City's Third Mystery Fire In 3 Days Partly Destroys Grocery Store, Barber Shop

Summer's Grocery Shop, Richmond and Horton Streets, Partially Destroyed.

CAUSE IS UNKNOWN

Third Mystery Blaze in Three Days Starts in Store-

The third mysterious fire in as many days caused approximately $4,000 loss to the grocery store of Lew Summers and the barber sho of J. H. Firth at the corner of Horton and Richmond streets at 1 o'clock this morning. The fire was discovered by W. J. Bowern, a taxi driver, who turned in the alarm from the corner of Bathurst and Richmond streets

When the firemen arrived the flames had made good headway, and the whole second story of the build ing at the north end was a mass o flames. The building, being of light frame construction, burned rapidly to bring it under control.

The stock of the grocery store, with Memorial church, Toronto, the exception of that in the storeroom at the rear, was untouched by flames, but the amount of water which poured in will cause considerable loss. The barber shop, too, was flooded with water. The greatest damage, however, will be to the building itself.

Police Constable Thompson made his round of the place at 12:15 and reported everything all right. At 1 o'clock, when the firemen arrived, however, the whole north end was burning and several holes had been made in the roof. The rapidity with which the flames gained headway led the firemen to believe that it might have been incendiary.

Slight damage was caused to the furniture of Alfred Evans and P Panos, who reside in the Richmond Apartments, adjoining the building, by the immense amount of smoke which poured through. The paper on the walls was virtually ruined. This is the second fire in the struc ture recently. On May 13 several new auto and fuel has possibilities, thousand dollars' damage was caused they declare, but it will be years by a midnight fire. The loss will be covered by insurance.

The Drop in Rural Population.

The number of farmers in Ontario is decreasing and the city population is increasing. years Ontario's rural population has declined by 700,000, and recent years have contributed

This migration of the farmer has been a from farm to city a sinister thing, a cause for alarm, an evidence of decadency. The argument has been that agriculture constitutes the back bone of the country's wealth and that if our young men are no longer willing to stay on the farm, which was good enough for their fathers, things are reaching a sorry state of affairs.

A directly opposite conclusion, however, is appearing in the Dearborn Independent. Mr. Benson holds that fewer farmers are a good thing for farming and that the trend citywards is merely a natural and healthy result of greater productivity in farming methods. Statistics both in Ontario and the United States appear to support Mr. Benson's argument.

Ontario's decrease of 700,000 rural population since 1845 is matched by American figures. The first American census in 1790 showed that of each 100 population 97 were engaged in farming. In other words these 97 people produced only enough food for themselves and for three people in the city, with no surplus for export. The American census in 1920, however, showed that of each 100 population only 30 were occupied in agriculture, while 70 lived in cities and towns. The 30 farmers of 1920 thus supply with food themselves 70 other city dwellers, with huge surpluses for export to foreign markets In Ontario a similar decrease in rural populacrease in farm values. It is estimated that Ontario's farms have more than doubled in value in eighty years, while the crop of wheat, pats and barley during the last eighteen years alone has increased in value by the sum of $134.667.000

These figures, both in Ontario and in the United States, mean, of course, that the productivity of the individual farmer has enormously increased. Thirty farmers in the United States now produce far more than 97 farmers a century ago; a greatly decreased farmer population in Ontario is producing a tremendous increase over the total of fifty years ago.

I wo things have happened to bring about this change: agricultural machinery and power. No Bathing Beauties From Cape May.

Probably few people in Ontario have ever heard of Cape May, New Jersey. It has neverdeclining to send a representative to the annual presented by Allan L. The city manager of Cape May, who corresponds to the mayor, replied to the invitation by saying: "We can not see the propriety of young women being and the management accepted an engagement to an engagement to the propriety of young women being the you sent with pomp and circumstance to Atlantic City, or any other city, once a year to be measured, weighed, appraised and gazed on by you like, but count Cape May out. In any case the bathing-girl competition is a futile affair, for it has never yet resulted in the selection of a winner who can be accepted as representing properly either the most attractive or the most intelligent of a community's girlhood. Being old-fashioned like Cape May is a pretty good thing sometimes. It saves money and pre-

Would Drop "Lloyd George" and Find a Name Which Would Be Truly Canadian.

