HIS REPENTANCE.

It was a vain one. Surprised to see her here, so far from home and alone, he inquired the reason in the moment's impulse. The crimson blush, called into her face at the mention of her name, told him that she was not alone. An appointment. She could not have come there for pleasure.

And, besides, that strange weariness of spirit, when we no longer struggle against fate, but grow to be hers. It seemed of little account whether he knew her errand that day or not; a faintness of heart, not unlike despair, was weakening her energies.

"An appointment," he repeated. "Not at the place where I saw you before? Not with Mr. Alfred King?"

"Yes, that is where I am going," she replied, feeling she could not battle against the question. "I was to have seen Mr. Alfred King at 12 o'clock, but I was late, and so I have to wait for him."

"But he is not expected that you should wait," said Oswald.

"I must go there," she answered, all too earnestly in her desperation. "I have to interview him to lead me to my death, and I know that it would, I should go."

The words, so unlike her calm good sense; the tone, so full of hopeless sorrow, told him that she was not alone. He knew that she was not alone. He knew that she was not alone.

"Do you think anything in the world happens by chance," gravely observed Oswald. "Do you think that the interview I had with you at your house, just after your sister's death?" he resumed after a pause.

"Oh, yes," she answered, and he continued, his voice assuming its sincerest and tenderest tone. "What I said at that interview—that which would give me so much pleasure as to be your friend, should you require one. Sum—forgive me if I go back for a moment to tell you of my sister's death."

"In what manner?" she asked, after some moments of hesitation.

"I am able to understand anything of this business, you need one. I have seen her alone in it—no one to counsel you, no one to help."

"It is true," she said. "I have to stand in it alone. I must stand in it alone. I must stand in it alone."

"Sister me to be so far from your friend," she faintly shook her head. "You could not do it."

"It is true that—that the period has not arrived perhaps for either of us, when we had contemplated such a friendship might begin. But we must waive that; necessity compels us. Let me serve you; I ask for your friend, should you require one."

"I am more than ready to accept of it," she said, and he continued, his voice assuming its sincerest and tenderest tone. "What I said at that interview—that which would give me so much pleasure as to be your friend, should you require one. Sum—forgive me if I go back for a moment to tell you of my sister's death."

"In what manner?" she asked, after some moments of hesitation.

"I am able to understand anything of this business, you need one. I have seen her alone in it—no one to counsel you, no one to help."

"It is true," she said. "I have to stand in it alone. I must stand in it alone. I must stand in it alone."

"Sister me to be so far from your friend," she faintly shook her head. "You could not do it."

"It is true that—that the period has not arrived perhaps for either of us, when we had contemplated such a friendship might begin. But we must waive that; necessity compels us. Let me serve you; I ask for your friend, should you require one."

"I am more than ready to accept of it," she said, and he continued, his voice assuming its sincerest and tenderest tone. "What I said at that interview—that which would give me so much pleasure as to be your friend, should you require one. Sum—forgive me if I go back for a moment to tell you of my sister's death."

and so much. Suffer me to stand to you in this, in your brother's place. I am sure Captain Davenal would wish it."

The faint color of dread came into her cheeks as she thought how far he would be from wishing this betrayal to Oswald Gray. "I can't tell it," she murmured.

Oswald turned his gaze upon her, his dark blue eyes never more earnest, more eager. "Will you let us consider this according to the dictates of common sense? Is it fit that you, being what you are—a lady, young, refined, inexperienced—should be dancing attendance at Jones & Green's offices; men who do not bear too good a reputation in the legal world, to meet principally Mr. Alfred King, a man who bears a worse?"

The crimson shone in her cheeks. Put in this way it was anything but pleasant to the refinement of which he spoke. "I know, I know," she said impulsively. "I felt the going there the day you saw me; I feel it again now. But indeed I cannot help myself. It was a solemn charge left me by my father, and in going through with it I am but doing my duty. God is over me," she simply added. "I have a great deal to try me; a great deal to bear; but I am striving to do it right under him."

Her lip quivered as she spoke, and she paused from emotion. It was too much for the stoic philosophy of Oswald Gray. All the old feelings, pent up so long, buried only, not subdued, resumed their sway with uncontrollable force, like a torrent let loose down a mountain's side. He caught her hand in his, he bent his face to hers, his whole expression one of the deepest love, his persuasive voice, trembling with agitation, was sunk to the softest whisper.

"Sara, my dearest, I still love you better than anything on earth. Heaven knows how I have striven to forget you since that cloud fell upon us. It has been a long dreary path, growing more cruelly monotonous day by day."

Her heart beat wildly, and for one brief interval a hope, sweeter than earthly dream, stole into it like a ray of sunshine. Only for an instant; she knew that it was but so much deceit, for him as for her.

