dramatic production. The experience of Mr. Skinner has been, with one exception, that of the four or five most conscientious and talented artists who have visited this city during the season now nearing its close. Mrs. Sarah Cowell Le Moyne in "The First Duchess of Marlborough," Kyrle Bellew in "A Gentleman of France," H. Reeves-Smith in "The Tyranny of Tears" and Golden (who in his line is as true an artist as those just mentioned), have all been subjected to the same cavalier treatment by the professedly cultured people of London. Only one of the high-class attractions of the season has met with the success it deserved, and that was J. H. Stoddart in "The Bonnie Brier Bush." Even this can- done much for the advancement here not be alleged in the defense of those of his beloved art, and his twilight who have been lacking in appreciation of other worthy offerings, for it is safe inculcating in many a love for the to say that two-thirds of the patronage extended to "The Bonnie Brier Bush" could be accounted for, not on the ground that it was an intrinsically artistic production in itself, but partly because it was a dramatization of a once popular book, and partly because it appealed to a large following through its locale and chief characters being Scottish. Evidently Londoners want only slapstick work, a "Tom" show, or the maudlin musical things which come dignified by the name of they seemingly want, and apparently deserve, and that is a paucity of elevating, instructive, and ennobling dramatic work, and a superabundance of the cheap, useless and foolish things which cumber the stage. Houseful of Young Men Whose Only Toil Is to "Smoke Up."

Coloring meerschaum is a long and delicate process, and unless a man likes to do a difficult feat there is no reason why he should set himself to the task of putting a beautiful shade on his costly pipe. That is a business in itself, and an experienced smoker knows, or can learn, the location of establishments to which he can take his pipe and have it smoked until the desired color is obtained. Such an enterprise exists in the outskirts of London, and makes a fine competence for its proprietor, an Austrian. It is a large house that used to be the country seat of an English gentleman.

Hither come every day a score of young men who are the experienced employes of the house. They pass upstairs to the business room in the rear of the house, and seat themselves in armchairs and forthwith begin their