Sir,-Every Londoner must be enthusiastically in favor of rendering every reasonable support to the latest proposal for the construction of a new hotel in London. But since the previous promotion schemes have been thereby eliminated please let a Canadian suggest that the "Lloyd George hotel" idea drop overboard too. Lloyd George in England ranks as a defeated politician and to many is a discredited politician. Surely some Canadian in all Canada's history has done is not work for them to do, because fewer oldest building in the British Honduras, but something that would better entitle him to what ever honor there is in it. I believe that one of the reasons so many Canadians leave Canada is that Canada has been taken from them, even in such inconsequential details as the naming of hotel. As through heaven's paths you roam? Do you glimpse the woods I wandered When I sought, a happy child,

Where so much of love was hiding In the days that are no more Is the tranquil village sleeping Where I spent such joyous hours? Is the silver river leaping Brother's Bureau Drawer Ransacked For Lingerie Pattern.

> BY AILEEN LAMONT. Special to The Advertiser Copyright.

New York, Aug. -Strong efforts to bring the sweater back to presummer popularity are being made by retail shops here. The effect of these efforts cannot yet be gauged because of the weather, but so far little interest has been manifest. The new models are of the coat type of soft light brushed wool.

Many young women have raided brothers' bureau drawers for ties and shirts, but now they have adopted the BVD's. This newest femining underwear is cut on exactly the same lines as men's underwear, but the materials are created a chine in nink materials are crepe de chine in pink or peach and Point de Venice lace. Many French designers are sponsoring the three-quarter coat for fall suits. But fashion decrees that skirts even of coats shall have fullness. This object is attained by the sli back, a vent extending from the hem practically to the waistline.

Trains in France are off the track. At least they do not follow the trail of their wearers but parallel it. One of the new smart evening gowns from the Due de la Paix is of ivor satin crepe with a diagonal band o pearl embroidery which leaves on shoulder bare and with a huge pear ornament at the left hip from which the train is suspended.

The old proverb, "Love flies out as the window when poverty walks in at the door," is true to this extent, that people who cannot afford enough to eat are thinking more of their stomachs than they are of their hearts. Nobody can make a peaceful and happy home in a house where woman, 28 years old. Have been the rent is overdue, and there is no

No man who loves a woman should ask her to share grinding poverty with him. No woman who loves a man should add the burden of her support to the load on hir shoulders, unless he can readily bear it. And no man and woman have a right to bring little children into the world that they cannot take care

So my advice to you is to wait until you are able to marry, and that should not be long if all four of you are willing to work

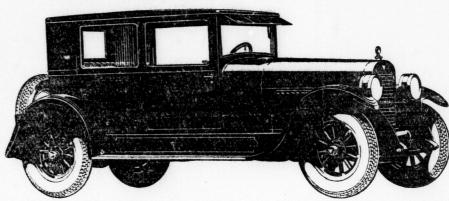

Unless your sister is a hopeless invalid, there is no reason why you should support her. Get her a job, and force her to stand on her own feet. And very likely your mother might, with the proper encouragement and advice, find something that she could do to make a living.

A Golf Championship is a Refined and Homeopathic Sport With Stars "Doing Their Stuff" Amid Church-Like Silence

A Series of Tiny Thrills Spread Out Over Four or Five Miles—Never Does a Player Lose Machine-Like Poise — Never Does a Spectator Talk Above a Whisper

By F. G. GRIFFIN

GOLF championship, to the spectator, is homeopathic sport. If you have been accustomed to watching first-class baseball, rugby, boxing, or tennis, and having your games served in hot, concentrated doses, then indeed does a golf championship seem a longdrawn series of minute thrills spread out thin over four or five miles.

Even a cricket game, with its bowling, hitting, running and fielding-unless a chronic stone-waller is lingeringly on the job-is considerable excitement by comparison.

If only Hagen or MacFarlane or Diegel, or some of the other stars, would on occasion blow off steam, cuss a string, or frenziedly smash an offending club when they slice or miss! But they never do. They never lose their machine-like poise, their complete control in this nerve-wracking championship contest.

On the other hand, one wonders what would happen if in the midst of the religious hush that accompanies the solemn ritual of putting, or immediately afterwards, some intense enthusiast should shout, "Yah, take him off. He couldn't sink a spoon in a soup plate." No doubt the casualties would be enormous. The player would probably drop dead. The gentle caddies would flee from such rude vulgarity. And the refined spectators in the ring would without doubt fall in faints by the score.