"Are there no means by which we may forget the cloud, and return to the past?" he resumed; his voice hoarse with its emotion, and so low in tone that she could scarcely hear it. "Better to sacrifice a scarcely heart to a whole life in dissatisfaction. Let the dishonor—pardon me for thus alluding to it—rest with the dead; perhaps it has been wrong from the first to make it our sorrow."

She looked at him not quite understanding. "He saw the doubt."

"By my wife, Sara. I can then take these troubles upon me as my legal right. On my sacred word of honor, I will never cast a reproach to the past so much as in thought. No! I will not let your hands go until you tell me by word of mouth what I know—that your heart is mine still; that we cannot be faithful one to the other."

She felt faint with the moment's pain. The dewdrop of emotion were gathering on her face, and he would not loose her hands that she might wipe them away. "Other, let us be so now," he went on. "It is too solemn a moment for equivocation; it is no time for us to pretend ignorance of our mutual love."

"It was indeed no time for equivocation, or for doubt. Sara rose superior to it. A reticence that might have been observed at another time was forgotten now in her emotion and pain."

"I have not been faithful; perhaps never shall be. But we can never be more to each other than we are now. The dishonor clings to me, and always will cling."

"I would never bring the possibility of—of—I think you do not understand," she broke off, lifting her white face to his. "It was not only dishonor."

"What else?"

"Crime."

"It was not your crime, Sara. And it has passed away."

"It has not passed."

"Not yet. There's danger still."

"Of—of—exposure. Danger of what?"

"Do not force me to say more. Only believe one thing—that I can never be your wife. Do you think if there was no insuperable barrier, that I should make one?" she added, her face flushing a hot crimson. "Forgive me; I scarcely know what I say; but you wished that we should speak without reserve."

An accident happened a few miles above Walkerville Saturday that may result in the death of one man and the maiming of another. A thrashing machine owned by Ladore Bros. was at work on the farm of Climax Janisse on the river front, when the engine exploded, blowing both men and covering the laborers who were close by with hot water. They were taken into the house and medical aid summoned. While their clothes were being taken off the skin peeled in many places, and the cries of the sufferers were heart-rending. It is feared that one of them is seriously scalded internally.

When raising one of the timbers the "bent" fell forward, striking Bigham on the head, loosening nearly the whole of the scalp. It required five stitches to close the wound. WENTWORTH.

Scores of friends of J. A. Dingle, who has for so many years resided in Barton, were sorry to learn of his death. The late Mr. Dingle was a native of Cornwall, England, and was well known in Hamilton. He had been a great sufferer for many months, and had borne with wonderful patience the most intense pain. The deceased is remembered by the people of Hamilton as a man of courteous disposition, warm-hearted and a good friend. He was widely known and as highly thought of. Mr. Dingle, who was 68 years old, leaves a widow, three daughters and a son, to mourn the loss of an indulgent and loving husband and father. For the past six months he had been ill from a complication of diseases, and his son, Joseph, has managed the business in the market building.

TRAVELERS' PRIVILEGES.

Interesting Ruling by Judge Ross in the Case of an Unpaid Bill for Printing.

OTTAWA, July 24.—Judge Ross decided an interesting case to-day, when C. W. Mitchell, printer, had Giles and Henry Pullman, two circus employees, upon a capias as absconding debtors to recover a bill for printing done years ago when the Pullmans were here with a show of their own.

Judge Ross held that the defendants were travelers, and that when a man who made his living in the show business and a bona fide traveler left the town he did not owe an intent to abscond and not pay his debts. The defendants were therefore discharged, with costs against the plaintiff.

The Turn up of the Nose on That Prisoner in the Jail at Windsor.

WINDSOR, Ont., July 24—Joseph P. Smith, the inmate who was reported as having been severely injured by a two-inch stream of water from a hose being turned on him by a turnkey at the jail here, is not as badly hurt as was at first supposed. It now transpires that the jail surgeon advised that Smith be washed down by a light stream of water, and the turnkey took this method of doing it. He says that the stream did not strike Smith directly, and that the cold water drenched his hair and face, but did not harm him. Jail Sparks, of the jail, has, however, been suspended from duty, a counter-charge of drunkenness having been brought against him by one of the other jail officials, and an investigation will be held.

In view of what Hood's Fanaparilla has done for others, is it not reasonable to believe that it will also be of benefit to you?

The latter may be secured from Mr. F. W. Matthews or Mr. S. R. Break, who will be in the City Hall arcade from 4:15 to 5:15 Thursday and Friday afternoon to distribute them. The move is a commendable one.

More Trouble.

Complaints have been made that tenants of stores on Dundas Street between Richmond and Market Lane refuse to pay their rent on account of street railway ties and relaying at the sides of the street. The city engineer wrote Mr. Break, manager of the street railway, advising him to have them removed at once, or the work would be done at the company's expense.

Cut His Throat.