For such simply isn't done at such a contest. The half back must steady himself for a field goal, with the exhortations of the crowd pouring in on him, the boxer must judge the solar plexus punch with a nicety that takes no notice of the milling mob roaring in the nearby seats, the jockey must figure his riding in the crowded, crucial moment with ears shut to the thunders of a multitude to whom his winning or losing means huge sums of money, the pitcher may have to send over a ball that will decide a world series in spite of the fact that ten thousand hostile voices are shouting in razzing chorus-but the contending golfer is allowed to do his stuff in church-like silence. Tranquillity is the keynote of a great golf cham-

Constant Nerve-Wracking Strain

EVEN at that, the speechless stare of the two form the gallery at every stroke may be a more severe test of the nerves in this game where every blade of grass is a potential factor than the frenzied furore that frequently accompanies other games.

For make no mistake about the nerve strain of such a championship as the Canadian Open played last week on the Lambton course. The wonder to the ordinary onlooker is that men can stand the strain of four successive rounds of this high-keyed placidity from tee to green. stroke upon stroke, every good stroke surely adding to the burden of each successive one, without ever once blowing up. Such golf is a triumph of repression and concentration.

Each man, temperamentally different, seemed to show the strain in a different way, and to meet it. Leo Diegel, the Long Island player who won the championship for the second year in succession, was plainly keyed to a severe pitch. He is youthful, sturdy, lean and keenfaced, looking more like a ball player than a golfer, in contrast to several of the other great players who, except for their evident physical fitness, looked anything but athletic.

Diegel displayed his edge in several ways. Facing a long, difficult putt, he would light a cigaret, take two or three fierce drags, pitch the cigaret on the green and, with the smoke of the inhalation pouring from his mouth, set himself nervously for the stroke. Golf must surely be the only game in the world where smoking may be resorted to as a steadier of nerves.

When the hole was played, Diegel's caddie would retrieve the cigaret and hand it to him. In another way Diegel showed the intensity of his game. If he missed an eight or ten foot putt, and took two strokes where one might have done, he invariably stayed on the green, after holing out, placed the ball where it had first lain and tried again, by way of practice, to make the hole with the single long putt. He would not leave the green till he did it, repeating the stroke if necessary two or three times, satisfied only when the ball went into the hole.

Such was his behavior on the Friday: And yet on the following day he still stood the strain sufficiently to turn in two fine rounds authorities. and win the championship.

MacFarlane Like Solemn Professor

M IKE BRADY, the eventual runner up, was another player who was intensely on edge. When in the act of driving from the tee or putting, he would suddenly straighten, whip round and order some spectator to move awaysively invisible behind him. More than any- reached the point of maximum daily tension.

fourteenth green-Hagen putting.

thing else, it seemed to be merely a little trick of Brady's for blowing off steam and relieving the tension.

Kirkwood, smiling and suave, very different from the dour Brady, acted similarly several And once, when he was in the very act of putting from the edge of the green, he halted and made the caddy who was holding the flag, ready to lift it should the ball show signs of sinking in the hole, give it to the other caddy to hold. Yet there was nothing about the first caddy, so far as the spectator could see, to warrant Kirkwood's displeasure. It was simply a sign that his high-keyed nerves had to find a means of slackening.

One of the most interesting players was Andrew Kay, the Lambton pro, one of the very finest golfers in Canada, who played so well during the three days of contest that he finished third only to Diegel and Brady and equal to the great Hagen. If he was under a strain he seemed to show it least of all. He seems a dashing, forcing type, actually devil-may-care as compared with some of the others and lacking their mechanical precision and machine-like repression. And yet his seeming lack of intensity in no way hurt the scores he turned in.

Compare his rubicund face, sturdy figure and rather swashbucklin' style with those of Willie

And one heard no less than three people at different times in the gallery exclaim in a subdued whisper as he bent to putt, "Isn't he like a a preoccupation that was unaware of the crowd professor?" So evidently there is in the public mind a distinct type of the professor and Mac-Farlane is it.

He wears large solemn glasses. He also sports a straw hat when playing instead of a bare head or a cap like the others. His thin face, long legs, spare frame and, above all, his ada are growing. And they have learnt what fine hands with their artistic, tapering fingers, all give the impression of a studious, aloof figure. And yet his manner on the links proved free and easy, without the slightest hint of for the first time. They keep still. They do strain. But then, even when he was playing not talk. They preserve a hush-hush attitude Bobby Jones in that terrific extra round in the American Open and winning on the last hole by one stroke, he was described as showmerely playing a friendly round with nothing and put him off the stroke which is to come.

Thus is was in the Canadian Open, though the immediate running. It must be that Macfarlane's equanimity is natural; that he shows sunk unexpectedly does a little flutter of handno signs of strain because he feels none. One clapping break apologetically forth, to be watched him when he came out after lunch with his caddy and his huge leather bag of clubs to practise a full assortment of shots before it came time for his round. A long cigar cannot help wondering how people who have was stuck in the corner of his mouth. He beballs almost on the head of the fielding caddy, as his eyes followed each shot. In a short time he cast away his cigar and settled down in earnest. And he did not smoke during his competitive play. One thing he did do, unlike most of the others, and that was crack an occasional dry joke that always had good humor in it. In that he was like that other great Scots golfer who was in Toronto a couple of years ago, Jock Hutchison, who joked incessantly, addressing the ball or the spectators pawkily at every stroke. But whereas Jock's joking was of the safety valve variety, being his way of lessening the tension, it struck one that Willie MacFarlane's remarks were simply the easy expression of his thoughts.

Both men are very different indeed from Walter Hagen. "Doesn't he look cross?" one heard a girl in the gallery exclaim once. He did, too, in a way. His round, smooth, heavy, business man type of face was burnt almost black with the sun of a hundred golf courses which he had tackled without a hat. And it was black with a cloud, not of bad temper, but of concentration. Hagen never relaxed for a moment. He did not joke. He did not smile. He did not speak to anyone. Watching him, one wondered what his thoughts were. Either it is that when he has made a stroke he is concentrating on the problem of how he is going to play the next one: or it may be that he goes over and over in his mind some problem of an automatic sort like counting up to a hundred, for the purpose of keeping his nerves steady under the strain. Undoubtedly his preoccupation during the Canadian Open was the most marked of any of the outstanding golfers. Never once did he relapse from his exalted quietude in a round of eighteen holes. On the other hand he showed none of the irritability, none of the signs of tautness, displayed by some of the others. It was as if, godlike, he was doing his stuff in of a couple of thousand more or less who watched his every move and trailed him every time he

HE gallery at the Canadian championships proved interesting. These galleries in Canis expected of them, though there must be a heavy percentage of each of them who, drawn by great names, are seeing championship golf throughout. Even when they are trekking along on the heels of the distinguished golf gladiator they talk in subdued whispers lest the murmur ing no visible signs of any kind, as if he were of their voices reach his temperamental ears Not once during the day on the course do you hear a sound that would bring rebuke at a after the second round he was scarcely in funeral. Only occasionally, as when a particularly straight drive is made or a seven foot putt checked immediately lest the god with the club be upset. Even allowing for the fact that the gallery holds a heavy leavening of golfers, one been brought up on horse racing, boxing, basegan with his irons sending remarkably aimed ball and rugby develop suddenly these gentle manners of the golf gallery. The affai technique that makes great golf.

> And yet when the day is over and the nongolfer has tramped about watching these giants at their work, he is apt to wonder: "Well, did I or did I not get a kick out of watching them?" It may be all right for the golfer, dub or otherwise-and he was there by the score for one could hear him in the galleries saying "Look at his feet" or "Watch the way he brings his shoulder round." They come to stand in awe before the skill of these masters and to learn. if possible. In their blood is the virus that gives every move a meaning. But for the nongolfing spectator it's different. He is watching from the point of view of pure amusement, entertainment or thrill, as he would watch the players of any other game. And to him the golf even of an artist cannot be anything but homeopathic in its thrills and thinly spread in its excitement.

Which would be all right if they averaged equally for every one of the thirteen days, in. seeing that 150,000 people is a nice, comfortable day's crowd. But the trouble is that they will not. One day there might be only 75,900 present; the next the turnstiles might click 300,-000 times. And it is the probability of the latter tremendous figure that makes the 2,000,000 shadow somewhat oppressive to the exhibition

For 300,000 guests in the course of a day would swamp the grounds to suffocation, choke the buildings to the stifling point, strain the facilities till they crumpled and send the concessionaires crazy because of their inability to provide hot dogs, colored drinks and what not, and to empty and fill their sideshows fast enough to take care of the clamoring multitude. After such a day, the chances are the grounds would be strewn with the dead bodies of wornout entertainers and stall holders.

Experience has taught that 200,000 people are about the limit that the Exhibition, as it is, can possibly take care of in the course of a day. Once, last year, the attendance between daylight and dark soared to 230,000. It was a children's day, and the little visitors squeezed in by the tens of thousands. But, phew! It was some crush. Not that it will not be repeated again this year, and possibly added to. For nothing can prevent the children from coming to the greatest annual show on earth. And nobody wants to, least of all the exhibition

That is the trouble: nothing can prevent the crowds from increasing every year. One day last year boy scouts counted 2,400 American cars in the exhibition grounds. There is not the slightest doubt that the American attendance is increasing every year. And yet the present exhibition-that is, the buildings, amusethough the latter had been apparently inoffen- ments and equipment generally-has just about and loading of street cars.