In a neat little cottage, nestled amid overhanging foliage to the north of the barracks, lives Mr. Thomas Hall, who follows the calling of a carter. About a week ago he was sunstruck, and the effects, as shown by subsequent events, evidently influenced his mind. The first symptoms of the unwelcome result was noticed a few days since when he swallowed a quantity of peas green. Dr. J. A. Nelles was speedily summoned and with the aid of a stomach pump the man was soon placed beyond danger. Yesterday Hall again attempted to take his own life. He secured a razor, and, before the unwitting onlookers could interfere, he made a frightful gash in his throat. In the confusion which ensued, he also slashed his body in the vicinity of the heart. Prior to these events, early in the morning, the deranged man rushed in a half-nude condition through the garden adjoining his house. Last evening he was removed to the hospital, and it is thought probable that he may recover.

Look Out for Labor Day.

A meeting of delegates from the various labor organizations of the city met in United Labor Hall for the purpose of taking steps to celebrate Labor Day, Sept. 4, in a fitting manner. A large number of delegates were present, and it was determined to have a parade and demonstration in the afternoon and a grand concert in the Crystal Palace in the evening. Wm. Thomas was elected chairman, Joseph T. Marks secretary, and John Johnson treasurer. Committees were appointed to look after the various departments of the work. The secretary was instructed to communicate with the City Council, asking for the use of the grounds and also Crystal Palace with electric light in the evening. A proposition by one of the delegates asking for a grant from the city to aid the celebration met with the strongest opposition, and the meeting put it on record that they were opposed to the City Council giving grants of public money to celebrate Labor Day. The merchants and manufacturers will be asked to take part, and the proposal is to try and procure railway rates and bring hundreds of visitors into the city. The proceedings will be novel and attractive, and of a character never before presented in the city. A petition will be presented to the mayor to have a half-holiday proclaimed. The citizens can look out for a big time, as the organizations interested intend that this shall be the event of the season. Further information will be given through the city press and by bills and posters.

CONTRACTS AWARDED.

For Various Works Required in the Different Schools.

Nothing of a startling nature occurred at the meeting of No. 2 committee of the Board of Education last evening. The proceedings consisted mainly in opening tenders for various works. The chairman expressed a desire that more members turn out.

The sub-committee, who were instructed to prepare a schedule of the duties of the superintendent of works, reported. The document was left for the consideration of the general board.

The tender for fuel was awarded to T. S. Wall: Lump coal, $4.20 per ton; hard coal, $5.15 per ton; beech and maple wood, $5 per cord.

Tenders were opened for the painting and kalsomining necessary in the various schools, and Geo. Burdick secured the contract at $300. Fifteen dollars extra was granted for repainting kindergarten circles. The contract for composition blackboards was given to the Walter Liquid Slate Company, of Berlin, at 35 cents per square yard.

Brick floors in the boys' department in the basement of Simcoe street school are to be relaid by S. Flory & Co. at a cost of $75.

The pipes at the Collegiate Institute leading from the water closets to the sewer have become obstructed by the fibers and roots of the trees. Superintendent Perry was instructed to have the pipes relaid as cheaply as possible.

The members present were Messrs. D. W. Blackwell (chairman), Anderson, Turner, Dewar and Superintendent Perry.

Every lady in the land says Duncombe's Dark Pills for Digestion and Dyspepsia are at their command.

was speedily summoned and with the aid of a stomach pump the man was soon placed beyond danger. Yesterday Hall again attempted to take his own life. He secured a razor, and, before the unwitting onlookers could interfere, he made a frightful gash in his throat. In the confusion which ensued, he also slashed his body in the vicinity of the heart. Prior to these events, early in the morning, the deranged man rushed in a half-nude condition through the garden adjoining his house. Last evening he was removed to the hospital, and it is thought probable that he may recover.

Look Out for Labor Day.

A meeting of delegates from the various labor organizations of the city met in United Labor Hall for the purpose of taking steps to celebrate Labor Day, Sept. 4, in a fitting manner. A large number of delegates were present, and it was determined to have a parade and demonstration in the afternoon and a grand concert in the Crystal Palace in the evening. Wm. Thomas was elected chairman, Joseph T. Marks secretary, and John Johnson treasurer. Committees were appointed to look after the various departments of the work. The secretary was instructed to communicate with the City Council, asking for the use of the grounds and also Crystal Palace with electric light in the evening. A proposition by one of the delegates asking for a grant from the city to aid the celebration met with the strongest opposition, and the meeting put it on record that they were opposed to the City Council giving grants of public money to celebrate Labor Day. The merchants and manufacturers will be asked to take part, and the proposal is to try and procure railway rates and bring hundreds of visitors into the city. The proceedings will be novel and attractive, and of a character never before presented in the city. A petition will be presented to the mayor to have a half-holiday proclaimed. The citizens can look out for a big time, as the organizations interested intend that this shall be the event of the season.