It has always been the policy of the C. N. E. officials to look beyond the fair of the immediate present and vision the future. That is the main reason for the successful continuity of development which the great annual event has shown. Now, the plan of the directors is expansion to the east and the instalment of new buildings and attractions in that direction to care for the coming annual increases.

Some of the additional features that the greater exhibition capable of caring for the future's mammoth crowds may be listed as

So far as the Empire court, so far simply a dream of the future, is concerned, signs are not wanting that it may yet come. This year, indeed, it might be said that the first unit will be started. did not manage it. No doubt the sister dominion will come next. The beginnings of the Empire court may be easily seen in such actual or prejected co-operation. It may be safely prophesied that it will be only a matter of a year or two until there is a British government building, a building which the exhibition authorities have been trying to get since the days of Earl Grey. It is nearer than ever it was. And some of these fine days the British Board of Trade is going to give its approval to a project which will be one more sign of the national and international significance of the C. N. E. For Australia was extremely anxious to show her stuff this year. In the Canadian Open pairs of contestants set off every five minutes. If you decided to watch one pair and set off to follow them in one of the galleries, then you could not see any of the others in action. If you perhaps only went with them half way and deserted them to pick up another pair coming along, it resulted possibly in your missing the first pair playing the most wonderful golf of the day.

Apparently spectators of golf have half a dozen ways of showing their interest. One noticed that numbers stayed all day round the first tee and watched the successive contestants drive off. Of course, they saw nothing else. Another crowd grouped round the last green and watched each pair as they played the last hole. These, too, saw nothing but the final putting at the finish. At least everyone who went out to Lambton and wandered out along the course saw a strip of beautiful countryside that it would be hard to surpass. Lambton's greens, patches of woodland, picturesque stretches of winding streams, valleys and hills were indeed beautiful.

Of course, there were galleries of hundreds following the favorite players, trekking along over hill and dale in their wake, like children lured by the Pied Piper. But all such galleries could see of the championship was the pair they followed. They could only find how the others had done when they sought the score sheets at the club house.

King George Officially Honors Initiative -Ginko and the Duchess Have Their Difficulties.

IEUT. - COMMANDER IVAN W. WHIT-HORNE of the British navy has just been promoted, by order of King George, over the heads of many senior officers, to a full commandership in the fleet.

The announcement of the award passed unnoticed among the more important news of the moment as did the reasons for it and for the King's personal interest in it.

It may be remembered, however, that an American citizen named Hawley, living in Wanhsien, a city in the interior of China, was last year murdered by a mob while the local officials sat calmly by and neither attempted to interfere nor to take action after the affair had happened.

Lieut. Whithorne in command of the British gunboat Cockchafer, stationed in Chinese waters, heard of the incident and without waiting for orders and instructions of any variety, promptly steamed up the river, cleared for action and announced to the authorities of Wahhsien that he would proceed to bombard their municipality without formality or further warning unless within twelve hours the ringleaders of the mob were arrested, tried and executed, and the funeral of the victim was allowed to take place without molestation.

The young naval officer also insisted that high officials of the province follow the coffin to the grave in token of sorrow and he himself stayed on the job till his demands were carried out to the last detail.

Naturally enough, Pekin made an official protest to London and even a few members of Parliament, looking for something to talk about, told the British House of Commons that the young Britisher's action was high-handed, to say the least.

But the Admiralty was very curt about the matter and perfectly satisfied with Whithorne's

As many agreeable trips can be marred by such incidents, it was agreed that they would take their daily turn at the cooking and washing of dishes, and whoever kicked at the cooking had to wash the dishes whether it was his turn or not, which was considered somewhat of a punishment.

The arrangement worked fine until one evening Dick, after pitching camp, went trolling, leaving the major to wrestle with the cooking pots. Dick returned with a fine string of fish and an equally fine appetite, bellowed: "Gosh, I'm hungry, is there anything ready to eat?" Then she returned to Chicago and her children with a huge collection of experiences. Incidentally her ideas on the subject of prison reform were greatly changed.

"Every prisoner I met," she told reporters, feared the law and hated it for the punishment it imposed. There is a dread, caused by fear of prison, which I am now convinced is beneficial. Formerly I thought prisons out of date. But they serve a useful purpose. Only there is not enough attention paid to the problem of fitting girls to lead a new life once they are

THESE WERE HAPPY DAYS THE OLD PIONEER TIMES

Life Was Not Complicated and Living Was a Very Comfortable Sort of Thing

MEMBERS of the old time mounties, men who went to Alberta in 1873 and '74, gathered together in Calgary a short time ago to honor the widow of their early commander, Col. J. F. Macleod.

Col. Macleod was the man who founded Fort Macleod in 1874 and who, a year later, was responsible for the naming of Calgary. His position in the history of the Canadian west is a unique one and in all the pioneer work which he accomplished, he owed much to untiring support and unselfish aid of his wife.

Mrs. Macleod came west in 1876. previous, Col. Macleod had come, with a handful of men, to establish Fort Macleod. At that time it was wild country, inhabited only by Indians and whiskey traders from the States, As Col. Macleod came down the Belly River, dead braves lay along its banks. On pitching camp, many hundreds of Indians came to watch the strange proceedings. Two of the chiefs spoke at great length and with much gesticulation. On each occasion when Col. Macleod asked his interpreter, the famous Jerry Potts, to translate what the redskins had said, invariably Jerry would reply "They say, 'Dam glad you here'."

The first meal under cover was on Christmas Day. As yet no floor had been built and the table was set in the centre of a buffalo wallow. Col. Macleod had made a trip to Helena and had brought back with him a turkey, a dozen of eggs, for which he had paid $6.00 and some raisins for a plum pudding.

Next year Mrs. Macleod came from Winnipeg, driving by democrat and taking the boat on the Missouri river, then driving overland again by democrat, fording rivers en route that were so deep the four-horse teams had to swim, while the water came into the wagon box.

Finally she arrived at her new home-s typical fort of those days with palisade fence and log buildings with their interiors lined with Mrs. Macleod used to ride with her husband each morning, before breakfast, while he inspected his men. Ideas of frontier defense were adopted from the Indians, such as placing the horses in the centre, while the men dropped to their elbows around.

They Were Badly Outnumbered

D URING the first years of her marriage, Mrs. Macleod accompanied her husband on many of his trips, being one of the few white women present at the signing of Blackfoot Treaty Number Seven in 1877. In speaking of this Mrs. Macleod said they were encamped at Blackfoot Crossing for several days, while negotiations of the treaty were going on, a handful of white people among hundreds of Indians. "The only time that I was ever afraid of them," she said, "was during a thunderstorm, when white men and red men hurried to the council tent for shelter. It came to me suddenly how much we would be in their power if the Indians should take advantage of their strength. Mrs. Macleod was a member of the well, known pioneer Drever family of Winnipeg, prominent loyalists in the first Riel rebellion of 1869. Her father, William Drever, left his home in the Orkney Islands and with twenty-five cents in his pocket enlisted in the Hudson's Bay service to try his fortunes, with the gentlemen adventurers in Prince Rupert's Land, in 1821. Pioneer days were happy days, says Mrs.

Mrs. Macleod photographed at the recent gathering of R. N. W. M. P. veterans.

Macleod. Life was not as complicated as it is to-day and in many ways one was just as comfortable. Homes were always warmly built, the food, which was largely meat and pemmican, was good, while the clothing was both sensible and warm and the furniture for the most part home made.

The chief amusement was dancing, favorite dances being the Red River Jig, four and eight hand reels, the polka and Sir Roger de Coverly.

One day we penetrated into a remote district, but any idea that we might be pioneers was rudely shattered when we sought out the village barber and clamored for immediate attention.

Other visitors had been there before us, aliens who knew little of the language and less of the customs. Apparently they had flouted tradition and fired the scorn of the village perruquier, for he had nailed in a prominent place this notice, in what he assumed to be English:

WARNING

Messieurs the customers * strangers and English are prayed to know that here it is the custom to give the tips to the harber.

The amount, it is to your good wish. If you give too much, the barber will let you know. If it is too not enough, you will learn it also,

We were quite willing to take the gentle hint. Moreover, we were sophisticated enough to know that a tip of two cents would be just about right. For three cents the barber would bow obsequiously, while for four cents he would kiss us on both cheeks.

Three cents was our largesse. Remember, we were on a holiday, when one expects to fling money around once in a while, and hang the expense.

I was first in the wide rush-bottomed chair that bore the marks of long and honorable service. One leg had been broken in the course of a slight misunderstanding following a wedding some years earlier, but if the customer leaned slightly to the right the chair remained steady enough. Many generations of corduroy trousers had worn the rushes sharp and shiny, and a man with a good imagination could easily fancy himself sitting on a pin cushion. But I was

I gave my shoulders the French shrug which

"My good man, how the devil do you expect me to know what you are talking about?" The barber picked up what looked like a silver spoon without a bowl, being slightly rounded on both sides. "In this district, M'sieu," he explained. "the barbers always shave with the cheeks stiff like a drum. The English custom of pulling down the skin with the fingers is no good. We push out the skin from the inside. Some customers like me to use the spoon; others prefer the thumb. It is a matter of taste."

> "Impossible, Monsieur! My reputation-!" The Frenchman was politely stubborn.

I got out of the impasse by having one of my friends shave me. Then I shaved him. We had no fear of the Union; it didn't exist in that part of the world. The barber looked on, cluckling dissatisfaction and murmuring that Englishmen were certainly a queer lot.

NATURE'S WEATHER PROPHET

MOST people know that seaweed, which becomes moist and clammy when rain is coming, makes an excellent barometer. Flowers are sensitive to weather conditions, and those in a position to observe them can generally tell something of the coming day. So true a prophet is the "scarlet pimpernel" that it has been called "the poor man's weather-glass."

Crocusus, dandelions, anemones, and woodsorrel close their flowers on the approach of rain. Fir-cones open and close as the weather is fine or wet. In some parts of the Continent, especially in Germany and Switzerland, where many quaint customs survive, they have a frog weather-glass which consists of a green frog in a bottle half filled with water. From the neck of the bottle, and just touching the water, runs a flight of steps. If the frog remains under the water, near the bottom or actually at the bottom of the bottle, the weather will be fine, but when he comes up and sits on the steps it is certain to be dull, cold, and wet.

The Slow Freight

Clarence N. Lindsay in New York Central Lines Magazine Most people like to watch fast trains;

The "Special" or "Express"; And count the Pullmans. But with me, It's different, I guess! I like to see the "slow freight" when It crawls around a bend!

By Ginger! Sometimes I half b'lieve The train ain't got an end! All kinds o' curious cars, you know, That hail from ev'rywhere!

And you can read the signs; there's time Enough, and some to spare, There's cattle-cars and lumber-cars,

And cars built like a skate; Oil-tanks and gondolas and some We'll have to call "plain freight."

From New Orleans and Omaha; From Troy and Buffalo;

From Cincinnati, Pittsburg and Atlanta and St. Joe! It makes you think this here U.S.

Of ours is quite a place; Geography seems pleasant when

You watch the freight-cars chase Each other down the curving track And hear the whistle toot That sort o' lazy warning, which Somehow just seems to suit The slowly-winding bunch of cars Whose end you cannot see; "Empires" and "Centuries" are fine-But the slow freight for me.

V7 E have often been asked to explain the Chinese situation which has puzzled many Canadians. Any Chinese who has stayed in Canada for several years and has lost touch with his own country cannot help being perplexed by the disturbances in China when he every morning learns from the newspaper that Bolshevik propaganda is working in that country. After gathering information from different sources in China, however, we begin to have a clear idea about the present movement.

One cannot understand the situation in China clearly without knowing something about the various parties there. There are at present unproductive soil for Bolshevism. Bolshevism is two strong and important parties. One is demo- a revolt against autocracy which existed in its cratic and the other militaristic. But both are extreme form under the czar, whereas the nationalistic; they are only different in their Chinese government, before the republican means of carrying out their programs. Most of our students to impose upon them so many restrictions. What have no sympathy for the militaristic party. Bertrand Russell has the leader. Since Dr. Sun died one section has inery which will direct our long-acquired free-

The existing Soviet government is a sort of labor dictatorship; it gives all power to the workers and soldiers. But the present Chinese uprising is primarily a student movement; it is essentially an expression of patriotism. Those who were killed in Shanghai, Hankow and Canton were mostly students. All our students are now mourning for the dead and they are surprised at the wrong done to them by a "Christian nation." These students at present appeal to the patriotic sentiment not only of the laboring class but also of merchants. It is the arousal of the indignation of the commercial class that gives a new impetus to the movement. One of the Chinese millionaires in Shanghai has promised to build a new university for those students who left St. John's University in Shanghai. Judging by these facts, one can easily see that the Chinese people are not fighting against capitalism or the existing social system, but against the wrongs and injustice done to them by some foreigners who call themselves Christians. The present movement is simply an aspect of patriotism provoked by the unfortunate events that occurred recently in Shanghai, Hankow and Canton. It is not anti-foreign because we know we depend for our prosperity upon international commerce and trade. It is not anti-religious because we have no religious domination as Russia had. In fact, Christians, Confucionists, Mohammedans, Buddhists, are all represented in this mo ement.

two backstops. Incidentally, the Bak ermen can do no less now than split the series, and again, it was Bill Coogan's sixteenth win of the season. The Bay City invaders appeared real furious after their beating Thursday, and at first it looked as if Coogan was going to have a job on hand to set them back, but after the Tecs set up a four-run lead in the first frame Bill turned them down methodically with the exception of the sixth and ninth frames, when he let up a bit and the visitors garnered their two runs All the hurlers looked alike to the Tecs, and Dick Breen sent in four of them in an attempt to stem the tidd of hits. Added to that, he thought he might help a little, so in the fifth he took Patterson's place behind the bat and did give some aid—to the Tecs. His wild heave in the sixth in an attempt to catch Silcker Cross at second materialized into a counter after Stimpson and Cross pulled the old double pilfer act.

Toronto, Aug. 7 .- With the Canadian dollar at a premium in New York, with the opportunity to save approximately $100,000 a year for the country by refining gold from Ontario's mines at Ottawa, how long is the government going to let gold shipments go to New York, is the question being asked by the gold bridge between the Border Cities and after the export of gold from Can-

Is is argued therefore that at a time when the government is urging that every possible dollar be extracted from the natural resources of the country that some step should be taken to keep this money in Canada,

New York. Aug. 8.—Stock prices forged steadily ahead this week despite occasional bear selling and profit taking. The advance was based on improving trade prospects, particularly on such basic industrials as steel and copper and on increasing indications of no strain on the credit situation, despite the unusually large total of brokers loans on stock collateral.

The strong investment demand for high-grade rallway and industrial stocks brought fresh buying power into other groups and stimulated pool activities in a number of issues whose current warnings give promise of special dividend developments before the end of the year.

Olis were sluggish in reflection of additional crude and gasoline price cuts in several popular makes of cars and the imposition of a selling based on the theory that the recent price cuts in several popular makes of cars and the imposition of a beavy tariff on July 1 by Great Britain would result in a sharp curtailment in earnings in the last half of the year. Planting the Olive.

The Prince of Wales' tribu memory of the great Napoleon took the form of an olive tree which he planted beside the "tomb" at Longwood. The French custodian of the estate, M. Colin, had chosen that tree as an emblem of the manner in which the good fortune of fate has reunited Napoleon's nation and Great Britain.

This place, where for 21 years the dead Emperor lay, has a majesty and a loneliness befitting the first restingplace of so mighty and turbulent a figure. It is a natural recess, being the head of a long green valley look the head of a long green valleys of St. Helena, straight down upon the shimmering blue waters of the South Atlantic. On three sides the little dell is shut in by steep, grassy hillsides, aflame with golden gorse. one corner flows a spring of clear water, to which Napoleon used to come daily to drink.

London, Aug. 7 .- Louis Philippe, Duke of Orleans, who has lived in exile in England for forty years, has made an impassioned plea for permission to return to France to spend his declining years.

English comment s to renounce his claims to the French throne before he will be permitted to return, and this he is understood to be unwilling to do.

The Duke left England for Belgium last week in order to be near the motherland in case his appeal was granted, and his four decades of suffering in exile ended

His appeal, addressed to the Duc de Lynes, and reprinted in the London papers today, is crouched in moving terms. It protests against eternal exile, concluding, "one must feel this agony to understand the heart-breaking effect of it. I, who Members of the city council who have longed so much to serve disagree with Mayor G. A. Wenige, France, have been denied this joy even in minor details, are to have and honor for forty years. I have an opportunity to square accounts at remained in banishment. God grant the Irish picnic at Port Stanley on that I may see France again before I die."

The medicines she took did not help her, and she almost despaired of gaining her health. In this condition she one day read in a newspaper of a case very similar to her own, in which health was re-Day.

More than a hundred delegates are in attendance.

mewspaper of a case very similar to her own, in which health was restored through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. This made her decide to give these pills a trial. After using a few boxes she found the pills were helping her, and she continued their use until her old-time health and vitality were restored. Now Mrs. Woodworth looks after a small farm of fifteen acres, credit for her present splendid health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which, she says, are the best medicine she ever used, and strongly recommends the pills to all run-down people.

RAYON

What It Is and How It Is Made.

Rayon is a vegetable fibre made by transforming cellulose into filaments by means of chemical and mechanical process. This cellulose is a substance on which the silk worm feeds. Hence silk and Rayon are made of the same substance, but the silk worm produces an animal fibre, whereas the chemical treatment produces a vegetable fibre.

Rayon is the most staple fibre on the market today because it is not dependent on the crops or the seasons. As long as we have plant life we will have cellulose, and hence Rayon.
